Mr. OLIVER: I am very glad of that, because the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Buchanan), who is most interested in this matter, is not here to-night.

Mr. BORDEN: Would my hon. friend prefer not to take the Bill up at all?

Mr. OLIVER: I have no objection to running through it, as the Prime Minister has said, and anything that we do not consider controversial may go through. Perhaps we would gain something if we ran through this Bill, as long as we are not committed to what we do not understand.

Mr. BORDEN: Certainly not. If we pass any sections that are found afterwards to require further consideration, they may be brought up again.

On section 5—minister may permit diversion of water:

Mr. OLIVER: As to this section, to use a legal phrase, as at present advised, the section does not strike me as being such as I would wish to see. When an application is made to construct irrigation works with a view to securing a license to use water, as the Act stands the applicant must carry out his part of the contract, he must complete the works which he undertakes to construct before the license is granted that will enable him to dispose of the water for which he has applied. But the effect of this proposed section is to allow him to dispose of water before he has completed his irrigation work—that is before he has carried out the contract with the Government requiring expenditure on his part. Suppose I apply for the right to take water and make a contract to construct certain irrigation works. Before I have half finished these works, I may begin to use the water and, though I never finish the works which I undertook to construct, may continue to use the water. That is to say I have the benefit of the contract without having completed it. It does not seem to me that that is a business-like proposition and I do not think it will work out well in practice. I have no doubt that the reason for this section is that in some certain case the applicant has found it difficult to complete his works, or completion has been delayed, there has been a demand for water, and it has been said: What is the difference?—we have got enough of the works constructed to allow a partial use of the water; let us use what we can use and we will finish later on.

Mr. BORDEN: Are these licenses for a definite term?

Mr. OLIVER: No, once issued, they are perpetual. That is the reason why, as the Act has stood, the licenses are not issued until the work is completed. This, it seems to me, breaks in on that principle, and I am afraid it leaves the situation in a condition that, I should say, would not be satisfactorily workable to all interests concerned.

Mr. BORDEN: I suppose the object of this section would be this: During the construction of the works, when partially completed, it might be regarded as in the public interest that water should be used for the purpose of irrigating a certain portion of the land that might otherwise have to await for a considerable period the completion of the work. I see, however, the force of the objection that the hon. gentleman has mentioned.

10 p.m.

Mr. CARVELL: Suppose the water were allowed to be used for a specified period.

Mr. BORDEN: I was just about to suggest that. Some words might be inserted which would subject the license to such conditions as the minister might regard as proper in the public interest, and also the license could be granted only for a certain term. In the meantime, the section should stand, and the minister will take into consideration the suggestion made.

On section 6—minister may waive public notice:

Mr. KNOWLES: I do not wish to criticise. It is, however, hard to know what some of these sections mean without an explanation. Probably the minister will look at 'Hansard,' and I might mention now that it would be convenient if he would give a short resumé of the purpose of the Bill.

When we are at home, people very often ask us what changes have been made in these Acts. I generally make a practice of looking up 'Hansard' for the speech of the minister on the introduction of the Bill. I am not clear about many of the points that have been gone over to-night. If Mr. Drayton, the chief man in the Immigration Branch, were here, he would probably be able to give the minister the information. For instance, what is meant by 'municipal purposes?' Then, I am hazy about section 6. I have not the slightest suspicion of its being wrong, but it requires some little study and explanation. The right seems to be taken here that the minister may, whenever he considers it expedient, waive the necesssity of public notice for filing the memorial or the memorial and plans. The footnote says this is necessary in comparatively trivial cases where the water is required for washing gravel or taking out ice. That qualification, however, is not in the section of the proposed legislation. I would like to know more particularly the answer to the points I have raised. In Moosejaw, for example, we have had quite a municipal problem. A year ago last winter a company was engaged in taking out ice where it always has been taken out, and all of a sudden an injunction was taken out against them by the Canadian Pacific railway. It appears that the Canadian Pacific railway had some old water licenses for damming the water for their railway operations; and, not for the sake of all the ice which they could take out, but for other reasons, they wished to put a block in the way of these men, and took advantage of this Act to stop them by injunction. A very great wrong might have been done to the city, and possibly was done for all I know, by putting the ice trade into the hands of a nonopoly. They made it possible to take ice from a pond a mile long. Some powers should be taken by the Government to grant relief against any arbitrary assertion of rights that go to the grantee of a water license. I mention that because the explanatory note refers to the cutting of ice.

Mr. BORDEN: I think the hon. gentleman's suggestion that the minister should give an explanation of the whole Bill is a proper one, as the second reading took place by consent and without the usual explanation. I may be able to make this section clear by reading subsection 1 of the present Act, which is as follows:

In the case of applications for water for domestic or irrigation purposes, the minister may, if he sees fit, waive the necessity for filing the plans required by this Act, and may require the applicants to file a memorial only.

It is proposed to amend that by striking out the word 'irrigation' before the word 'purposes,' and then the subsection would be as follows:

In the case of applications for water for domestic or other purposes, the minister may, if he sees fit, waive the necessity for filing the plans required by this Act, and may require the applicants to file a memorial only.

Then there is section 2, which is not touched:

The minister may order that such memorial shall contain all the information necessary to a full and complete understanding of the rights applied for.

The third subsection as proposed, is set forth in the Bill. This section had better stand until the minister comes.

Section stands.

On section 7—S. 29a amended:

Mr. OLIVER: If the explanation in the footnote explains thoroughly, there seems to be no objection to this section; but I would suggest that, instead of the section being drafted as it is, the old section should be repealed and a new section substituted conveying in so many words exactly what the intention is. It makes it much more simple, and I think is better in every way.

Mr. BORDEN: My hon. friend's suggestion is carrying out a principle that I have advocated a great many times myself. I think it is the better way to carry out an amendment in most cases.

Mr. OLIVER: It is for laymen; I do not know how it is for the men of the law.

Section stands.

Progress reported.

SUPPLY.

The House in Committee of Supply, Mr. Blondin in the Chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Department of Agriculture—For the development of the live stock industry, $400,000.

Mr. MARCIL: The minister will allow me to call attention to a statement in La Patrie to-night. It gives an account of a visit to the horseflesh abattoir in the county of Chambly. I think there are two of them, both in a very flourishing condition. Four to six horses are sent there every day, some to be canned and some to be salted. It is claimed the meat is sent to Sweden. It is also stated that the minister has sent an inspector down there and that he has made a report to the health authorities of Montreal. I would like to know if it is a fact.

Mr. BURRELL: I am afraid I cannot tell my hon. friend. I have no knowledge of one of our inspectors going down there, but I will make inquiries.

Mr. MARCIL: The papers are making such a splurge over this that the people of Montreal are getting frightened. The price of meat is high, I know, but they are not accustomed to eating horseflesh.

Mr. BURRELL: We are not authorized under the Act to deal with horseflesh.

Mr. OLIVER: Notwithstanding the lateness of the session and the amount of legislation we have on hand, I am sure that if there is a business enterprise in Montreal such as my hon. friend mentions, the House will agree to spare the time to pass legislation authorizing the Minister of Agriculture to take the necessary steps.

Mr. MARCIL: There are two of these enterprises in the county of Chambly. The horses are bought at from $8 to $20 a head, and some of them can hardly limp to the abattoir to be knocked down.

Mr. GAUVREAU: La Patrie has a story about it to-night.

Mr. MARCIL: They claim that the meat is exported to Sweden, but we have no guarantee that such is the case.

Mr. OLIVER: I think the minister will realize that this is an emergency.

Hon. J. D. HAZEN: When the Agricultural Estimates were before the House on the 26th February last, there was some discussion with regard to the purchase, or rather the non-purchase, of a property in the county of Carleton for an experimental farm. The hon. member for Carleton made some remarks which reflected on the conduct of two gentlemen in that county, and suggested that the reason the property was not bought in Carleton county was that if it had been a rake-off would have to be paid to Mr. B. F. Smith. I will read what my hon. friend from Carleton said:

> I want to make a correction in the statement I made before dinner, because I want the record to be correct in every way. I said the minister had an offer from Mr. Charles L. Smith to sell 500 acres of land in Woodstock—the very best land that could be required for an experimental farm, including all grades of soil—for $20,000. I am wrong in that. I think the offer the minister has in his department is $30,000. The difficulty was that another gentleman, this time the postmaster at Woodstock, Mr. Norman W. Winslow, was the medium; he was the commission merchant in this case. Mr. Winslow, and as he stated, my opponent, Mr. B. J. Smith, had to have $10,000 as a rake-off, and therefore if the farmer wanted to sell his farm he was compelled to put the price at $30,000 so that the politicians could get $10,000 as a rake-off; he would get but $20,000 for his farm. These are the facts of the case.

I do not propose to enter into any discussion of the matter, but I have been asked by Mr. Winslow and by Mr. Smith, both of whom are reflected on by this statement, to place side by side with that accusation against them the statements which they make in regard to the matter. On the 28th February I received this telegram from Mr. B. F. Smith:

> Hon. J. D. Hazen,
> Minister of Marine and Fisheries,
> Ottawa, Ont.
>
> Referring to the discussion in the Commons on the twenty-sixth instant, as reported in Hansard, regarding the purchase of land in New Brunswick for experimental farm, cowardly allusions made to myself by F. B. Carvell are absolutely false in every particular. Would ask for an investigation.
>
> B. F. Smith.

Later on, Mr. Smith wrote me a private letter dated March 4, but in a subsequent letter, dated March 6, he asked me to read his letter of March 4 to the House, as he has nothing to conceal. This letter reads as follows:

> Hon. J. D. Hazen,
> Ottawa, Canada.
>
> Dear Mr. Hazen,
>
> With reference to the statement which appears in 'Hansard,' made by Carvell, regarding the purchase of land in New Brunswick for experimental farm. I beg to say that the statements, so far as I am concerned, are false, in every particular. I cannot see why he should be allowed to get by with that kind of talk. The files of the Minister of Agriculture will show that I never recommended the purchase of Charles F. Smith's farm, nor did I ever write to the department regarding it. In fact, I was not favourable to the purchase of it.

Norman Winslow told me, at one time, that Charles F. Smith would retire from the provincial contest, if we would buy his farm. My reply to Winslow, at that time, was that I would not give him a ten cent piece to retire. It seems to me that you should take Carvell to task, on the floor of the House for making statements of this kind. This is the only place that you could do it effectively. It is not right that he should be allowed to make a cowardly attack like this on any one at a distance of 1,000 miles and under the protection of the House.

I understood, from Mr. Winslow that he was writing you fully, with regard to the matter.

Yours very truly,

B. F. Smith.

I also received a letter and telegram from Mr. Winslow. On February 27, 1914, he sent the following telegram from Woodstock:

Hon. J. D. Hazen,
House of Commons,
Ottawa.

Telegram regarding Charles Smith's farm received. Carvell has been misinformed, as it is absolutely untrue that Frank Smith and I, or either of us, endeavoured to make ten thousand dollars rake-off on sale of farm owned by Charles Smith to the Government for experimental purposes. I never at any time asked or wrote Frank Smith to recommend the Government to buy the farm at twenty or thirty thousand dollars, or any other price. Will write you more fully tomorrow.

J. N. W. Winslow.

The letter to which Mr. Winslow refers, dated Woodstock, March 2, 1914, reads as follows:

Hon. J. D. Hazen,
Minister of Marine and Fisheries,
Ottawa.

My Dear Hazen:—

I have read 'Hansard' report of Mr. Carvell's story re the C. L. Smith farm. As I wired you he was misinformed as to the facts. During the session of 1912 it became known that the Government proposed establishing an experimental farm in New Brunswick. I with others in Woodstock were anxious that it should be in Carleton and we asked Frank Smith to urge Carleton County's claims. When talking it over with him he favoured buying it in the Jacksonville district and we named over several farms around the farm formerly known as the G. R. Ketchum farm comprising about 700 acres that we estimated could be bought for about $30,000. I spoke of buying a farm south of Woodstock, between Woodstock and Bull's Creek. Later on I think in April, 1912, C. L. Smith came to me and asked me to do what I could with Frank to get the department to buy his farm. I asked him the price and he said $20,000 for the whole farm, upland and intervale, which he stated contained between 400 and 500 acres. I asked him for an option so as to fix the price. He said he could not give it as he had already listed it for a certain time with another party in town who was to have a commission of 5 per cent. I then asked for particulars and learned he did not want to include in it a certain part of the rear which is known as the Henry Smith farm. I said that if he got $20,000 for the whole of it he would be making a good sale as farms were selling. I agreed with him however that the farm was well situated, being close to town, and as the buildings were A1 and there was about 80 acres of intervale, it was really worth more money and as the price of farms were going up no doubt in a very short time it would sell for very much more. I further stated that as his farm included the intervale off the front of the George Upham farm and about 50 acres off the rear of the Upham farm that I did not think the department would care to buy it in that shape, as they would probably later on want to buy the balance of the Upham farm so as to square up the property, and might have to pay very much more than if bought now. He said Upham would sell and I told him to send Upham to me. Upham called on another day and stated he would sell for either $7,000 or $9,000, I am not sure now which figure. I said I thought his price was high but I would think it over. I did not ask him for an option. I afterwards told Frank Smith the farms could be bought for $30,000. I made up my mind that C. L. Smith would want something more to throw in the Henry Smith farm, but that Upham would drop and the two combined would not cost over the $30,000, and as the two would contain about 700 acres it would mean nearly $42 an acre which would be a good trade for the department and also for them. C. L. Smith gave me as a reason for selling that he wanted to go to Alberta where his boys were farming. Whether Frank Smith ever wrote the department or not I do not know, as I paid no further attention to it. If he did write and stated $30,000 he meant that amount for the combined farms. I enclose a rough sketch which will show you that it was necessary to have both farms. Upham I considered wanted too much for his farm but that Smith's was a purchase at $20,000 and that the two combined were well worth $30,000. I believed then and still believe they would be an excellent site for the purpose intended, as they included both intervale and upland. Later on when the Liberals were trying to form a ticket for the local election which I think was in June, 1912, C. L. Smith who was talked of as one of the candidates alone with Geo. Upham and Andrew McCain, came in to see me a day or two after he had been to Florenceville to see McCain, and asked me to speak to the Conservative executive in regard to some of them buying his farm for $20,000. He said if they would put up a part of the money the balance could be arranged by a mortgage until they could sell it. He also said that if they would buy it, he would immediately go West and not be a candidate, and if he were not in it McCain would not run and there would probably be no opposition ticket in Carleton. I replied that I was not taking any active interest in the local election but would speak to Geo. Balmain who was at that time the president of the Conservative Association. I did speak to him but he replied they would have nothing to do with it. When Mr. Grisdale with Mr. Hubbard came to town, I with others met them on their arrival, but beyond being introduced to Mr.

Grisdale I paid no further attention to them. I believe they with a few others got two motors in the afternoon and drove down to C. L. Smith's farm and possibly further, and also out the Jacksonville road and left on the afternoon train. I did not discuss with Mr. Grisdale any particular farm or prices, for the reason that I had at that time about given up any hopes I ever had of Carleton getting it, as Landry had told Frank Smith, who had asked him for his support, that he favoured Fredericton it being the seat of the Government, etc., etc., and Hubbard I knew myself favoured Fredericton. When Mr. Burrell came down later on I phoned Frank Smith to try to get him to come to Woodstock, and the president of the Board of Trade wired him to come, but he replied he had not time. While he was in Fredericton I believe he arranged to buy the experimental farm below Fredericton. That ended the experimental farm as far as Woodstock was concerned.

Later on in 1913 when the St. John and Quebec railway were ready to grade across Smith's farm, I advised them to buy the farm as Smith was asking too much for the right of way. I tried to get an option for the $20,000 on the whole farm, as you can see by the copy of a letter I wrote him which I enclose. He still wanted to keep out the Henry Smith farm and also wanted what he was claiming for right of way, which was exactly what I wanted to save for the company. I did not get the option and that ended those negotiations.

The arbitrators afterwards awarded him $1,800 for about 3½ acres for the right of way and about two months ago he sold about 10 acres off the north side of his intervale front to the Agricultural Society for $1,900 or about $200 an acre which is $100 an acre more than it is worth. He was at a slimly attended annual meeting of the society last fall elected president, and with a combination he and some others formed engineered the sale to the society at that figure.

Yours very truly,

J. N. W. Winslow.

Following that, is a letter enclosing a sketch of the different properties. I am simply reading the correspondence to the House for this reason: The charge against Mr. Smith and Mr. Winslow was one of a very serious character; they are not in the House to defend themselves; I have no knowledge whatever in regard to the transaction except what is contained in these letters; and it is simply in fairness to these gentlemen that I read these letters in order that their denial may appear in 'Hansard' side by side with the charges which were made by the hon. member for Carleton.

Mr. CARVELL: I am afraid that the gentleman referred to by my hon. friend, Mr. Winslow, has been in so many little land deals around Woodstock since he became postmaster.

Mr. MACDONALD: Is he the postmaster of Woodstock ?

Mr. CARVELL: Yes, he is the postmaster at the present time.

Mr. MACDONALD: What does the Postmaster General say about that ?

Mr. CARVELL: The Postmaster General does not care as long as it is a Tory who is doing these things. Mr. Winslow has stated that he was acting for Mr. B. F. Smith. I make no reference now to what Mr. B. F. Smith may have said. But my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries very kindly told me that he had received letters from Mr. Smith and Mr. Winslow which he wanted to read to the House, and, without giving me copies of the letters, he told me that they claimed that the difference between $20,000 and $30,000 included in some way the Upham farm. Inasmuch as the matter might come up in a day or two, I wired to Mr. Smith the general result and I received this letter from him which I purpose placing upon 'Hansard.' Fortunately I have something else beside this, which, I think, will convince the minister that his friends in New Brunswick are very badly muddled over this real estate transfer. I will read the letter first.

Mr. McKENZIE: What Mr. Smith is this?

Mr. CARVELL: This is Mr. C. L. Smith, who owned the farm in question:

Woodstock, N. B., March 9, 1914.

F. B. Carvell, Esq., M.P.,
House of Commons,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Frank:

At your request about the selling of my property for an experimental farm.

Mr. Holyoke, a real estate man of the town of Woodstock, told me that he wanted my farm for an experimental farm as the Government was going to have an experimental farm in the province of New Brunswick. I gave him a price of $20,000 for my farm, including the Upham interval.

I hope you will remember that Upham interval and Upham farm are two different transactions entirely. The Upham farm originally was one of the oldest grants on the river St. John, and next south of it was the Smith farm, or the Smith grant. Some years ago, the Upham interval, consisting of about one hundred acres on the front of the Upham farm, was sold to Mr. C. L. Smith, who thus owned not only the Smith homestead which had been in the family for 125 years, but the interval in front of the Upham farm.

Afterwards, I was sent for by Mr. Winslow, postmaster of the town of Woodstock, and he made the same request. I told him that Mr. Holyoke was ahead of him. Mr. Winslow said that Mr. Holyoke could not put the deal through, as he (Mr. Winslow) had B. F. Smith with him.

Mr. B. F. Smith is the gentleman who now controls the patronage of the county.

Mr. Smith having the patronage of the county, and being with Mr. Winslow, I told Mr. Winslow to go ahead that I wanted to sell the farm. My price was $20,000 including the Upham interval, and I did not care which one sold it. Mr. Winslow took the matter up and Mr. Grisdale of the Department of Agriculture was sent here. I was told by Mr. Winslow that Mr. Grisdale would be here, and that I was to ask him $30,000 for the farm of 400 acres, at $75 an acre, including the Upham interval.

Yours truly,
(Sgd) C. L. Smith.

As far as that goes, we simply have the word of one man against another. I would not have made this statement had I had nothing else than simply the ordinary gossip that may go around the neighbourhood, but I have always tried to back up with documents any statement that I have ever made in this House. I have knowledge obtained from a source which, I think, will satisfy even the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that I was justified in making this statement.

During the summer of 1913 a railway company required a certain portion of the Smith farm for right-of-way, and as they could not agree upon the price it went to arbitration. I was Mr. Smith's solicitor and counsel, and naturally Mr. Smith was trying to make his farm as valuable as he could, because like every other landowner he felt that great damage was being done him, and as the value of the farm played some part, it became important, in my opinion, to show the arbitrators everything that could be shown to give them an idea of the value of the farm and the consequent damage caused by the taking of the right-of-way; this being a stock farm and the pasturage being behind the railway. I have here the record of the case which was decided on sworn testimony. Before I had any idea at all of what Mr. Winslow or Mr. B. F. Smith was going to say, Mr. C. L. Smith, the owner of the farm, gave evidence as to the value of the property. I read from page 29 of the case, part of the evidence of Mr. C. L. Smith:

Q. In your opinion how much will the building of this road across the land as you have described depreciate the saleable value of your property?—A. I say $4,000. I wouldn't have it there for $4,000 if I want to stay there and farm.

Q. Have you had any offers for your farm of late?—A. Yes I had an offer this spring in writing, and one last June, I think.

[Mr. Carvell.]

Q. From whom?—A. Mr. Winslow, postmaster.

Q. Norman Winslow?—A. Yes.

Q. How much?—A. $20,000.

Q. For your whole farm?—A. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN: With the railway there or not there?—A. They would have whatever they got from the right of way.

Mr. CARVELL: Did you have any other offers?—A. Well parties had an option last June for $30,000.

Q. Who did?—A. Mr. Winslow, $75 an acre for 400 acers. No writing about it but he was to have the land for that amount.

Q. Then he came back this year and offered you $20,000?—A. He did.

Q. Did you accept his offer of $20,000?—A. I told him at first that—I didn't understand that he wanted the whole thing, and when he wanted the whole 600 acres I wouldn't let him have it.

Q. How much did you suppose you were offering to sell for the $30,000?—A. The same as a year ago.

Q. How much?—A. 400 acres.

You have there the sworn testimony of Mr. C. L. Smith given in a case, in which this matter about the $10,000 rakeoff played no part whatever, and he said he offered his land to Mr. Winslow for $30,000, including 400 acres.

Mr. HAZEN: Was there any agreement in writing?

Mr. CARVELL: No, it was a verbal offer, as he swears. But the point is that he swears he offered Mr. Winslow 400 acres of his farm, including the Upham intervale, for $30,000. But he says he was only to get $20,000 and the balance was to go to Mr. Smith and Mr. Winslow.

Mr. HAZEN: Where does he say that?

Mr. CARVELL: He says that in the letter.

Mr. HAZEN: That statement is not contained in the evidence.

Mr. CARVELL: The statement is contained in the evidence that he asked $30,000 for 400 acres, and that 400 acres included his main farm and the Uham interval. Mr. Winslow sees the difficulty he is in and he says now that the $30,000 offer was on account of the George W. Upham farm, but that farm never was mentioned.

Mr. HAZEN: How do you know?

Mr. CARVELL: I know it was not because I have the sworn evidence of Mr. C. L. Smith. I will tell my hon. friend more than that. I will tell him that George Upham would be insulted if any one went to him and asked him to sell his farm for $9,000 or $10,000; he would not sell the remainder of his farm for $15,000. When Mr. Winslow talks about the George Upham farm being included it is a pure fabrication. Mr. Upham is a client of mine; he was also in the courts and we fought out the matter, and we won, I am happy to say. I would know if George Upham ever had any offers for his farm. There is not a particle of this gentleman's business for the last ten years that I have not done for him. My own personal knowledge teaches me that the George Upham farm never was mentioned, and never was dreamed of until this matter was brought up and the postmaster saw he was in rather an unpleasant position in Woodstock, and then he writes this letter to the minister, dragging in the George Upham farm in order to account for the $10,000 rakeoff. I do not want to discuss this matter any further in the absence of the gentleman, neither of whom are here, but I think I have given sufficient evidence—the sworn testimony of Mr. C. L. Smith before this matter was ever thought of—to show that the offer he made to Mr. Grisdale for $30,000 included only the 400 acres of his own farm, and that George Upham's farm never was thought of. I appreciate the position in which Mr. Winslow is. I know that this thing created certain consternation in Woodstock, because a great many people, Conservatives as well as Liberals, believed that if it had not been for the attempt to make a rake-off we would have had the agricultural farm in Woodstock instead of in Fredericton. Naturally, when the matter became known, a good deal of adverse comment was made on it and these gentlemen down there, seeing the box they were in, attempted through the medium of the minister—who I admit is perfectly innocent in the matter—to square the thing and make an explanation, but fortunately we have the sworn evidence of a court of record, given eight or nine months before this thing took place, entirely disproving the whole story. I would say, as a word of advice to my hon. friend (Mr. Hazen), he ought to know both these gentlemen well enough to be a little cautious how he reads letters or telegrams from either of them, to substantiate any proposition which looks a little fishy upon its face.

Mr. HAZEN: It is perfectly clear from what has been stated that my hon. friend (Mr. Carvell) has no charge to make against Mr. Frank Smith in connection with this matter. As the matter appeared on the records of this House, after the statement made by my hon. friend on the 26th of February, any one reading that would come to the conclusion that Mr. Frank Smith, who has been twice a candidate in the county of Carleton, was a party to an arrangement by which an endeavour was being made to obtain a rakeoff of $10,000 on the sale of his farm. The statement of my hon. friend shows that there is absolutely no evidence; that there is absolutely nothing that resembles evidence, to justify any such charge against Mr. Frank Smith. As far as Mr. Smith is concerned there is nothing whatever to in any way reflect upon his conduct in regard to this matter or to show that he had any connection with it in any way whatever.

In regard to the other matter, it would appear from these proceedings, as we have them here to-night, that it is a question of credibility as between Mr Winslow on the one hand and Mr. C. L. Smith on the other.

Mr. CARVELL: Sworn testimony.

Mr. HAZEN: Mr. C. L. Smith I know well, as I also know Mr. Upham and Mr. Winslow well. Knowing Mr. Winslow as I do, I desire to say that I do not believe that Mr. Winslow would deliberately make a statement that was not true in connection with this or any other matter. I have known him for a great many years and that is the opinion I entertain of him. My hon. friend says there is sworn testimony, but that sworn testimony of Mr. Smith was given in connection with another matter altogether when this question was not under consideration. The only statement to the contrary is that made by my hon. friend, that he has been Mr. Upman's solicitor for years and that, if any such offer had been made, he would know about it.

Mr. CARVELL: Does Mr. Winslow state in his letter that Mr. Upham came to him and offered to sell his farm for $8,000 or $9,000?

Mr. HAZEN: That is what I understand.

Mr. CARVELL: It is simply preposterous.

Mr. HAZEN: My hon. friend may state that it is preposterous. I think I am stating the matter correctly.

Mr. CARVELL: I will prove that it is preposterous.

Mr. HAZEN: My hon. friend may say that it is preposterous; but my hon. friend was not there. He does not know; he simply says that nothing of this sort could have occurred, because he has been for a good many years past Mr. Upham's solicitor, and therefore he would have known. I do not think that is a logical deduction from the fact that my hon. friend has been Mr. Upham's solicitor. Mr. Upham might very readily, in connection with his property, have made in the course of conversation offers of which my hon. friend is not aware. Apart from that altogether, if we are to believe Mr. C. L. Smith's evidence given at the time as to the value of the right of way running across his property, we have the statement made by Mr. Smith that there was an option on the property, but that that option was not in writing. In that case it would not be an option at all; it would not have the slightest bearing and effect in law if it had not been reduced to writing and signed by the different parties to the agreement. The option, if we call it an option, is simply a verbal one; there is evidence that there had been a conversation between Mr. Winslow and Mr. Smith with regard to this property; and the matter having never been reduced to writing, no contract having ever been entered into, it seems to me it is easily within the range of probability that there was a misunderstanding between these gentlemen as to what the offer was for, or as to the amount of property embraced in the offer. Under the circumstances, it may be that each gentleman is honestly telling what he believes to be the facts with regard to the matter. We all know that in conversations of this sort, which are not reduced to writing, what mistakes occur, what misunderstandings take place. As I said before, while I am very glad to hear to-night that my hon. friend practically exonerates Mr. Frank Smith from any connection with the matter; I might also say that having known Mr. Winslow since we were boys together, I do not believe he would make any statement that was not a true one with regard to a matter of this kind.

Mr. CARVELL: I think I stated in the beginning that I had no evidence that Mr. Frank Smith was implicated, except what Mr. Winslow told Mr. C. L. Smith. I think my hon. friend will find that I made the statement in February that Mr. Winslow said that Mr. Frank Smith was in it. I did not state that Mr. Frank Smith was in it; I simply stated that Mr. Winslow said that he was. If my hon. friend can take any satisfaction out of that, I gladly give it to him; but I do not want to make any statement or claim about any gentleman at all which might injure him, without being able to prove it to the hilt.

When I come to the Winslow part of the matter, I cannot be so charitable. It is true that my hon. friend says that we have not any evidence here except a verbal statement of one gentleman against the other, and he rather tried to get behind the technical side of it and stated that it was not an option because it was not in writing. I am not arguing that it was a legal option; I am only stating the facts of the case. Mr. Grisdale will be able to tell the minister, if he will ask him, that Mr. C. L. Smith demanded $30,000 for 400 acres of his farm. Mr. Smith swore that he was willing to take $20,000 for it. As my hon. friend seems to have such a high opinion of Mr. Smith, and says that this $30,000 offer included Mr. Upham's farm as well, I do not think I am to be blamed if I give a little professional information I have on this matter. Within half an hour after that offer of $30,000 with $10,000 rake-off was made, I was consulted professionally about the matter. I told Mr. C. L. Smith that he was very foolish to be mixed up in any such transaction, because it would lead only to a scandal, and that I thought he had better write a letter to Mr. Grisdale stating that he would accept $20,000 for his farm. I wanted an experimental farm and I did not want any boodling out of it either. If my hon. friend wants an affidavit as to that fact, I can easily get it from the gentleman who gave it to me. I know what I state here is a fact, namely that Mr. Upham's farm was never though of in connection with the matter. All this talk about including the Upton farm to make up the $10,000 is a pure fabrication.

Mr. HAZEN: I can only tell my hon. friend that, knowing Mr. Winslow as I do, I will unreservedly accept his statements about the matter, until the contrary is proved.

Mr. CARVELL: Knowing him as well as I do, I will place no confidence in him at all.

Mr. HAZEN: Perhaps my hon. friend will place more confidence in Mr. C. L. Smith.

Mr. BURRELL: I would like to say to my hon. friend, because he made the statement before, that the minister had in his possession an offer of $30,000, $10,000 of which was to be a rake-off, that I have looked into the whole matter and I have no offer whatever on the Smith farm.

Mr. CARVELL: It was made to Mr. Grisdale personally.

Mr. BURRELL: What conversation may have taken place between Mr. Grisdale and Mr. Smith I do not know anything about. As to any offer being made to the department, there is no offer at all in the records.

In regard to this item, I might state very briefly how it is made up, so that the hon. members of the committee will be informed. Somewhat over $40,000 of this is planned to be expended, as it has been in the past, in connection with the various winter shows throughout the provinces, including also all the judges of the different shows, whose expenses we pay, the fat-stock shows and stallion shows of each province. The record of performance work is estimated to take about $21,000. In that we have a number of men employed, the breeds of cattle being the Holstein, Ayrshire, Jersey, French Canadian and shorthorn, of which a record is being kept by our different inspectors. The sheep branch takes about $10,000. The poultry division takes about $20,000. I shall be very glad to deal with any of the matters that my hon. friends wish to know about a little later on. Then, there is the horse industry, which takes about $80,000 or $90,000 this year. As regards this, I would like to say a word of explanation to the committee, because it is somewhat of a new departure.

Hon. gentlemen will probably remember that there was a good deal of criticism last year in regard to the action of the department in giving a bonus of $250 apiece for thoroughbred stallions, and it was thought to be somewhat of a discrimination against other breeds. On going into the whole matter and studying it as closely as we could in the department, we came to the conclusion that we had better adopt a different system this year. Accordingly we propose to adopt, in connection with this part of the appropriation, a system somewhat similar to that carried on in England and Scotland, with which system some of my hon. friends are probably familiar.

The conditions relating to horse breeding that at present obtain in Canada seem to warrant the conclusion that the time is opportune for the breeders in each municipality or district to adopt more freely co-operative measures in providing for themselves the service of suitable stallions. It is generally admitted that improvement in breeding methods can be effected most rapidly and conditions permanently remedied by organized effort on the part of the owners of mares. In the past a number of breeders have, by their energy and enterprise, aided greatly in the advancement of the industry, and they deserve every credit for the splendid service they have rendered. Unfortunately, these men have been comparatively few in number and the business has not progressed, therefore, as rapidly as could be desired. It is now felt that by judicious and systematic assistance horse breeding as an industry can be greatly stimulated and benefited. Except in the more favoured districts, improvement in breeding practice has been hindered hitherto through the lack of such concerted action as would enable the farmers to procure and retain the services of good breeding sires. In a majority of sections, breeders wishing to grade up their horses are forced to use whatever stallions may by chance stand for service in their district. Many of these are faulty in conformation and lack in quality, while others, though of better type, remain, either through insufficient patronage or because of failure to leave colts, but a single season in each district. The fact also that there has been no systematic adherence to the use of one breed suggests another reason for the lack of progress in the breeding of high class animals.

It must be recognized, further, that the owner of a valuable horse, after paying for maintenance, insurance, interest on investment and the expense entailed in the collection of his fees, has frequently little left from his outlay, particularly in districts where he has to compete with grade and scrub stallions standing for service at a very low fee. As a result, really high class stallions can be maintained only in districts where the breeding of horses has been given serious and progressive attention. In view of these considerations it is proposed to enter upon a policy which may serve to place the horse breeding industry in Canada in a position comparable to that which it has attained in Great Britain and other European countries. It is believed that by encouraging the organization of breeders' clubs and by enabling such clubs to procure the services of good breeding stallions under favourable financial conditions, the assistance in this direction can best be provided. The encouragement of community breeding will, naturally, of itself, be productive of useful results. The payment to community organizations of a part of the service fee will it is expected give a permanent stimulus to the hiring of the best stallions that may be procured and, at the same time, promote the development of a comprehensive movement in the interests of this important national industry. With this end in view, We therefore propose to adopt a scheme whereby farmers' clubs or associations will be formed under certain by-laws which will encourage the permanent success of these institutions, and it is proposed the club should guarantee the stallion owners a certatin number of mares at a certain service fee, these mares, of course, to be in good breeding condition and not subject to any disease.

It would be the duty of the secretary of each association, under the rules, to send a copy of the memorandum of agreement to the Live Stock Branch, the minimum service fee to be fixed at $12, all service fees to be collected by the club. The department will undertake to pay twenty-five per cent of the fees to the association on the number of mares guaranteed, which would have to be paid at the end of the season, and a further twenty-five per cent of the fees paid by the association to the stallion owner on the assurance of the mare being in foal. In this way, in practice, we should pay twenty-five per cent to all the associations and they would be left a fairly free hand within the limits I have prescribed. This would be applicable to all breeds. We have had a good many inquiries as to what course we would adopt if we did not continue the policy adopted in the past of subsidizing or bonusing thoroughbreds.

11 p.m.

Mr. WARNOCK: Is it the policy of the department to discontinue the bonus?

Mr. BURRELL: Yes—discontinue it to one special breed, but applying this method to all breeds, believing that it will have in the long run as beneficial effect upon thoroughbreds as upon other breeds, and put the whole on a fairer footing.

Mr. WARNOCK: Will that interfere with the remount policy of which the Minister of Militia spoke?

Mr. BURRELL: Not necessarily at all. Because, as I understand the proposal,— though I would not undertake to discuss it at this time—it is not finally decided, or if it is decided I would prefer that the Minister of Militia should discuss it. I understand that it is left open for the Government to purchase from any farmer as before.

[Mr. Burrell.]

Mr. WARNOCK: I am sorry the Minister of Militia is not here; but this matter can be taken up again. I understood this breeding ranch will be handed over to the National Bureau of Horsebreeding. And I understand that the National Bureau, the owners of this ranch, undertake to purchase the progeny of these bonused thoroughbred stallions and develop them on the ranch. I think that the doing away with the bonus might interfere with that.

Mr. BURRELL: I cannot say how close the association may be between the National Bureau and any live-stock association, because I am not familiar with that part of it. But while such an association might buy all the foals that are the results of this subsidizing of the thoroughbred, they are still open to buy from any farmers any horses they want to buy for remounts. It would encourage, of course, the development and progress of even the thoroughbreds. I do not see that these matters hang together in any shape or form.

The larger part of the amount we have under discussion, which will be $150,000 or $160,000 is in connection with the purchase and distribution of live-stock throughout the country and very particularly in the West. I would like to say a word or two about that because fault has been found with it. Though I may say frankly to the committee there has been a very strong general endorsation from all quarters of the policy we adopted, yet any government in a work of this kind has to face criticism; it could not well be otherwise, nor do I fail to recognize the advantage of criticism in helping to perfect the plan. Criticism has run along various lines, sometimes that it is not good practice to put in operation on account of hurting the breeders. Some criticism has been on the distribution and some on the prices. We have had it suggested that we are not paying enough for certain animals, which involves the whole policy and I should perhaps consult the wishes of the committee if I were to take up the question of stallions, which has been discussed a good deal.

The primary object of this policy is to supply newly settled districts, where the people are unable to purchase for themselves, with a good class of pure-bred stallion. The loaning of pure bred sires by the branch enables such districts to discontinue the use of scrub sires. In many cases the local horse stock is nondescript in character, and poor in quality. The introduction of strong, prepotent, pure-bred blood will very materially improve the horses of the localities sharing in the benefits of this policy, in type, size, quality and value. At the same time, farmers in these districts must of necessity be induced to adopt better methods of care and management.

As the farmers in outlying communities are, generally speaking, not experienced horsemen, and as they can best be aided by making it possible for them to produce a goodly number of useful commercial horses, it is felt that, by supplying them with a good class of Canadian bred stallion, as much relative good may be accomplished as if they were furnished with higher priced imported sires. Moreover, to supply the average district with very high priced stallions would be a needless expenditure when it is remembered that the average stallion-keeper has had very little experience in the care and management of high priced animals. Experience in horse breeding is only gained by actual practice.

The supplying of imported stallions to such associations would mean either that the Live Stock branch would have to go into the importing business, and thus interfere very materially with private enterprise, or, on the other hand, the branch would have to purchase from a few private individuals and pay such prices as they saw fit to ask. This would mean the favouring of a few importers, to the disadvantage of the breeders generally, and, as a consequence, to the detriment of our national horse industry. It should be added, also, that Canadian bred stallions, being hardier and acclimatized, leave more and equally as good foals as compared with imported horses.

Should the branch purchase the very best imported stallions that come into the country, or bring them in, these horses would be placed where they would do the least amount of good, while the pure bred breeders of Canada would be deprived of the services of such stallions, and would be forced to use a poorer class of sire on their pure-bred mares. This would result in retrogression rather than improvement. To make possible continued improvement, the very best stallions should go into the studs of the good breeders of the country.

The policy of buying Canadian bred stallions for distribution not only benefits the districts to which they are loaned, but, by providing a market for good home-bred horses, gives also a stimulus to the whole horse-breeding industry. There can be little encouragement to the home breeders to expend valuable time and large sums of money in the production of good horses, if even the home market is denied them. Such a policy would mean that Canada must continue indefinitely to pay tribute to foreign breeders, and would certainly prove the ruin of horse-breeding in Canada. It is only by encouraging in every legitimate way our own industry that the greatest good will result.

It may be safely stated that such sires as are purchased by this branch for distribution are superior to a goodly percentage of the imported stallions. Those who are familiar with the horse industry of the country will not question this statement. In this connection it may be pointed out that the branch purchased five Percheron stallions from Mr. Geo. Lane, of Calgary, These stallions were exhibited at the recent Calgary Winter Show, where they defeated many imported horses, and one of them was awarded the grand championship for the breed. It may further be stated that some of the largest and best breeders and importers of Percherons in Canada exhibited at this show, so that the winning of a championship in such a company, by a Canadian-bred stallion, was certainly an accomplishment of which the breeder may be proud, and which shows also in no unmistakable way the class of Canadian-bred sires that this branch is procuring for distribution.

Mr. WARNOCK: Would the minister state what price he paid for the horses he purchased from Mr. Lane?

Mr. BURRELL: Our price was $600, the maximum price that we pay.

Mr. WARNOCK: I know Mr. Lane's stud of horses very well. He has imported some of the very best Percheron horses that could be purchased in France, and when he took that price for these horses he sold at a very great sacrifice. I know that for the past five or six years he has been selling these home-bred Percheron stallions at from $1,000 to $1,600 each. I have bought a horse from him for which I paid $1,600. I think it was simply his public-spiritedness that induced him to sell these stallions at that price. He did it for the purpose of keeping out inferior low grade scrubs that would have been brought in had he not agreed to sell those horses to the department, and I think it was an act of very marked public spiritedness on his part. I am very much surprised to hear that he would accept that price.

Mr. BURRELL: It is well to hear that there are public-spirited men who will sell at a sacrifice for the public good.

In the matter of prices paid for Canadian-bred stallions, as compared with those for imported stock, and for Canadian-bred stallions sold at several sales held during the past winter and spring, some figures are given in a table which I shall place on 'Hansard.' It should not be forgotten in a comparison of these prices with those paid by the branch, that the former provide for a credit of six months or a year, while the latter represent cash payment. At the sales reported considerable paper had to be accepted, it being stated in one case that not a dollar was paid over at the time of purchase. The figures are as follows:

Regina sale, March, 1914:

No. of stallions sold, 11.

Highest Price.	Lowest Price.	Average.
$850	$437 50	$563 50

Calgary sale:

	Highest Price.	Lowest Price.	Average.
Clydesdales .	700	475	554 00
Percherons .	535	300	387 00

Total average, $504.

Both these were credit sales.

Toronto Union stock yards sale:

No. of stallions sold, 5.

Highest Price.	Lowest Price.	Average.
$480	$165	$295

Two imported stallions brought $480 and $250 respectively.

A particularly good Canadian-bred, from imported stock, brought $310.

The offering was considerably the best ever offered at this sale.

Smith Falls sale:

No. of stallions sold, 5.

Highest Price.	Lowest Price.	Average.
$340	$165	$234

This does not include a yearling colt which was sold for $80.

I think it quite desirable to place these figures on record showing that although we might fix our maximum price at a higher rate, on the whole the department thinks itself justified, at present at least, in fixing the price it has fixed. The figures at these sales that I have read would seem to justify our price.

Mr. WARNOCK: When this item was up last year I did not offer any criticism.

[Mr. Warnock.]

I felt at the time that it was best to await the practical working out of the policy. My reason for offering a few criticisms to-night is that I have had quite a lot of letters from breeders and farmers in the West pointing out that the policy is not at present satisfactory. I do not wish to be misunderstood and so I would point out that I am not opposed to the farmers of the West, or even of the East, if they cannot get good sires, receiving Government aid. But I think there is a better method than the purchasing of these Canadian bred sires. I think that the maximum price is $600. I do not believe that a stallion, suitable for a sire, can be bought for that price. Pehaps it is possible just at the present time, but in past years it would not have been possible because I find that the Ontario breeders and breeders from south of the line have brought a great many stallions into Alberta and Saskatchewan in the past eight or nine years and they have been selling those horses, in some cases for cash in other cases on two or three years' credit at prices ranging from $1,500 to $4,500.

Mr. BURRELL: Prices on the average horse, as my hon. friend knows, have decreased quite a lot.

Mr. WARNOCK: I have quite a number of cases in mind where they sold as high as $4,500. We have had in the past altogether too many low grade stallions in the western provinces. I think the hon. member for South Ontario will agree with me in that. We have altogether too many low grade stallions, and I think the federal Government is doing a good deal towards perpetuating the use of these low-priced horses by our farmers. The provincial governments of Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and, I think, Ontario are doing everything in their power to discourage the use of these low grade stallions. In some of the provinces the stallion ordinances have recently been made very rigid and I know that in Alberta it is proposed to take steps, perhaps at the next session of the Legislature, to amend the stallion ordinance and make it much more drastic. The minister has said that his department proposes to purchase Canadian bred sires. I do not quite understand how that would effect the proposal to have a community system.

Mr. BURRELL: I do not think they would conflict at all. We are not going to purchase the stallions at all. That will be a matter for the clubs or associations. As some farmers are not in a position to pay for the use of a first-class stallion, we are offering to pay to these clubs twenty-five per cent of the fee to encourage the farmers to patronize the best horses.

Mr. WARNOCK: Would that twenty-five per cent be paid to the executive of the association?

Mr. BURRELL: To the secretary.

Mr. WARNOCK: Not direct to the stallion's owner?

Mr. BURRELL: No, the association would have to pay him.

Mr. WARNOCK: One of the objections I have to the present policy of the Government in purchasing stallions is that it is expensive, and I think that in course of time the Government will find itself loaded up with quite a number of sires that are either unproductive, or inferior breeders that will have to be emasculated and sold as work horses at a loss of about $400 a head. Others will be affected with contagious diseases, or disabled by accident and some, of course, will die from natural causes and be a total loss. I believe that the system in Scotland and England is much to be preferred; that is, a system of bonusing the very best sires. That plan is followed by the well-to-do agricultural associations in the various districts. The association offers a bonus or premium of from £50 to £100 sterling, their officers select a suitable sire and arrange with the stallion's owner that the association will regulate the fees. The premium is given to the owner of the sire for the season only. The horse may be selected to travel in the same district the following year, or may go to some other district. We have some excellent imported sires in Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba, but I wish to speak more particularly of Alberta, where we have some very fine imported sires. I believe the Government could do a great deal of service to the horse-breeding industry by the system of bonusing some of these imported horses. When applications are made by farmers' associations for the use of a horse, a bonus could be given, the association could regulate the fee, and have the horse travel a certain specified district as is done in the United Kingdom.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE: Why would not the horses bred from imported sires be as good as the sires imported?

Mr. WARNOCK: I will explain to my hon. friend. My experience has been—and I think it is the experience of every breeder in Canada—that in order to keep the progeny up to the standard of excellence you must, from time to time, import pure bred stock from the land of origin of these animals, whether it is horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, or any other kind of live-stock. You must get in fresh blood. I think every breeder in this House will agree with me on that.

Mr. BURRELL: Does not my hon. friend agree that it would be better for the individual breeders to import stock for their own establishments?

Mr. WARNOCK: I can quite see the force of the minister's objection to purchasing imported stock, because immediately we should have Canadian dealers going over to the United Kingdom and France—to the native home of whatever particular breed they wanted—and purchasing a lot of very inferior stock. Let me just illustrate that. When the importation of Clydesdales to Canada and the United States was at its height a few years ago—there is quite a large importation now, but not nearly so large as a few years ago—we found that the Scotch and English breeders attempted to keep animals for breeding purposes that would not have made even decent work horses. Many of those animals were sold to Canadian and United States importers, for prices ranging from £50 to £60 sterling. They were brought over to Canada and sold at prices ranging from $1,200 to $2,000 each—a very handsome profit. That is just what would happen now if the department purchased the horses from the importers. What I say is this: Do not purchase at all; simply bonus for the season a good imported horse that is a known breeder, and one that has shown that he breeds true to type. That, in my opinion, would do a great deal more towards benefiting the horse-breeding interests than by purchasing low-grade sires in Canada and distributing them amongst the farmers who may apply for the use of them. I am borne out in that opinion by a resolution which was passed at the Calgary Horse Breeders' Association two or three weeks ago. It was a purely business meeting, having nothing to do with politics; dealing with the matter from a commercial standpoint. As a matter of fact, I think two-thirds of the Calgary Horse Breeders' Association are very strong Tories. The resolution which was passed almost unanimously, reads as follows:

We, the Alberta Horse Breeders' Association, in annual meeting assembled respectfully request the Hon. Martin Burrell, Dominion Minister of Agriculture, not to distribute any stallions in Alberta.

That resolution was passed almost without a dissenting voice on the 13th April, just about the time of the Calgary spring show.

Then, I have an excerpt here from a paper published in my own constituency, the High River Times, a paper which is not at all unfriendly to the present Government. I presume the editor penned this after the meeting of the Calgary Stockbreeders' Association. It is as follows:

Discouraging Breeders.

If the Dominion Department of Agriculture had for its object the improvement of livestock throughout the country they have evidently missed their mark. During the past year many stallions and bulls have been shipped here in Ontario, and placed in different communities where the homesteader had the privilege of using them. The idea would be a popular one if the class of stock being distributed were as good as Alberta bred and stock from the old country. There has been better stock imported into this province during the last ten years than in any other part of Canada, and it is to be regretted that importers and breeders of Alberta should be so discouraged in the laudable work in which they are engaged.

We understand that $600 is the highest price the department officials will pay Alberta breeders for their pure-bred stallions, and as a result very few choice animals are obtained. The outcome is that an inferior class of breeding stock is being distributed among the farmers. As an evidence of the unpopularity of the move, we may cite the instance of the horse breeders' meeting last week at Calgary, where practically every man present opposed the scheme.

Mr. MORRISON: Is the Horse Breeders' Association of Alberta not largely composed of the importers of horses?

Mr. WARNOCK: All the members, perhaps, have imported horses, but a number of them have imported horses for their own use, not for sale. Others are both importers and breeders.

Mr. BURRELL: I would like to say very frankly that I could read scores and scores of resolutions from all over the West conveying a diametrically opposite opinion, but I do not want to go into a controversial discussion to-night. I think that my hon. friend's own criticisms are very fair, but when it comes to statements of this kind it must be remembered that sometimes resolutions are engineered and sometimes there is a misunderstanding as to the work that is being done. I do not think that statement reflects the general opinion of the people of the West.

[Mr. Warnock.]

Mr. WARNOCK: Of course, the policy has not been very long in vogue I want to be fair. I am referring to draught stallions. With bulls and rams any harm that may be done by a poor sire is very soon eliminated by sending the animals to the block as soon as they are in condition. But it is a different thing with a horse. I have seen very few of the sires sent out by the department, but this year I intend to see as many as possible and form my own opinion. I believe that the minister will give my suggestions a little thought. I hope he will agree with me that the policy of bonusing good, heavy draught sires in the way that the department has been bonusing thoroughbreds in the past will be of far greater benefit to the horse-breeding interests of the West. I have no objection to the bonusing of thoroughbreds; we have a great scarcity of saddle horses and drivers in the West, but if the thoroughbreds should be bonused, the good heavy draught sires ought to be bonused as well.

Mr. MACDONALD: In regard to this question of assistance to better stock breeding, I would like to say to the minister that in my province, as in most of the eastern provinces, we have had for a long period of years a system of agricultural societies in which men meet together and, with a good deal of public spirit, devote themselves to the improvement of stock. I would like to point out to him in all kindness that in dealing with this question of the improvement of stock he ought to utilise this condition. I was very much surprised—personally I do not regard it as of any political significance or as being a disadvantage to me politically—to find that the Conservative local member for my constituency, during the winter, was writing letters to the newspapers announcing this policy of my hon. friend and putting it on as if it were some political arrangement. Letters from my county are to the effect that Conservative farmers are grouping themselves together and applying to my hon. friend to get a bonus for the stock.

Mr. BURRELL: We are not carrying it out along those lines.

Mr. MACDONALD: That is what is going on. I do not regard it as being of any political disadvantage to me because any one foolish enough to be engaged in that silly business would not be elected in the constituency I represent. If the minister is really desirous of making the proposition a success in our province, we have these organizations that have gone along entirely on non-political lines where men have worked together for the general benefit and if he is in a position to utilise these local agricultural societies he might supplement what is being done by the various provincial governments. Imported stock has been brought into all the provinces in the East, and, in connection with these agricultural societies, there has been a great deal of stock improvement. I think that the minister, if he would act along these lines, would be able to accomplish some good results by supplementing the efforts of the provincial Government.

I take advantage of this opportunity to call the minister's attention to another matter. A friend of mine, Mr. C. S. Campbell, K.C., of Montreal, has been largely interested in horse breeding. He is a well known gentleman who for a long time occupied a high position at the Bar. Becoming interested in the breeding of horses he has devoted himself to matters in connection with that line. He had some correspondence with the minister in regard to the matter. This correspondence was brought down in response to a motion for a return. Although I do not profess to be anything in the way of an expert in regard to this question, the correspondence which he had with the Minister of Customs and the Minister of Agriculture discloses what I think is a very grave defect in regard to the importation of pure bred stock into this country. The minister is familiar with the customs regulation which provides that no thoroughbred stock can be imported for the purpose of improving of stock breeding unless it is accompanied with a certificate from the National Association of Canada or some other association of like standing. Last year Mr. C. S. Campbell communicated with the Department of Customs in regard to this matter and stated that it was his desire and intention to bring in a thoroughbred mare from the United States. He wanted to bring her in free of duty. He wrote to the department for information and they sent him a copy of the customs regulation. I quote from his letter:

> I am advised by the accountant of the National Live Stock Records at Ottawa that the American studbook of thoroughbred horses does not come within the list of recognized thoroughbred records, and I infer from his letter that the English, French, and Australian studbooks would come under the same ban.

If that statement is correct it seems incredible that some Canadian organization should undertake to decree that the certificates or studbooks of every English, French, Australian or American Association of horse-breeders would not be sufficient to permit entry into Canada of a thoroughbred horse free of duty. He goes on to say:

> I was under the impression that the amendment to the regulations had been made with the object of facilitating the import of thoroughbred horses, but if books such as the English, American, and Australian Studbooks, which are recognized all over the world, are not placed by the National Record Committee in the class of books of record recognized as reliable, it is obvious that the importing of thoroughbred horses has not been made any easier by the amended regulations.
>
> I would be obliged if you would let me know whether it is the intention of the Customs Department, under the authority conferred by the minister as to the forms, that a British subject who presents at a port of entry an animal unquestionably thoroughbred, and who also presents registration certificates from such a book as the English, or American studbook, and makes the affidavit required, should be prevented from getting his free entry by the fact that the National Records Committee declines to certify that the English and American studbooks are recognized as reliable authorities.

To that letter my friend Mr. Campbell received the following from Mr. McDougald, the Commissioner of Customs:

> In reply I am to state that under the regulations as formulated by the Government regarding free importation of animals for the improvement of stock, it is necessary on each importation to furnish a certificate stating that the animal is recorded in the Canadian National Records or in a foreign record recognized as reliable by the National Records Committee.

Of course, that left the matter as it was, and apparently Mr. Campbell approached the Department of Agriculture, and it does not appear from this correspondence, but from what he tells me personally, he has not been able to get any change from that interpretation which, to use his own language, puts under the ban the certificate from the English, Australian and American studbooks. He writes to the Minister of Customs, and, after referring to the fact that he had received this letter from the Commissioner, he says:

> It appears that I am by the Order in Council entitled to enter an animal duty free if I furnish an import certificate stating that the animal is recorded in a Canadian National record or in a foreign record recognized as reliable by the Canadian National Record Committee.
>
> This proposition seemed to me to be absolutely fair and calculated to remove some serious difficulties that lay in the way of importers under the previous regulations. It never occured to me, nor do I believe now, that it was the intention of the Government in passing the Order in Council that I should be placed in the power of the National Record Committee to exercise its duty of recognizing a foreign record as reliable or refusing it as a mere instrument to obstruct the importation of stock.

Probably ninety per cent or more of the thoroughbred stock in Canada are registered in the American studbook, a book which is recognized as reliable throughout the civilized world. Those who do not trace to this book, trace to the British studbook, a book, if possible, of still higher standing.

The Canadian Thoroughbred Register, which seems to be controlled by the National Record Committee, takes up the pedigree of an animal out of the British or American studbook and continues it, and it is inconceivable therefore that in good faith the National Record Committee could refuse to recognize the British and Amerian studbooks as reliable.

On application, however, to the accountant of the Canadian Live Stock Records, he advises me as follows:—'The accompanying booklet, (a pamphlet printed by Taylor Brothers, Queen street, Ottawa, Canada, 1913) beginning on page 37 shows a list of Canadian books of record, and beginning on page 39 is a list of recognized foreign books of record, consequently the American studbook does not come under the list of recognized foreign records.' A very widely signed petition was sent to the Minister of Agriculture from this district, signed by importers and breeders of thoroughbred stock, and by members of the Montreal Jockey Club, representing that the difficulty of getting thoroughbred stock were enormously increased by the obstacles that were placed in the way of the would-be importer by the then existing regulations, and it has been understood that the new Order in Council was intended to accede to their wishes and to enable the purchaser of a thoroughbred animal abroad to bring it with certificates which showed it to be a thoroughbred to the port of entry and there to enter it free of duty if the certificate was the certificate of a reliable foreign book of record, the importer making affidavit as to the identity of the animal.

You will see that the present attitude of the National Record Committee makes such a system impossible and remits the importer to the same position of difficulty that he stood in before the new regulations.

My friend Mr. Campbell also addressed the Minister of Agriculture and practically at the same time he received a letter from the Minister of Customs acknowledging the receipt of this letter and stating that his letter had been transferred to the Minister of Agriculture. He wrote the Minister of Agriculture in the following terms, under date 30th May, 1913:

Montreal, May 13, 1913.

The Honourable,
The Minister of Agriculture,
Ottawa, Ont.

Sir:

I have the honour to enclose you herewith for your information copy of letter sent by me this day to Mr. D. Macrae of Guelph, a director of the Canadian Thoroughbred Horse Society.

It struck me as peculiar that a gentleman in Mr. Macrae's position saw no further into the question than to suggest that a difficulty about the fees was at the bottom of the discussion.

[Mr. Macdonald.]

Anybody who knows Mr. Campbell knows what a splendid personal character he is and how truly unselfish he has been in regard to this question of stock, and indeed in every walk of life, and they will agree that for any one to think that he was quibbling about a question of fees is simply ridiculous. The letter continues:

I have been at some pains to endeavour to make it clear to him that this is not so, and it occurred to me that it might be advantageous to importers in this province if you had the same information before you.

I am to-day in receipt of a letter from the accountant of the Canadian National Live Stock Records which I frankly confess I am unable to understand. The Order in Council certainly grants free entry to animals that are recorded in the Canadian register or in a register recognized as reliable by the National Record Committee. This committee's accountant writes me 'It is not within the jurisdiction of the Record Committee to say in connection with the issuing of import certificates for free customs entry that the English, French, American or Australian Thoroughbred Studbooks are recognized foreign records. The reason of this is that these records are taken care of by the Canadian Thoroughbred Horse Society.

Upon what authority the National Board Committee can transfer its authority to the Canadian Thoroughbred Horse Society, I do not know. Colonel Hendrie, president of the society, admits that his register is obstructing duty free importations. If the National Record Committee has abdicated its functions and allows its accountant to remain under the impression that the business is to be taken care of by the Canadian Thoroughbred Horse Society it is quite easy to see how and why my importations are obstructed and also to make it clear that except action be taken by yourself I shall be left without any other remedy than to pay the duty and endeavour to recover the cost of it from Mr. Brant.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
C. S. Campbell.

The Minister of Agriculture is familiar with this matter, and all the correspondence I need not read in detail. But finally on the 30th of July last year Mr. Campbell wrote to the Deputy Minister of Agriculture:

I have parted with 'Long Ago,' the mare I had in the States, and have made arrangements to return 'Brynwood' to the States. Will you kindly, therefore, return me the certificate I sent you in mine of July 8.

So far as I can see it the situation is such that there is no inducement to attempt to bring in new stock and a great many reasons for not attempting it, and as without new stock the possibility of meeting the American competition on an equal footing is taken away from us, I have concluded to give up breeding in Canada.

Mr. Campbell is a son of Sir Alexander Campbell, former Minister of Justice of Canada. Mr. Campbell is animated by the highest motives, and no one would think of attributing to him any selfish idea in regard to the matter. Having leisure and means at his command, he laudably, with the idea of improving horse-breeding in Canada, entered into importing thoroughbred stock and raising thoroughbred animals. When he did so he found that by the operation of the Order in Council, when he went to England and when he went to the United States and got mares or stallions, the status of which was recognized by the studbooks of those countries, and brought them into Canada, he could not get them in free of duty, and was thus debarred from the encouragement which the country ought to give to the importation of stock of that kind. As a consequence, after going into horse-breeding for a year or two, he went out of it altogether. Not being an expert in this business and not speaking from that stand point, but having heard Mr. Campbell's story personally, having read his correspondence, knowing that there is no possibility of misrepresentation so far as he is concerned, I think that, if the condition of affairs, as asserted by Mr. Campbell, exists in Canada to-day, it is the duty of the minister to remedy it. I would like to hear from the minister his explanation of the case made out by Mr. Campbell in these letters; and whether or not, if that condition exists, he cannot by an amendment to the Order in Council provide some remedy so that a man who wants to do what Mr. Campbell evidently wanted to do may not be prevented by some arbitrary and foolish regulation from doing so.

Mr. BURRELL: It is a pretty familiar subject; and, as my hon. friend knows, and probably some other hon. members know, the brief that he has given to the House now on this matter is of precisely the same character as that placed in the hands of Senator Casgrain and read in the Senate a short time ago.

Mr. MACDONALD: I did not know.

Mr. BURRELL: Yes. The whole matter has been gone into just as fully in the Senate; and as a result of that, a special committee of the Senate has been appointed to thresh the matter out in detail, and witnesses are to be summoned. At all events, Mr. Campbell is to be given the fullest opportunity to come here and have the matter gone into thoroughly Whether or not he has availed himself of that opportunity, I do not know. I would not like to go into the whole story. I quite agree with my hon. friend that we are not disputing Mr. Campbell's honesty of purpose in this matter; but it is a case where one particular view has seized his mind and the department holds another view and we cannot see eye to eye. I believe that Mr. Campbell, in his desire to get animals in here free of duty, has refused to conform to certain regulations, amongst which are that, when we have in Canada a national record system for any particular breed, an animal of that particular breed that is imported, has to be registered here. As I understand it, Mr. Campbell will not do that. I might also point out—I think I am right in this: I shall be corrected probably by my hon. friend if I am wrong—that the Government of the United States would not allow a man to bring an animal from this country duty free into the United States, unless it were registered in our Canadian record of that particular breed, whatever it might be.

There was another very strong grievance of Mr. Campbell, namely, that he did not want to conform to our regulations, because they required that when a man imported an animal from the United States, he had to furnish a certificate of identity so satisfactory that it had been backed up by the transfers showing the number of hands through which the animal had passed. It is particularly desirable that this should be done, because there are a great many horses syndicated in the West that have been brought in there ostensibly with certain registration certificates which can sometimes be obtained pretty easily; people have been gulled, and no responsible party can be got hold of should the animal prove to be absolutely worthless. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Warnock) will bear me out in that. There has been a very strong request from every one interested in the horse industry to have a system of identification so complete that the horse industry in this country will be thoroughly covered. In some of these matters Mr. Campbell did not see eye to eye with the department. I do not profess to have sufficient legal training to see all the fine points of the matter; but the conclusion come to by myself and by the officers of the department who were interested was that we could not take any action.

Mr. MACDONALD: I do not profess to be an expert on this matter; but, on reading these documents, it strikes me as an anomaly that there should be any authority in Canada that will say: You can not regard an animal coming into Canada as being thoroughbred in the sense that it may be imported free of duty, although the animal has a certificate of the English or the American or the Australian register. Why should not such a certificate be sufficient?

Mr. BURRELL: That is not altogether the point, although it may be one point. The policy has been laid down that Canada is now big enough and important enough from a breeding standpoint to stand on its own feet and to have a national record system of its own. It is to the interest of every one who wants to benefit by bringing in a breed of any kind to have a Canadian register of that particular breed. If a man gets a horse of a particular breed from somewhere else, he must have it registered on our Canadian books as well. On that point, however, my hon. friend from South Ontario (Mr. Smith), if I am wrong, will be able to put me right. The subject is a rather involved one.

Mr. WILLIAM SMITH: In the first place, I wish to congratulate the Department of Agriculture upon the way in which the live-stock industry is being managed at the present time. A great deal of life has been thrown into the Department of Agriculture within the last few years, which I think is having its effect upon the breeders and farmers of Canada from one end of the country to the other.

As far as the objections raised by the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Warnock) are concerned, I would say that, whilst he was very moderate in his expressions—and I would expect that from a gentleman of his standing and of his knowledge of Northwest conditions—I cannot altogether agree with him. In the first place I take it that the object of the department is to supply outlying districts, namely, where Canadian bred horses are being used and travelled, as is done in many places in the West and in Ontario. Price does not mean everything in connection with a horse of this description, so that I do not think a great deal of harm can be done. There is this to be said, namely, that the policy of the Government is helping the farmers and the breeders of that class of horses, and they are getting a fair price for them. Therefore, I would scarcely believe Mr. Lane, as I know him, to be actuated altogether by sentiment in selling his colts for $600 each. In regard to the resolutions that were read, I think I see the hand of an old and prominent breeder of the province of Alberta. I refer to Mr. John A. Turner. When representations were made to Mr. Lane after the sale was effected, complaining that he had made it, his answer was that he was running his own business and running it in his own way. If the policy of my hon. friends opposite were carried out, instead of breeding these horses by our own people in the different provinces, the matter would be transferred altogether to another country, and there would be no object at all in a breeder crossing an animal so that it could be recorded in our registers, because there would be no special sale for such an animal. These animals have to be bought for Ontario in Ontario as long as they last; for Alberta, out of the province of Alberta; for Saskatchewan, the same, and so on in the other provinces. If there is not a sufficient number in a province, then the people can go outside the provinces in order to get the balance.

Mr. WARNOCK: When there is a good imported horse in the district, would not my hon. friend believe that that horse might be used without bringing in an outsider if arrangements could be made with the owner?

Mr. SMITH: If I understand the policy aright the department would not send a horse to a section where there was already an imported horse.

Mr. WARNOCK: I think that for this year in a portion of the district south of Macleod application has been made for a stallion. I understand they wanted a Percheron, but they were informed by the department that a Percheron could not be sent, but the department could get them a Clyde. I believe there is a very excellent imported horse in the district, and I know that within thirty miles from Macleod there are a number that could probably be got for a small bonus added to the fee.

Mr. BURRELL: I will take a note of what the hon. member says. I believe the department is living up to the principle the hon. gentleman announces with an absolute desire not to interfere with any privately-owned horse. I know that there is an honest desire on the part of every man in the department to carry out the policy in that sense, but yet the object is to meet the needs of those who cannot get the services of a sire except at great inconvenience and financial loss. I agree that if there is a privately-owned sire in the district we do not wish to enter into competition.

Mr. WARNOCK: I assume that. But the policy is not being carried out quite in the way the minister has indicated. In that Macleod district I want them to get a good stallion and not have some scrub sent in there, because there are a lot of valuable mares and it would be regrettable to have a scrub sire get into the district.

Mr. SMITH: Every one will agree that as few scrubs as possible should be used, and that I take it to be the object of the policy. There will be differences in the animals, no doubt one will be better than another, but in the main I believe the policy will work wonders for the horse-breeding interests of the different provinces. I would say a word in connection with the statement made by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald). This is an old and hackneyed grievance so far as some of us are concerned. In this connection I would like for a moment to refer to the national records. Whilst the details may be known to a good many members of the House, some hon. members not having a great deal of interest in live stock matters, know very little about them. A number of years ago there were several provincial registrations. These were good in their place and accomplished good. But the time came when it was felt that it was desirable that these should be centralized at Ottawa. The ex-Minister of Agriculture, whilst he never for a moment conceived the idea of centralizing them at Ottawa, was fairly liberal in his views concerning them. The distinct understanding, when they were centralized at Ottawa, was that every association must be under its own control —that is, the Clydesdale made their own rules and regulations, the Shorthorn people the same, the Thoroughbred people the same. So, the record committee which has been spoken of here did not have any real control over the rules and regulations; they carry out the rules and regulations in the central office in Ottawa. Mr. Campbell, of whom you have heard to-night, said they were an irresponsible body. I may say that the members of that committee include Mr. Peter White, Mr. Robert Miller, Mr. J. M. Gardhouse, Mr. Joseph Brethour, Hon. Mr. Garneau and Mr. J. Stephen. I have the honour to be chairman of that committee, and have had that honour for two years. Mr. Campbell made his representations to us. The central idea in connection with these records has been this: The establishment of Canadian national records so that there should be an association for each breed of domestic animals the records of which should be beyond cavil, so that they could be accepted by customs officers and others without question. So far as Government control is concerned, they have an officer appointed by the Department of Agriculture who stamps every certificate with the Government stamp. That gives its value. And to-day the Canadian records of all kinds, all breeds, stand, I believe, higher than those of any other country, in the world. Now, let me point out to you some of the difficulties that have to be met. For instance, all animals recorded in the Clydesdale studbook of Great Britain and Ireland cannot be recorded in our book, because our standard is higher. The complaint made by the hon. member for Pictou, as I understand it—and it is Mr. Campbell's complaint—is that he wants the thoroughbred to come in without being recorded in the Canadian book. That is, he wants us to deal differently with the thoroughbred from any other breed.

Mr. MACDONALD: Does not he propose to record it when it comes in?

Mr. SMITH: No, that is one of the difficulties. One of the very strong positions taken by every association is that every animal must be identified. Mr. Campbell says that that is an utter impossibility. But we do not have any other record, finding fault or complaining. We say that unless every animal is identified, we lose the goodness of our records. Take, for instance, the Thoroughbred Association, of which, no doubt, at one time, he may have been a member. The matter was brought by Mr. Campbell before that association, of which Mr. William Hendry was the president.

Mr. MACDONALD: Colonel William Hendry, of Hamilton?

Mr. SMITH: Yes. In connection with that I wish to read Colonel Hendry's reply, which covers the whole ground:

> The executive committee are fully advised as to the situation and the determined efforts on the part of Mr. C. S. Campbell to obtain his object through channels which might only inform your department of Mr. Campbell's side of the situation. I, therefore, was instructed to write you a personal letter giving you the personal view of the officers of the society. Briefly, the position is as follows: It is well to remember that when the society was formed, and when it was made a national one like other breeds of live-stock, all the prominent breeders were in favour of the change, some of them largely interested and who had been both breeding and racing for many years before Mr. Campbell became identified in a similar capacity. Therefore, at this stage, why should not the past experience of these gentlemen and those comprising the society to-day, be of sufficient importance to warrant the affairs of the society being properly conducted? Mr. Campbell desires to have the privilege of bringing his animals into Canada 'free of duty,' without recording such animals in the National Live Stock Records and paying the recording fee in the Stud Book of same. If his ground is well taken and his action supported by those in authority in your department, or any other department of the Government, then the whole system of importation of pure bred live-stock into this country is nullified, and the breeding interests will receive such a setback as they will never recover from.

Mr. Campbell has stated in a letter to me that the society seeks to put obstructions in the way of importing into this country, pure bred live-stock. This is a serious charge, and one which, as president of the society, I desire most strongly to disagree with. On the other hand, if your department were to follow the advice of Mr. Campbell and some others from his province, the absurdity of his contentions would only be exceeded by the serious damage it would do to the breeding interests, not only of all breeds of horses but of other live-stock breeds.

The Record Committee published a list of Canadian records and all information pertaining thereto, and a list of recognized foreign records in their annual report which is spread broadcast to breeders, and may be obtained by any one else who may apply. Many foreign records, while on the list of recognized records issued by the United States Government, are not recognized in their entirety. An importer cannot tell whether animals are entitled to free entry into the United States until their pedigrees are passed on by the authorities at Washington. While, generally speaking, all thoroughbred horses are admitted free to the United States, the Jockey Club, New York, practise a system of protection by making registration in their book compulsory within a certain period by a fine of $100. Transfers mean a chain of title to prove identity and prevent fraud by substitution. There has never been any difficulty with horses from Great Britain, as the Stud Book authorities in England issue an export certificate for all animals leaving the country, which absolutely proves his identity and ownership.

The first customs regulations in reference to the free importation of animals for breeding purposes came into effect on October 1, 1870. As to identification of animals, they were as stringent as those of the present time. In the case of a thoroughbred horse, a certificate of purity of blood, a certificate of identity signed and sworn to by the importer and a certificate of registration in either the English or American book was required.

The National Record Board exists by an agreement with the Department of Agriculture.

The Record Committee has never declined to perform the functions delegated to it.

The Government, by incorporating the Canadian Thoroughbred Horse Society, does not delegate to the National Record Committee authority to say whether the English, American, Australian, French or any other stud book is reliable.

The Customs regulations memo. 1713b and 1750b plainly state that if there be a Canadian record for the breed an animal must be entered therein.

An importer, before purchasing, can obtain from the National Record office information as to the eligibility of any animal.

Transfer of title is necessary to prove identity. The basis of all reliable records is the transfer of animals when sold. Without transfers you might as well accept every man's private record and abandon National Records.

No difficulty exists but with horses from the United States. The American Thoroughbred Stud Book does not enforce any system of transfers. The American Stud Book has been described as having a foundation of sand. Only horses that are noted performers on race tracks can be identified by race track officials or race track followers. Canadian purchasers of American horses on American tracks are in the same position as American purchasers of Canadian horses on American tracks. Canadian registration is required for Canadian horses entering the United States free of duty. It is doubtful if it is not illegal to change to a free entry for breeding purposes, a race horse that is under bond to be returned to the country from whence it came.

Most British and continental records were established because of exportations to foreign countries, principally to Canada and the United States. American records were established in many cases prior to those in the country where the breeds originated.

The National Record has passed the experimental stage. The paid membership reaches almost 10,000 persons and the number of people doing business with the National Record office is probably 35,000.

Pedigree registration is mostly based on honesty among breeders. The honest breeder insists on the most stringent regulations for his protection.

Animals already in the country at the time of inception of any record have the same system of identification applied to them as those that may come in later.

The progeny of unidentified animals upon which the duty has been paid, cannot be recorded.

If a mare is brought into the country in foal, is unidentified and duty paid, the foal cannot be registered until the mare is identified.

This pretty plainly shows the work of the Record Board and of the Record Committee and what is demanded. If any one thing was given up in connection with thoroughbred horses and their registration, everything in connection with it might as well go. There must be the identification of the animal in every case.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Borden the House adjourned at 12.15 a.m. Saturday.

Monday, May 11, 1914.

The House met at Eleven o'clock, the Speaker in the Chair.

CANADIAN NORTHERN RAILWAY PAPER.

Indenture between Lake Superior Terminal Company, Limited, Toronto, and National Trust Company, Limited, Toronto, dated 28th December, 1903.—Mr. Borden.

THE OKA POSTMISTRESS.

On the Orders of the Day being called:

Mr. PELLETIER: I would like to call the attention of the House to some statements which were made by the right hon. leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux) in my absence on Friday last. The statement of the hon. member for Rouville, which is to be found on page 3,592 of 'Hansard,' is as follows:

> I do not wish to offer any objection to the Bill, but I might remind the House and the leader of the Government that the Minister of Justice is more generous than the Postmaster General. Three years ago a mail carrier perished in trying to save the mails during a storm on lake of Two Mountains, between Ottawa and Montreal. He left a widow and five or six children. The case was brought to the notice of the House by the hon member for Two Mountains (Mr. Ethier). He begged the Government to do something for the widow and children, but the minister refused. More than that, the people of Oka petitioned the Postmaster General to transfer the mail contract, formerly held by her husband to the widow of this man. The petition was turned down, the widow has received nothing, and there she is to-day.

On page 3,593 I find the following:

> Sir Wilfrid Laurier: I agree with the minister in everything he has said, but I would strongly recommend to him the case brought to his attention by the hon. member for Rouville. It is not in his department, I know, but the circumstances are very much the same. Here is a man who lost his life in the performance of his duty. The circumstances may not have been heroic, but, after all, the case is deserving of attention from the State, which has benefited by the performance of this man's duty. If the hon. minister could prevail on his neighbour, the Postmaster General, to do the same for this man's widow, he would win the gratitude not only of the widow but of every member in this House.
>
> Mr. Doherty: I shall be very glad to call his attention to what has been said.
>
> Sir Wilfrid Laurier: Calling his attention to it will not accomplish much.

As I said, those statements were made in my absence. As a matter of fact, I asked Parliament to vote $1,000 for this poor woman, and that amount has been voted and paid. Moreover, much against the wishes of many of my political friends, I got this woman appointed as postmistress at that place; and I have received from her letters expressing her most profound gratitude. In one sentence of the letter I have in my hand she says:

> It seems to me that I have suffered enough since that time without having people heap reproaches on my benefactor after what he has done for me.

These are the facts.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: As far as I am concerned, I spoke under a misapprehension, and I am very glad to offer my congratulations to the Postmaster General on what he has done.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I was away during the first session of this Parliament, but I gathered from certain remarks that the hon. Postmaster General had refused the request of the member for Two Mountains. I, also, am glad to congratulate the Postmaster General on what he has done.

Mr. PELLETIER: If this had been taken up in my presence, it would have been better, perhaps.

PRIVATE BILLS.

THE FARNHAM AND GRANBY RAILWAY COMPANY.

The House in Committee on Bill No. 166, to incorporate the Farnham and Granby Railway Company of Canada.—Mr. Baker. Mr. Blondin in the chair.

On section 8—line of railway authorized:

Mr. BOIVIN: I would like to direct your attention, Mr. Chairman, to a small technical error in clause 8. There is no such place in Canada as the town of Granby. The section should read the 'village' of Granby. The inhabitants of the village of Granby are very anxious to see this Bill go through, and I am very much in favour of it, but I would like to have that mistake corrected. I was not able to be before the Railway Committee when the Bill came up. I would, therefore, move that the word 'village' be substituted for the word 'town.'

Section as amended agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

THE PRUDENTIAL LIFE OF CANADA.

The House in Committee on Bill No. 150, to Incorporate the Prudential Life of Canada.—Mr. Nickle. Mr. Blondin in the Chair.

On section 10:

The new company shall not commence business until at least one hundred thousand dollars have been paid upon its capital stock.

Mr. SINCLAIR: When I intervened on Friday night to say a word about this Bill, it was not with any desire to prevent its passing but to draw attention to the wording of section 10 which was discussed before the Committee on Banking and Commerce. It was contended by certain members of that committee that the language of the clause is not clear; that it might be complied with by showing that one hundred thousand dollars of capital had been subscribed at some time in the past, but that might now be impaired to some extent, and that it was necessary to have the clause so clear that there should be no doubt that one hundred thousand dollars of capital would be to the fore when the company is being incorporated with a federal charter. Apart from any undertaking of the Finance Department which no doubt will be carried out, I would like to know if the minister thinks the language of the clause is sufficiently clear as it stands to enjoin the department to see that there is one hundred thousand dollars to the good now, before the company would be chartered for business.

Mr. W. T. WHITE: Since this matter was last under discussion, I have made inquiry as to the Dominion Acts passed during the last three years incorporating companies with the power of taking over provincial companies. I find that in 1911 there were two companies so incorporated: The Merchants and Employers Guarantee Accident Company, and the Continental Fire Insurance Company of Canada; in 1912 there was incorporated the Liverpool-Manitoba Assurance Company, and in 1913 the Canadian Provident Insurance Company, the Underwriters Corporation of Canada, and the Western Canada Accident and Guarantee Insurance Company. The Insurance Department informs me that while these Acts prescribe the amount of capital stock required to be paid up before the new company shall commence the transaction of its several classes of business, there is no provision in any of these Acts regarding the amount of unimpaired capital to be shown. There is a provision in each of these Acts that there shall be a certain paid-up capital, but there is no specific provision that there shall be an excess of assets over liabilities, or an unimpaired capital. The Department of Insurance further informs me that in practice they have always insisted, before a license is granted, that the amount of paid-up capital mentioned in the Act of incorporation shall be wholly unimpaired. I have here the Acts incorporating the several companies which I have mentioned, but I do not think it necessary to go into them in detail. My hon. friend from Guysborough will observe that a new company is being incorporated under this Bill, H-2 of the Senate, that is to say, it is a new incorporation. This new company is to have the power of taking over an old company, the Prudential Life Insurance Company, incorporated under the statutes of the Province of Manitoba. By section 10 of the Act it is provided that the new company shall not commence business until at least one hundred thousand dollars has been paid upon its capital stock. That section is on all fours with sections in these several Bills which I have mentioned, passed during the last three years. When the matter was under discussion in the committee, I stated that it might be conceivable that a new company might have one hundred thousand dollars of fully paid-up stock and yet there might not be a surplus of one hundred thousand dollars of assets over liabilities, and therefore, if there had been no other circumstances in the matter it would have been entirely agreeable to me that the amount of sixty-five thousand dollars—which had been fixed in a Bill passed a little while ago by the committee—or eighty thousand dollars, or a hundred thousand dollars, should have been provided as the amount of unimpaired capital, the company should show before being licensed to carry on its business. But by reason of the considerations which were drawn to the attention of the committee, namely, that this Bill had been strongly opposed on the ground of its name; that last year it had been rejected in the Senate; that this year it had passed the Senate and that the change now might involve, by reason of the lateness of the session, the company not obtaining incorporation at all, it appeared to me that if the matter could be safe-guarded, as it can be safeguarded, by the Insurance Department, it would not be necessary to insert in this Bill a provision which has not in the past been usual in connection with similar incorporations. These being the facts it would appear to me that the matter of the standing of the company and its solvency is safeguarded by the precautions I have taken in instructing the Insurance Department to see that before the license is granted the company shall have an unimpaired fully-paid-up capital of one hundred thousand dollars. I may say that at the last meeting of the Banking and Commerce Committee, I was assured by the manager and by the president of the Prudential Life Insurance Company, that they have no objection whatever to taking that course and would have no difficulty in complying with the requirement of the department.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Another question. The minister in his letter to the superintendent of insurance says that he should associate with his officers an outside actuary to make an investigation into this company. I would like to know who is to pay for the services of an outside actuary?

Mr. WHITE: I did not consider that aspect of it, but personally I would see no objection to the Insurance Department paying. That will be done in the ordinary course of business. It is not unusual for the department to engage expert officials from outside in connection with the conduct of public business devolving upon it.

Mr. SINCLAIR: I think the Prudential Life Company should pay for the outside actuary; of course the actuaries of the department will do the work as part of the business of their office.

Mr. WHITE: I would suggest to my hon. friend that perhaps it would be better that the Government should pay, for the reason that my idea in suggesting that outside actuarial assistance be obtained was in order to put the matter of the standing of the company beyond any question. If a company whose affairs are to be investigated pay for the actuary, it might be suggested that the actuary, being so paid by the company, might not be as strict as if he were paid by the Government. It would occur to me that the proper way of dealing with the matter would be for the Insurance Department to pay for any actuarial assistance which might be obtained.

Mr. SINCLAIR: I do not regard it as important. I have no doubt at all that the minister will make the necessary investigation, and that everything will be done carefully and in order. I have every confidence in the minister and the department that this matter will be attended to as he states it will be. This measure is now practically a Government measure, and the minister, of course, takes the responsibility in regard to it.

The point that I wish to impress upon the House is that the House has functions in regard to these matters as well as the Department of Finance, and that it cannot discharge its functions by passing them over to the department. It is well understand that the functions of the Department of Finance are administrative and that the functions of the House are legislative. It is the duty of the Department of Finance to issue a license to a company when it complies with the terms of the charter granted by this House. If the House chooses to grant a charter to a company to do insurance business in Canada with a capital of $5,000, and if the company comes next day knocking at the door of the Department of Finance with the charter, complying with the terms of it and furnishing the $5,000 capital, or the proof of it, it is the duty of the department to issue the license, notwithstanding that the minister may be of the opinion that the company ought to have at least $100,000 capital. Therefore it is important that the House in all these matters should provide clearly and distinctly what is required because, as to what is required, the Department of Finance will carry out the mandate of the House. It is especially important, when we remember the unfortunate incident which took place recently in regard to the Union Life and incidents of a similar nature. Therefore I hope the minister will see the point which I make, namely, that in all these charters that are granted it is proper and right that the House should be clear and distinct in regard to the conditions on which they shall be granted.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Do I understand the minister to say that the section in the Bill fixing the capital at $100,000 shall be construed by the department to mean that there must be assets over liabilities to that extent?

Mr. W. T. WHITE: Yes.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill No. 59, respecting the Toronto, Niagara and Western Railway Company.—Mr. Currie.

Bill No. 167, to incorporate the Cornwall and Hawkesbury Railway Company of Canada.—Mr. Alguire.

Bill No. 161, respecting the Western Life Assurance Company.—Mr. Bradbury.

Bill No. 163, to incorporate the North American Accident Insurance Company.—Mr. Baker.

SECOND READING.

Bill No. 172, respecting the Toronto Terminals Railway Company.—Mr. Macdonell.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

CANADIAN NORTHERN RAILWAY FINANCE.

* Mr. MACDONALD:

1. Referring to the statement made by the Prime Minister in 'Hansard' 1912-1913, page 11757, as follows: 'The Canadian Northern Railway Company professes itself able, under ordinary conditions, to raise all the money that may be necessary for the completion of the line.' Who made this statement on behalf of the Canadian Northern Railway Company?

2. When was it communicated to the Government?

3. Was the statement made in writing? If so, who signed the same?

Mr. BORDEN:

1. An official of the Canadian Northern railway.

2. Shortly before the statement was made to the House, so far as the Prime Minister can recollect.

3. No.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—C. FRED. AVARD.

Mr. EMMERSON:

1. On what date was C. Fred. Avard appointed to a position in the freight department of the Intercolonial railway at Sackville, N.B., at what rate of wages or salary, and to what position was he appointed?

2. On what date was the said C. Fred. Avard dismissed from the Intercolonial railway service, and what position did he hold when dismissed?

3. What was the salary or wages being paid him at the time of his dismissal, and was he the senior freight porter at the Sackville freight shed at the time of his dismissal?

4. Under the schedule which came into effect on June 1, 1911, did it grant the following scale of wages: Senior freight porters $1.80 per day; junior freight porters $1.50 per day; second year $1.70 per day; junior freight porters third and subsequent years $1.75 per day?

5. How long was the said C. Fred. Avard in the railway service as senior freight porter at Sackville, and what was the rate of wages paid him after June 1, 1911?

6. For what cause was the said C. Fred. Avard dismissed, and upon whose recommendation was the dismissal made?

7. Was the said C. Fred. Avard senior freight porter at Sackville station on the first day of June, 1911, and since that date?

8. If not, who was and who has been since the dismissal of the said C. Fred. Avard, and what rate of wages were paid him since his appointment?

Mr. J. D. REID:

1. April 17, 1903; $1.20 per day; occupation, porter.

2. January 31, 1914; senior porter.

3. $2 per day; 63 years of age; senior in the service.

4. Yes, for sheds where porters are numerous enough to be classified.

5. Classified as senior porter nine months, from April 1, 1913, to January 21, 1914. $1.70 per day, June 1, 1911, to March 21, 1913; $1.90 per day, March 21, 1913, to April 1, 1913; $2 per day, April 1, 1913, to January 31, 1914.

6. Incapable of performing duties satisfactorily, on account of being too old.

7. No, but he was so classified from April 1, 1913, to January 31, 1914.

8. No one. Claude Estabrooks, at $2.

CANADIAN NORTHERN RAILWAY—TRANSCONTINENTAL LINE.

Mr. MACDONALD:

1. Referring to the statement made by the Minister of Finance, in 'Hansard' 1912-13, page 11713, in the following words: 'It is estimated that by the summer of next year, if the same conditions prevail as have prevailed as to labour, the Canadian Northern Railway Company will be running trains across the continent from Quebec to the Pacific coast;' who made the estimate referred to?

2. Was the said estimate made in writing?

3. Was the estimate communicated to the Government? If so, by whom and on what date?

Mr. W. T. WHITE:

1. Officials of the Canadian Northern Railway Company. In the annual report to the shareholders of the company at the annual general meeting of October 23, 1912, it was stated that it was hoped the transcontinental line of the Canadian Northern railway system would be completed by the end of 1913.

2. No.

3. Yes, during the session of 1912-13, but upon what date and by whom the minister does not recall.

NORTH RIVERSIDE POSTMASTER.

Mr. SINCLAIR:

1. Referring to the dismissal of Charles McPherson, postmaster at North Riverside, Guysborough county, N.S., did the postmaster or any officer of his department write to the said postmaster stating that complaints of partisanship had been made against him?
2. If so, was such complaint made in writing and by whom?

Mr. PELLETIER: Yes, by James R. MacPherson, but, as already explained, the postmaster was not dismissed for that reason.

PANAMA CANAL RATES vs FORT WILLIAM RATES.

*Mr. BURNHAM:

1. What will be the difference in freight charges per bushel for wheat from Pincher Creek, laid down at Liverpool, via the Panama canal and via Fort William?
2. What will be the difference from Winnipeg?

Mr. FOSTER: It is impossible to answer this question, as no wheat rates or other rates have yet been established through the Panama canal.

Mr. BURNHAM: The hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Warnock) informs me that the difference will be from six to eight cents; but I wished to get it more definitely. It is rumoured that it will be twelve cents.

SHERBROOKE POST OFFICE EMPLOYEES.

Mr. McREA:

1. What is the name of each person employed in the post office inspection department at Sherbrooke?
2. What is the remuneration paid to each individual, including the inspector?

Mr. PELLETIER: The following persons are employed in the post office inspector's office at Sherbrooke:

Name, rank and salary—Dastous, L. E.M., inspector, $2,500; Soles, C. Edw., asst. inspector, $2,000; Doherty, M. M. L. (Miss), clerk 3-A, $1,000; Campbell, S. (Miss), temp. clerk, $500; Bousquet, P., messenger, gr. A., $2 a day; Downing, J. P., temp. help; $2 a day; Frechette, R. temp. clerk, $500; Lefebvre, J. P., porter, gr. C., $2.50 a day.

PETITE RIVIERE BREAKWATER.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN:

What amount was spent during the fiscal year 1913-14 in connection with the Petite Rivière breakwater, Lunenburg county, N.S.?

Mr. ROGERS: $2,499.98 to January 16, 1914.

WHARVES BREAKWATER.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN:

What amount was spent during the fiscal year 1913-14 in connection with the Wharves Breakwater, Lunenburg county, N.S.?

Mr. ROGERS: $1,499.76 to December 27, 1913.

THREE RIVERS, MILITIA CAMP.

Mr. BUREAU:

1. How many tenders were received for the supply of meat for the military camp at Three Rivers during the year 1913?
2. (a) Is it the intention of the Government to hold a military camp at Three Rivers during the coming summer? (b) If so. will tenders be asked for the supply of meat and other necessaries of life?
3. (a) Who was awarded the contract for the supply of meat at Three Rivers military camp in 1913, (b) what price was paid to the contractor, and (c) was the one who supplied such meat the lowest tenderer?

Mr. HAZEN:

1. Four.
2. (a) Yes; (b) Yes; advertisement for tenders has already been made.
3. (a) Harris Abattoir Company, Ltd.; (b) eleven and one-half cents per pound; (c) Yes.

KINGSTON CAUSEWAY.

Mr. EDWARDS:

1. Has the work on the Causeway at Kingston been discontinued? If so, when and for what reason?
2. According to progress made to date, is the work likely to be completed by the time specified?

Mr. ROGERS:

1. No.
2. Fair progress is now being made.

FENIAN RAID BOUNTY—NOVA SCOTIA APPLICATIONS.

Mr. EDWARDS:

1. (a) How many applications for Fenian Raid veteran's bounty have been received from Nova Scotia, (b) how many have been allowed, and (c) how many have been disallowed?
2. Were the Nova Scotia claims forwarded to Ottawa and passed upon by the Pension Boards? If not, how and by whom were the claims adjusted?
3. In the case of Nova Scotia claims allowed, do the names of the veterans appear on active service pay-lists at Ottawa?
4. Was the form of application for the bounty the same for Nova Scotia as for Ontario? If not, in what respects did it differ?
5. What proof was required of the Nova Scotia veterans to make good their claims?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES: As claims have not been entered by provinces, it is almost impossible to give the exact date relative to the province of Nova Scotia; but:

1. (a) Approximately 20,000 claims have been received from Nova Scotia; (b) Approximately 5,700 warrants have been issued for Nova Scotia; (c) Approximately 300 claims have been disallowed.

2. Claims were all forwarded direct to Ottawa. The Pension Board had nothing to do with these claims. The claims were passed upon by the officials engaged in carrying out the terms of the Fenian Raid Volunteer Bounty Act of 1st April, 1912.

3. No. There are not any Active Service pay-lists for the province. The service took place in 1866, before Confederation, and it seems that the pay-lists were destroyed.

4. Yes.

5. As the proclamation of the 17th March, 1866, called out every man in Nova Scotia between the ages of 16 and 45, and not as in Ontario and Quebec, where corps were specially named in the General Orders calling out the force, the sworn declaration of a claimant and a comrade that he was enrolled in a corps of the Nova Scotia militia, and served with it on actual service in obedience to the proclamation issued by the Governor of Nova Scotia on the 17th day of March, 1866. The same proof, in fact, as has been required and accepted in cases in the other provinces where active service pay-lists were absent.

PORTNEUF LIGHTKEEPER.

Mr. DELISLE:

1. Is the Minister of Marine and Fisheries aware that, as alleged, when an investigation was being held by Mr. Omer Beaubien, attorney, in the case of Josephine Rodrigue, lightkeeper at Portneuf, county of Portneuf, several witnesses were summoned from Portneuf to Quebec, where said investigation was being held, and that they have not yet received their witness fees and travelling expenses?

2. If so, is it the intention of the Government to have them paid?

Mr. HAZEN: The amounts due the several witnesses were included in the account submitted by Mr. Beaubien. The account, including the fees for witnesses, has been paid to Mr. Beaubien. The matter has been referred to the Justice Department for advice as to further liability.

EMPLOYMENT OF MEMBERS OF PROVINCIAL LEGISLATURES.

Mr. MOLLOY:

Can members of any provincial legislature be employed by or receive money from the federal Government for services rendered?

Mr. BORDEN: Questions of this character are not usually answered, as they involve an opinion upon questions of law. In any event the subject would be dealt with by enactment of the provincial legislatures.

UNOPPOSED AND UNDISCUSSED MOTIONS.

Mr. Kyte.—For a copy of all letters, telegrams, correspondence and memorials since the 1st day of November, 1911, relating to the post office at Johnstown, Richmond county, N.S., and to complaints against the present postmaster and recommendations for his dismissal?

Mr. Wm. Chisholm.—For a copy of all correspondence, memorials, letters, telegrams and other documents relating to the redistribution of constituencies in the province of Nova Scotia, as affecting the electoral district of the county of Antigonish.

Mr. Sinclair.—For a copy of all correspondence, memorials, letters, telegrams and other documents relating to the redistribution of constituencies in the province of Nova Scotia, as affecting the electoral district of the county of Guysborough.

Mr. Kyte.—For a copy of all correspondence, memorials, letters, telegrams and other documents relating to the redistribution of constituencies in the province of Nova Scotia, as affecting the electoral district of the county of Richmond.

Mr. Oliver.—For a copy of all papers and correspondence relating to a contract for telegraph or telephone poles for a line from Green lake to Isle à la Crosse, Saskatchewan, the advertisement for tenders the tenders received, with names of the tenderers and prices, and also a copy of all correspondence regarding same and particulars of contract awarded.

Mr. Sam. Sharpe.—For a copy of all papers, letters, telegrams, accounts and receipts, concerning advances or payments made by the Government to Newton Wesley Rowell, K.C., for legal services in connection with the Oka Indian litigation.

Mr. Neely.—For a copy of all documents, letters, telegrams, homestead inspector's reports and other documents relating to the cancellation of the entry of R. Bannatyne for the north-west quarter, section 24, township 36, range 18, west of the second Meridian.

Mr. Sinclair.—For a copy of all letters, telegrams, Orders in Council, contracts, tenders, papers and other documents in possession of the Department of Public Works, and of the Department of Militia and Defence, relating to the construction of an armoury at Amherst, N.S.

Mr. McCrea.—For a return showing whether Mr. David Armstrong, mail carrier of the city of Sherbrooke has been dismissed, and if so the cause for such dismissal; whether an investigation was held at which he was given an opportunity of meeting his accusers and being heard in his own defence; the number of years Mr. Armstrong has been in the service and the remuneration he was receiving for his services; whether his successsor has been appointed; if so, the name of said successor, the list of those who recommended him, and the remuneration he receives.

DRAWBACK ON PIG-IRON.

On motion of Hon. J. D. Reid (Minister of Customs), Bill No. 171, to amend the Customs Act, was read the second time, and the House went into Committee thereon, Mr. Blondin in the chair.

On section 1—Revised Statutes, chapter 48, amended:

Mr. CARROLL: What is the usual time which is allowed after the payment of the duty? I refer to subsection 2 of this section.

Mr. W. T. WHITE: I am sorry that I am unable to answer my hon. friend; I will get the information later and give it to him.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Will it be the practice of the department to take note of all importations of iron when they are made and before consumption at the furnaces is begun?

Mr. WHITE: In the administration of this Act the department will satisfy itself as to the amount of pig-iron which entered into the export manufactures of any concern, and if that concern has imported an amount of pig-iron equal to that amount, a drawback will be allowed in respect of the duties paid upon the pig-iron so imported.

12 noon.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

DOMINION LANDS ACT AMENDMENT.

The House again in Committee on Bill No. 136, to amend the Dominion Lands Act, Mr. Blondin in the Chair.

On section 3—price:

Mr. ROCHE: Sections 3 and 4 of this Bill were held over for the purpose of considering an amendment suggested by the hon. member for Moosejaw. I had adopted the principle laid down by the amendment of the hon. gentleman, but had refused to accept its wording. The amendment to section 3 which he substituted ran this way:

Any instalment or instalments not paid on the due dates thereof.

As this is not very happily worded, I have redrafted the amendment. I beg to move:

That all the words between the word 'instalments' in the eighth line and the word 'provided' in the fourteenth line of clause 3 be struck out and that the following be inserted in lieu thereof: And every instalment which is not paid upon the date when it becomes due shall bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum from such date until it is paid.

In effect, that means that no interest is charged except upon overdue payments. That will necessitate another amendment farther on in the same section, as follows:

That the following words be inserted after the word 'fee' in the fourth line, in the second proviso: or on any instalment or instalments for any period before any such instalment became due.

Motion agreed to, and section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 4—section 28 amended:

Mr. ROCHE: A similar amendment is proposed in connection with purchasing homesteads. I beg to move:

That section 4 be amended by adding thereto the following:

Subsection 5 of said section 28 is repealed and the following is substituted therefor:

5. The price payable for land under this section shall be $3 an acre, and such price shall be payable one-third at the time the entry is made and the balance in five equal annual instalments; and every instalment which is not paid upon the date upon which it becomes due shall bear interest at the rate of five per centum per annum from such date until it is paid: Provided that, on the completion of the requirements under this section for obtaining letters patent for such purchased homestead, payment in full may be made therefor and letters patent therefor may thereupon issue.

Motion agreed to, and section, as amended, agreed to.

Mr. OLIVER: Before the Bill goes out of committee, might I suggest to the minister that, in consideration of the fact that this Bill governs the rights of such a very large number of people who are not learned in the law, but yet who desire to acquire knowledge of what their rights are from a perusal of the Bill, that, wherever he has made an amendment providing for the insertion of one or more words in the Act as it formerly stood, he repeal that section, and replace it by a new section which will express in full the new intent of the law; so that when a layman desires to understand the meaning of a certain section, he will not have to refer to the old Act and the new amendments, and read them together, in order to get the meaning of the amended Bill.

Mr. ROCHE: I think that is worthy of consideration.

Mr. KNOWLES: I want to ask the minister a question about a case which I know will arise. Suppose that a man has not money to pay the first instalment on his pre-emption when it becomes due, but is in funds for the total balance fifteen months after; how much residence duties would he be called on to give an account of?

Mr. ROCHE: He would have to perform his proportion of the residence duties. As the hon. gentleman knows he has to put in six months in each year. Therefore, in this particular case he would have to put in about fifteen days. Still this is a matter on which the very greatest amount of latitude will be allowed, and the ordinary good sense of the department will be called into requisition in deciding such a case. I do not suppose a matter of fifteen days would hold up any man's patent.

Mr. KNOWLES: It might be twenty months instead of fifteen. The minister cannot see each of these men personally, and I think it is a mistake to leave the Act in this slipshod manner. This is a matter which should not be left to the officials to decide, according to whether the applicant is friend or foe. The law provides for six months' residence duties in each homestead year. I am inclined to think that in the case I mentioned, where a man was in funds twenty months after the first instalment became due, the officials would make him put in two periods of six months each. If all these cases came before the minister personally, I have no doubt that he would do what was just, but it is hardly necessary for me to repeat that there are men in his department upon whose justice I would not always rely; and I think he is making a mistake in not making that point clear.

Mr. ROCHE: The strict interpretation would require what the hon. gentleman states, but we are not putting any more power in the hands of our officials than they now possess. There must be a certain amount of elasticity in the interpretation and enforcement of the law. The good sense of those charged with the administration of the Act will have to decide each case on its merits.

Mr. KNOWLES: Will the minister say that the residence duties for a fraction of a year shall be not more than in the ratio of six months to twelve months?

Mr. ROCHE: That is the rule that will be enforced.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

FOREST RESERVES AND PARKS.

On motion of Hon. W. J. Roche (Minister of the Interior), Bill No. 137, to amend the Dominion Forest Reserves and Parks Act, was read the second time and the House went into Committee thereon, Mr. Blondin in the Chair.

On section 1—paragraph 1 amended:

Mr. OLIVER: This Bill, as I understand it, merely provides for the setting apart of new reserves and the cancellation of old ones, or the limitation of boundaries. It is impossible for any person to understand what is meant without the aid of a map, and I would respectfully ask the minister to place a map on the table and to adjourn consideration of the Bill until this afternoon, or some other time, to give members an opportunity of seeing what are the changes proposed. It may not have any pressing importance and yet the changes may be important.

Mr. ROCHE: I have just placed a map upon the table. If it is necessary to postpone the Bill I shall not object, but I do not know that there are any very important departures proposed. The principal changes proposed are in the form of additions to our present forest reserves. These lands have been thoroughly inspected by the officers of the forestry branch, have been temporarily set aside, and we now wish to make the reservations permanent. There are withdrawals from two or three reserves, amongst them the Buffalo Park reserve, from which we are taking a quarter section upon which a homesteader has qualified. If the hon. gentleman thinks it necessary, I will agree to a postponement.

Mr. OLIVER: I would certainly like to have an opportunity of looking at the map to see what changes are being made.

Mr. ROCHE: Well, we will leave it until this afternoon.

Progress reported.

MERCHANTS AND EMPLOYERS ACCIDENT GUARANTEE COMPANY.

On motion of Hon. C. J. Doherty (Minister of Justice), Bill No. 120, to correct a clerical error in Act 1-2 George V, chapter 118, respecting the National Weekly Indemnity Company, and to change its name to the Merchants and Employers Guarantee and Accident Company, was read the second time, and the House went into Committee thereon, Mr. Blondin in the Chair.

On section 1—business of company:

Mr. DOHERTY: The purpose of this Bill is merely to correct a translator's error in the English version of the Act. The act sought to be amended was originally a private Bill presented in French, but, when it came to be translated, the word 'cautionnement' was translated as 'bond' instead of 'guarantee.' One of the purposes of the company was to do guarantee insurance but the translator rendered it as bond insurance. This Bill originally contained one section correcting that error but I may say that it will be necessary to put in another clause, because the same error occurred in another section of the Bill which was not noticed at the time the Bill was prepared. Furthermore, the Insurance Department having pointed out that the regulations they imposed in regard to the capital were imposed in view of the English version, it will be necessary to further amend the Bill to meet the requirements as to capital suitable for a company to do a guarantee insurance business. I therefore beg to move that the Bill as before the committee be amended by adding the following sections:

2. Subsection 2 of section 8 of chapter 118 of the English version of the statutes of 1911 is amended by striking out the word 'bond' in the second line thereof and inserting the word 'guarantee' in lieu thereof.

3. Subsection 2 of section 8 of chapter 118 in both the English and French versions of the statutes of 1911 is amended by striking out the words 'eighty thousand dollars' in the fourth line thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the words 'one hundred and twenty thousand dollars, but the new company may commence the business of guarantee insurance in addition to accident insurance and sickness insurance when its paid-up capital stock amounts to ninety-five thousand dollars, or may commence the business of burglary insurance in addition to accident insurance and sickness insurance when its paid-up capital stock amounts to sixty-five thousand dollars.'

4. Subsection 4 of section 8 of chapter 118 in both the English and French versions of the statutes of 1911 is amended by striking out the word 'thirty' in the fourth line thereof and inserting the word 'seventy' in lieu thereof.

The two last sections are introduced to meet the requirements of the Insurance Department.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Where is the head office of this company?

Mr. DOHERTY: In Montreal.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Where was it incorporated?

Mr. DOHERTY: The company by another name was originally incorporated in the province of Quebec, and by a statute of 1911 the name was changed to the Merchants' and Employers' Guarantee and Accident Company, and provisions were made with regard to the capital that would be required in order to the carrying on of the business. The reason these changes have to be made is, that in determining the amount that would be required with regard to capital at the time the Bill was passed, the Insurance Department acted upon the English version and required a capital suitable to the doing of a bond insurance business, which I understand is less than would be required for the doing of a guarantee business. The anomalous situation was created that whereas, under the French version of the statute which was based upon the petition which was in French, the company was authorized to do this guarantee business, under the English version it was apparently only authorized to do a bond insurance business. The requirement as regards capital was based upon the English version and, therefore, only provided for a capital such as, in the opinion of the department, was necessary to justify the carrying on of a bond insurance business. It comes as a public Bill because it has been represented that the mistake which called for correction was the mistake of the officers of the House. The petitioners put their petition before the House in a language which they were entitled to use, and in the French version it was perfectly clear that a guarantee business was sought, but an error occurred in the translation and it was carried through and not noticed until later. The Insurance Department has recommended that these other changes which are consequent on that original error should be made.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL SENATORS FOR BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Right Hon. R. L. BORDEN (Prime Minister) moved that the House go into Committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to provide for three additional members of the Senate for the province of British Columbia.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: It might be well to discuss this matter now.

Mr. BORDEN: The province of British Columbia was brought into Confederation by an Order in Council which provided that it should be represented in the Senate of Canada by three members. A close consideration of the statutes under which that Order in Council was passed might lead to the conclusion that possibly something had been overlooked. However, the Order in Council has been acted upon for a great many years, and British Columbia has always been regarded as being represented in the Senate by three members, and it is so represented to-day. When the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan were created in 1905, provision was made that they should each be represented by four members and after the next decennial census that the number might be increased to six. When the addition was made to the territory of Manitoba in 1911 a similar provision was made in regard to that province, namely, that its representation in the Senate, which at that time consisted of four, should after the next decennial census be increased to six. The original basis of representation in the various provinces in the Senate was not fixed by population, nor does it seem to have been fixed upon any principle that could very well be defined. The representation as fixed seems to have been purely arbitrary. There was a provision that the provinces then constituting Confederation should be divided into three divisions: Ontario, Quebec and the Maritime provinces. It was provided that Ontario should be represented in the Senate of Canada by twenty-four members, that Nova Scotia and New Brunswick should each be represented in the Senate by twelve members, and that Quebec should be represented by twenty-four members, it being provided that in the province of Quebec the representation should be assigned to certain divisions in that province, whereas in the other provinces of Canada the representation is at large. It was provided that in case the province of Prince Edward Island should be admitted to Confederation, the representation of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick should be reduced by four, and that Prince Edward Island should be assigned a representation of four in the Senate. Provision was also made for the representation of Newfoundland in the Senate should that colony be admitted to Confederation. There was also the provision that His Majesty the King, by Order in Council, might increase the representation in the Senate by either three or six. In case of an increase by the number of three, one should be taken from Ontario, one from Quebec and one from the Maritime provinces. If the representation should be increased by six, two should be taken from Ontario, two from Quebec and two from the Maritime provinces, and no new senators should be appointed from either of these provinces until after the number fixed by the British North America Act should be reduced below the number which I have mentioned, that is, twenty-four for each division. There has been no provision for the constitution or establishment of a fourth senatorial division in Canada, beyond the provision to which I have just now alluded; and the proposal to increase the representation of the four western provinces to the number of six each would bring about in effect the establishment of a fourth division, although, so far as those provisions in the British North America Act which provide for a temporary increase in certain cases are concerned, it would be necessary to have an amendment to the British North America Act for the purpose of establishing proper provisions in that regard. My right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition alluded to this matter when one of these Bills was under discussion some time ago; and, if I remember his words correctly, he suggested that it would be a very proper thing to establish a fourth division for representation in the Senate of Canada consisting of the four provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia. The proposals which we have laid before the House in that regard will carry out his suggestion except as regards the necessity of some amendment to the British North America Act to which I have alluded. I think it is clear that any legislation passed by this Parliament for the purpose of increasing the representation of the province of British Columbia in the Senate would have to be confirmed by British legislation. As far as that is concerned, we would not propose to bring the legislation into effect until such confirmatory legislation should have been obtained. There is a precedent for the course which I am proposing to follow in this regard in the legislation passed for the purpose of appointing a deputy Speaker in the Senate in 1894. This legislation was passed with the proviso that it should not come into force until His Majesty's pleasure was signified by proclamation in the Canada Gazette. The question as to whether or not Parliament had the power to pass that legislation was submitted to the law officers of the Crown in Great Britain; and, although they doubted whether any confirmatory legislation was necessary, such confirmatory legislation was passed in 1895. It is desirable, I think, that the province of British Columbia should be placed upon the same basis as the other western provinces in respect of its representation in the Senate, and I think I have already placed upon the table of the House a resolution of the legislature of that province passed during a recent session. It was transmitted to the Government by the following communication:

Province of British Columbia.
The 3rd of March, 1914.
At Government House,
Victoria, B.C.

Sir,—I have the honour to forward herewith, a copy of an approved minute embodying a resolution of the Legislative Assembly of this province, in which application is made to the federal Government for an increase in the number of senators representing the province.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Thos. W. Paterson,
Lieutenant Governor.

The Honourable
The Secretary of State,
Ottawa.

The resolution alluded to is as follows:

The Committee of Council submit for the approval of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor a resolution of the Legislative Assembly of the province of British Columbia, as follows:

Whereas the Parliament of Canada has under consideration a measure providing for the redistribution of the constituencies of the Dominion:

And whereas it is provided to make provision for the appointment of an additional number of senators:

And whereas it is provided that the number of senators for each of the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta shall be six:

And whereas the population of British Columbia, as ascertained by the census in 1911, compares favourably with the other provinces mentioned and is increasing rapidly:

And whereas the area and importance of the province of British Columbia make it necessary and advisable that this province should receive adequate recognition when such appointments are made:

Therefore, be it resolved that His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor be requested to forward through the proper channels to the Dominion Government the prayer of this House that the number of senators for the province of British Columbia be increased to six, so as to give British Columbia equal standing in the Upper House with the other western provinces.

The committee advise that a copy of this minute be transmitted to the Honourable the Secretary of State of Canada.

Henry Esson Young,
Clerk, Executive Council.

Victoria, 2nd March, 1914.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: There are before the House at the present time four resolutions to increase the representation in the Senate of the four western provinces, namely, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia, in order to give each of these provinces six members instead of what they have at present. As to the desirability of such legislation, for my part, I have no objection to offer. On the contrary, some years ago, at the time we created the two new provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, I pointed out that it would be advisable that we should do for the western provinces what had been done for the eastern provinces, namely, create a new division, which would be called the western division, and which would make the number of divisions four. As stated by my right hon. friend a moment ago, when Confederation was established three divisions were created for the purpose of senatorial representation, that is to say, Ontario, Quebec and the Maritime provinces, each of which three divisions was given twenty-four members. The fathers of Confederation foresaw that, as time went on, new provinces would be added to Confederation, and they made provision for representation in the Senate of two provinces, namely, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland, which it was supposed would come into Confederation. The dispositions which they made with regard to Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland were just as has been stated by my right hon. friend. With regard to Prince Edward Island, it was stated that, when it came into Confederation, it would be entitled to four members, but that these four members would be deducted from the twenty-four members from the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, leaving twenty-four as the unit of representation for the division consisting of the Maritime provinces. At the same time it was stated that Newfoundland would be given a representation of four, making the total number of senators seventy-six instead of seventy-two. Strange to say, although the fathers of Confederation foresaw that British Columbia might come into Confederation, no disposition was made as to its representation in the Senate. When British Columbia came into Confederation, it was given representation in the Senate of three members, thus adding three to the total membership of the Senate, which had been fixed by the British North America Act at seventy-two. The matter evidently was an oversight at the time; but still, as stated by my right hon. friend, more than forty years have elapsed since that date, and, although British Columbia has been represented in the Senate perhaps without authority, it would be to no purpose to question what has been done. I have only this, however, to observe to my right hon. friend, that in so far as two of the provinces, namely, Alberta and Saskatchewan, are concerned, whose membership in the Senate it is now sought to increase, there is no constitutional objection; we have the power in this Parliament to give them this increased representation. So far as British Columbia is concerned, my right hon. friend can see that we have no power, but that anything we do must be confirmed by the Imperial Parliament. I submit, with all due deference, that so far as Manitoba also is concerned, we have no power at present to increase the representation of that province in the Senate than we have in the case of British Columbia. It is true, that two years ago when we extended the boundaries of Manitoba, we introduced into the Bill a provision to the effect that Manitoba should be represented in the Senate by six; but I submit with great confidence to the judgment of my right hon. friend that this was simply an expression of our will that the thing should be done by the proper authorities, and that the Parliament of Canada as now constituted has no power to increase the representation of Manitoba in the Senate. I would submit to my right hon. friend the advisability of proceeding in a different way from that which he now proposes. I think undoubtedly we have no power to increase the representation of British Columbia in the Senate; and in my opinion—I do not know whether that opinion is shared by hon. members on the other side—we have no such power in relation to Manitoba, or that at best our power to increase the representation in Manitoba would not be held to be above doubt. Therefore, I submit to my right hon. friend that it would be better to proceed as we have proceeded in such circumstances before when we were asking for imperial legislation and, instead of passing Acts which we have not the power to pass and then asking confirmation by the imperial authorities, to proceed by way of Royal Address asked by the Senate and the House of Commons to His Majesty asking for the necessary legislation, which would give us the powers we have not now. I repeat what I said a moment ago, that in view of the development that is taking place in the provinces of the West they are certainly entitled to increased representation in the Senate, and as a group I think the representation should be increased to twenty-four. I think it would be more in accordance with the constitutional usage if we passed an Address declaring that we create a new group composed of the western provinces to be given representation of twenty-four—a new group of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia, just as we have the group of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island—and that its representation in the Senate be twenty-four members.

[Sir Wilfrid Laurier.]

Mr. BORDEN: The observations of my right hon. friend, are, of course, entitled to very careful consideration. Perhaps this resolution might be permitted to pass at present, so that the Bill may be introduced and I will confer with my right hon. friend before taking any further action in regard to it.

Motion agreed to, and the House went into Committee, Mr. Blondin in the Chair.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. BORDEN thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 184, respecting the representation of the province of British Columbia in the Senate.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

JUVENILE DELINQUENTS ACT AMENDMENT.

On motion of Hon. C. J. Doherty (Minister of Justice) the House went into Committee on Bill No. 174, to amend the Juvenile Delinquents Act amendment, 1908, Mr. Blondin in the Chair.

On section 1—appointment of deputy judge:

Mr. LEMIEUX: What is the object of this amendment?

Mr. DOHERTY: The purpose is to empower the judge of the Juvenile Delinquents Court to appoint a deputy judge, the appointment to be made subject to the approval of the Attorney General of the province. It has been found in some of the large centres, and I may say particularly in the city of Montreal, that there are occasions when it is impossible for the judge to be in attendance day by day and do the work. At present in the absence of the judge, they have to call in a police magistrate. While these gentleman who are called in, no doubt, do their work very effectively, still it has been considered undesirable that a person not accustomed to the administration of the Juvenile Delinquents Act, which, as the hon. gentleman knows, looks rather to paternal correction than to the administration of criminal justice, should intervene in the operation of the court.

It seems desirable that some one accustomed to the system should be appointed to do the routine work. I think it is probable that in many instances clerical officers of the court will be appointed deputy judges. This legislation has been strongly urged by Judge Choquet, whom everybody will recognize as being what may be called an expert in the administration of this particular law. It has been suggested, however, that there may be cases where it may not be considered desirable by persons interested in some of these juvenile delinquents that the matter should be dealt with otherwise than by the judge himself. To meet that view, I move that the Act be amended by adding a second section, providing that:

No deputy judge shall hear and determine any case which a Juvenile Court committee desires should be reserved for hearing and determination by the judge of the Juvenile Court.

The Act provides for the constitution of a committee of citizens, acting gratuitously, to co-operate with the judge of the Juvenile Court and I know that in Montreal there are very active committees of that kind which take a live interest in the treatment of the children who are brought before these courts. It has been thought that, when in their judgment any case is deemed to be of such a nature that the judge himself should deal with it, they should have the right to make a request to that effect, and that that request should be granted.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I quite approve of this legislation. From what I can gather, the Juvenile Court in the city of Montreal has, under the able direction of Mr. Justice Choquet, been a great success. There is, however, an amendment which I would suggest to my hon. friend and in doing so I simply voice the opinion expressed by many friends of the Juvenile Court. It is that the proceedings of the court should be kept more private; that is to say, that they should not be made public through the press. Several organizations and religious bodies in Montreal have made representations to the Attorney General to this end. The Juvenile Court was created by Parliament because it was thought that young boys and young girls who fall in early life should be kept away from the older criminals and given a chance of reforming themselves through their receiving paternal treatment on the part of society, represented by the judge. On several occasions I have noticed that cases coming before the juvenile court were fully reported in the press. I am a friend of the press and a sort of journalist myself, but I think that quite enough news of this kind may be obtained from the other courts without the proceedings of the juvenile courts being published.

Mr. DOHERTY: If the hon. gentleman will look at the Act, he will observe that section 10 makes ample provision for what he suggests. It says:

The trials of children shall take place without publicity and separately and apart from the trials of other accused persons and at suitable times to be designated and appointed for that purpose.

Sub-section 2 provides that trials may be held in the private office of the judge or in any other private room in the court-house. Sub-section 3 is as follows:

No report of the trial or other disposition of a charge against a child, in which the name of the child or of its parent or guardian is disclosed, shall, without the special leave of the judge, be published in any newspaper or other publication.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I am aware of this, but, unfortunately, I can point to some instances where the reports were published, much against the view of those who take an interest in these courts.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

The House resumed at Three o'clock.

FARMERS BANK DEPOSITORS.

On motion of Hon. W. T. White (Minister of Finance), the House went into Committee to consider the following proposed resolution, Mr. Blondin in the Chair:

That it is expedient to provide that there may be paid and applied from and out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada, a sum not exceeding in the whole one million two hundred thousand dollars to pay to persons who were creditors for money on deposit in the Farmers Bank of Canada, the respective amounts standing at their credit in the books of the bank when the bank suspended payment.

Mr. OLIVER: Is there any understanding in regard to this Bill? I do not know what the intention of the leader of the Opposition is.

Mr. WHITE: I understand that, following the usual course, the principal discussion will take place upon the second reading. In the meantime, I shall be very glad to explain in a general way, if any gentleman desires it, the reasons for the Government's proposals.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Perhaps the minister might give a brief explanation.

Mr. WHITE: My hon. friend from Halifax having asked me to explain, I may say that the proposals of the Government embodied in this resolution are founded upon the report of Sir William Meredith, now Chief Justice of Ontario, who, it may be recalled, was in 1912 appointed a commissioner to investigate the affairs of the Farmers Bank of Canada from its incorporation. His report, we submit, establishes that the certificate of the Treasury Board, which, under the Bank Act, was necessary before the bank could open for business, was obtained by false and fraudulent representations. In this connection, I might call attention to the first paragraph of page 8 of the printed report of the commissioner, which reads as follows:

> My conclusion on this branch of the inquiry is that the Treasury Board was induced to give its certificate by false and fraudulent representations on the part of Travers, and that if the facts I have mentioned as to the way in which the $250,000 was made up had been disclosed, the certificate of the Treasury Board would not have been given.

I might also draw attention to section 3 of page 9 of the report, which reads as follows:

> It is true that, as Mr. Fielding stated in evidence, Travers, so far as he knew, was a reputable banker; but that was not, in my opinion, a sufficient reason for not having instituted an inquiry as to the matters which had been called to his attention. Such an inquiry could easily have been made, and the delay occasioned by it would have been inconsiderable, and such an inquiry would, undoubtedly, have resulted in the discovery of the manner in which the $100,000 had been raised and in the refusal of the Treasury Board to give the certificate.

The report of the commissioner further establishes negligence on the part of the Treasury Board in the issue of the certificate. Paragraph 6 of page 8 of the printed report of the commissioner is as follows:

> I do not suggest that the minister would have been justified because of the information conveyed to him in recommending that the certificate should not be granted, or that the Treasury Board because of it would not have been justified in refusing to grant it, but, having received the information, it was in my opinion incumbent on the Treasury Board to have investigated the charges that had been made before coming to a conclusion as to whether or not the certificate should be given.

Briefly, the inquiry referred to in this paragraph would have shown that Travers, the general manager, and wrecker of the bank, had made a false declaration to the Minister of Finance and to the Treasury Board. It would have shown that the provisional directors had made a five years' contract with Travers, and put him in control of the organization and business of the bank. I would call attention, in passing, to paragraph 3 on page 5 of the report:

> It appears clear from these agreements and resolutions that what was intended was to sell the charter of the bank to Travers and to put him in control of its organization and business, and that the provisional directors should abdicate their functions and act in accordance with his directions, and that is what followed.

If the certificates had not been granted the bank would not have commenced business; or if, afterwards, the provisions of the Bank Act had been strictly complied with the bank would not have started business with Travers as its general manager. because if the Treasury Board had made the inquiry which the commissioner finds it was incumbent upon them to have made, the character of Travers would have been disclosed. Of course, if the bank had not started business, or if, starting business it had been under prudent and honest management, the loss which followed would not have ensued to the depositors.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: After all, is not the finding of the commissioner that if the bank had not started there would not have been any loss?

Mr. WHITE: I do not think the commissioner explicitly finds that. I am arguing that if the certificate of the Treasury Board had not been given the bank could not have opened its doors for business.

Mr. MACLEAN: And thereby there would not have been any loss?

Mr. WHITE: Therefore, there could not have been any loss. If, on the other hand, at a later date, the provisions of the statute had been complied with, if $500,000 of bona fide subscriptions had been received, and $250,000 in cash paid thereon, as required by the Bank Act then, assuming this inquiry had been made it would have been impossible for Travers to have been placed at the head of the bank, because the inquiry, which the commissioner finds it was incumbent on the Treasury Board to have made, would have disclosed that Travers had perjured himself in the statutory declaration which he made to the Minister of Finance. But, by reason of the negligence of the Treasury Board, as established by the commissioner, the bank was allowed to start on its ill-fated career, and with Travers as general manager at its head—Travers, whom the Treasury Board would have discovered, if they had made the necessary inquiry, a man who had perjured himself in his declaration, and was wholly undependable and unreliable. That, in a general way, is the argument in favour of the Government proposal in this matter. Without elaborating further, because I understand the debate is to take place upon the second reading of the Bill, I shall place upon 'Hansard' a statement as to the position of the bank, furnished by the liquidator under date of May 1, 1914, just a few days ago. The statement is as follaws:

Toronto, May 1, 1914.

In the matter of the Farmers Bank of Canada —Approximate statement of affairs.

Liabilities.

Circulation, with interest, outstanding		$332,133 00
Deposits due to provincial Government		26,533 00
Deposits—
Savings and current	$1,134,425 00
Less, deposits after hours paid	389 20
		1,134,035 80
Drafts issued outstanding		23,690 00
Due to creditors for moneys collected		13,704 00
All other claims		20,754 00
		$1,550,849 80

Assets.

Deposits with Receiver General to secure circulation		$ 21,000 00
Bank premises and furniture—valued at		3,500 00
Mining properties—valued at		2,500 00
Real estate and mortgages held		40,286 00
Value of accounts and bills receivable—say		47,303 00
		$ 114,589 00
Double liability—estimated value of uncollected portion		120,779 00
Keeley mine—option price		150,000 00
		$ 385,368 00

In regard to the last named item, the Keeley mine, option price $150,000, I was advised by the liquidator on April 3 that he expected that the option would be exercised by the parties who hold it. It must be exercised within the next two months and, I understand, that $10,000 has been paid down for the option. I have been told by the liquidator that ore to the amount of $30,000 or $40,000 has been blocked out which will belong to the liquidator in the event of the option not being exercised. He seems to be of the opinion that the option will be exercised and that the mine will realize $150,000. Consequently, it has been included in the list of assets of the bank. From this statement, including all assets upon which, in the opinion of the liquidator, it may be hoped there will be realization, it will appear that the depositors both on savings and current accounts, will receive nothing. In addition to the liabilities mentioned here there will be the cost of the liquidation which will be fairly heavy. There will be the remuneration and disbursements of the liquidator and the legal costs.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: What will they get from the double liability?

Mr. WHITE: The liquidator estimates that the double liability will produce $120,779.

Mr. MACLEAN: Will the Government get the proceeds of the option on the Keeley mine if it is exercised by the option holder?

Mr. WHITE: The proceeds of the option on the Keeley mine, as I explained, are included in this statement of assets and with that included there will be nothing left for the depositors on savings and current accounts. In the Bill which I propose to introduce, the Government upon payment of the depositors, will be subrogated to their rights in the liquidation. In the event of there being any balance, that would belong to the Government and the Government would be entitled to the benefits of the subrogation.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Will the parties who have money on credit with the bank, though without having it actually on deposit, get any benefit from this legislation?

Mr. WHITE: The Bill covers only depositors on current and saving accounts; it does not cover those who hold drafts or money orders on the bank.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: I noticed in the press a statement to the effect that there was some agreement existing between the depositors and the shareholders as to the partition of any amount received from the Government under this Bill. Will the minister inform the House if he knows of any such payment, and if so, what is the nature of it?

Mr. WHITE: I have no authentic information respecting the agreement in question. I have seen in the press, no doubt the same reports that my hon. friend has seen, in which it has been stated that depositors, of their own motion, would contribute such an amount from the sums which were received from the Government as would relieve the shareholders from their double liability, but I have no official knowledge of it nor do I know whether all the depositors, or, if some, how many, have entered into such an agreement. My information is hearsay only, as, I understand, is the case with my hon. friend.

Mr. PROULX: The minister stated that the Government would be subrogated in their rights; will the Government exact the double liability from the shareholders?

Mr .WHITE: The Government would not be in a position to exact anything. The liquidation is under the Dominion Winding-up Act, and it would be the duty of the liquidator to carry out his liquidation under the provisions of that Act. That would include the question of double liability. After all the liabilities are paid and the costs and expenses of the liquidation provided for, in the event of there being a surplus which would be available for the depositors on current and savings account, the Government would be subrogated to their rights in respect of such surplus available for them. But I must state to my hon. friend that the question is not likely to arise, for the reason that the liquidator has included in this statement, which I have placed upon 'Hansard,' the sum of $120,779 as the estimated value of the uncollected portion of the double liability, and even with that amount included the assets would appear to me, on the statement insufficient to meet the liabilities other than those to depositors. So that, in so far as the subrogation clause is concerned, I do not suggest that the Government will receive anything in respect to it, so far as I can judge from the statement which has been furnished me by the liquidator.

In concluding my remarks, which have been general in character, and reserving what I have to say in greater detail to the second reading of the Bill, I desire to call attention to the remarks of the commissioner on page 10 of the printed report as to the conduct of the bank under Travers and the nature of the failure of the bank. He says:

> The subsequent management of the affairs of the bank was characterized by gross extravagance, recklessness, incompetency, dishonesty and fraud, and has resulted in the entire loss of the paid-up capital and the whole of the deposits, and that after allowing for all that can be extracted from the shareholders on their double liability a loss amounting to no less than $1,806,437, making a record unparalleled in the history of any bank in Canada, or, as far as I am aware, in any other country.

For the present, that is all I desire to say with regard to the resolution.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Does the minister intend to safeguard the depositors irrespective of the shareholders? It is known to a great many members of this House that copies of an agreement have been sent, I presume to all of the shareholders, asking that they sign them. This agreement provides in the main that if the depositors receive their deposits they will pay thirty per cent. of them for the benefit of the shareholders, so that there may be no double liability upon the shareholders. I do not know that any one in the constituency I represent is interested particularly in the matter, but I have several clients from adjoining counties who have consulted me on that point, and I know from others that copies of this agreement have been sent them, and also letters, threatening them that if they do not sign they will not get anything.

Mr. WHITE: I ask merely for information; is my hon. friend aware as to how far these agreements have been signed, because I am not?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No, but I know from some hon. members in this House that they have advised the depositors to sign, and I would like to know if it is the intention of the minister or of the Government to safeguard the depositors, even those who have signed these special agreements.

Mr. WHITE: How do you mean to safeguard them?

Mr. GUTHRIE: To see that the money is actually paid to the depositors, and we can do that by inserting a clause rendering null and void any agreements that have been heretofore signed.

Mr. WHITE: The Government's action in this matter is not dependent in any degree whatever on what depositors may or may not do with their money. As I stated to my hon. friend from Halifax, I have no knowledge, except of a hearsay character, as to the agreement or agreements which have been referred to. If the depositor receives payment from the Government of Canada, I suppose it will be his money to deal with as he sees fit. It is the intention that these cheques shall be sent to the depositors themselves, from the Finance Department, when this Bill becomes law. Further than that, I do not see how it is possible to fetter the action of the depositors when they receive the money. My hon. friend has suggested that a clause might be inserted in the Bill that would safeguard the depositors, but if the depositor desires to use his money in a certain way after he receives it, I do not see how we can restrict him in what would appear to me to be his undoubted right. A question would also arise as to any agreements which he may have signed—and I have no knowledge as to how many of such agreements have been signed—as the question of how far a person has bound himself by contract would appear to me to be concerned with property and civil rights, unless, of course, it came exclusively under the jurisdiction of the Dominion Parliament and we were dealing with it by legislation. If we discuss that here we will get into pretty deep legal waters.

Mr. GUTHRIE: If the cheque is sent to the individual depositor and not to any representative of the depositors, I think that will pretty well safeguard it.

Mr. WHITE: My idea is to send it direct.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: The legislation which the Government purposes founding upon the resolution we are now considering is, I think, very regrettable indeed, and is establishing an extremely bad precedent. Further, I believe this legislation is proposed in face of the pretty strongly and generally expressed opposition of the people of this country. However, as the minister has suggested that it is more fitting that the discussion in detail upon the proposed Bill be postponed until the second reading, I agree in that. I would like to ask the minister a question or two in respect to some returns I asked for the other day. In the first place, I asked for a return giving the names of the depositors with the amounts of their deposits. I understand that the return has been placed upon the table of the House, but I believe it is very voluminous. My reason for requesting that return was that I wanted to ascertain what was the average amount deposited by each depositor. I would like to inquire if it is possible for the minister to direct that a statement be prepared by his officials between now and the second reading of the Bill, showing the number of depositors with amounts between one dollar and $1,000, and between $1,000 and $2,000, and so on, deposited by each.

Mr. WHITE: I think I can give the hon. gentleman that information now.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: I would be glad if the hon. minister would put it on 'Hansard.' I want also to call the minister's attention to the fact that I asked for a return showing the amount of deposits at the end of each year beginning with 1906, the year of incorporation, and ending with 1910, the year the bank was suspended. If my hon. friend could give me that information now and place it upon 'Hansard,' I would be much obliged. Further, when the minister rises, I would like him to explain upon what principle the Government has decided to decline to meet the petition of the shareholders, and upon what principle he differentiates between the claims made by the shareholders and the claims made by the depositors.

Mr. W. T. WHITE: Answering my hon. friend in detail, I laid upon the table, I think in his absence, the other day, a list of all the depositors of the Farmers Bank, upon both current and savings accounts. I have also laid upon the table the return to which he has referred showing the amount of deposits on current and on savings accounts as of the close of the years, 1907, 1908, 1909 and 1910. My hon. friend has not seen that return, but it was laid upon the table within the last two or three days.

Mr. ROSS: Has my hon. friend laid upon the table a list of the shareholders; if not, will he do that also?

Mr. WHITE: I have not been asked for that, and I have not such a list. I think, however, I can obtain it and lay it upon the table later on. My hon. friend from Halifax has desired to obtain some information as to the number of the depositors, as to the amount of the average deposit and as to certain of the larger depositors. I have a memo as to that, because I asked for it myself from the liquidators, before my hon. friend made his request. The memorandum is as follows:

Total number of depositors	6,779
Total deposits, including deposit receipts	$ 1,134,036.00
Average deposit	167.00
Ten largest deposits:
Township of West Zorra, Embro	18,741.09
J. O. Hayam, Camden East	15,115.19
Township of Wormington, Millbank	10,674.96
Imperial Fire Insurance Company, Toronto	8,226.78
R. Harman, treasurer, Township of Scott, Zephyr	6,485.91
J. Sevana, Brucefield	6,347.13
A. Fraser, Embro	5,566.73
Corporation of Equesing, Norval	4,448.59
A. Lyons, Kerwood	3,747.24
Fort William Land Investment Company, Toronto	3,732.56
Deposit receipt, A. Armstrong, Belleville	$ 11,206.40

The deposits will run from a few cents up to these large amounts.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Does the memorandum proceed any further than my hon. friend has read?

Mr. WHITE: No. If my hon. friend would like to have the number of depositors havings deposits between the several thousands I can get that information, if he thinks it is essential for the discussion of the Bill.

Mr. MACLEAN: I would like to see it.

Mr. WHITE: I will endeavour to get the information.

Mr. ROSS: Is my hon. friend going to allow the depositors any interest on their deposits?

Mr. WHITE: I do not think the depositors will insist upon interest.

Mr. ROSS: The same principle will apply.

Mr. WHITE: You are speaking of the interest, not the principal.

My hon. friend from Halifax has asked as to how we differentiate the shareholders from the depositors. I think that is an easy differentiation. The shareholders of the bank are the proprietors of the bank; they elect their directors; the directors select or continue in office the manager and other officers having under their control the administration of the bank. We cannot see any principle upon which the Government is justified in affording relief to the shareholders, because, as I have said, the shareholders are the proprietors, the owners of the bank, carrying on its business subject to the provisions of the Bank Act. If their directors, or the agent or agents of their directors, are dishonest or, by incompetence, extravangance or fraud, dissipate the assets of the bank, the shareholders cannot be heard to say that they have any claim for relief.

Mr. LEMIEUX: The other day I put on the Order Paper a question which was answered by my hon. friend, and which was as follows:

> Does the Government intend to reimburse the depositors of La Banque Ville Marie, La Banque du Peuple, and La Banque de St. Jean, three banks that have failed during the last fifteen or sixteen years?

My hon. friend answered 'no.' Since getting that answer I have received some letters. The county of Rouville, which I represent, the county of St. Jean, and Iberville and in some degree the county of St. Hyacinthe have been very deeply mulcted by the failure of La Banque de St. Jean two years ago. Especially in the parishes of St. Césaire, St. Paul, Marieville, Ste. Angèle and L'Ange Gardien; many of my electors, many widows and many minors have been practically ruined by the failure of that bank.

As regards La Banque Ville Marie, I know perhaps more intimately the cause of the failure, because at that time I was practising law in Montreal; and I, with Mr. Greenshields K. C., happened to be retained as counsel to defend some of those who were arrested in connection with the failure of the bank. We all know that the president and the manager were sent to jail, and that many people were ruined as a consequence of the failure.

We also know the causes of the failure of La Banque du Peuple. The manager had to leave the country and died in Chicago, ruining a large number of people. La Banque du Peuple, after the bank of Montreal, is the oldest in Old Canada, and the oldest amongst the French-Canadian families had their fortunes more or less involved in that bank. My hon. friend will understand that I am sincere in asking this explanation. The people who have been affected by the failure of these banks will hardly understand why there is a differential treatment in their case. I might tell my hon. friend that the management of La Banque Ville Marie and La Banque de St. Jean, and perhaps in a less degree of La Banque du Peuple, was characterized by the same recklessness as is described in the report signed by Chief Justice Meredith. When I recall what took place after the failure of La Banque Ville Marie, and of what took place before the court subsequent to the failure of La Banque St. Jean, I say this language applies exactly to those cases:

> The subsequent management of the affairs of the bank was characterized by gross extravagance, recklessness, incompetency, dishonesty and fraud, and has resulted in the entire loss of the paid-up capital and the whole of the deposits.

I say this language applies exactly to the management of these other banks. And the people will not understand why different treatment is meted out to those who lost their money in these banks and those who lost their money in the Farmers' Bank. Now, my hon. friend should give an explanation to the country, to the unfortunate depositors and shareholders—or let me say depositors, for I understand that the shareholders are not to be reimbursed—he should give an explanation to the unfortunate depositors of these banks setting forth the reason why they are not treated in the same way as the depositors of the Farmers' Bank are treated. I ask that in all sincerity and all frankness, reserving any further criticism of the subject for the present.

Mr. W. T. WHITE: I observed that my hon. friend was not in his place during the earlier part of my remarks upon the resolution. I supplied then the reason for the Government's action in bringing in a measure to reimburse the depositors in the Farmers Bank. He has referred to the consequences of certain bank failures. We all agree that in this and in all other cases of bank failures, the results have been most tragic—I think that is the word he used—to those who have lost through the failure of these banks and by the incompetence, fraud, and dishonesty of those in charge of those banks' affairs. My hon. friend has fixed upon one part of the report of the commissioner, at page 10, which he quotes, and he says that these remarks of this commissioner would apply equally to all the banks which he has drawn to my attention. But I would point out to him that the Government is not taking this action because of the fact that the banks' administration was characterized by 'gross extravagance, recklessness, incompetency, dishonesty and fraud', to use the words of the commissioner—

Mr. LEMIEUX: The hon. gentleman himself quoted that.

Mr. WHITE: I quoted that passage to show the character of the administration of the bank, but I say that the Government's action is not on that ground, or rather not solely on that ground; but, as I pointed out at the outset of my remarks, is based upon the finding of the commissioner, now Chief Justice of Ontario, which, I submit, shows conclusively that the conditions prescribed by the Bank Act as precedent to the issuance of the certificate of the Treasury Board had not been complied with, that the certificate had been obtained by fraud and dishonesty, and that the Treasury Board had been negligent in issuing it. The basis of the Government's action is negligence on the part of the Treasury Board, and I will read for the benefit of my hon. friend the portion of the report that I read during my remarks at the beginning of this discussion. I read from the printed report of the commissioner, page 8, first paragraph:

> My conclusion on this branch of the inquiry is that the Treasury Board was induced to give its certificate by false and fraudulent representations on the part of Travers, and that if the facts I have mentioned as to the way in which the $250,000 was made up had been disclosed, the certificate of the Treasury Board would not have been given.

I read paragraph 6 on the same page:

> I do not suggest that the minister would have been justified because of the information conveyed to him in recommending that the certificate should not be granted, or that the Treasury Board because of it would not have been justified in refusing to grant it, but, having received the information—

That is to say, in reference to the fraud which was being practised by Travers.

> —it was in my opinion incumbent on the Treasury Board to have investigated the charges that had been made before coming to a conclusion as to whether or not the certificate should be given.

It was 'incumbent upon the Treasury Board.' That is it was the duty of the Treasury Board, which duty the Treasury Board did not fulfil. Now, breach of duty is negligence. Therefore, the basis of the Government's action is negligence on the part of the Treasury Board which issued the certificate after express notice received that there had been irregularity. If the Treasury Board had made the inquiry which the commissioner says it was incumbent upon them to make, the bank would never have opened its doors for business, or if the irregularities had been cured subsequently, the bank would never have opened its doors for business with Travers as general manager, because the inquiry which the commissioner says it was incumbent upon the Treasury Board to make would have disclosed the fact that Travers was a perjurer and a wholly unreliable person. And I pointed out that Travers had a five years' contract with the directors of the bank. The result was that the bank was launched—the provisions of the Bank Act not having been complied with—with Travers at its head and with consequent loss to the depositors. Now, my hon. friend says: How do you differentiate this case from the case of the other banks? It is not the policy of the Government, I repeat—it has never been the policy of any government in Canada—to reimburse depositors or other creditors of banks that have failed. Where I differentiate this case from the cases that have been drawn to my attention and all other cases is this,—that this Treasury certificate should not have been granted. That certificate was granted by the Treasury Board, and the Government is responsible for the action of the Treasury Board, at least morally; and the Treasury Board's action in this case was negligent, according to the findings of the commissioner. The hon. member for Rouville says that the people will not understand. But in view of the explanation I make, the people will understand. And I am aware that, now that I have made the explanation, he will help me to get the people to understand. If he will reply to the parties who have written to him, or if when he is upon the platform as he frequently is in dealing with political matters, he will say, that the Government's action in this case does not form a precedent, because in no other case has there been established negligence in the issue of the certificate, the people will understand and no misunderstanding will arise as to the action of the Government.

I repeat—although it would seem to me to be an unnecessary repetition—that the principle of the Government's granting relief in this case is the negligence of the Treasury Board, and the loss which resulted to the depositors of the Farmers' Bank as a natural consequence and outcome of that negligence.

Mr. DEVLIN: May I ask the minister if this sum is to be paid in lieu of damages?

Mr. WHITE: No one has contended that these depositors have a legal right against the Government which they could enforce by action. The Government's course is not based upon its legal liabilities, although I think on legal principles the Government is bound to reimburse these depositors. I think it can hardly be said, therefore, that payment by the Government is compensation for damages sustained by the depositors.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: This is not the occasion upon which to discuss the principles involved in this Bill; that discussion will come more properly on the second reading. But without waiting for that occasion, I must at once protest against the imputation—not only the imputation, but the charge—made by my hon. friend against Mr. Fielding: that he was guilty of negligence in issuing the certificate.

Mr. WHITE: I made it against the Treasury Board, on the finding of the commissioner.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: The Treasury Board was presided over by the Minister of Finance of the day; therefore the expression of my hon. friend the present Minister of Finance, no matter in what language it may be clothed, implies—not only implies, but asserts—that his predecessor in office was negligent of the duties incumbent upon him. I protest against the language of the Minister of Finance and say that he has no reason for making such a grave assertion against a man of Mr. Fielding's character. I call the attention of the committee and of my hon. friend especially to the language of Mr. Justice Meredith, page 9 of the report:

> There is, in my opinion, no ground for supposing that any improper influence was used to induce the Treasury Board to give the certificate or to induce the Minister of Finance to recommend the granting of it, and the most that can properly be charged against the Department of Finance or the Treasury Board is an error of judgment.

Error of judgment and negligence are two different things. Error of judgment cannot be called negligence of duty; it is an error in itself. But when you imply negligence, you imply that the party alleged to be guilty of that negligence did something which should not have been done and could not have been done without violating the moral law.

Mr. WHITE: Oh, no, not the moral law.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I say that a man who is guilty of negligence has violated the moral law, and a violation of the moral law is, in my opinion, a fault, if not a crime. But nothing of the kind can be charged against Mr. Fielding. The judge's finding upon this matter is that Mr. Fielding would have been better advised if he had prosecuted his inquiry more than he did; that is all. Therefore the imputation which my hon. friend wishes to make does not apply in this case. If there was negligence on the part of Mr. Fielding the question of how far the Government would be responsible would be a very different question; the Government would be responsible morally, if not otherwise. If a minister of the Crown has made an error of judgment, it is simply a question of his having made a mistake which has no legal or moral consequences. Of course, there may have been political consequences. It is always a serious charge that there has been an error of judgment, but we are all liable to err, and, after all, if the only charge that can be made against a minister of the Crown who has been fifteen years in office is that upon a certain occasion he committed an error of judgment, the charge is but a minor one. As I have said, this present occasion is not the time to discuss the Bill, but I say it is not fair to Mr. Fielding to say that he has been guilty of negligence. The charge against him is one of error in judgment; let that pass until we come to the second reading of the Bill.

With regard to the matter which has been brought up by the hon. member for South Wellington—the assignment of claims on the part of depositors—the hon. Minister of Finance said that the money was to be paid to the depositors and that what they should do with their own money was their own business, not his. I agree with that, but at the same time there is another aspect of this case which must receive consideration. I have myself received a letter from an elderly lady telling me that she was almost forced to make an assignment of her claim to the shareholders. While the minister has nothing to do with that, as I do not think it can be provided against in the Bill, I think it would be well that it should be understood that no assignment of claim, whether partial or total, will be encouraged by the department, but that cheques shall be issued to the depositors. No assignment of claim should be admitted; if that is understood I shall be satisfied.

I have a question to ask my hon. friend with regard to the Keeley mine.

4 p.m. Travers assigned that mine property which is alleged to be of the value of $150,000. Mining property is of a very unstable character; its value may be very high to-day and very low to-morrow. Upon what basis is the optional price put at $150,000?

Mr. W. T. WHITE: I have no information except the statement of the liquidator that an option for $150,000 has been given; that it is to be exercised within the next two months and that it is his view that it will probably be exercised.

I desire to take exception to the assertion of my right hon. friend that I have imputed, by using the term negligence, moral culpability to my predecessor in office. I call the committee to witness that I have upon every occasion dealt as fairly and justly as I believe it is possible for a man to deal with my predecessor and his course in this House—

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Hear, hear.

Mr. WHITE: Because he is not here to defend himself. I always bear in mind the saying of Lord Bacon, that you should be tender to the memory of your predecessor because some day you may be a predecessor yourself. It may be that as to the question of negligence there is a distinction between the French law and the English law, but I may point out to my hon. friend—and there is not an English lawyer in the House who will not support me in the opinion which I now express—that an error of judgment may constitute negligence and that negligence does not necessarily imply moral culpability of any kind or nature whatsoever. For example, at common law a man may be negligent who miscalculates distance upon the street in driving his conveyance, if an accident results, causing damage. A man is bound to exercise the care which an ordinary man would exercise in his conduct towards his fellowmen. A man, by mere error of judgment involving no suggestion of moral obliquity, may become responsible at common law for negligence and its consequences. I did not mention, except in so far as I read it from the report of the commissioner, the name of my predecessor, but, of course, I am advancing to the committee the reasons for this legislation and I must advance them as they exist. The reasons for this legislation are that, according to the finding of Sir William Meredith, the commissioner, the Treasury Board did not do what he says it was incumbent upon the Treasury Board to have done. I lay it down as a principle of law which cannot be controverted that if it is incumbent upon an individual or public body to do something and that individual or public body does not discharge that duty which it is incumbent upon him or them to discharge, that constitutes negligence. I have stated that no legal rights accrue to the depositors against the Government, but I was seeking to justify—and I think I have justified—the action of the Government on the analogy of legal principle, and, therefore, it was perfectly proper for me—and I do not think my course can be animadverted upon at all—to establish, from the finding of the commissioner, that the Treasury Board had been negligent in the issue of the certificate. I have said, and I repeat, that that does not by any means mean that my predecessor in office was guilty of any moral lapse or obliquity in the discharge of his duties as chairman of that board. My hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Maclean) has quoted a paragraph from the report. I may say that the commissioner is there dealing with the question of whether money had been used by Travers to procure the issue of the certificate. It had been suggested that there was some impropriety connected with the issue of the certificate; that Travers had used money to purchase, so to speak, the certificate, and it was in dealing with that aspect of the case that the commissioner made the remarks my hon. friend has quoted. The commissioner says:

> There is, in my opinion, no ground for supposing that any improper influence was used to induce the Treasury Board to give the certificate—

I have not for a moment suggested that there was.

> —or to induce the Minister of Finance to recommend the granting of it,—

I have never suggested that it was so used.

> —and the most that can properly be charged against the Department of Finance or the Treasury Board is an error of judgment.

I submit that that error of judgment under the circumstances was negligence, or what we call negligence at the English common law—failure, either through lack of judgment or otherwise, to discharge the duty which the commissioner finds it was incumbent upon them to discharge.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Are you going to proceed legally on this question?

Mr. WHITE: No, because, as I have said, the negligence cannot be established as against the Crown, or as against a minister of the Crown acting in his capacity as minister. What I have sought to do is to show that on legal analogy the action of the Government is justifiable by reason of the fact that the negligence to which I have referred on the part of the Treasury Board was the primary and original cause of the loss of this money to the depositors.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Do you say that was the finding of the commissioner? Because he finds to the contrary.

Mr. WHITE: Of course, we knew before this report was issued that it was fraud on the part of Travers, and the recklessness and extravagance of his management, that brought this loss to the depositors of the bank; but my argument is this: if the Treasury Board had done what they should have done—in other words if they had not been negligent—then the character of Travers would have been discovered, the certificate would not have been issued, the bank would not have started, and there would have been no loss to the depositors.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: If a man was never born he would never sin.

Mr. WHITE: No certificate, no bank and no Travers; no bank or no Travers, no loss to depositors. That is the chain.

Mr. MACLEAN: I think the commissioner meant to ridicule that position.

Mr. WHITE: I do not think he made any attempt to ridicule that position. The commissioner says in the concluding portion of his report:

> Notwithstanding the irregularities on the part of Travers and his misconduct in connection with the application for the certificate, which I have mentioned, the evidence satisfies me that if the bank had been prudently and honestly managed there is no reason why it should not have succeeded.

Mr. CARVELL: Why blame Mr. Fielding?

Mr. WHITE: I agree with that. It is perfectly obvious that if the bank had been honestly managed there would have been no loss.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: Is the Government not attempting to pay a political obligation? It appears that way to me, because the minister seems driven very hard to invoke some principle on which to base this legislation. The commissioner expressly finds that the failure of this bank and the losses sustained by depositors were due to the negligent and criminal mismanagement of that institution by Travers. I think there is no sound reason for this legislation on that ground, and I inquire if it is not really an attempt on the part of the Government to liquidate by legislation a political obligation.

Mr. WHITE: I can only say in answer to my hon. friend that I do not know of any political obligation that the Government has to discharge, and it might be that my hon. friend from Middlesex (Mr. Ross) could answer that question better than I can. I have given the grounds for the Government's action and, I think, strong and cogent reasons justifying this measure of relief to the depositors.

Mr. ROSS: As far as I am personally concerned, I have no political obligations to discharge in connection with the Farmers Bank, and in that regard I am probably in a more enviable position than the minister's colleagues. It seems to me that either the minister's argument goes too far, or that his Bill is not going far enough. If, as he says, the reason for this relief being given is that there was negligence on the part of the Finance Minister and the Treasury Board in the initial stages, that negligence caused loss to the shareholders as well as to the depositors, and if the basis is as he says, he should go further and help the shareholders as well as the depositors. Either his reasoning is not good, or his assistance to those who lost in the Farmers Bank does not go far enough. I think that what the hon. member for Halifax has suggested is probably correct, that the Government by this expenditure of $1,200,000 is trying to discharge some political obligations with which they have encumbered themselves. I do not believe that the Finance Minister, in his heart, believes that this is a good principle to establish. Speaking for myself, I think this is an exceptional case, and I do not think it should be allowed to become a precedent in connection with the banking affairs of this country. I may say plainly to the House that considering the greatness of the disaster in Ontario through the failure of the Farmers Bank I, personally, am in favour of repaying the depositors for two reasons, and probably more: firstly, because the injury to the farmers of this country is so widespread and deeply felt; and secondly, because as a matter of principle—I know the minister does not agree with me in this—the depositors of every chartered bank in this country should be protected. I think the Government should compel the banks themselves to give this protection, and because they have not done so is sufficient reason for the minister assisting the Farmers Bank depositors at any rate. But I think the Government should go farther, and if the minister's argument is good, and in some way assist the shareholders also. If the minister did that—as has been agreed upon between the depositors and shareholders—it would be perfectly right so far as I can see, in this very exceptional case, which however, by proper legislation being enacted as I advocated last session should not be allowed to become nor could it become a precedent.

We had no branch of the Farmers Bank in my riding but some of the depositors did live in that riding, and I know depositors and shareholders who have suffered. They were both misled by the same fraud, misrepresentation and dishonesty. When the minister puts his proposed assistance upon the ground that he has, it is the duty of the Government to go farther than they have done or put their assistance upon some other ground.

Mr. LEMIEUX: In view of what has been said by my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. White), would he not consider an application on behalf of the depositors of La Banque Ville Marie, La Banque du Peuple and La Banque St. Jean? I think that when my hon. friend is made aware of the facts in connection with the failure of these banks he will find that representations were made to the officers of the Finance Department at the time that the aforesaid banks were mismanaged. The people have it in their heads that if the officers of the Finance Department had been more diligent perhaps the failures might have been averted. I would like to have an answer from my hon. friend whether in view of this legislation, in view of the fact that the Farmers Bank depositors are compensated, he will consider my application. Some years ago the then hon. member for Jacques Cartier, Mr. Monk, —and my right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Mr. Borden) will remember it—took very strong ground in this House that the depositors in La Banque du Peuple should be recouped their losses. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance says that this legislation is based on the fact that an error of judgment was committed by the Treasury Board. I have always been educated under the British constitutional system to the notion that the King could do no wrong. Can we not compare the action taken by my hon. friend in so far as the Treasury Board is concerned with the action which might be taken by the Minister of Justice, for instance in a case of miscarriage of justice? My hon. friend contends that he does not recoup the depositors of the Farmers Bank because of the crookedness, extravagance or perversity of Travers and his associates but because forsooth, an error of judgment was committed by the Treasury Board. Now, Sir, is not the Government also responsible for the administration of justice? The appointment of judges is made by the Minister of Justice after a recommendation is brought before Council. You appoint a judge, say in my district; he is supposed to be well versed in the law, honest and sober. He goes on the Bench, a case is brought before him, and, as a result of his inebriety, or his dishonesty, or ignorance of the law, he ruins the litigant coming before him—would not the litigant in that case be as much entitled, as a result of your error of judgment in appointing that judge, to receive compensation from the Government as the depositors of the Farmers Bank are to-day? The unfortunate appointment was made by the Government of a man supposed to be well versed in the law and to be honest, and yet the momen' he sits on the Bench he becomes dishonest, displays ignorance of the law, and as a consequence he ruins the litigants by his judgments—I ask again have not the litigants recourse against the Government? If we must accept the dictum of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance in the case of the Farmers Bank depositors the ruined litigants would have logically the same recourse. I think that this legislation, as my hon. friend from Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) stated a moment ago, creates a grave precedent, and if my hon. friend refers to the conservative press of the country—and when I use the word 'conservative' I apply it not only to the press of the Conservative persuasion, but, in its proper and wider sense—he will find that this legislation is very much deplored indeed. In my judgment, if the Government must reimburse the Farmers Bank depositors, the depositors of the Banque du Peuple, the Banque Ville Marie and La Banque St. Jean—my electors—should receive similar treatment, and for my part, I will try and see that they agitate to get justice the same as the Farmers Bank depositors have.

[Mr. Lemieux.]

Mr. NICKLE: My understanding was that there was to be no debate on this subject this afternoon and I did not come prepared to speak with regard to the question. But as the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross) has stated quite clearly that he is in favour of this proposition, I think it is only fair perhaps that I should state that I am equally strong against it. I may have some difficulty possibly in exactly placing before the House why I am not in favour of this legislation. In the first place, I cannot follow the logic of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. White). He lays down as a fundamental principal that the ground of negligence is that upon which he goes and he states that one of the fundamental principles of the law negligence is that the primary negligence is the basis of the action. That is not my understanding of the principle of negligence in law. Responsibility results not because there was negligence primarily, but when the negligence complained of was the efficient or proximate cause of the loss. In this particular case surely the commissioner in his finding makes that abundantly clear. He says:

> Notwithstanding the irregularities on the part of Travers and his misconduct in connection with the application for the certificate, which I have mentioned, the evidence satisfies me that if the bank had been prudently and honestly managed there is no reason why it should not have succeeded. The promissory notes that had been given by subscribers were for the most part good and were subsequently paid, and while it is true that if the certificate of the Treasury Board had not been granted the money of the shareholders and depositors would not have been lost—

If there had never been a Government and never been a bank certainly the money would not have been lost. The commissioner goes on to say:

> The efficient cause of that loss was the recklessness and fraud of those entrusted with the management of the bank, and not the granting of the certificate.

In the face of that finding it seems to me that the Government is establishing a most obnoxious and pernicious principle in giving effect to this legislation. I was one of those who, last year, fought most strenuously in the Banking and Commerce Committee for a more close and efficient supervision of banking affairs by the Government through the regulation of inspectors. After a few weeks of strenuous battling in that committee the Minister of Finance finally agreed that the list of auditors named by the bank should be submitted to his department for its imprimatur or approval before appointment. That is the law to-day. If this House adopts the principle that an error of judgment on the part of an official of the Government obligates the Government to make good to the depositors of a bank any loss they may suffer from that error of judgment, it means that if there are failures in the future, and no doubt they will occur in the future, and if it can be shown that the integrity or capacity of any auditor was drawn to the attention of the Department of Finance and that through oversight, carelessness, or error in judgment, the Department of Finance permitted that man to be named as an auditor, ipso facto, this country becomes liable to recoup the depositors. I say that is a most unfortunate precedent to establish.

Then, we are running into another difficulty. If recklessness and fraud was the efficient cause that led to the failure of this bank, I cannot see how we can make a distinction between a French-Canadian bank and an Ontario bank. What is law for Ontario—

Mr. LEMIEUX: Will my hon. friend allow me; the Ville-Marie bank, let it be well understood, because we have enough sins of our own to answer for, was not a French-Canadian bank. It had a French-Canadian name only.

Mr. NICKLE: Then let me put it generally, and speaking generally I say that I do not believe there should be one law for one part of the country and another law for another part of the country, in matters of this sort.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Although the Ville-Marie bank was not a French-Canadian bank, the French-Canadian people lost heavily.

Mr. NICKLE: One of my friends beside me says that there is not one law for one part of the country and another law for another part of the country. My opinion is that this is making one law in one case and none in another. That may be a question of judgment, and I am only giving my judgment this afternoon. Through a very peculiar coincidence I happen to hold two shares in the Farmers Bank, which, of course, was a mere trifle, but the most careful inquiry I had been able to make when that bank went into liquidation convinced me that the loss was all due to Travers' irregularities and not to any irregularity on the part of the Government; and, that while the ex-Minister of Finance was probably somewhat careless in the granting of the certificate, yet, after that certificate was issued, if the management of the bank had been honest and proper, there would not have been any loss, but the bank would have been a success. In my judgment, the efficient and proximate cause of the failure was not the granting of the certificate but the irregularity and criminal conduct of the management.

