PREFACE.

IN preparing this little book for the public, I have not attempted to give a full account of the war in South Africa, but have merely endeavored to outline the career of the First Canadian Contingent engaged in the campaign—with special reference to the volunteers from New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. The material for the work has been taken from official reports, published correspondence, and to a large extent from private letters written by my brother on the field.

In this day of souvenirs perhaps these pages will serve as a memento of how, on the departure of our volunteers for active service, public treasuries and private purses were thrown open, of how unceasing was the interest of the general public that followed them throughout the campaign, and of how, when sad news came of loved ones fallen—as alas! it did only too often—sorrow and sadness was universal, showing that the heart and prayers of the people were with “Our Boys Under Fire.”

OUR BOYS UNDER FIRE.

CHAPTER I.

"We send them forth from our true North,
For secret bond and sign,
That, well or ill, to the great brave end,
We are Britons from brine to brine."

THAT the people of the Dominion of Canada are "Britons from brine to brine" has been clearly shown in the intense and patriotic interest taken by them in the Boer-British war in South Africa. In this, the greatest international conflict of modern times, Canadian volunteers have played no inglorious part.

The beginning of hostilities can be traced from the famous battle of Majuba Hill in 1881, to the Jameson Raid in 1895-96, during which time the Boers, exultant by reason of their incidental victories, carried on a secret and extensive preparation for the final overthrow of British influence in South Africa. Their feeling of jealousy and bitter hatred became intensified again and again, as into the remote corners of the dark continent Englishmen carried civilization, commercial industry, abolition of slavery, education to the Kaffirs, just treatment to the Uitlanders and represented to all races "the Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of man."

During the year of 1898-99, a series of diplomatic conferences took place between Sir Alfred Milner, Governor of Cape Town and British High Commissioner in South Africa, and Stephanus Johannes Paulus Kruger, President of the Transvaal Republic, who was supported by President Steyn of the Orange Free State.

The result was that on October the 9th, 1899, an ultimatum was issued from Pretoria demanding that within forty-eight hours all British troops be withdrawn from the frontiers. This audacious demand, coming as it did upon England unexpectedly, instantly aroused the fighting blood of the United Kingdom, and enlisted the sympathy and support of the Colonies. An offer from Canada to equip and forward a contingent was accepted at once by the Imperial Government. So, for the first time in the history of the Dominion, her volunteers were called to join hand in hand with the New Zealanders, the Australians and the Regular British soldier, not only to resent the insult to Motherland but to liberate an enslaved people from the tyranny of their oppressors and to plant forever the Union Jack in a free Africa. The spirit of loyalty was so intense throughout Canada that when the bugle sounded "To arms, To arms,!" there sprang as if by magic, from lake and river-side, from forest deep and prairie plain, from Atlantic cliffs and Pacific slopes, thousands of our noblest and our best, ready to fight—to die—for Motherland.

Lieut. Col. W. D. Otter was given command of the Contingent, to be known as the 2nd Battalion Royal Canadian Regiment of Infantry on Special Service. The Regiment, 1035 strong, was divided into eight companies, each including one captain, three lieutenants, and one hundred and twenty-one non-commissioned officers and men. In Company "G"* were ninety-four recruits from New Brunswick and thirty-one from Prince Edward Island. Seventeen volunteers from New Brunswick were also enrolled in Company "F".

The departure of the volunteers was celebrated throughout the Provinces by banquets, church parades, and grand farewell meetings. In Fredericton the volunteers were addressed by Bishop Casey, Father Murphy, Rev. G. M. Campbell, Mayor Beckwith, Captain Carpenter, and Capt. H. F. McLeod; while the St. John boys were bidden adieu by Mayor Sears, Dr. Daniel, Rev. W. O. Richards, Rev. Dr. McNeill, Col. Vidal, Colonel McLean, Major White, Major Armstrong, Major Sturdce, Capt. Sharpe, Captain Skinner, Lieutenant J. Kaye and Captain Haggart of London, England. New Brunswick, true to her traditions as the home of the loyalists, was lavish with her gifts, presenting her volunteers with a sovereign apiece and agreeing to pay every man fifty cents a day in addition to the Imperial allowance. To each of the officers was also presented a silver match-box with the inscription "Citizens of St. John. Transvaal, October 25th, 1899."

QUOTA FROM ROYAL SCHOOL OF INFANTRY, FREDERICTON

At the farewell meeting held in Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, His Honor Lieut. Governor McIntyre presided and the speakers were Chief Justice Sullivan, Premier Farquharson, Mayor Warburton, Judge Fitzgerald, Rev. J. J. Teasdale, Rev. T. F. Fullerton, Rev. James Simpson and Major Weeks. Mrs. McIntyre, wife of His Honor the Lieut. Governor, then presented the volunteers with gold souvenir pins, the gift of Mr. E. W. Taylor, whose son Roland was the first member of "G" Company to fall at Paardeberg. They were also each presented with twenty dollars in gold from the Provincial Government, supplemented with ten dollars in gold from the Civic Government of Charlottetown, while Souris forwarded twenty dollars in gold for each of her three representatives; and the citizens of Charlottetown insured the life of every man for one thousand dollars in the Independent Order of Foresters. In the respective provinces the ladies vied with each other in preparing dainty baskets of fruit, flowers and confectionery, and to those from St. John were added one hundred neatly made and useful hold-alls.

On the final departure of the volunteers from the provinces, October 25th, 1899, thousands of people accompanied them to their respective depots where amid rousing cheers, cracking of torpedoes, blowing of whistles, patriotic music, cries of "best wishes," and "God speed," our soldier boys took their first step towards the blood-stained field of Africa. The St. John, Halifax and P. E. Island Contingents met in Moncton where Premier Emmerson bade them "au revoir," and were joined by the Fredericton quota at Chatham Junction. All along the line they met with a continual ovation, the citizens of Newcastle and Chatham even awaiting their arrival until 2 a. m. The Regiment was mobilized in Quebec, and on the arrival of the Maritime Contingent its men were greeted with another rousing reception. Hundreds of comrades joined them, some in red, some in green, some in Highland costume, with a great variety of caps and trimmings. They were all quartered together in the immigration building and slept on straw mattresses on the floor. Their meals were served outside on the veranda, in rather a promiscuous manner, much to the amusement of the boys. Words of admiration were heard on all sides for Sir Charles Tupper, through whose instrumentality the life of every Canadian volunteer was insured for one thousand dollars in the London Guarantee Co., London. On Saturday night the citizens of Quebec entertained the Regiment at a smoking concert, and the officers at a state dinner. Sunday the contingent, divided into different sections, attended their respective churches. Monday morning preparations for embarkation went forward rapidly and every member of the Regiment was furnished with the necessary equipment.

After a parade and inspection by General Hutton, short stirring addresses by Lord Minto, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and Hon. A. S. Parent, Mayor of Quebec, the Regiment marched to the wharf to embark on the troopship "Sardinian," of the Allan line. Here fair maidens made an onslaught for souvenirs, and the boys tore buttons and clasps from their tunics and scattered them hither and thither. But the last moment had come, handshakes were repeated, good-byes quickly said; blue eyes met eyes of brown; bedimmed sight, tremulous voices, a murmured farewell, and the heroes are "all aboard." Then, as the ship sailed down the harbour, accompanied by hundreds of small boats, the blowing of whistles, the firing of a salute from the Citadel, the cheering of the volunteers as they covered the rigging to even the topmost mast, the sun in all its heavenly radiance sank gradually to rest on one of the most memorable days in the history of Canada. And so they left us, our soldier lads, our loved ones. How brave, how gallant, how noble they looked! Yet notwithstanding our pride in their courage, our appreciation of their patriotic zeal, our firm belief that they would ever be a credit to Canada and their native land, there was a sadness mingled with the pride, for we knew only too well that all would not return.

The boys soon became acquainted with each other on ship-board, and it was found that there was among them a large number of typical adventurers who had participated in thrilling and notable exploits. There were also in the ranks, doctors, lawyers, bank clerks, chemists, saddlers, surveyors, tailors, moulders, ranchmen, type and shorthand writers and many of other trades and professions, a large number of whom had thrown up lucrative positions and wealthy and comfortable homes to serve Queen and country. To one of these, Private Ernest Lord of the P. E. Island Contingent, South Africa was of personal interest, for it was the birthplace of his mother, Mrs. Lord, wife of Artemas Lord, Esq., and the battle ground where his grandfather, the late Col. J. H. Gray, fought against the Boers at Orange River in 1846.

After passing the coast of Newfoundland, the "Sardinian" had comparatively smooth sailing. The ship was uncomfortably crowded, but "G" and "H" Companies were fortunate in securing hammock beds on the middle deck. Military discipline was maintained from the first. Revielle at 5 a. m. by one of the companies not on duty, the officers and staff always being present.

The third day out a gloom was cast over the entire regiment by the death of Pte. "Teddy" DesLauriers of "C" Company. Solemn indeed was that funeral at sea, when, amid the wild roar of the waves, the shrieking of the wind, the plunging of the ship, the depressed attitude of the troops, the body of their late comrade, wrapped in a Union Jack, was committed to the deep.

On November the 12th, the "Sardinian" passed the Cape Verde Islands and signalled "all well;" and on the 18th celebrated the crossing of the equator by the blowing of whistles and firing of cannon. Nearing the journey's end, a large number of sea birds such as ducks, geese, Cape pigeons and hens flocked around the boat; but at last, on November the 30th, after a trip of thirty days, the "Sardinian" arrived at Cape Town, South Africa. The harbour was fairly alive with boats! A troopship with the famous Black Watch and Seaforth Highlanders, and another with the Australians had recently arrived, and these, with other transports, steamboats and tugs greeted the "Sardinian" with a salute, blowing of whistles, martial music and hearty singing, which, combined with the lusty cheering of thousands on the wharves, made a regular pandemonium. When finally docked, the ship was surrounded by kaffirs, coolies, and men and women of all descriptions. The boys threw some Canadian money among them, and enjoyed seeing the black; white and yellow tots fight right and left with their fists; on winning a prize they would cram it into their mouths and dodge quickly away, much to the chagrin of souvenir seekers.

Cape Town was a grotesque and most wonderful-looking place, especially when viewed from the sea. Right back of the city towered Table Mountain, and on either side Devil's Peak and Observation Hill. The Canadians were treated royally and gazed on as special objects of curiosity. It has been hinted that the people expected to see Indians, fur clad mortals, or wild uncivilized beings coming from the land of "The Lady of the Snows."

The Regiment encamped at Green Corner, three miles from Cape Town. The following day all was hustle, bustle and always confusion in preparing to leave for the front. Haversacks were discarded, and each man rolled in his great coat a spare shirt, a pair of socks, a holdall containing soap, razor, knife, fork, bandages, towel and a box of grease. Then, when every one was equipped

CAPTAIN WILLIAM ARTHUR WEEKS.
(MAJOR CHARLOTTETOWN ENGINEERS.)

Born at Charlottetown, P. E. Island; son of late Wm. Weeks, Esq., educated at Prince of Wales College, McGill (B. A. 1882), Military School, Fredericton (1st Class Certificate 1898); Royal School of Equitation (1st Class Certificate 1898; Royal Military College, Kingston; (Staff Course 1899); enlisted for Northwest Rebellion in 1885; appointed Lieutenant in Charlottetown Engineers, 1885; Captain, 1897; Major, 1899; admitted to Bar of P. E. Island 1885; Aide-de-Camp to His Honor Lt. Governor McIntyre; given command of "G" Company, 1st Canadian Contingent, Oct. 25th, 1899. In December appointed on Topographical Department, and on Jan. 31st to position of Regimental Quartermaster.

dust-colored uniform has proved to be the winding sheet of the Boers. In the wars of long ago the bright red tunic of the British soldier against the dull green veldt of the African soil, proved a conspicuous target for the enemy, but now when Tommy Atkins goes to war he leaves his gay apparel at home. The same is true in regard to the officers who were uniformed with a rifle, bayonet, water-bottle, ball punch, bandolier and forty rounds of ammunition, the Regiment marched to the depot where Sir Alfred Milner congratulated the men on their splendid appearance and in the name of the British residents of South Africa thanked them most heartily for coming such a distance to aid the cause of justice, truth and right. The ladies of Cape Town threw handkerchiefs, bracelets, fruit, flowers and confectionery into the car-windows for the boys, and amid rousing cheers from thousands of spectators and responsive cheers from the volunteers, the train steamed out towards DeAar Junction.

The boys were very proud of their khaki uniform and well they might be, for it is said that this like the men and not allowed to carry a sword belt or any mark of rank any further than DeAar Junction. "Thus England has at last awakened to the fact that precious lives are not to be sacrificed for a paltry piece of gold lace or bunch of regimental trimming."

The romance of the expedition had long ere this faded into the past and the boys fully realized they were not playing a game of citizen-soldiery but were the genuine Tommy Atkins. Like Tommy, they were always bright and cheerful. This was notably the case, when, on their arrival at DeAar Junction they were cruelly initiated into the South African climate by a terrific typhoon of sand the worst known there for seven years. The storm was so furious that tents were pitched with great difficulty. The sand, in a perfect whirl-wind, filled the eyes, ears, nose, and throat, flavored the bread, butter, soup and tea and formed for the boys a couch at night.

After a few days at DeAar Junction, where Colonel Otter picked up a horse shoe and placed it in his cross belt for good luck, the Regiment marched on to Orange River, thence to Belmont. Here the men were brigaded with the Black Watch, Gordon Highlanders, Shropshires, Cornwalls and Australians. Colonel Otter was given command of the whole camp.

Great amusement was caused by the mules; some of them would kick and caper and then breaking away, rush into the lines of horse artillery. On every side were signs of the great battle fought three weeks previous, when the Boers were driven from their position by the British under Lord Methuen. The Belmont station house was literally torn to pieces by bullets, while the battle-field presented a most ghastly appearance. Hundreds of Boers had been slain, and their bodies, with those of their dead horses were lying around, intermingled with all kinds of war material, such as exploded shell and shrapnel. It was a blood-curdling sight. Here and there could be seen a human head, hand, or foot sticking up between the rough boulders or small stones.

The position given the Brigade in guarding this line of communication, was a very responsible and perilous one. A rigid vigil had to be kept up by the sentries as detachments of the Boers were often seen lurking in the neighborhood. Besides the outpost and patrol, the Brigade had all kinds of fatigue duty, such as constructing works of defence around the camp, and unloading supplies from the station. They were always ready for an attack, even sleeping in their regimentals. One night great excitement prevailed when the sentries reported strange lights on both sides of the camp. The whole regiment turned out ready to annihilate the enemy, but discovered just in the nick of time that the supposed enemy was only Company "G" marching out on relief duty. Another night dark objects were seen moving slowly towards the camp. The regiment was again called out, the enemy drew nearer and nearer, the excitement of the troops grew more intense every moment, — the hour of battle had come at last, — their fingers trembled on the trigger, — their breath came short and quick, — when suddenly a flash of lightning revealed a flock of ostriches not far distant. But this strict vigil was not stance, one night a Boer spy was captured with a complete design of the whole camp on his person, and, according to army rule he was shot next day.

The Regiment was so thoroughly drilled that at 3 o'clock every morning the men would leave their tents and without a light find their way to the trenches and be ready for action all within three minutes.

One day, when half of the Battalion was out on patrol duty they discovered in a cemetery the grave of Lieutenant C. C. Wood, the first Canadian to fall in the campaign. It so happened that some of the party were his old college friends and they

As time passed the boys began to watch for the order to advance and take an active part in the engagements at the front. But Christmas found them still at Belmont. This festal day passed with the usual routine work and a religious service conducted by the Rev. T. F. Fullerton. The officers had

The first member of our own Regiment to lay down his life on African soil was Pte. M. C. Chappell who succumbed to an attack of tonsillitis while at Belmont. He was a great favourite with his comrades who buried him just outside the camp lines, Rev. Mr. Fullerton performing the last sad rites. A monument erected to his memory, bears the following inscription,

"Halt, who goes there?"

"Visiting patrol!" "Advance one and give the countersign!" "Westminster."

"Advance patrol, all is well."

