Poetry.
A Song of the Past.
There is a land - far, very far away -
Beyond the hills - beyond the days -
It is a silent world, I know,
The dim forgotten land of long ago!
Oh, hand in hand with sorrow,
I wander there sadhly,
Where there is no to-morrow,
The dreamland of the Past!

For me both gold and silver keys there are
To the barred portals of that region far;
My golden key - a tress of sunny hair -
Unlocks a gate that guards a garden fair.
There, amid phantom flowers,
And daisies in ruined bowers
Of yore stand long ago.

I see her as I saw her here of old,
A chaplet bound about her locks of gold;
But let a passing sigh be in her eye,
And in her eyes a shadow lie.

By dusky blooms half hidden
She smiles amid her tears,
And then she cries with gladness
The ghosts of buried years.

Another key I have - a faded glove -
But it is hallowed by the kiss of love;
All that little palm it once so softly pressed
Crosses his sister now on Ella's breast.

This opens an ivory door,
In the forgotten land,
Where, in a myrtle thicket,
I have laid my hand.

More bliss than earthly potentia, I sway
This vale of tears of old which so far away
Armed with these precious passports I am free.
Of twilight gardens where my lost one be!
Where faded phantoms float
That never more shall die
Erewith dim ruined bowers -
The Land of Long Ago!

An Engineer's Yarn.

Our steamer had just cleared Singapore. My duty in the engine room was done and I was sitting with the mate on the bridge watching the downward sweep of the tropic sun. "It puts me in mind of a theatre sunset," he was saying, "they always go by the run. And that was a pretty theatrical bit you had in the engine room," he said to my chief, who had joined me. We had found all the mate but one of the forecasting rods had been broken. Had another half turn been made, our engines would have been a scap heap.

"Only once had it happened before," said my chief, "and there was a grand tableaus of it that was put on in the engine room. Our mate and three well-eyed junks were the actors. It was up there, jerking his head towards me, "There was nothing but a thousand odd miles of water and a dusting of islands between us and Hongkong!"

The mate held a lighted match to the chief's pipe and set him drifting with the current of his yarn.

"You see, it was years and years ago, and I was coming in a load boat - Hongkong to Yokohama. We were the first to employ Chinese firemen. We had been repairing and had put on a fresh crew, all except one, Li Chia. It was near moonset time, and the second day out we were heading on our way, but there was no sunset on that day. It had been heavy all day, and we were watching the moon rise - just past full. It looked as if one was - had just one side of the moon. It got up in the night, big and red, like a fire balloon at old Cremorne. A mass, staggering swell had set in, so oily that it had no more to it than the slush in a greaser's bucket. We were all pretty well hipped and morose, being company for no one except the sea, and that - well, that looked as if it wanted to be sick and couldn't. Li Chia, who was decent for a heathen, was in charge below.

"My chief was sitting on the rails, and somehow he went over the side. You know pretty well how things like that galvanize everybody. Lose him? No. The chief only saved him, for the old man ran the boat straight back in her own wake, which was marked out like a sandy road at the night, and that - well, that looked as if it wanted to be sick and couldn't. Li Chia, who was decent for a heathen, was in charge below.

"I looked over the rail. We'd hit the other and smashed one side off, her deck like a split cartload of turpentine as she heeled over. Her masts caught our boat and tore it away. Then she benched and slumped. "After hitting the first junk the old man had been rambling up and down the deck like a mad fellow.

"The third junk had got some distance away, but it was no use. After he went, our old man roared and shaking his fist at her. Then all at once he quieted and conned us like a Thames steambot skipper. "And we hit that junk clean in the stern and rode over her from end to end. It was a splendid piece of the struggle in our water. I ran and asked him if we weren't going to save some of them.

"He knocked me clean off my feet. I was pulled for more than ten minutes, and when I awoke together we were still running ahead.

"My chief was binding up my head and the old man was staring astern. All at once he screamed:

"Lord, what have I done!" and chucked up his arms and fell back. He never spoke more, but went out next morning. We made the heathen stoke us back to Hongkong - and jail. I went to the hospital completely knocked over.

"You know Aberdeen? Yes! Well, you know that old house against the town hall - and eating house? His widow keeps that now, and if ever you're stuck up say as you know and who she called with him.

Aunt Serena's Salt Bag.

"What makes the trunk so heavy?" asked Paul, as he lifted the old fashioned leather covered box from the ranch house.

"Gold and precious stones, likely. "You know folks are all rich down in New England," replied Thea.

"Aunt Serena wouldn't bring those." "Of course she wouldn't," put in that lady herself, coming from the dwelling which was to be her home for a year. "I guess I know better than to bring anything like that out here - why don't you have a board walk instead of a dirt path to your house?"

"This is the Concession, Aunt; it's Texas, or 'nighly near the Panhandle," replied Paul. "If you visit the Texas do as the Texas do; you know the proverb."

"It is not a proverb, and you did not quote it correctly; but hurry in with the trunk." "The heavy burden was, with much straining of muscles on the part of the two nephews, carried inside; but the youths' curiosity remained unsatisfied.

"I've brought this twenty miles in a wagon to-day, and I ought to be told what's in it," insisted Paul. "So they waited while Aunt Serena unpacked.

Drum, sprayer, a few keppans - out the articles came, all light of weight and finishing up explanation of the mystery. But before the bottom was reached the lid slammed shut and no more was to be seen.