Mr. BURNHAM: Some of these gentlemen, Mr. Chairman, are going too far afield. If you look at what occurred immediately after the certificate was given, you will find out who was liable and who was not. Where the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Nickle) is at fault is that he does not distinguish between negligence and gross negligence. It is quite true that ordinary common negligence may not imply responsibility, but gross negligence is an entirely different thing, and I contend that in this case there certainly was very gross negligence.

Mr. GAUVREAU: How do you know?

Mr. BURNHAM: I am stating my case, and if the hon. gentleman will wait I will tell him more. Therefore, we have to deal with the question of gross negligence. Now, then, is the extraordinary principle to be laid down that a Government is above all liability, that it may blunder, that it may do the most stupid things, that it may in fact do criminal things, and yet not be responsible?

Mr. NICKLE: Is it not correct in law to say that a petition of right could issue to permit the trial of the responsibility of a government for the negligence of an official?

Mr. BURNHAM: I think it is, but that is entirely contrary to what the hon. gentleman has just said. According to my understanding there can be no question in the mind of the ordinary citizen that the Government that undertakes to do a thing, by the very fact that it has undertaken to do it—incurs a co-relative responsibility, if it undertakes to issue a certificate. If it states that a bank can go on without a certificate, well and good, but where the Government says that a bank cannot go on without a certificate and prescribes the rules for the issuance of that certificate, there is beyond all question a responsibility upon the Government to see that no gross negligence is committed. To say that the efficient cause is subsequent to the issuance of a certificate, is to say that had a thief who stole the money and run been caught as he might have been caught as he ran through the streets, the loss would not have occurred. But that is an entirely different proposition.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: When did the hon. gentleman contend that this gross negligence took place? Was it during the administration of the bank, after it commenced business, or before?

Mr. BURNHAM: It certainly was before the certificate had issued. As I understand the evidence, it was pointed out very clearly that a full and complete warning was given to the people who had the power to issue the certificate, but notwithstanding that fact, when they should have been alert to catch every sound of warning, especially in such an affair as this, they absolutely glossed it all over and issued a certificate, and it was because they issued that certificate and because of the right of the bank to transact business that the people of this country put their money in the bank on the assurance that the Government was transacting its business properly, and so lost their money. It had nothing whatever to do with Travers; it had nothing whatever to do with the management of the bank; the fact is that because the certificate had been granted the people put their money in the bank.

Mr. LEMIEUX: What about the shareholders?

Mr. BURNHAM: They of course are supposed to look into the management of the bank themselves. They are one with Travers, in my opinion, and whilst they cannot be charged with criminal negligence, they certainly ought to be charged with gross negligence, and ought not to get anything at all. They have been mulcted to the extent of their double liability, and quite properly so. That is my opinion upon that. As to French-Canadian banks, are we to be threatened? I say that whether they are French-Canadian banks or not, if the money is stolen from the people under the circumstances of this case, they should get their money.

An hon. MEMBER: Why not?

Mr. BURNHAM: Certainly, why not. But the idea set out by prominent gentlemen sitting in this House, that if other institutions are not recouped, nothing shall be done for the people who suffered in this case, is the most monstrous doctrine I have ever heard. And the converse is true: if right is done in this case, it must be done in every case; if these other banks, on investigation, are proven to be in the same position as this bank, then pay the people their money. But do not let it go abroad that the poor people of this country, relying on the certificate of a Government, may put their money on deposit in a bank and are to have no reliance on the Government and no recourse when their money is taken from them. Are we to understand that a Government may be grossly negligent, yes, even inhumanly negligent, and still escape liability? And yet that is the doctrine that is laid down here to-day by some hon. gentlemen.

Mr. HUGH CLARK: If the debate is to go on at this stage, I do not see why I should not make a few observations. I quite approve of the stand taken by my hon. friend from Middlesex (Mr. Ross), but I quite disapprove of his reason for taking that stand. I do not think there could be any excuse for this Government, or for any government, coming to the aid of any bank for the reason that that bank had been improperly managed, or that there has been subsequent loss through the mismanagement, or incompetency, or fraud, or anything else of that sort. I would not support this Government if they tried to recompense the depositors for that reason. I support the Government for the reason given by the Minister of Finance, namely, that the certificate was wrongfully obtained, and that the initial mistake was made by the late Government in granting the certificate. Any person who has read the evidence can come to no other conclusion than that there was absolute lack of care and caution on the part of the Treasury Board. That can be stated without singling out any individual, and particularly the late Minister of Finance. To say that there was no negligence is to overlook the fact that the ex-Minister of Finance himself was warned as to the process by which the subscriptions were being received by Mr. Travers and others. And, as to there being political reasons for this action, there are no political reasons that do not apply to both parties. Hon. gentlemen who heard read the list of names of the depositors in that bank, will remember that the very first reference was to the township of Zorra, represented by my hon. friend from North Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt). A large number were in the constituency represented by my hon. friend from West Middlesex (Mr. Ross).

Mr. PROULX: Does the hon. member mean to say that the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) made the promise?

Mr. CLARK: No. Nor did I.

Mr. ROSS: There was not a large number mentioned from my riding; there was not one single name.

Mr. CLARK: As far as differentiating between the shareholders and the depositors is concerned, I do not think for one minute that the shareholders should be considered at all. A shareholder is a man who enters into a business of that sort as an investor. He knows what he is doing; he becomes a proprietor of the bank; he knows that there is a double liability. He knows the hazard of his venture, because he makes an investment on which there is a double liability; but the depositor, in almost every case when he deposits his money in a chartered bank, believes he is depositing it there for safekeeping, and that the stability of this country is behind the bank. At any rate, he used to believe that, before the failure of the Farmers Bank. I cannot see where my hon. friend (Mr. Lemieux) finds any logic whatever in making a parallel between this and a judgment given by a judge which may ruin a litigant, although the judge may have been improperly appointed by this Government. In that case a litigant has more than one appeal against the judgment of that particular judge. In any event it is not a parallel case. I do not approve of my hon. friend the member for Kingston (Mr. Nickle) stating that this is a pernicious and obnoxious precedent. It is not a precedent for such cases as advanced by my hon. friend the member for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux). No person has ever alleged that any of these banks obtained their certificates through fraudulent means. No person has ever contended that the certificates granted to these banks were obtained from the Minister of Finance or the Treasury Board after the Treasury Board had been warned that wrongful practices were being resorted to for the purpose of procuring deposits. It will be a precedent, and I hope that it will be observed as a precedent, if the Minister of Finance of the present day or of any future time shall issue a certificate to a number of men who are organizing a bank and who have obtained a charter or a certificate to do business for that bank in the same way that Mr. Travers and others did in connection with the Farmers Bank.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. W. T. White thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 185, for the relief of the depositors of the Farmers Bank of Canada.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

PENSION TO GUARD'S WIDOW.

Hon. C. J. Doherty (Minister of Justice) moved second reading of Bill No. 183, to provide for the payment of a yearly allowance to Mrs. Alice Joynson, widow of the late J. H. Joynson, a guard in the British Columbia penitentiary.

Mr. OLIVER: Perhaps the minister will make a very short statement of the occasion, and there may be no discussion.

Mr. DOHERTY: The matter was discussed somewhat fully when the resolution on which the Bill is based was before the House. The purpose is to provide an annuity for the lady mentioned who is the widow of a man who was a guard in the British Columbia penitentiary. Something over a year ago, this man was killed in endeavouring to prevent the escape from the penitentiary of two very desperate criminals. In their endeavour to escape, one of the criminals was killed and, very unfortunately, this man Joynson was also killed. I may say that his conduct on the occasion showed what I think may be properly described as conspicuous bravery. These two desperate men had succeeded, in the first place, in depriving one of the guards of the penitentiary, who was in immediate supervision over them, of his revolver, and then, by threatening other guards as they passed through different portions of the penitentiary grounds with this revolver, they succeeded in possessing themselves of the revolvers of those guards too. They had reached the final gates which separated them from liberty and were threatening the guards upon the wall when this man Joynson came to the rescue and at the risk, and, as it proved, at the price of his own life, intervened to prevent the escape. He has left a widow who has some small children and who is not in a position to maintain herself. Therefore we propose to give her a small annuity of $500 a year, the money to be paid to her monthly.

Mr. LEMIEUX: In connection with this Bill, as I unintentionally did an injustice to my hon. friend the Postmaster General the other day in referring to the Oka case, I wish to state most emphatically that I read this morning the fourth volume of the debates of 1911-12, after the explanation made by my hon. friend, and he is right in his explanation. When we discussed that case in the House, the hon. member for Two Mountains (Mr. Ethier) asked that certain provision be made for the widow and that the mail contract be given to her. I see by 'Hansard' that my hon. friend said at the time that it was not possible to give the contract, because the children were too young and the people objected to that contract being handed to minors. He said, however, at that time that he would see at the next session or at the earliest opportunity—it was in the dying days of the session—that a certain amount would be paid to the widow as a gratuity, and this morning I saw the cheque. I beg to apologize to the hon. minister for making the statement I did.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and the House went into Committee thereon, Mr. Blondin in the chair.

On section 1—pension for Mrs. Joynson:

Mr. OLIVER: On what principle did the hon. gentleman fix the compensation in this case? Is this a certain proportion of the salary of the deceased?

Mr. DOHERTY: The man was earning at the time $700 a year. We allowed Mrs. Joynson last year the salary for that year. Now, we are allowing $500. Perhaps it is a little difficult to say that there is any principle upon which we fixed it, save that it may be said that this family were living on $700, and there was the man himself to maintain. We know that less than $500 would not be worth while, and that this sum will at least help this woman and her children.

Mr. OLIVER: I endorse what the minister has done in this matter; and should such an unfortunate case arise in the future, I hope there would be no hesitation in making proportionately liberal provision for the surviving dependents, and I would much rather the error should be on the side of liberality than on the side of economy.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

[Mr. Doherty.]

INDIAN ACT AMENDMENT.

House again in Committee on Bill No. 114, to amend the Indian Act.—Mr. Roche. Mr. Blondin in the Chair.

On section 1—power to establish industrial schools, etc. :

Mr. ROCHE: When this Bill was before the House on the last occasion when I was present, it was pointed out that this section might be interpreted to be rather wider than it was intended by the department to be. It was stated that any school to which was committed an Indian child might be considered an industrial school within the meaning of this section. That was not the design. In accordance with the suggestion made on that occasion by the hon. member for Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Carvell), I beg to move the following in lieu of that section:

The Governor in Council may establish an industrial school or a boarding school for Indians, or may declare any school or institution where children are provided with board and lodging as well as instruction and with the managing authorities of which the superintendent general has made an agreement for the admission of an Indian child or children and for the inspection of the school or institution, to be an industrial school or boarding school for the purpose of this or the next following section.

This provides that where an arrangement has been made between the superintendent general and the authorities of the school, that is, where it is mutually agreeable, it can be done.

Mr. CARVELL: That meets the objection, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. OLIVER: I would like to have it clearer that this agreement spoken of is not merely an agreement as to the maintenance and control of that child, but is an agreement as to the measure of control of the school by the Government in consideration of the aid given.

Mr. ROCHE: Yes, that is the idea.

Mr. OLIVER: That is the purport of the agreement ?

Mr. ROCHE: Yes.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 2—taking land for schools:

Mr. OLIVER: When this section was up the other night, I criticised it on the ground that it seemed to me that the occasion was trifling as a warrant for interference with the rights of the Indian to his land. I think that possibly some isolated instance has occurred, and it is proposed to cure the difficulty by legislation. But I think it would be better to allow the individual difficulty to remain rather than to interfere by legislation with the ownership of land by the Indian. There is nothing upon which the Indians are quite so touchy as the ownership of land, and it is not well to interfere with them in any way unless the circumstances make it unavoidable.

Mr. ROCHE: This is because of a certain difficulty having arisen where land was needed and was refused by the Indian. Of course, it is not intended that the land should be taken without compensation. We are not very particular about securing this power, but we think that in case of similar difficulty arising it is better that this should be passed rather than see a school blocked.

Section agreed to.

On section 4—withdrawal of half-breed from treaty; status of wife:

Mr. OLIVER: When this section was under consideration the other night, I mentioned the fact that under recent conditions—I am not sure whether under present conditions or not—half-breed scrip is issued to members of bands who withdraw from those bands. If there is no issue of scrip, if that absolutely does not exist, the objection I make does not hold. But if half-breed scrip is issued to members of bands who withdraw from those bands, then the effect of this section would be to double the object of the scrip speculator in securing the withdrawal of the members from the band by automatically withdrawing the wife with the husband. Either the woman would be entitled to the scrip or she would lose the benefit of being in the band. Either one or other would be detrimental to the interest of the half-breeds.

Mr. ROCHE: I have read the hon. member's criticism on this point. It is not the intention to issue any further scrip. The issue of scrip has ceased, and will not be made in the future.

Mr. OLIVER: How long is it since any scrip has been issued?

Mr. ROCHE: None has been issued within the last two or three years.

Section agreed to.

On section 6—compulsory, etc., sale of reserve:

Mr. LEMIEUX: Has the hon. minister considered the protest of the Caughnawaga Indians on this subject?

Mr. ROCHE: I think the Caughnawaga Indians are unnecessarily alarmed.

Mr. LEMIEUX: What is the effect of the clause?

Mr. ROCHE: We have already an amendment, by which there is a portion of a reserve that is required for some public purpose, adjacent to a city or town of 8,000 population, and where the Indians refuse to surrender and are absolutely preventing the development of that portion of the country, provision was taken by my predecessor to have a reference to a judge of the Exchequer Court for inquiry and report to the Governor in Council, which report is placed before Parliament and must be passed upon by Parliament before the Governor in Council can act. The Act is being further amended by doing away with the limitation to cities and towns of a population of 8,000 or more, so that wherever lands are required for similar purposes, they shall, where the indians refuse to surrender, be dealt with in a similar way. There is no design upon the Caughnawaga reserve; the amendment introduced in 1911 has never been called into requisition and this one may never be called into requisition. There is no danger of the Caughnawagans losing their reserve.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I am glad to accept the word of my hon. friend in that regard. The Chief of the Caughnawaga band wrote the letter which I read the other day in the House, but after my hon. friend's assurance that they need not be nervous about any sinister design on his part, I suppose they will now be satisfied.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: What is the procedure in the obtaining of portions of Indian reserves not in or near a town, for industrial purposes? Is it complicated?

Mr. ROCHE: In such cases we secure a surrender from the Indians.

Mr. MACLEAN: What is the procedure?

Mr. ROCHE: We send one of our officials to the reserve, and he calls a meeting of the band and places the proposition before them. A vote is secured, and all that is necessary is the assent of the majority of the band. No protracted time is required and there is no complication.

Mr. MACLEAN: Is conveyance made by the chief of the Indian tribe?

Mr. ROCHE: Yes.

Mr. MARCIL: The rumour is prevalent that an effort is to be made to take the Restigouche reserve, or a large portion of it, for the establishment of a mill. The reserve is opposite the town of Campbellton, in the province of New Brunswick. In this case, it is not the town but some industrial corporation that is asking for further taking over of the reserve.

Mr. ROCHE: I understand that in the past there have been some negotiations between the owners or proprietors of the proposed mill and the Indians, but the Indians have thus far refused to surrender.

Mr. MARCIL: It would seem that under this section the company can get the reserve by going to the Exchequer Court.

Mr. ROCHE: Not unless the proposed establishment is considered by the Exchequer Court to be a public utility.

Mr. MARCIL: The Baie des Chaleurs Milling Company are located on the reserve at the present time. There is a rumour that these people are looking for a site for a pulp mill along the Restigouche river and that they have taken up several options. It is openly stated that they are going to locate on this reserve and I would like to know from the minister whether any application has been received in this regard.

Mr. ROCHE: It is true that so far as the mill is concerned they have an old lease from the Indian Department, but it would be impossible for that company to step in and take away any portion of the reserve without the consent of the Indians, from whom they must secure formal surrender. This provision distinctly states that the matter shall be referred to the Exchequer Court of Canada for inquiry and report as to whether the taking over of any portion of the reserve is expedient and as to whether the interests of the public and of the Indians of the band will thereby be served.

Mr. MARCIL: Formerly, if the Indians refused to surrender, that was the end of it, but now any company desiring to obtain the land may go to the Exchequer Court and, by following the necessary process, can get the reserve or any portion of it. Campbelton is not a town having a population of 8,000 and it seems to me that under this legislation the company will be able to get this reserve.

[Mr. Roche.]

Mr. ROCHE: The hon. gentleman is, I think, confounding private enterprises with public utility.

Mr. MARCIL: It may be declared that this private enterprise is a public utility. Although the minister may not know it, I am satisfied that some person may take advantage of this provision.

Mr. ROCHE: The hon. gentleman knows that if this case were brought before the Exchequer Court the supreme authority is, after all, the Parliament of Canada. Parliament must pass upon it favourably before any action can be taken.

Mr. MARCIL: Whether or not it is intended to furnish means by which this can be done, it is the intention of that industry that it is to be done. These Indians would thereby be dispossessed; they would be forced out of their lands, which would be turned over to this company by the usual process.

5 p.m.

Mr. ROCHE: I have not in mind the case to which my hon. friend refers.

Mr. CARVELL: The minister will remember that early in the session I asked him some questions with regard to the Tobique reserve. As my hon. friend knows, the valuable timber upon one portion of that reserve was pretty well cleaned off by his friend, Mr. Smith, during the last year, but the upper portion of the reserve still has a considerable amount of valuable timber. I am afraid that under this section the remainder of the lumber may be appropriated by gentlemen who require it in their business. One gentleman said that he had a mill a few miles down the river and as the lumber would be worth a little more to him than to anybody else, he ought to have it. I would like to know if the minister thinks this section is strong enough to allow these gentlemen to come in and gather up the remainder of the Tobique Indian reserve.

Mr. ROCHE: I think not. It is not designed to cover a case of that kind and I am satisfied in my own mind that it would not cover it.

Mr. CARVELL: I am glad indeed to hear that, and I hope the minister will give us a promise that the remainder of the Tobique Indian reserve will not be gathered in by the politicians of New Brunswick, the same as the southern portion of the reserve has already been gathered in.

Mr. ROCHE: I think probably the hon. gentleman has in view the gathering in, as he calls it, of certain timber that is upon the reserve. Certain lands were disposed of from time to time before this Government came into power, and recently a portion of the timber was sold, but that has nothing whatever to do with this provision of the Act. Every case will be dealt with on its merits. It is not my present intention to alienate any other portion of the Tobique reserve, and I am sure that unless they can make out a very good case it will not be done.

Mr. CARVELL: I am glad to hear that. I do not want to discuss just now the details of what is taking place because I think this is not the proper occasion, and I hope to have an occasion of doing so before prorogation. The minister will understand, however, that we have alienated portions of this reserve and, according to the returns, alienated it without much rhyme or reason, and so far as I can see without any application on the part of the persons who purchased it. The matter seemed to be the suggestion of the minister's own department that this land should be sold to Mr. Smith. I only hope that no more suggestions like that will be made, and that what remains of the Indian reserve will be maintained for the Indians and not for the benefit of the politicians.

Mr. ROCHE: It was surrendered by the Indians.

Mr. CARVELL: I understand that a portion of the land on the south of the Tobique river had been surrendered by some arrangement so that the department was in a position to sell; but the department was not in a position to give this land over to a political supporter without public competition and without the public knowing anything about it; and giving it to him for one-quarter of what the land was worth and allowing him to steal what valuable timber there was on it. Surely the department was not justified in doing that. However, I shall discuss that later.

Mr. KYTE: Has it come to the knowledge of the minister that there is an Indian reserve in the city of Sydney upon which certain individuals have been casting envious eyes for some years? I understand that applications, in one form or another, have been made—or were made, at all events, to the late Minister of the Interior—and I think the efforts in that direction have been continued up to a comparatively recent date.

Mr. ROCHE: Propositions have been made to the department on more than one occasion to have the Indians moved from their present location in the town of Sydney to some other place. The Indians have not been agreeable to such a transfer and, therefore, the department have not proceeded with the case at all. The Indians are not being disturbed, and will not be disturbed without their consent.

Mr. KYTE: Will the passage of this Act make it easier to remove the Indians from that reserve ?

Mr. ROCHE: Not unless it is desired to use the land for some public purpose. The judge of the Exchequer Court must first decide that it is a question not only of expediency but in the interests of the public as well as in the interests of the Indians. This amendment is not designed to cover that particular case, or any case like it. Propositions have come in to the department about that reserve, but invariably the Indians have refused to surrender their land, and that settles it so far as the department is concerned. We have no intention of calling this Act into requisition in order to dispossess them of their land.

Mr. KYTE: I understand the minister to say that it is only in the event of the land being required for public purposes that the Indians may be ultimately removed.

Mr. ROCHE: I might say to my hon. friend that the amendment brought in in 1911 would cover this particular case, because Sydney has a population of 8,000 people.

Mr. KYTE: So if this Act is passed, it will not be any easier to get rid of the Indians than heretofore ?

Mr. ROCHE: Not at all.

Mr. CARVELL: The minister so intends to administer the Act that the land will not be sold unless it is required in the public interests. I am afraid, however, that the Bill does not very happily cover the minister's intentions, and it is possible that at some future date there will be another minister of the Interior not possessed of the same high ideals as the present one. If the minister will read section 6 carefully he will see that it is not confined to the case of a public body requiring the land. It says:

In a case of an Indian reserve which adjoins or is situated wholly or partly within an incorporated town or city or in the immediate neighbourhood thereof or which contains more land than is necessary for the use of the band—

That is the point.

—or which is so situated as to materially retard the natural development of the surrounding country—

But, to go back a moment, it says: 'which contains more land than is necessary for the use of the band.' It seems to me that the minister should eliminate that line from the Bill, because you can hardly find an Indian reserve in the Dominion in regard to which some enterprising gentleman will not be convinced that they have more land than is required for the use of the band, and, once he convinces the minister that such is the case, he then has a right to apply for it. The section goes on:

—which reserve has not been released or surrendered by the Indians and which the Indians refuse to surrender, the Governor in Council may, upon the recommendation of the Superintendent General, refer to the Exchequer Court of Canada for inquiry and report the question as to whether it is expedient, having regard to the interest of the public and of the Indians of the band for whose use the reserve is held, that the whole or any portion of the said reserve should be sold for the benefit of the Indians, and that the Indians should be removed from the reserve or any part of it.

To go back to the Tobique Indian reserve, to which I have already referred. There are thousands of acres in that reserve that the Indians do not occupy. They occupy only a very small portion of the reserve; I think I am safe in saying that nine-tenths of the reserve is entirely in forest land, and I can quite understand how a number of enterprising gentlemen from New Brunswick may come here and convince—not this minister, because he has had a little experience of them—the minister's successor—that there is more land there than is necessary for the use of the Indians, and therefore persuade him to sell, not the whole of it, but the portion that has valuable timber. Those words in lines 21 and 22 of section 6 on page 2 are the ones to which I object. I am afraid it is opening up a very wide field indeed. I can readily understand that, in the case of an Indian reserve situated right in the midst of a town, there may be very strong reasons why that reserve should be opened to the public and the Indians removed to some other place. There would be strong reasons for that if some public utility required it, for instance, but I think this section leaves it open for any private individual who casts covetous eyes upon a portion of an Indian reserve to come to the minister, and possibly work the oracle and get possession of the property.

Mr. ROCHE: The hon. gentleman overlooks this fact. The Minister of the Interior, no matter who he may be, has not power to sell the Indian reserve. The matter would have to be referred to the judge of the Exchequer Court who makes a full inquiry. Witnesses are examined under oath and the Indians are represented by counsel paid for by the department. The judge, after inquiring fully into the matter, makes his report to Parliament; and if Parliament pass upon it, the case goes to the Governor in Council for final action. That is exactly the procedure that took place under the late Administration. Parliament must pass upon it before it goes to the Governor in Council.

Mr. CARVELL: We know what Parliament means; we had an illustration of that, this afternoon, in connection with the Farmers Bank.

Mr. ROCHE: The hon. gentleman will have a chance to enter his protest if it is proposed to sell any part of a reserve.

Mr. CARVELL: And that is all.

Mr. ROCHE: We often have the jurisdiction of the Governor in Council called in question, and hear it said that this and that matter ought to be brought to the high court of Parliament. As I said, the Minister of the Interior, no matter who he may be, has no jurisdiction in the matter of selling an Indian reserve. All he can do is to refer it to the Exchequer Court. It is then reported upon to Parliament, and Parliament passes upon it before the Governor in Council takes final action; so that I do not see any force in the hon. gentleman's objection. No undue influence can be brought to bear upon the Minister of the Interior, for he simply cannot act.

Mr. OLIVER: Parliament is to-day laying down the law which will control the judge of the Exchequer Court when the question is brought before him. Parliament is contemplating to-day that, if there is more land in the Indian reserves than the Indians are using, the extra area may be taken from them on an order of the judge. It is perfectly clear that if a case in regard to a certain Indian reserve is brought before the Exchequer Court, and if it is proven that there is more land in the Indian reserve than the Indians are beneficially using, the judge will have no discretion but to declare that a portion of the reserve shall be taken from the Indians. That is the whole purpose of the Bill, that is what it says, that is what will be the necessary result. I maintain that this is most objectionable.

Mr. BRADBURY: Will that apply to any reserve?

Mr. OLIVER: Yes. I think that the minister will realize that in pressing this legislation on Parliament he is proposing to destroy the treaty rights of the Indians by authority of Parliament. I am quite aware that Parliament can destroy these treaty rights but I am not prepared to admit that Parliament ought to. The minister may say that under the late Government provision was made for the taking of the land from the Indians by the order of the Exchequer Court. It is quite true. A Bill was brought before Parliament by myself, as an emergency measure, after a complete declaration of the fact that it was trespassing upon the treaty rights of the Indians, and that it was a question as to which was the greater right and which was the greater wrong. It was particularly provided in the Bill that it should only have effect where, by reason of the proximity of a large population, the land occupied by the Indians had reached an abnormal cash value and the Indians in occupation were not receiving adequate benefit, and where the duty of the Government, as guardians of the Indians, required them to take such action as would ensure to them all of the increased value by reason of the proximity to a large population. That was the limitation under which that extraordinary power could be exercised through the courts. But my hon. friend departs from that extraordinary condition altogether and in any circumstances where any Indian reserve occupies a greater area than the Indians are using he can put this Act into operation and the judge of the Exchequer Court must act as he is directed by the terms of this section. In so far as the Minister desires to excuse this Bill by suggesting that its terms are parallel with the terms of the Act now on the statute book, I desire to repudiate the parallel absolutely and to say that the Act now on the statute book is within limitations which absolutely safeguard the rights of the Indians and that it was put there for the direct benefit of the Indians. This Bill is certainly a trespass upon the rights of the Indians wherever they may be located throughout Canada.

There is another feature of this Indian question that I am going to take an opportunity of directing to the attention of the minister. This Bill is a trespass upon the ordinary treaty rights of the Indians. But there are the bands of the Six Nation Indians located on the Grand river in Ontario who, I maintain, are in a different legal position from any Indian bands who are native to the country. These Indian bands on the Grand river had their original home in the United States. At the close of the war of the revolution they emigrated to Canada and were given lands under a special treaty, not as subjects of Great Britain, but as allies of Great Britain, and I maintain that the holding of these Six Nation Indians on the Grand river is of such a kind that this Parliament has no right to interfere with it. I admit that Parliament has the power to interfere with the rights of Indians under treaty made with this Government, but I say that this Parliament has no right to interfere with a treaty made between the Imperial Government and the Six Nation Indians.

I protest most strongly against this legislation as being a breaking of faith with the Indians in a matter in which faith should be most sacredly kept. The other night, speaking in the House, I referred to the nature of the Indian and to the necessity of maintaining his self-respect. The knowledge of the ownership of his land is the greatest factor in maintaining his self-respect, and if we are to let him understand that the land which he is located upon and which is sacred to himself and his tribe is not his excepting as the Parliament or Government of the day may see fit to declare, you simply take away the last vestige of his self-respect, the last opportunity to save in him all that makes him a man.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I wish to emphasize the attitude taken by my hon. friend from Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) as regards the sacredness of the title which the Indians have to their reserves. I was speaking a moment ago of the Caughnawaga Indians, and my hon. friend said that there was no sinister motive behind this clause 6 as regards their reserve. Looking over the documents which were published by this Government many years ago, I find the titles to the reserves, and I submit that even with the legislation which is before the House to-day, the department could not dispossess the Caughnawaga band of that reserve or any part of it. I would refer my hon. friend the minister to the titles to the Sault St. Louis reserve in the 'Indian Treaties and Surrenders,' vols 1 and 2, officially published in the year 1891, and which contains the Indian treaties and surrenders from 1680 to 1890.

Respecting the Caughnawaga reserve, the following document is, I believe the most ancient concession made by France to the Indians of Canada. It will be seen from it that the Caughnawaga reserve was originally granted to the Jesuit Fathers by Louis XIV, on the 29th of May, 1680. Here are the terms of the grant:

Fontainebleau, France, 29th May, 1680.

Louis, by the Grace of God, King of France and of Navarre. To all to whom these presents may come, greeting:

Our dearest and well beloved, the Religious Order of the Society of Jesus, residing in our Dominion of New France, have caused it to be most humbly represented to us that the lands of the Prairie de la Magdalene, which were heretofore granted to them, being too damp for the purpose of sowing and of providing for the sustenance of the Iroquois who have thereon settled, and that it is feared they might leave if we were not pleased to give them the land called 'Le Sault' containing two leagues in width from a point opposite the St. Louis rapids, going up along the lake by an equal depth, with two islands, islets and shoals, which are in front and adjoining the lands of the said Prairie de la Magdalene, which would allow them not only to receive the said Iroquois but even to increase their number, and to spread by that means the knowledge of faith and of the Gospel; for these reasons, desiring to contribute to the conversion and instruction of the said Iroquois and to deal favourably with the said petitioners, we have made and do make them a donation by these presents signed with our hand, of the said land called 'Le Sault' containing two leagues, in width from a point opposite the St. Louis rapids, going up along the lake, by an equal depth, with two islands, islets and shoals, which are in front and adjoining the lands of the Prairie de la Magdalene on condition that the said land called 'Le Sault' shall belong to us, when the said Iroquois will give it up, toute défrichée (free and clear as it then may be without any claims on us).

We permit and allow all those who wish to bring to the said Iroquois rings, knives and other small mercery and such things, to do so; we do most expressly prohibit and forbid the French who may live with or go among the said Iroquois and other Indian nations who may settle on the said land called 'Le Sault' from having and keeping any cattle, and all persons from keeping any public-house among the dwellings (dans le bourg) of the said Iroquois which may be built on the said land.

Therefore we order our beloved and faithful men holding our Sovereign Court at Quebec, and all our other judicial officers whom it may concern, to have these presents our letters of donation and of grant read and registered and to permit the said petitioners to use and enjoy the same, ceasing and putting a stop to all troubles and hindrances which might be caused to them to the contrary, for such is our pleasure.

In faith whereof we have signed these presents and affixed our Seals.

Given at Fontainebleau the twenty-ninth day of May in the year of Grace one thousand six hundred and eighty and of our reign the thirty-eighth.

(Signed) Louis.

By the King.

(Signed) Colbert.

Later on Frontenac, one of the most illustrious governors under the French regime, issued the following letters patent, dated Quebec, 31st of October, 1680:

Quebec, 31st October, 1680.

With regard to what was represented to us by the Reverend Fathers of the Society of Jesus, that His Majesty by his letters patent of the twenty-ninth of May one thousand six hundred and eighty, registered at the Sovereign Council at Quebec on the twenty-ninth of October ensuing, having made to them a gift of the land called 'Le Sault' containing two leagues in width from a point opposite the St. Louis rapids going up along the lake, by an equal depth, with two islands, islets and shoals which are in front, and adjoining the lands of the Prairie de la Magdalene, for the reasons mentioned in said letters and in the clauses and conditions therein laid; and whereas they have asked that we might be pleased to grant them a piece of land of one league and a half or thereabouts in length to be taken from the said land called 'Le Sault' going up along the lake, towards the seigniority of Chateauguay, by two leagues in depth, which would afford them a still better opportunity of drawing thereto the Iroquois and other Indians, to increase their number and to spread by that means the knowledge of faith and of the Gospel;

We, by virtue of the power given to us conjointly by His Majesty, and in order to facilitate still more the said Reverend Fathers of the Society of Jesus with the means of continuing the care and pains which they have been doing for a long time and with such zeal, for the conversion and instruction of the said Iroquois and other Indians, we have given, granted and conceded, do give, grant and concede to them by these presents, the said piece of land of about one league and a half in length, to be taken from the said land called 'Le Sault' extending toward the seigniority of Chateauguay, by two leagues in depth, to be used and enjoyed by the said Reverend Fathers on the same conditions, clauses and terms as are set forth in the aforesaid letters patent of His Majesty, and that they shall obtain from him a ratification of the presents in a year from to-day.

In faith whereof we have signed these presents and affixed the seal of our arms.

Given at Quebec, on the thirty-first of October, one thousand six hundred and eighty.

(Signed) Frontenac.

(Signed) Duchesneau.

This is signed by Frontenac, and Duchesneau who was Intendant of New France.

Looking over these historic documents, I find that later on the Iroquois had a litigation with the Jesuit Fathers, just at the beginning of British domination. The case was brought up before the administrators of the colony at that time. After the conquest the country was divided into three governments: the Government of Montreal, the Government of Three Rivers, and the Government of Quebec, and the question came up in 1762 before His Excellency Thomas Gage, Governor of Montreal, assisted by his Council.

22nd March, 1762.

Before His Excellency Thomas Gage, Governor of Montreal, assisted by His Council, to wit, Messrs. Frederick Haldimand, Colonel of the 4th Battalion of the Royal American, and William Browning, Major of the 46th Regiment, Herbert Munster, Major of the 4th Battalion of the Royal American, and Gabriel Christie, Major and Quarter-Master of His Majesty's Armies.

Between the Iroquois Indians and other Indians of Sault St. Louis, appearing by Mr. Clauss their Attorney, Plaintiff, on the one part:

And the Very Reverend Fathers of the Society of Jesus, appearing by the Reverend Father Wett, their Attorney, Defendant, on the other part.

One of the chief allegations of the Iroquois in that famous litigation was:

That at the surrender of this country all things had been well arranged to maintain the said Indians in possession of their lands at Sault St. Louis, but that now the Jesuit Fathers, their missionaries, were granting continually to the French the lands forming part of the territory of Sault St. Louis which, however, they believed belonged to them by a title of grant given them by His Most Christian Majesty. And that if matters are not promptly set right, they would soon see themselves obliged to give up their own fields, to withdraw with their families to the woods, considering they do not any longer find there enough land to afford a means of living.

The Indians were also claiming some of the church property. They claimed that they had paid their share to the maintenance of the church, and that they were entitled to its ornaments and perquisites. Judgment was rendered by that special tribunal presided over by His Excellency Thomas Gage, and perhaps it would be well to read what the decision was:

We are of opinion that the grant of the lands of Sault St. Louis was made to the Right Reverend Jesuit Fathers with the sole intention of settling these Iroquois and other Indians and that all the soil could produce was wholly intended for their profit and advantage. The reasons which the Right Reverand Jesuit Fathers use in their petition, and which seemed to have determined His Most Christian Majesty to make his grant, were founded on the fear that the Iroquois that had settled at that time on the Seigniory of Laprairie and occupied lands which were too damp for the purpose of sowing, should happen to leave, alleging that by means of that new grant, they would be not only kept back but that their number would be increased and by that means the knowledge of faith and of the Gospel would be spread.

And another paragraph as follows:

Therefore we deprive and nonsuit the Right Reverend Jesuit Fathers of all temporal rights which they might have assumed on the said lands either by the condescension of the Governors or the Intendants, the only title by which they have got the decrees of Union to the estate which they obtained at different times, or by right of possession or other reasons which they might allege, and we order that the said Indians of the Sault—

Our English-speaking friends would do well to keep the pronunciation of the word 'Sault' not 'Soo.'

—be put in possession of and do enjoy peaceably for themselves their heirs and other Indians who would like to join them, the whole land and revenue which the said concession can produce.

And being of opinion that nothing contributes more efficaciously to civilize and enlighten the Indian nation than by scrupulously keeping the pledges which are made with them, and by preventing all cause of disagreement between them, and the inhabitants settled in their neighbourhood.

We order that the boundaries of the concession of the Iroquois of the Sault be drawn as soon as possible by a sworn surveyor, and that the limit of said concession be marked with stones fastened into the earth and stamped with His Britannic Majesty's Arms, and that the figurative plan thereof be delivered at a record office.

And then the litigation is settled by the representatives of His Majesty, the new King of British North America, deeding this reserve to the Iroquois, their heirs and successors, because it had been deeded to them for their purposes by the Crown of France in 1680. This constitutes an Imperial title. The Caughnawaga Indians received first a royal title from the Crown of France, and after the conquest, it was implemented by another royal title. By the treaties and by the capitulations of Montreal and Quebec, reference is made to the title of the Indians in their reserves as established by the Crown of France. Therefore in a case of this kind such as Caughnawaga reserve, I do not believe that this Parliament or the Department of Indian Affairs could interfere in any way, manner or form. My hon. friend has declared that the Iroquois should have no fear, but it is well that the country should know that this reserve was given under Louis XIV and confirmed by George III after the conquest, and that the Government takes authority to alter the conditions under which the reserve was granted. This is an old title which dates back to the time and days of Louis XIV. If there is a case where there should be sacredness in a title, this is the case.

I would call the attention of my hon. friend to this paragraph of the judgment rendered by Governor Gage, in which he uses the following language:

> And being of opinion that nothing contributes more efficaciously to civilize and enlighten the Indian nations than by scrupulously keeping the pledges which are made with them, and by preventing all cause of disagreement between them, and the inhabitants settled in their neighbourhood.

These words apply to-day as they applied in those days; and no doubt my hon. friend before expropriating any reserve or part of any reserve, will bear that paragraph in mind. It embodies a principle which every Government should respect, especially in their dealings with the Indians who are the wards of the Government and of the people.

Mr. BORDEN: It is perfectly obvious that great care must be taken in dealing with the titles of the Indians, and it is the desire of the Government to carry out that principle. As far as the legal point which my hon. friend has made is concerned, I am not at the moment quite able to appreciate it, because the result of it would be that any title acquired in this country to land, which is based upon the Acts of the British Crown or of the French Crown before responsible government was introduced into this country, could not be the subject of expropriation at all, whether it belonged to the Indians or to any one else. I do not conceive that to be the law of this country, nor do I think that the powers of Parliament are limited in that way. Under the British system, the title of all lands is traced to the Crown; and it does not make any difference, so far as the legal aspect is concerned, whether the title is traced, to the Crown before we have responsible government in this country or whether it is traced to the Crown afterwards, through the medium of responsible government. The position is precisely the same. Parliament has the right to declare in respect of the ordinary citizen of the country that his lands may be taken, with suitable compensation, for purposes of a public character. It goes further than that: It empowers corporations carrying on public utilities to expropriate lands of ordinary citizens, without their consent but with due compensation, for such public purposes. As far as the Indians are concerned, the object of this legislation is simply to extend in a certain measure a principle which has already been acted upon by this Parliament in a measure introduced, I think, by my hon. friend the member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) a few years ago. It is simply extending the conditions under which that power may be exercised in the public interest.

Mr. CARVELL: It is extending it much beyond the purview of public interest and public utility; it is getting down to where private individuals are interested.

Mr. BORDEN: I do not understand the legislation just in the way that the hon. member for Carleton understands it. Section 49a, which is the amending section, begins in this way:

> In the case of an Indian reserve which adjoins or is situated wholly or partly within an incorporated town or city or in the immediate neighbourhood thereof or which contains more land than is necessary for the use of the band or which is so situated as to materially retard the natural development of the surrounding country.

Then certain procedure can be followed for the purpose of expropriating the land without a surrender by the Indians. It is all concerned with questions of the public interest, and the Minister of the Crown who undertakes the initiating of proceedings must, of course, have due regard to what those are. In any case, the land of the Indians can only be taken after proper proceedings have been had in the Exchequer Court of Canada and under conditions which safeguard the interests of the Indians in every respect. They must be paid for their improvements; they must be fully compensated in every way; and further than that, if I remember the section correctly, they must be provided with certain suitable land elsewhere as a reserve. If there is any further provision that ought to be inserted in order to safeguard thoroughly the rights of the Indians, we will be very happy indeed to have suggestions in that regard. The object of the section is to extend along a certain line provisions which have already been sanctioned by Parliament and which in some cases have been found not to be fully adequate to meet considerations of the public interest.

Mr. OLIVER: The Prime Minister was not in his place when I made my explanation. The difference between the Act as it is and the Bill as it is before the House is that the Act would only apply to a very limited number of reserves under very special conditions, whereas under the Bill as it is proposed every Indian reserve can be dealt with and would be dealt with by the judge of the Exchequer Court if application were made.

Mr. BORDEN: As I understand the legislation it would be only under provisions set forth at the commencement of the section.

Mr. OLIVER: But it includes every Indian reserve. For there is no Indian reserve that does not contain 'more land than is necessary for the use of the band'; no reserve is occupied so efficiently that it could not be reasonably considered that there is room for more than the Indians to whom it is allotted. Then there is no Indian reserve of which it is not true that it 'materially retards the natural development of the surrounding country.' On these two counts every Indian reserve in Canada is subject to being decreased in area by reason of the order of the judge of the Exchequer Court; and the judge would have no option if the matter were brought to his attention.

Mr. BORDEN: But in the first place the proposal must commend itself to the minister, and he is responsible to Parliament, of course, for his action, and can be made amenable to Parliament if he exercises this power in an improvident or unjust manner. Then, after that the court must distinctly consider whether or not it is expedient that the band of Indians should be removed from that reserve.

Mr. OLIVER: I beg pardon, the courts must decide simply whether there is more land than is necessary for the Indians.

Mr. BORDEN: I will read to my hon. friend what I was relying upon. It is provided that the Governor in Council upon the recommendation of the superintendent general may——refer to the Exchequer Court of Canada for inquiry and report the question as to whether it is expedient, having regard to the interest of the public and of the Indians of the band for whose use the reserve is held, that the whole or any portion of the said reserve should be sold for the benefit of the Indians, and that the Indians should be removed from the reserve or any part of it.

The judge of the Exchequer Court is to take that into consideration and report upon it. The minister, in the first place, must decide that it is a proper case to refer to the court, and it is left to the judge of the Exchequer Court to determine whether it is expedient that the Indians should be removed. If he decides that they should be removed, provision must be made by Parliament and compensation must be afforded the Indians so that they may suffer no financial loss.

Mr. MARCIL: I have listened very carefully to the debate, and I am more convinced than I was at first that this legislation is objectionable. I have in my constituency the Restigouche reserve, the oldest Micmac reserve in eastern Canada, and the centre of the missionary efforts among the Micmacs for eastern Quebec and the Maritime provinces. This reserve is located very close to the town of Campbelltown. Now, from the white man's point of view the proximity of an Indian reserve to a town injures that town. That does not mean that therefore the Indians must go. From the point of view of the white man the Indians are not using the whole of the land contained in their reserve. As a matter of fact they do not do much farming. Most of them act as guides in the summer for American sportsmen who come to fish on the Restigouche and Cascapedia, and in the winter time they are in the shanties. For this reason, it would be found by the judge of the Exchequer Court, or by anyone else going there, that the Indians do not occupy all the land in their reserve.

Mr. BORDEN: How near are they to the town of Campbellton?

Mr. MARCIL: Just across the river, only a few minutes' distance. And as to the material development of the surrounding country, from the white man's standpoint, for instance, the establishment of a pulp and paper factory or a saw-mill, and the employment of a lot of white men, would certainly mean the development of the country. But the Indians have been there for over a century and a half—close upon two centuries; and if they are sent away under the terms proposed now a grave injustice will be done. The most objectionable part of the legislation, to my mind, is that we are not told who must make the application to the minister for this property. If the application were made by the missionary order, who have had in charge for generations the moral, religious, intellectual and every other interest of the Indians, or if the application had to be made by the town council of Campbellton, a public body, declaring that the reserve should be used for public purposes, it would not be so bad. But under this legislation any one could make the application, and we should not know who made it until it was acted upon by the minister who refers it to Council. Of course, reference has to be made by the Governor in Council to the judge of the Exchequer Court. The court must decide whether it is expedient that the band of Indians should be removed from the reserve or any part of it. Well, any number of witnessess from Campbellton would testify that it is to the interest of the town to get these Indians out of the way; it is obviously to the interest of the town that they should be removed. The interest of the white men is in favour of the establishment of a pulp mill which would necessitate the removal of the Indians. But that is not necessarily a final reason why the Indians should be sent away from the reserve. The Indians have already conceded a portion of their reserve for a saw-mill, and I think they are getting along pretty well with the company, though they had some difficulty at first. But from rumours circulating in the county and district, well known to the hon. member for Restigouche (Mr. Reid) as well as to myself, an effort is being made to get possession of that reserve. If it were solely for the public interest, I would not have so much objection, but I am afraid it is going to be obtained for private interest rather than for the interest of the country. The Indians are well situated; they have a magnificent church, and they benefit by the labour of the splendid order of missionaries who are looking after their interests and who can do so much better for them in that locality than they could if the Indians were removed. For this reason, I cannot help being reminded of the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury) and his bold, determined fight for the St. Peter's reserve. If it were made easier for these people to get these Indian reserves, they could easily invoke these reasons and the judge of the Exchequer Court would have to admit that the Indians have more land than they use and that their presence materially retards the advancement of the town and the surrounding country from the point of view of the white man. The decision is supposed to hinge upon ' whether it is in the interest of the public.' Of course, that is the white man's view of it—it is not in the interest of development from the white man's point of view that the Indians should be there at all.

Section 6 says:

> Having regard to the interests of the public and of the Indians of the band for whose use the reserve is held, that the whole or any portion of the said reserve should be sold for the benefit of the Indians, and that the Indians should be removed from the reserve or any part of it.

These things are easily established. Of course, the interests of the greatest number—the interests of the public—must overrule everything. If I were satisfied that in the application of this law nothing but the public interest would dominate; if applications under the Act were made by a reputable body, by the order of Capuchins, for instance, who are doing missionary work among the Indians and who have their interests at heart, I would consider the legislation to be not half as bad as it might be; but if applications for Indian reserves, or portions of them, are to be made by ordinary companies for business purposes, all the provisions of this Bill can easily be complied with, and the report of the judge of the Exchequer Court given to the minister and to Parliament. Parliament will accept the report of the Exchequer Court judge, the legislation will be put through, and the Indians deprived of their reserve, and a great injustice will, in my opinion, be committed.

Mr. CARROLL: In this legislation I think there is no doubt about the safeguarding of the public interest. Sub-section 1 of section 6 says that:

> The Governor in Council may refer to the Exchequer Court of Canada for inquiry and report the question as to whether it is expedient, having regard to the interests of the public and the Indians—

And so on. Subsection 4 says:

> If the court finds that it is expedient that the band of Indians should be removed from the reserve.

I think that in order to safeguard the interests of the Indians, this subsection should say: ' having regard to the interests of the Indians and of the public.' After the Exchequer Court judge hears counsel and evidence on both sides, he might find it expedient, in the interests of the people, to send the Indians out; according to the wording of this section he would be quite justified in doing so. But if the words in subsection 1 with regard to the interests of the Indians were inserted also in subsection 4, the interests of the Indians would be thoroughly safeguarded.

Mr. BORDEN: The Act in that respect has been copied precisely from the old Act, which was passed under the regime of the hon. member for Edmonton. There is some point, however, in what my hon. friend suggests, and I think that it could be met if after the word 'expedient' there were inserted the words 'as aforesaid.'

Mr. CARROLL: If the department employs solicitors to act for the Indians, great caution should be exercised by that solicitor to ascertain the exact facts that exist with regard to the particular bands of Indians whose reservations are to be taken over by the department. Application was made to two or three preceding governments to get the reserve of the Indians in the city of Sydney, which is a valuable piece of land. The Indians there live under peculiar conditions. The Micmacs of Nova Scotia earn their living generally by making tubs, baskets, and so on, but the Indians of the reserve in the city of Sydney make their living simply by labour, and if they were removed from Sydney—it certainly would be in the interests of the city of Sydney that they should be removed—their occupation would be practically gone. They have not taken up the occupation of their forefathers, and, if removed from Sydney, they would be taken away from the locality where they would ordinarily be able to make a living. I bring this matter up merely to show that great precautions should be taken by, and very detailed instructions given to the solicitors in each case with regard to the particular reserve in question. If all precautions are taken by the department, by agents and by solicitors, I would rather see the Act administered by a judge of the Exchequer Court or of any other court than by any department of any government.

Mr. ROCHE: I beg to move:

That the words 'as aforesaid' be inserted after the word 'expedient' in the first line of subsection 4 of section 6.

Motion agreed to.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

The Committee resumed at eight o'clock, Mr. Blondin in the Chair.

Mr. OLIVER: Inasmuch as the Minister of the Interior and the Prime Minister have both based their argument in favour of this Bill on the existence of a statute of 1911, I will take the liberty of reading the important section of that statute in which this question is dealt with, which will make perfectly clear the difference between the two provisions. Section 49a of the Act to amend the Indian Act, assented to on the 19th of May, 1911, begins:

In the case of an Indian reserve which adjoins or is situated wholly or partly within an incorporated town or city—

Both the Act of 1911 and this amendment are the same as to that point. The amendment goes on:

—or in the immediate neighbourhood thereof or which contains more land than is necessary for the use of the band or which is so situated as to materially retard the natural development of the surrounding country, which reserve has not been released or surrendered by the Indians—

These last words are the same in the Act as well. The amendment goes on:

—and which the Indians refuse to surrender.

Then the following words in the old Act and the amendment are the same:

which the Indians refuse to surrender, the Governor in Council may, upon the recommendation of the Superintendent General, refer to the Exchequer Court of Canada for inquiry and report the question as to whether it is expedient, having regard to the interest of the public and of the Indians of the band for whose use the reserve is held,—

The amendment goes on:

—that the whole or any portion of the said reserve should be sold for the benefit of the Indians, and that the Indians should be removed from the reserve or any part of it.

There is no material difference betweeen that last paragraph and what is in the old Act. I want to emphasize this point: Under the Act as it stands, there is a distinct and definite limitation of the exercise of authority by the minister, by the Exchequer Court and by Parliament. The limitation is fixed by the condition that the reserve shall be either within or adjoining a town or city of not less than 8,000 people. That is a definite and distinct limitation. It can only possibly apply to a very small number of Indian reserves, and it can only apply to the condition in which the value of the land occupied by the Indians has been abnormally increased by the existence of the city immediately adjoining or surrounding the reserve. That being the case, it is in the interests of the Indians that they should get the benefit of the increased value of the land that they hold, which they do not get by merely holding it; and it is the duty of the Government as guardian and trustee of the Indians to take such measures as will secure to the Indians the proper value of that land. That is an abnormal condition, and we took what may be called abnormal measures to meet it. I may say to my hon. friend from South Cape Breton (Mr. Carroll) that the condition of the reserve he mentioned is adequately and unquestionably provided for in the Act as it now stands, without any amendment. The old Act makes adequate provision for dealing with that reserve or any other similarly situated, and consequently there is no need to extend the scope of the Act to cover that case. While the old Act restricted action by the Government to a certain stated condition, for certain specific reasons, which are evident on their face, this Bill provides that for three other reasons in addition to those set down in the original Act the right of the Indians may be taken away by the process set out in the Act—the conditions being practically the same in both. The first of these is that the land is in the immediate neighbourhood of a city or town, it does not need to adjoin or be surrounded by a town, but if it is in the immediate neighbourhood of a city or town it can be condemned. If it contains more land than is necessary for the use of the band it may be condemned. If it is so situated as to materially retard the natural development of the surrounding country it may be condemned; so that in addition to the provisions of the old Act the proposed Bill makes three conditions under which the reserve may be taken away from the Indians without their consent, and under one or other of those three conditions every reserve in Canada can be brought under the operation of this Act. The minister, if he sees fit, may refer the question of the right of these Indians to their reserve to the Exchequer Court, and if the judge of the Exchequer Court find that the conditions are either of the three I have mentioned, he would be bound, I maintain, to render judgment that the Indians should be cleared off the reserve, or off some part of it; that is to say, that their rights should be taken away. The judge having rendered that decision, the case comes to Parliament. It has been referred to the judge on the responsibility of the minister, and it comes to Parliament with the decision of the judge. The ministry, after they have had the support of the judge's decision are bound to maintain the position that they first took, and the parliamentary majority gives sanction to that decision. The value of the treaty right to the Indian has absolutely ceased once this legislation has passed.

Mr. ROCHE: I may say to the hon. gentleman that if there is more land than the Indians require, it is not the intention of the Act to take the land away from them for that reason alone. The land if taken has to be used for particular purposes. That is the ruling factor in the question as to whether the land shall be taken from the Indians. In the first place, I do not think any Minister of the Interior would refer to the Exchequer Court the question of the expropriation of a portion of an Indian reserve by reason of the fact that the reserve was larger than the requirements of the Indians demanded. The Act is not to be read in that light at all. The hon. gentleman has stated that by reason of the contiguity of a reserve to a city of 8,000 population the land increased in value. I may say it matters not how close or how remote the reserve is to the city; the value placed upon it is estimated in the same manner in both cases. For instance, it has to be disposed of by public auction. If the hon. gentleman will read subsection 5 he will see that it provides that:

> The court shall transmit its findings, with the evidence and a report of the proceedings, to the Governor in Council, who shall lay the same before Parliament at the then current or next ensuing session thereof. Upon such findings being approved by resolution of Parliament the Governor in Council may thereupon give effect to the said findings and cause the reserve, or any part thereof from which it is found expedient to remove the Indians, to be sold or leased by public auction after the publication of notice of such auction in the Canada Gazette and at least two newspapers published in the locality or nearest the locality in which such reserve is situate for at least one month.

The compensation to the Indians is determined in the same manner. It matters not whether a reserve is adjacent to a city with a large population or remote from it. The hon. gentleman will surely see that there might be a case where, for some reason or other, the Indians might refuse to surrender their land notwithstanding the fact that it might be required for some public utility not covered by the expropriation clause of the Act. For instance, supposing a portion of the Indian reservation was required for a public utility; the Indians were quite agreeable to surrender the same except for one point and that point would be that they wanted all the money instead of the fifty per cent prescribed by the Indian Act. They might in this way be holding up a great public enterprise. Although the conditions, as far as the monetary consideration is concerned would be quite acceptable they would refuse because they would not be allowed one hundred per cent of the money. What would you do in a case of that kind? It is a case of that character exactly that we want to get at. That is one illustration where a section such as this must certainly be requisite. It would be an unreasonable thing for the Indians to do. If they were agreeable to the compensation, and in every other respect consented, they might still hold out for the one hundred per cent instead of the fifty per cent as provided by the Indian Act. Under the provisions of the Bill we refer it to the Exchequer Court, the evidence will be taken and laid before Parliament and by formal resolution Parliament refers it to the Governor in Council to be dealt with without the consent of the Indians. The necessity of taking advantage of the provision of this Act would be due simply and solely to the unreasonableness of the Indians. I do not think that the hon. gentleman has interpreted the Act aright when he states that the fact that there is land in abundance, or more than is required for the Indians, will entitle the minister to refer the matter to the Exchequer Court. I am sure that no minister of the Interior would do so and if that were done by a minister no judge of the Exchequer Court would decide that it was either in the interest of the Indians or of the public that that particular land should be taken from the Indians.

Mr. OLIVER: If my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Roche) had confined the section of his Bill to the taking of land from the Indians for the purpose of some specific public utility his argument would be good. But there is no such limitation in the Act. He may say that a minister of the Interior would not refer the question of taking land from the Indians unless for some good reason but if Parliament has placed fairly on the statute book the complete authority enabling the minister to do so is not that his sufficient warrant for doing it? We cannot go behind the plain wording of the statute, and if we, the members of this House at this time, assist to put on the statute book a provision which defines a sufficient reason why the land should be taken from the Indians, we are not to find fault with a future minister of the Interior or a judge of the Exchequer Court, if he exercises his authority in accordance with the statute passed by this Parliament. The responsibility is on this Parliament here and now to decide how far they will allow this discretion to the ministers of the Interior for the future. In regard to public utilities, if my hon. friend will look at the amendment to the Indian Act made in 1911, he will see that provision was made for the expropriation of land on reserves without the consent of the Indians for specific public utilities, that is to say, for a railway, a road, public work, or a work designed for any public utility. It seems to me that this is going far enough to meet the requirements of the public interest, and that if we are going beyond that we are going beyond the requirements of the public interest, and we are making an undue trespass upon the rights of the Indians and upon the good faith of the people and Government of Canada that is after all a matter of some importance.

Mr. BRADBURY: I am placed in rather an embarrassing position. During 1911, when the hon. gentleman who has just sat down (Mr. Oliver) introduced an amendment to the Indian Act which took away the right of the Indians to vote whether they should surrender a certain portion of their lands or not, I took strenuous objection to that amendment, and I pointed out that the amendment would deprive the Indians of a right which they enjoyed under treaty. The amendment that is proposed to-night goes farther than that of the hon. gentleman went, and consequently I feel that the powers that the Indian Department are asking for to-night are altogether too great for that department to have. In justice to the Indian, we must not forget that at one time he was all-powerful in this land, and that when these treaties were made he was in a position to enforce his side of them. To-day we are strong, but I am afraid we are neglecting to realize our position, and are taking advantage of our strength to deprive the Indian of some of the rights which he should enjoy under his treaty. If this amendment had gone no farther than to provide for the expropriation of land within the limits of a town, or adjacent to a town, and if it had provided, as it does, for expropriation proceedings to be taken before the Exchequer Court and that the judgment of the Exchequer Court should be submitted to Parliament, I would have had no hesitation in supporting the amendment. But I feel that this proposed amendment is altogether too broad, broader than necessary, and I would suggest that the Government should limit the power to merely taking lands within towns or adjacent to towns, a reserve situated fifteen or twenty miles away from a town. According to the provision of this Act, if anybody succeeded in winning the ear of the department a change might occur similar to that which occurred in 1908 when the St. Peter's Indian reserve was surrendered, without the Indians' consent. Under this provision, without the Indian's consent, this matter could be taken to the Exchequer Court, and his land taken away from him. I think that this is absolutely wrong, and unfair to the Indian, and that no such power should be vested in any department. The Indians have rights, and we ought not to trespass upon them. We have boasted in Canada for years that the Indians, under the British Crown, always received fair play and justice.

I regret to say that in following up the history of the manner in which the Indians have been treated in times past, by the provincial governments and by federal governments in Canada, I have discovered that that boast is not well-founded. The Indian has been exploited in this country to a degree that is pretty hard to conceive. In Ontario the Indian timber lands and the Indian reserves were exploited, and in the different provinces the same thing occurred. I believe it is the duty of the Government to see that the Indian is properly protected. I have every faith in the intention of the Superintendent-General of Indian Affairs to protect the Indians, but I am bound to say that in my judgment this amendment is giving him greater scope than he needs for the purpose of carrying out the intention of the department, and that he ought to ask Parliament for. I do not intend to dwell on this matter, but I can asuure you that I feel that in the interests of the Indians of Canada this amendment should be limited in such way as would not give the department power to expropriate lands that are not needed immediately for public purposes. I can understand that an Indian reserve must be subject to expropriation as is any other property, when it is needed for public purposes, but taking the reserves all over Canada I do not think Parliament should be asked for this power in the present Bill.

Mr. ARTHURS: I am sorry that to some extent I cannot agree with the hon. member (Mr. Bradbury). There are a good many Indian reserves in my constituency, and I have never known the timber upon them to be sold other than by the consent of the Indians, and in every case that has come to my knowledge they have always secured a very good price; a price rather higher than was got for the adjacent timber. In connection with this particular clause of the Bill, I may say that there is a reserve, not in my riding but in that of the Minister of Railways, which is well known to me and for the expropriation of which there has been a very strong agitation for some years. I do not know the name of the reserve, but it is almost adjoining the town of North Bay on lake Nipissing. It has been for a number of years a great handicap to the town of North Bay, which in the assessment before last had a population of 8,000. The Government of Ontario has been for a number of years building a great trunk road from North Bay to Sault Ste. Marie which has to cross this reserve, and the Government have been handicapped by the fact that they cannot get the right to cross the Indian reserve, and even if they got the right they would have no chance to keep the road in repair except at the expense, presumably, of the Government of Ontario. There are no roads leading west out of North Bay, which is due simply to the fact that they cannot get the right to pass the road through this reserve. I think that this clause, surrounded as it is by the safeguards placed in it by the minister, by the fact that there must be a judgment of the Exchequer Court before any action is taken, and as I understand it that it must be endorsed not only by the Governor General in Council but also at the succeeding session of Parliament, I think this clause safeguards and protects every right of the Indians. In justice to these towns which are situated as North Bay is, this Bill should pass.

Mr. OLIVER: In regard to the reserve which my hon. friend (Mr. Arthurs) speaks about, I may say that the Indians of that reserve signed a surrender, and part of the property was sold at auction, but there was a right maintained by some of the timber men and I believe an action is now pending in the courts. That is the reason the reserve has not been opened up. It is not the fault of the Indians nor the fault of the department, but the fault of some rights which have been acquired by holders of timber, who would not let go of these rights and who have been maintaining their position by action in the courts.

Mr. ARTHURS: Is not that due to the fault of the Indian Department in the sale of the timber? My contention has been for years, and it is the policy of the present Government—I think it was the policy of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) when he was Minister of the Interior—not to sell this timber except on condition that it be removed within a short term of years. This reserve is not large, and there is absolutely no reason why the lumbermen should not remove the timber within one or two years.

Mr. OLIVER: The arrangement I refer to was made many years ago under the old system, and the owner simply holds on to his right and refuses to let go, and the arrangement has been retarded up to the present on that account. I am sorry that the minister does not see fit to make some concession to what I think is not only the public interest but the good faith of the people of Canada. When it comes down to the question of good faith on the part of the Indian Department, if that is to be the final test in this matter, I am bound to say that the evidence which has come to me is not such as to warrant me in placing dependence on the good faith of the department in dealing with the Indians. I have had occasion to bring to the attention of Parliament the case of the Kitsilano Indian reserve, situated within the limits of the city of Vancouver. It was for the purpose of procuring the removal of the Indians, and the sale of that reserve for the benefit of the Indian owners, that this particular amendment to the Indian Act of 1911 was passed. Had the Act been operated under, the rights of the Indians as well as the rights of the city of Vancouver, they would have been protected. But instead of having that done, the position of affairs is this: the Indians who occupy that reserve, and whose property it was, have disappeared from it, and their buildings have been burned. They have gone elsewhere, we have been informed, without the knowledge of the department. Whether with or without the consent of the department we do not know, but we know it is absolutely and unquestionably without the protection of the department. These people have been sent away; they have been paid money by the Government of British Columbia to vacate that reserve, and they have vacated it, but no provision has been made for them in their new location, such as the Indian Act of 1911 provides for. These people have been paid a large amount of money by the Government of British Columbia. By what secret arrangement with the Dominion Government that was done I do not know, but I am perfectly satisfied that it was done under some secret arrangement with this Government. The Government of British Columbia paid that money, the Indians received it. The British Columbia Government had an understanding with this Government as to what their rights in that reserve would be or they never would have paid the money to the Indians, and the Indians are wanderers on the face of the earth to-day without the money, without the reserve, without recourse against anybody, and without having received an item of protection or consideration from this Government. Under these circumstances the minister must not ask us too much to trust the good faith of the Indian Department in a matter of the administration of Indian affairs. It is the fact, though I have not the figures before me, that these Indians were paid a large amount of money by the British Columbia Government. But it is also a fact that they were not paid within fifty per cent of the well established value of the reserve. The money value of that reserve was the property of those Indians according to the law of Canada; and under the Act placed on the statute-book in 1911, they would have received the full value for their reserve; they would have been established on other lands to which they would have had title; but instead of that, they have received money, not the value of the property that was theirs; they have been taken away from the land that belonged to them; their buildings have been burned, and they are to-day occupants of other reserves or wanderers over the province without a home in any part of the province. That is the administration of Indian Affairs that we have under this present Government; and when that Government comes here with a Bill of this character, which places every Indian reserve from the Atlantic to the Pacific absolutely at the mercy of the Minister of the Interior, I say they are asking too much when they ask us to pass such a Bill without consideration. I move that section 6 be struck out.

Mr. STEVENS: I cannot allow the remarks of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) to pass untirely unchallenged. I quite understand that he makes them with the best possible intention of protecting the interest of the Indians; but I think he has been somewhat misinformed in so far as the facts are concerned in regard to the Kitsilano reserve to which he has just referred. In the first place there was absolutely no action taken on the part of this Government to remove the Indians from the Kitsilano reserve; the Indians went of their own free will. In the next place it should be definitely understood that the Indians belonging to the Squamish band, of which the Indians of the Kitsilano reserve were a portion, have at least half a dozen reserves within a short distance of the city of Vancouver, and they move around from one to the other. Some of them are fairly well fixed on the different reserves; but not as a tribe are they fixed in any one locality, and the few Indians who lived on the Kitsilano reserve did not live there constantly, but steadily moved from one part to the other. In so far as the buildings are concerned, to which the hon. gentleman has referred, they are very, very few and of the most dilapidated character, so that no particular harm has been done to the Indians in that regard.

I would also draw the attention of the House to this fact, that the Government stated last year that, in so far as the Indian Department was concerned in its relation to these Indians, it was not different in one iota from what it was prior to the action of the provincial Government. I do not know that there has been any change in the situation since that time. I would like to say this—and I think the hon. member from Edmonton understands it—that the British Columbia Government put up a strong claim for reversionary rights; and in their exercise of it, in my estimation, an error was made. I do not think the provincial Government were probably well advised in acting exactly as they did, but from their viewpoint their action was warranted. An effort is being made, however, and I think has almost reached a point of successful conclusion, where this matter will be amicably adjusted, and the Indians, I think, will be dealt with in a perfectly just manner. I do not think that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) will have any complaint to make when this Government is through with the Kitsilano Indian reserve. He realizes the difficulty which always presents itself in dealing with an Indian reserve and its surrender, especially when complicated by provincial claims or rights, such as we have in this case. I would like the House to remember and understand that no injustice has been done to the Indians of the Kitsilano reserve by this Government, and that their interests are being well protected. I know this perfectly well, because I have been deeply interested in the whole matter.

I wish to say one word as to the merits of the Bill in general. In and around the cities throughout this country there are certain Indian reserves. There is one right in Vancouver, known as the Kitsilano reserve, and there is another in the city of North Vancouver. In the vicinity of North Vancouver district there are two more. Thus there are four reserves in and around the harbour of Vancouver. I but use this as an illustration. The Indians are suffering morally and in every other way from being kept upon these reserves, and I think it is desirable to get them away from city life. No hon. member will question the wisdom of getting the Indians away from contact with the cities. It is difficult under present legislation to deal with these Indian reserves; and as I understand it, this Bill will make the process a little more easy, and at the same time adequately protect the Indians and the public. I do not know a piece of legislation which so thoroughly protects the interest of the public and the Indians as this legislation, by which a reference is first made to the Exchequer Court; then it comes to the House and must go through both Houses of Parliament, and finally the Governor in Council deals with the question. It is impossible to throw more safeguards around a question of this kind than is being done by the arrangement made by the Minister of the Interior. With the growth and development and the advance in settlement in all parts of the country, it is recognized that we must do something to deal with the Indian reserves. Personally I would be in favour of a policy that would place the Indians on a basis of individual citizenship where we could get them, after a few generations, entirely off the hands of the Government from the standpoint of being wards. I know a large number of Indians, in the West particularly, who are well fitted to-day to take up the full rights of individual citizenship and be established upon farms and carry them on successfully. On the other hand, it would take some time to educate and develop other bands of Indians; but it would be a wise policy on the part of the Government to take steps of that kind. In the meantime, measures must be provided to deal with this question, and under the strictest regulations, and I believe the minister has discovered a method by which this can be done successfully.

Mr. OLIVER: Does the hon. member expect the Indians of that reserve to get the full value of their reserve ?

Mr. STEVENS: I have no hesitation in saying that, in so far as I am concerned, I would not ask the department to sanction anything short of the Indians getting a just and fair value for that reserve.

Mr. OLIVER: Has the hon. member any idea as to how they are going to get it?

Mr. STEVENS: I have an idea, but I do not think this is the proper time or place to give it.

Mr. BORDEN: The Indians are really in a very good position according to the statement of my hon. friend, because it seems they have received a considerable sum of money as compensation for this land, and the land is still held by the Government of Canada as trustees for them.

Mr. OLIVER: The only failure with that theory is that it goes on the supposition that the British Columbia Government do not know what they are doing; that they are a Government of fools, and that they are wasting the money of the people of British Columbia in handing it out to a band of Indians not knowing what they are handing it out for. That I think is a mistake. I have said before and I say again that, when the British Columbia Government handed out that money to those Indians, they had an understanding either with this Government or with members of this Government as to how they were going to be recouped for that money; either that or they are fit candidates for the penitentiary. It is either one or the other; there is no other recourse. They have taken the money of the people of British Columbia and have handed it out to a band of Indians. Now, either they have got value or they have not got value. If they have got value, they have got it by an understanding with this Government whereby the Indians sold their property for less than half what it is worth; and if they have not got value, then they have robbed the treasury of British Columbia. You can put it either way you like, but it is one way or the other. And I say that under the circumstances I certainly cannot be a party to supporting a provision such as contained in this Bill. My hon. friend has suggested that the conditions in Vancouver demand the legislation proposed in this Bill. There is legislation already provided—has been since 1911—that absolutely provides for the case in the city of Vancouver, or can be used to provide for such a case, whereby the interests of the Indians will be absolutely protected and the well-being of Vancouver will be equally protected. There is no difficulty about it. But the Government, or the department, did not see fit to take action under that Act. I did not say that this Government removed the Indians from this reserve. I said that this Government, which is the guardian of the Indians, permitted their removal from this reserve, permitted the burning of their buildings, such as they were. The Government either are the guardians of the Indians or they are not. I take it that they are the guardians of the Indians; and if so it was their business, if the Indians were making an improvident bargain, to see to it that they did not make that improvident bargain. If the Indians had anything to sell they were under the guardianship of this Government, and it was the business of this Government to see that they did not sell it for less than its value. That, I think, will be admitted. On the other hand, if the British Columbia Government took the money of the people of British Columbia and handed it to a band of ragged, dirty Indians, without getting value, then the British Columbia Government ought to be in jail.

Mr. STEVENS: The hon. gentleman is entirely wrong in his supposition. He is aware that the British Columbia Government made certain specific claims for reversionary rights. They are acting in good faith, and acting properly. There is a difference of opinion on the subject of those reversionary rights, but the Government have repeatedly stated just what their position was. When he charges the British Columbia Government with a criminal act, he knows that he is stretching it very far. They acted in good faith and within what they believed to be their rights. We believe they are mistaken in the assumption of that right, and the matter is now in process of very reasonable and successful settlement. It takes some time to settle an intricate question of that kind, but there is every prospect of a reasonable and satisfactory settlement, satisfactory to the British Columbia Government, to this Government, to the Indians and to the public at large. As to the hon. gentleman's reference to these Indians as a dirty and ragged band, I do not see why the hon. gentleman should use that language. They are Indians, industrious and hard-working —fishermen most of them—and there is no reason for the imputation he makes against them. We are the guardians of the Indians, and so far as we in the West are concerned, we do all we can to help them along. I do not suppose he really means what he says, but simply wants to add ginger to his remarks.

Mr. OLIVER: I am delighted to hear that these Indians are what the hon. gentleman says. I spoke of them only as I have seen them spoken of, as a very degenerate band of Indians who were not at all desirable to be where they were or competent to do their own business. If they are of the better character, I am very glad to know it, and I again come to the point that if they were doing business with the Government of British Columbia, and that Government were acting in good faith, then this Government was not acting in good faith in allowing the British Columbia Government to deal with these Indians as these Indians were dealt with.

Mr. ROCHE: This Government knew nothing about the matter until the deal was over and the houses burnt. That is my information on the subject, and I repudiate the assertion of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. OLIVER: If the hon. minister did not know he is the only man in Parliament who did not know, because the House was informed at the time by the British Columbia papers that this transaction was in progress. Yet no steps were taken either then or afterwards to deal with the matter. The hon. gentleman was certainly informed, the House was thoroughly informed, before the buildings were burned. It was all published in the newspapers. And I say now that if the department did not know, then the department should have known. It was the department's business to know. These Indians are their wards, and this property was worth a very large amount of money and the Government knew it. It is no excuse to say they did not know when everybody else in Canada knew.

Mr. BORDEN: So far as the Government is concerned we are not very much concerned by my hon. friend's opinion of the Government of British Columbia; the Government of British Columbia is responsible to the people of that province and not to him. They may have equally strong opinions about him, for anything we know. But all these matters are entirely irrelevant. This Government realizes that in respect of these lands it stands as trustee for the Indians and will maintain the Indians' rights. As was said last session, the supposed surrender not having been accompanied with the formalities provided for by the Indian Act, does not affect the title as we understand it. The position we took last session is the position we hold today. So far as this section is concerned, which is the matter under consideration at the present time, some hon. gentlemen have dealt with it as if some attempt was being made to rob the Indians of their land. The ordinary individual in this country is subject to powers of expropriation exercised not only by the federal Government but by railway corporations. The rights of the Indians under this legislation are preserved to this extent—that there must be in effect, what is equivalent to a special Act of Parliament before they can be interfered with even for public purposes. You have in the first place the responsibility of the Government through the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs exercised along a defined line. Then you have the judgment of the Exchequer Court exercised along the same line. Lastly, and after all that has been done upon due consideration and inquiry in court, nothing can proceed until Parliament ratifies it. So, as I have said, a special Act of Parliament must be passed to accomplish in respect of the Indian reserves what can be accomplished in the case of the property of the ordinary citizen by merely an administrative act of the Government or by a railway corporation. I would be sorry indeed to have any legislation passed that would in the slightest degree be capable of use for the purpose of injustice to the Indian. I realize some strength in one criticism of my hon. friend which I have discussed with my hon. colleague the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs. I refer to what is contained in lines 20 and 21, of page 2 of the Bill, the words 'or which contains more land than is necessary for the use of the band.' The object of the resolution in the first instance and of this extended legislation was to so deal with the land which might be situated in a particular part of the country whose development it would retard that that land might be acquired without injustice to the Indians and with due provision for the Indian elsewhere.

I am not at all sure that the expression

'or which contains more land than is necessary for the use of the band' is really required for the purposes of the Bill as based upon the principles that have been laid down, and I would suggest to my hon. friend the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs that if he sees no valid objection to it, these words might be struck out of the Bill, which would still contain all provisions that are really necessary to carry out the purposes for which it is intended.

Mr. MARCIL: Why not say: 'When any portion of a reserve is required for public purposes?' I am pressing this point because I asked the Minister of the Interior a few days ago if application had been made for the taking over of a portion of the Restigouche reserve and he informed me that a company had asked for land there, but that the Indians had refused to surrender it. Under these provisions this same company can make application and proceed to make out a case to the Exchequer Court and obtain the land. I am prepared to support this measure if altered but I do not want legislation to be passed here which will enable these reserves to be used for private purposes, as they would be in the case of the Restigouche reserve, opposite Campbellton. A company has land there with a saw-mill upon it; they are looking around for property for the purpose of erecting a pulp mill, they have taken up options all along the Restigouche river. They have applied to the Indians for land in their reserve for the establishment of a pulp mill, but the Indians have refused to give it. Under these conditions the company can go to the Exchequer Court and show that the Indians occupy more land than they need, that the reserve is so situated as materially to retard the natural development of the surrounding country, and if it is believed that the company will employ a large number of men and materially assist the development of the country, the Exchequer Court will grant the application. In the shape of a ministerial measure the matter will soon pass through Parliament and the Indians be dispossessed. Give me legislation that will provide for the taking possession of the lands of the Indians upon an equitable basis, and I will support it, but under the legislation now proposed the company referred to may secure the land of the Indians, which they could not secure otherwise, not for public purposes but solely for their own private use. The counties of Restigouche, Bonaventure and Gaspé have urged upon the Government for years the necessity of the linking up of the Gaspé railway with the Intercolonial and of building a highway and a railway bridge connecting Campbellton with the county of Bonaventure. This railway would pass through the Indian reserve; for a purpose of that kind there would be no possible objection to the acquiring of the land. If the town of Campbellton should make application for a portion of this reserve for public purposes, I would have no objection whatever, but I am afraid that we are putting through legislation by which we are helping a company—a company of Americans at that, from Portland, Maine—to dispossess these Indians, who have been on their reserve for over half a century. I think the matter is well worthy of consideration.

Mr. BORDEN: My hon. friend is, I think, unduly apprehensive. I would not imagine that any superintendent general of Indian affairs would undertake to exercise the powers conferred upon him under this Act for the individual interests of a company or syndicate. The reserve in regard to which any changes are proposed to be made must be within the immediate neighbourhood of a town or city, or must be so situated as materially to retard the natural development of the surrounding country. And there is something more than that. The question to be referred to the Exchequer Court is whether, having regard to the interests of the public—not of a company or syndicate—and having regard to the interests of the Indians of the band, it is expedient that the Indians should be removed. Before action may be taken, the judge must determine that it is in the interests of the public and in the interests of the band that they should be removed. If, after having inquired into the evidence and after having heard the Indians, represented by counsel, the judge should find that it is expedient to remove the Indians, the matter must come before the high court of Parliament and be sanctioned by Parliament before any further steps may be taken. Under those circumstances it seems to me that it is impossible to imagine that the provisions of the statute will be made to subserve any merely individual interests. That is not the idea at all; the idea is that the courts shall determine whether or not removal is in the interests of the Indians and in the interests of the public.

9 p.m.

In the event of removal, the Indians shall be fully compensated in every respect and provided for elsewhere.

Mr. MARCIL: I am sorry to be obliged to insist upon this matter, but there has been nothing as yet to show by whom application for this land is to be made.

Mr. BORDEN: There is no question of application at all.

Mr. MARCIL: If the minister refers a case to the Exchequer Court, he will do so, presumably, because somebody suggested that a portion of this reserve should be taken for some public purpose, or otherwise. If this application came from the Atlantic and Lake Superior railway, from the Intercolonial railway, from the town of Campbellton or from any public body and if the land were to serve a public purpose, I would not find fault, because I think the interests of the public are supreme, but in this case we do not know who the application may come from.

Mr. BORDEN: In this respect the legislation is exactly the same as the Act was found in 1911. No application was contemplated; it was supposed that the superintendent general of Indian Affairs would keep himself acquainted with the conditions in connection with these reserves throughout the country and I presume that it was expected that when a certain condition forced itself upon his attention, he might, after careful consideration, make the reference to the Exchequer Court of Canada which is provided for in the statute.

Mr. ROCHE: The interpretation placed upon this section by the hon. member for Edmonton is evidently that, where there is too much land or more than is necessary for the Indians, for that reason alone the reference can be made to the Exchequer Court. As the Act was not intended primarily to cover that condition, I would have no objection to striking out the words 'or which contains more land than is necessary for the use of the band' in the third and fourth lines of subsection 1 of section 6, and I beg to move accordingly.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. OLIVER: I think the amendment proposed by the minister certainly removes the most objectionable feature of the Bill. My view is that in the former Act Parliament went as far as Parliament was entitled to go in authorizing a trespass upon the rights of the Indian, and I cannot agree to going so far as the amended section goes, which gives the Government the right to interfere with the Indian reserve whether it has a particular value or not. Any reserve that comes within the limitations still left—if it is near a town, or if it is in the way of the development of the country—may be sold whether it has any serious value or not, and the Indians displaced and put elsewhere. I say that such a provision is simply an ignoring by Parliament of the treaties made between the King and the Indians, and that Parliament should not be a party to such a transaction. What was done in the Act of 1911 was an extreme measure to deal with an extreme case, and that is as far as Parliament should go.

Mr. CARVELL: I am very glad that the minister has seen fit to eliminate what appeared to me to be the most objectionable part of this legislation, but even then I do not think he goes far enough. As has been stated by the hon. member for Edmonton, either we are the custodians of the Indians and their property, or we are not. Anybody who knows the resourcefulness of people throughout the country—I am not referring to one set of politicians more than to another—can see how readily some people can get up some sort of an excuse to justify the department taking action. Two illustrations have been given this afternoon and evening: one was the Kitsilano reserve in British Columbia; certain people wanted that land, and they got it. The member for Vancouver and the minister may explain it in any way they like, but the fact remains that the Indians have lost their land and the people who wanted it have got it. The other, was the case down in New Brunswick. A certain gentleman wanted the lumber or the land of that reserve, and he got it through this department without any trouble. True, that by the vigilance of some people, myself included, the man has been compelled to pay a fairly good price, though even then probably only part of what the land is worth. If this Bill goes through even as amended, and leaves in the words:

> Or which is so situated as to materially retard the development of the surrounding country.

I can readily see how certain designing gentlemen might convince the minister that it is necessary to get rid of the rest of the reserve in order not to retard the development of the country. It looks to me as if this was a scheme by which every small Indian reserve in Canada may be obliterated, and the gentlemen who are supporting my hon. friends opposite will have ability and originality enough to devise some scheme by which these lands will be sold. My hon. friend knows how resourceful people are when dealing with a friendly Government. Perhaps the most useless provision in the whole Bill is that by which the minister provides for counsel for the Indians. We know how easy it is to provide counsel who are not working for the Indians, but for the people who want the Indians' land. To my mind, that is the most objectionable clause in the whole Bill. I think that this section should be entirely eliminated. We have already legislation to deal with a reserve in the vicinity of a large city, but here you are bringing it down to a reserve near any little town of 2,000 or 3,000 people. You are putting it into the hands of designing people to get the Indians' land, and the Indians cannot help themselves.

Section agreed to. Yeas, 43; nays, 17.

Mr. MARCIL: I did not vote as I was paired with the Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty).

Mr. GUTHRIE: I am paired with the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster). Otherwise, I would have voted against the section.

On section 9—restriction Indian dances, etc.

Mr. CARROLL: I want a little information from the minister. It might more properly be asked for on section 1, but perhaps the minister may give it to me now. Does the Department of Indian Affairs make any provision for the upkeep of young Indians who may be sent to reformatories for petty offences?

Mr. ROCHE: I understand they have to be committed by a judge of the province.

Mr. CARROLL: Under the provisions of our criminal law a person under the age of 18, instead of being sent to a penitentrary, may be sent to a reformatory, or, as we call it in Nova Scotia, an industrial school. They are kept in confinement at those schools, but are taught certain trades. The municipality or town from which the culprit goes pays a portion of his upkeep providing the parents are not in a position to do so. I want to find out whether the department pays a certain proportion of the upkeep of a young Indian sent to a reformatory?

Mr. ROCHE: No.

Mr. CARROLL: I just wish to bring to the attention of the department this fact. In our large cities with Indian reserves in the vicinity, young Indians like other people get into trouble. They commit offences and may be sent either to the penitentiary, to the common jail, or to a reformatory. Our stipendiary magistrates and judges try these cases—mostly stipendiary magistrates—and in the majority of cases the young Indians are sent to the common jail, where they do not receive proper care. I am talking of Indians under the age of 18. In Nova Scotia, we have both a Protestant and a Catholic reformatory. The Catholic offender is sent by the stipendiary magistrate to the Catholic reformatory, and the Protestant offender to the Protestant reformatory at Halifax, but Indians do not get the same justice, for the reason that they do not pay any taxes to the city or municipality. The city or municipality must pay a part of the upkeep of the inmates from its particular locality in these reformatories. I have talked with the stipendiary magistrate in Sydney and he has said to me: The city will not stand for me sending these young Indians to the reformatory because the municipality will have to pay for their upkeep. The provincial Government pays one-third, the municipality one-third, and the home provides something further as a matter of charity. The magistrate stated that it would not be fair to send these young Indians to the reformatory because the Indians do not pay anything towards the taxes of the city and therefore he had to send the Indians to the common jail. My hon. friend knows what common jails are for young people whether they are Indians or white people. I bring this to his attention so that the department may give it some further consideration and, perhaps, at some future time, something may be done towards bringing in an amendment to meet this particular difficulty.

Bill reported.

On the motion for the third reading of the Bill:

Mr. OLIVER: With reference to the section with regard to permission to Indians to participate in shows, this matter was discussed the other night and we were not quite clear as to whether this prohibition applied to the interchange of visits among reserves for the purpose of attending festival and ceremonial dances.

Mr. ROCHE: No, it does not.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

FOREST RESERVES AND PARKS ACT.

The House again in Committtee on Bill No. 137, to amend the Dominion Forest Reserves and Parks Act.

On section 1—schedule to Dominion Forest Reserves and Parks Act amended:

Hon. W. J. ROCHE (Minister of the Interior): The Bill is intended to make a considerable addition to the forest reserves in Saskatchewan, enlarging them from 1,801 square miles to 7,910 square miles. In Alberta there is no alteration whatever. In British Columbia there are added 1·5 square miles and eliminated 1·75 square miles, making very little alteration.

Mr. OLIVER: Where is the elimination?

Mr. ROCHE: There is an elimination at Long Lake Forest reserve of 1·5 square miles and at Larch Hills of 1·75 square miles. In Manitoba the Bill cuts off 36 miles from the northwest corner of the Riding Mountain Forest reserve, reducing the area there from 4,180·5 to 4,072 square miles. The reason of this is that the reserve cuts into the municipality of Bolton and the municipal council have petitioned us representing that they desire to have this land for taxation purposes. The area has been examined and pronounced fit for agricultural purposes and the municipal authorities are desirous of having it included in the municipality.

Mr. OLIVER: Has the minister considered the desirability of withdrawing the Lake Manitoba Forest reserve in Dauphin? It is between lake Dauphin and lake Manitoba, and consists of about seven townships. It is closely settled. I was advised while I was minister that there was no good warrant for maintaining it as a forest reserve, and I was under the impression that I had provided for its elimination. There is one small timber limit on it. I was discussing this with the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Cruise), and he did not think it should be maintained as a reserve.

Mr. ROCHE: The seven townships on the west side of lake Manitoba were pronounced fit for agricultural purposes, and there is a branch of the Canadian Northern railway running into that country which will penetrate the reserve and go farther north. The area has been withdrawn from the forest reserve.

Mr. OLIVER: Has that withdrawal taken place under this schedule?

Mr. ROCHE: No, the townships were withdrawn before, and it is my intention to have them thrown open for entry in the ordinary procedure this summer.

Mr. OLIVER: The reserve was withdrawn, but the proceedings have not yet been taken to throw it open for entry?

Mr. ROCHE: Yes.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—paragraph 7 of schedule amended:

Mr. OLIVER: The minister might say as we go on what the particular reserve is, and what the change is.

Mr. ROCHE: First, Long Lake; second, Larch Hill.

Mr. OLIVER: Increase or decrease?

Mr. ROCHE: The former decreased by 1.5 miles and the latter by 1.75.

Section agreed to.

On section 3—paragraph 10 of schedule amended:

Mr. ROCHE: This provides for the area taken from the Riding Mountain.

Mr. OLIVER: In regard to the Riding Mountain reserve, the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Cruise) left with me a return in which I find the following letter:

Office of the Riding Mountain Forest Reserve,
Kelwood, Man., November 12, 1912.

Sir,—Enclosed find report of P. T. Allen, forest assistant on townships 24 and 25, range 27, W., in the Riding Mountain forest reserve. I am of the opinion that this is a fair and impartial report, and is an accurate description of the land and conditions contained in those two townships. J. W. Curry was on this work with Mr. Allen and they made a thorough inspection as directed to do. The map of this territory will follow in a few days, as it is not quite completed at the time of writing; it will convey a fairly good idea of the amount of water, sloughs and timbered land, as well as stony ridges; there are also a large number of photographs that will be of value to show the nature of the reproduction, and the general looks of the country.

I am satisfied now, as I always was, that this is forest land and not fit for agricultural purposes, and if it is out of the reserve we will know it is for political reasons only.

Your obedient servant,
(Sgd) Albert McLeod,
Supervisor.

R. H. Campbell, Esq.,
Directory of Forestry,
Ottawa.

Mr. ROCHE: I have reports here quite to the contrary. The present supervisor, the Inspector of Forest Reserves, and the Homestead Inspector, report in its favour. There is a resolution passed by the municipal council, signed by Mr. Armstrong, secretary-treasurer, stating that the municipality desires to see it open as there is no timber on the same, and it is suitable for agricultural purposes. There is a letter from the reeve, Mr. Hemboff, a strong political opponent of mine, who sends forward a resolution of the council, stating that it should be thrown open for homesteading. The preponderance of evidence seems to be for its withdrawal.

Mr. OLIVER: I am not familiar with the case myself, but there seems to be quite a strong sentiment. In view of the discussions between the minister and myself in former years, in regard to the settlement at Clear Like in the Riding Mountain reserve, has that been completely disposed of?

Mr. ROCHE: There is no settlement there now.

Section agreed to.

On section 4—Porcupine Forest reserve.

Mr. OLIVER: That seems to be a very large addition. My understanding of the purpose of these forest reserves was that by their reservation the source of water supply would be conserved. Is this part of the Porcupine Hills a source of water supply?

Mr. ROCHE: It covers the headwaters of a large number of important rivers. It is reported that the soil is nowhere of permanent agricultural value.

Mr. OLIVER: Under present circumstances, when our homestead lands are within measurable distance of exhaustion in the vicinity of existing railroads, there should not be reserved such an enormous tract of land as this unless the Government is thoroughly satisfied that there is no considerable portion of it available for homesteads. On the face of it, it would seem hardly reasonable that there is in that country such an immense area that does not contain land suitable for homesteading. If the department has thoroughly examined the country and is satisfied, of course there is nothing more to be said. I merely draw attention to the fact that this is a time when there should be more than ordinary care taken before reserving lands from homestead settlement. I observe that a large part of the area has been township surveyed.

Mr. ROCHE: I made particular inquiry as to this land. It was selected and temporarily set aside the year before last and I notice that resolutions have been passed by the associated boards of trade in the West urging us to enlarge these forest reserves for the conservation of water and for re-forestration. The officers report that these lands are not available from an agricultural standpoint.

Section agreed to.

On section 5—Cypress Hills.

Mr. OLIVER: I would be quite ready to support the minister in fairly drastic action in securing considerable reservation on the crest of the Cypress Hills, and for an expenditure for the purposes of afforestration. There is an area, above all others in the West, where good can be done by securing the conservation of the water supply at the source of the streams flowing both north and south. I must plead guilty to not having taken very drastic action when I was minister in making large reserves there, but as the present minister seems to be willing to make large reservations I desire to place before him the fact that the summit of the Cypress Hills is above all other territory in the prairie provinces the place where it is desirable there should be afforestration. I would be quite willing to go a very considerable distance in support of the minister in acquiring lands in the proper localities and in making provisions for the growth of forest upon these lands, believing that a very great good can be done by that policy.

Mr. ROCHE: This is a new reservation situated near Seward and Webb on the Canadian Pacific railway main line. It has been reported on as a suitable place for this reservation. The Minister of Agriculture for the Province of Saskatchewan suggested in 1907 that as there was not yet sufficient forest in Saskatchewan to provide for the settlers, this area of agricultural land should be reserved and reforested. In response to a request of this character this reserve has been created.

Mr. OLIVER: Is it west or east of Maple Creek?

Mr. ROCHE: East, I think.

Mr. OLIVER: I have found it on the map; it is not very far from Swift Current.

I have travelled over that railway very frequently and I do not happen to have in mind any territory answering the description that my hon. friend has given. I almost think that he is running this reserve business a little into the ground.

Mr. ROCHE: Do you not think the Minister of Agriculture of Saskatchewan is pretty well acquainted with the neighbourhood?

Mr. OLIVER: I will admit that he ought to be and, of course, he has an interest in the matter. The responsibility, however, is here; and again I say that to make a reservation on the main line of the Canadian Pacific railway, that is absolutely accessible to settlement, is a rather serious responsibility unless there is remarkably good reason for it.

Mr. ROCHE: It would have been taken up before now if it had been fit for agriculture.

Section agreed to.

On subsection 33—Elbow Forest reserve:

Mr. ROCHE: This is a new reserve.

Mr. OLIVER: Is it west of the Elbow?

Mr. ROCHE: It is 70 miles northwest of Moosejaw, and about 80 miles directly south of Saskatoon.

Mr. OLIVER: Is it west of the Saskatchewan river?

Mr. ROCHE: The area proposed for the reserve is 119 square miles; and consists of two parts, one lying immediately west of the Saskatchewan river, at what is known as 'The Elbow' of said river, the other lying three or four miles east of the Saskatchewan river.

Mr. OLIVER: These lands are being set aside as forest reserves, although as a matter of fact there is no forest there. Is it the intention of the Government to establish forests, or is this merely a name used for the purpose of establishing a reservation?

Mr. ROCHE: The intention is to reforest. It is land, as I understand it, that is unfit for agricultural purposes and has not been settled upon, although in an old and settled part of the province. It has been recommended as suitable only for reforestation.

Subsection agreed to.

On subsection 35—Keppel Forest reserve:

Mr. OLIVER: Where is that?

[Mr. Oliver.]

Mr. ROCHE: That is a new reserve consisting of three blocks, and comprising 86.25 square miles lying southeast of Battleford, in the province of Saskatchewan.

Subsection agreed to.

On subsection 36—Manitou Forest reserve:

Mr. ROCHE: This is a new reserve, comprising a broken and hilly tract of 180 square miles, lying immediately south of Manitou lake, and reaching to the western boundary of Saskatchewan.

Sub-section agreed to.

On subsection 37—Steep Creek Forest reserve.

Mr. ROCHE: This is a new reserve comprising seven square miles, lying about 15 miles east of Prince Albert.

Sub-section agreed to.

On subsection 38—Big River Forest reserve:

Mr. ROCHE: This is a new reserve, comprising 1,373 square miles northwest of Prince Albert.

Mr. OLIVER: This big reservation is a very large one. What is the idea in regard to it.

Mr. ROCHE: This is intended to form a water shed. The tract is a rolling plain to the east and southeast; to the west and southwest it is quite hilly. The elevation of the country ranges from 1,500 to 1,900 feet above sea level. The general slope of the country is to the north and northwest, it being the headwater of the Crooked river, Big river and Chitok river, which are branches of the Beaver river, one of the large tributaries of the Churchill river. Sloughs and muskegs are numerous. The soil is sandy. The timber is mostly aspen, spruce and jackpine, but balsam and tamarack are also found. The tract has suffered a great deal from fires. Reproduction is as a rule very good. There are no settlers within the proposed reserve. The forest survey was made by an expert of the Forest School of the University of Toronto.

Mr. McKAY: Has the hon. minister any amendments to propose to section 38? I notice there are some sections in the description given now that were drawn to my attention some time ago.

Mr. ROCHE: I think we eliminated those that the hon. gentleman has in mind.

Mr. McKAY: I notice that in lines 29 and 30 there are some sections included that were drawn to my attention, and also in line 38. The sections that I would like to have excluded are all the sections in township 54 and the south halves of township 55, ranges 7, 8 and 9. I notice these are included in the Bill I have before me.

Mr. ROCHE: I understood that the hon. gentleman had gone over this Bill with the superintendent, and that this section was arranged between them.

Mr. McKAY: At the time I went over the Bill we excluded those sections brought to my attention at the time. Since then there are other sections; and if I remember correctly, I wrote to the minister in regard to the matter.

Mr. ROCHE: The hon. member knows the country better than I do. If he will vouch for it that these are agricultural lands, I do not wish to include them.

Mr. McKAY: The information that I have received is to the effect that they are suitable for agriculture. I move:

That subsection 38 be amended by striking out the following words and figures where they occur in lines 29 and 30, all of the sections of township 54, range 9, not included in the Indian reserve No. 118.

Subsection, as amended, agreed to.

On subsection 39—Sturgeon Forest reserve:

Mr. OLIVER: Where is this?

Mr. ROCHE: This is a new reserve lying northwest of Prince Albert and immediately east of Sturgeon river. This tract covers the watershed between Churchill river on the north and the Saskatchewan river on the south, and is drained to the north by Big river and Red Deer river and to the south by Sturgeon river and Little Red Deer river.

Subsection agreed to.

On subsection 40—Pasquia Forest reserve:

Where is this reserve?

Mr. ROCHE: In central eastern Saskatchewan. The tract is elevated and broken, reaching an elevation of 2,000 feet, which is about 1,000 feet above the elevation of the surrounding country. Several large streams have their rise in this tract. The forest cover consists of white and black spruce also poplar and aspen. Some jackpine, larch and balsam fir also occur.

Mr. OLIVER: A very large area is it not?

Mr. ROCHE: Yes, a very important watershed.

Mr. OLIVER: From what I have heard of that country it is more desirable to get rid of the water than to conserve it. That is the great difficulty—there is too much water.

Subsection agreed to. Section 6 agreed to.

On section 7 :

Mr. WARNOCK: Before this section passes, I have been requested to discuss with the minister the grazing leases in the forest reserve, but if I could have an opportunity to discuss that subject on the Estimates, I should not need to take it up now.

Mr. ROCHE: That opportunity will be afforded.

Mr. WARNOCK: There is just one matter to which I wish to call attention. A good many years ago an Order in Council was passed prohibiting the use of sheep on an area from the international boundary on the south to High river on the north and west to range 27 or 28. It was passed at the instigation of some of the large ranchers of that country. I would like to know if that Order in Council is still in force, and whether the minister proposes to have it rescinded with regard to the forest reserves.

Mr. ROCHE: Is the area referred to within a forest reserve?

Mr. WARNOCK: Some of the forest reserves are within it; one that I have particularly in mind being the Porcupine reserve.

Mr. ROCHE: The Order in Council is still in force.

Mr. WARNOCK: I will discuss it on the Estimates.

Mr. OLIVER: To what locations does this section 7 apply? That is not clear from the Bill.

Mr. ROCHE: The Miskonlith reserve is in the province of British Columbia. It covers an area of two square miles. And paragraph 2 of section 7 is to correct the description of the Rocky Mountains Forest reserve, which was incorrect through a clerical error.

Mr. OLIVER: What is the effect of it?

Mr. ROCHE: It does not affect any area.

Section agreed to.

Mr. OLIVER: Before the Bill is reported, I desire to ask the minister with regard to the reserve for military purposes in the province of Alberta—three townships south and the south branch. This was set apart of the Red Deer river, between the Red Deer and the South Saskatchewan. This was set apart some years ago for purposes in connection with the Militia Department. I understand that a lease has been granted of these three townships to some organization for some purpose connected with rearing and supplying horses for military use. If the matter has not been up before and the minister could give in a few words what the arrangement is, I should be glad. What I had in mind is this—that a number of these so-called forest reserves that are being set aside under this Act will be necessarily treated as grazing areas, and I presume under arrangements to be made from time to time. I should like to know just what has been done in regard to this one to which I have referred. Though not a forest reserve, it is a reservation for Government purposes and I suppose in this respect will be in much the same position as the forest reserves which we have just declared.

Mr. ROCHE: The matter is one concerning which I have not much personal knowledge. The area was set apart some years ago for the Militia Department, and therefore any lease that has been issued has been issued by that department and not by the Department of the Interior. I wish to explain an amendment which I propose to this Bill. I propose an amendment to the Bill to be known as section 5 (a). The effect of the section is to withdraw the south west quarter of section 6, township 44, range 8, west of the 4th meridian, from the Buffalo Park reserve. This is across the river from the rest of the reserve, has never been fenced in. It was given as a homestead entry and the man has qualified. This was recommended some years ago by Mr. McIntyre, then representative of Strathcona, but never formally recognized by Act of Parliament.

Amendment agreed to.

Bill as amended reported.

[Mr. Roche.]

On the motion for the third reading of the Bill:

Mr. OLIVER: The estimates for forestry have not yet been taken up?

Mr. ROCHE: No.

Mr. OLIVER: There are some matters I wish to discuss and I will take them up on those estimates.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

WINNIPEG JOINT TERMINALS.

On motion of Hon. J. D. Reid (acting Minister of Railways and Canals), Bill No. 181, respecting the entrance of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Comapny and the Canadian Northern Railway Company into their joint terminals at the city of Winnipeg, was read the second time and the House went into Committee thereon, Mr. Blondin in the Chair.

On section 1—agreement of April 10, 1911, confirmed:

Mr. OLIVER: In the absence of the leader of the Opposition and of the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals, I think that the acting Minister of Railways had better make an explanation of this Bill.

Mr. REID: In April, 1911, the Minister of Railways and Canals, the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company and the Canadian Northern Railway Company entered into an agreement whereby the Grand Trunk Pacific railway would have the right to use the terminals of the Canadian Northern railway in the city of Winnipeg. For some reason, no Bill was passed in the House confirming that agreement, and this Bill is introduced merely for that purpose. A schedule showing the terms of the agreement is printed with the Bill. As the hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. Graham) who made this agreement, is not present this evening, I would suggest that the committee pass the Bill and allow it to stand for third reading and if there is anything wrong in the Bill the hon. member for South Renfrew and myself will take it up later.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Is there not a case before the Supreme Court at present in connection with this agreement?

Mr. REID: If I remember rightly, there is a case before the Exchequer Court as to the value of the land taken by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company for terminals, but that does not in any way affect this agreement.

On section 2—use of railway tracks confirmed notwithstanding encumbrances:

Mr. MACDONALD: Will my hon. friend explain what he apprehends that the effect of section 2 will be?

Mr. REID: The effect of this section is that the Grand Trunk Pacific railway is to continue to use the terminals, notwithstanding any foreclosure of bonds or mortgages, subject, of course, to the payment of the rental of $30,000 per annum, as set forth in the schedule.

Mr. MACDONALD: The object of this section is to provide that if there be foreclosure of mortgage securing the bonds of the Canadian Northern Railway Company, the lease will not be swept away by an order of the court providing for sale and possession subsequent to sale?

10 p.m.

Mr. REID: That is the object.

Mr. LEMIEUX: When may we expect a similar Bill with regard to the agreement between the Transcontinental railway and the other lines at Quebec?

Mr. REID: I do not know whether or not a Bill is necessary; at all events, negotiations are going on and the matter is, as I understand it, in good shape. As the hon. member knows, the matter has not come directly to my attention, but I will look it up and give him the information in a day or two.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported.

COLD STORAGE REGULATION.

On motion of Hon. Martin Burrell (Minister of Agriculture), Bill No. 113 to regulate Cold Storage Warehouses was read the second time, and the House went into Committee thereon, Mr. Blondin in the Chair.

On section 1—short title:

Mr. BURRELL: The intention of this Bill is to give statutory power to exercise what we may call reasonable and desirable control over the cold storage industry of the country in so far as it is connected with the food supply of the public. We thought it well to deal with it, if we deal with it at all, as a federal matter although it has been argued that it is more a matter of provincial concern. It has not been found to work very well in those States of the Union that have taken up the control of cold storage, and considering it more as a federal matter the Federal Government of the United States are now contemplating passing legislation in that direction. In the commerce connected with the food supplies of the whole country, cold storage, as every member of the House knows, is a factor of very recent importance, but of very extraordinary importance. I think possibly the best brief description of cold storage is this:

> Cold storage is essentially the application of scientific temperature control to the solution of an economic problem, namely the storage of the surplus of one season against the want of the next and of preventing the fluctuation of prices from below the cost of production at harvest to a point beyond the resources of the purse the remainder of the year.

As every one knows, the problem of the preservation of food from one season to another, or from a period of flush production to a period of scarce production is as old as life itself, and it is only by the artificial control of temperatures in recent years that the whole question of cold storage has come so prominently to the front, and has made it a matter of very special public interest. To use the words of one writer:

> Cold storage has enlarged the number of food products preservable in their original condition and created a new industry; it has largely removed the function of this class of food preservation from the scattered individual producers to large central establishments and thrown the business of accumulating and conserving surplus more fully into the hands of tradesmen. It has permitted the preservation of flesh foods in a raw state, which were never before so preservable; and it has so improved the quality of stored products whose current production never ceases entirely that in many cases the held goods cannot be distinguished from the fresh production.

I can only say for myself—and I think most members who have given this matter any consideration will agree with me—that the history and development of the whole cold storage movement is a great, if not, perhaps, an unmixed blessing. Like other businesses closely concerned with popular needs, it has its evils. There is a tendency, of course, to centralization and specialization, and it is partly, I think, because of this, and partly because of the increase in the cost of living in recent years, that there has been a good deal of criticism levelled at cold storage, chiefly along two lines: first, along the line of prices, it being assumed, in some quarters, that extortionate prices by cold storage men have led to an increase in the cost of living—and, secondly, largely on account of a misconception, criticism has been levelled against the health side of cold storage. It was on account of a lot of this criticism in the United States that various states put through legislation, some of it, however, not working out very well. It was only as recently as 1911 that the first state law was enacted in relation to cold storage—in the state of Indiana, I think it was. At the present time about eleven states have cold storage legislation, but there is no federal legislation. In a natural season of production, if we could assume that there was no such thing as the preserving of food products, the man who produces food does it first for himself, and then for the rest of the community. When their needs are supplied naturally the prices come down, and he is going to cease producing any more until prices give him at least some little profit for himself. Then comes a slack season of production and prices go up. Finally there is a season of no production, when prices amount to almost famine levels for any of the particular articles which are not produced at all. One might ask what is the actual effect of cold storage within the last ten or fifteen years on our modern commercial life. Briefly, I think I may put it in this way: That it enables the carrying of food products from a season of flush production to a time of no production or a minimum production, and this has resulted in a lowering of prices, and also enables a greater production because the man who can produce for a relatively larger market is going to produce more heavily than ever before. I think it would be well within the mark to state in connection with the criticism of the high prices that cold storage men have exacted in this country, and in the United States, that on the whole prices have been lower for the whole year than they would have been if we had no cold storage at all. It has been said by some people that speculation has entered into this question, and that prices have been held up at an absolutely unreasonable height; but those who have given any study to the matter at all will find that although speculation has sometimes entered into it to a regrettable extent, taking one year with another the man who goes into the cold storage business after all, perhaps, gets only a moderate profit. In this connection I would like to read a line or two of the report of the commission that was appointed some time ago by the Chicago Association of Commerce, which practically bears out the report of the Massachusetts committee, which probably gave more study to this question than any other committee. The commissioners say:

> Exhaustive examination of the statistics compiled under the direction of your committee, and a comparison of these statistics with the facts obtained by the Department of Agriculture, after an exhaustive research demonstrates clearly that the prices of butter, eggs, poultry and fish have been more uniform during the year since cold storage has become a factor in the care of food products than before that period. These statistics also show that taking an average for a period of years, prices on the whole have been lower than during the years when cold storage was unknown.

Dr. H. E. Barnard, State Food and Drug Commissioner of Indiana, has said that this statement is in substantial agreement with the conclusions reached by the Massachusetts committee, and that it is undoubtedly an accurate gauge of the effect of cold storage upon the price of foodstuffs. A good deal of criticism has been levelled at cold storage in connection with its health phase. On this point I would like to quote from probably the greatest authority on the continent, Dr. Mary E. Pennington, who is chief of the United tates Food Research Laboratory. In the examination held recently she was asked this question:

> How does the change that takes place at the end of twelve months of cold storage, 10 degrees F., compare with the change that takes place in the same product after twenty-four hours' exposure under the same circumstances before refrigeration?
>
> Dr. Pennington: There would probably be a greater change in twenty-four hours if the temperature was from 65 degrees to 75 degrees than if the temperature was 10 degrees F. for twelve months.
>
> Mr. Littlefield: That is to say, the ordinary food product that is kept in the house, without being kept in a refrigerator, under ordinary circumstances would show more deterioration than the same food product kept in cold storage for twelve months?
>
> Dr. Pennington: If the atmospheric temperature should be over 60 degrees, it would —that is in respect to chickens.—We have at the expiration of twelve months (in storage at 10 degrees F.) a change which is fairly comparable with the change at the end of fifteen days at 32 degrees F., and with the change at the end of five and a half days in a good house refrigerator, and which is very much less than the change at the end of three days at a temperature at from 65 to 75 degrees.
>
> Senator Commins: As to meat kept hard frozen for twelve months; would a chicken so kept and eaten at the end of twelve months be injurious to the health of the person who ate it?
>
> Dr. Pennington: I have eaten many of them and found them very palatable.

There has been a lot of discussion in regard to the effect of cold storage on eggs.

Dr. Pennington was asked by a member of the committee:

Will you be kind enough to say to the committee whether your results with reference to eggs are practically parallel with the results you have described in connection with poultry?

Dr. Pennington: The investigation or study of eggs has been practically along the same lines as the study of poultry. Eggs are more difficult to handle if anything and keep in good condition than poultry. Nature has set a limit on eggs herself. An egg ordinarily will not keep in good condition under refrigeration for more than ten months—between nine and ten months generally—and it must be an extra good egg that will hold in good condition for ten months. Eggs that are to be kept under refrigeration must be even more carefully selected than poultry which is to be kept hard frozen.

In other places she repeats that an egg will deteriorate more in twenty-four hours in a certain condition of temperature and humidity than in eight or nine months in cold storage. One other illustration I might give of the result in regard to fish because it has been stated that the effect of cold storage on fish is rather disastrous. The testimony of Dr. William J. Gies, Professor of Biological Chemistry, Columbia University, is interesting in this regard. He was asked:

Mr. Littlefield: Have you had occasion to examine fish that have been the subject of cold storage?

Dr. Gies: I have.

Mr. Littlefield: Please state to the committee what your experiments in that line have been?

Dr. Gies: Briefly stated, fish in cold storage for a year, blue fish for example, and fluke—when allowed to thaw in my office on an ordinary table at room temperature after 24 hours; (that is after the fish had softened) appeared to be practically identical with fresh fish of the same kind.

I am only giving these instances to show that there is a great deal of misconception about the effect of cold storage, from a health point of view, on food. The conclusion arrived at by practically all the authorities who have looked into this matter is that a vastly greater effect is to be attributed to the condition of the food when it goes into cold storage than the length of time in which it stays in cold storage.

As to the legislation on the subject, there are eleven states of the union which have acts on their statute books, but as these acts have only been in existence for the past two and a-half years there has not been time to see how they have worked out. In Pennsylvania they have a law which has been very much quoted and it is not at all popular, not only with a great many of the fruit producers and handlers but even with a good many portions of the public. In Massachusetts probably the law has worked out more satisfactorily, and I can give the committee roughly the lines upon which these cold storage bills run. We recently sent our cold storage commissioner, Mr. Ruddick, down to Boston, to Pennsylvania and to New York to to get into contact with the people connected with the operation of the cold storage laws and study them as closely as he could, to talk with the leading people interested in cold storage matters and to obtain such information as he could for the benefit of any legislation which might be brought forward here. At the present time in Canada we have about forty-six public cold storages, twenty-seven of which have received subsidies, or are at present receiving them from the Government; that is thirty per cent on the cost of construction. In this country there are something like fifty private cold storage establishments, abattoirs and other places of that kind. As nearly as I can learn the total cold storage capacity in Canada would be about 18,000,000 to 20,000,000 cubic feet, a very small amount when it is realized that in the city of Boston alone they have one company which is operating about 10,000,000 cubic feet of cold storage. As far as the actual quantity of food products going into cold storage both here and in the United States is concerned, I think that probably it would not amount to more than eight or ten per cent. As far as our own country goes, of course, the whole cold storage system is comparatively in the very beginning of its development. We have thought, therefore, that in this legislation it would be better not to fix any arbitrary limit of time, or to embody in the legislation some of the details that have been worked out in the state legislation across the line because they are continually altering their laws as they are found to be unsatisfactory. The whole thing is in an experimental stage and we thought that it would be better to ask the House to pass this Bill in such shape as to give power, by regulation, to deal with all the questions practically that have been dealt with in most of the legislation passed in the various states. I shall take the legislation in the States of Massachusetts and Pennsylvania as examples. In Pennsylvania they have an arbitrary time limit fixed during which food products may be kept in cold storage. It is provided that beef may be kept four months; pork, sheep, lamb, six months;

veal, three months; fowl, drawn, five months, undrawn, ten months; eggs, eight months; butter, nine months; fish, nine months. There are also certain regulations in regard to marking. The food or the container is to be marked with the date of receipt and withdrawal. The sale of food kept in cold storage outside of the state is prohibited if held for more than the time limit or unless marked as provided. Quarterly reports to the dairy and food commissioner are provided for and more frequently if required by such officer. In Massachusetts the law was approved on May 27 and it became effective on September 1, 1912. It includes fresh meat and fresh meat products, fresh fish, poultry, eggs and butter. There is a time limit of tmelve months which may be extended by the state board of health if the foods are still in good condition. Articles of food, except fish, or container, are to be marked with the date of receipt. Reports are to be made quarterly to the state board of health or more frequently if the board requires.

In various states they require from three to four reports a year to a yearly report. In this Bill we have provided, under section 4, that the regulations will deal with all these questions including the question of making returns to the Government to show exactly what is in cold storage. I think that, without wearying the committee any more as to the general lines upon which the Bill runs, I will leave the committee to take it up clause by clause.

Mr. ROBB: Would the minister explain how he will control importations ex cold storage from other countries?

Mr. BURRELL: We have not worked out that feature, and I cannot say just now exactly how the United States is dealing with that.

Mr. ROBB: The minister proposes to fix a time limit on cold storage in Canada, but supposing stuff had been in cold storage in Massachusetts for eight months and was then shipped to Canada, how is he going to help that?

Mr. BURRELL: I am not definitely proposing that we should exercise the power now to impose a time limit, and I am not sure it would be wise to do so with our present knowledge. In the Bill we are reserving the power to fix a time limit if our experience should justify the department in doing so. As to other stuff coming from cold storage to Canada, I presume that would be dealt with under the inspection of food.

Mr. OLIVER: The certificate given by the minister to cold storage and its operation would rather lead to the conclusion that there was no necessity for this Bill. Cold storage as carried on at present, as I would gather from the remarks of the minister, is altogether a benevolent and generally a beneficent institution. That being the case there does not seem to be any serious necessity for its regulation. I think the majority of the House will believe that notwithstanding the good opinion the minister has of cold storage, the principle of cold storage and its operation, its regulation by the authority of Parliament is entirely desirable. The principle which the minister announces as being the principle of cold storage, namely, that by this means the surplus of one season can be made to supply the scarcity of the following season to the benefit of the consumer and producer in both seasons, is a beautiful theory, but like many other theories it does not work out in practice. As a matter of fact, everybody believed when cold storage was begun that it was going to work exactly in the way the minister suggested, namely, that the producer was going to get more and the consumer was going to pay less, but after the experience of several years the general public have come to the conclusion that the way cold storage works out is that the consumer pays more and the producer gets less. It is generally believed now that the policy of holding perishable food products from season to season enables the dealer on a large scale in these products, who has cold storage facilities, to control the market both as to purchase and sale, as he could not do unless he had the facilities of cold storage. It is believed that as a matter of fact, having that control of the market, he uses the control to depress unduly the price to the producer by reason of his always having an available surplus on hand, and on the other hand to unduly enhance the cost to the consumer because he can always hold back the supply without it being destroyed by process of time. It is because of this condition, the very opposite of the theory which the minister places before the House, that regulation under Government authority becomes a necessity. While I do not agree with the minister's premises I do agree with his conclusion.

But while we want governmental regulation we want that regulation on the authority and with the knowledge of Parliament, as a means by which the public is aware of what is being done for its benefit. The minister has taken authority to do as he pleases in regard to the regulation of cold storage; in regard to the regulation of the supply and demand of a large percentage of the food of the people, without reference to any authority except his own will and that of his colleagues in the Cabinet. That is a fairly large order and for my own part I do not think it is an order that should be filled. I think that in all fairness, the Government if satisfied that regulation of such an important department of business and of life is necessary, should be prepared to inform the public through the medium of Parliament how far they propose to go in that regulation. The fact still remains that cold storage ought to be a public benefit, and it is by means of legislation that we hope to secure that benefit to the public that we do not secure at the present time. Before we give authority to the minister, we would like to know how far the interests of the public are to be protected, if they are to be protected; how far the present conditions of monopoly are to be affected; whether they are to be perpetuated, or whether the interests of the public are to be left in the condition they are in to-day. It is not a small matter; it is a very great matter, and I and others think that before the Government ask for such wide authority they should be in a position to inform the House to what extent they expect to exercise that authority, and in fact to, so far as possible, take authority direct from Parliament so that the public would know how far they are being protected and how far they are not. I think legislation on the subject is entirely desirable, but I think it is altogether too much in line with about ninety-nine per cent of the legislation brought down by this Government since it took office; that is to say, legislation giving authority to govern by Order in Council. That is necessary at times, but I am one to say that I think we have had really too much of it at the hands of this Government, and I regret that this is another example.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN: Will this Bill cover the cold storage of meat?

Mr. BURRELL: Yes, it covers all cold storage.

Mr. McLEAN: There are regulations now providing that an inspector shall be in every cold storage warehouse where meats are put in cold storage. Is it the purpose of this Bill that a regulation shall be made that there shall be a Government inspector in every cold storage warehouse?

If so, I would suggest to the minister that the certificate of the inspector should be prima facie evidence that the product was fit for food when it entered that warehouse. Otherwise the burden of proof would be on the party who put the goods into storage and the goods might not be put into cold storage at all on receipt and might be spoiled before being put into cold storage. The consequence would be that, if the goods were spoiled, the burden of proof would be on the man who put them in. He would have no evidence at all; all the evidence would be in the hands of the cold storage warehouse. If he had a suit, if the goods were spoiled through the fault of the cold storage warehouse, he would have to call as witness a man in charge of that warehouse, and probably the man who handled the goods when they went in could not be found. Therefore, I would suggest—and I think this is a provision that is in the cold storage bills in other places, especially in the United States—that a certificate of the Government inspector, where there is an inspector in a warehouse in this country, should be prima facie evidence that the goods were as he certified that they were when they went in, that is fit for human food.

Mr. A. DeWITT FOSTER: I do not rise to make any extended remarks, but the subject under consideration is one which is of peculiar interest. I apprehend that we are considering question 4?

The CHAIRMAN: We are on section 3.

Mr. FOSTER: (reading):

3. The Governor in Council may make such regulation as he deems necessary or expedient, to provide for a supervision of all cold storage warehouses.

4. Such regulations may provide,—

(a) for the licensing of all cold storage warehouses;

(b) for the inspection of all cold storage warehouses;

(c) for a system of periodic and other reports by owners of cold storage warehouses showing the quantities in storage of the several articles of food.

In regard to that, it appears to me that the report made by the owners should be a report not only as to the quantities in storage of the several articles of food, but as to the time they are in cold storage. It seems to me that the time articles of food are kept in cold storage is of paramount importance to the consuming public of this country. I notice that the minister made reference in his remarks to eggs being kept ten months in cold storage. Personally I am not an expert as to how long an egg should be kept in cold storage; but from some little experience I have had with eggs that have been in cold storage for five or six months, I would say that a period of ten months was absolutely too long. In support of that contention I propose to give the House some information elicited last fall during an investigation into the high cost of articles of food by a committee appointed by the United States Government, which sat in the city of New York during the month of November. At this investigation some very startling evidence was brought to light as to the method and management and the result of cold storage systems operated in the United States. It seems to me that what is true of large cities in the United States may be equally true of cities in Canada where cold storage has been adopted or put into force to the same degree. The committee sat not only in New York but in other large cities of the United States, and the conditions they found there were similar. At the possible expense of wearying the House, I should like to put on 'Hansard' a few of the findings of that committee during their session in New York.

About that time one of the leading newspapers took up the question and showed it up to the public in a very remarkable manner. Demonstration stations were opened in various parts of the cities after the results of the investigation were brought to light, so that eggs that had formerly been selling on the market for 45, 50 and 60 cents per dozen were actually placed on the market at these demonstration stations at the price of thirty-two cents per dozen. In discussions which I had with egg dealers and other gentlemen closely connected with this business, I was informed, much to my surprise, that what had been brought to light at that investigation was going on and had been going on for a great number of years. One of the leading newspapers, the Globe, came out on November 2, as follows—I will read just a quotation or two:

> Everybody in New York now knows that the public is being robbed by the egg gamblers, but everybody does not know that the State of New York has conspired to help the gamblers in their cold-blooded conspiracy against public health and the public pocketbook. The Globe proposes through this demonstration station at the corner of 8th avenue and 121st street to make the whole scheme of egg trickery, egg fraud and egg corruption so transparent that the authorities, who now say they never realized what was going on, will no longer have any excuses for inaction, and that the people may have sufficient facts within their hands to enable them to give themselves the protection which they are now denied by the national, state and city governments. The eggs which will be sold to-morrow in the Globe demonstration station at 32 cents per dozen are nothing more nor less than storage eggs. There are no 'fresh eggs' in New York.

According to the Globe there were no fresh eggs in New York on November 2. That seems to be a startling thing in itself. (Reading):

> All the eggs sold in this city at the present time are known to the trade as 'western fresh,' 'fresh held' and 'storage.' Western fresh eggs may be from a month to three months old. Fresh held are between four and six months old. Storage eggs are between five and eight months old.

So that when we come to consider the labelling of eggs for cold storage in Canada, I would respectfully draw to the attention of the minister that he pay particular attention to the framing of his regulations in that regard. (Reading):

> One year ago we had a law that obliged the retailer to mark all 'storage' eggs for just what they were. The people were eating storage eggs then just as they are eating them now, but they did not know the facts then as they do now. Therefore when they saw the word 'storage' on the egg, they refused to buy it. At least this is what the egg gamblers, who held the eggs in storage, said to the New York Legislature, and the New York Legislature believed the story and at once repealed the law so that the retailer could label his storage eggs with a lie and call them 'fresh.' Under this fraudulent 'fresh' label the public is content to pay as high as 55 cents or 60 cents per dozen for the same eggs for which it would not pay 35 cents per dozen if they sold under their correct name. So say the egg gamblers, whose influence was so powerful with New York politicians that quietly and obligingly the politicians changed the law.
>
> Back to the demonstration station eggs, everyone of which is guaranteed to be a good egg of the class known as 'straight candled storage.'

I point out these words as the various degrees of eggs placed upon the market and eaten by the consumer. (Reading):

> All the 'weak' eggs, 'very weak' eggs, 'spots,' and 'cracks' have been candled out of these 32 cent storage eggs. Each case contains an average of from twenty to twenty-two dozen fancy and from eight to ten dozen fancy seconds. These are the same eggs that are now selling all over New York city at 40. 42, 45, 50 and 55 cents per dozen under labels that deceive.
>
> As a matter of fact, they should sell to the public for much less than 32 cents per dozen. The Globe does not own them, however, and, therefore, cannot control the prices. These eggs were put away in storage in the month of June and at that time cost between 18 and 19 cents a dozen. Storage charges cost 40 cents per case, interest 22 cents per case, cartage 3 cents, insurance 6 cents, which bring up the extra charges 71 cents per case of thirty dozen each.

At 19 cents per dozen, the outside price, a case of thirty dozen eggs when it went into storage cost $5.70.

Plus the extra charges of 71 cents, these eggs now represent an investment of $6.41 per case of thirty dozen, or 21 1-3 cents per dozen. This figure, 21 1-3 cents per dozen, represents the actual money invested in each dozen of eggs which will be sold to-morrow at the Globe's demonstration station at 32 cents per dozen.

On November 1 there were 1,800,000 cases of storage eggs in New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston, and Jersey city, representing an investment of $6.41 per case or $11,538,000. The gamblers who put these eggs away in the public coolers are now releasing them to the jobber at prices ranging from 29 cents to 40 cents per dozen. At a low estimate. The Globe takes the gambler's average price to the jobber at 30 cents per dozen, or $9 per case.

At this price the gambler realizes on the eggs held by him November 1, $16,200,000, or a profit of nearly $5,000,000. The jobber in selling these eggs to the retailer makes another profit of 2, 3, and 4 cents per dozen. At 2 cents per dozen his profit on a case is 60 cents. On 1,800,000 cases his profit is more than $1,000,000. The eggs which will be sold to-morrow at the Globe demonstration station at 32 cents per dozen were purchased from an egg gambler at 29 cents. Allowing the jobber a cent a dozen as his profit and also allowing him the loss on rejected eggs not good enough to sell at the demonstration station, the figure of 32 cents per dozen is arrived at.

At this price for good eggs the public allows a profit to those who have candled their eggs since November 1 of $5,742,000, which is exactly 50 per cent on the investment, quite a handsome figure. However, at 32 cents per dozen the public cannot buy good eggs in the city of New York. As a matter of fact, many of the eggs sold at 45, 50 and 55 cents are not good eggs.

If we take the average retail price of eggs on sale to-day in New York at 45 cents per dozen, we have a retail value of $13.50 per case. At this price the eggs, which, with all over head charges figured into the cost, represent an investment of $11,538,000 now have a value of $24,300,000, showing a profit on one of the most necessary and vital articles of our daily food supply of over one hundred per cent.

In view of the facts elicited by that committee, I am bound to say that I agree absolutely with the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver). While I have no fear in regard to trusting the Minister of Agriculture to draft regulations, and while I do not object to the Governor in Council making such regulations, I do feel that if Canada is to branch out into cold storage, as this Bill provides, the minister must make absolutely stringent regulations for the control of these articles of food; for in the future of this country the great difficulty we are going to have, and that we have to-day, is perhaps not so much the production of a food supply, but the distribution of that food supply, so as to get it from the producer to the consumer at the lowest possible cost to the consumer, eliminating the various profits that are made to which profits the cold-storage of the United States and of other countries, and I dare say of this country, will contribute a very large proportion. It is for that reason that I have risen to say that I hope that in any regulations enacted provision will be made for the owners to make a report with regard to the time these eggs are to be in cold storage. Because after they are in there for several months, they are sorted out and graded under different names. Some are a shade better than others. And, while there is a fine under the existing laws of New York for the selling of eggs of an inferior quality, and while, during the investigation of this committee, three men were actually put in jail for that offence, yet safeguards must be placed around the labelling of these eggs and the time they are in cold-storage, in order to preserve the best interest of the consuming public of Canada. And if the minister had done no more to assist consumer and producer than the production of this measure—and he has done a great deal more, as every one will admit—he will have conferred upon the people of this country one of the greatest benefits that have ever been enacted by this House or that could have been conferred upon the people, because it means that he will have the control of cold storage absolutely within his own power.

Mr. CARROLL: The Bill before the House is a rather important one from any point of view, but I am forced to say is rather a makeshift Bill. When cold storage was first made a business in this country, the majority of the consumers in Canada were led to believe that it was going to be a blessing, as was pointed out by the hon. member for Edmonton. But as time went on, these cold-storage institutions, especially in our large cities, took upon themselves absolute monopoly over all the products they could handle that were necessary for the people of those cities, and as a distributing centre for the smaller towns and cities. In the large cities to-day of Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Vancouver and others, these cold storage institutions will buy up foodstuffs such as meats, cheese, and so on when they are cheap, and will hold them there until other supplies have run out, and then they will take their own good time to give these articles to the public as fresh articles at greatly enhanced prices. I would like to point out that the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury) introduced into this House a Bill which to my mind was almost a masterpiece of the legislation of the kind we should have in this country for the regulation of cold storage. There is very little use in the minister or the Government taking power to pass regulations governing this thing. The minister tells us, as I understand him, that there is no great necessity at present, and he does not see that there will be any in the near future, for placing a time limit for articles kept in cold storage. I say that is the most important point the minister must grapple with. I say that this feature which he thinks will not be needed now or in the near future is one of the most necessary features of legislation for the regulation of cold storage.

Articles are sent out of cold storage and sold to the unsuspecting public as fresh products. I say that every article put into cold storage should be handled in such a way that the consumer of that article would know exactly what he is buying. He should know, in the first place, whether or not the article is a cold storage article, and he should know, in the second place, how long it has been in cold storage. The question asked by the hon. member for Huntingdon is a very important one; I notice that it is covered by section 4 of the Bill introduced in this House by the hon. member for Selkirk, which says:

> No food which has been placed in cold storage and has been removed therefrom for the purpose of sale shall be returned into cold storage.

The Bill brought down by the Minister of Agriculture makes absolutely no attempt to deal with that phase of the question. For example, articles which have been in cold storage in New York for seven, eight, nine or ten months may be sent to Canada and placed in cold storage here for a similar or a longer period of time. I think that there should be added to this Bill a section which would prohibit cold storage people in any other country or in any other part of Canada from removing their goods from one cold storage warehouse to another with any other purpose in view than that of immediate sale and immediate distribution.

Another provision which, to my mind, should be in this Bill, is that which is embodied in section 9 of the Bill introduced by the hon. member for Selkirk. It is as follows:

> All food taken out of cold storage and offered for sale shall be marked with a card upon which shall be plainly printed in red block letters not less than two inches long, upon a white ground, the words 'cold storage goods.'

That would be notice to the public that instead of buying what they might suppose to be fresh goods, they were actually buying cold storage goods. I say that the Bill as introduced by the hon. Minister of Agriculture having regard to the fact that he has told us that at the present stage there is no necessity for a time limit and that we may, therefore, presume that no regulations will be made by the department to that end—is an absolutely bald Bill, and I do not think it should be allowed to pass unless there are incorporated in it some of the provisions which are contained in the Bill presented to the House by the hon. member for Selkirk. There is no doubt that if the Department of Agriculture will at the present stage embody in the present Bill the provisions contained in Bill 6, the proposed legislation will have some effect. In my humble opinion, the high cost of living in our large industrial centres to-day is traceable largely to cold storage in this country. The New York commission referred to by the hon. member for Kings has come to that conclusion. By putting legislation on our statute books which would force the cold storage institutions in this country to break up their trusts, monopolies, and combines in respect of the necessaries of life, the minister would be giving relief to the consumers and incidentally not hurting the producers. While cold storage is of some benefit to the producers of foodstuffs, it is not the blessing to them that we were led to believe it would be when cold storage was given an impetus in this country by legislation some years ago. There can be no political controversy with regard to this piece of legislation. There are hon. gentlemen on both sides of this House who will think that the hon. minister's way of regulating cold storage warehouse is the better way, but I am sure that persons who have given attention and study to this subject will invariably tell the minister that instead of making regulations five, six and seven months hence, we should have upon our statute books at the close of the present session such legislation as will contain every possible regulation having in view the interests of the people. The most stringent legislation with regard to the time during which goods may be kept in cold storage warehouses should be made. I think the minister would be well advised if he would revise his legislation and, instead of making regulations by Order in Council, regulate this matter by provisions incorporated in this Bill and passed by this Parliament. I do not think that the minister, even in his own department, can get more information in the matter of cold storage than he can get right here in the Chamber of the Commons. Here we have gentlemen from all over the country—from the Maritime provinces, from central Canada and from the West. We are sent here to legislate, not to give power to the Government or to a member of a Government to make regulations. There are here members who have given this matter special consideration; members from all parts of Canada who know the conditions, and I am sure that after a thorough discussion of this Bill in the House the minister would come to the conclusion to pass a Bill not giving him power to make regulations but putting upon the statute book the regulations proposed by the hon. member for Selkirk.

11 p.m.

Mr. NESBITT: Does the minister propose to use the inspectors that he has now, or will he appoint new inspectors for the purpose of this legislation?

Mr. BURRELL: It would depend entirely upon how far we went as far as regulations are concerned. I entirely agree with the view of the hon. member for South Cape Breton that this is not a political matter; we are all engaged in trying to do something towards effecting reasonable control and supervision of cold storage warehouses, which have never been subject to such supervision or control. But, with all due deference to the hon. member for Edmonton and to the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, I must say that I do not entirely agree with all that they have said. Our own cold storage commissioner has given this subject more attention than probably any member of this House. It is his particular business; he has had made a careful study of the question, and has looked into the matter at first hand as it exists in the United States, and in view of the experiences that they had in the United States and the experience we had in our own department, we came to the deliberate conclusion that it would be at least a step in advance to warn all cold storage warehouses that we were going to demand from them a proper report of all their proceedings, and a right to inspect the condition of their warehouses in order to exercise some control over the stuff that went in and came out. That, in itself, would mean something; and I think it would be better to undertake that initial step and take power to make further regulations than, in the light of our present knowledge, to embody in a Bill things that might prove most unsatisfactory, very unworkable, and very cumbrous, and that would have to be dealt with over again. I believe that it is better to go slowly. I admit that it may not be always good policy to legislate by regulation. I quite appreciate that point of view, although I think my hon. friends opposite will agree that there has been a good deal of legislation for a great many years in which power has been taken to do things by regulation. That practice is not confined to this Government, and I do not suppose that any hon. member will assert that it is. I quite agree that something ought to be done, and I think it would be as foolish to do nothing as to go too far. I would ask that this thing be given a trial. What I wanted to do was to refer this matter to the Agricultural Committee, who could examine witnesses, take evidence, and thresh the whole thing out. If the House comes to the conclusion that it would be better to do that—better to defer action until the matter has been thoroughly threshed out—I would prefer doing that than, in the light of my present knowledge, embodying in actual legislation at the present time a lot of the suggestions that have been made. As far as the Government is concerned, we have no desire except to do something towards exercising proper supervision and control. After all, I think that a great many cold storage warehouses in the country are trying to do the square thing by the public, and I think that on the whole our system works out better than that of the United States, because although it is true that there are private institutions which may perhaps be engaged in a certain line of work that may be called monopoly, at the same time we have a great number of cold storage warehouses of smaller capacity that exercise a reasonable check on them. Our system, initiated by the late Government, of subsidizing a number of cold storage firms all over the country with a reasonable check on rates, has been spoken of in the highest terms by the United States authorities as being a step in the right direction, and as being a set off against monopolies controlling the cold storage business. My desire as minister, and the desire of the Government, is to take power, which we will exercise as fast as we can in the light of fuller knowledge, and to demand, now, a thorough accounting and reporting from cold storage warehouses, and to have such powers of inspection that we can make them toe the mark and see that all the stuff comes in and goes out properly. Some such step, we think, is in the public interest.

Mr. BRADBURY: I am afraid I cannot altogether agree with the minister when he practically points out that the cold storage system of Canada and the United States has done so much good, and very little harm. I am one that believes the cold storage system is a blessing, if properly managed. If not properly controlled, I believe it may be one of the greatest curses ever inaugurated. From my own observations—and I have given a little time to the study of this question—I am satisfied that something ought to be done to control the cold storage systems of Canada. There is no question in my mind that under the present system—with no regulations at all—the cold storage systems of Canada can, and are storing away food products in the seasons of the year when they are flush, and holding them until the supply is scarce, and then exacting undue profits from the masses of the people of this country. I am satisfied of that. Take the present time for instance. April and May is the season when the eggs for the whole year are stored. Now the mere fact that the cold storage systems of the United States and Canada are in the market purchasing those eggs by the million, enchances the price of eggs at the present time to the consumers of this country. The eggs are placed in cold storage and carried over till next winter when we are asked to pay double and sometimes treble the price that the cold storage people are paying for the eggs at the present time. The eggs were bought at the minimum price in April and May, although the price at that time was raised to the consumer because, if the cold storage people were not in the market for them, the eggs could be bought much cheaper.

Mr. NESBITT: Does my hon. friend not think that the price would be higher six months from now, if there were no cold storage system?

Mr. BRADBURY: No, I do not think the price would be higher, and I will tell you why. The consumer would be laying away the eggs as he used to in the old days, putting them away just as the cold storage people are doing now. They would not be cold storage eggs, but stored eggs, which would be practically just as good for the average housekeeper.

Mr. NESBITT: Do the cold storage people prohibit that now?

Mr. BRADBURY: No, they do not; but the fact of the cold storage people being in the market has raised the price of eggs at this season of the year.

Mr. NESBITT: What about the producer? I am one of them.

Mr. BRADBURY: That is all right; the producer is getting the benefit; but surely the consumer ought to be considered. The same thing applies to all food products; to meats, to fish, and everything that is put away in cold storage. I claim that the Bill that should be enacted as law in this country should make some provision for a time limit. The minister's Bill takes powers to regulate, and no doubt if the regulations limit the time of cold storage properly that would cover the necessities of the case, but everything depends on what those regulations are going to be. I have made a little attempt at framing a Bill for this purpose. I introduced a Bill in the early part of the session—

Mr. CARVELL: A very good one.

Mr. BRADBURY: —but it did not get very far. I have given considerable attention to that Bill, and I believe it covers the essential points in a cold storage Bill for Canada. Clause 3 of my Bill was designed to give the minister control of the cold storage business of Canada; to license every firm in Canada doing a cold storage business; that no building could be utilized for cold storage purposes until it had been licensed by the Department of Agriculture. At the present time, there is absolutely no control. Any one can set up in the cold storage business and take in eggs, meat, and poultry, whether the cold storage house is sanitary or otherwise. If we are going to have a system of cold storage in Canada, I claim that it should be controlled absolutely by this Government, and we have a precedent for that. Eleven or twelve states on the other side of the line have been devoting a good deal of time in the last four or five years to legislation to control the cold storage systems of the United States. There has been a great deal done and there has been a great deal of money expended in the way of investigation. Many state committees, and some federal committees, have investigated this question thoroughly and we have a vast amount of evidence from all these committees which tends to guide us in any legislation that we may pass here. California has a cold storage system by license, also Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Louisiana, Massachusetts, Nebraska, New Jersey, New York and North Dakota. In all these states there is legislation under which no cold storage system can exist except by procuring a license from the Government.

Mr. BURRELL: They will be licensed here.

Mr. BRADBURY: I am assured by the minister that they will be licensed here. That is an important point. Clause 4 of the Bill that I had before the House was designed to protect the health of the consumer. It is an established fact that ptomaine poisoning may occur from the eating of meats, poultry and fish, not from the fact that they have been held in cold storage, but from the fact that it had been exposed to the atmosphere, thawed or partially thawed and then put back into cold storage and refrozen. All the authorities on hygiene who have studied this question agree that food should not be returned to cold storage after being exposed for sale in the open air. In nearly every one of the states to which I have referred it was enacted that no food products, taken out of cold storage and offered for sale, should be returned to cold storage again. All the evidence that I have under my hand, including that of Dr. Wiley, the celebrated American authority on this question, proves beyond doubt that many serious cases of ptomaine poisoning have been occasioned by the thawing out of poultry which has been taken out of cold storage, exposed in the butcher store or in the green-grocer's store for from one to three days, put back into cold storage, refrozen and offered for sale again. I provided in the Bill I had before the House that it should be illegal for a storekeeper to expose poultry or meats for sale which had been taken out of cold storage and then to place these products back in cold storage and have them refrozen.

Clause 5 of my Bill was designed for the purpose of informing the public as to how long meat and other food products had been held in cold storage. That is a clause that is contained in the Act of every state to which I have referred. It is provided that every product offered for sale should be labelled 'cold storage food,' 'cold storage eggs,' or 'cold storage meat,' so that the consumer, when he walks into the store and purchases any article, will know what he is buying. My hon. friend from Kings, Nova Scotia (Mr. A. DeWitt Foster), has given us some information as to the effect this has had in New York. Evidence given before the committee of the United States Senate shows that cold storage eggs are sold repeatedly as fresh eggs in New York city. It is done right here in Ottawa and in every city in Canada. People imagine that they are buying fresh eggs when they are paying from 50 to 75 cents per dozen, but as a matter of fact they are buying cold storage eggs. It is the duty of the Government to have these eggs labelled when they come out of cold storage. Nobody objects to eating a cold storage egg, if good, as the cold storage egg may be just as good as the fresh egg, but we do object to paying the price of fresh eggs when we are getting cold storage eggs. It would be a very simple thing to have a law passed that would compel those who deal in eggs or meat to have these articles labelled as being cold storage products.

Clause 6 was designed to protect the consumer in two ways: The first was to make it impossible for large cold storage plants to corner any sort of food products and by doing so increase the cost to the consumer. The second was to ensure as far as possible that the product mentioned to be sold was in prime condition. This, Mr. Chairman, is a very important clause. If cold storage operators are allowed to hold eggs for an indefinite time the effect is liable to be very disastrous to the consumer. We have records showing that eggs have been held as long as three years and then sold to the consumer. We have evidence here, taken by the committee to which I have referred, demonstrating clearly that after three weeks eggs begin to deteriorate. If the egg is put into the cold storage perfectly fresh and the temperature is maintained regularly at from 32 to 34 F., they say that an egg will keep for six months perfectly fresh but we know by experience that we eat eggs in Ottawa that have been in cold storage from eight to twelve months and sometimes longer. The egg loses its value as a food product. The same applies to meat. You can hold meat, if it is put into a sanitary cold storage in prime condition, properly frozen and kept frozen, for a considerable time, but no one can tell me that meat does not deteriorate after it has been frozen. Take a quarter of beef out of cold storage and expose it to the atmosphere and the deterioration is so rapid that it soon becomes unfit to eat. But that is not the worst feature of it to my mind. I believe that meat can be held for a year and still be very good for food, but I do not believe that we ought to allow the cold storage system to place large quantities of food products in storage and hold them an unreasonable time. My idea is that a fair, reasonable limit should be placed upon meat and everything we consume to protect the consumer. There is no question but that the cold storage system has time after time cornered the market in food products. The mere fact that we have a cold storage enables those who deal in meat and all kinds of food products to make very large profits. Two or three years ago the Manitoba Government had reason to make some investigations into the abattoir system in the city of Winnipeg and the evidence that was adduced proved conclusively that the men who controlled the great abattoir were making unreasonable profits. I have some evidence here that I think would be interesting. An animal weighing 1,200 pounds will yield about sixty per cent of beef, and at the current price in Ontario of $8 per hundred the farmer would get about $96 for the animal, but when it is retailed the consumer pays about $155, netting the abattoir man about $59 profit. It is not fair to charge all this to the abattoir man, because the retail profit comes in, but in many of our great cities, for instance in Ottawa, these abattoir people have cold storage systems and they practically control the retail trade, having stores all over the city, and they get nearly ever dollar of profit out of that animal. I venture to say that the farmer who raised that animal did not make one-half of what the abattoir man made out of it. He was enabled to do this on account of the fact that he could place that meat in cold storage and hold it there until he got his price. In view of these facts a cold storage enactment should be placed on the statute books, to limit in some way the length of time cold storage houses would be allowed to store different kinds of food products. The Bill we are discussing is certainly a step in the right direction, but I do not think it goes far enough. However, I am willing to give the measure a chance as I am anxious to see something done along these lines. If the law does not work out satisfactorily, it will be because the department does not introduce the proper regulations and this measure will therefore place full responsibility upon the shoulders of the Government. I would have liked to see a Bill passed by this House that would contain certain operative clauses, but if the minister thinks he can accomplish the object in a better way by the measure now before us, I will give it my support because I want to see something done. I am sorry the minister does not see his way clear to adopt the principles embodied in the Bill which I had the honour to submit to the House. I do not claim that my Bill is perfect, but I do believe it would have given better results than the present Bill.

There is another phase of this question I should like to deal with for a moment. The people of Canada are bonusing the building of cold storage systems in different parts of the country, and it is very questionable to my mind whether that is the best way to accomplish the object we are aiming at of protecting the consumer. I think every one who has given this question any consideration must admit that if we are going to help the consumer we ought to try to bring the consumer and the producer as closely together as possible and eliminate the middleman to whatever extent we can. I believe that we can accomplish very much along this line if we could establish a system of small cold storage houses in the different counties, so that the farmers could have the use of these cold storage plants to care for their products. Every one who knows anything about the handling of eggs knows that if you want to get a real fresh egg it should be taken out of the nest and placed in cold storage, not longer than three days after the egg has been laid. Of course, as the weather grows warm, it would be necessary to place it in the cooling room much sooner than that. If we had these small cold storage plants in each county the farmers would be able to place their eggs in them within two or three days after they are taken out of the nest, and we would save a large number of eggs that at present are lost.

Mr. NESBITT: How would you pay for that cold storage?

Mr. BRADBURY: I would propose that the Government should pay a large proportion of the cost, and that the producers in the different localities should pay the balance. We are bonusing now large cold storage warehouses to the extent of twenty per cent, and we could afford I believe, to bonus these smaller places to the extent of 50 per cent, and that it would be in the interest of the consumers and producers alike. The producer, I believe, will obtain a better price for his products and the consumer would obtain these products at a less price than he is paying to-day, because there would be eliminated the cold storage middlemen, who take these eggs and hold them for months, and then ask and get a bigger price than they ought to. It seems to me that something along this line should be done by the Government.

The high cost of living is a live question throughout the country, and we have had it discussed in this House. It is well known that there is no country in the world that has a better supply of fresh fish than we have. Canada is one of the greatest fish-producing countries in the world, and yet you find that the people of Canada are paying to-day more for their fish than are the people of any other country similarly situated. On the Atlantic coast we have one of the greatest fisheries in the world, and on the Pacific coast we have enormously productive halibut grounds. We have allowed these halibut grounds to be exploited by the Americans. Last year 26,000,000 pounds of that fish were shipped from the Pacific coast, principally to the United States. I claim that, through a proper cold storage system, controlled by the Government, we ought to be able to in some way control a fair proportion of the halibut for sale in Canadian cities at a reasonable price, and the same would apply to the products of our Atlantic fisheries. A few days ago in this House some gentlemen from the Lower provinces urged the Government to subsidize a line of steamers to take our fish to Boston, but it seems to me a more sensible and practical thing, and more in the interests of the consumers of Canada, would be to provide cheap transport for fish from the Atlantic coast to Ontario and Manitoba, so that we would be able to purchase this fish at a reasonable cost, instead of bonusing a line of steamers to take it out of our country. These are problems we have to face, and problems that require a great deal of study and thought. We have these great natural resources which belong to the people of Canada, and the people of Canada have the right to get the full benefit of them. Instead of encouraging the export of our natural products such as fish, it would be much better to encourage interprovincial means of transportation, so that the people of Canada might be supplied with Canadian fish at a reasonable cost.

There is just one other phase of the question. I am not going to take up any more of the time of the House; but I shall be very glad to see this Bill go into force, and I hope, when it does, that every cold storage system of Canada will be placed under the absolute control of the department; that it will be licensed, and that every one of these cold storage systems will be compelled to make a monthly report of the amount of food products of different kinds held in the different cold storage plants. I believe this is absolutely necessary in the interest of the public. The public should know how many eggs and how much meat are at a given time in the cold storage systems of the country. If the public knew that, it would go a long way perhaps towards compelling the cold storage people, the people who control the food products of this country, to do the right thing by the people. The trouble at the present time is that there are millions of dozens of eggs and millions of pounds of meat stored away sometimes for one, two or three years. The people do not know it; and the cold storage people have been known to take out tons and tons of chicken and poultry of different kinds that have been in cold storage for two or three years and have destroyed them sooner than sell them to the people at a reasonable price at a reasonable time. I hope the minister will take every precaution he can to safeguard the interest of the people.

Mr. BURRELL: If it is desired to have more discussion on this Bill, I do not wish to choke off discussion. Our desire is to get all possible light on the subject, and I therefore move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Progress reported.

SUPPLY.

The House in Committee of Supply, Mr. Blondin in the Chair.

Post Office—Outside service, salaries and allowances, $6,429,920.75.

Mr. GRAHAM: What is the increase made up of?

Mr. PELLETIER: The increase of $932,190.75 is made up as follows:

Increase in the post offices ..	$756,672.50
Railway mail service	125,314.00
Post office inspectors' offices ..	50,204.25
Total	$932,190.75

The first item of $756,672.50 is made up as follows:

Increases given to employees under the Act of 1913	$191,556.00
240 statutory increases of $100 each	24,000.00

98 statutory increases of $74 each	$ 7,252.00
721 statutory increases of $50 each	36,050.00
1,102 statutory increases of $78.25 each	86,231.50
200 additional clerkships	112,070.00
342 additional letter carriers, porters, etc.	214,405.00
Salaries of letter carriers at Amherst and Belleville	11,268.00
Increase in provisional allowance	43,840.00
Increase in amount for temporary clerical and other assistance	30,000.00
Total	$756,672.50

This makes up the first item of the three I gave a moment ago which together make the total sum of $932,190.75. Now, the second item contributing to this total amount is one of $125,214, and it is made up as follows:

104 statutory increases of $100 each	$ 10,400
70 statutory increases of $100 each under the Act of 1913	7,000
177 statutory increases of $50 each	8,85(
4 statutory increases of $78.25 each	313
20 statutory increases of $91.25 each	1,825
109 additional clerkships	59,300
1 additional messenger	626
Increase in mileage allowance	25,000
Increase in provisional allowance	10,000
Increase in amount for temporary clerical and other assistance	2,000
Total	$125,314

The third item of $50,204.25 is composed as follows:

Increase under the Act of 1913	$ 1,095 50
48 statutory increases of $100 each	4,800 00
13 " " 74 "	962 00
102 " " 50 "	5,100 00
1 " " 11 "	11 00
6 " " 78.25 each	469 50
28 additional clerkships	29,286 00
1 additional messenger	626 00
Difference between the amount provided for an assistant inspector at Sherbrooke ($1,800) and the salary of Mr. C. E. Soles, transferred from the Montreal inspector's office to fill the vacancy ($2,000)	200 00
Difference between the amount previously voted for the salary of a messenger in the inspector's office, Ottawa ($500) and the salary of Mr. O'Brien, appointed to the vacancy ($704.25)	154 25
Increased provisional allowance	2,500 00
Increase in amount for temporary clerical and other assistance	5,000 00
Total	$50,204 25

These items of $50,204.25, $125,314 and $756,672.50 together make the total of $932,190.75.

[Mr. Pelletier.]

Mr. KYTE: I understand the minister to say that he has difficulty in getting men to fill the positions of railway mail clerks.

Mr. PELLETIER: I said that we had difficulty in finding people who had passed the examination. But we have quite a number of candidates who would like to get in without having passed the examination.

Mr. KYTE: I have a letter from a man in my county, Mr. Abraham Beranger, who tells me that he made application for a position in the railway mail service but for some reason his letter appears to have been overlooked.

An hon. MEMBER: A Liberal.

Mr. KYTE: No, a Conservative. His father has been a consistent Conservative as long as I have known him. The young man holds a second-class certificate as teacher in the public schools of Nova Scotia and he desired to get some information from me as to whether or not that qualification would entitle him to that position. Perhaps the Postmaster General, when he comes down with his Estimates again, would think of looking up this young man's letter. I would like to give him such information as would enable him to qualify for the position if the qualification he holds at present does not entitle him to it.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Borden, the House adjourned at 11.55 p.m.

Tuesday, May 12, 1914.

The House met at Eleven o'clock, the Speaker in the Chair.

PRIVATE BILLS.

FIRST READING.

Bill No. 186, respecting the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Company, and to ratify and confirm its purchase of a portion of the property of the Carillon and Grenville Railway Company.—Mr. Guilbault.

Bill No. 187, respecting the North Shore Power, Railway and Navigation Company, and to change the name thereof to 'Gulf Pulp and Paper Company.'—Mr. Fripp.

Bill No. 188, for the relief of Georgina Beatrice Boyd.—Mr. Fripp.

CANADIAN NORTHERN RAILWAY PAPERS.

On the Orders of the Day being called:

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Mr. Speaker, in reference to the papers brought down concerning the Canadian Northern railway, on page 14, there is a statement of the earnings of the road for the year 1913, and an estimate of the earnings for the years 1916, 1917 and 1918. It would be important if the Government could get from the company a statement of the earnings for the year 1913 up to date, and an estimate for the balance of the year. Since we have an estimate for the year 1916, perhaps it would be possible to get a similar estimate of the earnings for the year 1914.

Mr. BORDEN: I will be very glad to ask the company for that information.

Mr. MACDONALD: Referring to the documents brought down yesterday in connection with the Canadian Northern railway, at page 5, there is a letter from Sir Wm. Mackenzie to the right hon. the Prime Minister, in which he says:

> For the reasons mentioned in the memoranda and statements respecting the Canadian Northern Railway system, submitted—

I do not see where these memoranda and statements appear in this book, as they do not appear to accompany the letter. It would be very important that we should have these.

Mr. BORDEN: Everything that accompanied the letter has been brought down, and the selection of the documents printed was made by my hon. colleague from Halifax (Mr. Maclean), and by my hon. friend the Solicitor General (Mr. Meighen). I have not examined the blue book very carefully. The documents alluded to were placed upon the table of the House. My recollection—I am not absolutely sure of this—is that what appears on the following page is a memorandum setting forth certain documents and information which were required from the company. When the company handed in these documents, they placed a copy of the written requisition which had been made in front, and these which follow in this book were the documents alluded to in the letter. That is my impression at the moment.

Mr. MACDONALD: Apparently that letter of Sir William Mackenzie was accompanied by some memoranda which explained the reason and the necessity for asking aid. I cannot find in the book or in such of the papers as I have looked at any such memoranda. If there is any such it should be in possession of the House.

Mr. BORDEN: The memoranda consisted of the information which was demanded to be furnished on two separate occasions. I do not know whether the information supplied on both occasions is printed in this book because I have not had an opportunity of examining it, but I do know that the information in a somewhat extended form was supplied on two different occasions. I will make inquiry and perhaps I can inform my hon. friend privately.

ANTI-HOME RULE MEETING IN TORONTO.

On the Orders of the Day being called:

Mr. LEMIEUX: I have just read in the Mail and Empire the report of a meeting held on Sunday in Toronto to protest against the Home Rule Bill, and I see that my hon. friend from Toronto East (Mr. Kemp), was present. I have read his remarks as reported in the Mail and Empire, and I must say that I do not find much fault with what he said. But, as a resolution much more drastic than his remarks was passed at that meeting, I would ask the hon. gentleman to state to the House whether he represented himself or the Government on that occasion.

Hon. A. E. KEMP: I fancy that the hon. gentleman is not absolutely serious when he asks whether I represented myself or the Government.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I am quite serious.

Mr. KEMP: I may say, as the hon. gentleman knows, that I represented myself on that occasion, and the Government had no knowledge whatever as to anything I intended to say at that meeting. I am glad than my hon. friend agrees with the sentiments I expressed; I consider them very moderate sentiments indeed.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Hear, hear.

CANADA GRAIN ACT AMENDMENT.

On motion of Hon. G. E. Foster (Minister of Trade and Commerce), Bill No. 170, to amend the Canada Grain Act, was read the second time, and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Blondin in the Chair.

Mr. OLIVER: What is the purpose of this Bill?

Mr. FOSTER: In the working of the terminal elevators, the grain that comes in is burdened to some extent with freight and other charges, necessary to convey it to the terminal elevator. The warehouseman has, under the Act, to pay these charges when he takes the grain in, and these charges are then repaid by the shippers of the grain either before or at the time they ship out. In the course of the working of our own elevator we have had to pay out in the course of the half season's operations money for freight amounting in gross to seven or eight hundred thousand dollars, but this is almost immediately recouped and deposited to the credit of the Receiver General. The purpose of the first section is to carry out the idea of the Auditor General, which makes it unnecessary for us to get a vote for an amount, the maximum of which we do not know, and it enables us to draw for the money that is necessary on the Consolidated Revenue Fund, the money to be paid back again to that fund. When the internal storage elevators are added in operation to the terminal elevator at Fort William, the amount of these transactions will be much larger. Last year I had to get an advance from the Auditor General, and the advance was repeated and repeated. By this Act we will avoid the unnecessary loading up of the Estimates with large amounts, and do away with the necessity of asking the Auditor General for advances from time to time.

Mr. OLIVER: When this Act was in Committee the minister promised us certain information with regard to the handling of grain at the proposed interior terminals, and also the rate that would be charged for the service to be rendered, and generally to give the House an idea as to how the Government proposed to operate these interior terminals.

Mr. FOSTER: The interior terminals will be operated in very much the same way as the terminal at Fort William. These interior terminals are meant for the storage of grain. The grain before being stored has to undergo the operation of grading. It is sampled, inspected, graded and taken care of in the elevators exactly in the same manner as it is at present taken care of in the terminal elevators. This is the first and primal reason for the erection of these elevators. In the next place, each one of these elevators is to be equipped with all necessary treating and cleaning apparatus, so that for diseased or disabled grain, so to speak, in any season and more especially in seasons such as we had two years ago when there was a great quantity of that kind of grain through the Northwest, we shall have at these terminal elevators proper and adequate machinery for cleaning the grain as to drying, or any other way in which it is treated. That will be a very important office that the internal storage elevators will perform. The site of each elevator will have to be made a terminal point, and the grain stored there will break its passage. In so far as the rates of transport are concerned, these are matters which come under the general transport system; and the rates will be according to the railroad schedules over which the railway commission will have, at it has now, ultimate jurisdiction, if there is dissatisfaction with reference to the rates. Warehouse receipts will be given for the grain when stored in these terminal elevators just as they are granted at Fort William, and there will be a registration system for the receipts and cancellations when the grain is shipped out.

Grain will be inspected also for mills in the vicinity of these storage centres. We have already under the Act power to appoint an inspector for a milling concern, inspectors' fees to be paid, any deficiency to be made up by the mill itself. We inserted that provision in the Act some two years ago. If grain exchanges are established at the places where these terminal elevators are, then provisions will be made for the inspection of grain consigned to members of the exchange so as to facilitate their operations. Otherwise and beyond these matters, I do not see that any interference will be had with the general work of inspection of outward bound grain via Winnipeg and the lakes.

Mr. OLIVER: The usefulness of these terminal elevators will depend partly upon the facilities that they offer, partly upon the charges for the use of such facilities and partly upon the railroad carriage. How far can the minister inform the House as to the arrangement regarding road carriage?

Mr. FOSTER: So far as the charges to be imposed and the facilities to be given by the railways are concerned, these matters have not yet been taken up by the commission. These elevators will not be ready for the receipt of grain until probably December of this year or January of next year; and in the meantime the Board of Grain Commissioners will have to take up the whole question as to the modus operandi and the charges, so far as they rest in the hands of the board itself, which will be the charges for storage, cleaning and everything like that. So far as the railway rates are concerned, that matter will remain, as I have said, in the hands of the transport authorities, and the Board of Grain Commissioners will take the matter up with them. I suppose what my hon. friend has in mind is what may come to be a back-haul at certain times, namely, grain in the vicinity going into the storage elevators, then when going out again having to traverse part of the ground which it has previously traversed to get in. There is an arrangement which the railway companies make in the United States for this class of elevators; and I presume the same arrangement will be made with our own railways, both as regards the back-haul for the grain alone and as regards the freight rates charged for what we call milling in transit. These matters have not as yet been taken up by the Board, although they are being considered; but they will be taken up in the summer and provided for by the time the elevators are ready to receive grain.