Such was the watch night service of our soldier boys as they paced to and fro on the top of a kopje at the ushering in of the New Year, 1900. The night though cold was beautiful,—calm and moonlight. And from their summit they could see far below the camp, the dark shadows of the sentries,—further off, mounted sentries—while over the wide veldt sounded the tramp, tramp, tramp of horses feet. Off to the north, the searchlight of beleaguered Kimberley kept flashing in great sweeps across the sky like a huge fan,—away to the west were more diminutive mountains while high rugged rocks formed a pyramidal background for our heroes. And as there they kept vigil, with rifles in hand, wearing great coats to keep out the bitter cold, vividly they imagined a New Year's scene in the old home in far distant Canada.

The same day at Sunnyside, the Boers, while in the act of partaking of their mid-day meal, received an unexpected New Year's call from a detachment of the Belmont Regiment. After a slight resistance they broke their rifles and surrendered. The attacking party then finished the dinner commenced by their enemies, and proceeded on to Douglas, scattering the Boers, capturing supplies and ammunition, and releasing British and Kaffir prisoners. On the return march G and H Companies were detailed at a place called Richmond, to build a large fort where they kept the base of supplies for about a month.

About this time the hearts of the boys were cheered by the practical manner in which Her Most Gracious Majesty Queen Victoria showed her high appreciation of the services of her gallant troops by the gift of a box of chocolate to every member of the field force. The box, six and a half inches in length, three and three-quarters in width, and one inch in depth, was of a bronze metal, with bright red and blue trimmings and contained two layers of Fry's prime chocolate. On the cover were engravings of Her Majesty, the Royal Initials, the Royal Arms, the words "South Africa, 1900," and in copyright of the Queen's own handwriting,

"I wish you a happy New Year.

(Signed) VICTORIA, R. I."

Naturally "God save the Queen" was sung with great gusto around many a camp fire. A large number of the soldiers sold their empty boxes for $30.00 and $40.00. Be it said to the credit of the Canadians, very few of theirs fell into the hands of a purchaser, but were sent home as valuable mementos.

CHAPTER II.

"In the clamour and clash of encounter,
There is valour and glory—or death."

WHEN General Lord Roberts, who superseded General Buller as Commander-in-Chief of the British forces, began his advance march, the Canadians, on Feb. 12th, were ordered to form a conjunction with 60,000 troops at Gras Pan. In an inconceivably short time "Our Boys" tramped from Richmond to the central camp in Belmont. Here the wildest confusion prevailed. Arms, ammunition and supplies were piled high on transport waggons and the men were supplied with ordinary rations for an expedition of three days, and one ration of concentrated food, capable of feeding each man sixteen hours; then the Canadians and other regiments, with light hearts and rousing cheers, said good-bye to Old Belmont. Arriving at Graspan the Cornwalls, Gordon Highlanders, Shropshires and Canadians were formed as the 19th Brigade under General Smith-Dorien and attached to the main column. The next morning the Brigade commenced a march that lasted a week. The town of Jacobsdal they captured with little difficulty, but unfortunately the Boers succeeded in cutting off a large convoy with the result that the Brigade had less than half rations for the remainder of the march.

The mobilization of troops at Graspan was the beginning of the first great stroke in which Lord Roberts proved himself to be a masterhand and tactician of rare ability.

Cronje, known as the greatest Boer general, was strongly entrenched near bloody Magersfontein, and by some gigantic move he must fall a victim to British strategy. Lord Roberts appeared on the scene. Immediately a large force took up a position on the south and west of the entrenched leader. General French on the following day, Feb. 13th, with a force of 8,500, dashed from Modder River and relieved besieged Kimberly, and on the 15th swept down on Cronje's rear. Instantly the "Lion" sprang from his den and with a force of 10,000 men and a convoy of 300 wag-gons, fled eastward eight miles, but only to be repulsed by the in-vincible Kitchener. In vain the encaged general heliographed to General Joubert to break the British cordon.—in vain he tried to escape and searched on every side to find a single loop hole. But the cage was secure. The officers stood Born May 21st, 1869, son of Simeon Jones, Esq.; St. John, N. B.; educated in Edinburgh, Scotland; attended Royal Military College in 1893. Appointments: Lieut. 3rd Canadian Artillery, 1891; Captain, Jun. 6th, 1898; 1st Lieutenant Co. "G" First Canadian Con-tingent, October 20th, 1899. firm and erect, their eyes flashing bright and keen, ready to detect the slightest movement of the foe. Im-pregnable were rows of stal-wart Tommies, their hands grasping the glittering bayo-net, and as they thought of comrades lying by the Mod-der's side,—thought of the gallant Symons and Wauch-ope slain,—thought of those at home whose honor they were to uphold, they were ready to spring and bring the indomitable "Lion" to bay.

The surroundings of the coming bloody strife were tranquil and lovely. Na-ture's summer dress was tinged with autumn hues.

To the north of Paardeberg, —field of immortal fame— kopjes, some near and some far, towered heavenward.

On the east the peaceful Modder flowed, winding southward in its course, with trees and rushes scattered along the embankment. In a donga in the river bed the stubborn Boer leader lay heavily entrenched, determined to make a desperate stand and fight to the bitter end. Gradually the British closed around the cage, and as to the part taken by the Canadian Regiment, in the awful tragedy we will follow them from Jacobsdal by quoting extracts of a letter written by one of "Our Boys:"

"We had just lain down and were about to go to sleep, when a new order came to fall in, ready to march at once. After some confusion our Company emerged from a mass of artillery, cavalry and infantry, and took up its position as the advance guard of the column. We marched on slowly all night of Friday, the 16th. Early in the morning we came to a house with a windmill. We threw ourselves down on the ground exhausted, hoping to get a little sleep, but the order came for "G" company to guard approach of column, so we drew ourselves to our feet and marched to some rising ground about a mile away where we posted sentries. At day-break we marched back to camp. At 5 p. m. Saturday we left and marched toilsomely twenty-three miles, arriving near Modder River after sunrise Sunday morning, with nothing to eat on the way. We again tried to get some rest notwithstanding the booming of guns some distance off, but it was not to be. We had a small ration of coffee and a little biscuit which we were not given time to eat at our leisure and again fell in. The regiment moved over to a hill at the double and lay down there. Then we were marched back and proceeded to ford the Modder River, which was running deep and strong at that place. The Gordons and others were already struggling across with the help of ropes. The water was nearly up to our necks. Cronje and his army were strongly entrenched and the action was in progress. We were put in extended order and advanced to the open. Soon we could hear bullets whistling by our heads. After a little we lay down, then advanced again and so on, taking what shelter we could. We were in the supports and could not fire but our men began to be hit—Waye of Hunter River being among the first. Finally we got a position in which we remained for a long time. The sun was scorching hot and we had to lie flat to shelter ourselves from the bullets. Then a terrific thunder storm came up and we were soaked with rain and beaten with hail. It was bitterly cold after the scorching heat. The bullets were all the time whistling around us and the cannon roaring fearfully, the call for stretchers and bearers to carry off the wounded coming from all points. Then the order came: "Section one, "G" Company, Reinforce!" and getting our haversacks and fixings tight on, we rushed forward. The bullets sang and spluttered. I held on until I saw some cover with a Highlander and a Cornwall man, when I threw myself down. Evidently I had been followed by some Boer sharpshooter, for the bullets kept around where I was for some time. However, I soon opened fire myself. It was in this line that poor Roland Taylor was shot. He was a fine young man in every respect. After a while we fixed bayonets and charged. We made a splendid charge amid a perfect storm of bullets, but it was too hot for us, so the order was to lie down, which we did, and then retired from the charge by rushes. The fighting went on as before till dark, when the firing ceased. We then helped getting in the dead and wounded for a while. It was very risky work, and we were liable to be shot any moment by the enemy's snipers. Several were hit, and it was then that McCreary of New Brunswick was killed. I can tell you some gruesome stories about this part of our duty when I go home. The battle was a fearful one and lasted the whole day.

We found the accounts of all the boys did not differ greatly. All had narrow escapes : a number of us had our clothes riddled with bullets, others had their were shrieking over our heads on the Boer position in great style—the lyddite blowing up great clouds of dust and earth. One time I saw a man hurled bodily high into the air by the explosion. The shrapnel would break in the air and send a shower of bullets among the enemy. In the evening our company occupied a hill or kopje, where we were on duty all night, watching lest a force expected from Joubert's column should appear. The night was extremely cold.

water bottles shot away, others had their rifles shattered, while fragments of knapsacks, helmets and even the boot-heels of some members of our Company were scattered far and wide. The next morning we cooked our emergency rations, a tin with concentrated cocoa at one end, and concentrated meat essence at the other. On Monday we were ordered to fall in and take a position on a hill. Here we entrenched ourselves and remained for some hours. In the evening we came down, formed up and the battalion marched two or three miles, where we piled arms for the night. Early Tuesday morning, without having any breakfast, we marched off and extended, and our Company advanced in the firing line opposite the Boer Laager and not very far from it. Here we made cover for ourselves. I built one for myself with my bayonet and top of canteen for pick and shovel, and I put a large lyddite shell lengthwise across it and some bushes to hide it from the enemy. All day the bullets were whistling by but only three men were wounded and they were away back in the rear, a heavy artillery fire keeping down the enemy's shooting to a great extent. Our shells

Wednesday morning we marched to another camp for a day's rest, and really had some breakfast. Fred McRae and I visited the trenches of the Boers, held by them in Sunday's battle, and found them full of Mauser and Shrapnel from our shells. Many dead horses and oxen were lying about. Thursday, we remained back of the naval guns till the afternoon, when we occupied kopje to prevent vanguard of enemy's reinforcements coming in.

This Friday morning we are lying around the camp. Below us flows the Modder River, winding away past our position, past the Boer position, then past our camp in the distance. All the morning the bodies of dead Boers and horses have been floating by in great numbers, the heavy rain of last night causing the river to rise about six feet, which, combined with the swift current is bringing them down. Some of the boys have captured a bull and are just skinning it, while others are frying mutton on their canteen covers. This is quite a treat as we have been on short rations for over a week. A balloon is now going up in our camp and we will doubtless be able to locate the enemy."

The Colonel of the Cornwall Regiment who gave the fatal order to charge on that memorable Sunday, was killed in the first volley. In describing the battle Father O'Leary says:

"Canada may well be proud of her noble boys. It is true that many a once happy home is now in mourning since the fatal 18th day of February, but the deep sorrow

LIEUT. C. W. WELDON McLEAN.

(2ND LIEUT. OF THE PRINCESS LOUISE HUSSARS.)

Born Aug. 26th, 1881, St. John, N. B., son of Lieut. Col. H. H. McLean, Barrister, St. John, N. B. In the fall of 1899 was member of senior class in Royal Military College, Kingston. On appointment to 3rd Lieut. in Company "G" received certificate of competency i. e., had passed successfully all examinations up to date and was entitled to hold a commission in Cavalry, Artillery, Engineers or Infantry. The Militia orders of March 6, 1900, gazette the following:—3. "It is notified for information that Lieutenant General Sir H. E. Colville, K. C. M. G., commanding Ninth Division Field Force, has been pleased to select Lieutenant C. W. McLean, 8 Hussars, Second Special Service Battalion, Royal Canadian Regiment to act as A'de-de-Camp on his staff. Mr. Fred Hamilton, correspondent of the Toronto "Globe," stated:—"This appointment comes distinctly as a compliment to the Battalion, and it was such that Colonel Otter was asked to recommend a suitable officer. Lieutenant McLean is the youngest of the officers in point of actual years as well as in seniority, but has done his work so well as fully to merit the distinction conferred upon him.

So it is good-bye to "Little Mac." He leaves the Regiment with the heartiest good wishes of them all. Portraits of Lieut. McLean have appeared in the "Illustrated London News," "The Graphic," "The King," and many other papers. Religion: Presbyterian. Unmarried.

that has entered into the hearts of the loved ones far away will undoubtedly be tempered by the consoling assurance that all have done their duty—all, every one. So say the brave Gordons, the famous Black Watch, the Argylls, the Seaforths, the sturdy Cornwalls,—so say they all.

And oh, that wild mad charge against an invisible enemy. Never shall I forget it, nor shall I attempt to describe it, at least for the present. Hell let loose would give but a faint idea of it. On, on we rushed through a hail of bullets, the air alive again with deadly missiles.

On we rushed, madly, wildly, tearing through brambles, stumbling over prostrate comrades, eager in the delirium of bloodshed and destruction which had seized on us all to reach the enemy's trenches. And above the din of battle, oh, that wild soul-stirring cheer, or rather that savage yell! Like tigers our brave boys bounded over the open, but it was not to be; darkness closed on us ere the position was carried and the day won.

Darkness settled down on that well-fought field, mercifully casting a veil over the horrors. Then began the search for the dead and wounded. In the total darkness, for the least light drew the enemy's fire, we groped over the ground, everywhere our hands steeped in blood, blood, blood. From all directions faint moans coupled with pitiful pleadings for "water, water," reached our ears. Accidentally one would stumble over a friend. Then what pathetic scenes would take place—a message for home—"Tell mother, etc., etc.," or perhaps: "Don't leave me, it won't be long."

The moon soon rose over the weird scene and shed its peaceful rays on many an upturned face, and many of them calm and placid in death. That night myself and a few devoted fellows remained until late on the fatal field, exploring every nook and corner for the wounded, oftener meeting with the mangled dead, until at last our strength gave out, and reaching our line we threw ourselves on the hard ground, seeking rest and forgetfulness in sleep.

So did most of the survivors. Hardly a word was exchanged, for all were exhausted, what with a forced march of twenty miles the preceding night and the trying ordeal of that long, long day.

Monday morning we gathered our dead together and buried them. They had marched and fought shoulder to shoulder, blade beside blade, nor were their ranks broken in death, side by side they were tenderly, lovingly laid to sleep, whilst I performed the last sad but consoling duty of committing them to the care of God's angels when we would be far away from this fateful land."

1881—MAJUBA DAY—1900.

General Cronje and his forces had retired about four miles up the river, where they had their laager in a very strongly entrenched position. As an attack there would have meant great bloodshed, and as Lord Roberts was adverse to any needless loss of life he ordered the troops to advance by means of trenches. The regiments were on duty forty-eight hours alternately.

Each would dig a trench, occupy it, and charge on the Boer laager. It fell to the lot of the Canadians to be last on guard and they built a trench one hundred and fifty yards in advance of the previous one. That same evening Lord Roberts decided that immediate action must be taken. He instructed the Canadians to leave their trenches at three o'clock next morning, and advance with fixed bayonets, the Royal Engineers with pickaxes and shovels to bring up the rear. So at the appointed hour on the morning of the 27th of February the Brigadier passed along the line and gave the order to advance. Supported on the right by the Gordon Highlanders, and on the left by the Shropshires and Sutherland Highlanders with other regiments of Infantry in reserve, the Canadians crept along shoulder to

Born March 3rd, 1878, at Charlottetown. Son of Mr. E. W. Taylor, Charlottetown, P. E. I. educated public school and Prince of Wales College. It was the intention of his father to purchase a farm for him either on the Island or in the North West as he preferred out-of-door employment. On the call "to arms" he was one of the first who enlisted, saying: "My father is an Englishman and I am a son of England." Killed in action at Paardeberg, Feb. 18th, 1900. Methodist.

when suddenly, within sixty-five yards actual measurement, they were met with a most terrific volley, a regular flame of fire from the magazines of the enemy. Instantly all dropped on their faces and in spite of an incessant hail of bullets, held their own, even crawling back twenty-five yards and aiding the Engineers in a temporary construction of a trench. Here they lay for two and a half hours, returning in good earnest the galling fire of the enemy. "F," "G" and "H" Companies were in the front firing line and lost heavily. In that first fatal volley the shoulder in the utter darkness of an African night. Slowly they moved on and on, and were beginning to think the birds had flown, genial hearted Withers and Christian soldier Riggs were among the slain ; another volley, another flame of fire, and the heroic souls of Scott and Johnston returned to Him who gave them. Then the heart-breaking groans of the dying, the shrieks of the wounded and suffering, the cries for "water," "help," and stretcher-bearers were of such a soul stirring nature that it is impossible for pen to describe them.

Dawn at length broke and at six o'clock the hoisting of a white flag intimated that the last desperate stand was all in vain. First a few men advanced, then a few more and finally General Cronje, the lion of Africa, sent terms of unconditional surrender to General Roberts, and he with 4000 men, threw down their arms. "G" and "H" Companies were right on the spot, and it was to them the white flag was first shown. After their victory the captors jumped into the Boer trenches, which were long, narrow and very skillfully constructed. In them they found bags of flour, tins of mealie, bandoliers, books and a large number of rifles.