"Mighty funny she's no particular," commented Paul, as she and himself sat on their whip any man who leaves the stokeher ponies the following day, a couple of miles from the cabin, watching the big cattle-herd. "I'm going to find out, as 'right soon, too."

"Don't know; but I guess so. Father and mother are going to take her over to the school director's this afternoon. I'll make a hunt then."

"What d'ye find?" asked Thea.

"Gold, silver, iron, horse-shoes, beans, bullets - I've lived too long within smelling distance of salt water to risk having things fresh. Even for a visit I wanted to be prepared for emergencies, and besides, I suppose you've stock salt in the house."

"Your trail ain't even warm - its salt." "What for?"

"How do you suppose I know? I'm going to ask."

"But Paul did not need to ask. Aunt Serena suspected that her belongings had been searched, and forestalled any comments by remarking at the breakfast table: "It's the purest, finest salt I could get - hand made, milled in salt water to risk having things fresh. Even for a visit I wanted to be prepared for emergencies, and besides, I suppose you've stock salt in the house."

"But there it's just what you'd allow to find a school teacher doing," said Paul. His contempt for school teachers was, however, largely assumed, and he often wished he were capable of teaching the neighborhood school, as his aunt was doing. He longed for his knowledge of books every time he saw her crossing the prairie to the school house, a mile or more from the ranch, where all the settler's children gathered.

"But something else was of more pressing importance. The grass on the ranch was becoming short, and the growth had prevented the starting of a new crop."

"We must move the stock down nearer the ranch house," ordered the chief herder, and the men allowed the cattle to grass closer to the corral.

Five thousand head of Texas cattle! A little sea of horses, thin, nervous faces sharp backs and twitching tails - it was a difficult thing to manage, an army that skill alone could control. For man nor horse singly they had neither respect nor fear; but a man on a horse could rule them, provided there were enough men on horses.

At the hour morning days merged into autumn, no rain came to start the grass - something unexplained in the history of the ranch. Two or three times the herdsmen found it necessary to drive the cattle several miles to water; but the grass near the ranch house was largely because through the earlier part of the season the stock had been kept at some distance from the home headquarters.

"It seems like being outside of civilization," said Aunt Serena, coming home from her school one day, and looking out over the vast plains on which were feeding the excitable "longhorns."

"Never mind," said Paul, who came in just then clad in his herder costume; "if we don't have any bad luck, and get the stock to market all right, it'll take me into civilization. I've got to share in the herd, and as going to college."

Paul, indeed was growing exceedingly nervous over the cattle's condition. A few weeks longer of short feed would, he feared, make them unsalable at the high price on which he counted.

The next day there was another drive to water, and a threesome one it was. Twice the herd broke into an awkward trot, and it required all the herders' ingenuity and efforts to restrain it.

The crackling of a stick, the call of a quail, the sudden starting of a jack rabbit - nothing seemed too trivial for the cattle in their present condition.

"Watch 'em nighly close, boys," was the chief herder's order, when, after much difficulty, all were safely returned to the house range, as the feeding grounds near the house were called.

And they were watched close. All day the endless procession of herders rode round and round the restless creatures, turning back the stragglers.

On the second day the atmosphere seemed more oppressive than in weeks. It was "headache weather," according to Aunt Serena, and she found the mile walk to the school house a wearisome one.

"I shall dismiss school early this afternoon," she remarked, on leaving home. "The children can't stand to keep such long hours. I've invited the first reader class to come to tea with me. There are eight of them."

"I wish," spoke the latter anxiously, "that aunt wouldn't carry that bright yellow parasol. I'm afraid it may come as trouble some day."

"Nonsense!" was the reply; "we always have the herd on this side of the range while she goes and comes. She can't hurt."

"But the critics might stampede on the herd, and what's going to make 'em? Besides, it ain't likely they'll go in that direction, anyhow."

But Thea did not know as much about the ways of cattle as did his elder brother; nor was he animated by the same personal interest in the herd's welfare.

It was three o'clock when the brothers met again.

"Say, Thea," were Paul's words as he rode close to his companion, "I'm awful thirsty. I wish you'd ride over to the house and bring up a can of water. The cattle are a little quiter now, and I'll watch for both of us."

Without a word Thea was off, glad of a respite, and enjoying the brisk center to which he spurred his willing pony.

The Queen was accompanied by H. R. H. the Princess of Wales and H. R. H. the Duke of Devonshire. On the right of the Queen's carriage rode H. R. H. the Duke of Devonshire, and on the left H. R. H. the Duke of Cambridge.

The scene at St. Paul's was one which history will never forget. A lady writer—an eye-witness—gave the following description of what I give a little later: "The procession had moved into position upon the pavement. The 'Joy' organ was raised, and the noble organ of the church's hymn rang out.

Good Blood

Is essential to health. Every organ and corner of the system is reached by the blood, and on its quality the condition of every organ depends.

Good blood means strong nerves, good digestion, robust health. Impure blood means anemia, dyspepsia, rheumatism, catarrh or other diseases.

There were seen there sights of the comical character. Here was seen a coal with two young fellows stretched out, apparently asleep, and waiting for the movement of the procession. Directly a boy is seen with a handkerchief tied to his nose, and a little brother— I presume—lying on the top of the wagon, and so, we are informed.

Wood's Sarsaparilla

Is the best in fact the One True Blood Purifier. Cure liver troubles; easy to take; easy to operate.

BICYCLES For Sale or Hire

Two new Ladies' and four Men's. Wheel in perfect order which we offer for sale at very low prices. We will also repair and adjust any bicycle within a reasonable distance from our works.