Mr. OLIVER: The point that I want to get at and that I cannot imagine has been left in doubt at all up to the present time is as to whether there will be a storage-in-transit rate on the grain, or a local rate for part of the haul. If there is to be a storage-in-transit rate on an absolute equality with the rate without storage, that will make for the usefulness of the storage facilities offered. If, however, there is not an arrangement for a storage-in-transit rate which shall be on an equality with the present rate without storage, then the usefulness of the storage facilities provided will be very much minimized; and I assume that that is not a question in doubt at the present time, but that the Government and the minister know absolutely whether a storage-in-transit rate on an absolute equality with the present rate without storage will be given or not.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER: So far as that is concerned, whilst I think there is no doubt at all that there will be storage-in-transit rates, these have not yet been fixed, and they will not be fixed until the Board of Grain Commissioners take the matter up with the railway authorities first and then with the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Mr. OLIVER: This is a rather serious matter. The Government has entered upon this policy, presumably for the benefit of the producers and through them of the country generally; and on the authority of the minister, the Government does not know to-day whether that policy is going to be efficient, not knowing what the railroad rates are to be. I can hardly imagine a Government undertaking this policy in that condition. Surely it was quite possible to know a year ago whether there was to be a storage-in-transit rate on an equality with the rate without storage or not. It was not necessary to wait until the storage was provided before the rates could be arrived at. I have hopes that the condition is better than the hon. minister has seen fit to lay it before the House; but if it is as he has actually laid it before the House, it certainly is not a fortunate condition.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Has the minister considered the question that came up when the original Bill was before the House last year in regard to elevators for treating diseased and disabled grain? I refer to the noxious weeds that are cleaned out of the grain at these elevators. It seems a remarkable state of affairs that we should have elevators for treating diseased grain, and yet that part of the material handled which offers the greatest menace to the country is scattered broadcast. I feel that I am well within the mark when I say that the spread of noxious weeds throughout Canada is costing this country, I will not say how many millions, but certainly high up in the millions every year, and presents a serious problem in every province in Canada. So I do not think this Bill will be complete until the Government sees to it that none of the noxious weed seeds that are cleaned out of the grain in these elevators are allowed to be scattered broadcast throughout the country. I think this matter should have engaged the attention of the Government, and I hope it will engage their attention in the near future. I know that the provincial legislatures have the power to enact laws to control this matter, but I believe it would be more effective and more satisfactory if this Government were to take it in hand. What would you think of a hospital which treated people for contagious disease yet made no effort to prevent the spread of that disease? Yet we have a similar condition here, but instead of preventing the spread of its disease it is encouraged. This spread of noxious weeds I consider a most serious menace to the farmers of Canada at the present time. We speak of the high cost of living in this country. Why, there would be a living for one-third of the people of Canada in saving the losses that take place every year through the spreading of this terrible pest of noxious weeds throughout the country.

Mr. KNOWLES: I desire to ask the minister a question which I put on a former occasion—with regard to the architects of these buildings.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER: If the hon. gentleman is going off on another branch of the subject, I should like to have opportunity first to answer my hon. friend from South Oxford (Mr. Sutherland).

Mr. KNOWLES: I was not going to deal with the question of the screenings.

Mr. FOSTER: As to the question of noxious weeds in the screenings, I may say that for the past year that has engaged, and is now engaging, the earnest attention of the Grain Board. We have added the machinery of the chemical labatory, and we have at present two men, thoroughly equipped in their several departments, who are paying particular attention to that branch of the subject. They are working together with the officers of the Grain Board and are doing all that possibly can be done at the present time to get at a basis of facts with reference to noxious weeds in the several grades of grain, and also with reference to the values of these different seeds, mostly weed seeds, and the useful purposes to which they may be put. On that basis of fact, when it is made, there can be built up a system of taking care of these leavings of the good grain and making those leavings of economical use, for it is quite possible to make these screenings useful as feed for stock of various kinds. Of course my hon. friend is entirely right, that noxious weeds are a great detriment to the country. The 'farmer's pest' is always with most of the farmers of the country. And, whilst we would like to see the time approach when there will be no weeds on any farm in Canada, yet, the millennium so far as that is concerned, is a good way in the distance. But that does not justify the relaxation of any effort towards restricting, diminishing and if possible eradicating this pest. The provincial governments have their parts to do in the matter, and they are moving in that direction; the Department of Agriculture of the Dominion and the departments of agriculture of the several provinces co-operate in this work. Whatever can be done by the Grain Board, and—after they have mapped out their work in this matter, whatever can be done by Dominion legislation to diminish this pest, will be done. And I hope to be able, at the next session of Parliament, to give a fairly clear idea as to what we think can be done by the Grain Board and through Parliament in this direction.

Mr. KNOWLES: The weed problem is a very important problem in the West and has been so for many years. Some of the weeds we have are so tenacious that it is almost impossible to cultivate them out of the ground. But I must say that the theories of my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster) with regard to the desirability of having weedless farms and how to get rid of weeds will not, I fear, carry much weight in the West. For I may tell my hon. friend that the farmers of the West take very little stock in his advice about how to farm. In fact, it is one of the jokes among our people that the hon. gentleman's remedy for the evils that afflict us is mixed farming. I suppose that panacea would cover weed evils also, according to the hon. gentleman. Perhaps he will correct me if I am wrong. Evidently, he has not given that problem the mature thought that he has given to the other questions on which he has laid down his doctrine. At any rate, it is a joke among our farming community, that the Minister of Trade and Commerce, with all his college degrees, and even with his high standing as an orator, has one way of settling all our difficulties and that is by advising us to go into mixed farming. It is something like adequate protection—there is supposed to be something in it for everybody. But I can tell the hon. gentleman how he could have done more to keep down the weeds than in any other way, and that is by allowing us to grow such short-maturing crops as barley. There was nothing for which the open market that at one time seemed to be so near to us was more prized by our farmers than for this very reason, that it would have given them an opportunity to clear their farms of weeds. The worst weed we have, perhaps, is wild oats. There is so much oil in the seed that even though you summer-fallow your ground for four or five years, yet the seed will not rot. It is only by some system of growing crops that will mature before the wild oats that you can compel this weed to grow itself out. As I say, there was nothing for which the open market was more desired than to enable the farmers to clear their farms by cultivating these quickly-maturing crops.

Mr. CURRIE: Reciprocity would send more rain, too, would it not?

Mr. KNOWLES: I do not know whether or not it would have sent more rain, but it would have produced better conditions than those that exist under this Government. The people of Canada had the opportunity of choosing between a progressive, statesmanlike policy and a reactionary policy; they took the latter and we see the results. We saw the results before 1896 and we have seen them since 1911. If the people of Canada had accepted the progressive policy, I believe that there would be no such financial depression in Canada as there is to-day. Why is it that in England they never were so prosperous as they are now? Why is it that the city of Toronto is more prosperous than it has been? You can scarcely rent a house in the city of Toronto to-day because the policy of this Government makes Toronto prosperous and makes our farming communities not prosperous.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER: Now suppose we get back to the Bill.

Mr. KNOWLES: The hon. member for South Oxford might have been told to stay with the Bill and the hon. member for South Grey as well. I am afraid that the advice of the hon. minister on the weed question or anything else that pertains to farming, will not carry very much weight. As a farming instructor, the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce is a joke. When the western farmer asks for anything he is told to go into mixed farming; that advice is pretty well played out. We must get what is coming to us, not periodical lectures on mixed farming by a gentleman who does not know anything about farming. When the minister had his Bill before the House on a previous occasion he was in a hurry to get it through at six o'clock and he promised to give us some figures with regard to the relationship between the architect and the contractor in connection with these elevators. He informed us that the architect was a Nova Scotian, although he belonged he thought, to the firm that was constructing the elevator. Would he kindly give us such information as he can with regard to that dual capacity?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat stated that the remarks which I made were outside the scope of the measure now before the committee. I think I was well within the mark, because the provisions of the Bill deal with exactly those things to which I was referring. When the hon. member refers to the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce as a joke in western Canada when he undertakes to enact legislation in their interest—

Mr. KNOWLES: I am sure the hon. gentleman does not want to misrepresent me. I did not say that; I said that when he turned farming instructor we regarded that as a joke.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Permit me to say that when the hon. gentleman endeavours to make the people of this House believe that by growing barley he can get ahead of the wild oats, he is a joke himself. I say that you will have difficulty in beating out the wild oats by growing barley or any other kind of grain, for the oats will germinate just as readily and mature just as quickly as the barley. Even if cut before maturity, the grain will germinate and grow, and the roots will grow as well. This talk about the western farmer being handicapped by the people of Canada because they have refused him reciprocity is getting a little stale in this House. This House is being asked, day after day, week after week, and session after session, to pass legislation in the interests of the people of Canada and particularly in the interests of the people of the West. We are building the Hudson Bay railway, and we are building storage elevators, and the people of the West want cars right at their doors so that they will not have to build granaries. If the people of the older provinces were to ask for favours of this kind, they would be laughed at. We find no fault with the granting of facilities to the people of the West, but I think the hon. gentleman goes to extremes when he criticises the minister, who is doing everything in his power to look after the interests of the people of western Canada.

Mr. NEELY: I was surprised to hear the negative and noncommittal statement of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce this morning with reference to a question brought to his attention by the hon. member for Edmonton. A couple of years ago this House undertook to pass the Canada Grain Act, which we are now asked to amend by this Bill. As I understand it, the object of the Canada Grain Act was to regulate and correct certain conditions and abuses that surrounded the marketing of the farmers' grain, particularly in western Canada. Under this Act the Board of Grain Commissioners was appointed by this Government, and are carrying on the work of making regulations in respect of the storage, handling and marketing of grain. We have been watching very closely the operations of this Board of Grain Commissioners, and, so far as I can discover, the only radical change that they have accomplished is that in certain instances they have increased the fees chargeable against the farmers' grain for handling at the terminal elevators. This Government have inaugurated a new policy; they have undertaken to establish interior terminal elevators at various points through the West. The only possible good that could come from the establishment of these interior elevators would be to relieve the conditions of congestion that have prevailed year after year because of the inability of the railroad companies to handle the farmers' grain in the marketing season, and, in some cases, the inability of the terminals at Fort William and Port Arthur to receive the grain when it is brought there by the transport companies. In my judgment the very first thing, the Government, embarking on this policy, should have considered, is the question of keeping down the cost of storage and of transportation. If the effect of this policy is going to be that, in addition to the necessary extra charges for handling, that is unloading, storing and reloading of the grain at these interior terminal elevators, the grain grower will also have to pay two local rates on his wheat, to these interior elevators and from there to the final terminals, if we may use that term, at Fort William and Port Arthur, then I think that experience will prove and prove very shortly that this whole policy of interior terminal elevators will fall to the ground. In my judgment the very first duty of the minister responsible for the inauguration of this policy was to have made arrangements with the transportation companies as to the rates that would be charged for grain shipped to these interior elevators, and from them to the final terminals at Fort William and Port Arthur. The charges for handling grain at these terminals are inevitable. But if to these charges, as the minister will see, there is to be added an extra charge owing to the payment of local instead of through freight rates, the grain growers of the West will be very loath indeed to ship their grain to these interior storage elevators. The minister has absolutely failed to carry into effect the necessary measures to make these interior terminal elevators in the country a success. He now tells us that the question of rates is all in the hands of the Railway Commission. We quite appreciate that and we know that, year after year, these matters of freight rates in the West have been before the commission. In a case inaugurated something over two years ago a decision was handed down recently. Full two years had been spent on this question of rates. There is no doubt that if the farmers object to paying two local rates, and this matter is to be brought to the attention of the Board of Railway Commissioners, there will be an interminable delay before the matter can be remedied, if indeed it is ever remedied in that manner. Surely the minister does not propose to tell us that he jumped into this thing in the dark, when he decided on the policy of erecting a considerable number of more or less expensive interior storage elevators throughout the West, without working out to its final conclusion the beneficial effects that that policy might or might not bring to the grain growers. I say that is surely a serious admission on the part of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, if he proposes to make it, as apparently he has made it this morning. If the minister had found it impossible to make an arrangement with the transportation companies for the continuance of a through rate in connection with these interior storage elevators, a knowledge of that fact would have had a very important bearing on the decision of this House to agree to the policy of establishing these interior storage elevators. The minister knows that if the cost of using them is too large the farmers will shirk using them. From the answers to questions I have asked the minister, I do not think that the Government so far has got along very far in the actual construction of these elevators and I trust that before the minister goes any further with their erection or incurs any further expenditure, he will ascertain if it is not possible to have the railroad companies agree to give a through rate to Fort William, Vaucouver, Hudson bay or other final terminal points; because I am quite satisfied that if some such arrangement is not made the beneficial result of the building of these interior storage elevators will be nullified to a large extent, if not entirely. So far the passing of the Canada Grain Act a couple of years ago has resulted only in the increase of the cost of handling and marketing grain. The minister knows that the great cause of loss of profit to the farmer is the cost of production of his grain in the West. That cost has markedly increased owing to various things, not altogether the increased cost of handling, other contributing causes are the increased cost of lake shipment, of ocean shipment and of labour. The minister has read the report of the commission appointed by the Saskatchewan Government over a year ago to investigate the grain trade in which they point out that notwithstanding that last year's crop was the best the West has ever produced, both as to quality and quantity, the margin of profit was less last year than for many years previously. The commission pointed out that from 1909 to 1913 the cost of production of grain in western Canada had increased from twelve and one-half per cent to fifteen per cent, and one of the items in this increase has been the increase in the cost of storage, handling and marketing. The crux of the success of this elevator scheme depends upon keeping the cost of the use of these elevators down to a minimum; and if the farmer, say at Swift Current, who uses the terminal interior storage elevator at Moosejaw, has to pay a local rate from Swift Current to Moosejaw and another local rate to Fort William, or even if he has to pay one local rate with his through rate from Moosejaw to Fort William, the result will be that the grain grower will find it quite impossible to use these means of protection in times of congestion. I have been trying to get, by questions and returns, certain facts in connection with the operations of the Board of Grain Commissioners at Fort William and Port Arthur. I want to draw the minister's attention to a return dated March 2, of this year which I moved for and which called for

12 noon.

The quantities of wheat, by grade, received into the terminal elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur from the date of the weigh-up in 1910, to the date of weigh-up in 1911, the same for 1911-1912, and the same for 1912-1913.

I have gone over these returns and I find a very remarkable omission in all of them. My idea in moving for the return was to find out whether or not the terminal elevators were giving any better results under the control of the Board of Grain Commissioners than formerly. I am absolutely unable to come to any conclusion in that respect. These elevators show a certain amount of shortage or overage each year. The reason why the returns are unsatisfactory is that there is no balance carried forward from year to year in the case of each elevator. The bank account is apparently absolutely closed at the end of each year, or at each annual weigh-up, and the elevator starts out with a clean sheet for each succeeding year. The amounts are given for each year, the shipments in and the shipments out and the weigh-up, but there is no balance carried forward from year to year. There seems to be a remarkable omission in the returns and it prevents me from arriving at the information I had in my mind when I moved for them. There is no balance carried forward from the weigh-up of the year 1911 to the year 1911-1912. I would like to ask the minister if he does not think that he would be well advised to take into his consideration the question brought to our attention by the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver), and to see, before there is any further prosecution of this policy of building interior elevators, if there is any possibility of coming to a definite arrangement in regard to the matter. That could be done quickly, but the minister has not taken any steps even to ascertain whether it can or can not be done. As far as I could gather from his remarks, he never made an attempt to make such a specific arrangement. I think it is important that the attempt should be made now before the policy is prosecuted further. Surely the minister does not want to load up the country with a large capital expenditure for the building and maintenance of these elevators if the elevators are not going to pay, and if, to make them pay he has to compel the farmer to pay a great deal more in charges than he can afford.

Mr. KNOWLES: Is the minister not going to answer any of the questions that were asked him?

Mr. G. E. FOSTER: I did not quite catch my hon. friend's question.

Mr. KNOWLES: The minister will remember that, during the consideration of some amendments to the Grain Act, or perhaps it was while his Estimates were under discussion, I asked him as to the circumstances under which gravel had been procured for the construction of the elevator at Moosejaw, and I asked him also how the different railways were to get in. The minister said that he would have a letter written to the engineer and see if he could make any report upon it. I asked him in regard to the access of the different railways and he said I could see the plans if I went to the department. I went to the department but found that they were gone.

I also spoke of the combined position of architect and contractor and pointed out that the other contractors were at a disadvantage because the successful contractor was associated with the architect. None of these points were discussed at length, but the minister stated that we could discuss them later on; he was very anxious to get the item we were considering through before six o'clock. I see that he has not anticipated the repetition of these questions and I do not know whether we will have another chance of having them answered during the session.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER: What I said at the time—we were discussing Estimates—was that I would reserve one item in the Steamship Subsidies Estimates and that when we came to take them up afterwards I would be prepared to answer any question in regard to elevators and elevator construction. My hon. friend will remember that.

Mr. KNOWLES: Yes, I was in error when I said it was the Grain Act that we were considering.

Mr. FOSTER: When we were putting through the resolution upon which the Bill is founded, the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) asked if I would answer some of these questions at the time the Bill was being put through. I said that I would, and the hon. gentleman himself also put some queries that he would like to have answered. Therefore, I have been looking towards the discussion of these matters when we came to the single item that had been left in the Estimates. However, in face of the remarks which have been made by my hon. friends opposite, I will try to answer the questions now. Some of them I am going to allude to because they are important, and others I am not going to allude to because they refer to a little joking in reference to myself, and that is not important enough to take up the time of this committee with. I have never posed as a farm instructor, and all I did do was to exercise my individual right as an humble observer, and in looking over the situation in the West I conceived an opinion that in some way or other mixed farming might be more extensively prosecuted than it hitherto has been. I had the temerity to utter that opinion in the House on several occasions. I am quite sure that nobody has been hurt because I did utter it, and I am also quite sure that I have not lost the respect of any good, well-grounded farmer in the West because I mentioned that opinion. I defer entirely in connection with all that kind of knowledge to my hon. friend from Moosejaw (Mr. Knowles). He is a past master in all those questions of wild oats and oil seed out in all the different ranges where weeds grow and flourish and pester the farmer of the West. He lives in that country and ought to know a great deal more about these things than I do.

As to gravel, which has greatly disturbed my hon. friend, I am afraid I will have to ask him to excuse me from going deeply into the gravel question, because I do not think it is important. We make a contract with a contractor. We pay him for his construction, and cement is used in that construction. The contractor has to look for his own materials and he gets them where he best can and at the best price he can for himself. We are not concerned as to where he buys his cement, except that we would like him to get it, and he practically does get it, in Canada. We are not concerned as to where he gets his gravel. We are concerned with two things, and with two things only. These are that the cement shall be the proper thing and that the gravel shall be the proper kind, and that the two shall make the construction according to the ideas of the supervising officer who is our own engineer. As to any troubles which have arisen in the path of the contractor towards his finding the gravel and getting it to the place of construction, I do not think that is anything of interest to this House.

I have no information upon it. All that I require my engineer to do is to supervise the construction of the work and see that the gravel and cement are proper. That he does, and that he reports to me. So much with reference to the gravel business. The next is as to the nearness of contact between the contractor and the engineer. Plans are prepared by different individuals and architects for the building of an elevator. These plans are gone over very carefully by our own architect and engineer. The plans he considers the best for that particular elevator are recommended by him and they are accepted on his recommendation by the board. Then it is the duty of the supervising engineer, who has no affiliation with the contractor in any way, to see that the building is constructed upon these plans and specifications, and that he does. There is no collusion and could not possibly be any collusion between the architect and the contractor in that respect. The architect's plans are there; if they are not good they are not taken, if they are good they are taken, and when they are taken the plans and specifications have to be lived up to according to the direction of our own engineer in charge, and in whom I have full faith. Mr. Howe is one of the most capable young men in his profession in Canada, and he is also as straight-forward and as honest as a man can be. I have every confidence, as has the Board of Grain Commissioners, that he does his work well and sees that the contractor does his work well also.

With reference to my hon. friend (Mr. Neely), who made the general assertion that after all these three or four years of effort under the Canada Grain Act, the only benefit that has come to the West was that they had had their fees and charges raised, which, however, is not the fact. I may say that the enunciation of a statement like that is all the argument I want to use against my hon. friend's fairly long criticism of the Grain Commission and of the working of the Grain Act. I put that to the farmers of the West, to the shippers of the West, and to the grain growers of the West. Here on one side is a statement made by a member of this House that all the good that has come to the West out of the whole Grain Act and out of its administration under the commission is that they have had their fees made higher.

Mr. NEELY: I said all I had been able to discover.

Mr. FOSTER: My hon. friend will not depreciate himself so much as to say to this House that there is anything discoverable that he has not been able to discover. He has not so placed himself generally before this House as being a man who feels that he is lacking in knowledge in any way; the opposite is rather the case. He is an authority upon western matters and I have never questioned his authority, and it will not do for him to try to escape the mild criticism I am giving him by entering the plea he has just put in. I will let his statement go to the farmers, to the shippers, and to the grain men of the West and he will not find a baker's dozen of them who have had anything to do with and any experience under the Canada Grain Act, who will stand by him in that assertion. He has quoted the commission appointed by the Government of Saskatchewan, by which he sets great store, and I read the report of that commission and I approve very largely of that report. I hope I will not raise the ire of my hon. friend from Moosejaw (Mr. Knowles) when I venture to express the opinion that after having read that report I think it is a very excellent report, and my hon. friend can take that report from the first page to the last and he will find almost unceasing commendation of the work of the Grain Commission and of the Canada Grain Act.

Mr. KNOWLES: Where is the commendation that my hon. friend speaks of?

Mr. FOSTER: If the hon. gentleman has read the report he will find it on almost every page.

Mr. KNOWLES: What is the date of that report?

Mr. FOSTER: I cannot be expected to keep such dates in my head, but my hon. friend comes from Saskatchewan and surely he knows the date of the report of his own provincial government and he is not asking me for information in that respect.

Mr. KNOWLES: I wanted to get it down on 'Hansard.'

Mr. FOSTER: These are apparently questions which flow out fatuously from the hon. gentleman and are not meant for any practical result. With reference to the storage elevators, my hon. friend who last criticised them, gave the impression to the House that in the first place the only reason why these elevators were constructed was to enable people to store grain on its way to the ultimate market. That is one reason, but that is not the only reason. Even suppose we let him rest on his own argument, that the man who puts his grain into the storage elevator will have to pay the local rate from the place he takes it to the storage elevator, and then when the storage has served its purpose that the local rate will have to be paid again when it is sent to its ultimate market, are there not still other advantages to come from the erection of storage elevators in the West? I think the hon. member will not say that the only advantage is a resting place for a little while for grain on its way towards its ultimate market. The storage elevator is also to enable men who wish to take advantage of the market, and are able to take advantage of the market, and who have no grain houses and storage places of their own, to put their grain into these storage houses nearby their own farms, to get their warehouse receipt, to finance themselves upon that receipt, and if they wish, to hold the grain in an independent position for a future market. They have had no conveniences for that upon their own farms, and I hope my hon. friend from Moosejaw will not think I am unduly criticising the western farmers because they have not these conveniences, but the fact is that as a rule they do not have them. Here we have machinery placed by this Parliament or by the Government in which they may store the grain and hold it there, financing themselves to the extent that the warehouse receipt gives them the capacity for so doing, and avoiding the necessity of throwing their grain in with the general rush, when the price is apt to go down, as it did last year, and holding it themselves for a future market. I think that is a great advantage, especially if what happened two years ago should repeat itself. If you have any season during which we raise in the West two hundred or two hundred and fifty million bushels of wheat, when, owing to the season, a large proportion of that goes bad and needs to be treated, these internal storage elevators equipped thoroughly for drying and for treating grain will save so much to the aggregate farming interests of the West that they will pay for themselves one hundred times over. I think every one will admit that. In a season such as we had two years ago, with an aggregate output of two hundred and fifty million bushels in the West, elevators at Calgary, at Saskatoon, and at Moosejaw, ready for storage to the extent they will be, with treating machinery in full equipment, they will be an insurance and a benefit to the farmers of the West which it is very difficult to estimate in money value. These are advantages that ought not to be lost track of in connection with the other.

As to the matter of rates, we are not legislating in this Canada Grain Act for rates on railways. Rates on railways are fixed in different Acts and by a different authority from the Grain Commission. I am quite willing —I am rather glad in fact—that my hon. friend's criticisms have gone upon the paper. They will be embalmed in the treasure house of this Parliament—the inevitable and inexhaustible 'Hansard.' There they will be; and we shall compare notes next year when we come together again, when the capacities of 'Hansard' will be just as large as they are to-day, and we shall see how we make out in the way of these comparisons. I have no fears as regards that. The Grain Commission and my department have already considered this matter to a certain extent and will further consider it; and when the time comes for the movement of the grain and the operation of these internal storehouses, I have no doubt that a satisfactory arrangement will be reached.

I do not know that there are any other questions that I have missed answering. I want to answer every question; and if I incorporate into my answers a little mild criticism now and again of my two hon. friends who are facing me, it is just to show that I am generous enough to give back a little of what they so generously gave to me.

Mr. NEELY: It is very remarkable that the hon. minister, with all that fund of information which he has, which he should have and which he is expected, as the head of his department to have at his command, in speaking of the improvements in the handling and the marketing of the grain of the West, that have been brought about under his administration, after all has had to fall back for his verification on a report published by a commission appointed by the Government of the province of Saskatchewan. Whilst he has challenged my statement, he has not given, so far as I can learn, any concrete evidence that he has concrete illustrations in his own mind as to what improvements have been brought about; but he simply makes the general statement, basing it on the report which I have just mentioned, that such is the case. I am willing to take the minister's word for it, but I would have preferred if he had given us some concrete illustrations as to the improvements brought about since he has been in charge of the Department of Trade and Commerce, and consequently of shipping conditions in the West.

The minister tells us that, when this policy gets on a little further and when there are eight or ten of these elevators in operation, this question of the rates will be worked out satisfactorily. That information is very satisfactory, but it is very indefinite. The minister does not at all meet the point which I am trying to make, namely, that, before launching on this policy of building a large number of storage elevators throughout the West, at a greater or less expense, he and his department have made no definite arrangements. I use for illustration only this one particular benefit that the farmers expect to derive from these storage elevators, that is, a place of storage in time of congestion.

I quite agree with the minister that they may be of great benefit in other directions; but the point I am making is that, if the financial benefit that may be derived by the farmers from the erection of these elevators is to be handed over to the railway companies by the paying of extra rates for transport, then the whole scheme falls to the ground. That is my contention, as the minister knows; but he has managed, in that very able manner of his, to evade it entirely in his reply. The minister is very capable when it comes to making a general statement; but when it comes to giving particulars, I am afraid I have to admit that, apart from the criticism of my hon. friend from Moosejaw (Mr. Knowles), that he is not an authority on farming, he is not just as great an authority as he should be on matters intimately connected with his department.

On April 22 I asked the minister a few questions, which he was good enough to answer, with reference to what the Board of Grain Commissioners had done regarding the establishment of sample markets in western Canada. Here is a little bit of inside history given in answer to my questions. The questions and answers are as follows:

Mr. Neely:

1. Has the Board of Grain Commissioners recommended to the Government the establishment of sample markets in western Canada?

2. If so, what date did they recommend for the establishment of sample markets and at what points?

3. Has the Government passed any Order in Council respecting the matter, as required by the Grain Act?

4. If so, what dates were fixed and what points were selected for the establishment of these sample markets?

5. If such Order in Council was passed, has it been given effect? If not, why not?

Mr. George E. Foster:

1. Yes.

2. September, 1913. The board afterwards—

I do not know what 'afterwards' means——changed the date of their recommendation to December 15, 1913; Winnipeg and Fort William.

3. Yes.

4. December 15, 1913, but subsequently indefinitely postponed; Winnipeg and Fort William.

5. No. The crop of 1913 was of unusually high quality and remarkably uniform. It was harvested early and placed rapidly upon the market. By the date set, most of the wheat had passed out of first hands, and the farmers therefore would have got little if any advantage from putting the sample market into operation.

If the first date recommended, namely, September 1, 1913, had been adopted, and the Order in Council passed in accordance therewith, this answer would not have been on the Order Paper as to the crop having passed out of the farmers' hands previous to the establishment of the sample market. I am giving this as an illustration to show what I think everybody in the grain trade in the West knows perfectly well, that, through inexperience or something of the sort, a certain policy entered into last year for the handling of last year's crop was recommended by the Board of Grain Commissioners, an Order in Council was passed based upon that recommendation, and what happened? When it came to the working out of the policy, certain insuperable difficulties faced both the members of the board and the minister, with the result that that Order in Council was not carried into effect, but was indefinitely postponed. The recommendations of the Board of Grain Commissioners and the operations of the minister and department during this year will show whether or not they propose to take up for the coming year the proposals which they made last year, but which they dropped. I am just using that as an illustration to show how a policy may be adopted without due consideration, and that those who have adopted the policy may find themselves up against insurmountable difficulties, with the result that the policy has to be dropped. I would not like to see that occur in the case of the interior storage elevators, because I agree with the minister that great benefits may result therefrom. That is, benefits will result if the railway companies are not permitted to rob the farmers of those benefits by charging them double rates instead of single through rates to the head terminals at Fort William and other points.

Mr. ROBB: Can the minister tell what will be the storage rates in these elevators?

Mr. G. E. FOSTER: These have not been fixed yet by the Grain Commission. I may remind my hon. friend from Humboldt (Mr. Neely) that he is in error when he says that the only thing that had happened as the result of the Grain Act and its administration under the Grain Commission was an increase in the rates. I do not follow him in that, for the rates for storage in elevators are exactly the same as they were last year, under the amended Act they remained the same as under the former Act; there has been no raising of rates in any respect.

Mr. NEELY: What about the license and so on.

Mr. FOSTER: I did not imagine that my hon. friend was so interested in looking after the interests of the elevators, these big corporations, that we would raise this row because they were made to pay a fair license fee. That fee does not come from the farmer, and I think that the elevators are quite able to pay it; and so long as I have the administration of the Grain Act I propose that they shall pay something for the privileges that they enjoy. But so far as the fees charged the farmers are concerned, whether in the country elevators, the elevators in the West or the terminal elevators the farmers pay not one single tenth of a cent more than they paid before.

My hon. friend from Huntingdon (Mr. Robb) asks what will be the storage rates. I have already answered that the storage rates have not been settled. They will certainly not be greater than the rates at present in force in Fort William. Whether they shall be less or not will depend upon the opinion of the Grain Commission. I may say that while, as minister, I am responsible in the end, yet I have thrown absolutely their full share of the responsibility for these matters upon the Grain Commission. They are three men whom I believe to be good men and capable. They are in the business and all the time they are going, up and down the whole line of transport and amongst the people who are engaged in this business. I think they have the best opportunity of examination and of reaching conclusions, and I stand by the Grain Commission. I do not think there is a single thing yet in which I have been at cross purposes with them. I think they know better what ought to be carried out than I do. At the same time, I do not abdicate my position as being responsible and there is very little that the Grain Commission does that I do not discuss with them in one form or another.

Mr. ROBB: The statement from the minister that the storage rates will not be greater than the rates at Fort William will not afford much encouragement to the grain grower or grain handler of the West. The storage rates at Fort William have been one of the grievances in the trade. For instance, they charge for winter storage one cent per month, whereas, if the grain were on this side of the lakes it would be carried at one and one-half cent for the winter season.

If the internal elevators are to be of any considerable value for storage in the West, rates will have to be considerably reduced as compared with those at Fort William. Now, I agree largely with what the minister has said as to the value of these internal elevators in the West. One advantage will be that the crop can be handled more quickly than would be possible if the trains had to go down to Fort William and back. Another advantage will be that if these elevators are equipped with proper cleaning machinery, the grain can be cleaned in these elevators and the owner of the grain will not have to pay freight on weeds and seeds that are of very small commercial value and that are not wanted in the East. I am not sure that it is good policy to give out the ideas concerning the western country that freight rates are going to be quite as bad as represented by my hon. friend from Humboldt. I noticed that the hon. minister was not in a position to correct that. I do not know where my hon. friend from Humboldt gathered the idea he gave to the House. For instance, he gave a concrete case where they will have to pay a local freight from Swift Current to Moosejaw and another from Moosejaw to Fort William. I think he has been misinformed in that.

Mr. NEELY: I did not say anything about what they had to pay; I asked if the minister had made any arrangement.

Mr. ROBB: I gathered that the minister was going to take credit later on for fixing these rates. As a matter of fact, the rates had been in force for many years, and I suppose that these internal elevators will enjoy the same privileges as the millers in their elevators. Grain will be shipped on through rates to Fort William and will pay a stop-over of two cents per 100 pounds for cleaning. I think that is a reasonable charge and the farmers could hardly expect better. These are the rates going East; the rates going West are somewhat different, and they, perhaps, will have to be corrected.

Mr. KNOWLES: How long is the stop-over?

Mr. ROBB: I think the millers are allowed six months.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER: As to the point mentoned by my hon. friend, the feeling that the rates for storage at the terminal elevators at Fort William have been too high, we really are not in a position to understand the inside workings of the elevator system under the established rates until we have had the experience of a full year of an elevator owned and operated by the Dominion. The Grain Commissioners, of course, are watching that matter very closely, as also is my department. At the end of the year we shall have means of estimating what are fair and reasonable charges for storage at the terminal elevators. I am not making any pronouncement at the present time. But the Grain Commissioners' report, when it comes down, will, I think, give an intimation of the views that the Grain Commission has formed in that regard. And, I may say—putting it negatively—those views are not of a tendency to increase the cost and charges at the terminal elevators. The whole matter, as my hon. friend will see, assumes an entirely different aspect as the basis for judgment concerning proper charges, when the operation of the Government elevator has proceeded for the space of one year.

Mr. OLIVER: What are the winter storage charges at the Midland elevator ?

Mr. FOSTER: I have not the information before me just at the present time.

Mr. ROBB: One cent and a half a bushel.

Mr. OLIVER: What is the storage charge at the Port Colborne elevator ?

Mr. ROBB: One cent and a half is the maximum rate; if the grain is taken out within the winter period the rate is one-thirtieth of a cent a day.

Mr. OLIVER: The Port Colborne elevator is the property of the Dominion Government. It was built by the Dominion Government at the cost of the Dominion; it has been in operation for a considerable number of years, and there ought to be adequate knowledge in the department by this time as to whether the charge at the Port Colborne elevator, which is on all-fours with the private elevators at Midland, is or is not below a reasonable figure. It is hard to make anybody understand that Government money employed at Port Colborne in the erection of an elevator should have less earning power than Government money employed in the construction of an elevator at Fort William. I think the minister has been rather slow, if I may say so, in making up his mind as to what the storage charges should be, especially when he is establishing a new policy, carrying out a new principle and making a very large expenditure of money. Without wishing to delay the committee, I take this opportunity of emphasizing to the minister the views of the hon. member for Humboldt that the value of the interior elevators depends upon the charges made for their use, both in respect of storage and of transportation to and from them. I am not pleased to hear the minister explain at such length and with such emphasis the additional benefits that will be conferred by reason of the elevators offering more than simple storage. It seems to me as if he were discounting a possibility of higher charges for the additional advantages that we all hope will come from the construction of these elevators. I have said before, and I am going to take the liberty of saying again, that in the face of a falling world's market of wheat; in the face of increase of production in new and competitive countries, if we are going to stay in the wheat business, we must cut our costs to the bone. This is not a matter concerning only the farmer of the West; it is a matter concerning everybody in Canada whose business is dependent directly or indirectly, in whole or in part, upon the success and expansion of wheat growing on the western prairies. If it is possible for the minister to cut the cost of storage; if it is possible for him to cut the expense connected with these interior storage elevators, it is his duty to do so, in the interests not merely of the farmers but of the Dominion of Canada as a whole, in order that there may be a further expansion of the wheat-growing industry on the prairies and in order that the wheat growers of the West may be able to compete in the markets of the world under the adverse conditions which are increasing from season to season. I say it is his business to cut those costs absolutely to the bone, and it is not going to meet the case to say that such and such charges prevail some place else; that there are going to be special advantages in the use of these elevators and that the farmers ought, therefore, to pay an extra special charge. If the purpose of the Government in making these expenditures and in providing these facilities is to be reached, there must be a cut of costs absolutely to the minimum.

In connection with the cost of use of these elevators, let me refer to the back-haul to which the minister himself has alluded. The elevators at Saskatoon and at Moosejaw are situated about midway in the province of Saskatchewan from east to west. Very much more wheat is raised in Saskatchewan east of Moosejaw and east of Saskatoon than west of Moosejaw and west of Saskatoon, therefore if the elevators at Saskatoon and Moosejaw are to be used by the wheat growers living to the east of them an additional haul to market—the back-haul of which the minister spoke—is involved. I am not dictating as to what can or what should be done, but it is perfectly clear that in respect of the wheat of eastern Saskatchewan, which has to pay a back-haul to get the benefit of these elevators, unless there is some special advantage in connection with the freight rates, these elevators are going to be of very little use to that part of the province of Saskatchewan which raises the largest proportion of the wheat of the province. This special advantage would mean a cut below the ordinary rate in respect of the wheat taking this back-haul. I do not know whether or not that is possible; I am not going to discuss that point. I merely point out that unless something of that kind is done, considerably more than half the wheat grown in the province of Saskatchewan cannot get the benefit of those elevator facilities at Saskatoon or Moosejaw excepting at a prohibitive cost.

I am sorry that the minister is not able to give us the charges that he proposes to impose for the use of these elevators. The hon. member for Huntingdon has said that there is a milling-in-transit rate on the railroads which would be available to the elevators. That is quite possible. I know that there is a milling-in-transit rate, but I also know that special charges might be be levied on grain for storage which is not levied in the case of grain for milling. There is always the posibility of an advance to the disadvantage of a new institution. I wish to emphasize the necessity, in the interests of the Government, in the interests of the reputation of the Dominion, in the interests of the country at large, and in the interests of the farmers, that this matter of cost should have the fullest attention of the minister and that the cost should be cut absolutely to the bone.

On section 2—S. 121 amended:

Mr. ROBB: Will the minister explain the effect of putting 123 under the same classification as 122?

Mr. G. E. FOSTER: Putting 123 in clause 121 will bring public elevators in the East under the same supervision and control of the Grain Board as those in the West and as terminal elevators are under. A public elevator, as my hon. friend knows, is one that receives for storage and transit grain which has been certificated at Fort William, and which passes through on its way to the ultimate market. It has been felt for a number of years, and the Grain Commission have been very insistent on this, that there should be more supervision and control over the grain after it leaves Fort William and until it reaches the seaboard. The purpose of the inclusion of section 123 in clause 121 is simply to give the same authority and supervision and control over the eastern public elevator as there is over the terminal elevator. The purpose is to endeavour to keep intact the quality of the grain as it is certificated at Fort William or Port Arthur until it reaches the ultimate market.

Mr. ROBB: As I understand the section reads:

> No person owning, managing, operating or otherwise interested in a terminal elevator shall buy or sell grain at any point in the eastern or western inspection division.

As I understand, if this clause is adopted owners of public elevators will come under this prohibition, they will be deprived of the privilege which they now have of buying grain in the western division. Is that right?

Mr. G. E. FOSTER: No, you will see exactly in subsection 2. Subsection 1 is the general prohibition. In subsection 2, you have four clauses which have relevancy to and modify subsection 1. That was found to be necessary in order to carry on the practical working of the terminal and public elevators in the West. Subsections A and B show the modification to subsection 1. These exceptions only apply with the approval of the Grain Board. For instance, we have in the East, as public elevators, railway elevators, Government Harbour Commission elevators and Government elevators, the latter at Port Colborne, St. John and Halifax. We have also public elevators which take the grain carried from the West, as certificated, and which are now operated by neither of these three different kinds of authorities. That is, they have now the authority to take in this grain from the West, certificated at Fort William or Port Arthur, and to put it into elevators in which is also stored grain that they buy. Objection is taken to their being allowed to do that without any supervision. Now, before that can take place the Grain Board have to make an examination and satisfy themselves with respect to all the conditions, as well as to the personality of the public elevator. If they are satisfied and approve, the business of the elevator goes on exactly the same as in the terminal and public elevators at Fort William and in the West.

Section agreed to.

On section 3—exception in case of terminal elevators:

Mr. G. E. FOSTER: Section 3 is simply the exception of terminal elevators from the car clause. It would be impossible to carry on the work of a terminal elevator at Fort William under the restriction of the car clause. The clause that will govern them will be No. 133.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

On section 3—terminal elevators:

Mr. KNOWLES: The section which, of course, is really an amendment to the begining of section 195, and which is called 194a, provides that:

> The provisions of sections 195 to 207, both inclusive, shall not apply to elevators licensed as terminal elevators.

I suppose the minister intends to make the elevators at Moosejaw and Saskatoon terminal elevators under a declaration by Order in Council?

Mr. G. E. FOSTER: They must be terminal elevators.

Mr. KNOWLES: In paragraph y of the interpretation section it is provided that:

> Terminal elevator includes every elevator or warehouse which receives or ships grain and is located at any point declared by the Governor in Council to be a terminal.

Under this section 3 there is nothing to prevent every elevator at Saskatoon and Moosejaw becoming terminal elevators because every elevator, just as well as the Government elevator, will be an elevator which receives and ships grain and is situated at a point declared by the Governor in Council to be a terminal. The Governor in Council will declare Saskatoon and Moosejaw to be terminal points and this clause says then that every elevator which is situated at these points shall be a terminal elevator. Consequently, it would look as if the local elevators in Moosejaw and Saskatoon would not come under sections 195 to 207, namely, the clauses in regard to cars and the car order book.

Mr. G. E. FOSTER: I think there is a point in that which I did not notice. I would suggest that we pass the clause and I will not push the Bill to the third reading, but I will have this matter looked into so that if anything is necessary to guard it I can introduce it as an amendment.

Bill reported.

REGULATION OF EXPLOSIVES.

On motion of Hon. Louis Coderre (Minister of Mines), the House went into Committee on the following proposed resolution, Mr. Blondin in the chair:

> Resolved, that it is expedient to regulate and control the manufacture, importation and use of explosives and the construction, licensing and inspection of premises used for the manufacture and storing of explosives, and to provide for the making of inquiries where an accidental explosion has occurred.

Mr. OLIVER: This is a resolution that, no doubt, is important, and there are a number of members who would like to be informed in regard to it. There are very few in the House just now and we do not wish to delay the business, but if the minister will make a full explanation on the second reading of the Bill there will be no objection to it going through without the information being given now.

Mr. CODERRE: I will do that.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I would ask the hon. the minister if this resolution contemplates the avoidance of such accidents as happened a year or two ago at Beloeil? There was a powder manufactory at Beloeil and an explosion took place with the result that ten persons were killed. There is another powder manufactory on Ile Perrot. It is quite near the track, and I am often nervous when I pass that point on my way to Montreal. Does this Bill contemplate circumstances of that nature?

Mr. CODERRE: I shall be pleased, as requested by my hon. friend from Edmonton (Mr. Oliver), to delay the full explanation of this proposal until the second reading of the Bill. I would say to my hon. colleague from Rouville (Mr. Lemieux) that this resolution is to authorize the regulation and control of the manufacture, storage, testing, importation and transportation of explosives generally and the Bill which will be founded upon it proposes to do away, as far as possible, with such accidents as the one which he has mentioned. This is a most important measure. It should have been passed years ago. I remember that in 1911, my predecessor, Mr.

Templeman, brought a Bill before the House, a few clauses of which were passed. The accident which has been alluded to by my hon. friend from Rouville is not the only one that has occurred during the past year. I have here a list, based on information we have obtained from the Labour Gazette, of ninety-two fatal accidents in 1913 due to explosion in mining, railway construction and other employments.

Mr. LEMIEUX: The present Bill will deal with such conditions?

Mr. CODERRE: I think so.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. CODERRE thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 189, to regulate the manufacture, testing, storage, and importation of explosives.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

CANADA TEMPERANCE ACT AMENDMENT.

On motion of Hon. C. J. Doherty (Minister of Justice), Bill No. 180, to amend the Canada Temperance Act, was read the second time and the House went into Committee thereon, Mr. Blondin in the Chair.

Mr. DOHERTY: The first purpose of the Bill is to make the Canada Temperance Act of practical application in the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. The second purpose of the Bill is to obviate a difficutly which has arisen in connection with elections under the Canada Temperance Act in the unorganized territories of Ontario. The law at present says that the persons entitled to vote upon an election for the adoption of the Canada Temperance Act, are the persons who would be entitled to vote in Dominion elections, and in order to hold an election under the Canada Temperance Act it is necessary that there should be a list in force for the purpose of a Dominion election. The law provides that in the unorganized territories an electoral list shall be made every year unless the Governor in Council dispenses with the making of such list, and it has been usual for the Governor in Council to so dispense with the making of the list in years other than that in which a general election is anticipated. Consequently, in certain cases it was necessary to make a special list for an election for the adoption of the Canada Temperance Act, and inasmuch as the list so made must be suitable for use at a Dominion election, even where only a small part of the riding would be included in the district in which it was sought to bring the Canada Temperance Act into force, it was found to be necessary to make a list for the entire riding. This entailed additional and useless expense, and the purpose of the amendment is to provide that in such case the list may be made to cover only that part of any riding included in the district in which the Temperance Act is sought to be brought into force. It is provided that such list shall be applicable for the purposes of that election only, and shall not be used in the event of a Dominion election becoming necessary in that riding. It was considered undesirable that in a Dominion election in the riding part of the list should be made at one time and part at another.

It is farther sought to amend the law so as to remove doubt as to the jurisdiction of the Superior Courts to hear contestations of the validity of elections held under the Canada Temperance Act. I would not be inclined to think that the doubt as to the jurisdiction was very serious, but as the question had arisen it was thought wise to remove any doubt. In connection with the lists there was also found another difficulty which is sought to be remedied by an amendment which I intend to propose to the Bill as introduced. The Canada Temperance Act provides that twenty-five per cent of the qualified voters shall petition for the ordering of an election under the Act. In districts composed partly of organized and partly of unorganized territory, difficulty has arisen from the fact that in the unorganized territory there was not in force in certain cases any list of electors which would enable the Secretary of State to determine whether or not the petitioners were twenty-five per cent of the electors in that unorganized territory. The amendment will provide that in such case, for the purpose of determining whether or not there are twenty-five per cent of the voters in the unorganized territories who have signed the petition, the Secretary of State shall take the number of voters who were on the last list in force in that territory as being the number whereof twenty-five per cent must sign the petition. This is made subject to the exception that in cases where it may be demonstrated that there has been a noted diminution in the population of the unorganized district since the making of the last list, then twenty-five per cent of the persons who can be shown to be living in the district will be sufficient.

Mr. KNOWLES: In Ontario, as I understand it, you cannot hold an election under the Canada Temperance Act, for a county, in such a way that the rural population would impose their wishes on the city population, or vice versa, in cases where there is a city included within a county. Am I right in that?

Mr. DOHERTY: I understand that the Act as it now stands provides for separate elections in cities and counties. The difficulty that arose in the western provinces was that there were no subdivisions of territory corresponding with the districts in which the Act provided that a temperance election might be held. The way in which that difficulty is sought to be obviated is by a provision that in those provinces the word 'county' shall mean a riding for a Dominion election. It makes the Act applicable, and at the same time obviates any difficulty about the lists, because a county for the purposes of the Canada Temperance Act will be the county for the purpose of a Dominion election, and naturally the same voters' list will be applicable.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Will the minister tell the House in how many counties in the Dominion the Canada Temperance Act is now in force?

Mr. DOHERTY: I am not in a position to give that information. Perhaps I should have anticipated that question, but I did not anticipate it.

Mr. KNOWLES: Can the minister tell me whether my information is correct or not? I am informed that, say in a county in the province of Ontario, in which there is a small city and a large rural vote, in the city there may be a majority of people who do not approve of the bringing of this Act into operation, while in the rural district there may be a large majority approving of it. In such a case will the rural people have the power to impose their wishes on the urban people?

Mr. DOHERTY: Perhaps the best way to answer the hon. member is to give him the definition in the statute. Under section 2, the interpretation section of the Act as it stands, we have this provision, which I think answers the question:

> In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires, 'county' includes every town, township, parish and other division or municipality, except a city, within the territorial limits of the county, and also a union of counties united for municipal purposes.

I should say that under that provision, in an election held for a county, which includes a city, the city would not be included in the county.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN: But a town would?

Mr. DOHERTY: Yes, a town would. Everything that was not a city would be included.

Mr. KNOWLES: The amendment in regard to the provinces in the West will be subject to the same exception; or, in other words, our cities in Saskatchewan will be masters of their own destinies in this matter?

Mr. DOHERTY: I am afraid that the amendment as drawn will not meet that requirement. The provision in this Bill is that:

> As respects the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, 'county' means the electoral districts therein as designated by the Representation Act.

In that respect this definition differs from the definition of the word 'county' as given generally. That, however, is already the law as regards the province of Manitoba. The present provision of the law as respects the province of Manitoba is:

> 'County' means the electoral districts therein as designated by the Representation Act.

And we are now making applicable to Alberta and Saskatchewan the law as it stands with regard to Manitoba. If the hon. member thinks it desirable to make the same distinction with regard to these provinces, I am quite prepared to consider his suggestion.

Mr. KNOWLES: I am not very familiar with the matter; the minister knows it better than I do; but if we are thoughtlessly making one law for Ontario and another law for Saskatchewan, we may be in error. On the face of it, I have grave doubts whether it will be in the interest of temperance, say in the West, where we have a very large rural population, if we can take a constituency including a city, because the city may consider that the prohibition of liquor is not desirable, and that it can not be successfully operated, whereas the county people may hold the opposite view, and may be able to impose their views on the city. I am not at the moment placing myself on record either as in favour of the amendment or as against it; but if we are making legislation for one province different from that in another we should do so knowing that we are doing it and why we do it.

Mr. DOHERTY: It is a question of assimilating the law in Saskatchewan and Alberta to that in force in Manitoba. At first glance one might be inclined to think that conditions in Alberta and Saskatchewan might be more similar to those in Manitoba than possibly to those in Ontario. I have not heard any suggestion that the law does not operate satisfactorily in the province of Manitoba, and I think that the same provision under the Act is applicable to British Columbia.

Mr. KNOWLES: British Columbia has a very small rural settlement as compared with Saskatchewan.

Mr. DOHERTY: If the hon. member, who is no doubt more familiar with the conditions in these two western provinces than I can pretend to be, thinks there will be a material advantage in assimilating the law in these two provinces to the law in force in Ontario, rather than to the law as in force in Manitoba, I shall be glad to consider the suggestion.

Mr. KNOWLES: I am not speaking after very much reflection; but I am rather inclined to think that what the minister suggests may be my view, so far as I can see now. The fact that Manitoba has a certain condition of affairs does not seem to be a strong argument why the law in force in Manitoba should be applicable to Saskatchewan. In fact, I would rather follow Ontario in this matter than Manitoba.

Mr. DOHERTY: The mere fact that a certain provision is in force in Manitoba is not a reason why it should be put into force in Saskatchewan, unless it appears that the provision as regards Manitoba is more suitable to Saskatchewan than the provision as regards Ontario. As I said a moment ago, at first glance one would be inclined to think that conditions in Saskatchewan and Alberta would be more similar to conditions in Manitoba than to conditions in Ontario. When the law was originally made with this distinction, I presume there must have been some reason for the difference, and I have not heard any representation upon the subject indicating any desire that we should differentiate between the law as applicable to Manitoba and the law as applicable to the other provinces. I do not want to be understood as saying that because it is so in Manitoba, it should be so in Saskatchewan and Alberta. It is entirely a question of what is most suitable for the two provinces.

Mr. KNOWLES: Would the word 'county' have the same meaning in the East as in the West? It is possible that this little discussion may be due to the minister's having given in his kindness an answer without giving the matter very much consideration. I am not sure that there is a difference. I asked the minister to put it beyond peradventure. I wondered if the minister had looked into it carefully enough to be positive in his opinion that a different condition of affairs does prevail in Manitoba from that in Ontario. I know that there is a debate on the subject. If the minister is sure on that point, I will let it rest; but if he gave a somewhat hurried answer, there may be an explanation, and even the Manitoba cities are the governors.

Mr. DOHERTY: My answer consisted in reading the statute, and that seems to be perfectly clear. I will read all that relates to this point:

> (d) 'county' includes every town, township, parish and other division or municipality, except a city, within the territorial limits of the county for municipal purposes;
>
> (e) as respects the province of Ontario, or any other province in which provisional or temporary judicial districts exist, 'county' includes such provisional or temporary judicial districts;
>
> (f) as respects the province of Manitoba, 'county' means the electoral districts therein, as designated by the Representation Act;
>
> (g) as respects the province of British Columbia, until the province shall have been divided into counties and a regular municipal organization established in each of such counties, 'county' means an electoral district therein in accordance with the division of the province for election of members of the House of Commons of Canada, and includes every town, township, parish and other division or municipality within the territorial limits of such electoral district, or within a union of electoral districts where united for municipal purposes.

It is possible, in view of this first general definition of 'county' excepting from it the cities, that that first disposition should be considered as applying to these counties as subsequently defined in the other provinces. I shall be glad to look into that matter. I am free to confess that I did not examine that question, because what was represented to us, and the only thing represented to us, was that it was desirable that we should insert a definition so as to make it aplicable to Alberta and Saskatchewan, without any expression of desire as to how it should be made to apply.

Mr. OLIVER: In my judgment, the provision which is applicable in Ontario whereby the city is excluded would be properly applicable in Alberta and Saskatchewan.

A city is incorporated by the provincial authority, and given independent powers for what seem good and sufficient reasons. The fact that it has been created a city, the fact that a certain place has been created a city by the provincial authority, means that the provincial authority desires to establish a separate control within that area; and it seems to me that it would be rather a mistake to ignore that plain intent of the provincial authority when creating a city. I would suggest that in applying the law to the electoral districts, the same exception be made as regards cities in Alberta and Saskatchewan as is made unquestionably in regard to Ontario and probably in regard to Manitoba.

Mr. DOHERTY: I shall look into the question, as I mentioned a moment ago. The definition of county which excludes the cities is not specially applicable to Ontario, but is a general definition. Then, we have provision with regard to Ontario, with regard to Manitoba, and with regard to British Columbia, and we shall have with regard to Saskatchewan and Alberta. I think it is quite possible that one should read the definition as applicable to all these specified cases, in which event the exception of the cities would be general. I confess I did not consider any question arising except that we should make this law applicable and workable in the two provinces. If we reach the conclusion that it is applicable, the Bill might stand as it is; if we reach a contrary conclusion upon what is represented, I do not see any objection to modifying the Bill so as to make the exclusion of the cities apply.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I was not present when this debate commenced, but I heard the hon. minister speak on the introduction of the Bill. So far as he has spoken, he has not given any information as to the raison d'etre of this Bill. Are we to understand that this Bill is asked for by the temperance organizations, or is there any demand in the western provinces for the change of the Act?

Mr. DOHERTY: Before the right hon. gentleman came in I had endeavoured to explain the reasons that brought about the proposal of these amendments. It has been represented by people interested in the temperance cause that the Act was not workable in Saskatchewan, and if I am not mistaken the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) but a few days ago referred in this House to this lack of provision in the Act making it workable in these two provinces. It is because it appears to us fair and right that a law intended to be of general application, and unworkable in these particular provinces simply for want of definition of those counties or districts in which the Act might be brought into force, ought to be so modified as to make it applicable throughout the country generally. The other amendments suggested in the Bill are the result not so much of representation from anybody as of difficulties that arise in the application of the Act and that have caused a great deal of trouble. One difficulty was to get a list for the purpose of an election necessary for the adoption of the Canada Temperance Act, where the whole or part—more particularly where part of the counties in which the election was sought to be held consisted of unorganized territory in the province of Ontario. As I explained, it was found that under the law as it stands, in virtue whereof persons entitled to vote in an election on the Canada Temperance Act are described as persons who would be entitled to vote at a Dominion election to be held at the same time, wherever a county for the purpose of the Canada Temperance Act included some part of an unorganized territory in the province of Ontario, the only method by which you could get a list applicable to that part which was comprised of unorganized territory was by making a list under the Dominion Elections Act, and it was considered, after careful examination, that you could only make a list for the purpose of the Dominion Elections Act by making a list for the entire Dominion riding. So that where, perhaps, but one-tenth part of the Dominion riding forming part of the county for the purposes of a Canada Temperance Act election consisted of unorganized territory, we were under the necessity of making a list for the entire riding, which entailed a very considerable useless expense. That was one difficulty. A second difficulty that arose also related to the unorganized territory—that in order that an election should be held in a county as it is defined in this Act, it is required that there should be a petition made by twenty-five per cent of the qualified voters. In that connection the difficulty was that where the county for temperance election purposes consisted partly of organized and partly of unorganized territory, we found ourselves in this position: when the petitioner presented his petition it was easy enough to ascertain whether he had twenty-five per cent of the voters in the organized territory, because there was a list to which he could refer, but with regard to the unorganized territory it was exceedingly difficult, if not impossible, for the petitioner satisfactorily to establish that he had twenty-five per cent of the persons who would be entitled to vote at that temperance election when it came on, because the lists, being made only for the purposes of that temperance election, naturally would not be made until after the occasion for it had been shown by the presentation and granting of the petition for the election. It is mainly on account of the difficulties which I have mentioned with regard to the unorganized territory that the decision was arrived at to amend the Act. When we had decided to amend the Act, it was pointed out that in its present condition, as I mentioned a little while ago, it was not workable in these two provinces and we thought that we ought to meet that difficulty.

Mr. ROBB: In the preparation of this Act, has the minister taken into consideration the representations that were made to him in March, 1913, by Dr. Bazin, of Ormstown, representing the Temperance Association in the province of Quebec?

Mr. DOHERTY: The representations made by Dr. Bazin have certainly had the consideration which they deserved, both on account of their intrinsic merits and on account of the source from which they came. But the principal suggestion of Dr. Bazin looked to a much more fundamental amendment of this Act than anything which is suggested here. In fact, one could hardly call it an amendment to the Act; it was the suggestion of an entirely new procedure with regard to the adoption of the Canada Temperance Act. I am speaking now solely from memory, but I do not think that I am mistaken. The principal suggestion of Dr. Bazin was that at every general election we should simultaneously submit, all over the country, I understand, the question whether the Dominion Temperance Act, or prohibition in some shape, should be adopted. That, of course, is a proposition that, I think, calls for more serious consideration than any of the amendments which it is now proposed to make to the Act, which look merely to the making of the Act more workable than it is under present conditions.

Mr. CARROLL: I would like to bring to the attention of the minister what seems to me to be an anomaly in the Act. Any city situated in a county which brings the Canada Temperance Act into force is excluded from the operation of the Act, but if a municipality should receive a city charter after the coming into force of the Act, the newly-created city is in the same position as the whole county and is not excluded from the operation of the Act. If it is the intention of the legislation to exclude all cities from the operation of the Act, the Act should be amended to provide that when a civic corporation receives a city charter after the coming into force of the Act in the county in which it is situated, that city shall be excluded from the operation of the Act. The Supreme Court of Nova Scotia, on certiorari application, decided that civic institutions receiving city charters after the coming into force of the Act in the county in which it was situated, should come within the operation of the Act.

Mr. DOHERTY: I do not understand that the Canada Temperance Act provides that you cannot pass it in a city. What it provides is that when you pass it in a county the city shall be excepted, but the city may pass the Act for itself. The purpose is not to say that the Scott Act shall never be enforced in any city; the purpose is to prevent cities from being controlled by the rest of the county in which they are situated.

Mr. CARROLL: But that is not exactly the point I am making. The Act as it now stands provides that when the Canada Temperance Act is brought into force in a county in which there is a city, that city is excluded from the operation of the Act.

Mr. DOHERTY: It is provided that the city shall not be bound by the proceedings and the voting of the county.

Mr. CARROLL: Exactly so. If a town receives a city charter after the county in which the city is situate is brought under the operation of the Act, the Act does not apply to that city. I think there should be something in the Act to make its application uniform in respect of cities growing up in counties in which the Canada Temperance Act is put in force. The mere fact that the county has voted to bring itself within the operation of the Canada Temperance Act should not provide that the Act shall apply also to a town which afterwards receives a city charter, especially in view of the fact that that town would be exempt from its operation if it were a city at the time the county came under the operation of the Canada Temperance Act.

Mr. DOHERTY: It may, perhaps, be desirable to make some provision to enable the city to be included in the country, because it has become a city, to withdraw itself from the operation of the Act, but I do not quite see that because something that was part of a county at the time the election was held, and therefore bound, as part of the county, by the result of the election in the county, should, by the mere fact that it becomes a city, cease to be under the operation of the Act. That would be a proposition which, I think, ought to be acceded to if the provision of the law was that the Act was never to apply in cities. But that, as I understand it, is not the provision of the law. The Act may be enforced in cities if it is properly brought into force. Where the Act has been properly brought into force in a territory which at the time is not a city, but which subsequently becomes a city, the fact that that portion of the territory has become a city does not alter the fact that the Temperance Act has been properly brought into force within it. Whether, because it has become a city, it should be given some exceptional method of relieving itself of the condition with regard to the Temperance Act in which it was before it became a city is, no doubt, a matter that deserves consideration, but it does not, at first glance, seem to me that it goes without saying that merely because it has become a city, it ought to be relieved from a condition which it, in common with the rest of the county, had imposed upon itself.

Mr. CARROLL: I would think that there is no provision in the Act which would allow that new city, which received its charter after the Act came into force in the county, to exempt itself from the operation of the Act. There is where the difficulty comes in. If it were the intention of the Act to have one law for the city and another for the county or to give the city the option of having the law, no matter what the county may decide, there should be something in the Act to provide for new cities that may arise. I am arguing the matter merely from the standpoint of uniformity in the law. In the city to which I have special reference they could not bring into operation a license system as the Act stands now. They would have to be bound by the action of the county when it had perhaps one-third the population of the city to-day.

Mr. DOHERTY: The hon. gentleman will realize that his suggestion has no direct relation to the amendment sought to be made, and I have to confess it is the first time that that matter has been brought to my attention. I would require to consider it further before determining whether or not legislation should be introduced to meet the difficulty. The present amendment looks simply to providing voters' lists and to making the Act workable in provinces in which it is not now workable. I shall be very glad to consider the suggestion made and see whether it really calls for a remedy, and what would be the proper remedy.

Mr. WRIGHT: We might take it for granted that, in a county in Ontario, Quebec, or any province where there are counties, or in a constitutncy in the western provinces, where the Act has been brought into force, the city included in the county had voted in favour of the Act. But, if not, the city would have its own remedy: it could get up a petition and have a re-vote.

Mr. CARROLL: It could not.

Mr. WRIGHT: In that way it could take itself from under the jurisdiction of the Act. If that is not possible, an amendment to the Act giving that power could easily be drafted. I do not think, however, that any town should be able to remove itself from the operation of the Act simply by forming itself into a city. A certain population should be defined for a city. In the West, for instance, we know of certain places of two thousand population suddenly becoming cities.

Mr. KNOWLES: Five thousand is the law.

Mr. WRIGHT: I would refer my hon. friend to Weyburn, which has only two or three thousand.

Mr. KNOWLES: That is a place of seven thousand.

Mr. WRIGHT: If we are going into this system, it should be confined to cities of ten thousand population.

Mr. OLIVER: Subsection (c) of clause 2, reads:

> In the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, in any registry office or in any sheriff's office in the respective electoral districts.

I suppose that is in relation to the posting of notices in connection with the holding of elections. In Alberta and Saskatchewan there are a number of electoral districts in which there is no sheriff's office, or registry office, and some other provision must be made to meet that case.

Mr. DOHERTY: Is there not
4 p.m. a sheriff in each county?

Mr. OLIVER: These are Dominion electoral districts, in some of which there is no sheriff.

Mr. DOHERTY: I realize the difficulty, and would be very glad to meet it. What is desired is to get some place where notices could be posted where they would get the greatest possible publicity. Perhaps the hon. gentleman could help me in this regard.

Mr. OLIVER: I think the matter would have to be left to the decision of the officer of the Dominion Government. I do not know of any office that you could depend on being located in any particular constituency that would have particular prominence. A Dominion lands sub-office would be quite prominent, but there might be constituencies in which there would not be one.

Mr. BUCHANAN: In regard to the clause providing for the electoral districts being designated as counties for the purposes of this Act, I would point out that under redistribution, if it goes into effect, cities in western Canada will be divided. We shall have Calgary east and west and Edmonton east and west. This measure might be adopted in the east half of the city, which would go dry, while the other part of the city would remain wet. How would the minister deal with a case like that?

Mr. DOHERTY: If, on more careful examination, the conclusion should be reached that the city is included in the county for purposes of this Act as the law now stands, I shall amend this Bill so as to exclude the city and let the city in these provinces stand, as in the other provinces, as a distinct entity by itself, which, as such distinct entity, will adopt or not adopt the Act upon its own decision.

Mr. WRIGHT: Will the hon. Minister of Justice confine that to cities with 10,000 of a population?

Mr. DOHERTY: In regard to our making a modification as to the population of cities which should be excluded from the counties, that is another proposition which looks to modify what I might call the substance of the Canada Temperance Act. I have not considered that question at all. These amendments in the procedure of the Canada Temperance Act were urged upon us as being immediately necessary. We have not had any suggestion in regard to what population should be necessary to exclude a city. It seems to be evident that we shall not be able to finish the Bill without a further consideration and I shall be very glad to consider the suggestion and see if it is possible to comply with it. It has been suggested to me that permission to post the notice in a post office might meet the point which has been raised.

Mr. OLIVER: Yes, the post office will be all right.

Mr. DOHERTY: We might add 'or in any registry office, or in any sheriff's office or, failing such, in any post office'. I suppose it will be preferable that where there is a registry or sheriff's office it should be posted there?

Mr. OLIVER: Yes.

Mr. KNOWLES: I think it would be better where there is no registry or sheriff's office that the petition should be sent simply to the Secretary of State and let him direct the place where it shall be posted.

Mr. DOHERTY: We might provide that it shall be posted as may be designated by the Secretary of State.

Mr. KNOWLES: Let the man simply send his petition to the Secretary of State, and let the Secretary of State say as to the posting of the notice.

Mr. DOHERTY: I would think that suggestion better than the one in regard to the post office. I shall try to make an amendment to meet that. I beg to move that section 2 be amended by adding at the end of subsection c, the following:

Or, if there be no such registry office or sheriff's office, then in such place as may be designated by the Secretary of State for the purpose.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 5—publication of notice in newspaper:

Mr. GRAHAM: Why does it prescribe that the notice shall be published in a newspaper 'at or near' the city? Why not say 'in' the city?

Mr. DOHERTY: We can almost absolutely count on every city having a paper, but it must be drafted to meet the possible case of the paper not being published actually in the city. I do not know that we can take it for granted that all our cities have newspapers; they certainly ought to have.

Mr. GRAHAM: Legally, suppose a man puts the notice in a newspaper published fifty miles from a city; would that be near the city? Under this Act he is not compelled to put it in a newspaper published in the city; he could put it in a paper published elsewhere.

Mr. DOHERTY: There would be no objection to amending it so as to provide that it must be published in a paper in the city.

Mr. GRAHAM: If there be one.

Mr. DOHERTY: If there be one, or if there be not one, then in the nearest place. I would move that section 5 be amended by striking out the words 'at or near' in the 41st line and substituting the word.'in'.

Mr. WRIGHT: I presume that this Act may be submitted to the electors in municipalities in which there is no newspaper published, and I think the notice ought to be in some newspaper in the county or district in which the vote is taking place even although it is not near the city. I think that the nearest newspaper ought to have the opportunity of publishing this notice if it is going to be of any benefit to the electors.

Mr. DOHERTY: The intention is that the notice of the contestation of the election shall be published for two weeks in two newspapers published at or near the city or the county in which the vote has taken place, or if there be no newspaper published in such city or county, then in the nearest newspaper. I move:

That the section be amended by inserting in the forty-second line, after the word 'place,' the words:

Or if there be but one newspaper published in the city or county then in that newspaper, and in a newspaper whose place of publication is nearest the said city or county; or if there be no newspaper published in said city or county, then in two newspapers whose place or places of publication are nearest said city or county.

Mr. PROULX: The section does not say in what language the notice should be published. In provinces in which the English and French languages are official, I suppose the notice should be published in both languages.

Mr. DOHERTY: That is a reasonable suggestion. We might perhaps say that in the province of Quebec it should be published in both languages.

Mr. PROULX: In Manitoba both languages are official.

Mr. DOHERTY: I would move that the following words be added to the amendment:

Such publication to be made in the French and English languages in cities or counties wherein there is a newspaper published in each of these languages.

Section as amended agreed to.

Mr. DOHERTY: I move that the Bill be amended by inserting in section 2 the following subsections:

2. If in any city or county or any part thereof there are no voters' lists which could be used for the purpose of this Act, the petition shall have appended to it the genuine signatures of one-fourth in number of such persons as are voters or who possess the qualifications of voters, other than being on the voters' lists, for such city or county.

3. For the purposes of this section the number of voters in any city or county in which or in any part of which there are no voters' lists which could be used for the purposes of this Act shall be:

(a) Where there are voters' lists in force for part of such city or county, the number of voters on such lists, together with the number of voters who were on the last voters' lists that were in force in the rest of such city or county;

(b) Where there are no voters' lists in force in such city or county, then the number of voters that were in the last voters' lists that were in force in such a city or county; or

(c) Where there are no voters' lists in force in the whole or any part of any city or county, such number as is established to the satisfaction of the Secretary of State as being the total number of persons who possess the qualifications of voters for such city or county, other than that of being on a voters' list.

The purpose of this amendment is to meet the situation where the Secretary of State has to determine whether he has 25 per cent of the voters who have signed the petition, and where in whole or in part there is no voters' lists for the districts in which the election is to be held. In the case where the absence of the voters' list is only partial, he is to take as the total number of voters the total number of voters on the existing voters' lists, plus the total number of voters that were on the last existing voters' list for the portion or district of the county for which there is no voters' list. Where there are no voters' lists for the whole of the county, he takes the number of the voters that were on the last voters' lists. Finally, as an alternative to that, if there be reason for it, he may take what is proved otherwise to be 25 per cent of the people who are actually entitled to vote. The purpose is to avoid the necessity of this last requirement in all cases, and to facilitate the establishment of the 25 per cent wherever it can be done by reference to the last existing voters' lists.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. DOHERTY: I beg to move to amend the Bill further by adding to section 5 at the end thereof the following:

No such action shall be commenced until the plaintiff has given security for costs to the satisfaction of the court in which he proposes to bring his action, and no such action shall be brought after the expiration of one year from the date of the polling.

This is the requirement that any person contesting the election shall give security for costs to the satisfaction of the court, and furthermore to put a limit of time within which the contestation may be made.

Mr. PROULX: Does not the minister think a year is a little long?

Mr. DOHERTY: I am not quite sure but that it is a little long.

Mr. PROULX: I think six months is sufficient.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN: It is thirty days in our Election Act.

Mr. DOHERTY: I have no objection to accept my hon. friend's (Mr. Proulx) suggestion.

Mr. PROULX: Six months is ample time to get all the information necessary to contest an election.

Mr. DOHERTY: I think so, and it is desirable that there should not be too long a period during which the matter will be unsettled.

Amendment as amended agreed to.

Mr. PROULX: There is another section which gives jurisdiction to the Superior Courts of Record. Perhaps it would be just as well to give the county court judges jurisdiction in these matters. They are amply qualified to try these cases, which are mostly questions of fact.

Mr. DOHERTY: I do not want to suggest that the county court judges are not qualified to try these cases, but these are undoubtedly matters of importance concerning which sometimes a good deal of popular feeling arises in one way or another. Under the circumstances it seems desirable to leave these matters to the high court judges. Another reason is that, if we give jurisdiction to the county court judges, we cannot establish the same jurisdiction throughout the country, because we have no county court judges in the province of Quebec.

Section as amended agreed to.

Mr. DOHERTY: Before the Bill goes to third reading I shall get this question about the exemption of cities cleared up; and if it is necessary to obtain that result I will take such proceedings as may further be necessary to amend the Bill.

Bill reported.

IRRIGATION ACT AMENDMENT.

The House again in Committee on Bill No. 138, to amend the Irrigation Act.—Mr. Roche. Mr. Blondin in the Chair.

On section 5—minister may permit diversion of water:

Mr. BUCHANAN: It has been pointed out to me that this clause will affect certain litigation between the users of the Canadian Pacific Railway irrigation ditch in the vicinity of Strathmore in their action against the Canadian Pacific Railway Irrigation Company. The reason is that this legislation is made retroactive. I have been asked to urge upon the minister that the users of water should still be given the privilege of carrying on their action against the company. In this connection I might read a letter which I have received which probably will explain the case a little more clearly than I can. This is from the chairman of the Test Case Committee. As the minister knows there has been a good deal of difficulty in that part of the country with the Canadian Pacific Railway Irrigation Company:

You will notice on page 3, '20 F,' provisions for the minister being permitted to issue permits to persons or companies to divert and use water during the construction period, and in section 15 it provides for actions applying to all cases where the minister has given permits, which it appears to me is to authorize what the minister has already done which had not previously been authorized.

Now, they want to avoid that, they ask to be left to fight out their dispute without any retroactive legislation—that is they do not want to have their interest impaired in any way by this proposed measure, and they claim that it will interfere with their interest in that respect. There is a good deal of strong feeling in that district over the treatment received by the farmers who have purchased land from the Canadian Pacific Railway Irrigation Company. As the minister knows, there has been difficulty over the reclassification of land. It is held that under the proposed reclassification that the farmers may be compelled to pay more than they should for the land they bought. This land that they bought was guaranteed to be irrigable, and they claim that, under the terms of the reclassification arrangement, lands which have proven to be non-irrigable, but which were sold as irrigable and subject to irrigation from the time they were purchased, they will have to pay for at as high as $8 an acre, in addition to additional price. It has been represented to me, and I would like to place it before the minister, that this difficulty is serious in that particular district. There is a great deal of feeling and a great deal of dissatisfaction. The demand is made by the Grievance Committee in that district that there should be a Royal Commission to investigate the charges made by the farmers against the Irrigation Company before the Government takes any action in regard to the reclassification of the land. It is also pointed out to me that officials of the department are addressing letters to farmers in that district advising them that it is in their best interests to sign up a new contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway Irrigation Company, in which there are provisions with regard to reclassification which would bring about further charges upon the farmer. Of course, the company has its own side of the case—that the lands are satisfactory and the terms of sale are being carried out. But it has been represented to me by practical irrigationists, who have been in that district since the commencement of irrigation farming, that the condition of things was misrepresented, and that, under the proposed reclassification, they will be compelled to pay $8 more for their land, which it was claimed was irrigable land. I bring this to the attention of the minister, because this clause is objected to by the Test Case Committee. They prefer to be left in a position to carry on any action they may bring against the Irrigation Company, and they say that section would interfere with their rights.

Mr. ROCHE: It is not intended at all that this Bill should interfere in the slightest degree with those who have tracts from the Canadian Pacific Railway Irrigation Company, and I do not see how such an interpretation could be placed upon it. On the other hand, there have been instances where it would have been a very great hardship to have denied to an irrigation company—I am not now referring to the Canadian Pacific Railway Irrigation Company—the privilege of using a portion of their works before the completion of those works in their entirety. I am aware that considerable difficulty has arisen between the Canadian Pacific railway and the water users in the Canadian Pacific Railway irrigation tract. The matter was brought to my attention about a year ago. Representatives both of the company and of the farmers met me, and I decided, after hearing their representations, that it would be the part of wisdom that we should have a reclassification of those lands to see whether they were actually irrigable or not. At first the company protested strongly, and did not wish to submit to such reclassification. At that time the chief demand made upon the Government was either to institute an inquiry or have a reclassification of the land. We are now having a reclassification of these lands, the company having decided to submit to the request. The work of reclassification is being conducted by their officials as well as by engineers on behalf of the Government. This Bill will not interfere with any test case going on in the courts. For, as a matter of fact and practice, ever since the Act was put into effect in 1894, parties have been allowed to use their partially constructed works without taking out a license. This Bill is simply to legalize what has been done as a matter of practice hitherto. I may quote illustrations furnished me by the department to show the benefit arising from allowing an irrigation company to irrigate land before their entire works are completed.

Some years ago, in the early history of Moosejaw, that city obtained its water supply from Moosejaw creek, which flows through the city. This supply was never of a satisfactory quality, and finally became insufficient in quantity as well. Application was made by the city for permission to take a further supply from springs removed several miles from the city. This application was made in June, 1908. Authorization to construct the works was issued in 1913, subject to the acquisition of the necessary right of way by the city. The city authorities constructed their works in advance of this authorization, but secured only part of the required right of way. It was absolutely necessary for the city to have a further supply of water from this particular source as soon as their works were sufficiently constructed to enable them to lay a pipe from this creek. No objection was made by the Government of the day or by this Government. The city has not as yet received a license to use the water from this source, solely owing to the fact that they have not as yet been able to secure their entire right of way. Nevertheless, they have been using water from this source during the last four years. The same thing is being done in connection with its water supply from Sandy Creek, near Caron. In this case the works are not yet completed, but so great has been the need of water that the partially completed works have been in use for some time, although, as yet, unlicensed. I could cite many other illustrations to show what a hardship it would be to prevent a permit being issued until the licenses were granted after the completion of the work. I can assure hon. gentlemen that it is not intended to interfere at all with any decision that may be given with regard to any test case that is now pending.

Mr. OLIVER: Looking over the correspondence which the hon. member for Medicine Hat has here, I see that it is the opinion of counsel that this legislation would interfere with a case now pending. Would there be any objection to putting a saving clause in the section, saying that it would not interfere with any litigation now in progress?

Mr. ROCHE: I have no objection to that.

Mr. BUCHANAN: The counsel for the people to whom I refer have made this statement:

> Disputes exist between the railway company and the users respecting the obligations of the users of water heretofore used and as this legislation is retroactive, the rights and liabilities that exist between the railway company and the users would be affected.

I sent a copy of the printed Bill to the committee and to the counsel, who makes this statement in a letter to the committee.

Mr. ROCHE: I think the objections urged would be removed by adding to section 5 the words:

> But shall not apply to any case with respect to which litigation is now pending.

Mr. McKENZIE: I am not familiar with the Act, but I would point out to my hon. friend that where a clause of that kind is inserted in a Bill, the wording usually runs this way:

> Nothing in this Act shall apply to any case with respect to which litigation is now pending.

The amendment suggested by my hon. friend says that nothing in this section shall apply to pending litigation, but there might be something in some other part of the Act which would militate against litigation now pending. If it is the intention of the minister that nothing in the Act shall apply to pending litigation, it is better to say so, and to make the provision to that effect the last clause in the Bill.

Mr. ROCHE: Any litigation now pending is subject to the existing Act. If we say that nothing in this Act shall apply to any litigation, I am afraid we would be going a little too far.

Mr. McKENZIE: That is not what I mean. I am talking about the Bill now before the committee; the hon. minister is referring to the original Act as amended. The hon. minister might make his amendment read: 'Nothing in the amending Act;' that would make the matter perfectly clear.

Mr. ROCHE: I have no objection to such an amendment.

Mr. MURPHY: May I suggest to the minister that the amendment as now proposed to this particular section should come in at the end of the Act?

Mr. ROCHE: All right.

Mr. BUCHANAN: I have here a statement from Mr. Henry Sorensen, of Strathmore, who is chairman of the Farmers' Combined Irrigation Committee, with regard to the reclassification of land. It is as follows:

> With regard to the reclassification as it is now being conducted you will notice in the document, which the farmers have been asked to sign, pledging themselves to accept the reclassification as it is being conducted by the Government, that each farmer will be asked to incur an additional expense of $8 per acre for drainage and other work in connection with the lands.
>
> Now this means in plain words nothing else but: that after the Canadian Pacific railway have charged men an exorbitant price for so-called irrigation lands and after the water has so deteriorated the soil that the lands are unfit for farming purposes the farmers are now to be put to an additional expense of $8 per acre to endeavour to put the lands into the same condition as they were prior to being spoiled by the water.

That is the statement he makes in connection with reclassification, a statement which has also been made in other letters which I have received from the farmers of that district—that under this reclassification there will be an extra charge on certain of their lands of $8 per acre. I have here the forms of an agreement and a letter from the Superintendent of Irrigation under date of February 23, to a farmer in that district, which reads:

Department of the Interior.
Canada.

Ottawa, February 23, 1914.

Sir:

According to records filed in this department by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, you have purchased from that company certain irrigable and non-irrigable land and have entered into an agreement with the company for the supply by it to you of water for the irrigation of the irrigable land so purchased.

The company has informed this department of the completion of the works for the irrigation of the western section of its irrigation tract and has asked for the issue of a water license. The Minister of the Interior has decided that, before the works as constructed can be accepted and before any water license can properly be issued in the company's favour, it will be necessary for the company's classification of alleged irrigable land to be checked and, where necessary, revised by departmental officials. The company will be required to file with the Commissioner of Irrigation such additional plans and other data as may be required by him in connection with the reclassification. When such plans have been filed the commissioner will have such examination made on the ground as may be necessary to determine the accuracy of the plans and where necessary will have a resurvey made. The company's classification will then be carefully checked and, if necessary, revised.

The company has agreed to accept and abide by the result of such reclassification and to amend and adjust all its sales-contracts and water agreements in accordance therewith. I am, therefore, to request you to state whether or not you are willing to similarly accept the result of the reclassification to be made under the direction of the Minister of Interior. There is no desire on the part of this department to interfere in any way with any rights which you may now possess under your existing contracts with the company and no effort will be made to induce you to sign any agreement against your own inclination. It is believed, however, that the signing of such an agreement will materially facilitate the settlement of the existing difficulties between the company and lessees of water.

The attached form of agreement is believed to correctly show the lands purchased by you from the said company and the essential facts in connection with your agreement to receive water from it for irrigation purposes. If you are prepared to accept the result of the reclassification of land to be made under the direction of the minister, I am to request you to sign and return to me at your very earliest convenience the form of agreement attached hereto, retaining one copy thereof. Your signature should be properly witnessed and sealed. Kindly advise me of your decision in this matter at your very earliest convenience.

Your obedient servant,
E. F. Drake,
Superintendent of Irrigation.

What was pointed out to me in connection with this letter was that the farmers object to the reclassification, that their demand has been for a Royal Commission to investigate the whole situation prior to any reclassification. I am now speaking of this particular association, and I would not say that this includes all the farmers of that particular irrigation tract.

5 p.m. I would again ask the minister if the case for a Royal Commission has been presented to him, and what decision he has come to in regard to it; and also whether the statement made here that this reclassification will mean an additional expenditure of $8 an acre to put the lands 'in the condition in which they were prior to being spoiled by water,' is correct. I may say that I know nothing about the case myself except what is in the letters I have received.

Mr. ROCHE: The writer of that letter was one of the deputation representing the farmers that asked for a reclassification of the lands by the Government; and the request for a Royal Commission did not come until subsequently. When I was in Calgary last September, this gentleman, together with a number of others, waited upon me and mentioned the question of reclassification and also a Royal Commission, but the Royal Commission was an afterthought. It was in accordance with the request of the farmers, that is the water users, those who purchased land from the Canadian Pacific railway upon irrigation conditions, that the Government undertook the reclassification of lands. It was the company who objected to reclassification. That letter which was sent out and which has been animadverted upon and upon which a strained interpretation has been put by the writer as to the Government trying to influence the people and get them to sign an agreement that they would accept a reclassification, was sent out owing to our desire to ascertain whether, when the reclassification had been made, both the company and the farmers would be prepared to abide by the result. There is no justification for the interpretation put upon the letter by this gentleman that the Government is trying to influence the farmers. As a matter of fact, the letter distinctly states that the Government are not in any way trying to influence them. It is erroneous to say that by reason of the reclassification they will be called upon to pay $8 more an acre for their lands. They have their contracts with the Canadian Pacific railway. We have asked the company not to prosecute any litigation against any water users in arrears for rental until after a reclassification has been made. The company strongly objected to that, but we have impressed them with the necessity of foregoing action against the farmers pending the reclassification. The result has been that there have been no proceedings against the farmers. This will not mean an increase of $8 an acre for the land. If it is found that the Canadian Pacific railway's original classification was right, I presume the farmers will be subject to their contracts with the Canadian Pacific railway, whatever they agreed to pay for the land. If it is found that the lands have been wrongly classified, there will have to be a rearrangement and a new contract. It was for that reason that the letter was sent out. The Royal Commission which has been recently asked for, was not originally asked for; in fact, it was only asked for after the reclassification was under way. Very many of these farmers have agreed to sign an agreement that they will abide by the reclassification, probably in the proportion of three to one.

Mr. OLIVER: Could the minister say what seems to be the reason this writer has for saying that a reclassification will mean an increase in the cost of the land? As the minister explained, the man is simply writing nonsense, but surely he must have had some foundation upon which to base the idea.

Mr. ROCHE: Supposing they have a contract with the Canadian Pacific railway to purchase lands that are supposed to be irrigable and that the contract price should be, say, $24 per acre, if it turns out, as that gentleman says, that they are not irrigable, then he claims that they should be got for $8 per acre less. That is the only explanation I can give for the gentleman saying that they would be called upon to pay $8 more in the event of the reclassification upholding the Canadian Pacific railway's contention.

On section 8—use of irrigation works for the storage of water:

Mr. OLIVER: The question of administration would arise in applying this section and I think there should be a full statement as to how it is proposed to exercise the authority which the section will confer on the minister.

Mr. ROCHE: As the Act states, the amendments are for the purpose of preventing any person or company from enjoying a monopoly of the available water supply and more especially if that particular water supply is situated in an advantageous location in reference to ditches. The amendments, while so framed as to protect existing rights, will make provision for the use by others, or by the public, under the direction of the minister, of any works which are not being fully utilized by their owners or which can be advantageously enlarged so as to serve a more useful purpose. There might be certain seasons of the year when there is a drouth and a certain work is not utilized by its owners to its full capacity. Other parties desire to use the water and the minister takes power under this provision of utilizing this work for the benefit of persons who have no other opportunity of securing water privileges. To cite an instance: the Alberta Railway and Irrigation Company were requested to allow their works to be utilized in favour of other parties and they were so utilized. I think the proposal explains itself pretty fully. It sets out in detail how the relative costs are to be borne. It states that the minister may fix the amount of compensation to which the owners of the works so utilized are, in his opinion, entitled, and the amount that shall be paid to the owners of such works. The cost of maintaining these works shall be borne as between one applicant and the other and the owners of the works, as they existed before the enlargement, generally in proportion to the quantity of water which each is entitled to use. Where parties have works completed but not utilized to their full capacity it is provided that these works may be utilized on behalf of other parties.

Mr. BUCHANAN: There is a considerable waste of water from the works of the Alberta Railway and Irrigation Company. This water is carried away through the coulees. It has been represented to me that if an arrangement could be made by which this water could be stored it would be of great advantage to farmers and stock-raisers. I might mention the case in which a large quantity of water goes through the Chin coulee which might be stored. If some arrangement could be made with the Government or the irrigation company by which that water could be stored in a reservoir the people in that particular district would derive a great amount of benefit especially for the watering of stock. At present the water which runs through the Chin coulee is not stored and it does not become of permanent value to the people in that district. The storage of that water would be no loss at all to the irrigation company but it would be of great value to the farmers and settlers there, especially for the watering of stock.

Mr. ROCHE: I understand that there is a waste of water down these coulees and I also understand that the company are now making arrangements, by way of the construction of a reservoir, to preserve that water. When the Chin coulee works are completed they will stop the future waste.

Mr. OLIVER: This section gives the minister very extraordinary authority over private property. Is there a precedent for that authority and, if so, where does it exist?

Mr. ROCHE: I do not know if there is a precedent but we felt that where works were being taken and utilized by the minister for the general benefit of the public he should have the authority to fix the compensation. I have no precedent in my mind for this authority but in what manner would my hon. friend suggest an alteration in the manner of fixing the compensation?

Mr. OLIVER: I did not know but that there was a precedent in some legislation elsewhere, which probably would be an indication as to the way in which the Act could be administered. The reason given for the desirability of this authority I will not question, but I still say it confers a very extraordinary authority upon the minister and I think that in a matter of providing compensation the minister is possibly taking a measure of responsibility that is not best for his own convenience or in the interest of the individuals concerned. Where the question of compensation comes in I would think there should be provision for arbitration, and in a case where one party materially alters the work of the other party, there is always a possibility of substantial damage being done to the new work, or of the new work being ill-conceived or ill-executed and serious damage suffered by the owner of the original work. There is no provision in the Act to meet such a case. I do not wish to stand in the way of the good administration of the Irrigation Act, but I take this opportunity of calling the attention of the minister to the fact that he is assuming very extraordinary powers here on his individual responsibility, and I think he would be well advised to give the matter more consideration than he evidently has given it up to the present time.

Mr. ROCHE: I am informed that there is a precedent for this in British Columbia, but I am not absolutely certain as to that. It is considered that the minister should take this responsibility, although he is not anxious to insist on any undue responsibility. First of all, the parties have an opportunity of coming together and deciding if at all possible as to the amount of the respective cost of the work that should be apportioned by their respective parties, but failing or delaying to agree the minister may fix the amount to be paid by each. It is only when the private users fail to amicably agree on the amount, that the minister is called in as an arbitrator. This Bill has been submitted to quite a number of persons in the West and in the East who are engaged in irrigation, and they thought this was quite essential.

Section agreed to.

Mr. ROCHE: I wish to amend section 4 of the Act by substituting the following:

Any water, the property of which is vested in the Crown may be acquired for domestic, municipal, ndustrial, irrigation, and other purposes including the granting of permission to establish dams, piers, booms and other necessary works in any non-navigable stream, to facilitate the passage of logs, timber, and other products of the forest along such stream.

By this amendment the word 'municipal' is added to the existing Act and the words beginning with 'including the granting of permission' down to the end of the amendment, are also added.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. ROCHE: I have another amendment to propose. In the original Act Parliament clothes the Minister of the Interior and the Department of the Interior with all the powers and authority as to the expropriation of lands for irrigation purposes which the Minister of Railways and Canals and the Department of Railways and Canals enjoy with regard to the expropriation of lands for railway purposes. Subsequently, however, the Railway Act was amended so as to vest certain powers with respect to expropriation in the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada. It has been held by some that the amendment to the Railway Act has curtailed to a certain extent the powers of the Minister of the Interior and the Department of the Interior with respect to the expropriation of lands for irrigation purposes and the object of the amendment I have to propose is to re-establish, if it be necessary, their full authority over such matters without reference to the Board of Railway Commissioners. I am told by legal authorities that it really does not curtail our power but I desire to make it absolutely clear.

Mr. OLIVER: Is there any authority now vested in the Board of Railway Commissioners under the Irrigation Act?

Mr. ROCHE: Our law department states they have nothing at all to do with the expropriation of lands for irrigation purposes.

Mr. BUCHANAN: Is there any truth in the following despatch from Calgary which appears in the Citizen of this morning?

Calgary, Alta., May 11.—Approximately four hundred thousand acres of land in the southern portion of Alberta will be put under irrigation by the Dominion Government, or by the municipalities which obtain from the Government the right to operate a system of irrigation in the various districts, some time in the near future, according to the statement of F. H. Peters, irrigation commissioner for the Dominion with headquarters in Calgary.

Mr. ROCHE: I am informed that the department have made certain surveys north of Lethbridge to determine the character of the land and to see what quantity is available for irrigation; but we have no final report on the subject as yet, and we have not come to any decision regarding the matter. I do not know whether Mr. Peters is referring to that or not. He may be referring to the fact that in the very near future the 400,000 acres of the Canadian Pacific lands will be sufficiently advanced to be thrown open for settlers on the irrigation system. If he refers to the Government land, we have not any final report from the engineer as to the particular character and class of lands and where they are located. I believe they are north of the city where the hon. gentleman resides.

Mr. BUCHANAN: During last summer a survey was made of these lands north of the city of Lethbridge, near the Little Bow. I do not know exactly the locality of the lands, but I know there was a survey party there; and some of the settlers told me that they were talking to members of this party, and that it was intimated to them that the Government might establish an irrigation system in that particular district so that the farmers could get a supply of water from it under certain arrangements. The settlers are particularly anxious to get this water, especially in the district known as the Iron Springs district. The settlers say that the surveyors were in there examining the possibilities of supplying water to that country, and that the Government had in view the establishment of an irrigation scheme so as to supply the farmers who required it with water for irrigation purposes.

Mr. ROCHE: I have not any final report on that.

Mr. OLIVER: The question is: Has the Government in contemplation the establishment of a Government irrigation scheme in that particular locality?

Mr. ROCHE: The policy of the Government has not been discussed in regard to that matter at all; it has never engaged the attention of the Government.

Section agreed to.

Mr. ROCHE: I beg to move:

That the following words be added at the end of section 10:—Nothing in this amending Act shall apply to any case with respect to which litigation is now pending.

Section as amended agreed to.

Mr. OLIVER: Can the amendments made to the Bill be printed before the third reading? They are rather important.

Mr. ROCHE: Yes.

Bill reported.

JUDGES' SALARIES.

On motion of Hon. C. J. Doherty (Minister of Justice), the House went into committee to consider the following proposed resolution, Mr. Blondin in the Chair:

Resolved, That it is expedient to amend the Judges Act, chapter 138 of the Revised Statutes, 1906, and to provide for the increase of the salaries of three Judges of the Superior Court of Quebec from $5,000 each per annum to $7,000 each per annum and to provide for the salary of an additional Judge of the said Court at $5,000 per annum; to provide for the salaries of three additional puisne Judges of the Supreme Court of Alberta at $6,000 each per annum; to provide for the salary of one junior County Court Judge for the province of Manitoba at $3,000 per annum; to provide for four additional District Court Judges for the province of Saskatchewan at $3,000 each per annum; to provide for the increase of the salary of the senior Judge of the Circuit Court of the district of Montreal from $3,600 to $5,000 per annum, and for the increase of the salaries of the three other Judges of the said Court from $3,000 each per annum to $4,500 each per annum.

Mr. BOIVIN: Who are the three judges of the Superior Court of the province of Quebec whose salaries are to be increased from $5,000 each to $7,000?

Mr. DOHERTY: The three judges referred to are the judges who were appointed respectively for the district of Richelieu, Mr. Justice Bruneau; for the district of St. Hyacinthe, Mr. Justice Martineau; and for the district of Montcalm, Mr. Justice Chauvin.

Mr. LEMIEUX: The judge sits at Mont Laurier, in the district of Montcalm.

Mr. DOHERTY: With regard to the first two judges, the reason of this proposal is that the legislature of the province of Quebec, after consultation between the Prime Minister and Attorney General of the province and myself, as Minister of Justice, has provided that the residences of these two judges should be fixed in the city of Montreal, and that they should be expected to devote their entire time outside of their special districts to the service of the district of Montreal. This legislation was enacted after the Attorney General of the province and myself had both agreed that it would be desirable, in the interest of the proper administration of justice, that these two judges should be so transferred to that district. The operation, of course, required the concurrence of both authorities, because, while it is within the power of the legislature of Quebec to define the duties of a judge, and they may by so doing modify the position to which a man has been appointed, it is the function of the Government of Canada to appoint the judge to the position so created. It is to carry out this understanding arrived at that the provision is made with regard to these judges.

I may point out the particular advantage that results. It is undoubted that the services of outside judges, or, failing those services, the appointment of additional judges, are required in the district of Montreal. If this arrangement were not made, it would be quite open to the legislature, in the exercise of its functions, to provide for an additional judge or additional judges for the district of Montreal. If that had been done and two additional judges provided for that district, it would have imposed upon the country a charge of $14,000. Under these arrangements we get the services in Montreal for the bulk of the time of two rural judges at an additional cost to the country of only $4,000. With regard to the persons who are appointed to these new positions, this Government is quite prepared, in accordance with the understanding which has been arrived at, to assent to their appointment and recommend the voting of the salaries. With regard to the third gentleman, the situation which has brought about the present position is that under the legislation of the province of Quebec, so long as the court house was not finished at Mont Laurier, the new judge appointed to the district, Judge Chauvin, was to reside in the district of Ottawa. He was in reality in the position of a second judge in the district of Ottawa. The legislation as originally passed provided that when the court house was completed at Mont Laurier the judge was required to live in that district. That left the district of Ottawa with but one resident judge. It was represented to me and to the Attorney General of the province, that the work in the district of Ottawa required the services of two judges; and certainly, from what knowledge I had on the subject there could be no mistake about that. I was asked whether, if the legislation providing for an additional judge for the district of Ottawa were passed, I would recommend the salary of a judge. I pointed out that as there were a number of judges in the province of Quebec whose districts called for comparatively little work, it would be desirable, instead of adding to the number of judges, that the judge of some other district where the work was not very heavy should be asked to share the work in the district of Ottawa. That view was apparently accepted, both by the Bar of the district of Ottawa who made representations to me and by the Attorney General of the province who in consequence provided that the judge in the district of Montcalm should be a judge for the district of Ottawa, that, in addition to his own work in the district of Montcalm, which is not very heavy, he should give some of his time to sharing the work of the present incumbent of the district of Ottawa. The provinical Government and Legislature considered that the judge serving these two districts, instead of residing in one district and going to the other as occasion might require, could more conveniently reside in the city of Montreal. That is a matter with which this Parliament or Government is not concerned. Under the circumstances, here again is a case where by the combination of work we avoid the appointment of an additional judge, which, in this case, would have involved $5,000. But as the two districts have been assigned to the one judge, it seemed reasonable that that judge should have more remuneration than a judge of but one rural district, and so it is suggested that Judge Chauvin should have $2,000 additional. So by this we economize $3,000, as by the other we economize $10,000.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: As I understand it, three judges are increased from $5,000 to $7,000?

Mr. DOHERTY: Yes.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: One being Judge Chauvin, the new judge of the district of Montcalm?

Mr. DOHERTY: Yes.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: And who are the others?

Mr. DOHERTY: Judge Bruneau of Richelieu and Judge Martineau of St. Hyacinthe.

Mr. BUREAU: The Minister of Justice seems to be labouring under the impression that the rural judges can devote some of their time to either Montreal and Quebec, and for this reason two of these judges are assigned to Montreal at an increased salary. The rural judges receive $5,000 and the Montreal judges $7,000. I would like to ask the minister what is the basis of that salary distinction—is it on account of the work or is it on account of the higher cost of living in the larger cities? I may say that if it is on account of the amount of work, the judges in Three Rivers, as I have had occasion to say before, sit every day in the year except vacation, and even then they very often sit, and one has to be in attendance all the time. They have original jurisdiction in a wide range of cases; they hear appeals under municipal and school codes, and they sit as a court of review in the city of Quebec. They do not complain of the work. But I do not see why they should be discriminated against as they certainly are if the salary is based on the amount of work. If you were to divide the number of cases tried or the judgments rendered at Three Rivers by the number of judges there, and the number of cases tried and judgments rendered in Montreal by the number of judges there, you would find that there is more work done by each of the two judges in Three Rivers than by any individual judge in Montreal. So, I fail to see why they should not get the increase. If it is on the basis of the cost of living, then if that matter is investigated it will be found that the cost of living in Three Rivers is just as high in Three Rivers as it is in Montreal, if not higher. Then, as I have pointed out before, the judges in Montreal, being more numerous, have better opportunity to consult together. They have also a very large law library which is kept up by the Bar of the whole province, we may say, because all our students read in Montreal or Quebec and their fees on admission go to these libraries. Our judges have to subscribe for their own reviews, periodicals of jurisprudence and reports. Practically they must have their own library, for our Bar library is not extensive—we are only twenty-two or twenty-three in number in our district. I fail to see why these judges should not have an increase of salary to put them on the same footing as those of Montreal or Quebec.

Mr. DOHERTY: The reasons which led to making a difference between the salaries of judges of the Superior Court sitting in the district of Montreal and Quebec and those sitting in other districts must, of course have been known to those who established that difference. The present scale of salaries was established under a law enacted during the regime of the Government of which the hon. gentleman for Three Rivers (Mr. Bureau) was the Solicitor General, and I should presume that he would be in as good a position as any member of this House to indicate the reasons that influenced the Government of that day in making that distinction. For myself, speaking personally, if circumstances were such as to enable me to deal generally with the subject of the salaries of judges, I might be disposed to do more than is proposed to be done under this legislation. But this legislation accepts the situation, as regards the district of Montreal, which existed when this Government came into power and merely is intended to facilitate the appointment in cases where this Government feels justified in nominating particular judges in rural districts to be judges in a special way of the district of Montreal without being entirely separated from their own districts. We are not modifying the principle upon which the distinction was originally made. As regards judges generally, I might personally be disposed, if circumstances made it possible to do more than is done here. But that would involve dealing with the subject of judges generally, not only in Quebec, but throughout the Dominion.

I am limiting myself to making provision for additional judges and, with regard to this particular matter, to meeting an arrangement come to on the part of the province and on the part of the Government by which we believe that the administration of justice in the district of Montreal may be improved and, at the same time, an economy effected. I am not in a position to deal with the suggestion that the judges at Three Rivers do more or less work than the judges in the district of Montreal.

Mr. BUREAU: The conditions that existed five or six years ago in the district of Three Rivers are vastly different from the conditions that exist there to-day. Since that time the population of the city of Three Rivers has jumped from eleven thousand to eighteen thousand. You know, Mr. Chairman, that the town of Grand Mere, which is in the district of Three Rivers, and which was a wilderness ten years ago, has now a population of 6,000 or 7,000. Industries are constantly springing up and water-powers being developed and no district in the province of Quebec has made such rapid strides forward during the last four or five years as has the district of Three Rivers. The judges in the city of Three Rivers have as much work to do as any judge in Montreal or Quebec. Besides, if it comes down to a question of the cost of living, it costs them as much—if not more—to live in Three Rivers as it costs the judges to live in Montreal or Quebec. The judge, as I have said, has the disadvantage of not having a library at his disposal, and he has to provide one out of his own funds. He has to sit in the Court of Review the same as the judge of any rural district, where the amount of work is not so great. They are sitting every day in the year except during vacation. I do not know why these men, who have to do this large amount of work and with living expenses as great as the living expenses of the judges in Montreal, should not get the same salary as the judges of the Montreal district. I am not talking about the other districts, because I know nothing about them, but I submit that under the circumstances no justifiable reason can be given for the difference between the salaries of the judges in the district of Three Rivers and those in the districts of Montreal and Quebec.

Mr. BOIVIN: I would like to direct the attention of the Minister of Justice to the fact that there is a judge residing in the city of Westmount, near Montreal, who was originally appointed for the district of Pontiac, with residence at Bryson. I understand that the provincial Government has authorized his residence at Westmount in the district of Montreal and asked him to exercise his judicial duties in that district when he is not required in the district of Pontiac. This, it appears to me, places him in very much the same position as the judges of the districts of St. Hyacinthe and Richelieu, whose cases have just been dealt with by the hon. Minister of Justice. This judge would not be included in this resolution, and I should be very glad if the hon. Minister of Justice would explain why this exception has been made. I believe the judge to whom I refer is Mr. Justice Weir.

Mr. DOHERTY: As I pointed out in dealing with the case of the judges of the Richelieu and St. Hyacinthe districts, the bringing about of a position whereby these two gentlemen enter upon the performance of the duties of the new position created by the legislature of Quebec and will become, if this resolution and the Bill based upon it be passed, entitled to this additional salary, involves action within the jurisdiction of the provincial Government and legislature and action which comes within the functions of the Government and the Parliament of Canada. The reason why the judge originally appointed at Pontiac does not figure in this resolution is that in regard to him there has been neither consultation with this Government nor action by it. The assignment of these judges to this new work involves an appointment going beyond the appointment granted by their original commission. It is the function of the Government of Canada to make those appointments; it belongs to the office of the Minister of Justice to make the nominations to those appointments. After looking into the conditions as to the locality of the districts of the two judges of Richelieu and St. Hyacinthe, from the point of view of proximity to Montreal, and after consideration of the qualifications of these gentlemen, I have come to the conclusion that I was perfectly justified in nominating them for these positions of wider usefulness and greater responsibility. Being ready to do that, and my nomination being acceptable to the Government of Canada, which must take the responsibility; we are proceeding accordingly. Not having been consulted at all about the arrangement which the legislature of the province of Quebec thought proper to make with regard to the district of Pontiac, I was not, of course, called upon before it was made either to form or to express any opinion. After its having been made, it is quite true that it might be possible, if I as Minister of Justice were prepared to take the responsibility of the nomination and this Government were prepared to take the responsibility of the appointment, that we might appoint the gentleman who fills the position under his commission of judge of the district of Pontiac to this new sphere of action. Without going into any discussion that would in any way be derogatory to the gentleman concerned, after full consideration of the circumstances—in the first place, that the district of Pontiac is very remote from the district of Montreal and, in the second place, that there are a number of judges in rural districts much nearer to Montreal who could much more conveniently have been called to the performance of these duties—and after considering also the question of whether in my judgment, and upon my responsibility I ought to nominate this particular gentleman for the position, I have not been disposed to take the responsibility of making that nomination.

Mr. PROULX: Are these three judges whose salaries are increased from $5,000 to $7,000 at present residing in the city of Montreal?

Mr. DOHERTY: I do not know whether Mr. Justice Bruneau and Mr. Justice Martineau have changed their residences since this enactment of the Quebec Legislature, nor am I quite certain where they were actually residing before the change. I would assume that they were residing at St. Hyacinthe and at Sorel.

Mr. PROULX: Then in addition to receiving $7,000, every day they sit in Montreal they will claim ten dollars a day for living expenses.

Mr. DOHERTY: The law already prevents that.

Mr. E. LAPOINTE: Where will the new judges for the Superior Court in Quebec reside?

Mr. DOHERTY: There are to be two judges in the district of Saguenay. My impression is that the one thus added is to live at Chicoutimi.

Mr. FOWLER: What is the present necessity for this legislation? I understood a couple of months ago that there would be a revision of the salaries of judges all along the line. Now we find two or three judicial positions in Quebec singled out for special consideration. Have the judges in Quebec struck for more pay? There are judges in the other provinces doing their duty quite as well as those in Quebec, and if consideration is to be given to those in one province why should it not be given to those in the others? It seems to me that the minister is making an invidious distinction in favour of these judges in Quebec. The Supreme Court judges in Alberta are to receive $6,000 but these strikers are to receive $7,000. I want to know why these judges in Quebec are receiving this special consideration while those in other provinces are receiving no consideration at all. I think the salaries of judges, taken on the whole, are just about as large as they should be. I am a member of the profession—and I know something of what I am talking about. The salaries received by judges of the various courts throughout Canada, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, are in about ninety per cent of the cases considerably in excess of the amount the judges made at the Bar. Laymen are asking where this is going to stop and why these men, who are retiring usually into positions of comparative ease and munificence of the Government, receive salaries much greater than their former incomes, although they do much less work. Very good reasons should be given for an increase of $2,000 per annum in a judge's salary. Unfortunately, I was not present when the minister began his explanation of this resolution, but I would like to hear reasons strong enough to convince me that this is legislation for which I should vote.

At six o'clock, the Committee took recess.

The Committee resumed at eight o'clock, Mr. Blondin in the Chair.

Mr. DOHERTY: I was about to say when the House rose at six o'clock that if the hon. gentleman who spoke last had been present when I made my explanation he would have perceived that this is not a question of making an increase in the judges' salaries or of making any discrimination in favour of any province. This legislation is the result of an endeavour to improve the system, and by means of that improvement in the system to arrive at an improvement in the administration of justice in the district of Montreal in a way more economical than it otherwise could be arrived at. The great centre of legal business in the province of Quebec is the district of Montreal. The population of that district must be in the neighbourhood of 800,000 people, and the judges are in large numbers scattered through the rural districts. If we proceeded in the ordinary way, what would happen would be that the legislature of the province of Quebec would be entitled, if the business of the Montreal district required it, to provide for two additional judges in the district of Montreal, and that would have made two additional salaries for the Dominion to pay. There being need for further aid, and there being men available the duties of whose districts do not take up all of their time, under this arrangement we are getting a transfer into the place where the work is to be done of two men at an additional cost of $4,000, instead of $14,000. Instead of the province of Quebec providing for two new judges and two full salaries, we are utilizing the services of men who are entitled to a salary of $5,000 a year at a cost to the Dominion of $4,000. After this explanation there can be no question of discrimination, and I feel sure that my hon. friend's terror of strikers will disappear.

Mr. PROULX: Will Mr. Justice Chauvin do work in the district of Montreal also?

Mr. DOHERTY: As far as it may be possible, but I believe he will have enough to do in the district of Ottawa and in his own district of Montcalm. I do not anticipate then that he will have very much time after he has done his work in the district of Ottawa. If an arrangement had been made for a resident judge in the district of Ottawa there would have been also a judge in Mont Laurier, and it would have been necessary to provide a salary for an additional judge, which would have meant an extra expense of $5,000 a year. Acting upon the suggestion I made, which was concurred in by the provincial authorities, instead of doing that arrangements have been made by the provincial authorities to have this judge take, in addition to the work of his own district, his share of the work in the Ottawa district. Again, instead of an additional judge with salary of $5,000 a year, we get an additional judge doing the same work at an extra cost of only $2,000. The whole thing has given me a good deal of thought. I was rather disposed to congratulate myself on having brought about a most economical arrangement, and I did not expect to be criticised as adding unduly to the expenses in this province.

Mr. MARCIL: Has the minister been able to make an arrangement with regard to the judicial work in Terrebonne, Joliette and Beauharnois?

Mr. DOHERTY: In regard to the district of Terrebonne, there has been such an arrangement for a great many years. The judge of Terrebonne resides and works in the district of Montreal. Last year we made a similar arrangement in regard to the district of Beauharnois.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN: How many Superior Court judges are there in Quebec, and how many Supreme Court judges?

Mr. DOHERTY: The total number of the Superior Court judges is forty-one. There are no judges under the name of Supreme Court judges. The Superior Court in Quebec is a court that has entire jurisdiction in first instance save in regard to cases under $100. From $100 up the Superior Court has entire jurisdiction in all civil litigation in first instance.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN: This matter has been coming up from time to time since it was settled some years ago, as appears by the Revised Statutes of 1906. Amendments have been made from time to time, and a few years ago the principle adopted was that judges should be appointed according to population. I suppose the amount of litigation among a given number of people is about the same all over Canada. The number of judges would be about the same in different provinces in proportion to population. I think that there is just as much litigation in the eastern part of Canada as there is in the middle part, in Quebec, in Ontario, or in the West. But we find that there is a discrimination. We find that the chief justice of Prince Edward Island gets only as much as a puisne judge in Manitoba or in Quebec and that puisne judges in Prince Edward Island only get $5,000 a year. I do not think this is right. If we have about the same population to a judge as Quebec has, why should the judges in eastern Canada be discriminated against in this way? The judges in Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick do just as much work as the majority of the judges in Quebec, Ontario or Alberta, but we find on the statute books a discrimination in favour of every one of these provinces as against the smallest province in Canada. I brought this question to the attention of the former Minister of Justice some years ago and I also brought it to the attention of the present Minister of Justice but I was told that there was no change being made in the Act contained in the Revised Statutes of 1906. I cannot see it in that way. I find that there is a change made in judges salaries in this very resolution. The resolution reads in this way:

Resolved, that it is expedient to amend the Judges Act, chapter 138 of the Revised Statutes, 1906, and to provide for the increase of the salaries of three judges of the Superior Court of Quebec from $5,000 each per annum to $7,000 each per annum and to provide for the salary for an additional judge of the said court at $5,000 per annum.

I would like to know how it is that these three judges are to get an additional $2,000 and that the new judge who is to be appointed will only receive $5,000 a year, the same as the puisne judges in Prince Edward Island. I suppose that probably next year another Bill will come in to give this puisne judge an additional $2,000 a year because there will be a lot of kicking over this matter on account of this discrimination. If you look up the statutes you will find that all the other puisne judges receive $6,000. This law in regard to judges should be put upon a proper basis. There should be no discrimination and they should receive equal salaries in all parts of Canada. Important cases come up in the smaller provinces as in the larger provinces, and the same care and attention have to be given them by the judge. In New Brunswick they have only one judge for fifty thousand inhabitants, while in Alberta and Saskatchewan they have one judge for thirty thousand inhabitants, so that these new provinces have been favoured in that way, and the judges receive large salaries as well. The reason given for these larger salaries is on account of the high cost of living, but I think you will find that the cost of living is about equal in every part of Canada. There may be a difference for the man who wants to live high, but so far as the ordinary cost of living is concerned, not the cost of high living, it is about the same all over. There should be no discrimination and no favouritism shown in the salaries of public officials in this country who do their duty. I think you will find that the judges in eastern Canada do their duty as well and are just as competent as the judges in Quebec, Ontario, the middle west or British Columbia. I ask the Minister of Justice to withdraw this resolution and reconsider it, and I have no doubt this House will do justice to the judges from one end of the country to the other if a proper resolution is placed before it.

[Mr. A. A. McLean.]

Mr. CARVELL: I have had occasion to discuss this subject many times during the last six or seven years in this House, and I want to say to the Minister of Justice tonight what I have said to my own political friends when they were in power. I heartily concur in everything which has been said by my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. A. A. McLean). I am sure the Minister of Justice does not appreciate the position of the county court judges in the Maritime provinces. They occupy a different position altogether from the county court judges in the rest of Canada. I do not know exactly what the status of the Circuit court judges in Montreal is, but I assume they occupy somewhat the same position as do county court judges in the Maritime provinces. In the Maritime provinces we have only two classes of judges: Superior Court judges and county court judges. I appreciate that the minister meets with a great deal of difficulty in increasing the salary of the county court judges in the Maritime provinces, because of the rather peculiar anomaly which exists in the province of Ontario, where there are two judges for practically every county, and I suppose the minister feels that, as these judges have not very much to do, it would not be reasonable to increase their salaries to, say, $5,000 per annum. But the minister should remember that, in the Maritime provinces, instead of having two judges in a county, each judge has from three to five counties to attend to, and in the western portion of New Brunswick the judge of the county court has four counties under his jurisdiction.

Mr. BLAIN: The hon. gentleman is not quite correct when he says that in the province of Ontario almost each county has two judges. That is not the case.

Mr. CARVELL: There may be instances to which my remark would not apply, but there must be a great many counties in Ontario where there are two judges.

Mr. BLAIN: There are quite a number, but there are more which have only one judge.

Mr. CARVELL: Well, that makes no difference to my argument, because I say that in the Maritime provinces each county judge takes from three to five counties, and is an important official. Besides attending to the holding of courts, he has to take speedy trials, and that necessitates travel over very great distances. I think the minister should take these things into consideration, and realize that, if there are different conditions in any part of the country, these conditions should be specially provided for. I know that the Minister of Justice has been importuned, the same as have other ministers of justice, in regard to this matter, but, notwithstanding what my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) says, if the minister would take the House into his confidence I think he would have to admit that his difficulty in doing justice to the Maritime province judges is because of the peculiar conditions existing in Ontario. If however the Minister of Justice can depart from the general rule and provide increased salaries for judges in Montreal and elsewhere in the province of Quebec, surely he can find means to give a reasonable salary to the judges in the Maritime provinces. It is unnecessary to argue the matter farther; I have called the attention of the Minister of Justice to it on at least two occasions since he became minister, and I do hope that before the Bill passes he will see his way clear to in some way arrange matters so that these important officials in our part of Canada shall receive a reasonable allowance for their services.

Mr. McKENZIE: Considering the large number of judges in the province of Quebec, the advance is a small one, but no doubt it will be gratifying to the recipients of it. It is, however, a step in the right direction. I do not pretend to understand the divisions of the judiciary in the province of Quebec, but it appears from the Judges' Act that there are at least three classes of judges: the judges of the Superior Court, of which there are quite a number, the district judges, who do not preside in the Superior Courts and who evidently would correspond to County Court judges in the other provinces.

Mr. DOHERTY: In the province of Quebec, what the hon. gentleman (Mr. McKenzie) describes as district judges are judges of the Superior Court, but each has assigned to him a particular district. Some of these Superior Court judges are assigned to the district of Montreal, some to the district of Quebec, and the others to rural districts. We have no County Court judges in the province of Quebec. All are Superior Court judges with the exception of four Circuit Court judges in the city and district of Montreal. All of the judges who sit in the first instance are judges of the Superior Court, but although there is a difference in the salary paid that difference is based presumably upon the fact that in the large districts of Montreal and Quebec the work is vastly heavier than in the rural districts.

Mr. McKENZIE: The Supreme Court judges in Nova Scotia are supposed to live in the capital city of Halifax and they go on circuit and act as a court of appeal sitting en banc. There is a court of appeal in the province of Quebec which I presume is composed of some of the Superior Court judges.

Mr. DOHERTY: The court of appeal in Quebec is a separate court called the Court of King's Bench.

Mr. McKENZIE: That is, as I understand it, that they do not go on circuit. Those judges, whose jurisdiction is confined to districts, are doing what is really County Court work.

Mr. DOHERTY: They do both Superior Court work and county court work.

Mr. McKENZIE: The same thing is true absolutely of the county court judges in the province of Nova Scotia. The hon. minister knows that with very few exceptions a county court judge can try every kind of crime with the consent of the accused. Murder, or attempt to murder and a very few other cases cannot be tried without a jury. In the province of Nova Scotia a county court judge is a Master in Chambers of the Supreme Court. As such, almost every kind of work comes before him. As we have only one set of Supreme Court judges and that set residing in Halifax, it is very easily understood that everything that can be done by our different Bars throughout the province of Nova Scotia before the local masters is done. For instance, in the county of Cape Breton we have a local Bar and a great deal of legal work is done. No lawyer goes to Halifax except to attend the Appeal Court; and consequently the county court judge is sitting every day, trying the cases in his regular courts, sitting as a Master in Chambers or sitting as a Criminal Court, trying criminals, so that every day in the year our county court judge is engaged in some kind of business in connection with the discharge of his duties. A salary of $3,000 a year for a man occupying a position of that character, and requiring as a judge to have such a wide knowledge of the profession to which he belongs, is not sufficient pay. While it may be difficult to change the situation which has lasted for a great many years, it may be a good opportunity for the minister to deal with the matter at the present time. I was rather sorry to hear the comments made from the other side of the House that judges were being paid ample salaries at present. The fact must not be lost sight of that a judge is not in the same position as the ordinary man getting a salary, because there is a certain standing that a judge must maintain; there is a certain dignity of his calling that he must observe, and there is further a provision in the Judges' Act that he must not do other work. There was a time when he could take an interest in companies as a director or as a trustee, and could earn some money in that way; but under the present Judges' Act, passed in the year 1905, he is excluded from all such things, and is not permitted to do anything whatever except that which appertains to his calling as a judge. Therefore he has no income of any kind except his salary. Unfortunately we have only human beings and human nature to contend with in judges just as in men in other positions, and it is well and proper that the man who has to administer the laws should be absolutely independent of any temptation that poverty brings. We fortunately throughout Canada have no complaint to make in regard to the character of our judges, and it is well that we should maintain the dignity of the Bench as far as possible.

As far as the province of Nova Scotia is concerned, I suppose the hon. minister would have no complaint to make if we had a county court judge for each county in the province. In the province of Ontario there is an average of more than one judge for every county, whereas in the province of Nova Scotia we have eighteen counties and only seven judges. Supposing that in the beginning we had a judge for each county, that would be eighteen judges; and as they would certainly be paid $3,000 a piece, that would be $54,000. With the small number of judges that we have, if you give them each $5,000 a piece, it is only $35,000, as compared with $54,000. Seeing that we have cut down the number of judges to seven, I think we have a right to expect that they shall be decently paid, and $5,000 is certainly not asking too much.

In the province of Ontario, county court judges earn something as surrogate judges; that is they discharge some functions as judges of probate, for which they are paid fees, and it makes a considerable addition to their income. They have also something to do with the assessment lists; they sit at a court of revision or appeal, and for this work they are paid something. In the province of Nova Scotia, however, the county court judge by way of his office is the court of appeal from the decisions of the probate court, but he gets no allowance for that work at all; he gets the bare amount of his salary. I mention this so that the minister will know that there is no analogy between the position of a county court judge of the province of Nova Scotia and that of a county court judge of the province of Ontario, so far as that is concerned.

I think the minister had a different idea in his mind some time ago, namely that he could deal in a general way with this matter, and assist the judges throughout the whole of Canada, particularly in the Maritime provinces. I am sorry to find that the prospects are not so bright as they were eighteen months or two years ago. I hope that the idea put forward by my hon. friend for Queens, Prince Edward Island (Mr. A. A. McLean), will be followed out and that this resolution will be withdrawn and a wider one submitted. We all understand that it is not competent for the minister to amend the resolution now before the committee, but it certainly would be competent for him to withdraw it and submit one dealing more generally with this question.

There is another matter which I wish to bring to the attention of the minister, as I did on a former occasion. I explained to the minister on that occasion that the county court judge for my district had been deprived of his allowance for travelling expenses under a regulation which assumes to discriminate between different classes of work performed by county court judges. It seems to me a poor matter that, when a county court judge is carrying out the demands of the legislature of the province he should be paid less than the regular travelling allowance. Section 18 of the Judges Act does not recognize any such discrimination. It is as follows:

There shall be paid for travelling allowances to each judge, whether of a Superior or county court, and to each local judge in Admiralty of the Exchequer Court, except as in this section otherwise provided, in addition to his moving or transportation expenses, the sum of six dollars for each day, including necessary days of travel going and returning, during which he is attending as such judge in court or chambers at any place other than that at which he is by law obliged to reside.

That is a broad provision that when a judge of the county court is sitting as a court—as he was in the case I have in mind—acting under the provisions of the statutes of the province of Nova Scotia, he certainly comes within the provision of that section. I was certainly surprised that under that regulation the judge was deprived of his proper fees. As I said, I brought this matter to the attention of the minister before. But he has many matters to attend to, and, I quite understand, tends to lose sight of small matters of this kind. But I remind him of it again in the hope that the regulation will be removed, and that when a judge of the county court travels in the regular discharge of his duty, he shall be given, without hesitation and without trouble, the fees allowed under the Act.

However, that is a matter of detail. I would again urge upon the minister the necessity of dealing liberally with the county court judges in the province of Nova Scotia, in the Maritime provinces generally, and indeed all over Canada.

Mr. McCURDY: Not having the pleasure and advantage of belonging to the legal profession, I cannot appreciate to the same extent as the hon. member for North Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie) the demands which are made on the time of a county court judge. It is quite evident that the demands made upon him call upon him to be self-sacrificing, and it becomes ingrained in his nature, for has not the hon. member himself relinquished a position at $3,000 a year as county court judge to accept a much smaller honorarium in the service of his country? But, seriously, it seems to me—and I have made representations to the minister upon the subject at different times—that the remuneration given to our county court judges is quite inadequate. It has remained the same for many years, although, as hon. members are so often reminded, the cost of living has been increasing. There is no way, as the hon. member for North Cape Breton has pointed out, whereby the man who occupies the position of county court judge can increase his income, he is dependent on the salary attached to his position. He is expected to keep up a certain style of living and it seems to me that taking into consideration the constantly increasing expenditure, this is a matter which might well claim the minister's attention. Some of the districts in Nova Scotia cover quite a wide area. One which I have particularly in mind covers three counties. I would like to add my word to that of others in support of consideration being given particularly to an increase in the salaries of the county court judges.

Mr. BICKERDIKE: Why has the Minister of Justice left out the Superior Court judges of Montreal? I find there is no hope for them under the present ruling, though no man knows better than the hon. minister himself the amount of work these judges have to do. I think each of them does as much work as almost any two judges outside of the city. The judges all over the country ought to be well paid, there is no question about that. There is no use of this Government saying that they cannot afford it or that they decline to do it on the ground of economy. A government that has the reputation of burning the candle at both ends must not save on poor judges.

Mr. CARROLL: Our judges of both District and Supreme Courts are very inadequately paid. I believe that there are very few judges in Canada to-day who could not make double their salaries in the practice of their profession. The judges that I know anything about in the province of Nova Scotia and one or two of the other provinces, are men who were of the very highest standing at the Bar in their respective provinces, and who, had they remained in practice would be making salaries of from $18,000 to $25,000 a year instead of the $6,000 or $7,000 which they now receive. If there is one class of our public servants—and I suppose judges are to a greater or lesser extent public servants—who are very meagerly paid, that class is our judges both of the county and Supreme courts. The judges of the county court in our province and I suppose the same is true in other provinces—receives only $3,000 a year. Any man, if he has sufficient ability to be appointed county court judge, could make double that money in the practice of his profession. My hon. friend from Shelburne and Queens (Mr. McCurdy) has referred to my hon. friend from North Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie) having resigned his county court judgeship. If the hon. member for North Cape Breton had given the same attention to his profession that he did to the duties of his position as county court judge, he would have made $4,000 to $8,000 a year instead of the $3,000 he was paid—and probably that had something to do with his giving up the job.

Mr. McCURDY: My remark was entirely commendatory of the action of the hon. member.

Mr. CARROLL: I know. Especially in the district of Cape Breton island, our county court judge does an amount of work that is worthy of double the salary that is paid him.

I need not repeat what has been said by the hon. member for North Cape Breton, but our county court judge is busy from Monday morning at nine o'clock until Saturday afternoon at three. He tries practically all criminal cases, with the exception of those of a more serious character; he assumes the duties of master of the Supreme Court at chambers; he hears all interlocutory applications that are made in the various stages of cases sent up to the Supreme Court for trial—my hon. friend the minister of Justice will know what that means in a district where there is a considerable amount of litigation. He is the taxing master and he has the jurisdiction to try civil cases of a very important nature. I mention his case not because I hold a brief for him, but because I know something of his duties, and I believe that he does more work than any other county court judge in the province, excepting, perhaps the judge at Halifax. I cannot understand why this or any other Government should pay a man in that position only $3,000 a year, an absolutely inadequate sum. Many of our tradesmen and smaller merchants, who have not had to go to the expense of acquiring technical knowledge, make more money than that in a year. The judges are absolutely unable to live up to the standard demanded by the dignity of their office on the salaries which they receive.

Mr. LANCTOT: They can resign.

Mr. CARROLL: If it were not for the fact that I would probably be dealing in personalities, I could point out to my hon. friend very many cases where judges have resigned and taken up the practice of their profession simply because they could in that way earn double the amount which they received as judges.

Mr. C. A. WILSON: What about the hon. Minister of Justice ?

Mr. CARROLL: I believe that if the hon. Minister of Justice would devote to the practice of his profession the careful attention which he gave to his duties as judge of the Supreme Court, he would make double the amount of money which he received as a judge. But we have to have judges, and in my humble opinion the minister is going to have some difficulty in getting the very best men to act as judges of the Supreme Court if the salaries are to be left as they are at present.

Mr. BURNHAM: Does the hon. gentleman really think that in this the twentieth century the whole trend of civilization and culture has been such that now everything is measured in dollars and cents?

Mr. CARROLL: The hon. gentleman is ahead of his time; he is living in the twenty-eight, not in the twentieth century. He is one of those men who can see the commerce of this country being carried on by flying machines; he is living in the twenty-fourth century at least. But, no matter in what century we are living, to my mind the question is: are the judges of our courts to be paid adequate salaries? The hon. Minister of Justice is taking a forward step in this matter, but I do not think he is taking a step that will commend itself to the country at large. It is all very well to increase the salaries of some particular judges from $5,000 to $7,000 and from $3,000 to $5,000, but I think the Minister of Justice and his department should go thoroughly into the whole question and come to the conclusion that an increase should be given to every judge in Canada, whether he be judge of the smaller or of the Superior and Supreme Courts. If the minister will see fit to bring down legislation to that end, I believe it would have the hearty support of every gentleman in this House.

Mr. MORPHY: I desire to congratulate the minister upon his attempt to make a forward step along the lines of economy in dealing with the question of the judges of our courts. As I understand the idea of the minister, he is going to enlarge the territorial jurisdiction of the county court judges and let them do work in adjoining or neighbouring counties. In that way, by a slight increase in their salaries, he will obviate the necessity of the appointment of a higher salaried judge in the county to which the judge in question is sent. I think that is commendable and should meet with the approval of this House, especially in an age when it is sometimes considered proper to attack men who sit on the Bench of the country. I pay tribute to the thoughtfulness of the minister in providing a little more work and a little more pay for some of the county court judges. My own idea, being fairly well acquainted with the conditions in Ontario, is that there is gross inequality of pay, having regard to the labour performed. Leaving out altogether the rather unique and sensible idea to which the hon. member for West Peterborough has given utterance, I claim that many judges throughout the province of Ontario are doing three times as much work as they are paid for doing. There are a great many judges in Ontario who do not earn the money they are getting; yet no one could ask them to take less, because they have always to be on duty and to perform the services from day to day which a judicial officer must perform. In the county that I have the honour to represent the judge of the county court is a very estimable gentleman, formerly a member of this House, who is held in the highest esteem by the litigating public. He is a very busy man, as the county is a great litigating county; we call it the fighting county. I am quite certain that I could pick out throughout the province of Ontario six county court judges who together do less work than the judge of the county court in the county of Perth. That being the case, the principle that the minister is endeavouring to establish by this Bill might be fairly established to-day in respect of the county court judges in the province of Ontario. While I admit that as the province of Ontario is growing rapidly in industrial life, the work of the judges will increase very rapidly and the day may come when these men of whom I speak may have more than enough to do, still I believe that it would be worth the minister's while extending the principle not only to Quebec but to the province of Ontario as well.

Mr. CARROLL: And to Nova Scotia.

Mr. MORPHY: I cannot speak of the conditions in Nova Scotia, but I heard the hon. member for South Cape Breton (Mr. Carroll) eloquently speaking for the Superior Court judges a moment ago. So far as Ontario is concerned, I have heard no complaint about their salaries, but there is complaint at times from the public that while this Parliament has enacted a law which compels the retirement of county court judges at seventy-five years, it is entirely left open so that a judge of the Superior Court may stay on the bench until he is 175 years old, if he lives that long. I do not think the discrimination is a fair one. I believe that the county court judge throughout Ontario and within the whole Dominion jurisdiction is in every respect as estimable a man and as worthy of the consideration of Governments as any Supreme Court or Superior Court judge, and I, for one, feel that since the law has been applied, and I think in many cases well applied, that a judge having reached the age of 75 is forced to retire from the county court judgeship, his brother on the Superior Court bench, who has enjoyed more than double the salary all his life, should be put in the same position. While I will have to make exceptions, owing to the fact of men of 75, such as Chancellor Boyd in Ontario, retaining all their faculties in splendid shape so that they are able apparently to do their work as well as at any time, so that it would be a distinct loss to the bench if they were forcibly retired; there are to-day in Ontario some complaints at the non-retirement of Superior Court judges who have reached the age at which a county court judge would be forcibly retired. I congratulate the minister on his advance towards economy on this line and the application of the sensible plan of giving the county court judges a little more work and adding to their pay.

Mr. W. M. MARTIN: I cannot say that I agree altogether with the remarks of the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Morphy). It seems to me that the question of economy should not arise in connection with the salaries of judges. If the Government are going to practise economy, cutting down or keeping low, the salaries of judges would seem to me to be a very poor place to begin it. It would be better for the Government to begin in the Militia Department and cut down the construction of drill-halls, or perhaps in the Public Works Department, where the expenditure has been going up by leaps and bounds in the last three or four years.

There seems to be a general agreement between members on both sides that the salaries of district or county court judges in Saskatchewan should be somewhat increased. If that is true in Nova Scotia or in parts of Ontario or in Quebec, it is equally true in the western parts of Canada and particularly so in Saskatchewan, not only on account of the fact that the judges in that province are all working from morning until night, as there are not sufficient County Court judges in the province, but also because living is much more expensive in that part of the country than in any other part of Canada. In an ordinary county town in Ontario a man occupying the position of county court judge can live on much less than he could in a similar town in Saskatchewan. I attended a banquet given by the Bar Association of Saskatchewan to the Minister of Justice last fall. The minister was in particularly good humour on that occasion after he had been banqueted and treated to the best that the prairies produce. I understood from his remarks, and the impression was general not only in Regina but in Moosejaw, that he was going to do something 9 p.m. to increase the salaries of county court judges in Saskatchewan. I know that the minister's answer will be that he must deal with the whole of Canada; but the conditions are somewhat different in the West as it costs more to live and the judges there actually do more work than county court judges in Ontario. I hope the minister will devise some scheme by which he can be of some assistance to the judges of the county court in Saskatchewan. The minister is going to appoint four more District Court judges in that province. He will have trouble in getting proper men for those positions at $3,000. He shakes his head. I venture to say that a great many of the applications he has had for the position are from men not fitted to occupy the position of county court judge. I know that he cannot get properly qualified men for these positions at a salary of $3,000. Unless the salaries are made adequate to the position the minister will not be able to get the best men to occupy the positions of District Court judges in the western provinces, and I hope that some means will be found to give these men more salary than they are offered at the present time.

Mr. LANCTOT: Mr. Chairman, before this resolution is put, I wish to once more state my views as to its purport. The hon. minister stated that the Judges' Act should be amended. I must say, in the first place, that I am greatly pleased at the rapid spread of the views I expounded in the course of this session concerning the proposed increase in the Judges' salaries. Despite the lateness of the season, the seed which I have put in the soil is making good progress, if I am to judge by the statements forthcoming from the hon. member (Mr. Fowler) before recess, and I have reason to believe that before long it will yield a magnificent crop.

[Mr. W. M. Martin.]

I have several times addressed the House in this connection, and I must say once more that I cannot agree with the views expressed by my hon. friend from South Cape Breton (Mr. Carroll); and neither can I agree with the views expressed by another of my colleagues, who has just taken his seat (Mr. Martin of Regina) when he stated, as the previous gentleman had also stated, that the judges were being paid starvation wages. Starvation wages, you say, with $7,000 for the Superior court judges and $3,000 for the County court judges of Ontario and the other provinces? If such be the case, I wonder how many people we will lose in this country within a year or two, when those who are drawing such salaries are bound to disappear from the face of the earth on account of the increased cost of living. I wonder how many people there will be left in the country following on such a disaster. Is it not a fact that we have, in this country, a large number of people earning less than five, six, seven hundred dollars, one thousand or twelve hundred dollars, while burdened with families to bring up and children to educate? However, not a single lawyer in this House has as yet risen from his seat to urge on the Government the desirability of increasing the wages of these people who are threatened with starvation. Not a single legal gentleman on either side of the House has done so.

That question of the judges' salaries is entirely a novel one for the electorate, and I say that the people are ignorant of what is going on in this connection. But the people will be informed of the facts, and I for one, have quite made up my mind to take up the subject whenever an occasion offers.

Most lawyers are willing to accept these judgeships at $7,000 or $8,000 per annum, realizing that in so doing, they are providing for their old age a pension, after fifteen or twenty years' service, without ever contributing to the fund. Is there in any part of the country people who draw superannuation without beforehand contributing to the fund off their salary cheque? Only the judges enjoy that privilege.

As stated by my hon. friend from Queens and Albert, at the time of recess, many legal gentlemen who are promoted to the Bench never, while practising at the Bar, had the chance of drawing a monthly cheque of between $416 and $580, such as they receive from the Government. Far from it, I may say that to my knowledge, many lawyers who were eking out a mere living in Montreal, or elsewhere, were most happy to accept positions in the Civil Service, because they could not make both ends meet out of their professional fees; and now we are told that the judges should be paid larger salaries. I say that is preposterous.

What example are you professional men setting for the people? I say that in taking such a stand you are abetting the other classes of society against you; you are making yourself an object of envy to them, because you are keeping everything for yourselves and leaving nothing for others. But the time is near when a stop will have to be put to it.

I have already spoken to the same effect on several occasions, but I wish to-day to make an exception in favour of the judges of the Montreal Circuit Court. I am in favour of increasing the salaries of those judges, the senior of whom has heretofore drawn only $3,600 per annum, while his colleagues drew $3,000. I say that those judges are not sufficiently paid for the work they are doing, and besides they have no right to a pension.

Mr. DOHERTY: After twenty-five years.

Mr. LANCTOT: Well, that is wrong. I am against granting any pension to them. If both parties in this House are agreed as to the desirability of paying larger salaries to the judges, why not pay them while they are doing the work? There is no reason for that pension. It is to that the people object.

Why is that pension granted to the Superior Court judges, instead of a larger salary? Why? Simply in order to enable the party in power to appoint as judges those who are unwilling to face public opinion, and that, by pensioning the retiring judges, so as to make room for others. The hon. Minister of Justice is posted in this connection. Possibly he will deny it, but I challenge him to come and discuss that question on the hustings in the province of Quebec, and I am satisfied that he will not defend before the people the stand he is now taking.

The hon. Minister of Justice stated that, by means of this resolution, he expected to effect a saving of $12,000 per annum by getting those three judges to sit in Montreal. The minister has thus adopted the right course; I may congratulate him right here, for those $12,000 will put us in a position to continue paying that pension to him for some time to come. But that pension will have to be dispensed with some day, and I beg of him to speak in my behalf to the right hon. Prime Minister, so that the House may be afforded an opportunity of discussing the Bill which I introduced at the opening of the session. The Government should not entertain any fears since they have the majority in this House.

I am not speaking for myself alone. True, I am not a lawyer, but what I say is in the interest of those poor people who work hard and strain every nerve to earn a few hundred dollars, and I am waging war on the magnates who would gobble everything and leave nothing to others.

I see that the few hon. gentlemen who have taken part in this debate belong to the legal profession. I think they expect to be promoted to the Bench one of these days. Among them, there are some men of mature years, and others much younger. For instance, my hon. friend from South Cape Breton is young; he is a good lawyer and he will be made a judge before long. My hon. friend from Queens, P.E.I., is anxious that the judges' salaries should be increased; I surmise that he will be made a judge pretty soon; his stand on the question would seem to indicate it. I must say in conclusion that I am strongly opposed to any increase of the salaries of such judges as are drawing just now $8,000, $7,000, or even $5,000, and I say that the country is at one with me on that point.

Mr. MACDONALD: I was very much disappointed with the fact that the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty) had not succeeded in dealing with this question of the judges' salaries in a comprehensive way, as he assured us last year he would do in the interval. I cannot follow my hon. friend from North Perth (Mr. Morphy) in the congratulations which he has given to the minister wherein he says that some economy has been practised as a result of this resolution. I have always been under the impression that the constitution of the courts, the statement as to the number of judges that should exist, and all the provisions in that particular, rest entirely in the hands of the provincial legislatures, and all that is necessary for the Minister of Justice to do is to provide for the appointment of judges and fix their salaries. The minister, in dealing with this case, has devoted his energy entirely to one province of the Dominion. I need not repeat the arguments that have been made by the two hon. members from Cape Breton as to the necessity for a prompt and early consideration of the conditions which exist in the province from which I come; but I apprehend that in other provinces of the Dominion the question is quite as acute as it is in the province of Quebec or in the province of Nova Scotia. I think that the gentlemen who are on the bench were led to believe last year by the minister that this whole question of the revision of salaries would have been considered between sessions and would have been dealt with this year. I have not heard any explanation from my hon. friend the minister as to why, in dealing with this question, he has limited his efforts to one province. One does not need to repeat the arguments which have been made on behalf of the Opposition. On the other hand, we have had some suggestions as to the lack of any necessity for moving, but I am sure that the practice which has always characterized the payment of the judiciary in the empire, the custom that has been set for us in the Parliament of the mother country, where salaries which would almost be regarded here as princely accompany the filling of the judicial office, has marked a condition of affairs which I think might well be continued in this country. When we recall the fact that the life, the liberty and possibly everything there is in the world belonging to the individual may be destroyed or completely nullified as the result of the decisions of the men who have been appointed by the state to sit in judgment in regard to the particular issues involved, we will at once realize that we have a condition in which nothing but the most unswerving integrity and the highest degree of independence should characterize the occupant of the bench who has these questions to determine. Anything that would detract from that superb independence which is absolutely essential to the proper administration of the law and the maintenance of those high standards of legal jurisprudence on which the very best interests of our country depend would be the greatest possible menace to the state. These considerations which, I have no doubt, have been put by hon. gentlemen who have spoken before me, must have appealed to the minister, and I only desire to again express my regret that in dealing with this question he has only touched the fringe of it and not attempted to deal with it on those broad lines which we anticipated last year he would have done.

Mr. CARVELL: I want to point out to the minister that we are finding fault with the increases granted to certain judges in Quebec who, while it is true they are not county court judges, yet, from the information which we all have, we know are practically performing the same service as county court judges in the other provinces. I do not think the minister should go behind any such technicality as that. He may claim that there are particular circuit judges who are doing a large amount of work, but I venture the assertion that they are doing no greater amount of work than many of the county court judges are in the Maritime provinces. Take the county court judge of Sydney, the county court judge of Halifax, the county court judge of St. John, or the county court judges of many of the rural districts and compare the amount of work they do with the work that these judges do in Quebec, and the comparison, I venture to say, will be very favourable to the county court judges of the Maritime provinces. You have also to take into consideration the fact that in the Maritime provinces there are often three and four counties joined together in one circuit. I am afraid the minister does not appreciate the condition of affairs. The statement was made by one hon. member this evening that large demands were made upon their time. It is not so much the demands that are made upon the time of the county court judges, but it is the fact that, owing to the high position they occupy, they cannot do anything else and they are simply compelled to live upon their $3,000 a year or resign their position. They are prohibited from taking part in any other of the activities of life. The county court judge occupies, so to speak, just as high a position as the Lord Chief Justice of England does; that is, he is not in a position to engage in business, he cannot increase his salary by any outside transactions, he cannot even be a director in a joint stock company, and he has to live up to a standard just the same as a judge of the Supreme Court of Canada or the Lord Chief Justice of England. My hon. friend may say that they have no difficulty in getting men to take these positions. That may be true, but my hon. friend will find that he has a lot of difficulty in getting the right class of men to take these positions. I am speaking from the standpoint of the Maritime provinces practically altogether. The hon. member for South Cape Breton (Mr. Carroll) gave some little account of the way it worked out in Nova Scotia. It is very much the same in New Brunswick. Our Supreme Court in

New Brunswick is divided into two sections, the appellant division consisting of three judges, a chief justice and two puisne judges. Then there is the King's Bench division, which consists of a chief justice and three others. The two chief justices receive $7,000 a year and the others $6,000. The county court judges require just as much knowledge of the law and they must be just as able lawyers as are the judge of the King's Bench division, because exactly the same class of cases is brought within their purview. Under our arrangement civil matters up to $400 in contract and $200 in tort are decided by the county court judges. Beyond that the cases go to the King's Bench. The same amount of legal acumen is required in deciding a case involving an amount of $399 as that which is required in a case involving $400. My hon. friend does not seem to appreciate the fact that as far as the Maritime provinces county court judges are concerned they are exactly on a par with the King's Bench judges, except that they receive half the salary. I think the minister must be alive to the fact that this is an unfair basis. This is a position that these gentlemen ought not to be asked to sustain, and I trust that at an early period my hon. friend will be able to do something to remove this anomaly. Since this discussion commenced this evening I have been casting my eye over the Estimates in every department of the Government in Ottawa, and if you look at these Estimates you will find from one to eight or nine officials outside of the deputy ministers who are receiving salaries greater than those of the county court judges. I have nothing to say against these gentlemen; they are doing the work assigned to them, but they are only clerks. I do not think the Minister of Justice can consider for a moment that a chief clerk in a department at Ottawa has anything like the responsibilitty devloving upon him as has a county court judge in the Maritime provinces; the two cases are not comparable.

Mr. MARCIL: And these officials are not satisfied.

Mr. CARVELL: No doubt they are not satisfied, but I am only mentioning them as a matter of comparison. In this very building to-night there are eleven or twelve gentlemen, not including the Clerk of the House, the Clerk of the Senate, the Sergeant-at-Arms and important officials of that kind, who are mere clerks and who are receiving a greater salary than the county court judges in the Maritime provinces. I am not going to say anything about the Militia Department; I had something to say about that last week, but if the Minister of Justice would look at the salaries of the officials of the Militia Department he would be ashamed.

Mr. DOHERTY: I would find a good example there.

Mr. CARVELL: Yes, you would find all the justification you possibly could require to increase the salary of judges who really are doing something for the country, who are a necessity to the country, and who are earning their salary. Again, I am not attacking the Militia Department; I am only mentioning this by way of comparison If it be necessary to keep this body of military gentlemen in their positions at enormous salaries, surely the Minister of Justice ought to be able to equalize the matter by raising the salaries of the county court judges to somewhat near what they should be.

Mr. DOHERTY: In so far as we have listened to argument upon the general increase of the salaries of county court judges, and perhaps of judges, generally speaking, I have very strong sympathy with that view. The hon. gentleman from Regina (Mr. Martin) said that I was in good humour up in Regina, and that I intimated my feeling in that regard. I may say, as a matter of fact, that on that question I am always in good humour and I always entertain the same feeling. Unfortunately one is not always able to do these things which in the best of humour he wishes to do.

Mr. CARVELL: Why not?

Mr. DOHERTY: I am not alone to deal with this matter, and there are other considerations than those which have been advanced this evening that appear to be paramount obstacles to the general dealing with this subject at this session. It is quite true that I promised to do my best, and I have endeavoured to keep my promise. But the circumstances have not been favourable, and we are not in a position to deal with the whole subject at present. I have explained the peculiar circumstances of what is being done in Quebec. This is not a matter of increasing salaries pure and simple. So far as the Superior Court judges are concerned, we are avoiding the appointing of two additional judges by making arrangements by which existing judges do considerably more work for a small addition to their salaries. It is from that point of view that one hon. gentleman has been good enough to speak of it as being, what in reality it is, an economy.

I do not want to go into comparisons which might seem invidious, but I do know of my personal knowledge the immense volume of work the circuit court judges in Montreal do. The province of Quebec thought there was so much work that there should be six judges in the circuit court, but I have so arranged matters that it is possible to do the work with four judges, and I am simply distributing between these four the six thousand dollars salary that would have been paid to two additional judges at $3,000 each. I am not in reality burdening the treasury of this country with any addition to the salaries of particular judges. What I am doing with regard to the Superior Court judges who come into the district of Montreal, is, adding two increases of salary of two thousand dollars each, instead of paying salaries for two additional judges at seven thousand dollars each. In the case of the Circuit Court judges, I am getting the work done by four men, and paying the same as I would have paid if I simply folded my arms and made no effort, and added two judges at the suggestion of the legislature. I have to acknowledge the co-operation of the Government of the province of Quebec in this arrangement. An hon. member has said that it is for the province to fix the number of the judges, and I have to acknowledge that this arrangement could not have been come to without the co-operation of the Government of the province of Quebec.

As to the statement made by the hon. member for Prince Edward Island (Mr. A. A. McLean), there is no doubt that the Chief Justice of that province receives less than the Chief Justices of the other provinces, but on the other hand the puisne judges of that province receive more than the rural puisne judges in Quebec. There are anomalies with regard to these salaries. Perhaps it is true that something ought to be done to remedy these anomalies, but they seemed quite satisfactory to a large number of gentlemen who have spoken this evening, at the time they were brought into existence, and so long as it remained in their power to change them. These hon. gentlemen seem to have discovered the great need for a change only when their power to make the change slipped from them. But that does not alter the force that attaches to the argument that there ought to be a change, and speaking for myself personally, I shall be glad if circumstances should put me in a position where I shall be free to deal with this whole subject. As I have said, circumstances have not appeared this year to be favourable to that being done, and I regret it as much as any of the hon. gentlemen who have spoken. The hon. member for St. Lawrence (Mr. Bickerdike) touched a sympathetic chord when he spoke of the position of the judges in the district of Montreal. I am as sorry as he can be that we are not in a position to deal with the whole subject, and in dealing with the whole subject to deal with their case. The action that is being taken here now is purely and simply giving effect to an arrangement that enables us, while avoiding a larger burden on the treasury, to get a more effective administration in a particular district. It is not a matter of increasing salaries purely and simply, because for what we are doing we are getting a direct consideration of greater value than we are giving.

Mr. MARCIL: Is there any arrangement made with regard to the judge in the district of Gaspé?

Mr. DOHERTY: I must confess that I know of no reason why the judge in Gaspé should be treated differently from the other rural judges in the province of Quebec.

Mr. MARCIL: His salary remains at $5,000?

Mr. DOHERTY: Yes.

Mr. MARCIL: Does he reside in Quebec?

Mr. DOHERTY: The judge in the county of Gaspé exercises his functions also in Bonaventure, with residence at New Carlisle or at Percé, at his choice.

Mr. MARCIL: That is a requirement of the provincial law, I presume?

Mr. DOHERTY: Yes.

Mr. MARCIL: His salary is $5,000?

Mr. DOHERTY: Yes.

Mr. MARCIL: He sits in Quebec almost all the time.

Mr. DOHERTY: That must be because of his own willingness to do so, and it must be remembered that he gets ten dollars a day for expenses when he does so.

Mr. MARCIL: Why should not the same arrangement be made in these two other cases?

Mr. DOHERTY: If the proposition should come from the provincial authorities to make the change, I shall consider what ought to be done; but I do not know the circumstances under which the hon. member says the judge of the district of Gaspé resides in Quebec. His residence apparently by law is fixed in his district.

Mr. MARCIL: I am not reflecting on the judge of the county of Gaspé. He is a distinguished man and has had a very noteworthy career in judicial life, but he occupies the same position as other judges have before him. His immediate predecessor resided at New Carlisle.

Mr. PELLETIER: He resides at Rimouski.

Mr. MARCIL: The judge resides there in the summer time, but in Quebec in winter. I understand he sits very often in Quebec. The same thing might apply to the judge at Rimouski. I suppose the same thing applies to other judges who reside in the city of Quebec. The only objection I have is that there should be any discrimination. When a judge is appointed to the Superior Court Bench, he should obtain the same salary as his confreres. Ten, twelve or thirteen years ago Sir Charles Fitzpatrick brought a resolution before the House and by an error, according to his statement, no increases were granted to these judges and it was a source of conplaint for many years after that.

Mr. DOHERTY: That has been remedied.

Mr. MARCIL: I am not blaming the present Administration, but I think there is a discrimination against these district judges, if the salary remains at $5,000.

Mr. DOHERTY: All the rural judges are on the same basis.

Mr. MARCIL: You are taking three rural judges now and making city judges of them. Why not do the same thing with the judges of the district of Gaspé as with the judges of the districts of Richelieu, St. Hyacinthe and Montcalm?

Mr. DOHERTY: They are not all required in the district of Montreal, and it would not be a very practical arrangement that a judge should have a district down in Gaspé and also have a district in Montreal, thus spending a large part of his time travelling between the two places. Where we have sanctioned this action, it has been in the cases of districts immediately adjoining Montreal, where a man living in Montreal can with equal facility serve his own district and the district of Montreal and because of the need existing in the district of Montreal, and the possibility of its being done with perfect convenience and without loss of time, we have sanctioned the arrangement with regard to these particular judges. Of course, we do not require all the rural judges in the district of Montreal, and we are beginning with those whose districts are nearest to the district of Montreal.

Mr. MARCIL: I am not objecting to the arrangement at all, but I think it might be extended to the other parts of the province. Gaspé may seem very remote, but it is now within a few hours of the city of Quebec. I think that no discrimination should be made between judges occupying equal rank and doing equal work. If in their own districts the work is not sufficient, the Government should give them additional work, if possible, instead of increasing the number of judges. So far as the Circuit Court judges are concerned, I have the pleasure of knowing these judges from the day they were appointed. Three of them were originally appointed, and now the number has been increased to four; but our friends in the Maritime provinces may not know that last year there were before this court 18,000 cases to be tried, and because the role was so overcrowded, two judges of the Superior Court had to be appointed to assist these judges in catching up in their work. The court is presided over by Mr. Justice Leboeuf, who is certainly a very hardworking man and who is entitled to get all he is receiving, and the other judges are Mr. Justice Purcell and by Mr. Justice Dorion, of whom the same is true. I do not believe on the whole that the people of the province will object to reasonable salaries being given the judges, but I do not think discrimination is in the interest of justice. Instead of employing additional judges, the present judges should be given the work, but they should at the same time receive the salary.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I see that as regards these judges who are to be appointed for the district of Quebec, Chicoutimi or Roberval are the places of residence. Where will they reside?

Mr. DOHERTY: The provision of the Quebec statute is that the judge in the district of Chicoutimi, shall reside at Roberval, or Chicoutimi, at his choice.

Mr. GAUVREAU: Is there any provision in the statute by which the Minister of Justice can compel a rural judge to reside in his district? If so, is it the intention of the minister to enforce the law so far as the rural judges are concerned?

Mr. DOHERTY: The residence of a judge in the province of Quebec is fixed by the legislation of the province of Quebec. In what manner the Minister of Justice could exercise compulsion upon a judge to obey the law of the province, is perhaps a matter that might require some consideration. So far I have not had called to my attention a case or cases calling for action in that regard.

Mr. PROULX: The best way to enforce the law would be to stop the salary unless the judge complied with the provincial law.

Mr. DOHERTY: We are talking about judges of the Superior Court of Quebec, and the only remedy of which I know, exercisable against judges of the Superior Court is impeachment before both Houses of Parliament. Whether it would be considered a case for impeachment that a gentleman was residing in one place rather than in another is a matter which requires some reflection. Short of that I do not know of any authority that the minister has to compel a judge actually to sit down and stay in a particular place. I am not prepared to say that there is nothing that can be done under these circumstances. When such a case arises and is called to my attention, I shall look into the matter and see whether or not it is possible that something can be done to ensure that a judge performs the duty that the provincial law prescribes for him of residing in a particular place. It is not something incumbent upon him under the law of the Dominion of Canada, and therefore it may perhaps not be our function to compel obedience to that law.

Mr. PROULX: The legislature fixes a district and it assigns the place of residence of the judges. Then, the federal authority provides the salary. I submit, the federal Parliament could impose conditions on the payment of these salaries. It could provide that the judge shall comply with the law made by the provincial legislature, and otherwise shall not be entitled to receive the salary.

Mr. DOHERTY: That is possible, and if the case arises we will see.

[Mr. Doherty.]

Mr. CARVELL: Will the minister tell me whether or not he considers that one of his judges has the right to remain in the active command of the unit of the militia. The question might arise as to whether he might be called upon to order out the militia in the case of riot or disturbance. Has that matter been brought to the minister's attention?

Mr. DOHERTY: The hon. gentleman is asking for an opinion which turns on the interpretation of a section of the statute. In that case, I am sure he will allow me time to give the subject consideration. The only provision I recall that could be suggested as applicable is that which prohibits a judge from engaging in any other occupation and requires that he shall give his whole time to the duties of his office. I doubt whether service in the militia would be held as going into an 'occupation' within the meaning of the statute. When the case arises we will consider what the law is.

Mr. KYTE: I desire to call the attention of the minister to an anomaly that exists in the County Court Judges' Act in respect to the travel and living allowance to county court judges who have to hold court in places other than the shire town of the county in which they reside. No provision appears to exist for payment of such an allowance when the judge has to travel from one town to another in his home county for the purpose of holding court. I called the attention of the minister to this matter before, and he suggested that I send him a memorandum with respect to it. This I did and I hope he will bear it in mind.

Mr. DOHERTY: I received the hon. gentleman's memorandum and will endeavour to see what can be done.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Can it be done without legislation?

Mr. DOHERTY: I do not quite recall. I understand it is somewhat similar to the difficulty spoken of by the hon. member for North Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie). The difficulty of which he spoke, I understood, arose under some regulation of the department, but the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Kyte), refers to the County Court Judges' Act. Do I understand that is a provision of our own Judges' Act?

Mr. KYTE: It is a provision under the Dominion statute.

Mr. DOHERTY: I will look into it, and when we come to deal with the Bill to carry out this resolution, if necessary I will see that an amendment is made to meet the case.

Mr. SINCLAIR: The case is where a judge is presiding over two or three counties. As the law now stands the judge can get no travelling fees for attending courts in the county where he resides. This is a matter of considerable hardship and there is no reason why this anomaly should exist. I trust that before this Bill becomes law the minister will see that it is amended to meet such cases as I have referred to.

Mr. GAUVREAU: The minister said that there were no complaints to his department about judges not residing in their districts. I wish to call his attention to the fact that in the district of Kamouraska the complaint is that the judge should reside at Fraserville, the shire town of the district. If I may rely upon what the newspapers in that district state, then it is against the best interests of justice in that district to have a judge who does not reside at the shire town. It is within my own knowledge that the judge was obliged to go away earlier than was expected to Quebec, and some witnesses were sent back to their homes and were obliged to come back at the next term at a cost of over $250—an expense uselessly caused by the fact that the judge had to go to another case at Quebec. If the hon. minister has no complaint from that district, I profit by the circumstance to be the first man to lay the complaint before him.

Mr. DOHERTY: Can the hon. gentleman tell me where the residence of that judge is fixed? I notice that in the Quebec statute, with regard to the district of Kamouraska, the provision is that the judge shall reside 'at the place assigned to him by law.' And I understand that under the Quebec law, that means that the Lieutenant Governor in Council may fix the judge's place of residence. I will verify that if the hon. member is not able to tell me what action has been taken.

Mr. GAUVREAU: Judge Cimon nearly always lived at Rivière du Loup for the best interests of justice. He has been replaced by Mr. Justice Belleau, and it is all changed since Judge Cimon is gone.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. DOHERTY thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 190, to amend the Judges' Act.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

THIRD READING.

Bill No. 181, respecting the entrance of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company and the Canadian Northern Railway Company into their joint terminals at the city of Winnipeg.—Mr. J. D. Reid.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT AMENDMENT.