Cronje's face was absolutely impassive when he approached Lord Roberts, exhibiting no sign of his inner feelings. Lord Roberts was surrounded by his staff when General Prettyman addressing the Field Marshal said : "Commandant Cronje, sir." The commandant touched his hat in salute and Lord Roberts saluted in return, saying : "You have made a gallant defense, sir."

The vanquished general was then royally entertained by Lord Roberts, and the rival soldiers went about laughing, talking and comparing notes, each one congratulating the other on his bravery. One Boer, in conversation, is reported to have said, "We can stand the shooting of the average British soldier, but your Canadians are regular fire eaters and know no fear." Another said, "It is easily seen now what nation is going to rule the world." Cronje with his wife, his grandson, a private secretary, Commanders Albrecht, Wolmeares, and other leaders, went ahead seven hours before the main body, but all met at Modder River and took the same train to Cape Town, en route to St. Helena, which Lord Roberts decided would be a desirable place for his foes. After the departure of the Boer prisoners the British troops marched into the vacated laager. What a sight! Everything lying about in confusion. The men could not be kept in line. In fact the officers were as anxious as they were to get some "loot" and something to eat. Tins of lard, tea, flour, and all kinds of eatables were commandeered. Bonfires were quickly started and soon the odor of fried pancakes and scones was perceptible. The troops had been living on half rations for the three preceding days and thoroughly enjoyed their impromptu meal, with the exception of a few who had fried their pancakes with axle grease by mistake, and were consequently quite ill.

Swiftly the news flashed over the wires of the brilliant charges made by the Canadians at Paardeberg. Canada was filled with pride that her representatives had upheld the honor of the Dominion and so faithfully discharged their duty to God and Motherland. But alas ! honor and glory had not come without loss. The stern reality of war, the true meaning of a blood-stained battlefield came more vividly home than ever before. And while nineteen Canadian heroes were laid to rest under the balmy trees of the now famous Modder, here in their native land bells tolled, flags waved at half-mast, funeral dirges or martial strains swelled forth, and in the homes of loved ones fallen the bowed form of the father, the broken heart of the mother, the pitiful wail of the desolate young wife, showed at what cost the unity of a Greater Britain was purchased.

CHAPTER III.

FAMOUS MARCH TO BLOEMFONTEIN.

"Oh, noble hearts and true, there is work for us to do;
And we'll do it as we did it oft before."

FOR some days after the surrender of Cronje there were slight skirmishes along the bank of the Modder. On March the 6th, the 19th Brigade in conjunction with other columns advanced seven miles up the River, every man carrying his great coat and regulation accoutrements. They passed a large detachment of mounted engineers with waggons of pontoons for crossing the river. At 5.30 p. m., after having had no mid-day meal, half rations of tea were issued, and at dark soup and meat. Two o'clock next morning found them again astir. When four miles up the river they halted and charged their rifle magazines with ten cartridges each; then, with forty-one paces between the companies, advanced towards a flat-topped kopje occupied by the Boers. Darkness now gave place to daylight and the artillery opened fire. The Boers replied from a large gun at the summit of the kopje, their shrapnel shells exploding in front of the artillery causing many casualties. The British were very quick in picking up the range, though under the disadvantage of having to fire to the top of the kopje, while for the enemy it was easy game. After a while the firing ceased and the Boers galloped away, leaving a large gun behind them. The troops marched on and on, and, in the excitement of the occasion, forgot hunger, thirst and weariness. Some fifteen miles further they again attacked a kopje with the same result. From the summit of this kopje the troops beheld a grand spectacle. On the opposite side of the river a great battle had been raging, and in the moonlight thousands upon thousands of cavalry, mounted infantry and troops could be seen streaming after the flying enemy. But soon the weary boys turned their steps to camp and finding the transport wagons had broken down some miles behind, gladly obeyed an order to use their emergency rations. Fortunately a few bags of mealie had accidentally fallen into their hands and consequently the odor of fried pancakes was prevalent far into the night. The benefit their day's march afforded the main column will be seen by quoting some extracts from the Brigade order issued by General Commander Smith-Dorien:

Stagskrall, March 8, 1900.

"The Major General commanding the Brigade wishes all ranks of the Brigade he has the honor to command to understand how thoroughly he appreciates the spirit and zeal shown since the Brigade assembled at Graspan on the 12th and 13th of February. All have been called upon for extraordinary exertions and have had to undergo forced marches, short rations, great wettings, want of water and sleep, and severe and trying fighting, concluding with an extremely arduous and flank march yesterday of some twenty miles. It will be gratifying to them to know that yesterday's march turned the Boers' position on the Sankop and Blue Kopje and threatened their rear and caused them to retreat in haste, making them to cease firing on our naval guns and abandon their own gun, which the Shropshires eventually captured."

Reaching Driefontein, the Brigade encamped by a small kopje. Near them was a house, garden and orchard, completely deserted with the exception of a little kitten. The house was built of brick and stone, the walls being very thick—the inside walls, floors and partitions similar. The roof was flat, consisting of long canes laid closely together, covered with cement. This description answers for all the houses there, some being white, red or gray.

Again astir they marched from an undulating veldt along ridges of low kopjes, and passed houses flying white flags in which were wounded Boers; nurses could be seen moving to and fro within. These houses were always approached with caution as the Boers had, since the beginning of the campaign, established a record that the use and abuse of the white flag

THE LATE PTE. JACOB BOYD SCOTT.

Born January 28th, 1882, Richibucto, Kent Co., New Brunswick. Father drowned at sea, 1882. Deceased lived with aunt, Miss Jane Scott and later with Mr. M. C. Uchack; both of Moncton; educated at public school; in the fall of 1899 was attending the Military School, Fredericton and from there enlisted for active service. Killed in action at Paardeberg, South Africa, Feb. 27th, 1900.

was a desirable and legitimate method of modern warfare. A plea for total supremacy, a desire for expulsion of foreigners, even the issuing of an ultimatum calls forth a certain degree of respect, but artful abuse of the emblem of peace rouses righteous indignation in the mind of every just thinking man in God's universe. But "Our Boys" were fortunate in not falling victims to such intrigue. Proceeding, their march grew more arduous. The ground became rough and rocky, or else swampy, with long grass and large stones covered with a slimy substance that proved very trying to the men who could only get a sure footing by stepping high and looking for the low places beneath. Yet this was not always practicable as the soles of their boots became smooth and slippery. Then what with hunger, thirst, thunderstorms, intense heat by day, cold by night, and the great fatigue of rapid marching, a large number from all the regiments dropped out.

The Canadians were no worse than any other regiment; in fact they showed great pluck in holding out in the manner they did. In many cases their boots were completely gone, yet with their feet torn and mangled, bravely they tramped on mile after mile. Along the line of march they would often come to large watermelon patches. The soldiers were not allowed to leave the ranks, but the negroes on the transport wagons helped themselves and throwing the skins away, the boys, nearly famished, would fairly fight for one to moisten their parched lips. At times they would halt by a spring where unfortunately the water proved not only yellow, but contained multitudes of small, squirming animals—still, "down it went and welcome." Every morning long ere dawn had broken, the troops were on the tramp, through gullies, over kopjes, up hill and down hill, but to the boys it seemed mostly "up," still they were cheerful, and with the Gordons playing their bagpipes, the Canadians singing "the Maple Leaf forever," all gallantly kept on.

When stopping for a rest on the fourth day's tramp, vague rumors ran through the camp of dissension among the Boers, followed by the announcement that the advance guard under General French was in Bloemfontein and the British flag waved where it had waved forty years before. Instantly a sudden roar and wild cheers arose from five thousand voices. The tired foot-sore soldiers, with haggard, weary faces, brightened up in a moment and all was congratulation and animation. It was well worth the long days of semi-starvation and toilsome march to participate in such a scene. This march, though not as long as previous march to Bloemfontein. Then I must bear testimony to the late Pte. Alfred Riggs, whose body was found under the Boer entrenchments. He was an earnest Christian worker and his religion was no put on thing. On board the "Sardinian" coming out he took an active part in the services held by Rev. Mr. Fullerton and Mr. Barrie. He was indefatigable in asking men to give their souls to Christ, and when he asked it he meant it.

ones, is conceded by best authorities to have been one of the most difficult feats of the campaign, and is now reported to be on record as the second most famous march in the annals of British history.

Writing of the pluck, endurance and heroism of the soldier boys, "Chibucto" correspondent to the Halifax Herald says:

"Take the case of Nelson Brace of "G" Company, belonging to Charlottetown. Brace was wounded in the thigh on the morning of February 27th, and concealing the fact, getting a comrade to dress his wound, actually hobbled along and got through fulfilling the object of his desire, namely, to be in at the finish of this

He was quite a lad and his face was always illuminated by a bright happy smile which only true grace can impart. And shall we efface from our memories the heroic action of Sivert of Nova Scotia who literally threw his life away in order to save another."

Of brave New Brunswick boys (Lieut.) Arthur Mellish wrote to a friend in St. John: "We are so pleased at the kind sympathy shown by the people of St. John and all Canada for us in our great struggle. The thought has helped us in many a hard march and fierce battle, and when we have felt weary and hungry and ready to drop with fatigue the thought of how the friends at home felt for us and trusted in us has kept us from giving in, and enabled us to hold our own even with veteran soldiers such as the Gordons, Cornwalls and Shropshires, which compose our brigade.

The suspense must have been terrible among our parents and friends during the days they knew we were fighting the Lion of Africa, as Cronje is known, and as the dead and wounded had their names telegraphed home the heart-breakings must have been piteous. But that is the way with everything, the greater the sacrifice the greater the glory. And those who have died for our country have died nobly, and after all, life does not consist in quantity, but quality.

In our company no nobler or braver man fell than Pat. McCreary. He was a stretcher bearer, and as such was not compelled to go nearer than one hundred and fifty yards to the fighting line, but all day Sunday, regardless of the hissing bullets, he succored the wounded, and as evening fell he went away forward where many of us had fallen in the charge, and there he was riddled with bullets by the cowardly and dishonorable enemy. Then too, I must tell you of another New Brunswick man named Hatfield. In the march from Paardeberg here to Bloemfontein his boots gave out. Wrapping his puttees round his feet he stubbornly limped on, mile after mile, never giving in. His feet were covered with blood blisters, the nails of his toes were torn off and bleeding, and every step must have been a hell to him, but he would not give up. And as there were lads in our company who could die like McCreary and march like Hatfield, doubtless there were like Canadians in the other companies. So you see that I cannot help feeling proud that I was allowed to resign my commission and live and fight with privates who were men." In writing to Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Taylor of Charlottetown on the death of their son Roland the same writer says: "Just a line to express my heartfelt sympathy in your irreparable loss. Your son was the friend of us all. During the tedious and trying months he was with us he always remained cheerful and by his example encouraged the downhearted. Never during that time of constant association did I hear him utter a profane or improper word, but he lived in the midst of most trying surroundings a quiet, unostentatious Christian life, quietly reading his Bible every night. One day when coming from Thomas' farm-house, where we had dinner he told me what a comfort it was to him to have a settled Christian belief. He lived nobly and died gloriously."

It might be interesting to the reader to know that in the battle of Paardeberg the thirty Island boys stood shoulder to shoulder, and in the famous march to Bloemfontein not one member of Company "G" fell out of the ranks.

The entry of Lord Roberts into Bloemfontein was unique in every detail. President Steyn, finding opposition was useless, retreated with a large force towards Kroonstadt, and Lord Roberts was met three miles from the city and formally presented with the keys of Government House and other official buildings.

Cheer after cheer greeted the Commander-in-chief and his force on their arrival at the Capital. The glorious news had spread throughout the city like wild fire, and all the pent-up excitement that had lain dormant in the bosoms of the English people during the long tedious months of the war, burst forth into exultant joy and thanksgiving. A Union Jack, the handiwork of Lady Roberts, made expressly for this occasion, was hoisted by Lord Roberts, while flags were frantically waved and hats thrown in the air; strangers clasped hands, strong men became hysterical, and all deliriously and wildly shouted "Three cheers for the army, three cheers for 'Bobs,' and three cheers for the Queen."

The following telegram from Lord Roberts to the War Office is expressive of the true nobility of the man:

Bloemfontein, O. F. S., S. Africa,

Educated Charlottetown Business College (Diploma 1897), Royal Military College Fredericton, (1st class certificate 1899.) Appointments: Lieutenant in No. 3 S2nd Regiment, 1899. affairs of the city are managed by a Mayor and Town Council. A statue of Sir John Grant, the founder of the State, stands in front of the Government Buildings. It was unveiled on the 5th of July, 1893, — an excellent bronze cast on a polished pedestal surrounded by railings, and was the first statue erected in South Africa to a native born South African.

Among the many spacious and imposing dwellings, Government House stands out conspicuously. It is a solid structure built of polished freestone of elegant architectural design, and is surrounded by an extensive flower garden and orchard. It was from this Garden of Eden that President Steyn fled, and here Lord Roberts enjoyed a temporary abode.

The principal seat of learning for boys— "Grey's College." —was founded in 1886 by Sir George Grey, then governor of Cape Colony and High Commissioner for South Africa. The institution has an average attendance of three hundred pupils from all over South Africa. On May 10th, 1874, Lady Brant laid the foundation stone of the "Free State Ladies' Institute." A staff of teachers was engaged from Europe and now this institution ranks on a level with Grey's College.

There is also in Bloemfontein a large public library, three permanent hospitals, and churches of all denominations. One of "Our Boys" in writing, says:—"On entering the Dutch church one is struck with the sight of an old-fashioned pulpit standing in the middle of a small chancel. The music is good, but sad and melancholy; the clergyman looks white and thin, the men seem sad and downcast, while the women are continually wiping their eyes. They have lost husbands, brothers and lovers in the war, and have not even victory to console them. In the English Church, however, a magnificent choral service goes with a jubilant swing. The lights on the altar, a deep chancel, with the choir boys on either side,—the robed priests,—the vast audience of soldiers and civilians, is a grand sight. But even here the presence of Red Cross nurses in uniform reminds one of the sick, wounded and dying near by, for every house or available spot in the city is being used as a hospital."

Bloemfontein can also boast of a Natural History Museum, founded in 1877. The specimens include gold quartz, diamond-iferous soil, collections of snakes, native weapons, parchments, old deeds, currency, stuffed lions, tigers, African birds, flying lizards and many relics of ancient and modern wars, even shrapnel and other shells that the English fired against the Boers at the Battle of Colesburg in the present campaign. A curio of special interest is a small locomotive with cars and rails attached. It seems that when the Capitalists wanted to build a railway in the country they had this imitation made and operated for the benefit of the doubting Boers, who when fully convinced that as this diminutive engine could pull small cars so could a larger one pull larger cars, acknowledged that a railroad could be built.

A newspaper called "The Friend," formerly hostile to the British, but later published by correspondents on Lord Roberts' staff, contained the following proclamation on Lord Roberts' staff, contained the following

PROCLAMATION.

TO THE BURGHERS OF THE ORANGE FREE STATE.

The British troops under my command, having entered the Orange Free State, I feel it my duty to make known to all Burghers the cause of our coming, as well as to do all in my power to put an end to the devastation caused by this war, so should they continue the war the inhabitants of the Orange Free State may not do so ignorantly, but with full knowledge of their responsibility before God for the lives lost in the campaign.

Before the war began the British Government, which had always desired and cultivated peace and friendship with the people of the Orange Free State, gave a solemn assurance to President Steyn that, if the Orange Free State remained neutral, its territory would not be invaded, and its independence would be at all times fully respected by Her Majesty's Government.

In spite of that declaration, the Government of the Orange Free State was guilty of a wanton and unjustifiable invasion of British territory.

The British Government believes that this act of aggression was not committed with the general approval and free will of a people with whom it has lived in complete amity for so many years. It believes that the responsibility rests wholly with the Government of the Orange Free State, acting, not in the interests of the country, but under mischievous influences from without. The British Government, therefore, wishes the people of the Orange Free State to understand that it bears them no ill will, and as far as is compatible with the successful conduct of the war, and the re-establishment of peace in South Africa, it is anxious to preserve them from the evils brought upon them by the wrongful action of their Government.

Requisitions for food, forage, fuel or shelter, made on the authority of the officers in command of Her Majesty's troops must be at once complied with, but everything will be paid for on the spot, prices being regulated by the local market rates. If the inhabitants of any district refuse to comply with the demands made on them, the supplies will be taken by force, a full receipt being given.