On motion of Hon. J. D. Hazen (Minister of Marine and Fisheries), Bill No. 168, to amend Part VI of the Canada Shipping Act, was read the second time and House went into Committee on the Bill, Mr. Blondin in the Chair.

Mr. HAZEN: This Bill was fully explained at the time of the first reading. It is to give effect to the recommendation of the Pilotage Commission with regard to the control of the pilots in the city of Quebec. It places the control of the pilots in the hands of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries instead of in the hands of the Corporation of Pilots, in that respect complying with the recommendation made by the Pilotage Commission, which, as hon. gentlemen will remember, was appointed last year to investigate this matter.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Before this legislation passes I should like to put briefly before the committee a few of the objections urged by the pilots of Quebec against this Bill. The Bill is based upon the report of the commission appointed by my hon. friend a year ago, and, if I mistake not, is presented also at the request of the shipping federation and shipping interests generally. The Corporation of Pilots, which is composed of gentlemen whom my hon. friend the Postmaster General knows well, has sent to the members of the House an answer to the report of the Royal Commission.

Mr. HAZEN: What is the date?

Mr. LEMIEUX: January 22, 1914. I shall not weary the committee by reading the whole of that document, but I wish simply to read seriatim the objections made by the Corporation of Pilots, in order that my hon. friend may give his answer. I may say that personally I approve the Bill; the shipping federation, the shipping interests and the public generally, I think, are in sympathy with this legislation. As the pilots have a right to be heard, however, let me briefly state their objections. They use the following language with regard to the condemnation of the pooling system by the Dominion:

Page 10, section (c) reads as follows: The system of pooling pilots' earnings is vicious and removes all incentive, etc.

In answer they say:

We have experienced this system these last fifty-four years, and consequently we must be in a better position to appreciate it than those who judge that the system on hearsay or according to their interests or their anxiety to pay less. We are glad to say that every member of our corporation is satisfied with it, and would not like to be deprived of it. We cannot understand why the system of pooling our earnings is bad for us and good elsewhere.

Then they proceed to quote the usages which are followed by other pilots' corporations, the Sandy Hook pilots of New York and the Cardiff pilots of Wales, for instance. They say that these pilots' corporations adopted the pooling system which has been followed by the Quebec Pilotage Corporation.

Another grievance is as to the pension fund. On page 10 of the report of the commission it is recommended:

That the pension fund be taken over and managed by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Here is the answer made by the pilots:

That question has not been discussed at all during the investigation and no complaints have been made by witnesses against the actual administration of the fund. This has been decided, ex cathedra, by two commissioners. We think that it is not sufficient to settle the matter without any proof of bad administration.

Mr. HAZEN: I desire to call my hon. friend's attention to the fact that this Bill does not interfere with the management of the pension fund.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Very well; I will pass to the next grievance. With regard to the appointment of an independent superintendent, they say:

We again regret to say that we do not agree with the commissioners' opinion expressed in section (a) about the superintendent of pilots. When the Trinity House was the pilotage authority, they were superintendents and according to law they had to be pilots. What a curious thing to pretend that a pilot cannot fulfil his duty as superintendent because he has been a pilot and will not be independent enough. One might as well say that an advocate is not qualified to become a judge, because, having been an advocate, he will not be independent enough of his former confreres to deal with justice. Governments should do better, we suppose to appoint notaries as judges, they know law and would be more independent.

They complain also of the suggestions made in the report with regard to the apprentice pilots. Then they give this answer with regard to the Quebec tariff of pilots:

The commission would like to point out that the pilotage tariff rates for the Quebec pilotage district are too high for the services rendered. That question of tariff did not come up during the investigation.

Mr. HAZEN: The Bill does not interfere with that.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I know, but the pilots have this opportunity of being heard. (Reading):

And consequently we have had no chance to discuss it and show that the rates are not too high, if we consider the length of the pilotage, 157 miles.

They then compare the pilotage tariff of New York and Boston with that of Quebec, arriving at conclusions which are in favour of the Quebec tariff. These are the chief objections of the pilots to the report of the commissioners and to this legislation.

For many years this matter has been a much debated question and I think that the hon. gentleman has at last taken the authority which should have been entrusted to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries long ago. Unfortunately, there are too many accidents on the river St. Lawrence, chiefly below Quebec, although there are some between Montreal and Quebec as well. Navigation has just been opened and there have already been at least three accidents, two of them very serious—the cases of the Saturnia and the Montfort. In respect of these cases the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries was kind enough to send me yesterday a copy of the judgments rendered by the commission. In both cases, if I mistake not, the masters and pilots were found in fault.

Mr. HAZEN: In the case of the Saturnia the pilot was suspended for three months and the master was censured. In the case of the Montfort the pilot was suspended for three months, but the master was commended for his course at the time of the accident.

Mr. LEMIEUX: In the case of the Saturnia, Mr. Meredith, K.C., who represented the Shipping Federation at the investigation, did not agree with the findings of the commissioner in this sense that whilst the master and the pilot are blamed he thinks that the department is also at fault. I quote from to-night's Star as saying:

A strong protest was entered yesterday at the sitting of the Dominion Wreck Commission when the judgment, read by Captain Lindsay, dismissed entirely the absence of aids to navigation as a factor in the grounding of the ss. Saturnia and ss. Montfort, April 28.

F. E. Meredith, K.C., counsel for the Shipping Federation in the case of the Saturnia, and for the Canadian Pacific railway in the case of the Montfort, in view of the fact that no recommendation was made in the judgment that the Government be advised as to the condition of navigation aids in the St. Lawrence, made comment thereon.

'I have no intention of discussing the judgments,' said Mr. Meredith, 'nor to argue whether the absence of buoys and lightship had anything to do with the casualties, but I appear for the Shipping Federation of Canada and the Canadian Pacific railway, both of whom are tremendously interested in the St. Lawrence navigation. And, as no mention has been made in either judgment of the absence of lightships from their stations, I am instructed to ask you to bring the evidence in this regard before the minister. This is with the object that in future years there may not be a position where we find ocean steamers reported coming into the gulf and no lightships sent down in proper time, especially to what is regarded as one of the most dangerous spots in the channel, the Lower Traverse.'

Mr. Meredith also added that Captain Lindsay's successor on the commission should obviously not be a member of the Marine Department and placed in the position of condemning his superiors in office. He should preferably belong to the Department of Justice.

I leave this to my hon. friend to consider. From the first reports that were received of the accident to the Saturnia it would seem that if the lightship had been towed by a proper tow boat it might possibly have been in time at the proper place at the Traverse and the accident might have been averted. At the same time I wish to call the attention of my hon. friend to a judgment which has just been rendered by the Privy Council and which, I think, should affect in the future the legal position of the masters and pilots respectively on board a ship in case of accident. The decision is by Mr. Justice Bargrave, Dean of the British Admiralty Court, in a recent collision case. He decided that the master should never interfere with the pilot in pilotage waters unless there be an indication of absolute incapacity, drunkenness or mental difficulty of some sort. This is likely to create a precedent of far-reaching importance. Further, the judge added that in his opinion the master must assist the pilot and advise him but should not assume command. The pilot is supposed to know local conditions thoroughly and should be in a better position to navigate the vessel than the captain. This decision, given by the highest judicial authority in marine matters in the British Empire, should interest my hon. friend and the navigators generally in the St. Lawrence where so many accidents have occurred, much to the detriment of our country and especially of the good old city of Montreal and generally the ports of Montreal and Quebec. The recent grounding of the Saturnia and the Montfort occurred while both these vessels were in charge of pilots. I am very glad my hon. friend corrected me just now in the case of the Montfort, saying that the master's action was commended. In the case of the Saturnia, although I do not know the captain personally, it seems to me from the circumstances, if the case had been argued before the Admiralty Court in England the master would not have been found guilty as he was found guilty by the wreck commissioner in Montreal. I would like to have the opinion of my hon. friend on this point as I think this decision is likely to be invoked in future cases. I believe on the whole that the Bill which has been introduced by my hon. friend will give us a more modern and more able body of pilots than we have had in the past. I am not finding fault with the old pilotage system, but evidently, from the number of accidents which have taken place in the river St. Lawrence, the Government and the minister were justified in taking the pilotage system of Quebec under their own control as the pilotage between Montreal and Quebec is now. As regards the superintendent of pilots, I suppose there will still be a superintendent of pilots in Quebec. The present superintendent is Mr. Talbot. What are the functions of Mr. Lachance?

10 p.m.

Mr. HAZEN: He is a pilot and was president of the Corporation of Pilots of Quebec. He was president when placed on the Pilotage Commission with Mr. Robb and Captain Lindsay.

Mr. LEMIEUX: To show that the shipping interests of the country are somewhat perturbed at the condition of the pilotage system below Quebec, I wish to read the following extract:

I have here the Canadian Railway and Marine World for September, 1913. A report on the grounding of the steamer Lake Manitoba is given in this paper. I read the following:

The court unanimously unites in its opinion that the cause of the casualty was entirely due to the negligence of Adjutor Lachance, the pilot, inasmuch as he totally disregarded the rule of the road in porting for a bright light on his port bow, and also in not being aware of the exact position of his vessel with regard to the land. Moreover circumstances ultimately proved that there was not sufficient room for the execution of this manœuvre. It is also of the opinion that had the pilot on seeing the bright light, at once stopped the engines and reversed, if necessary, the casualty would have been avoided. The court therefore suspends his license until the completion of the present season of navigation.

The pilot, A. Lachance, is president of the Corporation of Pilots of Quebec, and was one of the commissioners appointed by the Dominion Government, in the recent inquiry into pilotage matters on the St. Lawrence.

Commenting on this decision, the Canadian Railway and Marine World used the following language in its issue of November, 1913:

The matter has given rise to considerable comment in marine circles, and a number of suggestions have been made to obviate what is becoming a ridiculous state of affairs. Some of these cover the entire removal of wreck investigations from the jurisdiction of the Marine Department, making the Wreck Commissioner's Court subsidiary to the Department of Justice, and depriving the Marine Department of any right to revise judgments and sentences, and also fining only of pilots for errors of judgment, etc., which result in the damage to, or loss of, a vessel, grading such fine according to the gravity of the offence, and extending payments over a stated period, by deducting a percentage from fees due the pilot for services rendered to each vessel during that period. There are certainly some good points in the suggestions mentioned, especially the bringing of the Wreck Commissioner's Court under the Department of Justice, leaving one of the superior courts of justice to be the final court of appeal in all matters pertaining thereto. In all cases where a pilot has committed any offence under the Pilotage Acts, in addition to a fine, the conviction should be endorsed on his license.

Since the foregoing was put in type, we have been officially advised that the Minister of Marine made a full and careful enquiry into all the facts of the case, and having satisfied himself that the period for which the license in question was suspended might be shortened, he so ordered and the license was accordingly returned to the pilot forthwith.

This confirms our opinion, as previously expressed, that decisions of the Wreck Commissioner should not be subject to reversal by the political head of a Government department, on whom political influence may be brought to bear, but should be only appealable to a judicial body.

I quite understand what influence is brought to bear on my hon. friend when similar cases happen, and I think he should be the first to give way to another authority than his own so as to protect himself against himself and the public also. I therefore hope that in future my hon. friend will not give way to the political influence which is brought to bear upon him, and that he will see that, if a pilot is found guilty and if he is suspended, the suspension will run its full course. There is certainly among shipping men and the general commercial world in Canada great dissatisfaction as regards the administration of our pilotage in the river St. Lawrence. This affects the whole of the Dominion. It has affected the insurance rates. We have been clamoring for years and years that all possible advantages shall be given the St. Lawrence, and we have been trying to secure for Montral and Quebec all the orders possible, not only from the Canadian West, but from the American West. But, in view of the many accidents which have taken place, insurance rates have gone up and the trade of the St. Lawrence nas suffered accordingly. I hope, therefore, that this Bill will prove to be a move in the right direction. My hon. friend, I am quite sure, will understand full well that he should be very chary about altering the decisions which are rendered by those who supervise the work of the pilots after an accident has taken place.

Mr. BICKERDIKE: I want to congratulate the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Hazen) on having taken a move in the right direction. There is one thing that has always struck me as peculiar and it is that, according to the law, you are not obliged to take a pilot, but you are obliged to pay pilotage. I know some captains of steamers who do not take a pilot at all. They consider themselves better pilots than any of the pilots we have on the river. It does seem strange that the captain of a vessel is obliged to pay pilotage whether he takes a pilot or not. I am very proud that my hon. friend the ex-Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) has brought out the fact that all of these accidents or nearly all of them happen below Quebec. We have few, if any, accidents above Quebec.

Mr. SINCLAIR: What is the reason?

Mr. BICKERDIKE: The pilotage system is a little better and there is little or no danger above Quebec. You could almost run a ship up the channel there as easily as you could drive a team up St. Lawrence Main street. There are lights on each side so that there can be no mistake. You are just about as safe there as if you had a barbed wire fence on either side. I cannot understand why pilotage should be compulsory while the taking on of a pilot is not compulsory. This system was in existence long before my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries took office. I know captains who have been coming here regularly for the last twenty years, and they know just as much about the route as many of the pilots, if not more, and it is not fair that these men should be obliged to pay pilotage when they do not require a pilot and do not take one on.

I do think the minister might be able to arrange that. I cannot understand that there is any argument in favour of making a man pilot his own ship and then making him pay pilotage.

Mr. HAZEN: I am glad that my hon. friend from Rouville (Mr. Lemieux) and my hon. friend from St. Lawrence (Mr. Bickerdike) approve generally of the measure that is now before the committee. My hon. friend from Rouville has pointed out that there has been more or less dissatisfaction for a number of years with the pilotage system, and perhaps with the administration of that system upon the St. Lawrence. We have two sets of pilots, one between Montreal and Quebec, and the other between Quebec and the ocean. Both these were considered by the commision, which consisted of Mr. Robb, the president of the Shipping Federation, Captain Lindsay, the Wreck Commissioner, and Mr. Adjutor Lachance, who was then president of the Quebec Pilotage Corporation. It is to carry out the recommendation in their report that this Bill is introduced. Nearly all the recommendations of that commision have been carried out, but as most of them were of a character that did not need legislation they could be made effective by regulations. This applies to all the recommendations respecting the Montreal pilots, which were of a minor character. Generally speaking, the commission found that the Montreal Pilotage Division was in a most satisfactory condition. It is true that very few accidents take place between Quebec and the city of Montreal, although the large vessels which come up to the port of Montreal have to traverse a channel which in some places is not more than a few hundred feet wide. The Montreal pilots discharge their duties so well, and the aids to navigation are so good that, as my hon. friend (Mr. Bickerdike) said, very few accidents take place.

Mr. LEMIEUX: You can navigate between Montreal and Quebec, day and night, as safely as you can walk Sparks street.

Mr. HAZEN: The important regulation is with regard to the pilots who have jurisdiction from Quebec to the sea. The Bill before us places the control of pilotage matters in the hands of the Minister of Marine who shall make regulations with regard to the apprenticing of the pilots and all matters of that sort which are now in the hands of the corporation of pilots which was established in 1860.

Mr. BICKERDIKE: A family compact.

Mr. SINCLAIR: What about the pilots above Quebec?

Mr. HAZEN: They are under the control of a superintendent of pilots appointed by the Marine Department.

Mr. BICKERDIKE: They are all good men.

Mr. HAZEN: The Pilotage Commission recommended the abolition of the Pilots Corporation, but this Bill does not go as far as that. The corporation is an ancient institution, with traditions attached to it which are valued by the Quebec pilots, and I could not see any purpose in dissolving the corporation, because if you did abolish the corporation it would be quite open to these pilots to be incorporated for their mutual advantage and for social and other purposes under the laws of Quebec. This corporation has managed admirably what is called their pilot fund and which is a pension fund. They always invest their money for that fund subject to the approval of the Marine Department and the department of late years, before approving of the securities which the pilots might invest these moneys in have adopted the practice of asking the opinion of the Finance Department with regard to the investment. I could see no reason why that power should be taken out of this corporation, and without wounding unnecessarily the suceptibilities of these men and without interfering with their traditions we have placed the control of these pilotage matters below Quebec in the Department of Marine and Fisheries, as pilotage matters above Quebec have been placed for some years past. We have appointed Captain Lindsay, who is retiring from the position of Wreck Commissioner, to have superintendence over the whole pilotage and his office will be at Quebec. He will have superintendence over the Montreal pilotage replacing Captain Riley, and also superintendence over the Quebec pilotage; Mr. Talbot continuing superintendent of Quebec pilots as at present.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Who will take Captain Lindsay's place?

Mr. HAZEN: No appointment has been made but it will have to be made soon.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Does this involve the dismissal of any of the pilots.

Mr. HAZEN: No, but if the pilots from year to year are unable to pass the examinations prescribed they will have to pass to one side. They are examined yearly with regard to eye sight and physical condition, and if a pilot cannot comply with these tests, then in the interest of the safety of life and property he cannot be allowed to continue.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Hints were thrown out that some of these pilots were incompetent, will we have to wait until they are dead to get rid of them?

Mr. HAZEN: There is an age limit of sixty-five and while there are men over sixty-five who are quite as good as they were at forty-five, yet a hard and fast rule must be laid down in these matters, even though it should work hardship in individual cases. There are only three of the Quebec pilots in active work who are over sixty-five years of age. The objection taken by the pilots to the report of the commission was submitted to the department and considered by myself and my officials. We are not interfering at present with the pilots pooling their earnings. Their system is to pool all their earnings and divide them into equal shares amongst themselves. There is a misapprehension in some quarters, to the effects that if a pilot is suspended for a certain length of time it is no punishment to him because he gets his share of the earnings just the same as if he were at work. That is not the case. If he is suspended he does not share in the earnings during the period of his suspension. If the pilots are disposed to pool their earnings it is difficult to see how it could be prevented even though we thought it desirable to do so.

If they choose to enter into an agreement that they will pool the earnings and divide them amongst themselves, as is certainly done in other ports in the world, I do not see how you can make legislation that will prevent them from doing so. We do not think that we can do so for the present year at least, and we thought it better to wait for further developments before acting on the report of the commission so far as that feature of it was concerned. We hope that the changes made will have the effect of improving the pilot system on the St. Lawrence below Quebec, and that there will be fewer wrecks than there have been in the past. There is no doubt that there have been too many wrecks. For two or three years there were very few wrecks, but these things seem to come in a rush. Misfortunes come not singly, but in battalions. For a few years there were so few wrecks on the St. Lawrence that Mr. George Davey, who had a bonus from the Government for conducting a wrecking plant, threw up the contract because he was making practically no money. The only earnings he was getting were the bonus he was receiving from the Government.

Mr. LEMIEUX: That was under the Liberal Government.

Mr. HAZEN: Perhaps my hon. friend may claim the credit for that. The year before last there were a good many wrecks on the St. Lawrence, but last year there were very few, and the damage that resulted was very slight indeed. This year, however, we seem to have started at the very opening of navigation with several disasters, although very little real damage has resulted from them. Yet they are most unfortunate, and, coming at a time when attempts are being made to get lower insurance rates on the St. Lawrence, they naturally fill the underwriters with alarm, and they say there must be something wrong when these disasters occur.

Mr. LEMIEUX: It never rains but it pours.

Mr. HAZEN: That is an old maxim, in which there is a good deal of truth. My hon. friend has referred to the accidents to the Saturnia, and the Montfort, the judgment of the wreck commission and also some remarks made by Mr. Meredith, who was counsel for the Marine Association at the inquiries that were held before Captain Lindsay and his associates. In my opinion, while I should not take a newspaper report too literally, I may say that I do not think there is justification for Mr. Meredith or for any one else uttering such statements as are attributed to him in the Montreal Star in the interview read by my hon. friend from Rouville (Mr. Lemieux). There was not a single witness at either of those inquiries who ventured to express the opinion that the absence of aids to navigation had anything whatever to do with the accident in either case. I would like to read to the House the judgment in the case of the Saturnia, which is comparatively short. I will only read the conclusion to show the House that the very contrary is the case, and I fail to see how Mr. Meredith could have made such a statement as attributed to him in the Montreal Star. The finding in the Saturnia case is signed by Captain Lindsay, Captain Francis Nash and Captain J. O. Grey. These two latter gentlemen will be known to my hon. friend from the St. Lawrence division (Mr. Bickerdike). I believe they are old shipmasters familiar with the St. Lawrence river. The finding is as follows:

After carefully considering and reviewing the evidence adduced, the court is of the opinion that the stranding of the steamship Saturnia, in the Lower Traverse, river St. Lawrence, on the morning of the 28th of April, was caused by the action of Jules Lachance, the pilot, inasmuch as he appears to have no confidence in himself as to the manner of navigating the vessel through this channel, and apparently did not make proper use of the usual day marks for safe navigation, and it is the unanimous opinion of the court that the vessel touched the ground on the south side of the channel, and close to the old Lower Traverse block, and this probably accounts for the pilot not seeing the buoy moored off the block, as the vessel must have passed almost over it just before or after striking the ground.

The court also considers that when in doubt as to his position, and lacking confidence in his ability as a pilot, he should have sent for the master to assist him in the navigation of the vessel. The court therefore considers that the pilot did not show either ordinary skill or good judgment, in attempting to pass through the Lower Traverse channel under the existing conditions, and therefore suspends the license of Jules Lachance, the pilot, for a period of three months from this date.

In view of the master, David Taylor, knowing that the Lower Traverse lightship was not on her station, and the risks attending the navigating of these narrow channels with a strong flood tide, the court is of opinion that the master ought to have been on deck after passing Cape Goose, and censures him for this negligence.

The fact of the Lower Traverse light vessel not being on her station at the time of the casualty, does not appear to the court to have any bearing on the matter, as the Saturnia had passed the position where the light vessel would have been moored, some minutes before the accident, and, had the light vessel been considered necessary for safe navigation, both the master and the pilot were taking undue risks in trying to navigate the Lower Traverse with the full knowledge that the light vessel was not there.

That is an absolute finding, which I think is the very reverse of the statement made by Mr. Meredith, as I comprehend it. The same thing occurred in regard to the Montfort.

The finding in that case is in part as follows:

The court therefore suspends the license of François Gaudreau, the pilot, for a period of three calendar months from this date. No blame in the opinion of the court can be attached to the master and officers of the ship, as everything appears to have been done by them to assist in the proper navigation of the vessel, and the court considers that the master was perfectly justified in taking the ship out of the pilot's hands, although unfortunately not in time to prevent the stranding, and commends him for his action. The fact that all the aids to navigation were not in place on April 27, in the opinion of the court, has no material bearing on the stranding.

I will not discuss these findings, because it may not be proper that I should do so for the reason that, under the law as it exists there may come an appeal to me, by the captain or the pilot or any one else who has been censured, against the ruling of the court. Under the law as it exists at present, while there is a Wreck Commission appointed, whose duty it is to attend to these matters, yet the minister can appoint any one else who is an official of the department or who occupies a judicial position in the country to hold an inquiry, so that if an appeal came to me, I might, subject to the statute, try the matter myself, or I might order a rehearing before the same court under certain conditions laid down in the statute, or I might order a hearing before any one else in the classes I have specified who might be named for the purpose.

My hon. friend also referred to the judgment of the admiralty division of the high court as to the position of the captain. I do not think, as I caught the judgment as read by my hon. friend, that it in any way changes the law as the law has been known to exist for a great many years past. I think it has always been recognized that, when a pilot is on a ship, he is in command of the vessel, but the captain's duty is to assist the pilot.

Mr. BICKERDIKE: I think the hon. gentleman is in error. The captain is always in command of his ship, and the pilot is only there as an assistant to him.

Mr. HAZEN: I do not think so.

Mr. BICKERDIKE: I know it, or else the law has been only recently changed. That was the law.

Mr. HAZEN: I think, when a pilot goes on a ship, he takes full charge of the ship. I know my hon. friend has a good deal of experience in shipping matters and I speak subject to correction, but I think I am correct in my statement. My hon. friend from the St. Lawrence division referred to the fact that a ship has to pay the full pilotage whether she takes on a pilot or not. That is correct in many ports in the world. It is correct, I know, in the port of the city where I live, namely, in the port of St. John. Ever since I can remember there has been a controversy over this question whether there should be compulsory payment of pilotage or whether, if a captain is capable of bringing in his own vessel and actually does so, he should not be compelled to pay pilotage. It is a vexed question with shipping people and different views are held upon it. But I think that the argument on which compulsory payment of pilotage is justified is this: You must have an efficient staff of pilots if you are going to have a port well equipped so that vessels may be brought in and out, which staff must be composed of men who have the local knowledge requisite; and you will not be able to maintain a thoroughly equipped corps of pilots unless you pay the pilots suitable salaries, and you cannot pay proper salaries unless you make the shipping that comes in and out of the port pay pilotage fees for that purpose. Unless you pay your pilots proper sums for their services, the funds being raised by a tax, as it were, on the vessels coming in and out of the ports, you will have pilots who cannot efficiently discharge their duties; and as the pilot must pass an examination and submit to different tests, as he must have a license and observe fixed rules, it is only fair that he should be properly paid. And it is in the general interest of the shipping and of the trade and commerce of the country that the pilots should be properly paid, and therefore that the different ships should contribute the necessary funds. For, while a ship that comes into Quebec, let us say, may not need a pilot, yet, that ship going to a port in Brazil or some other part of the world, will need a pilot, and it would not be possible to have a pilot service there unless the vessels using that port were compelled to pay their fair share towards maintaining the system. That is the argument, I think, on which the system is based. There is an argument on the other side, and I have heard the question argued both ways. You can never get the advocates of the different sides to agree about it. Certainly, that is the consensus of opinion on which the practice is based—that if you are going to have an efficient corps of pilots you must have a system of compulsory payments.

[Mr. Hazen.]

Mr. BICKERDIKE: Will the hon. minister tell us whether they are going to adopt the 'tour de role' system in Quebec?

Mr. HAZEN: As I understand the system in Quebec, the big liners that come regularly into the port, the Allan liners, the Canadian Pacific Railway liners and the others, are allowed at the first of the season to make a selection of the men they want to pilot their vessels up and down, and these men are employed by them for that purpose. The others are put on what is called the 'tour de role' and take their turn. The men on the big liners, of course, earn more money, but under the system that is pooled with the others, as the pilots consider it fair it should be. I think I have mentioned all the matters which it is desirable I should refer to, but if there are any others, I will be obliged to hon. gentlemen if they will let me know.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Will there be any reduction in the rates?

Mr. HAZEN: There is no provision for reduction. But, so far as I know, there is no complaint about the rates. The ship owners are satisfied with the rates. As a matter of fact, it was thought that the rates at Montreal were not high enough and they were raised. The commission having on it a representative of the Shipping Federation of Canada made a request for this increase for the pilots, in the Montreal division. What the shipowners want is to get more efficient pilots—it is not a question of rates but of more efficiency.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Will they get the same amount when the captain pilots his own ship?

Mr. HAZEN: On the St. Lawrence it is the same, but there are ports where the full amount is not charged.

Mr. SINCLAIR: I would suggest that it would be worth while to consider whether half the pilotage rate would not be sufficient to charge when the captain is so well versed in the river that he is able to navigate his own ship. I have heard that pilotage is considered an onerous tax on the coal trade, for instance, where the captains go once a week or once a fortnight up the river, and know the river as well, perhaps better, than many of the pilots. These men do not take pilots, but they have to pay the full pilotage rate. I think it would be fair to make the rates on the St. Lawrence in such cases half the regular rates, as is done in many other ports.

Mr. BICKERDIKE: There was one point to which the hon. minister did not make reference. I asked a question whether the captains of most of the steamers coming here who could pass the examination would have a pilot's certificate the same as the pilot. That is a question we have had before us for a long time, as the hon. minister knows.

Mr. HAZEN: Under the regulations as they existed for a long time, and as prepared by the corporation of pilots, they would not.

Mr. BICKERDIKE: Would they now?

Mr. HAZEN: That is a question to be considered.

Mr. BOULAY (Translation): Mr. Chairman, as the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux) said, the pilots have had distributed to the members of this House a memorandum in which they bitterly complain of having been treated unduly by the investigating commission at Quebec last year. Here is, among other things, what I find in this memorandum:

> What we desire is that any one who can suggest anything which may further the interests of the pilots, or of the shipping interests, or of the trade on the St. Lawrence will be welcomed before us, and we will be glad to hear the views they may wish to express.

To which the pilots replied:

> We, pilots, were not long deceived by those honeyed words of the chairman of the commission, because we soon perceived the aim of this investigation which caused us so much trouble and expenses.
>
> The very first evidences taken were sufficient to show that the end sought was not to discuss the dangers of the river St. Lawrence, and the aids to the navigation of the said river. The only danger seemed to be the Corporation of Pilots, and the way they manage their money so well earned. The real dangers of the St. Lawrence, lights, buoys, etc., went in the second place.

Were this assertion of the pilots true, it would constitute a most serious charge indeed against the commission entrusted, last year, with making an inquiry on their account.

As regards the management of their funds, I see that section 3 of the present law seems to give them justice—I mean the management of the pilots' chest. I notice, a little further, in this memorandum, the following remark:

> Apprentices are required at present to be examined in both English and French. If the commissioners are of opinion that a man speaking and writing one language is superior to another speaking and writing both languages, let them cherish that idea, this will not surely increase nor diminish the rates of insurance on the St. Lawrence.

I understand that, according to the new legislation, the apprentices are required to be examined in both English and French. I do not agree with the commissioners on this point, since they seem to have ruled that one language is enough. Any man who is called upon to hold public office in the province of Quebec, whether in the Marine, Public Works or Customs Departments, should certainly be able to speak both languages. This is a drawback which is very often found with a good many public servants and, of course, most serious inconvenience is derived therefrom. I would like to know whether the hon. minister has inserted a provision to that effect, and whether the apprentices who are preparing at Quebec or at other places below Quebec to become pilots, and who are all French-Canadians, shall be required, henceforth, to know both languages.

Mr. PELLETIER: Just one word in reply to the hon. member for Rimouski, on the question which he has raised. This is a matter which should be regulated by the authority which governs pilotage, that is, by the hon. Minister of Marine. Of course, if a pilot wishes to be competent and able to understand the languages spoken on board of ships, he must know both languages.

A word, now, in reply to the hon. member for St. Lawrence (Mr. Bickerdike) who said that the Corporation of Pilots was a family compact. This is quite unfounded. This charge has been very well disproved by my colleague the hon. Minister of Marine. One has gone so far as to say that they continued to receive their pay even after being suspended. It is by means of such unfounded insinuations that one has succeeded in raising certain prejudice against the pilots of Quebec and of places below Quebec. I wish to say that the members of the Corporation of Pilots in Quebec and in localities below Quebec are, as a whole, as a body, most worthy, most devoted people, sticking like men to their duty. They get no pension, and when they have reached the age of sixty-five, their licenses must be renewed every year or else they lose the right to earn their living.

I wish to contribute my humble share of commendation to the career to which they devote themselves. They sometimes meet with accidents, but accidents happen to everybody, and I do not think that one could find such fault with them as is done generally.

I must also congratulate the pilots upon the fact that the Minister of Marine becomes the pilotage authority. Both parties in this House are agreed to-day that the pilotage authority shall, henceforth, be vested in the Department of Marine, as it appears from the remarks made by the hon. member for Rouville and by the hon. member for St. Lawrence. This will amend certain drawbacks with which the pilots have been reproached in the past, and the effect of this law will be satisfactory.

Mr. GAUVREAU: Must I understand that the pilots get no pension after they have reached sixty-five years of age?

Mr. PELLETIER: No. I stated that the pilots lose their license at sixty-five years of age, and that, from sixty-five to seventy, they are required to be examined every year if they wish to continue their service.

Mr. GAUVREAU: Surely, the hon. minister said that they got no pension. When he reads 'Hansard' to-morrow morning he will find that he has said so.

Mr. PELLETIER: If I have said so, I made a mistake, or I did not speak plainly enough. I meant that they had the right to keep their license until they were sixty-five years of age.

Mr. GAUVREAU: I understood that part.

Mr. PELLETIER: And that, after they had reached sixty-five years of age, they were required to be examined every year until they were seventy years old, in order to get their license. And they get no pension from the state. That is what I meant.

Mr. GAUVREAU: This surprised me so much as to call forth the remarks which I made, for I am satisfied that they get a pension and I wished to know whether I was mistaken.

Mr. LEMIEUX: My hon. friend will remember that some months ago I called his attention to the fact that the Dominion Wreck Commissioner did not understand the French language. My hon. friend told me at the time that this was not the case; at all events he said that he would remedy the grievance. Personally, I do not know the fact, but I saw in the papers two or three days ago that during the investigation held in the case of the Saturnia a pilot represented by Mr. Choquette, one of the members of the Senate, complained very bitterly that the commissioners who were investigating the matter did not understand the French language, and that some of the witnesses had to give their evidence in English, much to their discomfort. I wish my hon. friend would look into the matter.

Mr. HAZEN: My hon. friend will find that the commissioner appointed to succeed Mr. Lindsay will understand English and French equally well.

Mr. BICKERDIKE: If a man were a first-class pilot and could bring my ship safely into Quebec, I would not care if he could speak but Hindu. I would not like to see it provided that no pilot that does not understand both French and English shall get a license.

Mr. McKENZIE: In my part of the country we are particularly interested in navigation on the St. Lawrence, and the more it is safeguarded the better we like it. I was glad to hear the hon. member for Rouville say that the navigating of the ships from Montreal to Quebec was as easy as walking along Sparks street, and I do not exactly understand why the conditions that prevail between Montreal and Quebec should not be extended down to the sea. We have in the county of Cape Breton a system of pilotage, but as the pilots seldom come here for legislation we do not often have an opportunity of dealing with their interests in this House. I would like to know from the minister whether any new pilots have been appointed to the Pilotage Board of the county of Cape Breton or of Sydney harbour during the last year or two. Last year I brought to the notice of the minister the fact that some dismissals of pilots had been made at the time of the change of government. I do not think the Board of Pilotage Commisioners had any authority to dismiss any of these pilots for political reasons. The minister was good enough, I understand, to have some of these pilots put back in their positions, but I never had an opportunity of learning from the minister how many were put back. The last time I was in Sydney attending the Supreme Court I noticed on the docket the case of McGillivray versus Kimber, which was an action brought by one of the pilots for his pay against the secretary of the Pilotage Commission. I understand that after this pilot was put back on the service the secretary through whose hands the pilots receive the money out of the pooled earnings refused to pay him, and the matter found its way into court. I really do not know what became of the action, but I would suppose that if a pilot were put back by authority of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, no secretary of the board would have any authority to deprive him of his share of the profits of his employment. Will the minister let me know what pilots were dismissed and put back, and whether they have the same status as they had before they were dismissed.

Mr. HAZEN: I am sorry that I cannot give my hon. friend definite information about the matter to-night, as I had no idea that when we were considering this Bill matters affecting Sydney would come up for discussion. I shall be glad indeed, however, to give instructions to the deputy minister to prepare a memorandum on the subject giving the information my hon. friend desires, and to have it mailed to him at an early date. My recollection is that a number of these pilots were restored to their positions, but I would not venture to make a positive statement about it now.

Mr. EDWARDS: Has the minister given any consideration to the very evident discrimination against Ontario vessel owners with regard to pilotage dues at Montreal? This matter has been the subject of negotiations in the past between the Ontario Government and the late Government, and of frequent representations on the part of the Dominion Marine Association. Section 477 of the Canada Shipping Act undoubtedly discriminates against Ontario vessels, which are obliged to pay pilotage dues from which vessels from the Maritime provinces, Newfoundland and the Atlantic States as far south as New York are exempt. I think I am right in saying first that there is a discrimination; second, that that discrimination is not just, and, third, that it should be done away with and Ontario vessel owners put on a parity with the vessel owners of the other provinces, with Newfoundland, and with the Atlantic States.

11 p.m.

Mr. HAZEN: I remember that certain representations were made several years ago with regard to this matter by the Dominion Marine Association. I think that certain arrangements were come to and certain concessions made which were satisfactory to that association and that as a consequence they ceased to press the matter any further. I have not the details in my memory to-night, but I shall be glad to look into the matter. I understand that all coal laden vessels coming from the Maritime provinces pay pilotage dues just the same as any other vessels on the St. Lawrence river. I will get the facts for my hon. friend and let him know just what they are.

Mr. EDWARDS: I introduced a Bill in the session of 1909, and again in 1910. I did so at the request of the Council of the Dominion Marine Association, who felt that Ontario vessels were not receiving fair treatment. Certain changes were made in the Act which, prior to June, 1908, gave exemption to vessels with a draught when loaded not exceeding sixteen feet, but that was changed, so that even that exemption was not allowed to Ontario vessels. The fact that Ontario vessel owners were obliged to take pilots on board their vessels at Montreal and to pay their dues and were not relieved of the slightest responsibility, seemed to me to add to the unfairness of the case. If any changes have been made since 1910 I am not aware of them.

Mr. HAZEN: Some arrangement was made. I shall look it up for my hon. friend.

Section agreed to.

On section 3—pilots' pension fund:

Mr. AMES: Is it the intention to make it impossible for the Corporation of Pilots to hold the pilotage money and to share it?

Mr. HAZEN: I have explained that we are not at present interfering with the right of the pilots to pool their earnings if they choose to do so.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

MONTREAL HARBOUR COMMISSION.

On motion of Hon. J. D. Hazen (Minister of Marine) the following resolution was considered in Committee, reported and concurred in:

Resolved, 1. That it is expedient to provide that the Governor in Council may, from time to time, advance and pay to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal, hereinafter called the corporation, in addition to the moneys, if any, heretofore authorized to be advanced to the corporation by the Governor in Council by any Act, and which have not at the date of the passing of any Act founded upon these resolutions, been so advanced, such sums of money, not exceeding in the whole the sum of nine million dollars, as are required:

(a) To pay off and retire debentures of the corporation of the par value of two hundred and thirty-five thousand dollars, maturing in the year 1917, and

(b) To enable the corporation to complete the construction of the terminal facilities of the port of Montreal, for which the plans, specifications and estimates have been approved by the Governor in Council, and to construct such additional terminal facilities as are necessary to properly equip the said port.

2. That during the period of construction of the terminal facilities mentioned in these resolutions, the interest payable on the debentures receivable by the Minister of Finance in exchange for such advance, shall be deemed to be money required to complete and to be part of the cost of construction thereof, and such interest may be paid out of the said sum of nine million dollars.

3. That the corporation shall submit to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries for approval, monthly applications for such advances, with statements showing total expenditure on different items in detail, and upon approval, authority for the payment of the amount applied for may be granted by the Governor in Council.

4. That the corporation shall upon any advances being made, deposit with the Minister of Finance debentures of the corporation equal in par value to the advance so made, repayable within twenty-five years from the date of issue and bearing interest payable half yearly, at the rate of three and one-half per centum per annum.

5. That the principal and interest of any sums advanced under any Act founded on these resolutions shall be payable, subject to the second of these resolutions, out of the revenue of the corporation mentioned in section 8 of chapter 10, of the statutes of 1896 (first session), and shall be a charge thereon as if the sums so advanced had been borrowed by the corporation under said chapter 10.

QUEBEC HARBOUR COMMISSION.

On motion of Hon. J. D. Hazen (Minister of Marine) the following resolution was considered in Committee, reported and concurred in:

Resolved, 1. That it is expedient to provide that the Governor in Council may, from time to time, advance and pay to the corporation of the Quebec Harbour Commissioners, hereinafter called the corporation, such sums of money, not exceeding in the whole the sum of two million dollars, as are required to enable the corporation to carry on the construction of such terminal facilities as are necessary to properly equip the port of Quebec.

2. That during the period of construction of the terminal facilities mentioned in these resolutions, the interest payable on the debentures receivable by the Minister of Finance in exchange for such advances, shall be deemed to be money required to construct and to be part of the cost of construction of the said terminal facilities, and such interest may be paid out of the said sum of two million dollars.

3. That the corporation shall submit to the minister of Marine and Fisheries for approval, monthly applications for such advances, with statements showing total expenditure on different items in detail, and upon approval, authority for the payment of the amount applied for may be granted by the Governor in Council.

4. That the corporation shall upon any advances being made, deposit with the Minister of Finance, debentures of the corporation equal in par value to the advance so made, repayable within twenty-five years from the date of issue and bearing interest payable half-yearly, at the rate of three and one-half per centum per annum.

5. That the principal and interest of any sums advanced under any Act founded on these resolutions, shall be payable by the corporation out of all its property, assets, tools, rates, dues, penalties and other sources of revenue and income whatsoever, and shall be a charge thereon next after, and have precedence in regard to payment next after all debentures or bonds issued by the corporation amounting to the sum of one million, one hundred and fifty thousand dollars, under chapter 48, of the statutes of 1898, chapter 34, of the statutes of 1899, and chapter 36 of the statutes of 1907.

SUPPLY.

The House in Committee of Supply.

Mr. PELLETIER: I do not intend to ask my fellow members to stay here any longer than they wish to stay. If my hon. friends on the other side of the House would like to refer to some particular matter at a later date when we again take up these Estimates, and if they would be kind enough to let me know what information they desire, I will have the papers here. As there are many branches in the department, 14,000 postmasters and 11,000 contractors, it is somewhat difficult for one to remember every case by itself. The main object in asking the House to go into supply was to enable me to make this request, so that I may be able, as far as possible, to give any information when we again go back into committee of supply.

Mr. CARVELL: I understand that the hon. Postmaster General wishes members to give him notice, not to-night, but at some future time, of the items which they would like to discuss?

Mr. PELLETIER: That is exactly what I mean. Hon. gentlemen may not have present in their minds the different points which they would like to bring up, but I would like to be given notice of all the matters which may be brought up, and about which papers have not been put on the table. As to postmasters or contracts, about which papers have been laid on the table, I take it for granted that the information is contained in those papers, but if there are some matters about which papers have not been asked, or, having been asked, have not been laid on the table of the House as yet, and in regard to which some information is wanted, as hon. members have the right to get information on all these subjects, if they will write me a few words or let me know, I will do my best to have all the information at hand when we again go into committee of supply.

Mr. OLIVER: I would like to mention to the minister now some matters that I would be glad if he would give us some information in regard to. They are as follows: the establishment of a mail service and post offices on the line of the Grand Trunk Pacific westward from Jasper to Fort George; the establishment of post offices and post office facilities on the lines of the Canadian Northern main line construction between Tête Jaune Cache and Kamloops; the postal service and post offices on the line of the Edmonton and Dunvegan railway, with a statement as to what arrangements have been made, if any, for the forwarding of mails to the farthest point of construction.

Mr. PELLETIER: In what respect?

Mr. OLIVER: When the railway is under construction the camps are strung out for twenty, thirty, forty, fifty or a hundred miles ahead of the end of steel. It has always been a sore point on railway construction work that the men have to depend upon a mail service by the contractor, which is a very unsatisfactory way of serving the public of which these railway workers are a part. I wish to urge upon the department the desirability of taking care, on the responsibility of the department, of the forwarding of mail along the construction work instead of leaving it to the contractors. Hundreds, if not thousands, of men are employed in these construction camps, and they are entitled to a mail service. They do get a private service performed by the contractors. Naturally, it is not satisfactory, and I am going to urge upon the Government that they make it a public service on the line of the Canadian Northern from Tête Jaune Cache to Kamloops, a matter of 200 miles; on the line of the Edmonton and Dunvegan railway from Saw Ridge, 150 miles northwest of Edmonton, to the end of construction at Smoky river; and on the Edmonton and Great Waterways railway, between Edmonton and Lac la Biche. I would also like to get information as to the mail service in the Peace river country, not only the service to Vermillion on the north and Fort St. John on the west, but to Hudson's Hope, if there is a post office there; also the service down the Athabasca river as far as McMurray and Chippewayan; also the service on the Grand Trunk Pacific between Edmonton and Calgary; also the service on the Canadian Northern between Edmonton and Calgary, and, generally speaking, the postal services on all the new railway lines radiating from Edmonton in all directions.

Mr. PELLETIER: The notice given by my hon. friend from Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) that he will ask for this information is very helpful to us in getting ready to give him the information when we discuss this matter at a later date, and if there are any other hon. gentlemen who are ready to refer to any of these points now, we might devote five or ten minutes to that purpose.

Mr. TOBIN: Last year I moved for a return regarding the dismissal of the mail carrier between the station of Bromptonville and the post office. I see that this return was brought down on June 2 last, but it does not seem to be complete. From the return brought down in June last some of the letters are missing.

Mr. PELLETIER: My hon. friend and I have talked this very matter over several times, and he knows that there are some letters marked 'private' which are not on the file.

Mr. TOBIN: When I went to see the minister last year about this case, he called me into his private office and showed me the file. I asked him if I could have a copy of the documents upon it and he said: You will have to move for them. I moved for them, but when they were brought down I found there were letters on that file which are not in the return. I do not think it is right that the Postmaster General should refuse information to the House. The same thing occurred with reference to the correspondence about the carriage of the mail between St. François Xavier de Brompton and Windsor Mills. I have certain information that letters were sent to the Post Office Department which were not on the file brought down, and I do not think that is right.

Mr. PELLETIER: The rule has been well laid down in this House by the right hon. the leader of the Opposition, who was then Prime Minister, and everybody agreed to it, and I do not think it is possible to dissent from it, and that rule is that the papers which the minister has to bring down are those which are not marked 'private.' Further than that, Sir Wilfrid Laurier said that a minister had a right to consider as private—and I speak now subject to correction, but I am pretty sure—papers which were not so marked, but the nature of which was private. That being the rule I do not see why I should be asked to bring down confidential letters. I have shown the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Tobin) as a personal friend, certain letters, but when it comes to placing papers on the table I do not consider myself bound to bring down confidential letters. No minister has ever done it, and I do not think I should.

Mr. BOIVIN: Some ministers read them in the House.

Mr. CARVELL: The Department of Labour is not included in that.

Mr. TOBIN: The minister showed me the file in his office and we read the letters over, and when I asked him about getting copies he said I would have to move in the House for them. I did move but they were not brought down. Will the minister show me these letters that are not on the file if I go to his office?

Mr. PELLETIER: Did not my hon. friend state a moment ago that I had shown him these letters?

Mr. TOBIN: Yes, when I went to your office first.

Mr. PELLETIER: I would show my hon. friend privately letters which I would not place on the table of the House, and I think that course is to be commended.

Mr. TOBIN: If I call at the office will the Postmaster General show me that file so that I would be able to look over the private letters. He showed me them last year?

Mr. PELLETIER: Am I right in assuming that the hon. member wants to carry them better in his memory now than he did last time?

Mr. TOBIN: I would like to look at these letters once more; will you do it?

Mr. PELLETIER: I will have to think it over, but if I show private letters once to a friend and he wants to see them again I should like to understand first what his object would be.

Mr. TOBIN: The Postmaster General understands my object well enough. If I remember aright some of those letters on that file and which were not brought down were not marked 'private'. I think I could name some of them. I know something about these private letters, and if I had not known, the minister would probably not have shown them to me.

Mr. PELLETIER: I will have the matter looked into.

Mr. ETHIER: I moved for certain papers concerning the dismissal of a postmaster and when they were brought down a petition asking for the dismissal of this gentleman and the appointment of another in his place was not on the file. Would the minister consider such a petition private?

Mr. PELLETIER: There would have to be some special circumstances about it.

Mr. ETHIER: The postmaster at Ste. Scholastique, Mr. Raymond, has been dismissed and I know there were petitions signed in Ste. Scholastique asking for his dismissal and recommending two persons in his place, namely, the actual postmaster and Mr. Sauvé. When I moved for all the correspondence, petitions, etc., with reference to the matter, the papers were brought down but those petitions were not included.

Mr. PELLETIER: I will look into that.

Mr. ETHIER: There were many persons surprised that these petitions were not on the file. I am certain they are not of a private character.

Mr. PELLETIER: I will instruct the officer in charge of the branch to look into it to-morrow.

Mr. MORPHY: I would like to bring to the attention of the Postmaster General a matter which I think properly comes under this item. I refer to the case of one William P. Tye, who was a mail clerk in the public service. On the 4th of February, 1911, while on duty between Richwood and Paris, I think on the Grand Trunk railway, this employee was on a train which was wrecked. The result of the wreck was that the car in which Mr. Tye was performing his duties was burned, and he lost his life. Nothing was found of the poor unfortunate man's remains, the only thing that was discovered being the bunch of keys that he had carried in his pocket. Application has been made to Mr. Clare, the hon. member for South Waterloo, by the widow who lives in that riding, and I have a letter from the son of the deceased who lives in the riding that I have the honour to represent. It appears that the car in which this man was performing his duties was of ancient construction; and the other cars being more modern were stronger, and the impact was more felt in the car in which he was riding than in the other cars. As a result it was crushed in the impact, set on fire; and as I said before, his body was cremated. The widow was granted by this Government what is said to be the usual allowance, namely $200, equal to two months' salary. She has four children; and if she had been left to the tender mercies of the usual methods pursued by Governments, she would be rewarded with the $200 which she has actually received. The circumstances are rather harrowing in their details, and I do not intend to give them. It is sufficient to say that Mr. Tye had been thirty-three years in the public service as mail clerk for the various governments of this country, and he had paid into the superannuation fund during that period a sum of between $500 or $600. The widow gets back $200, and the Government keeps the rest. Under the circumstances it seems to me that a widow left to support a family of four children, having a husband burned to death in that manner and the remains cremated so that there was not even the opportunity for Christian burial, should at the hands of the Government receive some special treatment. If the man had lived two years longer he would have been entitled to superannuation. He was burned to death at the age of fifty-two years. His record, as shown by the department files, is honourable and absolutely flawless; he had been a faithful public servant.

Mr. EDWARDS: What salary was he getting?

Mr. MORPHY: $1,200 a year after thirty-three years' service. There is a sort of arbitrary rule that permits of the granting of some sort of gratuity when public servants die or leave the service, and I presume that is what this widow has received. I feel that I would be neglecting my duty if, on this item, I did not take the opportunity of asking the minister, according to the principles of equity that ought to govern governments and that would govern private individuals, to take this case into, not the ordinary formal way of putting it, his serious consideration, but his heartfelt consideration, and to place in the Estimates a substantial sum that would in some manner put the Government right in this case, perhaps by setting apart the sum of $5,000, an annuity to pay to the widow. I think that would be a fitting recognition of faithful service performed to all governments by a public employee who was so unfortunate as to lose his life under such harrowing circumstances. I therefore ask the minister to oblige the widow by rising to that height, to which I think the Government of this country ought to rise, and straining a point in this case. If he says: Where are you going to draw the line? If we do this in this case, we shall have to do it in some other case. In such an event I would make answer that these cases are very rare, and possibly all the members of this House will have passed away before such a thing occurs again. If you compute the interest upon the sums paid in for thirty-three years from year to year, and bear in mind that nothing whatever has been received and cannot be received, I submit that it should meet with the approval of every member if a substantial sum is placed in the Supplementary Estimates for this widow. Mr. Tye's father was a good Liberal, but that does not prevent me pressing this just claim. I hope the minister will take the matter into his consideration and act accordingly.

Mr. PELLETIER: The case to which my hon. friend has referred is one deserving not only as he said of the ordinary form of consideration, but of special consideration. Mr. Tye was an old servant in the Post Office Department, who lost his life under very special circumstances. If that case had stood exactly as given to us here by my hon. friend, there would not have been any hesitation in giving something to the poor widow. But there is one important fact which I have found on the file when my hon. friend (Mr. Morphy) took up this matter with me. I may say that this is not the first time that he has taken up the matter. He has devoted to this cause a good deal of attention and care, and he is quite satisfied that he is right in what he says, because he is very keen in insisting on it.

The man was burned to death and the family was left in poor circumstances, but I have found the practice in the department which my officers have informed me has existed for years without one exception, that when we are called upon to give some compensation in cases like this, we never do it when the widow and children have had some other compensation. In this case the widow has had damages awarded to her by the court, and which were paid to her by the Grand Trunk Railway Company, to the extent of nearly $10,000—

Mr. MORPHY: To the extent of $9,400.

Mr. PELLETIER: —and that makes a difference, at least according to the department's usage. I may say that it does not entirely appeal to me as a conclusive reason for refusing the widow something. Of course, what we give under these circumstances we call a 'compassionate allowance'—that is how these amounts are always voted. And if it is a compassionate allowance, of course it is supposed to be the thing which the widow or children might have to depend upon. However, speaking for myself—because I intend to take this matter up with my colleagues, as I promised my hon. friend—I think there are two sides to that question. What the Grand Trunk Railway Company paid this widow she was entitled to by law, for it was given her under judgment of the court. Now, whether under these circumstances this country is absolutely relieved of all its duties and obligations towards the widow and four children of a man who has been so long in our employ, I do not like to say in an absolutely definite manner. My own desire and inclination would be the other way. But, as the matter is to be discussed in Council, if there is to be an amount in the Estimates, I cannot go further than that at the moment. But what has fallen from my lips shows my hon. friend that the matter has engaged more than the usual, formal, ordinary consideration. Further than this I am not prepared to go to-night.

Mr. KYTE: This afternoon, before the Postmaster General was in his place, I called attention to the fact that a return was not yet down, called for on the 16th of March, the correspondence relating to the carrying of the mails from Grand River to Grand River Falls, in the county of Richmond, and the awarding of the contract. I hope the Postmaster General will bring this down before his Estimates are again considered.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Pelletier the House adjourned at 11.50 p.m.

Wednesday, May 13, 1914.

The House met at Eleven o'clock, the Speaker in the Chair.

THE FARMERS BANK.

Mr. LEMIEUX: In connection with the papers brought down with reference to the Farmers Bank, would the Minister of Finance lay on the table of the House the names of the depositors in La Banque du Peuple, the Ville Marie Bank, and La Banque St. Jean? I think these reports were submitted to Parliament some years ago.

Mr. W. T. WHITE: Usually that information is not available in the department, but if it is, I shall consider the advisability of complying with the request of my hon. friend.

BILL WITHDRAWN.

Bill No. 108, to incorporate the North-Western Railway Company of Canada.

MONTREAL HARBOUR COMMISSION.

Hon. J. D. HAZEN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 191, to provide for further advances to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUEBEC HARBOUR COMMISSION.

Hon. J. D. HAZEN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 192, to provide for further advances to the Quebec Harbour Commissioners.

Mr. LEMIEUX: When we come to discuss this Bill in committee, will my hon. friend have with him a detailed statement of the dredging work performed by the Quebec Harbour Commission at Quebec?

Mr. HAZEN: I will have the details of all the work that has been done.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUEBEC BATTLEFIELDS COMMISSION.

Hon. W. T. WHITE (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 193, to amend the Act respecting the National Battlefields at Quebec. He said:

By this measure, the number of commissioners is increased from five to seven, and power is given to the commission to adopt by-laws for the administration of its affairs. The commission is further empowered to purchase, without the approval of the Governor in Council, any lands which it may have been authorized previously by Parliament to acquire, provided that funds have been appropriated for the purpose and are at the disposal of the commission.

Those are the three changes provided for in the amending Bill.

Mr. SPEAKER: This appears to be a Bill which requires to be introduced by resolution. Section 11 says:

> No expenditure shall be made and no liabilities shall be incurred by the commission until funds sufficient to cover such expenditure or liabilities shall be at its disposal for the purposes of this Act.

Mr. WHITE: I was advised that it was not necessary to precede this Bill by a resolution, but I shall bow to your judgment in the matter. No expenditure is contemplated by the Bill unless it has been provided for by Parliament. Under the existing legislation the commission may, with the approval of the Governor in Council, purchase lands provided it has been previously authorized by Parliament to acquire such lands. The purpose of this amending Bill is to prevent the delay which arises in the purchase of land, and which in the past has resulted disadvantageously to the commission in purchasing lands. The object of the provision which Your Honour has under consideration is to enable the commission, without obtaining the approval of the Governor in Council, to purchase properties, provided that the acquisition of such properties has been authorized by Parliament, and provided also that moneys for the purpose have been appropriated and are at the disposal of the commission. If Your Honour has any doubt as to the matter upon further consideration, I shall of course be glad to defer to your judgment and proceed by way of resolution; but I had been advised that it was not necessary in this case.

Mr. SPEAKER: On looking over the section more carefully, I think perhaps the hon. gentleman is right. It says:

> No expenditure shall be made and no liabilities shall be incurred by the commission until funds sufficient to cover such expenditure or liabilities shall be at its disposal for the purposes of this Act.

If it were necessary to move by way of resolution, it would be only on this one section of the amending Bill. I will look into the mattter and find out what is the correct procedure.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

CO-OPERATIVE CREDIT SOCIETIES.

Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Solicitor General) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 194, respecting Co-operative Credit Societies. He said:

No lengthy explanation will be necessary as the same Bill, with the exception of a few amendments, was introduced by myself last session. Furthermore, last session I had the honour of addressing the House upon the question at large. My remarks upon that occasion will apply to the present Bill, and I will explain it more fully on the second reading. This Bill provides for uniform machinery throughout the Dominion enabling the formation of co-operative credit societies. I do not need to describe the character of the societies for which co-operative credit is provided. They are societies, the principle of which is mutual loanings among its members of funds for the purpose of their commercial advantage. Certain restrictions are placed upon each society, and the general precautions provided under the previous Bill are embodied here. I may add that the Bill does not differ in any essential particular from that passed by this House, after a very thorough review in Committee, in 1907.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Is it the intention of my hon. friend to press this Bill during the present session?

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is my intention and my hope. I do not think it will entail the sacrifice of a great deal of the time of the House, because the attention of the House has already been given to the principle, and, in large measure, to the details. Consequently, I do not think I am asking a great deal of the House in asking that this Bill should pass.

Mr. NESBITT: Is it the intention to restrict the districts in which these companies work, or is permission to be given them to circulate all over the country?

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is Dominion-wide.

Mr. LEMIEUX: The previous Bill was passed by the House but rejected by the Senate. Is it the same Bill exactly or does it differ in some respects?

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is the Bill to which I referred in my opening remarks. The hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux) was chairman of the committee on that Bill, and that committee reviewed the measure in great detail. This Bill differs from that in some respects, but in principle it is the same. Any changes that have been made are dictated by the experience of banks that have been organized since that Bill was before the House.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

SCHOOL LANDS.

Mr. NEELY:

1. What disposition has been made of the south half of section 11, township 28, range 29A, school land?
2. If sold, to whom, by whom, for what price, and whether or not by public auction after due and proper advertisement?

Mr. ROCHE: The south half of section 11, township 28, range 29A, presumably west of the first meridian, has not been disposed of.

RIGAUD POST OFFICE CLOCK.

*Mr. BOYER:

1. What price was paid by the Government for the clock which it has placed on the post office building at Rigaud?
2. (a) When was it bought and (b) from what firm?
3. (a) What price was paid for the bell annexed, from what firm does it come and (b) what is its weight?
4. Was that clock and accessories placed by contract or by day work?
5. If by contract, who was awarded such contract?
6. Were there any other tenders? If so, what are the names of the tenderers and the amount of each tender?

Mr. ROGERS:

1. Clock account for £140 11s. 2d.; paid on account, £134 0s. 0d.; equal to $654.85.
2. (a) Delivered about October 14, 1913; (b) John Smith & Sons, Derby, England.
3. (a) Bell included in price for clock and supplied by same firm; (b) 800 pounds.
4. By day work.
5. Clock installed by A. E. Montpetit.
6. No.

EMPLOYMENT OF DARIUS CADRIN.

Mr. ERNEST LAPOINTE:

1. Is Mr. Darius Cadrin, of St. Anselme, county of Dorchester, employed in any of the departments of the Government?
2. If so, in what capacity, what does he get, either as salary or travelling expenses, and what is the date of his appointment?

Mr. CODERRE: Mr. Darius Cadrin is employed as acting preventive officer of customs since 14th November, 1913, at a salary of $700 per annum. He is the acting sub-collector at St. Anselme.

[Mr. Meighen.]

EMPLOYMENT OF THOMAS KINSELLA.

Mr. ERNEST LAPOINTE:

1. Is Mr. Thomas Kinsella, of St. Malachie, county of Dorchester, connected with any of the departments under the present Government?
2. If so, what is his position, how much does he get either as salary or travelling expenses and at what date was he appointed?

Mr. CODERRE:

1. Yes.
2. Inspector in River St. Charles' works, Quebec; salary, $3 per day; appointed 13th August, 1913.

EMPLOYMENT OF ISIDORE LACASSE.

Mr. ERNEST LAPOINTE:

1. Is Mr. Isidore Lacasse, of St. Henedine, county of Dorchester, connected with any of the departments under the present Government?
2. If so, what is his position, how much does he get either as salary or travelling expenses, and what was the date of his appointment?

Mr. CODERRE:

1. Yes.
2. Clerk of works, Quebec; salary, $100 per month; appointed 5th December, 1913.

MR. ALBERT MORIN.

Mr. ERNEST LAPOINTE:

1. Is Mr. Albert Morin, of St. Henedine, county of Dorchester, connected with any of the departments under the present Government?
2. If so, what is his position, how much does he get, either as salary or travelling expenses, and what was the date of his appointment?

Mr. CODERRE:

1. No.
2. Answered by No. 1.

MELVILLE POST OFFICE.

Mr. MacNUTT:

With further reference to question No. 9 of Thursday, April 30, what indirect requests or petitions, aside from those of the Melville Conservative Association, have been received by the Department of Public Works in connection with the erection of a post office building at Melville, Sask.?

Mr. ROGERS: Alex. Hardy offers to obtain a site.

SUPPLY.

The House in Committee of Supply, Mr. Blondin in the Chair.

Post Office—Outside service—Salaries and allowances, $6,429,920.75.

Mr. PELLETIER: On account of some misunderstanding, my officers inform me, in the Supply Bill which we have passed, which has gone through and been sanctioned, two items in the Supplementary Estimates for the year ending 31st March,

1914, were omitted. Those items are as follows:

Mail service: Ordinary land service, including rural mail delivery—Further amount required	$215,000
For mail bags..	25,000
For railways on account of new rates.	135,000
Mail service by steamboats—Further amount required..	1,400
Total	$376,400
Miscellaneous: Printing and advertising—Further amount required... ..	$125,000

I am informed by the officers of the House that we shall have to present a special Supplementary Estimate for these items. The Clerk of the House informs me that if the items were passed here, they must have been left out somewhere in the printing or in the course of the work. I am going to ask the assistant Clerk of the House to make some inquiry about them. Meanwhile, we may go on. The omission can be remedied in some way, but we shall have to verify the facts more completely. When we wanted to have the use of the money covered by these items, we were told by the Auditor General that the amounts were not included in the Estimates as passed. At all events, we will look into the matter.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I received a letter this morning which informs me that Mr. Briegel, superintendent of the railway mail service in Montreal, an old gentleman who has rendered faithful service to His Majesty for over forty years, is about to retire upon pension and that the department contemplates appointing as his successor Mr. W. L. Carkner, of Quebec city. Mr. Carkner has been in the service for two years only and has never passed the examinations which are required of the other officers. I do not know him personally and he may be a good public servant, but I would call the attention of the Postmaster General to the fact that there are in the post office department at Montreal other gentlemen, friends of his, who have been in the service a very long time and who should be entitled to promotion. I might name, for instance, Messrs. Méthot, Villeneuve and Forest. If the staff in the Montreal post office is not to be demoralized—my hon friend appreciates the sense in which I use the word—the principle of filling vacancies by promotion should be recognized. The railway mail service is a complicated service, and the man who is at its head should be fully equipped for his duties and fully cognizant of the conditions that exist all over the immense district of Montreal. I do not think it would be fair to the staff or in the interests of the service that a new man should be brought from another district and given this position in Montreal. Personally I know nothing about the facts, but I am informed that the hon. minister was approached on the subject, that he gave his decision in favour of Mr. Carkner and that the appointment is about to be made. I would like the hon minister to state whether or not this is the case, and whether or not he will follow the good old golden rule of filling vacancies by promotion, especially in a branch of the service which is certainly one of the most important.

Mr. PELLETIER: Mr. Briegel, who has been connected with the department for a very long time, has given most devoted and efficient service. If he is not quite as capable of working now as he was some years ago, on account of old age, his services are still very valuable to the department, and I shall certainly not ask him to resign or to be pensioned. If the time comes—and I hope it will not be in the near future—when he cannot accomplish his work in an efficient way, he will understand without anybody telling him what he should do. I am happy to say that that time has not yet come, and so far as I am concerned, I have had no requests from Mr. Briegel to be pensioned; my officers inform me that they also have received no such request. I certainly shall not touch upon the question of his successor until such request is received, for I would not do anything which would hurt Mr. Briegel's feelings.

Mr. LEMIEUX: So far as Mr. Briegel is concerned, that is quite satisfactory. I agree with my hon. friend that Mr. Briegel is an old and faithful servant and that he is quite capable of fulfilling his duties for many months, and, I hope, for many years to come. The hon. member for St. Lawrence is aware that Mr. Briegel is universally known in Montreal, and that he is very popular with the public on account of his courtesy and devotion to duty. It would be a thousand pities if he were removed and pensioned when he is still able to render valuable service to the department. I may say frankly to the hon. minister that the gentleman who informed me in the matter says that the minister was lately approached with regard to Mr. Briegel's successor, and that the hon. gentleman said that Mr. Carkner would be appointed immediately after the close of the session. I am glad, however, to take the word of the hon. Postmaster General that nothing of the kind will happen. I have the highest regard for my Quebec friends, but surely there are enough public servants in the post office at Montreal able to succeed Mr. Briegel without importing one from another district. It that were done it would cause a great deal of feeling.

Mr. PELLETIER: It would be absolutely improper on my part to discuss the successor of Mr. Briegel when he is in charge of the office, and I intend that he shall stay in charge so long as he desires and so long as his services are efficient.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Hear, hear.

Mr. PELLETIER: I have not said to anybody that this matter was settled. I think it would have been indelicate on my part to do any such thing without having first heard from Mr. Briegel. So there is nothing decided, nothing settled. As to the question of bringing an officer from Quebec to Montreal or from Montreal to Quebec, I would not hesitate for a moment to do that if I thought it would be in the interest of the service. We have sent people from the East to the West and vice versa, and I believe that my hon. friend did the same thing. We are having some complaint about that in the West, but we consider the Post Office Department to be, to a certain extent, in the position of a bank which has branches all over the country. A bank will move its employees or clerks from office to office for the proper carrying out of its business and the efficiency of its service. While we are always prepared to give promotions to the employees of a branch in their own town, when any circumstances require that we move one employee from one district to another we shall certainly do so without being estopped by the question of the place where he formerly lived. The gentleman to whom my hon. friend from Rouville referred is a very good employee in the railway mail branch in Montreal. I understand that he is a very efficient help to Mr. Briegel, but there are others too. In other words I have not looked into the question, and I shall not look into it or decide it so long as our good employee Mr. Briegel is in charge.

I have made inquiries about the other matter of which I spoke and I find that the two items in the supplementaries for the year ending March 31, 1914, had been left in the portfolio of the clerk. We might dispose of them now. There are accounts due which should be paid out of these items, but of course payment cannot now be made.

[Mr. Lemieux.]

Mr. LEMIEUX: As these votes are in the Supplementary Estimates of the last fiscal year, I think the minister should inquire whether it will not be necessary for him to introduce a special Supply Bill.

Mr. PELLETIER: I have taken the opinion of the assistant Clerk of the House, who says that he has not the least doubt that we can pass the items now.

Mr. GRAHAM: But after the items have passed, as the Supply Bill for 1914 has gone through, it will be necessary to put these in a separate schedule of the next Supply Bill and have that passed.

Mr. PELLETIER: My hon. friend is quite right; that is what I am told.

Mr. TOBIN: A few days ago I placed a question on the Order Paper, which was answered by the Postmaster General. The question and answer are as follows:

Mr. Tobin:

1. Has Mr. J. R. Denison, postmaster of Richmond, Quebec, been dismissed? If so, on what grounds?

2. Was an investigation held? If so, by whom and did Mr. Denison have an opportunity of defending himself? If not, why not?

3. Has a new postmaster been appointed? If so, what is his name and who recommended his appointment?

Mr. Pelletier:

1. Yes. The management of the office was very unsatisfactory.

2. Serious complaints were made in regard to the management of the office and an official investigation was held. The inspector's report showed that a change in the postmastership was necessary.

3. A new postmaster has been appointed by the direction of the Postmaster General. His name is Wm. E. McIver.

It seems that the Postmaster General has a kind of brutal way—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. TOBIN:—of dismissing old employees. Mr. Denison, who has been postmaster of Richmond for the past sixteen years, has, as far as I know, given satisfaction to the public; and up to April 22 last, I believe, he was not aware that any mistakes had been made in his office. But on the 22nd of April last he received this letter from the inspector of the district:

To the Postmaster,
Richmond, Quebec.

Dear Sir,

I beg to notify you that I have received notice from the department at Ottawa that you have been dismissed from the postmastership of Richmond for unsatisfactory management. The transfer will take place as soon as arrangements can be made.

In answer to that letter, Mr. Denison wrote to the inspector on the 23rd of April as follows:

L. E. Dastous, Esq.,
Post Office Inspector,
Sherbrooke, P.Q.

Dear Sir,—I beg to acknowledge receipt of yours of the 22nd inst., advising me that I have been dismissed from the postmastership of Richmond for unsatisfactory management.

I must say that this seems to me to be a very peculiar letter to have received, and I would ask you to register my protest against this, and to advise me wherein the unsatisfactory management has occurred. It seems to me that I should have been advised of any investigation which has been made into the working of this office, and to have had a chance to have put in my defence.

Will you please procure for me copies of any complaints which have been made against me, by whom they were made, and also what steps were taken to investigate this matter.

J. R. Denison.

I am surprised, yet in another way I am not, at the stand taken by the Post Office Department. It seems they have no regard for justice at all when they wish to distribute patronage. I quite understand that some weeks ago there was a tour through the Eastern Townships of certain members of this Government, and I have no doubt that one of the promises they made at Richmond was that Mr. Denison's head should be cut off to make room for one of their own friends; but why did they not dismiss him in the proper way? Why did they not hold an investigation and give the accused a chance to defend himself? If that had been done I should have had nothing to say, but, as it was, the man was dismissed without any investigation, and I would ask the Postmaster General why that investigation was not held? Mr. Denison would like to have the satisfaction of knowing what he was dismissed for.

Mr. PELLETIER: I am somewhat surprised to hear the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe raising this question in the way he has done. Politics do not enter into this case at all. I want to tell my hon. friend at once that the Hon. Mr. Perley has not in any way been the cause of the dismissal of this postmaster. That question, to my knowledge, was never discussed at all during the visit which my two colleagues made in the Eastern Townships. I might say that for a long time previous to this dismissal it had been represented to me that the postmaster at Richmond was not giving the public satisfaction. I made inquiries, and was told that if I could leave this postmaster in charge it would be a good thing from some other point of view than the service, seeing that he was an old man; and I have kept him there for the last twelve or fifteen months. He was not accused of taking any part in politics, and that is not the reason for his dismissal. He has been dismissed purely from the point of view of efficiency in the transaction of the business of that post office—nothing more or less. My hon. friend says that an investigation should have been held. Let me tell my hon. friend that I did not go into this matter blindly. This man was dismissed as the result of an investigation. I am sure we have a report in the department from our officials notifying me that the business of the post office at Richmond was not transacted in a satisfactory manner to the public, and that a change should consequently be made. I have not the report before me, as I was not informed that this matter was going to be brought up, when I asked my friends opposite to let me know what matters they were going to deal with so that I might have the papers. My hon. friend has chosen to use the word 'brutal' in referring to this man's dismissal. I did not rise to a point of order at that word because I did not think the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe, whom everybody knows is a very good fellow, really meant what is implied by that word. There was no brutality about it at all. The postmaster in question has been kept on for a long time, in spite of representations made to me that the business of that post office was not carried out as it should be. Gradually the representations became more pressing, but I said that I would not dismiss the man until the regular and proper investigation had been held. That investigation took place, and the report showed that there was nothing else for me to do but to replace this man in order to give efficient and satisfactory service to the public. Under the circumstances, I do not think the remarks of my hon. friend are just and fair to me.

12 noon.

Mr. TOBIN: Does the Postmaster General think it is right to dismiss this man after he has served the public for sixteen years? The Postmaster General admits that no complaints have been made as to Mr. Denison's interfering in politics. Mr. Denison is a Liberal, but he has never interfered in politics one way or the other. He is an honourable gentleman, who is respected throughout the whole district; and I would ask the Postmaster General if he thinks it fair that Mr. Denison should receive such a letter of dismissal from the post office inspector without any other notice having been given? For the information of the Postmaster General and the House, I will read the letter once more:

The Postmaster,
Richmond, Que.

Dear Sir,—I beg to notify you that I have received notice from the department at Ottawa that you have been dismissed from the postmastership of Richmond, for unsatisfactory management.

The transfer will take place as soon as arrangements can be made.

Yours truly,
(Signed) L. E. Dastous,
Post Office Inspector.

The Postmaster General objects to my using the word 'brutal.' But is that word too strong, considering how this old servant has been treated? This man wrote to the post office inspector on the 23rd of April asking for an investigation, and a chance to defend himself. Was it unreasonable of him to expect British fair play at the hands of the Postmaster General? He was accused of mismanagement of the business of his post office, and he should not have been held guilty until the charge had been proved. But the Post Office Department does not want any light thrown on their investigations; they hold their investigations in the Eastern Townships in a dark room. Mr. Denison was not given a chance to defend himself. I am sure he is not looking for the small salary attached to that post office. He is a wealthy man, well able to provide for himself, but he objects to being dismissed in this way. I will ask the Postmaster General a direct question: Does he approve of that letter of dismissal that the post office inspector sent to Mr. Denison on the 22nd April?

Mr. PELLETIER: The post office inspector having received instructions from the Post Office Department to change the postmaster at Richmond had nothing else to do but notify Mr. Denison of his dismissal, and I cannot blame the inspector for doing what was his duty. My hon. friend seems to be under a misapprehension as to the facts. I told him a moment ago that I was not aware of any charge of partisanship having been made against this man. We have our regular officers whose duty it is to look into these cases of improper management of a post office, and who report to the department whether the office is being properly managed or not. In this case the regular course has been followed. We have a report which says that the management of the office was such that an investigation was held and that the change in the postmastership was desirable.

Mr. TOBIN: On what grounds?

Mr. PELLETIER: Had my hon. friend given me notice I would have brought the papers. I cannot remember the exact tenor of the report but I am almost sure I gave instructions to name another postmaster because of the report of the officials which justified that course. If I remember aright the report of the officer was such that I would not have done my duty had I kept that postmaster there. I am sorry to have to go so far in my statement, but it is the fault of the hon. member (Mr. Tobin) and not mine. I do not know the postmaster, I never saw him, but will the hon. gentleman say that when I have a report from the officers of the department telling me a change must take place on account of mismanagement, that I should refuse to act on that report?

Mr. TOBIN: I did not give the Postmaster General notice in the House, but last evening after the House adjourned I told him that it was my intention to take the matter up. I am pleased to hear the Postmaster General say there are no politics in this, but I know the contrary, and the supporters of the Government in the Eastern Townships know it also. The minister without portfolio and the Secretary of State could not stop off there during their visit but they had Mr. Baker. I do not know what you call him; I call him their sleight-of-hand man, that is the member for Brome; he stopped off there. Perhaps he expects to step into the gap some day and become a minister. The secretary of the minister without portfolio stopped off there also to settle some questions as to a site for a post office. When the Postmaster General gets the report of these gentlemen he will discover that his friends down there were not throwing bouquets at each other. Did the Postmaster General inform Mr. Denison that this investigation would be held?

Mr. PELLETIER: The investigation was held by the official of the department who was instructed to do so, and I cannot say whether notice was given or not. I feel sure that the usual and proper course was taken. In what particular does Mr. Denison claim that he had no notice? Does he claim that he was not in the post office when the officers of the department investigated its affairs? I presume it was not done by the officer in the absence of the postmaster. Unless the report of the post office inspector is a pure fabrication, there was every justification for the dismissal of this postmaster.

Mr. TOBIN: Let me read the following letter from Mr. Denison to the post office inspector:

Richmond, P.Q., April 23, 1914.

L. E. Dastous, Esq.,
Post Office Inspector,
Sherbrooke, P.Q.

Dear Sir:—

I beg to acknowledge receipt of yours of the 22nd instant, advising me that I have been dismissed from the postmastership of Richmond, for unsatisfactory management.

I must say that this seems to me to be a very peculiar letter to have received, and I would ask you to register my protest against this, and to advise me wherein the unsatisfactory management has occurred. It seems to me that I should have been advised of any investigation which has been made into the working of this office, and to have had a chance to put in my defence.

Will you please procure for me, copies of any complaint which have been made against me, and by whom they were made, and also what steps were taken to investigate this matter.

Mr. Denison wrote me yesterday that he had not got any answer to that letter. I beg also to read the following letter from Mr. Denison:

I might say that about the 10th day of March, 1914, Mr. Dastous, the post office inspector, came to Richmond, and stated that he had a complaint and charge to lay against me, in connection with the office. I asked him what the complaint was, and he told me it was for allowing people who are not sworn to assist in stamping and assorting the mail, and he named W. J. Ewing, and Mrs. Powers. I told him that he was mistaken, as Mr. Ewing had been sworn in assistant postmaster about one year and a half ago, and that Mrs. Powers was duly sworn as assistant, the day she came into the office, and Mr. W. J. Ewing, J.P., administered the oath to her. The inspector seemed surprised at this, and asked me to show him the certificates; as the mail was being sorted, I asked him if he could not wait as at the present time I could not lay my hands on them, and he said he would take my word for it, if I told him I had the certificates when he came.

That is the only notice the postmaster had of what the Postmaster General calls an investigation. I do not wish to take up any more time in the matter, but I think I can ask the Postmaster General to investigate this case more fully, because the people of the Eastern townships, and especially the people of Richmond and Wolfe, have been treated very harshly by his department in the last two or three years. My hon. friends seem to have nothing to do but to make room for their Tory friends, and they do not even do it in a decent way. There is no use in holding a one-sided investigation. If these people have done wrong in taking part in politics, if they have not conducted their office properly, if they have not given the best service possible to the public, I am sure we shall have no complaints to make; but I am surprised when I hear the Postmaster General tell the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux) that he is trying to run the Post Office Department on the same business principles as those on which banks are run. Before any little mail contract is given to-day, the Post Office Department calls for tenders, and two or three tenders are put in. If a Liberal is the lowest tenderer—

Mr. LEMIEUX: He is out of the game.

Mr. TOBIN:—why, the department will wait for a few weeks and finally write to the defeated candidate, who in some instances will not reply for months. Then they will get some of their Tory friends in the city of Sherbrooke, where there are a lot of lawyers looking for a few dollars, to write to the Postmaster General stating that if such a gentleman is offered a few dollars less than the lowest tender he will accept the contract. Yet the Postmaster General calls that running his department on the same business principles as those on which the banks of the country are run. When my hon. friend makes that statement, he knows that no business man in the country will believe him. Take the St. François-Xavier and Windsor mail services.

Mr. LEMIEUX: And Richmond and Wolfe.

Mr. TOBIN: The lowest tenderers were—

Mr. GAUVREAU: Do not give the names.

Mr. TOBIN: As I have the papers here, I might as well give the names. Tenders were called for the service on the 28th of February, 1913. The Postmaster General wrote to the defeated candidate, Dr. John Hayes, at Richmond, Que., on the 28th of February, 1913, as follows:

The following tenders have been received for the St. François-Xavier de Brompton and Windsor Mills mail service. Jos. Labbé, $175.

Mr. Labbé was the old carrier who had been carrying the mails there for the last ten, twelve or fifteen years.

George Morin, $175; T. Levasseur, $180; Pierre Salois, $200; E. J. Morissette, $200.

The first three, Mr. Jos. Labbé, Mr. Geo. Morin and Mr. T. Levasseur were Liberals, and Mr. Pierre Salois and Mr. E. J. Morissette were Conservatives. (Reading):

Jos. Labbé and Geo. Morin's tenders are equal, and the department would be glad to be informed which of these two you consider in the public interest more capable of performing a satisfactory service. An early reply would be appreciated.

Yours sincerely,
(Sgd.) H. B. Verret,
Asst. Deputy P.M.G.

On the 15th of March, 1913, the following letter was addressed to the Deputy Postmaster General:

H. B. Verret,
Deputy Postmaster General,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—Re tenders St. François-Xavier de Brompton and Windsor Mills mail service.

Mr P. Salois, one of the tenderers, I think, would give good service. I suggest it be offered him at $170 per annum.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) I. Hayes, M.D.

Five dollars less than Mr. Labbé's tender, and ten dollars less than Mr. Levasseur's tender.

Mr. BUREAU: Shame.

Mr. TOBIN: What was done? Here is a letter written by Mr. Salois. On the 12th of April, Mr. Salois went to Sherbrooke, called on one of our friend's friends there, and had him write the following letter to the Postmaster General:

(Translation.)

To the Hon.
The Postmaster General,
Ottawa.

Sir,—I have tendered for the mail contract between St. Francis-Xavier of Brompton and Windsor Mills, at the price of $200.

I am ready to carry out this contract for $170. Hoping that you will favourably consider my request.

Believe me, Sir,
Your most obedient and devoted,
(Sgd) Pierre Salois.

That is the way in which business is run in the Post Office Department. There are hundreds of such cases throughout the eastern townships, and yet the Postmaster General tells us that he is trying to run the Post Office Department on the same business principles as those on which banks are run.

Mr. BUREAU: The Farmers bank.

[Mr. Tobin.]

Mr. TOBIN: Just on the same principles as those on which the Farmers bank was run. They have done the same thing at Bromptonville. An old gentleman there, eighty odd years old, was carrying the mail. He had a contract which ended on the 31st of March, 1914, and was receiving $120 a year for carrying that mail. The Post Office Department cancelled the contract a year ago last January, because one of the political friends of my hon. friend the Postmaster General said that this old gentleman must be disposed of and a younger man, who had probably voted Tory for the last two or three years, put in his place.

I have some further questions to put to my hon. friend.

Mr. BELAND: Will my hon. friend tell us who got the contract for the St. François-Xavier mail service?

Mr. TOBIN: Mr. Salois got the contract at $170 a year.

Mr. BELAND: He had tendered for $200?

Mr. TOBIN: Yes. When we were in power, if I went down to the Post Office Department and asked the Deputy Postmaster General and the superintendent of mail service to give a mail contract to so and so, they would say: This is a business department; and if we asked you to do such a thing in your business, you would say, 'no'. Well, we cannot do it here. I am glad to see the Deputy Postmaster General before the House to-day, because he can bear me out in that.

Mr. BICKERDIKE: That was some years ago.

Mr. TOBIN: That was previous to 1911. The department was run on different principles then.

On April 27 last, Mr. McCrea, the hon. member for Sherbrooke, put this question to the Postmaster General:

1. Has a new postal inspection district been created in Sherbrooke?
2. If so, how many new employees have been appointed in connection with the new district?
3. What is the total amount of salaries paid the new employees, including the inspector?

Mr. Pelletier:

1. Yes.
2. Five new employees have been appointed in connection with the new district.
3. $4,752 a year.

Mr. LEMIEUX: That is Sherbrooke?

Mr. TOBIN: Yes; a new district. Now, Mr. McCrea was informed by some of his friends that the answer could not be right, that if the department gave him that answer they were making a mistake, as more was paid in salaries and more people were employed than was stated in that answer. So, on the 11th of May, he put a question and received an answer as follows:

1. What is the name of each person employed in the post office inspection department at Sherbrooke?

2. What is the remuneration paid to each individual, including the inspector?

Mr. Pelletier: The following persons are employed in the post office inspector's office at Sherbrooke:

Name, rank and salary—Dastous, L. E. M. inspector, $2,500; Soles, C. Edw., asst. inspector, $2,000; Doherty, M. M. L. (Miss), clerk 3-A, $1,000; Campbell, S. (Miss), temporary clerk, $500; Bousquet, P., messenger, gr. A., $2 a day; Downing, J. P., temporary help, $2 a day; Frechette, R. temporary clerk, $500; Lefebvre, J. P., porter, gr. C., $2.50 a day.

That makes a total of about $8,872.50 a year.

An hon. MEMBER: Which of these is the chauffeur?

Mr. TOBIN: I do not know, but he must be included. We see that on the 27th of April last the Postmaster General told the hon. member for Sherbrooke that the total cost of this office was $4,752 a year, and about fourteen days afterwards he gives items showing that the total cost is $8,872.50 —almost double. Yet the Postmaster General tells us that he is running his department on business lines. I would like to ask him what explanation he has of this difference arising within fourteen days.

Mr. PELLETIER: The department thought fit, from the point of view of business, to establish a branch of our inspection office in the city of Sherbrooke for the Eastern Townships. That existed years ago and was abolished. We have found that it should not have been abolished, that the Eastern Townships were entitled to a post office inspector's office though they had been deprived of it. Believing they were entitled to it, I gave it back to them, and I am proud of having done so.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: And you call it business to act on that ground?

Mr. PELLETIER: Yes.

Mr. MACLEAN: Then the post office inspection office is a matter of political patronage and favour, and not a matter of business.

Mr. PELLETIER: Not at all.

Mr. MACLEAN: That is what you said.

Mr. PELLETIER: I say the Eastern Townships were entitled to that office.

Mr. BUREAU: On what ground?

Mr. PELLETIER: The public interest.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Explain that.

Mr. PELLETIER: I took it for granted that my hon. friends would have guessed that, but, seeing that their minds are so far away from the public interest, I now state it.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: What about the reason the hon. gentleman gave a moment ago—that the office had been taken away, and they had the right to have it restored.

Mr. PELLETIER: These statements do not clash at all. The office had been established, and then it was abolished.

Mr. MACLEAN: Why?

Mr. PELLETIER: For some political reason.

Mr. TOBIN: To cut down expenses.

Mr. PELLETIER: It was necessary that it should be re-opened, because the business in the Montreal office was so great that it could not be taken care of properly. So we re-established that office. And we have established another one at Joliette.

Mr. LEMIEUX: One at Joliette?

Mr. PELLETIER: Yes, a branch. And I am re-instating the one at Three Rivers.

Mr. BUREAU: Hear, hear.

Mr. PELLETIER: I thought that would please my hon. friend.

Mr. BUREAU: It does not.

Mr. LEMIEUX: When was this done?

Mr. PELLETIER: We are doing it now. The amount was voted last session. The office at Joliette will be a branch of the Montreal office.

Mr. LEMIEUX: But Sherbrooke is by itself?

Mr. PELLETIER: Yes. We re-established the sub-inspectors' office at Three Rivers, and I think the district of Three Rivers, from the public point of view, is entitled to that. So shall I be told that because I have done this the department is not conducted in the public interest or on business lines as a bank would be? The banks have branches all over the country.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: But not inspection branches, there is only one inspection head office.

Mr. PELLETIER: No, they have district inspectors.

Mr. MACLEAN: But the Montreal bank eastern inspection district includes the Maritime provinces and Newfoundland.

Mr. PELLETIER: How is it that we hear so much about this now, when this vote was passed last session? My hon. friend from Richmond and Wolfe and my hon. friend from Sherbrooke were both members of the House then. Why did not they raise their voices against it?

Mr. BELAND: If we are to criticise all that comes before us the session will last the whole year.

Mr. PELLETIER: But it takes no more time to criticise it in advance than to criticise it afterwards. When it was proposed that money should be voted for this purpose there was unanimous consent, and now complaint is made about it. The hon. member complains of the number of employees there. There are five, if I am not mistaken. I think that one of these was in the post office at Sherbrooke before. There is another, Mr. Soles, to whom the hon. member refers. This gentleman was taken from the Montreal office on account of his experience and knowledge of the business of the inspector's office and transferred to Sherbrooke.

Mr. LEMIEUX: He belongs to the eastern townships.

Mr. PELLETIER: He originally came from there. He was a pretty good officer in Montreal, and when the office in Sherbrooke was re-opened, we had to have a man there with experience, so we asked Mr. Soles to go to the Sherbrooke office. He consented, and he is paid for his Sherbrooke work as he would have been paid for his Montreal work.

Mr. BELAND: Mr. Dastous was appointed in Sherbrooke ?

Mr. PELLETIER: Yes.

Mr. BELAND: Has he had any experience ?

Mr. PELLETIER: For a certain length of time—I would not care to state the exact number of months—Mr. Dastous worked in Quebec under the instructions of the Quebec post office inspector in order to learn what had to be learned about the duties of an inspector. That is a businesslike way, I should think, of administering the department. The other man, Mr. Soles, who was sent from Montreal, has had considerable experience, and we are satisfied that we now have in Sherbrooke an office which is a credit to the Eastern Townships, and which should not be criticised as it is to-day by hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. LEMIEUX: If I remember rightly, the Post Office Act requires that no one shall be appointed superintendent unless he has had a certain number of years' experience.

Mr. PELLETIER: That does not apply to inspectors.

Mr. BELAND: Was Mr. Dastous employed by the department before he was made inspector ? I always thought that he was a dealer in flour and grain in Sherbrooke.

Mr. PELLETIER: No, he was not connected with the department.

Mr. ROBB: How far west do the Sherbrooke and Three Rivers inspection divisions extend ?

Mr. PELLETIER: I will get the information for my hon. friend and give it to him this afternoon or to-morrow morning.

Mr. ROBB: Does the Sherbrooke inspection division extend to St. Lambert or St. Johns ?

Mr. PELLETIER: I should think that would be in the Montreal district. I will get the information.

Mr. BUREAU: May I ask the minister to give similar information as to the territory covered by the office to be opened at Three Rivers. Has the minister in view the person who is to be appointed as inspector ? If not, I might submit a name.

Mr. PELLETIER: An assistant inspector is to be appointed at Three Rivers. It is to be a branch of the inspector's office.

Mr. BUREAU: Under the control of the Montreal or of the Quebec inspector?

Mr. PELLETIER: Quebec.

Mr. BELAND: Has the hon. Postmaster General received applications for the position?

Mr. PELLETIER: A very great number.

Mr. BELAND: Would the hon. minister explain the difference between the two amounts given in answer to the same question asked on different occasions by the hon. member for Sherbrooke?

Mr. PELLETIER: One explanation would be that the salary of Mr. Soles, which is, I understand, $2,000, is not a new expenditure; it is paid at Sherbrooke instead of at Montreal. However, I will look into that and give my hon. friend the information.

Mr. BOIVIN: Before the hon. Postmaster General leaves the question of the Sherbrooke post office I think it my duty to resent the insinuation which he has just made against the Eastern Townships' members. In the course of a very able speech he insinuated that the hon. members from the Eastern Townships, including the hon. member for Sherbrooke, who is not in his seat, and myself, are opposed to the opening of an inspection office at Sherbrooke. I never said a word in this House in opposition to the opening of an inspection office in Sherbrooke; I do not think the hon. member for Sherbrooke ever said a word in this House against the opening of that office, and I fail to understand from anything which has been said by the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe to-day that he is opposed to the opening of that office. The hon. Postmaster General, who continually rises in his place and tells hon. gentlemen on this side that they ought to be fair, should himself treat the members of the Opposition fairly and not put in their mouths words that they never uttered or make any such insinuations as he has made on this occasion.

Mr. PELLETIER: I made no insinuations whatever. What is the tenor of the discussion which has been taking place in this committee?

Mr. BOIVIN: The tenor of the discussion in this committee is whether or not the Post Office Department is run on a businesslike basis. The hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe was proving that it was not run on a businesslike basis, because two answers to the same question, given within fifteen days of each other, showed a difference of $4,000. The hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe said that that is not businesslike; there is no objection whatever to the opening of an inspection office at Sherbrooke.

Mr. PELLETIER: When I said that this should not be criticised because it was passed by the House last session, the hon. member for Beauce said: we have no time to criticise everything and it would take twelve months to do that.

Mr. LEMIEUX: That is because you bring these matters up at the end of the session.

Mr. PELLETIER: Whether at the end of the session or not, if it is wrong, I should be told that it is wrong; if it is passed unanimously, I take it for granted that everybody agrees. This discussion will be understood by the people as meaning that the expenditure which we are making in Sherbrooke for this inspection office is a useless expenditure and should not be made. I want there to be no misapprehension about this matter. Let us take it for granted that the hon. member for Shefford voices the sentiments of hon. members from the Eastern Townships. I give him credit for what he has said and I accept his word, but let it be well understood that all the hon. members from the Eastern Townships approve the opening of the inspection office at Sherbrooke.

Mr. BUREAU: Run on a business basis.

Mr. PELLETIER: Very good; what was wrong a moment ago is all right now.

Mr. BUREAU: That is not fair, Mr. Chairman. The hon. Postmaster General has the knack of making assertions that are not always exactly correct. He says that the public will be under the impression, from the discussion that has taken place here, that the expenditure which is proposed to be made in the Eastern Townships is useless. We may criticise the expenditure, but we may, nevertheless, approve the establishment of an inspection office in the Eastern Townships. We may criticise part of the expenditure, and we may admit that another part of it is all right, and it is not fair that the Postmaster General should come here and say: as a whole, you are opposed to the principle of this thing, and you must not criticise. My hon. friend asks us why we did not criticise last year. We had nothing to criticise. He was asking for an expenditure of money, and we thought that that money would be expended in the businesslike manner which he boasts of as being characteristic of the administration of his department. The hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe says that the hon. member for Sherbrooke put a question to the minister twice with regard to the amount of money expended in one particular office. The answer to these questions, put within two weeks of each other, showed a discrepancy of $4,000; yet the Postmaster General says that that is business. I submit that the hon. member for Richmond or any other member could not criticise this item before the information was available, and it is not right that the Postmaster General should endeavour to convey the impression that hon. members of the Opposition oppose the establishment of an inspection office when they do not oppose it. We want the public to understand that we are going to criticise any expenditure that we do not think is made justly and in a businesslike way. We want it understood that the Postmaster General cannot bluff it out by saying, when an item of expenditure comes before the House: Oh, you must oppose this expenditure. We do not know how the money is going to be expended and I claim that the criticism made by the hon. member for Richmond is a proper one. It is his duty to make it and the Postmaster General has no right to get wrathy about it or to insinuate that we are trying to impute motives to him or are against the principle of establishing inspection offices. I gave notice to the Postmaster General who seems astounded because letters to his department were not answered, that in the district of Three Rivers there is a mail service between Yamachiche and St. Barnabé. A contract was awarded——

Mr. PELLETIER: If my hon. friend would excuse me, I think it would be only fair to the hon. member for Richmond if I gave the information for which he asked.

Mr. TOBIN: I want to answer a few remarks made by the Postmaster General. Was there anything in my remarks that was against the opening of inspection offices in the district of St. François? I asked the Postmaster General to explain the discrepancy in the amount given on the 27th of April last as the cost of the office, that is $4,700, and the amount given on the 11th of May last, that is over $8,000. If my hon. friend wants to be fair he should come before the House and say why he opened the office. He said that we had abolished the office years ago and when they came into power they reopened it. I do not say that the office is good or bad. We have not opposed it in any way. Why was my friend compelled to open the office? He knows and the people in the Eastern Townships and Sherbrooke know that it is because a party in Sherbrooke held a pistol to his ear and said: You have to do this and give Mr. Dastous a position. The collector of customs, Mr. Stenson, an ex-member of this House, died. The French-Canadian people of Sherbrooke said that this position belonged to them, but the Minister of Customs gave it to an English-speaking gentleman. The French-speaking people then said: You have to place Mr. Dastous and you must create an office. That is why the office was opened. There was not a request from the people to open a post office inspection, but a request to place Mr. Dastous. I have nothing against Mr. Dastous, who was a grain merchant. If my hon. friend wants to employ him that is his business. He is a good Conservative and a young man whom I respect. But when my hon. friend the Postmaster General comes before the House and says that he opened the office on business principles he is not accurate, it was not opened in the public interest, but in a political interest. My hon. friend says that we complained. I have never heard a member from the Eastern Townships say anything against the opening of the office. What we complain of is that when we put questions on the Order Paper there is within two weeks a difference in the amount given in the answers of fifty per cent. If we move for a return in the minister's department the return is not complete; somebody takes out from the file just what we want to see. That has been done with every return I have asked for in the minister's department and he knows it. He admitted it last night. Why not be fair. If he wants to play the game, let him play it fair and be honest about it. If you do not want to give us information, we will not move for any returns. If the Postmaster General treats me in the future as he has done in the past, I will stop asking for information and will tell my people the manner in which he refuses it. Everything that is done in his department is done in a dark room. If an investigation is held, they get a few people together in a room and decide to cut off the heads of a few of our Grit friends. That is not fair. Mr. Denison asked for an investigation. He is an old public employee, he has given good service to the people of the district of St. François and Richmond. My hon. friend will probably be in the Eastern Townships this summer. If he comes to Richmond he will find that it will do his party and himself no good to refuse an investigation and to decline to give Mr. Denison and his friends a chance to show just what ground there is for the complaints that were made against the administration of the post office at Richmond.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Was Mr. Denison a dishonest man?

Mr. TOBIN: He was an honest man but he was dismissed on the ground that he did not run his office properly. No doubt the minister and his friends wanted the position for Mr. McIvor, the present postmaster, a young man, perhaps 42 years old. He has been practising his profession as a lawyer in Richmond for ten years, and yet he has to accept a small position that will give him probably $1,400 or $1,500 a year after he pays his office help. He was a defeated candidate in the county of Richmond for the local House in 1912 and lost his deposit. But he came around and held up the Postmaster General and the hon. Minister without portfolio, the member for Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) and said: You must do something for me. Then they cut off the head of Mr. Denison and placed him there.

Mr. LEMIEUX: No investigation?

Mr. TOBIN: No investigation. Mr. Denison protested against it and asked for an investigation, but we have not got justice and we do not expect justice.

Mr. PELLETIER: If my hon. friend does not expect justice he should not lose so much time talking about it.

Mr. TOBIN: I want the people to know how you treat us.

Mr. PELLETIER: If the hon. member wants the people to know how this thing has been dealt with he should wait before he passes judgment. We have been told that Mr. McIvor has been appointed, that he was a Conservative candidate and had lost his deposit. That may be true, I do not know. Even if he has lost his deposit as a candidate in an election I do not take it for granted that that disqualifies him to be appointed to any position at the hands of the Government.

Mr. TOBIN: I do not want to be personal.

Mr. PELLETIER: The hon. gentleman does not want to be personal, after he has been as personal as he can be. The question is not whether Mr. McIvor has been a candidate or not. I did not know that when I appointed him; but I will say that if he is qualified to be a postmaster, and I think he is, and if he has been a candidate, that is another good reason why he should have been appointed and I am glad to have appointed him.

Mr. BUREAU: We all know that.

Mr. PELLETIER: I am told by my hon. friend that Mr. Dastous did not notify Mr. Denison that an investigation would take place. I have the file here now and Mr. Dastous says:

Mr. Denison was fully aware of my investigation at the time I made it because I called at his office the very same day and told him the object of my visit and made him aware of the complaints laid against him.

Mr. TOBIN: What were the complaints?

Mr. PELLETIER: I am coming to that now. My hon. friend will see that all the fuss he has made about this does not amount to much in the face of the facts.

Mr. KNOWLES: Does that mean that he notified him simply on the day of the investigation?

Mr. PELLETIER: I have read what he said. I did not give the notice myself.

Mr. TOBIN: What were the complaints?

Mr. PELLETIER: I would advise my hon. friend not to get excited. I am trying to give the facts. After I have given them, and if he has a reason, my hon. friend can become excited. I have before me a letter signed by a certain number of the citizens of the town of Richmond, amongst them, the ex-mayor, the President of the Agricultural Society, the Manager of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, the President of the Board of Trade.

Mr. TOBIN: All good Tories.

Mr. PELLETIER: So much the better. Just wait and take your medicine. I have some confidence in the Tories, if my hon. friend has not. I do not take their word because they are Tories, but because they are the best men in the district. The letter is signed by six prominent citizens of the town of Richmond, and reads as follows:

Richmond, Que., Feb. 11, 1914.

The Hon. the Postmaster General,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir,—As a citizen of the town of Richmond I hereby complain of the management of the post office at Richmond.

The present postmaster, J. R. Denison, never had the education or business training required for the management of such an office—

Mr. BELAND: I know all about it.

Mr. PELLETIER: The letter goes on:

—and as he is now upwards of 80 years of age and very deaf, is utterly unable to render the public efficient service, nor does he engage employees capable of doing the work for him.

The present postmaster is a man of large means to whom the salary as postmaster is of no material importance.

The postmaster and his assistants do not sort the mail properly. Almost daily, I receive other people's letters in my box, and I find that letters addressed to me have been given to others, always causing serious delay in receiving them; and I have reason to believe that sometimes I have never received them. I have heard the same complaints from all the other business men and the townspeople generally.

Persons not employees of the post office (even children) are allowed to enter the office, pick out their own mail before it is sorted and also assist in the general distribution. The management of the post office is so careless and inefficient that intolerable and unnecessary delay attaches to every item of the service.

The post office is not kept in a clean condition, nor is order maintained in the public portion.

As a large mail receiver I find these conditions intolerable, and make this complaint hoping that a competent person will be sent to investigate the truth of the facts alleged.

In addition to sending this complaint myself, it is my intention to show it to a few of the business men of the town more particularly interested in the conduct of the postmaster, and to ask them also to sign this if they can bear out my statements and approve of the complaint.

Yours very truly,

Charles Campbell.

The complaint is signed by five other people: John Hayes, M.D.

Mr. BUREAU: The man that Tobin licked.

Mr. TOBIN: The defeated candidate in 1911.

Mr. PELLETIER: Who will come back next time. It is signed also by A. Rainbach, George J. Alexander, Mr. W. H. Keenan and E. S. Bernard. I received this in February, long before Hon. Mr. Perley went through the Eastern Townships. It was sent to Hon. Mr. Perley, and he sent it to me. The matter was investigated in the regular way, and I have here the report of the inspector who says:

I come to the conclusion that the employees, as well as the postmaster, are not qualified to give the accurate and satisfactory service which the patrons of an office of the size of Richmond would naturally expect. The general appearance of the office is not a credit to the Post Office Department; the boys have made depredations in the lobby, defacing and mutilating the woodwork with knives, etc.

I come to the conclusion, therefore, to recommend the appointment of a new postmaster, duly qualified and capable of maintaining discipline, who will undertake to furnish an efficient staff.

Those are the facts. As it is now one o'clock, I would move that the committee rise and report progress.

Mr. TOBIN: We will be able to discuss this at three o'clock?

[Mr. Pelletier.]

Mr. PELLETIER: I was going to suggest that we take that up again the next time my estimates are under consideration.

Progress reported.

At one o'clock, the House took recess.

The House resumed at three o'clock.

CANADIAN NORTHERN RAILWAY AGREEMENT.

Right Hon. R. L. BORDEN (Prime Minister) moved that the House go into Committee to consider the following resolution:

In the following resolutions unless the context otherwise requires:—

'Canadian Northern System' means the Canadian Northern and the Constituent and Subsidiary Companies.

'Canadian Northern' means the Canadian Northern Railway Company.

'Constituent Companies' means such of those companies mentioned in the first schedule to the following resolutions, and such other companies, hereafter declared by the Governor in Council to be comprised in the Canadian Northern system, as own or operate railways, terminals, bridges or other railway facilities.

'Subsidiary Companies' means such of those companies mentioned in said schedule, and such other companies, hereafter declared by the Governor in Council to be comprised in the Canadian Northern system, as do not own or operate railways, terminals, bridges or other railway facilities.

'Contractors' means Mackenzie, Mann and Company (Limited).

'Minister' means the Minister of Railways and Canals.

'Guaranteed Securities' means the securities to be authorized to be guaranteed by the Act to be based upon these resolutions.

'Mortgaged premises' means the undertakings, properties and assets, rights, powers and franchises from time to time mortgaged or charged for the purpose of securing the payment of the guaranteed securities.

'Government' means His Majesty the King in the right of the Dominion of Canada represented in such way as the Governor in Council may from time to time approve.

Section 2, of the Railway Act shall, except as aforesaid apply when any of the expressions defined therein are used in these resolutions.

Whereas the Canadian Northern Railway Company hereinafter called the 'Canadian Northern' has represented that the several companies set forth in the first schedule to these resolutions, and their railways and undertakings, rolling stock, equipment, assets and properties are intended to constitute a transcontinental railway system to be denominated the 'Canadian Northern System' and that the Canadian Northern desires to control said system by the ownership or control of the shares or majorities thereof in the capital stock of the said companies, and that it now owns or controls the shares or majorities thereof in the capital stock of certain of the said companies, and that the several companies are desirous that aid should be granted for the purpose of completing the construction and equipment of the works and undertakings of the Canadian Northern system and for the betterment thereof;

And whereas it is in the interest of Canada that the desired aid should be granted.

It is therefore resolved that it is expedient to provide as follows:—

1. That His Majesty on behalf of the Dominion of Canada may aid the construction, completion, equipment and betterment of the Canadian Northern system by guaranteeing payment of the principal and interest of the bonds, debentures, debenture stock or other securities, hereinafter called the guaranteed securities of the Canadian Northern, to an amount not exceeding forty-five million dollars ($45,000,000) which guaranteed securities, to the extent aforesaid, the Canadian Northern is hereby authorized to create and issue; interest on the guaranteed securities to be at the rate of four per cent per annum payable half-yearly, the principal to be payable not later than a day in the year 1934.

2. That the guaranteed securities shall be secured by a trust deed, hereinafter called the 'New Trust Deed' made to a trustee or trustees approved by the Governor in Council, hereinafter called the 'Trustee' and the same shall in manner and terms satisfactory to the Governor in Council,—

(a) Grant a first, fixed, and specific mortgage or charge upon the shares mentioned in the first part of the second schedule hereto;

(b) Grant a specific mortgage or charge upon the mortgage securities and shares of stock now or from time to time hereafter deposited with and specifically mortgaged under the Trust Deed of the 30th day of June, 1903, hereinafter called the 'Perpetual Consolidated Debenture Stock Trust Deed' those now so deposited and mortgaged being mentioned in the second part of the said Second Schedule;

(c) Grant fixed, specific and floating mortgages or charges upon the undertaking of the Canadian Northern and its properties, assets, rents and revenues, and its rights, powers and franchises, present and future;

(d) Grant a fixed and specific charge upon the equity of redemption of Mackenzie, Mann and Company, Limited, in $10,000,000 of capital stock and $10,000,000 of First Debenture Stock of the Canadian Northern Town Properties Company, Limited (the subsidiary company mentioned in the eighth clause of the trust deed dated the 19th of November, 1913, made between the Canadian Northern Railway Company, Mackenzie, Mann and Company, Limited, The British Empire Trust Company, Limited, and the National Trust Company, Limited, trustees, securing £3,500,000 of five per cent Land Mortgage Debentures), the said capital stock and First Debenture Stock being now held by the said Trustees as part of the mortgaged premises under the said trust deed.

(2) The Mortgages and charges to be granted under (b) and (c) of this section shall be subject to and rank next after the mortgages and charges heretofore created and the securities heretofore or hereafter created or issued under the existing trust deeds or mortgages securing the same, and to the powers of issuing securities having priority therein reserved and contained.

3. That before a guarantee is given the following conditions shall be complied with:—

(a) The agreement a draft whereof is set forth in the third schedule hereto, (hereinafter called the 'Agreement' shall be duly executed by the parties thereto, and the Governor in Council is hereby authorized to execute the same.

(b) There shall be transferred to and vested in the Trustee as part of the mortgaged premises the shares of stock mentioned in subclause (a) of section 2 of these resolutions free from prior charges thereon, such shares to become and to remain the property of the Canadian Northern, subject to the charge created by and to the terms of the New Trust Deed. Provided that the necessary shares to qualify the directors and preserve the corporate entities of the respective companies may remain in the name of such directors and other necessary parties, but the share certificates ready for transfer shall be delivered to and held by or for the Trustee of the New Trust Deed.

(c) There shall be conveyed to the Trustee as part of the specifically first mortgaged premises, by the purchaser at court sale thereof, the railway and undertaking mentioned in the third part of the second schedule hereto, the said railway and undertaking to be free from all bonds or other indebtedness thereon, the same to become and to remain the property of the Canadian Northern subject to the mortgage or charge created by the New Trust Deed, and to be operated by the Canadian Northern as part of its system.

(d) There shall be transferred to the Minister of Finance and Receiver General of Canada in trust for the Government of Canada, three hundred and thirty thousand fully paid shares of the par value of $100 each of the capital stock of the Canadian Northern and such shares shall be the absolute property of His Majesty in right of the Dominion of Canada. The said shares or any part thereof may be disposed of under the authority of Parliament upon such terms and conditions as it may determine, and the proceeds of the sale thereof paid into the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada. Pending the disposal of the said shares and of the seventy thousand shares issued to the Minister of Finance and Receiver General of Canada, pursuant to section 8 of chapter 10 of the statutes of 1913, all voting and other rights under the said shares shall be exercisable by the said Minister of Finance and the Receiver General or by whomsoever he may from time to time appoint.

4. That covenants or undertakings to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council shall be given that all outstanding temporary loans to the Canadian Northern or any of its constituent or subsidiary companies secured by the deposit or pledge of securities, will be paid out of the proceeds of such deposited or pledged securities when the same shall be sold or disposed of, and that no proceedings against the Canadian Northern or any of said other companies will meanwhile be taken for the collection of such temporary loans.

5. That covenants or undertakings of the contractors and such other covenants or undertakings as may be required by the Governor in Council shall be given that the current indebtedness of the Canadian Northern and of the said constituent and subsidiary companies will within one year from the passing of the Act to be based upon these resolutions be reduced to the normal or usual current amount to be determined by the minister and that meanwhile all such current indebtedness other than such as may be the subject of bona fide dispute, will be either paid or arranged in such a manner that no proceedings for the enforcement of payment thereof will be taken or pressed.

6. That the kind of securities to the guaranteed hereunder, and the forms thereof, and the forms and terms of the New Trust Deed, and the times and manner of the issue of the guaranteed securities, and the disposition of the moneys to be raised thereon by sale, pledge or otherwise, and the forms and manner of guarantee or guarantees shall be such as the Governor in Council approves, and such terms, provisions and conditions as the Governor in Council may consider expedient or necessary shall be included in the new trust deed.

7. That the said guarantee or guarantees shall be deposited with the trustee, signed by the Minister of Finance or such officer as is designated by the Governor in Council, and upon being signed and deposited as aforesaid, His Majesty shall become liable as guarantor for the payment of the principal and interest of the guaranteed securities according to the tenor thereof, and the said payment shall form a charge upon the Consolidated Revenue Fund, and a guarantee so signed and deposited shall be conclusive evidence that the requirements of the Act to be based upon these resolutions respecting the guaranteed securities and the New Trust Deed and all matters relating thereto have been complied with.

8. That subject to the provisions of the Act to be based upon these resolutions any moneys paid by His Majesty under any guarantee given hereunder shall be held to be paid in discharge of the liability of His Majesty, and not in discharge of the liability of the Canadian Northern under the guaranteed securities, or under the New Trust Deed and the moneys so paid shall be held to be still secured by the guaranteed securities and New Trust Deed, and His Majesty shall be subrogated in and to all the rights of the holders of the guaranteed securities, the interest or the principal of which has been paid by His Majesty, and His Majesty shall, with respect to the moneys so paid, be in all respects in the position of a security holder with respect to whose securities default shall have been made in payment, to the extent of the moneys paid by His Majesty.

9. That (1) the books, returns, reports and other records of the Canadian Northern and of each of the Constituent and Subsidiary Companies shall at all times be accessible and open to inspection for and on behalf of the Governor in Council by any person or persons from time to time named in that behalf by the Governor in Council or by the minister.

(2) Commencing with the year 1915, the Canadian Northern shall furnish the minister annually within five months from the close of its fiscal year a consolidated balance sheet showing the financial position of the Canadian Northern System for the fiscal year then last completed.

10. That in so far as the Canadian Northern and the Constituent and Subsidiary Companies may be subject to the legislative jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada, every such company shall have full power to do all and every of the things authorized by the Act based upon these resolutions, or provided for in the Agreement, and shall have full power, and be bound to make, do and execute from time to time, all such acts, deeds, matters and things as may be necessary or expedient for carrying into effect the full intent and meaning of the Act based upon these resolutions and of the Agreement, and the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada is hereby empowered to do what may be necessary on its part in the carrying out of the provisions of said Agreement.

11. That repayment of any portion of the proceeds of the guaranteed securities expended upon or for the purpose of any company (other than the Canadian Northern) included in the Canadian Northern System with interest at four per cent per annum shall be by the respective companies upon whose undertaking or for whose purposes the same may be expended, secured by trust deeds in manner and terms satisfactory to the Governor in Council which trust deed shall grant fixed, specific and floating mortgages or charges satisfactory to the Governor in Council upon the undertaking of such company, and its property and assets, real and personal, present and future, and its rights, powers and franchises, tolls, incomes and revenues, said fixed and specific and floating mortgages or charges to be subject to and to rank next after the mortgages and charges heretofore created and the securities heretofore or hereafter created or issued under the existing trust deeds or mortgages securing the same, and under the power of issuing securities having priority therein reserved and contained. Such trust deeds shall be made to the Trustee of the New Trust Deed and shall form part of the mortgaged premises thereunder. Each trust deed shall be executed before any advances secured thereby are made, and shall cover future advances out of the proceeds of the guaranteed securities.

12. That the capital stock of the Canadian Northern be fixed at the sum of one hundred million dollars subject to increase only by the Parliament of Canada:

Provided that for the purpose of exchange of Income Charge Convertible Debenture Stock, secured by trust deed made to the British Empire Trust Company, Limited, and the National Trust Company, Limited, dated 6th May, 1910, not exceeding twenty-five millions dollars in all, there may, during the period of the option of exchange given by said Trust Deed to the holders of said debenture stock, viz:—the years from January 1, 1916, to January 1, 1919, inclusive, and during any extension of that period, be issued to such holders who may exercise said option, such amounts of capital stock, over and above one hundred million dollars as may be required for the purposes of such exchange, not exceeding $100 of capital stock for $100 of debenture stock and not exceeding in all twenty-five million dollars.

Provided that the Canadian Northern may extend the period of said option from time to time. The said additional twenty-five million dollars of capital stock is hereby authorized and shall be set apart for the sole purpose of such exchange and any fully paid stock deposited with the Trustees of said Trust Deed for such purpose may be returned to the depositors thereof; Provided, also that no further issue of said Income Charge Convertible Debenture Stock shall be made under said Trust Deed.

13. That the difference between the present issued paid up capital stock of the Canadian Northern, namely, seventy-seven million dollars, and the said one hundred million dollars, namely, twenty-three million dollars, may in pursuance of the provisions of the Agreement be issued as fully paid in consideration of the transfer of the shares mentioned in the first part of the second schedule hereto, such twenty-three million dollars of stock to be issued to the parties transferring said shares, or to their nominees as provided in the Agreement.

14. That no shares of the capital stock of the respective companies mentioned in the First Schedule hereto, other than the Canadian Northern, beyond the amounts heretofore issued, shall be issued without the consent of the Governor in Council.

15. That the works and undertakings of the following companies shall be declared to be works for the general advantage of Canada, viz,—

Canadian Northern Manitoba Railway Company,

Canadian Northern Western Railway Company,

Canadian Northern Saskatchewan Railway Company,

Irondale, Bancroft and Ottawa Railway Company,

Marmora Railway and Mining Company,

Canadian Northern Pacific Railway Company,

The Halifax and Southwestern Railway Company,

The Quebec and Lake St. John Railway Company.

16. That while any of the guaranteed securities are outstanding the Governor in Council may from time to time appoint any person to be a director of any or of all the companies comprised in the Canadian Northern System, and at pleasure remove the director so appointed.

2. Every director appointed by the Governor in Council shall at the request of the Governor in Council have the right to have a meeting of the directors or shareholders of the company for which he is so appointed, called at any time, and the secretary or other proper officer of such company shall at such company's expense forthwith upon being requested so to do, call such meeting in accordance with the statutes or by-laws regulating the calling thereof.

17. That without limiting any power now possessed, it be enacted that any railway company comprised in the Canadian Northern System which is now or may hereafter be subject to the legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada may, with the approval of the Governor in Council, enter into arrangements and agreements with any other railway company comprised in said system which is now, or may hereafter be subject to said legislative authoriity, or which has now, or may hereafter have power to enter into the same, respecting the operation by or the leasing to or the sale or transfer to such other railway company of the undertaking of the first mentioned company including assets, rights, franchises and powers, and said companies are hereby respectively empowered to carry out such arrangements and agreements.

18. That without limiting any power now possessed, it be enacted that any Constituent Company which is now or may hereafter be subject to the legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada, may, under the provisions of the Railway Act, amalgamate with any other or others of the Constituent Companies which is now or may hereafter be subject to said legislative authority or, if not so subject, which now has or may hereafter have power to enter into such amalgamation.

19. That any company now or hereafter comprised in the Canadian Northern System which is now or may hereafter be subject to the legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada, may acquire shares in the capital stock of, or securities issued by, or make advances to, or receive advances from any other company comprised in said System, and may take or give security for such advances.

20. That the Canadian Northern may redeem or otherwise discharge the guaranteed securities and the liability of His Majesty as guarantor in accordance with any terms in that behalf contained in the New Trust Deed.

21. That the following shall be events of default within the meaning of the Act to be based upon these resolutions, viz,—

(a) If the Canadian Northern shall make default in payment of the principal or interest of the guaranteed securities or any part thereof, or default in observing or performing any of the provisions of the New Trust Deed, and the security constituted by the New Trust Deed shall thereby become enforceable;

(b) If while any of the guaranteed securities are outstanding the Canadian Northern or any Constituent or Subsidiary Company shall make default in the payment of the principal or interest or any part thereof, of any securities heretofore or hereafter created or issued under the existing trust deed or mortgages securing the same, or under any future trust deed securing securities having priority to the guaranteed securities or default in observing or performing any of the terms of any such existing or future trust deed or mortgage, and the security constituted by any such trust deed or mortgage shall thereby become enforceable;

(c) If, while any of the guaranteed securities are outstanding, an order be made by any court against any company in the Canadian Northern System for the appointment of a receiver or for possession, or if a receiver be otherwise appointed or possession be otherwise lawfully taken of the whole or part of the undertaking.

22. That upon the happening of any event of default and at any time or times while the same shall continue, it shall be lawful for the Governor in Council after such notice to the Canadian Northern as the Governor in Council may direct, to declare to be vacant the offices of the directors of the Canadian Northern and of any of the Constituent or Subsidiary Companies which may be subject to the legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada, and to appoint a board or boards of directors in lieu thereof respectively (any former director being eligible for appointment).

(2). The power of appointment herein conferred upon the Governor in Council shall be a continuous power and shall be exercisable from time to time and so often as any event of default may exist and be continuing.

23. That the directors so appointed by the Governor in Council shall hold office during the pleasure of the Governor in Council, and any such director may be removed and another appointed in his place. Vacancies occurring from time to time may be filled by the Governor in Council. The said boards respectively shall have all the powers of a board of directors elected by the shareholders; and acts of the board requiring the authority and approval of the shareholders shall if authorized or approved by the Governor in Council be as valid and effectual as if authorized or approved by the shareholders.

24. That if authorized by the Parliament of Canada, the Governor in Council may on such terms and conditions (if any) as Parliament may prescribe, at any time while any event of default shall exist and be continuing, by order declare the equity of redemption of the Canadian Northern and of all other persons whomsoever in the mortgaged premises to be foreclosed, and thereupon the equity of redemption of the Canadian Northern (and of such other persons) in the mortgaged premises and every part thereof shall become absolutely barred and foreclosed, and the same shall thereupon be vested in His Majesty in the right of the Dominion of Canada, any statutory enactment or any rule of law or equity to the contrary notwithstanding.

25. That without limiting any of the powers of the board, it is declared that every board so appointed by the Governor in Council shall with the approval of the Governor in Council have power from time to time, in such way and on such terms and conditions as may be thought expedient,—

(a) To create and issue securities and to secure the same by mortgages or charges under trust deeds or otherwise and to raise money thereon by sale, pledge or otherwise;

(b) To make arrangements and agreements with any of the companies then comprised in the Canadian Northern System and with the trustees under any mortgage, charge or trust deed securing any securities issued by any such company respecting such security or the money payable thereunder or the terms of any such mortgage, charge or trust deed;

(c) To make arrangements and agreements respecting their claims with creditors of the Canadian Northern or any company then comprised in the Canadian Northern system;

(d) Subject to all securities forming a charge upon the Canadian Northern system or any part thereof and to the terms of any trust deeds securing the same, to make from time to time, with or without consideration, with any corporation or corporations incorporated by the Parliament of Canada for the purpose, having the necessary powers in that behalf, any arrangement or agreement for the operation or for the leasing or for the sale or transfer of the Canadian Northern system or any part or parts thereof, and the undertakings, assets, rights, franchises and powers thereof or any part or parts thereof, or for the sale or transfer with or without consideration of any equity of redemption therein, and every such board shall have power to carry every such arrangement and agreement into effect;

(e) Generally to do all such acts and things as the Governor in Council may deem requisite in connection with or with the operation of the Canadian Northern and of the Canadian Northern System or any part thereof or with any outstanding securities or the trust deeds securing them, or with holders of securities or creditors or in connection with any re-organizations or changes, financial or otherwise, with respect to the Canadian Northern or the Canadian Northern System or any part thereof, or in connection with the sale or foreclosure or other proceedings in court or otherwise or with the carrying out of the provisions of this section according to its true intent or meaning.

26. That while and so long as the Governor in Council has power to appoint a board of directors or after the exercise of such power, the Parliament of Canada may at any time and from time to time upon such terms as Parliament may prescribe, vest in the Governor in Council or in any corporation or corporations, person or persons, all or any of the powers which would under the Act to be based upon these resolutions be vested in any board of directors appointed by the Governor in Council.

27. That every order of the Governor in Council made in exercise of any of the powers contained in the Act to be based upon these resolutions, may on ex parte application on behalf of the Governor in Council, and without any notice to any person, be made a rule, order or judgment of the Exchequer Court or of any Superior Court of any Province of Canada, and shall be enforced in like manner as any rule, order or judgment of such Court, and shall not be subject to appeal.

28. That the following provisions shall be enacted with respect to every person from time to time appointed by the Governor in Council a director of the Canadian Northern or of any Constituent or Subsidiary Company, viz,—

(1) Notwithstanding the provisions of the Railway Act or any other law, statute or by-law to the contrary, it shall not be necessary for any such director to possess any stock or other qualification nor shall any such person during the term of his office be subject to disqualification on any account whatever;

(2) No such director shall be under any responsibility to any shareholder, director, or officer of the company of which he is director, nor to any other person, in respect of any act done, or omitted to be done by him in the execution of his office;

(3) Each director appointed under the enactment to be based upon section 22 of these resolutions shall be entitled to be paid by the company for which he is appointed such salary as the Governor in Council may from time to time fix.

29. That the Governor in Council may at the request of the Canadian Northern out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund pay all or any portion of the first six half yearly payments of interest on the guaranteed securities falling due after the opening for traffic as part of the Canadian Northern System of the through line from Vancouver to the City of Quebec, but in such case the Governor in Council shall not enforce the repayment thereof against the Canadian Northern under the New Trust Deed until the maturity of the principal of the guaranteed securities. The Canadian Northern shall however pending the repayment of interest so paid by the Governor in Council pay to His Majesty half-yearly interest on such interest at the rate of four per cent per annum, and such interest upon interest until so paid, shall form a charge upon the mortgaged premises under the New Trust Deed.

First Schedule.

The Canadian Northern Railway System.

Bay of Quinte Railway Company,
Canadian Northern Railway Company,
Canadian Northern Pacific Railway Company,
Canadian Northern Alberta Railway Company,
Canadian Northern Western Railway Company,
Canadian Northern Saskatchewan Railway Company,
Canadian Northern Manitoba Railway Company,
Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Company,
Canadian Northern Quebec Railway Company,
Canadian Northern Ry. Express Company, Limited,
Canadian Northern Transfer Company,

Canadian Northern Telegraph Company,
Canadian Northern Steamships Limited,
Canadian Northern System Terminals, Limited,
Central Ontario Railway,
Duluth, Winnipeg & Pacific Railway Company,
Halifax & Southwestern Railway Company,
Irondale, Bancroft & Ottawa Railway Company,
Lake Superior Terminals Company, Limited,
Minnesota & Ontario Bridge Company,
Minnesota & Manitoba Railway Company,
Marmora Railway & Mining Company,
Mount Royal Tunnel & Terminal Company, Limited,
Niagara, St Catharines & Toronto Railway Company,
Northern Consolidated Holding Company,
Quebec & Lake St John Railway Company,
Qu'Appelle, Long Lake & Saskatchewan Railroad & Steamboat Company.
St Boniface & Western Land Company,
Winnipeg Land Company, Limited.

Second Schedule.

Part 1.

Stocks to be transferred free from prior charges.

Bay of Quinte Railway Company	$ 1,395,000
Canadian Northern Pacific Railway Company	25,000,000
Canadian Northern Alberta Railway Company	3,000,000
Canadian Northern Western Railway Company	2,000,000
Canadian Northern Saskatchewan Railway Company	1,000,000
Canadian Northern Manitoba Railway Company	Total Issue.
Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Company	10,000,000
Canadian Northern Quebec Railway Company	2,000,000
Canadian Northern System Terminals Company	2,000,000
Central Ontario Railway	3,329,000
Duluth, Winnipeg and Pacific Railway Company	3,060,000
Halifax and South Western Railway Company	1,000,000
Irondale, Bancroft and Ottawa Railway Company	53,000
Mt. Royal Tunnel and Terminal Company, Limited	Total Issue.
Marmora Railway and Mining Company	100,000
Northern Consolidated Holding Company	4,446,700
Quebec and Lake St. John Railway Company	4,002,800
Qu'Appelle, L.L. and Saskatchewan Railway Company	201,000

Second Schedule.

Part 2.

Mortgage Securities and Stocks to be Transferred Subject to Perpetual Consolidated Debenture Stock Trust Deed.

1. The Minnesota and Ontario Bridge Company.—Bond No. 1 for $100,000 face value, and Bond No. 2 for $80,000 face value, being four and a half per cent First Mortgage Debenture Bonds, dated First of July, 1903, and registered in the name of the National Trust Company, Limited, and the British Empire Trust Company, Limited (herein called the 'Trustees') as Trustees under the Trust Deed dated 30th June, 1903, made to secure the First Mortgage four per cent Consolidated Debenture Stock and Bonds of the Canadian Northern Railway Company $180,000
Fully paid shares 100,000

2. The Minnesota and Manitoba Railway Company.—Three five per cent General Mortgage Bonds numbered one to three inclusive, dated First July, 1903, being two bonds for $100,000 each and one bond for $50,000 registered in the name of the Trustees .. $250,000
Fully paid shares 400,000

3. Lake Superior Terminals Company, Limited.—Ten First Mortgage five per cent Gold Bonds numbered 1 to 10 inclusive, of face value of $100,000 each dated first of July 1903, registered in the name of the Trustees $1,000,000
Fully paid shares 500,000

Lake Superior Terminals Company, Limited.—Five per cent Gold Bonds numbered 1 to 9 inclusive, secured by Trust Deed dated the 28th December, 1903, for the following respective amounts; numbers 1, 2, 4 and 6 for $100,000 each, numbers 3, 5 and 7 for $50,000 each, number 8 for $300,000 and number 9 for $150,000 .. .. $1,000,000

4. Canadian Northern Telegraph Co.—Four five per cent Gold Bonds, numbered 1 to 4 inclusive for $200,000 each due June 30, 1930 .. .. $800,000
Fully paid shares 500,000

5. Winnipeg Land Company, Limited.—Three first Mortgage Five per cent Gold Bonds, numbered 1 to 3 inclusive, face value $100,000 each, dated 1st July, 1903, and registered in the name of the Trustees $300,000
Fully paid shares 100,000

6. The Canadian Northern Coal and Ore Dock Co.—Five per cent First Mortgage Gold Bond No. 1, due 1st June, 1932, for £77,054 15 11 .. .. $375,000

7. The St. Boniface and Western Land Co.—Three five per cent Gold Bonds, numbered 1 to 3 inclusive, due 1st July, 1957, for $250,000 each registered, in the name of the Trustees $750,000
Fully paid shares 250,000

8. The Edmonton and Slave Lake Railway Co.—Four first mortgage five per cent Gold Bonds, numbered 1 to 4 inclusive due June 30, 1937, for $100,000 each and Bond No. 5 for $20,000 .. .. $420,000

9. Canadian Northern Railway Express Company, Limited.—Three four per cent First Mortgage Gold Bonds, numbered 1 to 3 inclusive, due 1st December, 1960, face value $1,000,000 each, registered in the name of the Trustees $3,000,000
Fully paid shares 1,000,000

10. Canadian Northern Steamships, Limited.—Certificate No. 2 Five per cent First Mortgage Debenture Stock, due 30th April, 1930, registered in the name of the National Trust Company, Limited .. .. £ 600,000
Fully paid shares $2,000,000

11. Canadian Northern System Terminals, Limited.—Certificate No. 1, First Mortgage Ninety-nine year Debenture Stock and Bonds, being equivalent of £1,438,356, secured by Trust Deed to the National Trust Company, Limited, and the British Empire Trust Company, Limited, dated June 5, 1912, $7,000,000.

Second Schedule.

Part 3.

The railway and undertaking to be conveyed which was formerly owned by the Brockville, Westport and North Western Railway Company and which was sold under Court sale, extending from Brockville northwesterly about forty-five miles to the village of Westport, including stations, yards, buildings, equipment, etc., as per deed from Court.

Third Schedule.

This Agreement made this day of 1914.

Between:

Canadian Northern Railway Company, hereinafter called the 'Canadian Northern,'

Of the First Part,

The following Railway Companies:—

Bay of Quinte Railway Company,
Canadian Northern Pacific Railway Company,
Canadian Northern Alberta Railway Company,
Canadian Northern Western Railway Company,
Canadian Northern Saskatchewan Railway Company,
Canadian Northern Manitoba Railway Company,
Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Company,
Canadian Northern Quebec Railway Company,
Canadian Northern System Terminals, Limited,
Central Ontario Railway,
Duluth, Winnipeg and Pacific Railway Company,
Halifax and Southwestern Railway Company.
Irondale, Bancroft and Ottawa Railway Company,
Lake Superior Terminals Company, Limited,
Minnesota and Ontario Bridge Company.
Minnesota and Manitoba Railroad Company.
Marmora Railway & Mining Company,
Mount Royal Tunnel & Terminal Company, Limited,
Niagara, St. Catharines & Toronto Ry. Company,
The Quebec & Lake St. John Railway Company,
Qu'Appelle, Long Lake & Saskatchewan Railroad & Steamboat Company, hereinafter called the "Constituent Companies,"

Of the Second Part;

The following Companies:—

Canadian Northern Ry. Express Company, Limited,
Canadian Northern Transfer Company,
Canadian Northern Telegraph Company,
Canadian Northern Steamships Limited,
St. Boniface & Western Land Company,
Winnipeg Land Company, Limited,

hereinafter called the "Subsidiary Companies,"

Of the Third Part;

Mackenzie, Mann & Company, Limited, Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald D. Mann, hereinafter called the "Contractors,"

Of the Fourth Part;

and

His Majesty the King, hereinafter called the "Government" represented herein in such way as the Governor in Council of Canada may approve,

Of the Fifth Part;

Whereas the Canadian Northern, the Constituent Companies, the Subsidiary Companies and the Contractors are desirous that aid should be granted by the Government for the purpose of completing the construction and equipment of the works and undertakings of the Canadian Northern System, and for the betterment thereof; and by an Act of Parliament of Canada, being Chapter of the Statutes of 1914, the Government has been authorized to grant such aid upon the fulfilment of certain conditions precedent, one of which is the execution of this Agreement;

Witnesseth that in consideration of the premises;

1. Interpretation.

"Canadian Northern System" means the Canadian Northern and the Constituent and Subsidiary Companies and such other companies hereafter declared by order of the Governor in Council to be comprised in the Canadian Northern System;

"New Trust Deed" means the Trust Deed described in Section 3 of the Statute;

"Trustee" means the Trustee or Trustees of the New Trust Deed and any successor Trustee or Trustees thereof;

"Guaranteed Securities" means the securities authorized by the Statute of the Parliament of Canada, being Chapter of the Statutes of 1914, and "Statute" means the said Statute;

"Mortgaged Premises" means the undertakings, properties and assets, rights, powers and franchises from time to time mortgaged or charged for the purpose of securing the payment of the guaranteed securities;

"Minister" means the Minister of Railways and Canals;

"Government Railways" means the railways subject from time to time to the Government Railway Act and amendments thereto.

In all other cases, the provisions of the Interpretation Act and of the interpretation section of The Railway Act, being Section 2, Chapter 37 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, shall apply hereto.

2. Covenants by Contractors.

The Contractors jointly and severally covenant with the Government as follows:

(a) That the Contractors will forthwith, upon the execution hereof, transfer or cause to be transferred to the Trustee all the shares of capital stock of the Constituent and Subsidiary Companies mentioned in the first and second parts of the Schedule hereto, and the said shares shall form part of the mortgaged premises comprised in the New Trust Deed; Provided that the legal title to such of the said shares as may be necessary to qualify the directors and preserve the corporate entities of the respective Companies or any of them, may be allowed by the Trustee to remain in the names of such directors and other necessary parties, but the certificates thereof ready for transfer shall be delivered to and held by or for the Trustee. The absolute ownership of all the shares mentioned in the first part of the said schedule shall be vested in the Canadian Northern, subject only to the charge thereon created by and to the terms of the New Trust Deed; and the beneficial ownership of all the shares mentioned in the second part of the said schedule shall be vested in the Canadian Northern, subject only to the rights now or hereafter possessed by the National Trust Company, Limited, and the British Empire Trust Company, Limited, under the Trust Deed of the 30th of June, 1903, securing the perpetual consolidated Debenture Stock of the Canadian Northern, and to the charge thereon created by and to the terms of the New Trust Deed.

(b) That they will forthwith cause to be transferred to the Minister of Finance and Receiver General of Canada in trust for the Government, fully paid and non-assessable shares of the Canadian Northern of the aggregate par value of thirty-three millions, such shares to be the absolute property of His Majesty in right of the Dominion of Canada;

(c) That they will cause to be conveyed to the Trustee as part of the mortgaged premises free from bonds or other indebtedness thereon, the railway and undertaking of the Brockville, Westport and North Western Railway Company described in Part 3 of the Second Schedule of the Statute, the same to become the property of the Canadian Northern subject to the charge thereon created by the New Trust Deed, and to be operated by the Canadian Northern as part of its system;

(d) That they and each of them will from time to time make, do and execute all such acts, deeds, matters and things as may be reasonably required by the Government for the purpose of more fully and effectually carrying into effect the provisions hereof, and the terms, conditions, and stipulations of the Statute;

(e) That the Contractors will not at any time make or seek to enforce any claim for contractors' profits, commissions, or otherwise against the Canadian Northern, or against any of the Constituent or Subsidiary Companies, upon or in respect of any express or implied contract, understanding, agreement, or stipulation of any kind, heretofore or hereafter made, whereby or whereunder they, or any one or more of them, may now or hereafter be entitled to receive from the Canadian Northern, or from any of the Constituent or Subsidiary Companies any construction profits, in respect of work heretofore undertaken, or as consideration for transfers of properties, rights or franchises already transferred, or to be transferred under sub-clauses (a) and (b) of this clause, or for commission or remuneration for services in financing, or for any other services heretofore rendered, and all such claims are hereby by them and each of them absolutely renounced and released.

3. 9. Covenants by Canadian Northern.

The Canadian Northern covenants with the Government as follows:

(a) That the Canadian Northern is at the time of the execution hereof, the absolute owner of the equity of redemption in all the shares of the capital stock of the Constituent and Subsidiary Companies set forth in the second part of the Sechedule hereto, and that all such shares are fully paid and non-assessable, and that there are no mortgages, incumbrances, charges, or liens thereon other than those created by the mortgages and charges heretofore created under existing trust deeds or mortgages referred to in paragraph (b) of Section 4 of the Statute (Section 2 of the Resolutions).

(b) That the Canadian Northern will at all times make, do and execute and concur in all such acts, deeds, matters and things as may be reasonably required by the Government for the purpose of more fully and effectually carrying into effect the provisions hereof.

(c) That it will forthwith transfer or cause to be transferred to the Trustee as part of the mortgaged premises all the mortgage securities and shares of stock mentioned in the second part of the schedule hereto subject to the charge thereon created by and to the terms of the Trust Deed of 30th June, 1903, hereinbefore mentioned, and to the terms of the New Trust Deed.

4. Covenants by Constituent and Subsidiary Companies.

Each of the Constituent and Subsidiary Companies covenants with the Government as follows:

(a) That it will not create or issue any further share capital without the consent of the Governor in Council.

(b) That it will at all times make, do and execute and concur in all acts, deeds, matters and things as may be reasonably required by the Governor in Council for the purpose of more fully and effectually carrying into effect the provisions hereof and of the Statute.

(c) That it will from time to time execute and deliver to the Trustee the trust deeds, mortgages and charges referred to in section 12 of the Statute securing the repayment of the moneys advanced to or for it as therein mentioned, and in default of any such security being given, the Trustee shall for the benefit of the holders of the guaranteed securities have a charge upon the undertaking, property assets, rents and revenues present and future of each Constituent and Subsidiary Company for all moneys advanced to or expended upon or for the purposes of such Company out of the proceeds of the guaranteed securities with interest thereon at the rate of four per cent per annum, such charge to rank with the same priority and subject to the same powers as mentioned in section 12 of the Statute.

5. Issue of Stock by Canadian Northern.

The Canadian Northern covenants with the Contractors that in consideration of the transfer of the shares of the Capital Stock mentioned in clause (a) of paragraph 2, hereof, it will by proper corporate action cause to be allotted to the Contractors or their nominees fully paid and non-assessable shares of the Capital Stock of the Canadian Northern of the par value of twenty-three million dollars, being the difference between the present issued share capital of the Canadian Northern and the amount to which its capital is increased by the Statute.

6. Routing and Interchange of Traffic.

The Canadian Northern and the Constituent and Subsidiary Companies severally agree with the Government as follows:

(a) That at all times hereafter all freight originating on the lines of the Canadian Northern or on the lines of any of the Constituent Companies, or on any line or lines of Railway now or hereafter owned, leased or operated by the Canadian Northern or by any of the Constituent or Subsidiary Companies, their successors or assigns, shall, when destined to points in Canada, be carried over the lines of the Canadian Northern or of the Constituent Companies or over some other Canadian Railway or Railways (which term shall include the line operated by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company between Montreal and St. John) and that the through rate on export traffic from the point of origin to the point of destination shall not be greater via Canadian Ports than it would be via United States ports; and that all inward and outward ocean traffic shall be carried to Canadian Ports, and that the Canadian Northern and the several Constituent and Subsidiary Companies shall not in any matter within their power or control, directly or indirectly, advise or encourage the transportation of any such freight by routes other than those above provided, but shall in all respects in good faith use their utmost endeavours to further the development of trade through Canadian channels and Canadian Ports.

(b) That they and each and every of them will from time to time enter into Agreements with the Government for the mutual interchange of traffic between the Canadian Northern and the Constituent Companies or any of them, with the Government Railways, and the terms and conditions of every such agreement, shall be such as the parties thereto may agree upon or in default of agreement, as may be settled by the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada (hereinafter called the 'Railway Board'), and the Railway Board shall have power from time to time upon the application of the Governor in Council or of any party to any such agreement to vary, modify or rescind the same, provided always that every agreement respecting the interchange of traffic shall be subject to any agreements now existing with any other company or companies.

(c) That the Canadian Northern and the Constituent and Subsidiary Companies or any of them will from time to time on the request of the Governor in Council enter into an agreement or agreements with the Government granting to the Government for the purposes of the Government Railways running powers over the lines of railway now or hereafter comprised in the Canadian Northern System or any part or parts thereof, and the terms and conditions of every such Agreement shall be such as the parties thereto may agree upon, or in default of agreement, as may be settled by the Railway Board, and the Railway Board shall have power from time to time upon the application of the Governor in Council or of any party to any such agreement to vary, modify or rescind the same, provided always, that every such agreement shall be subject to any existing agreements with any other Company or Companies.

7. Covenants by the Government.

The Government covenants with the Canadian Northern that it will from time to time enter into agreements with the Canadian Northern or with any Constituent Company, giving running rights over such parts of the Government Railways as may be desired and the terms and conditions of every such agreement shall be such as the parties thereto may agree upon, or in default of agreement, as may be settled by the Railway Board and the Railway Board shall have power from time to time upon the application of the Governor in Council or of any party to any such agreement to vary, modify or rescind the same, provided always, that every such agreement shall be subject to any existing agreements with any other company or companies.

In witness whereof the Honourable acting on behalf of His Majesty the King hath hereunto set his hand and seal and the parties of the First, Second, Third and Fourth Parts hereto, being Corporations, have hereunto affixed their corporate seals by the hands of their proper officers, and the other parties hereto have hereunto affixed their hands and seals.

Schedule.

First Part.

Stocks to be transferred free from prior charges.

Bay of Quinte Railway Company	$ 1,395,000
Canadian Northern Pacific Railway Company	25,000,000
Canadian Northern Alberta Railway Company	3,000,000
Canadian Northern Western Railway Company	2,000,000
Canadian Northern Saskatchewan Railway Company	1,000,000
Canadian Northern Manitoba Railway Company	Total Issue.
Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Company	$10,000,000
Canadian Northern Quebec Railway Company	2,000,000
Canadian Northern System Terminals Company	2,000,000
Central Ontario Railway	3,329,000
Duluth, Winnipeg and Pacific Railway Company	3,060,000
Halifax and South Western Railway Company	1,000,000
Irondale, Brancroft and Ottawa Railway Company	53,000
Mount Royal Tunnel and Terminal Company, Ltd.	Total Issue.
Marmora Railway and Mining Company	$ 100,000
Northern Consolidated Holding Company	4,446,700
Quebec and lake St. John Railway Company	4,002,800
Qu'Appelle, L. L. and Saskachewan Railway Company	201,000

Schedule.

Second Part.

Mortgage Securities and Stocks to be Transferred Subject only to Charge Created by Perpetual Consolidated Debenture Stock Trust Deed of 30th June, 1903.

1. The Minnesota and Ontario Bridge Co.—Bond No. 1 for $100,00 face value, and Bond No. 2 for $80,000 face value, being Four and a half per cent First Mortgage Debenture Bonds, dated First of July, 1903, and registered in the name of the National Trust Company, Limited and the British Empire Trust Company, Limited (herein called the 'Trustees') as Trustees under the Trust Deed dated 30th June, 1903, made to secure the First Mortgage Four per cent Consolidated Debenture Stock and Bonds of the Canadian Northern Railway Company $180,000
Fully paid shares $100,000

2. The Minnesota and Manitoba Railway Co.—Three five per cent General Mortgage Bonds numbered 1 to 3 inclusive, dated 1st July, 1903, being to bonds for $100,000 each and one bond for $50,000 registered in the name of the Trustees $250,000
Fully paid shares 400,000

3. Lake Superior Terminals Co., Limited.—Ten First Mortgage five per cent Gold Bonds numbered 1 to 10 inclusive, of face value of $100,000 each dated 1st July, 1903, registered in the name of the Trustees $1,000,000
Fully paid shares 500,000

Lake Superior Terminals Company, Limited.—Five per cent Gold Bonds numbered 1 to 9 inclusive, secured by Trust Deed dated the 28th December, 1903, for the following respective amounts: numbers 1, 2, 4, and 6 for $100,000 each, numbers 3, 5, and 7, for $50,000 each, number 8 for $300,000 and number 9 for $150,000.. .. .. $1,000,000

4. Canadian Northern Telegraph Company.—Four five per cent Gold Bonds, numbered 1 to 4 inclusive for $200,000 each due June 30 1930 .. .. $800,000

Fully paid shares.. 500,000

5. Winnipeg Land Company Limited.—Three first Mortgage five per cent Gold Bonds, numbered 1 to 3 inclusive, face value $100,000 each, dated 1st July, 1903, and registered in the name of the Trustees.. .. .. $300,000

Fully paid shares.. 100,000

6. The Canadian Northern Coal & Ore Dock Company.—Five per cent First Mortgage Gold Bond No. 1, due 1st June, 1932, for £77,054,-15.11.. .. .. $375,000

7. The St. Boniface & Western Land Company.—Three five per cent Gold Bonds, numbered 1 to 3 inclusive, due 1st July, 1957, for $250,000 each, registered in the name of the Trustees.. .. .. $750,000

Fully paid shares.. 250,000

8. The Edmonton & Slave Lake Railway Company.—Four first mortgage five per cent Gold Bonds, numbered 1 to 4 inclusive, due 30th June, 1937, for $100,000 each and Bond No. 5 for $20,000.. .. .. $420,000

9. Canadian Northern Railway Express Company, Limited.—Three four per cent First Mortgage Gold Bonds, numbered 1 to 3 inclusive, due 1st December, 1960, face value $1,000,000 each, registered in the name of the Trustees.. .. .. $3,000,000

Fully paid shares.. 1,000,000

10. Canadian Northern Steamships, Limited. Certificate No. 2, Five per cent First Mortgage Debenture Stock, due 30th April, 1930, registered in the name of the National Trust Company, Limited.. .. .. £600,000

Fully paid shares.. .. .. $2,000,000

11. Canadian Northern System Terminals, Limited.—Certificate No. 1, First Mortgage Ninety-nine year Debenture Stock and Bonds, being equivalent of £1,438,356, secured by Trust Deed to the National Trust Company, Limited, and the British Empire Trust Company, Limited, dated 5th June, 1912.. .. $7,000,000

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is desirable that a brief statement of the situation, which confronts the country in connection with the Canadian Northern railway, and an explanation of the proposals which have been placed before the House, should be given before the House goes into Committee on this resolution.

The Canadian Northern railway had its beginning in 1896 in the construction of 100 miles of railway in the western part of the province of Manitoba, under the charter of a company known as the Lake Manitoba Railway and Canal Company. The enterprise of building this road had been undertaken in 1889, and those who sought to promote that enterprise had signally failed in their undertaking. Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann acquired the charter of the road and constructed it, and it was put into operation about 1896. Afterwards other roads from time to time were purchased, other charters were procured and additional mileage was constructed, so that the system at the present time extends into every province of Canada except, I think, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island.

The system has to-day in operation 7,236·51 miles; it has also under construction with track laid, but the road not in operation, 1,542·26 miles; it has grade completed, but no track yet laid, 850·52 miles; it has grade not completed but under contract, 230·08 miles; which gives a total of nearly 10,000 miles.

The status of the railway as a potential transcontinental railway was realized in Parliament, according to my recollection, as early as 1903 or 1904, and its status as such was definitely recognized in 1911 by chap. 6 of the statutes of that year. The following recital is to be found in that Act which provided for certain aid to the Canadian Northern Railway Company:

> Whereas, having regard to the growth of population and the rapid development of the production and trade of that portion of Canada lying west of the Great Lakes, and to the rapidly expanding trade and commerce of Canada generally, it is in the interests of Canada as a whole that another line of railway designed to assist in the direct and economic interchange of traffic between the eastern and western portions of Canada, to open up and develop portions as yet without railway facilities, to promote the internal and foreign trade of Canada, to develop commerce through Canadian ports, and to afford the Government system of railways in Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island an interchange of through traffic, should be constructed from the Pacific Ocean to the city of Montreal: And whereas the projected line of the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Company extending from Port Arthur to the city of Montreal will provide the uncompleted portion of the said through line lying north and east of the Great Lakes.

The statute last mentioned provided for a guarantee of bonds of the Canadian Northern railway from Montreal to Port Arthur, about 1,000 miles in length, to the amount of $35,000 per mile. By chapter 7 of the statutes of 1912 a guarantee of bonds of the same amount in respect of 115 miles in the province of Alberta, to the boundary of British Columbia, was also authorized.

The aid which has been granted to the company, whether in lands or in subsidies, whether by the federal Government or by the provincial governments or by municipalities, is set out at pages 10 and 13 of the printed documents which are upon the table of the House and which have been distributed among hon. gentlemen. From these documents it will also be seen that the total outstanding securities which have been issued by the Canadian Northern and its allied companies amount to $311,276,822.32. Of this total the sum of $58,042,248 has been guaranteed by the Dominion of Canada and the sum of $76,850,203 has been guaranteed by various provincial governments. The balance which amounts to $176,383,371 represents securities which have been issued but which have not been guaranteed by governments.

The most profitable portion of the road now in operation consists of the lines extending from Port Arthur to Edmonton, and these lines, as hon. gentlemen are aware, are for the most part situated within the three prairie provinces. These lines however, are to-day less profitable than they otherwise would be until the system is extended, on the one hand to the Pacific coast, and on the other hand to Quebec and Montreal, so as to be in touch with the great traffic which has already developed, and which will develop in still greater measure, in the future, upon the Pacific ocean, and to bring the road into touch with the great railway systems of Ontario and Quebec, and particularly the system of government railways, and the Canadian Pacific railway system, so far as it is situated within Quebec and the Maritime provinces.

The Canadian Northern system, so-called, comprises the Canadian Northern Railway Company which owns the lines in the prairie provinces, and various subsidiary or allied companies which are enumerated and set forth in the schedules to the resolution. The securities of many of these allied companies have been guaranteed by the Canadian Northern railway proper and thus the lines owned by the Canadian Northern railway proper in the prairie provinces, which undoubtedly are the profitable portion of the system from an operating standpoint, are vitally interested in the completion, extension and success of the whole system.

It became apparent some months ago that the enterprise could not be carried to a successful conclusion without further assistance. That assistance became necessary for various reasons, among which there was the financial stringency that for a year or eighteen months past has prevailed not only in Canada but—what is of more importance in this particular instance—in the great money markets of the world. The difficulty of making a successful flotation of issues already authorized and of further proposed issues was so great that it could not be attempted without the risk of absolute failure. In the meantime, those who were carrying on the operation of the road so far as already constructed and who were endeavouring to bring the completion of the system to a successful issue, were confronted with this condition. The ordinary current indebtedness of the system, more especially in connection with operation, had increased from $3,000,000, its normal amount, to nearly $11,000,000. It was found that nearly $11,000,000 of contractors' accounts remained unpaid and could not be met. In addition to this, Mackenzie and Mann Limited had raised $10,500,000 to meet outstanding contractors' accounts. Under these circumstances, the company have presented to the Government the statement, which is found on page 10 of the printed documents and which indicates the amount necessary to be provided in order that the road may be completed. It seems proper that at this juncture I should read that statement to the House in order that the situation presented to us may be clearly apparent to hon. gentlemen on both sides:

Canadian Northern Ry. System.

Requirements to Complete.

1. C.N.O. Ry., British Columbia section	$23,647,492
2. C.N. Ry., main line and branches already under construction	$15,042,896
3. C.N.O. Ry., Montreal-Port Arthur and Toronto-Ottawa.	$18,251,891
4. Canadian Northern Tunnel and Terminal Co., Montreal Terminals	$5,995,734
5. Rolling stock: Equipment for Transcontinental and maturing equipment notes.	$27,441,086
6. Betterments: Ballasting, permanent improvements, including heavy rails on balance main line	$10,000,000
		$100,379,099
Proceeds of securities which will be issued in respect to above expenditures and cash in trust accounts, for construction.
Canadian Northern Pacific Ry.: C.N.P. Ry. 4½% Deb. Stock and subsidy	$ 6,704,097
New Securities	4,854,500
C.N. Ry.: Proceeds of securities in hand and to be earned against above	$7,634,497
C.N.O. Ry.: Proceeds of securities in hand and subsidy to be earned	$16,788,822
Canadian Northern Tunnel and Terminal Co.: Proceeds of terminal securities	$ 5,995,734
Rolling stock, 4½% equipment bonds	$16,496,332
		58,473,982
Balance to be provided		$41,905,117

This balance of $41,905,117 must be provided for the completion of the road and for certain betterments which, as I understand, are absolutely required in the immediate future.

It may be asked why the $58,473,982, which is apparently available, cannot be used for the completion of the road. That seems to be a very natural question, and it is one which I myself asked when the statement was first presented to me. The explanation is very simple, namely, that both subsidies and proceeds of securities are not available until expenditure has been made which justifies payment by the Minister of Finance or by the trustees for the bond-holders in the case of other trust securities. Subsidies as well as the proceeds of securities which are raised by means of guarantees are paid out only in the proportion which the expenditure bears to the total estimated cost of the road; and in respect of this railway and of all railways, the construction of which is provided for in part by subsidies and in part by the proceeds of bonds and securities, there is necessary as well what may be called a working construction capital; that is, money has to be provided for carrying on the work of the road, and capital is necessary for that purpose before either the proceeds of the securities which are lodged with a trustee or the amount of the subsidies earned can be made available.

The procedure, as I understand it, is as follows. In the first place, the Government engineers inspect the road from time to time and satisfy themselves as to the amount of expenditure which has been made upon it. They also make an estimate of the total cost of the road when completed. The subsidies are paid out only in the proportion which the expenditure incurred bears to the total estimated cost, and the same is true of the proceeds of guaranteed securities, that is securities guaranteed by the Government of Canada, the proceeds of which are always deposited with the Minister of Finance and the Receiver General. They are paid out in the same way, so that, when the last of the subsidies are paid, and when the last of the proceeds of guaranteed securities are paid, the road must have reached completion. I have made inquiry of various provincial governments as to the character of the legislation under which they afforded assistance to the road by way of guarantees. They have informed me that the procedure is the same with them, namely that the proceeds of guaranteed securities are deposited with the provincial treasurer and are paid only in the same proportion as that which I have already indicated with regard to federal subsidies and securities guaranteed by the federal government. Practically the same procedure is followed in respect of unguaranteed securities as well. The proceeds of those securities are deposited with the trustee for the bond-holders and are paid out by him only in the proportion which the amount actually expended, according to the report of the engineers, bears to the total estimated cost of the whole road. Therefore, while there were $58,473,982 of securities and subsidies apparently available, the difficulty with which the company found itself confronted was that, those subsidies not having been earned and the proceeds of those guaranteed securities not having been earned, it was impossible to apply those moneys to the construction of the road until further expenditures should have taken place thereon.

The extraordinary financial conditions above alluded to account in part, as I have said, for the need of further assistance, and the fact that the securities available cannot be sold at a reasonable price must also be taken into account. In addition to this there is undoubtedly an increased cost of the road due, as I am informed, and as I believe, after having made pretty careful inquiries into the matter, to two considerations: in the first place to a very decided advance in the price of labour and material during the past five or six years, and in the second place to the fact that a higher standard of construction has been adopted than that which was at first anticipated.

Now, the situation which was presented to the Government was not without its difficulties. The credit of the Dominion and of the several provinces had been pledged in very large amounts by the guarantee of securities. It had to be taken into account, and we did take it into account, that besides this the sum of nearly $180,000,000 was outstanding in unguaranteed securities, that that money had been invested in this enterprise by people who may have been influenced, and undoubtedly were influenced, by the fact that the road was recognized as a great transcontinental railway in Canada, and further, by the fact that the road had received very substantial assistance, not only from the federal Government, but from the provincial governments, both in subsidies and by the guarantee of securities. My attention was called recently to an article in the Journal of Commerce of Montreal, under date of 6th May, which is not only entitled to respect by reason of the fact that a gentleman who has been very eminent in the public life of Canada for many years is supposed to preside over the editorial utterances of that journal—I refer to Hon. W. S. Fielding—but also is notable for the expression of opinion which it gives with regard to the duty of the Government in respect of the completion of this transcontinental railway. I will not read the whole article, but a portion of it might very well be quoted at this juncture:

No doubt many members on both sides of the House share the widespread feeling that both Dominion and provincial Legislatures have distributed aid in cash, land and guarantees to the railway companies with a rather lavish hand, and that there should be a slowing down, if, indeed, not a halt, in this generous policy. That members entertaining these views should be inclined to set their faces against further assistance to the Canadian Northern is quite natural. But there is another side to the question that must be considered by all who have a sense of responsibility.

Whether the railway aid policies of the past have been too generous; whether governments, in their desire to provide for the railway needs of the opening west, have moved too rapidly; whether it was wise to become involved in the construction of a third transcontinental railway, while the second was still far from completion—these are questions upon which as one looks back at the events of the last few years, there may easily be room for wide difference of opinion. But such differences would not be sufficient ground for a refusal to face the conditions of the present time.

The affairs of a great railway company, which owes its existence to the encouragement given by Government and Parliament, become so interwoven with the general interests of the country, and particularly with the public credit in the money markets of the world, that it becomes impossible to regard them as matters of private concern. There was a time when the Canadian Pacific, with all the aid it had received, found itself in a critical position. The Government had to come to its aid, and although their action in so doing did not escape adverse criticism there will be few if any to say to-day that the help should not have been granted. The Grand Trunk Pacific has already more than once had to seek assistance. At this moment it is representing that, owing to the very large increase in the cost of labour, materials and supplies, the earlier estimates of the cost of the division which the company are building have been greatly exceeded, and that therefore the Government should make the public aid proportionately larger. The Canadian Northern, under one name or another, is operating in almost every province of Canada. Its financial stability is a matter of importance to a very large number of corporations and individuals with whom it has had dealings, and also to the public interests represented by Dominion and provincial Governments.

To allow the concern to fail in its finances and leave the various railway lines in an unfinished state would be a national calamity that could not be seriously contemplated by any one possessed of a due sense of responsibility. The company, if it is in difficulty, as is alleged, must be helped, and the only questions to be considered are the form and extent of the assistance and the proper means of protecting, as far as that may be possible, the Dominion in the way of security for the aid to be given.

Now, Mr. Speaker, many suggestions have naturally been made to the Government in connection with the action to be taken under the circumstances which have been brought to our attention. I start with a premise with which I think every hon. gentleman in this House will agree, and that is that that system cannot be allowed to remain uncompleted. To leave a road upon which so much money has been expended, into which so much of the money of this Dominion and of the provinces has been poured, a road which has been endorsed by the financial guarantees, not only of the federal but of provincial governments—to leave that with two thousand or two thousand five hundred miles of road necessary to link up the whole system, in an unfinished condition, is a proposition to which no hon. gentleman on either side of the House would give his support and sanction. It was suggested to us, however, that the road should be allowed to go into liquidation, that its finances should be reorganized with a view to cutting down the amount of unguaranteed securities. I am free to admit that that proposal never commended itself to my judgment; and I say that, inasmuch as Canada is to-day in that condition of progress and development which makes it absolutely necessary that we should resort almost continuously to the money markets of the world, a saving of $30,000,000 or $40,000,000 or $50,000,000, if that were possible by that method, would in the end result in the loss of tenfold that sum to this country in view of its possible progress and development. It was apparent, as I have said, that the road could not remain uncompleted. It constitutes a part of a great projected transcontinental system and its traffic over the lines in operation has developed wonderfully during the last half dozen years and especially in the western provinces. To leave it uncompleted would retard the progress of this country for at least a generation; and as far as I can discern the situation, even if the road went into liquidation it could not be brought to completion within a reasonable delay unless this country should come to its assistance by some such measure as this. Therefore, it seemed to us that under proper stipulations and under proper safeguards it was not only desirable but necessary for the country at this time to give such assistance as would insure the completion of that road at an early day.

Certain arguments against any assistance to the road were based also upon the connection of Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann with this enterprise. The undertaking, on which they embarked in 1896, and which had its inception in the construction of 100 miles of railway in the province of Manitoba, has gradually developed into the proposed construction of a great national transcontinental system. I am free to confess that I think it would have been better, when the idea of that enterprise became fixed in the minds of Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann, if they, by means of their large holdings of common stock and by their almost sole proprietorship of the enterprise, had seen fit in years gone by to associate themselves with large financial interests which, I think, could have been brought into the enterprise, so that the condition which confronts the country at this time might not have been before us to-day. I am saying no more here in Parliament than I have said, in terms even franker than those I have used here, to both Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann.

But there was more than that. It has been asserted in the press and in the corridors of this House, and noised abroad throughout the country that large sums of money which have been raised for the purposes of this undertaking, through federal or provincial government guarantees, and by means of unsecured bonds, have been appropriated not to the purpose for which they were raised but to the private enterprises of Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann. It is needless to say that if any such condition as that could be found to prevail, it would demand immediate and drastic action by the Government and by Parliament. Further than that, it was alleged that Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann, as contractors for construction, had made very large profits out of the enterprise. Finally it was charged that the moneys raised, whether by Dominion guarantees, provincial guarantees, or without guarantees, had been improvidently expended or wasted. We thought it our duty, under the circumstances, to have the books and records of the system and, so far as it was necessary, other books and records investigated for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not there was any truth in the charge that moneys raised for the purpose of constructing this railway had been diverted to other enterprises. I am bound to say that the evidence which we have received, through the examination, inquiry and report of the expert auditors appointed by the Government, leads us to the conclusion that not one single dollar of the moneys raised has been diverted by Sir William Mackenzie or Sir Donald Mann to any other enterprise or appropriated to any other purpose than the construction of this road. We also felt it our duty to investigate, and we did investigate, the question as to whether or not profits had been rereceived by Mackenzie and Mann in respect of construction and whether or not the moneys expended had been prudently and providently used in the prosecution of the work. I think the extent of work which has been done and the amount which has been expended upon it, when contrasted with the results which have obtained in the case of other similar enterprises, whether in this country or in the United States, would reasonably lead one to the conclusion that the money has been prudently and providently and wisely expended. So far as profits are concerned, I have already placed upon the table of the House the report of the auditors, which indicate that no profits have been received by Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann out of the construction of the road; that they have been acting for some years past as construction agents for the Canadian Northern Railway system; that the only remuneration or compensation which they have received for their services up to the present time has been the allocation to them of common stock; but that they would, unless a safeguard had been provided by the resolution now proposed, have been legally entitled to a claim against the Canadian Northern Railway system of $15,000,000, $20,000,000 or perhaps $25,000,000 for the services which they have rendered, upon the ordinary basis of computation which I understand is applied to such cases. In saying that I desire hon. gentlemen in this House to realize that these two gentlemen have devoted 18 years of their lives almost entirely to the prosecution of this enterprise, which already has attained an important status in the transportation system of this country, and I think it will be admitted that they have brought to the prosecution of the work which they have undertaken an amount of ability and energy and skill which, perhaps, has not been exceeded in this country or in any other country in connection with the carrying on of such enterprises.

In addition to the report of the auditors, to which I have already alluded, we have a declaration from the comptroller of the company, Mr. Alfred James Mitchell, of the city of Toronto, who has had charge of the accounts and records of the Canadian Northern railway and of the Mackenzie and Mann Company, Limited, and who has peculiar means of knowing of the matters in respect of which he deposes in this declaration. It is as follows:

In the matter of the Canadian Northern Railway Company and of Mackenzie, Mann and Company, Limited.

I, Alfred James Mitchell, of the city of Toronto, in the county of York, Esquire, do solemnly declare:

That I am the comptroller of MacKenzie, Mann and Company, Limited, and as such have a knowledge of the facts hereinafter stated.

MacKenzie, Mann and Company, Limited, have acted as contractors for the Canadian Northern Railway Company in the construction of certain of its lines and of certain allied lines, as per schedule 'A' attached hereto.

It will not be necessary for me to read the schedule. (Reading):

In connection with the construction to date of such lines, I say that to the best of my knowledge and belief and according to the books kept by me as such comptroller, no contractors' profits or percentage had been received directly or indirectly by Mackenzie, Mann and Company, Limited, or by any other person on their behalf or for their profit, save and except certain fully paid common stock of the said Canadian Northern Railway Company and of its allied lines issued to them from time to time, the question as to payment for services or profits being left open for future adjustment.

The moneys received to December 31, 1913, by Mackenzie, Mann and Company, Limited, for railway construction as aforesaid amount in all to the sum of two hundred and twenty three million, four hundred and seven thousand, six hundred and forty one dollars and ninety eight cents ($223,407,641.98) and the whole of the moneys so received have been paid out by the Mackenzie, Mann and Company, Limited, for construction of the said railway lines leaving no profit to them other than the said common stock.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing it to be true and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act.

Declared before me at the city of Ottawa, in the county of Carleton, this twenty first day of April, A.D. 1914.

A. J. Mitchell

Z. A. Lash,
A Commissioner for taking affidavits, etc.

[Mr. Borden.]

In addition to the suggestion to which I have already alluded, it has been alleged that although Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann did not make any profits either individually or under the corporate status of the Mackenzie and Mann Company, Limited, they did make profits out of the enterprise as proprietors of or as interested in a construction company known as the Northern Construction Company, Limited, and that the secret of the profits alleged to have been received by them lay in their connection with that company. We have been furnished with an original declaration, which is in the possession of the Government, a copy of which I will lay upon the table of the House. It is as follows:

Dominion of Canada, province of Ontario, county of York, To Wit:

In the matter of The Northern Construction Company, Limited.

We, Alexander Robert Mann, of the city of Vancouver, in the province of British Columbia, and Archibald Mackenzie, and Charles Cummings, both of the city of Winnipeg, in the province of Manitoba, do and each of us doth hereby declare:

1. That we are President, Vice-President and Secretary-Treasurer respectively of the Northern Construction Company, Limited.

2. That we have full knowledge of all the affairs of said company.

3. That neither Mackenzie, Mann and Company, Limited, nor any shareholder or director in such company, nor Sir William MacKenzie, nor Sir Donald Mann, have any interest of any kind whatsoever, directly or indirectly, in the Northern Construction Company, Limited, or in its capital stock, or in its property or assets of any description, or in any profits or earnings resulting from the company's operations, contracts, or works.

And we make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing it to be true and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act.

A. R. Mann,
A. Mackenzie,
C. Cummings.

Declared before me at the city of Toronto, in the county of York, this ninth day of May, A.D. 1914.

Gerald Ruel,
A notary public in and for the Province of Ontario.

I am not concerned here to speak in any sense on behalf of Mackenzie and Mann, Limited, or Sir William Mackenzie, or Sir Donald Mann. The question that we have to discuss and consider in Parliament at this juncture is one which transcends the interest of any individual in the country. It is a national question and one which must be looked at from a national standpoint only. It is, however, proper to say that it has been represented to us that

Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann have put into this enterprise very large assets which they might, under the law of the land, have retained for their own benefit in the early stages of the development of this system. The Lake Manitoba Railway and Canal Company was, I think, the name of the company whose charter they first acquired. Then came the Winnipeg and Hudson Bay railway and the Manitoba and Southeastern Railway Company, and perhaps some other companies in Manitoba. It is fair to say that the charters of these companies had gone begging for half a dozen years before Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann took hold of them, and during all those years no man had ever come forward to carry out the particular enterprises in connection with these companies which Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann did carry out. It is perfectly well understood by hon. gentlemen in this House familiar with such matters that these charters carried with them large land grants, and that it would have been possible for any man in Canada to have acquired those charters and, by the construction of those roads, to have acquired the lands which were granted as a subsidy in aid of that construction if he had seen fit to do so. Mr. Mackenzie and Mr. Mann came forward and acquired those charters and, by the construction of the roads, acquired also lands of very great extent, amounting, I think, to over four million acres in all, which at the time when they were acquired were probably of very little value and possibly could not have been sold at all, but which eventually, through the development and progress of the country, have acquired a very substantial and indeed a very large value.

I think it ought to be said in justice to these men that all those lands, which under the law of the land they might have retained if they had desired to do so as their own property absolutely, were not retained by them, with the exception, I believe, of one hundred thousand acres, but were placed into this enterprise. The amount already realized from these lands is $17,000,000 and upwards, which has been added to the assets of the Canadian Northern Railway system. There is enough of these lands left to provide, at current prices, something like $12,000,000 more. So it ought to be said, in fairness to these men, that, having the right to retain these lands and to retire from railway construction as men with very large fortunes, they had the ambition to construct a great national transcontinental railway system and into that system they placed the $29,000,000 of assets to which I have just alluded, being the proceeds of the lands which they acquired from the construction of those three lines of railway. I have no doubt that the original idea and ambition of these gentlemen was to make large fortunes out of the construction of railways, and that they did not have in their minds any idea of constructing the great transcontinental system which is almost complete to-day. But it would seem to me that the course taken by them indicates that many years ago the mere idea of making a large fortune out of this enterprise ceased to be their sole purpose; that they did desire as well to build a transcontinental railway line which would be an important factor in the railway development of this country.

In connection with their idea of building a national transcontinental railway system this also may fairly be said. I have heard it charged against them that if they had been contented simply to develop their lines in the three Prairie provinces and not to reach out to the West, they would have had a very profitable railway system in western Canada and one which would have been of very great service to the country. I think it is only fair that I should give it to the House that their idea in making their eastern extension was that, previously to the projection of the Grand Trunk Pacific railway, they had in eastern Canada a road, the Grand Trunk railroad, with no western connections, with which they could make a working arrangement and provide for an interchange of traffic upon reasonable terms. But when the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway project was brought about they found themselves confronted with this situation: They had to meet the competition of two great railway systems reaching into the east as well as into the west of Canada, and so they would have been isolated in their operations, they would have been handicapped and might have been oppressed. For the reason that the second transcontinental railway was launched in that way they had the belief, whether it was right or wrong, that, in the very nature of things, it was essential for them to press on into eastern Canada.

It was necessary also for us to go into the question of future earnings and future expenditures, for betterments or otherwise, because these betterments would undoubtedly be necessary even if the road should be completed. The anticipation of the company as to earnings after the completion of the system is to be found on page 14 of the printed documents, and upon the same page is to be found a statement of the earnings of the company during the last fiscal year. In considering the possibility of the system acquiring earning power sufficient to meet its total fixed charges, we sought the advice of engineering and traffic experts of the Intercolonial railway. It is obvious that the future earning power of the system will depend on the progress and development of the country and the future expenditures for betterments on traffic necessities. While it is possible that the expectations of the company, which are very sanguine, may not be realized, it must, nevertheless, be remembered that the system at present has an earning power equal to that of the Canadian Pacific railway in 1901, and if the country develops in the future as in the past, of which we can have no reasonable doubt, the earning power of the system may be expected to increase accordingly. More than that, we are informed that the line from Montreal to Port Arthur and from Edmonton to the Pacific coast is of a high character, and will lend itself to low operating charges.

The main consideration which influenced us in placing these proposals before the House was the necessity for the completion of the road. We were impressed by the fact that liquidation must involve long and serious delay in the completion of the enterprise, and must materially retard the development of the country. We were impressed by the fact that such liquidation would impose serious charges and burdens not only upon the federal exchequer, but upon the provincial treasuries. We were impressed by the fact that very large sums, amounting to many millions, were owing to contractors, subcontractors, merchants, material men, and labourers throughout Canada. And we were impressed also by this fact: that a reasonable confidence in the future development of the country should lead to the belief that the enterprise could be carried to a successful conclusion. It has been suggested that adequate provision has not been made in the resolutions which we propose for the payment of contractors and labourers. So far as labour is concerned, there is already in chapter 98 of the Revised Statutes of Canada most ample provision. So far as the resolutions are concerned, although I do not intend to go into any argument upon that point at the moment, I may call the attention of hon. gentlemen to the fact that under clause 6 of the resolutions it is provided that the dispositions of the moneys to be raised by means of the guaranteed securities shall be such as the Governor in Council approves; and we shall take care that all contractors, material men and others who have made advances or to whom debts are owing shall be fully protected in connection with the completion of this road.

The road when completed will have an indebtedness of about $40,000 a mile, and fixed charges of $1,600 per mile, which I think will compare very favourably with other systems in this country and the United States. Undoubtedly, if conditions had permitted it, it would have been desirable to organize a new corporation which would take over the assets and undertakings of all the various companies which form part of the system. We are convinced, however, that by reason of the methods of financing adopted in the past, the great variety of securities issued, and for similar reasons which seemed cogent to us, it is impossible to accomplish this at the present moment. Nevertheless, we required, so far as it was practicable, that all the lines constituting the system should be brought under one management, and in effect amalgamated. The method which has been adopted accomplishes this result in effect while at the same time it does not affect the priority of charges or liens which have been created in the past, and which eventually may, under some refunding arrangement, be arranged so as to permit the entire ownership of the lines to be vested in one corporation. In that regard I would like to say that the Government have been careful to see that every security which could have been made available through amalgamation, has been acquired.

4 p.m.

The total capitalization of the various companies amounts to $138,500,000, and further proposed capitalization of the Montreal Terminals and of the Canadian Northern Manitoba railway would bring that amount up to about $145,000,000. The total capitalization of the system has been reduced to $100,000,000 by the following method: The stock of all the subsidiary and constituent companies—to which I shall allude as the allied companies—has been transferred to the Canadian Northern railway, and the capitalization of that company has been fixed at $100,000,000. The several companies are prohibited from any further issue of stock.

The proposed issue of $45,000,000 is to be made by the Canadian Northern railway—the parent company to which all the stock of the allied companies is to be transferred—and the Government is to be safeguarded against any liability upon this guarantee by the following securities:

1. A mortgage upon the undertaking, property, assets and revenues of the Canadian Northern railway, which comprises some 5,350 miles, extending between Port Arthur and Edmonton, and includes numerous branches in the three prairie provinces.

2. A mortgage or charge upon the properties and assets of the allied companies to the extent to which any of the moneys raised by the guaranteed securities may be appropriated and paid for construction or betterment of their respective undertakings.

3. A mortgage or charge upon the shares of the allied companies now transferred to the Canadian Northern.

4. A charge upon all the securities and stocks enumerated in the second schedule, and a first charge upon the Brockville and Westport railway—a small railway of about 45 miles.

5. A charge upon the equity of redemption of Mackenzie, Mann and Company, Limited, in $10,000,000 of capital stock, and $10,000,000 of first debenture stock in the Canadian Northern Town Properties, Limited.

Some further explanation may be given at a later date with regard to the value of that security. We regard it as very valuable security indeed.

In addition to twenty-one million dollars now owing in respect of construction, the Canadian Northern and its allied companies have incurred liabilities to the extent of $20,703,865—as shown on page 112 of the documents brought down—upon temporary loans secured by the deposit or pledge of securities which under present conditions are not saleable at a reasonable price.

The fourth section of the resolution provides that covenants or undertakings to the satisfaction of the Government shall be given by Mackenzie and Mann, Limited; that these loans shall be paid, and that no proceedings against the Canadian Northern or any of the allied companies shall be taken in respect thereof. Our idea in that regard is this: we are guaranteeing $45,000,000 worth of securities, as asked for by the memorandum which I read to the House in the early portion of my remarks, to ensure the completion of this road. When we found that these temporary loans were outstanding to the extent mentioned, that they were secured merely by the pledge of certain bonds and debentures, we made it a stipulation that these temporary loans should be taken care of by Mackenzie and Mann—not by the country—and that the proceeds of the $45,000,000 of guaranteed securities should be available for the completion of the road, and not used to pay off these temporary loans.

In addition to this indebtedness it has been found that the current indebtedness of the Canadian Northern and allied companies, the normal amount of which would be in the vicinity of three million dollars, has risen to the sum of $10,408,128.30. The Government have exacted a stipulation—which is to be found in the fifth clause of the resolution—that security to the satisfaction of the Government shall be given by Mackenzie and Mann and by Mackenzie, Mann and Company, Limited—not only their own covenant, but such further security as the Government may demand—that this indebtedness will, within one year, be reduced to the normal or usual current amount, which is to be determined by the minister, and that in the meantime no proceedings shall be taken against the company for payment of the same. The giving of such guarantees or securities in respect of the temporary loans and of the current indebtedness are made conditions precedent to any guarantee by the Government.

We have also provided by clause 9 of the resolution that the books, returns, reports and other records of the Canadian Northern and allied companies shall at all times be accessible and open to inspection by competent experts appointed by the Government.

In that connection and for a similar reason, we have provided that the Government shall have authority to appoint a director of the Canadian Northern and a director of each of the allied companies, and that the Government shall have power to remove any such director and to appoint another director in his stead. Such director shall have the power to cause meetings of directors or shareholders to be held at any time, and in that way we believe that the Government will be kept fully in touch with and fully acquainted with the proposals of the management and the condition of the undertaking from time to time.

For further safeguard we have also provided that the company shall, within five months after the close of each fiscal year, furnish to the Government a balance sheet showing the financial condition of the Canadian Northern Railway System for the year then completed.

As the system has long since assumed the status of a transcontinental railway, we considered it important that all companies whose lines are included in the system should be brought within the legislative jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada and made subject to the control of the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada. This has been accomplished by section 15 of the Bill, which will follow the resolution. My hon. friend from South Renfrew (Mr. Graham) urged that point upon us, when certain proposals affecting this company were under consideration by Parliament last year. We have thought it desirable that this provision should be inserted, not only with regard to the company to which he called attention then, and which indeed was the only company under consideration at the time, but that it should also be applied to all those companies which are not at present subject to the legislative jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada and which form part of the Canadian Northern system.

The Government have thought it desirable in the public interest and for the reasons already stated, that the road should not be permitted to go into liquidation. Nevertheless, as the contingent liability which is imposed upon the people of the country by the proposals which are now before the House is a substantial one, we have held it to be reasonable that the people of this country, lending their credit for the completion of this enterprise, should also directly participate in any profits and advantages of the enterprise if it is carried to a successful completion. Therefore, in fixing the total capitalization of the Canadian Northern Railway system at $100,000,000 we have required that $40,000,000 thereof shall be absolutely vested in the Government as trustees for the people of Canada who will thus participate in any value which may eventually accrue through the progress and development of the country. I venture to say that there is no man in this House or in this country who will deny that the people of Canada, in coming to the assistance of this enterprise at this juncture, are reasonably entitled to the compensation which we have asked for in these proposals and upon which we intend to insist. The capitalization of the whole system, when these negotiations commenced, stood approximately at $145,000,000 of which $138,000,000 were held by Mackenzie and Mann and $7,000,000 were held by the Government. In consideration of the assistance now afforded to the enterprise, this capitalization has been reduced to $100,000,000 of which $60,000,000 are held by the former proprietors and $40,000,000 are held by the Government. The stock of Mackenzie and Mann has thus been reduced by $68,000,000 and the stock of the Government has been increased by $33,000,000. To permit the road to go into liquidation would not only injure seriously the credit of all Canadian enterprises and of Canada itself for many years, but would involve long delay in the completion of the enterprise.

Mr. MACDONALD: Before the right hon. gentleman leaves that question of stock, I would like to understand what the effect of subsection I of section 12 of the agreement has, in providing for the issue of $25,000,000 additional stock for the purpose of retiring income.

Mr. BORDEN: I had omitted to mention that, and of course, as far as most of the details are concerned, we can more conveniently discuss them in Committee. My understanding of that is this: that among the securities which have been issued by Mackenzie and Mann, Limited, were Income Convertible Debenture Stock, to the amount of $25,000,000. I understand that in case of liquidation it would be a charge upon the enterprise, but that the interest payable upon it is not a charge except in so far as the directors may declare that the income has been earned. If, for example, it should be declared that the income has not been earned during a certain period, then the income for that particular period would not be recoverable, by the holders of the stock; in other words, it is not cumulative. Twenty-five million dollars of that description of stock has been issued with an option covering a certain period during which it can be exchanged for ordinary stock. There is in the resolutions a provision, which has been alluded to by my hon. friend, that if those who hold at the present time the income convertible debenture stock, to the amount of $25,000,000, should desire to make that exchange, then ordinary stock may be issued by the company for the requisite amount, in which case a corresponding amount of income convertible debenture stock will be wiped out.

Mr. MACDONALD: In addition to the $100,000,000 ?

Mr. BORDEN: In addition to the $100,000,000; it is a change of form. If those who hold that stock desire to do so, they may, within a limited period, which I understand it is the intention of the Canadian Northern to extend, exchange that for ordinary stock. It will be merely an exchange, a substitution of one stock for another already in existence.

Mr. CARVELL: Is that $25,000,000 of income charge convertible debenture stock included in the securities issued, and mentioned at page 32, amounting to $312,000,000?

Mr. BORDEN: I am informed by the Solicitor General that it is. In connection with the importance of the early completion of the road, I may say that I have received certain communications, which have been placed on the table of the House, and it might be proper that I should read them now. They are communications from the Prime Ministers of four of the provinces. The first one in order of date is a communication from the Hon. George H. Murray, Premier of Nova Scotia, and it is as follows:

Halifax, N.S., March 14, 1914.

Hon. R. L. Borden,
Prime Minister,
Ottawa.

Nova Scotia Government realizes that Canadian Northern contributed very largely to railway development in this province, operating at present over four hundred miles. We feel that this progressive railway situation could only have been brought about by the enterprise of such a concern, and the province, by reason of accepting their guaranteed bonds for large sums is vitally interested in the future of this company. Government feels that any reasonable assistance consistent with public interests that can be accorded by the Dominion to the Canadian Northern would be a policy which would be acceptable to our people as it would enhance provincial credit.

(Sgd) G. H. Murray.

Then, there is a telegram from Sir Richard McBride, as follows:

Victoria, B.C., March 16, 1914.

Rt. Hon. R. L. Borden,
Prime Minister,
Ottawa, Ont.

Press reports state that you say no agreement has been arrived at with the Canadian Northern. You will be interested to learn that operations of this company from Alberta to coast and Vancouver island are of highly satisfactory nature. Main line from Yellow Head pass to coast is magnificent piece of construction and am advised provides finest route on continent with lowest grades. Their work has been thoroughly carried out, roadbed and steel of finest order. Expenditure to date here in excess $36,000.000, and contract with provincial Government well lived up to. Considering whole undertaking of national importance do not hesitate to say, if representations made you for aid to enable them to complete at once arrangements for first-class transcontinental service are based on fair, reasonable grounds, there should be ample justification in extending support. Canadian Northern cost approximately $70,000 per mile in British Columbia. Province granted this session additional $10,000 per mile to original $35,000 for main line. These with $12,000 from Dominion still leave balance $23,000 added to which, in the light of past experience, must be large initial expenditure for final completion and equipment in order to carry on first-class service.

(Sgd) R. McBride.

The next letter is from the Hon. J. A. Calder, acting premier of the province of Quebec, under date of Ottawa, April 17, 1914:

Dear Mr. Borden:

As I have been advised that you are not expected to return to Ottawa until next Monday or Tuesday, and as I must leave for the West on Friday, I regret that I shall not have another opportunity of discussing with you the question of further federal aid to the Canadian Northern Railway Company. Since our last conference I have given the matter a good deal of consideration and now wish to communicate to you briefly the general conclusions I have reached.

As I understand the situation, the company in question has made application to your Government for further Dominion aid, chiefly, if not solely, on the ground that such aid is required to enable it to complete and put into operation its main line through British Columbia and east of Port Arthur, thereby providing the necessary outlets for the network of branch lines which the company has constructed throughout the prairie regions.

Regarding the necessity which may exist for the assistance applied for I have no opinion to offer as I have no knowledge of the facts. On the other hand, however, it appears to me that there can be no room for a difference of opinion as to the desirability of having the company carry to completion its through lines at the earliest possible date, more especially as these eastern and western outlets for the products of the prairies have already been largely provided for and are approaching completion.

I have already given you my views with respect to the absolute necessity which exists for the immediate construction of additional branch railways in Saskatchewan. If you desire confirmation of the same I would refer you to the recent decision of the Board of Railway Commissioners in the western freight rates case. The whole question was investigated thoroughly by the board and their conclusions, as well as their reasons therefore will be found embodied in their report.

Viewing the matter, therefore, from this standpoint, it seems to me that if there is any likelihood that the Canadian Northern railway, on account of the magnitude of its through line undertakings may without additional federal assistance, be left in such a position as to compel it to curtail or hold back its branch line development, the loss to western Canada would be very great indeed.

At present we have thousands of settlers who have been patiently waiting for some of these lines for years, and it would be exceedingly unfortunate, under conditions now prevailing, should there be any further delay in providing the branches required.

To sum up, therefore, it seems to me that not only the West but the whole of Canada is directly interested in the early completion of the through lines of the Canadian Northern railway, as well as the building of those branches so urgently required through large settlements that are at present without adequate railway facilities. If, therefore, upon thorough investigation by your Government, it is ascertained that the company in question must have further federal aid to enable it to complete the undertakings to which it and the country are already committed, it appears to me that there is but one course to follow, namely, to grant the aid required.

Yours truly,
(Sgd) J. A. Calder.

Then there is a further telegram, under date of March 20, 1914, from the Hon. A. L. Sifton, Premier of Alberta, which is in the following words:

Paris, 20th March, 1914.

Premier Borden,
Ottawa, Canada.

With present financial conditions would consider advisable federal guarantee with proper safeguards sufficient to ensure early completion and operation main line Canadian Northern. Prosperity settlers on present and prospective branch lines Alberta and West generally should be greatly enhanced by early completion.

(Sgd) Arthur L. Sifton.

I have already stated that, for the reasons indicated, we thought the road should not be permitted to go into liquidation. The country, however, may be confronted with conditions in the future which will render prompt and vigorous action necessary. We have made provision for immediate and summary action in case default shall be made by the company in the payment of the securities now proposed to be guaranteed, or of any of the securities of the Canadian Northern Railway Company or its allied companies. The definition of default is set forth in the 21st clause of the resolution; and by the 22nd and subsequent clauses it is, in effect, provided that, if such default takes place, the Governor in Council may, upon such notice as he deems expedient, declare vacant the offices of the directors of the Canadian Northern Railway Company, or of any of the allied companies, and may appoint a new board or boards, upon which very extraordinary powers are proposed to be conferred. Among such powers are the creation of any additional securities, the making of arrangements with the holders of any outstanding securities, and the transfer, with or without compensation, of the Canadian Northern system, or any part thereof (subject to then existing charges) to any corporation created by the Parliament of Canada for the purpose.

It is also provided by clause 24 that, if authorized by the Parliament of Canada, the Governor in Council may, in case of default, declare that the interest of Mackenzie and Mann, in the Canadian Northern Railway system is absolutely barred and foreclosed, and that all the properties and assets thereof, subject to any outstanding obligations, shall thereupon vest in the Crown in the right of the people of Canada

So if, as apprehended in some quarters, the road cannot, with the assistance now afforded, be brought to a successful conclusion, the Government and Parliament of Canada will have the situation in hand better than by any possible method at the present time. In effect we propose to provide in the first place that a certain amount shall be available for the early and immediate completion of the road, and, if the road is not carried to completion by means of that aid, then the people of Canada, through their Government and Parliament, are enabled in the most effective and vigorous way to grasp the situation, and carry to completion, for their own benefit, one of the great transcontinental railway systems of Canada.

Some features of the agreement should also be called to the attention of the House. Prominent amongst these is the release of all claims for contractors' profits, commissions or otherwise, against the Canadian Northern railway. The provision to which I wish to call attention, and which is, in my opinion, a very important one, will be found at page 19 of the Orders of the Day. That clause reads as follows:

That the contractors—

Which includes Mackenzie and Mann as a corporation and Mackenzie and Mann individually.

—will not at any time make or seek to enforce any claim for contractors' profits commissions, or otherwise against the Canadian Northern, or against any of the constituent or subsidiary companies, upon or in respect of any express or implied contract, understanding, agreement, or stipulation of any kind, heretofore or hereafter made, whereby or whereunder they, or any one or more of them, may now or hereafter be entitled to receive from the Canadian Northern, or from any of the constituent or subsidiary companies any construction profits, in respect of work heretofore undertaken, or as consideration for transfers of properties, rights of franchises already transferred, or to be transferred under sub-clauses (a) and (b) of this clause, or for commission or remuneration for services in financing, or for any other services heretofore rendered, and all such claims are hereby by them and each of them absolutely renounced and released.

We insisted upon that provision for the reason that although we then believed, and still believe, that Mackenzie and Mann had an absolute legal claim against the Canadian Northern railway and the constituent companies for a very large sum of money, yet in view of the large holdings of common stock which they have acquired, and in view of the assistance which the country at the present time is bringing to the enterprise, it was no more than fair that they should give the absolute and unqualified release which is embodied in this clause.

The agreement also provides that all freight originating on the line of the Canadian Northern railway or any of the allied companies when destined for points in Canada shall be carried over Canadian lines, or if destined for points outside of Canada, to Canadian ports, and that the through rates thereon shall not be greater than via United States ports. In this provision we have not inserted the qualification which has been inserted on a previous occasion 'Unless otherwise routed by the shipper.' The condition as it stands in the resolution and as it has been assented to by the Canadian Northern railway is absolute and unqualified.

Provision is also made for the exchange of traffic with the Intercolonial railway, subject to existing agreements, and for running rights over the Canadian Northern railway upon such terms as shall be agreed upon and fixed by the Board of Railway Commissioners of Canada.

Now, I wish to come to the financial details set forth in the statement furnished by the Canadian Northern railway and verified by reports of the Government's auditors. In respect of these, the following explanation may be given:

The amount of outstanding securities, given at pages 32 and 33 is $311,276,822.32. In another portion of the printed document brought down the amount of securities reported by the auditors is fixed at something over $312,000,000. I will not pause to explain that apparent discrepancy, but a full explanation will be given when we reach that part of the agreement. The total proceeds as shown at page 33 of the printed documents are $246,768,389.16. The difference between these two sums is made up as follows:

1. Securities used directly in the purchase of equipment. (Item 17 at page 30 shows that there has been spent for equipment $23,746,000.)

2. Securities not sold but delivered in connection with the purchase of other lines; securities which do not take the form of money coming into the hands of any trustee or into the hands of Mackenzie and Mann, Limited.

3. Securities not sold but delivered for acquisition of prior liens on loans purchased.

4. The discount, that is the difference between the amount realized and par value.

I have already made an explanation with regard to the payment of subsidies and the payment of proceeds of securities which I intended to make also at this juncture, but I think I have made the position clear to the House and need not repeat. Coming to page 26 of the printed documents, it will be seen that the total receipts by the Mackenzie and Mann Company, Limited, on account of construction aggregate $223,467,641.98. This amount is made up as follows:

Withdrawals on account of construction	$164,422,303 78
Rolling stock securities	32,811,467 87
Halifax and Southwestern land	175,090 11
Halifax and Southwestern bonds	675,000 00
Subsidies	25,323,780 22

The total expenditure by Mackenzie, Mann and Company, Limited, shown at page 28, amounts to $244,670,169.24. Taking from this the sum of $223,407,641.98 above mentioned, it will be seen that there is a balance of $21,262,527.26 which is represented in part by amounts owing to contractors and in part by moneys raised by Mackenzie, Mann and Company, Limited, for the purpose of construction. Details of this sum are to be found at page 42 and full particulars of the additional amount required for construction and for the estimated cost of betterment will be found at page 15.

I do not know that there is anything further which it would be desirable for me to say at the moment in connection with the financial details of the enterprise. I need not assure the House that the proposals which we present to Parliament have received very careful and anxious consideration and that we submit them to the House with every confidence. It is our firm belief that the public interest has been thoroughly protected, but if it can be more effectively safeguarded we shall be glad to consider suggestions to that end. The commitments of Canada in aiding transcontinental railways are very great. I will not pause to consider their wisdom, as the hour for that has passed. The collapse of this enterprise would undoubtedly be a national calamity. It may well be added that lack of courage in dealing with it would be a national disgrace. The enterprise must proceed, but the interest of the country coming to its assistance must be considered and it has been considered. Every dollar of the money to be raised by means of the securities which we propose to guarantee will be used for the payment of existing liabilities of the Canadian Northern system and for the completion of the road. If the expectations of those who believe the enterprise can be carried to a successful conclusion are disappointed, then a summary method has been provided by which the road can be taken over, the system reorganized and either be transferred to another corporation constituted for the purpose, or pass into the ownership of the people. If, on the other hand, the enterprise meets with the anticipated success, the country will have acquired a two-fifths interest therein as compensation for the guarantee of forty-five millions of dollars. The Canadian Northern system to-day has earnings equivalent to those of the Canadian Pacific railway in 1901. We all confidently hope, and, more than that, believe that the progress and development of Canada during the next twelve years will not be less than that with which this Dominion has been favoured since 1901. In that case it may reasonably be anticipated that the compensation now received from the company for the aid proposed by these resolutions will amply recoup and compensate Canada for every subsidy and guarantee that it has brought to the assistance of this railway. It may not be amiss to bear in mind that a like policy applied thirty years ago in affording assistance to the Canadian Pacific railway would have most amply recouped the country for all its aid to that great undertaking. And so to-day our faith in the future progress and development of this Dominion impels us to believe that for the assistance now proposed the country is receiving a consideration which in the years to come will more than amply compensate not only for the pledge of the country's credit which we now propose, but for all other aid which has been granted to this enterprise—and in both cases the country has secured also the construction of a great transcontinental railway.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Mr. Speaker, in rising to present the views which I and those with whom I am associated on this side of the House entertain with regard to the resolution which has been presented to the House, I hope that I shall not be considered as making a vain boast if I say that it is our firm purpose to approach this question with minds as free as they can be from consideration of party interest considerations which are never absolutely devoid of passion, and to give to this very important question the attention to which it is entitled, and upon its merits alone.

I may confess at once that I have long believed that this country requires three transcontinental railways and although this theory has been sometimes controverted, in this House and out of it, I have never seen any reason to change my opinion. The Americans have three transcontinental railways, the Union Pacific, which is the oldest, the Great Northern and the Southern Pacific, and these three are scarcely adequate to meet the needs of the enormous trade which they have to carry. It is no vain boast to say that in prospects our western country is certainly equal, if not superior, to the western part of the American Republic. Not the whole but the greater part of the American territory west of the Mississippi river is a barren desert which is and must for all time remain unproductive, whereas our own country west of lake Superior is, every inch of it, not only arable but fertile, and not only fertile, but fertile as few other countries are. For my part I can say that I have always favoured the efforts of our two fellow citizens whose names have been mentioned several times by my right hon. friend, and who have applied themselves for many years to the task of binding the continent with another band of steel. The late Government were not slow to interest themselves in the enterprise and to favour it as much as they could. The beginnings of the railway system which we are now considering were certainly very modest, and I doubt if even its projectors, Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann, thought at that time that their system would attain the proportions which it has since atained. It was, as has been stated by my right hon. friend, in the year 1896 that Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann went into railway construction. It is to their very great credit that the first venture which they took up was an enterprise which had gone a-begging and which nobody dared to tackle at that time. With the assistance of the provincial Government of Manitoba, they started the construction of a small line of railway branching out north and west from the existing system. In 1899, or thereabouts, after we came into office, we asked Parliament to give them assistance to extend the railway system then in existence in Manitoba eastward to the end of lake Superior. If I remember rightly, we gave them a cash subsidy of $6,400 a mile for that length of railway. Later, in 1903, we induced Parliament to give them a guarantee of $13,000 a mile for a line of railway running through Manitoba to the city of Edmonton. Afterwards, in 1908, we asked Parliament to give them another guarantee of bonds to provide for several branch lines which would be feeders of the line in the prairie provinces. In 1911, as has been explained by my right hon. friend, it was considered that the system would not be complete unless it were extended eastward to the St. Lawrence and eventually to the Maritime provinces, that is to say, unless it were made a transcontinental railway, and in that year we asked Parliament to give to the enterprise from Port Arthur to Montreal a guarantee of bonds to the extent of $25,000 a mile. After the new Government came into office they took up the policy which we inaugurated. In 1912 Parliament was asked to assist a line from St. Albert to the limits of the province of British Columbia, a distance of 115 miles, with a subsidy of $35,000 a mile. They also asked and got from this Parliament a cash subsidy of $12,000 per mile in British Columbia, for a distance of 525 miles. I for my part, and those around me, did not assist in that last vote, for reasons which I shall explain later on. Last year the Government again extended its bounty to the enterprise and Parliament granted it a cash subsidy from Ottawa to Port Arthur, a distance of 910 miles, of $12,000 per mile, or $10,920,000; and from Edmonton to the boundary of British Columbia, a distance of 260 miles, a cash subsidy of $12,000 per mile, amounting to $3,120,000; in all, $14,040,000. Thus, since the present Government came into office, this enterprise has been assisted to the extent of $24,365,000, of which $4,000,000 was only a guarantee, while $20,040,000 was actual cash. Last year, when my right hon. friend asked the bounty of Parliament for the enterprise, he expressed his opinion—I shall not say conviction, but his strong opinion, or rather the opinion of the promoters of the enterprise, Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann—that with the assistance which we were then giving them, they would be in a position to complete the enterprise by the borrowings which they could make elsewhere. Unfortunately, as we know, these sanguine expectations have not been realized, and they are again before us for a further bounty from Parliament, which, as they again assert, will enable them to complete their system.

It has been current in the corridors of this House, in clubs, in the streets, and in the press all over the country, that the Canadian Northern Company was stranded financially, that the owners of it could not advance any more—nay, that there were against them millions upon millions of liabilities due to their contractors, to their furnishers, to the banks, which they were unable to meet. It was stated also that, unless the country came to their assistance, we were threatened with a financial crisis. It was represented to us that the situation was pretty much the same as the situation in 1884 when the promoters of the Canadian Pacific railway came before Parliament and asked for a loan of $30,000,000 in order to face liabilities which they were unable to meet, and thus avoid a financial crisis. If, Sir, these rumours, which we have heard every day almost since the opening of the session four months ago, had been realized, if it was true that the finances of the company were in such a condition that they could not meet their liabilities, that their credit was exhausted, and that possibly, unless assistance were afforded to them, some financial institution might be in serious peril, involving the fall of some other institutions not so strong, the condition of things would be far different from the condition of things stated by my right hon. friend. If the situation to-day were the same as it was in 1884, as we had expected, if the promoters of the enterprise had represented to us that they were for the moment financially embarrassed, that in view of the conditions of the financial market they could not realize any more upon the securities which they had in hand, and that unless we came to their rescue we might have to face a financial crisis, I for my part, would have been inclined to favour doing exactly what was done by Parliament in 1884—lend them the money in order to avoid that financial crisis. But, Sir, this is not the condition which is presented to us to-day. This is not the statement which is made by the promoters of the enterprise, Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann. They do not represent at all that they are unable to meet their liabilities. They say, on the contrary, and it is stipulated in the resolutions—and my right hon. friend has just insisted upon this point—that the money which is to be raised on the guarantee which they ask of us is not to go to the payment of their liabilities, but is for another object. Indeed, when the resolution was laid before the House some days ago, a communication coming from the Government was given to the ministerial press in which you could read this:

As the company, outside of the amounts owed to contractors, which are very large at the present time, owes also about $14,000,000 of temporary loans raised by the pledging of securities which have not been sold and which hitherto have not been saleable at a reasonable figure, and as the company has also floating indebtedness of between $10,000,000 and $11-000,000, the Government have stipulated that Mackenzie and Mann, Limited, shall give absolutely satisfactory security that both the temporary loan and the floating indebtedness shall be paid off by them without recourse in any way to the moneys which are to be raised by the guaranteed securities for the completion of the road.

Therefore it is very plain that not a dollar of the money which is to be raised upon our credit is to go to discharge the liabilities of Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann or of the Canadian Northern railway at the present moment. Indeed, the resolution which we have before us is to this effect in so many words. Let me read again the paragraphs which were read by my right hon. friend, and which go to show that the money which is to be raised upon our credit is not at all for the discharge of past liabilities. Sections 4 and 5 read:

4. That covenants or undertakings to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council shall be given that all outstanding temporary loans to the Canadian Northern or any of its constituent or subsidiary companies secured by the deposit or pledge of securities, will be paid out of the proceeds of such deposited or pledged securities when the same shall be sold or disposed of, and that no proceedings against the Canadian Northern or any of said other companies will meanwhile be taken for the collection of such temporary loans.

5. That covenants or undertakings of the contractors and such other covenants or undertakings as may be required by the Governor in Council shall be given that the current indebtedness of the Canadian Northern and of the said constituent and subsidiary companies will within one year from the passing of the Act to be based upon these resolutions be reduced to the normal or usual current amount to be determined by the minister and that meanwhile all such current indebtedness other than such as may be the subject of bona fide dispute, will be either paid or arranged in such a manner that no proceedings for the enforcement of payment thereof will be taken or pressed.

Mark the difference between the language which I have just quoted and that of the statement which was given to the press. According to the press statement, security was to be given to the Government. Now, it is not security, but is simply a covenant which is given to the Government, that Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann, the Canadian Northern railway, the debtors whoever they be, shall not be pressed by their creditors. That is to say, they undertake to pay their creditors, or to have from them satisfactory arrangements that they will not be pressed; in other words, they will have an extension of time. I fail to understand the meaning of this resolution. If the debtors, those who owe this money, whoever they may be, whether the firm of Mackenzie and Mann or the Canadian Northern or any of the subsidiary companies, can make a covenant with the Government that their creditors shall not press them, they can make that agreement just as well with their creditors as with the Government. I do not understand how they can make it with the Government unless they make it also with their creditors; and, if they make it with their creditors, I do not see that there is any necessity of their making such an agreement with the Government. But be this as it may, this clearly is shown that the money to be raised by the sale of the securities is not to be used in paying off past liabilities.

This brings us, to the consideration of the reason why Parliament is asked to appropriate this sum of $45,000,000. At this juncture, I do not propose to go very deeply into the subject, but I intend to lay before Parliament in plain language the reasons why we on this side of the House think that these resolutions are absolutely unacceptable. If the object of the Government in asking for this credit of $45,000,000 is not that the company may discharge its present liabilities, if it is to continue to carry the load it has at the present time, and which it is unable to discharge, what is the reason why we are asked for this guarantee? The object is recited in the preamble to the resolution which is before the House:

Whereas the Canadian Northern Railway Company hereinafter called the 'Canadian Northern' has represented that the several companies set forth in the first schedule to these resolutions, and their railways and undertakings, rolling stock, equipment, assets and properties are intended to constitute a transcontinental railway system to be denominated the 'Canadian Northern system' and that the Canadian Northern desires to control said system by the ownership or control of the shares of majorities thereof in the capital stock of the said companies, and that it now owns or controls the shares or majorities thereof in the capital stock of certain of the said companies, and that the several companies are desirous that aid should be granted for the purpose of completing the construction and equipment of the works and undertakings of the Canadian Northern system and for the betterment thereof.

So that, according to the language which I have just quoted, the main object of the Government in asking for this credit is to unite the different companies which at present are already under the ownership of Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann. If that be the object, it is not sufficient for asking us to appropriate $45,000,000; and, if that be not the object, then we must know that reason, I say that we should know the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. Moreover, that is not all. We are told that these companies are to be united in a transcontinental system, and with that object I agree; but I say that object is not carried out in these resolutions. In the system as it exists at the present time there are twenty-eight different companies. When this resolution has passed, and when the Act founded on it has received the sanction of the Governor General—if it receive it—there will still be twenty-eight different companies as there are at present. Why is this? My hon. friend told us a moment ago that the capital stock of twenty-seven of these companies is to go into company under Mackenzie and Mann. That may be the intention. I heard from my right hon. friend a moment ago that the capital stock was to be reduced to $100,000,000. I say that if that be the intention, it is not at all expressed in the resolution before the House. On the contrary, by the resolutions now before us the twenty-eight companies preserve their identity. The stock of twenty-seven companies goes into the hands of one company, it may be; but the twenty-eight different companies remain fully alive. Why is this? If you are going to give the stock of twenty-seven of the companies into the hands of one company, why not wipe them out altogether? I repeat that, if it is the intention to reduce the stock of these 28 different companies to $100,000,000, that intention is not expressed in this resolution, and the resolution will have to be amended accordingly. Let me call the attention of my right hon. friend to that point. I do not know who prepared the resolutions, but whoever did it did not carry out the intention of the Government as it has been announced to us by my right hon. friend this afternoon. Take the language of the resolution, which seems to have been prepared with care. It reads:

5 p.m.

In the following resolutions, unless the context otherwise requires:

'Canadian Northern' means the Canadian Northern Railway Company.

'Constituent companies' means such of those companies mentioned in the first schedule to the following resolutions, and such other companies, hereafter declared by the Governor in Council to be comprised in the Canadian Northern system, as own or operate railways, terminals, bridges or other railway facilities.

'Subsidiary companies' means such of those companies mentioned in said schedule, and such other companies, hereafter declared by the Governor in Council to be comprised in the Canadian Northern system, as do not own or operate railways, terminals, bridges or other railway facilities.

The distinction between constituent companies and subsidiary companies is very minute, and a definition perhaps, was not necessary to an understanding of what was meant. I call these companies subsidiary companies, whether constituent or subsidiary; they are practically the same. I would call the attention of my right hon. friend to section 12, which says:

That the capital stock of the Canadian Northern be fixed at the sum of one hundred million dollars subject to increase only by the Parliament of Canada.

What is the Canadian Northern? The Canadian Northern is not the Canadian Northern system; the Canadian Northern is one company to which the other companies are accessories, and its capital stock is fixed at $100,000,000. I say this $100,000,000 cannot include the capital stock of the subsidiary companies, because the terms are against it.

But that is not all. I take the contract, of which clause 12 says:

That the contractors Mackenzie and Mann will forthwith, upon the execution hereof, transfer or cause to be transferred to the trustee all the shares of capital stock of constituent and subsidiary companies mentioned in the first and second parts of the schedule hereto, and the said shares shall form part of the mortgaged premises comprised in the new trust deed. . . The absolute ownership of all the shares mentioned in the first part of the said schedule shall be vested in the Canadian Northern, subject only to the charge thereon created by and to the terms of the new trust deed;

And, therefore, if the capital stock of the subsidiary companies is to be transferred to the Canadian Northern, they transfer something more than $100,000,000.

There is something else. By section 2, paragraph b, as security for the $45,000,000 we are advancing to Mackenzie and Mann, we receive a specific mortgage or charge upon the shares mentioned in the first part of the second schedule, that is to say, upon the stock of the subsidiary companies. If, therefore, we receive a mortgage upon the stock of the subsidiary companies, surely it cannot be contended that the stock of these subsidiary companies is wiped out. That is as plain as plain can be.

But there is something else. We receive also a mortgage upon this stock, but part of the stock of ten of these subsidiary companies is mortgaged to different creditors to the extent of $18,000,000. Are we to understand that you are wiping out the shares of these companies which are already secured for the protection of creditors who advanced money upon them? That is the situation in which we are; and therefore it is very important to know exactly where we are at.

If it was the intention of the Government to have a transcontinental system, why have they preserved the identity of these companies? Why not wipe out their stock altogether? And if you do, there is nothing left of them except the board of management. Therefore, I say to my right hon. friend that if that be the idea he had really in mind, this resolution will have to be amended very carefully. But that is a point for consideration later on.

There is another point, and it is that if it was the intention of the Government to wipe out the stock of all these companies and to assimilate them and make them one, I shall insist that that intention shall be carried out in deed, and that we shall have one company and not twenty-eight companies. And since it is stated that the stock is of these twenty-eight companies is wiped out. I will ask whoever follows me to explain why we keep the identity of these twenty-eight companies which are not to disappear, the mortgage powers of which still remain and which are still empowered to exercise all their powers, and this will lead to very ludicrous consequences. It is stipulated in section 18:

> That without limiting any power now possessed, it be enacted that any constituent company which is now or may hereafter be subject to the legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada, may, under the provision of the Railway Act, amalgamate with any other or others of the constituent companies which is now or may hereafter be subject to said legislative authority or, if not so subject, which now has or may hereafter have power to enter into such amalgamation.

Let us analyse what this means. It is stipulated that the stock, say, of the Canadian Northern Pacific Railway Company, is to be owned by the Canadian Northern Railway Company, which is practically Mackenzie and Mann. It is stipulated also that the stock of the Canadian Alberta Company is to be owned by the same parties, and therefore you provide that Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann, representing the Canadian Northern Pacific Company, can negotiate for amalgamation with Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann, representing the Canadian Northern Alberta Company. If you have the power to amalgamate, why not amalgamate now, and make it clear once and for all? I confess I do not understand what is meant by so much confusion thrown into this agreement. If you want to have a transcontinental railway, as you say, why not enact so when you have the power?

But there is something more serious. For this charge of $45,000,000 which we are asked to vote to the Canadian Northern Railway Company, what security do we get? I submit with all confidence that the mortgage which we get as security is altogether illusory. Is my language too strong? Let me analyse what it means. Here is what we get as security for the $45,000,000 which we are asked to vote to that company: First, as the resolution reads, a grant of the first fixed specific mortgage or charge upon the shares, mentioned in the first part, of the subsidiary companies. We are now told that we are going to get a grant of a mortgage upon the stock and shares of the subsidiary companies; and yet we were told a moment ago that all the stock is wiped out. There is $81,000,000 of stock in these companies, and we are told it is altogether wiped out; therefore what becomes of our mortgage upon that stock? I shall be glad to be told what this means; but for my part I say it is absolutely illusory. Even if there were something left, even if the stock were not wiped out, what value would it have in the market to-day? It is of course impossible to speculate as to that. But I do know that while the stock pledged in this part of the agreement is to-day nominally worth $81,000,000, there is, what is not nominal, an indebtedness of $18,000,000 upon it. That is the true situation.

What do we get next? We get a specific and floating mortgage or charge on the undertaking of the Canadian Northern and its properties, assets, rents and revenues, and its rights, powers, and franchises, present and future. That would seem to be a mortgage upon the undertaking, upon the roadbed and upon the revenue, and that is worth a good deal, I admit. But we must not forget that against that same property there is a mortgage to-day of $312,000,000. Does any one on the other side of the House believe that a mortgage upon the top of that mortgage for $312,000,000 is worth a great deal to Canada? Why, if we undertook to execute our rights under that mortgage we ourselves would simply have to provide for the payment of this $312,000,000. That is the consequence of the mortgage we are taking now, and it is the clearest part of it.

I have been told: Oh, but you yourselves advanced money to this enterprise. So we did, but in every case we took a first mortgage. When we advanced in 1903 a certain amount per mile for the railway from Manitoba to Edmonton, we took a first mortgage upon that part of the road, and that mortgage is secure; it is as good as gold. When in 1908 we gave a further advance for another part of the road, we took also a first mortgage upon that part of the road which was to be created by our bounty, and we took a second mortgage upon this enterprise also. When in 1911 we gave a guarantee of bonds to the extent of $35,000 a mile to the enterprise from Port Arthur to Montreal, we took a first mortgage on that part of the road, and we also took a second mortgage on the whole of the enterprise. I venture to assert that even that second mortgage is perfectly satisfactory, though not so sure as the other one. According to this resolution, we have a general mortgage upon this enterprise, but we have not a similar mortgage upon the properties of the subsidiary companies. Somebody perhaps may say that I am wrong in this—that we have a mortgage for this $45,000,000 upon the properties of the subsidiary companies. I say no. We have a mortgage on the properties of the Canadian Northern Railway Company; we have not a mortgage upon the properties of the twenty-eight subsidiary companies. I assert this without any hesitation.

There is also in clause 11 a very extraordinary provision, namely, that, of this $45,000,000 which we are to raise upon our credit, that portion which goes into any one of these subsidiary enterprises for instance, the Canadian Northern Alberta Railway Company, the Canadian Northern Manitoba Railway Company, the Canadian Northern Saskatchewan Railway Company, or the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Company—is to be secured, not upon the whole of the enterprise, but upon that particular part of the enterprise. I do not understand the reason of this provision, but it is in the resolution.

We have been told in the preamble to this resolution that the object is to create a transcontinental railway, and that we are making an advance of $45,000,000 for this enterprise. If we are to do so, it seems to me to stand to reason that we should obtain a mortgage on the whole of the enterprise, and not simply on a part of it. We should obtain a guarantee upon the properties, not only of the Canadian Northern, but of the Canadian Northern Pacific, the Canadian Northern Alberta, the Canadian Northern Saskatchewan—of all the twenty-eight subsidiary companies that we are to amalgamate. Instead of having this guarantee upon the properties of these twenty-eight companies, we have a mortgage upon the properties of one of them, and the other twenty-seven will give separate mortgages for the part of the $45,000,000 which goes into their own territory. If this is an amalgamation, if this is the way in which you can have a transcontinental railway, I think it is a novel method. It is a method which is not conducive to the object you have in view. Therefore one of the reasons why I object to this resolution is that although it purports to constitute a transcontinental railway, it does nothing of the kind.

My right hon. friend said, and I altogether agree with him, that we cannot allow this enterprise to fail. We have too much money in it—not only the money of the country, but of the provinces and of the bond-holders themselves. It is therefore necessary that we should assist this enterprise; but the provisions made to carry it to completion are altogether deficient. If you want to have this enterprise as a transcontinental railway from ocean to ocean, in course of time, at least from the Pacific ocean to the St. Lawrence, why is the method of carying out that project covered with these blemishes? Why did you not bring forward a project which would at once have made all these companies into one, and then deal with the project?

There are other serious considerations in this matter. We have been told that we are to have $40,000,000 of the stock of the company. What is to be the total stock of the company? My right hon. friend has presented a view which is new to me, and which I cannot understand in the face of the resolution. To-day there is against these twenty-eight companies a stock issue of $158,000,000. Of this, $77,000,000 is the stock issue of the Canadian Northern, leaving $81,000,000 as the stock issue of the subsidiary companies. We are told that this stock issue of the subsidiary companies is to be wiped out. I cannot read that in the resolution; but if this stock issue is to be wiped out, which is something to which I would not object, what are you going to do as regards the $18,000,000 for which that stock is pledged? I desire an explanation of that. So far as I understand the matter, however, the stock of the subsidiary companies is to be wiped out, and the stock of the Canadian Northern railway is to be fixed at $100,000,000. The stock of the Canadian Northern to-day is $77,000,000, and it is proposed that it shall be increased by $23,000,000. The reason this is done, as has been explained by my right hon. friend, is to compensate Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann for the relinquishment which they make of the stock of the subsidiary companies. Let us read this section once more, because here is another mystery which I cannot fathom:

> The Canadian Northern covenants with the contractors that in consideration of the transfer of the shares of the capital stock mentioned in clause (a) of paragraph 2, hereof, it will by proper corporate action cause to be alloted to the contractors or their nominees fully paid and non-assessable shares of the capital stock of the Canadian Northern of the par valve of twenty-three million dollars being the difference between the present issued share capital of the Canadian Northern and the amount to which its capital is increased by the statute.

This is to compensate Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann for their generosity in relinquishing to the trustee the stock of the subsidiary companies. But, according to the first part of the contract, section 2, Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann have stipulated that the stock of the subsidiary companies shall be transferred to the trustee, for what? Simply for the purpose of giving a mortgage upon it. Then the section goes on to stipulate the absolute ownership of the Canadian Northern shares, as follows:

> That the shares mentioned in the first part of the schedule shall be vested in the Canadian Northern, subject only to the charge thereon created by and to the terms of the new trust deed.

[Sir Wilfrid Laurier.]

Therefore Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann have given nothing at all, except that they have transferred this stock to the trustee for the purpose of giving a mortgage upon it; but they give nothing more to the trustee than the power to give a mortgage, and they keep the stock in their own hands. That requires more explanation than we have received in the speech of my right hon. friend. Suppose that the stock is to be reduced to $100,000,000—and we shall have more to say as to that later on—Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann receive $23,000,000 of stock, the Canadian Northern receives $77,000,000, and the Canadian Government receives $40,000,000, so that out of the $100,000,000 of stock we receive 40 per cent. Is this a sufficient consideration for the bounty which Mackenzie and Mann are now asking the Government to give them?

I would not care very much to bargain and haggle upon this point, but there is a consideration which is paramount, since the Canadian Northern have asked the assistance of the Government at the present time, after telling the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance last year that, after the assistance they then received, they would not come to Parliament again. Then, I think we have the right to ask that we should obtain at least a controlling interest in the stock of the Canadian Northern railway. My right hon. friend says that he has covenanted and agreed for the possible contingency that this company may make default. I say that not only should we provide for the contingency of possible default by covenant and agreement, but we should have the majority of the stock so that we could control the company. My right hon. friend says that we are to go into partnership with Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann and the Canadian Northern railway. These are the very words of the Prime Minister. That being so, is it unreasonable to ask that in that partnership we should be the leading and not the junior partner?

Now, what is to-day the financial position of the company we are asked to assist? It is a matter for very serious consideration and one that should make us hesitate before we agree to the resolution before the House. I do not pretend to be a master of figures, but there are matters of ordinary business which even one who is not a master of figures may hope to understand. We have had these figures before us for two days, and I have looked carefully into them, and I will state the financial position of the company as I understand it to be. I speak subject to correction, and if my figures are wrong my right hon. friend will tell me.

The statement brought before us shows that to finish the road the sum of $100,379,000 is required. I think that as to that there is no dispute. It is also shown in the documents before us that the liability of the company to banks is not $14,000,000 as stated in the press but $20,703,865. It is also stated in another official document that the floating liabilities of the company are $10,408,000. These items make a total liability of $131,490,865.

As against this there are securities of the Canadian Northern railway of $58,470,000 including, as stated by my right hon. friend, bonds of the Canadian Northern Pacific, the Canadian Northern and the Canadian Northern Ontario railway. I assume that as these are all guaranteed by the different provinces they are worth par. But what of the bonds of the Canadian Northern Terminal Company? There is no statement as to these that they are guaranteed by anybody. It may be that they are cash in the hands of trustees. If so, they must be counted at par. The proceeds of these are given at $5,959,000. Then there are the rolling stock 4½ per cent equipment bonds of $16,000,000. These, so far as I know, are not guaranteed by anybody, and so I do not know that they are worth what is stated here. As to these items there may be some difference of opinion as to their value, but I assume for the present that they are worth one hundred cents on the dollar, and so I assume the correctness of the total I have just stated—$58,470,000. Deducting this amount from the liability of $131,490,000, we have a balance of $73,000,000 in round figures. There are other securities pledged to the banks for temporary loans amounting to $24,703,865. These are set down at different figures—the Canadian Northern Ontario at 75½, another at 84, another at 80, another at 95, another at 93. We do not know the exact value of these but the figures show them to represent $20,703,865 to be set against the total liability. This leaves $49,000,000 in round numbers of the liability unprovided for so far as the company is concerned.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the right hon. gentleman please let me know where he finds his $20,000,000 owing to the banks?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Here it is—in schedule B. Now, against this unprovided balance of $49,000,000, we have this proposed loan of $45,000,000. How much will it realize? If it realizes $42,000,000 it will be a very satisfactory return. Thus we have a liability of $49,000,000 for which it is proposed to provide $42,000,000, leaving $7,000,000 absolutely unprovided for and for which this same company must come back next session for further aid. I do not think these figures can be disputed; they are the figures of the documents before us. As to the loans from the banks, I know that it was stated in the press at $14,000,000 but the official statement shows it to be upwards of $20,000,000. Now, this is the security we have, and as I said a moment ago, in my humble judgment, this security is absolutely illusory. We take a mortgage on property that is already fully covered, and consequently the security we have is of no value, but binds us, if we wish to collect, to the payment of all the other securities. With regard to the disposition of the moneys which are to be realized upon this $45,000,000, clause 6 of the agreement says:

> That the kind of securities to be guaranteed hereunder, and the forms thereof, and the forms and terms of the new trust deed, and the times and manner of the issue of the guaranteed securities, and the disposition of the moneys to be raised thereon by sale, pledge or otherwise, and the forms and manner of guarantee or guarantees shall be such as the Governor in Council approves, and such terms, provisions and conditions as the Governor in Council may consider expedient or necessary shall be included in the new trust deed.

While I have believed and still believe that this provision is absolutely insufficient, in view of the statement of the Prime Minister that the moneys will be left in the hands of trustees, only to be applied as the work progresses, I shall not insist upon my objection. But another objection I have to make to this agreement, one that is, perhaps, of a more serious nature, is with regard to the provisions respecting tolls and interchange of traffic. My hon. friend, seeing the weakness of his position in that respect, stated that he had made provision to place all these companies under the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada. So far, so good; all the companies which are coming under this agreement shall remain separate entities, as they are at the present time, and shall, under this resolution, come under the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada and of the Railway Commission so far as tolls are concerned. But I am sure that there is an objection with regard to

British Columbia. What does the agreement say in that respect? I call the attention of the House to section 6, clause (b), of the third schedule of the agreement, which is as follows:

That they and each and every of them—

That is, the subsidiary companies.

—will from time to time enter into agreements with the Government for the mutual interchange of traffic between the Canadian Northern and the Constituent Companies or any of them, with the Government railways, and the terms and conditions of every such agreement shall be such as the parties thereto may agree upon or in default of agreement, as may be settled by the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada (hereinafter called the 'Railway Board'), and the Railway Board shall have power from time to time upon the application of the Governor in Council or of any party to any such agreement to vary, modify or rescind the same, provided always that every agreement respecting the interchange of traffic shall be subject to any agreements now existing with any other company or companies.

This matter was discussed in the House before, and it was pointed out that one of the companies here mentioned, the Canadian Northern Pacific, had an agreement with the Government of British Columbia whereby the control of the tolls was expressly taken away from the Government of Canada and placed under the jurisdiction of the Government of British Columbia. When two years ago the Government succeeded in putting through the House a measure giving a subsidy to that branch of the road, we on this side contended that this road should not be subsidized or assisted because the company was under the control of the province of British Columbia, not only in respect of traffic originating in British Columbia, but in respect of traffic going into that province. The part of the contract with the province of British Columbia to which I allude is as follows:

In consideration of the guarantee of the securities hereunder, the Northern Company covenants that the Pacific Company will agree that the Lieutenant Governor in Council, may from time to time, having due regard in so doing to the position and interests of the Pacific Company, and in the case of traffic destined to or originating in the other provinces of Canada, bearing also in mind the desirability of obtaining reasonable rates from points in the province of British Columbia to points in the other provinces or vice versa, modify any rates established by the Pacific Company for the carriage of freight and passengers to and from all points on the said aided lines within the province of British Columbia, provided always, that before any rates are so modified, the Pacific Company shall be heard and its interests taken into consideration as aforesaid; provided further, that if the Pacific Company shall at any time be dissatisfied with any rates so modified by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, it shall have the right to appeal from the order modifying any such rates, to the Supreme Court of British Columbia. Any such appeal shall be heard before the chief justice and one of the justices, or before two of the justices of such court (thereafter referred to as the Appellate Tribunal) who, upon any notice of appeal being given, shall be nominated by the Lieutenant Governor in Council to hear and determine such appeal. The Appellate Tribunal, in the event of any such appeal, shall have authority, and it shall be its duty, to inquire into the whole matter, with power to call and examine on oath or otherwise such witness as either party may desire, to examine into, or cause to be examined into, all books, vouchers or accounts of the company, to call in the assistance of such experts, and generally to make such investigations as it may be deemed desirable to enable it to determine the matters involved in such appeal, and thereupon it may either confirm, modify, disallow, or revise such rates so appealed against. Any rates so modified or determined by the order of the Lieutenant Governor in Council, in conformity with the provisions of this section, shall, except as modified on such appeal, be rates which the Pacific Company will be entitled to enforce in respect of the services covered by such rates. The Canadian Northern railway undertakes that it will not and that the Pacific Company will agree that it will not bring or promote any appeal to the Railway Commission of Canada from any order made under and pursuant to the provisions of this section, and in the event of any such appeal being brought by others, that the Northern Company and the Pacific Company, will represent to the commission on such appeal, that it is satisfied with the rates the subject of such appeal, in so far as they are or have been established within the provisions of this section.

This agreement is standing to-day. It is very true that if this resolution passes into law the Railway Commission shall have jurisdiction over the rates in British Columbia, but subject to the provisions of the agreements. Why is this?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Under what clause?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Under this clause:

That they and each and every of them will from time to time enter into agreements with the Government for the mutual interchange of traffic between the Canadian Northern and the constituent companies or any of them, with the Government railways, and the terms and conditions of every such agreement shall be such as the parties thereto may agree upon or in default of agreement, as may be settled by the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada (hereinafter called the 'Railway Board'), and the Railway Board shall have power from time to time upon the application of the Governor in Council or of any party to any such agreement to vary, modify or rescind the same provided always that every agreement respecting the interchange of traffic shall be subject to any agreements now existing with any other company or companies.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the right hon. gentleman tell me what that clause has to do with the control of rates ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: It has this to do with it: Each one of these companies is preserving its identity; therefore under this resolution they can arrange their rates as independent companies for the interchange of traffic. Each of these companies has its own rights, and these rights cannot be interfered with except by agreement; therefore every arrangement regarding interchange of traffic made between them must be subject to the existing agreement between the province of British Columbia and the Canadian Northern Pacific. Does my hon. friend pretend to say that if the legislation based upon this resolution becomes law I cannot send a car of freight from Montreal to British Columbia without its being liable to be detained at the British Columbia boundary line and being made subject to additional tolls by the Canadian Northern Pacific Railway Company? If we had only one company, then the question of interchange of traffic would not arise, but, as it stated specifically here, we have all these companies, each preserving its own identity, and the Canadian Northern Pacific Company has the right to make its own tariff under its agreement, and that agreement is preserved and not subject to the supervision of the Railway Board. If that is not the effect of this contract, there is time yet to change it. Does my right hon. friend intend to alter this disposition ?

Mr. BORDEN: Would my hon. friend answer me a question in order that I may understand his contention. Does he contend that a provincial railroad can enter into such a contract as to oust the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada and of the Board of Railway Commissioners in case the road afterwards is declared to be for the general advantage of Canada?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: No, sir, I do not contend anything of the kind.

Mr. BORDEN: That is the whole question.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: But I contend that when the Parliament of Canada, at the instigation of my right hon. friend, says that the Railway Commission shall have jurisdiction, but subject only to an existing agreement, my right hon. friend has ousted the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission. I contend, on the contrary, that the Railway Commission has full jurisdiction, because my right hon. friend very wisely provided that the Canadian Northern Pacific railway shall come under the jurisdiction of Canada, by being declared a work for the general advantage of Canada. But whilst my right hon. friend has claimed that we have jurisdiction over that railway through the Railway Commission, at the same time the agreement says: 'Subject, however, to the agreement which has been made by the Canadian Northern Pacific Railway Company.' Sir, this company never should have received a dollar of subsidy from this Government. We took that position two years ago; but the Prime Minister had the weakness to agree to a stipulation that would not permit even an appeal to be taken to the Railway Commission of Canada. To-day, whilst we give this bounty to this enterprise, and claim jurisdiction for the Railway Commission over the railway, we are very careful to say to the commission that we will exercise that jurisdiction only subject to the agreement which exists in reference to the Canadian Northern Pacific Company.

These are some of the objections which I have to urge. I said at the beginning that I had not the intention of going deeply into the subject; but I said that I would not fail to show the salient objections that we had to this agreement. Let me recapitulate. The first objection we have to this agreement is that although it purports to be a unification of the Canadian Northern system, it is no such unification—that the twenty-eight companies are still in existence, and will continue as they are to-day. The next point is that the guarantees that we have are absolutely illusory, that the mortgage which we receive is absolutely insufficient.

I said a moment ago, and I repeat, that this enterprise must go on. It has been conceived for the benefit of the Canadian people. We require this railway. My right hon. friend said he would not let it go into liquidation. It must not go into liquidation, but we should have the control of it. Since we must go into partnership with the Canadian Northern railway, let us see that we are the master, not the servant. Let the agreement be modified; let the resolutions be modified. But, sir, as they stand at the present time, they are not conceived for the benefit of the Canadian people; they are conceived altogether for the benefit of the firm of Mackenzie and Mann and of the Canadian Northern Railway Company. Sir, we have no objection to helping them. We have helped them in the past. I for my part have been an admirer of their energy and enterprise. I have not much in common with them; I cannot claim them as friends; but I admire energy, enterprise and pluck wherever it is found. At the same time, there is this consideration to be borne in mind by the Prime Minister, that there are interests which are transcendent, and the primary of those transcendent interests is that of the country. I have to repeat that the interest of the country is not served by the present resolutions, and as they stand it will become the duty of the Opposition to oppose them from first to last.

At six o'clock, the House took recess.

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, it is one of many interesting features of the character of the right hon. the leader of the Opposition that one is never able to predicate with any certainty the position he will assume, and assume for his party, on any public question. Very little assistance can be gained by a review of his past attitude on similar questions, and usually very little assistance can be gained by a study of the advance notices offered by his followers in particular instances. In the case at present under review, we find that even the Toronto Globe is a very unsafe guide in prophesying the position of the Liberal leader. We had been led to expect by the thunder and fire we have heard and seen from the city of Toronto in the last two weeks—yes, in the last two months and a half—that the Liberal party was ready to set its face unalterably against any assistance to Mackenzie and Mann; that it was going to stand between the people of Canada and the dissipating of their resources. We have heard it said that the Government of the day had sold out the people of this country, and that there was to be no sham fight. Even before the proposals of the Government were known, the position of the Liberal party in this country, in antagonism to those proposals, was flourished throughout the world by a section of the Liberal press. However, when the day of battle comes, we find the Liberal leader not setting his face against assistance to the Canadian Northern, but taking exception to certain details of the Government's proposals, and admitting, after he takes all his exceptions, that he does not understand the proposals at all. I am disposed to agree with the Liberal leader in that latter statement. I am also disposed to congratulate him on having shown himself on this occasion the leader of his party, and that he has not allowed the petulant malice of a Toronto editor to stampede and dragoon him into a wild and unreasoning opposition.

I said that the Liberal leader had admitted that he did not understand the resolutions now before the House. At the same time—as he finished his speech, and indeed at various times throughout his remarks—he emphasized that he was unalterably opposed to these resolutions, and that he was going to oppose them from beginning to end. If I might offer a word of advice it would be this: that the attitude of a party, as of an individual, toward any proposal had better be reserved until that party or individual thoroughly understands what the proposal is. I am free to admit that the resolutions before the House are not of the simplest imaginable character. The situation that presented itself for solution was not a simple situation; it was an exceedingly complicated and difficult situation, and it was found that the interests of the country could only be preserved by an arrangement that necessarily involved very many and very difficult intricacies. However, I believe—and I am more firmly convinced after listening to the right hon. leader of the Opposition—that the Government's proposals have in the end been reduced to as simple, compact, and thoroughgoing a form as it was possible to reduce them to.

The right hon. gentleman opened his speech with the statement that the alternative that presented itself to the Government of allowing the road to go into liquidation was an unthinkable alternative. Consequently, I need not address myself to a consideration of that alternative at all. The alternative, if it presented itself at all, of permitting the road to go into liquidation was unthinkable. The time for contemplation of that point has gone by. Likewise the hour for considering whether or not we shall go ahead with a third transcontinental system in this country has also gone by. That question is now properly eliminated from discussion. The seal of this country was put upon the third transcontinental system, indelibly and irrevocably, in 1911 by the late Liberal Government. The sanction of Canada was given by the Government headed by the present leader of the Opposition when he guaranteed the bonds of the great connecting link between Montreal and Port Arthur to the extent of $35,000,000. Whatever may be the merits of the question as to whether a third transcontinental system was necessary in Canada, those merits cannot now logically be taken under review at all. The hour for discussion has gone by, and once the seal and endorsement of this country was affixed to those thirty-five millions of bonds for the connecting link, we were committed, and committed irrevocably, to the third transcontinental system. It may, however, be worth while to reflect at the present time that when that responsibility was assumed by the Government of the day in May, 1911, the question was brought before that Government in words of warning and in words of weight by the present Prime Minister as to whether or not the Government had assured themselves on sufficient information and data that it was advisable to encourage by the sanction of this country the completion of a third transcontinental system; I would respectfully refer hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House to the words of the leader of the Opposition of that day, the present Prime Minister, when he warned the Government that a very serious responsibility was being lightly undertaken—that even then the traffic over the one transcontinental was not sufficient to occupy more than about one-fifth of its capacity, and when he declared that it might well be that we were taking a false step in affixing the seal and endorsement of this country to that great issue of bonds. However, the time for meditation and reflection on that phase of the question has gone by. The country is committed to it whether it be a success or a failure, and we are bound in justice to its bond-holders, but far more so in justice to the people of this country, to see that transcontinental railway to completion. It is only just to say that in the conflict that may take place between the three rivals for the transcontinental traffic of this country, there are very important advantages that will accrue to the Canadian Northern in the contest; and there is every reason now to say that in the struggle that will ensue the Canadian Northern railway will not be the unfittest to survive. Many and great are its advantages over the Canadian Pacific railway itself, in some respects, and more and greater still are its advantages over the Transcontinental railway as constructed by the late Government.

What, then, is the position of the Liberal party at the present time? The leader of the Opposition says: We are committed to it; failure or collapse is an unspeakable alternative. But, he says: I do not favour the present proposal, because the company does not come to us admitting that it is unable to pay its debts and that failure or collapse is the alternative if we do not come to its assistance. Why, he says: there are some ten and a half million dollars of floating liabilities and the men who own the stock of the Canadian Northern come forward and agree in the terms of this Bill to themselves provide for the excess of these floating liabilities over the normal figure without recourse to the current securities, and that, he interprets as an admission that the company are not in extremis at all, but are quite able to take care of their own liabilities at the present time.

A word in the first place as to the general principle there laid down by the leader of the Opposition, and then I will have a word to say as to the premises on which he bases it. 'If' he says, 'it appears to me that this company cannot get along without assistance I would do again as I did in 1911 and I would loan them the money to see them through.' In other words, if it appears to the leader of the Opposition that the Canadian Northern Railway Company were not at the present time able to carry on their enterprises without assistance, he would lend them the money out of the treasury of the country and he would take no compensation in return. On what security would he lend them the money? He says, our present security is illusory. Can he name anything possessed by the Canadian Northern or by the other companies that we do not take security on? Then, if it appeared to the leader of the Opposition that this company were in extremis and bound to ask for aid or default, he would lend the money, give them $45,000,000 on the same security we have taken or on less security, and he would undertake that liability and perform that service and take back not one dollar's worth of compensation from the company. There stands the Liberal party.

If I can convince the leader of the Opposition that the company does require this money and cannot succeed without it, then doubtless we will have the support of the Liberal party in this House and we will have the emphatic support of the leader of the Opposition, especially when he reflects that we are not guaranteeing the bonds for nothing but that we are getting two-fifths stock in the enterprise as a compensation therefor. The floating liability it is true, in so far as it exceeds at the present time the normal figure, must be taken care of aside from the guaranteed securities and their proceeds, within one year. It must be reduced to the normal figure within that time and in the meantime they must be protected against action. But what does that mean? It means that Mackenzie, Mann and Company, Limited, the contractors, under subsection (b) of section 4 of the Bill, are bound themselves to see to it that the floating or current liability of the Canadian Northern is reduced within one year to three million dollars, or to such normal amount as the Government may decide to be correct, and that that must be done without recourse to the proceeds of the guaranteed security.

It will be asked, if they are able to do that, then what other liability is it they are not able to take care of? As the hon. gentleman knows, at the present time there stands on the construction account of the Canadian Northern a further liability, owing at the date of the audit, amounting to $21,262,000, entirely aside from the current indebtedness. This $21,262,000 has already been spent on construction, and is planted in the road to-day, and the Canadian Northern Railway Company owes that indebtedness to the men who did their work and supplied the material, and that indebtedness they are not in a position to meet. Why, says the leader of the Opposition, the temporary loans are taken care of. Very true. Twenty million dollars of temporary loans are protected at the present time by some twenty-four million dollars of securities, and it is provided by the Bill that satisfactory covenants must be given that these securities, and these alone, will be resorted to in order to satisfy the loans they have advanced. That takes care of temporary loans and floating liabilities, which must be taken care of, but what about the $21,262,000 that is owing on construction account? Would the right hon. gentleman tell me now how he would have that provided for by the Canadian Northern Railway Company? We have thrown everything on the table; he has access to every one of their assets, and to all their available securities, and he cannot point where the Canadian Northern Railway Company can go and discharge that liability of $21,262,000. The financial stringency that has overrun the world, as well as the increased cost of construction, has brought about such conditions that the Canadian Northern Railway Company at the present time faces a situation that it is not able to surmount without the assistance of this Government.

While I am at that point, it may be asked: How are Mackenzie, Mann and Company, Limited, going to reduce this sum of floating indebtedness to the normal figure? My information, and the result of the investigation is this: that the Canadian Northern Railway Company has been under the necessity of providing out of its current revenues large sums in payment of instalments due on what is called 'equipment trust', and as a consequence the regular current indebtedness of the Canadian Northern has swollen away beyond the normal figure. The payments on equipment trust are payments made on the purchase of equipment. These payments are logically and correctly chargeable to capital, but the company was under the necessity of meeting them when they fell due and they met them out of current revenue. When that necessity is removed, as it will be removed by the present financial arrangement, then the company will be in a position to declare that they are quite capable of taking care of this excess of floating indebtedness over the normal figure, and to reduce it within a reasonable time to the normal figure.

As to temporary loans, very little need be said. It will be clear to all that with the rehabilitation of their credit that naturally results from the present arrangement, the securities that are pledged against these current loans will be amply sufficient and much more in all probability to take care of all liability thereon.

But the fact remains that the system at present stands in a position where it cannot, in the nature of things, be made a paying investment, be made to turn the way of success and away from the road to failure, unless funds are provided to take care of the completion of that road. What does it consist of: The Canadian Northern Pacific, the western lines between Port Arthur and the coast; a portion of the Canadian Northern Ontario uncompleted between Montreal and Port Arthur; other portions uncompleted in the province of Quebec; other large portions uncompleted in British Columbia which ought to, when completed, bring the road into contact with our western harbours. So long as it remains in the present condition it will not appeal to any business man that the road could possibly be a success as a road, but must proceed on the down grade and not on the highway to success. Consequently the road is in danger of failure at the present time. The situation is such that, through no fault of its own, so far as we are aware, the Canadian Northern Railway Company is brought face to face with a situation where an arm stronger than its own must be extended, and where the assistance of the Government must come to it, or the Canadian Northern railway cannot be anything but a failure. That being the case, the right hon. the leader of the Opposition is bound to reverse his party position and come to the assistance of the Government and help to put through these resolutions which provide for the guarantee, that he would give for nothing, being given in return for a two-fifths proprietorship of the road.

A further objection taken by the leader of the Opposition is that we have not reduced the capitalization. After all, he says, we have only pretended to reduce the capitalization. That is what I understand to be the point he makes. Under the plan that the leader of the Opposition would follow, he would not make even a pretence. If he believed that the road needed the money and had to have it, he would lend it just as he did in 1911, and he would not even go through the formality of reducing the capitalization at all. But we have reduced the capitalization; and I think I shall be able to convince him on this point, that he was quite correct when he made the statement that he did not understand the resolutions. What do the resolutions say? They say that, before any guarantee is given, all these allied companies must have their various stocks passed to the trustee as security, the beneficial interest subject to that mortgage being in the Canadian Northern road; that is to say, the Canadian Northern road must become the absolute owners, subject to this mortgage which protects the Government, of all the stock of the eighteen companies at present owned by Mackenzie and Mann. There are eleven other companies at present owned by the Canadian Northern itself, their stocks and bonds being already pledged to secure the perpetual debentures issue of 1903; but 18 companies have almost their total stock issue clear in the name of Mackenzie and Mann, Limited. These companies have to put their stock in the Canadian Northern, impressing it first with a charge for the protection of this guarantee. My right hon. friend says: You put those stocks in, you put $25,000,000 of the stock of the Canadian Northern Ontario; you put in twenty-five millions dollars of the stock of the Canadian Northern Pacific; you put the stock of the Central Ontario; you put the stock of the Canadian Northern Quebec; you put the stock, six millions dollars or almost that, of the Quebec and lake St. John and after you have put them all into the Canadian Northern, those stocks still exist. It is quite true that they do exist. No one says that these stocks are burned or wiped out. They exist, but none the less the capitalization is reduced to the capital of the company that owns these stocks and all the assets of these companies.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Oh, oh.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The right hon. gentleman laughs. What is the purpose of a reduction of capitalization? How is the public interested in that reduction? Because, if a public utility is over capitalized and the stock gets into the hands of the public, that is a lever in the hands of the public giving them a right to a revenue on that stock and consequently a lever for the upkeep of freight rates; but if you take that stock and keep it out of the hands of the public, put it where it never can possibly get into the hands of the public, and make it owned by the Canadian Northern railway, whose capitalization is reduced to $100,000,000, how possibly can you have any further evil result from over-capitalization? You have done everything that possibly can be done to prevent every ill that ever comes from over-capitalization. The companies still exist in any case; but the stock belongs to the Canadian Northern railway; all the profits of those companies go to the Canadian Northern railway, and the Canadian Northern railway is capitalized at $100,000,000 and no more. Consequently $100,000,000 and no more is the stock which has any right to earn dividends. That must be clear to my right hon. friend, and I feel quite certain that he understands it just as well as I do. The capitalization, in so far as it is a lever or can be used as an argument to affect freight rates or to affect the public in any way whatever, is reduced to $100,000,000. And we are the guardians of the public and of no one else.

Then my right hon. friend says: Why, that only applies anyway to the eighteen companies that Mackenzie and Mann own clear. They own the stock of those companies clear, each company of course being subject to its bonded indebtedness. But, he says, there are some other properties of which they do not own the stock, and the stock of which is already pledged. That is true. We get a first mortgage on the stocks that come into the Canadian Northern, in so far as they come in clear. In so far as the eighteen companies are con-possibly be a success as a road, but must Mann, Limited, our mortgage comes upon the stock of these companies direct, a mortgage physically fixed on the stock of these eighteen companies. That is one constituent of the mortgage premises. That constitutes a real mortgage and forms the first constituent of the mortgage premises.

What comes next? The equity of the Canadian Northern railway in the eleven companies, the bonds and stock both, are already brought under the trust deed of 1903. In 1903, the bonds of the Canadian Northern Express Company, $3,000,000, the bonds of the Winnipeg Land Company and the stock of both companies, the bonds and stock of the Lake Superior Terminals, the bonds and stock of the Canadian Northern System Terminals, owning their terminals from shore to shore, all became at the time the bonds of the Canadian Northern, and were put in along with the Canadian Northern assets as security for the 4 per cent perpetual bond issue of 1903. Consequently the Canadian Northern own all these companies, both the bonded indebtedness and the stock issues, subject only to the charge created by that trust deed or mortgage of 1903. They hold the equity of redemption therein, and a large equity it is. We have taken care, in these resolutions and in the Bill which will follow it, to take that equity and place it as constituent No. 2 under the mortgage which we take to secure this guarantee. Was it not worth while taking it? In that way we take everything these companies have and, we place it under our mortgage as our security against our guarantee. Who is there who can suggest anything more that we can do? Would the hon. gentleman have us legislate the bonds out of existence in order that we could get a first charge? Would he legislate the priority out of existence for the benefit of the people of this country? Would he have confiscatory legislation? We have done everything we can to get the mortgage right down on all the assets left of all the companies that are there. Those assets are tremendous assets.

Furthermore, we take a physical mortgage on the Canadian Northern properties themselves. The Canadian Northern railway, operating the main line and all the branches between Port Arthur and Edmonton, about 5,350 miles, is able to give a mortgage on those assets alone. It cannot give a mortgage on the assets of other companies; it can give a mortgage on them only to the extent and in the form in which those assets come to it. But on its own physical road between Port Arthur, and Edmonton, the Canadian Northern gives a mortgage direct to the trustee for the protection of the guarantee of this country. Now, the hon. gentleman says: Oh, this mortgage is entirely illusory mortgage, because he says, there is indebtedness ahead of it. And in that he has the wonderful consolation of having the imprimatur of the hon. member for Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Carvell), who says 'hear, hear' to the statement that 'the mortgage is entirely illusory.' Let me draw his attention to a number of these securities—and I know he is listening, though he affects not to be. The Canadian Northern railway itself has a road between Port Arthur and Edmonton which, with branches represents about 5,350 miles of railway. It owns its terminals and various other assets there; it owns its lands. Now, that road is already mortgaged, it is true; it has several bond issues against it. But it is the most valuable portion of the whole Canadian Northern system that is to be; it is the portion that has been paying and paying well, it is the portion that serves, if not the best, almost the best parts of the whole northwest country.

That is the portion which above all things must be preserved; it is the valuable asset of the Canadian Northern railway. Now, as I have said, that road is bonded already. But I ask the right hon. gentleman if he would not, dollar for dollar and mile for mile, rather have a mortgage on that road than on the Canadian Northern Ontario running through a wilderness which has no local traffic, or very little? I ask the right hon. gentleman again, which is the better security—the Canadian Northern Ontario running through a wilderness, a connecting link, or the western line of the Canadian Northern Railway system? I know that he would choose the western road. Now, I tell him if he took all the securities which this 5,350 miles of railway are liable for and added to them this $45,000,000 he would still have the road charged at about the same figure per mile that he charged, to secure this country, on the Canadian Northern Ontario. He took a mortgage, to secure the guarantee of the people of Canada on the Canadian Northern Ontario, at the rate of $35,000 per mile—he took a first mortgage, it is true, on most of it, or in effect a first mortgage. And if he adds the whole $45,000,000 to the present indebtedness of the Canadian Northern Railway western line, he would only reach the charge of practically $35,000 a mile. So, if one security is 'illusory'—even assuming that we have nothing else than the physical road of the Canadian Northern railway on the western plains—what is to be said of the security he took in 1911?—and got no compensation. But further, does the right hon. gentleman realize what security he did get in 1911? He just took a mortgage on the rails, the right of way, and, I suppose, the stations. He did not provide for a mortgage on the floating assets and current revenues of the company. But we have provided for it in this case, for if the company goes into liquidation our mortgage takes effect on everything it is fastened to now, and immediately fastens itself on the floating assets of the company and all its cash, revenues, etc. What does the hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. Graham) think of his Government that brought down a Bill to this Parliament to guarantee the bonds of the Canadian Northern Ontario for $35,000,000 and did not take a dollar of compensation for this country or a dollar's worth of stock, and only took security on the rails, the right of way and the stations—on the mere road itself—did not even have the terminals? So, if we took over the road all we should have would be a bare railway, without a terminal, without a connection, without a traffic arrangement, without anything else.

But we do not stop there. We have already three constituent elements in our security. We have the stocks of eighteen companies—the stocks clear of incumbrance—we have the stocks and bonds of eleven more companies subject to the mortgage of 1903, and we have a mortgage on the Canadian Northern Railway western lines subject to the mortgages on the physical lines and properties themselves. But we have more than that, we have a mortgage on the whole townsite properties of Mackenzie, Mann, Limited. That is a portion of the resolution which the right hon. gentleman may have understood, but I notice that he said nothing about it. What does it mean? The Canadian Northern Railway Company are not the owners of these townsites, they made no investment in these townsites; the moneys were all laid out by Mackenzie, Mann and Company, Limited. Lands were sold them by this Government, paid for by Mackenzie, Mann and Company, Limited, and they purchased lands at various points as well. The expenditures have been made by them and by them alone, and these lands belong to them, they are legally their possession, just as the land of any owner is his possession. There is a charge against these townsites in this way: The lands which the right hon. Prime Minister referred to, some 4,100,000 acres, belonged to Mackenzie, Mann and Company, Limited as their property. These lands, with the exception of 100,000 acres, were turned over to the Canadian Northern railway. But before they were turned over, or about that time, bond issues were made against these lands, I think to the extent of $7,000,000. These lands are worth to-day somewhere in the neighbourhood of $30,000,000—the lands and the moneys that have been received from the sales of lands and the agreements outstanding. And the company desired to make a loan, a bond issue, on the lands of $17,000,000 more, were asked to and did put in their townsites as additional security. Consequently, the position was this: Their lands worth about $30,000,000 and their townsites, whatever they were worth, were in as security for bonds issues aggregating about $24,000,000. Now, the lands belong outright to the Canadian Northern railway, and there is an appreciable, yes, a very material surplus, over the whole bond issue in these lands alone. So, if the lands alone were used to discharge the whole $24,000,000 of bond issues it would leave the townsites entirely clear and a few millions of dollars of surplus besides. We have these lands as part of the assets mortgaged direct, and we have the town properties mortgaged as a fourth constituent of our security. It is impossible to say what these townsites are worth. They belong to a company known as Town Properties Limited, which has made an issue of $10,000,000 of bonds, and $10,000,000 of stock. At all events, at a very conservative estimate, these townsites are worth in the neighbourhood of $11,000,000 or $12,000,000. So, there is a fourth constituent of the mortgage premises taken as security for the people of Canada against the guarantee.

But we do not stop even there. We conceived that perhaps our security might be improved, and we set about to improve it in this way: In connection with any of the subsidiary or constituent companies or allied companies the stocks and bonds of which were held and are pledged as our security, it was possible that these companies might make further issues, and that consequently the value of our securities would contract, and in that way the security of the people of Canada would be diminished. As a result of that, and for a further reason as well, we took the precaution of compelling each of these allied companies, before it gets one dollar of the proceeds of this $45,000,000 issue, to give a mortgage to the trustees as our security to the extent of all the money that it would receive. Each of the allied companies is bound to give, before it gets a dollar of this money, a mortgage on the physical assets of its own railway and its own property for the whole amount of whatever money it shall receive out of that $45,000,000. In that way it will be impossible for any one of these companies, by a further issue of bonds, or by any other method, to impair the security which this country holds for the money which that company shall get. Oh, the right hon. gentleman says, you should have every road mortgaged. Does he mean that we should mortgage a road or a company that does not get any of the money? If a company does not get any of the money, upon what ground should we ask it to give a mortgage? If any of these companies gets the money—and among them they will get all of it, except about $15,000,000, according to the present proposal—then we get a mortgage on its assets—we have already a mortgage on its stock—before it gets a dollar's worth of money, covering every possible dollar they may get of this $45,000,000. What further security would the right hon. gentleman have? Is there any other security in the whole system which the Government could get? We get the stocks and bonds of the allied companies and every time one of them gets a dollar of the money we get down on the rails and assets of that company for another part of our security. We have everything we could have for the protection of the country.

But we do not stop even there. The Brockville and Westport railway, was bought for the Canadian Northern at a court sale and we have insisted that that road be conveyed to the trustees and become a part of our security. In so far as the Brockville and Westport railway is concerned, our mortgage becomes a first charge on the road. There are, I think, six separate constituent classes of securities covered by one mortgage to protect the people of this country. If we eliminate five of them, and thereby eliminate a value aggregating the whole amount of our liability, we will still have left the Canadian Northern itself and if the whole of our liability were piled upon the present liabilities of that road our security would be better than that the right hon. gentleman took in 1911, mile for mile, for the $35,000,000 guarantee given to the Canadian Northern Ontario railway.

The right hon. gentleman says: Why preserve the identities of these companies? I have addresed myself so far to showing that aside from any special reason for preserving the identities of the companies, this country is not concerned in their amalgamation, because we have succeeded in securing all we can secure as part of the mortgaged premises, even if these companies were amalgamated. We have left nothing out that we could get or to which we would rightfully be entitled, even were the companies amalgamated; so that, in so far as security is concerned, no object can be served by amalgamation. Even though that be the case, I think there are sound reasons why amalgamation should not be insisted upon. Amalgamation would mean that each of the companies, instead of turning its stock into the Canadian Northern, subject to the charge for our security, would pass its physical assets into the Canadian Northern subject to such indebtedness as might be against it. That would be the effect of amalgamation as distinguished from the present arrangement. What are the objections to amalgamation? The right hon. gentleman seems to think there are none at all. He says: You provide for amalgamation in this resolution. It is true that there is in the resolution a clause which says that amalgamation may take place under the provisions of the Railway Act, and it is the purpose of the Canadian Northern railway, under the new organization, to facilitate amalgamation as much as possible and as rapidly as the objections and obstacles to amalgamation are swept out of the way. What are the objections and obstacles that at the present time exist? In the first place, under the present system, if any individual outlying line proves an incumbrance rather than a benefit to the system, we are in a position to let it go; we are in a position to say: We will not have this barnacle on the Canadian Northern system, a liability rather than an asset.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: Would that not be rather hard on the districts in the West which you want to serve?

Mr. MEIGHEN: There is no danger of that in the West.

Mr. CLARK: What about the East?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not know; I hope there is no danger there. But if, in the progress of events, any such a thing should happen, we have the power to let the mouldering branch drop off. If we permitted amalgamation and such an event took place, the liabilities of the line in question would be loaded upon the Canadian Northern itself. What would the right hon. gentleman do in such a case? Suppose that he found that a certain line, a part of the system, is not a paying line; that it is a liability and a drag on the system, pulling it back rather than helping it forward; what would he do to get rid of it? He could not sell it; it is loaded down with $350,000,000, the debt of the whole system. He could not sell it unless he were to take a jaunt through Europe and circularize several thousand bondholders to get a partial discharge. There would be no way of getting rid of it; he would be tied to it, no matter whether it were valuable or detrimental. So there is one objection to amalgamation. But there are others. It has been found, not only by the Canadian Northern system, but by practically every system, that very many of the accessories which are essential to the success of a railway system are handled to much better advantage in individual companies. I venture to say that not a railway system in the world has amalgamated within it as part of one company all the assets of as many individual companies as come into this system under the present arrangement. Would the right hon. gentleman advise that the land companies amalgamate and convey their lands to the Canadian Northern? Here the Railway Act itself would come in, because only for certain purposes can a railway own land. There would be objection to any such amalgamation. Would he advise that the telegraph company, express company and the Montreal Tunnel and Terminal Company convey their assets to the Canadian Northern Railway Company? What was the idea of the forming of the Mount Royal Tunnel and Terminal Company? It was because the markets of England demanded that the money to be raised for the purpose of these terminals should be raised by this method? It is a notorious fact that if you can simplify into one unit certain of the accessories of a railway and base your securities on specific, well-defined and easily-understood contracts which that company possesses, you can sell the bonds of the company to better advantage. For reasons such as these the Mount Royal Tunnel and Terminal Company was formed, and those advantages you sweep away and rid yourself of if you insist on amalgamation. The same is true right through the system. Indeed, there are objections and legal objections to amalgamation which at the present time could not in honour be gotten over. The right hon. gentleman knows, because he himself, a few days ago, asked that there be laid on the table a list of companies in which Mackenzie and Mann, Limited, did not own all of the stock. That list was laid on the table, some four companies in all, the Quebec and Lake St. John, the Duluth and Winnipeg Company, the Canadian Northern Quebec and another railway whose name at the present time I do not recall. We know that the majority of the stock of these four companies is owned by Mackenzie and Mann or the Canadian Northern railway, but there are portions of the stock, in the main of very small portions but very considerable in the case of the Duluth and Lake Superior and rather considerable in the case of the Canadian Northern Railway Quebec, which are outlying in the hands of the public. Will the right hon. gentleman tell me how he would effect an amalgamation in the case of these companies, portions of whose stock are outlying in the hands of the public? He knows that the Railway Act provides for the protection of minority stockholders and he knows that we could not, without doing injustice and depriving the minority stockholders of their rights, insist on having their stock in this case.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Hear, hear.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is quite correct, so that his whole scheme of amalgamation—

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: All the stock of this company is conveyed to Mackenzie and Mann in this agreement.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Oh, no, how could we make an agreement with Mackenzie and Mann to compel the public to convey stock to them? All the stock of Mackenzie and Mann is conveyed to the trustees for the protection of the Government.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: The stock of other parties, too, according to your agreement.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If the right hon. gentleman can show me that I will agree to an amendment. Will he just read it, where we provide that all the stock, even if it is owned outside, must be conveyed to the trustees? That would be confiscation pure and simple, and it does not exist in the resolution. The stock that is to be conveyed is set out in each case in the schedule with the amount opposite the name of the company. That is the stock that is being conveyed, that is the stock that is owned by Mackenzie, Mann and Company, Limited, where they own stock at all. In the case of the Duluth and Winnipeg, the majority is owned by the Canadian Northern railway itself. Where the other is to be conveyed it is the stock owned by Mackenzie, Mann and Company, Limited, because we have no power, without the most arrogant act of confiscation, to demand that others convey their stock to the Canadian Northern railway. As a matter of fact, in the case of the Quebec and Lake St. John, the others cannot be found. That is the reason why Mackenzie and Mann Company have not got the stock. They have been trying to chase them up all over the world but cannot find them. I would ask how, under sections 361 and 362 of the Railway Act, you are ever going to amalgamate with these outlying stocks. The provisions of the Railway Act relating to amalgamation are for the protection of the minority stockholders, and we would have no right, in justice, to repeal them, even if we chose to do so. We have power to repeal them, of course, but it would be unjust to do so. They provide for an application of two-thirds of the stockholders to the Railway Board. The Railway Board must then publish in the Gazette notice that they will, at the expiration of a month, apply to the Governor in Council for leave to amalgamate, and within that time the stockholders have a right to appear and be heard, and there is no telling what length of time may elapse before it would be possible for the Governor in Council to hear the application. After they are heard they have to be protected. I would ask how you are going to protect them so long as there are outstanding stockholders at all? As the stock outlying in the hands of the public comes in and becomes the property of these men and gets into the system, then amalgamation is quite possible, and it is the purpose and aim of all the allied concerns and of the Canadian Northern railway to effect an amalgamation as soon as it can be effected. So much for the question of amalgamation and so much for the advantage of retaining the identities of the original company. I would ask, as a last word, that I be allowed to impress on the right hon. gentleman that while we have, under this arrangement, retained all the advantages of the individual identities of the company, we have not incurred one single obstacle, we have not injected into the agreement one single weakness or impaired our security one jot, by failing to amalgamate the road. The right hon. gentleman complains that the security is illusory because he says it is subject to $312,000,000. He says: You could not take over the road even if there should be failure, because you would have to pay $312,000,000. Of course we would, or assume it. What would the right hon. gentleman say if he found the Canadian Northern railway on their knees and really believed that they were in extremis and had to have the money? What would he himself take for security because he had promised to lend the money? He could not get the road except subject to the indebtedness, he would have to take the very security which to-day he tells us is an illusory security and no good at all. After he took it he would have the hon. member for Carleton or some of his supporters get up behind him and say: You have got all kinds of security; nothing better than default could happen for the country. For this was something like the language used by the hon. member for South Renfrew in 1911, when he said that it would be a great advantage to this country if the Canadian Northern Railway Ontario defaulted and we were obliged to take over this connecting link, without terminals and without any of the accessories of a railway. The right hon. gentleman has a further objection, and this time he is more than usually vigorous in pressing the objection. Why, he said, we are giving $45,000,000 now of our credit. We are loading this country with an indirect liability of $45,000,000 for the Canadian Northern railway, and for the life of me I cannot have the heart to vote for it unless we get a majority of the stock. That is his second last objection. I know that the political necessities in this case were very great. This is a concession which the right hon. gentleman has made to the editor of the Toronto Globe. In the main he was much more moderate, much more sensible, has a more far-seeing eye to the advantage of his party, but he made this little concession that he would follow the dictates of that gentleman to the extent of insisting on a majority of the stock. Here is one of the features of his policy which was impossible for us to predict. I would be the last to believe that the right hon. gentleman would say that he would be satisfied with this agreement if it called for sixty instead of forty million dollars of this stock. The right hon. gentleman has made railway bargains himself in days gone by. He made a railway bargain in 1903 and he did not take very much stock at that time. Why, he said, we (this Government) have paid out twenty million dollars in subsidies to this company since this Government came into power. I do not think we have. I figure the subsidies that this Government has undertaken total some $15,000,000, but anyway the difference is not very great. The total subsidies which the Canadian Northern railway and allied companies have received come to about $25,000,000. That is the aggregate of their subsidies. Their bonds have been guaranteed to a very considerable extent besides, I think to the extent of about $131,000,000; and in addition they have raised about $176,000,000 without any credit or assistance at all. That, in a nutshell, is the financial history of the Canadian Northern railway, $25,000,000 odd of subsidies. Does the right hon. gentlemen remember the subsidy that has been paid by this country, under the compulsion of his legislation, to the Grand Trunk Pacific? We will use the word subsidy for that is the word the hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. Graham) insisted on in the Transcontinental debate. He said the seven years' interest is subsidy, and nothing but subsidy; so we will call it subsidy to-night. What is that seven years' interest which he pays as subsidy to the Grand Trunk Pacific? One hundred and eighty-one million dollars is the cost of the Transcontinental from Moncton to Winnipeg. On $181,000,000, the company have to pay interest after the seven years elapse; we have to pay it in the meantime and it costs this country four per cent. Now, I ask my hon. friend what is seven years' interest on $181,000,000 at four per cent? About $50,000,000 on that item alone. That is the subsidy that the leader of the Opposition bound this country to pay to the Grand Trunk Pacific; but he bound the people of this country to pay a lot more than that. He bound them to pay interest for seven years on the mountain section, without recourse—no getting it back at any time—and that liability is between $11,000,000 and $12,000,000, and I think I have stated it too small. Add that to the $50,000,000 and you have $61,000,000 or $62,000,000 of subsidy to the Grand Trunk Pacific to get them to build a line between Winnipeg and the coast. But more than that, he put an implementing clause in his Bill; he did not get any stock or proprietorship as compensation, but he succeeded in getting an implementing clause, and as a result of that consideration the country is stuck for $13,000,000 more, $4,900,000 of which we have paid already, and to save paying the rest directly we are buying the bonds ourselves, which cost us, of course, far more than we can sell them for. If we followed the course of letting the bonds be sold and paying the difference—as we are bound to do under the implementing clause—we are out $13,000,000 more. Add that to the $61,000,000 or $62,000,000, and you have $74,000,000 or $75,000,000 of subsidy to the Grand Trunk Pacific. But, unfortunately, we cannot stop there. We have undertaken to give the Grand Trunk Pacific the use of the National Transcontinental railway for 50 years for three per cent, and we have to pay, now, four per cent on our money. We are out one per cent on that. It may be that, in that time, the rate will come down. Suppose that we assume that three and one-half per cent would be a fair amount. Capitalize that, and it runs the subsidy to the Grand Trunk Pacific up to about $100,000,000. That is the subsidy that hon. gentlemen opposite saw fit to pay in additional to their guarantees to the Grand Trunk Pacific. Why? To secure the building of a line between Winnipeg and the Pacific coast, about 1,750 miles long, the right hon. gentleman has compelled this country to pay $100,000,000 in subsidy to the Grand Trunk Pacific, or, on that basis, about $60,000 a mile. Then, in addition to that, we build the eastern end of the Transcontinental outright, ourselves. We are out in the meantime in capital expenditure, for which, of course, we have the road, about $181,000,000 besides, as the cost of the Transcontinental from Moncton to Winnipeg. Spreading the subsidy over the whole road we have paid in subsidy to the Grand Trunk Pacific about $30,000 a mile for every mile of the road between the Atlantic and the Pacific. In addition to that we are building ourselves over half of the road, and we guarantee to the extent of three-quarters of the amount for all the rest of it. That is the bargain that the right hon. gentleman made for the Transcontinental. One would have thought that he would have insisted then upon some compensation to the country. One would have thought that he would not have been satisfied with being the very juniorest of junior partners of the Grand Trunk Pacific. He is a partner in that transaction, all right; the country is a partner—a very silent partner, it is true. It is a silent partner except on pay day, but the country is never a partner on receipt day. He took care that all the money went the way of the company, and that all the risk went the way of the country. That was his bargain with them, and not one dollar of stock did the country get. No possible chance—no matter how profitable the road may be—of ever bringing back to the treasury any part of the moneys we paid in subsidy, or of ever getting compensation for the immense indirect liability under which the country lies. And the same right hon. gentleman says that for the life of him he cannot see his way to consent to let the Opposition vote for a Bill which only takes $40,000,000 worth of the proprietorship of the Canadian Northern as compensation for a $45,000,000 guarantee. I am glad he recognized that there should be compensation for guarantee: this is his first conversion to that doctrine—that is as far as the country is concerned. He recognized the validity of the doctrine in 1903, so far as individual companies are concerned. The Grand Trunk Railway Company guaranteed the Grand Trunk Pacific, and for its guarantee it got the whole stock of the Grand Trunk Pacific. The country guaranteed three-quarters of the cost of building the whole road, and for its guarantee and for its hundred million dollars of subsidy it never got one dollar. And now the right hon. gentleman says that we are not justified at all in letting Mackenzie, Mann and Company away with a paltry $40,000,000 of stock as compensation for our guarantee. We have a two-fifths proprietorship in the Canadian Northern absolutely, come what may. If it succeeds, as there is every anticipation it will, then the value of that stock enters the treasury of this country as compensation; and there is every reason to believe that before any great length of time there will be a par value for that stock, and that the Government of the present Prime Minister will have restored to the treasury of this country the $40,000,000 which his (Sir Wilfrid Laurier's) Government squandered on the National Transcontinental railway.

9 p.m.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK: Will my hon. friend allow me a question? Which railroad has the most wooden trestles in it?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am obliged to the hon. member for Red Deer for mentioning that point. The Canadian Northern railway is building its railway along sensible lines, and according to business methods. It has used both wooden trestles in the construction and later on steel trestles when they could be put in more cheaply. As a result we are going to have a transcontinental railway that will cost on the outside about $40,000 a mile from coast to coast, instead of $100,000 a mile; and as a result we are going to have a real competing factor in the railway world, instead of a factor the only influence of which in the way of competition is to shove up the rates. But did I say $40,000 a mile for the Canadian Northern as against $100,000 for the Transcontinental? That does not do half justice to the Canadian Northern. In the Canadian Northern as an aggregate system what do we include? We include the railway from coast to coast and all its branches; we include the terminals in every city to which it comes; we include the lands, 4,002,000 acres and the proceeds thereof; we include the telegraph and telephones; we include the express companies and the transfer companies; we include the steamship companies operating two steamships across on the Atlantic, and we include a quarter of a million dollars' insurance for another steamship that was burned. We have all these collateral accessories which go to make a railway, and even then the total aggregate capitalization bond issue is only about forty thousand dolllars a mile.

On the other hand, what is the situation as regards the National Transcontinental railway? It has cost this country in outlay $180,000,000 for about 1,800 miles of road, and when you have got your $100,000 a mile capitalization you have not a steamship company in it, you have not a terminal in it—yes, you have a terminal in it—

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: No, you have not.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Then I was doing overjustice to the right hon. gentleman. But I do know that you have not any express company in it; I do know you have not any transfer company in it; I do know you have not any steamship company in it; I do know you have not any telegraph company in it; you have not any 400,000,000 acres of land; you have no townsites; you have nothing in it except your bare road between Winnipeg and Moncton. Such is a comparison between the railway arrangement of the present Government and that of the late Government led by the Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Then the right hon. gentleman has another distinctive feature in his railway policy. Under the present Bill we have a summary method of taking over the road, a summary method which in effect gives us as security the other sixty per cent of stock. We know we have the ordinary right which any mortgagee has, and the right which any guarantor of a mortgage has, the right by subrogation of getting into the shoes of the lender and in the event of default exercising the rights of a mortgagee and taking possession of the road as a receiver; we know we have that right, but we have the additional summary remedy of proceeding by mere Act of Parliament to take over the road as the property of the people of this country and eliminate once and for all, all other parties interested in that railway. And we have not only so arranged it that the interests of the Canadian Northern and all other persons whatsoever in the Canadian Northern system shall be eliminated, and that in the event of default all shall be the property of the Canadian people, but furthermore, the ten million dollars of stock in the townsite and the ten million dollars bonds are put into hotchpotch, although they are the property of Mackenzie and Mann, and although Mackenzie and Mann alone made investment in them, and in the event of our foreclosing and taking over the enterprise we ourselves get the whole benefit of the townsite. That summary method is given us. It is true Parliament has to act. The Government did not think it wise to in any way tie the hands of Parliament in days to come. We provide though that Parliament in days to come, should there be default, shall have in its own hands the power to put in directors of the road, and we clothe the directors so appointed with full power to sell that road to any corporation established by the Parliament of this country for the purpose of taking over the road. Or, if we choose, we can ourselves, by Act of Parliament, legislate that that road is the property of the people of this country and that the interests of all persons whatsoever outside of the people of Canada are eliminated. The idea of that is that we are at this time making the interested parties and all stockholders parties to this contract, and we say to them: We now and here bind you that should the day of default come you shall not appeal to the Parliament of Canada on the ground of your road being confiscated in any way whatever, but you here and now leave the Parliament of this country free from any such question and untrammelled in every way to deal with the property of the Canadian Northern as it may be advised in the interests of the people of this country. That is the summary procedure outlined here for taking over the road.

How does that differ from the procedure followed by the late Government? Had they any such method? No. They had the ordinary method of subrogation it is true; those ordinary methods come in the common law and they were embodied in their Bill. They have the right to go into possession of the Grand Trunk Pacific as receivers, and when they do so they act as receivers, and if the road pays the Grand Trunk Pacific can come back again and take the road and make the money. But if the road fails it fails, and the people of this country stand the loss and all the results therefrom. That was the method employed by the late Government for taking over roads in respect of which it issued its guarantee bonds. And in 1911 when the present hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. Graham) introduced his resolution to guarantee the $35,000,000 issue of the Canadian Northern Ontario railway, no summary provisions whatever were embodied in that resolution, and the only rights which this country had were the rights of subrogation. Their only way of getting into the shoes of the bond-holders and exercising these rights was by the appointment of a receiver. As a consequence if that road paid, then the stockholders could come in and demand their money back, the bond-holders being satisfied, but if it failed, on the head of this country was the failure, and all the consequent loss.

During the last few weeks we have been told several times that we were very stingy with our information and very slow in producing it. I do not believe that any legislation has ever been proposed in this House which has been accompanied by data so ample as this Government has supplied in the present instance. There has been no concealment. The right hon. gentleman asked for the names of all contractors, and for the names of all parties that the Canadian Northern owed. If there was throughout the length and breadth of Canada a man to whom they owed one dollar and fifty cents he wanted to know who that man was; he wanted to know the name of each individual who was a creditor in this $21,262,000. It was not believed that such information would result in any good whatever, but that on the contrary there would be insuperable objection to disclosing such particulars as that. But what was the procedure in 1911 when the hon. gentleman from South Renfrew (Mr. Graham) was Minister of Railways, and when he asked for a guarantee for the Canadian Northern railway? He came to this House without any data at all; he had made no exploration of the road; he did not know what it would cost; he had the guarantee of the Canadian Northern but he did not know how the Canadian Northern stood. He was asked in this House what the cost of the Canadian Northern was and his answer was he did not know; he was asked what the bond isue of the Canadian Northern was and his answer was he did not know. He had no data on the subject; he had never sent his engineers over the line; he did not know what the road would cost; he had very little idea of it at all; and he had no data or papers to lay on the table of the House. And as a matter of fact he was unable to tell the House where the road was going. He pointed out a few far-distant parts through which it was going to go, but the route of the road as ordinarily laid down he was unable to give to the House.

Mr. GRAHAM: Under these conditions did my hon. friend or any of his friends vote against this guarantee?

Mr. MEIGHEN: On this side of the House the particulars were called for and the data should have been supplied by the then Minister of Railways. Protests were made against the guarantee. Inquiries were made of the Government as to the grounds for it. One protest after another was entered. As far as I can recall, the House was not divided; but there was no excuse whatever for the hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. Graham), then Minister of Railways, not arming himself and informing the country to the extent it should have been informed before it incurred that liability. We have on the table a whole book of data which I venture to say not one hon. gentleman opposite has read in full yet; and when $35,000,000 were guaranteed here three years ago, the table of this House was as bare as the board of Lazarus. Then my right hon. friend comes to the traffic clause, and he conceives that he has found the much heralded joker which the Liberal press of this country has been declaring would yet be discovered in the Government proposals in regard to the Canadian Northern. He says the traffic clause is so perilous a thing that it utterly removes the Canadian Northern Pacific from the jurisdiction of the Board of Railway Commissioners as to rates. The Canadian Northern Pacific is at the present time a provincial company; it had its bonds guaranteed by the province of British Columbia, and it entered into an arrangement with the Government of British Columbia by which that Government should control its rates, and it would not apply for or agree to a control of rates by the Government of Canada through the Board of Railway Commissioners. That is all correct; but the law is the law and the law of this country, as contained in section 6 of the Railway Act—I think I have the section right—is that the moment the assets of the railway company are declared to be for the advantage of Canada, the jurisdiction of the province ceases and the jurisdiction of the Dominion commences. Consequently the effect of this clause is undoubtedly, clearly and emphatically, to establish the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission over the Canadian Northern Pacific as over every other railway line embraced in this system. Oh, well, says my right hon. friend, you have nullified the effect of your absolute clause by this traffic clause contained in the agreement. Now, what is the traffic clause contained in the agreement? Here it is:

> The Canadian Northern and the Constituent and subsidiary companies severally agree with the Government as follows:—
>
> (b) That they and each and every of them will from time to time enter into agreements with the Government for the mutual interchange of traffic between the Canadian Northern and the constituent companies or any of them, with the Government railways, and the terms and conditions of every such agreement shall be such as the parties thereto may agree upon or in default of agreement, as may be settled by the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada (hereinafter called the "Railway Board"), and the Railway Board shall have power from time to time upon the application of the Governor in Council or of any party to any such agreement to vary, modify or rescind the same provided always that every agreement respecting the interchange of traffic shall be subject to any agreements now existing with any other company or companies.

That is to say, that the Canadian Northern itself, owning the stock of all the other companies, or any one of the others, as the Canadian Northern Pacific, will, if called upon at any time, enter into an agreement for the mutual interchange of traffic with a Government railway. The terms they are to agree upon mutually. If they cannot agree, the Board of Railway

Commissioners is empowered to fix the terms, but no terms can be fixed affecting this traffic arrangement between the individual company and the Government railway that nullifies any agreement already entered into. In the first place, if this clause is never acted upon, there is no repeal of the general clause establishing jurisdiction, is there? If we never call upon the Canadian Northern Pacific to make a traffic arrangement with a Government railway, then the clause is never acted upon, and consequently there is no repeal, even if there were a repeal, if it were acted upon. I pause for any objection, if there is any objection to the reasoning so far. There is no objection, and consequently that is quite clear. Then, who in the world can conceive of the Government, owning the Intercolonial railway, calling upon the Canadian Northern Pacific 2,000 miles away, to enter into a traffic arrangement? The Canadian Northern Pacific is confined to the province of British Columbia, and how in the world can it make a traffic arrangement with the Intercolonial railway that never gets west of the province of Quebec? Consequently the point raised by my right hon. friend, to say the most of it, is a purely academic one. There is no conceivable possibility of a traffic arrangement between any constituent company in British Company and any Government railway, is there?

I go farther. Not only will the clause never be acted upon, so far as anyone can see, with regard to the Canadian Northern Pacific; but if it were acted upon, it would not have the effect for one minute of impairing in the slightest degree the control of the Railway Commission as to rates. Let us say that the Government owns a railway that runs to British Columbia, and it says to the Canadian Northern Pacific in British Columbia: We want to make a traffic arrangement with you for the interchange of traffic? What is a traffic arrangement? It is an arrangement for the interchange of traffic and for the apportionment of rates. Well, suppose we have a line running to British Columbia, and the Canadian Northern Pacific railway is asked to make an arrangement with us for the interchange of traffic and the apportionment of rates between us. If we cannot agree, the Railway Commission decides how the traffic is to be interchanged and how the rates are to be apportioned. Now, how in the world can that ever interfere in any way whatever with any agreement between the Canadian Northern Pacific and the British Columbia Government as to control of rates? It does not matter what the rates are. All the traffic arrangement does is to apportion the rates, whatever they may be, and to agree upon an arrangement by which traffic shall be interchanged. The rates are fixed by the Railway Commission. The apportionment of them is fixed by the traffic arrangement.

Furthermore, the agreement that the right hon. gentleman has referred to between the Canadian Northern Pacific and the British Columbia Government is not a traffic arrangement at all. Therefore, for a third reason it can not possibly interfere with the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission, because the meaning of that clause would be, and it was intended to be and is, that, while if there is any traffic arrangement such as that we have, as a Government, with another road, that traffic arrangement shall not be violated by any terms the Railway Commission shall make. As a matter of fact we have a traffic arrangement. I am informed that the Canadian Northern has no traffic arrangement with any company, but the Government of this country has a traffic arrangement with the Grand Trunk, made by the right hon. gentleman himself, for the interchange of traffic at the city of Montreal. As a consequence, we were bound to protect the country by saying that we could not be called upon to make a traffic arrangement with the Canadian Northern that would be a violation of our obligations under our traffic arrangement with the Grand Trunk. That is the effect of clause (b), of which the right hon. gentleman is so much afraid.

I recapitulate as follows the reasons why there is nothing in the objection of my right hon. friend. First, there is no conceivable possibility of the clause being acted upon with regard to the Canadian Northern Pacific at all, because we have no line that connects that can make a traffic arrangement with it. Second, if there were a traffic arrangement between any two companies, it could be made apportioning the rates between them without in any way violating any arrangement with any Government as to the rates themselves. Third, the agreement made by the Canadian Northern Pacific with the Government of British Columbia is not a traffic arrangement at all.

I think I have passed in review, perhaps not fully, but as fully as the time at my disposal will permit, all the objections raised by the right hon. leader of the Opposition to the resolutions of the Government.

I do not feel that I should be justified in delaying the House longer with a more detailed examination of the various provisions of the Bill. That can be better attended to in committee. While we believe this Bill to be complete, while we believe that it safeguards the public interest in every way, yet it is laid before the House not as an invulnerable document, not as an infallible document beyond all possibility of improvement, but as the proposal of the Government to which we invite criticism from hon. gentlemen opposite as well as from hon. gentlemen on this side of the House. And if the Bill can be improved in the public interest, it is open for improvement, and we will welcome any suggestions along that line. But, Sir, we lay the Bill on the table of the House and before this Parliament as the solution proposed by us of a very vast and very difficult problem, a problem freighted with difficulties on every side; and we say, in laying it before this Parliament, that we believe it at once preserves the public interest and does justice to all the fair claims of private capital; for only by concurrent regard for the rights of private enterprise and the promotion of the public welfare can the ultimate ends of government be properly subserved.

Mr. W. F. NICKLE (Kingston): If my intention in rising had been to reply to the hon. the Solicitor General (Mr. Meighen), his eloquent, able and comprehensive speech might, at the last moment, have deterred me. But, Sir, I have not risen with that intention. I have a conscious sense of embarrassment in rising to-night to express to this House and to the country the reason for my differing with my party on this measure. It is not a pleasant thing to differ from men who have been one's confreres for a length of time, and it is an accentuated unpleasantness where the position one takes is seized upon by the representatives of the opposite party and his conclusions and his motives distorted.

When I accepted the nomination for the city of Kingston I reserved to myself the right to exercise my judgment and express my views on such subjects as were not fundamental to the Conservative party, and it is in the exercise of that right that I rise to my feet this evening. Sir, I do not believe that there is a man in this House to-night who is more loyal to the principles of the Conservative party as he understands them than am I. But I am not willing to admit that it is necessary to the solidarity of party government that the crack of the party whip should be so loud and its sting so sharp that individual responsibility should be absolutely abrogated.

I have, as I say, some difficulty in approaching this subject. My good friend the Solicitor General has frankly admitted that the Government places this Bill on the table not wedded to its terms, that they are prepared to have it discussed and to accept amendments if in their opinion they are such as should be adopted.

It is a strange thing what an important part railway legislation has played in the history of this country. In the fifties we had the Grand Trunk Railway Company; in the sixties we had the Intercolonial railway; in the seventies and early eighties we had the Canadian Pacific railway; at the end of the century we had the minor Ontario railways and the proposed railway in the Yukon; and from 1900 we have had the National Transcontinental and the Canadian Northern railway. In my judgment there is much of truth in what the Solicitor General has said in his criticism of the construction of the National Transcontinental railway and as to the effect of that road as a competing road for the lessening of rates. If I understand the principle which underlay the construction of that road it is that Mr. Hays thought that the increased cost of railway operation through the increase of wages and prices of material, necessitated the construction of a road which would permit of long trains being economically drawn. But when the cost of the Transcontinental was so augmented, through irregularities and extravagance that the interest charges became excessive, then, I say, the National Transcontinental ceased to be a factor in competitive railway rates in this country. If I understand correctly the attitude of Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann, or the Canadian Northern Railway Company, they approached the problem from an altogether different point of view. Their road was constructed more after the manner of a colonization road. The original cost of construction was reduced to a minimum with the idea of improving the road out of earnings or improving it indirectly as money might be available. And it follows necessarily, where grades are high and curves are sharp, that the cost of operation must be high although the expenditure for construction is small and the interest charges comparatively low. I do not know that any opinion of mine as to what would have been the wise thing for the Liberal party to have done in 1903 will carry the slightest weight or be deemed worthy of attention. But I submit for the consideration of this House and the country at large, that from the point of view of economy—and I want to emphasize that word, 'economy'—it would have been better for the Government of that day to have made some arrangement with the then existing transcontinental road the Canadian Pacific railway, around the head of lake Superior, than have put Canada to the expense of building another road there. But there is another consideration besides that of economy. I do not know the motives that actuated the present leader of the Opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). It may be that he was inspired with the idea that Canada through the West should be something more than a line, that it should have breadth as well as length, and that he felt that from a national and political point of view it was well that Canada should be broadened around the head of lake Superior, and therefore favoured the construction of the second transcontinental railway. However, Sir, when we come to the question of 1911, it has always puzzled me why the then Minister of Railways and Canals promoted the construction of a third transcontinental road by guarantee of $35,000 per mile of some 1,000 miles of road. Surely it would have been the wiser plan to have incorporated the National Transcontinental and the Canadian Northern Railway system into one road. It would have been more economical and certainly it would have served equally well the national and political outlook. But that plan was not adopted, and I suppose that but little is to be gained by looking into the past rather than into the future. But before I leave the past, I would like to direct the attention of this House and of the country at large, and more particularly of my constituents, to the fact that when last year application was made to the Government for further assistance to the Canadian Northern Railway Company, I was outspoken within my own party in stating my objections to any aid being granted without a full and ample inquiry.

I told those then in authority that in my judgment the amount required would never complete the Canadian Northern Railway system. I was, however, confronted with the statement then made by an official of the Canadian Northern railway that if that money were granted that railway system would be enabled to carry its work to completion. I was told that to stop that work would be a national calamity; that the Canadian Northern railway was so closely allied with the financial interests of this country that if the work were stopped, financial chaos would result and Canada would suffer a setback from which she could not recover for half a century. Possibly I was wrong in yielding to that argument without full examination, but, as you will remember, Sir, the Bill was brought down to the House in the dying hours of the session and there was little opportunity for inquiry and investigation. This year, however, when the matter came first to the attention of the House, through an insidious and persistent lobby that was carried on by the Canadian Northern interests, it seemed to me that the time had come for a thorough examination and inquiry into the development and organization and relation to the Government of the Canadian Northern Railway system. After giving that matter the most careful consideration that I have been able to give it, permit me, Sir, to say that I am of the opinion to-night that I held a year ago; that it was a mistake in 1913 to have assisted the Canadian Northern railway, and that the bargain that the Government suggests to-day is a bad bargain for the Dominion of Canada.

I want to look back a little into the history of the Canadian Northern railway. I should like this country to understand just how this undertaking has been organized and managed. I do not know whether members of this House know the history of this company, but I do know that it took me many weary hours to worm out from the statutes of this country the financial wanderings of this road, and the intricacies of its amalgamation and absorbing corporations. I want this House to come back with me to the year 1880, when certain gentlemen presented a petition to this House asking for an incorporation for the Nelson Valley Railway and Transportation Company. The prayer of the petition had the favourable ear of the House and by 43 Victoria, chapter 57, authority was granted to that railway to undertake certain operations, and by 43 Victoria, chapter 59, similar powers were granted to the Winnipeg and Hudson's Bay Railway and Steamship Company. The Nelson Valley Company had power to build a railway between the north shore of lake Winnipeg or the navigable waters flowing northward therefrom, and the shore of Hudson Bay at or near the Churchill river, with a branch to the Pacific railways west of lake Winnipegosis. By an Order in Council of July 28, 1882, authority was given for the grant, on terms and conditions named, of 6,400 acres of land per mile to the Nelson Valley Company for the construction of their main line and branch, the total distance being reckoned at about 800 miles. The Winnipeg and Hudson Bay Company had charter powers to build a railway from the city of Winnipeg to Port Nelson or some other point on the shores of Hudson Bay at or near the Nelson river. By an Order in Council of the 28th July, 1882, authority was given for the grant of land to the company, on specified terms and conditions, for their line from Winnipeg to Port Nelson, the distance being set down as about 573 miles, namely 3,840 acres per mile up to the 54th parallel and 6,400 acres per mile from that point to the terminus at Port Nelson. By the Act of 1883, 43rd Victoria, chapter 69, authority was given for the amalgamation of the two companies and such amalgamation appears to have been duly carried out, but in the following year, 1884, by the Act of 47 Victoria, chapter 70, this Act was repealed and authority was given for winding up the Nelson Valley Company and the transfer to the Winnipeg and Hudson's Bay Company, of all its rights, privileges and franchise. By this Act of 1884 the construction powers of the Winnipeg and Hudson's Bay Company were amended and they were empowered to build either from Winnipeg or Selkirk, or from the Canadian Pacific railway between Selkirk and Portage la Prairie to Port Nelson and Churchill or some other point on the shores of Hudson Bay in the territory of Keewatin; also a branch to the Canadian Pacific railway west of the lake Winnipegosis. By the Dominion Lands Act Amendment of 1884, 47 Victoria, chapter 25, the Governor in Council was authorized to grant aid in land to a railway from some point on the Canadian Pacific railway to Hudson bay, the limit being 6,400 acres per mile in Manitoba and 12,800 acres per mile in the Northwest territories. By Order in Council of May 11, 1885, all previous orders in this connection were cancelled and there was granted to the Winnipeg and Hudson Bay Railway and Steamship Company a subsidy in land. I would like the House to observe that this grant was made to the railway company, not to the contractors. The Order in Council provided that the grant should be made to the Winnipeg and Hudson Bay Railway and Steamship Company. The subsidy in land was divided as follows:

Division A, from the Canadian Pacific railway to the northern boundary of Manitoba: estimated distance, 225 miles, (6,400 acres per mile), 1,440,000 acres.

Division B, from the boundary to the terminus near the mouth of the Nelson river, Hudson Bay, estimated distance, 425 miles, (12,800 acres per mile) 5,440,000 acres.

Division C, the branch, from a point on the main line, near the northern extremity of lake Winnipeg, to intersection with the Manitoba and Northwestern railway, estimated distance not to exceed 250 miles, grant to be subject to approval by Parliament, (6,400 acres per mile) 1,600,000 acres.

The time for completion was fixed by this order as 50 miles on division A or B by April 19, 1887, and 50 miles a year thereafter until completion of main line, but if the main line was not completed by May 11, 1890, they were to forfeit their right to a grant for their branch line, which was itself to be completed by May 11, 1893. In April, 1888, the chief engineer of Government railways reported, showing that 40 miles of road were completed, with the exception of certain station buildings, etc.

Whilst on this point I would like to ask the Government if they would be good enough to let the House know if the recent demand of Mackenzie and Mann for 256,000 acres of land in respect of that 40 miles has been recognized, or if it is going to be recognized.

In 1887, the various Acts relating to the company were consolidated and amended by the Act 50-51 Victoria, chapter 81. They were thereby empowered to construct a railway from Winnipeg northerly to Port Nelson or Churchill or some other point on the shore of Hudson bay, and a branch from any point on their main line at or near the crossing of the Saskatchewan river to the Canadian Pacific railway west of lake Winnipegosis. Their capital stock was fixed at $15,000,000. The Act provides that no portion of the railway or its branches or lines leased or controlled by the company shall be amalgamated with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. The limit of time for completion of the main line was fixed as June 21, 1891. The name of the company was changed to the Winnipeg and Hudson Bay Railway Company.

In 1890, by the Act 53 Victoria, chapter 80, the clause of the preceding Act relating to completion was repealed and the following substituted:

The said main line of railway shall be completed to the Saskatchewan river within four years from the 21st of June, 1890.

In 1891, by the Act, 54-55 Victoria, chapter 81, authority was given for entering into a contract with a company by the Government for the conveyance of men, materials and mail for twenty years, for a subsidy of $80,000 annually on the construction of the railway from the end of the forty miles already built to a point on the river Saskatchewan. Perhaps it is only fair that I should explain to the House what I understand these transport contracts were. The land grants were not available for the ready raising of money for the financing of the road, the Government guaranteed a transport contract by which they agreed to pay, for a definite number of years, a certain amount. This amount would be transferred or assigned from the company to one of the financial institutions which would advance money for the purpose of carrying on construction work, and at the expiration of the period of the transport contract an adjustment would be made between the Government and the company to see which was the debtor. By the Act, 57 and 58 Victoria, chapter 9, 1884, the name of the company was changed to the Winnipeg Great Northern Railway Company, and the time clause of the Act of 1891 repealed, the following being instead enacted:

The main line of the railway shall be completed to the Saskatchewan river.

You will observe that the original road was to have gone to Hudson bay. This provided that the railway should stop at the mouth of the Saskatchewan river.

The main line of the railway shall be completed to the Saskatchewan river by the 31st of December, 1896, otherwise the powers granted with respect to such construction shall be null and void as respects so much of the railway as then remains uncompleted.

An Order in Council of the 8th of November, 1893, extended the time for subsidy purposes up to the 31st of December, 1896, for the completion to the Saskatchewan river. I wish to direct the attention of the House to the cost of railway construction in the Northwest at that period. On the 12th of May, 1894, Ross, Mackenzie and Company entered into a contract with the Winnipeg and Hudson Bay Railway Company to construct 290 miles of railway for the sum of $11,700 per mile. Mr. Collingwood Schreiber, the engineer of the Government, estimated that $10,870 per mile was a fair price, but he added 5 per cent to cover incidentals, and left the price $11,420. The Winnipeg company then made application—and if you will follow the meanderings of this company from the early days up to this day you will find that their policy has always been, whenever work was undertaken, to get the Government behind them, either by way of loan, guarantee or subsidy. The company made application to the Government for a loan of $2,500,000. They had a land subsidy of 6,400 acres per mile, they had a transport subsidy of $80,000 per year for 20 years, the cash value of that subsidy being $1,200,000. The Government of the day, the late Hon. John Haggart being then Minister of Railways, gave their approval to assistance by way of loan. The work, however, did not go on, owing it is alleged to the stringency of the money market and the slackness of agricultural conditions in the West. By the transport agreement, provision was made that if the work of construction was not advanced the contract might be terminated and other disposition made of the subsidy. A new transport contract was made under date of the 2nd of May, 1896, by which a new transport subsidy of $40,000 a year for twenty years was given the Winnipeg company and the other half of the subsidy, $40,000 a year, was given to the Lake Manitoba Railway and Canal Company. By the Act of 1898, chapter 10, it was enacted that the company, instead of constructing its lines to the Saskatchewan river might, before the 31st day of December, 1899, construct a line of railway commencing on the Lake Manitoba Company's line, at a point between Dauphin station and lake Winnipegosis, thence towards the Swan River district northerly and westerly, and that upon such construction the company should be entitled to the subsidies of which I have spoken.

10 p.m.

I wish now to direct the attention of the House for a moment to the history of the Lake Manitoba Railway and Canal Company. This company came into existence in 1899, by 52 Victoria, chapter 57. It had power to construct a railway from Portage la Prairie to deepwater on lake Winnipeg. From time to time this charter varied and widened, permitting the construction of a railway from Portage la Prairie northerly and westerly to lake Winnipegosis, around the west side of Dauphin lake. The Lake Manitoba company had this Dominion assistance. They had the transport subsidy of $40,000 a year to which I have directed attention. They had 6,400 acres per mile of land, and by an arrangement entered into with the Manitoba Government—and my right hon. friend the leader of the Government this afternoon when directing attention to the fact that these charters of the Winnipeg company and the Manitoba company were for years peddled around without a purchaser failed to direct the attention of the House to the radical change that took place when Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann bought this charter. Up to the time they got their grant of $8,000 per mile from the Manitoba Government, all these companies had was the land grant and the transport subsidy, with an assurance that certainly merited recognition from the point of view of railway financing, they had the courage to make application to the Manitoba Government for a guarantee of $8,000 per mile to build a road that they had admitted could be built for $11,700 per mile. Just figure this out for a moment. These wizards of finance, so-called, had bonds guaranteed at the rate of $8,000 per mile. They had lands that were worth $9,600 per mile, if the land is valued at $1.50 an acre, and I leave it to you and members of the House who are older in parliamentary affairs than I am, to say whether in the '90's lands in the Swan river and Dauphin district were not worth at least $1.50 per acre. They had more than that, they had a transport subsidy, which, capitalized, was worth $4,000 per mile. In other words, they had $21,600 of Government subvention to build a road that their own contract showed could be built for $11,700 per mile. That is the beginning of the road.

I want to state to the House where the Canadian Northern Railway Company came into existence. The Act permitting the amalgamation of the Manitoba Railway and Canal Company and the Winnipeg Northern Company, the two companies to which I have been referring, was passed in 1899, 62-63 Victoria, chapter 57. You will remember that the authorized capital, not the subscribed capital of the Winnipeg and Northern Company, and that was the final name of the Winnipeg company, was $15,000,000. The authorized capital of the Lake Manitoba Railway and Canal Company was $800,000. And what did the wizards of finance do when they bought up these two charters? They amalgamated the two companies under the name of the Canadian Northern Company and by section 3 of their agreement they fixed the stock at $16,000,000, all paid up and fully subscribed.

And that $16,000,000 of watered stock is the initial foundation on which the Government builds their claim that they are dealing fairly with the country when they take forty millions of watered stock as security for a bond guarantee of $45,000,000. How did they provide for the distribution? Section 6 says:

> Each shareholder in the Winnipeg Company shall be entitled to receive, and there shall be issued to him by the amalgamated company, one share in the capital stock of the amalgamated company, issued as fully paid up and free from calls and other liability, for every one hundred dollars, paid up upon the shares held by him in the capital of the Winnipeg Company.

The agreement further provides:

> Each shareholder in the Lake Manitoba Company shall be entitled to receive, and there shall be issued to him by the amalgamated company, two shares in the capital stock of the amalgamated company, issued as fully paid up and free from calls and other liability, for every one hundred dollars of fully paid-up stock held by him in the capital of the Lake Manitoba Company.

The original capital of $15,800,000 was increased by $200,000, a paltry sum perhaps, to roll the whole amount into round numbers. They went on further with their amalgamation. By chapter 52 of 1 Edward VII, 1901, certain agreements of amalgamation between the Canadian Northern Railway Company and the Manitoba and Southeastern Railway Company, and the Canadian Northern railway and the Ontario and Rainy River railway were ratified. The agreement is dated 28th of April, 1900. Schedule 'A' says:

> 3. The name of the amalgamated company shall be 'The Canadian Northern Railway Company.'
>
> 4. The amount of the capital stock of the amalgamated company shall be sixteen million, seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

$750,000 of water was poured into the amalgamated company. How was it divided? In the same way: $100 worth of fully paid-up capital stock for every $100 of stock subscribed for, whether paid or not. Let us go further. By schedule B of the same Act a further agreement was ratified. That agreement provided that the amount of the capital stock of the then amalgamated companies should be $24,750,000 being the capital of the two companies. One share of the new stock was issued for each share of the old stock held by the respective shareholders in each company.

And now, Sir, a change comes over the scene; the hand of the hon. Minister of Public Works appears. He was then Minister of Public Works in Manitoba. The Northern Pacific and Manitoba Railway Company ran a line of railway from the United States up into Winnipeg. The railway was not doing well and was in the hands of a receiver. With that shrewdness that has characterized the Minister of Public Works from that day to this, he grasped an opportunity that few men at that time appreciated. He went to the United States and made an arrangement, the full story of which I am not at liberty to tell, but it would be interesting if he would take the House into his confidence.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. NICKLE: It is not often that gentlemen opposite applaud the Minister of Public Works, but I am sure they will be generous when I tell them that the bargain he entered into with the Northern Pacific and Manitoba Railway Company was highly advantageous to the province of Manitoba and a credit to the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG: Cheer now.

Mr. NICKLE: The province of Manitoba secured the road, and almost at once turned it over to the then Canadian Northern Railway Company stipulating that the Canadian Northern Railway Company must guarantee not to take the traffic through American territory and thence to the seaboard by other American lines but that they must connect up with the Canadian Northern railway to Port Arthur. I want to say that if there is one thing that has characterized our railway policy more than another it is this: we have done things in Canada because our conditions compelled us to do so, but while we did things we also dreamt things, and one of the things we dreamt was that Canada must be united from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and when the Minister of Public Works made that bargain that diverted the grain trade of Manitoba from the United States to Port Arthur and the Great Lakes, he did a great work for Canada. Later on the Canadian Northern railway branched out. Certain subsidiary companies were incorporated to conduct railway operations in British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Ontario and Quebec under the name of the Canadian Northern Pacific, Alberta, Saskatchewan, and so on. I have mentioned the fact that they made application to this House in 1911 for a grant of $35,000,000 and that they got it. We know what was done in 1912, and also last year. So much for the early history of the company.

I now wish to draw the attention of the country to the aid this railway company has had, and while one does not want to say unpleasant things it is hardly fair to the people of Canada to issue such a misleading statement as the Canadian Northern railway people have issued to the people of this country through the recent blue book laid on the table of the House. Any one who reads it with care, and that understands the financial situation, will see how craftily words have been used; the distinction that is made between aid received and aid granted, to these companies since their incorporation, and amalgamation under the name of the Canadian Northern Railway Company, and the careful method by which the subsidies and aids are eliminated when the aid was given prior to amalgamations. I say that the statement issued by the Canadian Northern railway most inadequately portrays to this country what assistance has been given to the company, and I am going to read to this House a statement showing the assistance Canada has given the Canadian Northern Railway Company system. Take land grants for instance. Let us see what the Dominion Government has done. As I explained earlier in the evening, they made a grant to the Winnipeg Great Northern of 2,624,128 acres. I have asked the Government how about that extra 256,000 acres they asked for a few week ago. Does the Government intend to grant that in respect of 40 miles of railroad constructed out of Winnipeg—a railroad that was never completed, the wires of which were used to fence the fields of settlers, the ties of which rotted, and whose rails lay a streak of rust along the way? The member for Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury) tells us that when the road was built thirty years ago the land could not be sold. To-day it is worth from $15 to $20 an acre. Is the Government going to yield to Mackenzie and Mann, and grant 256,000 acres of this domain in the year 1914 which was not asked for in 1900, when the land was worth only $1.50 an acre? Why was the request made lately? Why has it hung fire so long? We will take another case. The Canadian Northern Railway Company received, as the Lake Manitoba Railway and Canal Company, 798,400 acres of land. The Manitoba and Southeastern Railway Company, now a part of the Canadian Northern railway, received 680,320 acres. In other words, the Canadian Northern through these three subsidiary incorporated companies has received 4,102,848 acres of land.

Now, let us see what that land is worth. I desire to be fair, and perhaps it is hard to be fair sometimes; but I would like to direct the attention of the House to the value of the lands as shown by the company. I would first direct attention to the eighth annual report of the Canadian Northern Railway Company, at page 8 where, over the signature of Sir William Mackenzie, he admits that up to that date there had been sold $12,964,627.76 of that land, and that in addition the railway company had to dispose of 1,151,017 acres.

Mr. CARVELL: What is the date of that report?

Mr. NICKLE: It is the report for the year ending the 30th June, 1910. Let us see what they have got for their land since. I give in this table the year, the number of acres sold, the price received, the average per acre, and the page of the report of the Canadian Northern Railway Company at which the statement is to be found:

Year ending June 30.

	Acres.	Price.	Average per acre.	Page of report.
1909. ..	116,662	$1,091,722.37	$ 9.36	7
1910. ..	246,996	2,561,072.52	10.36	6
1911. ..	279,151	3,345,498.73	12.00	6
1912. ..	55,111	836,084.37	15.17	6
1913. ..	19,755	291,195.18	15.36	6

Let us see now how much they received for these lands altogether. The following extract from the reports will show the net result to be:

Land sales to 30th June, 1910 ..		$12,964,627 76
	Acres.
Available acreage to 30th June 1910	1,151,017
Sold from 30th June, 1910, to 30th June, 1913..	354,017	4,472,776 28
Unsold June 30, 1913.	797,000
Estimate of the unsold land, 797,000 acres at $15 an acre...		11,955,000 00
Total..		$29,392,404 04

This shows that the land grant they received from the Dominion Government will bring them $29,392,404.04 in cash. So much for the land.

Let us come now to the province of Quebec and see what land they received from that province. As I said in the beginning I wanted to be accurate, and I therefore wrote to the treasurer of the province of Quebec, who kindly wrote me explaining what land in the province of Quebec was granted to Mackenzie and Mann, or rather to some of these allied or subsidiary companies. The net result is that the province of Quebec gave to the allied companies of the Canadian Northern 685,800 acres of land, which I might put down at, let us say, $5 an acre.

Let us now come to the province of Ontario. I was a member of the legislature when Mackenzie and Mann made application to the Government of the province of Ontario asking that they be assisted in the building of this railway from Port Arthur to Montreal. Sir James Whitney, with that astuteness which has always characterized him, refused to guarantee their bonds and refused a subsidy, but he said he would give them lands provided they threw their line further north than they intended to do; that is, that they would throw it up into the clay belt, so that it might act as a colonization road. The result is that the province of Ontario granted 2,000,000 acres of land to Mackenzie and Mann, and taking that 2,000,000 acres of land at $5 an acre, and I submit it is not an unreasonable value to put on it, that would make $10,000,000 as the value of the land they received from Ontario. The Dominion land grant amounted to $29,392,000, the Quebec land grant to $3,400,000, the Ontario land grant to $10,000,000, making a total estimated value of land grants of $42,392,000 granted by this country to Mackenzie and Mann and their allied interests.

Let us come to the question of the bond guarantee and the subject becomes interesting. Let us see what the Dominion has done. These are the bond guarantees by the Dominion Government:

1. The Canadian Northern Railway Company, Cap. 7, 3 Edward VII, 1903: Gilbert Plains branch to Edmonton, 620 miles; Prince Albert branch, P.A. east, 100 miles; $13,000 per mile. The guarantee is for the principal of £1,923,287 sterling, and interest thereon at the rate of 3 per cent per annum for fifty years.

2. The Canadian Northern Railway Company, Cap. 11, 7 and 8 Edward VII, 1908: The guarantee is for the principal of £1,622,586 19s. 9d. sterling debenture stock and interest thereon at the rate of 3½ per cent per annum for fifty years from July 20, 1908, interest payable half yearly.

Regina to Manitoba, 152 miles.

Saskatoon towards Calgary, 175 miles.

Prince Albert to Battleford, 132 miles.

West boundary Manitoba to Rosthern, 100 miles.

Rossburn line, west boundary of Manitoba, northerly direction, 50 miles.

These were all guaranteed at $13,000 per mile.

3. The Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Company, Chapter 6, 1 and 2 George V, 1911:

The guarantee is for the principal of £7,493,835 12s. 4d. sterling debenture stock and interest thereon at the rate of 3½ per cent per annum for fifty years from May 19, 1911, interest payable half-yearly—1,050 miles.

4. The Canadian Northern Alberta Railway Comapny, Chapter 6, 9-10, Edward VII, 1910, as amended by Chapter 8, 2 George V, 1912:

The guarantee is for the principal of £647,260 5s. 6d. sterling debenture stock and interest thereon at the rate of 3½ per cent per annum for fifty years from May 4, 1910, interest payable half-yearly: $13,000 per mile for the first fifty miles; $25,000 per mile for the balance from St. Albert westward.

5. 2 George V, Chap. 7, 1912: Canadian Northern Alberta, 115 miles to Yellowhead Pass, $35,000 a mile—$4,025,000.

Here is a summary of these Dominion bond guarantees:

1903, £1,923,287 0s. 0d.; 1908, £1,622,586 19s. 6d.; 1911, £7,493,835 12s. 4d.; 1912, £647,260 5s 6d. £11,686,969 17s. 7d., or $56,915,539. 2 George V, Chap. 7, $4,025,000. Total, $60,940,539.

What has Manitoba done for the Canadian Northern Railway Company system, because they never stop? It is first the Dominion and then the provinces. The following table gives the guarantees by Manitoba.

Main and branch lines in Manitoba	$15,313,860 00
Winnipeg terminals	3,000,000 00
Ontario division (line to Port Arthur)	5,745,586 67
Total	$24,059,446 67

The following table shows the bond guarantees given by the province of Alberta:

1909, chapter 14, Canadian Northern railway; 1913, chapter 8, Canadian Northern railway, 900 miles at $15,000 per mile	$13,500,000
1911, chapter 19, Canadian Northern Western railway:
315 miles at $15,000 per mile	4,725,000
250 " 20,000 "	5,000,000
480 " 13,000 "	6,240,000
100 " 15,000 "	1,500,000
118 " 13,000 "	1,534,000
1913, chapter 9, 2nd session, 114 miles at $25,000 per mile	2,850,000
Total	$35,349,000

The following table shows the bond guarantees given by the province of Saskatchewan:

1908-12, Canadian Northern Branch lines:
1,115 miles at $13,000 per mile	$14,495,000
1912, Canadian Northern Saskatchewan railway:
315 miles at $13,000 per mile	4,095,000
Total	$18,590,000

Then, the province of Ontario, prior to the amalgamation of the Ontario and Rainy River railway with the Canadian Northern Railway system, guaranteed, under authority of 8 Edward VII, chapter 47, the principal and interest at 3½% per annum, debenture stock, payable in thirty years from June 30, 1908, $7,860,000.

The following table shows the guarantees given by the province of British Columbia:

A guarantee of principal and interest at 4 per cent per annum on approximately 600 miles at the rate of $35,000 per mile for 30 years	$21,000,000
1912, Vancouver terminals	10,000,000
1913, chapter 57, section 2, s.s. a, b, c and d, 339 miles at $35,000	11,865,000
1914, legislation, about	5,100,000
Total	$47,965,000

Let us crystallize the subsidies, and see what they come to. The following table shows them:

Dominion:
Canadian Northern railway, including:
Winnipeg Great Northern	$ 374,606 00
Port Arthur, Duluth and Western	271,200 00
Ontario and Rainy River	1,534,526 00
Canadian Northern Ontario	2,255,872 00
Canadian Northern Quebec	2,020,616 89
Canadian Northern Pacific 1912, Yellowhead to Vancouver	6,300,000 00
Canadian Northern Alberta	2,589,600 00
Edmonton Yukon Pacific	160,000 00
1913 subsidy	15,640,000 00
Municipalities	172,000 00
Total	$31,318,420 89
Provincial:
Ontario	2,001,413 00
Manitoba	641,575 00
Quebec	3,413,541 03
Total	$ 6,056,529 03
Sum total	$37,374,949 92

I defy you, Sir, to find that amount in the statement issued by Mackenzie and Mann. I want to be fair to them. They say that what I am dealing with is the amount granted, not issued by the Dominion of Canada, not the amount by the Dominion actually paid over to them. That can be determined by deducting from the sum total the amount in the hands of the Government. What I want to say, however, is that the Dominion is behind this undertaking. Here is the recapitulation of the whole statement:

Land Grants:
Dominion		$ 29,392,404
Ontario		10,000,000
Quebec		3,000,000
Bond guarantees:
Dominion		60,940,539
Manitoba		24,059,446
Alberta		35,349,000
Saskatchewan		18,590,000
Ontario		7,860,000
British Columbia		47,965,000
Subsidies granted:
Dominion and municipalities		31,318,420
Ontario		2,001,413
Manitoba		641,575
Quebec		3,413,541
Total		$274,531,338
Loan given by the Nova Scotia legislature to the Halifax and Southwestern of $13,500 per mile, for 372 miles		5,022,000
Subsidies granted to Bay of Quinte	$159,228
Central Ontario	219,018
Iredale, Bancroft and Ottawa	250,569
James Bay	27,612
		656,427
Sum total		$280,209,765

That shows that the Dominion of Canada is behind this undertaking to the extent of $280,209,765. What has this company done for Canada? I have heard considerable to-night from the Solicitor General, who, with that eloquence that always characterizes his utterances and with that effectiveness of speaking that at times stamps a fallacious argument as being effective, made the statement that the Canadian Northern Railway Company was a competitive railroad and that it would lower or regulate rates. If I have not quoted him correctly or given the spirit of his language, I would like him to correct me. I understood him to say that while the National Transcontinental railroad would never be a regulating factor owing to the cost of construction, the Canadian Northern Railway Company would be. I want to take him on his own statement, and I want to quote, in reply to him, not what the Canadian Northern Company say when they want further assistance from the Government, but what they said when they wanted to keep up freight rates. I want to quote what the Hon. Mr. Phippen argued before the Railway Commission on the Consolidated Western Freight Rates Case. Mr. Phippen said no doubt what he did say with the approbation of the management and control of the Canadian Northern railway system. Their officials were there. Here is what Mr. Phippen said:

All of the evidence and ninety-nine per cent of the argument has been directed against the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. We have hardly heard the name of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company mentioned, we have hardly heard the name of the Canadian Northern Railway Company mentioned by the Complainants. It has been avoided by them as a thing accursed. Their whole case is built up, with the exception of some statements which Mr. Pitblado made, and which I will deal with later, upon conditions which exist on the Canadian Pacific railway. The expert brought by the Government, Mr. Muller, says that the Canadian Pacific railway should be the road upon which these rates should be based, and the rates upon which the Canadian Northern should be compelled to carry its traffic.

He says further, that in determining what are reasonable rates for the Canadian Pacific railway this board should not take into consideration any benefits which were given to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company under its agreement with the Government, except perhaps the land grant of twenty five million acres. He says that the Canadian Northern railway, constructed at a time when, putting it moderately, it took $3 to get the same result as $1 would bring when the Canadian Pacific was constructed, should be compelled to compete with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, not only upon the basis of the Canadian Pacific turning over to the public the benefit of all the advantages which were given to it under the terms of its contract, but turning over also to the public the benefit of the increased value of the dollar which went into the road, in other words, the unearned increment of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company between the time when that road was constructed in 1881, and the heyday of prosperity when the Canadian Northern and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railways were built.

Now, let us see a little more minutely just what that would mean. Let us take the Canadian Northern beginning at Port Arthur and follow it west, and as we go let us apply Mr. Muller's theory to the conditions with which he would have us compete. We start at Port Arthur and we build to the Red river through probably as expensive a bit of country to construct a road in as there is in Canada. We build that line at the request both of the Government of the province of Manitoba and the Government of the province of Ontario, and we build the line necessarily alongside the line of the Canadian Pacific railway at the request of these provinces as a competitive line to meet Canadian Pacific railway conditions. What would Mr. Muller make conditions under which he would have us compete? The Government of the Dominion of Canada built the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and presented it to the company under the terms of the agreement of 1881; The Canadian Northern railway built the line which it operates out of its own money, raised on its own bonds, guaranteed, if you will, by the province of Manitoba, but bonds for which it primarily and the people of the province of Manitoba secondarily are responsible. Mr. Muller would say that we must compete with the Canadian Pacific railway line which was presented to it on the basis of there being no capital charge for the construction of our line.

Now, let us come to the city of Winnipeg, where the Canadian Northern has acquired central and expensive terminals, one part of which is not in use at the present time, but which will be brought into use almost immediately and which part also has been valued by some of the best experts in the United States within the past few days at $7,000,000, and what do we find? The Canadian Pacific Railway Company received not only a perpetual exemption from taxation from the city of Winnipeg, but it received its terminals in that important city without any charge or cost to the company.

The Canadian Pacific built from Winnipeg when there was scarcely a settler in the country, it obtained its right of way for nothing or practically nothing until it came to range 14, some 80 or 90 miles west of the city of Winnipeg. Then it ran into the Northwest Territories of Canada, and under the terms of the agreement between the Government and the company from there to the eastern boundary of the province of British Columbia it received a right of way 150 feet wide for nothing; not only that, it received its terminals and its station yards through all these important cities through which it now passes, for nothing. But it did more than that, it got half interest in all the town sites along the line. However, leave that out of the question. It got its right of way for nothing, it got its terminals and station grounds for nothing. Yet Mr. Muller would have the Canadian Northern, built by its own bonds, compete with the Canadian Pacific. He would have it build its line and but its right of way when three dollars represent only the value of one dollar, and would say that what it paid for its right of way shall not be taken into consideration as a capital charge when competing with the Canadian Pacific railway

More than that, the Canadian Pacific from range 14 built its lines under the terms of the contract, by virtue of which the company, its capital stock, its stations, its buildings, its right of way, its lines, its improvements of all kinds, every asset that man can think of, were exempted for all time from all taxation, municipal, provincial, Dominion or otherwise, and so firmly was that exemption fixed that when the boundaries of the province of Manitoba were extended from range 14 to range 29 the extension was made subject to the tax exemption of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. So that to-day and for all time by part of what is now the constitution of Canada the province of Manitoba is deprived of its right to tax the Canadian Pacific railway assets between range 14 and range 29 in that territory. Mr. Muller would say that the Canadian Northern and the Grand Trunk Pacific must not only do the other things I have mentioned, but must pay taxes, municipal, provincial and Dominion and compete without this being taken into account.

You gentlemen have all travelled over the line of the Canadian Pacific railway through the Fraser Canyon. You all can form an estimate of what it cost to build the Canadian Pacific railway through that territory. Across the canyon you see the Canadian Northern working along what is probably the most difficult place where God permitted man to build a railway; you see the Canadian Northern building a line between Kamloops and Vancouver which must cost—I am speaking now as an estimate, not by the book—at least $100,000 to $125,000 a mile to build. Mr. Muller would say that the Government-built Canadian Pacific from Kamloops to Vancouver—the Government presented that line to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company—and the Canadian Northern railway should both have their rates fixed by the same standard; that the capital which the Canadian Northern has expended in building this most difficult piece of line should not be taken into consideration but should be provided Heaven knows how; that the company should compete with the Canadian Pacific Company on the basis of that section of the line costing nothing.

I go further to Vancouver. When the Canadian Pacific reached what is now the thriving city of Vancouver it reached a wilderness. Under the terms of its contract it had a right to all the water front it required and to all the land it required for its terminals. It took advantage of that provision to the full. Where we must buy into a city where real estate is, to say the least, not given away, where we have to buy the Canadian Pacific received its terminals for nothing, received its water frontage for nothing, and received hundreds of acres in the city of Vancouver, which it is now disposing of for millions of dollars, for the betterment of its line. Yet Mr. Muller and Mr. Bicknell would have the Canadian Northern compete on the basis of there being no capital allowance for those advantages.

Going further still, the Canadian Pacific in addition received 25,000,000 acres of land as a land grant, and while Mr. Muller by his theory would not compel the Canadian Pacific to apply the proceeds of the land in reduction of its capital—I do not know why, unless he had reached the point by this time where it was a reductio ad absurdum, and he saw if applied there would be nothing left but rather that there would be something on the other side of the ledger and the company would have to pay the public dividends—I say if that was not so I do not see why he did not compel them to apply the proceeds of the land grant in the construction of the line, but although he did not compel them he did not prevent them from so doing.

And what do we find today? We all saw the amount of the issue made by the Canadian Pacific a few days ago. By that issue, as I understand it, the Canadian Pacific disposed of approximately $50,000,000 (I have not the figures in my mind) of relatively short day notes secured on the proceeds of sale of their land, to bear interest at 6 per cent, and to be redeemed over a period of ten years; to be redeemed at par meanwhile during the ten years by drawings and at the end of the ten years outstanding notes to be redeemed at par out of these proceeds; the notes being given to the present shareholders of the company at 80. What does that mean? It means that $40,000,000 are taken from the land grant assets of the Canadian Pacific railway and put into the capital account of the road. It means that that $40,000,000 won't draw one dollar from the operating revenue of the road, because its interest and principal are to be repaid out of the proceeds of the land sales, and when the transaction is cleaned up, when those notes have been redeemed, the effect of the transaction will be this, that the Canadian Pacific railway will have received $40,000,000 which it has applied in the betterment of its road, and its outstanding obligations will not be increased one cent, because the investment will have been repaid out of the proceeds of its land sales.

It is quite possible for the Canadian Pacific to do this. According to the statements put in by Mr. Muller it has done it in the past to the extent of many millions of dollars. Doubtless it will continue to do it in the future.