Should any inhabitant of the country consider that he or any member of his household has been unjustly treated by any officer, soldier, or civilian attached to the British Army, he should submit his complaint, either personally or in writing to my Head-Quarters or to the Head-Quarters of the nearest General Officer. Should the complaint on enquiry be substantiated, redress will be given.

Orders have been issued by me, prohibiting soldiers from entering private houses, or molesting the civil population on any pretext whatever, and every precaution has been taken against injury to property on the part of any person belonging to, or connected with the Army.

ROBERTS, Field Marshal,
Commander in Chief, South Africa.

In gay holiday attire, with flags and bunting flying, guns firing, parades of militia and civilians, Bloemfontein on the 29th day of May celebrated one of the most important events in the campaign. The excitement reached a climax at noon when the Military Governor and Lord Roberts declared the annexation of the Orange Free State, henceforth to be known as the Orange River Colony. The occasion, one of great state and pomp, was graced by the presence of Lady Roberts, the Hon. Misses Roberts and many other titled personages. The ceremony concluded with the firing of a salute, lusty cheers and singing of "God Save the Queen." The British troops, numbering about 60,000 encamped at Ferrara, eight miles outside of Bloemfontein. Col. Otter at once used the donation money sent from Canada and purchased food and clothing for his Regiment. Still they had no shelter at night beyond the canopy of heaven, "and so it happened that many sturdy fellows who had withstood the hardship of forced marches and the fatigues of battle, were obliged to haul down their colours at the fag-end of the Free State rainy season. Most of the typhoid cases were undoubtedly due to the execrable water imbibed during the famous march upon Bloemfontein, most of which was obtained from the Modder River. The translation of "Modder" is muddy, but the vile stuff which our soldiers drank without boiling or filtering, was far worse than muddy. When taken from below Cronje's laager, at Paardeberg, it was simply liquid filth, of which drainage, decomposed horse, and a stray human corpse formed component parts. The army doctors cautioned the men to boil Modder water, but in a country like the Free State, where wood is often unprocurable, it was impossible to make sure of the necessary fire. A thirsty soldier in South Africa is willing, moreover, to run more risks in one day than the average man encounters throughout his life.

Another source of infection was the immense number of dead horses which lined the route of the army. There was a place on the way called Ossfontein, which the soldiers—on account of equine dead—promptly altered to “Deadossfontein.” Not alone horses, but a large number of oxen had been killed, and the carcasses of the poor creatures torn open and partially devoured by birds of prey, who collected around the victims in ghoulish groups, were half broiled by the tropical heat. The stench was intolerable, and, taken in conjunction with Muddy water for breakfast, dinner and tea, proved more disastrous than bullets of the enemy.”

Only five men of each Company were allowed in Bloemfontein at once. The Canadians were objects of great curiosity. Dr. Conan Doyle in the London Times said: “The Canadians are fine strapping fellows, broad-shouldered, clean-limbed and blue-eyed. They swung past with easy stride and free gait, conscious of strength and pride brought with them from the lakes and mountains of Canada. Their boots were out at the toes, their stockings undarned, their breeches torn, then mended and torn again, but every stain was honor to those sons from over the sea, who have marched shoulder to shoulder with regiments of long and great tradition.”

The people of Bloemfontein were remarkably kind and hospitable. For instance when one of the soldiers was strolling along he heard the exclamation, “Why, there is a Maple Leaf,” and turning, was warmly greeted by a Mr. Patterson of the R. R. department, who at once invited him to his house where this “Maple Leaf” and many other “Maple Leaves” often spent a pleasant hour.

Although the city was then in the hands of the English, strict vigil had to be kept in case of an attack from the Boers. The troops were frequently marched out at 3 o'clock in the morning to scatter the enemy's forces.

On April 5th, after a tramp of fourteen miles the Canadians met with a pleasant surprise in the unexpected arrival of their tents, last used in Belmont. And for Company “G” also had arrived the long looked for Christmas boxes. Notwithstanding they had been packed five months previous, containing private parcels and practical remembrances from the friends in N. B. and P. E. Island, everything was in first-class condition. The cake,—who, on earth, but mother could bake like that? and what with preserves, canned goods, plum puddings, nuts, raisins and confectionery—~~why~~, it would have done the hearts of the donors good to have seen how the soldier boys, on the battle-field of far distant Africa appreciated these bounties of their love!

support of a contingent than any other individual in Canada.

On March the 12th, "Strathcona's Horse" and one hundred recruits to fill the vacancies made by casualties in the First Contingent sailed from Halifax.

While the Royal Canadians were doing good work in South Africa, Canada was all astir in sending off a second contingent. This Regiment, 1320 strong, known as "The Mounted Rifles and Royal Canadian Artillery," embarked from Halifax in three detachments during the first six weeks of 1900. Later an offer from Lord Strathcona, Canadian High Commissioner in London, Eng., to equip and forward five hundred mounted men, was accepted by the Imperial Government. at Halifax, the different contingents were given a hearty and enthusiastic farewell.

The respective transports arrived safely in Cape Town, South Africa. Here the troops were brigaded into different divisions, and while we regret that we cannot follow them further, it has been proved that by bravery, heroism and noble sacrificing of life during privations, long marches and heavy engagements, all have added a more brilliant lustre to our Maple Leaf and ever kept unsullied the honor of Britain.

first contingent was repeated for her sixteen recruits in the Reinforcement quota. New Brunswick agreed to pay each of her sixty-five volunteers in the second contingent and ten representatives in the reinforcements fifty cents a day in addition to the Imperial allowance. The sum of money required to pay the men of the four contingents from the date of departure up to August 31st, 1900, when the allowance ceased was $25,335.00. Minor donations increased the sum to over $26,355.00 To meet this the Legislature of New Brunswick voted $5000.00, the city of St. John $2,000, while the balance was made up by private subscriptions and local societies. The spirit of wide-spread loyalty was such that throughout all Canada, and finally

CHAPTER IV.

"Stand to your work and be wise, captain of sword and pen,
Who are neither children nor gods—but men in the world of men."

AFTER remaining in Bloemfontein for over six weeks, Lord Roberts with an army of 40,000, began his march northward on May 1st. The general advance was made along the line of the Orange River Colony to Bradford, Winberg, Kroonstadt, Johannesburg and thence to Pretoria.

On April the 20th, when the enemy was driven north from Wepener and DeWep's Dorp, General French was ordered to hasten with his cavalry and intercept them at Modder River, and General Hamilton, in command of the 19th Brigade, was to go south and cut off their retreat at Thaba N'Chu, both divisions to connect with the main advance column at Winberg.

* * * * *

All was bustle and confusion in the Canadian camp on the early morning of April the 21st. Haversacks packed, army blankets strapped, rubber sheets, great coats, and spare blankets piled high on transport waggons. A command "Attention!" "Form in line!" "March!" and our heroes were on the tramp once more. On and on they marched, not even halting for a mid-day meal. Finally the pump, pump of the waterworks could be clearly discerned amid the roar of Artillery, and on May 3rd, after a short and decisive engagement at Springfield, the principal waterworks station of the Orange Free State was taken by Gen. Broadwood. The Canadians were then put on patrol and sentry duty, and in the evening a number of "G" Company marched back to camp, carrying a branch of a willow tree, looking like the enemy attacking Macbeth.

It was found that a large body of the enemy held a strong position between Springfeld and Thaba N'Chu so the Brigade once more forded the Modder and advanced in extended order. A number of the boys took shelter behind some ant hills, and in the excitement of the battle Hedley McKinnon, Arthur Mellish, Ambrose Rodd and Arthur Dillon did not hear the order to retire and suddenly discovered they were facing the enemy alone. Equipped in full marching order, it was impossible for them to secrete themselves from the enemy. The Boers seemed to understand the situation fully and centralized their rifle and volley fire on their diminutive fortresses. Still the boys hung on, calling out alternately "How are you making it?" "Still there?" etc. To add to their peril the enemy began firing from the top of the kopje to their left, from which there was no protection. Excitement grew intense—the boys vowed to do or die, and, keeping their noses well under cover, returned a continual fire. Their friendly ant hills; riddled with bullets, were literally torn away and death seemed inevitable when reinforcements arrived and the position was carried.

In a later engagement, the Canadians found the kopjes strengthened with trenches and entanglements, and, although only five hundred strong, steadily advanced. Suddenly, when within 1500 yards, they were met with a terrific fusilade of fire. Instantly there was a wild roar, yet the boys pressed on. Two shots struck Col. Otter, one grazing his neck and the other his shoulder; still he bravely encouraged his men forward. "Fix bayonets and charge!"

Born July 19th, 1872, New Glasgow, P. E. I., son of John McDonald, Esq., New Glasgow; educated, Prince of Wales College, Charlottetown; called to Bar of P. E. I., July 30th 1897; attended Provisional School of Infantry, Charlottetown, during spring of 1898; Provisional School of Equitation, Charlottetown, 1898; appointed Lieutenant in 82nd Queen's Co. Regiment; in February, 1900, appointed to fill a vacancy as Lieutenant in first contingent.

rang out the order, and down the Boers jumped from their position and galloped speedily away ; for if there is anything that strikes terror to the heart of the Boer it is those fatal words : " Fix bayonets and charge."

After the engagement General Smith-Dorien in congratulating Col. Otter said that the Regiment had acted with splendid courage, admirable steadiness and good judgment, and that he had often placed the Canadians in the most difficult positions and never found the men wanting in anything that goes to make up splendid soldiers. To the regret of the regiment, Col. Otter was compelled to return to Bloemfontein for medical treatment, but fortunately his injuries were only slight.

BATTLE OF HOUKNET.

The junction made by the forces of Gen. French and Gen. Ian Hamilton at Thaba N'Chu, again separated ; the latter known as the Winberg column, divided into three divisions,— Artillery, Engineers, Mounted and Foot Infantry, numbering in all 1200, and continued their march along the main line. In advancing, the country seemed to improve, the land even looking as if it might make good pasturage, though by no means equal to the grazing in Canada. A fight was expected before entering Winberg. On nearing the town the column found a great number of troops and transports encamped. These regiments proceeded to pass through two ranges of kopjes, the 19th Brigade being held in reserve. The Imperial Volunteers and Cameron Highlanders extended on the right ; mounted men dashed on and, dismounting, extended and advanced on the kopje towards the left. Then came the rattle of musketry from the British. Instantly the Boer artillery opened fire from a high kopje, their shells bursting all over the field ; an action began on the left also and the 19th Brigade advanced in extended order. The British shells soon began to burst on the kopjes and the Boers could be seen galloping away. Still the artillery fire was continued but finally silenced by a large naval gun. The mounted men, scamperring here and there, the hills dotted with khaki—as the men advanced—the row of horse-artillery, the oxen dragging the great naval guns, the long line of transports, and occasionally a bunch of white covered ambulances, flying a Red Cross flag, looming in the distance, presented a grand panorama. The troops gradually cleared the hills and advanced onwards once more. The slaughter of the Boers was very great, trails of blood being discernable on all sides. So this engagement, known as the battle of Houknet, proved another defeat for the Boers. After marching some hours, the column came to a narrow gorge or pass which was crossed with great difficulty, being crowded with troops, ammunition, carts and transports.

But finally the Canadians came to a place of shelter by a donga, at the foot of a kopje. On ascending they found the Gordons had completely cleaned it out, but as the Mauser bullets were still sniping past, it was not safe to be seen on the sky line. The shell fire on this kopje had ceased and the regiment was ranged along the hill to hold it for the night, with orders to move on against the Boers in the morning. So the Canadians ranged in order, with bayonets fixed, and at dawn advanced against the enemy, who were occupying what was really part of the same kopje, with dips between, and gradually drove them back. About 10 o'clock they were subjected to a severe shell fire again, but bravely advanced and finally succeeded in gaining the position, completely routing the enemy and capturing their Long Tom.

Tramp ! tramp ! tramp ! It was the 26th day of May and the force under General Hamilton marched twelve miles beyond Thaba N'Chu to a neck through which it was expected the Boers would pass in their retreat from Wepener, but only to find that opposition the previous day at Yester Neck had accomplished this purpose. An advance southward, a slight skirmish, a tramp of twenty miles and the Brigade was back again at Thaba N'Chu. During the evening the boys lay around the camp watching shells of the enemy's big guns bursting on kopjes near by. Before daybreak next morning, mounted men, infantry, guns and transports again moved forward. At noon the Canadians halted while the Gordons went off to the left and Shropshires advanced. Soon the booming of cannon, the rattle of rifle fire, the reports of pom-pom, and the carrying past of the dead told that a fight was on in earnest. Near the Canadians were a number of Kaffirs in charge of ammunition carts. Suddenly a shell burst in their midst; half frantic with fright, and with the wildest terror depicted on their faces, they ran off, helter skelter, to a place of safety. "Advance Canadians, support the Gordons!" In a moment the Regiment was hastening forward. Shells fell like hail stones. One fell near "H" Company; one among the boys of Company "G," scattering the clay hither and thither; then, as if hurled from the gates of hell, one burst with awful violence in the midst of Company "C" and Pte. Cotton of Toronto was instantly killed. Another boom! a whiz! a whirl! and from the force of a flying shell one of "Our Boys" was hurled bodily many feet in the air. "Are you hurt?" cried a comrade, but beyond a stunning and general shaking up he felt no serious effects and bravely kept on with the regiment. Another march, another river crossed on rocky ledges; and the

Canadians proceed to climb a high kopje by a steep, rugged and picturesque path, lined with large mimosa trees. At this place a number of gentlemen and officers passed the Brigade, carrying a British flag rolled on a pole. They proved to be a deputation from Winberg, offering the surrender of the town. Thus Winberg was entered without opposition. The formal entry was preceded by a brass band and the same deputation carrying, unfurled, the Union Jack, who paraded through the streets, hoisting the British flag on all important buildings, while a throng of soldiers and civilians cheered to the echo. The residents of Winberg showed their delight at the entrance of the troops by literally throwing their homes open and doing all in their power for the comfort of the soldier boys. The Canadian Contingent was now very much decimated, being four hundred and fifty-two, while Company "G" had only thirty-four members on parade. Here the Regiment was reinforced by the Draft from Canada, who received a royal welcome at the hands of their veteran brothers.

From Winberg the column marched north to Kroodstadt, then eastward towards Lindley, the very centre of the Boer country, where ex-President Steyn had set up a default-administration. The British were daily threatened with an attack from a surrounding force, but beyond a rapid chase over some kopjes, a slight skirmish, capturing of fifteen of the enemy's waggons, and taking twenty-four Boer prisoners, Lindley was occupied by the victorious host.

Again they started. Again the Boers flew ahead and again the British increased their speed and hastened on. Mr. Richmond Smith, special correspondent of the "Star," says:—

"On they went, over ridges, through fields of meales and ploughed ground galloped the cavalry, followed by the guns. It was a grand chase. Then as four butts or ridges were passed on a gallop, suddenly a pom-pom opened fire away to the left, then another, and finally a third! Had the enemy fallen into our hands at last? Up over another grassy ridge at breakneck speed, and lo! the cause of the firing was apparent! Three or four thousand yards ahead, far below us was the Boer convoy crossing the spruit and slowly crawling up the opposite bank. The Royal Horse Artillery guns were quickly unlimbered and opened fire on the convoy. Shell after shell dropped among the wagons but still they trekked on. Along the ridges to the right the enemy's riflemen kept up a galling rifle fire upon the cavalry as it advanced to clear the ground for the advance of the guns. A dozen shells among the enemy's waggons and the guns again limbered up and dashed ahead. Again they unlimbered and a perfect hail of shells from the Royal Horse and pom-poms fell among the trekking waggons. Suddenly, there was a loud report and a shell dropped in the midst of our advancing cavalry.

The enemy in a desperate attempt to protect this convoy had opened fire from a gun placed with great cleverness around the nose of a kopje to our left front across the spruit. But our gunners had soon the gun galloped into position, and in a few minutes four shells dropped all about the enemy's gun. Quick as lightning the gun was limbered up and galloped away out of our sight around the protecting kopje from which it came. Meantime the rest of our artillery turned its attention to the slowly moving convoy! A dozen waggons cut off from the rest left the road to escape our shell fire and trekked across the veldt. Two whole batteries were turned upon them and shells landed in half dozens at a turn in front, behind and all about them. Away to the right along a high ridge came the sound of a continual rattle of musketry. Then came the sound of guns with the continual pom-pom of the Maxim Nordenfeldt. It was our mounted infantry driving the enemy's riflemen from the ridge overlooking and commanding the spruit and shell stormed convoy. The guns opened on our left away on the opposite side of the spruit, more mounted infantry with guns shelling the main convoy of the enemy as it trekked over the ridges beyond the drift. On galloped the guns in front! The tail of the convoy could not escape us! Another hail of shells from a closer range and the waggons were deserted by their drivers as shells burst in a mass about them. They had stopped! They were ours. On galloped the cavalry across the drift and up the opposite slope. Galloping after I found we had captured fifteen waggons loaded with all kinds of stores and the whole of the enemy's sick convoy of ambulances. It had been the most exciting chase imaginable and differed from most fights inasmuch as the whole panorama was spread out before one! It was practically over, however, though the cavalry followed on for miles and succeeded in bringing back a couple more waggons unable to keep up with the speedy trek of the Boer convoy! It had been a great day! Seldom indeed is it that one gets a chance of seeing so pretty a fight.

As the sun peeped over the ridges in the east, the following morning, Monday May 21st, the column moved out of bivouack at Karoo Spruit. Another hard day's trekking without a fight of any kind brought us to Witpoort, about ten or twelve miles south of Helibron. Here the column bivouacked for the night! One could write for days on the humorous incidents of these awful days of hard trekking for they have their humorous as well as their pathetic side! I had outspanned at Witpoort just before dark, tired out with a long and wearisome day in the saddle. A regiment of infantry crawled slowly up the incline close to where my cart was! I was thinking in a tired sort of a way, how much harder it was for the foot soldier with his awful burden of knapsack, belts, ammunition, pannikins and rifle to trudge wearily all day, than it was for one without belts and burdens to do the same distance in the saddle, when I was hailed in a cheerful manner! They were the Canadians! I had not been able to distinguish them in the growing darkness. Tired, hungry, grimy and footsore, but still they were cheerful—facing the enemy on the battle-field was hard enough, but these weary marches from dawn till sunset were infinitely worse! How thin their ranks were! Scarce four hundred of the thousand who landed with me in Cape Town six weary months ago! Some had died like heroes, their faces to the foe, but by far the greater number had either passed away from fever, brought on by just such marches as the one we had done that day and the filthy water and insufficient food and clothing! Only the harder and more fortunate of the regiment had been able to endure the hardships of the most difficult campaigns any army has ever been called upon to endure! And yet they were cheerful! This was my train of thought when I was interrupted by a cheerful voice asking permission to light his pipe at my fire. I looked up, wondering that any Tommy could be so cheerful after so hard a day! Never in my life did I see such a figure! Clad in thin khaki drill uniform, black and grimy and torn and tattered with much wear, stood a figure leaning heavily on his rifle. He had the usual complement of belts, knapsack, and ammunition belt, and in addition, several tin cans tied to his belt, out of which were sticking ears of corn or mealies as they are called here; carrots and beans. In one hand he carried a large pumpkin! Tied to his waist and cross belts, was a motley collection of beet roots, squashes and other vegetables! He looked a veritable Father Christmas and he must have been carrying close on to a hundred pounds with his belts and rifle! From his badge I saw at once that he was a Canadian! And he was cheerful! Asked if he was sick of the war, he replied that like everyone else he would be glad when it was over, but he quickly added: "I would not have missed the experience for all the money in the world!" He hadn't any complaints to make! Often he was hungry and did not get enough to eat, but all the other regiments in the brigade were the same! With quiet thankfulness he accepted a cup of hot coffee and offered me some of the vegetables he had carried for miles! He even seemed put out when I refused to accept them and was only satisfied when I told him I had lots to eat in my cart and could not take what he had carried so far."

HOW OUR BOYS CELEBRATED THE QUEEN'S BIRTHDAY.

God save the Queen! "We celebrated the Queen's birthday," writes a member of Company "G," "by an excursion over the veldt of fifteen miles. Of course for such an exceptional ordinance we arose from our downy beds at the early hour of 4.30; at 4.45 had our blankets packed, at 5 o'clock enjoyed a luxurious breakfast consisting of a piece of scone, cooked the previous evening, and a drink of coffee. Before daylight at 5.45 we started, all in good spirits and marched, with occasional halts, for about five miles. We came to a farm house with trees around it and on one tree were bunches of what looked like bananas, so

RALPH FAARAR MARKHAM.

(LIEUTENANT 8TH HUSSARS.)

Born Feb. 24th, 1877, St. John, N. B., son of Lieut.-Col. A. Markham, of St. John Sun; educated Rothesay Collegiate School, University of New Brunswick. Engaged on newspaper staff. Attended Royal School of Cavalry, Toronto, 1898; appointed Lieutenant 8th Hussars 1898; resigned commission and enlisted as private in the Mounted Rifles 2nd Canadian Contingent, Jan. 1900.

Lieut. Jones, now commanding Company "G," Capt. Macdonnell being ill, told one man from each section to go and get some fruit for the crowd. Ned Small bounded away from our section, but returned soon at a slower pace; the bananas had proved nothing but bunches of hard corn hung up to dry. It was a great joke. Another piece of fun was on the previous day when thirty of us were ordered out on a sheep fatigue expedition. We easily surrounded a flock and each captured a sheep, and, holding one of its fore legs and one of its hind legs together, straddled it across his shoulders, and marched back to camp, handing it to the Regimental butcher, who had the privilege of keeping the heart and liver for his trouble. But to continue,—the country had all been burnt over by the Boers in order to show up our khaki suits and as we marched along with thousands of foot, artillery and transports we raised a cloud of fine black dust that was suffocating and made it difficult to distinguish soldiers from Kaffirs. Finally we halted and when an issue of flour as the day's rations was served we proceeded to cook our supper in style. Matheson mixed the flour with some baking powder we happened to have, on a rubber sheet. Then we made a fire with scrappings and straw, and every fellow in the section cooked a bun on the top of his canteen. True they were not very promising "cheetivis" being half between a pancake and scone with a little ashes etc. to heighten the taste. Then came an issue of tea, soup, an extra supply of rum for those who take it. It is dark now by 5 o'clock and about 8 o'clock we heard a distant cheer, and the National Anthem came floating over the veldt, then some near regiment took it up; nearer and nearer drew the cheer and song until our company joined in, and in less than three minutes the welkin rang and resounded to the echo of "God save the Queen." Then a band struck up "When the boys come marching home again," and I tell you this was sung with great gusto all over the camp. Other airs followed, but gradually faded away; silence reigned and I dropped off to sleep, the last memory of that Queen's birthday being a spirited discussion between Dillon, Arbuckle and Matheson, as to whether the bandmaster of the Shrops, or our Godfrey was the greatest bandmaster in the world."

Tramp! tramp! tramp! over an endless veldt and difficult as the marching was for the troops, the transport waggons almost found the country impassable, but bravely they struggled on, "sometimes with the column, sometimes miles behind, sometimes on the road, sometimes off; up hill and down hill, across deep spruits, over rocks, through water; the kaffirs screaming, the mules braying, officers shouting directions and orders; everyone, black, white, officers or men, swearing at each other, at the mules, at the horses, at the road, at the weather and almost swearing at themselves for being such fools as to go to war."

"Look, boys, look at the sky," cried one of "Our Boys" on the evening of May 27th, "French is heliographing Lord Roberts, he has crossed the Vaal. Three cheers and a tiger for General French," and the veldt re-echoes again and again to the lustrous cheers of those buoyant hearts. With vigor and spirits aglow they again move forward, and on the 26th of May the "Fighting Nineteenth" as the Brigade was named, waded, waist deep, into the Vaal and crossed from the Free State boundary into the territory of Oom Paul. The Brigade had the honor to be the first British infantry to set foot on the Transvaal Republic. As the boys climbed up the steep, rocky embankment and the silvery waves lapped in on the golden shore, anecdotes of great hauls of smelts, trout, mackerel and salmon, caught in Canadian waters, were exchanged; but the stern reality of war recognizes no sentiment—and reminiscences of the past were drowned by an order to form in line and march eighteen miles to Drientspruit.

Military experts, arm-chair critics, and even the Boers of the Orange River Colony prophesied that the enemy would make a decided stand and resist the advance of the British on the border of their country, but, to the amazement of all, not a shot was fired, not a shell thrown to prevent the invasion of the Republic by the victorious army of Britain. On to Johannesburg Lord Roberts and his hosts advanced, and on May 30th entered the Golden City. It is said that when the war began Johannesburg folded its arms and went to sleep. The Stock Exchange closed its doors, the mines shut down, the millionaires went abroad, the shops were fenced in, the private homes boarded up, and the few stragglers that did pass along the deserted thoroughfare seemed to have no energy and moved as if in a dream. On all sides were vast heaps of slate-coloured powder, the trailers of the mines, heaps upon heaps piled mountains high, surrounding scaffold and chimney, leaving little range of sky and speaking to the educated eye of unlimited wealth in the tunnels under ground. Roads were everywhere; railroads, tram-roads, waggon roads, and millions of wires, telephone, telegraph, electric, trolley wires, all crossing each other in indescribable confusion, as if some enormous spider had woven a huge web over the land while Johannesburg slept. This, then, was the city Lord Roberts entered and his reception was more like a funeral service than a triumphant entry. But the Union Jack was hoisted, the soldiers cheered, a few onlookers smiled a dreary smile, and the Field Marshall was happy.

Boom! boom! boom! the 19th Brigade is beyond Johannesburg. In the rear guard the Canadians hear the hammering pom-pom, the shrieking shell, the whistling bullet. Their advance guard is engaging the enemy. The Gordons are ordered to advance, the Canadians to act in reserve. All day a fierce and exciting battle ensues, until finally the Boers evacuate their position and flee. At dawn once more the "Fighting Nineteenth" move forward, this time the Canadians are advance guard. Over great kopjes, through winding roads and across the veldt where the fight had taken place the previous day they move. Large heaps of granite piled high up in pyramidal style, as if designed for some purpose, are scattered along the roadway.

A heavy mist lies over the land but by noon it gradually becomes thinner and thinner until in the distance can be discerned Pretoria. Instantly a roar, a cheer, a wild shout, a hip, hip, hurrah, rings out from thousands of voices. What a transformation goes over that long line of troops, how sprightly their step, their fifty pounds of accoutrements seem as nothing; how happy they look; every one is in buoyant spirits, and as usual, whistling "The Maple Leaf Forever." After forming a conjunction with another column of Lord Robert's army, all advance in splendid style towards the coveted metropolis.

CHAPTER V.

PRETORIA.

"Rest lads! ye have wrung from this death-ride gory Baptisement of blood, and a mantle of glory."

PRETORIA, the seat of the South African Republic, with its magnificent fortresses costing over two millions of pounds sterling,—Pretoria, on the threshold of which Kruger threatened the English with a slaughter that would "stagger humanity,"—Pretoria, the centre of the world's undivided attention, the goal of Lord Roberts, was on June the 5th, 1900, occupied by the victorious army of Britain.

When the bombardment of the city began and the firing of a few shells utterly demolished one of the "impregnable forts," President Kruger, like the intriguer Steyn, decided that safety was in flight, so gathering some millions of gold together, he boarded a private car and fled northward to Middleburg.

The demand by Lord Roberts for the immediate surrender of the capital brought out the burgomaster with the official keys of the city.

Of the formal entry, Mr. W. H. White, the "Star" correspondent of the Mounted Rifles, says:—"Lord Roberts made his formal entry at the head of his victorious army. It was a grand spectacle. The streets were thronged with the inhabitants of the place who had come out to see the British flag run up over the Raadzaal. Early in the morning, preceded by the mounted troops, the Guards Brigade had marched into the city and all day performed the duties of town guard. Long before the hour at which Lord Roberts was to make his formal entry the streets were thronged with people and Church Square was a black mass of humanity with the open space in front of the Raadzaal kept clear by long lines of the Coldstream Guards. From the flagstaff over the handsome building in which the Transvaal Parliament has its sessions, the Vierkleur floated proudly. It was a little after two o'clock when a commotion in the crowds in market street proclaimed the coming of the Commander-in-Chief and his staff. There was a cheer from a little band of loyalists about the Grand Hotel on the corner of Church Square, as Lord Roberts with his staff galloped into the open space in front of the Raadzaal. The immense crowd which lined its sides were silent spectators unlike the crowd which witnessed the same ceremony in Johannesburg. They refrained from any demonstration of their feelings. Their silent sullen faces touched with a tinge of sadness, were far more impressive than the angry groans which greeted the hoisting of the British flag in the Gold Metropolis a few days before. As the Commander-in-Chief took up his stand in the open space the long lines of soldiers presented arms. Then all eyes were turned on the fluttering folds of the Virkleur, which still floated

JOHN HEGAN PARKS.

(LIEUT. PRINCESS LOUISE HUSSARS.)

Born St. John, N. B., 1874. son of Major I. H. Parks, St. John. Graduated Royal Military College, Kingston, 1896; Lieut Princess Louise Hussars 1896; resigned commission and enlisted as private in "B" Squadron, 2nd Canadian Contingent, Jan. 1900.

proudly over the Raadzaal. Presently two British officers appeared on the stone balcony and in a few seconds the Transvaal flag was quickly run down. A small British flag was attached to the halliards. As it was run to the top of the mast the soldiers presented arms, the band played the National Anthem and a small portion of the crowd cheered with the wildest enthusiasm. It was a strange sight, however, for among that great mass of humanity which crowded the square came not a sound. To them there was no cause for enthusiastic jubilation. They seemed to realize that the inevitable end had come at last and the country of which they were so proud was no longer theirs.

They did not seem to bear resentment as did the Dutch population of Johannesburg. Their faces wore rather a look of sorrowful resignation and I saw tears roll silently down the rugged cheeks of more than one sturdy burgher. It was a great day for Britain, for it marked the nearing of the end of the long and hardly fought war which has cost the lives of so many of her brave soldiers, but to the Dutch burgher it was the saddest of all sad days—the end of his bright dream of supremacy over South Africa and the beginning of a national existence subject to the suzerainty of the great nation whose arms have been successful in one of the bitterest struggles the world has seen.

A few minutes after the ceremony of hoisting the flag was over, the Guards band headed by Gen. Pole-Carew and staff marched past, followed by the 18th Brigade under Gen. Chemside—the Essex, Welsh and York Regiments. Then came the 19th Brigade under Gen. Ian Hamilton. It is interesting to note the kindly consideration shown by the Commander-in-Chief to the column which has done most of the fighting since the army left Bloemfontein. But a single division of infantry were given the honour of marching past the Commander-in-Chief from the many thousands of troops which composed the main column under his command:

It was a delicate and well-deserved compliment paid to Gen. Ian Hamilton and the troops he commanded that all were given the honour of marching past the Field Marshal in the city in the capture of which they had taken such a prominent part. Heading the procession was General Ian Hamilton and his staff, followed by the Mounted Infantry attached to his division which had done such splendid work in the battle of the previous day. They are a fine body of men these Mounted Infantry, ready to dare death at any time in the performance of their duty. Conspicuous among them were the sturdy Colonials from New South Wales and West Australia. Next came the guns of the Royal Horse Artillery, followed by General Smith-Dorien and his staff at the head of the two brigades of infantry which have done such magnificent work under his command since the army left Bloemfontein. "The Fighting 19th," as it is called, which has been in every engagement since the Army left Eslin, was given the place of honour. The Gordon Highlanders followed the General and his staff, headed by their band of pipers. Their appearance created a splendid impression. A fine regiment the Gordons have always been and they marched past with a steady swing which excited general admiration. Next came the Cornwalls, who were also well received. Then the Caradians, led by Colonel Otter. It was enough to make any Canadian proud of his country as these sturdy heroes passed in front of the saluting base at a long, steady, swinging gait, which compelled the band to change its tune and give something faster.