I am not blaming the Canadian Pacific for adopting this policy. So far as the public is concerned, it is a good policy. But it simply means that when the Government gave 25,000,000 acres of land to the Canadian Pacific railway it put a club in the hands of that company which it can wield over the head of any unfortunate company which comes in competition, by using, if it chose, the proceeds of these land sales to reduce its capital charges, to reduce its operating expenses, to make the apparent return on its stock so great as to invite public attack against its rates, and to bring down in the wreck which might follow rate reduction any unfortunate minor competitor who might happen to be in the field—notwithstanding all this, Mr. Muller would apply his theory. The Government made that possible. You may say that the same Government made it possible indirectly in a much smaller way for the Canadian Northern to do the same thing. We bought a charter, that of the old Hudson Bay railway, which carried with it a land grant, and we do show in our assets some 800,000 acres of land and the proceeds of sale of other land, our total grant amounting to two million acres, which we have used in promoting the welfare of our road, and to that extent there is a comparison. But the comparison of the two million against the twenty-five million, the comparison of nothing against the millions we have had to spend in Vancouver, and the other comparisons which I have made show that if the theory which Mr. Muller advocated is to be adopted it would be impossible for any other railway company ever to construct a line in Canada in competition with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. It would be absurd to suggest that any railway company on its own merits could attempt to construct a line such as the Canadian Northern has built against conditions I have pointed out, conditions which would exist as competitive conditions if Mr. Muller's theory be accepted, and the assets be considered as gifts by the public to the public and not as inducements to the construction of the Canadian Pacific railway.

That was not the intention of Parliament. That it was not the intention is shown by the fact that the Parliament of Canada and the legislatures of the various provinces have assisted in the construction of the Canadian Northern railway in a competitive field where the company must die if this condition existed. Therefore I say that when you are considering what will be done with these assets, when you reach the point that you must consider them either in this investigation or hereafter, you must consider the fact that Parliament did not intend that these assets should be given by the whole of the public to a part of the public, but that they were given to the Canadian Pacific railway as a company, otherwise competition is dead and the Canadian Pacific railway would be the only railway in Canada for all time, unless a road were constructed by public money and operated by the public for the public as a public road.

Now, Sir, what does that mean? It means simply this, if I understand it, that while we have taken freight rates out of the competitive field by entrusting the determination of those rates to the Railway Commission, the officials of the Canadian Northern railway and the officials of the National Transcontinental take the position that the freight rates should not be determined by the road that can most cheaply carry the traffic but should be determined by the road which finds it most expensive to operate; that the credit of Canada is so interlocked and bound up with these railroads that the Railway Commission can do nothing that would indirectly affect the rates because if they do they would impugn and possibly overthrow the national credit. I wish to direct the attention of the House, while we are on the question of transportation to the statement of Mr. Smithers, made the other day at the annual meeting of the Grand Trunk Railway Company. He said:

> Mr. Smithers said he felt the Railway Commission must have had the Canadian Pacific more particularly in their minds, because the Canadian Pacific was defending itself against a reduction in that which it had enjoyed ever since its birth.

Let me draw attention to the fact that the Railway Commission had ordered the railway freight rates to be reduced. Here is what Mr. Smithers said:

> The effect may be less than is now estimated and there may be compensation in increased traffic, but if we can show these reductions, although they can be borne by a neighbouring rich company, have imperilled the earnings on which we ourselves relied when we entered into agreements with the Government, I am sure the Government will have the support of the Canadian Parliament in either restoring rates, or compensate us in some way for the loss involved.

I submit that these extracts prove conclusively that the question of freight rates must be dealt with not from the standpoint of competition; the matter must be adjusted, if the national credit is to be maintained, by determination of such a rate as will enable the transcontinental companies to continue.

That brings me to another point, and it is here that again I find my divergence with the Government. I was not a member of this House in 1904 or in 1908, but I was taking some little part in politics in Kingston and the surrounding districts at that time, and there rings in my ears yet the statement of the right hon. leader of the Government and his confreres, that, if Canada were to support the cost of building a railroad, we should own and operate it. The Conservative party, as I understand it, were pledged to Government ownership and Government control. In the debate that took place in this House in 1903, the right hon. leader of the Government of to-day made the remark: I do not shrink from Government ownership and Government operation. He went further and moved a resolution, in the support of which he said that he regretted that the Transcontinental Bill then going through the House would put back Government ownership 50 years. I am not going to discuss the advisability of expediency of Government ownership; that is a matter that may be discussed at another time, but what I do say is that, if my leader turns sharp corners and sees new light, and I do not see that light, I see no reason why I should be held up to the contempt and ridicule of the Conservative party because I go on my way unperturbed, holding my allegiance to the principle that he upheld in 1903. I believe that the Government of this country has to face a great problem. I do not believe that the National Transcontinental railway from Winnipeg eastward will ever be taken over by the Grand Trunk Pacific Company; I believe that the interest charges on the cost of construction will be prohibitive.

Mr. MORPHY: Upon what does the hon. gentleman base that belief?

Mr. NICKLE: Upon the arguments advanced by the Conservative party in this House during the course of the National Transcontinental railway debate a few weeks ago and upon a statement which I propose to read in a few moments. I am not sure whether the hon. member for North Perth spoke on that occasion, but I have a hazy recollection that he did. If I understood at all the import of that debate, the whole anathemas of the Conservative party—and certainly the anathemas of the Solicitor General to-night—were directed against the Liberal party because the cost of the construction of the National Transcontinental railway had rendered nugatory the competition factor in the question of the determination of railway rates in this country.

In 1911 a singular thing took place in this country. Politically I am not very much interested one way or another with this railroad question; I am not particularly concerned whether the Liberal party or the Conservative party are to blame for the difficulties in which we are. To me it is simply a business proposition. I am trying to look forward, and looking to the future this is what confronts me. In 1911, as I say, a startling thing took place in Canada. The West, outside of British Columbia and Manitoba, went practically solid for the Liberal party, and Ontario, a great industrial centre, went practically solid for the Conservative party. What do we find? Since that time I have sat in this House and if I have listened to one thing more than another it has been the complaint of the western members about the condition of the western country. Canada lies like a huge dumb-bell, if I may use the expression, one end on the Atlantic, the other end on the Pacific, and between these extremities a narrow district, not thickly populated. The West, as I understand its position, offers three solutions to the difficulty: free wheat, free agricultural implements and, to a certain extent, an increase in the British preference. If I understand the position of the West, it is this: they have little sympathy with protection because they have very few industries. In my judgment, if this country is ever going to become a great country, East and West must co-operate. The East must sacrifice for the West and the West must sacrifice for the East. I am not going to discuss free wheat; I am not going to discuss free agricultural implements, but one thing that struck me when these subjects were under discussion in the House was that the question of freight rates became an important factor. I find that the question of freight rates in Canada is necessarily of more importance than it is in the United States, for several reasons. Our population north of lake Superior is practically nothing, so far as contributing to the upkeep of a railway is concerned. In the states to the south there is quite a dense population. They have a well-regulated railway system, and it is economically managed; more so than our railway system, because the rigours of their winter are not so acute as ours. Those who know anything about railway operation know that in a country with a climate such as Canada has it is more expensive to operate a railway than it is in a country like the United States, where similar climatic conditions do not prevail. Another factor that enters into the cost of operation is the question of coal. The Canadian railway companies must pay a duty of fifty-three cents a ton upon their coal; the American roads do not have to pay that duty and the result is that their roads are more cheaply operated than the Canadian roads. When the American roads are taken in hand by the Interstate Commerce Commission, they are going to be compelled to lower their rates, and when they are compelled to lower their rates discontent in the western provinces will be more rife than it is to-day, because the western provinces are compelled practically to confine themselves to the production of wheat, which they send abroad, and they must necessarily pay more for the products which they buy because they come from the East. The hon. member for one of the Bruces asks me if I approve of the taking out of watered stock. Frankly, I think that that has got to come. We are squeezing some of the water out of the Canadian Northern and when the Interstate Commerce Commission gets hold of the American roads, some of the water will be squeezed out of them. I am not going to be so blind as to say that there is absolutely no virtue in the Government's proposal. I frankly admitted when I got up that I do think there are certain advantages in it, but I do say that fundamentally I do not agree with it and on that ground I am arguing my case to-night.

I want to take up another phase of this question. If you will turn to the census returns for 1911 you will find that the province of Alberta had a population of 374,000, Saskatchewan 492,000, and Manitoba 455,000, a total of 1,322,000. Ontario had a population of 2,500,000. The rural population of the three prairie provinces was 849,000, and of Ontario 1,200,000. The urban population of the western provinces was 473,000; of Ontario, 1,300,000. The value of the agricultural products in 1910 in the three western provinces was $229,000,000; in Ontario it was $314,000,000. The manufactured products of the West were $78,000,000; of Ontario $579,000,000. The value of the agricultural and manufactured products of the three western provinces was $307,000,000; of Ontario $893,000,000. Now, Sir, I want to reduce that to a per capita production. The total products per capita of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba were $232; of Ontario $355. The agricultural products per capita of the rural population of the three prairie provinces was $263; of Ontario $261. You will observe that the per capita production of the western provinces and of Ontario was practically the same in dollars, but as the cost of living is very, very much higher in the western provinces than it is in Ontario, the advantage to the farmer of the West was greatly reduced on that account. Let us look at the area under cultivation in the West and in Ontario. The area farmed in the West was 17,000,000 acres; in Ontario it was 9,000,000 acres. The value of the products in 1910 of the three western provinces was $229,000,000, and of Ontario $314,000,000. The value of the products of each acre farmed in Manitoba and the West was $13 only, while in Ontario it was $32. That is to say, the western farmer received only 40 per cent from each acre of what the Ontario farmer got. Why was that? It was not that his land was any less fertile. The reason is that he is restricted in the production of his crop to grain, the market of which is in Liverpool and the price of which is determined abroad. As I say, in 1911 the strange thing happened that Manitoba and the West went solidly Liberal and Ontario went solidly Conservative. I see a national danger there. My reason for advocating that the Government should take over these roads is that I believe that the problem for Canada is: Can we not develop some transportation solution that will place in the western provinces the raw material of the East so that we may have manufactories in the West. It is all very well for men in Ontario connected with manufacturing to say that they are in favour of protection; they want protection against the highly organized and efficient industries of the United States. I am an Ontario man, and as an Ontario man I make an appeal to this House for consideration for the West. They have no industries there, it is difficult to start them. They tell me that the moment they try to do so the efficiently organized industries of the East come into competition with their less efficiently organized industries and throttle them by competition. What I would like to see would be for the Government to take over these two railroads, the National Transcontinental railway and the Canadian Northern railway.

An hon. MEMBER: The Canadian Pacific railway too?

Mr. NICKLE: You ask me why not the Canadian Pacific railway. The reason I say not the Canadian Pacific railway is that if I have proved anything to you tonight I have proved this, that the Canadian Pacific railway can give a cheaper rate than either of the other two railroads; they can stand the competition and the cut, and in my judgment there is only one way that the Canadian Pacific railway will ever have to stand a cut and that is by the competition of a railroad operated and controlled by the Government. Government competition, a railroad run by the Dominion of Canada, where the capital charge will not have to be considered, where raw materials can be given a differential rate, where there will be a certain subvention that will enable the western manufacturer to get his raw material cheaper, 11 p.m. so that the farmer in the West can have a local market and the purely distributing population that exists in the centres of the West to-day may become an industrial population. I believe when the time comes that the West has its industries, the cleavage between the West and the East will be done away with and there will be a tendency from segregation towards cohesion throughout Canada from end to end.

There is another factor in this question which I wish to discuss, that is the general railway situation in Canada. Mr. Hanna's figures were quoted here to-day. I would quote some more of the Canadian Northern railway figures as to the railway situation in Canada, the figures of the Canadian Northern railway not when they want a Government subvention but when they wanted to maintain rates. Let us see what Mr. Phippen said to the Railway Commission:

> Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, this brings me to my last consideration, the general situation in Canada as it is to-day, and I hope that my statement will not be unduly emphasized by the press, but I must give this Board facts which I think will give cause for thought to every member of the Board.

And, Mr. Speaker, if I mistake not these facts will give every member of this House cause for thought:

> I produce a statement showing the capital invested and to be invested to complete the transcontinental lines at present constructed and under construction.
>
> The figures for the Canadian Pacific railway are taken from the statement Mr. Chrysler filed yesterday, $635,000,000 odd.
>
> Grand Trunk Pacific railway $175,000,000.
>
> These figures are furnished by Mr. Biggar. They are conservative. I regret to say there will probably be an addition of a further $25,000,000.
>
> National transcontinental, $200,000,000.
>
> This I obtained from a high official in the Finance Department. The cost of the transcontinental without equipment will be $200,000,000. This is a cold fact, and food for much thought. It is a little over $100,000 a mile. This money has been found or must be found. Some one must pay interest.
>
> The Canadian Northern Pacific, 600 miles, I have estimated. It is my own estimate. It is not based on actual cost or on information given me by any officer of the road. I think I am low, but I wish it taken as simply my own estimate. I have tried to make it reasonable. $80,000 a mile. That is for the British Columbia work and is not excessive when the Grand Trunk Pacific cost $87,000 on the prairie. At the estimated mileage this amounts to $48,000,000.
>
> Canadian Northern Ontario north of lake Superior. Again this is my own estimate. The mileage is right. $50,000 a mile through this country is not, I think, excessive. That would be $45,000,000.
>
> Additional equipment for Grand Trunk Pacific railway and National Transcontinental. I have that from authority. $40,000,000.
>
> Additional equipment for Canadian Northern. I have that from our own officers. $35,000,000.
>
> Or a total cost of $1,178,229,094.
>
> Leaving out the Canadian Northern railway, which I deal with a little lower down. I take the net earnings of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, according to the last report, which were then stated as $42,403,340.
>
> Net earnings of the Grand Trunk Pacific railway, as shown under its operating statement, $2,691,402.
>
> Or a total from these two companies of $45,094,742.
>
> From which I deduct Canadian Pacific taxes shown as $1,362,420.
>
> Leaving a net operating revenue of these two roads of $43,712,322.
>
> To which I add the surplus earnings of the Canadian Northern shown in the last annual report as $400,000.
>
> Giving the total of all net earnings, over and above what is necessary to provide for the outstanding obligations of the Canadian Northern road of $44,112,973.
>
> This added to the above gives a net earning of 44 million dollars to pay interest on $1,178,229,000, and also to provide for such margin of safety as may be necessary to enable those companies to maintain their credit.
>
> Let us see what all this means. Mr. Muller says six per cent is fair. Six per cent on the billion odd amounts to $70,693,745.
>
> For which there is available as above, 44 million dollars.
>
> Leaving a deficit of $26,580,000 a year.
>
> This is not prophecy, it is cold fact.

And the Government rush us into partnership with the Canadian Northern railway! If Mr. Hanna's figures are correct, Mr. Phippen's argument is false; if Mr. Phippen's figures are correct, Mr. Hanna's estimates are wrong. And did you read the note to his estimates? Could anything be more vague, more uncertain? What does he say: it is a guess in the dark; I hope it will turn out all right, but I am not going to pledge my word. If it does not turn out all right, what is going to happen to Canada? She has entered a partnership and is bound to see the thing through, no matter what it may cost. Last year they told us that a $15,000,000 subsidy would complete the road, and this year they tell us that $45,000,000 will complete it. 'Once bitten twice shy' is a proverb worthy of remembrance by governments as well as by men.

There is another side to this question to which I wish to direct attention, and this is perhaps just a bit personal. I do not know exactly whether it is fair that I should bring it up, and yet the conduct was so outrageous that I think it is only fair that the House and country should know how some men fight. There is such a thing as a fair fight. A fair fight is the kind of fight a man should fight who has felt the approving touch of His Majesty's sword. There is the fight of a knight who should always remember the order to which he belongs; he should have a fair tilt in an open field. He should realize what fair play is, and should not strike below the belt. When this despatch appeared in the Kingston Whig I stood aghast. I want the House to listen, because within the last year men have been hurled from the legislatures of the provinces of Quebec and Ontario because they accepted bribes, because they yielded to the influence of money, and I want to know what is the opinion of this House of men who do not use money, but threats to win their purpose. As I said, when the first move was made by the Mackenzie and Mann interests in the lobbies of this House to secure Government assistance, I was somewhat outspoken in how I felt in regard to the matter. Here is the telegraphic despatch that appeared in the British Whig, Kingston, dated March 9, 1914:

Not Inclined to be Favorably disposed towards Kingston—W. F. Nickle's Stand is not Relished by the Canadian Northern Railway President whose Company it was Thought Could be Interested in Establishing a Terminal Here for Transhipping Coal From Oswego.

It is reported from Ottawa that Sir William Mackenzie, of the Canadian Northern Railway Company, is not inclined to be favourably disposed towards Kingston with regard to railway facilities here in view of the announcement that its member in the commons, W. F. Nickle, is out so strongly against any further government assistance towards the completion of the Canadian Northern railway line. When some one approached him with regard to the establishment here of a terminal so that coal could be shipped via Kingston from Oswego, New York, he is reported to have said that the Canadian Northern railway could hardly be expected to consider projects that would benefit this city when its representative was inclined to be antagonistic to the interests of that road.

I try to fight fair, and to be perfectly sure that I did the gentleman no injustice. I got a second copy of that paper, and, under date of March 12, I sent the following registered by mail to Sir William Mackenzie:

March 12, 1914.

Sir William Mackenzie,
Chateau Laurier,
Ottawa.

Memorandum for Sir William Mackenzie's information.

Enclosure: Clipping from 'The British Whig,' Kingston, March 9, 1914,

W. F. Nickle.

And the report of the Post Office is that Sir William Mackenzie signed for this on the 15th of March. To this day he has never answered that letter, has never repudiated that interview, and therefore I think I am justified in saying that Sir William Mackenzie justifies that method of fighting. I want to give this House an illustration of how he fights. In Kingston there is a great railroad industry called the Canadian Locomotive Works Company. The man that gets a preponderate share of its vote is as sure to be elected as day follows night. Sir William Mackenzie's emissaries reported in Kingston that their companies would give no contracts to the Canadian Locomotive Works Company, as Kingston's member was unsympathetic to their request for assistance. In a period of industrial stagnation when that became known in Kingston, women held their children to their breasts, dreading the pangs of hunger and of frost, but a thousand times better that I should be removed from the public life of Canada than that women should go cold and children suffer. But I want to say this for those men: no man raised his voice in protest but one. What is democracy coming to when the plutocrats can so tyrannize over the representatives of the people? Does free speech amount to anything? First they tried coercion here, then they tried other influences What do they do? Take my own seat, which I hold so dear because if there is one thing that I have been proud of more than anything else in my public life it is that I had the satisfaction of redeeming that riding when Sir Wilfrid Laurier was in power. I won that seat after seventeen years of Liberal rule—for the first time in a general election since Sir John A. Macdonald went to his grave. Are the representatives of the people to be throttled? Better a thousand times that I should go out of public life than that Mackenzie and Mann should put their hands on my throat, and make the public think a man dare not stand up and express his conviction in this House. Why, Sir, the day the Government brought down this measure, on my way to the Chateau Laurier I met Sir William Mackenzie. What did he say? 'Why don't you go over to the Opposition?' That is his idea of freedom within a party. He thinks there is no room for independence in Canadian politics either on one side or the other; do not express your honest convictions if you cannot express them in favour of your party, is his motto. Might I not say in the words of Shakespeare:

> Why, man, he doth bestride the narrow world like a colossus;
> And we petty men walk under his huge legs,
> And peep about to find ourselves dishonourable graves.

I would sooner have honourable defeat than mean victory. I would sooner go down to defeat in Kingston, if I am a candidate in the next election, than I would be in Mackenzie's shoes and so far forget the order to which I belonged as to adopt the tactics of the South African savage and blow a poisoned dart into the back of an unsuspecting enemy. So much for that, and that is personal. Gentlemen may laugh. Some man behind me laughs, but he does not know what it is to suffer. Let him stand where I have stood for the last three weeks and see whether he will laugh. I do not profess any virtues, but as I said when I accepted the nomination, I reserve the right to think and speak for myself. If party government in this country has got to such a stage that within a party there is no room for independence, that a man must agree with his party on the fundamentals and also on the incidentals, then I say to this House that so far as the member for Kingston is concerned, give me the freedom of an elector rather than the fetters of the elected. As I said before, I do not differ from the Government on fundamentals. I have been as careful to-night as any man could be not to go outside the pale of my party. I am just as good a Conservative to-night, in so far as my inclinations and tendencies go, as I was thirty years ago when I learned my politics at the knee of Sir John A. Macdonald.

But here is where I differ. I am opposed to going into partnership with Mackenzie and Mann, just the same as I am opposed to going into partnership commercially with people I do not trust. I think they will do the Government in the long run, but if they do not do the Government let us see where the Government has placed us. It is admitted that this one hundred million dollars is practically all watered stock. You may say that is not so, but I submit that it is, and I think one can easily prove it. For instance, I will refer to their statements with regard to two of the companies. It is a very difficult thing to get at the bottom of the position of these companies for the reason that many are incorporated either by private Act or by Dominion letters patent, and under the Dominion Companies' Act they do not have to make annual returns, and so when you ask any question of the department, with the object of getting information, you are confronted with the fact that there is no information to be had because no returns are published. But in Ontario that is different, and there are two companies, the Canadian Northern Coal and Ore and Dock Company, Limited, and the Lake Superior Terminals Company, Limited, that are incorporated under Ontario statutes. Here is the return for the Canadian Coal and Ore Dock Company, Limited:

The amount of capital of the company and the number of shares into which it is divided—$500,000 divided into 5,000 shares of $100 each.

The number of shares subscribed for and allotted: 5,000.

The number of shares, if any, issued as fully paid shares as consideration for the transfer of assets, good will or otherwise; if none are so issued the fact to be stated: 5,000.

The amount of calls made on each share: none.

What does that mean? All water. And that statement is signed by Z. A. Lash.

Now, let us look at the return of the Lake Superior Terminals Company, Limited:

The amount of the capital stock of the company and the number of shares into which it is divided: $1,000,000, divided into 10,000 shares of $100 each.

The number of shares subscribed for and allotted: 5,000.

The number of shares, if any, if it has fully paid shares as consideration for any transfer of assets, good will or otherwise; if none are so issued, this fact to be stated: 5,000.

The amount of calls made on each share: None.

More water.

And, Sir, if one wants a startling statement one need only take up the report into the inquiry of the tariffs of express companies. The inquiry was made in 1911 and reading it one gasps at the financing of this company.

The stock of the Canadian Northern Railway Express Company is now owned by the Canadian Northern Company and is included among its assets. I read from the report of that inquiry before the Board of Railway Commissioners:

> This company was incorporated in 1902, with a nominal capital of $1,000,000; $300,000 was issued, $5,000 paid in cash and $295,000 paid up stock issued to the following shareholders:
>
> William Mackenzie, Esq., 1 share of $100.
>
> D. D. Mann, Esq., 1 share of $100.
>
> Z. A. Lash, Esq., 1 share of $100.
>
> R. J. Mackenzie, Esq., 1 share of $100.
>
> Estate of A. W. Mackenzie, Esq., 1 share of $100.
>
> Mackenzie, Mann and Company, Limited, $299,500.

There was $5,000 in cash paid in, and the rest was water.

> The property of the company, consisting of general equipment, amounts at its estimate to $38,393.
>
> The iinvestigation shows that for 6 years, 1902-3 to 1907-8, their total receipts have been $919,183, increasing from $60,889 for 1902-3 to $336,708 in 1907-8.
>
> The company's operations were principally west of Port Arthur up to about three years ago, when they opened up in Ontario and Quebec.
>
> The amount of transportation paid for the 6 years is $353,126 or 38.4 on gross revenue averaging $58,854 per annum.
>
> The total general expenditure was $331,740 or 36 per cent, averaging $55,290 per annum.
>
> The loss and damage sustained is $3,893 and averages $649 per annum.
>
> The total net earnings are $234,316 or 25.5 on gross revenue, averaging $39,053, increasing from $18,995 in 1902-3 to $57,432 in 1907-8.

Then, we turn back a page and we find out from whom the Canadian Northern Railway Express Company was bought, and here is what the report says:

> The capital stock of the company authorized is $1,000,000; issued, $300,000. Of this $5,000 was paid in cash and $295,000 was issued as paid up stock to the vendors of the express business, and the rights, franchises, good will, properties, etc., connected therewith, carried on in connection with the Northern Pacific and Manitoba and allied railway companies, and for the good will, properties, etc., used in connection with the express business then done for the Canadian Northern Railway Company and allied roads.

What one would like to find is how much was given for that stock, and here is what bothers one. As I just explained, reading from the report, the Canadian Northern Express Company issued $5,000 worth of paid-up stock, and $295,000 worth of stock that was issued subject to call was given to them as a gratuity. The right hon. leader of the Government said to-day that he had a statement regarding Mackenzie and Mann, Ltd.—he read it frankly and honestly as he always does everything—he read this statement showing that Mackenzie and Mann, Limited, and the Northern Construction Company, Limited, had not made anything out of this railway. But he did not read a statement showing whether Mackenzie and Mann in their individual capacity, and not as members of the company, made anything or not, and I put my finger here on $295,000 and I say that if I manage to find that out in face of the secret system they have in their financing, how much more is there behind?

But it is not just the $295,000. I find in the Canadian Northern Report for 1913 at page 16 that the Canadian Northern Express Company, Limited, had a capital stock of $1,000,000 and they have issued first mortgage gold bonds to the extent of $3,000,000. To whom did Mackenzie and Mann sell these bonds and stock and what did they get for it? These are the sort of things it seems to me that this country would like to know and these are the questions that I would like to have answered because if ever there was a case where apparently men made a large sum of money by the juggling of stock, it is this particular case.

Somebody might say to me, and I suppose it would be in reason: You do not know anything about this; you are inexperienced; and the danger in this partnership which you see does not amount to anything. Before I touch on this point here is a thing which strikes me as a citizen of the country, and it is: Who is going to pay the money to make stock that Canada takes worth $40,000,000? The Government admit that $100,000,000 stock represents the services of Mackenzie and Mann since they undertook this railway business in 1897. Nobody pretends that they paid in anything. That has not been suggested by the leader of the Government as I understood him, nor by the Solicitor General. The Solicitor General said they had in their subsidiary allied strategic companies common stock or stocks to the amount of $158,000,000. We have not squeezed water out of that; you cannot squeeze water out of water where there is nothing but water; the Solicitor General has dipped it out.

Mr. R. B. BENNETT: Bailed it out.

Mr. NICKLE: The Solicitor General has bailed out $58,000,000, and he has brought it down to $100,000,000. What does that mean? That is Mackenzie and Mann's price as promoters for carrying on this work, acting as financial agents, acting as constructive agents. That is their price for their services for all these years' work.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not want you to get the idea that I think Mackenzie and Mann should not be allowed something. I certainly think they should. They are far-sighted, energetic, earnest men and they should get reasonable recognition, but I say that $60,000,000 of stock which the Solicitor General says some day will be worth dollar for dollar is too much money for Canada to pay to two men for promoting a transcontinental railway in this country. Not only is it too much for these men to get, but it is too much for Canada to pay freight rates on. Who is going to pay these freight rates? Again it has to come out of the West, not only on that $60,000,000, but on that $40,000,000 that Canada has taken as her share, if I might use the term, of the booty. Freight rates have to be paid on that. It is not like a royalty in a mine. When you take a royalty on a mineral, you take a product which is easily worked. The intrinsic value is there. It is not in the working that the value exists; the value exists because somebody is fortunate in finding the mineral and there is a huge profit; but in this case, this road on that $100,000,000 has to earn $6,000,000 annually which has to be taken out of the pockets of the people in rates, and it means that the cost of living in the West will be that much higher. What will be the argument of my good friend Mr. Phippen before the Railway Commission the next time that freight rates are being discussed? He is going to say this: In the determination of these rates, you have to take into consideration this $100,000,000. Canada through her Parliament recognizes that that is a fair amount to pay these men for their services. Canada has taken $40,000,000 of it in return for her guarantee; and we represent the Canadian Northern, and Mackenzie and Mann demand that you fix the freight rates at such an amount that there will be a fair return on the money which you must consider as capital invested. That is the policy which the Government has asked me to commit myself to, but I am not prepared to do so. The great broad principle is the principle of a partnership. You, Mr. Speaker, may say: The hon. member has no experience; he is young in Parliament so far; he was prejudiced against these men; they have struck at him and he has struck back; he is hurt. But let me establish my case in the light of history, and it is only in the experience of the past that you can reach the conclusions as to what should be done in the present and as to what will happen in the future. This is not the first time that Canada has experimented in railroad partnerships. In 1852, Upper Canada began to pay the price when she entered into a partnership with the Grand Trunk Railway Company. By the terms of that arrangement Canada was to have nine directors and the Grand Trunk were to have nine, and what was said at the time? The inspector general, Mr. Hincks, spoke in severe terms of the misrepresentations made by the enemies of this undertaking respecting the effect which it was said to have on the credit of the province. He denied altogether that the Government was interested in the slightest degree in the cost of the undertaking, whatever it might be. The province paid nothing; it would only promise to guarantee the amount of £3,000 per mile, for which it was to have the first mortgage on the road with interest at six per cent. He did not care how much the stockholders laid out on the road; the more they expended the better it was for the province. One thing he was pretty certain of, the Grand Trunk Railway Company would not ask for a single penny from the province, for they could get money in England at a much less rate than six per cent without being subject to the restrictions which were to be imposed upon them if they accepted the Government guarantee, in having directors on the part of the province.

In 1854, the Grand Trunk Railway Company came back again to the Government of the day in Upper Canada. In 1855, they came back again. In 1856, they came back again and they asked to be allowed to issue preferential bonds to the extent of £2,000,000. In 1857 the Government were so disgusted with the whole thing that what did they do? They brought in a measure to sever the connection between the executive and the commercial enterprise. Listen to what Mr. Cayley said in 1857. He was then inspector general which is practicaly Minister of Finance:

The first object of this Bill is to dispense with the Government directors in the company. The position of Government directors has been the occasion of casting upon the Government a good deal of reflection. All the management on the part of the Grand Trunk Railway Company has been cast upon or attempted to be cast upon the Government. The position has been an unenviable one. Now we propose to do away with the responsibility of the Government, and to give the entire management into the hands of the company. It has been suggested one member of the Government in tre board with a view of exercising a supervision over its affairs, but this arrangement in the board with a view of exercising only leave to that member the same responsibility while depriving him of the advice and support of his colleagues.

In the light of the experience of Upper Canada, in the light of the economic conditions that I have laid before this House to-night, the Government ask me to support this measure. All I have to say is that I cannot see eye to eye with them. I have tried to place fairly before the House my reasons for my stand. If they are incorrect, it is open to other gentlemen to refute them; but as I have spoken, so I believe.

On motion of Mr. Boivin, the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Borden, the House adjourned at 11.30 p.m.

Thursday, May 14, 1914.

The House met at Eleven o'clock, the Speaker in the Chair.

PRIVATE BILL.

FIRST READING.

Bill No. 195, to incorporate the Canadian General Council of the Boy Scouts Association.—Mr. Currie.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

AMHERST ARMOURY.

Mr. SINCLAIR:

1. Is the Department of Public Works constructing an armoury at Amherst, N.S.?
2. If so, were tenders called for?
3. Who was the lowest tenderer, and what was the amount of said tender?
4. After tenders were received, were any changes made in the plans? If so, were new tenders called for?
5. To whom was the contract awarded, and at what price?

[Mr. Nickle.]

Mr. ROGERS:

1. Yes.
2. Yes, by Militia Department.
3. Rhodes Curry, Limited, $81,100 for a stone front building.
4. No; lowest tenderer was asked to quote price on suggested changes.
5. Rhodes Curry, Limited, for $81,100.

BARRIEFIELD CAMP.

Mr. EDWARDS:

1. Were tenders invited for the plumbing arrangements at Barriefield camp? If so, by what officer and when?
2. From whom and when were tenders received and what was the amount of each tender at the time it was received?
3. To whom was the contract awarded, and for what amount?
4. Was the contract price lower than the original tender? If so, by how much?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES:

1. Yes. Major Hughes, Royal Canadian Engineers, on or about March 20, 1913.
2. Lemmon Bros., tender received March 23—$170. Simmons Bros., tender received March 24, 11.15 a.m., but did not comply with notice for tenders in that they should have been in by the first mail delivery at 9 a.m., March 24—$165.
3. Lemmon Bros.—$170.
4. Contract price same as original tender.

HALIFAX FLOUR CONTRACT.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN:

1. Was John Outhit and Son of Halifax, N.S., awarded the contract for the supply of flour to the permanent force at Halifax, for the year beginning April 1, 1914?
2. If so, has the said contract been terminated, and if it has, under what authority and upon what grounds?
3. Has the contract for the supply of flour to the permanent force been since awarded to any other person or firm for the year beginning April 1, 1914? If so, to whom and at what price?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES:

1. Yes, for patent flour.
2. By authority of the Minister of Militia and Defence, Messrs. Outhit and Son, were notified by letter dated April 21, 1914, that the contract would terminate on the 24th day of May next following, by virtue of paragraph 9 of the conditions of the contract, reading as follows:

The Minister of Militia and Defence may terminate this contract at any time by giving one month's notice to the contractor to that effect; or immediately, at any time, should the contractor become insolvent, or in the event of repeated irregularities by, and complaints against, the contractor.

3. A contract for the supply of patent flour to the permanent force at Halifax for the period beginning May 24, 1914, and ending March 31, 1915, was made with the St. Lawrence Flour Mills, Limited, of Montreal, by letter of acceptance dated April 21, 1914. The contract price is $2.42½ per sack of 98 pounds, Outhit's contract price was $2.54½ per sack of 98 pounds.

When tenders for flour for 1914-1915 were first called for by public advertisement, in February last, the Halifax representative of the St. Lawrence Flour Mills, Limited, was furnished by some one in the Militia offices, Halifax, with an obsolete form of tender containing no reference to Patent flour, which is exclusively used at Halifax. In accordance with the terms of this obsolete form, the St. Lawrence Company submitted a tender for Strong Bakers flour only, at $2.32½ per sack of 98 pounds, which was accepted, being the lowest received for Strong Bakers flour. On their communicating with the military authorities at Halifax, they learned that only Patent flour, and no Strong Bakers flour whatever, was used, and that the contract for Patent flour had already been made.

As they had thus been debarred from tendering, in the first place, upon the supplies actually required, they immediately communicated the facts to the minister and quoted $2.42½ per sack for Patent flour. This being the lowest tender received, Outhit's contract was cancelled, and the St Lawrence Company's tender accepted.

LUNENBURG FISHERY GUARDIANS.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN:

Who are the fishery wardens and the guardians for Lunenburg county, NS., and what amount is being paid to each annually?

Mr. HAZEN: Fred Emeno, $25; S. Volger, $75; Otis Bowers, $37; Solomon Teal, $37; Chas. Watters, $25; Henry Eurns, $25; Alex. Joudray, $1.50 per day; Joshua Berringer, $75; W. A. Conrad, $75; Jos. Reinhardt, $75; Jas. Kaulbach, $25; Benjamin Ramey, $1.50 per day; Timothy Lantz, $40; J. W. Langille, $40; Wm. Mosher, $50; John Croft, $40; Moran Hatt, $15; Richard Russell, $25; Emanuel Veinot, $25; Wilson Hennigar, $25; Freeman Lantz, $40; Zenas Meisner, $40; Warren Pearl, $25; Edward Publicover, $25; Albert Setters, $25; Geo. E. Jollymore, $25; Benjamin Wagner, $25; Abram Feindel, $25; Joshua Feener, $40; Wallace Thompson, $25.

LAPRAIRIE RETAINING WALL.

Mr. LANCTOT:

Referring to an answer given by the Minister of Public Works on the 20th of April regarding the construction of the protection wall at Laprairie as follows:

Schedule of prices for material approximately $70,000.

Earth filling, 40 cents a cubic yard.

Reinforced concrete $10.

Stone rip-rap, $1.50 a square yard.

Bed road, stone foundation, $1 a square yard.

Roadway, broken stone, 25 cents a square yard.

Roadway, gravel 25 cents a square yard.

Does that $1.50 per square yard for the stone rip-rap cover the work only, or are the contractors obliged to supply the stone for the price mentioned?

Mr. ROGERS: The contractors supply the stone.

WATROUS POSTMASTER.

Mr. NEELY:

1. Who is the present postmaster at Watrous, Sask.?

2. When was he appointed and has he held his position continuously since his appointment?

Mr. PELLETIER:

1. Mr. Wm. E. Wright.

2. On the 12th January, 1914: yes, so far as the department is aware.

SHERBROOKE POST OFFICE INSPECTION.

On the Orders of the Day being called:

Mr. PELLETIER: Yesterday I promised to answer a question put to me in regard to the discrepancy between two answers given by the department as to the Post Office Inspection Department at Sherbrooke. The first answer given was to the effect that the salaries of that office amounted to $4,752 a year, and the second answer made it appear that the total salaries were larger than that amount. This morning I called the attention of the officers of the department, who compared these two answers. After careful investigation, they say that the two answers are perfectly correct. The first question referred only to the new employees, and stated so specifically, and it was answered that the new employees' salaries were so much. The second question asked for the salaries of all the employees. There were three employees who were not new employees, and so the second question was answered giving the salaries of all the employees, old and new. Thus the two answers are absolutely correct.

STEAMER CANADA.

On the Orders of the Day being called:

Mr. MARCIL: In the absence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr Foster) perhaps the Postmaster General

(Mr. Pelletier) can tell me whether it is probable that the trips of the steamer Canada will be resumed. This is about the season when navigation opens, and the movements of this vessel are a matter of great importance to the Gaspé coast people. If she is not yet in a condition to be removed from the dry-dock, perhaps the hon. minister can tell me what progress is being made.

Mr. PELLETIER: I know that an inspection has been made, and I think the report is favourable. If so, I have no doubt the steamer will go into commission. I cannot speak definitely.

Mr. MARCIL: I would press upon the hon. minister the importance of this matter.

Mr. PELLETIER: I fully realize it. I was under the impression that the steamer had entered upon her work for the season. But I will draw the attention of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to the matter.

SUPREME COURT JUDGE, SASKATCHEWAN.

On the Orders of the Day being called:

Mr. KNOWLES: Is the Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty) able to give us any information as to when he will fill the vacancy, a long standing vacancy, in the Supreme Court Bench of Saskatchewan?

Mr. DOHERTY: There is now before the House a Bill providing for additional district court judges. When that Bill is passed, I hope to deal with the whole matter.

APPOINTMENT OF HIGH COMMISSIONER.

On the Orders of the Day being called:

Mr. KYTE: May I ask the Prime Minister when he expects to fill the position of High Commissioner, which has been vacant now for a good many months?

Mr. BORDEN: When any announcement becomes necessary I will make it to the House.

Mr. KYTE: Pardon me, but I venture to think an announcement is necessary when a member representing a constituency in this country asks for an announcement. Whether the Prime Minister is prepared to give a definite answer or not is another question.

Mr. BORDEN: I stated to the hon. gentleman that when an announcement became necessary in the ordinary course it would be made. I hope he does not think it is incumbent upon me to make it merely because an hon. member rises and asks me to do so. I may not be prepared to make an announcement at the moment.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: The question is, when will it become necessary?

Mr. BORDEN: That will be announced in due course.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: And the announcement will make it necessary.

THE UNEMPLOYED IN MONTREAL.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I desire to ask the Prime Minister if he has received the following letter:

To the Right Honourable R. L. Borden,
Prime Minister,
Ottawa.

Honourable Sir,

No doubt you are aware of the conditions which actually prevail in Montreal. There are thousands of men applying to the city for work and although we have done all we possibly could do, we cannot supply them with what they want.

I appeal to you as head of the Government of the Dominion to help the city in relieving the present conditions by hastening the works which the Government intends to carry out in the city in the course of the next summer.

I beg to remain, Honourable Sir,

Yours faithfully,
Méderic Martin,
Mayor of Montreal.

Has the right hon. gentleman received that letter, and if so will he say what he intends to do?

Mr. BORDEN: I have received that letter, but I judge that I did not receive it as soon as my hon. friend did, for it only reached me at half-past ten this morning. I understand that the Mayor of Montreal has already professed his ability to provide employment for all persons who should make application to him. Apparently, he may have overestimated his ability in that regard, hence the letter which has been addressed to me. I have already—although, as I say, the letter only reached me at half-past ten this morning—dictated a reply in which I informed him that his communication had been submitted to the heads of the several departments.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: In justice to the Mayor of Montreal, my right hon. friend should correct his statement. The Mayor of Montreal did not profess his ability to provide work for the unemployed, but his desire to do so, and I hope my right hon. friend is animated by a similar desire.

Mr. BORDEN: The statement appeared in the public press, but if I have misapprehended it, I desire that my statement should be corrected. My recollection of it when I spoke was, and is now, in effect what I have stated, though I have not seen it for some time.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill No. 84, to amend the Export Act—Mr. J. D. Reid.

Bill No. 138, to amend the Irrigation Act. —Mr. Roche.

CANADA TEMPERANCE ACT AMENDMENT.

Hon. C. J. DOHERTY (Minister of Justice) moved the third reading of Bill No. 180, to amend the Canada Temperance Act. He said:

With regard to the question that arose as to the applicability in Alberta and Saskatchewan of the provision of the Temperance Act under which cities are not included in the county in which they are situated, I find, upon looking into the matter, that there is no room for question that that provision will apply in Alberta and Saskatchewan without any amendment to this Bill being necessary.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN NORTHERN RAILWAY AGREEMENT.

Consideration of the proposed motion of Mr. Borden that the House go into Committee to consider certain resolutions respecting the Canadian Northern railway, resumed from Wednesday, May 13.

Mr. G. H. BOIVIN (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, in rising to address the House in connection with the resolution which was submitted to us yesterday by the Prime Minister providing for a guarantee of loan of $45,000,000 to the Canadian Northern railway, I feel that my first duty is to thank the right hon. the Prime Minister for having allowed me at a comparatively early hour last night to adjourn this debate, thus not obliging me to impair the eloquence of yesterday's proceedings by my humble efforts in discussing this resolution.

Yesterday was certainly a day which will go down in the annals of the history of Canada. Yesterday this House was favoured with four excellent speeches concerning the guarantee of a loan of $45,000,000 to the Canadian Northern railway; four speeches in which this loan was discussed from, I might say, four different points of view. The speech delivered by the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Nickle) was certainly a masterpiece. I desire to congratulate him and to thank him on behalf of members on both sides of this House for the information contained in that speech, the preparation of which, I am sure, as he said himself, required long hours of hard work and careful research—information which he placed in such a form that it is easily understood not only by the members of this House but by the people of Canada as well. I may say that I do not agree with him, perhaps, in all the conclusions at which he arrives; I cannot contend that government ownership at the present time would be the best possible thing for the Canadian Northern railway. But I do agree with him in this respect: that the agreement which is proposed by the present Government is not an agreement which should receive the support of the majority of the members of this House.

I am glad to congratulate also the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Meighen), who, as every one knows, is the father of these resolutions, upon the able manner in which he delivered his speech, but I am sorry to say that I cannot congratulate him upon its subject matter. He rose to his feet to say that the right hon. leader of the Opposition had not understood the different clauses of this resolution. It was his duty as Solicitor General of Canada and as the father of these resolutions to explain them to the House, so that they could be understood. Did he do so? No, Mr. Speaker; he took an hour and a half of the time of this House to refute the very logical objections which were urged against these resolutions by the right hon. leader of the Opposition, who, he said, did not understand these resolutions. I am mistaken when I say 'to refute'; I should say: to attempt to refute the objections, without success. The first thing which he says is that in this agreement the right hon. leader of the Opposition found that there was no provision for amalgamation of the different companies. He tried to refute that objection, but in doing so he admitted that there is no such provision for amalgamation, and then proceeded to give us the reasons why there should be no amalgamation. The right hon. leader of the Opposition told him that our security is not what it should be. His answer to that is that we have security on everything which the Canadian Northern railway possesses to-day. He might have gone one step farther and said that we have obtained security on absolutely nothing, because the Canadian Northern Railway Company possesses absolutely nothing to-day. And what is his answer to the objection urged by the right hon. leader of the Opposition with regard to clause (b) of section 6 of the third schedule, concerning the control of the Railway Commission over freight rates? His answer is that the Canadian Northern Pacific railway is situated in one end of Canada and the Government railway in the other, and that consequently there is no danger of any agreement ever being made between those two companies. But in the same breath he is obliged to admit that if any such agreement or arrangement were made between those two companies, the right hon. leader of the Opposition's contention would be absolutely correct. Is it possible that an agreement may be made between the Government railway and the Canadian Northern Pacific railway? I contend that it is. I contend that freight may be shipped from British Columbia to points on the Government railway in the Maritime provinces, that freight may be shipped from points in the Maritime provinces on the Government railway to British Columbia, and that, therefore, such an agreement may possibly be made between the two companies. If any such agreement is made, the Railway Commission will be able to assert its powers only in so far as they will not contravene that clause of the resolution which says:

Provided always that every agreement respecting the interchange of traffic shall be subject to the agreements now existing with any other company or companies.

But, Mr. Speaker, before reviewing in detail the attempted answer of the Solicitor General to the able address delivered by the right hon. the leader of the Opposition, let us see why this resolution has been placed before this House and what this discussion is about. The people of Canada, informed through the Conservative press before this resolution was laid upon the table of the House, were under the impression that the Canadian Northern railway had come rapping at the door of Parliament and begging for aid. Since the very beginning of this session it has been no secret that Sir William Mackenzie, Sir Donald Mann and their friends have been frequent visitors to Parliament Hill, they have frequently called at the offices of the members of the Government in power seeking aid for the Canadian Northern Railway Company from the Dominion of Canada.

Time after time members on this side of the House have asked the Minister of Finance if any request had been made, if any aid was to be given; and every time the Minister of Finance has replied; 'no request has been made, no aid is to be given.' It was rumoured that the Minister of Finance was unable to arrive at any understanding between the Government and these gentlemen and that he finally was obliged to give up the task and pass it on to our good friend the Solicitor General. Then the Conservative press published throughout the length and breadth of this land the statement that an agreement had been arrived at, that there was to be an amalgamation of all the Canadian Northern railway companies, that there was to be a reduction of the stock to $100,000,000, that Canada was to receive $40,000,000 of common stock for the guarantee of a loan of $45,000,000 and that $15,000,000 of common stock would be placed in the hands of a trustee, to revert to Canada if the Canadian Northern railway did not carry out their obligations. That is the agreement which was heralded from one end of Canada to the other. That is the agreement that was published in all the Conservative papers of Canada. That is the agreement the party in power tried to impress on the minds of the Canadian electors before they dared place this resolution on the table of the House—and that is not the agreement at all. There is absolutely nothing in this agreement which says that the Canadian Government will have $15,000,000 of common stock placed in the hands of a trustee which will revert to the Government of Canada if the Canadian Northern railway does not carry out its obligations, absolutely nothing. The Canadian Government gets $40,000,000 worth of common stock, and what is the common stock worth to-day? Absolutely nothing. $40,000,000 of water is given to the Government for the guarantee of a loan of $45,000,000 of cold cash. The position is this: Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann come to the Canadian Government and they ask for further aid to this railway. They hand us a statement showing how much money has been expended, showing how much money has been received from the Dominion of Canada and from the different provinces, showing how much more money they require to complete their road. They placed this statement upon the table of the House and the Government said to them: All right, we will take that statement as the absolute truth, we will give you $45,000,000, or we will guarantee a loan of $45,000,000, which means absolutely the same thing, because in the long run it is the people of Canada who will have to pay the $45,000,000. I find in the statement the amounts of money received from the different provincial Governments by the Canadian Northern Railway Company and the subsidiary companies. I find the amount of money received from the Dominion of Canada by the Canadian Northern Company and the subsidiary companies. I find the amount of money expended and I find the amount of money still due. But what I do not find in that statement is the amount of money that Sir William Mackenzie and the amount of money that Sir Donald Mann took out of their own pockets and put into this enterprise. That is not mentioned in the statement, and I fear, that if it was to be mentioned the page which would bear that heading would be absolutely blank. These gentlemen, it is true, deserve something from Canada. They have foresight, they have ability, they have skill, they have courage; I am willing to admit all that. But before attempting to build a railway which is to be a transcontinental railway and extend from one end of Canada to the other, they should have had more than skill and more than courage and more than ability—they should have had a few dollars in money. Instead of that they form a company known as the Canadian Northern Railway Company. Who is the Canadian Northern Railway Company? Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann. In order to get aid from this country they form eighteen or more companies, called subsidiary companies and who are the principal stockholders in the subsidiary companies? Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann. They come to the Canadian Parliament, they go to the different legislatures, and they get money for these different companies; and in getting this money they are getting money for Mackenzie and Mann. They then form a construction company under the name of Mackenzie, Mann and Company, Limited, and the money they have received from the federal Government and the Governments of the provinces for Mackenzie and Mann acting as the Canadian Northern Railway company they pay over to Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann acting as Mackenzie, Mann and Company, Limited, construction agents. So that all the money that is paid out still remains in the pockets of Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann. Of course Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann, construction agents, get rich and make money, but the Canadian Northern Railway Company gets poor because it gives all its money to Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann. Messrs Mackenzie and Mann, as the Canadian Northern company, come back to Parliament and ask for more aid. They should tell us, if they want to be absolutely fair: We have two money bags at home, one belongs to the Canadian Northern Railway Company, the other to Messrs. Mackenzie, Mann and Company, Limited. We have taken all the money out of the money bag belonging to the Canadian Northern Railway Company and we have placed it in the money bag belonging to Mackenzie, Mann and Company, Limited. There is no more money in the first bag, it is all in the second; kindly fill up the first. And the Government says: Give us a statement of your affairs. Did the Government say: We will have an investigation of your affairs, we will find out who got this money, we will find out if your contracts have been given at a reasonable figure, we will find out whether Messrs. Mackenzie, Mann and Company, Limited, when they got these contracts, got them by means of a tender and whether they were the lowest tenderers? Oh, no.

The statement is laid upon the table of the House, and so they print the copies which were handed to the different members two or three days before the resolution was brought down. In that statement, we find that Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann did not get any actual profits; but that they did get common stock in lieu of profits. That is the statement contained in this blue book, 'Documents relative to Government Guarantee' (printed by order of Parliament). But where is the proof that they did not get any money? Where is the proof that every cent they received—and nobody denies that they received money to pay their labourers and to pay for the material, ties, rails, etc. —was paid out? There is no proof in this blue book. Where is the proof that Mackenzie and Mann did not get any cash profits? There is none at all. There is the affidavit of Mr. Alfred J. Mitchell, who is the comtroller of the Mackenzie-Mann Company, Limited. In that affidavit, he says that according to the books and to the best of his knowledge and belief Mackenzie and Mann received nothing but common stock in lieu of profits. Then there is also the affidavit of another Mr. Mackenzie and another Mr. Mann of the Northern Construction Company of British Columbia, to the effect that under cover of this company

Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann did not get any cash in lieu of profits. Both of the declarations just mentioned may be absolutely true, but I ask the Prime Minister to-day where is the affidavit of Sir William Mackenzie, and of Sir Donald Mann, that they made no money out of those enterprises? They say they require $41,000,000 more to complete the road. Where is the proof that they can complete it for that amount? There is absolutely none. Every one agrees that the cost of construction of railways in this country has increased and is increasing by leaps and bounds. They give us a statement, found on page 10 of the blue book, that to complete the railway will cost $100,000,000, but that they can raise $58,473,982 by proceeds of securities which will be issued in respect to he above expenditures, and cash in trust accounts, for construction, leaving a balance of $41,905,117 still required. Where is the evidence that they can complete the road for $100,000,000? Where is the proof that they can obtain $58,000,000 from the proceeds of these securities? Parliament is asked to accept the statement of the two men that come begging at the door, and who tell us that they need the money; and we are asked to give it without any further investigation. I claim—and I am speaking for myself only, I do not pretend to express the views of my party—that an investigation should have been held to ascertain exactly what these gentlemen have received, and why Canada is obliged to give them more—an investigation where they could have been called as witnesses and examined under oath, and where the evidence of their employees could also have been taken under oath. Parliament would then have known what was required in the way of aid, and would have been justified in making an agreement to provide the aid required. But, even if every statement in this blue book is absolutely correct, even if the Canadian Northern railway needs the sum of $45,000,000 to complete the construction of their road, Canada is not getting any security for the guarantee which we are asked to give. Let us see what that security is. First of all, it is a mortgage upon the stock of eighteen constituent companies—a mortgage not upon all the stock of these companies, but upon only a certain part of the stock of the companies detailed in the first part of the schedule attached to the resolution. We would like to know who owns that stock to-day, and how it is that this stock can be placed in the hands of the Canadian Northern Railway Company? Who is going to give that stock to the Canadian Northern? Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann, Limited?—perhaps. Sir William Mackenzie?—perhaps. Sir Donald Mann?—perhaps. Nobody knows. And a very curious thing is that the stock which is mortgaged to the Dominion of Canada as security for this guarantee is worth very little on the market at the present time; in fact, it is worth nothing to-day. Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann own other stock, they are interested in other companies. Why do they not give us a mortgage on stock of other companies which are worth something, and which are paying dividends to-day?—the Toronto Street Railway Company, for instance. There are many other paying companies in which these two gentlemen are interested, but they will not give a mortgage on the stock of those companies because it is worth something. Another proof that these companies are worth nothing was given by the hon. Solicitor General himself last night, when in answer to the argument of the right hon. leader of the Opposition that this was no amalgamation, he said: 'No, it is not an amalgamation, and it is a great deal better for Canada that it should not be an amalgamation; and the first reason is that perhaps some of these companies are worth nothing and may never pay their running expenses; perhaps some of them will be left to rust and decay, and in that case we will not be obliged to keep them; we can cast them off.' But still the Government takes a mortgage upon the stock of those companies, without knowing whether they will ever be worth anything or not. His other argument against the amalgamation was that in order to amalgamate these companies, to make one great system which would really be a factor in the commercial life of Canada, it would be necessary to enact confiscatory legislation. Then, in the next breath, he says that it is not necessary that any shares should be deposited in the hands of a trustee, because, if, in three or four years, the companies do not pan out well and the Canadian Northern Railway Company is unable to pay its interest on its bonds, Canada can take it over, confiscate everything it has, form a new board of management or turn the road over to some other corporation. If there is to be confiscation in three years from now why not confiscation to-day? What is the difference? The Solicitor General knows very well that this is not the last request that the Government will receive from Mackenzie and Mann. My right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition showed us yesterday very clearly that within a year from now they will be obliged to come back here, knock at the door and ask us for the $7,000,000 which is not provided for. In answering that argument the Solicitor General only makes the case a great deal stronger; he says there is also an item on page 43 of $21,262,000 for construction, equipment, terminals and branch lines which is still due, which must be paid and which is not included. So that next year, instead of it being $7,000,000, there will be $28,000,000 more that the Canadian Northern Railway Company will come and ask us to guarantee our loan to them.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The $21,000,000 is inincluded in the statement.

Mr. BOIVIN: It is not included in the statement given on page 10 of the blue book distributed to the members of this House.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, it is included in the amount of $100,000,000 for their requirements.

Mr. BOIVIN: If the $21,000,000 is included in the $100,000,000 for their requirements, will the Solicitor General tell me how the Canadian Northern railway will be able to spend that $45,000,000 on entirely new lines and still pay a debt of $21,000,000?

Mr. MEIGHEN: There is $100,000,000 to be expended. The hon. gentleman has not even given casual consideration to what has been laid on the table. The sum of $58,000,000 will be available as it is earned and the $45,000,000 will be available as it is earned, and these will take care of the $21,000,000 along with all the rest.

Mr. BOIVIN: The $58,000,000 is still to be earned? In order to get the $58,000,000 the $45,000,000 has to be spent.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The work has to be done.

Mr. BOIVIN: And it is precisely because they have not the $45,000,000 at the present time to do the work with that the Canadian Northern railway cannot get the $58,000,000. To earn the $58,000,000 the Canadian Northern railway must spend the $45,000,000 which they are asking from Parliament to-day. Even if the $100,000,000 comprises this $21,000,000, and I maintain that it does not, the argument advanced yesterday that there is still $7,000,000 to be provided for, holds good. The argument of my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition that they will have to come back and ask for more money, still remains. The Solicitor General says we are getting 40 per cent of the common stock, and that we are leaving $60,000,000 to Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann to pay them for their eighteen years of work for the development of the railway system. When the leader of the Opposition said yesterday that Canada should get more than $40,000,000 of the common stock, and that Canada should have a controlling interest in this road, I do not think it was in his mind that we should get more than $40,000,000 worth in money, because we all know that the common stock is now worth absolutely notning. We know that the common stock may never be worth anything, but we claim on this side of the House that Canada should have a controlling interest in this road, so that we may have something to say when it comes to letting the contracts for the balance of the construction of the road. We want to have a word to say in the management of the road in order that the contracts shall not be given by Mackenzie and Mann and the Canadian Northern Railway Company to Mackenzie and Mann, acting as the Mackenzie and Mann Construction Company, Limited, without tender and without competition. We claim that this road has been carried on as a feeder for the Mackenzie and Mann interests long enough, and that the time has come when the Canadian Northern railway should be administered, as other up-to-date railway companies are, in the interest of its shareholders and of the country generally, rather than in the interest of the promoters alone. Canada is becoming a shareholder in this road, and is advancing $45,000,000 in cold cash, or its equivalent. Canada backs the note of the company to the extent of $45,000,000. We claim that we should be able to protect our interests by having a say in the management and in the awarding of contracts; in order to see that these contracts shall be given to the lowest tenderer. It is not so much the proprietorship of the road that we are interested in as the right to have a word to say in the administration, in order to protect the interests of the people and to protect the guarantee which we have given.

I would like to call the attention of the Solicitor General to another part of this contract. In the definitions I find that:

'Contractors' means Mackenzie, Mann & Company (Limited).

According to the resolution these contractors are obliged to assume certain obligations. Clauses 4 and 5 of the resolution provide:

12 noon.

4. That covenants or undertakings to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council shall be given that all outstanding temporary loans to the Canadian Northern or any of its constituent or subsidiary companies secured by the deposit or pledge of securities, will be paid out of the proceeds of such deposited or pledged securities when the same shall be sold or disposed of, and that no proceedings against the Canadian Northern or any of said other companies will meanwhile be taken for the collection of such temporary loans.

5. That covenants or undertakings of the contractors and such other covenants or undertakings as may be required by the Governor in Council shall be given that the current indebtedness of the Canadian Northern and of the said constituent and subsidiary companies will within one year from the passing of the Act to be based upon these resolutions be reduced to the normal or usual current amount to be determined by the minister and that meanwhile all such current indebtedness other than such as may be the subject of bona fide dispute, will be either paid or arranged in such a manner that no proceedings for the enforcement of payment thereof will be taken or pressed.

These are the clauses which provide that covenants or undertakings must be given to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council, that this money will be used for the completion of the road. The contractors in clause 5 are a party to this undertaking; they are the party who under clause 5 must give such covenants; and according to the definition, the word 'contractor' means Mackenzie, Mann and Company, Limited. Why not in the definition of the word 'contractor,' also include, as we do in the trust deed, the names of Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann? Is it because Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann do not wish to undertake this obligation, because they are afraid to covenant and undertake that not only the contractors but all outstanding temporary loans to the Canadian Northern or its constituent or subsidiary companies, so secured, will be paid out of the proceeds of such deposited or pledged securities? I claim that, for the protection of the people of Canada, if this resolution is adopted, the names of Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann personally should be added to the name of Mackenzie, Mann and Company, Limited, as the contractors, and that further than that, Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann should themselves become liable for the carrying out of the covenants and undertakings which may be entered into between the Governor in Council and the Canadian Northern Railway Company and the other parties to the agreement.

It would be better still to have these covenants and agreements made at the present time and submitted to Parliament, so that we could decide the value and the worth of them before we grant this aid. This resolution practically leaves to the Governor in Council the whole administration of this loan. The Governor in Council alone is to decide whether the Canadian Northern Railway Company, whether Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann and whether Messrs. Mackenzie, Mann and Company, Limited, are doing what they undertake to do by this agreement, or not. Why not have it decided now once and for all what these covenants and undertakings are to be? Why not tell us now, how a company, which is so hard up that it is obliged to come to Parliament for aid to continue the construction of its line, is to ward off its creditors for a year or two years or a longer term, and how that company is to guarantee to the people of Canada that it will not be sued by the people to whom it owes money? Are the creditors to be called in by the Governor in Council and to be obliged to sign an agreement by which they will promise not to sue the Canadian Northern Railway Company? According to clauses 4 and 5 of the resolutions before the House, one would believe that that is going to be done; but if that agreement can be arrived at, then the very reason why this aid is granted, why this $45,000,000 is given to the Canadian Northern Railway Company, falls to the ground of itself, because the company does not require the aid.

Speaking of the securities given to us, the hon. Solicitor General last night, after discussing in detail the reasons why the companies were not amalgamated and why all the shares were not mortgaged to the people of Canada as a guarantee, went on to say that we had a mortgage on 5,350 miles of the Canadian Northern railway which extends from Port Arthur to Edmonton. But what he did not say is that that road is subject to other mortgages. We are getting not a first nor even a second, but a third or fourth mortgage on the road which is already mortgaged for all that it is possibly worth.

His next argument was that we were getting a mortgage on the townsites; that they were worth an enormous amount of money and that the mortgage upon the townsites was worth millions. If the mortgage upon the Canadian Northern railway proper is worth millions and the mortgage upon the townsites is worth millions, and if the company is so well off that it has millions at its disposal, why should it come to Parliament asking us to guarantee its bonds? Why does it not go to the money markets of the world with these securities and these millions, which the hon. Solicitor General has referred to and say: We have the security and we want the money, and we are independent of the Canadian Parliament? The money-lenders of the world know that this security is worth absolutely nothing; and they have told Mackenzie and Mann that, if they want any more money, they must ask the Dominion of Canada to back their note. The Dominion of Canada is backing their note and is getting nothing in return, not even the right to tell Mackenzie and Mann, in two weeks from to-day or as soon as they get the money, to whom they shall give their next contract. It is true they pretend that up to the present time they have given the contracts to themselves; that they have taken nothing but common stock; that they have taken water in lieu of profits. Part of the water has been squeezed out or bailed out, and the whole capitalization has been reduced to $100,000,000. That capital stock is not to be increased. If it were to be increased, there would be no reason for reducing it at the present time. The Government has $40,000,000 of this stock and Mackenzie and Mann have $60,000,000. Therefore, there is no more common stock to be taken. The next time Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann get a contract from the Canadian Northern Railway Company they will have to get a profit. If they cannot get it in common stock, they will have to get it in cash.

Statements were made not long ago by Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann to the effect that they would be able to finance this company without applying to Parliament for any further aid. Those statements were repeated in this House less than a year ago by the right hon. Prime Minister himself and by the hon. Minister of Finance. Questions were placed on the Order Paper this year asking upon what authority those statements were made, and those questions were answered by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance. In spite of those statements, Mackenzie and Mann come to us and say: We require $100,000,000 more to complete the road and we require $45,000,000 more than we ourselves can provide. The hon. Solicitor General stated that that was due to the fact that the road is being built to a higher standard of construction; that the cost of construction, the cost of labour and the cost of material at the present time is greater than it was when these predictions were made, and greater than it was when the idea was first launched of making the Canadian Northern railway a transcontinental system.

He branched off from that into a consideration of the speech delivered by the hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. Graham) on the National Transcontinental. He spent a quarter of the time allotted to him to explain this agreement in giving a new answer to the speech of the hon. member for South Renfrew when he attacked the Gutelius report and defended the construction of the National Transcontinental. He told us that if the Canadian Northern railway went into bankruptcy Canada would at least have something—that Canada would not have only a railway extending from ocean to ocean, but would have stations, rolling stock, telegraph lines and other assets, whereas in the case of the National Transcontinental Canada had nothing but a railway. I am willing to admit that to a certain extent the Solicitor General told the truth, but he did not tell the whole truth. He should have said that if the Canadian Northern railway goes into bankruptcy we shall have a third-class road on our hands with a telegraph company into which no money has been put, with a few stations, terminals and steamships; but in order to claim these as our property, we shall have to pay a mortgage of $312,000,000 which now stands against them, besides losing the $45,000,000 we are now giving, a total of $357,000,000. And we should also lose the amount required to replace wooden trestles and bridges with steel and concrete and bring the Canadian Northern railway to something near the standard of the National Transcontinental railway to-day. But the National Transcontinental railway is our absolute property, in that road we have the best railway that was ever constructed, and it has been paid for, for the most part, out of the yearly revenues of our country.

The Solicitor General told us that we had not consulted the documents laid on the table, had not even consulted the maps and were discussing the matter without knowing where the road was going to. We consulted the books and documents and one thing we do know is that the road is going into bankruptcy, and that $45,000,000 will not save it; more will have to be given if it is to be saved. The Canadian Northern railway is going into bankruptcy and that is where this country will go if the party now in power remains there much longer, because when it comes to handing out money to assist corporations it is always ready to act, and the Minister of Finance is always ready to borrow.

The Prime Minister, when he submitted these resolutions to Parliament, laid great stress upon the fact that he was able to read to the House an editorial taken from the Journal of Commerce, published in Montreal, edited by the former Minister of Finance of Canada, Hon. Mr. Fielding. If the Prime Minister can get any great consolation out of that editorial he is welcome to it. The former Minister of Finance, Mr. Fielding, admits in that editorial that it would be a disastrous thing for Canada if the Canadian Northern railway went into liquidation. He admits that the loan necessary to avoid that must be guaranteed by Canada. He does not discuss this agreement or say that these resolutions are good resolutions or the best that could have been made. He merely says that the money or credit must be given. That is what the Prime Ministers of the different provinces say in the letters and telegrams they have sent to the Prime Minister of Canada. We all agree that the Canadian Northern railway must have assistance. The money has all gone from the moneybag labelled 'Canadian Northern Railway' into the moneybag labelled 'Mackenzie and Mann', and these Canadian Northern Railway moneybags must be refilled. But what we do not agree upon is the manner in which that loan is to be guaranteed. It is because we consider the guarantees insufficient, it is because we consider that we should have a controlling interest in this road, it is because we consider that we should receive all the securities that Mackenzie and Mann can give, that we do not favour this agreement. If Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann have confidence in their enterprise, if they really consider that with the money advanced by Canada at this time they can make a success of this undertaking and make millions out of it besides, they should at least give us security upon all they possess, and not merely a mortgage upon the stock of companies that are worth nothing. If this were done it might be wise for the Dominion of Canada to give a guarantee or loan. Now, talking about editorials in newspapers, I have an editorial here that I would like to read to the Prime Minister. It is taken from the Montreal Gazette—and nobody will tax that with being a Liberal paper—of date February 27, 1914:

> The Government of Canada is being asked to loan the Canadian Northern railway a sum of money, said to be $20,000,000 or $25,000,000.

They made a mistake; it is $45,000,000. At that time the amount was not known and people did not think they would dare ask for so much.

> The grounds are peculiar. The company voluntarily undertook to construct a great system of railway lines, some of them in close competition for a limited traffic with other roads. It has been liberally treated by Parliament and legislatures of the provinces traversed by its tracks. The cost of the construction to December 31 last was given the other day as $303,319,000. Included in this amount is $20,000,000 of cash subventions from the treasuries of Canada, of the provinces and the municipalities, besides the proceeds of $24,000,000 of land grants bonds issued and on the security of land given to certain of the component lines of the system. Even with the free way the legislative provinces of Canada have of voting away public money and resources, this was not illiberal. Then, in order that the company or its subsidiaries should be the better able to borrow money, the guarantee of the Government of Canada, as to principal and interest, was given to some $62,000,000 of bonds. It is after this that the demand is made for a direct loan, which, if it is made to the company, can only be made after the Government itself borrows the money. The proposition is not businesslike. The Government of Canada is not an institution financing private corporations. What it has done in the connection, because of the folly of Parliament, has cost it much already and will cost it more, has compelled it to borrow heavily, swollen the annual interest charge on the public debt and made it impracticable to reduce the customs taxes. The reasons advanced in support of the request are not strong. One is that if the loan is not made some other company may get control of the Canadian Northern property. This is not a thing to be afraid of. Parliament in the Railway Act has done all it could to ensure that there shall be no competition in rates between railway points and railways.
>
> The Railway Commission fixes rates, which may neither be exceeded nor cut. It does not matter, so far as cost of service is concerned, whether the railways of the country are owned by ten or a hundred companies. Another statement is that unless the loan sought is made, provinces which have guaranteed bonds of the company and its associated organizations may be embarrassed. Some of them would certainly be embarrassed if they were called upon to meet the obligations they have assumed. They have backed railway notes with a recklessness that has made the process useless. This, however, is not the business of the Parliament of Canada, whose duty it is to consider first and only the credit and financial strength of Canada and the interests of the federal taxpayers. These will not be helped by continuing the bad practice of making the national treasury responsible for the debts of companies or individuals in any line of activity.

That is the opinion of the Montreal Gazette, a good Conservative newspaper; an opinion expressed, by the way, just about the time when the hon. Finance Minister said that no further loan would be given. Whether or not the Gazette still has the same impression I do not know, but I do know that the Montreal Gazette is a reputable newspaper. I consider it to be one of the best Conservative newspapers published in Canada and I read its editorials with much interest. I find that it strives as much as possible to be consistent, at least with itself, and for that reason, I presume, it cannot approve the arrangements made at the present time by this Government for a guarantee of $45,000,000 worth of bonds for the Canadian Northern railway.

I do not propose to take up the time of the House any longer; I merely wish to say that I am at one with the leader of the Opposition in this matter. I believe that the Canadian Northern railway should be assisted, not so much for the company itself as for the credit of Canada and for the necessity of building a third transcontinental railway. As other speakers have said before me, the question of whether the third transcontinental railway should be built to-day or to-morrow is a question which cannot be discussed at the present time; that question has already been decided in the affirmative. I have confidence in the future of my country and I really believe that in a very few years Canada will be in a position to furnish traffic for this third transcontinental railroad. I cannot say, however, that I approve the resolutions as they stand at the present time upon the Order Paper of this House and I hope that they will be amended in such a way as to provide that more security will be given to the people of Canada. I hope that an amalgamation of the different companies will be brought about. Amalgamation should not be a difficult task, although I quite realize that it could not be brought about without notice to and protection of the shareholders in the different companies. But I do think that all these constituent and subsidiary companies should be incorporated into one large company known as the Canadian Northern Railway of Canada, instead of retaining their own identity and being known as the Canadian Northern system, a definition which says much but means very little.

I think I have shown to you, Mr. Speaker, and to other hon. gentlemen of this House that the right hon. leader of the Opposition yesterday really found the weak points in this agreement, that he very ably pointed them out and that the hon. Solicitor General was unable to refute the objections which were urged. I regret that the Solicitor General, having devoted two or three months of his time to the drawing of these resolutions, should not have taken the trouble and the time yesterday to explain them to the House in all their details. I admit that they are complicated; I admit that for members of Parliament who are not accustomed to high finance they are difficult to understand and that we may make mistakes in interpreting them, but I do say that they certainly should be understood by the hon. gentleman who drafted them, and that he should have explained them fully to the House instead of attempting merely to refute the objections which were levelled against them. The hon. Solicitor General promised us at one time in this House this year, when a certain resolution was moved by an hon. member on this side of the House concerning the reduction of the duty on agricultural implements, that that was not the proper time to make such a motion; that the matter would be considered in the Budget speech, and that when the Budget speech was delivered he would rise in his place and explain his position. When the Budget speech came before the House he did not rise in his place and did not explain his position. Further, he was so busily engaged in drawing up these resolutions that he was not even in his place when the vote was taken. After neglecting his other duties for the purpose of preparing these resolutions, he certainly could have done more, in making his speech yesterday, than to accuse the right hon. leader of the Opposition with not knowing what he was talking about. Although he proceeded to show the members of this House and the people of Canada that the right hon. leader of the Opposition was absolutely right, and that his objections could not be successfully refuted.

Mr. H. B. AMES (St. Antoine, Montreal). Mr. Speaker, after the full and careful explanations of these resolutions that were given yesterday to the House by the Prime Minister (Right Hon. R. L. Borden) and by the Solicitor General (Mr. Meighen) very little can be added at this stage of the discussion. But some of us who are endeavouring to give careful and conscientious consideration to the problem now before us and who have tried to bring into somewhat stronger light the main features of the arrangement which is being made, are desirous of stripping the question, to some extent, of its technicalities and of throwing upon the screen a few of the salient features connected with this arrangement and the steps that have led up to it.

I think it is generally admitted that no prime minister and no government in Canada has for many years been called upon to face a more difficult situation than that which this Government has had to meet in connection with this question.

It would not have been at all unnatural for the right hon. the Prime Minister and his colleagues to have declared themselves not responsible for the situation that has arisen and, having reference to the fact that this organization, the Canadian Northern railway with all its subsidiary companies, was born about 1896 and has grown to full maturity under a regime for which the present Government is not responsible, to have said: We did not create this position, we do not propose to become responsible for this affair; we will allow matters to take their natural course. But that position, while it might be defended from a political point of view, did not appeal to the statesmanlike mind of the Prime Minister. He felt that in inheriting the power of carrying on this Government he inherited also the responsibilities of government and that he had to face all situations that might arise, whether they were situations easy of solution or difficult to deal with. This is one of those questions that he has had to face and make the best of conditions for which he was primarily not in any way responsible. And so we should consider this question without political recriminations, without personalities, with the elimination even of the personal factors in connection with the people with whom we have to deal.

The fact is perfectly apparent that a third transcontinental railway has nearly reached completion, that in order to complete that railroad obligations to the extent of $300,000,000 have been incurred, that the railroad cannot be completed without additional assistance, that if it be not completed it cannot pay, that if it does not pay the obligations already incurred will be repudiated and the credit of Canada, will, in consequence, suffer; that, therefore, the only chance that the expenditure already has of being made good is that the system be completed and that the railroad, as a going concern, be permitted to earn what is necessary to meet the charges upon its obligations.

There is given in the blue book of information placed in the hands of members of Parliament a statement by Mr. Hanna, the third vice-president of the Canadian Northern railway, which may by some be regarded as an optimistic statement. Mr. Hanna states that by 1918 the fixed charges on the system would be about $16,000,000, and he proceeds to show that by that time he would consider that the earnings would be ample to meet not only the fixed charges but to create a surplus of some extent. Whether we altogether agree with his prognostications I do not know. They do not, however, seem unreasonable. At all events, it can be urged that the line then in operation will have upon it an obligation which will not be more than one-half of that which the Grand Trunk Pacific have assumed in undertaking to operate the National Transcontinental railway. If the Grand Trunk Railway Company can expect to succeed, it is not unreasonable to imagine that a railway with one-half the obligations to carry can also succeed. However, we have to admit the fact that this company in its time of extremity can turn to no other source than the Canadian Government. It has no other friend in the world, and however we may feel towards it, the responsibility rests on us of determining whether we shall or shall not be the only friend that that company can possibly have.

We cannot escape the fact that the Government of Canada and the provincial governments and the municipalities to some extent have frequently recognized this undertaking. They have declared that the primary intention of the promoters, the building of a transcontinental railroad from the Atlantic to the Pacific, was timely and was a laudable intention. They have frequently committed themselves to that contention. They have done so by granting frequent and generous aid. It is not perhaps inopportune to review what we have done, very briefly. The Dominion has given to this undertaking in cash $21,378,534; the provinces have given in cash $3,877,000 by way of subsidies. These companies have been able to earn lands amounting to 4,100,000 acres which were originally in the possession of the Dominion Government. They have entitled themselves to select 2,000,000 acres of land in the province of Ontario, now belonging to that province, and some 500,000 acres of land in the province of Quebec, now the property of that province. In addition their obligations have been guaranteed by the Dominion to the extent of $58,000,000, and by the provinces to the extent of nearly $77,000,000; and the public, taking cognizance of the fact that the Dominion and the provinces have both recognized this institution, and that the people of Canada, in Parliament and Legislature, have declared that it was a laudable undertaking, the general investing public of the world, of Europe and of America, have put their savings also into this undertaking to the extent of some $175,000,000 or $176,000,000 without government guarantee. Canada's investment in this undertaking is large. Our endorsement of this undertaking that may become an obligation is still larger, and the moral obligation which rests upon us of having encouraged other investors is larger still. Therefore, on these three heads, it seems to me that we cannot allow this undertaking to go by default.

There are three alternatives that have been urged in reference to the situation which confronts us, each of which has its advocates and each naturally has its objectors. The first alternative is what we may call laisser faire, allowing matters to take their course, with the inevitable understanding that collapse will follow. That has been declared to be unthinkable. It is admitted on both sides of the House that it is unthinkable. It therefore is of no advantage that we should dilate upon the disaster that might result from a condition of affairs which none of us have any intention of allowing to come to pass.

The second alternative is that of immediate Government possession. I have found it a little difficult to understand what is the policy of the right hon. leader of the Opposition in this respect. But as nearly as I can judge, his contention is that we should take a majority of the stock at present owned by Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann and hold a majority of the stock in the new Canadian Northern amalgamation. That is equivalent to our assuming a controlling interest, which is practically the same as our taking immediate possession. The other method of taking immediate possession, if I understand aright, is that proposed by the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Nickle), whose method would be the taking over of the physical assets of the whole system. Just how that would be done was not fully explained by the hon. member. So that the second alternative, and if I am right it is what the leader of the Opposition favours, is that the Government should at this time assume control or possession of the entire undertaking.

The third method is that proposed by this Government, namely to grant what may be called an extension of time, one final and last opportunity to the promoters of this great enterprise to make good, with the understanding that this is the last time that the pitcher goes to the well, that if it ever comes back again it will most assuredly be broken. I do not think that we in this House should indulge ourselves to any considerable extent in considering the personality of the two men whose names are primarily connected with this great undertaking. I am quite free to admit—and I think this feeling is shared on both sides of the House—that there are many members of Parliament who have just cause to feel that they have not always been fairly dealt with in respect to the demands that have been made by Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann upon the Parliament of Canada. Those of us who remember the legislation of last session, when we were given to understand that the aid then granted would bring about the completion of the road and that nothing further would be demanded, while we feel that those who made those representations in this House were sincere in believing that the evidence laid before them was in accordance with the facts, yet we cannot help feeling that to some extent they were deceived, and purposely deceived, and that this House acted on a supposition which further events have shown to be unfounded. Therefore, we cannot altogether get away from a feeling of annoyance at the way in which we have been treated. In the matter of the stock that came into the possession of the people of Canada one year ago, it was repeatedly stated in this House that the Canadian people were henceforth the owners of one-tenth of the capital stock of the company. If I remember rightly, the Minister of Finance in four separate paragraphs of his speech made that statement, and I have no doubt whatever that he believed that was what Canada was getting; instead of one-eleventh of $77,000,000, which is what we actually received. In both those cases members of this House have, I think, just cause to feel that they were not dealt with as openly and frankly as they were entitled to be by the promoters of this great undertaking, and naturally there remains in the minds of many of us a predisposition to deal somewhat hardly with these gentlemen; but I think that to allow those feelings to influence our action, to allow whatever personal animosity there may be with us to guide our course, would not be wise inasmuch as in gratifying our dislike we might be doing a very great injury to many innocent people, and undoubtedly would be doing something that would not be to the benefit of Canada as a whole. Consequently, I think the lesson from our experience of last year is this: That we should take the fullest possible precaution to ensure that this agreement says what it means, and means what it says, and we should adopt the attitude of him who sups with the devil; that is, we should use a very long spoon. Under the circumstances, however, I do not think we should allow whatever feelings we may have in this respect to influence our better judgment; but, as was said last night, 'the burnt child dreads the fire,' and consequently we should be careful that the arrangement we make embodies what we wish it to, and that it is susceptible of no other interpretation than our intention.

Just for a moment I want to ask the members of this House whether immediate Government possession of that railway is desirable? That was what I understand was advocated by the member for Kingston (Mr. Nickle) last night. I listened to some of his arguments as to why immediate Government possession was desirable, and as to the manner in which he would bring that about, and I would like to have asked him a number of questions. First of all, as to what proof he had that public opinion was so crystalized and so definitely formed as to lead him to believe that it was the desire of the people of Canada to-day to own a transcontinental system; again, as to whether the time was ripe for taking over a new enterprise of this kind—whether an undertaking that is only three-fourths completed should be taken over and completed by the new set of owners; whether a change at this particular time might not lead to much confusion, and, possibly, additional expense. Again, I would have liked to ask him whether, under present circumstances, with heavy expenditure and diminishing revenue—which we have to admit is at present evidenced in our financial situation—the Government would be justified in undertaking the enormous immediate cash requirements that would be necessary if the Government at this time were to take over the road. I would have asked him whether he can imagine, if another $100,000,000 was necessary to make this system complete, that the Government and its officials might be expected to expend that $100,000,000 any more economically or carefully than the men who have grown up with the work, and are now engaged upon it. Could the Government, if owners of the road, reduce the rates? If, at the present time, the road is not paying, could rates be reduced save at a loss? And what, then, would be the object in acquiring the road, with the expectation that rates might be reduced, and that the other railroads dealing with the Northwest might be brought down to a lower export rate basis. Again, is there time to reorganize, to rearrange the personnel so as to permit this railroad to pass into the hands of the Government without having gone through an interval equivalent to bankruptcy? It seems to me there are a great many difficulties which present themselves in the way of bringing about, in the very short time at our disposal, the passage of the physical assets of the company into the hands of the Government or the exercising of a controlling influence by the Government. Should the Government, as has been advocated by the right hon. leader of the Opposition, assume the majority of the stock in this company, it must not be forgotten that assumption of the majority of the stock means assumption of control and responsibility; and I would like to ask members on the other side of the House if they are prepared to advocate, at the present time, that the Government immediately assume the entire responsibility for the completion of this road and this system. So I think there is much yet to be laid before this House by way of proof by those who advocate that, either by way of controlling the majority of the stock, or by way of acquiring possession of the physical assets of the company, the road should pass into the immediate possession of the Government. The Government in their proposals have had regard for present conditions, and future contingencies; for the alternative of success, and for the alternative of failure. I believe it to be a careful honest attempt on the part of this Government to find the best possible solution in a case of extreme difficulty.

At one o'clock, the House took recess.

The House resumed at Three o'clock.

Mr. AMES: Mr. Speaker, before the House rose at one o'clock, I had been dealing briefly with the various alternatives open to this Government in meeting the difficult situation, and I had endeavoured to show that of the several alternatives there was none which seemed to be so free from objection as a method somewhat similar to, if not identical with, the one that is covered by the resolutions which have been introduced by the Prime Minister. I shall now take a few moments of the time of the House in dealing rapidly with some of the prominent features of this agreement with the view of pointing out wherein, in my judgment, that agreement is commendable and should receive the support of the House and of the country. When the Government approached this problem they found that they had to deal with a very tangled web of allied companies. The proposition would have been comparatively simple if they had been dealing with one completed railway system. But they found a score and a half of different companies each having a separate entity and organization. The first task that presented itself was that of unification, not the task of amalgamation which would require extensive legislation and much time. Under present circumstances all that was necessary was to form a unification and to bring these various component parts of this system together so that they could be controlled from one centre. My hon. friend the Solicitor General showed last night what were the advantages of this method and the many obstacles that were in the way of such an amalgamation as had been hinted at by the Opposition. It is proposed to bring these twenty-nine undertakings into one system so that they can be centrally controlled.

These undertakings, if united, contain all the essentials to the successful operation of a railway system. They include a main line of railway from the Atlantic to the Pacific, the necessary terminals in all of the chief centres of traffic, a number of branch lines and feeders, telegraph systems, express companies, even steamship lines, and care has been exercised in bringing into the unification every essential feature which might be necessary were the Government, or another company, to be called upon to operate it as a completed Canadian transcontinental railway system. Henceforth there is to be a central control—not a central control as heretofore by Mackenzie and Mann, Limited—but the Canadian Northern Railway Company are to hold all, or a majority, of the stock of every one of these subsidiary companies that go to make up this general unification. In order that these provisions may be observed these stocks are to be in the hands, not of the Canadian Northern Railway Company itself, but of trustees who will see that the agreement is carried out in its fullest particulars. Moreover, further issues of stock are prohibited, so that we know just where we stand in our enumeration of the stocks involved.

With this new unification the Government has made a bargain. Some people think that it is a hard bargain. There are people who believe that the Government has exacted really more than it should have taken out of the companies and the people who compose this unification. Hitherto it has been customary for the Government of Canada to present the railways with large assistance considering that the only return necessary was that the roads, when completed, would be successfully operated and would indirectly be a benefit to the people of Canada. But, for the first time, the Government has sincerely insisted that a bargain should be made in which there is a large quid pro quo in return for aid rendered.

This undertaking is about three-quarters completed and it has been represented to the Government that it will require an expenditure of another $100,000,000 to bring the system up to a full operative basis. That $100,000,000 can be made up in this way: There are $58,000,000 worth of securities which are already legislatively possible but which can only be realized as the work of construction continues. The other $42,000,000 of aid, the promoters are expecting to realize by the sale of new securities guaranteed by this Government and it is claimed that with $42,000,000 they can easily realize the $58,000,000 and therefore, the whole $100,000,000 will be available for the completion of this system. The Government gives—or I might rather say—lends its credit to this enterprise to the extent of guaranteeing an additional $45,000,000 worth of bonds. These securities are to be issued for twenty years at four per cent and the Government becomes, in the last resort, responsibile for the principle and interest. That is the main assistance that the Government gives.

But the Government gives further assistance than that which must be taken into consideration when we are examining this bargain. The Government says: For the first three years of the operation of this system it will be very difficult, if not impossible, for the company to pay interest on these bonds; consequently the Government undertakes to advance—that is to lend—the interest of six semi-annual payments, amounting, it is estimated, to $5,400,000 and this loan shall be repayable in 1934 when the guarantee securities fall due, and this loan shall be covered by the same security. So that the Government is giving an additional guarantee to the extent of $45,000,000 and practically a cash loan of $5,400,000. This makes the total assistance that the Dominion Government has given to these allied enterprises:

Cash	$ 21,400,000
Guarantees	103,000,000
Loaned in cash	5,400,000

or a total of about one-third of the entire $400,000,000 which at the time of completion shall have been invested in this road. The Government has taken a large interest and is entitled in return to very marked consideration.

What does the Government get in return? I propose to classify the benefits which are to accrue to the Government under several different heads. In the first place, the Government is to get forty per cent of the common stock of the reorganized Canadian Northern Railway system. That forty per cent of stock, or that $40,000,000 worth of stock if it remains at par, is to be the absolute property of the Government for all time.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN: There was an apparent discrepancy as to the cash and other aids alleged to have been given to the Canadian Northern between the member for Kingston and the Solicitor General. Has the hon. gentleman had an opportunity of investigating the difference and can he give any reply?

Mr. AMES: I have not had an opportunity of investigating the difference, and I am giving what is set forth in the official papers laid before the House.

To resume, let me state that this $40,000,000 par value of stock of the reorganized Canadian Northern Railway system is to be the absolute property of the Government for all time. The Government is already a partner to the extent of $7,000,000 worth of stock, or one-eleventh of the present stock of the Canadian Northern. The Government is now to become a partner to the extent of two-fifths of the entire capitalization of the undertaking. I take it that the Government is not so particularly anxious that this should become a revenue bearing stock as it is interested in the fact that the stock should be controlled by the Government in order that, in that way, it may to a large extent be able to guide the future policy of this great organization. It is well known how this matter is to be arranged. The Canadian Northern at the present time have a capital of $77,000,000 of which we own $7,000,000. They are authorized to increase that capital to $100,000,000, and all the stock of all the constituent or subsidiary companies will become the absolute property of the Canadian Northern Railway Company, and no further stock will be permitted to be issued by any of these subordinate companies. In order to secure the carrying out of that arrangement, these stocks will be placed in the hands of a trustee who will act for all the parties to this agreement. Therefore to control the Canadian Northern in the future will be to control the entire system, including all these subsidiary companies; and if two-fifths of the control of the entire system rests in the hands of the Government, two-fifths of the control of all the component parts of the system will be with this Parliament and those whom we appoint for that purpose.

There are further conditions to be imposed upon the Canadian Northern and the subsidiary companies. The Government, in making this arrangement, have thought of other people besides themselves; they have thought of those people who have made short term loans for this undertaking and of those who have in good faith sold goods or rendered services on construction account. All these people will be protected by this agreement. As far as the temporary loans are concerned, all represented probably by short term notes, I understand that they represent $20,703,865, and to secure the payment of that amount securities valued at $24,324,000 have been lodged under the trust deed of 1903. This agreement proposes to say that these securities shall be regarded as pledged for that loan; that they will not and cannot be interfered with in any other way or for any other purpose than for the satisfaction of these temporary loans. Therefore, it gives to the persons who have loaned that money the feeling that they need not worry; that while there may be delay, they will eventually be paid, and they are thus relieved from the necessity of pressing for immediate attention.

As to current indebtedness—that is to say the floating liabilities for work on construction, for supplies given and for services rendered, scattered throughout Canada from one end to the other, many of them owed to Canadians, some for large amounts, some for small amounts, some which would ruin the man to whom they were owed if they were not paid—the Government undertake to make a prior condition to this guarantee that Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann, Limited, shall reduce those claims from $10,500,000 to about the normal amount, namely, $3,000,000. In other words, in one year Mackenzie and Mann must reduce those claims by $7,500,000 or arrange for that indebtedness in such a way as may be satisfactory to the persons who have supplied the goods or performed the services. This is protecting, of course, our own people, and will undoubtedly be received throughout Canada with great satisfaction by many who have passed anxious days and nights while this subject has been under consideration.

There are certain other conditions which by this bargain are imposed upon the Canadian Northern; and it is well that we should see all that the Government of the day has seen fit to exact, shall I say, before bringing this bargain before the House. In order to secure oversight and accurate information, and in order to make it certain that hereafter we shall know down to the last detail how this company is getting along and how all the constituent parts are thriving, we are to have first of all a director who will sit, not only on the board of the Canadian Northern, but on all the other boards that are kept alive in connection with this system. He can attend every meeting; he can demand that a meeting be called if it is not called at the regular time, and he is protected in many ways in performing the duties for which he is appointed. He is on guard and will be on guard to see that the Government interests are in all ways protected, and to notify the Government in case any of the stipulations covered in this agreement are not lived up to by the Canadian Northern Railway Company or any of its secondary or constituent parts.

There is also to be brought down yearly a consolidated balance sheet, which will show the financial condition of the entire system. If that is in any way unintelligible or does not contain a statement which the Government is prepared to accept, there cannot be the slightest difficulty in the Government having an outside independent auditor appointed, such a firm for example as Price, Waterhouse and Company, to go thoroughly through that statement and find out whether it represents accurately in every particular the position of the company. We have the further right that the books shall always be open to inspection, and that any person appointed by this Government shall have full right to inspect all the details. Therefore the Government will always have accurate information; and with such precautions, even if the company were to try to hide some things, I contend that it would be impossible for them so to do, because this Government will always be completely and accurately informed as to all that is going on.

We may subsequently require again to deal with this great question in some form or another; and I contend that, if from this time forward every detail of these transactions is open to inspection and can be filed on record and can be known and understood by the Government of the day, when we have again to deal with these people, we shall be in a position far better than we are in to-day adequately to meet the situation.

There are further conditions that are imposed on the Canadian Northern that carry with them indirect benefits to the Canadian people and to the Canadian Government railway system. First of all it is stipulated that Canadian routes and Canadian ports will always have preference. I would point out that this railway company has no American terminus, and this agreement does not encourage private and independent routing of freight. The companies agree in these arrangements that they will follow Canadian routes and that they will utilize Canadian ports. Further, they agree to enter into an arrangement whereby the export traffic, viz., goods, that may originate in the Northwest intended for export via Montreal, Halifax or St. John, shall be carried to those ports, and the rates shall not exceed those which the American railroads are at that time prepared to give. So we are assured that we shall have in Canada as good rates as are given on the continent on such goods as we may desire to export. Then again there is interchange of traffic which may be possible with the Intercolonial railway which involves, of course, apportionment of rates. And finally it is stipulated that they shall consent to give to the Intercolonial railway, that is to the Government railway system, running rights over the whole Canadian Northern Railway system. Now, as I look at that—and the point has not yet been dealt with to any great extent—it seems to me that that is a consideration which carries with it very great benefits. For example, under that arrangement Intercolonial railway trains might be expected to travel to Winnipeg and Canadian Northern railway trains to arrive at Halifax; and if it should happen at any time that none of the three great companies gave satisfactory railway rates across the central portion of Canada, nothing need hinder the Intercolonial railway from taking advantage of these running rights into the heart of the northwest and instituting their own rates for the relief of those citizens of Canada who may be affected by the situation. So, there are further considerations which certainly bring indirect benefits to the people of Canada and to the Canadian Government railway system.

Now, there are some conditions which have been imposed upon Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann, which, it seems to me, might have been left entirely out of the agreement had not the Government felt that they were anxious to make that agreement so good that there would be no chance of it being rejected by Parliament and the country. Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann have been connected with the system ever since 1896. During that time they have acted in the double capacity of contractors and financial agents. As contractors they would naturally be entitled to contractors' profits, and as financial agents to commissions for the loans and financial dealings that they put through. It is stipulated by the Mackenzie and Mann Company, Limited, and by Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann, individually and collectively, that all claims of this character shall be considered as satisfied up to the time that this agreement is signed, and that they will not be presented hereafter. There is, therefore, no undisclosed liability in this connection, and we feel that we have all the cards on the table before us. Hereafter doubtless they may still perform services for which they will expect remuneration, but in that case these services will be performed with the knowledge and consent of the directors of the new company, which directorate will contain a representative of the Canadian Government, and unless these agreements are in advance accepted by the representative of the Canadian Government, it is not probable that they will be permitted to hold. So that in this case also the Government were freed from liability of having claims made upon them—should the road prove eventually successful—that it would probably require a very large sum of money to satisfy.

Now, without in any way impugning the good intentions of the contracting parties, it is customary in an arrangement like this to exact large security that shall be placed in impartial third hands, and shall be forfeitable in case either of the contracting parties should fail to fulfil the terms of the agreement. In this case securities to a considerable amount are to be placed in the hands of impartial trustees. I do not intend at this time to go to any great extent into an examination of those securities. That was done very thoroughly last night, and will be further done when we reach committee. It is hardly necessary to do more than enumerate: First, there is the physical mortgage on the entire Canadian Northern road, an undertaking having 5,300 miles of railway, an undertaking which, at the present time, I understand, is able to meet the fixed charges that are upon it, and which we have every reason to believe will become, if it has not already become, a profitable undertaking. In the second place there are the eighteen lots of stock enumerated in schedule 2, part 1, which at present are owned by Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann Company, Limited, free from all prior claims save the mandatory charges. These, with four exceptions, are all the stock either issued or that can be issued. They become what might be called the second line of defence, the second item in the list of securities. Then, we have the equity, which is alleged to be considerable, in a list of bonds and stocks which are held under the trust deed of 1903 which, with that trust satisfied, it is expected would realize a certain sum of money available for the satisfaction of our guarantee. And finally we have the Brockville and Westport railway on which we shall hereafter have the first claim.

There is also security which Messrs.

Mackenzie and Mann Company, Limited, have been asked to put up which does not really directly belong to this railway system, and the putting up of which they would have been justified in refusing to consider had they not been anxious to meet this Government. I refer to their equity, their beneficial interest, in their townsite properties. We understood from what the Solicitor General told us last night that the townsite properties together with the prairie lands were covered by certain securities which, if satisfied, would practically leave the townsite property free of all indebtedness. And the $10,000,000 of capital stock, and $10,000,000 of debenture stock which Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann Company, Limited, have as their share in this townsite property are placed in escrow for us and come into the list of securities which are given as pledges for the purposes of this undertaking.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Will the securities in townsites include the townsite near Montreal?

Mr. AMES: No, those I refer to are townsites throughout the Northwest. Now, securities have a dual value in an arrangement of this kind. They have their instrinsic value, the value that may be there to satisfy any financial loss which may be involved through foreclosure. But they have also the value that they are to the pledger who may be presumed at least to be very anxious to resume possession of what he has pledged. If my hon. friend from Algoma, for example owned a property worth $10,000 and I loaned him $10,000 on that property, he would naturally feel that, having already obtained the full value he would not need to pay the interest and need not care whether the mortgage were foreclosed or not. But if, on the other hand, I had loaned $6,000 and he felt that the property was worth $10,000, he would pay the interest promptly and would be anxious that the mortgage should not be foreclosed as he would look forward to the day when he might step back into his possession of the whole $10,000. It is the same in the matter of driving the bargain that we are making here; if you take from the party with whom you are dealing so large a share of what there is in it that he feels he has practically already received full value he has no incentive to endeavour to recover his possession. One of the features of this arrangement that I think should commend themselves to the House is that Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann individually and collectively will have a very great incentive which will call forth their very best endeavour to bring this great enterprise through, because if it is a success there is still enough left in it for them to amply repay them for all they may have done.

If you took from them practically everything, they would be, just as other human beings naturally would be, far less liable to put forth their every endeavour to get back into the position that they were in in the first place. So I think that when we come to consider the value of the securities, we may take into consideration both their instrinsic value and their value as an incentive to those who are putting them up to redeem them and to put themselves back into their former position.

There is another feature of this matter which, I think, is well worthy of consideration. What is to happen in case of default? We have hitherto been dealing with the situation in case of success; the Government has very carefully looked ahead in regard to what might happen in case of failure. Ordinarily it is a very slow process to foreclose a railroad and for the bondholders gradually to take possession of the physical assets thereof. The Government in this case, however, has supplied a method of quick procedure whereby the axe drops instantly and whereby there can be no coming back for further assistance. It is definitely stipulated in this undertaking what shall constitute any event of default; it is so clearly defined that there can be no possible misunderstanding. Should the Canadian Northern railway fail to pay interest on the securities which are to be issued in connection with the guarantee which we are now authorizing, or should they fail to carry out any of the conditions contained in the trust deed as accompanying that guarantée, they would commit an event of default. Should the Canadian Northern on any of the previously guaranteed securities or hereafter guaranteed securities fail to pay the interest, they would commit an event of default. If any part of the system goes into the hands of a receiver; if any branch of the whole tree shows signs of decay, that is an event of default and in any of these events the Government can drop the axe without delay. I have heard this agreement described somewhat as a case where the culprit has confessed judgment and has been let out on suspended sentence. Some elements of the agreement certainly can be compared with such a case. The trial is over. The applicants for aid admit that without our help they cannot complete the road. We have undertaken to give them a last chance, and it will never be necessary for them again to come here, nor will it be necessary for this Parliament to listen to another discussion such as is taking place this session. They have been tried; I may almost say they have been found guilty and let out on suspended sentence. If there is an event of default; if they fail to perform the obligations that by this new trust deed are placed upon them, the axe drops and that is all there is to it. There is a summary method, therefore, by which the Government steps in and takes possession of the whole enterprise. The Government can replace the directors by Order in Council; the new board of directors will have all the rights that would be given by a board of directors elected by the shareholders, and they can deal with the physical property as they see fit. Then, the Government can declare the mortgage foreclosed and can enter into the benefit of the equities, subject, of course, to the consent of Parliament. If the Government, in such an event, enters into control, it may become the owner of the system by assuming the responsibilities and powers as provided by this proposed legislation. The Government could then arrange the whole financial system involved so as to protect all concerned. The Government can operate; the Government can lease, or the Government can create a new railway company to manage the road and enter into ownership, if so desired.

It has been advocated in this House that the Government should immediately take possession of this system. The right hon. leader of the Opposition practically recommended that when he said that we should demand and receive a majority of the stock. If you have a majority of the stock you have control of the system, and to control the system means to assume the majority of the responsibility and practically let the other fellows out, if they care to go out. That is one way of doing it. The other way is that explained by the hon. member for Kingston, who proposes that we should immediately allow the road to go to smash and then step in and take over the physical assets and become absolute owners of the system. I endeavoured to point out before luncheon that there were many difficulties in the way, but if we now give, by this new arrangement, what practically amounts to four or five years' extension of time; if we permit Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann to make one more effort to put this thing into shape and bring it through; if, with the information which will hereafter be always at our disposal, we can see that they are not succeeding, this Government will then have ample time to consider the matter and provide ways and means whereby we can, in due course, take possession of the road if we so have to do.

To conclude, I will simply summarize in a word what I have been endeavouring to demonstrate. This is a bad situation, at the best, but it is a situation in respect of which a government in which we have confidence has no intention of lying down or shirking responsibilities. This arrangement will be either a success or a failure. It gives to the promoters of the road one more chance; it still leaves them with a considerable status and if they regain their original position the people of Canada will benefit to the extent of being the owners of $40,000,000 worth of stock, which will be then of value. If, however, the promoters cannot succeed, this legislation provides a simple and effective method of foreclosure and a short cut whereby the people of Canada can take, without expense, possession of the physical assets of the road. The Canadian Government would then be the owners of a transcontinental system which has been built at lower cost than any other; a system which ought to be able to pay if any of them can be made to pay. If it is to be sold or to be leased or to be operated we will in the next few years have time to consult the people and ascertain what their wishes may be in regard t the matter. I feel, Mr. Speaker, that the Government, having had to face an extremely awkward situation, has acted with courage, with foresight and with skill and has made the best possible arrangement that under the circumstances could be made, and therefore, deserves the support of this House.

Mr. R. B. BENNETT (Calgary): Mr Speaker, I confess that I rise with some diffidence to address this House at this time. I am not unconscious of the fact that in rising to address the House on a measure which has been submitted by a Government that I have supported, I am inviting not only criticism, but something worse; and yet I cannot by any system of reasoning that I can adopt bring my mind to support the proposals that are now submitted for our consideration. I am, however, a firm believer in party government. I have always believed that under democracy as it now exists the interests of the people can best be safeguarded by party government; I have not changed that view, nor have I any apologies to offer for my party affiliations. I am proud of the fact that during my manhood, since I have been able to think for myself, I have served one party. I have expended some time, some energy and what little ability Providence gave me, on behalf of that party. In doing that, I believed that I was best serving the State of which I am a unit, and I cannot better express the views which I held and which I now hold than to quote to this House the sentiments from Macaulay with which I closed the annual address that I gave to my constituents last fall. Lord Macaulay, in his farewell address to his constituents at Edinburgh, used these words:

> I acknowledge great errors and deficiencies but I have nothing to acknowledge inconsistent with rectitude of intention and independence of spirit. My conscience bears me this testimony: that I have honestly desired the happiness and prosperity and greatness of my country; that my course, right or wrong, was never determined by any selfish or sordid motive, and in troubled times and many vicissitudes of fortune, in power and out of power, through popularity and unpopularity, I have been faithful to one set of opinions and one set of friends. I see no reason to doubt that those friends were well chosen or that those opinions, were, in the main, correct.

I still hold that the friends with whom I have been associated were well chosen and that the opinions which I have held were, in the main, correct; but I venture to say that in this new democracy in this Canada of ours there must be room, in the party to which I belong, for independent spirit and independent thought, and that I must be permitted to exercise the intelligence that Providence gave me, in arriving at a conclusion as to whether or not this measure commends itself to my judgment; and if it does not commend itself to my judgment, as it does not, I purpose to give to this House and to this country some reasons for the faith that is in me. That being so, let us frankly for a moment contemplate the transportation system in Canada. There is no problem so serious, there is no problem that offers so many difficulties, there is no problem that so vitally affects the well-being and interests of the people of Canada, as does the transportation problem; and in the solution of that problem the measure which this House is now asked to consider must bear always an ever increasing importance, for what we do here to-day with this measure must have a vast and vital effect and influence upon the well-being not only of this generation but of generations of men and women yet unborn who in time to come are to occupy the great fertile plains of Canada. That being so, what is the position that confronts us? I am not concerned about the argument of how much better we are doing than some one else did. The argument that I am holier than thou is getting rather played out, if I may use a common expression.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. BENNETT: I did not say that to gain any sympathy from my hon. friends opposite. If they read history aright they will be so ashamed of their record with respect to transportation matters that they will offer apologies to the generations yet unborn. What was the condition with which this country was confronted? A vast territory, one of the vastest unoccupied and fertile countries that the world knew, was being joined and united into a great dominion. By contract we undertook to provide for transportation between the two seaboards. We undertook that the far off seaboard of the Pacific should be united with the seaboard of the Atlantic, and in the strength of that undertaking the people of Canada, numbering but a few millions, commenced a task of a magnitude such as the same number of people never undertook before and in less than fifty-five months they carried it forward to a successful conclusion. But they did not carry it through to a successful conclusion without facing great difficulties and overcoming enormous obstacles. For, only thirty years ago last month, that great enterprise now known as the Canadian Pacific railway was faced with destruction, and the right hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition is, I think, the one survivor of this House who will remember the circumstances under which assistence was sought by and given to that undertaking. After the Canadian Pacific railway was constructed the people of the West began to demand additional transportation facilities. They cried out against the monopoly that had been created alike by statute and by agreement. They said that adequate transportation facilities had not been given to them and that the provisions in the contract made with the Canadian Pacific railway were such as to preclude new lines of transportation being opened with the United States, and therefore they were deprived of the rights which they claimed as citizens to transport their products to the markets of the world at the cheapest possible rates. It became necessary for a readjustment of the contract to take place. A readiustment took place. Then it was that the Dominion Government looked towards that other means of transportation, the Hudson bay railway, and I thought it was after all a commentary upon the slow way in which human movements are accomplished when I heard the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Nickle) reading the offers that had been placed upon the statute-book, month after month and year after year, in order that we might have a Hudson Bay railway thirty-five or forty years ago. There is no Hudson Bay railway yet. Despite the offers, and the genius and the vision of the men of thirty years ago, the road is still not an accomplished fact. These land grants were offered but there were no takers; and then it was, as has been said, that certain pioneer contractors, James Ross, one of the greatest minds in that direction this country has produced; H. S. Holt, now president of the Royal Bank; Mackenzie and Mann, then contractors of ambition and energy, and with some wealth behind them, because they had large means for those days as contractors, conceived the possibility of being able to make some money out of these enterprises. They were then not empire-builders or merchant princes; they were ordinary contractors seeking to make money out of the building of railways. They conceived the possibility of making money, and took up these charters. These roads ran largely from nowhere to nowhere, and when it is said in this House that the land grants that attached to these roads were land grants that were available to these men as contractors, on the very threshold I controvert that argument. Why? Because those grants were given to a road to Hudson bay, and the lands that were to be given were lands that had no value as fertile prairie lands, but lands which lay along the railway, not valuable in any large sense. But when, in 1907, in the month of May, after the Canadian Northern railway had been formed, certain Orders in Council were passed, then this country said: Because this company has shown some signs of becoming a national transportation system, a transportation system in the larger sense, we will allocate and allot to it certain fertile lands in the valley of the Saskatchewan, and in the Goose lake country. Hundreds of thousands of acres of land were thus made available by that Order in Council to the Canadian Northern Railway Company, not to Mackenzie and Mann, not to the men who owned the road, but to this system as such, as an assistance to enable it to prosecute the construction of the road for the benefit of the people of Canada, and especially of western Canada. That is the reason that the Hudson Bay railroad was not prosecuted with the subsidies or aids proposed to be given to it. That is the reason the Canadian Northern emerged from the position it then occupied, of a short road running from nowhere to nowhere, offering no adequate facilities, into a road stretching out, branching out, reaching out, extending, if you will, ultimately to Edmonton. This road at that time had not become a national undertaking. It was, however, a road offering some transportation facilities to the people. It had not offered great facilities, as my friend from Kingston said yesterday —and in order to shorten my address I desire to adopt in its entirety the statement made by him yesterday, for which I accept absolutely as much responsibility as he— I accept full responsibility for the accuracy of his statement because you will find that every word and figure he used in reference to the history of aids given and subsidies granted and guarantees of securities are absolutely borne out by the statutes of this country. Every line has been checked and rechecked and I accept with him full responsibility for their accuracy. He pointed out that it was because the little province of Manitoba was demanding more transportation facilities that we now have the Canadian Northern system. He referred to the part taken in that enterprise by my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Rogers). I would say in all seriousness, to the people of this country and the members of this House, that I think we little realize just how large a debt we owe to that hon. gentleman in regard to transportation matters in the West.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friends who applaud perhaps do not know the facts. I know something of the facts. I think no man knows them all because they are locked in the hearts of many men; but there are one or two solicitors, one or two lawyers, one or two great counsel in St. Paul to-day who will tell you that, almost repudiated by the Government to which he belonged and by those who held high place and office, the Minister of Public Works assumed the responsibility of signing a contract by which Manitoba acquired the branch lines of the Northern Pacific railway in that province, and after Manitoba acquired the ownership of the lines he had to look for and found somebody to operate them.

It is true the Canadian Pacific offered the province of Manitoba $1,000,000 on their bargain and a reduction in freight rates. It is also true that the contract then made for a reduction in the rate on wheat to the head of the Great Lakes secured to the people of western Canada a reduction in freight rates that has since amounted to not less than fifteen or twenty million dollars. I point that out, Mr. Speaker, because it seems to me right that it should be pointed out, and that honour should be paid where honour is due. Such was the beginning of the career of two men, if not three, that challenges its parallel in the history of the world. I appeal to every man in this House and say that if he will take the time to read the history of the operations of Mackenzie and Mann from that time till now, he will find nothing but a long trail of parliamentary corruption, of lobbying, of degradation of parliamentary institutions, of the lowering of the morale of public life, and the degrading of those standards by which public life should be truly measured. Both sides of the House have been to blame. Look to the statute books for the aid that has been given to this company. Just a few days before a general election, one party proposes and the other acquiesces. They are bound to ask a few questions in order that the contribution to party funds may be large enough. Let us look the business squarely in the face. The time has come when we must take stock of the conditions, and now faced as we are with conditions such as we never met before, we must decide whether we will continue to add to the predatory wealth of promoters or whether we shall strike a blow for the people of this country. That is the condition that confronts us at the present time, and it is to that question I propose to direct my remarks. No man occupying a high position has ever had greater problems and difficulties confronting him than the present Prime Minister. My right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition had no such problems to solve when he came into power. This Government inherited difficulties sufficient to stagger any government. We realize, Mr. Speaker, the difficulties this country is confronted with, and they are not entirely undue to the party opposite and the men I have mentioned. My hon. friend who has just taken his seat (Mr. Ames) says we are not concerned about the men. In all the history of transportation there has never been an enterprise before where two men, or three, have endeavoured to control a transcontinental system. When the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was launched, its stock was placed on the markets of the world. When other enterprises were launched the stock was placed upon the markets of the world. But these men conceived an ambition greater than any man in this country had hitherto conceived, greater even than that of Huntington and his associates in the case of the Central Southern Pacific. These two men conceived the ambition of having the people of Canada build a transcontinental system which they would control and own. That is the position, and that is what we must face. When the Northern Pacific line fell into their hands, they extended it on to Edmonton with a line to Port Arthur. They then had a complete system that extended from Edmonton to Port Arthur comprising now with many branches nearly 5,000 miles of track. I regard J. J. Hill as a man of some genius in transportation matters; yet in his wildest dreams he never conceived the idea of carrying the Great Northern down to New York. Gould conceived the possibility of carrying his rails across the continent but was unable to do it. Huntington conceived the idea of carrying the rails of the Southern Pacific from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and joined the Gulf of Mexico with the Pacific coast. He accomplished that with the aid of governments, and of those who invested in the securities of the road. But Mackenzie and Mann conceived the ambition of uniting the Atlantic and the Pacific oceans at the expense of the people of Canada, while they owned the road. That is the position; we cannot get away from it.

The Prime Minister said that the Canadian Northern railway in 1903, by reason of the threatened construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific and the National Transcontinental railway, was confronted with the difficulty of getting traffic. That was the moment the people of this country should have decided that there was not room for three transcontinental railways. There are always two reasons why men do not vigorously oppose certain things. Men are human. I have been in politics long enough to know that the mainsprings of human action are not always in accord with the highest moral ethics or the teaching of the Sunday school. After the Government of the right hon. leader of the Opposition had committed itself to the construction of the Transcontinental from ocean to ocean, the Canadian Northern enterprise was threatened with extinction. The genius of a man, who is now no more, foresaw that there was not room in Canada for three transcontinentals. My right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition believes that there is room in Canada for three transcontinentals at the present time. I am not a pessimist; I am an optimist, but I take issue with him at once on that point. The history of transportation is simple; there is a limit to the producing and consuming power of the people. It all, therefore, depends on the population of the country and I say that not in history, in the most fertile territory where traffic is produced by the hundreds of thousands of tons to the mile has it been possible for 10,000,000 people to support three transcontinental railways. Do you realize, Mr. Speaker, that we have over 30,000 miles of railway under operation in this country. That is exceeded only by the United States, and by the Empires of Russia and Germany, and by British India. Canada, with less than 10,000,000 of people, has at the present time, or will have at the end of this year, more miles of railway under operation than any country in the world except those I have mentioned. Is it possible for a single moment to conceive that this country can support three transcontinental railways under those conditions where the earnings, to make possible the payment of the fixed charges on the roads to pay the interest upon the outstanding securities, must reach the enormous sum mentioned by Mr. Phippen in his argument before the Railway Commission and quoted to this House last night. The mandatory charges that must be paid by the Canadian Pacific railway are relatively small because they have converted bonds and debentures into ordin-

4 p.m. ary stock, so that four per cent consolidated perpetual debenture stock and ordinary stock have taken the place of bonds, and the bonded indebtedness is becoming smaller and the mandatory charges are therefore becoming less. The Canadian Northern has fixed charges amounting to over $12,000,000, but I shall deal with that later. The National Transcontinental Railway system, when completed from Prince Rupert to the Atlantic will have fixed charges that I will not venture to mention for I do not know nor do I think does any one else. But, Sir, it is not possible for 10,000,000 people to produce and consume sufficient traffic to pay those fixed charges unless a miracle happens, unless the country changes entirely, and the population is suddenly increased. Ten million people cannot do it. That is the condition confronting this country. The late Government, doubtless inspired by splendid motives, desired to build a line from Prince Rupert to the St. Lawrence wholly in Canadian territory. They have built a line the cost of which has become so enormous as to stagger one's imagination, and the fixed charges on which will be so large that I cannot conceive the possibility of the road ever earning them. What is the position to-day? A partially completed Grand Trunk Pacific, and a partially completed Canadian Northern railway. Then you have the Canadian Pacific railway being extended, rebuilt and made stronger day by day, so strong in fact that what is the greatest asset of the country, in my judgment, is also its greatest menace as far as transportation is concerned.

The late Government gave the Canadian Northern a guarantee to enable it to build from the head of the lakes down to the St. Lawrence. In some countries that may be called statesmanship; but if I were to undertake to characterize it I would be obliged to describe it in harsher terms. I have no doubt that the men who granted that guarantee believed that it was essential that this road should be built. But all it meant was that the boundless ambition of two promoters obtained control and overturned the sanity of the Government.

That is the situation which this Government had to meet. They did not create it, but we must face it. Difficulties belong to governments and they must be grappled with by the men who hold power. On that statement of facts, what must be done? Last year and the year before we were induced to grant extensive aid—I am sorry to say it—to this Canadian Northern system. I voted for it on a statement of facts that, I am bound to say, I did not believe. I voted for it on a certain statement of facts which was presented to me as being true, which I did not believe to be true, but fortunately, or unfortunately, I voted for it. I was negligent as far as that is concerned. I failed in my duty as a member of this House last year. My duty last year was to point out what I am going to point out this afternoon. I failed in my duty then, but I am not going to fail again. I did point out then—although I did not do it in this House—that it would take $100,000,000 to finish that system. That statement was laughed at. I knew that these men would be back here. Some people describe them as empire builders, wizards of finance, merchant princes, etc., but if I were asked to describe them I would describe them as Mackenzie and Mann, mendicants. Ever since I have been in this Parliament all they have done has been to get down on their knees and beg. That is a beautiful sight, is it not? Is that uplifting, is that elevating, is that calculated to advance the interests of democracy? Is that the kind of thing that should be going on in these legislative halls? Yet that is what has been taking place since I have been here. I have in my hand an article written by a Washington correspondent in 1896, and this is what he says:

> The most pitiable and at the same time the most disgusting spectacle that now offends the national capital is the Huntington lobby. The list of paid lobbyists and attorneys now number twenty-eight, and their brazen attempt to influence Congress to pass the Pacific Railroad refunding bill have become the disgrace of the session.

It only means that there is a change of time and a change of place—1912, 1913, 1914! We have listened to the voice of the tempter. We granted aid to these men at last, and we are confronted with a difficulty the most serious that has ever confronted the people of Canada. This is the greatest problem of domestic politics that we have ever had to consider.

Before we consider what this country should do, I ask the hon. members of this House to go with me on an imaginary trip from Montreal to Vancouver via the Canadian Northern railway—system, they call it, but I would call it a lack of system. You commence at Montreal at the terminal, in the tunnel. Mr. Speaker, have you read the advertisements in the newspapers regarding the exploitation of the townsite there? My friend the ex-Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) asked yesterday: Who got the money out of it?

Mr. LEMIEUX: Hear, hear.

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend may well say 'hear, hear.' I do not know whether my hon. friend means by that that he benefited, but I do not think he did. I cannot conceive that he did. I think it might perhaps equally well be said 'hear, hear' and 'there, there,' because I suppose many benefited who bought lands and sold them. Who owns these terminals?—the Canadian Northern Railway Company of Canada—no; the Canadian Northern Quebec?—no; the Canadian Northern Ontario?—no. In the railway committee we had a Bill for consideration providing that the Canadian Northern, the Canadian Northern Quebec and the Canadian Northern Ontario should lease these terminals. On what basis? On the basis of paying the interest on the capitalization in bonds of the terminal company and the providing of a sinking fund. When that sinking fund has paid the bonds, of course the capital stock would have some value. I do not know at the present time, because that Bill has been held up, what the exact condition is, but this I do know, that there is a terminal company bonded to death about which there has been a real estate exploitation which made millions, not for the terminal company or the railway company but for many—I do not know whom—and this country is now asked to come to the relief indirectly of this terminal company. That is what it means.

The hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Meighen) said last night that it was generally regarded as good railway practice that the terminals should belong to one company and the railway to another. I would not like to join issue upon any statement that he might make except that I might point out to him that the greatest terminals that have been built in America in recent years —those of the Chicago and North Western railway in Chicago and those of the Pennsylvania railway in New York city—are examples to the contrary. Who owns the Pennsylvania terminals? The genius of Cassett, who was then president of that great railway system whose earnings at times amount to one million dollars a day, did not think it good business to create a terminal company to control the New York terminals and as a result those terminals are owned by the Pennsylvania Railway Company. The Chicago and North Western system terminals in Chicago, which challenge your admiration by reason of their beauty and the facilities that they provide for the public, belong to the North Western system. The New York Central Railway terminals belong to the New York Central and Hudson River railway, the Canadian Pacific Railway terminals at Windsor street, Montreal, belong to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the Bonaventure station, the poor terminals of the Grand Trunk, belong to the Grand Trunk Railway Company and are used jointly by the Intercolonial railway. When we were getting another great terminal in the city of Montreal provision should have been made for the joint use of that terminal by the Government railway, the Canadian Northern railway and also the Grand Trunk railway, because, if you can get union terminals for traffic, you reduce the fixed or rental charges against the railway and you thereby render it possible to reduce the carrying charges to the people. We advocate joint terminals and union stations because in these days of high values of city real estate and enormous cost of construction the only way in which charges can be lessened is by having a large number of railways running into one terminal. I, therefore, join issue when it is stated that it is sound railway finance to have separate companies to own and operate the railway and the terminals. It is sound finance for the promoters. It affords one more opportunity—

Mr. MEIGHEN: Would my hon. friend say who owns the Mount Royal Tunnel and Terminal company?

Mr. BENNETT: The Mount Royal Tunnel and Terminal company.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Canadian Northern railway owns all the stock in that company.

Mr. BENNETT: If so, so much the worse because it affords an opportunity for an exploitation to the extent of a few million dollars for the benefit of the promoters. I am glad to see that the Solicitor General has become the advocate of these two men. Before I finish he will regret that he has become their apologist. The Canadian Northern may own the stock of this terminal company but, why could it not own the terminal in the first instance without creating another company? Why, these companies within companies; why these interlocking companies?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I explained that.

Mr. BENNETT: If the hon. gentleman calls it an explanation, I do not dignify it by that term. He may dignify it by calling it an explanation; but it exceeds my intelligence, weak and feeble though it may be, to understand his explanation.

To proceed, I have left the terminal; I have moved out on the Canadian Northern Quebec rails. Where do I get to? I get up to a point called Hawkesbury, and I leave the Canadian Northern Quebec railway and I want to know what sort of a railway I have passed over. It is the Canadian Northern Quebec, not even a solvent line. The report in Poor's Manual, to which I shall presently refer, shows that the Canadian Northern Quebec last year did not pay its fixed charges; and my information, correct or incorrect, is that it owes the province of Quebec $300,000 for taxes. Yet we are entering into partnership with that sort of company.

Now I move out from there to the Canadian Northern Ontario, and where do I get to? I move west until we get to Port Arthur. I pass over this line, of which my hon. friends opposite guaranteed the bonds. They tell us it is a beautiful line. I can only say this, that I looked at the profile, that I saw the gradients; that I saw something of the character of the line, and I desire to say that, so far as that profile and those plans show, it is an excellent line. But it traverses a territory that will not be productive, so far as I can see, of any substantial traffic. That is the report given to me by the men who are building the line. When I arrive at Port Arthur, I go into the Port Arthur terminal and into the Port Arthur hotel. My eye may catch a grain elevator and I say: To whom does this belong? I am told that it belongs to the Lake Superior Terminals Company. I look at another elevator and I am told that it belongs to the Dock Company; and I find other facilities, all of which are held by separate companies. Why? I am going to show you why—it is the only way in which these unpaid contractors, these poor men, who for eighteen years have laboured in season and out of season, night and day, who have toiled without pay, can make a dollar. Then we leave Port Arthur; we leave the Canadian Northern Ontario guaranteed by the Dominion, against which there are outstanding various classes of securities, to which I shall presently refer, and we go on the Canadian Northern proper to Winnipeg. We traverse that line, to the physical condition of which I shall presently refer and we arrive at the Winnipeg terminals jointly occupied by the Grand Trunk Pacific, the Government of Canada and the Canadian Northern. Then we go to Edmonton on the Canadian Northern proper; we leave that city on the Canadian Northern Alberta and traverse that road from St. Albert to Yellowhead Pass. Leaving Yellowhead Pass you go on to the rails of the Canadian Northern Pacific and traverse that line down to Vancouver. There we get into the Vancouver terminals, presenting again another corporation. We travel across by boat to Victoria, and we reach the terminals of another company. We have thus traversed over all these companies' lines in order to go from one end of the country to the other. Everyone has to have its separate and corporate identity maintained; and the right hon. the leader of the Government is wrong—I say it with deference—when he says that these roads can be amalgamated, and he is wrong for these reasons: Their separate identities must be preserved because of the bond guarantees outstanding, rendering it necessary for separate accounts to be kept. For instance, the Canadian Northern Alberta, guaranteed by the Dominion, must keep separate income and expense accounts in order to know whether or not there is a deficit on its bond interest. The Canadian Northern Pacific must do the same thing; the Canadian Northern proper, with its branch lines, the same thing; the Canadian Northern Ontario, the same thing; the Canadian Northern Quebec and the terminals the same thing. All these companies must keep separate accounts, duplicate books. Economy and cheapness, my hon. friends say, but I say, multiplication of the things which go to make railway operation expensive, rendering it necessary for them to keep separate sets of books, to have separate directors and separate managers. All these may be small, but in the aggregate they amount to a great deal. All this must be done, and in this age of consolidation we are told that this plan of segregation is the least expensive. The other day the Railway Commission of New York authorized the New York Central and Hudson River Railway Company, to consolidate with other railways, with a capital of, I think $600,000,000. Segregation increases the cost, because it renders necessary the multiplication of the keeping of accounts for the reasons I have mentioned. For instance, it may happen that the Canadian Northern Pacific will lose money, while it may be that the Canadian Northern Alberta will make money. It is essential that these two systems should not be joined together, for the reason that the underlying securities might then have to be dealt with by the courts. In the case of the Pere Marquette system, in Michigan, the question of underlying securities came up, and the matter had to be dealt with by the courts. Consolidation and amalgamation in these respects would be utterly impossible unless indeed you have a company willing and prepared with financial standing to accept the responsibility for the fixed charges of every part of the system. That is the reason I offer, with deference to my right hon. friend, why there can not be amalgamation of these lines into one system except by foreclosure and sale.

With that condition in front of us, let us analyse the legislative conditions. Leaving Vancouver, you have the terminal securities guaranteed by the province of British Columbia for $10,000,000 at 4½ per cent, or $450,000 a year. That means that over $1,200 a day has to be earned to pay the interest on those terminals at Vancouver. You journey up the line and you have to earn what? You have to earn the interest on $45,000 a mile at 4 and 4½ per cent, to pay the fixed charges as far as Yellow Head Pass. The line, it is said, is good; the grades are perfect; the cost of construction is great, because, it is said, it is the finest road that has yet been built. That I do not know. All I know is that last year I journeyed especially to look at certain parts of the line and I know that certain parts of it between Kamloops and Vancouver along the Fraser river that do not slip into the river in the spring manage to get there in the fall. It will require an enormous expenditure of money in the building of retaining walls to bring portions of that road to a proper state of efficiency.

What is the legislative difficulty that here confronts us? I look at the statutes of the province of British Columbia and I find that, in the year 1910, the province made a solemn bargain with the Canadian Northern railway and the Canadian Northern Pacific Railway Companies, and in the succeeding election that bargain was practically unanimously approved by the people of British Columbia. I am going to point out that this Parliament proposes to lay unholy hands upon that bargain, and to say to the people of British Columbia: we know more than you. I deny the right of any federal power to deprive the people of a province of the right which they exercise under the constitution. I stand here and make my protest against this Parliament declaring the Canadian Northern Pacific to be a work for the general advantage of Canada under this Act, because by turning to section 17 of the British Columbia Act, I find clearly stated:

> The Northern company agrees that the Pacific company will agree that the Pacific company shall not, and the Northern company agrees that it will not, at any time apply to be declared a work for the general advantage of Canada.

How, in face of that statutory agreement by the Canadian Northern Railway Company and the Canadian Northern Pacific Company with the people of the province of British Columbia, are we to do this thing? I say there is no point more clearly established than that provincial rights must be maintained. The autonomy of a province is quite as much to it constitutionally, when it is in the wrong financially, as the autonomy of a province is to it when it is in the right. The province of British Columbia is not asking us to do this thing, because it cannot do it without breaking this solemn contract. In any event the legislature and not the Government must act. The Canadian Northern Railway Company cannot do it and the Canadian Northern Pacific Railway Company cannot do it without breaking this solemn contract.

Then, why should we do something which the covenant of two railway companies says we shall not be asked to do, and which the Government of British Columbia said should not be done? That is the first question. I am against this measure so far as it declares this work to be a work for the general advantage of Canada, because it is an interference with provincial rights, because it interferes with the autonomy of provinces, and because it is a violation of a contract made between a railway company and the representatives of the people, which contract has since been approved of and validated by the people themselves in a general election.

Now, leaving that, we come to the Canadian Northern Alberta, and that road's bonds are guaranteed by this Dominion. We must do something to take care of them. The main line guarantee need not give us any concern, because our guarantee is only $13,000 a mile, annual charges less than $550 per mile, which is not a matter of great concern or importance—we know they will take care of themselves.

Then, from Port Arthur to Ottawa we have the Canadian Northern Ontario. The bonds of that company also are guaranteed by the Dominion, and Mackenzie and Mann say they cannot build the line. Now, I ask my hon. friends, why should we interfere with the guarantees of provinces, whether they be Liberal or Conservative in their administration? Why should not we concern ourselves with our liability under our own guarantees? In other words, I say we have no right to interfere with Alberta, Saskatchewan or Nova Scotia. What interest have I, living on the prairies, in the Halifax and Southwestern railway? An hon. gentleman near me suggests I am a Canadian. But I have no interest as a Canadian financially in that railway, because this Government is the trustee for Canadians as Canadians, but the Government of Nova Scotia is the trustee for the people of that province. The Government of British Columbia, when they made their bargain, were the trustees for the people of that province, and so with the Government of Alberta for the people of Alberta. My hon. friend from Kingston (Mr. Nickle) pointed out the extent of the guarantees given by the various provinces and by the Dominion. I say that guarantees have been given recklessly, absolutely recklessly, in western Canada. The only province absolutely free from peril in that regard is the province of Manitoba, because on the old lines the guarantees were only $8,000 and $10,000 a mile and because of the lease of the Northern Pacific lines. But west of Manitoba there is danger and peril to the body politic by reason of the recklessness of the guarantees that have been given. I ask, what is going to happen if the Dunvegan road defaults? There are other roads there, besides the Canadian Northern railway and the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific. There are two lines of road whose bonds are guaranteed for $20,000 a mile, or $1,000 a mile per annum fixed charges. Is this Government going to save these also? And if so, if we are going to pay the piper, why should not we exercise some control and some discretion? The Chairman of the Railway Commission pointed out a few days ago that one of the greatest evils in Canada to-day was the duplication of lines, and he said that would have to be dealt with. If that be so, why should we put ourselves behind the guarantees of all these provinces for this road forgetting that there are other roads in the same position? I say that as a matter of law it is unsound; as a matter of policy it is unsound, in every way you view it it is unsound. Why? Because it is bringing upon this Parliament untold responsibilities with the creation of which we had nothing to do and with respect to the carrying out of which we know nothing. I wish to make that clear at the very threshold of this matter. That is to say, if I am correct—and I do not think you can possibly get away from it—on the 1st of January of this year, this Dominion and this Parliament was confronted with a liability under our guarantees for the Canadian Northern Alberta, the Canadian Northern Ontario and the main line of the Canadian Northern railway. The main lines will take care of themselves as I have indicated and will provide for the underlying guarantees in some cases Dominion and in some cases provincial. So far as we are concerned we need be apprehensive only of the ability of the contractors to finish the two lines the Canadian Northern Alberta and the Canadian Northern Ontario. Now, these companies are solvent, or they are insolvent. The Solicitor General told us last night they were insolvent. The Government has investigated the matter and finds that they are unable to carry out their undertakings. If that be so, what follows? A receivership follows; and this Parliament is sitting here to-day to advance money practically as though we were advancing it to a receiver. What is a receiver? He is an official appointed by the court to stand between the security-holders on the one hand and the property on the other; to see to it that the property is maintained and operated for the benefit of those who advanced money to make its construction possible. We have a road in a forward state of completion, but it is insolvent—they tell us absolutely insolvent; they cannot raise money, they cannot finish the road, and they come to you and me sitting here as the high court of Parliament and ask us to advance money practically to somebody as receiver. But the road is under contract. Who are the contractors? Mackenzie and Mann Company, Limited. Are they insolvent as contractors? Where is the statement of their liabilities and assets? Reports say that they have $50,000,000 at least of assets. If so, let them pay their debts and build the road as contractors. I put this proposition before you, Sir, and this House, as a legal proposition: Either there is a contract to build this road or there is not. If there is a contract let us call upon the contractors to finish their work and if they cannot finish their work let us take an assignment of their assets as security for the money we shall advance. Let us put this position squarely: John Smith contracts to build your house. After construction has proceeded a certain distance, John Smith comes to you and says: I cannot finish my contract. John Smith goes to the bank and says: I cannot finish my contract; but I have a lot of assets that will come into value very shortly, a very large number of assets; I do not know exactly where I am at, but I must have some money. The banker says: Assign me your contract, assign me your assets, and I will see what I can do to find money to finish your contract. Is not that what would happen? But what we are doing is handing out to these men money, true under certain restrictions and reservations, but without inquiry as to their ability to fulfil their contract. I say with all deference, how are you going to get away from that? Either these men are contractors or they are not contractors. They are spoken of as contractors, and I want to emphasize this: If they are contractors we must have evidence why they are not finishing their work; and if they are unable to finish their work, we as bankers should demand an assignment of every security they have before we give them a dollar. Is not that a banker's business? Take the other horn of the dilemma. Say that the company is building its own road and is insolvent. What follows? If the road is insolvent, it must go into the hands of a receiver. But, for reasons mentioned by the Prime Minister, and with which I agree; for reasons mentioned also, by the leader of the Opposition, and with which I also agree, this country cannot afford to let the road get into the hands of a receiver. If so, then let us act the part of a receiver. That is all I ask. Why should we depart from well known legal principles, from well known legal rights, from well known legal positions, merely to please two promoters? I leave that to the House. Let us get on. The Government says: We propose to grant $45,000,000 to these men at four per cent on certain well defined principles, and they lay them down. My friend the Solicitor General says: Here is the mortgage we are going to take; and the mortgage has certain constituents and factors that constitute the security that is to be given. I agree with that; it is perfectly clear that he has taken all the security he could get, except the security of the men who are responsible for this disaster. That security has not been taken, I ask that it should. Surely my hon. friend was wrong when he said that first of all, on entering into this matter, he reduced the capital stock of this company. If he will turn to page 34 of the blue book he will find that he has not reduced the capital stock of the Canadian Northern in any way, shape or form. We find on page 34 that there is vested in the Canadian Northern Railway Company or in persons who hold it for them in trust, $45,000,000, and $45,000,000 subtracted from $145,000,000 leaves $100,000,000 of stock of the Canadian Northern railway and constituent companies that is now to be represented by the capital of the Canadian Northern. You are exchanging that for $100,000,000 of water in the proprietory companies. You forget to recognize that the Canadian Northern already owns part of this stock and that $8,000,000 of it belongs to other people whom we cannot get at. So that on page 34 of the blue book you find the facts stated as follows:

Issued capital stock of the Canadian Northern Railway System, $145,778,500.
Issued Canadian Northern Railway stock $77,000,000.
The stock of the Subsidiary Companies is the difference between these two sums, viz., $68,778,500.

From the third column you will observe that $45,000,000 of the $68,778,500 is already held by or in trust for the Canadian Northern Railway, so, that when that company acquires $23,000,000 more stock in the subsidiary companies, it will own all the capital stock of the subsidiary companies. The purchase price for this $23,000,000 of stock in the subsidiary companies is to be $23,000,000 of Canadian Northern Railway stock, whose capital will then be increased from $77,000,000 to $100,000,000. Instead of a reduction of capital stock, there has been an increase; instead of taking water from it, you have put water into it.

But that is not all, Mr. Speaker; let me proceed a step further. I want hon. gentlemen to turn to the schedule of the resolution itself, and to examine closely the kind of stock we are getting. The first company mentioned is the Bay of Quinté Railway Company. One would think that is a rather valuable company. Let us refer to Poor's Railway Manual, page 1657, and see what we are getting. I find that instead of getting an asset we are getting a liability. This manual says that since 1908 the road has had a deficit. Here are the figures:

Capital account and income, Bay of Quinté railway. Mileage, 86 miles. Deficit for the year 1913, $32,000; 1912, $10,000; 1911, $5,000; 1910, $27,000; 1909, $36,000; 1908, $38,000.

Rather a good thing to exchange the stock of a company worth nothing for stock in the Canadian Northern, is it not? The Bay of Quinté railway, the first company mentioned of the Canadian Northern Railway system, has had a deficit—could not pay its fixed charges—since 1908. According to the returns published in Poor's Manual, that stock is valueless. There is something else I am going to point out further on in the agreement which this has an effect upon, because this company is in default before you start to sign the agreement. Is it not a beautiful thing to say that you have the right to exercise the power of foreclosure and take control when the very documents you sign show default before you sign them. That is perfectly absurd. But that is not all; let us go a step further.

Not only is it a fact that the Bay of Quinté railway has had a deficit all these years, but if hon. gentlemen will be good enough to look up the figures, which may be found in sessional paper No. 269c, they will find a statement of the floating liabilities of the railway companies embraced in the Canadian Northern Railway system and that the floating liability of this small company amounts to $173,114.58. That is, the floating liability of that road really represents accumulated deficits. The capital stock of the Bay of Quinté Railway Company, $1,395,000—and it is not worth anything—is converted into Canadian Northern stock of the par value of $1,000,000 and over. Surely the Government does not intend to do that. The Prime Minister was good enough yesterday to say that he would listen to any suggestions that might be made. The first suggestion I have to make is that the Bay of Quinté railway stock be wiped out of this transaction as quickly as possible because you are being asked to take over the stock of a road which is already in arrears in its interest charges, on which there is a deficit, and the stock of which, amounting to $1,395,000, is being exchanged for over $1,000,000 of Canadian Northern stock. Speaking as a man from the West, I do say this: The constituency which I represent will object to their freight rates being based upon the payment of any dividends upon that $1,000,000 of Canadian Northern stock.

Let us now take the next road, the Canadian Northern railway. I have here the annual reports of the Canadian Northern system since it became such, and turning to the last report, what do I find? I find over the signature of Mr. Hanna and Sir William Mackenzie a statement of the financial position of the road. I find that on June 30, 1913, they had a cash surplus of $6,778,384.65 and a land account surplus of $16,930,835.01, a total alleged surplus of $23,709,000. Where is it, Mr. Speaker, that is what I want to know? Before I vote for this measure I want to know where that surplus is. Perhaps some of my friends will be able to tell me now; it will afford me much gratification and pleasure and make it easier for me to know just where it is.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If the hon. member had listened to me last night he would have heard me say that this money was drawn on equipment trust, practically a payment on capital expenditure.

Mr. BENNETT: I am going to deal with that. Unfortunately, that is the story they tell, but it is not true. The difficulty with my hon. friend is that he is taking the statements of these men as facts, when I know they are not facts, as I am going to show before I finish. I want to ask this question here and now. Last year we were told that the $15,000,000 which we were giving to the Canadian Northern would finish the road. It has not done so. We have been told that continuously, year after year, and this is the question I ask the Solicitor General: Since when did a fraudulent representation constitute a basis or foundation for an application for further aid? Since when did bogus surpluses and false accounts constitute a groundwork and foundation upon which to lay a claim for the use of the collective credit of the people of this country?

The floating liabilities of the Canadian Northern Railway Company are said to be $6,565,652.61. After paying the floating liabilities, there will still be a surplus of over $100,000, outside of the land grant surplus of $17,000,000. Are they insolvent or solvent? If they have a surplus of $23,000,000, obviously they are not insolvent. If they have floating liabilities of $6,500,000, obviously they are insolvent. 'You pays your money and you takes your choice,' as they say at auction sales. There is their annual report sent to investors in England. Here is the report made to the Parliament of Canada. Here is the report you make to those you get money from; here is the report to those you want money from. Here is the mendicant, there is the promoter. What are you going to do about it? I want to know what this House is going to do about it? There, stripped of everything, is the story. I am going to deal with this notorious and nefarious Equipment Trust in a moment, because I should like to remind the Solicitor General that this surplus of railway operations is not for one year but is the accumulated surplus of the system, and there are ten reports showing that the surplus was carried forward from year to year and had reached the amount of $6,778,384.65, after paying every equipment trust bond that was due. Let that sink into my friend's mind. I direct the attention of the Solicitor General to the fact that of the fixed charges that were paid by that company as set out on page 14 of this statement, they paid equipment trust securities in full and still had a surplus left according to that. How does he make that out?

Mr. MEIGHEN: All right.

Mr. BENNETT: How do you make it out? There is the story written broad upon the face of that report and I say--

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is just what I said. I did not contradict that. That is absolutely true.

Mr. BENNETT: Then my hon. friend contradicts himself.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, I contradict you.

Mr. BENNETT: This is a matter which might as well be threshed out now. The Canadian Northern Railway Company issued its eleventh annual report on October, 1913. In its statement of income for the year ending 30th of June, 1913, it shows its total revenues and expenditures to have been upwards of $30,000,000. It shows that the company carried forward from the previous year a surplus on operating account, leaving a credit balance of $5,986,553.29 on the 30th of June, 1912. It says it met every equipment obligation that year. It shows that after paying all these epuipment, trust and other charges the company had left a surplus on operating account of nearly $1,000,000 which they carried forward, making a total surplus at the end of the year, after paying all equipment trust and other obligations of $6,778,384.65. Is that true or false?

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is true.

Mr. BENNETT: If it is true, then how could the payment of equipment bonds have exhausted the surplus which they had in June last?

Mr. MEIGHEN: You have only the interest there.

Mr. BENNETT: That was all the payments that were made.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Oh, no, that is where you fall down.

Mr. BENNETT: I shall turn up the report and read it in order that there may be no misunderstanding about it. I have been too long at this business to be fooled with that story. Here is the report:

Deduct fixed charges as per statement on page 17.

And you will find there a complete statement of all the payments for fixed charges and equipment securities. The fixed charges are stated upon the mortgage securities, the consolidated debenture stock, the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake mortgage securities, and the land grant securities. My friend knows better than I that equipment trust securities are payable annually out of the income of the Company and that this method of acquiring equipment is one largely adopted by railways in all parts of the world.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It meant the fixed charges as it says. Does my hon. friend think that the fixed charges include payment of capital?

Mr. BENNETT: All I can say is that in railway finance the payment of equipment trust obligations is regarded as a fixed charge. My hon. friend has, no doubt, much knowledge of railway matters and will not be able to learn from so great a book as Poor's Manual, but I shall turn it up and leave it to him. Here is what we have. At page 1663 of Poor's Manual for 1914, you will find this regarding the Canadian Northern:

Funded debt, including debenture stock, June 30, 1913, bonds, rebenture stock and car trust obligations.

And in connection with this car trust there is a beautiful story which I shall tell about the Imperial Rolling Stock Company, which is Mackenzie and Mann under another name. Poor's Manual says that payment of these car trust liabilities constituted a fixed charge against that company's revenue. And what is it? The equipment obligations are payable in instalments, the instalments representing the measure of depreciation and the rent of the equipment. I am only saying that is what this book says, and I prefer Poor on railways to Meighen on railways.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is not what the book says at all, that is what my hon. friend says.

Mr. BENNETT: I shall read from the book.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The book does not say —I do not wish to be obnoxious to the hon. gentleman and would not interrupt him had he not invited me to do so—the book does not say at all that payments on equipment trust are in lieu of depreciation. They are payments on capital.

Mr. BENNETT: They are not payments on capital. I am going to argue this matter as if I were in a court. This is the high court of Parliament. There are three ways in which equipment is purchased. Equipment, comprising railway locomotives and cars, is bought outright, sometimes charged against capital when capital can be obtained cheaply and sometimes not. Then, second, you have equipment purchased on what is called the lease system. Any member of the House who goes to Montreal tomorrow on the Grand Trunk, if he walks up to the locomotive will find a strip of brass on that locomotive reading. 'The property of Blair and Company.' If you go on the Wabash to Chicago and look at a locomotive you will find a tag of the same character. On cars you will find tags indicating that a car trust has been established or that the property has been leased. The provisions of the lease ensure the payment of an adequate rental over a period of years; the upkeep of the equipment, its insurance, and at the expiration of the lease the property usually passes to the Railway Company, but in the meantime it is of course owned by the lessor. Then there is the system by which equipment trust bonds are issued secured by a mortgage on the equipment. This differs from the lease system in that in the one case the equipment is the property of the lessors, in the other case it is the property of the railway company subject to the equipment trust mortgage. After the initial payment on account is made the balance is usually paid over a period of years representing the lifetime of the equipment I shall now turn to what the Imperial Railway Stock Company itself says.

Mr. MEIGHEN: You have not read that out of Poor's Manual.

Mr. BENNETT: No, because it would take a long time to deal with it.

The Philadelphia plan is the one I first mentioned. Let us turn to Poor's Manual, page 1666:

Car trust obligations outstanding, June 30, 1913 (total, $19,501,500):

All equipment series as described above are issued by the Imperial Rolling Stock Company, Limited, and are unconditionally guaranteed as to principal and interest by the Canadian Northern Railway Company. The Imperial Rolling Stock Company, Limited, holds the title to all of the equipment for the partial payment of which each series is issued, until the railway company has paid off the last bond of said series, assigning and pledging the titles to the trustee of the mortgage to be held in trust for the bond-holders. Trustee of all series: National Trust Company, Limited, Toronto, Ont. The bonds are in coupon form, and are registerable as to principal. Interest is payable at office of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, Toronto, New York and London, Eng. Principal is payable at Toronto, Ont., and New York, N.Y.

Bear in mind that the total outstanding liability amounts to $19,000,000, payable in instalments extending over periods of eight, nine and ten years. It is idle to say that the whole surplus of $6,000,000 has been exhausted in buying the securities since June, 1913.

I want this House and the country to know the story about the rolling stock of this railway and to thoroughly understand its history. To-day we are confronted by a lobby of creditors who are interested. The Canada Car Company is a creditor for one and a half million dollars for equipment; the National Steel Car Company, two or three hundred thousand dollars. Whose needs have they supplied? Mackenzie, Mann and Company Limited, gave their notes for that equipment. What did they buy the equipment for? Did they sell it to the railway? Not they, they sold it to the Imperial Rolling Stock Company Limited. Let us just understand who they are. I hold a prospectus in my hand describing an issue of first mortgage five per cent gold bonds, class 'B.' They started class 'A' in August, 1903, and have proceeded with the series ever since. The paid-up capital is $300,000. Directors, Sir William Mackenzie, president, Sir Donald Mann, vice-president, Z. A. Lash, K.C., Frederic Nicholls, J. M. Smith. Let us analyse that. Mackenzie, Mann and Company Limited buy the rolling stock and give their notes to the Canada Car Company. The Imperial Rolling Stock Company takes the equipment and sells it to the Canadian Northern. Do they make a profit? We are told they do not. Do they do it just for the love of the thing? Then why do they want $300,000 of paid-up capital?

Mr. MEIGHEN: If my hon. friend really wants to know, I will tell him, although I thought he would understand it himself. The Imperial Rolling Stock Company is formed for the purpose of buying the rolling stock. Were it not purchased through the agency of such a company, the rolling stock so purchased would immediately become subject to all the prior encumbrances of the Canadian Northern railway. The same thing applies to other railways as well as to the Canadian Northern. In order to avoid subjecting the rolling stock to all the prior encumbrances of the road by the mere act of purchase, a rolling stock company is formed through which the rolling stock is bought. The rolling stock is then sold to the Canadian Northern or whatever the railway may be. This practice is not confined simply to the Canadian Northern; it is common to all companies.

Mr. BENNETT: On this prospectus the following statement appears:

The Imperial Rolling Stock Company has been incorporated with the object of purchasing rolling stock from manufacturers and leasing it to railway companies in good standing. The railway companies agree to pay for the rolling stock in instalments, which instalments are more than sufficient to pay the interest on and retire the bonds as they mature. This plan has been used extensively in Great Britain and the United States and has proved advantageous to the railway companies and profitable to the rolling stock companies, and has recently proved most successful in Canada.

Do I understand that a company created for the purpose of buying rolling stock from manufacturers and selling it to railways, is a philanthropist when it sells to the Canadian Northern? 5 p.m.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The rolling stock company is merely an agency.

Mr. BENNETT: It says it is profitable.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, it does not. It does not refer to the Imperial Rolling Stock Company at all.

Mr. BENNETT: Then, I-m-p-e-r-i-al does not spell Imperial.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Imperial Rolling Stock Company does not exist for profit. It exists as an agency between the makers of the equipment and the railway company.

Mr. BENNETT: Will my hon. friend say that Mackenzie and Mann make no profit out of it?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Our auditors have investigated the mattter, and have so reported.

Mr. BENNETT: Show me the report.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think it is in the report that has been filed.

Mr. BENNETT: No, it is not. I had that report here purposely to look up that point. I cannot help the way they keep their books, but two and two make four, and I say that Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann positively cannot be trusted after the statement they have given to this House and to the people. The prospectus says:

The Imperial Rolling Stock Company has been incorporated with the object of purchasing rolling stock from manufacturers and leasing it to railway companies in good standing. The railway companies agree to pay for the rolling stock in instalments, which instalments are more than sufficient to pay the interest on and retire the bonds as they mature. This plan has been used extensively in Great Britain and the United States and has proved advantageous to the railway companies and profitable to the rolling stock companies.

Mr. MEIGHEN: In the United States.

Mr. BENNETT: It does not say so.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It does.

Mr. BENNETT: I will read it again:

And has proved advantageous to the railway companies, and profitable to the rolling stock companies, and has recently proved most successful in Canada.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Read the whole sentence.

Mr. BENNETT: I have.

Mr. MEIGHEN: You did not; you started with the word 'and '.

Mr. BENNETT: I will read it again.

This plan has been used extensively in Great Britain and the United States and has proved advantageous to the railway companies and profitable to the rolling stock companies, and has recently proved most successful in Canada.

Mr. BOYCE: Successful, but not profitable.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Boyce) says that what is meant is that it has been successful but not profitable.

[Mr. Meighen.]

Mr. MEIGHEN: It does not say the Imperial Rolling Stock Company has been successful. There are other rolling stock companies.

Mr. BENNETT: There are; I know many of them. But does my hon. friend think the people are so gullible as to believe that men are going to issue securities for $300,000 of paid-up capital for nothing? Why did Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann sell to the Imperial Rolling Stock if it was not created for that purpose? Why is it their notes, and not the notes of the Imperial Rolling Stock Company, that the Canada Car Company holds? Why do the Canada Car Company hold the notes of Mackenzie and Mann and not of the Imperial Rolling Stock Company? Whom do they buy the rolling stock from? From Mackenzie and Mann Coy., Ltd., the go-between the manufacturers and the railway company, who sell it to the Imperial Rolling Stock Company themselves by another name, and who, in turn, sell it to the various railway companies, being Mackenzie, Mann & Coy., Ltd., still another name. These companies could pay for this rolling stock and the people who made these cars and engines are whistling for their money while Mackenzie and Mann will not pay. My hon. friend the Solicitor General says that this is done in order that the stock may not be charged with the payment of the securities under the trust deed. I will read the trust deed and show him that it is charged with it. Let us see what the charges are.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Read it all.

Mr. BENNETT: I am not going to read all of the trust deed. Section 10 says:

The company for further securing payment of the principal moneys and interest and other moneys aforesaid hereby grants and conveys to the trustee a specific charge upon and over the whole of the undertakings and railways of the company present and future including rights of way, station grounds and all real estate and interests therein, buildings and other structures and improvements, rolling stock and equipment, plant, machinery, supplies, material and other personal property present and future acquired for the purposes of the said railways and in connection with operating, repairs and maintaining the same and the tolls, incomes and revenues of the company arising and to arise from the said railway and the rights, privileges, franchises and powers of the company now or hereafter held in respect to and in connection with the said railways and the operation, maintenance thereof (except as hereinafter expressly declared) such charge to rank next after the existing charges thereon as hereinbefore recited but to be subject and without prejudice to the powers hereinafter reserved to the company of creating further charges thereon ranking in priority to the charge hereby created.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Now, then, the hon. gentleman can understand why the rolling stock company intervened and the means that were found necessary in the purchasing of the rolling stock. The Canadian Northern Railway Company pay for it by instalments, it becomes their property and then it becomes subject to the trust deed.

Mr. BENNETT: Absolutely.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BENNETT: Hon. gentlemen pound their desks, but they do not understand what they are doing. Why, then, if that be so, are Mackenzie and Mann's notes outstanding for these unpaid cars and engines?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I presume because the makers of the cars and engines like their notes better than those of the others.

Mr. BENNETT: Then that is the story. Let us have it in all its miserable character. Here are cars and engines bought from manufacturers in Canada, Canadian workmen made them and Canadian materials were used for their construction, Mackenzie and Mann think they are the right people to intervene and as they buy this equipment they must expect to make a profit out of it. Why should they have done so if that were not the reason?

Mr. MEIGHEN: They have bought a lot of other things for the Canadian Northern Railway Company besides that and given their notes.

Mr. BENNETT: Are they the contractors of the Canadian Northern Railway Company?

Mr. MEIGHEN: They are carrying on the construction department of the Canadian Northern railway.

Mr. BENNETT: But, this being new equipment for the Canadian Northern Railway Company, why should they give their notes?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I presume that the makers of the cars asked for further security and got it.

Mr. BENNETT: This is not further security. The company only have their notes; there is no lien.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is the hon. gentleman sure they have not a lien on the cars.

Mr. BENNETT: I regret to say that they have no lien. The Imperial Rolling Stock Company has the lien upon the cars.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I presumed that they had a lien.

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend's presumption and his thoughts had better be revised. These are the cold facts of the case, and if the hon. gentleman had fortified himself with facts rather than presumptions he would have made out a better case.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Did not the hon. gentleman say they had $50,000,000 of assets?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, and they will not pay their debts and want the Dominion of Canada to pay for them. My whole argument is that these men have assets, that they will not use their assets and that they want us to pay their debts for them. I protest in the name of the people of Canada against paying their debts.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Why do you say that their notes are no good?

Mr. BENNETT: Because they have refused to pay them until this legislation is put through, which will compel the people of Canada to pay them. Look at the contractors who have been swarming around the hotel corridors in Ottawa. Why have these contractors come here? Because these men would not pay them. They said: Sue us, and they were sued the other day in connection with a piece of property near Toronto. My hon. friend (Mr. Meighen) touches the point exactly; these men will not pay if they can avoid it. They want the people of Canada to pay their debts, and I protest against the people of Canada paying their debts. If these men are contractors, then let us exhaust our remedies against them before this country pays their debts. Every citizen in my part of the country, I know, will say: If these two men have contracted for the building of this road, and if they have got the money, let them pay their debts. I hold in my hand a copy of a letter which is to be found in the Library from Mr. George Stephen—

Mr. MEIGHEN: As far as I know there is no contract by which they are bound to build the road between them and the Canadian Northern Railway Company at all, but if there was, under what rule of law would anybody say that they were bound to do it if the Canadian Northern cannot pay them for doing it?

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend has no evidence that the Canadian Northern cannot pay them for doing it, but if they have entered into a sub-contract they are bound to pay for the work.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If they have the money.

Mr. BENNETT: Now, I have my hon. friend exactly where I want him. He says: As far as I know there is no contract with Mackenzie and Mann to build this road. This release of the contractors' claims is lovely.

Mr. MEIGHEN: These men have acted as financial agents, and have financed the construction of the road on their own credit and on their own responsibility. It is for services in that connection that they have a claim. There is no outstanding, binding contract, as far as I know, but, inasmuch as they have performed such services, as a court in this country, not many years ago, adjudged, they have a claim.

Mr. BENNETT: Of course, there is a rule in our Railway Act which says that men shall not contract themselves with companies of which they are directors. That is a statutory provision in the Railway Act. Doubtless my hon. friend is aware of it, and in order to get around and about it they have made it Mackenzie and Mann, Limited, when it used to be Mackenzie and Mann. Now, if it is true, as my hon. friend said, that there was no contract with these men to build this road, what right have we to pay this money?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have just told my hon. friend.

Mr. BENNETT: Because they were the fiscal agents?

Mr. MEIGHEN: This is the money of the men who actually dug the dirt and built the road, and of the banks who supplied money.

Mr. BENNETT: Who got the money? My hon. friend knows that it is not a fact that the men who did the work got the money, but Mackenzie and Mann, whom they directly contracted with. I asked three contractors who was the contractor on the Canadian Northern Ontario, and they said Mackenzie, Mann and Company were the only people they knew.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think that is correct; they simply acted as intermediaries in the construction of the Canadian Northern.

[Mr. Meighen.]

Mr. BENNETT: Why were they not the contractors?

Mr. MEIGHEN: As on every other railway there is a construction company, and Mackenzie and Mann, Limited, act as the contracting company in connection with the Canadian Northern railway, just as another company act in connection with the Canadian Pacific railway.

Mr. BENNETT: In the case of the Canadian Pacific railway, construction is not under another company.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What is the harm in a separate entity?

Mr. BENNETT: The harm of the separate entity is that the claim that these men have is against Mackenzie, Mann and Company, and not against the railway company.

Mr. MEIGHEN: This is a liability which they have incurred, for which they get no compensation, and out of which they get no profit.

Mr. BENNETT: I took the trouble to look up the contracts for the Canadian Northern Ontario, and I learned that the contracts call for the construction of the telegraph lines. Then, who got the telegraph lines?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Canadian Northern own them.

Mr. BENNETT: What did they pay for them?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Canadian Northern paid nothing for them. They were turned in.

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend has been misinformed and misinstructed.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I accept all challenges; I have accepted them all so far, and I will accept this one. My hon. friend will remember that just yesterday he made a similar statement during the speech of the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Nickle).

Mr. BENNETT: I did.

Mr. MEIGHEN: He said that the Canadian Northern railway had paid Mackenzie and Mann $3,000,000, the value of the $3,000,000 bonds which they took from the Canadian Northern Express Company. I challenged the statement at the time. I repeat that now, in this connection, that the Canadian Northern railway never paid them one dollar, and that those bonds were turned in absolutely free of charge and as compensation to the Canadian Northern. The Canadian Northern raised money on them and used every dollar of it in their undertaking. I would like you to prove that what you said yesterday is correct.

Mr. BENNETT: I am going to do it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Very good.

Mr. BENNETT: Nothing would please me better, because it makes me come to the point at once. My hon. friend the Solicitor General has at once raised the issue as to whether or not Mackenzie and Mann, Limited, have made any profit with respect to any of the allied enterprises of the railway company.

I turn to page 16 of the eleventh annual report, October, 1913, and I find the statement of acquired securities as follows:

The Minnesota and Ontario Bridge Company, 4½ per cent first mortgage debenture bonds	$ 180,000 00
Capital stock	100,000 00
The Minnesota and Manitoba railroad 5 per cent general mortgage bonds	250,000 00
Capital stock	400,000 00
The Lake Superior Terminals Company, Limited, 5 per cent mortgage gold bonds	2,000,000 00
Capital stock	500,000 00
The Canadian Northern Telegraph Company, 5 per cent general mortgage bonds	800,000 00
Capital stock	500,000 00
The Winnipeg Land Company, Limited, 5 per cent first mortgage gold bonds	300,000 00
Capital stock	100,000 00
The Canadian Northern Coal and Ore Dock Company, 5 per cent first mortgage bonds	437,000 00
The St. Boniface and Western Land Company, 5 per cent first mortgage bonds	750,000 00
Capital stock	250,000 00
The Edmonton and Slave Lake Railway Company, 5 per cent first mortgage bonds	420,000 00
The Canadian Northern Prairie Lands Company, capital stock	483,393 55
The Canadian Northern Railway Express Company, Limited, 4 per cent first mortgage bonds, £616,438	3,000,000 00
Capital stock	1,000,000 00
The Canadian Northern Steamships, Limited, 5 per cent first mortgage debenture stock, £600,000	2,920,000 00
Capital stock	2,000,000 00
	$16,390,393 55

Turning to page 12, I find this statement:

Acquired securities cost $8,294,006.87.

Then I turn back to the report for 1905 (the first report in which the Canadian Northern Railway Company make any reference to acquired securities), for the purpose of ascertaining upon what basis these securities were actually acquired. On page 8 of the report for that year I find that the company owned the securities of the bridge company, the railway company, the terminal company, the telegraph company, the land company, aggregating $3,630,000 par value, for which they paid $1,946,666.66. I find further, by turning to the trust deed issued by the company in connection with its four per cent consolidated debenture stock in 1903, that this issue of consolidated stock was made with the one simple purpose namely, to raise £400,000 with which to buy these securities. Let us read it in order that there may be no misapprehension on that point. You will observe that the very first line of that agreement provides that this money is being raised for the sole purpose of buying that stock. Section 4 of the trust deed is as follows:

The total amount of stock and bonds is limited in the first instance to £400,000 and the company is to be at liberty from time to time and at any time to issue further stock or bonds ranking pari passu with the said £400,000 of stock and bonds.

And section 9 says:

It hereby grants and conveys unto the trustees a first and fixed and specific charge over the whole of the said bonds and stocks mentioned in the fifth schedule hereto.

The fifth schedule, page 51 says:

Lake Superior Terminals Company, Limited, The Winnipeg Land Company, Limited, The Minnesota and Manitoba Railroad Company, The Minnesota and Ontario Bridge Company, The Canadian Northern Telegraph Company.

This $2,000,000 was raised on the consolidated debentures of this company in order to buy the securities. That is what it says.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Have you read it all?

Mr. BENNETT: Wait a moment. I have here the prospectus on which the first money was raised and I want to read it in order that there may be no misapprehension about the matter. The fact of the matter is that there is so much in connection with this enterprise that one gets rather confused in one's endeavour to state exactly what the facts really are. I have now in my hands the prospectus upon which the first money was raised to buy these securities. This is what it says:

The money provided by the present issue—

That is the issue made by Sperling & Co., and it is the first issue of consolidated debenture stock made by this company.

£400,000 four per cent consolidated debenture stock. This stock will bear interest at the rate of four per cent per annum.

Now comes the statement:

The debenture stock will be secured by a specific first mortgage upon the undermentioned securities and other securities from time to time deposited with the trustees for further issues. The money provided by the present issue will be applied in the first place in acquiring the bonds and stocks set out below, arrangements for the acquisition of which have already been made. The stock will be registered on a register kept in England.

Then there is set out how the instalments are to be paid, and so on.

The first question is: Did they receive that money? They did. The second question is: To whom did they pay it? Will my hon. friend answer that question?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. gentleman will have noticed, as he read his figures, the very wide divergence between the amounts paid and the value of the bonds. The fact is that these bonds were turned into the Canadian Northern Railway Company. I can illustrate the process by these two examples. The Winnipeg Land Company owning property in Winnipeg had certain indebtedness on it for purchase price on property bought in the early days. That land is worth some millions more than the land company is bonded for. Those bonds were turned into the Canadian Northern. The Canadian Northern on the strength of those bonds and its other assets issued its four per cent perpetual debenture stock, out of which it paid first that indebtedness against the Winnipeg Land Company and nothing more, not one dollar going to Mackenzie and Mann. The same is true of the Express Company, in which some few thousand dollars only was invested.

It was bonded for some $3,000,000. These bonds were turned in, and out of the perpetual stock raised thereon, enough was paid back to pay the $5,000. Or rather, I am not sure that that $5,000 was paid, but I do know that not a dollar more was paid. The only moneys out of that 4 per cent perpetual debenture stock given to these companies was paid in discharge of the liabilities against them to get a title, but not any of it came to Mackenzie and Mann.

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend says that Mackenzie and Mann did not get any money out of these enterprises. All I can say is that I take this prospectus for what it says, and it says that this money was raised in London to purchase these securities. If they paid, they paid it to the people who owned these securities, and if the hon. gentleman will say who owned, I know who got the money. All I can say is that the record in the investigation of the express matter shows that in this case these men owned that stock—Mackenzie, Mann, Lash, R. J. Mackenzie and Mackenzie and Mann Company, Limited. It follows that the people who sold the property got the purchase price. And if the people who sold it were Mackenzie and Mann and their associates, then they received the purchase price.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It was enough to pay the indebtedness and nothing more.

Mr. BENNETT: All I say is that that is the statement that these men have made from one end of Canada to the other. The hon. gentleman may know more about their affairs than I do—I think he does. All I have is the records. And the records show that the Canadian Northern Railway Company has paid $5,000,000 cash to acquire securities upon which the people of this country are paying 4 per cent interest. They must have bought them from the people who owned them, and the records show that the owners were Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann and others connected with them.

Mr. MEIGHEN: They were of far more value than $5,000,000, but all that was paid was the indebtedness against them, none of which came to Mackenzie and Mann. The record shows that.

Mr. BENNETT: When they got these companies together to incorporate them, why did they create a lot of watered stock and bonds, if the Canadian Northern railway was to get all?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the hon. gentleman wish an explanation?

Mr. BENNETT: I know in advance what the explanation will be; but the hon. gentleman might as well state it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Canadian Northern Express Company had a large revenue. As a means of raising more money they bonded the Canadian Northern Express Company at $3,000,000—the revenue justifying a large issue. They turned that bond issue into the Canadian Northern railway, and by reason of that being there they were able to raise more money.

Mr. BENNETT: But why create bonds and stock if the Canadian Northern railway only was to get the return?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Because they found it more convenient to raise the money on them.

Mr. BENNETT: And the money passed through the conduit pipe—

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is the point—it did pass through.

Mr. BENNETT: It does not get through—that is the point exactly; and the records show it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. gentleman cannot establish that.

Mr. BENNETT: Show me the case of any system, except the Frisco, where such a situation occurred without a public investigation. And that leads me to my second objection to this measure, the one I have raised from the start: I demand that there should be a public inquiry under oath in order that I may know whether the facts alleged are facts or not. I demand to know on behalf of the people of Canada whether these statements are true or false. The Solicitor General knows no more about this matter than anybody else. He has been instructed and he believes the instructions he has received—though a lawyer is not bound to believe the instructions contained in his brief. I do not say that offensively, for the Solicitor General has been making the best case he could, as he is bound to do, on behalf of the Government, and the Government probably believe it to be true. But I do not know whether the story is true or not. I know that in the townsites matter which was referred to this morning, you have $20,000,000 of stocks and debentures as the value of these townsites, and that was in the end of 1913. Where did the money go during the preceding years, during the fat years, when they were dealing in townsites right and left? Mackenzie and Mann owned the townsites which must have netted them millions, for the country only got $3 an acre for the land. And municipalities have been oppressed through lands having been exempt from taxation in some of the provinces. I defy any member of this Government or of the House to state accurately the facts with relation to this enterprise; and I demand that there should be a full and complete investigation that the facts may be made known. I have here a book upon the subject of great railway enterprises in which the story is told of the Huntington-Hopkins contract. If you were to ask me upon what Mr. Lash patterned his whole enterprise I would tell you it was upon the Southern and Central Pacific with Huntington and Hopkins as contractors. They were subsequently incorporated. Their dealings with the company seemed perfectly fair. The auditors went over the figures year by year, and adding two and two together, always made four—they showed that the company was getting the benefit of everything. But, seventeen years after, an investigation was held. The President of the United States appointed a commission to investigate the affairs of the Southern and Central Pacific and such scandal was stirred up as caused the ruin of the reputations of the men engaged in it and made it impossible that any such exploitation of the country should again be carried on. I say that we have in this enterprise at this time a duplication of that very story. What happened last year? We passed a statute by which we were to get $7,000,000 of stock? And what did we get? Why they set the printing presses to work and ground out $7,000,000 paper. The Minister of Finance referred to 'the one tenth of the capital' which we owned; the ex-Minister of Railways spoke of the same. What did we get? We got $7,000,000 of added water. Here is the language of the book to which I have referred:

> To own a construction company, a railroad company, and a good reliable printing press is better than to own a mint. Nothing can limit your fortune but the extent of your greed.

There is the story of the Southern Central Pacific, and the same thing took place with relation to this. Here is what is said with relation to the way the Central Southern Pacific dealt with politics and parties:

> This great political machine was much more efficient than Tammany's or any other machine that ever existed, because it was non-partisan; it dominated the Democratic organization as easily as the Republican. Political manipulation is reduced coldly to the exact principles of science and business. It made politics a matter of scientific corruption and perfect organization, and by this means it secured astonishing results.

Here is a duplication of it. And it is because I say the people ought to know the facts that I have led my hon. friend the Solicitor General into the discussion that is now taking place. I am delighted to have had that discussion because it accentuates the argument I desire to make. The hon. gentleman says such and so is the fact; I say the record says that the facts are such and so. He says the records should be read in the light of knowledge which he possesses; I say they should be read as they are. He has information that I have not; he knows what is in the minds of these men and what took place; I do not. I read the records in the cases referred to to show that not one dollar ever went back to the company. On the contrary the records show that every dollar received from the sale of terminals, telegraphs and express companies went to the people who owned them, and so far as the records before this Parliament are concerned the owners were Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann. Therefore, I ask before we enter upon so hazardous a policy, before we undertake so vast an enterprise, before we stand responsible for such enormous liabilities, this country should have a Parliamentary Committee or a Royal Commission to investigate this enterprise from its inception, in order that the Solicitor General may know, in order that I may know, in order that every man and woman in Canada, the taxpayers who will bear the burden of these rates, may know, exactly what the facts are in connection with this nefarious undertaking. That is what I ask, and that is what I demand. Would anybody ask more; should anybody ask less? A man would be unfaithful to his trust as a member of this Parliament to ask less, and I ask no less than that. What about all these figures that run up into the hundreds of millions, which are now made the subject of cavil and thrown aside as though they were baubles, but which represent real money that must some day be paid by the people of this country? I ask that you and I; that the man in the street, the business man and every man in Canada shall know the facts about this enterprise. If gentlemen can stand out in the broad light of day and show these men to be the paragons of virtue and angelic perfection that they say they are, I shall be pleased and the people of the country will be pleased, but all I can say is that you will find it hard to make the public believe it. I am delighted that the discussion of this matter has made it possible, as it went on from time to time, to develop the point I wanted to make as strongly as I could: that precedent to any action on the part of this Parliament the House should know just how the mattter stands. That is all I ask. The fact that the Solicitor General, who has forgotten that independence that characterized him in days gone by and who should be the first man to say that we should have this knowledge; the fact that he possesses information obtained not under oath, compiled by men who are not merely interested and prejudiced but who are interested as no men are interested; the fact that he believes this information to be the truth does not do violence to his reason nor yet to his understanding—it may do violence to his imagination, but not otherwise—the fact that he does believe these things does not detract from his position or from the position of the Government. My hon. friend has asked for suggestions. May I make the suggestion that first of all, before we move a hand permanently to commit ourselves, have an investigation of everything connected with this project, lock, stock and barrel, from the time to two contractors stood upon the banks of the Red river up to the day when they stood upon their terminals in Vancouver and looked upon the blue waters of the Pacific. Seventeen years went by in the United States after the completion of the Southern and Central Pacific lines during which just such discussions took place in legislatures and in parliaments as are now taking place here. During those seventeen years the people were thwarted in their efforts to obtain information and no investigations were held. At last, yielding to the clamour of public opinion, a president issued a commission and that commission of 1887, sitting practically until Huntington died, laid before the people a great mass of evidence, volume after volume—you will find it in the Congressional library—exposing corruption and degradation of public life and the destruction of the morals of Congress and legislators; disclosing a trail of corruption commencing at the gulf of Mexico, wandering to San Francisco and Sacramento and finding its way to Congress at Washington. Here we have the same state of facts. I am no prophet, but there will arise a race of men in this country who will demand that this Parliament investigate under oath everything connected with this enterprise. Why were these facts not given to us last year? Why were they kept back, if they were true? Why were they not given to us the year before, if they were true? Why were they not given in years gone by, if they were true? Why? Because the alleged facts would not stand the criticism of public opinion. In these days of hard times, when money is tight, when the public credit is strained; when it is convenient to say that we are up against our last resources; when town lots are not selling; when you cannot exploit the whales of the Pacific or the fisheries of the Atlantic; when the natural gas of the prairies can no longer be watered, these two men who have promoted and exploited the natural resources of Canada from the whales of the Pacific to the last thing they could get in the province of Nova Scotia, come here with statements which I challenge; with statements which are not borne out by the records, if the records be true, and which are not shown by their annual reports, if their annual reports be true.

What is the history of the Frisco system? Year after year their books were audited; year after year they showed that two and two made four and that three and two made five, but when the receivers tore it to pieces, when the great audit firm of Price, Waterhouse & Company, trained and skilled men, who knew their business, went down to the bottom of the iniquitous enterprise, they were able to expose to the shareholders of the Frisco system conditions that astounded the public. Men who were thought to be highly respected had degraded their high offices for their own enrichment and aggrandizement, and the people had to suffer. It may not be so here; I do not know, but I challenge any man in this House to give a straight and complete statement of the condition of the affairs of this company. It cannot be done. You may tell me what Sir William Mackenzie tells you or what Sir Donald Mann tells you; I want none of that. I want the truth, under oath, given by men who are trained to ascertain the facts; by men who will lift the lid and get under it. I want the facts shown to the people of Canada before I put the collective credit of our people behind this enterprise.

Am I interested? Do you know, Sir, that over $500,000,000 of the collected credit of the people has been put behind transportation enterprises in this country during the last few years? I disagree with some of my friends that it has been done largely because of the growth and development of eastern Canada. We must have an outlet for our grain and other products. The great seaports of Halifax, St. John and Vancouver and the great ports of Montreal and Toronto must be developed, but must they be developed by the collective credit of the people of this country, for the purpose of gratifying the boundless ambition of two railroad promoters and gratifying their greed for wealth? It is not yet too late. I would be content with any investigation the Solicitor General would conduct on behalf of the people of this country, through a Royal Commission, whose duty it would be to get the facts; to cross-examine, to riddle out all falsifications and subterfuge. The British Empire Trust Company, which is trustee for nearly all these securities, has Sir William Mackenzie as director. Who gets the underwriting profits? Are all these things to be known, or are they not? Are we to get to the bottom of them, or not? It is not yet too late. Hon. gentlemen on this side, when in opposition, criticised the Government of my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition because he was in too great a hurry about the Grand Trunk Pacific. His Minister of Railways raised his voice against the project, saying that the Government was too precipitant. Time has vindicated the prophesy of Andrew George Blair. Sir, I am not worthy to loose the shoestrings of a man like Blair, but I do say, in all seriousness and solemnity, that it is not yet too late.

I urge upon this House that this Government should pause before we are committed to a proposition involving $300,000,000; before we are made fourth mortgagees in this enterprise; before we are made partners with men whose misrepresentations have brought upon us this iniquity. Sir, we can investigate; we can still save the credit of Canada. All we have to do is to pass a short statute authorizing the Governor in Council to appropriate such a sum of money, not exceeding a sum mentioned, for the purpose of carrying forward the construction work on the lines in which we are interested, the Canadian Northern Atlantic and the Canadian Northern Ontario, for the purpose of paying the contractors; for the purpose of paying the equipment people and of subrogating this country, in right of the Crown, to the position which they as contractors or otherwise, would occupy in respect of this enterprise. If the road went into a receiver's hands, the first question would be: show me the report of the physical condition of the property. What is the physical condition of this property?

What is the physical condition of this property? I suppose the Solicitor General has been told that the physical condition of this property is so splendid that it challenges the admiration of every traveller. All I know is that last spring in Winnipeg there sat a board to determine what price should be paid to the men who worked on the road, and they had to get more pay because the road was so bad that it took longer to get between points than on other roads. I have perused a tail-end report of every mile of that system, not made by a Canadian Pacific Railway man nor by any man connected with that company and that tail-end report shows that the road from Port Arthur to Yellowhead Pass is a system unworthy in some respects of being called a railway—dirt ballast, dirt track, poor ties, mostly fifty-six and sixty-pound steel, sharp curves, heavy grades, everything that goes to constitute what is called a minimum cost road. What would happen if you went to a receiver and asked for a receiver's certificate for $45,000,000? He would say: Show me your physical reports and show me your financial position, and I shall give the certificate. But no such thing is done here; it is go in blindly—

Mr. MEIGHEN: If the hon. member will look on the files of the Railway Department at Ottawa he will see official reports there to the effect that his report is absolutely false.

Mr. BENNETT: In answer to that I would ask my hon. friend if the train known as the Saskatoon express has not been described by an eminent engineer as one which is unsafe to carry human traffic.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I cannot tell you what engineers say.

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend does not know what engineers say, and I do. I am not an engineer myself but I do say that the track of the Canadian Northern railway—and I have travelled over miles of it for the purpose of seeing myself, and I speak whereof I know—may be described as unfit to carry human traffic. It will carry freight traffic. It is a matter of record that the road was so bad that it had to pay larger wages to its employees.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The road carried three million people last year without one being hurt.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so, I quite agree that it carried three million people, because they had no other means by which they could get transported. My learned friend says that none of them were hurt; but I know that at least one man consulted me who had been hurt during the last year. Perhaps that was overlooked in preparing the report, as many other things were. The road carries a large amount of freight traffic, because it is the only avenue by which this freight could be carried. I may be wrong as to that; I do not know, but I do say that this country has the right to know. That is all I ask, and I plead with the Government to appoint a commission or a committee that will enable this House to know, first, the physical condition of this property, and, second, the financial position of the company, in order that we may thoroughly understand the enterprise we are getting behind and what we are putting money into. I make a further suggestion before I deal shortly with the agreement. If we cannot appoint a commission, do not let us permit this money in any way to be controlled or spent by the men responsible for the chaos, the men who have brought about this condition. Mackenzie, Mann and Company, either as contractors or railroad builders, were the men who have made this condition possible. Now, if we are going to lend these men money, let us be receivers in every sense of the term. My friend says we are going to put this money in the bank and keep it to the credit of the Receiver General, and will have progress certificates. He explained how it was to be dealt with. I come from the province of Alberta. That province guaranteed bonds on one of the lines of this company from Edmonton to Calgary. The money was placed to the credit of the provincial treasurer? It was to be paid out on progress certificates. But this I know, the records shows that in July, 1912, every dollar but one had been paid out—and the first train came into Calgary in February, 1914. That is your safeguard. What are you going to do here, if these men receive more money than they are entitled to? If the road was to be completed before the last dollar of the proceeds of guaranteed securities was paid out, how is it that there still remains so much uncompleted line and the money is all gone, for practically that is what it amounted to in the provinces? As far as the Dominion is concerned, these progress estimates indicate that the line is three-quarters completed, some have said two-thirds completed. I do lay down this principle of law, that no receiver or court would ever permit the organization which had brought about the chaos to have the money and to get a receiver's certificate. What are you going to do with this money? Are you going to pay the contractors? Are you going to pay the notes that are out? The notes of Mackenzie and Mann are out for equipment and cars. Are they going to be paid? I would like to know, and there are a lot of people in Canada who would like to know this. Some people say that this agreement means that that is a floating debt and will not be paid. Is that true? The Imperial Rolling Stock Company has the rolling stock, it has its brass tag on it. The bonds have been sold, the money has gone to the Canadian Northern railway and the people who built the equipment are looking to Bill and Dan for the money. That is putting it roughly, but that is the fact. Is this money to go for that purpose? Is it to go to pay the contractors or the sub-contractors? I understood my hon. friend to say that the sub-contractors would be paid, that the men who built the Canadian Northern Railway Ontario and the Canadian Northern Railway Quebec were to be paid for that work. Is this to be paid out of the $45,000,000? Then I find there are large sums for equipment. Is this equipment to be purchased by these men in any way they like and are they to be allowed to pay for the equipment on long term bonds or not Are they to be permitted to buy from the Imperial Rolling Stock Company in the same way? Are they to roll up obligations that some day will have to be met? I would like to know, you would like to know, Mr. Speaker, this House would like to know what are the safeguards as to what these men are to do and what we are to do. It is all right to say that you will put the money to the credit of the Receiver General. We all know that once you get that money in there the men running the road are the men who will create the obligations and, they creating the obligations, your business will be to pay. We know what history is on that point.

My third suggestion is: Eliminate Mackenzie and Mann from this road. That is very drastic you say. I say that if a contractor had charge of an enterprise and he ran it into difficulties and into an insolvent condition, you would not keep him on the job and pay him the money. I ask that these men be eliminated. I ask that this item, the whole $100,000,000, if you have arrived at that, be pooled in the hands of a trust company, that a man who has had experience in operating Government railroads in Australia or some other place, a man like Sir Thomas Tait be put in charge of that enterprise to operate it, because Mackenzie and Mann are no more operating officials than children on the street. They are contractors pure and simple. They have not the ability, the capacity, or the men about them to operate a railway. With two or three exceptions, they have no operating officials. I ask that these men be eliminated from the enterprise and that it be put in the hands of men who operate railroads and understand their operation, that the stock be put in the hands of a trust company and that we operate the road as a receiver until we ascertain where we are at and until the Government can determine whether or not it is wise, on behalf of the pople of Canada, to take this road over. I do not think that is an unreasonable thing to ask.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. R. B. BENNETT (resuming): When the House rose at six o'clock I was drawing attention to the fact that I had been diverted from the main portion of my argument by a discussion as to whether or not Mackenzie, Mann & Company, Limited, or the individual parties constituting that firm had been beneficiaries from this railway company. I had also asked what had become of the surplus earnings of this company as shown by their last annual report. The Solicitor General had directed attention tc the fact that he was privately advised that the report issued by this company was false. I am quite content to leave it at that, and let it be known to the country, and the shareholders in England who have invested largely in this company, that the reports issued from time to time over the signature of its president and third vice-president were absolutely and incontrovertibly false, and that a surplus which was said to be on hand was not on hand. It had been disbursed and not shown. The statements of that company should show what the disbursements are, and if the money has been disbursed and not shown, obviously those reports are untrue and misleading. I am content it should be said the reports are untrue and misleading, and that private information given to the members of this Government or a law officer of the Crown establishes that fact. I leave my hon.

friend the Solicitor General with that dilemma. There is another point to which I wish to direct attention, and which I think conclusively establishes the observation I have just made. If this House has before it the report of the Canadian Northern Railway Company for the year ending 1910, it will find published there a statement showing that among the securities which the company has acquired is $483,000 worth of Canadian Northern Prairie Lands Company stock. Obviously a company cannot be very hard up that goes out and invests in land company stock, and it is rather interesting to know just how the Canadian Northern Prairie Lands Company came into existence. We heard much last evening of the history of the land grants to the Canadian Northern railway. The hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Nickle) made that quite clear. But if any gentleman here is curious and will go to the department at Toronto he will find that on the 23rd March, 1910, the Canadian Northern Prairie Lands Company, Limited, filed a return showing that it had a capital of $5,000,000 in one million shares of $5 each, 300,000 shares of which had been subscribed for and allotted in payment of 500,000 acres of land, acquired out of the Canadian Northern subsidy lands. This company is referred to in the London Stock Exchange Year Book for 1914 under the proper heading, which indicates that there was one and a half million of capital stock issued to this company and that the 500,000 acres were acquired at $3 an acre. The report filed at Toronto states that the Canadian Northern Prairie Lands Company, Limited, was organized by a number of young men in the office of the general solicitor of the company, including Gowans, Lovell, Mitchell, Annesley and a few other employees.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Would the hon. gentleman oblige me by repeating what he said about me before I came in?

Mr. BENNETT: I would really like to oblige the hon. gentleman, but that is quite impossible.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is the hon. gentleman afraid to repeat it?

Mr. BENNETT: If the gramaphone of Mackenzie and Mann thinks that I consider that as other than as an insulting remark, he is mistaken. I should like him to understand that I am perfectly prepared that he should hear anything I have said, but obviously I cannot take up the time of the House in repeating something he did not hear. If he was not here it is not my fault, but if he thinks I fear to make any statement before him he misjudges his man. The statement I made was this: that among the assets of the Canadian Northern Railway Company there will be found to be $483,000 worth of Canadian Northern Prairie Lands Company stock.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I was not referring to that. I understand the hon. gentleman stated that I had said some report was false.

Mr. BENNETT: I made no such statement. I do not propose to be diverted from my argument again this evening, as is apparently the desire of the Solicitor General, but I am ready to answer any fair question he may ask. What I said was this: If the Canadian Northern Railway Company as a company over the signature of its president and its third vice-president states that it makes certain disbursements, and certain only, for a year, and that at the end of the year it had a surplus of $6,000,000 and now the Solicitor General comes in and says that he knows from private information furnished from private records—which nobody in this country will believe until they are verified by oath—that that surplus has been disbursed, which is not shown in the record over the signature of the president and third vice-president, I say that I prefer the record to the words whispered in the ear of the Solicitor General. I prefer to take the record sent to the shareholders in England who have invested their money in this company and it ill becomes a law officer of the Crown to throw discredit on that record.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not throw discredit on it; I believe it is true.

Mr. BENNETT: A report that does not show a disbursement that the hon. gentleman says was made, is untrue. What would the hon. gentleman think of his book-keeper whose accounts showed that at the end of the year he had a surplus of $1,000 and who said when asked to show that $1,000: I have made a disbursement of that money; and when asked to show the entry for the disbursement, said: I did not put it down in the books. I wonder how long he would keep that book-keeper in his employ.

I was pointing out that the report of the Canadian Northern Railway Company for 1910-1911 shows that the railway owns $483,393.55 worth of Canadian Northern Prairie Lands stock. The report says that the Canadian Northern Railway Company bought that stock. How much did it cost. I turn to the record on file at Toronto and I find that the par value of a share of that stock is $5. The land company got 500,000 acres of subsidy land in consideration of $1,500,000 fully paid up shares. But the shares did not go to the railway company. Who did get them? The names of at least some of the gentlemen interested in the Prairie Lands Company will remind the Solicitor General of his new-found friends. For instance, Brouse Mitchell, 1,000 shares; D. B. Hanna, 902 shares; A. J. Mitchell, 540 shares; L. W. Mitchell, 660 shares; W. H. Moore, 600 shares; G. G. Ruel, 500 shares; A. D. McRea, Winnipeg, 700 shares; Noel Marshall, 750 shares; A. J. Hills, 752 shares, Angus Sinclair, Parry Sound, 730 shares; Hugh Sutherland, Winnipeg, 902 shares; Mackenzie & Mann, 105,777 shares; Canadian Northern Railway, 38,986 shares. It is apparent from the records that the land company was incorporated on the 30th May, 1905. The report of the Canadian Northern Railway Company for the year ending 30th June, 1905, shows that it owned no stock in this land company. For the year ending 30th June, 1906, the report shows that it owned no stock in the land company. For the year ending 30th June, 1907, the report shows that it owned no stock in the land company. For the year ending 30th June, 1908, the report shows that the company owned stock in the land company of the value of $492,006.61. That report at page 8 shows that perpetual consolidated debenture stock of the par value of $2,000,000 was sold during the year and that the proceeds as far as received were applied to the general purposes of the railway 'and the purchase of securities of companies whose business is incidental to the traffic of the railway.' In the report for the year ending 30th June, 1909, the shares in the land company are shown to be valued at $483,393.55. For the years 1910 and 1911 the same. In the report filed at Toronto it is shown that at this period of time the Canadian Northern Railway Company held 38,986 shares. The par value of the shares is $5, which would show that the shares were worth at par $194,930. From the records it is clear that these shares were acquired at least three years after the incorporation of the land company and their apparent cost to the railway was over $12 per share. The railway company is hard up but it can afford to buy shares in the land company at $12, and from whom? Poor insolvent company, dependent upon the hand-out of the people of Canada! Yet for the purpose of enriching the coffers of Mackenzie, Mann and Company, they can their own shares at $12. I have the report of the Canadian Northern Prairie Lands Company, Limited, underneath my hand which shows that its shares are worth $13.70 apiece. A few years afterwards these shares were worth $13.70, having gone from $5, and the moment these men get hard up they sell to this rich Canadian Northern Railway Company 38,896 shares and get $483,000.

An hon. MEMBER: When was that?

Mr. BENNETT: On March 23, 1910. What did these shares cost Mackenzie and Mann? They were issued to them for what? They manipulated 500,000 acres at $3 an acre. The reports they put in show that the land they bought from themselves cost $3 an acre in addition to the 100,000 acres they took for themselves first for nothing. Then, when they are hard up, when money is a little tight, they say: We will go to the milch cow, the Canadian Northern Railway Company, and sell to them stock for $12.50 a share, and that company paid them, according to this report, $483,000. In the light of that transaction, which is proved to the hilt, will any man for a single moment believe that these wizards of finance handled all this money all these years for nothing, that the Imperial Rolling Stock Company handled $32,000,000 merely for the sake of drawing their cheques? Go to the people of the country and tell them that these noble patriots, these splendid philanthropists, handled $200,000,000 for nothing, just for the satisfaction of the thing, just for the sake of writing their names and signing their cheques, and ask them to believe such a story. We may presume upon the credulity of the people to a certain extent, but if there is any man so credulous as to believe that statement he is unworthy to direct the law operations of the Crown. Now I shall leave that transaction.

I wish to say a word more about the Canadian Northern Express Company. The chief railway commissioner reduced the rates of that company because they showed an operating surplus of $152,000. They had padded the accounts in order to make this showing in anticipation of a bond issue, and next year, when the surplus had been reduced to $48,000, Mr. Hanna said: That is all right. Certainly, if you pad your earnings up to $152,000 and then consent to a reduction to $48,000, you are easily satisfied. Then they tell us that these people made no money out of their telegraphs and they want the people of the country to believe it. These operations are all in line with the prairie land transaction —something for nothing; that is the motto, and the House and the country are asked to believe that these men handled these enormous sums of money day after day for nothing. It is the height of insanity to presume that the people of the country, with all their credulity, will, for a single moment, believe it. Now I have finished that phase of the matter.

These gentlemen, they say, are illy paid. They say that they have received nothing. They were contractors for the railway and they built it. At what price were they contractors? The Solicitor General says that they were not contractors in the proper sense of the term. Either they were or they were not. To whom were the cheques paid for the services rendered? They drew the subsidies and they received them in the capacity of contractors or they had no right to them at all. It follows that these people fixed the prices which they themselves would get for their work. I do not know as to this, but I will give the Solicitor General and this House the benefit of some information I have and it is that eminent engineers, who worked for them and who are no longer in their employ, tell me that the prices that were given for handling rock and earth on the line between Kamloops and Victoria were forty per cent more than people would have put them at if they had been asked to tender.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the hon. gentleman—

Mr. BENNETT: I will not be diverted from my argument by the impertinent interruptions of this young man. I listened to his speech and I listened to it with care.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. SPEAKER: The expression 'impertinent interruptions' is scarcely permissible in parliamentary debate.

Mr. BENNETT: If the use of the word 'impertinent' is unjustified I certainly withdraw it. But, having listened to the speech of the Solicitor General with care and having asked no questions, I do not propose that the thread of my argument, as is obviously his intention, shall be broken merely by the hon. gentleman standing in his place and repeating the record that he has received from the gramophone.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is official from the Department of Railways and Canals.

Mr. BENNETT: I know it is official from the Department of Railways and Canals, but one of the most eminent engineers in charge of this work wrote me and told me personally that the work cost 40 per cent more than it could have been done for by tender and contract. Name a single contractor who was asked to tender for this work. If tenders had been called for, this work would not have been in the position it is.

The same question arises too in connection with the marketing and sale of these securities. I do not care as to what may be the observation of somebody in the Railway Department; the Railway Department work on the theory that the total cost will be so much and that so much has been done. That may be true, but when it comes down to taking section after section I say, lay upon the table of the House the price per yard that was paid for that work, then ask for competitive bids and let the people of Canada say whether the prices were fair or not. It is stated that these two men, in their capacity of contractors, have taken from themselves in their capacity as owners sums of money from 25 to 40 per cent more than the amount for which the work could have been done. We have the right to know whether this is true or not. I demand an inquiry under oath that we may know. You may talk till kingdom come and you may say that somebody whispers this or that somebody tells you that, that the record shows this or the record shows that, but there is one record, the record that the people would like to have, and that is the record resulting from the opportunity of examining these men before a competent Canadian tribunal and finding out from them what the facts are. Since when has it been a crime to seek for information? Since when has it been a crime for people to want to know what the facts are? Since when are the facts to be regarded as statements made by one of the parties to the issue? Has it come to this, in this free country, that the men who are on trial are to be believed though not on oath and that nobody else is to have a chance to say anything? I prefer to take the attitude of a common layman, a highly cultured gentleman, the hon. member for Montreal, St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) who was much more guarded in his statements this afternoon. He considered the evidence and found the contractors Mackenzie and Mann 'guilty.'

I say to my hon. friend the Solicitor General, do not, in the enthusiasm of your desire to serve the Government, be carried away in the defence of men whose nefarious transactions have made this Dominion a byword and the trail of whose corruptions extends from Victoria to Halifax.

We have been told that the stock of this company had been reduced by $45,000,000, but I shall show this House that such a statement is obviously untrue and absolutely false according to the records which have been brought down. If you will turn to page 34 of the blue book which has been distributed you will find that the sum total of the capitalization of the Canadian Northern Railway Company and of its auxiliaries was $145,000,000 and of that $145,000,000 there is already resting in the treasury of the Canadian Northern Company over $45,000,000 leaving outstanding a sum total of capitalization for the Canadian Northern railway and its subsidiaries and allied companies of $100,000,000. Of that $100,000,000 you will observe that $77,000,000 is now issued stock of the Canadian Northern proper, so that as I have already said, $23,000,000 of new stock is to be issued to enable the parent company to acquire and hold in its treasury $23,000,000 of useless watered stock of subsidiary and allied companies.

Who would not make such a deal? Let us look at the value of the $145,000,000. I started with the Bay of Quinté railway, and I pointed out, according to Poor's Railway Manual—and I gave the page to you this afternoon and I will repeat it—at page 1657, that road has had a deficit and has not paid its fixed charges since 1908. Yet these men have the hardihood and the effrontery to come to this Parliament and say that part of the floating liabilities of the Canadian Northern system is this $173,114.58 of the Bay of Quinté Railway Company, which represents the sum total of its accumulated deficits. This stock, which is subject to foreclosure and to be absolutely wiped out because the road is in default and not paying its fixed charges, is exchanged for over a million dollars of Canadian Northern stock. The voice is the voice of the Government, but the hand is the hand of Zebulon. That is all I can say. It is so obvious, so plain that he who runs may read. The idea of saying that the stock of a company, which is in default under its securities, which may be foreclosed to-morrow and over which a receiver may be appointed, should be exchanged for over a million dollars of Canadian Northern stock is so absurd that it is surprising that a man would come to Parliament and ask any one to take it. Why? Because on the million dollars you ask the East and the West, and more particularly the West, to pay freight rates. If the evidence of Mr. Muller given before the Board of Railway Commissioners is correct, then that stock should earn $60,000 per annum, which means that that amount would have to be taken out of the farmers and grain growers of western Canada to pay interest as a fixed charge. Is it a reasonable thing to ask the people of Canada to pay $60,000 per annum on $1,395,000 of water in the Bay of Quinté railway, a railway which should be in the hands of a receiver and which has an accumulated deficit of $173,114.58?

We go to the next one—the Canadian Northern Alberta, at page 1673 of Poor's Railway Manual. You will see that the issued capital stock is $3,000,000. Did it cost one dollar? No; it cost the price of lithographing the plate and grinding it off on the printing press. As I said this afternoon of the authors of the Canadian Northern system: Your greed is the only limit to your wealth, if you have a printing press a contracting and a railway company. My hon. friend from Edmonton (Mr. Oliver), who has known what it was in times past to vote against his party, knows that we in the West will have to pay, according to the economic theories that now prevail upon that $3,000,000 for all time a minimum of six per cent or $180,000 each year. This water is exchanged now, par for par, dollar for dollar, for Canadian Northern stock.

Then we go to the next—the Canadian Northern Western Railway Company. My hon. friend from Edmonton will bear me out—my hon. friend from Lethbridge (Mr. Buchanan) knows that it was incorporated against our protest with a fictitious capital—a capital that represents all water. At the present time this railway company is building branch lines in the province of Alberta and has built a completed line to the Brazeau coal fields, which are controlled by a German syndicate and our friends Mackenzie and Mann. It is right and proper and fitting that these gentlemen should have interests in coal mines and other things as well. When this House was told that these men were being fairly compensated by common stock, because they had devoted their time and energies principally to the Canadian Northern railway, surely we overlooked the London Stock Exchange year book for 1914. There is nothing in which these gentlemen do not find scope for their activities or for the development of their splendid exploiting genius. As I said this afternoon, the fishes in the sea, the cattle on the hills, the timber on the plains, the splendid prairies, all pay toll to them, because whenever they saw something that seemed to be worth something, that would pay something; that it seemed possible to exploit with profit, these gentlemen were there for the purpose of exploiting it. I quote once more from the history of great railways to show the historical parallel:

'Year after year the interests of these men spread in many directions. They went into banking, politics, legislation, land-owning, navigation and newspapers; and with particularly unfortunate results to the public, went into street railroads. They increased their investments and power; and turned their profits made from one greedy enterprise into power to secure more greedy enterprises to gain more profits and more power.'

Those are not my words; they are the words of a great author describing conditions in the United States during and after the construction of the Central and Southern Pacific. Could words more aptly describe what has happened in this country?

Not content with putting the $3,000,000 of water into the Canadian Northern Alberta, they launched into the enterprise known as the Canadian Northern Western in connection with the Brazeau coal fields. They were able to induce this year, by that insidious lobbying to which I shall again refer before I resume my seat, the legislature of the province of Alberta to guarantee the bonds of the Canadian Northern Western Railway Company to the Brazeau coal fields for $25,000 per mile at four and a half per cent, a completed road, after the bonds of this road guaranteed by the Canadian Northern had not been sold. It is in this enterprise, provincial in its character, local in its nature, intended for one purpose alone, that I am asked to see the people of Canada become partners—and I protest.

We go to the next line—the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Company, dealt with in Poor's Railway Manual at page 1673. As this road is only in the construction stage, its inability to meet the fixed charges is what one might naturally expect; and during its construction, interest accounts are charged up against the proceeds of the bonds. Next year, when that road is completed, the fixed charges on it must be met. The Canadian Northern Ontario has a sweet story behind it. Let me tell you what the capital of that company was. According to Poor's Manual at page 1673, when this Parliament rose in 1912, the capital issued stock of the Canadian Northern Ontario was $250,000 of water. I will tell you how it was done: The directors of Mackenzie & Mann, Ltd., meet together as railway directors and say: We will give you all the stock and all the bonds, if you will build the road. Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann and Mr. Zebulon A. Lash said: We will make a little deal with ourselves as contractors, and you will have all the stock and all the bonds and all the monies if you will build the road. When you go to Parliament, there is no contract, you are merely financial agents, looking for money. So they issued the capital. Here is Poor's Railway Manual, page 1674, showing Canadian Northern Ontario's capital account in 1912 as $250,000, all paid up; but after last session, learning a lesson taught by the Parliament of Canada, they rushed to the printing press, and what do you think the capital is to-night—$10,000,000. They added only $9,750,000, because the owners of the printing press and the contracting company and the railway company—their greed being the only limit to their wealth—agreed to add $9,750,000 to the capital stock. Only $9,750,000 of the ocean let in—and Lake Superior still boundless and the sluice gates still to be opened. Mr. Speaker, for this $10,000,000 of water, my hon. friend the Solicitor General has reduced the stock of the Canadian Northern railway by giving them $10,000,000 for this stock. Six per cent on $10,000,000 is $600,000, the amount that the people of the prairies must pay every year in freight rates, in order to afford opportunity to show the matchless powers of the printing press when properly oiled and directed.

I proceed to the next company that is to be reduced in circumstances, the Canadian Northern Quebec Company. I turn to Poor's Manual for this year, page 1674, and I find that that beautiful aggregation has a deficit. Its capital in 1913 was $9,550,000. Last year it had a deficit of $189,136; the year before, a deficit of $124,336, and the year before that, a deficit of $268,963. And so, nearly $10,000,000 of stock with the deficits I have given is to be given life, force and vitality by exchange for $10,000,000 of Canadian Northern railway stock. The farmers of the West must earn $600,000 a year more to pay for the exchange. I find also that the Canadian Northern Quebec Railway Company has a floating liability of a million and a quarter —to be exact $1,250,490.67, representing the accumulated deficits of the road, and the people of Canada are to pay to get a chance to have more deficits. The people of Canada are asked to exchange that for Canadian Northern railway stock—and you are told you have reduced the stock.

Then we come to the next one—the Canadian Northern Railway Express Company, Limited. I do not know what it earned last year; I have not been honoured with a report. But I know that the Canadian Northern Transfer Company, the next company named belongs to the Canadian Northern Railway Express Company. Then, we come to the Canadian Northern Railway Steamships, Limited. The steamships are bonded for large sums and are capitalized for large sums, and my hon. friend says that they all belong to the Canadian Northern railway. Certainly, that was the intention at the start. He might make the capital stock $100,000,000 as well as what it is because no money passed. I do not know what these boats are worth, but I know what they were offered for. They were built for the Mediteranean trade, and I know that they were offered to two gentlemen who are known to me at very much less than the sum at which they stand upon the books. I assume that the price of boats has gone up in the meantime, and so we have an explanation as to the capital stock and the guaranteed securities. Of course, the boats are very much improved because they were built for the Mediteranean traffic and had to be changed for the Atlantic route—I wish to state that in fairness. Then we have the Canadian Northern Railway Telegraph Company, with which I have already dealt. The next is the Canadian Northern Railway System Terminals, Limited.

I do not know anything about that, except that its capital stock does not represent anything in money, it represents the splendid services that these gentlemen have rendered to the state—the state being, of course, the contracting firm of Mackenzie and Mann. Do not confuse the issue when you refer to these stocks and what the Government is going to do; the Government is not doing this for the benefit of individuals, but for the benefit of the state, but the trouble is that while we spell 'state' one way, these men spell it another. Then follow the Lake Superior Terminals Company, Limited, the Irondale, Bancroft and Ottawa Railway Company, the Halifax and South Western Railway Company. If you will take the trouble to refer to Poor's Manuel for this year, page 1748, you will find that the Halifax and South Western, unfortunately, has not been earning very much money. In fact, they showed last year a deficit of $54,000. Well, we in the West are not very particular. Add that company, at a capital, as I observe from the statement before me, of $1,000,000. That is not much. Just exchange that for the Canadian Northern railway stock and the people who will pay the freight rates and taxes would not be much bothered—and that is all about it. So goes another million—$60,000 a year in freight rates taken from the people is a mere bagatelle. The Irondale, Bancroft and Ottawa last year showed a small surplus—$3,000. Then we have the Minnesota and Ontario Bridge Company, and the Minnesota and Manitoba Railway Company. At page 1,669 of Poor you will find that that concern has a deficit—not a heavy one, of course, but it just happened to be a deficit. And the capital stock of that road, which hon. members will see from the statement amounted to a considerable sum, is to be handed to us to be exchanged for Canadian Northern stock. Then you have the Marmora Railway and Mining Company, the Mount Royal Tunnel and Terminal Company, Limited, the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway Company, whose deficit is only $152,000—we take them at par. Then there is the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railway and Steamship Company, with capital stock outstanding of only $201,000, which seems to be fairly reasonable having regard to the importance of the road—much less in proportion than the other companies. But, as a matter of fact the explanation is that they were a little late in getting their hands on it; they bought it as a road established, the stock of which had been issued. The Quebec and Lake St. John has $4,524,000 capital outstanding, some of its bonds are guaranteed by the Canadian Northern railway. Its deficits since 1911 are over $150,000. The fact that it is subject to the appointment of a receiver is a matter of supreme indifference. Then there is the St. Boniface and Western Land Company and the Winnipeg Land Company, Limited. But there is also the Northern Consolidated Holding Company. You gentlemen who read the daily press of Montreal will remember a prospectus published last year with regard to this company. It had the backing of the names of enterprising bankers in Boston and New York. The prospectus is a rather interesting document. I have a copy of it before me, but have not time to read it all. It is spoken of as one of the Mackenzie and Mann undertakings. I observed in the press yesterday or the day before, that this enterprise, is in a rather precarious position —and, in fact, they propose to appoint a receiver. Here is the prospectus that appeared in the Montreal papers last year, in which a well known brokerage firm offered the securities of this company for sale:

> The Canadian Northern Quebec railway, whose lines afford the Canadian Northern railway with access to Montreal and Quebec, and ultimately to the Maritime provinces, is one of the most important units of the system.
>
> The properties owned, controlled and dominated by the Canadian Northern railway form an estate so extensive that the outlines of this gigantic corporation can be but faintly comprehended and its future can only be visualized by the exercise of a considerable degree of imagination.

I should think that aptly described the situation. And we are taking that company, too, and of course we are doing a little something in the way of issuing stock for that. We are getting all these, and, in exchange, you are giving Canadian Northern railway stock, whose future the most brilliant flight of imagination can hardly picture.

I have dealt with the list of companies in the first and second schedule. For these things, and the present $77,000,000 of issued Canadian Northern capital there is to be issued $100,000,000 in Canadian Northern stock. How much of that is no good? How much of it is absolutely useless? Remembering, as I hope you do, Sir, that at the present time $45,000,000 of this water is held by the Canadian Northern, we propose to take the other $100,000,000 of these companies—I have pointed out that while all of it is watered, most of it is now useless—and we are going to put behind it the security of this great Dominion, the name of this great Dominion the name of the Crown in right of all the people of Canada, through a fourth mortgage, and give the stock strength, life and vitality. I venture to think that when the people of Canada understand that they will pause; I venture to think that the people whom I have the honour to represent, the people of western Canada, will hesitate; they will want to know what this $100,000,000 means, and I want to know. I am here only as trustee for the many thousand people whom I represent, and they demand of me what I mean by standing in Parliament and giving to $100,000,000 of water a value when it possesses none? I want the answer, but I am unable to get it.

So much for the $100,000,000; so much for the reduction in the capital stock. I challenge any man in this House, in the face of these documents and in the face of the reports published in Poor's Railroad Manual, to say that we have reduced the capital stock of the Canadian Northern. On the contrary, what we have done I have just described. Sessional paper No. 269 c, which I think, is not printed, shows that the floating debt of the Canadian Northern Railway Company and other allied companies amounts to over $10,000,000. The identities of these companies are to be preserved; their corporate existence is to be assured, but there is to be substituted for their stock—not, mark you, a substitution in the sense that there is to be an exchange, but the purchase price to be paid in respect of that stock by the treasury of the Canadian Northern railway is the difference between $77,000,000 and $100,000,000, $23,000,000. But that is not all. Did you ever hear tell of five per cent income charge convertible bonds? The genius of these men as financiers I do not desire to underestimate. There is no scheme known to the wit of man; there is no device that ever financial acumen knew of which they have not resorted to. I desire to pay tribute to the colossal brain and intellect that is behind it all: that there is not in this great Dominion a man with the intellect, the keen perception and the financial acumen of Mr. Z. A. Lash. But his great powers of intellect and mind and his great legal knowledge are used for this corporation's advancement at the expense of the people of this country. And that is his business, mark you, but his viewpoint is constantly the viewpoint of a man who acts for the company of which he is a director, for the interests which he serves and serves so well. He has been able to create schemes and systems that almost, but not quite, dazzle the intellect, confuse the mind and prevent their being understood. These five per cent convertible bonds that were issued from time to time amounted to $25,000,000. The first issue was $7,500,000; the second issue was $7,500,000 and the next was $10,000,000. When the first block was put on the London market, they sold at less than par. When the next block was put on the London market, they sold for less than par. When the last block was placed on the London market, by a clever system of financing indicated in a special letter which was sent to a syndicate of which the British Empire Trust Company was a part, of which Mr. Horne Payne is the managing director and of which Sir William Mackenzie is also a director; the British Empire Trust Company and a few men in high finance in London conceived the possibility of taking an option from the first upon this convertible stock in order that they might be able to sell it at more than par. And so, according to the prospectus I have under my hand under which these bonds were launched upon the London market, they were placed at 106 and the premium amounted to $600,000, of which $250,000 only found its way into the coffers of the Canadian Northern. At least, the report says so; perhaps everything is not told in the report, but it says that that is all the railways put in. They issued a prospectus in which they stated to the people who invested, that this road would soon be another Canadian Pacific and the English investors bought at 106 these convertible certificates, paying a premium of $600,000. When they issued the trust deed under which these bonds were secured, the capital stock of the company was only $55,000,000. I commend the attention of the House to this paragraph in exhibit No. 269a, the trust deed for the five per cent convertible stock. These are the words:

> And whereas the company represents that the capital stock of the company is now $70,000,000, divided into shares of common stock of $100 each, of which $55,000,000 has been issued and is outstanding and fully paid up.

$70,000,000 authorized, $55,000,000 outstanding and income certificates to be issued amounting to $15,000,000. It was necessary, as these were convertible, to put into the hands of the trustees $15,000,000 worth of stock. It is stated, as I pointed out, in the prospectus that as this company's stock in the first instance had not been increased and was only $55,000,000, it would be necessary to increase the capital to $70,000,000. They increased the capital; they put the $15,000,000 up and now they want us to do it over again, because in this agreement the right is reserved to this company to increase its capital to another $25,000,000. My friend the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) yesterday directed attention to that point. So not only was the capital increased from $55,000,000 to $70,000,000 between June 30, 1909, and June 30, 1910; not only was there $15,000,000 not issued on May 6, 1910, the date of the trust deed, but the $15,000,000 having been deposited for the purpose which I have stated, it looks to be an easy chance to do the people again, and so we take the right to add another $25,000,000 to the capital whereby the capital becomes $125,000,000 although, according to the trust deed, $15,000,000 of that has already been taken care of. But Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann say: oh, no, we did not take care of that; all we did was this: we put our stock up with the trustees only in the meantime and until the opportune time came to change it for treasury stock. Now is the opportune time, they say. Evidently they believe in the old doctrine: 'now is the appointed time.'

The hon. Solicitor General told us, as did other members who spoke on the subject, and as did the hon. member for St. Antoine, that we were going to get security upon these various debentures and stocks mentioned in the second part of the second schedule. Why, Sir, we have them now. The company has borrowed all the money it could upon them by debenture stock issues, and these are not redeemable. The stock is irredeemable and perpetual. Why fool us with stories like that?

Why tell us there is equity in something that is mortgaged for all time, perpetual, irredeemable? What does perpetual mean if not irredeemable, for all time? Can they talk about an equity of redemption in a perpetual stock? That is a contradiction of terms, an abuse of language. The fact is that the securities are held in perpetuity by the Trust company for the four per cent perpetual debenture stock and in the prospectus on which they were sold these words appeared:

> This stock is perpetual and irredeemable.

Then we pass on to the next point. The agreement has been said to involve absolutely a reduction of stock, and an improvement in our security. There is another thing said about this agreement that I should like to discuss. They say: We are getting forty per cent of the stock of this company and you should be satisfied; and we are going to get one director and a right to look at the books and make an inspection and as my hon. friend besides me says, to have a balance sheet. That is a large concession. According to my appreciation of the Railway Act, railway companies have to render balance sheets anyway, but perhaps I am mistaken. In the facts I have stated as to how this capital is made up, as to how it has been constituted, the people of this country want no such partnership as that for their guarantee. You ask me why. Well, the fact is that one director can do nothing but create trouble. Do you realize that on the railway in Quebec to which I referred the city of Quebec had the right to name a director and the Government has a director on the board of the Grand Trunk Pacific even as the old Government of Canada had on the Grand Trunk Board. I have heard of the enormous control exercised over the line. I have heard how he has cut down the cost of construction and reduced the cost of betterments! My hon. friend the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) will know what a stupendous power the Government director on the Grand Trunk Pacific was in connection with that enterprise. There is only one thing for us to do, we must not permit the men who have created this condition to control and dominate and operate this road. One director is to add insult to the injury that has already been done to the Canadian people. I do not want any man representing me, as one citizen of this country, to sit at the board of this company and become a recording machine for a brute majority. What power would he have? He would have the power to look at the books. According to my understanding of the law, any director may look at the books; and we have an absolute right, through the machinery of the Railway Act, to know about these things. The Government now says that we are going to have the right to look into the books, to inspect them, and to put a director on the board of an enterprise that has been cursed with incompetency in operation, with inefficiency in upkeep, that is not a railway in a proper sense of the term—and we are to become partners in that and have one man on the board and a look in at the books. Why, Sir, it is monstrous, absolutely.

You may say that any man can be destructive in criticism and ask me what I offer against that. That is a fair question.

9 p.m.

I offer this: I say that the stock of that company should not be in the hands either of the Government or of these men, that it should be in the hands of a trust company; and I would put a man in charge of the operation and completion of the construction of that road who was a railway man and not a contractor. Is it right that men occupying the dual capacity of owners and contractors should carry forward an enterprise on which they have brought disaster? I ask my hon. friend, would he do it in his business? Is there any man in this House who would do it in his own business? Would any reasonable business man in this House for a single moment entrust the administration of his estate and affairs to a man who had so mismanaged it as to bring about the crisis that now exists? The first thing you would do would be to remove the incompetent servant or manager. There is a man who left this country and with great distinction administered the Government railways in Australia; that was Sir Thomas Tait. I would get a man of that type to administer this road, to give us a report on its physical condition. Let us know where we are at before we start on this toboggan slide that will land us we know not where. Am I not reasonable? I ask you to apply to this matter those intelligent precepts of business that govern every man in his own affairs. I appeal to the business men on each side of the House, to the men of large affairs—and there are men sitting in this House who have administered the affairs of great and vast enterprises, men who have had to do with great business undertakings, men who are the directors and managing directors of vast industrial concerns. These men would not for a moment entrust an insolvent concern in the hands of the bankrupt who had brought about its insolvency. Would the courts? For five of the companies I have named are to-day in a position where a receiver could be appointed and the courts could intervene. These men come to the House and say: We have floating debts, we have liabilities which we cannot now readily discharge, but can discharge in a year. But in the meantime we are going to have these men in charge of our property, because we are making it ours, putting ourselves behind it. I ask this Government not to enter upon so perilous an enterprise, so hazardous an undertaking, an undertaking so fraught with disaster to the body politic, so dangerous to the generations that are yet unborn upon our western plains. Let us be trustees for posterity in the proper sense of the term. Let us care for the race that comes after us and not damn them and place them in a position where they cannot help themselves, in a position where they will have excessive fixed charges and heavy freight rates. I ask this House to consider, I ask this Government to pause and consider before entering upon this matter. I do not believe that the calm, astute, reasonable judgment of men of affairs would for a single moment direct them along that channel. The next distinctive feature referred to by my hon. friend this afternoon, and one which has been much relied upon by others, is the power of foreclosure. I wonder where the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Burnham) is who places such reliance upon this power. Let us look at it. May I ask you to turn your attention to sections 22, 23 and 24 of the proposed Bill. Let us carefully consider what they mean:

That upon the happening of any event of default and at any time or times while the same shall continue, it shall be lawful for the Governor in Council after such notice to the Canadian Northern as the Governor in Council may direct, to declare to be vacant the offices of the directors of the Canadian Northern, and to appoint a board or boards of directors in lieu thereof.

Is that foreclosure? Oh, no.

Mr. GERMAN: Semi-ready foreclosure.

Mr. BENNETT: It is not even semi-ready foreclosure. I know that if one man appreciates my position to-night, it is the hon. member for Welland. He knows what it is to stand up on his own side against his own party, and I hope the results will be no more disastrous to me than they were to him. That is not foreclosure, that is taking possession as a receiver. I want to make that clear. In other words the Governor in Council sits down and says: Under the advice of my ministers I wipe out the board of directors and appoint a new board which has supreme control over this system to operate and run it. That is a receivership after the money is spent. Just look at the folly of that provision, so far as we are concerned. If the company, or one of the subsidiary companies, makes default we may take possession. Did you observe from the returns I read that two of these companies have already made default for four years running? Therefore, it follows that the receivership is due to-night. We are going to do the nonsensical thing; provide for a contingency in order that these men may get their securities out of hock. That is what it amounts to, when stripped of everything. We are going to put $45,000,000 in their hands to spend and while they are spending it these roads may continue to run at a deficit. What assurance have you that these roads having made default for four years running are not going to continue to do so? The default then has arisen, the receivership is due to-night, but we are going to go through the formality in order that they may get their hands on the money, not in a literal sense you know, but in order that they may direct, order more rolling stock, make new contracts, build more roads at no profit! No, Sir, in order that the boundless ambition and greed of these men may be satisfied, that is all. Let us go a step further. The receivership being due and the receiver appointed, what is the next step? It has been sent broadcast throughout Canada that this railway can be taken possession of and these men put out of business. Here is something I want this House to please attend to. I beseech hon. gentlemen with all the power I have to look at clause 24:

That if authorized by the Parliament of Canada, the Governor in Council may on such terms and conditions (if any) as Parliament may prescribe, at any time while any event of default shall exist and be continuing, by order declare the equity of redemption of the Canadian Northern and of all other persons whomsoever in the mortgaged premises to be foreclosed, and thereupon the equity of redemption of the Canadian Northern (and of such other persons) in the mortgaged premises and every part thereof shall be and become absolutely barred and foreclosed.

They talk about the slow machinery of the courts, but look at this: 'That if authorized by the Parliament of Canada,' You have to come back to Parliament to foreclose. To foreclose what? About $60,000,000 of stock outstanding in the hands of Mackenzie and Mann. Our $40,000,000 is there too, and the $25,000,000 of convertible securities, which may not be converted, are also there. We are going to foreclose our interest, but we have to come back to Parliament to do it. Mr. Speaker, those loyal devoted Canadians who believe that democracy's mission is not fulfilled, and that popular government is upon trial, know what that means—a long protracted lobby as to how much we are going to pay to get rid of Mackenzie and Mann. Do not you think you see that lobby, do not you think you see that session of Parliament and the corridors black with the lobbyists moving to and fro, trying to see that the Government does not foreclose unless it pays this much or that much. Is that the way we are going to deal with this matter? What about your unpaid contractors then—and these men are still free to contract. What about the unpaid labourers then; and the unpaid equipment men? This company, and these men, are still free to run into debt, still free to create further obligations, to pledge the credit of the company, and they come to us when this Parliament is asked to authorize foreclosure—mark you, it says: 'that if authorized by the Parliament of Canada'—and they say: behold what we have done; you must not foreclose us unless you take care of this man, that man and the other; look what we have done; all we got was common stock; do not wipe us out without something; give us something; we are the champion mendicants of our day, peradventure, we starve if you do not give us something. That is absurd. Let me read once more from the book to which I have already referred. The chapter and verse are indifferent, but the sentiment is important. It is speaking of the lobby Huntington carried on. You know the United States guaranteed the bonds of Huntington's road at 6 per cent and he got a land grant besides. He went down to Congress for thirty odd years and carried on the finest lobby ever known in the world, barring, of course, the not feeble imitation we have had here in the last few years. This author says:

> The money cost, of course, was great, but as the cost was saddled directly upon the people, this was not a matter of importance to the company. It was equipped with funds to buy whatever was needed, and it had very active support in ways and from men that cost little or nothing.
>
> This at first seems strange, but on reflection will be found to be true and to represent a universal condition in this country. The railroad company took and still takes advantage of the following elements that exist in every community:
>
> 1. Men that can be fooled by party loyalty.
> 2. Men that are eager for political careers and know there is no chance except by serving the money power.
> 3. Merchants that can be controlled through their banks, or terrorized, or brought into line with rebates.
> 4. Men that believe the railroad company and all great corporations to be part of 'our set' and feel a class-conscious satisfaction in allying themselves against the rifraff and the ignorant rabble 'envious of us of the better orders.'
> 5. Men that are fooled by the purchased press.
> 6. Men that can be had for a pass or two.
>
> Beyond these remains the class that must be secured with money, including bosses, heelers, professional politicians, repeaters, colonizers, floaters, lodging-house keepers, the keepers of such dives and disorderly houses as cannot be controlled through the police, the saloon keepers that cannot be controlled through the breweries.
>
> All of these were fully utilized by the political department and secured for the railroad company through the control of the state legislature.

Now I ask that we think of those words when we are considering the provision of this Act which will lead to one of the greatest lobbies ever known. I have had some experience in the practice of my profession and it has been my privilege, sometimes my unhappy lot, to foreclose mortgages, and sometimes under trust deeds.

Sometimes I have gone to the courts, when an appearance has been entered in behalf of those who own the property. I have head a pitiable tale of repeated efforts and failures and the judge has been asked to fix a long time hence in order that there might be a redemption. Sometimes a delay of six months, sometimes twelve months and sometimes longer is given depending upon the ability with which counsel has presented his case or the pressure of circumstances. Here these gentleman are putting up a claim and we are the mortgagees in possession responsible more strictly than in any other capacity that possibly could be created. I need not say to any lawyer in this House that a mortgagee in possession is held to more strict account than any other man in the world. As receivers and mortgagees in possession we are to be asked in this Parliament to fix the terms of foreclosure and at the bar of the high court of Parliament these gentlemen cannot—will not—be heard in person. That is the insidious provision to which I have referred. That is the champion deceptive clause of this agreement.

But that is not all. During the course of my study of this matter I tried to ascertain what, thirty years ago, the Parliament of Canada did. My right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), with his forty years' experience, will remember what it did and it will be no new story that I repeat to him. But there are men who have had less experience in this Parliament and they will not remember the circumstances which occurred at that time. I refer to the position which was then taken by Parliament in relation to the assistance which was given to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to enable it to pay its floating debt of $7,500,000 and to meet other obligations to the amount in all of $30,000,000. There will be found in the records of the Library a letter of Sir George Stephen in which he said: 'I regret that we have not been able to sell our stock, although its dividends have been guaranteed by the Parliament of Canada for a term of years, but in the city of Montreal the directors of this company have put up their personal securities in order that the enterprise may be continued.' Is Sir William Mackenzie a less rich man than was Sir George Stephen? Are Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann less rich than Duncan McIntyre and Donald Smith of that day? There are men who say the richest man in Canada is Sir William Mackenzie. Why does he not lend something to his own enterprise? I commend this House to the consideration of that letter of Sir George Stephen, now Lord Mount-Stephen. What did this Parliament do then about foreclosure? Let us look at the sections of the Act. The arrangement with the Canadian Pacific railway will be found in the statutes of 1884, chapter 1. This is now nothing more perhaps than a reminiscence; but is known that the caucus of that day rejected the proposals of Sir John Macdonald in the first instance to aid the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, but later on a modified proposal met with the approval of the caucus and it was enacted into law. What does that statute provide with reference to foreclosure? It provides, first, by section 3, that the time for payment of certain obligations shall be extended; it authorizes a loan of $22,500,000; it provides for an immediate advance of $7,500,000 and it provides as security, under section 5, the following:

As security for the repayment of the said loan, with interest as aforesaid, and as additional security for the payment of the said sum of seven million three hundred and eighty thousand nine hundred and twelve dollars and interest, falling due on the seventh day of November, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-eight, the Government shall have a first lien and charge upon the entire property of the company, real and personal, now owned or hereafter to be acquired or owned by them, including their main line of railway, the extensions thereof, their branch lines of railway, the whole of their equipment, rolling stock and plant and all their steamers and vessels, and also upon the land grant of the company, earned and to be hereafter earned; saving always, however, the rights of the holders of the existing mortgages on the extensions of the line of the railway from Callander to Brockville and Montreal, as security for the unpaid balances of the purchase money of the lines constituting the said extensions, and subject to the mortgage upon the land grant, executed by the company to secure their issue of land grant bonds; and the Government shall continue to hold and retain the entire amount of land grant bonds now in its custody or possession, subject to redemption under the terms of the said land grant mortgage, and with all remedies as to interest, voting power and all other matters in respect thereof, which would be held or possessed, or could be exercised by any purchaser of the said bonds; and all moneys received by the Government from the trustees of the land grant bonds in redemption of such bonds shall be applied as follows, that is to say:

There follows a statement as to what is to be done. Then, they are to build the line within a certain time and here is the section providing for the default, subsection 2 of section 6:

That upon default for twelve months in the payment of any half-yearly instalment of interest upon the said loan, or any part thereof, or of interest upon the said sum of seven million three hundred and eight thousand nine hundred and twelve dollars, or any part thereof, or in the payment of the principal of either of the said sums or any part of either of them when the same shall become due, in accordance with the provisions hereof, the right of the company under their contract hereinbefore mentioned, to demand or receive any further cash or land subsidy shall cease and determine, and the said railway and extensions thereof, branches, equipment, rolling stock, plant, including steamers, and all lands and property of the company and all land grant bonds then in the possession of the Government—

Remember the Government was then holding land grant bonds of the Company which could not be sold.

—shall vest in Her Majesty, and shall forthwith, thereupon, be taken possession of by the Minister of Railways and Canals, on behalf of the Government of Canada; and each and every employee of the company shall, from and after the expiry of the said period of twelve months, become and be the employee of the Government during pleasure, and shall hold and possess any matter or thing apertaining to the said company then in his custody, as and for the Government; and the rates of interest, and the terms of payment, hereby fixed, shall not be disturbed or altered by the terms of such agreement.

Then it goes on further:

The said company is hereby authorized to execute an agreement of the nature and purport hereinbefore provided for, and to charge its entire property and assets, in manner and form as hereinbefore described; and in such agreement to agree upon such further and other conditions as the Government may prescribe; provided, that authority to the board of directors of the company to accept the provisions of this Act and to execute an agreement containing the charges upon the said railway and property and the other conditions required or authorized by this Act, shall be granted by the shareholders of the company, either by a resolution passed at a special general meeting of such shareholders called for the purpose, by a vote of at least two-thirds in value of such of the shareholders as shall be present or represented at such meeting, or by an instrument or instruments executed by at least two-thirds in value of the whole of the shareholders of the company, in person or represented by their attorneys or proxies, respectively, duly authorized in that behalf.

What does that mean ? That means that the shareholders agreed that their interest in the property as shareholders must, and should be, lost, if they failed as shareholders to make good the conditions mentioned in the statute. What have we here? —not any such thing as immediate foreclosure, and not any agreement by the shareholders by which their stocks may be forfeited. But having regard to the decisions of the Privy Council in cases that came from the province of Nova Scotia, it has been clearly and definitely stated and laid down that, unless the Crown states positively beyond question that it intends to destroy that which belongs to the private individual, as far as possible it shall not be destroyed without adequate compensation. This $60,000,000 of stock, that may be scattered broadcast throughout the world, will stand at the door of Parliament and say: We paid eighty cents on the dollar for it when we bought it. It is true there is a statute, but we did not know about the statute; and because we did not know, we ask Parliament to listen to the greatest lobbying of our time and to postpone foreclosure until Parliament has passed and settled the terms. I ask the Government to adopt the terms of the Canadian Pacific statute and I say: If you are going on with this, then do not let Parliament again be disgraced by that which is referred to, in the history of the Huntingdon lobby, as the worst of its time. I am weary and sad to see the men who wander around and threaten and cajole and coax, and sometimes do one thing and sometimes another, in order to get us to do what they want. We are not here to discharge a public trust for this set of men or for any other set of men that may ever arise; and when we say that these men ought to be foreclosed, I ask that they be foreclosed as it is provided that the Canadian Pacific railway may be foreclosed, namely, by a contract arranged between the shareholders and the Crown, by which the shareholders will say that, if default be made, the stock will be wiped out. Do not let us wait a year and permit this thing to happen. If you must do this thing, please do it at least in the manner I have mentioned—my hon. friend from St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) says if they make default, then the axe will fall. It is not the axe; it was only the invitation that will be sent out—the invitation to an execution that might never take place; that might be postponed, and, after all, instead of being an execution, might turn into a wedding.

One word more in relation to the question of interchanging traffic. Great credit was taken by the Administration because it said: We are going to have an interchange of traffic—and the statement did not contain the words 'as far as possible.' I was taught to believe, in the school of law in which I had my training, that 'as far as possible' was always understood; and, if you are going to say that a man who ships his goods cannot choose the route by which he is going to ship them, something new has happened in Canada. It surely is not contended by this Parliament that a man who ships his goods from Calgary cannot say: I am going to ship them via lake and rail, or via so-and-so or so-and-so. Surely it is not contended that you are going arbitrarily to say to every shipper in Canada: You must make a contract to ship your goods by such and such a railroad. If a shipper sees fit to choose a certain route, why, of course, by the Railway Act, he has the right to do so. I suppose you are going to amend the Railway Act and declare that hereafter no shipper, at any point served by the Canadian Northern, will have the right to choose the route by which he shall ship his goods after they reach a point which may be served by one of the roads in the agreement. That is all there is in it, and I leave the matter for the consideration of the House.

The question that is of vital importance to our country is the duplication of existing transportation facilities. I hold in my hand the judgment of the Board of Railway Commissioners in the western freight rates case. Might I offer this suggestion to the Government, that they have this document printed and distributed to every member of this Parliament, because, while there may be on the board men who differ from me, I would like to say this for the board, that it has expended an amount of industry and care and patience and attention to the details of the transportation problem that will astound those who take the trouble to read through their report. I find on looking at this report that Mr. Drayton, at great length, at pages 53, 54 and 55, deals with the question of transportation facilities in Alberta and Saskatchewan, and alludes to the need for facilities that will serve the territory within ten miles of either side of the railways. He finally turns to the consideration raised by Mr. Muller, the expert, and points out that the real difficulty that has to be met is the question of the duplication of transportation facilities. At pages 54, 55, 56 and 60 he deals with the whole question, and finally concludes as follows at page 67:

> For the reasons already pointed out, the board does not pass any opinion as to how much of the duplication shown was or was not necessary. The criticism of Mr. Pitblado, however, is at least in part well founded, and the necessity for a business control by the Government which will prevent the unnecessary duplication of transportation facilities in the future as urged by Mr. Bicknell, is established.

There I rest again. No provision in that regard has been made in this agreement. These men may continue, as they have been doing in days gone by, to push work out here and there, to get the bonds guaranteed, the bonds sold, the proceeds paid into the bank, and year after year no facilities created, year after year the time gone by and no road built. They give us facilities that parallel existing ones, and give the people no better transportation opportunities, because there can be no lessening of the rates, they being fixed by the Railway Commission. Where rates are fixed by the Railway Commission and are uniform, the duplication of existing transportation facilities is one of the worst grievances the people of the West have to contend against. I ask: Has any man looked into the transportation problem of western Canada in the light of existing conditions? You have the Grand Trunk Pacific railway, built to a standard never before seen on this continent, with eighty pound steel rails, with splendid grades and easy curves, a great artery capable of handling great traffic, but with few branch lines. Then you have the branch lines of the Canadian Northern scattered here and there, that might be made tributary to a great artery; and by some working agreement between these two systems, you might prevent the duplication of existing lines and offer to the people some effective transportation facilities. There is the opportunity. This $45,000,000 that we talk about so glibly to-day, wit h the present cost of transportation, would give to western Canada thousands of miles of cheap roads. What we want is branch lines—surface roads, if you will—cheap feeders to great arteries, in order that the traffic of this country may be carried to the seaboard at a small cost. Mr. Drayton, in the judgment to which I have referred, points out that the cost to the farmer of getting his product to the railway is what destroys his profit. He points out that the cost is enormous—20 cents a bushel in some instances, more than that in others. You will find it all dealt with at length between pages 50 and 60 of the judgment. It shows what is demanded is transportation facilities within ten miles of the farmer that will enable him to get his crop to the market, whether it be cattle, or pigs, or butter, or eggs, or dairy produce, or wheat, or whatever it may be, so that he may be afforded the opportunity of getting the products of the soil and the produce of his toil carried to the markets of the world cheaply. This is what the West demands. This is what the Canadian Northern has failed to do. Its promoters have given vague promises—promises that have not been kept. They have made promises marked in black upon maps, which were calculated to mislead and which did mislead intending settlers.

North of the city of Edmonton there is a great fertile empire that is now being developed; and if the facilities now under construction are completed, there is a duplication, and the money so expended will not be used in giving to other sections of that vast empire the facilities that it so much requires and demands. That is the case in the province of Alberta and in the province of Saskatchewan, perhaps less so in the province of Manitoba; but what we require and demand is some policy of vigorous construction that will make possible the bringing of transporation facilities to the men who are building this empire.

That is what we demand, that is what we require. This partnership will not do. Since when did the loyalty of this country, since when did the intelligence of this country, permit the Crown to enter into partnership with men guilty of the misrepresentation of which we were the victims last session and which I have mentioned. Something was said of national disgrace. Certainly, it would be a national disgrace for the Crown to enter into partnership with the men from whom we have obtained $7,000,000 of watered stock ground out by the printing press. That was taken at two hundred cents on the dollar. It had a high value last year. This year, of course, the price is less. We get the $33,000,000 more and are giving a guarantee to pay $45,000,000 and putting ourselves behind over $200,000,000 besides. I guess the stock is going down, or up—but nobody can tell unless it were a receiver or mortgagee in possession. But are we warranted in going into such partnership? I say, nay.

In conclusion:

1. We have been in times past the victims of base deception;

2. The reports published abroad by this company of its undertakings, its payments and receipts are apparently untrue, because the payments alleged are not shown to have been made, and moneys claimed to be on hand are now said not to be there.

3. The stocks of the companies it is proposed to bring into this system are in many cases already partially held by the Canadian Northern railway, and the securities are now held in their entirety. These things are plain and obvious.

4. By the alleged reduction of capital, it is proposed to give life and vitality so far as can be given to water by this legislative action—to exchange stock that has no value for that which, according to the eminent authority whom we heard last evening will shortly reach par value. Imagine, for instance, $1,395,000 par value of Bay of Quinté stock being exchanged for shares of an equal value in the Canadian Northern railway to be, in a few years, worth par!

5. We become mortgagee, receivers in possession, without any adequate provision for immediate foreclosure.

5. We become mortgagee-receivers in the people of the West will secure better or cheaper transportation facilities.

7. And lastly, it means a partnership which, for the reasons I have given, we cannot tolerate.

Then, you say, what do you offer in place of this arrangement? I answer at once: Instead of what is here proposed, first, the stock of this company should be vested in a trust company. Second, these men should be removed from their position of direction of an enterprise they have made insolvent. Third, a statute should be passed to enable the Governor in Council to advance money to pay the artisans, the contractors, the equipment builders—the men whose money and labour are in the enterprise and to subrogate us to the rights they have against the men with whom they have contracted—the Mackenzie and Mann Company, Limited.

Then, I ask that we should make the fullest possible inquiry as to the condition of this road. There is a difference of opinion on that subject. The enterprise of these men may be surrounded with the halo which was pictured for us this afternoon. They may be the most slandered men in the world; they may be angels in disguise. They are said to be poor men who left their native towns with little and are now worth millions; and it may be that these millions came to them even as the manna came from Heaven. It may be that this represents their honest toil as railway contractors to which for eighteen years they have given their time. This may all be. If so there are no men so much interested in having it known as they. And it is necessary that the people of this country should know and understand, for we are to put ourselves as fourth mortgagees behind an enterprise of waterlogged securities and watered stock, and we demand that we should know what the end will be before we enter upon an undertaking so vast, a policy so hazardous.

But more—and with this I conclude. We ask that an opportunity be given to those who toil to get the produce of their land, the product of their toil, to the market at the least expense. My hon. friend from Kingston gave me great joy as he spoke last evening of the wants of the West and of the bond which lies between the East and the West. I ventured, at various Canadian clubs in this eastern country when first I came here, to point out some of the grievances, or alleged grievances, under which the people of the West labour. They complain of many things, but nothing strikes them so hard, nothing pinches them so cruelly, as undue railway tolls—the twenty cents a bushel that must go to get the crop to the railway on which there is but little profit. Nothing makes them more disconsolate, more unsettled and more discontented, than to think that the produce of their lands and their hands has gone merely to carry that produce to where it may be sold. We hope to develop the West. I am an optimist; and I believe that in the West we have the greatest land under the British Crown potentially. But it requires strong hands, vigorous minds, great enthusiasm, much optimism, the expenditure of Capital, and beyond all that, a common feeling for a United Canada, to build in that West a great land. That is not going to be done rapidly; our population is not so easily to be assimilated. Here to-night upon this issue rests largely the future of the West. When they tell me what this road is going to earn, I refer to the figures, and I have under my hand a volume on the earning power of railways. Neither Mr. Hanna nor anybody else can tell me that they are going to earn fixed charges with the traffic that it will be possible for them to develop. They know it, I know it, the country knows it. Shall we, then, take this road and operate it as a Government enterprise? I cannot say until we have had a report and physical valuation. The people of the United States have found that freight rates must be based on physical valuation—that water has no value. That physical valuation will show what the property is worth. The long ten-years' struggle in the United States came to an end last year, and the Inter-State Commerce Commission commenced its labour of physically valuing every road in the United States, and on that valuation they will base the freight rates of the country. Let us begin right. We are putting upon the people of western Canada especially a burden. Let us pause before we go forward lest it be said of us that we have made progress too swift and have not considered the end from the beginning. They are the statesmen, who in public affairs forecast every phase of a proposed policy and understand what it means. It is for us to look at this enterprise in that way, and not to be deterred from our duty because the action which that duty lays upon us seems temporarily unpopular.

Sir, I have to thank the members of this House for the patience with which they have listened to me. There are many other matters I should like to have said but I shall be able to deal with them on the second reading. One word, and this is my final one. In this city recently we have had a visit from a great English poet. What this poet said with regard to empire builders seems to me to be strictly applicable to this situation in view of the contention that has from time to time been heralded abroad that we should be generous to Mackenzie and Mann as empire builders:

Who are the Empire-builders?
  They whose desperate arrogance demands
A self-reflecting power to sway
  A hundred little selfless lands?
Lord God of battle, ere we bow
  To these and to their soulless lust,
Let fall thy thunders on us now
  And strike us equal to the dust.

Leaders unknown of hopes forlorn
  Go past us in the daily mart
With many a shadowy crown of thorn
  And many a kingly broken heart;
Though England's banner overhead
  Ever the secret signal flew,
We only see its cross is red
  As children see the skies are blue.

For all are Empire-builders here
  Whose hearts are true to Heaven and home
And, year by slow revolving year,
  Fulfil the duties as they come;
So simple seems the task, and yet
  Many for this are crucified;
Aye, and their brother-men forget
  The simple wounds in palm and side.

But he that to his home is true,
  Where'ere the tides of power may flow,
Has built a Kingdom great and new
  Which time nor fate shall overthrow.

These are the Empire-builders, these
  Annex where none shall say them nay,
Beyond the world's uncharted seas,
  Realms that can never pass away.

On behalf of these true and real empire builders who have made the West what it is, and who have done something to make this Canada what it is, I give voice to a protest against the measure that has now been submitted for the consideration of this Parliament.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Edmonton): I think that the hon. member who has just sat down is entitled to be congratulated on the independence of spirit which he has shown and the House is indebted to him for the study which he has given to the very important subject that is now under discussion. I am not altogether able to agree with the view that he expressed in the beginning of his remarks, however, that this Canadian Northern enterprise was beyond the scope and necessities of the Dominion of Canada. He strongly took the ground that Canada is not big enough for three transcontinental railways. I will admit that, but we want three transcontinental railways to make Canada bigger; we think that is one of the ways by which Canada's greatness may be advanced. As to the possibilities, let me point out that there are to-day three railways from Chicago by way of St. Paul to Puget Sound passing through a territory absolutely similar to that in our country between Winnipeg and the coast, absolutely similar and of like extent, and that these three railways find great business, large traffic and satisfactory profits from the carrying of freight and passengers through the tier of states that lie alongside the Canadian boundary.

Mr. BORDEN: What are the roads to which my hon. friend refers?

Mr. OLIVER: The Northern Pacific, the Great Northern and the Chicago, Milwaukee and Puget Sound. I say that what has been done south of the boundary can be done north of the boundary, and that what has been necessary south of the boundary is or will be necessary north of the boundary. I note that when the right hon. Prime Minister was making his presentation of this case he took occasion to remind the House that it was the Liberal Government, by their action in 1911, that committed Canada to the Canadian Northern system as a transcontinental enterprise. I think I saw in the allusion something more than the desire to give credit to the late Liberal Government. I am rather of the view that the right hon. Prime Minister was laying the foundation for the argument that such difficulties as surround the Government of the day in dealing with the Canadian Northern are measurably due to the late Government, and that for them the present Government is not entirely responsible. For what the late Government did the late Government must assume the responsibility, and I believe the members of that Government are entirely willing to assume full responsibility for everything that they did in connection with this Canadian Northern enterprise, as well as with regard to other matters. But while they are prepared to assume full responsibility for what they did, let there be a sharp distinction drawn between what they did and what they did not do: between the responsibilities of the late Government and the responsibilities of the present Government, which began in the fall of 1911, two and a half years ago. It is true that the Liberal Government gave important aid to the schemes of railway transportation that now constitute the Canadian Northern system, and it is true that in the year 1911, when they made provision by guarantee for connection of the eastern with the western sections of that system, they did use the argument that a transcontinental system was desirable. But let me point this out: that while they said then, and I say now, that a third transcontinental railway system such as that undertaken by the Canadian Northern is an ultimate necessity for this Dominion of Canada, it does not by any means follow that it was then or is now an immediate or pressing necessity. Let me make my point clear. The Canadian Northern, as the House has already been informed, had its inception in the province of Manitoba as a local project. It was then extended to connect the province of Manitoba with lake Superior. That having been done, a guarantee was given by the Liberal Government to enable the company to extend its lines from Grandview, in Manitoba, to Edmonton, and from the Manitoba boundary to Prince Albert, a guarantee of $13,000 a mile for the respective distances, some six hundred miles in one case and two hundred miles in the other. These lines were built. Following upon their construction the provincial Governments of Saskatchewan and Alberta saw fit to make provision for extensions of branch lines from the main line for the accommodation of the people of those provinces, for their greater development, and for the benefit and welfare of the Dominion of Canada. A great transportation system was built up in those western provinces, extending from lake Superior practically to the Rocky mountains, on the joint responsibility of the Dominion and of the three prairie provinces. At the same time enterprises were entered upon in the eastern provinces by the Canadian Northern Railway Company, and by 1911 railroad connections had been established under control of the Canadian Northern railway between the cities of Quebec, Montreal and Ottawa, and between Toronto and Sudbury. For reasons that have been given to the House, it seemed to the Government of that day desirable that the important commercial and industrial centres of eastern Canada touched by the Canadian Northern railway should be directly connected with the system of the same company operating in the three prairie provinces, so that, on the one hand, that system operating in the prairie provinces would have independent and competitive access to the eastern seaboard and the eastern commercial centres, and, on the other hand, that these commercial centres should have direct, independent and competitive access to the prairie West. That action by the Liberal Government of that day has been condemned by the Solicitor General. As a member of that Government, I have no apology to offer for the action that was taken, for the purpose of the action or for its result. It was a necessity of the case arising out of conditions as they had been created. It was essentially for the welfare of eastern and western Canada, and to bind eastern and western Canada in a common interest as they could not have been so thoroughly bound without it. It may have been that the enterprise could have been delayed for a year or two years, but, at any rate, under the conditions as they then were, that part of the project was favoured by the late Government, and to-day the rails are connected between Toronto and Winnipeg, and are within measurable distance of being connected between Montreal and Winnipeg. Had the enterprise been confined to the area between the city of Quebec and the foot of the Rocky mountains, as it was confined so far as the assistance given by the late Liberal Government is concerned, there would not have been facing this Government and this country to-day that condition which has been characterized here as a railroad, as a financial, and, as it may develop, possibly a political crisis.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No danger of that.

Mr. OLIVER: While we give this company all credit for enterprise it is possible for this or any other company to be enterprising beyond the limits of good business, and it is perfectly clear to-day that it is owing to the fact that this company undertook to establish its connection from the prairies to the Pacific ocean before it had established and built up a profitable connection between the prairies and the eastern seaboard that the difficulties of this company and of this Government have arisen and for that condition this Government must take its full share of responsibility. When Mackenzie and Mann or the Canadian Northern Railway came to the late Government and said: We want to have a transcontinental line, we want to build through British Columbia, we have the guarantee of the British Columbia Government, and we want assistance from you to enable us to complete our line through British Columbia to the Pacific coast, they were specifically and definitely refused that assistance, and until the present Government came into power their expenditures upon that part of the project were of a minor character. But as soon as this Government came into power, the first session of Parliament saw a demand by the Canadian Northern Railway for $6,000,000 to be used in building from the Yellowhead Pass to Vancouver, and it was given to them without a question, without a condition of any kind. It was this Government that committed the people of Canada to the building of that part of the transcontinental line prematurely and because of that commitment, for which this Government must take the responsibility, the Canadian Northern railway and the Government and the country find themselves in difficulties to-day. Up to the present time there has been expended, according to the return, a matter of some thirty odd million dollars upon that section of the road. It still calls for an expenditure of $23,000,000 to complete, a matter of approximately $60,000,000 required for the British Columbia section of this enterprise. All that the company requires to borrow, so it says, is $45,000,000. If it had not undertaken to carry that load of the extension through British Columbia before the time was ripe, this difficulty would not have arisen. For this difficulty the Government must take the full responsibility and cannot lay any portion of it upon the late Government.

10 p.m.

I do not wish to weary the House by traversing the terms of the resolutions, as they have already been dealt with so fully, but I do say that when a serious financial situation came up for consideration, when the credit of the country and its welfare were seriously concerned, when the matter had to come before Parliament, it was a most unfortunate thing that there should have been sent broadcast throughout the country, upon the stated authority of this Government, an absolute misrepresentation of the facts in regard to the resolutions to be submitted to the House. It is most unfortunate that this should have taken place. The night the resolutions were brought down there was put upon the wires—it must be presumed with the authority of the Government—a series of statements in regard to these resolutions that are not borne out by the facts. There was a statement that $15,000,000 worth of the stock of the Canadian Northern was to be placed in trust to become the property of the Government in order to give them control of the stock of the company in case of default. There is no such provision in the resolutions.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That was in the Liberal press.

Mr. OLIVER: The Conservative press. That statement was made in an editorial of the Ottawa Journal this week.

Mr. MEIGHEN: You put too much stock in the Liberal press.

Mr. OLIVER: I do not wish to get entangled in an argument with my hon. friend, but that is a childish suggestion. This statement went on the Associated Press wires, and it went out, I take it, on the authority of the Solicitor General.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think I can be excused for interrupting now. It did not go out with my authority, either directly or indirectly. I never heard of it until I read it in the newspapers, nor do I think it went out on the authority of any member of the Government.

Mr. BORDEN: I desire to say that so far as I am aware no such statement was put out on behalf of the Government, or by any member of the Government.

Mr. OLIVER: It is a fact that it went out. My hon. friends have seen it, and up to this moment they have never seen fit to contradict the statement and to put the public right in regard to the facts.

Mr. FOWLER: The resolution contradicts it.

Mr. OLIVER: The public have not had the benefit of seeing the resolutions in the press. It is a most unfortunate thing, I repeat, that this rank misrepresentation should have been sent out in regard to this very important matter. I make this allusion for the purpose of bringing the point home, that when our friends opposite find they are criticised in regard to the subject matter of these resolutions for not having acted, apparently, in good faith they must blame themselves, or their friends, because they have already prejudiced the court of public opinion against them.

The particular feature that I wish to bring to the attention of the House, however, in connection with these resolutions is following up certain questions that I placed before the Prime Minister some days ago. I had hoped that he would make some allusion to those questions in his address, but he did not do so.

Mr. BORDEN: I may say that I was not quite clear as to the exact meaning of at least one of the questions, and it was not through any lack of courtesy that I did not allude to them yesterday, but merely with the view that I could perhaps give my hon. friend more satisfactory answers when we are in committee than I could in the course of my address.

Mr. OLIVER: I am not finding any fault at all; I am merely stating the facts.

Mr. BORDEN: I propose to give that information when we are in committee.

Mr. OLIVER: I desired to have the information as a basis for the views I had to place place before the House in regard to the resolutions. However, this is the aspect of the question to which I wish to draw special attention, and which, except for a side remark by the Solicitor General, has not been dealt with in any way in the discussion up to date. I have already said that the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan, and other provinces, have joined with the Dominion Government in carrying forward the Canadian Northern railway enterprise by guaranteeing the bonds of branch lines. This is a matter of intense importance to the people of those provinces and to their governments. I need not spend time in explaining the situation. We have there a vast area of country into which population rushed at a most unprecedented rate. Those settlers scattered all over the great provinces, were in absolute need of railroad communication. Although the responsibility for providing that railroad communication properly rested upon the Dominion Government, the Dominion Government felt that it was doing all that it was warranted to do in providing the main lines of the Canadian Northern and the Grand Trunk Pacific, and the provincial governments therefore either had to take measures to provide further railroad communication, or settlement in those provinces would have come to a standstill or retrogressed. For good and sufficient reasons, those provinces have guaranteed the bonds of branch lines of the Canadian Northern to the extent of many millions of dollars, and of many hundreds of miles of railway. I am interested in knowing on behalf of those provinces what part the interests, there existing, are to have in the project under the impetus given to it by the proposed guarantee. In the province of Alberta some 1,400 miles of line have been guaranteed. The guarantees amount to about $22,000,000. Some 500 miles have been constructed, some 200 miles are under construction and some 400 or 500 miles still remain guaranteed but to be constructed. I am a member of the Parliament of Canada and I am called upon to vote to give the Canadian Northern Railway Company a guarantee of $45,000,000. It is, of course, interesting to me what the security is going to be, what the terms are going to be, but it is very much more interesting to me to know how far, and to what extent, the completion of the branch line enterprise, undertaken in the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan, is going to be promoted by the vote I give. If I am to vote $45,000,000 to the Canadian Northern Railway Company and if the people I represent are to be left without the railway communication that they have been expecting to get from the Canadian Northern Railway Company, I will not be here in the next Parliament; that can be taken for granted. I want to know very definitely, for my own information, but still more in the interests of these provincial governments, how far this proposed aid is going to promote the railway enterprises in these provinces which these provinces have guaranteed and whose completion is an absolute necessity for the further development of these provinces and for the welfare of the people already occupying the land. Men who are from the West know perfectly well that when a line has been laid out, a guarantee given and a part of the line constructed, people have occupied the country for the whole length of the proposed line in the full confidence and expectation that the line would be completed. Work on a number of these lines has been at a standstill during the last two summers. The people have been told: the company is hard up, they cannot raise the money, you cannot get the line. But if the company is going to get $45,000,000 at the hands of this Government, the people will want to know why these lines are not completed; and that is what I want to know from the Government.

An hon. MEMBER: They will not build branch lines with that.

Mr. OLIVER: Then, if they do not, I certainly would say that they cannot have my vote for the loan.

Mr. HANNA: Your view is very sectional.

Mr. OLIVER: Well, I will have to stand the criticism. I was elected to represent the people in the part of the country from which I come and I am bound to represent them in this House. I was under the impression that that was what Parliament was for. However, I will have to accept the criticism.

There is another question I want to discuss with the Government in this connection. I notice that the resolutions make provision that a very considerable amount of money that is owing by the Canadian Northern Railway Company is not to be paid out of this $45,000,000. I have listened to the discussion and I must say that I view the matter from a different angle from that from which it is viewed by some hon. gentlemen. I do not know why this Parliament is voting money unless it is to see that the money that is owing by the company is paid. It seems to me that this is the very first purpose to which this money ought to be devoted. I am at a loss to understand the reason behind the arrangement that especially stipulates that some $15,000,000 or $20,000,000 which is said to be owing to-day by this company is not to be provided for out of this money that is being voted by Parliament. If bills are owing in that part of the country from which I come, certainly the creditors will want to know why they do not get paid if Parliament has voted the money. I cannot understand the reasoning which caused the agreement to be so drawn as to provide that the money to be voted is not to be used to pay accounts that are already due.

Mr. BLAIN: Does my hon. friend think they will not be paid?

Mr. OLIVER: I do not know whether they will be paid or not.

Mr. MACDONALD: They are not to be paid out of the $45,000,000.

Mr. OLIVER: If they are not to be paid out of the money the hon. member (Mr. Blain) and myself are voting, if we have voted the money on the understanding that it will not be used for the payment of these debts, and if, perchance, they are not paid, I want to know what we will say to those to whom that money is owing.

Mr. BLAIN: What would likely happen if the Parliament and Government of Canada refused to help them?

Mr. OLIVER: That is not the question that is before the House. That is a matter that we would be quite willing to take up and consider in other circumstances, but we are dealing with a proposal to ask Parliament to guarantee $45,000,000 in aid of the Canadian Northern Railway Company. I cannot understand how, if the Canadian Northern Railway Company need that money to pay their debts, it should not be used for the purpose of paying their debts. If they are insolvent, if they cannot pay, are these people to be left without their money? If they are not insolvent why are they owing that money to-day?

I want to know to what purpose this money is going to be devoted. Is it going to be used to pay the debts of the company, and is it to be used to complete the project now undertaken on the responsibility of the provincial Governments of the prairie provinces? In my constituency there is a settlement in the grand prairie of the Peace river. It is 200 miles from the nearest railway point. Some eight or ten townships there have been settled. The Canadian Northern have a line projected for a distance of 300 miles from Edmonton. They have a guarantee from the provincial Government of 100 miles. They have built some forty miles, and have laid steel. They have done grading on the balance, I believe, of the 100 miles. I certainly want to know whether that 100 miles is to be completed or not.

There is another line running easterly from Edmonton, a hundred miles guaranteed, only some twelve or fifteen miles graded. The country is all thickly settled, needing railway communication very badly. I want to know if that piece of railroad is going to be completed. The same question arises all along the line.

Provision is made for what is to be done if the road defaults. I want to know what is to be done if the road defaults in regard to these provincial guaranteed lines. It is true that the provinces hold a first security upon these lines; and it is quite competent for the Government to say: We have no responsibility in regard to these lines; you have the mortgage, and you can take them. That is what the Solicitor General told us last night was the attitude of the Government. In dealing with the question of amalgamation of the companies, he said:

> What are the objections and obstacles that at the present time exist? In the first place, under the present system, if any individual outlying line proves an incumbrance rather than a benefit to the system, we are in a position to let it go; we are in a position to say: We will not have this barnacle on the Canadian Northern system, a liability rather than an asset.

That is a very good statement to make in the Dominion Parliament dealing with this question as a purely Dominion issue; but is not by any means a very satisfactory position for a Dominion member to take in dealing with the question as it exists, and is a vital question in the two greater prairie provinces. If the company defaults, we want to know the position that will be taken by the Dominion Government in regard to the carrying forward of these enterprises and in regard to dealing with the securities held by the provinces upon them. I may not be able to explain the situation very well; but the province has given a guarantee on a piece of road, the building of which is a necessity for the well-being of Canada, and should have been constructed on the responsibility of the Dominion of Canada. It was not so constructed on the responsibility of the Dominion, and the province had to take the responsibility on behalf of the Dominion. The province has taken the responsibility, and the road is constructed in whole or in part. The province is responsible for the interest upon that piece of line. This Government takes the scheme as a whole; sees fit to consider this particular section as a barnacle; cuts it out of the main system; thereby renders it unable to earn interest upon the monies guaranteed, and the province has to pay the guaranteed interest. I do not know how far the position taken by the Solicitor General is to be carried through in dealing with these companies; but this is a condition that demands attention and consideration; and the Government will do well to state what its intentions are and to put those intentions in black and white in the Bill in regard to these matters, or they certainly cannot expect the support of the members representing those provinces. In the questions that I asked the Prime Minister, I drew attention to section 10 of the resolution. I am not sufficiently learned in the law to discuss the effect of the provisions of section 10, but I will read the section and will repeat my question. Section 10 says:

> That in so far as the Canadian Northern and the constituent and subsidiary companies may be subject to the legislative jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada, every such company shall have full power to do all and every of the things authorized by the Act based upon these resolutions, or provided for in the agreement, and shall have full power, and be bound to make, do and execute from time to time, all such acts, deeds, matters and things as may be necessary or expedient for carrying into effect the full intent and meaning of the Act based upon these resolutions and of the agreement, and the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada is hereby empowered to do what may be necessary on its part in the carrying out of the provisions of said agreement.

I have asked the Prime Minister how far this section may, in case of default, affect the relationship between the provincial Government and these branch lines. I expect, of course, when the matter comes up for consideration in committee that I will get full information in regard to the matter.

I have taken considerable time in dealing with this matter, because of its importance in connection with the whole scheme. I must say that I was startled when I saw in this remarkable newspaper announcement the statement that the Government was taking security on 5,000 miles of lines in the prairie provinces, which was the most valuable part of the whole property of the Canadian Northern. I was startled when I read that, and when I remembered that the provincial Governments held a first mortgage on approximately 4,000 of the 5,000 miles. I wondered what had happened to the provincial Government's right in the matter. In looking into the resolution, I find that the resolution does not undertake to destroy the securities held by the provincial Governments; but in view of that remarkable announcement in the newspapers, I want very full information in regard to the meaning of section 10. I want to know if the Government has any idea of putting itself in the position, in regard to the rights of the provinces in respect to branch lines, such as was suggested in that newspaper announcement. The province of Alberta, as I have said, has guaranteed some $22,000,000 on branch lines of the Canadian Northern railway, and the province of Saskatchewan, about $18,000,000 on similar enterprises. It is the country served by these branch lines that is going to provide the traffic for the whole of this great system. It seems remarkable if those whose enterprise has created these lines are to be ignored in the legislation which is being brought forward for the benefit of the Canadian Northern railway. I have no quarrel with the Canadian Northern railway, but I do not wish to see the rights of the people and the provinces of the West subordinated to the interests of that company. I do not want to see the millions of dollars voted by the people of Canada taken to complete the line in British Columbia while the lines in the prairie provinces are left uncompleted, and the people dependent on these lines left without railway communication. This Government voted in 1911 $6,000,000, every dollar of it for expenditure in British Columbia. In the session of 1912, they voted $15,000,000, every dollar of it for expenditure in Ontario. If this $45,000,000 is to go merely to the completion of the main line in British Columbia and Ontario, ignoring the branch lines in the prairie provinces, then I say it is not a project that ought to have the support of this House. As the Solicitor General has said, and as everybody has admitted, it is the prairie section of the road which is the reason for its existence, and which is going to furnish the traffic for it. And is that portion to be left without completion and without extension because the provincial governments have been enterprising enough to pledge their credit to carry the enterprise as far as it has been carried, while the money of the people of the country at large is taken to complete these other parts of the road that are not by any means of the same present necessity? I say this is something about which it is desirable that we should know the last word before we vote in favour of this proposition.

I was struck last night with the comparisons made by the Solicitor General between the action taken by the late Government in guaranteeing the bonds of the Canadian Northern railway and the action proposed to be taken by the present Government under the resolutions before us. The difference between the two conditions was this—that in the case of the late Government we were guaranteeing the loans of a going concern and solvent company, but the condition now is that the present Government is called upon to provide aid for a concern that cannot, on the evidence placed before us, be called either a going concern or solvent company. There is necessity for conditions being imposed to-day that were not necessary when the late Government gave this guarantee. I was astonished to hear the Solicitor General try to argue—and yet I should not have been astonished because he has great ability in arguing—

Mr. GERMAN: Agility.

Mr. OLIVER: Yes, and agility—he was arguing with great cleverness that a third or fourth mortgage on what he himself has given to be understood was a presently bankrupt institution, was a more valid security than a first mortgage on the same identical project. He set himself a heavy task, and I must say he acquitted himself with credit; yet I do not think he quite proved his point.

This resolution is difficult to deal with. It has been the occasion of a great deal of eloquence both to-day and yesterday, and I do not think that the subject is exhausted by any means. I have given the matter some study, and my conclusion is that this resolution is a purposely involved attempt to establish a controlling junior partnership with an insolvent debtor. It is not remarkable if such an attempt should lead to difficulty in demonstrating absolutely what is meant by what is said.

I object to this resolution because it is improvident, and it is improvident because it is inefficient. What is the purpose of this aid that we are giving? It is to preserve the credit of the country, to secure the completion of the system and to insure the permanence of the Canadian Northern as a competitive railway system. Are any of these purposes served under the terms of the resolution? The credit of the country is not preserved—provision is made that the money that we provide shall not be used to pay the company's debts; their debts are still to be left unpaid. Will this money that is to be voted complete the system? The claim was made last year that the $15,000,000 of cash that we then voted would secure the completion of the system. But it did not, and there is no more reason to-day, on the showing that has been placed before the House, to believe that the $45,000,000 will secure the completion of the system than there was to believe that the $15,000,000 of last year would secure its completion. With $58,000,000 to raise on securities not yet earned, it is a grave question if the money can be secured to complete the system. But our hon. friends say that they have security on everything that the company has, and that they have made provision for taking over the company's belongings. Is it for the sake of the security that they are advancing this money? I fancy that if it were merely for the security, they could advance the money for other purposes and get much better security. They are advancing the money to prevent the system from going into bankruptcy and to secure its permanence, and when they have advanced the money they will have not one dollar's worth more of valid security than they have to-day, before they advance the money. That, I think, has been demonstrated to-day. All the security that they will have when they have put this marvellously and wonderfully-worded resolution into effect; all the security they will have of any value, they have to-day. This resolution is merely a form of words to cover up the fact that the Government are advancing $45,000,000 to the Canadian Northern, without security, to enable the company to avoid bankruptcy. A year from now, when the money has been spent and the $58,000,000 that is expected to be raised has not been raised, and the company is again unable to pay its debts, every reason that my hon. friend has given for not foreclosing the mortgage that we have on the Canadian Northern to-day will exist then, reinforced by the amount of money that we have voted in the meantime. To-day we do not dare to foreclose, because the company owes too much money; yet we give them $45,000,000 more, and we are going to foreclose if they are not then in a position to carry on the enterprise. Surely if we are not going to foreclose now, when we have put $45,000,000 more into the enterprise, we are not going to foreclose then.

Mr. MORPHY: The hon. gentleman argues as if he were of the opinion that we should foreclose now. Is that the state of the hon. gentleman's mind?

[Mr. Oliver.]

Mr. OLIVER: I am not giving my opinion at the present time; I will deal with that later. I am arguing on this point, and I would like the hon. gentleman's careful attention to it. It is this: we to-day hold a first mortgage on the Canadian Northern enterprise in its most important parts. We can foreclose that mortgage to-day if we see fit, but we do not want to do it. Why? Because of the reasons that have been given to the House. We are going to give the company $45,000,000 and we are not going to be in any better position when we have given that $45,000,000 than we are now. We cannot foreclose any quicker and if we will not foreclose now, are we going to foreclose then? I say, certainly not. The whole of this resolution is for the purpose of exchanging a preferred creditorship for a junior partnership in a practically defaulting enterprise. I am not saying that that is not necessary in the interests of the country; I am not arguing either one way or the other. What I am arguing is that this Government has absolutely deceived or attempted to deceive the public in regard to their position towards this company and with regard to the result of the action that is to be taken. They have told Parliament and they have told the country that they are getting security when, as they have been informed this afternoon, they are actually increasing their liability without increasing their security.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Do you think that as well?

Mr. OLIVER: I do not merely think it; I know it. Does my hon. friend not know it?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Indeed I do not.

Mr. OLIVER: I am not of the legal profession, but I think that that is elementary and that even I can demonstrate it. There is to-day on the line from Grand View to Edmonton a first mortgage held by this Government for $13,000 a mile. Superimposed upon that are certain bonds issued by the Canadian Northern—I do not know how much a mile, but I venture to say that they covered everything they could get. Upon that my hon. friend is going to superimpose another mortgage as security for this $45,000,000. Supposing the company defaults and he forecloses; how is he going to collect his equity of redemption in the mortgage that he is putting on now if he does not assume responsibility for the second mortgage that the Canadian Northern have given on that road?

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is right.

Mr. OLIVER: Very well. If he does not lend the $45,000,000 to-day and does not put on his third mortgage and the company defaults, he has the first mortgage and he can collect on that first mortgage without paying off the second mortgage. Is that not so? My hon. friend admits that instead of getting security on that section of the line he is incurring a liability up to the amount of the mortgage given by the Canadian Northern. Well, my hon. friend will not admit anything?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I misunderstood what the hon. gentleman said first. There is no doubt at all that by the present resolutions we incur greater liability. What I thought the hon. gentleman said was that by taking the other companies in we had not added to our security and had added to our liability. I knew that he had more sense than to believe that.

Mr. OLIVER: I was not dealing with that. Now that my hon. friend has mentioned the taking in of the other companies, I may say that I heard several speakers here to-day and yesterday declare that the stock of these subsidiary companies has been reduced; that the water has been squeezed out of these companies. That is the way, at any rate, the public were given to understand the matter; that this Government had driven a hard bargain with Mackenzie and Mann; that they had put them right up against the wall and had taken these stocks from them, squeezed the water out of them and reduced everything down to a basis of $100,000,000. Now, is there any foundation for that statement? Absolutely none whatever. What is the idea of watering stock? It is that there shall be shares of stock which shall draw dividends, if dividends there be, and if you reduce the number of the shares then there will be a lesser number to draw dividends on. Take the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway with its $10,000,000 of stock. Suppose the Canadian Northern Ontario railway earns dividends a year from now or ten years from now, will it be paying dividends on anything less than $10,000,000 of stock? Not one cent less. It is true that the Canadian Northern railway will get the benefit of the dividends, but the dividends will be paid on $10,000,000 of the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway stock, and so right along the line. I would be sorry to accuse our hon. friends of intentionally misleading; they may have believed when they made the statement that they were actually squeezing water out of this stock. They were not doing anything of the kind, they were putting the stock up as security, but they were not squeezing the water out of it; and as the hon. member for Calgary to-day pointed out, they were giving the Canadian Northern stock in addition to it.

They have also given out a statement that the Canadian Northern Railway stock has been reduced to $100,000,000. Now, the Canadian Northern Railway stock a year ago was only $70,000,000. The Canadian Northern Railway Company afterwards increased it to $77,000,000, so that when this Parliament met the common stock of the Canadian Northern Railway Company was $77,000,000. This resolution states that it is to be increased to $100,000,000 and that difference is to be handed over to Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann; and yet they have sent the statement throughout all Canada that they had decreased the stock of the Canadian Northern railway. It is not $100,000,000 it is $125,000,000. There was $77,000,000 of common stock at the beginning of this session and $25,000,000 of debenture stock which this resolution provides can be converted into common stock, so while they have been spreading word all over Canada that this company's stock had been reduced to $100,000,000, as a matter of fact it has been increased from $102,000,000 to $125,000,000 and Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann have been made a present of $23,000,000 absolutely without consideration.

Mr. W. T. WHITE: How much stock of the Canadian Northern railway do Mackenzie and Mann own to-day and how much will they own after this resolution is adopted?

Mr. OLIVER: This legislation says they will own $100,000,000.

Mr. WHITE: No, they will own $60,000,000. Did not Mackenzie and Mann and Company own $70,000,000 before and will they not own $60,000,000 after? How much of the stock of the subsidiary companies did they own before and how much do they own now.

Mr. GERMAN: You have not told us that yet.

Mr. WHITE: I am asking my hon. friend.

Mr. OLIVER: Whatever stock of the subsidiary companies they owned before they have turned into the Canadian Northern railway.

Mr. WHITE: Very good, who will own that?

Mr. OLIVER: After the resolution goes through the Government of Canada will own $40,000,000 and Mackenzie and Mann, or those to whom they sold their debenture stock, will own $85,000,000.

Mr. WHITE: $60,000,000.

Mr. OLIVER: $85,000,000.

Mr. GERMAN: Who will own the $25,000,000 of redeemable debenture stock?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The bond-holders have the debenture stock.

Mr. OLIVER: And who got the money for that?

Mr. WHITE: The Canadian Northern railway.

Mr. OLIVER: Yes. We do not need to dispute about the facts. The point is that this Government has sent out word to the people of the country that they had reduced the stock of the Canadian Northern railway to $100,000,000, when there is no foundation in fact for that statement.

11 p.m.

Mr. WHITE: Do you not believe it.

Mr. OLIVER: It was an absolute misrepresentation to the people of Canada.

Mr. WHITE: Nothing of the kind.

Mr. OLIVER: They intended to make them believe that a bargain was being made in their behalf when, as a matter of fact, the bargain was against them and not in their favour. To-day the country is being given to understand that the Government has been given $40,000,000 of the Canadian Northern Railway stock formerly held by Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann. This House knows, after the calculations that have been made to-day that Mackenzie and Mann owned last year $70,000,000 of Canadian Northern Railway stock.

Mr. WHITE: And what else?

Mr. OLIVER: And to-day they own $60,000,000 of Canadian Northern Railway stock and the Government have $40,000,000. Now, there is frenzied finance for you. The Government gets $40,000,000 and Mackenzie and Mann only lose $10,000,000.

Mr. WHITE: What about the subsidiary companies whose stock they own?

[Mr. Oliver.]

Mr. MACDONALD: They were not worth anything. Mr. Bennett showed that you are giving them something for nothing.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: The Solicitor General told us yesterday that there was no such thing now, that it was all wiped out.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I did not say that.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Oh, yes, you did again and again.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member for Edmonton has the floor.

Mr. OLIVER: I maintain that this proposal should either be a loan on terms that, failing substantial security, would ensure proper expenditure of the money in payment of indebtedness and completion of the enterprise, or a definite, controlling interest in the company.

Mr. McKAY: The hon. member referred to the question of what was to become of the loans and indebtedness of the company. Has he read clauses 4 and 5 of the resolution?

Mr. OLIVER: Yes.

Mr. McKAY: Does that not give some explanation as to how these debts are to be paid?

Mr. OLIVER: I do not think this explanation would satisfy me if I was a creditor. It is really one of the most remarkable provisions ever put on any statute book. If my hon. friend were a creditor he would not think that the provisions of that section protected him.

Mr. GERMAN: How would you prevent a man from suing a company if he had a claim against them?

Mr. OLIVER: And how is it going to be guaranteed that these claims, which are to be paid only out of certain securities, will be paid if those securities do not realize the required amount?

Mr. MURPHY: By the promise that they will get more money next year.

Mr. OLIVER: That is the only way. These securities are existent to-day, and if the amounts are not paid out of proceeds of the securities, it means that the securities will not bring a sufficient amount, and they will not bring any more to-morrow than they will to-day.

Mr. McKAY: They still look to the company.

Mr. OLIVER: Of course, and the company has no money.

Mr. McKAY: As I take it, these people advance money on certain securities, and the recourse to the company is postponed till the system is completed. That is the meaning of the section.

Mr. OLIVER: That means that it does not mean anything at all, effectively. I must admit that I do not understand it myself, nor do I think that the man who framed it understands it.

Mr. MACDONALD: Lash knows what it means.

Mr. OLIVER: If he drew it up, I guess he understands it. I certainly do not see in this section any assurance of the maintenance of the credit, either of the company, or the country by the passing of a resolution containing such a very remarkable provision. I think quite the contrary. I see in the section, and in the resolution containing that section, a disregard of the credit of the country, and of the company, and if I were a creditor of the company I would certainly think that my interests were not being safe-guarded by such a provision embodied in a statute. Section 5 reads:

> That covenants or undertakings of the contractors and such other covenants or undertakings as may be required by the Governor in Council shall be given that the current indebtedness of the Canadian Northern and of the said constituent and subsidiary companies will within one year from the passing of the Act to be based upon these resolutions be reduced to the normal or usual current amount to be determined by the minister and that meanwhile all such current indebtedness other than such as may be the subject of bona fide dispute, will be either paid or arranged in such a manner that no proceedings for the enforcement of payment thereof will be taken or pressed.

Mr. ROSS: Who gives the covenant?

Mr. OLIVER: The contractors give undertakings that they will reduce the current indebtedness to an amount to be fixed by the minister. Now Mackenzie and Mann, it is said, are not able to pay their debts to-day; that is why they are here, and yet we are taking a covenant from them that they will pay their debts if we give them this money.

Mr. MACDONALD: But we have no guarantee.

Mr. OLIVER: Why in the world should we take a covenant from them that they will pay the money we give them over to somebody else, instead of providing that there shall be an accounting, and that the money shall be paid to the people to whom it is owing.

Mr. GERMAN: Allow me to correct my hon. friend. It is not asserted that Mackenzie and Mann cannot pay their debts, but that the Canadian Northern cannot. Mackenzie and Mann have got all the money, and the Canadian Northern railway has none.

Mr. McKAY: That is just the point. The Canadian Northern railway has not the money. Mackenzie and Mann are paying the debts.

Mr. OLIVER: I am delighted to hear that. If my hon. friend will induce the Government to insert the words Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann—

Mr. McKAY: Mackenzie, Mann and Company, Limited.

Mr. OLIVER: If it is provided that Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann are to be responsible themselves, we should know who we are looking to. But as the section is drawn up, no man can tell its meaning. No responsibility is placed on any one.

Mr. MORPHY: The interpretation clause makes it plain.

Mr. OLIVER: I maintain that if this resolution has a purpose at all, it is to see that the debts of the company are paid, and it is not making that provision; it is to see that the enterprises of the company are completed, and it is not making that provision; it is to see that the property of the company, in case of default, becomes the property of the people of Canada, and it is not making that provision; in none of these particulars does it meet the requirements of the case. I object to these resolutions because they establish a junior partnership with an insolvent debtor. They, in effect, compel further aid to prevent future bankruptcy. While professing to take security they establish a largely increased liability. Although they lay an enormous additional burden on the credit of the country they do not provide for outstanding liabilities. They do not secure completion of the enterprise; they do not protect provincial interests; they do not provide for minimum freight rates; and in case of foreclosure, they do not provide for Government ownership of the property.

On motion of Mr. Bristol, the debate was ajourned.

On motion of Mr. White, the House adjourned at 11.12 p.m.

Friday, May 15, 1914.

The House met at Eleven o'clock, the Speaker in the Chair.

PRIVATE BILL.

FIRST READING.

Bill No. 195, to incorporate the Canadian General Council of the Boy Scouts Association.—Mr. Currie.

TORONTO TERMINALS.

Hon. J. D. REID (acting Minister of Railways) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 196, respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada, and the Toronto Harbour Commissioners. He said:

I have a memorandum here prepared by the deputy minister explaining this Bill, and perhaps the reading of that will be the briefest explanation I could give to the House of this measure:

In the Toronto Viaduct Act of 1913, chapter 11, 3-4 George V., the description of the property which may be expropriated is given as follows:

All or any lands and lands covered by water in the city of Toronto lying within the district south of the existing right of way of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company from Yonge street east to the prolongation southerly of Berkeley street and south of the existing right of way of the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada from the prolongation southerly of Berkeley street east to Cherry street and extending out to the present Windmill line, and also a strip of land not exceeding one hundred and fifty feet in width, immediately south of the Windmill line and extending from the prolongation of Parliament street in the west to Cherry street in the east.

On February 25, 1914, the general solicitor of the Grand Trunk Railway system wrote as follows:

We have just discovered that there is a mistake in the description of the lands referred to in the Toronto Viaduct Act, that is, chapter 11 of the Statutes of 1913. The mistake is caused by the draughtsman thinking that the Windmill line terminates at Cherry street instead of Parliament street. The result of that the lands described have no southerly boundary between Parliament and Cherry streets. In co-operation, therefore, with the Canadian Pacific railway, I have re-drafted the Act with a correct description and we have thought it more convenient to have a new Act instead of amending the Act of last year. I inclose copy of draft Bill and have omitted from it the clause providing for the Act being brought into force by proclamation.

[Mr. Bristol.]

The description of the property as described by the proposed Bill is as follows:

All or any lands and lands covered by water in the city of Toronto lying within the areas bounded on the west by the easterly limit of Yonge street, on the north by the southerly limit of the existing right of way of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company from Yonge street eastward to the easterly limit of Berkeley street, and by the southerly limit of the existing right of way of the Grand Trunk Railway Company from the aforesaid limit of Berkeley street eastward to the southerly prolongation of the limit between lots 8 and 9 on the south side of Mill street, formerly Front street, according to a plan of the Toronto hospital property filed number 108 in the registry office for the said city, on the east by the said southerly prolongation of the limit between the said lots 8 and 9, and on the south by a line drawn along the southerly limits of water lots granted by the Crown to Gooderham and Worts and to William Gooderham, and by the new or present Windmill line, such boundary limits of the lands of the Crown. Also the whole or any part of the northerly one hundred and fifty feet of the lands and lands covered by water, granted to the National Iron Works, Limited, by the said city of Toronto, by deed dated the 21st day of August, 1909.

The draft Bill has been approved by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the Grand Trunk Railway Company, the Toronto Harbour Commission, the corporation of the city of Toronto, and the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SATURDAY SITTINGS.

Right Hon. R. L. BORDEN moved:

That this House shall meet on Saturday the 16th instant and on all Saturdays until the end of the session, the hours of sitting and the order of precedence for business shall be the same as on Fridays.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: The motion that the House should sit on Saturday as a rule is not brought down until all the Government programme has been laid upon the table. The programme is still incomplete, in this at all events, that the Supplementary Estimates have not yet been laid before the House. If that were all, I would not object to sitting on Saturday, because I am as anxious as anybody else to facilitate the ending of the work we have on hand. I am not aware, however, that that is all; perhaps my right hon. friend has other things to bring down. But, even aside from that, there is objection to sitting on Saturday.

As the season is far advanced, I do not object to the taking of Saturday as a sitting day; but I would suggest to my hon. friend that at all events we should not sit tomorrow. The notice that we have had has been too short; only yesterday we heard for the first time that it was the intention of the Government to sit to-morrow and the following Saturdays. I interpose this objection to our being called upon to sit to-morrow that many members of the House, myself included, have made other engagements for that day. If we have, however, notice that we shall sit the next and following Saturdays, hon. gentlemen will be able to make arrangements accordingly. I hope therefore that my right hon. friend will modify his motion in order that it may take effect not from to-morrow but from the following Saturday.

Mr. BORDEN: I appreciate what my right hon. friend has said with regard to laying the programme of the Government before the House, but I am not aware of anything else at the moment which is to be brought down except the Supplementary Estimates. So far as sitting on Saturday is concerned, I hope that my right hon. friend will not press his objection. I shall be very glad to arrange that nothing shall be taken up on Saturday except matters of a non-controversial character; indeed, nothing to which my right hon. friend has any objection. I think we shall make some progress in that way. As to how long we shall sit on Saturday, I shall be prepared to meet the views of hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House. I think we can get some work done without any detriment to the public interest in the absence of those gentlemen who have already made other arrangements. If that would meet the views of my right hon. friend, I would be glad if the motion would pass at it is.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: In view of this explanation, I shall not interpose my objection. I understand from my right hon. friend that he does not contemplate bringing up during the remainder of the session anything more than the Estimates. As to the business of the House to-morrow, I am quite satisfied that we should take up non-contentious matters and expedite business as much as possible.

Mr. BORDEN: If my right hon. friend will give me a memorandum of what he thinks may conveniently be taken up to-morrow, I shall be very glad to meet his views.

Motion agreed to.

THE FARMERS BANK.

On the Orders of the Day being called:

Mr. LEMIEUX: I have received several letters this morning inquiring about the position of the Government with regard to the depositors of the banks I have already named—La Banque du Peuple, the Ville Marie bank and La Banque St. Jean. I would urge upon my hon. friend to get a list of the depositors of these banks before we proceed with the Farmers Bank Bill.

Hon. W. T. WHITE: The request that my hon. friend prefers this morning is similar to that which he made within the last day or so. I find that we have not in the department any list of the depositors of the banks in question, and I am not sure that we shall be able to obtain one. My deputy has, however, communicated with the liquidator of one or more of these banks with a view to seeing whether or not such a list can be obtained. I shall not promise it to my hon. friend, because I am not certain that we can obtain it. At all events, the matter is having consideration.

DEATH OF HON. F. D. MONK.

On the Orders of the Day being called:

Right Hon. R. L. BORDEN (Prime Minister): Before the Orders of the Day are called, it is my painful duty to announce to the members of the House the death of the Hon. Frederick Debartzch Monk, who for many years was a member of this House and who was also a member of the present Administration. I met Mr. Monk for the first time in 1896, when we came here as members of the Parliament elected in that year, and from that time up to the present I have, as hon. members know, been associated very closely with him in public affairs and have also during that time had the very great privilege of enjoying his personal friendship. I am happy to say that although sometimes there was a marked difference of opinion between us with regard to public questions and although that difference did result in his retirement from the Government more than a year ago, these differences never interfered in the slightest degree with the full friendship which always existed between us. Mr. Monk was a man of very distinguished qualities. He was an eminent constitutional lawyer, a great parliamentarian, a man of high ability and a commanding figure in Parliament and in public affairs. His character and his temperament in some respects were not suited to public life, for the reason that he was a man of singularly sensitive disposition, much more sensitive than, perhaps, those who did not know him intimately may have realized. His course throughout his public career was marked by a high sense of duty and a desire to discharge to the utmost of his ability what he conceived to be his duty to the people of this country. His death leaves a great blank in the public life of Canada and no one mourns it more than I do. For many weeks and even months past it has been known that he was not likely to recover from the illness which confined him to his house. I am sure that, in common with all the members of this House and with all the people of this country who knew him, I can assure those of his family who survive him that they have in this loss the most profound sympathy of the Parliament of Canada and of the people of this country.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Mr. Speaker, the sad intelligence which has just been conveyed to the House by my right hon. friend was not altogether unexpected, because, as he has stated, for many months and even for many years past Mr. Monk had been in failing health and his recovery was not hoped for, although the end has come, perhaps, more suddenly than we had reason to suppose it would. Those of us who knew Mr. Monk—it was my privilege to know him almost from the days of his youth—are aware that the qualities that have been attributed to him by my right hon. friend he had in abundance. It is perhaps not generally known that his failing health can be traced back to the day when he lost a most charming wife, who had been to him not only a friend and companion but a most valuable advisor as well. I do not suppose that he ever fully recovered from the blow which he then suffered. Mr. Monk was well known in Quebec as belonging to a family which has been the adornment of the Bench and of the public life of our province. He was himself endowed in many ways with the talents of his distinguished father, and I agree with my right hon. friend that in temperament and ability he was more suited to the duties of the Bench than to participation in public life.

Everybody who saw Mr. Monk in this House will share my conviction that, if it had been his lot to be on the Bench, as his father was, he would have added great dignity to that position, and would have brought to the discharge of the duties devolving upon him commanding ability as a jurist and wide experience as a constitutional lawyer. Speaking on behalf of those who sit on this side of the House, and whose misfortune it was to have to differ from him upon many questions, I can say that in conveying to his family the condolence of his friends, the right hon. Prime Minister can also, in the same degree, convey the condolence of his opponents.

Mr. PELLETIER (Translation): Mr. Speaker, following on the right hon. Prime Minister and on the right hon leader of the Opposition, I trust I may be allowed to add a few words to the encomiums and tributes of praise which have fallen from their lips in memory of the one who has just departed from our midst.

Mr. Monk loomed large in the political world and in the hearts of the people of the province of Quebec. Friends and opponents alike held him in high esteem. He was a man of high standing, a man of whom the whole province of Quebec was justly proud. Even those who differed from him could not help acknowledging that he was reflecting great honour on our race.

I was his colleague in this Government, and even after he left the Cabinet, our intercourse continued to be of the most cordial nature. His death for me, as for the whole of the province of Quebec, has been a source of deep and sincere grief. The place he occupied will not be easily filled.

One of his last deeds is very characteristic of his whole career. When he found that the ailment which terminated in his demise was an impediment to the fulfilment of his parliamentary duties, such as he conceived them, and that he would no longer be in a position to carry out the mandate which the electors of Jacques Cartier had entrusted to him, he was unwilling to let events follow their course, and preferred sending in at once his resignation, such was his high sense of duty.

However, subsequent to that resignation, I for one recommended postponing for some time the issuance of the writ, in the hope that this distinguished gentleman would be in a position to take once more his place in our midst as member for Jacques Cartier. God has decided otherwise, and it only remains for us to submit to His superior will.

I join with the Prime Minister and the leader of the Opposition in offering to his family the expression of my deepest sympathy.

Mr. LEMIEUX (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I may be allowed to pay my respects to my former colleague who has just died. We owe an expression of our grief to the departed statesman, and, to his family, an assurance of our heartfelt sympathy.

Frederick DeBartzch Monk has played an important part in this Parliament, and his demise is a grievous loss not only to his native province but to Canada as a whole.

A professor at Laval University, he moulded the minds of a whole generation of professional men, and his pupils, even those who did not agree with him in politics, held him in high esteem.

We, his former colleagues, are aware to what extent his knowledge of constitutional law had made of him an incomparable parliamentarian. He was listened to in this House and elsewhere; his eloquent utterances captivated his hearers.

Our regretted colleague was of distinguished lineage. Through his mother he was connected with the old Canadian noblesse. The De Bartzch family played an eminent part at the time the seignorial regime was in force.

On his father's side, he was related to a family of distinguished jurists. His father, of English extraction, had for many years past thrown in his lot with the French-Canadians, in whose midst he lived. He was one of the striking personalities of our Court of Appeal. And through his wife, whose premature death has been the occasion of such deep grief, he was connected with the Cherrier family, whose head, Côme Seraphin Cherrier, was under the Union the friend and counsellor of Lafontaine, and later of Dorion.

Mr. Monk had inherited the attainments of the former and profited by intercourse with the latter. His death deprives us of one of our superior men.

The Government, no doubt, will be represented at his funeral. Those who opposed him because their views differed radically from his will also be there, for the grim reaper leaves in his wake no harsh feelings; only pleasant memories remain.

Hon. C. J. DOHERTY (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, in the death of Mr. Monk Canada suffers no ordinary loss. We all know how he gave to the service of this country the best years of his life and we all realize to what extent he brought to that service abilities that qualified him to take the foremost place in the ranks of her public men, that place which he so easily attained and so worthily held. We all feel too, that, what is perhaps greater and more rare, he brought to that service an unselfish devotion that, I am sure, all who witnessed it admired. A man whose standards were of the very highest, and whose unfailing industry drew from the exceptional gifts with which nature had endowed him the largest measure of usefulness to his country. Canada may well mourn his loss. Born in the same year, and in the same city, we were boys together and grew up in a life-long friendship, and great as is the loss to the country it is perhaps more the sense of personal grief in the loss of an esteemed and admired and beloved friend that has made it impossible for me not to say a word expressive of sympathy in the great grief of those who were dearest to him. That is my excuse for adding a word, at least, to what has already been said.

CANADIAN NORTHERN RAILWAY AGREEMENT.

Consideration of the proposed motion of Mr. Borden that the House go into Committee to consider certain resolutions respecting the Canadian Northern railway, resumed from Thursday, May 14.

Mr. EDMUND BRISTOL (Centre Toronto): Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer a few observations on what I regard as one of the most important matters that have come up for consideration by the Parliament of this country. I listened with a great deal of attention to the speech that was made yesterday by my hon. friend the member for Calgary (Mr. R. B. Bennett), and I do not purpose to follow him so far as the personal element in that speech is concerned. I feel it would have been of some advantage to this House if the hon. member had told us who made the report as to the condition of this railroad, which must have taken at least a couple of months to prepare and cost a considerable sum of money. It would have been interesting to know what group of men paid for this report, and furnished it to the hon. gentleman; and also interesting if, when making his anonymous attack, he had read to the House the letter that the engineer said to have been formerly in the employ of Mackenzie and Mann had given him. Anonymous attacks that come from sources not given are not, in my humble judgment, proper methods of dealing with a subject of this importance, on which we are entitled to the best possible evidence and the fullest disclosure. I do not admit that my hon. friend from Calgary has a monopoly of the public conscience of this country, or that he alone of the members of this House is anxious and desirous to see done what is best in the interests of Canada at the present time. My hon. friend has spoken of a lobby extending over a great many years, and which he says is the most disgraceful that has ever taken place in any country. Does my hon. friend wish to imply that this Government has been lobbied in respect of this measure? Is that the charge? If so, it should be made boldly and clearly here and now. But there is not a man within the sound of my voice, or in the country, that believes that the present Government, either directly or indirectly, has been lobbied in respect of this most important matter. There is not a man in this country, in my humble judgment, that does not believe that if the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance or any other member of the Government had been lobbied, it would have been a great deal worse in the final result for the people doing the lobbying. That is as far as we need to go into the question of parliamentary corruption. If it has not existed in this House, this House is not concerned. If it existed at an earlier stage in the hon. gentleman's career, he had the knowledge, the ability, and, apparently, the language to place the facts before the people of this country at a proper time and before a proper tribunal. I think with these observations I may dismiss that matter, and leave it to the hon. gentlemen to discuss at a place where it may properly be considered.

The Government of this country were confronted with this condition: they had a transcontinental railway in process of completion, not connected up. They found that the various provinces, with one exception, had guaranteed portions of the bonds of this line; that the Government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier had guaranteed bonds and had given subsidies to the extent of $58,000,000. Consequently, the road had the status not merely of a provincial railway, but of a transcontinental system endorsed by this Parliament and in a public fashion, so that investors abroad could regard it as a transcontinental system which was as much favoured by the people of this country as was the National Transcontinental railway, the child of my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). That being the condition of affairs, I am going to deal just for a moment with the hon. member's charge of reckless guarantees, made in his three and a half hours of discursive statements, more or less vigorous and going from San Francisco to the North Pole. The western provinces must have branch lines of railway; they have either to build them themselves by Government construction or get contractors to build them by means of Government guarantees of bonds. We have one striking example of Government construction in this country, and, in my humble opinion, the people of this country are quite satisfied to allow private enterprise to construct the railways under Government guarantees, and under proper supervision; particularly, when all the railway has to sell later on is transportation, which is controlled by the people of this country through the Railway Commission. It was for the provinces themselves to determine the best way to get branch lines to the settlers. The settlers had to have branch lines, and at once if immigration was to continue, and the farms of the West were to be occupied by those who make a living growing grain. I venture to say that the system of Government guarantees for railway construction has been more beneficial as regards the Canadian West than any system so far devised by any government or person. There are two things in favour of Government guarantees. First of all, they enable the contractor to get his money for the road at a lower rate of interest than he otherwise could get, because the endorsation of the Government conveys to the investor abroad that it is a portion of a railroad system that the Government believes should be built; and it has this further benefit: the road, when constructed, has lower fixed charges, because the bonds thus guaranteed carry a lower rate of interest, and the road has consequently to earn less to pay the guaranteed bond interest, and that means less charges upon the settler. It is idle, therefore, for a western man to tell us that these guarantees have been reckless. I venture to say that the hon. gentleman would not make such a statement in Alberta, because he knows the settlers of that country are very anxious indeed for branch lines; and we have also the statement of the hon. gentleman from Macleod, and of the Prime Minister of Saskatchewan, as to their necessity. That being the condition of affairs, the Government of Canada were confronted with this situation: they had a partially completed railway system that had been guaranteed by both the provinces and the Dominion as a transcontinental line, and the question before them was: Shall we assist that line to become a transcontinental railway, or let it go into the hands of a receiver; or, as the hon. gentleman said yesterday, pool the stock, eliminate Mackenzie and Mann, and appoint some gentleman to run the road? What did the Government do first? The first thing they did was to make a thorough investigation into the affairs of the company. My hon. friend complains that it was not under oath. Well, we have investigations made into companies affairs continuously in this country. When any question arises in regard to any of these large mergers, you employ a firm of accountants to inquire into the affairs of a company before you take it over, and I have never heard that, when any of these large corporations were formed, any inquiry was made other than an audit such as the Government has made in this case.

The people before us are not criminals, they are not people who are unknown and the Government employed the Comptroller of the Finance Department, the Comptroller of the Railway Department, and the Comptroller of the Intercolonial railway to make that investigation. On top of their examination, you have the oath of two officers of the road who say that as far as Mackenzie and Mann are concerned they have not made one dollar out of this enterprise. I had the pleasure of being at a banquet in the city of Toronto on the 14th of December, 1906. It was a banquet given by the Board of Trade to the two distinguished gentlemen who control the interests of the Canadian Northern Railway Company. Sir Mortimer Clarke, then Lieutenant Governor of the province of Ontario, presided at that banquet. The most distinguished men in the province of Ontario. Senators, premiers, ex-premiers and others, were present on that occasion, and before that assembly, as long ago as 1906, Mr. Z. A. Lash made this statement:

> Now, gentlemen, I will tell you another secret. During all these years neither Mr. Mackenzie nor Mr. Mann has drawn from the railway company or the Canadian Northern Railway system one single dollar in cash for themselves, whether for contractors' profits on construction or otherwise. They have given their invaluable time and services without salary; and though they have in the interests of the railway probably done more travelling than any other two men in Toronto, yet they have not drawn one dollar for travelling expenses. On the contrary, they have advanced out of their own private means and credit, millions of dollars for this railway system, and have in the earlier stages risked their whole fortunes and future for the benefit of the undertaking.

My hon. friend has been pleased to cast some slurs upon, or to make some remarks about, Mr. Z. A. Lash. I venture to say in the presence of any lawyer in the province of Ontario, and I think of the Dominion of Canada, there is no man in the legal profession who is more highly regarded by the profession than Mr. Z. A. Lash. He has been a distinguished member of a leading firm in the province of Ontario for a generation. He has been counsel for the Bankers' Association for a great many years. He has been connected with the Law Society and he has looked after the legal affairs of the province of Ontario for a generation. His word would be taken by any man in the province of Ontario, by any business man, any banker, and I venture to say that that statement made at that time in that fashion is a statement that every gentleman in this House will accept without question as being true. I am reminded by an hon. gentleman that he was also deputy Minister of Justice in this country.

The audit which the Government made, and which they made, I am satisfied, with the greatest possible care, is only corroborative evidence of what has been well-known to those who have known what this work was, the men who were carrying it on and why they were carrying it on, and the Government have taken care in this matter that no claim shall be made and no profit other than common stock. My hon. friend stretches out his hand and says: Why, it passes the credulity of man that they could do such a thing. When you have a great undertaking to carry on, can you commence to milk it at the start as the hon. gentleman would have us believe? For one thing, the bank would never in the world allow it. I am quite satisfied that the Canadian Bank of Commerce, when they made Mackenzie and Mann put up every security, personal and otherwise, at their command for the carrying on of this enterprise, would never have allowed these gentlemen to take one dollar out of it. These men were ambitious to build a great transcontinental railway and they were willing to wait until the completion of this enormous enterprise before receiving the profits which they would be so justly entitled to and which, I am sure, nobody will begrudge them when the facts are known. Therefore, I think it may be taken as a fact that, in so far as Mackenzie and Mann are concerned, they have not received one dollar profit out of this enterprise and that their sole profit will be that which may be derived out of the common stock, which is all they get in connection with the arrangement which is now being made by the Government.

The Government having made this audit and having ascertained this state of facts, it would be reasonable for them to consider the whole situation. In considering the whole situation, it was reasonable for them to look into the matter and see who the applicants were and what right they had to come to the people of Canada for assistance. My hon. friend says that these gentlemen are the prize mendicants of this country. I did not know that it was mendicancy to ask a loan from a bank when you put up security and pay for it by common stock. It is to my mind a most ordinary business transaction. Instead of going to a banker it was very natural to go to the Government because no one is more vitally interested in the success of the road than the Government is and if it was a good financial proposition for a banker it certainly was much more so for the Government. It was much more so in the interests of the people of the country because the aid which the Government could give to this enterprise could obviously be obtained at a cheaper rate than if it were obtained from a private banker. The Government, while aiding the road were also aiding the people of the country, and it was much better that they should grant this aid than that Mackenzie and Mann should go to the bankers and allow them to distribute this common stock because if any common stock was going it was desirable that the people should get it.

The Government having ascertained the position of this matter, and having met the applicants, it is only fair, it is only just to these men to show what they had put into this enterprise which entitles them to the consideration of this country. These men gained their first experience in construction work on the Canadian Pacific railway in the Canadian West. I do not think there is a man within sound of my voice who does not believe that they know more about railway construction than any other people in this country to-day. I do not think there is a man who is informed upon these matters who believe that there is any set of men in Canada to-day with the same amount of skill and ability in the construction of railways, cheaply, safely and economically as the two men who control the interests of the Canadian Northern railway. Having got their experience in the Canadian West they began to build railways for themselves practically only from 1896. I want you all to bear in mind that in 1896 only 21,000 immigrants came into this country. I want you to bear in mind that that great, powerful system, the Canadian Pacific railway, would not build one branch line of railway, would not put up one dollar for branch lines. Why? Because they did not have the faith in Canada's future that these two men had. They are entitled to consideration because they had faith in Canada and they realized that the construction of the branch lines in the Northwest was necessary in order that that country might be settled and that Canada might become one of the greatest countries of the world. How do I know that? There were, in 1896, three charters kicking around Manitoba, that had been kicking around there for these many years, and nobody would touch them, land grant or anything else. The Canadian Pacific railway would not touch them at all. Obviously it was thought that there was no necessity for them to do so because they no doubt argued that if anybody was willing to be a big enough fool to build a branch line the traffic would come to the main line and they would get the branch lines in the end at their own price. And they would have got them but for the genius of these two men, who succeeded in connecting up Port Arthur and Winnipeg. They built a line there, so that, when the Manitoba Government had an opportunity to buy the Northern Pacific, there were only two men outside of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company who were able to handle the matter and to carry grain to the Great Lakes, thus giving the West the one thing for which its people had asked for years, namely, railway competition. It is idle to say that the Manitoba Government did it. I am willing to give my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works all the credit that is so justly due to him; but it takes two men to make a bargain; and it is due to the fact that Mackenzie and Mann put their energy and capital into that railway enterprise that there was a railway from Winnipeg to Port Arthur able to deal with the Manitoba government independently of the Canadian Pacific. There was no one else who could have leased the Northern Pacific Manitoba railway, and in that way given railway competition to the Canadian West except the Canadian Northern. That is the first thing that occurred.

In connection with the construction in 1896 of these roads that nobody else would have anything to do with, Mackenzie and Mann got 4,100,000 acres of land. Apparently they took 100,000 acres of that land for themselves, and turned in the other 4,000,000 acres for the benefit of the Canadian Northern railway. My hon. friend from Calgary (Mr. Bennett) says that some of these lands were later on exchanged, and that the new grant was made to the Canadian Northern railway and not to Mackenzie and Mann or these other companies that originally earned the land grant, as if that were of any consequence. The only reason that was so was because these earlier roads had been amalgamated with the Canadian Northern railway, and the Canadian Northern railway had absorbed the lands granted to these railways and was therefore at that time the company entitled to receive those exchange lands. There is no particular mystery in regard to the fact that other land than the particular land that they got was given to them. A portion of the land originally granted was found to be unfit for settlement; and where it was not fit for settlement, the Government were bound to give them land fit for settlement. The Canadian Pacific railway got land fit for settlement in exchange for lands originally granted which were unfit, and it was perfectly fair and proper to give the Canadian Northern railway lands fit for settlement, seeing that the grant called for that class of land. So much for that situation.

I want it to be borne in mind that I accept the statement of the Prime Minister, who has investigated this matter through the accountants, as to the value of that land which these gentlemen were entitled to put into their pockets; in the same way as other gentlemen in the Canadian West put into their pockets land grants in connection with the construction of railway lines in that country, as is well known to every one here. Mackenzie and Mann had precisely the same right to retain these land grants for their own use and profit but they turned the lands over to the Canadian Northern. When the Prime Minister says that that land is of the value of $30,000,000, I accept his statement, and I will deal with it later on. It is of importance in regard to what the people of Canada must do, because they must deal fairly with these gentlemen, just as they must deal fairly with themselves. We are too great a people not to rise to an occasion of this kind, and deal well and fairly with those who have dealt well and fairly with us.

I will now leave these land grants for the moment and come to the question of freight rates and freight competition and the benefit the people of Canada have already derived in this regard by the work of Mackenzie and Mann. I have here Chapter 39 of the Statutes of 1901 of Manitoba; and section 8, subsections (a) and (b) read as follows:

> (a) Reductions amounting to more than four cents per hundred pounds on the tariff rates in force on the date of said indenture for the carriage of grain from Manitoba to a lake Superior port and,
> (b) Reductions amounting together to more than fifteen per cent on the tariff rates in force on the said date for the carriage of all other freight from and to points in Manitoba, and from and to points in Manitoba to and from Fort William and Port Arthur.

I also call attention to section 10 of the schedule to this statute, which says:

> Commencing when this agreement takes effect, the company shall reduce its passenger rates in Manitoba to not exceeding three cents per passenger per mile.

I may say for the information of some hon. gentlemen that the former rate was four cents, so that the reduction has been 25 per cent, an enormous reduction.

I am now going to read some testimony as to the benefits the people of the West and of Canada generally have received from this undertaking, from a paper of which some of us have certainly heard. I refer to the Globe, published in Toronto.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: We have heard of it before. 12 noon.

Mr. BRISTOL: An article in that paper under date of March 24, 1914, says:

> The Canadian Northern railway has a part to play, and no insignificant part, in the development of Canada. It has already been of value in providing lower passenger and freight rates over wide sections of the prairies than were obtainable under monopoly conditions.
>
> Railway experts state that ninety per cent of these reductions originated on Canadian Northern railway lines during the past ten years. The reductions in the grain rates from railway stations in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta to lake Superior made by the Canadian Northern railway in 1903 and followed by the Canadian Pacific railway represent a saving to the farmers on the crops of 1903 to 1913, both inclusive, of $17,000,000, or four per cent on nearly $39,000,000 per year. And this is not all. There were large reductions in the rates from Port Arthur and Fort William not only to stations in Manitoba, but to Saskatchewan and Alberta, and the Canadian Pacific also had to reduce its rates. There were substantial reductions in the rates on coal from Port Arthur and on lumber from various points. There was a reduction of 15 per cent in the local rates in Manitoba and 7½ per cent in Saskatchewan and Alberta. It would be difficult to compute the amount of the reductions made by the Canadian Northern railway and forced on the Canadian Pacific railway, but outside of the reductions of $17,000,000 on grain to lake Superior the saving in the rates on freight from eastern Canada and the United States, and locally between provincial and interprovincial points, would be twice, possibly even three times, the sum above-mentioned.

I am content to take it at twice, and leave it at $50,000,000. (Reading):

In over twenty years the only reductions in the grain rates to Fort William made by the Canadian Pacific were those made under the Crowsnest Pass agreement in 1898 and 1899 (three cents per 100 pounds), and the reductions forced on it by the Canadian Northern railway in 1903. The rates on grain and flour from stations on the Canadian Pacific in Saskatchewan and Alberta are higher to-day than twenty years ago.

They have since been reduced, I believe, by the Railway Commission. (Reading):

It is argued that the West would be just as well off with one strong road like the Canadian Pacific railway as with competing lame ducks that cannot compete because of overcapitalization or poor physical condition. The facts presented above prove this to be a specious fallacy. The Canadian Northern railway and the Grand Trunk Pacific have a great work to do in the West, and no one desires to see either of them so financially hampered as to be forced to the wall or sold out to the Canadian Pacific railway.

I asked the Department of Railways to verify those facts for me, and I will read a part of the statement. I think the statements made to the Globe are substantially accurate as to the savings in the Canadian West.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: As always.

Mr. BRISTOL: I am very glad we can agree on this point anyway. I call attention to page 46 of the report of the Railway Commisioners in the western freight rates case, where the following important statements are made by Mr. Drayton:

The next reduction was forced upon the Canadian Pacific as a result of an agreement entered into by the Canadian Northern with the Government of Manitoba. As a result of that agreement, the 14 cent grain rate from Winnipeg to Port Arthur and Fort William became 10 cents, and reductions approximating 15 per cent of the tariff rates on all other freight were made. The result of the agreement was that, although the operations of the Canadian Northern at that time were comparatively small, for competitive reasons the Canadian Pacific was compelled to accept the scale of rates that the Canadian Northern had been paid to adopt, and to put into effect decreases which, according to the evidence adduced by Mr. Cowan, the Canadian Pacific thought could but result in the insolvency of the Canadian Northern.

Well, it has not done so up to date.

On the assumption that the existing Canadian Pacific Railway tariff, in force prior to the Manitoba agreement, represents 100, the Canadian Northern's rates were made 85 in Manitoba; and the Canadian Pacific, as the result of the competition of the Canadian Northern at the lower rate, reduced its rates also to 85. Complementary to this action, the Canadian Pacific reduced its rates in Saskatchewan and Alberta to 92½. The reduction in Saskatchewan and Alberta does not seem to have been brought about either by agreement or competititon. Scaling as they do 15 per cent of the standard so reduced, town tariffs in Manitoba were reduced to 70, and in Saskatchewan and Alberta to 77½.

The Comptroller of Statistics of the Department of Railways and Canals goes on to say that there were 18,980,946 tons of grain of various kinds shipped during the period from 1901 to 1913.

The saving at the rate of 4 cents per one hundred pounds, would be 80 cents per ton, and on 18,980,946 tons would amount to $15,184,757. From this calculation is unavoidably eliminated the volume of grain which was moved between Winnipeg and the storage elevators at Port Arthur and subsequently by rail eastward. The saving would be swollen by just that much. Then, there is the money value of fifteen per cent reduction on commodities other than grain. I asked concerning the branch lines of railways and general mileage increase in the West, and I found that from 1907 to 1913 the Canadian Pacific railway built 1,835 miles, while in the same time the Canadian Northern railway built 2,186 miles and the Grand Trunk Pacific 1,023 miles. It can at least be claimed that these substantial additions made to the transportation facilities of the West should in a large degree be credited to the Canadian Northern Railway system.

The Canadian Northern Railway system have shown their ability, even as an isolated system, not connected, as a granger road, to compete with the Canadian Pacific Railway system and to reduce rates in the Canadian West. The Canadian people to-day have received the benefit of $50,000,000 in cash, by reason of the Canadian Northern Railway system going into the West, by reason of the genius of these men; and up to this moment, it has not cost the Canadian people one dollar on the guarantees they have given. And what have the Canadian people got? A network of branch lines in that country such as does not exist in any other country of similar area in the world. And there goes with that, of necessity, the opening up of the country. The very thing which this Dominion has been spending hundreds of millions on the Transcontinental to accomplish has been accomplished by the Canadian Northern Railway system with no cash aid except a paltry $25,000,000 of subsidies amounting to $2,912 per mile, or less than the usual Dominion Government subsidy of $3,200 per mile towards the total of their expenditure and Government guarantees of less than half of their subvention—guarantees which have not cost Canada one dollar.

My hon. friend from Calgary yesterday dealt with the question of the subsidiary companies. It seemed to affect him terribly that there were so many companies in connection with this system. My hon. friend is probably one of the best company lawyers in this country, and he knows, I am sure, as well as any one in this House, how these companies are, one and all, financed. He knows, for instance, that if you are going to build an elevator, you form an elevator company and issue direct the bonds of that elevator company, so that the person who buys those bonds has a first mortgage on the particular property in respect of which he is putting up his money. So with a terminal company, if they were unable to finance it, as the Canadian Pacific railway do, through their main company, they must give the persons who take the bonds security on, in this illustration, the terminal property, the very property upon which their money is advanced. That is easily accomplished by issuing first mortgage bonds of the terminal company and a certain amount of common stock which goes into the hands of the parent company which controls this and the other subsidiary companies.

The hon. gentleman said also that Mr. Lash had 'performed every known feat of financing.' I do not know whether it is well to follow a statement of that kind. Everybody knows that these securities have been sold in England, and that if you are going to raise money in England you must go with the securities that the English investor wants. This road, like any other concern that is looking for English money, must be financed on the basis on which the English investor is willing to take the security. Neither Mr. Lash or anybody else can dictate to an English banking house what form the securities shall take. Believe me, they will have the securities in the form they want them, and the securities of the Canadian Northern railway are not different from others placed with British investors.

There was one matter on which my hon. friend from Calgary was particularly eloquent and forceful; I even thought, when he presented it to the House, that he was prepared to rest his case upon it; for he made a most unjustifiable attack upon the Solicitor General (Mr. Meighen) and while that hon. gentleman was absent from the House, made the statement, and was willing that it should go to the people, that the statement presented by the Canadian Northern railway to its English shareholders and investors was false. I have here the statement of the company as at 30th June, 1913. It shows a surplus as follows:

Land account	$16,930,835 01
Railway account.	6,778,384 65
Total..	$23,709,219 66

The hon. gentleman waved his hands, and speaking in stentorian tones demanded why they did not take this surplus and pay their debts. Now, this surplus is shown on the liability side, not on the assets side. It is a liability, that is, it is a surplus which has been disposed of, because you have to look for it in the assets if it is shown on the liability side. When you turn to the assets side you find this:

Deferred payment and accrued interest on land grant sales, $7,834,174.42.

That item refers to the land account in respect of which they are entitled to $16,930,835.01, and it accounts for $7,834,174.42 of the surplus shewn as a liability. And again:

Cash with National Trust Company account of land sales, $2,962,310.93.

This accounts for a further sum and the balance obviously has been absorbed in the other assets of the company otherwise the assets and liabilities would not balance. The Solicitor General said it had gone into betterments. Obviously that is where it went—why? The company issued their bonds, which went into railway construction. If they made betterments, therefore, they could not make them except with the money that the railway earned. That is simple, surely. The idea of saying that this is a false representation to the English investor! Can one imagine a first-class company lawyer, one who associates with leaders in financial affairs, making a statement of that kind and putting his personal belief behind it? To me it almost passes belief. I hope I have made the point plain, because I regard it as of some importance. If any hon member listening to me does not understand it, I hope he will let me clear away his misunderstanding. To me it is so obvious that I should think even the hon. member for Calgary ought to be able to understand it.

Then there was another matter that was going to turn into a terrific scandal—the Imperial Rolling Stock Company. I have asked for information, and I find that the Imperial Rolling Stock Company was precisely as it had been described. In order to prevent the rolling stock coming under the main railway mortgage, the Rolling Stock Company intervened and bought the rolling stock, when they had credit enough for it, and sold it to the railway company with their tag upon it, so that it did not pass under the main bond mortgage. I have the information from the Government that not one dollar of profit was made out of that concern and not one dollar has ever been paid in dividends in respect of the rolling stock of the company. I almost thought, however, that the hon. gentleman was going to throw a fit when he was dealing with that rolling stock company. He picked up this Eleventh Annual Report of the Canadian Northern and held up his hands in holy horror at this item that he found among acquired securities in Canadian Northern Prairie Lands Company $483,393.35. Let me call attention to the fact that is precisely the value of that stock on the London market at that time, about $12 per share. It was bought for $5 a share, or rather was received in exchange for land which they sold at $3 per acre. The amount simply represents land which they put in and which they took stock for. They sold some of the stock, and got the money, which went into the road, and this is simply the value of the balance of the stock exchanged for land—it is put under acquired securities—of the stock which they still hold.

My hon. friend said: Since when did a fraudulent misrepresentation form the basis of an agreement for further aid? I assume that this remark had reference to a statement made by the Prime Minister last year, in which he said:

> The Canadian Northern Railway Company professes itself able, under ordinary conditions, to raise all the money that may be necessary for the completion of the line.

I am sure that no man in this country will contend that conditions are ordinary in Canada, in Great Britain, in the United States, or in the money markets of the world. War, fear of war, decreased railway earnings, lack of confidence, have made conditions extraordinary. Financial people have told me that financial conditions are worse than they have been for the last fifty years, and they have grown steadily worse since these gentlemen were here a year ago. I myself know a little of the law, and I do not believe that a statement of intention may constitute fraudulent misrepresentation. I am sure that legal gentlemen of the House will bear me out in saying that an untrue statement of fact may constitute fraudulent misrepresentation, but not a statement of future intention to do something. My hon. friend, however, is sometimes as mixed in his law as he is in his facts.

My hon. friend dealt with the question of $70,000,000, and $77,000,000 of stock, and the ten per cent. I will not follow him in that matter, except to say that I understand that the Government, for their own protection, preferred to make that $7,000,000 of stock paid up by Act of Parliament. Without any consultation with the Canadian Northern railway or Mr. Z. A. Lash, who was not in this country at the time, a measure so providing was put through Parliament. So that if there were $7,000,000 extra issued last year and if the per cent were eleven instead of ten, the Government of this country take the responsibility; they wanted to be sure that the stock was fully paid up, and they asked Parliament so to provide. In my judgment, this was quite the proper thing to be done.

My hon. friend speaks of this road as a bankrupt road and, speaking of its physical condition, refers to dirt ballast and things of that kind. He did not give us his authority for the assertions which he made, though he did tell us that he went through British Columbia and that he was afraid he would fall into the Fraser river. That seems unfortunate. The proof of the pudding is always in the eating. We have had the evidence of the Railway Department of this country, not forgetting the Toronto Globe, that this system has been good enough to save the people of this country $50,000,000 since it was created; consequently it must have been good enough to carry traffic. My hon. friend really makes no distinction between a main line and a branch line. Obviously the people do not spend large amounts of money on branch lines of railways if they can avoid it. Why? If you have a branch line on the prairies of the Canadian West that is operated three months in the year for special traffic, would you spend money on any special ballast? Would you make the railroad anything better than was necessary for the purposes of carrying grain? Is that not what the farmer wants? I have seen in the South, railway tracks laid right over the cane-lands without ballast and taken up again after the sugar cane was harvested. The whole theory of this class of transportation is to provide such facilities as will enable the train to get to the main line of railway and get there safely. This railway which is called a bankrupt and useless railway, carried over one-third of the grain of the Canadian West last year to Port Arthur. What else did it do? It carried 1,681,760 passengers in 1912, with only one person killed, and carried nearly two million passengers in 1913, with none killed. Is that not a magnificent record for a railroad? My hon. friend says these people do not know how to operate a railroad. They do not kill anybody; they carry the traffic; they provide competition. They show a surplus in earnings in the West even while under construction; but, in his opinion, they do not know how to operate a railroad. They must go to Sir Thomas Tait to learn how to do that. Did any one ever hear such nonesense?

Let me give you one more illustration. Do you know that this line of railroad, during the last four months of the year 1913, September, October, November and December, carried over 40,000 cars of grain at the rate of 335 cars a day? I have the figures from the Railway Department, and I am talking by the book. The best record the Canadian Pacific railway ever made on a single track road was 250 cars a day. The Canadian Northern this year has run 335 cars a day for a period of four months: 12 trans a day, with 30 cars each, and, in respect of passenger trains, four more on top of that. Yet the hon. gentleman has the audacity to say that these people do not know how to operate a railroad. I think the performance of this road, under the conditions which have existed, is remarkable, and something of which any one may well be proud. What are they coming to Parliament for? They are coming to Parliament for a guarantee of $45,000,000, of which some $27,000,000, as was suggested, is wanted for rolling stock, and $10,000,000 for betterments. What is that $10,000,000 for betterments for? It is to put 80-lb. rails on the road from Winnipeg to Edmonton, where for 620 miles they now have 60-lb. rails; it is to put up a proper balast on the line and to bring it up to the standard of the National Transcontinental line. No road can be built in a day. The National Transcontinental is the best road that has ever been built in this country, so far as construction is concerned, and the Government of this country are requiring that the new portions of this line, from Port Arthur to Montreal and from Yellow Head Pass to Vancouver, shall be built up to the standard of the National Transcontinental in respect of ballast and rails, and that it shall be in all general respects sufficient for the purposes of fast transportation.

What else have these gentlemen done? Why is this road in the future going to be of greater benefit to Canada than it has been in the past? The railway profiles show that the Canadian Northern transcontinental line through the mountain section has even a better profile than the Transcontinental railway in the ratio of ·07 to 1 per cent; has a better grade than the Canadian Pacific railway, in the ratio of ·07 to 2·4; has a better grade than any transcontinental railway in the United States as well, over this most difficult section; and in other respects the grades and curves of the Canadian Northern railway are superior to those of the Canadian Pacific railway as they exist to-day. What does that mean? That means that as this road gradually settles down in two or three years and gets re-ballasted in places and filled in as a road does, because you cannot make it in a day, you must have use and weather conditions and time for structures to be filled in and brought up to standard, you will find a road which in grades and in curves will be superior to any road on this continent. What does a ·7 per cent grade mean through the Rocky mountains as against a 2·4 per cent grade? It means that a train of sixty cars can be hauled by one engine as against a train of thirty cars by two engines. What does that mean in getting traffic between Edmonton and Vancouver? It means according to experts a saving of $1,200,000 and upward on every 6,000,000 tons of freight hauled. The Canadian Northern Railway line is only 762 miles from Edmonton to Vancouver. The Transcontinental line is 952 miles from Edmonton to Prince Rupert. Consequently the Canadian Northern railway is nearer the sea. The western system of this line, over 5,000 miles, is earning its fixed charges, it has been successful, it has paid and since its inception has had surplus earnings amounting to $6,778,384.65 which have gone into betterments. It is in no sense bankrupt. It is prosperous. But when my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition, then Prime Minister, made up his mind to have another transcontinental railway, in connection with the Grand Trunk Railway system, the Canadian Northern railway either had to get from ocean to ocean or they had to lose all through traffic which at that time they were getting through the Grand Trunk system. Their existence as a railroad was at stake, and they were compelled to become a transcontinental system. My hon. friend from Calgary (Mr. Bennett) enjoyed himself very thoroughly over the Bay of Quinte road and the deficit of that poor little road. I happen to come from that part of the country; I know the road and it does not deserve the abuse my hon. friend gave it. As a matter of fact, that road was bought because it was to form part of the system of the Canadian Northern railway between Montreal and Toronto, and the value of the thirty miles which the Canadian Northern railway acquired will be a great deal more than two or three times the deficit when it is a part of a connected-up system. The same thing applies to the Canadian Northern Quebec. My hon. friend took Poor's Manuel and showed, very properly, that a branch line railway, without any connections, was not paying. No one would argue that such a line would pay in this country. But, as part of this transcontinental system, connecting Montreal and Quebec, it was a vital railway for the Canadian Northern railway to have, and it was worth many times to that system the amount of the deficit of which my hon. friend speaks. That is why these branch lines have been bought, and that is why you get no statement as regards the eastern lines. Why? Because the eastern lines in Ontario have been and are to-day under construction. But I say that it is one of the miracles of modern railway construction and operation that the Canadian Northern railway in the Canadian West was able, through all these years, to build and construct railways and operate them without one deficit and without costing one dollar to the people of Canada or to the Canadian West during the actual construction period of the railroad in respect of the Government guarantees. That has never been done before in any country. I think when the hon. member for Calgary is so anxious to change the personnel of the must be some other reason than the reason gentlemen in control of this road, there that he does not believe that they are able to construct and operate railroads. The eastern system will be connected up with the western system, with the result that instead of the company having, as they now have, a branch line in the Canadian West, dependent on practically one set of crops or one kind of merchandise, they will have a well balanced system, they will be able to take the manufactures of eastern Canada, so far as they are required, to the West, they will be able to bring the products of the West here. They will be able to bring the timber and fish and coal of British Columbia into the western prairie country, where it is so much needed. I venture to state that the history of the success of the Canadian Pacific railway in this country, of which we are all proud, will, in the future, attend the Canadian Northern railway, once the system is connected up and properly put in operation.