The Canadians never appear at a function of this kind without creating comment upon the sturdy appearance of their ranks. Individually taller and more strongly built than the men of any other British Regiment, except, perhaps, the Guards, their appearance is always the signal for an enthusiastic reception. As they passed through the open space and in front of Lord Roberts and his staff, every man seemed to realize that he must do his best. Weary as they were their uniforms blackened and stained with long marching and hard fighting, of which no regiment in the army has had more, their soldierly bearing and sturdy appearance won for them enthusiastic plaudits on all sides. Even the silent Dutch were interested and as our boys marched past, I heard more than one apathetic burgher enquire who they were, and crane his neck to see the men who had travelled 8,000 miles over the seas to fight for the supremacy of the British Empire in South Africa. It is strange, but perhaps natural that the Boers should have such an interest in the Colonials from Canada and Australia, who have fought in this war. You can always interest a burgher by telling him about the Canadians. This is, perhaps, because they are astonished at a colony so far removed from the Mother Country and the scene of the present hostilities, interesting itself in a struggle in which it had no stake save a desire that the supremacy and integrity of the British Empire should be preserved. Certain it is that the Boers have had more than one opportunity of learning to respect Canadians, at least for their fighting qualities. The men who forced General Cronje to surrender at Paardeberg and have so often since compelled the enemy's forces to fall back and and hurriedly retire before the advance, have earned no small reputation among the Boers and are always spoken of in terms of the greatest respect. The Shropshires brought up the rear of the 19th Brigade.

Next came the 21st Brigade under the command of General Bruce Hamilton, composed of the City Imperial Volunteers, the Cameron Highlanders, the Sussex and the Derby. Following them, the divisional artillery brought the memorable procession to a close, and the Commander-in Chief and his staff rode to headquarters at the residence of the British agent in Sunnyside, a western suburb of the city."

The releasing of prisoners captured by the Boers was the next incident worthy of note. In the different compounds there were over six hundred men confined. Though pale, the men did not look as if they were harshly treated, but said they had received a fair amount of consideration at the hands of their enemy.

According to agreement the regiments of the 19th Brigade were formally disbanded at Pretoria. The Gordon Highlanders and Canadians who had side by side marched, fought and endured the hardships of war for eight months, felt the separation keenly and were loth to say farewell.

General Smith-Dorien, in his official report of June the 7th says: "The Nineteenth Brigade has achieved a record any brigade might be proud of. Since the day it was formed, 12th February, 1900, it has marched six hundred and twenty miles, often on half rations, and seldom on full. It has taken part in the capture of ten towns, fought in ten general engagements, and on twenty-seven other days. During one period of thirty days it fought twenty-one of them, marched three hundred and twenty miles. Its casualties have been between four and five hundred, its defeats nil."

We left Elandsfontein for this place on the evening of the 10th of June. I must tell you of a very amusing incident that occurred when we were marching through the town of Boksberg.

From Pretoria the Canadians were ordered to Elandsfontein thence to a small railway centre known as Springs situated between Pretoria and Johannesburg. Of the place (Lieut.) Lorne Stewart writes:—"The towns and villages in this country are very pretty,—splendid farms and comfortable houses, with gardens and trees; the latter had all to be planted and are looked after like hot-house plants.

Small, Matheson, Mellich, Foley, Rodd, Dillon, Gaudet and myself are the only ones left of the thirty Island boys that left Graspan, and arrived at Pretoria. Since we left Pretoria, McKinnon, Brace and McRae have rejoined us; they are all well. Major Weeks and Mr. Fullerton are also with the Regiment.

Shortly after leaving Elandsfontein it began to rain and continued about an hour. By that time we had arrived at Boksberg, and were marching through the streets whistling the Maple Leaf and different other tunes. Suddenly an Englishwoman, short and fat, ran out of a house, clasped her hands over her heart and shouted "the British! the British! God bless them, eight months of suffering. Give it to the Boers, boys, they're curs, every one of them. Give it to them boys, give them the devil." We had been cross and cranky during our march up to this time, but we began to laugh and forget all about being cross.

The negroes that work in the mines came over here last Monday and gave us a dance, and a horrible affair it was—I can hear and see them yet at all hours of the day or night. For drums they have casks nearly as big as an oil cask, the heads covered with the skin of some animal; for the kettle or small drums they take an ordinary five gallon kerosene oil can, cut out the heads and cover them with skins. But their pianos take the cake,—they have a long box about four feet long, one and a half feet high, and about a foot wide, and the top is made of barrel staves and sticks of wood tied together. It is wonderful how well they have them tuned. They beat on this with a stick that has a piece of cloth tightly wound around the end, and keep excellent time. There were about twenty of these pianos, four or five big drums and about the same number of smaller ones. They had quite a dance, singing meanwhile about the British and the Boers. Here are some of their sayings: "The British very wise men; they go up to heaven in a balloon; talk to God; God tell them how, then they come down and beat the Boer." "Paul Kruger has lost his number." "If the British want to catch old Paul they had better go to Delagoa Bay." "Great day for Kaffirs when British come, Boer no pay Kaffir: British fair man, he always pay." "The great white Queen is Kaffir's friend, she good to Kaffir." They had a great many of these sayings put to music, and would dance to the music, sing these pieces, brandish their shields and spears, and jump, why they would jump ten feet high sometimes, then almost put their feet around their necks, and always land on their feet—it was a sight not to be soon forgotten. Then their dress;—some had vests, others coats; some had a piece of cloth tied around their waists and hanging down to their knees. Others had only a cloth around their waists while their arms and legs were covered with copper bracelets and anklets, and they also had horse-hair tied to their legs and arms, and feathers in their hair. They were as ugly looking a lot of wretches as I ever saw in my life. I call them "wretches" for they were so disgusting they were utterly unlike human beings. Then they had tin cans filled with little stones which they rattled as they danced. I can never forget the horrible exhibition as long as I live. I never will want to see it again."

Of life at the Springs (Lieut.) Anslow writes:— "A Boer force is reported one and a half days' march from us near the railway to Johannesburg. Yesterday an attack was made on their Laager. "G" and "H" Companies were detailed on an armored train which patrols the railway between Kroonstadt and Pretoria. We have great sport stopping the natives and also the white inhabitants from passing in and out of the town, as no one is allowed to go through unless accompanied to the station by an escort. It is really amusing when you stop a native and he cannot speak English. He jabbars away at the rate of a mile a minute and makes innumerable signs with his hands. I generally jump at conclusions and let him pass. This morning we attended a Joe Letson was wounded at Houtnek on May 1st. Bert McCullum is better and with us again. Ben Harris has also recovered from the fever. He saw Matheson in the hospital at the Cape, who was suffering from fever as well as from his wound. Will McLellan is with Rev. Mr. Lane, C. M. R."

During an evening that a member of Company "G" was spending at Mr. Vicars', chief engineer of the mines, Mrs. Vicars remarked that heavy firing had been going on at a certain place all day. "That is strange," was the reply, "we did not hear any at the camp." Then she explained that it was possible for her to hear when others a short way off could not. The reason was simple, but curious, being that her house was built on top of a coal field excavated underneath—a huge sounding-board that carried a noise from a very great distance.

On the night of June the 28th, while one of "Our Boys" was out on outpost duty, a horseman came dashing along and shouted to the Artillery to harness up as the Boers were coming over the hills by hundreds. He at once ran over to the left half and gave the word to the bugler of "F" Company who at once sounded the alarm and in an instant the general order was given from the station. Within half a minute men were streaming from their quarters with their belts half on, their bandoliers fixed anyway, and some wearing toques, some forage caps, some helmets, but all grasping their rifles ready for a fight.

In the meantime the negroes were driving in the mules and oxen, and the maxim gun men were rushing to and fro trying to catch their mules and get them harnessed. Pte. O'Reilly very nearly met with a bad accident. He was on the maxim gun squad and there were three mules harnessed abreast. He had the right hand one in when the animal tried to bolt; naturally it just swung the maxim in a circular direction, nearly upsetting the gun. O'Reilly held on and managed to stop it but was pretty well run over; as it was his hands were lacerated quite a bit. While this was going on firing had commenced between the British and the Boers. The Canadians advanced in open order and the guns were moved off to the left. Soon boom, boom, boom announced that the big guns were at work, and as shot followed shot the rifle fire of the enemy gradually slackened.

CHARLOTTETOWN ENGINEERS—FIRST CONTINGENT SOUTH AFRICA.

A lively fight ensued, our men never flinched, and finally the Boers retreated in confusion, the mounted men chasing after them. When the fight was over the boys found one dead Boer, killed by rifle fire, and five dead horses—and they learned from some negroes that twelve had been wounded. It is probable that there were many more casualties, as the Boers always did their best to conceal their loss.

Not long after when two of the volunteers were a few miles outside of Springs they were fired on from a farm house. One of the men was badly wounded in the hip and another bullet struck his hat, circled round the crown, and tore the crown as clean as if it had been cut with a knife. Col. Otter sent out a strong detachment of mounted men who burned the farm house and barns to the ground.

Some time before when Lord Roberts was advancing on Johannesburg, there was one little town that put up quite a stiff fight. Among the enemy was a burgher whose wife and twelve-year old son were in a house near the engagement. During a lull in the firing the father beckoned the boy over to the rifle pit. When half way across the field the child was struck by an exploding shell and killed in the sight of both parents.

And so the Boers have suffered. The issuing of the ultimatum that promised freedom and happiness, has brought only disaster and woe; but a bright day is now dawning for these misguided people, and the Union Jack of old England will amply fulfil the mission that the administration of South Africa failed to accomplish. Yet when we think of the scores of homes that are devastated, of the many family ties that are broken, and recall the hardships endured by our own troops, as well as the sad and lonely hearts throughout the Empire to-day, gladly will we welcome the time when universal peace shall reign.

Although apparently defeated the Boers continued to resort to secret and artful tactics, often blowing up bridges and breaking weak lines of communication. On July 14th a plot to take the garrison at Johannesburg was discovered. It is said the scheme was defeated by a young Dutch officer confiding in his lady love who immediately gave the alarm. Later a plot of a more serious nature, to kill all the British officers, capture Lord Roberts and retake Pretoria, was discovered on the brink of execution. This treachery proved that the conciliation and kindness with which Lord Roberts had been treating the enemy, was falling far short of the mark, and that if the Boers were to be subdued it was only by firm and severe treatment. Consequently Lord Roberts issued the following Proclamation :

Referring to my proclamation, dated Pretoria, 16th June, 1900, I, Frederick Sleigh Baron Roberts of Kandahar and Waterford, K. P., G. C. B., G. C. S. I., G. C. I. E., V. C., Field Marshal, Commander-in-Chief of Her Majesty's troops in South Africa, do hereby declare, proclaim, and make known that, should any damage be done to any of the lines of railway, or to any of the railway bridges, culverts, or buildings, or to any telegraph lines or other railway or public property in the Orange River Colony, or in that portion of the South African Republic for the time being within the sphere of my military operations, the following punishment will be inflicted:

1.—The principal residents of the towns and district will be held, jointly and severally, responsible for the amount of damage done in their district.

2.—In addition to the payment of the damage above mentioned, a penalty depending upon the circumstances of each case, but which will in no event be less than a sum of 2s. 6d. per morgen on the area of each farm will be levied and recovered from each burgher of the district in which the damage is done in respect of the land owned or occupied by him in such district. Furthermore, all receipts for goods requisitioned in such district on behalf of the military authorities will be cancelled, and no payment whatever made in respect of the same.

3.—As a further precautionary measure, the director of military railways has authorized to order that one or more of the residents, who will be selected by him from each district, shall from time to time personally accompany their trains while travelling through their district.

4.—The houses and farms in the vicinity of the place where the damage is done will be destroyed, and the residents in the neighbourhood dealt with under martial law.

5.—The military authorities will render every facility to the principal residents to enable them to communicate the purport of this proclamation to the other residents in their district, so that all persons may become fully cognizant of the responsibility resting upon them.

CHAPTER VI.

"Oh the wail that rent the night wind
When the day was done."

THE war would no doubt have ended with the taking of Pretoria but for the ability of General DeWet, who frequently succeeded in breaking weak lines of communication and who won universal admiration for the skillful manner in which he evaded the large body of English troops.

Capt. A. H. Macdonnell who was appointed to the command of Company "G" in December at Belmont had a very interesting experience in the General's camp. On April 7th the Captain was stricken with enteric fever at Bloemfontein, and on June 7th when returning to the Regiment was taken prisoner at Roudival. Only a small British Garrison was on guard at this station and when the line of communication was cut by the Boers outside help was unavailable.

In describing the surrender Capt. Macdonnell says; "When nine days passed and failed to bring us any help from Kroonstadt there was nothing for us but to entrench and strengthen our position. With loaded railway trucks we made an oblong enclosure about the station which we made secure by piling up boxes of stores and bags of mail matter and clothing.

"Our reconnoitering patrol was fired on by a single horseman about day break on the morning of June 7, quite close to the station. The alarm was at once given and the little garrison took up the position previously assigned to them inside our barricade. It was about half past five o'clock on the morning after our patrol had been fired on when we saw a single horseman carrying a white flag approaching the station. Captain Grant and myself went out about a mile from the station and met the man, who proved to be a Boer messenger. He gave us a written summons from General Christian De Wet, which read as follows: 'I am around you with about one thousand men and four guns and demand your immediate unconditional surrender in order to avoid bloodshed.' After reading this peremptory demand we asked for half an hour's time for consideration so that we might establish communications with the Derbyshires, whom we knew were already engaged with the enemy from the reports which came from the river banks further north. We sent a horseman out with a message for the Colonel of the Derbyshires, but in a very short time he returned and reported that we were cut off from the other British force. In the meantime we had discovered that the enemy had cut the telegraph line to Kroonstadt. By this time DeWet's messenger had returned and said that his General would give us ten minutes longer to comply with his request, after which his burghers would open fire. Knowing that further parley was useless we told the messenger to inform General DeWet that we had decided not to surrender. Immediately upon receiving this answer the horseman rode quickly to one side, made a signal, and a big gun, which had been advanced to within eight hundred yards of our barricade, during the conference, escorted by about five hundred rifle men, opened fire upon us. This, of course, was a most unfair thing to do, as advantage was taken of the white flag to advance troops closer to our position than they would dared to have approached had not a conference been going on. The first shell landed right in our midst, killed four and wounded three of our men. Simultaneously the enemy poured in a hot rifle fire which fortunately was not effective. Gradually we forced back their firing line to a range of seventeen hundred yards. The Derbyshires fought well but were finally compelled to surrender. Then we saw that the whole force of about fifteen hundred burghers with five guns were coming to engage us. When we saw the five Boer guns taking up positions all about us, Lieut. Blanchard with half a dozen men volunteered to go out from the barricade under a perfect storm of rifle and shell fire to dig a small trench to protect our rear. By half-past eleven we had five fifteen pounders, and about fifteen hundred rifles pouring shells and bullets into us. All their big guns were well out of range of our rifle fire. About this time a shell landed right in the midst of the little working party under the command of Lieut. Blanchard. Two men were killed outright and three wounded, including Lieut. Blanchard (died from wounds) who throughout the entire day had shown the greatest pluck and bravery. Shortly before noon we saw a large body of the enemy working around our rear and occupying the small pan about five hundred yards from the barricade from where they could fire upon us at close range under perfect cover. As we had absolutely no hope of receiving assistance from Kroonstadt and knowing that the Derbyshires had given up some two hours before, there was nothing left for us to do but surrender. It was a hopeless struggle against tremendous odds, with no prospect of relief and we had already two officers and ten men killed and seventeen wounded. It was just twelve o'clock when after a consultation we ran up the white flag after having fought for six hours a force nearly twenty times as large as our own, armed with five big guns which landed something over one hundred shells in and about our little enclosure.

"When the enemy came in and made us prisoners General Christian De Wet expressed surprise at the resistance the garrison had made, calling us plucky fellows. He admitted that we had wounded eight of his burghers.

"In addition to large quantities of food stuffs, there was at Roodival when the Boers captured the place some fifteen hundred bags of mail for the troops at the front, all the British warm coats and winter clothing for the Nineteenth Brigade including the Canadians, and several truck loads of ammunition for our twelve, fifteen, and two hundred and forty pound guns.

While the major portion of the Boer force was engaged looting the captured stores the prisoners were marched under a heavy guard to De Wet's farm at Vaal Krantz nine miles east of the railway line where they had their main laager. I never saw a grander sight in my life than the station at Roodival presented that evening after dark. The Boers had piled the immense quantity of stores of all kinds which they could not carry away with them about the station house and set fire to it. Great tongues of lurid flame shot up high into the sky and every now and then there was a tremendous report and showers of sparks and burning wood were hurled high into the air as the large two hundred and forty pound shells exploded. When in the enemy's camp I have heard the Boers openly boast that no British troops could be moved to or from any point between Bloemfontein and Pretoria, without them knowing not only the numbers and destination, but also at what time they would be at a given point. I saw lots of evidence of the fact that De Wet regularly received information from Bloemfontein, Kroonstadt and Pretoria as to the movement of our troops, while along the railway line he knew exactly the strength and disposition of all our garrisons from spies, who in many cases were in the confidence of the British officers in command at various points." On July the 26th, when General De Wet was almost surrounded by the British, he left Capt. Macdonell and other prisoners behind at Farriesburg in order to make good his own escape. Capt. Macdonell returned to the regiment; in his absence Lieut Jones was in command of Company "G." and Lieutenant Kaye acting Adjutant during the illness of Captain Ogilvie."

Having followed the 19th Brigade through the Orange River Colony and Transvaal Republic, it might be interesting to the reader to take a glimpse at the tragic scenes enacted in another part of the campaign. During the fall and winter months the war raged with unabated fury in Natal, and perhaps we can not to better than to give an extract of a letter written by the late Captain Hensley, describing the battle of Glencoe,—one of the heaviest engagements that took place in Cape Colony :

“ On October 20th, we paraded as usual at 4.30 a. m., and whilst on parade we heard musketry firing and a message had come in from our M. T. patrol, to say that a large party of Boers were coming up on the Talana Hill overlooking Dundee and that he, with his twenty men, could not check them. So two companies B and E were sent out to reinforce. Renny, one of our youngsters, who was looking through a glass, spotted a lot of men on the top of Talana, 4,100 yards from our camp. We argued about their being Boers, and I said to Bird, our Commanding Officer, “ the first thing we know will be the sing of a shell into camp.” I had hardly got the words out of my mouth when a puff of smoke came from the side of the hill, and a shell burst on the ground about 1,000 yards short ; bang came another, this time right into camp, but hurt no one, and it must have been a funny sight, as we all ducked ; at least I know that I did. The men had fallen in by this time, and I gave my Company the order to double out and lie down on the ground away from the tents, as they served as targets for the enemy, and drew the fire. The shells were coming in pretty thick then. No sooner had I done this, than every Company in the Batallion did the same, and formed quarter column, which was of course worse than being near the tents, so I moved again. . . . We remained behind a stone wall for some time, and then the word came to advance. I was on the left Company, and the two lines of advance were on the left by a nullah, and on the right a stone wall, which protected them from the Maxim on the right hill, and most of the ground was dead from the top of the hill. Those who went up along the wall formed under the cover of it, it being three feet high, and ran parallel to the Boer position, about cre hundred yards from it, and protected partly by a bend of the hill. We, who had the bad luck to get under the nullah, had a bad time of it as it proved a regular death trap. The Boers evidently had thought it would prove one of the points of our attack, and consequently told off their crack shots, the Middleburgh burghers to watch it, so that when anybody showed himself for a second the bullets fairly sang about him. The cover was bad, and only effective when one lay flat on his stomach. We made rushes one at a time from one little side nullah to another. I had made a run forward, and a minute after Perrean, one of our Subs, came up, the Artillery were giving them beans on the top, and Perrean said, “ We are giving them Majuba today,” when whizz came a bullet just past my head, over my right shoulder. I thought I was hit, and put up my hand, and at the same time I heard a thud, and Perrean staggered back,

THE LATE CAPTAIN CHAS. A. HENSLEY.

(FIRST BATTALION OF ROYAL DUBLIN FUSILIERS.)

Born Charlottetown, P. E. Island, Sept. 21st 1865; son of Albert Hensley, Esq., Halifax, N. S.; educated Collegiate College, Windsor, N. S.; Royal Military College, King-ton; accepted commission in Imperial Army, Sept. 2nd 1885; served in Naas, near Dublin, Egypt and India for twelve years; promoted to Captaincy, 1885; ordered to South Africa, Sept. 19th, 1899; in front storming line at battle of Glencoe; on Jan. 20th, 1900, at Ventris Spruit when engaged in an unsuccessful attempt to relieve Ladysmith was shot through the head, died at Fairview Hospital, and buried in a green field, mourned sincerely by officers and men. Among the many notes of condolence received by Mr. Hensley was one from Her Majesty Queen Victoria sympathizing with the bereaved family and requesting a photograph of the late officer.

began to rain. We, of course, only had on our khaki, which soon got wet. We had nothing to eat that day; there were a lot of wounded men and few dead lying about. We could neither advance nor go back, and we could see the others getting ready for something. I can't imagine anything more miserable;

saying, "My God! they've got me." He had been shot clean through the left shoulder, but afterwards it proved to be a clean wound, and not very serious. He was very plucky about it, and said: "I wish they had left me alone till I got to the top." I had to go on at once to make room for more men. However, in time we got to where the nullah stopped, and there was nothing for it but to wait until the guns hammered them a bit, as it was suicide to attempt to cross the open in the face of that awful hail of bullets. I got up once to see if there was any nullah in front which we might make a rush for, and though I was not up for fifteen seconds, the bullets came buzzing around like bees, and one hit just in front of me and knocked the mud into my face. Just to show you what the fire was like, I made a man put his helmet in the grass, which was two or three inches high on the edge of the nullah, and before it had been there three minutes, there was a hole in it. Towards noon it

Then at the wall we saw a lot of men led by Dibblee, one of our Captains, make a mad rush over the wall for the hill. This was the so-called bayonet charge. It was a very plucky thing to do, but mad and absolutely useless, as it was impossible to charge up a perpendicular cliff, as we found it afterwards, and they had to come back. Some of the 60th and 87th joined in the charge. Lowdnes, our Adjutant, who followed Dibblee, was shot in the leg, and had it broken, and has had to have it off, I'm afraid. Dibblee was shot under the eye, and the bullet came out behind his ear and it looked a ghastly wound, but he was doing well when we left Dundee.

Well, just as our fellows began to come back, the guns began a salvo on the top. I ought, though, to tell you of the magnificent bit of pluck on the part of the Boers, the only time I have seen them show any.

As I told you, our men were under cover behind the wall, but that when they climbed over they had to cross a space about fifteen yards across before they got under cover of the cliff.

As they came over the wall eight Boers in waterproofs which blew about like flags, stood up on the skyline, regardless, or perhaps it was in contempt of our rifle fire, remembering '81 and fired down on our chaps like one who would fire at a rabbit bolting down a hill, five of them went down almost at once (of course we had to be cautious for fear of hitting our own men), but the remaining three seemed to bear charmed lives, but they too, went down, shot in time. And I said the guns began tatoes, and all I can say is that I hope to heaven I shall never be under a fire like that they poured into the top of the hill. The fire was incessant for about five minutes, and the top must have been a perfect hell. . . . Just as we got under a cliff there was a cry, "Come back, come back, the guns are going to shell the position," and you bet we ran for the wall again. Of course there were a lot of wounded lying outside the wall, and these we tried to get under cover again. I found a poor chap of the 87th, Connor, the Adjutant, lying hit in three places, and it took four of us to carry him down to a place of safety, as he weighed fourteen stone. Poor chap, he died next day. It proved to be a false alarm, for the guns opened to the right and left of us. Colonel Carleton called out, "Who's for the top?" and of course there were shouts of "Rifles," "87th," and "Dublins," and we went all mixed up for the top, which proved to be absolutely forsaken by the Boers, except dead and wounded, but they were still-firing from the right hill. However a few volleys soon stopped that. There were not many dead left on the top, but it was strewn with kit, rifles, ammunition, etc., and the rocks splashed with blood, showing that their loss must have been very heavy. . . . After the battle we marched into the camp wet to the skin, hungry, and I personally, as were most of us, sadder than I have been all my life. All the good chaps gone, with whom we had been chaffing and laughing with only that morning. Poor Weldon, with whom I shared a tent, killed; Genge, a boy of twenty-one, died that evening; three others badly wounded; Sherston, my old G. D. Instructor, shot dead; five of the Rifles and two of the Irish Fusiliers, dead; to say nothing of all the men killed and wounded, and our General dying. Our losses for that day, in our Regiment alone, were: killed, wounded and missing, 9 Officers and 105 Non-Commissioned Officers and men. The 60th lost 12 officers killed, wounded and missing, and 111 men, and the 87th, 5 Officers and 41 men.

CHAPTER VII.

" Deeds like this made Britain's glory
 In the straiter past;
 Days like this shall light her story
 While the world doth last."

DURING the summer months a number of sick and wounded Canadians were invalided home by way of England. Arriving in London they were treated with the utmost kindness and consideration. In the different hospitals Her Majesty Queen Victoria and ladies of title and rank were often found beside the couch of a Canadian soldier. When convalescent and up to the time of their departure from England "the boys" were entertained most royally and they cannot speak too highly of the whole-hearted spirit of the people of the Mother Country. On their arrival in Canada they were again warmly received and in the respective provinces given a hearty welcome home.

Among the number to arrive home were Lieutenant W. C. McLean, of St. John, who had obtained three months leave of absence from the Imperial Service.

Sergt. W. C. Utton, R.C. R. I., Fredericton (transferred to Company "F") who was wounded at Paardeberg, Feb. 18th, and mentioned especially in Colonel Otter's official report.

Private Bruce McFarlane, of Fredericton, accidentally shot himself through the leg; Private Dermott, of St. John, who, when getting water from the Modder River by mistake strayed into General Cronje's camp and fell into the hands of the private secretary. He was going to shoot him on the spot but General Cronje appeared on the scene, had an interview with the young Canadian, with the result that he was kept a prisoner in the laager until the surrender on February the 27th.

Private Quinn, of the R. C. R. I., Fredericton, reported dead. During the battle of the surrender of Cronje a bullet entered his body under the heart and passed out of the back. Private Quinn was very ill for some time, but is now in his usual place in the Infantry School—an honored hero.

Corp. Wm. Wallace, R. C. R. I, Fredericton, was invalided home from the effects of enteric fever, but on regaining his former health and vigor, re-enlisted once more for the front.

Private Harry Fradsham, R. C. R. I., Fredericton, was wounded badly in the hip on the morning of Cronje's surrender.

Shand, Black Watch Regiment, paralyzed in both legs; (8)—Member Imperial Army, foot shot off by exploding shell; (9)—Pte. A. Sutherland, Co. "F," R. C. Regiment. Wounded Cronje's laager, Feb. 27.

Private John Harris of Charlottetown was wounded on the morning of Cronje's surrender—Feb. 27th. When the first murderous volley was fired by the enemy he threw himself down on the ground and a bullet grazed his left arm. A few moments later another grazed his ribs but did not lodge. He then raised his left arm slightly and as he did so another bullet grazed the muscle of the arm. Then crawling on his stomach towards a trench he came to a redoubt that had been thrown up by some of the boys. Owing to the great loss of blood the young soldier was rapidly becoming unconscious. His friend Small who happened to be near, pluckily raised him on his shoulders and staggered to a trench where the wounded were being cared for. Although receiving the best attention in the hospitals, Private Harris has, to the regret of a large number of friends, lost the use of his arm, the leaders being completely paralyzed.

Corporal Frederick W. Coombs, of St. John, was wounded in the chest during the battle of the surrender of Cronje. He is known throughout the provinces as a great athlete, was twice captain of the Mohawk Hockey team and led them to the championship at St. John, N. B. Corporal Coombs has had a very serious time in South Africa. After recovering from the effects of his wound, in Cape Town, he bravely started for the front again, but was overtaken with fever and has since been reported "very low."

Private H. Leavitt, Grand Lake, Queen's County, was badly wounded on the morning of the 18th of February. The brave young soldier has since suffered a very great deal with his back, and we are glad to hear is now gaining strength.

Private Durant, of Moncton, was wounded in the groin and elbow during the desperate encounter with the enemy at Paardeberg, February 18th.

Private John A. Lutz, also of Moncton, was wounded on May the 10th at Thaba N'Chu when valiantly doing his duty.

Private Duncan Robertson, of the Second Contingent, son of ex-Major Robertson, has also returned home.

Private Pelkey, of St. John, underwent his baptism of fire at Paardeberg Feb. 27th. He was wounded within sixty yards of the Boer trenches. The ball entered his right fore arm and passed out above his elbow shattering one of the nerves and paralyzing two of his fingers. He lay perfectly still and close to the trenches until the hail of bullets ceased, then crept to the hospital where his wound was dressed, and returned to the regiment in time to see General Cronje going into the British camp.

was wounded in the first battle of Paardeberg. In the thick of the fight he was struck with a bullet in the thigh, still he advanced and another bullet entered his foot. A stretcher bearer was near at hand and using his rifle for a crutch, the wounded boy soon reached the field hospital.

Private Walter Lane, of P. E. Island, suffered from a severe sunstroke, followed by fever, and was compelled to return home.

Private Arthur Hayden, one of St. John's plucky young heroes, was wounded near Johannesburg, May the 29th.

Although still in England we might mention Private W. Donohue, of St. John, severely wounded on the morning of the surrender of Cronje. An explosive bullet struck his knee and thigh and although receiving the best of attendance both in South Africa and England, the doctor found that amputation of the limb was necessary. The soldier boy bore the affliction in the bravest possible manner and has written home many bright and cheerful letters.

*Privates Joseph Letson of Newcastle, Frank Sprague, W. C. Unkauf and James Johnstone, St. John, were also victims of the enemy's fire during those memorable days of conflict.

The majority of the soldiers who suffered from fever were not allowed to return to the front, and among the number to sail for home were: M. McCarthy, J. S. Walker, P. E. Island; Sgt. E. Hessian, Corp. J. Pringle, Privates S. Jones, F. C. Walker, Fredericton; H. P. McLaughlin, Daniel Ferguson, Moncton; Russel B. Hubley, George Chapman, Sussex; John McLeod, St. Stephen; Andrew Doyle, Chatham; J. B. Pascoe, Petitediac.

The boys deeply regretted the death of the late Cor. Withers, whose high Christian character made him a favourite with all.

Such is a brief history of some of our Canadian volunteers on the battle field in South Africa. Now they are home again, having done as much during one short year in the service of their country as many a man who retains the full use of his limbs for three score years and ten. As we note the crutch in the hand of the cripple, the lifeless arm by the side of the buoyant youth, the halting step of the maimed we feel sure that the Government—be it Liberal or Conservative—will see that every one of these heroes has an honorable and substantial maintenance.

The Patriotic Fund is already doing a most laudable work in this respect, having in its treasuries over a quarter of a million dollars subscribed by the generous people of Canada.

The object of the society is to help the dependant families of soldiers engaged in South Africa, and the widows and orphans of men who have fallen as well as the heroes who are disabled for life.

Another society that has done commendable work during the year is the Soldiers' Wives' League organized in Ottawa by Mrs. Hutton, wife of General Hutton. The League has eleven branches throughout Canada and its chief aim is "to bring the wives of all soldiers, whether of Officers, N. C. Officers or men of the Staff, Permanent Corps, and Active Militia of Canada, into closer touch and sympathy with one another, so that whether in sickness or in health they may be able mutually to aid and assist one another and their families in times of difficulty, trouble and distress."

The sick and wounded in the hospitals and rest camps could not speak too highly of the medical staff and nurses, also of the many friends at home who through the medium of the different branches of the Red Cross Society did so much of practical aid in alleviating their sufferings.

MISS GEORGINA POPE.

Daughter of the late Honorable W. H. Pope, County Court Judge, P. E. Island. Graduate of Bellevue Hospital, New York. Engaged as nurse with First Canadian Contingent, Oct. 25, 1899.

The Canadian Branch of the Red Cross Society was organized in 1896 by Lieut. Col. G. Sterling Ryerson of Toronto, and the departure of our Canadian volunteers elicited an intense interest in this great philanthropic movement. Through the instrumentality of Lady Tilley, St. John, local branches were organized in a number of cities in New Brunswick, and in Charlottetown Mrs. C. C. Gardiner formed another Branch of the society. The ladies of the different organizations were untiring in their efforts, and Dr. Ryerson, Red Cross Commissioner in South Africa, used judiciously the contributions from Canada.

A large number of the boxes forwarded to South Africa were not valued, but independent of these, *Fredericton raised $32.00, St. John, $885.00, Sackville, $140.86, Moncton, including value of boxes, $468.00, while Charlottetown forwarded a cash contribution of $344.30, and boxes valued at $567.63. These are only examples of what was done in Sussex, St. Stephen, Rothesay, Dorchester and throughout Canada.

The principal hospitals in South Africa were in Bloemfontein, Winburg, Kroonstadt and Wynberg near Cape Town.

Many touching incidents were told within those hospital walls. One was the story of a young Australian soldier who had strayed away from his regiment and was met by two horsemen. The soldier immediately drew his revolver. The newcomer's who were dressed in khaki uniform, said to come with them as they had been sent to look for him. Deceived by their appearance the young Australian returned his revolver to his belt, whereupon one of his companions raised his rifle and fired, hitting the soldier in the breast near the left shoulder. The shock threw him from his horse, and the two Boers, as they really were, at once rode up to the prostrate man and fired two more shots into him, one wounding him in the right arm, the other hitting him in the face, smashing his teeth and right jaw. The Boers then rode off with his horse. Some time after he was found by his comrades and sent to Vretfort hospital and thence to Kroonstadt, where he is slowly recovering from his wounds.

After remaining for about six weeks at Springs, the Canadian Regiment united with General Hart's Brigade, and on July 31st the Boys were once more on the brink of the Vaal. In conjunction with other columns this combined force under General Kitchener, began a grand chase after General DeWet, the wily Boer general. Day by day, week by week, over an endless veldt they pursued the flying enemy. Col. Otter, in order to keep the men in good spirits adopted the plan of putting a number of good singers in the centre of the regiment to swell the anthem of song. The plan worked capitolly and even after a fortnight's hard marching they marched into Krugersdorp gaily singing "The Maple Leaf Forever."

*Contributed largely towards the Society of the Daughters of the Empire.

In official reports Col. Otter says:—Aug. 7th: "Our march yesterday of fifteen miles was a most trying one, being made in the teeth of a very strong north wind which blew up clouds of dust in our faces, nearly blinding us. . . . To-day we are moving rapidly forward again. . . . Strength of Regiment 585; the men are standing the work well.

Aug. 24th.—During the last two weeks not a man has fallen out of the march, although our average was seventeen miles a day. Battalion has so far marched 1000 straight miles since coming to this country. Strength of Regiment 400."

Meantime up north General Buller occupied Lydenburg, known as the key to the Transvaal Republic, and the brilliant French captured Barberton, which lies two hundred and fifty miles east of Pretoria. In the Orange River Colony Lord Methuen, General Hunter and General Kelly-Kenny were successful in foiling an attempt at an insurrection among the Boers.

Kruger at Lorenzo Marques stubbornly challenged the proclamation of Lord Roberts, declaring that the end of the war was still far off. "Time will prove," he said, "that we are not nearly beaten—at the worst you may conquer us, but you can never subdue us." And so it seemed, for the continued success that followed the British arms should have convinced the most stubborn enemy that the desperate game embarked upon nearly twelve months previous was about played out. In the well-timed proclamation issued by Lord Roberts, forgiveness and protection was offered to all the Boers except those who violated their oaths, and although the Field Marshall practically held the remainder of the foe in the palm of his hand the enemy persisted in carrying on a fruitless and guerrilla warfare.

It is said that "Kruger sent a man over to England some time ago to find out if there were still any men left in the country, and on the man's arrival in Brighton he sent a telegram to Kruger: "Thousands of men here." He then paid a visit to London, and from there wired "Millions here." The next town was Birmingham, from here he wired "Hundreds of thousands." Next he went to Staffordshire and saw the men coming up from Time passed by and the term of service of the Royal Canadian Regiment gradually drew to a close. Lord Roberts was loth to part with the brave boys and gave them the option of remaining until the end of the war and returning home by way of England or sailing directly for Canada. Positions of honor and wealth were also offered the colonials; but the boys had arrived on the scene of conflict at an early stage, had taken a share in the thickest of the fight, and now that the annexation of the Transvaal virtually brought the war to a close, were satisfied to return home to resume the duties of life laid down twelve months previous for the service of a common Empire. The Regiment mobilized at Pretoria, and on the eve of their departure for Cape Town, Sept. 25th, was reviewed by Lord Roberts in the presence of his wife and daughters. The occasion was a most brilliant one and the men, who were in excellent health, made a splendid appearance. After the march past, Lord Roberts addressed them briefly. He said: "I cannot allow you to depart without expressing my thanks for and appreciation of your loyal services and excellent work, especially at Paardeberg on February 27th. I am sure the people of Canada will be pleased to hear how gallantly and how splendidly you have behaved in action.

"Deeply I regret the losses you have suffered. I should have been happier if you had returned in your full strength, but no one could expect you to pass through so arduous a campaign without losses.

"I am sorry that some of you are obliged to return sooner than the rest of the regiment, but I recognize the urgency of private affairs. I am confident that the Queen and the British people will never forget your services. If it should ever be my good fortune to visit Canada, I hope to meet you all again."

The regiment travelled from Pretoria to Cape Town in open tram cars. On their arrival they were given a hearty reception. The Mayor, on behalf of the citizens, thanked the men for the splendid services they had rendered on the field. The Contingent had previously been presented with General Cronje's flag taken from the Boer Laager on the memorable morning of February the 27th.

All aboard for Canada! It was the morning of Sept. 30th, 1900. Seventeen officers, three hundred and eighty-five men of the First Canadian Contingent, thirty-three various colonial troops and two hundred Boer prisoners embarked from Cape Town on the good ship "Idaho," of the Wilson line.

Col. Otter, with thirteen other officers and about three hundred non-commissioned officers and men, including "A" and "B" Companies elected to remain on active service for a while longer.

The "Idaho" is due at the Island of St. Helena on October the ninth, where she will land the Boer prisoners. This lonely isle of Napoleonic fame is at all times of interest to visitors, but to the Canadian volunteers it will be especially so and will prove a fitting sequel to their life in South Africa. There, perhaps, the boys will have a chance of renewing their old acquaintance with General Cronje, who, no doubt, can recall many reminiscences of their last interview at Paardeberg.

General Cronje and his men are not only enjoying the hospitality of the British, but are also making extensive preparations for a double celebration of natal days, for on the 10th of October ex-President Kruger of the Transvaal Colony will be seventy-six years of age, and ex-President Steyn of the Orange River Colony will pass his forty fourth birthday. Just a year previous these gentlemen celebrated the anniversaries of their birth by entering on a contract that within a few months every Englishman would have disappeared from spruit, kopje, rand and veldt.

Twelve months have passed, the two Republics are now in the hands of the British and both presidents are fugitives from their own lands. Ex-President Steyn is reported to be lying seriously ill in some remote corner of the Lydenberg District. Ex-President Kruger has formally resigned his position of state and it is said is making arrangements to sail from Lorenzo Marques for Europe in the Dutch cruiser Golderland.

The boys from time to time have sent home a large number of souvenirs, among them being Orange Free State and Transvaal flags, china and silverware engraved with stamp of the O. F. S. Republic, Zulu testaments, Basuto Bibles, Kaffir and Serelong prayer-books, Dutch-English dictionary, quartz from the mines of Johannesburg, petrified wood from Zand River, Boer babies' stockings, pipes used by the Boers several inches in length; and in Cronje's Laager they picked up exploded dum-dum and mauser bullets, pieces of shrapnel, even a range finder stamped "British War Office" supposed to have been captured from the English, a Boer woman's belt, evidently a late possession of Mrs. Cronje's, hard tack, skeins of wool, Kruger coins, and many other curios.

One of the bravest boys that went to South Africa is Capt. Beverley R. Armstrong, who was wounded so badly in the foot that amputation was necessary. Although in a French hospital where the chief surgeon is a German, his assistant an Italian and the head nurse also German, with whom the patients can only communicate by signs, Capt. Armstrong writes home in the most cheerful manner both as regards his surroundings and as to the irreparable loss of his foot.

Another of St. John's noble young men is Harry Treble Smith, who left Canada last January for England, took passage to Africa and joined the famous Black Watch Regiment, but who, we regret to learn, has been seriously wounded.

Norman P. McLeod, son of Rev. Dr. McLeod, Fredericton, and former student at the University of New Brunswick, is at the front with the Second Contingent.

No. 4 Company 74th Regt. of Moncton, under command of Captain W. H. Watts, has the distinction of sending to the front the greatest number of representatives from any single company,—six members to the First Contingent and four to the Second. They include 2nd Lieut. H. Metzler, who resigned his commission and enlisted as a private, and Corporal Frank Doyle, who is now transferred to the Railway service in Bloemfontein and holds the position of accountant in the railway; and J. H. Lockhart, who has had the honor of being one of the four Canadians to be appointed on Lord Roberts' body guard.

Dr. Price, also of Moncton, threw up a lucrative practice and joined the force. On arrival at Cape Town he was selected to accompany Cronje and the Boer prisoners to St. Helena, as physician in charge. The Doctor has in his possession a tooth of the General's, extracted on the voyage.

Speaking of Boer prisoners, Wm. Cooke of the Charlottetown Engineers, was chosen with others to take charge of a number who were sent to Celyon. Other Island boys we might mention are Corp. Herbert Brown and Hurdis McLean who are engaged in the Red Cross establishment at Bloemfontein.

Wm. Coombs, R. D. Kennedy and W. J. Proud of the Draft are named as having reached Pretoria with the regiment.

Ernest Bowness, Reginald Cox and Roy Harris, who, owing to illness, were out of the Regiment during the entry into Pretoria, rejoined a few weeks after.

One of the brave Charlottetown boys was R. Ernest Lord, who notwithstanding a wrenched knee tramped from Paardeberg to Bloemfontein. Arriving there the young soldier was isolated from his comrades by a severe attack of diphtheria followed by a long siege of enteric fever.

Arthur Mellish, who was thrown in the air and rendered unconscious by an exploding shell at Thaba N'Chu, and who received a slight bullet wound in the leg at Zand River, remained with the regiment.

Bugler William McMullin was one of the number who found a handsomely dressed doll on the march to Bloemfontein, and divided the spoils of the wardrobe among his comrades.

The men Nova Scotia has given for her country are :

“St. Vincent, Cape Verde Islands,
Oct. 18th, 1900.

TO THE MAYOR OF CHARLOTTETOWN :

Twenty-three Island boys—nineteen of First Contingent, three of Reinforcements—en route home. All well.

Signed, (REV.) T. F. FULLERTON.”

All is excitement in the Provinces by the sea and throughout our fair Dominion, for the soldier boys of the First Contingent are expected to arrive in Canada on the anniversary of their departure.

Halifax is rising magnificently to the occasion and promises not only to call out her standing militia to take part in the celebrations, but also to entertain four hundred heroes at a grand banquet and present each man with a sovereign.

The Government of Canada is also showing her appreciation of the Soldiers of the Queen by arranging to present each one with a suit of civilian's clothes.

In New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, and throughout all Canada, extensive preparations in the form of banquets, torchlight processions and public celebrations are going forward rapidly; all social religious and political barriers are swept away, and the people are uniting in giving the soldier boys a hearty welcome home.

Steps are being taken in Charlottetown and elsewhere for the erection of monuments to the memory of those brave heroes who have fallen, and in honor of their equally brave survivors.

The medal for the present South African campaign will be the most expensive and the most ornate issued by the War Office in recent years. The medal proper is a five-pointed star with a gold centre surrounded by a ring of bronze, on which the words “South Africa” appear in raised letters. In the centre of all is a miniature of the Queen. The medal is the same size as the Khedival Star of 1881. The ribbon is of four colours, a stripe of khaki in the centre, two of white, and one each of red and blue. There will probably be a bar granted for each important engagement.

TO OUR RETURNING SOLDIERS.

The marked success that has followed the arms of the colonial troops throughout the campaign has called forth admiration from the world at large. Never before in the history of the nation has the British Empire stood out with such magnificent strength, and the fact that you, our representatives, have held your own with regiments of long and hard-earned fame, and that your blood has flowed with that of England's greatest has forever cemented the unity of a Greater Britain. You have fought for the most glorious traditions of English freedom, not for the Boers alone, but for all nations that cluster in South Africa practically under the protection of the British flag. British pluck and valor, when used in the right direction, must in the end triumph, and we are proud that in the hour of Britain's need "Canadian hearts were true," proud that in the tumult of the fray you flinched not, quailed not, faltered not.

But in the hour of our pride we do not forget that your ranks are broken,—a thin line, an absent face, a missing comrade, tell of heroes fallen, yet "they who die for country sleep with God," and their names, enshrined with honor and glory; shall ever stand immortalized before the world.

And now to you our brave Canadian volunteers who have borne the heat and burden of the day, to you who will carry forever marks of the strife and din of battle, and to all our returning heroes, we Nova Scotians, New Brunswickers, Prince Edward Islanders, we Canadians all,

EXTEND TO YOU A HEARTY WELCOME
HOME.

It is well known that in the three memorable sieges Gen. Sir George Stewart White commanded the British forces in Ladysmith, Col. Kekewich in Kimberley and Col. Baden-Powell in Mafeking. On the Boer side Joubert was in command of the forces around Ladysmith during the greater part of the siege of Mafeking and was later succeeded by Snyman, when Cronje moved down to take charge of the siege of Kimberley.

The dates of all the principal battles are given above. The battle of Glencoe, also called the battle of Talana Hill, was fought under Gen. Symons on the British side and a portion of Joubert's command. Won by the British.

The battle of Elandslaagte was fought under Gen. White against a portion of Joubert's forces and won by the British. Gen. French signalised himself in this fight.

Reitfontein, like Elandslaagte was fought to hold the Boer forces at bay till the British forces from Glencoe, (under Gen. Yule after Symon's death) could make good their retirement to Ladysmith. Won by the British.

Nicholson's Nek disaster befell a portion of Gen. White's command, who were captured by Joubert's men.

The battle of Belmont was fought by Gen. Lord Methuen against the Boers under Cronje and won by the British. Gras Pan the same. Modder River the same, though it was pretty nearly a drawn battle.

At Magersfontein the British under Methuen were repulsed in an attack on the Boers in position under Cronje.

The first great battle on the Tugela was fought by Gen. Buller against Gen. Joubert. The British were repulsed with severe loss.

At Stormberg the British under Gen. Gatacre were repulsed with heavy loss in killed, wounded, prisoners and guns by the Boers under Botha.

Spion Kop was first captured and afterwards abandoned by the British under Gen. Warren, the Boers being commanded by Schalkburger.

At Paardeberg, and at the capture of Cronje nine days later, the respective commanders were Lord Roberts and Cronje. Since Cronje's capture the command of the Boer forces has devolved on Botha who has been driven back 290 miles from Bloemfontein to Pretoria.

The taking of Pretoria on June 5th, and the annexation of the Transvaal on Sept. 1st are virtually the closing stages of the campaign.

The Absent Minded Beggar.

BY MOLAR FORCEPS.

With Apologies to Rudyard Kipling.

When you've shouted with the toothache, when you've lost a few nights' sleep,
When you've thought the whole thing over in your mind,
When you've wondered if there's such a thing as comfort in this life,
Or pleasure, without pain, for poor mankind.
Then you "Absent-minded Beggar," come and see us mighty quick,
We will ease your troubles, make you nice to look at,
But we give you timely warning, which we hope won't be too late,
That if you delay you always will regret it.

Back Tooth, Front Tooth, Tooth of any kind,
No matter what the trouble is or what it has gone through,
We'll treat and fill in a painless way, make it as good as new,
You can sit down at the table then, and Chew! Chew! Chew!

If at any time through carelessness you had a tooth pulled out,
And you miss it when you strike a tough beefsteak,
We can put it back quite easily in a scientific way,
And the new one we will guarantee won't ache.
For you're an "Absent-minded Beggar," and at sometime through your life
When your tooth ached, and you thought you would not miss it,
You faced the piece of cold steel in a careless sort of way
And now's the time you feel you must replace it.

Tooth Ache, Tooth Break, no matter how badly gone,
We'll build it up, and Crown or Bridge, and give you perfect ease,
Everything new and "up-to-date" we make it a point to learn,
We give you the benefit of the best, so Come! Come! Come!

Some "Absent-minded Beggars" have lost teeth, roots and all,
And as a last resort must have a plate,
Come in and see our specimen work of every kind that's made,
We'll fit you right, you'll wonder why you let it go so late.
And we have the Berlin Method when some bad ones must come out,
By painless work a patient's never flurried,
You surely won't regret it, and you'll send your friends as well,
For many of them the fear of pain has worried.

Plate Tooth, Crown Tooth, Tooth upon a Bridge,
A dozen different kinds of teeth, we make them every day,
We'll do our work and do it right, and what we ask of you
That you'll open your purse in a pleasant way and
"Pay! Pay! Pay!"

You will find us at the