[Mr. Bristol.]

We have heard a great deal on this question of capital stock. It it is really a very simple question and not at all complicated. I think it will do no harm to go over it. The Canadian Northern Railway system proper to-day has $77,000,000 of capital stock issue, $70,000,000 controlled by Mackenzie and Mann, and $7,000,000 by the Government of Canada. Some $68,000,000 of the capital stock of the subsidiary companies is outstanding. My hon. friend from Calgary pointed out that $45,000,000 of that $68,000,000 was held by, or in trust for, the Canadian Northern railway. That is true to this extent, that the Canadian Northern railway will be ultimately entitled to it when they comply with the trust or pay the necessary money. But the effect of what the Government are doing in this case is that they take the $68,000,000 of outstanding stock belonging to companies other than the Canadian Northern railway and they say that those stocks shall go into the treasury of the Canadian Northern railway, and be held there for all time and in return for that there will be issued $23,000,000 of fully paid-up stock of the Canadian Northern railway. That stock does not go to Mackenzie and Mann except as Mackenzie and Mann are legally entitled to that $68,000,000 as anybody is entitled to any stock which he may buy and pay for. The Government of Canada, in the bargain they are making, after taking the $68,000,000 of stock and selling it to the Canadian Northern railway for $23,000,000, say to Mackenzie, Mann and Company and the Canadian Northern railway: That $23,000,000 must be transferred, with $10,000,000 more that you now have, to the people of this country. The capital stock has been reduced, obviously, because if that $145,000,000 were left outstanding, that would be the stock on which these companies would have to earn dividends. The hon. member for Edmonton in referring to these companies said that, for instance, the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway capitalization was $10,000,000, and that they would have to earn dividends on that. My hon. friend is entirely mistaken, because that $10,000,000 of stock goes into the hands and becomes the property of the Canadian Northern Railway system, and it is only the $100,000,000 of stock, oustanding, that will ever be in the hands of the public or on which any dividends can ever be declared or paid. That is another reason why it is idle to follow my hon. friend from Calgary through his long oration on these various roads and their capitalization. It becomes quite unnecessary, because the only capitalization that the people and Parliament of Canada have to consider is the $100,000,000 capital which now constitutes the capital of the Canadian Northern railway. One hon. gentleman makes the suggestion that there was $25,000,000 more in respect of convertible stock. That is quite true for this reason, that the convertible stock is convertible into common stock, and if it is taken out of convertible stock and changed into common stock it means that the fixed obligations of the Canadian Northern Railway system are decreased by $25,000,000 and the common stock is increased by $25,000,000. No one can have objection to a change of that character. If a man went to the Canadian Northern railway with convertible stock and changed it for common stock, there could be no objection. But let it be clear that the $25,000,000 of convertible stock no longer remains a fixed charge on the Canadian Northern Railway system, but becomes common stock. We have nothing to do with that, it has been sold in England and is out of this country. But there is $100,000,000 of stock that this country has to deal with.

Mr. AMES: Do I understand that the $25,000,000 of convertible stock, if exchanged for common stock, would carry with it voting power?

Mr. BRISTOL: Obviously, I think, I cannot understand that there could be more than one kind of common stock.

Mr. AMES: So that there would be $125,000,000 of common stock carrying voting power, if it fell into the hands of the general public.

Mr. BRISTOL: Precisely.

Mr. AMES: Then the Government or general public would have the controlling interest.

Mr. BRISTOL: That is quite true. As that $25,000,000 of convertible stock has been sold abroad and the money put into that road, I think that so far as this debate is concerned we cannot deal with that matter; but there is $100,000,000 of stock which we can deal with, and it is the only stock that affects the people of this country, as it is the only stock on which dividends will be paid. I put the proposition to you in this fashion. Here is an enterprise which, when completed, will have cost about $375,000,000, including about $70,000,000 for rolling stock and about $25,000,000 for terminals the people of Canada have got the benefit of every dollar of that vast expenditure. I want just a moment to compare its cost with the cost of the main line of the Transcontinental. The main line of the Canadian Northern railway costs $106,000,000 without the terminals, which figure out at $34,000 a mile. The Transcontinental costs $305,000,000—my hon. friend from South Renfrew will correct me if I am wrong—which figures out at about $80,000 or $84,000 a mile. The importance of that comparison is this: Giving the former Government of Canada every credit for desiring to construct a transcontinental railway in the cheapest possible fashion, the result practically is that it cost the Government about $45,000 a mile more to construct the Transcontinental than it cost Mackenzie and Mann to construct the Canadian Northern railway. Look at the proposition in this way: The people of Canada are interested in the construction of this road at the cheapest possible price. That is vital in order to give competition and cheaper rates. The fixed charges of the Canadian Northern railway will amount to about $12,000,000. The hon. member for Calgary made that statement, and I quite agree with him. The fixed charges of the Canadian Pacific railway are about $10,000,000; but the Canadian Pacific has about $260,000,000 of common stock outstanding on which it is paying 10 per cent dividends, and if it failed to pay these dividends financial disaster would come on the railway and the people of this country, as no stock is more highly regarded than Canadian Pacific, and properly so. The Canadian Pacific, then, has to earn, including the $10,000,000 of fixed charges and the $26,000,000 of dividends on the common stock outstanding, $36,000,000 in order to keep its stock before the public in the proper shape. The Canadian Northern railway has only $12,000,000 of fixed charges, and only $100,000,000 of capital stock; so that when the day comes when this capital stock is earning 10 per cent it will have $22,000,000 of fixed charges, and dividends of which the Government will be getting $4,000,000 a year. The fixed charges and dividends will still be $14,000,000 less than the fixed charges and dividends of the Canadian Pacific, because I think it is only fair in this connection to take into account the dividends on the common stock outstanding of the Canadian Pacific. What has this road to show for that expenditure? When the $375,000,000 are spent, they will have 10,000 miles of railway throughout Canada —an enormous railway system. The Canadian Pacific railway mileage is rather larger, about 14,000 miles, I think. The point I want to make is this: Here is $100,000,000 of common stock to be dealt with, and here are two gentlemen who admittedly have put into the enterprise over $30,000 in land value, quite apart from anything else, and who if they were to be dismissed and, as my hon. friend from Calgary says, sent about their business, would surely be entitled to a claim for their work as contractors in this enterprise; and is there any man in this country that believes that less than ten per cent on the cost of the enterprise would be allowed by any board of arbitrators? If you take that figure, these gentlemen would be legally entitled to $37,500,000, which anybody in this country, on an arbitration, would give them for their work in connection with this railway as contractors and $30,000,000 cash for lands. These two sums for land and contractors services. That, in my humble judgment, more than pays in cash for the $60,000,000 of stock. How idle it is to talk of the printing press, and of water, when you have to face facts of that kind that cannot be contraverted. But that is not all. What did these gentlemen do in addition? The Government of Canada says: Coming in at this last stage, we are to be entitled to $33,000,000 of your stock for the $45,000,000 guarantee. If that is a fair price for a guarantee, what price should be paid Mackenzie, Mann and Company, Limited, for guaranteeing every dollar invested in this enterprise from its inception to the present day, and putting their personal guarantee behind it? My hon. friend from Calgary says that Mackenzie, Mann and Company, Limited, are worth $50,000,000. They have guaranteed this investment. What price would they get in common stock for that guarantee? Does anybody think that they can get a guarantee for ten per cent on an investment? Any hon. gentleman who has had any experience in the construction of railways knows that first of all you have to get your charter; then you have to make your surveys; then your plans have to be laid out; then you have to get a contractor to do the work, and you go to a bank and say: Will you finance this road during construction; we have certain subsidies, and So-and-So is the contractor? If the contractor is Mackenzie and Mann you will get along all right, because the bank knows they are able to pay for the cost of the railway to completion whether the subsidies are sufficient to complete it or not; but if he is not a substantial contractor, some one has to be found to endorse that paper before the bank will advance the money. That is the only way in which these things are done, and anybody who knows anything about financing a matter of this kind knows that you must give either money or stock to the person who guarantees that the railway will be completed, that the enterprise is all right, and that the securities can, and will, later on be marketed. That is another item that has not been considered in the $60,000,000. There is a further item: these gentlemen have created and promoted a great enterprise. You may scoff at promoters, you may use the word in any discreditable sense that you like, but, believe me, there has been no great enterprise of any size since the world began that has not had to be promoted and worked out by the enthusiast who believed in it. Every great enterprise requires faith, optimism, and imagination, and there is not a man who does not think that a person who has the genius to plan and carry out a great enterprise, who influences capital to take stock in an enterprise which is a great national benefit for any country, should be paid for his services. But where is the payment for that? I venture to say that $100,000,000 would not be regarded by any arbitrator as anything else than the cash value of the services of these gentlemen in connection with this enterprise, when we consider that the sum of $375,000,000 has been honestly and carefully expended over a period of eighteen years without one dollar of graft being taken by the contractors—or profit, if you prefer to call it so. But are they getting $100,000,000 of cash? Are they getting $30,000,000 of cash? Are they getting any cash? They are getting stock to the amount of $60,000,000 and they have to take their chance upon that with the Railway Commission to fix rates. The assistance that the Government is giving them is this. They say: we are going to guarantee your securities to the extent of $45,000,000, we are going to give you three years to try and operate this road after completion; we know you can build railways but we are not sure whether you can operate them, we do not know whether you will make default and if you make default after three years we will take the railway away from you with every dollar you put into it and we need not give you one dollar compensation. That, in short, is the bargain which the Government have made with these people in respect to this business.

I venture to say that no firm of bankers in this country, the United States, or England, could have dealt with this matter in a more businesslike fashion, in a more statesmanlike fashion, in a more patriotic fashion, for the interests of the people of Canada than the Government have done on this occasion. My hon. friend from Calgary waves his hand and says that the people must have their rights and that the people's rights must be protected. Since when did the hon. gentleman become the only champion of the people in this country? The long training that my hon. friend had in defending the interests of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in the West and fighting the Canadian Northern Railway Company. I am afraid, has slightly warped his judgment in connection with this matter and has prevented him from bringing to the consideration of it the same fair-minded treatment that he otherwise would have devoted to the subject. But as I state it was the Canadian Northern that he spent most of his life in fighting in the Canadian Northwest, and I fear his mind has become biased.

In dealing with this matter the Government, in my humble judgment, have considered every possible phase of the situation. They did not create the situation, out they have to deal with it. Obviously, in view of the past history of the Canadian Northern Railway Company and the cost of construction, it would have been the heigh of folly for the Government to have changed the method of construction or completion of this railway at the present time. Obviously, no two men in this country are better qualified to complete this great enterprise than they who had the honour of fathering it. The Government did wisely in not taking away from these men the natural incentive that they would have to complete this great railway system in the best possible fashion, to make it a paying system, a credit to this country and a momument to themselves, their friends, their families and the people of Canada. Under these circumstances I think it would have been most unwise if the Government had insisted on more than one director upon the board of the company or of taking any control in this way. It would have taken from these men the greatest possible incentive they could have to complete this railway and make it a success.

When you reflect, Mr. Speaker, upon the length of time that they have spent in developing this great transportation system, when you reflect that the people have already received reduced rates as the result of the introduction of a railway system which is a real competitor, when you reflect that the Canadian Northwest has been covered with branch lines which have made the settlement of that great country possible, when you reflect that, to their credit, these two men have opened up the great Saskatchewan valley and made it clear to the world that this valley is fit for settlement and that the land is of such a character that the settler can raise wheat profitably upon it, when you reflect that every government of this country has endorsed this enterprise, that every government has an undoubted interest in its success, that the people of Canada have had the full benefit of the vast expenditure and are as vitally interested in the success of this railway as even the owners of the stock. I think you will agree that when the Government of this country took forty per cent of the capital stock of the company for giving this guarantee, which if history repeats itself will cost the country not a dollar, they assuredly performed an act of statesmanship which will be remembered in the history of this country and which will redound to their credit. It marks a new era in the dealings between governments and railways for the benefit of the people. If the railway is a success the people will be $40,000,000 richer and if it fails they will own a transcontinental line and branches 10,000 miles in extent at its cost to the builders.

At One o'clock the House took recess.

The House resumed at Three o'clock.

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (South Renfrew): Mr. Speaker, in the light of modern history, it will not be unwelcome news to the House if I intimate in the beginning that I am not going to follow an established precedent of speaking at any great length—I refer to a precedent established by myself.

The question of transportation is one to which I have given a little attention during my term of public life. While I am not vain enough to imagine that I have mastered this great problem, I have devoted some attention to it, and think I have discovered some of the difficulties that we encounter in the Dominion of Canada in working out the problem.

In the first place, we have a territory as large as the United States, comparatively sparsely populated. We have undertaken, in a manner not undertaken by any other country in the world of the same population as Canada, to afford as far as possible transportation facilities, not only to our own native Canadians, but to those whom we have asked to come from other countries to join in our citizenship. The task has been one of greater magnitude than possibly we thought in the beginning. When the Canadian Pacific railway was first discussed, honest differences of opinion arose as to the best method of carrying out the desire of the fathers of Confederation to unite the West, that was to become great, with the East, which at that time had reached greater developments. That was on the one hand. On the other hand, in the far East we had the problem of giving to the Maritime provinces railway connection with older Canada. In the latter case, the Government undertook and carried out the construction of a railway which has since remained Government-owned and Government-managed. A great deal of criticism has taken place year after year, not only in this House, but in the press, as to the benefits derived by the people not only from the construction of the Intercolonial but from its management as well. I have never departed from the idea, that first seized me when I entered into an investigation of the Intercolonial railway, namely, that it is a road of a great benefit to the people and should remain their property, not as a money-making investment but as a part of the terms of 'give and take' entered into between the various parts of the Dominion of Canada in order to round out Confederation, and make those who became a part of that great Confederation content and prosperous.

Into the far West was extended the Canadian Pacific railway, a work of great magnitude, and one that required, not only vision into the future, foresight as to the Canada that was to be, but financial courage and financial sacrifice. At least at the time of its construction many there were who thought it would entail financial sacrifice. I am not one of those who feel sorry that the men who took a great risk in the construction of the Canadian Pacific railway became wealthy after some years. It is a credit to the development of Canada that such has been the case; and it is an incentive to other men to invest capital in order that this new country of ours may be developed, because, unless capital has some security, development will cease.

Years after the Canadian Pacific railway came into operation, the Canadian Northern railway came into being, as has been described by several other speakers. As the result of the work of the Canadian Northern railway and its ramifications and the men connected with it, there is west of the Great Lakes what is, to my mind, the best gathering system in that territory. By 'gathering system' I mean ramifications and network of branch lines that extend into the most productive parts of the plains. This work was carried out first with the assistance of the Manitoba Government, then with that of the Dominion and the provincial Governments. Finally it developed into a transcontinental system or ambitions for a transcontinental system. It has been said to me on several occasions by persons connected with the Canadian Northern railway that the National Transcontinental or Grand Trunk Pacific railway have usurped some of the territory that the Canadian Northern thinks belonged to them originally, and through which their lines were intended to operate. I do not know as to that, but I know that the Canadian Northern railway has developed into a very large system.

I may say, without being considered partial, that the Canadian Northern, on the whole, even through its proposed main line, traverses territory as rich as that traversed by either of the other two transcontinental lines, to put it mildly. I do not agree with some hon. gentlemen who have stated that the line east of Port Arthur passes through a wilderness that will not be productive. That statement applied to the Canadian Pacific railway is partially true, because that railway but fringes the great fertile territory of Ontario that, at the time of its construction, was practically unknown. It is known, however, that in the northern part of Ontario there are millions of acres of very fertile land. The Grand Trunk Pacific railway traverses a portion of this territory and the Canadian Northern railway traverses equally as rich a portion of it. Not only are there millions of acres of very fertile land, but the mineral wealth of the newer portions of Ontario, to my mind, is not yet known. The timber wealth is not yet exhausted. It may be that the massive pine that raised its top skyward has been reduced in quantity; but there are in the newer portions of Ontario many million cords of pulp-wood and other timber of great value, which will become of greater value as the years go by. I do not at all agree, again I say, with those who insist that, from Port Arthur east, these two new transcontinental lines traverse territory that will not produce traffic. In the years that are to come, when some of the men who are in this House look back, I believe they will be surprised at any one thinking that that portion of Ontario and Quebec would be unproductive. Already there are springing up hundreds of farms, hundreds of farmers going into that country, pulp-mills arising, other industries that will arise, which point to a great development that will not only be of great benefit to the railways concerned, but to the two provinces and to the Dominion of Canada at large.

Mr. BORDEN: May I ask the hon. gentleman—purely for information, and because I know he must have made something of a study of this while he was Minister of Railways and Canals—do the observations which have just fallen from him apply to that portion of the territory immediately north of lake Superior, where, as we know, the Canadian Pacific railway runs through a very rocky country? I mean, does he think that north of that there is a good country such as he has described?

Mr. GRAHAM: Not, perhaps, directly north; but a very few miles east of that the good country does begin.

Mr. GEO. E. FOSTER: And runs eastward?

Mr. GRAHAM: Yes. I have been told that in conversation on many occasions. And in studying the investigations of officials of the Ontario Government particularly, I have arrived at the conclusion that in that northern country we shall find —we have already begun to find—minerals that will develop a great traffic even just north of lake Superior. As I have pointed out, the Canadian Pacific railway fringes the lake, and has only one side, while the other railways will have traffic on two sides.

M. J. D. REID: They run many miles back of the lake?

Mr. GRAHAM: Now, the Canadian Northern Railway Company—and I speak of it for the moment as a whole—desire to have a Transcontinental line. That was not an uncommendable ambition. And, speaking for myself, I think there is room in Canada for the three transcontinental lines. If not, we are building on a false foundation, and are making a mistake as to the future greatness of this country. Because, if, with our immense territory, as large as that of the United States, we are forever to continue on the basis of a population of ten millions, then Canada can never be the great country that we have believed Canada is to be. In laying the foundation of these great transcontinental systems, I believe the people of Canada acted wisely. I am not going to criticise the gentlemen behind any of these projects, for we are concerned more with what we ourselves have done in this Parliament, and what we need to consider is whether what we did in what we thought was the interest of the people was really in the interest of the people. So, if our population is to increase, as I believe it will—as everybody believes it will—if the great West of Canada, the fertility of which we have only begun to use, is to produce from the millions of acres still undeveloped, we shall need all the transportation facilities we have provided; and I believe we shall need the water transportation as well as rail transportation. For it is a well known fact that where you have the competition of water transportation you increase traffic. If hon. gentlemen will look at the history of transportation companies, if they will consider the movements of commerce to markets, they will find that where there has been water competition it has not decreased the traffic by rail, but that in nearly every instance the traffic has increased as the traffic by water has increased. And that stands to reason. For, no matter how many boards of railway commissioners may be appointed, it still remains true that carriage by water is a great regulator of freight rates. That is evidenced by the fact that as soon as summer arrives and the boats begin to run the railways reduce their rates and bring into force rates that do not prevail when navigation is closed.

The Solicitor General (Mr. Meighen) took a little shot at the National Transcontinental. I do not blame him; I suppose it was natural, and possibly I should have done the same had I been in his place. But we are not discussing the Transcontinental; we did that at some length several weeks ago. But I would gently remind the Solicitor General of the fact that in these very resolutions he is asking for money to do on the Canadian Northern railway what he said should not have been done on the Transcontinental—money to provide steel structures, heavier rails, better grades, easier curves. Why? To bring this road up to standard so that it can compete with the Transcontinental and the Canadian Pacific railway. That is a pretty good vindication of my position and the position of the late Government. I wish to refer to one other thing the Solicitor General said and that my hon. friend from Central Toronto (Mr. Bristol) discussed this morning. He made a comparison between the Canadian Northern Railway system and the National Transcontinental. I think it would be out of place to go at length into that comparison, but I would like to make one remark about it: There is not a comparison there is a contrast. There is no pretence made that the Canadian Northern Railway system, even with this grant will be brought up to the high standard of the Transcontinental. My hon. friend from Centre Toronto pointed to the line through the mountain and said that the Canadian Northern railway would have better grades through the mountain section than the Transcontinental. That is—begging his pardon—superficial, and I will show the House why. It is true that at one point in the mountains the Canadian Northern railway has an 0·7 grade where the Grand Trunk Pacific has a one per cent grade. But all the rest of the Grand Trunk Pacific in that section has a grade of 0·6 against westbound and 0·4 against eastbound, and at the one point where there is a one per cent grade, a pusher grade is provided, Therefore, the ruling grade on the Grand Trunk Pacific eastbound is 0·4, while the ruling grade on the Canadian Northern railway is 0·7, and it is the ruling grade that governs, not the grade at one particular point. If hon. gentlemen will ask any railway man they will find out that what I say is correct. I do not wish to pursue these comparisons, because that is not the point under discussion.

Now, I want to say in beginning that I agree with the Prime Minister and I agree with the leader of the Opposition—which may be considered a somewhat difficult thing to do. I believe that the completion of this road must not only not be stopped, but it must not be delayed. I go, perhaps, a little further than some of my friends; I say that I am not in favour of putting the company into liquidation. I need not make any long explanation to make my position clear. In the first place, if we need the Canadian Northern railway—and we all agree that we do need it—then the sooner that we get it the better for the transportation service of Canada and the sooner we shall begin to get a return for our money. Again: Should we put this company into liquidation? I think not. Why? The situation in Canada to-day is such that the fewer liquidations of great concerns we have the better for the standing of the people of Canada. There must be a continuous construction of this road without liquidation, if possible. Now, let me speak just for a moment of what has been done by the Canadian Northern railway, and so lead up to the present situation. What the previous Government did in relation to the Canadian Northern railway has been referred to. The Solicitor General made some comparisons which I will not follow in detail for the moment. But briefly, and from memory, in 1908 the bonds of certain lines were guaranteed, and, if I remember correctly, in these guarantees for 1908 a first mortgage was taken on the lines guaranteed, and an over-riding charge on the other lines belonging to the Canadian Northern railway and in addition the tolls, revenues and so on. I say that, because the Solicitor General, if I understood him correctly, said that we did not have these in the mortgage.

Mr. BORDEN: I do not know whether the Solicitor General was correct or not, but, as I understood him, the mortgage to which he alluded was the mortgage of 1911.

Mr. GRAHAM: I will take that up in a moment. There were two other securities, but in each instance there was a first mortgage. In 1911 another guarantee was given on the line from Montreal to Port Arthur, approximately, I think, 1,000 miles. The line from Montreal to Ottawa was partially constructed, but, I think, was not up to the standard of a transcontinental line. However, a first mortgage was taken on the line from Hawkesbury to Port Arthur, excepting two small sections on which there was a previous charge and on the stock of which a first mortgage was taken to the extent of $35,000 a mile. In addition to that, there was a blanket charge on the line from Ottawa to Niagara, a part of the line which is now being constructed from Toronto to Niagara, which will, perhaps, be one of the best paying portions of the road. Laying down these premises, I want to discuss the situation as we find it to-day.

I agree with what the hon. member for St. Antoine said with regard to the Canadian Northern coming to us continually. When I was in a position to speak with some authority, I said to them: Why not let us sit down and decide what you want to finish this road; why should we not discuss it thoroughly, obtain complete reports and make up our minds as to what should be done? Like the present Government, I was assured on one or two occasions that a certain amount would finish the road. I must say, though, that what these gentlemen always referred to in discussing the matter with me was the line from Yellowhead Pass east and not the line from that point west. There are one or two things in connection with the present situation which it would be well for us to look at. Should we do anything under the present circumstances? I think I have indicated my view in that regard. What are we asked to give under these resolutions and what is it proposed that we should get? If I read the resolutions aright—and they are very intricate—we are asked to give a guarantee of $45,000,000 and running rights on Government railways. My hon. friend in discussing the Government railways, referred entirely to the Intercolonial. The provision in this regard may be one solution of the difficulty of getting the Canadian Northern into the Maritime provinces or of connecting it with the other lines in the Maritime provinces, but I would point out to the Government that to give running rights for a long haul of several hundred miles will not mean much unless the railway company that gets the running rights are allowed to carry on local traffic. If they are allowed to carry on local traffic they will reduce the amount of the local business handled by the Intercolonial railway and just to that extent make the Government road less prosperous than it is at the present time, unless—and I am not pessimistic—unless the increase in traffic will be sufficient to carry on both lines. But the running rights are not over the Intercolonial railway only. Hon. gentlemen must not forget that the Government is building a railway to Hudson bay and this agreement gives the Canadian Northern railway and its subsidiary companies the right to operate on the Hudson Bay railway. That I am not objecting to at all; but it may be possible that giving the Canadian Northern railway operation of the Hudson Bay railway may mean handing over that project with its steamship connections to the Canadian Northern railway. It struck me, in reading over the agreement, that perhaps the Canadian Northern people had more in the back of their heads than one might think when they obtained this arrangement for running rights over Government railways, because, as I have pointed out, Government railways would include not only the Intercolonial railway but the Hudson Bay railway as well.

We are asked to give $45,000,000 by way of guarantee. Why give a guarantee, under the circumstances? It is a well-known fact that this Government can borrow money more cheaply than any second party can, even with a Government guarantee, and if this money is to be given to the Canadian Northern for a term of years—it may be returned, but there is a possibility that it may not—why should it not be wiser, under existing conditions, for the Government to borrow the money itself, and save the difference in the discount and in the carrying charges between what the Government would pay directly and what this company would pay, with the Government guarantee? The Finance Minister will at once raise the point that guaranteeing a bond would not affect our borrowings in the market as much as borrowing direct would; that it would not add to our direct liability. That is true, in a measure, but nevertheless, under the present conditions and in view of the discussion which has taken place, I have very grave doubts that it would not enhance the financing ability of Canada if the Government should borrow this money direct, rather than go on the bonds of the Canadian Northern.

What are we going to get for this guarantee? I have looked over the various companies and the various securities and, although the statements are quite intricate, I think I have arrived at a fair knowledge of what they mean. I think I am not going astray when I say that the securities offered to the Government are not securities at all in the real sense of the term. We have a certain amount of stock on which a first mortgage is given, and a certain number of securities on which a second or third or fourth mortgage is given, subject, of course, to underlying obligations. If these were good securities, quite a large amount of money could be raised by the company without coming to this Government at all. I think it is fair to say that these are not considered good securities in the money markets of the world. Mark you, Mr. Speaker, that, if I have read the resolution aright, the only first mortgage on real property that the Government gets is a first mortgage on the Brockville and Westport railway. A mortgage on securities may or may not be any security at all, and there is prima facie evidence, to begin with, that these are not good securities, or the Government would not be asked to advance this $45,000,000. The Government is not getting a first mortgage on any real property except upon forty-five miles of the Brockville and Westport railway, running from Brockville north. That road is not really such good security for very much, I mean when we are speaking of millions. My right hon. friend the Prime Minister has travelled over that road with me to the village of Athens, on an occasion when we were not on political business. It is a road from forty-four to forty-five miles long, with fifty-six pound rails. Heavy traffic could not be carried over that line, yet this is one of the lines of the Canadian Northern railway system that is to be part of its transcontinental line. But if that road is to carry any heavy traffic, it will have to be rebuilt from end to end, new rails, new ballast, new ties, steel structures instead of wooden structures; so that the mortgage on real property does not add very much to the value of the securities. As I said, I think I am not putting the case very strongly when I say that the securities offered are not securities at all, outside of the Brockville and Westport railway, which is not security for a great deal of money. True, we have the land companies, the equity of redemption in certain other properties. But in these times of financial stringency, when real estate is going down instead of going up, the equity of redemption in a land company is purely speculative—and you must spell 'speculative with a capital 'S''. If I went through this House and quietly touched the members on the shoulder and asked them if they could dispose of at a profit the real estate which they have been holding for a year or two, they would say: We cannot sell it at all. Nobody wants to buy real estate. The speculative spirit drove real estate beyond the limits of prudence, both in the East and in the West, and it will take some years before the people return to sanity on real estate. The equity of redemption of a company dealing in real estate is certainly speculative, and of very little value. I think I am not going too far when I say it could not be put up for security anywhere in the money markets of the world to-day. Let me point out another thing about the security. Hon. gentlemen say, in reference to this stock and securities of the subsidiary and constituent companies: We are placing all that security in the hands of the Canadian Northern railway and making that company the proprietors of the stock in the subsidiary companies. That is true. Then the Government take another step and they say: We will hold for our own, forever, four-tenths of the stock of the Canadian Northern railway. Consequently this Government now, if these resolutions become law, will own four-tenths of all the stock in the subsidiary companies, and then they say: We are taking a mortgage on our own property to secure ourselves. Owning four-tenths of the Canadian Northern Railway stock means that they own four-tenths of all the property of the Canadian Northern railway, which includes the stock of these subsidiary companies. Now they are putting a mortgage, and calling it security, on four-tenths of the stock of the subsidiary companies, which stock is the property of the Government under the statute. They are not getting any security at all, they are counting it twice. They say: We own four-tenths of the stock of the Canadian Northern railway and four-tenths of the stock of the subsidiary companies, so that we are taking that stock as our own; and in the next paragraph they are taking the credit for putting a mortgage on the very stock which they say belongs to the Canadian Government. So far as the stock of the subsidiary companies is concerned, that is wiped out because the Government will own it anyway and they cannot possibly add to the security by taking a mortgage on their own property. As to the stock, I was glad to hear the hon. member for Centre Toronto to-day admit that the capital stock was not limited to $100,000,000 but could be made $125,000,000 under the statute. $100,000,000 is the amount named for capital stock. The provision that allows the company to issue $25,000,000 additional capital stock, to be exchanged for debenture stock, does not add, it is true, to the liability of the company; it is merely an exchange of securities. But it does add to the capital stock of the company and does change the balance of control as between the parties holding the stock, because those who now hold debenture stock will, if the exchange is made, hold $25,000,000 of the common stock, and instead of the Government of Canada owning 40 per cent they will only own $40,000,000 of that $125,000,000 when it comes to controlling the company; and should the time come for taking over the control by the purchases of stock, the Government will have to take that into consideration. I am not arguing as to the difference that it will make in the liabilities because, as I have said, we all understand that it is only a change in the name of the liability from debenture stock to capital stock; but it does make a difference in the balance of control, so far as the stock of the company is concerned. Hon. gentlemen must not become impressed with the idea, as the press seems to have been, that the Government are taking four-tenths of the stock of the Canadian Northern railway. They are not getting four-tenths of the stock if this other $25,000,000 is issued which the company is given the right to issue under the resolutions now before the House.

We have been told that the Government, under this resolution, are getting $40,000,000 of stock. That is not correct. The Government, under this resolution, are getting $33,000,000 of stock, because last year, under a statute, the Government got $7,000,000 in connection with a subsidy. That $7,000,000 must be added to the $33,000,000 to make the $40,000,000, so that under this resolution let us remember that the Government are getting $33,000,000 of stock and, in order to get that $33,000,000 of stock from Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann, they are giving them $23,000,000 in the first place and then taking it back and $10,000,000 more with it. You ask me how that is. Well, if you have read the resolution carefully you will have discovered, that in exchange for Mackenzie and Mann, representing the subsidiary companies, handing over to the Canadian Northern railway the stock of these companies in their possession, to be part of the Canadian Northern system on which a mortgage can be placed, they are getting $23,000,000 of Canadian Northern Railway stock. In the face of the fact that the Government are becoming a live partner with the Canadian Northern railway, I think the Canadian Northern Railway is making a mighty good bargain in making the trade. But the Government give them $23,000,000 and then take it back and $10,000,000 more with it. So, to make it clear, we are getting $33,000,000, $23,000,000 of which is given to Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann and outside of that nearly-a-gift to Mackenzie and Mann, we are getting $10,000,000 in connection with these resolutions. We are told that we are getting, in addition, running rights over the Canadian Northern railway and a traffic arrangement. The running rights over the Canadian Northern railway may be of some benefit, or they may be of little benefit. My remarks as applied to the running rights of the Canadian Northern railway over the Intercolonial railway will apply with the same force to the running rights of the Intercolonial railway over the Canadian Northern railway. It makes all the difference in the world what the arrangement is, what the distance is. But for every train that is put on for a long distance, local traffic must be given to the lessee, or else they cannot do business, and that will decrease the traffic of the parent company unless traffic increases very materially.

I come to the traffic arrangement. I am not sure whether it was the Prime Minister or the Solicitor General who spoke of the traffic arrangement—and rightly so—as quite a concession. Of course, I am very humble and modest, but as a matter of fact, under the statute of 1911 the Canadian Northern railway was compelled to make an arrangement for exchange of traffic with the Intercolonial railway whenever the Government should demand it. Chapter 6 of the Statutes of 1911, subsection (b) of section 14, reads:

> On the request of the Government, to make arrangements with the Intercolonial railway for the interchange of traffic between the company and the Intercolonial railway at Montreal, for such period as the Governor in Council determines, and upon such terms as are agreed upon between the parties, and if the parties fail to agree, the terms shall be fixed by the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada.

After a great deal of discussion with the owners of the Canadian Northern railway, this clause was inserted compelling the Canadian Northern railway, whenever the Government should demand it, to make a traffic arrangement with the Intercolonial railway subject to the Board of Railway Commissioners if the Government and the company could not agree.

Mr. PELLETIER: At Montreal.

Mr. GRAHAM: Which would make it absolutely necessary to have an interchange of traffic all along the line, because you could not very well have two or three exchanges. The reason why the statute did not provide that the Canadian Northern railway should immediately give an interchange of traffic was that there was not much traffic to interchange at that time, as the Canadian Northern railway was not completed. In the second place, there is a contract at the present time for the interchange of traffic between the Intercolonial railway and the Grand Trunk railway, which it would not be easy to break, and perhaps not desirable. The Government of that day did that, and I think the present Government will agree that the Grand Trunk railway, itself, when the Grand Trunk Pacific railway is finished, will probably want to make some arrangement to have its freight carried from Montreal to Quebec, and the eastern ports, over the Grand Trunk Pacific railway. An arrangement was made that when the Government should express a desire for a contract, the Canadian Northern railway would be compelled to exchange traffic with the Intercolonial railway. I am not finding fault with the arrangement in this respect at all, but some hon. gentlemen have expressed the view that that was forgotten in 1911. Nothing of importance was forgotten in 1911, as I will try to show my hon. friend. My hon. friend referred to another point, and that is the shipment of goods to Canadian ports. I do not agree here with the Prime Minister, who rather thought that leaving out the words 'unless otherwise routed' makes it compulsory for the Canadian Northern railway to carry the traffic to Canadian ports. That is an omission of words that makes no difference in actual practice. If I ship a bushel of grain from the West, I am the owner of that grain and I say how it is to go. I select the route. If I desire to ship it by one particular route the Canadian Northern railway cannot take my grain by any other route. They have to carry it to the designated port by the route I choose. That is what the statute of 1911 says. Every business man in the House will agree with me that a shipper has perfect control over the routeing of his goods. If I order some goods from John Brown, and send them by the Canadian Northern railway to Winnipeg, and then on by the Grand Trunk Pacific railway, do you think I am not the controller of those goods? The Canadian Northern railway must hand them over to the party whom I designate. So that leaving out the words 'unless otherwise routed' makes it read a little more smoothly but does not alter the meaning at all. Let me read the statute of 1911, and lest a wrong impression should go abroad, I want to point out that there is nothing in this that was not in the statute of 1911 when the bonds were guaranteed on the line from Port Arthur to Montreal. The statute reads:

> It is hereby declared that the aid herein provided for is granted by the Government for the express purpose of encouraging the transportation of goods through Canadian channels. Before such aid is granted the Governor in Council shall require the Canadian Northern Railway Company and the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Company to enter into an agreement undertaking that all freight originating on the line of the Canadian Northern Railway Company or its branches, or on the line of the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Company or its branches, not specifically routed otherwise by the shipper, shall, when destined to points in Canada be carried over the Canadian Northern railway or the Canadian Northern Ontario railway, or the connections of either of them, or over any railway within Canadian territory; and that the through rate on export traffic from the point of origin to the point of destination shall at no time be greater via Canadian ports than via United States ports, and that all such traffic, not specifically routed otherwise by the shipper, shall be carried to Canadian ocean ports; and that the Canadian Northern Railway Company and the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Company shall not in any matter within their powers directly or indirectly advise or encourage the transportation of such freight by routes other than those above provided, but shall, in all respects, in good faith, use their utmost endeavours to fulfil the conditions upon which public aid is granted, namely, the development of trade through Canadian channels and Canadian ocean ports.

Those conditions were imposed when aid was granted to the Canadian Northern in 1911, and although the wording is not exactly the same in this case, the meaning is identically the same. No railway or transportation company can take goods of mine contrary to my directions, and they are liable to a penalty if they do so. If goods be shipped without being specifically routed, it is the duty of the Canadian Northern railway, and has been ever since 1911, to take them to Canadian ports. It is the same in 1914 as it was in 1911. If the shipper routes his goods one way the Canadian Northern railway, as the carrying company, has no power to carry them by a different route. I think it was the Solicitor General who ridiculed this 1911 arrangement, saying that if we had taken the road over we would have had no terminals and consequently could not operate. I think that was the trend of his argument. I am afraid my hon friend has not read the statute. Even that was provided for, and I think when Mr. Lash was working this out he had this in his mind before he discussed it with the Solicitor General. The terminals were specifically provided for in the statute of 1911. The terminal companies were separate companies, and I say to my hon. friend and to the House that with the indebtedness against the terminal companies I did not think the second or third mortgage on them would have been any security at all. Let me read what provision we made in 1911 in case the road should come under that mortgage. Subsection c of section 14, chapter 6 of the statutes of 1911, provides:

That in the event of default, and of the consequent acquisition by the Government, or by any railway company other than the company, of the line hereby aided, neither the company nor the Canadian Northern Railway Company will oppose any application to the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada for an order providing for the use by the Government, or by such other railway company, of terminals at Port Arthur, Ottawa, and Montreal, or either or any of them, owned or controlled by the company or by the Canadian Northern Railway Company.

So that it was provided that if the line defaulted and became the property of the Government the Canadian Northern would not oppose any application to the Board of Railway Commissioners to let either the Government or the new owner of the railway use their terminals at Montreal, Ottawa, and Port Arthur. My hon. friend says that is not as good as we have it. Why? The terminal companies are separate companies and the road now has to make arrangements with separate companies if they want to use the terminals no matter whether the stock is controlled by the same people or not. They are a separate entity and they have to make their arrangements as to what it will cost the Canadian Northern, or the Canadian Northern Ontario, to use these terminals. In the statutes of 1911 we were placing the Government, if it came into possession of the railway, in exactly the same position as the railway itself in regard to the use of these terminals.

Let me turn to some of the securities of 1911. My hon. friend rather drew a distinction between the bargain of 1911 and the proposed bargain of this year as outlined in the resolutions. Perhaps I may be blunt in my expression but I would say that there is no use of beclouding the situation with words, words, words and pages, pages, pages. The securities outlined in this resolution, to my mind, are nothing but words and sentences and do not form any real security. I would rather have a first mortgage on 500 miles of the Canadian Northern railway than all the securities that my hon. friend has gathered together in this resolution. In 1908 the Government of the day got a first mortgage on the line then aided. In the succeeding year it got, in addition to a blanket mortgage on other lines, a first mortgage on the line aided. In 1911 it did not take mortgages on stock, except in two small instances, it did not take stock that had no value, but it did take a first mortgage on the line aided and that first mortgage is worth more than the value of the full amount of this guarantee by the Government in 1911. The line from Ottawa to Port Arthur, when it is completed, will be the best part of the Canadian Northern system up to date and it will take many thousands, yes, many millions, of dollars, to bring other parts of the system up to the standard of the road between Ottawa and Port Arthur, if it is built up to the standard. When that guarantee was given there were conditions as to the standard of the road comprised in the guarantee. In the first place, heterodox as it may seem on the other side of the House, we stipulated that they must build steel and concrete bridges and that for the smaller streams they could for the time being use wooden trestles but that the Governor in Council would see that they were replaced by steel structures as soon as possible. The 'soon as possible' has come now and we are asked to supply the money to make all these improvements and to bring the road up to standard. I am not pointing out these things about the policy in 1911 in any fractious way but I want to make it clear from the standpoint of the late Government, and from my own standpoint, as I was directly responsible, that in a first mortgage on the line from Ottawa to Port Arthur we had a far better security than is proposed now in this list of securities that has been placed before the House. In fact, there is no first mortgage on any real estate in these resolutions except a first mortgage on the 4 p.m. Brockville and Westport railway, running 45 miles from Brockville north with a 56-pound rail.

Ever since I entered this House we have been discussing the question of branch lines. I have taken the ground, sometimes disagreeing with members of the House and, I think, possibly disagreeing with some of my own friends, that it is the duty of the Government, in connection with a Government-owned road, not only to provide branch lines where they will pay, but to provide branch lines where the people have been in the country for years and require the transportation because that is the only way more people can be brought into the country. I have taken that ground. But now in this discussion one of the reasons given why these roads were not amalgamated is that some branch lines which do not pay might be cut off. That is a retrograde policy. I think the Government's duty, in dealing with this great enterprise and in announcing their policy was to declare that they would take over these branch lines whether they were paying propositions or not if the necessities of the people settled in the districts served by the lines required it. Instead of that they gave, as a reason why these roads should not be amalgamated, that if the time came to take them over, they would be in a position to cut off the lines which were not paying a profit. That announcement will not be encouraging to the settler in the East or the West and I think the Government will have to revise that policy when the Bill comes up for discussion and will have to admit that that is not the reason for the non-amalgamation, as I think it is not.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What are the reasons?

Mr. GRAHAM: My hon. friend wants to know what are the reasons?

[Mr. Graham.]

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think my hon. friend could give very good reasons himself.

Mr. GRAHAM: Possibly I could, but I was taking my hon. friend's reasons. I think he has better ones up his sleeve if he would give them. My legal knowledge is very limited, but I have grave doubts that this Government has the right to do what it is doing with this line. Two years ago, when aid was asked for the British Columbia end of the line, the Canadian Northern Pacific, I asked that the aid be given only on the condition that the provincial line would agree to come under the control of the Board of Railway Commissioners. That suggestion of mine was rejected by the Government and the reason given was that the securities had been issued for the Canadian Northern Pacific on the terms of a contract made between Mackenzie and Mann and the British Columbia Government and any interference with that arrangement now might interfere with the security of the bond holders. It would at least interfere with the terms of the contract under which the securities were issued, or which formed a basis for the issue of securities. But still the Government, which would not last year, or the year before, alter the terms of the resolution by one line, now propose to declare the British Columbia line to be a line for the general advantage of Canada and thus bring it under the jurisdiction of the Board of Railway Commissioners. Perhaps my contention is all wrong, legally, but my contention is that as between the Dominion and the province, the proper way to do that, and the only way in which it can be done, or in which it should be done, is by the provincial Government undertaking by statute to agree to this arrangement and thus to take the responsibility of protecting their own bond-holders. It might be done in that way, but I have very serious doubts if the courts would uphold, if it were carried to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, the right of the Dominion Government to override a contract made by the provincial Government with innocent third parties. I do not know whether the Premier of British Columbia has agreed to this proposition or not. I have no means of knowing, but if he has personally agreed that does not bind the province, it does not mean anything to the bond holder unless that agreement is substantiated by legislation passed in the Legislature of British Columbia. If no contract had been made, if no arrangement had been made, if no guarantee had been given by the provincial Government it would not have been of very serious consequence, but here is a contract signed by Mackenzie and Mann, or one of them, signed by the British Columbia Government and ratified by the Legislature of British Columbia and to-day this Parliament is asked to override the terms of the statute and bring this line under Dominion jurisdiction without any legislation by the British Columbia Government agreeing to any such arrangement. I think there are some other provincial roads which are being brought under the jurisdiction of the Dominion; but I am just taking that one as an illustration. Let me make myself clear. I have always taken the ground that it is wise for roads that carry through traffic to be under Dominion jurisdiction, and I am not objecting on that ground; but I am firmly of the opinion that the Dominion Government will get themselves into trouble with the province of British Columbia and other provinces whose lines they are taking over, unless they get legislation confirming the taking over of these lines. In British Columbia, there is a certain board appointed to manage the rates; in the province of Alberta I think there is some machinery for controlling the rates, although I do not know what it is. The same thing applies to the provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan. Therefore, I believe that putting these roads under the Board of Railway Commissioners without any agreement with the provinces, may lead to a great deal of trouble and misunderstanding. If the question is raised by the provinces, what good to Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann will be the guarantee, given illegally by the Parliament of Canada, if the courts should so hold; and how will Mackenzie and Mann get the money on these guaranteed bonds if the question of legality is raised? Will that not postpone the coming into operation of this legislation should these resolutions become crystallized in the statutes until that question of law can be settled by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council? The Government ought to consider this question before they go any further along that particular line.

You ask me what other security you would get. You have outlined some of the difficulties; you have shown what you are going to give and what you are going to get. Now what are you to do under the circumstances? In the first place, I want to point out—and I want to do it without any harsh reference, because we are discussing a question of transportation more than a question of men—that I have been told for the last two or three years without any hesitation that the profits resulting from the sale of lands in the Model city at Montreal will more than pay for the Montreal terminals. Where is that money? Now, the interests in connection with Mackenzie and Mann are the same interests that are handling that property. I have been told time and again about this; I have been taken in an automobile over the property in Montreal and have gone over it thoroughly. It is valuable property, and there must be many millions of dollars of profit. I say in all fairness that, if that development is taking place ostensibly in connection with the Canadian Northern railway and is so understood by the people of Canada, every dollar of profit made out of that investment in the Model city at Montreal ought to go into this project. Nevertheless we are asked to provide $5,000,000 or more for the terminals in the city of Montreal—and that in face of the fact that the boast has been made here and in Europe that the investment in Montreal would more than pay for the terminals.

Let me come to closer range as to my view as to what should be done. I feel perhaps I have no right to have a policy, and I am not sure that I am going to expound one now. This, however, is my own policy; it is not an opposition policy, but it is a policy in opposition to these resolutions. In the first place, I believe that something is due to Mackenzie and Mann; that these gentlemen have shown great ability, and that none of us would feel very much humiliated if we had made the success of things that Mackenzie and Mann have made. I am not going to abuse them along that line at all; but it is their ambition to have this line completed, and nobody knows that better than the Prime Minister, and I know it pretty nearly as well myself. If the road is completed, not only will it be a monument to the ability of Mackenzie and Mann, but it will mean fortunes for their families and themselves. Under these conditions, they should put every dollar of their personal property at stake for the construction of this line as those who undertook the construction of the Canadian Pacific railway did. I do not think I am asking anything unreasonable. I do not know how much money these gentlemen are worth; I am not going to dilate on their millions, and they may not have millions. But there is in the province of Ontario a law under which the assessor asks us to make certain affidavits and statements as to our income, and there is not much opportunity of getting around that. We could do something similar in this case, without prying into matters that perhaps might be considered private affairs, and I think the gentlemen interested in this enterprise, namely, Messrs. Lash and Mackenzie and Mann, should make an affidavit as to the amount of their personal property over and above their indebtedness, and that amount ought to be risked on their part. It is not fair to ask the people of Canada to keep continually putting up money, unless the men who are as deeply interested, to put it mildly, as we are, dig down into their pockets and stake every dollar they have to put this enterprise through. The men behind the Canadian Pacific railway did so before they came to the Government asking for a loan of some thirty million dollars. I remember, as a very young man, reading the history of that great undertaking; and even if I thought the methods adopted were all wrong and should have been different from what they were at that time, I always admired the courage of those men who, before they come to the Government for aid, had pledged every dollar they were worth of their personal property, not their collective property as a company, to the banks. Therefore the first thing I would ask is that Messrs. Mackenzie, Mann and Lash, be their property great or be it small, take their share in this undertaking by pledging every dollar of personal property they have for the completion of this line, and then we shall step in and do something too. Perhaps that is a policy.

Another thing that I think is not unfair—and perhaps there will be differences of opinion in regard to it—is this: The gentlemen interested in the Canadian Northern Railway Company have worked hard, it is true. I think, however, they have had some reward. I would not like to say how much or how little, but I think they are able to pay their coal bills anyway, without pinching. But what I do say is that this is not the guarantee of two years ago or three years ago, each of which was supposed to be final. This is not the guarantee of 1913, which was supposed to be final. This is an extra circumstance under which the Government is appealed to that this project must stop unless the Government comes to its rescue, and this is over and above everything else that has been granted, which it was said at the time would complete this great undertaking. The conditions are different from those existing at any time before, because the line is approaching completion, more than half of it having been constructed. Now, the Government, the trustees of the people of Canada, have invested in this road millions of dollars. In putting up the guarantee now proposed, they get no first mortgage on real property. On the other hand, they are guaranteeing every underlying charge against the Canadian Northern Railway system, they are guaranteeing the payment practically of all the indebtedness of the Canadian Northern railway and making sure all the bonds heretofore issued on that line and by subsidiary companies. Under these circumstances, I think it is not unfair that Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann should hand over, at least for the time being, the control of this enterprise to the Government of Canada. I know there are difficulties in the way, from the Government's standpoint, of the Government taking over the controlling interest. But as I said before, the conditions are peculiar, the conditions are most exacting; and I do not believe that the people of Canada will be satisfied that at this time their credit should be again extended to the amount of $45,000,000 unless the men who represent them have a controlling voice in the expending of this money. You say to me: We will not allow a dollar to be expended unless in a manner satisfactory to us. I know the routine. This is how it runs: Certain construction takes place on one of the lines, a certain standard of construction being fixed. When this work is done, the company, whichever one it is, comes to the Government with the Government engineer's report, and on this report the money is handed over. It ought to be 'right about face' under present circumstances. The Government ought to say to the company what work is to be done, what the prices are to be and what money is to be expended before the liability is created, not after the money has been expended. That would make it stronger, that would protect the people who are expecting lines to be built in certain localities not now served by a railway. That would give the Government of Canada the right to say that these lines shall be completed before anything else is undertaken. The Government would have control before the money is expended, instead of merely confirming each expenditure after it has been made.

But, I am told, we have a man on the board. Well, the Prime Minister, I think, will agree with me that that is not much of a safeguard—I think he will agree with me down in his heart. On the Grand Trunk Pacific they had a board with a Government representative. I have not seen his report for a year or two, but I know that under the old Government there was a man on the board. Well, one man does not form a majority by a great deal. I say without any fear of contradiction that the value to the country of having one man on this board will be absolutely nil so far as the protection of the people of Canada is concerned. The Government has a responsibility, a heavy responsibility. If we are going to give this money or guarantee these bonds, the Government ought to have an amount at least equal to what added to their own will form a majority, placed in the hands of trustees, to be automatically handed over to give them control at any moment they like—they ought to have at least that. My contention is that the Government ought to insist on control until the work is completed and the operation of the Canadian Northern railway begun from ocean to ocean. But I am not unreasonable, I am not an extremist; and if the Government thought it wise to put in a provision that when that time arrived that portion which they took to give them control should be disposed of in some other way, I should not object. But, for the present, with the financial condition as it is, when there are attacks on these great undertakings in Canada, when the work is near completion, when we are in the particular condition in which we now are, the people of Canada will not be satisfied to give $45,000,000 more of their money to this enterprise unless the people who pay shall control absolutely and directly every dollar of that money.

I think I have made myself clear, but to recapitulate. In the first place, to my mind, the Government has no security, in a practical sense, no security whatever.

In the second place, if they are going to give the money, they might better borrow it and hand it over direct, because they can borrow at a cheaper rate than any company, even with the Government guarantee. This would save millions, and would mean a great deal at this time.

In the third place, I think that before the resolutions go further the Government ought to have a clause inserted that Mackenzie, Mann, Lash, or whoever are the stockholders or beneficiaries of these companies, ought to pledge every dollar of their personal property in this undertaking.

Fourth, the Government is not justified in granting aid to the Canadian Northern railway, unless they get control, at least until such time as the enterprise is placed on its feet and the road is in operation.

Mr. J. J. CARRICK (Thunder Bay and Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak of this question not only from the standpoint of the district which I have the honour to represent, but from the larger and more important standpoint of its relation to the Dominion. As the hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. Graham) said, the problem of railway transportation has been one of the most important questions in Canada since Confederation. In fact, through railways Confederation was made possible and without railways the United Canada that we are so proud of to-day would be only a dream. The Intercolonial united Nova Scotia and New Brunswick with Upper and Lower Canada and its earlier history is replete with the difficulties and hardships of pioneer railway development. Then came the Canadian Pacific project which was for years the all-absorbing political and administrative problem of the time. What other question in Canada has engaged public attention so long? The Government initiated and inaugurated the policy of building the Canadian Pacific railway. Elections were fought and won over this issue alone. It was turned over to a private company which became financially embarrassed and would have failed and gone into liquidation had not the Government of Canada come to its rescue with cash loans and subsidies. And to-day the question of paramount importance throughout Canada is the Grand Trunk Pacific and Canadian Northern railways. The former we must save and protect, but what are we going to do with the latter?

It may be stated that I am interested. Of course I am interested, and so is everyone in the constituency that I have the honour to represent. If it were not for Mackenzie and Mann and the Canadian Northern railway we would have no Port Arthur as we have it to-day. Only a few years ago Port Arthur was a small hamlet consisting of a mere handful of people and known as Prince Arthur's Landing. It had the honour of being named after our distinguished Royal Governor General. Railroad construction and development was undertaken and as a direct consequent result we have to-day in the adjoining cities of Port Arthur and Fort William a population of fifty thousand as industrious and prosperous citizens as are to be found in Canada.

In the third place, I think that before

If it were not for the railways we would have no Port Arthur or Fort William. The Canadian Pacific railway—the greatest railway system in the world—a national undertaking that we are all proud of—has converted a wilderness into the thriving city of Fort William. The Canadian Pacific railway originally had its lake terminals at Port Arthur, but on account of a dispute with the town officials, who held up an engine for arrears in taxes, it moved its terminals to Fort William, and Sir William Van Horne said that he would make the grass grow in the streets of Port Arthur. The grass did grow in the streets of Port Arthur. Mackenzie and Mann came along and mowed it down; built their railway, and transformed Prince Arthur's Landing into a busy commercial and industrial city which, on account of its geographical location at the head of Canadian navigation—the silvery gateway of the golden West—is destined, especially under this enterprising Government's policy of fostering the iron and steel industry, to be the Chicago of western Canada.

Not only are the citizens of the cities of Port Arthur and Fort William interested in this matter, but the farmers and settlers as well of the surrounding districts are interested. The Canadian Northern railway has opened up and developed the whole Rainy River district. According to Mr. Whitson, Ontario's Good Roads Commissioner, its line traverses the most fertile section of the province of Ontario. Railway development is producing for that district the same beneficial results as were claimed for it in the British House of Commons in 1854, when it was stated that the essence of a railway system is to increase its own traffic, adding twenty-five per cent to the value of every farm within fifty miles of the track; doubling the value of those near the track and quadrupling the value of the farms in the district through which it passes. Interest in this matter is not merely local; it applies not only to Port Arthur and Fort William, but to all the cities and towns which are tributary to this great national highway. It applies more or less to every part of the Dominion of Canada. Not only are we interested as individuals; we are interested collectively, for the provinces, from Quebec to British Columbia, have all guaranteed the bonds of the Canadian Northern railway. The credit of thousands of individual citizens, the credit of the provinces and the credit of the Dominion is so interwoven with the Canadian Northern railway that the proper solution of the problems affecting its completion is a question of paramount importance to all Canadians.

For many years it has been fully realized and appreciated that railway construction is necessary to the development of Canada. It was an important condition of Confederation that the Intercolonial railway should be built to unite Upper and Lower Canada with Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. British Columbia made it a condition of its entry into Confederation that a line of railway should be built to the coast, and the importance of railway construction was so very forcibly impressed upon the British House of Commons that they guaranteed the bonds of the Intercolonial to the extent of $15,000,000. It has been the long-accepted policy of all political parties and of Canadian Governments to assist and foster railway development. The Conservative party jealously takes credit for the Canadian Pacific railway and the Liberal party for the Grand Trunk Pacific railway, but until this resolution was introduced, no one seemed to want to father the Canadian Northern railway. It is true that this road was conceived and born under the Liberal regime; it is the elder brother of the Grand Trunk Pacific railway, but the laws of primogeniture did not prevail, and the Grand Trunk Pacific railway, with its aristocratic godfather living in London, was the younger and favoured son and received the blessing and inheritance of the Liberal chieftain, while the less fortunate brother was left to struggle alone in a cold, hard world. That is why the newspapers sometimes refer to Bill and Dan as Canada's two lone orphans. As I said, it has long been the policy of the Canadian Government to foster and stimulate railway development, because Canada's prosperity is intertwined with its network of railways, and through its arteries pulsates the industrial life of our commercial existence.

Why not assist in the completion of this great national enterprise at the present time? Have Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann used the funds which they have procured through the sale of their debentures for the construction of the road, or have they diverted the money to other purposes? Have they devoted the Canadian Northern railway funds to Mexican, Brazilian or street railway purposes? Have they used the credit of Canada and the credit of the provinces for their own personal emolument? Have they made large fortunes for themselves out of the proceeds of railway issues? These, Mr. Speaker, are questions which the public want answered. Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann have presented a full statement to the Government. The Government have appointed, I understand, a committee of the Cabinet to investigate the matter fully. The Government have asked their railway experts, under the able guidance of Mr. Gutelius, to conduct an investigation. The legal part of the matter was entrusted to the hon. Solicitor General, and I think we are all proud of the agreement which he has made. Expert accountants and auditors have been sent to Toronto to look into the books, and what do they find? They find that every dollar that has been raised by the debenture issues guaranteed by the provinces and the Dominion has gone into the construction of the road and that not one single dollar of Canadian Northern railway funds has gone into Mexican, Brazilian or street railway operations. They find further that nearly $100,000,000 not guaranteed by the provinces and the Dominion has all gone into the construction of this railway, and they find that Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann have not taken for their services the money to which they are justly entitled. According to the affidavit recently made by Mr. A. J. Mitchell, comptroller of the company, since the road assumed the proportions of a transcontinental system, Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann have taken no profits out of the company, save and except certain common stock. What else do they find? They find that these men devoted their own personal resources and their own assets to the building of this road; that they turned over to the company 4,000,000 acres of land grants which they secured in respect of the Lake Manitoba Railway and Canal Company, the Manitoba and Southeastern Railway Company, and the Winnipeg and Hudson Bay Railway Company, which under the terms of the charters became their own personal property upon completion of the railways. Part of these lands have already been sold for $17,000,000, and the remainder is worth, at the prevailing price of adjoining lands, $13,000,000. This money, to which the contractors were personally entitled, has now become part of and is included in the assets of the Canadian Northern railway. They turned their lands and the proceeds of sales over to the railway company without receiving a single dollar in return, and they also turned over a great number of other assets which belonged to the Mackenzie and Mann Company, such as transport contracts, Lake Superior terminals at Port Arthur, elevators, docks, holdings of the Canadian Northern Telegraph Company, the Canadian Northern Express Company, the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake Railway Company, the Duluth, Winnipeg and Pacific Railway Company, the Port Arthur, Duluth and Western Railway Company, and the St. Boniface and Western Land Company. According to the statement presented, these assets are worth $50,000,000. What did they receive for these cash assets? They received common stock, which is not worth one dollar unless the railway is a success. Does this look as if the object of Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann was to exploit railroad building in Canada, to exploit the credit of the provinces and to exploit the credit of the Dominion for their own personal gain? No, Mr. Speaker; if their object had been personal gain and personal emolument they would not have turned over to the Canadian Northern Railway Company millions of dollars in land grants, transport contracts, elevators and telegraph and express companies. No, Mr. Speaker; they have a higher and a worthier ambition; not an inordinate ambition for personal gain or personal enrichment, but an ambition as Canadian-born citizens to develop Canada and to leave behind them a monument that will transmit their memory to posterity and redound to the credit of Canada. Small minds cannot appreciate high motives, but, let me ask whether Sir John A. Macdonald devoted a life to service to Canada for personal gain? Has the right hon. leader of the Opposition devoted forty years of his life to Canada for personal emolument? Is the present Prime Minister devoting every energy, every ability, and every faculty with which he is endowed to the service of his country for the sake of personal gain? Is there not a loftier, higher and nobler ambition among our great men? Sir, there is, and as Canadians we are proud to acknowledge it. Our public men of to-day are just as capable of disinterested endeavours, noble conceptions and self-sacrifices as were the splendid characters that adorn the pages of our history. Let us not be ungenerous in the motives we assign to two of our greatest Canadians, Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann.

Who are the detractors of these two distinguished Canadians? I am very sorry for the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. Bennett), and I regret that he is not in his seat that I might express my personal sympathy with him in his unfortunate position. Disappointment in politics is somethng like disappointment in love: it is liable to embitter the sweetest and most amiable disposition and turn the vials of wrath upon one's own party and associates. At the present time the province of Alberta has no representative in the Cabinet, which is a bitter disappointment to the would-be Cabinet minister from Calgary. One could see by his speech in the House that bitter jealousy animated his personal attitude towards the Solicitor General, because he himself was anxious for that position. What a source of strength he would have been to the Cabinet!

He said, two or three weeks ago, that when he made his speech in the Commons, the Government dare not give any assistance of the Canadian Northern railway; the stampede would be transferred from Calgary to Ottawa and the bucking broncho would kick down all the Government bars and create consternation in the camp. The words of the dramatist are very appropriate when he says:

> But man, proud man!
> Drest in a little brief authority,
> Plays such fantastic tricks before high Heaven
> As make the angels weep.

It is the irony of fate that we should be sent down here to follow Mr. Borden and not a bucking broncho from the West. What an anomalous position for the hon. gentleman to fulfil, to be a back-bencher with would-be Cabinet aspirations, and how amazing it is that the Government has been able to get on without such a great railway authority, the greatest living railway expert out of captivity. Here the dramatist again describes him:

> What a piece of work man is! how noble in reason! how infinite in faculty, in form and moving how express and admirable! in action how like an angel! in apprehension how like a god!

I understand that there has been a new party formed called the Bull Moose party; that the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. Bennett) is the leader, the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Nickle) the first lieutenant. I understand that the hon. member for Prince Edward (Mr. Hepburn) was unanimously elected chief whip of the Bull Moose party; but after full consideration and much talk he declined the honour, deciding that it would be better to remain a barnacle on the good old ship of state. Like Horatius of old, Theodore the Second then cried:

> Who will stand on my left hand
> And keep the bridge with me?

And up stepped Don Quixote, the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Aikins), but, after taking a good look at the Government forces, he decided that discretion was the better part of valour; whereupon he purchased a ticket to parts unknown, sanctimoniously remarking to his three associates in caucus assembled:

> He who fights and runs away
> May live to fight another day.

What is the business side of the proposition? The Toronto Globe discussed it editorially, and said that it was quite natural that the competing companies did not want the Government to assist the Canadian Northern railway. It also stated that the Canadian Northern railway, whilst yet an uncompleted road, had saved the farmers of this country on grain shipments alone $17,000,000 by the reduction of freight rates, and had saved to the shippers of the Dominion of Canada a total of $50,000,000. Part of this editorial was read this morning by the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bristol), but another part was not; so I will read the entire editorial. It is as follows:

> The suggestion that opponents of the Canadian Northern railway raid on Ottawa are 'playing the game' of the Canadian Pacific railway is most unworthy. The Canadian Pacific railway is playing its own game openly and above board. The Canadian Northern railway promises to become a powerful rival of the original transcontinental. It may prove a much more effective competitor than it otherwise could hope to be if the Government of Canada continues to provide the money or pledge the credit of the people for its completion and up-to-date equipment. Were any other shrewd business man in Sir Thomas Shaughnessy's place he would probably protest as vigorously as the president of the Canadian Pacific against further aid to the Canadian Northern railway.
>
> Sir Thomas is actuated by an intelligent selfishness and conveniently forgets that the Canadian Pacific railway during the construction stage usually paid dividends upon the common stock out of moneys that should have gone to construction; that the North American Construction Company, composed of directors and officials, occupied the position of favoured contractors in Canadian Pacific railway construction, just as Mackenzie and Mann and the Northern Construction Company do for the Canadian Northern railway; and that in land grants, direct aid, completed track handed over, and other forms of help, the Canadian Pacific railway was endowed by the people of Canada as no railway ever was before or has been since.

The Canadian Northern railway has a part to play, and no insignificant part, in the development of Canada. It has already been of value in providing lower passenger and freight rates over wide sections in the prairies that were not obtainable under monopoly conditions. Railway experts state that ninety per cent of these reductions originated on Canadian Northern lines during the past ten years. The reductions in the grain rates from stations in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta to lake Superior by Canadian Northern railway in 1903 and followed by the Canadian Pacific railway represent a saving to the farmers on the crops of 1903 to 1913, both inclusive, of $17,000,000, or four per cent on nearly $39,000,000 per year. And this is not all. There were large reductions in the rates from Port Arthur and Fort William not only to stations in Manitoba, but to Saskatchewan and Alberta, and the Canadian Pacific also had to reduce its rates. There were substantial reductions in the rates on coal from Port Arthur and lumber from various points. There was a reduction of 15 per cent in the local rates in Manitoba and 7½ per cent in Saskatchewan and Alberta. It would be difficult to compute the amount of the reductions made by the Canadian Northern railway and forced on the Canadian Pacific railway, but outside of the reductions of $17,000,000 on grain to lake Superior, the saving in the rates on freight from eastern Canada and the United States and locally between provincial and interprovincial points would be twice, possibly even three times, the sum mentioned. In over twenty years the only reductions in the grain rates to Fort William made by the Canadian Pacific were those made under the Crowsnest Pass agreement in 1898 and 1899 (three cents per 100 pounds), and the reduction forced on it by the Canadian Northern railway in 1903. The rates on grain and flour from stations on the Canadian Pacific railway in Saskatchewan and Alberta are higher to-day than twenty years ago.

It is argued that the West would be just as well off with one strong road like the Canadian Pacific railway as with competing lame ducks that cannot compete because of overcapitalization or poor physical condition. The facts represented above prove this to be specious fallacy. The Canadian Northern railway and Grand Trunk Pacific have a great work to do in the West and no one desires to see either of them so financially hampered as to be forced to the wall or sold out to the Canadian Pacific railway.

Here we have a reduction of $17,000,000 to the farmers alone by the building of the Canadian Northern railway and a total saving of $50,000,000 to the shippers of Canada. Is this not a vital, tangible, business reason why the completion of this road is a question of paramount importance to all Canadians?

Then, why should it be necessary for the Government to guarantee the bonds of the Canadian Northern railway? We all know that during the past two years, because of wars, social unrest and general economic conditions there has been a financial stringency and money has been difficult to get. A bond guarantee not only makes it possible to get the money, but enables the borrowers to get it at a lower rate of interest; and here is where the Government have a direct responsibility. The lower the rate of interest the lower the cost of construction, and the lower the traffic rates which it will be possible to charge. The acting Minister of Railways emphasized this point in a discussion not long ago, when he quoted Mr. F. W. Tye as saying that the actual cost of handling traffic is the cost of operation plus the fixed charges. A railway can handle the traffic at the least sum when operating expenses and fixed charges are the least, and any increase in fixed charges which does not result in a corresponding decrease in operating expenses is an additional burden for the road to carry and means added freight rates. Money can be obtained more easily under Government guarantee for the construction of railways, and that means a lower freight rate. Then surely, as our railroads are common carriers and public servants and are under the control of the Government through the Dominion Railway Board, and as money can be obtained most cheaply by a bond guarantee, it should be the first aim and desire of this Government to lend assistance not only to procure this money in time of need, but to procure it as low a rate of interest as possible.

What would happen if the Government did not lend its credit now as it has done in the past to all the railways in Canada? Would it not mean that construction would stop, and perhaps the company default in its debenture interest payments? What a far-reaching, disastrous effect this would have upon Canada! In what position would it place some of the financial institutions that have helped finance the railway? What effect would it have on the contractors, the labourers, the merchants, throughout Canada? What effect would it have upon the source of money supply from the old country upon which we are entirely dependent? Mr. Speaker, the dark side of the picture is too gloomy for contemplation; whereas with Government assistance at the present time the road will be completed; it will be put on a paying basis, and in a few years will become one of the great national highways of Canada.

Ever since Confederation there has been a popular demand for railways. The different provinces have been eager for colonization roads to open up and develop their respective provinces. They have been vying with each other for railway development. Ontario, Quebec, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia have all given subsidies or bond guarantees to the Canadian Northern railway, and the Dominion Government has given both. They did not give assistance simply to satisfy a whim of Mackenzie and Mann to build railways. They gave assistance because the people wanted and demanded railways. The provinces asked and solicited Mackenzie and Mann to build through districts where it will be years before the returns are commensurate with the investment. They have built through my constituency from Port Arthur to Sudbury, a distance of 500 miles. The line traverses the great clay belt of New Ontario, consisting of sixteen million acres of as fertile agricultural land as can be found in Canada; but which according to Ontario's Commission of 1900 is a territory larger than the states of Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New Jersey and Delaware combined, and nearly all of which is well adapted for cultivation, with a climate not much different from that of the province of Manitoba. The territory possesses an abundance of wood for fuel, building and commercial purposes, and many falls on the rivers and streams, which may be used with advantage in the creation of electrical energy when the country comes to be opened up.

The Ontario Government Commissioners estimated that in the district of Nipissing there were at least twenty million cords of pulpwood; in Algoma, one hundred million; and the Thunder Bay, one hundred and fifty million; a total of two hundred and seventy million cords of pulpwood. In addition there is a very considerable quantity of merchantable pine timber.

The district immediately adjoining Sudbury contains the largest known deposits of nickle, and is to-day the world's centre of the nickle industry. There are many millions of tons of iron ore deposits in this northern country. We have heard for years and years of the great undeveloped resources of Canada and this phrase has a very pleasing sound; but Canadians cannot afford to live much longer with the charge that they have great undeveloped resources. That which was once a boast has become almost a reflection on our national character. The Government of Canada has a trust to perform and that trust lies in the development of our natural resources, and the first step towards development is transportation. This great clay belt belongs to the people of Canada. Without railway facilities, it is of very little value; with railways, it is worth millions of dollars. There is no settlement in this district yet; no local traffic to help pay the interest on the bonds. But, in a few years, this great agricultural clay belt will be settled with prosperous farmers; towns will spring up and the products of the farm will be exchanged for the wares of the artisan to the mutual advantage of both. In the meantime Mackenzie and Mann have built the railway and are carrying the burden, while the benefit of opening up the country and the enhancement in the value of the land inures to the credit of the people of Canada. Surely none of the provinces, or the Dominion, will take the position that they granted assistance simply at the solicitation of Mackenzie and Mann. They gave assistance at the solicitation and demand of the people to open up the country and provide railway facilities; and in the present application of Mackenzie and Mann this should receive every consideration.

What about the physical character of the Canadian Northern railway? Has it a good road bed? Is it well constructed? It is very difficult to compare railway systems from the standpoint of cost and expenditure. This has been amply demonstrated in the recent lengthy debate on the Grand Trunk Pacific railway when numerous figures were given showing comparative costs of different systems. Date of construction, nature of territory, wages paid, rate of interest and general economic conditions, are all contributing factors in computing cost. Without giving interminable figures I think it can be readily shown that the Canadian Northern Railway system has cost less per mile than any other system in Canada; and at the same time, in order to receive the subsidies, it has been built to the very high standard required by Dominion Government specifications. What does this mean to Canada? It means, if cost of construction is a factor in determining tariff rates, that the Canadian Northern railway when completed will be instrumental in reducing rates throughout Canada; and according to the Globe this railway, while yet uncompleted, has already reduced rates and saved the farmers of western Canada $17,000,000 on grain alone, and a total of $50,000,000 to the shippers of Canada in the last ten years.

Last year I travelled over the Canadian Northern railway from Port Arthur to Winnipeg, a distance of 438 miles, and our running time for the whole distance averaged over fifty miles an hour. This rate could not be maintained over a poorly constructed line, and I think the roadbed and equipment can compare favourably with any other road in western Canada. Mr. Angus Sinclair, who is a well known civil engineer and contractor and familiar with the whole Canadian Northern system says:

> When the system is completed, with its easy grades and curvatures, its completely new equipment, and its high standard of construction, it will be without exception the finest railway in America.

When Sir Richard McBride was in Ottawa recently he stated in an interview that there is no better road in the whole of British Columbia.

The Canadian Northern railway crosses the Rocky mountains through the Yellowhead pass at the lowest grade line on the American continent. The Union Pacific crosses the Rocky mountains at a height of 8,000 feet, with a grade of 2½ per cent; the Northern Pacific at 7,000 feet; the Great Northern at 6,000 feet; the Canadian Pacific main line at 5,300 feet; the Canadian Pacific Crow's Nest Pass line at 4,300 feet; the Canadian Northern at 3,700 feet. The Canadian Pacific maximum grade through the Rockies is 2.2 per cent; the Great Northern 2 per cent; the Grand Trunk Pacific 1 per cent, and the Canadian Northern 7-10th of 1 per cent. So the Canadian Northern crosses the Rockies at the lowest and best grade on the whole American continent, and thus has a great advantage over competing systems.

What is the nature of the country that the Canadian Northern traverses? Mr. S. J. McLean, railway commissioner, in his article on national highways, says that the Canadian Northern is built through the most fertile wheat sections in western Canada, and this fact is amply demonstrated by last year's statistics, which show that it carried nearly one-third of the grain shipped from the West to the lake ports of Port Arthur and Fort William.

Mr. Speaker, I think Mackenzie and Mann are entitled to the earnest consideration of this Government. During the past twenty years they have been one of the greatest factors in the development and prosperity of Canada. They have brought to Canada, and expended in Canadian development, over three hundred millions of dollars. They have built railroads and colonization branches at the request and solicitation of the provinces and the Dominion. They have given employment, directly and indirectly, to hundreds of thousands of Canadian citizens. Their monthly pay roll runs into millions of dollars. They have saved the people of Canada in freight rates in the past ten years $50,000,000. Where can we find two other Canadians with such a record? They are the greatest all-star team that has ever been produced in Canada. One is a past master in the art of finance; the other a past master in the art of construction. I happened to be in the old country last year when they were on their annual quest for money. Times were very hard and money difficult to secure. A Canadian, Sir Max Aitken, expressed the general feeling in England when he said it was most important to Canada for Sir William to get money for the Canadian Northern. Leading British financiers said he could not get it; but he did get it, and then they said no man could have got it but Sir William Mackenzie. No man in London has the confidence of the financial interests to a greater degree, because he has always faithfully and honourably discharged all his obligations and every time they exchange their gold for his securities they give him another certificate of sterling integrity and honour of which the Canadian people should be proud.

And, Mr. Speaker, the characteristic traits as exemplified in our two distinguished Canadians—power of initiative, capacity for work, sterling integrity and character—constitute the most precious heritage of any people; and I am firmly convinced that it is this asset, intangible if you will, that has placed Canada in the position she occupies among civilized nations. For, in the last analysis, it is not wealth, natural resources, material things, that make a nation, but it is the virility and national characteristic traits of the men born and bred in a country that, in the final court of appeal, determine its status. Capacity and character must be fostered and stimulated before our natural resources can be developed and great achievements accomplished.

In conclusion, I believe it will greatly redound to the credit of Canada to enable Mackenzie and Mann to finish their railway system. They are Canadian born citizens who are building for the benefit of Canada, and it is truly stated in the preamble of their charter that the work is for the general advantage of Canada. It is Canada, not Mackenzie and Mann, that gains or loses by any assistance the Government may or may not give. They have not sought their own personal gain and emolument, by withholding land grants, elevators, townsites, but have a higher and nobler ambition, and any assistance we can give at the present time will redound to the credit of this Government and the people of Canada as it redounded to the credit of Canada under Sir John A. Macdonald's Government when he came to the rescue of the Canadian Pacific railway and enabled that company to complete its road. Mr. Speaker, I congratulate this Government upon rising to the occasion, protecting the fair name and credit of Canada and helping complete this great national highway.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend who has just sat down (Mr. Carrick) is always listened to with pleasure on the all too rare occasions upon which he addresses the House. His enthusiasm for this proposition is natural and genuine, but I am free to say that I think the conditions under which my hon. friend approached this subject are such that he can hardly be said to apply to its consideration that keen business judgment which is usually inseparable from him in other matters. We are in a peculiar position in the consideration of this measure. We have had the spectacle, within the last two days, of two of the cleverest young public men in this country supporting the Government, openly declaring that upon a very fundamental and important proposition, the legislation submitted by the Government to the House, they are unable to support that Government and that they have decided to vote against the proposition. Differences in regard to public matters may sometimes exist under the system of party government, but it has rarely occurred in the history of this Parliament that men possessing the integrity and occupying a position in which they can be said to be absolutely disinterested in their view, have broken away from all those ties that have carried them along in life hitherto and have taken a position of antagonism to everything with which they have up to the present time been associated. The indictment which these hon. gentlemen presented to this House, in giving the reasons why this measure should not receive the support of this Parliament and of the country, were of such serious and grave import that I submit that this Government cannot disregard them, that this House cannot fail to direct attention to them, and that the country will be awakened by so serious a proposition as that which the Government are submitting to Parliament at the present time.

5 p.m. When we have such a situation in regard to the matter as is presented in reference to this Canadian Northern Railway proposition, in view of the history which is familiar to every one of us, in view of the events of last year when gentlemen representing the Canadian Northern railway came to the Prime Minister of the country and said to him: If you will only give us $15,000,000 we can complete this third transcontinental railway; when the Prime Minister of this country, on the faith of that statement, stood up in this House and justified to his friends and to the country a presentation of this measure to Parliament by the statement made by such an authority that the great railway would be completed if this aid were given; when we find that that statement was absolutely and unqualifiedly untrue, we have a condition that warrants the strong language which was adopted in this House by the two hon. gentlemen supporting this Government to whom I have referred. But when you have the hon. the Finance Minister (Mr. White), as he did last year, disregarding all the appeals which were made to him from this side of the House to stop and investigate the financial position of the Canadian Northern Railway Company, to make an inquiry into their assets, their liabilities, and their standing in Canada and elsewhere before he purchased $7,000,000 of their stock and paid them $15,000,000 of Canadian money therefor, when you find the Minister of Finance absolutely disregarding all these entreaties and stating that, as he had been informed, if the aid that was then proposed was given, the whole system would be completed by the year 1914, and when we find in one short year afterwards these two hon. gentlemen coming back to this House to admit that they were deceived, to admit that they should have investigated, to admit that they should have gone into the situation of the Canadian Northern railway with the greatest possible care and exactitude last year, and that because they did not do so the Government, the House and the country were deceived, you, Sir, will agree with me that when these gentlemen come back to this House and ask us to go into a partnership with the men and with the enterprise which indulged in, that fraudulent misrepresentation, to use the language of my hon. friend from Calgary (Mr. Bennett), we have a curious spectacle indeed. As to the deceit, there can be no question. My hon. friend from Montreal, St. Antoine (Mr. Ames), who is the amicus curiae, the man outside but still within the confidence of the right hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden), who leads this House, to whom has been committed some of the influence possessed by hon. gentlemen who have seats in the Cabinet, who, from time to time on important questions, gives the House his suggestions as to what our friends opposite would do, and which he has always done since this Government came into office, said yesterday in the apology —not the argument—which he presented in regard to this measure, and it is as well that we should recall it, because it was language of great significance:

> Those of us who remember the legislation of last session, when we were given to understand that the aid then advanced would mean the completion of the road and that nothing further would be demanded, while we feel that those who made those representations in this House were sincere in believing that the evidence laid before them was in accordance with the facts, cannot help feeling that to some extent they were deceived, and purposly deceived,—

Mark the significance of the language.

> —and that this House acted on a supposition which further events have shown to be unfounded. Therefore, we cannot altogether get away from a feeling of annoyance at the way in which we were treated.

The mild and gentle member for St. Antoine, strong and faithful party man as he is, mustered up sufficient courage in his apology for this measure to suggest that we could not help getting a little bit annoyed over this deception. Is the House to be content simply with this mild expression of annoyance? When we are proposing to form a positive and lasting partnership with the Canadian Northern railway, under which we bind ourselves, if not in a bond, yet in absolute reality to furnish all the finances that this company will require to complete this enterprise, are we to content ourselves with being somewhat annoyed at being deceived; or is my hon. friend from Calgary (Mr. Bennett) right when he declares that, before Parliament enters into a partnership with these gentlemen, there should be a full and complete investigation into all the circumstances connected with this enterprise, so that we may find out why that misrepresentation was made last year.

I am sure the House was struck with the fact—and the country is not aware of it yet —that, when Mackenzie and Mann came to this Government with the stock for which they paid $210 for every $100 last year, instead of giving to the Government of this country $7,000,000 out of the $70,000,000 worth of stock that was supposed to have been issued, they proceeded to issue $7,000,000 more stock. To use the somewhat extreme language of my hon. friend from Calgary, they started a printing press and rolled off $7,000,000 more stock, and gave it to the unsuspecting Minister of Finance, who did not know that he was getting this new stock that was being issued to him, but who thought, in all his childish innocence, that he was getting $7,000,000 out of the $70,000,000. Not until the autumn did he discover that he had been sold like a child by these great financiers, who had buncoed him by giving him this $7,000,000 worth of stock which was never issued until they ran it in the printing press.

My hon. friend the Minister of Finance is asking this Parliament to reimburse the men who invested in the Farmers Bank certain sums of money as deposits, alleging an error in judgment on the part of the previous Minister of Finance. I venture to say there has never been a Minister of Finance since Confederation who has been guilty of such gross negligence and disregard of the interest of Canada as the present Minister of Finance was when he allowed himself to be deceived by these people last year, and when he allowed them to palm off on him this $7,000,000 worth of stock that never existed until the printing press was started once more. Is it any wonder that my hon. friend from St. Antoine is somewhat annoyed? Is it any wonder that even he, while he cannot permit himself to take the stern position which his friends from Calgary and Kingston have taken, is bound to express dissatisfaction with such conduct and to indicate to the House and to the country that he is swallowing this dose of medicine with a very bad grace?

My hon. friend the Minister of Finance did not care to have anything to do with these people. What are the facts in regard to the situation this session? Everybody who has been in Ottawa since the session began knows that, when Mackenzie and Mann came here in February looking for aid, the word went up and down that no aid was to be given. It was stated that hon. gentlemen in the Government had declared that Mackenzie and Mann might as well go into bankruptcy now as three years from now. After Sir William Mackenzie had consulted the Minister of Finance and gone back to Toronto and given an interview to a paper, in which he said that he had made a presentation to the Government for aid, we had the spectacle of the hon. Minister of Finance declaring in this House that nothing of the kind had happened. I refer to 'Hansard' of March 3, when my right hon. friend who leads the Opposition had called the attention of the hon. Minister of Finance to what Sir William Mackenzie had said. The Minister of Finance, who was smarting under, and who is still smarting under, the deception practised on him last year, and who has handed over to the youthful Solicitor General the task of being toyed with by that shrewd legal genius, Zebulon A. Nash, because he does not want to run the risk of being toyed with this year, on the 3rd of March replied to the right hon. leader of the Opposition as follows:

Hon. W. T. White (Minister of Finance): I can give an explanation of the statement which I made to the press, but as to the statement of Sir William Mackenzie, or as to any remarks that may be attributed to him, of course I cannot speak. My hon. friend has correctly read what I stated to the press, namely, that no application had been received for assistance by way of loan to any railway company, nor was any expected to be received. So far as I am aware, that is a correct statement of the facts.

Mr. hon. friend the Minister of Finance was clearly annoyed, like the member for St. Antoine, over the situation of last year. Hon. members will note that up-to-date he has had nothing whatever to do with the matter. Newer and cruder hands have been given the task of initiating this country into partnership with Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann.

After it was clearly understood that no further aid was to be given, it was said: But Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann owe $21,000,000 to people in this country; to carmen, to railway contractors, to men who have worked with the spade and shovel out in the northlands, and these poor fellows will be destitute unless Parliament intervenes. But insidiously were the outworks pushed forward until there came to be a feeling quite clearly existing in the arena of the House that, after all, perhaps it would be better to do something for these poor fellows who were entitled to their money. Although there was created in the ranks of my right hon. friend a feeling of sympathy and that something ought to be done in that regard, the ridiculous part of the matter is that there is no provision, as I shall show, in these resolutions for the payment of that $21,000,000 to the railroad contractors and to the men who have sold materials to this railway.

The Minister of Finance, on March 3, said that there had been no application for a loan; that there was nothing doing. In the blue-book which has been brought down, I find the following letter:

Ottawa, March 5, 1914.

To the Right Honourable R. L. Borden,
Premier of Canada.

Dear Sir,—For the reasons mentioned in the memoranda and statements respecting the Canadian Northern Railway system, submitted it is essential that the company should receive further Government aid. The amount required is forty-two million dollars ($42,000,000).

Recognizing the difficulties in the way of a cash loan, I beg to apply for a guarantee of securities to the extent of forty-five million dollars ($45,000,000), par value. The discount on the disposal of these securities would probably reduce the proceeds below the forty-two million dollars ($42,000,000).

I have the honour to be,
Your obedient servant,

Wm. Mackenzie,
President.

Now, we are asked to believe that Sir William Mackenzie came to the Government on the 5th of March, two days after the Minister of Finance had made his statement to the country, and without any more data, without more reasons given than the statement to the effect that it was essential—'essential'—that this money should be found for him, this Government proceeded to get it. I asked the Prime Minister a few days ago where was the memorandum that accompanied this letter. He indicated that he thought that the memorandum was contained in these financial statements that have been submitted. But I apprehend from the correspondence attached to the documents that these statements were furnished subsequently to the application being made by Sir William Mackenzie, before the employment of the auditors, and after the Solicitor General had written the correspondence in the latter portion of this book directing what should be done.

Mr. BORDEN: Would the hon. gentleman please repeat.

Mr. MACDONALD: I said I asked the Prime Minister a few days ago what was the memorandum that accompanied this letter of the 5th of March—

Mr. BORDEN: I understood the hon. gentleman to say that the statements were furnished after the report of the auditor.

Mr. MACDONALD: I said it would seem so.

Mr. BORDEN: That is not correct. The statements were furnished and we then sent the auditor to inquire into their accuracy.

Mr. MACDONALD: The information is furnished in extremely crude form. Apparently a large part of the knowledge that we are supposed to depend upon is in the head of the Solicitor General, as was indicated by the encounter between that hon. gentleman and the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. Bennett) yesterday. The information is not of such a character as would warrant Parliament, without further investigation, in entering upon this momentous proposition and becoming a partner in this great enterprise. If this information about the length of the line, what it cost to build, what is necessary to finish, if that was the only information Sir William Mackenzie gave when he made this application of the 5th of March, then I say that Sir William Mackenzie gave this Government no information to warrant them in coming to Parliament with these resolutions, even though their auditors verified the statements that he submitted. When Sir William Mackenzie stated to the Prime Minister last year that with $15,000,000 he would complete the railway why should he be given more money now for that purpose merely on his statement that it was 'essential' he should have the money? There was no allegation that he was unable to pay his bills or that he had difficulty in financing in London—no data such as any other enterprise that ever came to Parliament for assistance has been called upon to give. My right hon. friend's great predecessor in the leadership of the Conservative party acted differently in 1884 when the Canadian Pacific railway came asking for relief. The preamble of the Act by which that relief was granted sets out in detail the reasons why Parliament was asked for this aid—ample and sufficient reasons, if they were true, why Parliament should interfere. Compare with this, the one statement on the part of Sir William Mackenzie that it was 'essential' for him to get the money, and that my right hon. friend should take the step he does on that statement seems ludicrous and incomprehensible. It is no wonder that his supporters from Kingston and Calgary should leave him on this question. Here is the preamble of the Bill of 1884:

Whereas the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have represented, that although possessed of property and assets, which, if realized, would be sufficient for the completion of the Canadian Pacific railway within one-half of the time contemplated by the contract between the Government and the company, namely, by the first day of May, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-six, yet that in consequence of the state of the market for railway securities, and of other circumstances beyond their control, and notwithstanding the agreement made with the Government on the seventh day of November last, for securing for ten years from the seventeenth day of August last, a three per centum dividend upon their outstanding stock, they are unable to procure the funds required for proceeding with the work of construction as rapidly as is necessary to complete the railway within the said earlier period, and have applied for certain modifications of the contract of construction and of the said agreement, and for an advance upon the security of their entire railway, branches, equipment and property in order to assist them in so proceeding with such work; and whereas it is expedient, in furtherance of the early settlement of the Northwest territories and of the completion of transcontinental communication by railway through Canada, that the early completion of the said railway should be ensured: Therefore Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:

But this document of the 5th of March contains no such allegations. One hon. gentleman tells us that this company will go into liquidation if this money is not provided. But the Solicitor General—I think it was—argued that that was not the state of affairs at all, but that so far as the Canadian Northern railway was concerned and so far as Mackenzie and Mann were concerned, they had ample funds but that it was the duty of the country in the premises to assist in this enterprise. When we look at the preamble of the resolution which my right hon. friend introduced, we find that he simply alleged that:

Whereas the Canadian Northern Railway Company hereinafter called the 'Canadian Northern' has represented that the several companies set forth in the first schedule to these resolutions, and their railways and undertakings, rolling stock, equipment, assets and properties are intended to constitute a transcontinental railway system to be denominated the 'Canadian Northern System' and that the Canadian Northern desires to control said system by the ownership or control of the shares or majorities thereof in the capital stock of the said companies, and that it now own or controls the shares or majorities thereof in the capital stock of certain of the said companies, and that the several companies are desirous that aid should be granted for the purpose of completing the construction and equipment of the works and undertakings of the Canadian Northern system and for the betterment thereof.

That is all. Mark the difference between the way Sir John Macdonald proceeded in 1884—Sir John Macdonald, whose name and record, my hon. friend from Rainy River (Mr. Carrick) invoked, and the method by which the present leader has proceeded in the matter in which he is handing out $45,000,000 more of money with lesser security, and is embarking in a partnership venture under which Canada makes herself liable in addition for $312,000,000 that we know of and for other millions the number of which nobody can yet estimate.

Now, it was essential that Sir William Mackenzie get this aid. The Minister of Finance (Mr. White) did not want to have anything to do with it, so the task was given to my hon. friend the Solicitor General (Mr. Meighen). And that hon. gentleman received his first lesson in how to draw up a railway contract from Mr. Z. A. Lash. On the one side is my hon. friend acting for the Government and on the other that astute railway lawyer, who has been drawing contracts, agreements and trust deeds of the most artistic shapes all his life. Indeed, I have heard of several members of the Bar who have not had the opportunity of seeing a trust deed such as Mr. Z. A. Lash could draw until they were placed on the table, taking them home to preserve them for examination and record and for the instruction of students in various portions of the Dominion. That astute railway solicitor, who has ploughed through many a stormy sea of litigation and difficulty, was put up to make an agreement with my hon. friend the Solicitor General—and he took the hon. gentleman into camp in splendid shape. That is what was to be expected. The Solicitor General has had his head turned since he got into that office. He is being touted and talked of all over the country—the Federal News Bulletin circulating its half-page photograph and biography of this Daniel come to judgment whose deliverance on the Transcontinental put even my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster) in the shade—why even the Prime Minister and every other hon. gentleman on that side are paling into insignificance before this new light that has come. When he rose the other night we thought that he was going to explain to the House this wonderful agreement that he had made with Mr. Z. A. Lash, who, being one of the noble eighteen, would be supposed to have special influence with this Government.

[Mr. Macdonald.]

But, instead of explaining the agreement, the hon. gentleman chided the right hon. leader of the Opposition because he did not know all about it. The Solicitor General was the only one who did know all about it, and he found fault with my hon. friend, saying: You admit the necessity and the desirability of completing a third transcontinental railway, and you propose to give these people a certain amount of money by way of loan without any security. It does seem to me that a gentleman having the aspirations possessed by the hon. Solicitor General should, in dealing with questions of this kind, approach their consideration upon some basis of fairness. If you refer to my hon. friend's assertion you will find that he reiterated the charge that the right hon. leader of the Opposition proposed to loan this money without taking any security whatever. This is what he said:

> If it appears to the leader of the opposition that the Canadian Northern Railway Company were not at the present time able to carry on their enterprises without assistance, he would loan them the money out of the treasury of the country and he would take no compensation in return.

That is not what my right hon. friend said at all. My right hon. friend said that he would deal with the matter as Sir John A. Macdonald dealt with the Canadian Pacific railway in 1884. Yet the hon. Solicitor General, carried away by the applause of hon. gentlemen opposite, some of whom have never read the agreement, reiterated the statement that the leader of the Opposition was proposing to give this money without any compensation whatever. If my hon. friend the Solicitor General had followed the lines of the agreement made in 1884 with the Canadian Pacific railway he would not have been compelled to submit to the desertion of two distinguished members of his party, the hon. member for Calgary and the hon. member for Kingston. Had my hon. friend the Solicitor General attempted in any court in this country to make a case on such a statement as he made to this House with regard to the merits of this proposed agreement, any judge would decide against him on his opening. Outside of what the hon. Solicitor General has said, what information has been given to this House and the country with regard to the proposed agreement? Who has answered the assertions of the hon. member for Kingston and the hon. member for Calgary? The House still waits for some hon. gentleman on the other side to deal with this question, if it can be dealt with, in some practical way, in order that we may know, at least, what the view of the Government is in regard to it.

My hon. friend failed to explain who was going to pay this $21,000,000. I made the statement that the one and only reason why there developed in this House a sympathy for this Canadian Northern proposition was the theory that there was $21,000,000 owed throughout this land and that it was not fair that the people who claimed this money should be without it. What is the situation? I wish to give some figures, and I hope the hon. Solicitor General will correct me if I am wrong. I find, in going through the return which has been brought down—I have not the advantage of any private information, as my hon. friend has—that the financial condition of the Canadian Northern people to-day is this: as shown on page 43 of the blue book, their floating liabilities amount to $10,408,128. As shown on page 42, the amount due on construction is $21,262,527. As shown on page 10, they require $41,905,117 to complete the construction of the railway. Then, we have the further indebtedness to the banks of this country, which was exposed by my right hon. friend and leader, to the amount of $20,703,865.

Mr. GERMAN: Where is that to be found?

Mr. MACDONALD: It is not in the printed books, but it is in the statement which the right hon. leader of the Opposition found in the return and which was admitted in the discussion a few days ago. The figures which I have given make a total indebtedness of $94,279,637.56.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the hon. gentleman give the figures again? I do not see how he makes the $94,000,000.

Mr. MACDONALD: Floating liabilities, $10,000,000; due on construction, $21,262,000; balance necessary for completion, $41,905,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is not a liability.

Mr. MACDONALD: I am speaking of the amount of money which this company requires in order to complete the railway, and I am including in that the liabilities which exist to-day and the amount of money which they state they require, after giving credit for all the assets set out on page 9 of the blue-book. I add to that $20,703,000, the amount which is owing to the banks, and I make a total of $94,279,637. It is stated that $24,000,000 are pledged to the company as security for this $21,000,000. Supposing these securities have a par value; there would be to the credit of the company, coming from the banks, $3,396,135.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Just to correct the hon. gentleman, I may say that the $24,000,000 is not on the basis of a par value; it is on the basis of the quoted value in the market at the time.

Mr. MACDONALD: In the light of the fact that a good deal of information about this bargain is in my hon. friend the Solicitor General's head, and not in these books—

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is on paper.

Mr. MACDONALD: I want to ask my hon. friend the Solicitor General to lay upon the table of the House at once a statement of the securities that have been pledged to the banks and what their normal value is.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is tabled.

Mr. MACDONALD: It is not in the books. If there is a statement tabled, I have no doubt that the hon. member for Calgary and the hon. member for Kingston had it, in view of their speeches of yesterday. At any rate, it was rather difficult for hon. gentlemen on this side of the House to get it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If I may explain—

Mr. MACDONALD: My hon. friend will tell me this: At what does he value the securities that are pledged to the banks?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I will get that in a moment. In the meantime, let me say that everything was printed that was asked to be printed; the rest was laid on the table of the House.

Mr. MACDONALD: I am asking my hon. friend only one question.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have a right to say that, whether my hon. friend desires it or not.

Mr. MACDONALD: My hon. friend has a right to say nothing which I do not permit him to say during the course of my speech; he may as well understand that. I asked my hon. friend what he gives as the value of the securities now pledged to the banks for the loan of $20,000,000?

Mr. MEIGHEN: $24,324,029.10. The price of each one is given in the statement.

Mr. MACDONALD: Then my hon. friend need not have corrected me, because I was giving him exactly that amount.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is correct, but it is not on a par value.

Mr. MACDONALD: Whether or not it is on a par value, is entirely unimportant; what we want to get at is the actual value. From what my hon. friend says, it can be seen that there is a margin of $3,396,135 over and above the amount owing to the banks. I deduct that $3,396,000 from the $94,000,000, which shows that, taking into consideration the $41,000,000 necessary to complete the road, the Canadian Northern enterprise, or the Mackenzie and Mann Company, Limited, require $90,000,000 to pay their debts and to complete the road, after making allowances for all the securities which are credited on page 10 of the blue book. My hon. friend apparently agrees with that. If they require $90,000,00 to complete the road, this country is only giving them one-half of that amount, $45,000,000, and the net value of that $45,000,000 is $42,000,000, which means that there is $48,000,000 of debt and of money necessary for the completion of the road that have to be found somewhere. Where does my hon. friend in this agreement provide for that? We find first, in regard to this money owing to the banks, that Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann, or the Canadian Northern railway, undertake that that $20,000,000 will be paid out of $24,000,000 of securities that have been put by. So we will assume that one crosses the other. Then, in regard to floating liability, we have the covenant here that Mackenzie and Mann themselves will, within one year, retire or reduce that $10,000,000 down to a floating amount, in the judgment of the Government. We will assume that they can do that, but where does my hon. friend find $21,262,000 to pay the implement men, the contractors and sub-contractors and the men who worked with the pick and shovel all over the country? Where does my hon. friend say they are going to get that?

Mr. MEIGHEN: They get the proceeds of $45,000,000 of the guaranteed securities; but, in addition to that, they have, in unsold and unearned securities, $58,000,000 besides, which totals $100,000,000 odd. In that $100,000,000 odd the $21,000,000 is included, and consequently the $21,000,000 must be got out of those two.

Mr. MACDONALD: My hon. friend says that out of this $58,000,000 of securities that exist the $21,000,000 is going to be paid?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Out of the $45,000,000.

Mr. MACDONALD: Does my hon. friend say that this $21,000,000 of debt is included in the statement of requirements to complete on page 10?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not know about the page, but there is a total of $100,000,000. Yes, it is included in that $100,379,099.

Mr. MACDONALD: How can that be? Take, for instance, equipment. There is owing for general equipment $1,539,863. The only item for equipment on page 10 is item No. 5, rolling stock, equipment for transcontinental, and maturing equipment notes, $27,000,000. Will my hon. friend say that the $1,539,863 is included in the $27,000,000?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, and the whole $21,000,000 is included, spread over these items.

Mr. MACDONALD: Has my hon. friend any statement showing that?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, I have seen a statement, I am pretty sure it is filed. I can produce it to you.

Mr. MACDONALD: It is as well that my hon. friend should personally undertake to give it to me.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes.

Mr. MACDONALD: Because I am interested in the case of those to whom this money is owing. I want to know whether they will get the money out of the $45,000,000 the Government are going to give them, or where they are going to get it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The indebtedness of $21,262,000 is to be liquidated out of the $45,000,000 and the $58,000,000. I cannot say in what proportion it will be, but it must be done out of both, if that is the way it is to go.

Mr. MACDONALD: Does my hon. friend, for the Government, say that it will be the business of the Government, under this clause which gives control of the payment out of this money, to see that these men to whom this money is now owing will be paid?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Government follow this money to destination and the Government only have control of the $45,000,000 and of such proportion of the other as is guaranteed by the Government. The Government will see that that money, so under its control, goes first to debts. Now, on the other hand, there will be a proportion of debt doubtless that will be applicable to the unguaranteed securities but which will be paid in due course without question before the non-guaranteed securities and the Government securities are expended.

Mr. MACDONALD: There are people in this country who are owed money by the Canadian Northern railway whose claims are included in the $21,000,000. We have seen them around this Parliament, and they have told members of Parliament that there are people suffering financially to-day by reason of the fact that they have not received their money from the Canadian Northern railway. The condition of affairs is this, if I understand my hon. friend aright. This Government are giving securities which will net $42,000,000. Will he undertake to say that one-half of that amount will go to pay those debts or will he not?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have made the statement as clearly as I can make it, that is always in the power of the Government.

Mr. MACDONALD: The Government declines to give and absolute assurance upon this question and I want to say that hon. gentlemen in this House know that were it not for the representations made here and throughout the country that it was necessary to make this advance in order that the people who were owed this money would get it, this Government would never have had the temerity to come to this Parliament, in view of the opposition which has been exhibited from their own friends. And it also shows, beyond a shadow of a doubt, that the $45,000,000 of security, to which the country is being committed under this measure, is but the beginning of further and much greater grants which of necessity will have to be made by this governmental partner of this railway. My hon. friend the other night, in dealing with this question, evaded the point with skill. He declared that the $21,000,000 owing to the banks was to be protected with securities; and with considerable finesse, which he is gradually assuming, he proceeded to demand of my honoured leader, after declaring that they had thrown on the table every atom of information in regard to the matter, what he would say as to where this money was to be found that was to pay the people to whom the Canadian Northern railway was indebted. Then my hon. friend drifted away from the subject and you will not find, from one end of his speech to the other, the information which for the first time we have been able to abstract from him to-day, as to how the men who are owed the $21,000,000 are to get their money. My hon. friend the other night, extolled to the House the virtues and the advantages and the glory of the Canadian Northern railway. Why, he said, we advance the money, the whole $45,000,000, upon the guarantee of the Canadian Northern railway and we will be better off than this country was under the arrangement made by the ex-Minister of Railways when an advance was made to the Canadian Northern Ontario railway. He said that if you added the $45,000,000 to the total amount of the bond indebtedness of the Canadian Northern railway you would have an amount which would be less or practically the same as the $35,000 a mile given to the Canadian Northern railway. My hon. friend knew that he was about $8,000 or $10,000 to the mile out.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Oh, no.

Mr. MACDONALD: My hon. friend will find that the bond issue of the Canadian Northern to-day is $191,933,000 odd. My hon. friend advances the proposition that if you added the $45,000,000 which you are loaning to this company to the $191,000,000 you would only be in the vicinity of $35,000 a mile. If my hon. friend will figure it up, he will find that the cost is about $44,000 a mile.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The figures given by my hon. friend are correct if he includes the equipment bonds. Had the old Government any security on the equipment?

Mr. MACDONALD: My hon. friend is dodging the point.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Not at all. Eliminate the security on the lands and the equipment, as it should be eliminated, and it figures out at $35,000 a mile.

Mr. MACDONALD: My hon. friend, as usual, is avoiding the point. Instead of coming to Parliament and explaining this agreement, as an associate member of the Government, a rightly constituted minister should do, he goes off into side issues. I have taken his figures from the blue book to show that instead of the road being mortgaged for $35,000 a mile it is mortgaged for $44,000 or $45,000. He is only out by $9,000 or $10,000 a mile. Then in regard to this mysterious equipment trust. My hon. friend was rather in doubt about this trust from the very beginning. If you turn to the Votes and Proceedings of the 28th April, when this great measure first saw the light, you will find that in the first schedule my hon. friend had included the rolling stock and equipment of any of the companies mentioned therein, and he also included the Manitoba railway (former name: Northern Pacific and Manitoba Railway). After the Prime Minister had explained that somebody, by mistake, had sent a rough draft instead of the final document to the printer, my hon. friend cut out this rolling stock and equipment and since the 30th April it has not appeared in the resolutions. My hon. friend knows that. He also knows that this security for the proposed guarantee does not attach to a single car or locomotive. He also knows that if there is an equipment trust in regard to the railways mentioned in Part 1 of the second schedule, this country gets no security on even an engine or box car in any one of those companies.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, I do not. We get security on just the same property, as if those words had been left in. We get security on the Canadian Northern rolling stock because we have a floating mortgage.

Mr. MACDONALD: Since my hon. friend is beginning to explain, perhaps he will tell us why he put those words in, in the first instance.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Nothing was in my mind in the first instance because I did not put them in. The Manitoba leased lines were there just by way of indicating that they were to come in as part of the Canadian Northern property. They come in as part of the physical assets of the Canadian Northern, just as does the line between Portage and Winnipeg.

Mr. MACDONALD: Have you equipment mortgages upon the line?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Certainly, there are equipment mortgages, and we get security on the equity of the Canadian Northern in them.

Mr. MACDONALD: My hon. friend knows very well that when the hon. member for Calgary discussed with him yesterday as to what was done with the surplus, he started a discussion on the equipment. Mackenzie and Mann go to the car men, buy the cars from them and give them their notes, and then sell the cars to the Imperial Rolling Stock Company at a profit.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Oh, no.

Mr. MACDONALD: Is my hon. friend willing to give a guarantee that they do not make a profit? Why do not the Imperial Equipment Trust go to the implement men in the first place to buy rolling stock like any other great railway?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Every other railway does not.

Mr. MACDONALD: Excuse me, my information upon that point is quite as accurate as my hon. friend's. I say that the great railroads purchase through their equipment companies from the car people and implement men, and in this respect there is a very great difference between the Canadian Northern and other companies. I disagree with my hon. friend's views on this point. Under the terms of this arrangement, whereby we only get a mortgage on the shares, and where equipment is not specially set out, I submit that we do not get a lien upon a single box car, passenger car, or locomotive in any one of those companies. The Prime Minister told us that one of the things this country was getting was a traffic arrangement with the Canadian Northern railway. Sir William Mackenzie's letter of March 6 is a very astute document. On March 5, he wrote the right hon. Prime Minister saying that it was essential for the reasons mentioned in the memoranda that the Canadian Northern receive further Government aid. Things moved quickly after that. Although on the 3rd of March the Finance Minister knew nothing whatever about the business, Sir William Mackenzie wrote to the right hon. Prime Minister on March 6, as follows:

> Dear Sir,—It has been suggested that an agreement should be made between the Canadian Northern railway and the Government in connection with the company's application for assistance, providing for an exchange of traffic between the company's lines of railway and the Intercolonial railway at Quebec. To an arrangement of this kind, the company is agreeable, and it is suggested that the arrangement should be of such nature that the Intercolonial would secure all the benefits, from traffic originating on the company's lines and consigned to points on the Intercolonial railway, that it would have were it the eastern part of the Canadian Northern Railway system. Naturally, the Canadian Northern would expect the same benefits from traffic originating on the lines of the Intercolonial railway.

I am convinced that an arrangement of this kind is practical and would result in benefit to the two railway systems affected, and if the members of your Government are of the same opinion, I would suggest that provision be made in such legislation as may be passed in connection with the company's application for aid, empowering the interested parties to enter into the necessary agreements.

Yours very truly,
Wm. Mackenzie,
President.

Mark the delightful candour and kindness of the Canadian Northern. They are willing to assent to this traffic arrangement. Sir William Mackenzie and the Canadian Northern have been trying for the last five or six years to get running rights over the Intercolonial. They were hoping to get to Quebec, and the height of their ambition was to get running rights over the Intercolonial railway from there down to the sea, and so, on March 6, after Mr. Lash had been mesmerizing the Solicitor General for a little while and had got him into a proper frame of mind, the astute president of the Canadian Northern comes along and says: If you people want me to make an arrangement of this kind, I am agreeable. The Canadian Pacific railway for the last ten years have been trying to get running rights over the Intercolonial railway from St. John to Halifax, but the Government would not consent. Sir William Mackenzie has been wanting this traffic arrangement for years, and now he kindly says: We are going to give all the freight that originates on the Canadian Northern to the Intercolonial. Of course he is. Who else would he give it to? To the Canadian Pacific railway, his rival? Certainly not. He always was going to give it to the Intercolonial railway. He would be delighted to accept the return traffic. He would expect the Intercolonial to give him the return traffic. He was delighted to get it. To get all the traffic of the Intercolonial railway that comes to Quebec handed over to the Canadian Northern railway to go west was a very important achievement for the Canadian Northern Railway Company. They had been endeavouring to get that for years. Graciously waiting for Sir William Mackenzie to accept it is the presentation of the Solicitor General and it is really as good as a play. One of the things that this Government has obtained as a result of this great achievement is that the Canadian Northern railway get an interchange of traffic with the Intercolonial railway. That is really a most interesting phase of this situation. Whatever the country does or does not get in regard to the question of financial terms, there is one thing that Mackenzie and Mann do get out of this agreement and that is running powers over the Intercolonial railway that they had been trying for the last seven or eight years to get and under such conditions that they are obliging the Government to accept the arrangement.

At six o'clock, the House took recess.

The House resumed at Eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill No. 132, respecting W. C. Edwards and Company, Limited.—Mr. Fripp.

Bill No. 172, respecting the Toronto Terminals Railway Company.—Mr. Macdonell.

SASKATOON AND HUDSON BAY RAILWAY COMPANY.

The House in Committee on Bill No. 162, respecting Saskatoon and Hudson Bay Railway Company.—Mr. Carvell. Mr. Blondin in the Chair.

On section 1—extension of time for construction:

Mr. OLIVER: What is the extension of time?

Mr. CARVELL: Two and five years.

Mr. BLAIN: The matter was discussed in the Committee, and it was unanimously agreed that this extension of time should be given.

Mr. OLIVER: The Bill stood over at the request of the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. McCraney). I am informed that he has been communicated with and that he is willing that the Bill go through as it now stands.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill No. 186, respecting the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Company, and to ratify and confirm its purchase of a portion of the property of the Carillon and Grenville Railway Company.—Mr. Guilbault.

Bill No. 187, respecting the North Shore Power, Railway and Navigation Company, and to change the name thereof to Gulf Pulp and Paper Company.—Mr. Fripp.

Bill No. 188, for the relief of Georgina Beatrice Boyd.—Mr. Fripp.

CANADIAN NORTHERN RAILWAY AGREEMENT.

Mr. MACDONALD (resuming): I was pointing out the grace and ease with which Sir William Mackenzie responded to the proposition that he should have the running rights over the Intercolonial railway and all other Government railways. Some hon. members who have endeavoured to defend this proposition on behalf of the Government have taken the position that this was a concession in the interests of the country, an offer on the part of the Canadian Northern railway that they would be delighted to carry the traffic that originated on Government railways on the one hand, while the Government railways, more particularly the Intercolonial railway, would be given the opportunity of carrying Canadian Northern railway traffic that might be routed by the shipper. My hon. friend from South Renfrew very pointedly and very ably showed the fact to be that the clause which was put forward by the Prime Minister as being a tangible advantage to Canadian ports and to the Government railways amounted absolutely to nothing, that the clause contained no more, so far as beneficial results were concerned, than was amply provided for under the legislation of 1911. But hon. gentlemen who have been defending this proposition have either chosen to forget or have never seen the delicious irony of the letter of Sir William Mackenzie of the 5th of March. It is really a classic, that document; it deserves to go down to future generations as a specimen of diplomatic negotiations. Its reception is a tribute to the ability of Mr. Lash, who unquestionable penned this document —the solicitor, close adviser and fidus Achates of Sir William Mackenzie. He dealt with the Solicitor General upon whom the whole responsibility of having to do with this measure was placed, the Minister of Finance having absolutely renounced all connection with it—and he put forward the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) to declare that every one was annoyed at the deception practised last winter and the easy way in which he had fallen under the wiles of the Canadian Northern railway. Mr. Lash led the Solicitor General to believe that the country was getting something especially beneficial; hence we find this covenant in the agreement:

> The Government covenants with the Canadian Northern that it will from time to time enter into agreements with the Canadian Northern or with any constituent company, giving running rights over such parts of the Government railways as may be desired and the terms and conditions of every such agreement shall be such as the parties thereto may agree upon, or in default of agreement, as may be settled by the Railway Board.

Now, the Canadian Northern railway, as I have stated, had been for years yearning to get the Atlantic connection for their railway. With all the assiduity and with all the ability—the unquestioned ability—which has characterized their methods in every province of the Dominion, they were able to get down to the province of Quebec and down to the city of Quebec. But how were they going to get down to the Maritime provinces was a conundrum which they had never been able to solve. And they took advantage of their very necessity for aid, and in order that they might create a complete transcontinental system, to seduce the Solicitor General into giving them absolutely what they had long sought and had been unable to get from any other Government in this country. By these running rights over the Intercolonial railway they will be able to make valuable the property known as the Halifax and South Western. But the Hudson Bay railway from Winnipeg to Hudson bay is also a Government railway. And this company own to Le Pas, as is well known. So this Government is committed to the policy of giving to this company practically the exclusive right of operating over that Hudson bay road ahead of any other transcontinental line. And if the Hudson Bay railway is to be what hon. members from the western provinces have declared it to be, then among the things that have been given up by the country, in addition to entering into partnership with these gentlemen, has been the guarantee to the Canadian Northern railway of practically exclusive rights to operate the Hudson Bay railway from Le Pas to the bay. After the Minister of Railways and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries have spent the huge sums of money that must be spent in rendering Hudson Bay straits navigable and in providing terminals on the bay, the Canadian Northern railway will be given, by virtue of this agreement, running rights over that railway to the bay, the use of the terminals and consequently the navigation of the bay and straits. So that, instead of an advantage being gained by the Government under this agreement with regard to running rights, as was asserted in the antecedent notice given to the press, these astute gentlemen have befooled the Solicitor General and have obtained from him, in respect of the Intercolonial railway and the Hudson Bay railway, rights which are practically priceless to the country, and which, if Mackenzie and Mann did not secure them under these conditions, they could never obtain under any other circumstances. As I say, this letter, in which Sir William Mackenzie delicately hints that he may be forced to accept this proposition, is the most delicious piece of composition that has ever formed part of any diplomatic correspondence in any communications between contractors and the Government of this or any other country. I am aware that my hon. friend the Solicitor General, who alone, we are told, with many eulogies on his behalf on the part of the Conservative press, conducted these negotiations, had very little knowledge with regard to the Intercolonial railway. Had he consulted the acting Minister of Railways; had the Minister of Finance dealt with this question; indeed, I am free to say that if the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries had had anything to do with the initiation or the carrying on of these negotiations, it would not have been found that that which the Canadian Pacific railway for the last ten years has been unable to obtain upon any terms would be given absolutely for nothing to the Canadian Northern Railway Company. As my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries knows, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has for many years been endeavouring to obtain running rights from St. John to Halifax, and has been willing to pay for them, but they have been unable to get them. Yet when these gentlemen, whom my friend the hon. member for Calgary has characterized as mendicants, come here and ask this Government to enter into partnership with them and to rescue them from their difficulties, they are able to mislead the Government to such an extent that they succeed in obtaining, in respect of the Intercolonial and Hudson Bay railways, these advantages upon terms which have never before been dreamed of. This is but another evidence of the lack of shrewdness which characterizes this agreement.

The hon. member for Calgary last night pointed out very aptly the summary methods by which the Government in 1884 were able, in case of default of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, to obtain absolute control of that system without the application of any such complicated provisions as are to be found in this document. Mr. Lash, the astute solicitor, provides in this agreement that if default is had and the country comes to the conclusion that it is not possible for the Canadian Northern to pay the interest upon its bonds and that it must go into the hands of a receiver, there shall be given to them a further lease of life. After the Government has taken the extreme step of entering into possession; after they have assumed all the responsibilities of mortgagee in possession, it is provided that they are bound to account for everything that they do in the interim until Parliament meets, perhaps in the following year, and undertakes to deal with the matter. Supposing default takes place after Parliament rises in June and it becomes necessary for the Government, in order to carry on the operation of the railway, to exercise their powers in respect of default and to enter into possession, the railway may be operated by the Government until Parliament meets in the succeeding winter, when, perchance, the gentlemen who control the Canadian Northern will be in a position to make financial arrangements which will compel the Government once more to restore them to the position of management. In that event, they can, if they are dealing with gentlemen unlike the hon. members for Calgary and Kingston, be able to put through an arrangement with their former partners under which they may resume possession and the Government of this country will be bound to account for every cent of receipts and will have thrown upon them the onus and responsibility for every day's operation from the time they assume possession until the time Parliament undertakes deliberately to declare an absolute foreclosure. The hon. Solicitor General, when he distorted the remarks of my honoured leader in regard to the attitude of the Opposition on this question the other night; when he said that we were perfectly willing to give the Canadian Northern the money without any compensation, entirely ignored the position which was taken by the right hon. gentleman, who, on account of his long experience in Parliament, knows better than anybody in this House the powers and rights which were vested in the Crown in 1884 when the loan was given to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. That power, which could be summarily exercised under the clause contained in the Act of 1884, as was pointed out by the hon. member for Calgary, should be made a provision of this legislation or of any other agreement made between this company or any other company and the Government under like conditions. The hon. member for South Renfrew pointed out this afternoon conditions which every hon. gentleman on this side of the House and, indeed, every hon. gentleman on the other side of the House, and every man in the country, will contend should be attached to any agreement with this company at the present stage. We are told that we have a mortgage upon so many shares of so many subsidiary companies. We are told that we have mortgages upon other shares which have been mortgaged two or three times over. We are told that we have mortgages upon land companies in respect of which no statement has been laid upon the table of the House to show how many bonds have been issued or in whose possession these bonds are—bonds the right of foreclosure under which may be exercised at any moment to the exclusion of the Government of Canada. What about the other companies in which these gentlemen are interested? This Government has agreed to give to the Intercolonial Railway Company running rights over the Intercolonial. In the province of Nova Scotia we have a railway known as the Inverness Coal and Railway Company, a railway which is controlled and operated by the firm of Mackenzie and Mann Company, Limited, or the Canadian Northern Railway Company. Why did not the astute Solicitor General insist upon that railway forming part of this security? As a security it is very much better than the Halifax and Southwestern. Why did he not include in the security to be given the large coal properties in the county of Inverness? Why is it that such companies, for instance, as the Toronto, Niagara and Western and the Toronto, Niagara and St. Catharines railways, which are owned by Mackenzie and Mann—or by this Canadian Northern system group who are asking for this $45,000,000 and entering into partnership with the Canadian Government; why is it that these properties are not included in the list of securities? The Halifax and Southwestern railway runs from Halifax to Yarmouth, in competition with what is known as the Dominion Atlantic railway. We have a railway running from Port Hawkesbury through the county of Inverness, which, together with large coal properties in that county, is controlled by Mackenzie and Mann, and which are of the utmost value to any railway system offering securities to the Government of Canada under such an agreement as this. I do not find that these properties are taken into security; no attention has been paid to them. As the hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. Graham) very ably pointed out this afternoon, that which we on this side of the House say, that which the people of the country are saying, that which the two gentlemen who sit behind the Treasury benches said is: Why should not these two gentlemen, Mackenzie and Mann, able as they are, having ideals if you will, ambitious as they may be; why should not they, controlling the Canadian Northern Railway system, when they ask the Dominion of Canada to go into partnership with them, do that which the men who were interested in the Canadian Pacific railway did in the early days, have enough faith in the project to put their resources behind the proposition and to stand by it? When they did that they would have a right to come to the Canadian people and ask for consideration. The Solicitor General did not seem to think that that was a necessary and important factor in regard to this matter. We are told in the Conservative press that this agreement was so cleverly drawn, so ably dealt with, that it was impossible for any other man in the Dominion of Canada than the Solicitor General to fool Mr. Zebulon A. Lash, with the same astuteness. Is there any man on the other side of the House who believes that? I am sure after the eulogy of the hon. member for Centre Toronto upon Mr. Lash, in view of the opinion that every hon. gentleman from Ontario entertains about that gentleman, while it is all very well for the subsidized Conservative press of this country to laud the extreme astuteness of my hon. friend the Solicitor General, all such talk is poppy cock and the practical men of this country know just how far Zebulon A. Lash could deal with the hon. gentleman. My right hon. friend who leads the Government, before the honours and responsibilities of office were thrust upon him, was a man of the very highest ideals. Up and down this land he talked about the control that railways exercised over the Government of this country. He lamented, in tones of the most lachrymose character, the frightful condition into which Canada was thrust when the Liberal Government, under Sir Wilfrid Laurier, made the arrangement with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company. He stood for a Government-owned railway in place of a railway-owned Government, and he rang the changes on that all up and down this land. If ever there was a railway-owned Government in this country, from 1867 down to this time, it is this combination that happens to sit on your right, who have gone into partnership with a railway by which there is fastened on this country for all time a mortgage of $312,000,000 to start with, which is going to place upon it another mortgage of $45,000,000 and which owes to-day in the vicinity of $90,000,000 more, which this country will have to pay before it gets through with it. Where is the railway-owned Government to-day? My right hon. friend dilated upon the glories and the advantages and the beauty of Government ownership in this country. Why, if the people are going to pay for a railway should they not own and operate it? That was the sentiment, that was his promise. Starting from that promise, the right hon. gentleman dilated on the rights of the free people of this country whose money was to be placed behind the enterprise and who were giving this untold amount in order that a few men might sit in control of the rates upon the farmers of the West and upon every other business in the country. That was the burden of his song. Of course my right hon. friend, in the platform which he promulgated previous to 1911, laid down a great many other propositions of that kind. After two and one-half years of responsibility he has not even ventured to fulfil a single one of the assurances he gave the Canadian people. After his blunder of last year, after his failure to make the inquiries which ordinary prudence would have demanded when they came asking the sum of $15,000,000, still when these gentlemen came to him in extremis this year, declaring appealingly that this money was essential to them, without giving any reasons, my right hon. friend forgot all he had ever said about a railway-owned Government and a Government-owned railway and capitulated through the Solicitor General to Zebulon A. Lash, one of the eighteen men who had given him support in the elections of 1911. Why did not the right hon. gentleman, if he believed in all he said about the desirability of a Government-owned railway, apply himself with assiduity to the task, when the opportunity came to him, of obtaining control over this enterprise, and not palter with the situation and give us this talk about putting up $45,000,000 and obtaining $33,000,000 of stock in return, of putting Canada and her credit in partnership with and under the control and dictation of two men in this country? Why did not my right hon. friend, when these people came to him, as his supporter said, as mendicants, be true to himself and fulfil at least one of the promises that he gave to the Canadian people in regard to this whole question of railway management? And yet this House and this country are seriously asked to accept this proposition. There is not an hon. gentleman outside of the Ministry who has spoken on this question, but who has apologized for the bargain. I venture to say that hon. gentlemen who sit behind this Government will not venture to come before the House and the country and declare that this agreement is the best one which the Government could have made under the circumstances. I fear that we have at last in this country reached that stage when, for the Canadian people, for the world in general, at last we have a railroad-owned Government in reality. Had this Government no sense of responsibility after their experience of last year, after the Minister of Finance had been fooled, after the right hon. gentleman the Prime Minister had been misled? If they had learned the lesson which the hon. gentleman from St. Antoine division (Mr. Ames) indicated they should have learned, why did they not have a full and complete investigation into the affairs of the Canadian Northern railway? Why do they not have it now? It is all very well, after the Minister of Finance on the 3rd of March declaring that there was nothing doing, after the Prime Minister on the 6th of March, in answer to a question which I placed upon the Order Paper, declaring that if there was any announcement to be made it would be made in due time, it is all very well with this letter of Sir William Mackenzie declaring that $45,000,000 was essential to him, to come to us and tell us that they had sent their auditors from the Railway Department and the Finance Department and had looked over the statements which the company submitted and that the auditors had told them that these statements were all right, and because they were all right the Government did not propose to take control of this railway but to practically go out and buy some more stock in it. They say: we bought $7,000,000 last year for which we paid over $200. Now we are going to buy $33,000,000 worth and we are getting it cheaper than last year, we are only going to pay $45,000,000 or about $150. Everybody in Canada should take off their hats and thank Heaven that we have a Government of such splendid erudition, such great business capacity, who come forward and say: It is true we were fooled last year; it is true we have made no investigation although Parliament insisted that it should be made; but, after all, we ask this House and the country to adopt this agreement. And why? Because some untold evil that nobody suggests the nature of may happen to this country. The hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) gave the lie to the Finance Minister yesterday who has been asserting all along that this country is wonderfully prosperous, and that Canada had stood up under stress better than any other country in the world. The hon. member for St. Antoine said that financial conditions and the stagnation throughout the country were such that a problem had been created which called for solution. Practically the position of the Government is this: Although the Canadian Northern make no representations in any of the documents that have been laid before Parliament that they need this money other than the fact that Sir William Mackenzie says it is 'essential' that the Canadian Northern railway should have it, although no statement such as the Canadian Pacific railway made in 1884 has been presented, this railway-owned Government proceeds to do something, and we are asked to fall down and worship this agreement. Before we go into a partnership of this kind we should have a full and complete investigation into the financial position of this company. I need not urge upon this House the necessity of that; the arguments that have been made by gentlemen on the other side of the House are ample and sufficient to warrant us on this side asserting the absolute necessity of having that done in the interests of the country. We are asked to commit ourselves absolutely to finance this proposition for all time to come, because that is what it means; and, financing this proposition to permit the gentlemen who are in control of the Canadian Northern to-day to spend the money after we have provided it. We are asked to give them this money on no further information than is contained in the pages of this little blue book. We are asked to assume that times are hard on the other side, and that these gentlemen are in financial difficulties. Although they do not say so in this report we are told that they cannot pay the $21,000,000 that they owe, and that this moment nobody can say, after having heard the Solicitor General deal with this question, whether their creditors are going to get the money or not. Parliament is supposed to give them $45,000,000 under this peculiar agreement. We on this side of the House want to see this transcontinental railway protected. We have as much faith, perhaps more, than hon. gentlemen on the other side. I recall the occasion just ten years ago when the proposition was made by my right hon. leader that we should build a second transcontinental railway in Canada, and how the gentlemen who happen to be in power to-day, then sitting on your left, Mr. Speaker, went up and down this land declaring that it was a totally unnecessary and frightfully extravagant proposition; and hon. gentlemen who came to Parliament in 1904 will recall that they had to fight their way here against hon. gentlemen of the party opposite, who declared that their future and that of their children was being mortgaged for all time to come for a totally unnecessary proposition in this country. Not only do we on this side of the House believe in Canada, but we believe in a third transcontinental as well. We have faith that in the days to come the men and women not only of the western plains, but of all the provinces of our fair Dominion, will produce conditions under which this giant of the north will march forward with more rapid strides than did the country to the south of us. Our great leader twenty years ago told us that the twentieth century was Canada's, and every one of us on this side of the House believe that it will be so. But in order to obtain a third transcontinental, we do not propose to take any gambling chance such as is being submitted to the country at this time. We on this side of the House do not believe that Canada should be saddled with the consequences of this agreement, and that belief is shared by men of promise and ability on the other side of the House. We are proud to know that upon this question the hon. member for Calgary and the hon. member for Kingston, to whom I referred at the inception of my remarks—men whom we on this side of the House have always respected for their high ideals and true Canadianism, although we differ on certain questions of politics—have gone so far as to leave their party, and to declare that this Government shall not have their confidence when they come before this House with such a proposition. Not only that, but last night the Evening Telegram, of Toronto, that citadel of Toryism, gave this note of warning to the gentlemen who sit opposite. Referring particularly to the remarks of the hon. member for Kingston, the Telegram says:

A clear-eyed cynic wrote the foregoing words into the terms of his tribute to a House of Commons other than the assemblage addressed by W. F. Nickle, M.P., yesterday. 'He made rather a spectacle of himself,' was the reward Mr. Nickle earned from a Conservative visitor who does not share the ideals, admire the policies, or serve the interests of the Clan Mackenzie. God help Canada if the old men who should see visions and the young men who should dream dreams are to forever glorify cowardice and despise courage.

Ontario, including Toronto, seems to be represented at Ottawa by seventy-two rubber stamps in the hands of Right Hon. R. L. Borden, whose Government seems to be a rubber stamp in the hands of Sir William Mackenzie. The Canadian Northern Railway bungle and the Grand Trunk Pacific bungle must be straightened out by heads and hands that had no leading part in the making of these bungles. The situation of the Borden Government is inexpressibly disappointing to Canadians who rejoiced in the results that armed Right Hon. R. L. Borden with the power of Ontario's progressive enthusiasm. The disappointment of progressive Canadians is aggravated by the spectacle that Ontario Conservatism made of itself in its passive approval of Sir William Mackenzie's attempt to bludgeon and bulldoze the Parliament of Canada.

That is what the Evening Telegram, one of the old-fashioned Conservative papers in the city of Toronto, says.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACDONALD: Since when was John Ross Robertson read out of the party? I listened this afternoon with some amazement to the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Carrick) reading out of the Conservative party the doughty member for Calgary (Mr. R. B. Bennett), who, from the Maritime provinces, went into western Canada and carried aloft the banner of Conservatism in the dark days when it was not fashionable to be a Conservative out there. He and the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Nickle), who glories in the fact that he learned his politics at the knee of Sir John A. Macdonald, were read out of the Conservative party because they would not bow the knee to this agreement. And now, forsooth, John Ross Robertson is to be read out of the party because he chooses to believe that the hon. member for Kingston and the hon. member for Calgary have a right to speak their minds in this House. The appreciation of the enormity of this proposition that is put before the Canadian people by this Government will grow as the days go by. This Government attempted to gag public opinion by sending broadcast through the country a false and distorted statement as to the terms of this agreement, before the document was laid on the table of the House. We were told that a most satisfactory, splendid, beneficial agreement in the interests of the Canadian people had been arranged by the astute Solicitor General. The hon. member for Kingston has led the way in pointing out the enormities of this proposition, and I say that the people of Canada will at last learn that we have a railway-owned Government in this country—a Government that, forsooth, was always to stand for the rights of the people, and that was always going to provide for a Government-owned railway. This proposition is one which the Canadian people will not ratify, will not stand for, and we on this side of the House, feeling that we want to put our views at the inception of the discussion upon record in regard to it, I desire, Mr. Speaker, seconded by the Hon. Mr. Murphy, to move:

That the Speaker do not now leave the Chair, but that this resolution be considered six months hence.

Mr. E. W. NESBITT (North Oxford): Mr. Speaker, in speaking to the resolution and the amendment, I am not going to refer at any great length to the gentlemen who are the proprietors of the Canadian Northern railway and of the subsidiary companies that are interested in this resolution. If all we have heard about Mackenzie and Mann is true, they certainly are entitled to a great deal of admiration for the ability they have shown, to say the least. If it is true that they have nearly completed a transcontinental railway with money secured from various governments, both Dominion and provincial, from municipal corporations and by the bonds that they have sold to the various financial markets of the world, it certainly must be regarded as a tribute to their business acumen and financial skill. Not only, according to the statements made here, have they been able to do that, but they have been able to enrich themselves to the extent of millions of money. I confess that I have no jealousy of Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann, and I give them credit for displaying at least very wonderful ability. I do that all the more readily because I could not be counted as 'one of a half dozen of equal ability with myself that could do anything of the kind.' But I am also not jealous of Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann, because, if I were offered all the money in the world to go through what they apparently must have gone through in the last two months I certainly would have refused it.

I was rather amused the night before last and yesterday at the unbounded enthusiasm of my hon. friends on the opposite side of the House, over the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Nickle) and the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. R. B. Bennett), in their very great consideration for the people of the West. I noticed that the hon. member for Kingston, in his very admirable speech, was eager to bring about unity between the people of the West and the people of the East by the Government taking over this railway and giving cheaper transportation rates. I was amused because my hon. friend, in 1911, had an opportunity to unite the people of the West and the people of the East such as had never been given to the country before and probably will not be again. Where then did we find our hon. friends who are now so solicitious for the people of the West? Just recently in this session of Parliament also we gave our hon. friends who are so solicitious a golden opportunity to free the people of the West from the restricted markets that they have for their wheat. Where were they then? They certainly voted against free wheat, and, if I understand the people of the West, they were just as anxious to get free wheat as they were to get a reduction in railway rates. My hon. friends were not so solicitious at that time, and therefore I was rather amused to observe the great earnestness that they have displayed on this question within the last two days. If I am not mistaken also, if our hon. friends had supported, not only free wheat, but free grains, meats and stock, in the interest of the people of the West in 1911, there would have been no necessity for any appeal to the Railway Board to lower freight rates. Competition with the American railways would have attended to that better than anything else in my judgment that could have been brought about.

9 p.m.

I would like to refer to the stocks that have been transferred to the Canadian Northern Railway Company under this agreement. It has been stated by the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Meighen) that the Canadian Northern Railway Company would own or control all the subsidiary railway companies. That is quite true, and if any dividends were earned by the subsidiary companies, as they are really part and parcel of the Canadian Northern road, though under different names, the dividends would be paid to the holders of the stock of the Canadian Northern, which would be, according to this resolution, held partly by the Government and partly by Mackenzie and Mann. While it is true that the roads still remain as separate entities and still remain in the hands, to a certain extent, of the officers of each individual road, a certain amount of stock being left in the hands of individuals for the purpose of qualifying them as officers, there is nothing in this agreement that I can see which would prohibit the subsidiaries from paying all the profits, if there were any profits, to the officials of these individual roads so that there would be no dividends possible. I have seen that done in joint stock companies. I see nothing in this resolution that would prohibit the whole of the profits that may be earned by the subsidiary roads from being paid to the officials of the road in the form of salaries, etc. Therefore, there would be no dividend earned for the stock of the Canadian Northern, or the parent company.

I am not going to dwell on the values of the stocks that are to be assigned as securities for the Government, because that matter has been pretty well dealt with by various members who have spoken, and I am not in a position to say just what the values of those stocks are. They may be worth something or they may be worth nothing. As some hon. member has stated, the probability is that they are not worth very much, or funds could be raised on them even in the present financial stringency. The reason why I cannot support the agreement as set forth in the resolution is mainly this: I do not think the Government should have a partnership in this undertaking at all. This proposed guarantee takes the form of a loan; and I leave it to any of my hon. friends who may be within reach of my voice to decide this question. If it were a private deal, a man was putting through for himself and he was lending to another person on his real estate money to pay up mortgages that were already against the real estate for more than it probably was worth, would he take another mortgage or would he not rather take a deed in trust from the party whom he was assisting; and would he not give that party an agreement that, at any time, if he could redeem the property, he would give him back the deed, because that would save the expense of foreclosure? My hon. friend the Solicitor General set out that, in case of default after three years, the Government could automatically take possession of this enterprise. If they could do so, there is nothing in this agreement to show what would become of the stock owned by Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann, as they still have a controlling interest in it. The Government could not take that, so that, if they took the road and afterward made the road a success as a Government undertaking, Mackenzie and Mann would still have a controlling interest in the stock, so far as I can see. Therefore I do not think there should be a partnership at all.

I do not know whether Mackenzie and Mann have made millions of money out of this undertaking or any other undertaking. They are reputed to be worth millions, but I know nothing about that. If they are; and if they are in earnest in getting the Government to assist them in carrying out this project, why do they not do as any of us would do, if we were asking any one to help us out of our difficulties, namely, be willing, if they have confidence in their undertaking, to put-up all the securities they have in the world and by that means secure the Government to the best of their ability for tiding them over their difficulties?

It has been suggested that we take a controlling interest in the stock. I am opposed to the Government's taking any stock at all. If Mackenzie and Mann carry this work through to a successful conclusion, they are entitled to any profit they can make out of it. The Government should reduce the stock to such an amount as they think will be a satisfactory payment to Mackenzie and Mann if they carry this enterprise through to a successful conclusion; and this stock should now be transferred over to the Government in trust to be deeded back to the owners of the Canadian Northern Railway Company when they achieve success in building the road and when they prove that they can pay interest on all the securities against the road. The Government has no right to go into partnership with Mackenzie and Mann or any company or corporation in this country. I consider that, if we reduce the stock to $100,000,000, that is too much payment even for the trouble Mackenzie and Mann will have in building this road. Suppose we take this $40,000,000, and the company is capitalized at $100,000,000, we leave aside the debenture stock, because that is in the future, and the people who now hold debenture stock may not be willing to trade for common stock, dollar for dollar. If they do, of course, that means another $25,000,000 of capital. I do not pretend to say what the capital should be; but I think $100,000,000 is too much, and I object to the Government owning $40,000,000 of the capital stock, because, when the road is completed, if it is completed, it is only human nature that Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann, who hold the controlling interest in the stock, should try as best they can to earn a dividend on that stock and make it worth something. If the Government for any reason wanted to reduce the rates, either eastbound or westbound, that the railways charge in this country, they would not be in a very happy position, if they were endeavouring to repay themselves by those same freight rates for their $40,000,000 of stock in this enterprise. I think they would be in a very awkward position, and the same as any one of us would be in if we were asked to reduce charges that would reduce profits coming directly into our own pockets. It is against human nature to put ourselves in such a position; and, as the Government is composed of human beings, it is against human nature so far as the Government is concerned.

I am opposed to this resolution, because I do not think we should have a dollar in this enterprise, because, if it is not carried to a successful conclusion, it will not do us any good. $40,000,000 does not give us control by any means. It is misleading the people to say so, and the proposal to have a director on the board is even more misleading to the people. One director on the board can not control in any way, manner or form, and he will be bound by the actions of the board as long as he sits on it. No man can sit on a board of directors and not be responsible for the actions of that board. If he does not agree with the Board of Directors, he has but one duty—to resign. If we had a representative on that board, the great public, after all, would think that the business was under his charge to a certain extent, that he had a certain control over it. But that would be purely imaginary, we should have really no control; and the presence of our representative there would put us, as a country, in a false position.

If the Canadian Northern railway, no matter by whom controlled, is able to carry its enterprise to a success, every one would be willing that they should make well out of it. I am sure no one in this country grudges to the originators of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company the immense means that they nearly all control through the success of that road. And if the Mackenzie-Mann people are able to carry their enterprise through to success, I am sure no one in this country will be jealous of them. But I do not think we ought to enter into partnership with them. My right hon. leader (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has said he would be willing to loan them the money. And he was criticised severely by the Solicitor General for suggesting such a thing. But the Solicitor General was unfair in his criticism; he put words into my right hon. leader's mouth that that gentleman never used. The unfairness of this course showed in all the worse light because the Solicitor General is a young man and because of the high standing of my right hon. friend and leader,—I am sure that when the Solicitor General thinks it over, he will think so himself. I absolutely agree with my leader that we should assist the Canadian Northern railway, but that we should assist them in such a way that, while they are enabled to carry out their project, we also shall maintain our position, so that in case of default at any time we shall have absolute control of everything there is in the road. And the only way to do that is to have the stock put in the hands of the Government, to be forfeited in case of default. And I am one who would like to see the stock very materially reduced.

Now, my right hon. friend referred to clause (b), at page 14 of the agreement with Mackenzie and Mann, and drew attention to the fact that the Dominion Railway Board were given control over the various railways that went to make up the Canadian Northern Railway system, but that there was a clause reading:

> Provided always that any agreement respecting interchange of traffic shall be subject to any agreements now existing with any other company or companies.

I noticed that the Solicitor General was rather amused that the right hon. gentleman should think that that or any agreement could hinder the Dominion Railway Board from having absolute control. But I would refer him to the case of the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta in which the Railway Board had made an order that conflicted with an agreement which the Canadian Northern railway had made with the province of Manitoba at the time that province guaranteed the company's bonds. That appeal came to the Supreme Court, and it was decided in favour of the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta on the ground that the order was contrary to the agreement with the province of Manitoba. That will answer, so far as I am concerned, both clauses (b) and (c) of the agreement. I am not sure that he was right that that only refers to the agreements for the exchange of traffic. Without seeing the agreements that have been made by the various governments with the Canadian Northern railway, I am sure that no lawyer, be he ever so capable, could decide whether the Railway Board would have power or not.

Now, as to the agreement proposed, that the Canadian Northern railway should send all freight over the Government railways, that strikes me as a bit ridiculous. No consignee can be bound by any railway as to how he shall consign his freight. The Canadian Northern railway would be absolutely helpless. If any of us were shipping a carload of freight over that road and wanted it carried to a certain point, they would have to carry it to that point or not take the freight at all.

Let me say in a word, I have no objection to Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann making some money out of this enterprise if they can, but I agree with the hon. member for South Renfrew that, if these gentlemen have some means, large or small, and if they are in dead earnest over getting this railway built and are satisfied that this $45,000,000 will finish the road, then it is asking no more than is reasonable, no more than any member of this House, I am quite sure, would ask if he were making a loan privately, that they should pledge their property. There is no reason why the Government should not insist on that. On the other hand, there is every reason why the Government should not be a partner in this enterprise. I ask the Government—with all due deference to this learned and grave agreement—before it is too late to consider their position. I am going to vote for the amendment, because I do not think that the agreement proposed by this resolution is at all satisfactory to the people. While I am absolutely in earnest in wishing to see this railway built, and while I absolutely agree with my honcured leader that the country, if not today, then to-morrow or next day, will be quite capable of sustaining this additional transcontinental railway, at the same time we should be cautious about the assistance we give. We should drive the best bargain we can. Or, rather, it is not a case of us driving a bargain; it should be a case of our stating our terms and the people who want assistance coming to those terms.

I am not in favour of the Government's undertaking the finishing of the road. I believe that the Government, in so far as the letting of contracts is concerned, could do just as well as private individuals in any part of the work that had still to be completed. But if we were to take the work out of the hands of the present proprietors it would be necessary that we should operate the road when it is completed, or get some person else to operate it. If Mackenzie and Mann have the ability attributed to them by the various speakers during the course of this debate, then I say that if we search the country with any kind of comb we will be unable to find any one more capable of carrying on this work after it is completed than they are. I for one would much rather let Mackenzie and Mann or some private corporation do the work than have the Government operate the road. I have not the slightest faith in government operation of a work of this kind. No one can tell when the Government may change, and even if the Government does not change, the Minister of Railways of any government would have to be born with a heavenly insight into railway management to be able to take charge of the railway and carry on its operation without making mistakes. All the great railway corporations of America—and they are the only ones with which we can compare ours—are managed entirely by men who have risen from the ranks; men who know the business from A to Z. No matter what party is in power, how are they going to appoint a Minister of Railways who has the experience necessary to enable him properly to manage a great transcontinental road? Every man sitting behind the Government would be compelled day and night to have positions available on the railway for persons applying for them. Naturally, we would think that the fellows in our constituency who applied for these positions were quite worthy of them; we would be very inhuman if we did not think so. For these reasons I am absolutely opposed to any government system of operation of railways. I hope, therefore, that this Government will reconsider these resolutions and put them into such shape as will enable the Government to give the assistance necessary to ensure the completion of this road. I believe there will be traffic for it, and traffic that will make it pay. I believe also that the country will sustain it. I do not look to see a setback in the West for any length of time, nor do I anticipate any setback in the East. I do believe that the Government will be forced, no matter whether they are willing or not, to give the people of the West some of the things that they have asked for and demanded during the last few years, and the sooner it is done the better. I have much more faith in the Canadian Northern Railway Company, so far as their earning powers are concerned, than I have in the Hudson Bay railway, and I have immensely more faith in the Canadian Northern railway, so far as their earning powers are concerned, than I have in the Georgian Bay canal, which 500 and sometimes 1,000 men at a time, coming here in a body, are asking us to build. I believe that the Canadian Northern railway, properly handled after it is finished, will not only earn interest on the securities that are against it but will earn more than sufficient to pay interest on the securities and give a reasonable rate for freight both east and west as well.

Let me refer for a few moments to some comparisons and nasty insinuations that have been thrown out as to the cost of constructing the National Transcontinental railways. Some hon. gentlemen the other night compared the cost of the Canadian Northern—I am not sure that it was not the hon. Solicitor General—after the $45,000,000 goes into it, with the cost of the National Transcontinental. Let us be fair in this discussion; there will be no earthly comparison, after these roads are finished, between the physical conditions of the Canadian Northern and those in respect of the National Transcontinental railway. Why, then, compare their respective cost? The section of the Transcontinental railway built by the Government runs through an inaccessible country and it was very difficult to convey the supplies and the machinery necessary for the building of the road. This line, however, opens up a new country. Let me say also in support of what my hon.

friend the hon. member for South Renfrew and the hon. member for Port Arthur said, that the Canadian Northern opens up a very much better territory after it leaves Port Arthur coming east than does the Canadian Pacific railway. I have been over some sections of that country and I would not be surprised if a sound earning power on that section of the road from Port Arthur to Montreal were established after the road is completed. I believe that the project will be successful enough once it is carried through, but there is a right and a wrong way to carry this project through, and the wrong way is the present proposition. I offer these few remarks for the consideration of the Government before they try to force this Bill through Parliament against the wishes of the members on this side of the House.

Mr. WILLIAM SMITH (South Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I have listened very patiently to the speeches of hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House upon perhaps one of the most important questions that has engaged our attention this session. I do not propose to talk about millions or about bonds to-night, because these are things outside of my knowledge. I may be allowed to express some little surprise at the position taken by the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt). He was in this House last year when the legislation authorizing the granting of $15,000,000 to the Canadian Northern railway was before Parliament. And what did the hon. member do? If my memory serves me rightly, he walked out of the House rather than vote on the question.

Mr. NESBITT: The hon. member will, I hope, allow me to say that his memory is in fault.

Mr. SMITH: The hon. gentleman will not find his name upon the record in connection with that matter. I propose to discuss this resolution to-night from a standpoint different, perhaps, from that which has been taken by any of the previous speakers. I happen to be only an ordinary farmer, and I am inclined to ask this question: has this railway ever done anything for us? If it has, then it seems to me that the proposition now before the House is one which is in the interests of Canada generally. If not then I may be taking a wrong position.

[Mr. Nesbitt.]

This railway company started a number of years ago by building one hundred miles of railway out of Portage la Prairie to the north, practically through a virgin territory. It then commenced to open up the valley of the Saskatchewan river, where the settlers naturally drifted in. The land was somewhat rolling, slightly wooded, and naturally adapted for mixed farming. I made a statement to the House in the Budget debate that the hope of the Northwest was in mixed farming. Settlers naturally followed the building of this line. Homesteads were taken up. Men were able to perform their homestead duties and work upon the railroad, and out of their savings they purchased implements and live stock, and many of these men became the principal agriculturists of the great Northwest. I believe that not only the Dominion but provincial governments have asked the company to continue their building, because it would be in the interests of the farmers of Canada. The people of the Northwest, especially in Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba, have reaped considerable returns from the building of this road. This was pointed out, I think, admirably to-day by the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bristol), who said that $15,000,000 had been saved to the farmers of the Northwest. In Alberta they reduced the rates upon live stock and grain 15 per cent, and in Manitoba 7½ per cent, and 3 cents per 100-lbs, on their rate to the head of the Great Lakes.

An advantage has also been secured to the people of the Northwest in the competition which was afforded by this railway. We all know what that means. We know what it means in the older portions of our Dominion, and we know what it means to the success of our Northwest territory. The new line which they are building from Edmonton to Vancouver will afford to the farmers of the Northwest great opportunity of sending their grain and livestock into that province, while the railway will bring back lumber, fish and fruit from British Columbia for their use. The Canadian Northern railway last year handled 30 per cent of the grain and 70 per cent of the livestock of the Northwest.

One of the great difficulties in the building of the railroads has been the municipal aid which has been given to them. This is one thing which I think has been overlooked to a great extent in the building of the Canadian Northern railway. Outside of Port Arthur and the Parry Sound district, where they received in the neighbourhood of $70,000, as far as I know not one single dollar has been given by any municipality in aid of the Canadian Northern railway.

Coming to the Canadian Northern railway in the older parts of Ontario, the hon. member for Calgary last night skipped over from Montreal to Winnipeg very lightly. He seemed to forget that there were hundreds of miles between Montreal and Winnipeg. The great province of Ontario was practically forgotten. This line from Toronto to Ottawa and then east passes through the richest portions of the province of Ontario. It passes through the county that I have the honour of representing, and I may say from my own experience and knowledge, running as it does between the Grand Trunk to the south and the Canadian Pacific railway to the north, it is doing a splendid work for that portion of the province of Ontario. The Canadian Northern railway will run away to the north in the newer portions of the province of Ontario. The land, I understand, is admirably adapted for settlement. It will afford great opportunities for our young men, who instead of having to go to our Northwest or to the country to the south. can go on that land and still remain in the province of Ontario. That land will be admirably adapted for mixed farming. The Dominion Department of Agriculture has been doing splendid work. They have been developing the live-stock interests especially in the Peace River district, in British Columbia, and in other portions of the Dominion. It is here that the Canadian Northern railway will play a considerable part in being able to market the produce of the work which has been done by the Agricultural Department. I wish to draw the attention of the House to the fact that, in the older and more settled portions of Ontario, the Canadian Northern railway has been doing splendid work. We find that where it has perhaps been impossible for them to continue their steam road, they have been building electric lines as feeders to the main line. These are doing splendid work for the farmers of Canada. I believe that the farmers of Canada fully realize this fact, and when the time comes, and this party and this Government need not hesitate to say when it shall come, that the farmers of Canada will rally around the Government and say: You did wisely and well when you came to the assistance of the Canadian Northern railway.

I have listened to the hon. gentlemen who have spoken on both sides, and whilst we may have difficulties upon our side, I venture to make this statement, that when the vote comes to be recorded, we will be able to point out that our oppnents too have their difficulties. I listened to the hon. member for Pictou as carefully as I could to-night. I listened to his speech, forcibly given as it was, and I could not help drawing a contrast between his speech and that of his leader. But it seemed to remain for one of the principal lieutenants of the party to propound their policy. What did the right hon. leader of the Opposition say the other night? He said he was in favour of assisting, in some form or other, the Canadian Northern railway. That was repeated by his lieutenant, the hon. member for South Renfrew, and yet the hon. member for Pictou comes and says: We will do that in six months or later if possible. Mr. Speaker, these gentlemen to be honest, if that would be parliamentary, should remember their record of 1903 and 1908 and 1911, when they came to the assistance of this railroad.

Are they going to let this almost transcontinental road go down? Are they going to ruin the prosperity of this country by not coming to the assistance of this road? Or, on the other hand, shall we adopt the policy propounded by the right hon. the Prime Minister the other evening? Have we not security for the proposition that we make? Can any hon. gentleman put his finger upon one single thing that we could have done more than we have? We have practically tied up the road in every possible way. To-day, the people of Canada are looking to this Parliament because they believe that part of the prosperity of Canada depends upon what shall be done in connection with this third transcontinental railway. I do not say that it was absolutely necessary that this road should have been started, but if any one is to blame because the Grand Trunk Pacific came in between, it is hon. gentlemen opposite. We have these roads, and to-day we cannot do without them. They touch so many vital points not only in the older portions of this Dominion, but in the newer territory as well, that it would be suicidal for this Government to allow these roads to go down. I have an abiding faith that the Canadian Northern with all its difficulties, and despite all its trials in the past, will come out all right, and that it will play a very great part in the carrying of the products of this country in the years that are to come.

On motion of Mr. A. K. Maclean, the debate was ajourned.

SUPPLY.

The House in Committee of Supply, Mr. Blondin in the chair.

Post office, outside service—Salaries and allowances, mail service, miscellaneous, Yukon territory, $13,958,564.25.

Mr. CARROLL: I wish to bring to the attention of the Postmaster General the dismissal of the postmaster at Bridgeport, in the riding of South Cape Breton. I wish to place on 'Hansard' and before the House the correspondence that took place between the Post Office Department and the postmaster at Bridgeport, Mr. Joseph McMillan, and some other correspondence. On April 9, 1912, the Postmaster General received the following telegram:

Please investigate Joseph McMillan, postmaster, Bridgeport. Official political partisan. If dismissed beg to recommend Daniel Cameron, Bridgeport, to succeed him.

(Sgd) J. W. Maddin.

In reply to that, Mr. Verret, the assistant Deputy Postmaster General, wrote to Mr. Maddin stating that the usual course was to write to Mr. McMillan first, and afterwards to have the matter investigated. On April 11, 1912, the following letter was sent to Mr. Jos. McMillan, postmaster at Bridgeport:

Sir,—I am directed to inform you that it is represented to this department that you have taken a more active part in elections, federal or provincial, than quietly polling your vote since the date of your appointment as postmaster. The Postmaster General desires to know, therefore, what you have to say in reply to the charge in question.

That letter is signed by William Smith, the secretary, I presume, of the Postmaster General. Mr. McMillan answered this letter on April 15, 1912:

To the Postmaster General,
Ottawa, Canada.

Sir,—In reply to your communication, No. 54747, dated April 11, I beg leave to say that I know of no reason why such a charge as stated should be made against me, and I further submit that I have performed my duties as postmaster honestly, faithfully and impartially, and without fear or favour.

Respectfully yours,
(Sgd) J. McMillan.

In answer to that letter, Mr. Hector B. Verret wrote Mr. McMillan on the 23rd of April, 1912, as follows:

[Mr. Nesbitt.]

Sir,—With reference to the communication addressed to you from this department, under date of 11th instant, in regard to the representations made to the department that you had been guilty of active political partisanship, and to your reply thereto, dated the 15th instant, I beg to say that in view of the statements made in your letter, it is presumed that you will have no objection to sign the solemn declaration herewith enclosed, which should be attested before a Justice of the Peace.

The declaration to which Mr. Verret refers was signed by Mr. McMillan, and reads as follows:

1. That I was appointed postmaster in the year 1908;
2. That since my appointment as postmaster, I have taken no active part in federal or provincial elections; I have not canvassed or taken any voters to the polls, nor have I offered or given any money or liquor, or represented any candidate at any polling division; I have not checked or verified any list of voters outside any polling station; neither did I take part in any committee of organization or address a meeting in favour of any candidate, and I did not interrupt any public speaker during the course of any meeting.
3. All I did was to quietly cast my vote.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing it to be true and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act.

And I have signed,
(Sd) Joseph McMillan.

Declared before me at Bridgeport, N.S., this 26th day of April, 1912.

(Sgd) Alex. O. McDonald,,
Justice of the Peace in and for the county of Cape Breton, N.S.

The letter that accompanied that affidavit has no bearing on the case, but the following letter was addressed to Mr. McMillan by Mr. Hector Verret in answer to the letter covering the declaration I have read:

Ottawa, April 30, 1912.

Dear Sir,—I am directed to acknowledge receipt of your solemn declaration, denying the charges of political partisanship which have been preferred against you.

You are no doubt aware that this declaration is as binding as any statement made under oath, and in view of the statements made to this department as to your political activity, your declaration seems inexplainable.

Under the circumstances, it becomes necessary to ascertain who is telling the truth, and the department will consequently proceed to make the necessary inquiries towards this end.

Yours very truly,
(Sgd) Hector B. Verret,
Assistant Deputy Postmaster General.

The department, then, undertakes to ascertain who is telling the truth as between the gentleman who made the charge against McMillan, and McMillan, whose declaration exonerates him, so far as I can see, from ever having taken any part in politics since the date of his appointment. Then, there is the following letter, dated Ottawa, May 21, 1912:

Acting under authority of an Order in Council dated the 27th November, 1896, copy of which is herewith, I beg to request that you will undertake a judicial inquiry into certain charges which have been made against Mr. Joseph McMillan, postmaster at Bridgeport, Nova Scotia, in the county of South Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, of political partisanship during his incumbency of that office.

Your allowance will be $15 per diem, in addition to your actual travelling expenses, and $3 per diem for living expenses. It will not be necessary to employ a shorthand writer or copyist. You will hear the witnesses pro and con and base your report on the evidence.

You will please give Mr. Thomas Callant, Inverness, N.S., and the postmaster due notice of the date on which the investigation is to be held.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd) L. P. Pelletier.

H. P. Duchemin, Esq., K.C.,
Sydney, N.S.

Mr. Duchemin acknowledged the receipt of that in a letter dated Sydney, May 25, 1912, in which he says that he will give the matter his very early attention. There are a few other letters in connection with this matter which do not have very much bearing on it. It seems that the gentlemen who made the charges against Mr. McMillan of political partisanship were unable to bring forward any evidence to show that he was guilty. Here is a letter dated Ottawa, August 12, 1912. Apparently it should be dated Sydney:

Hon. W. B. Nantel,
Acting Postmaster General,
Ottawa, Canada.

Dear Sir:

I am in receipt of your favour of the 18th instant, wherein you ask me to report at the earliest possible moment, the result of the investigation into charges against Mr. Joseph McMillan, postmaster at Bridgeport, N.S.

In reply I beg to state that no evidence has yet been offered me; that about a month ago, I wrote Mr. J. W. Maddin, advising him that this case was in hand, and that I have received no intimation from him that he has any evidence to offer; also, that Mr. J. C. Douglas, M.L.A., of Glace Bay, in answer to my inquiry regarding this case a fortnight ago, stated that he thought it would be better not to go ahead with it at the present time.

The case is still on my list, and as Bridgeport is so near at hand, I am prepared to take it up at any time the local complainants have evidence to submit. It is entirely in their hands.

Trusting that this explanation will be satisfactory, I remain,

Yours very truly,
(Sgd) H. P. Duchemin.

Next, there is a letter from Mr. Hector B. Verret, assistant Deputy Postmaster General, dated Ottawa, August 17, 1912, as follows:

I beg to ackowledge your letter of the 12th instant, stating that you have not yet taken up the investigation into the charges preferred against the postmaster of Bridgeport, N.S., Mr. Joseph McMillan, owing to the fact that you have not yet been advised by Mr. Maddin as to what evidence he may have to offer in the case.

In regard to this matter I am to say that a petition has been received for the removal of the Bridgeport post office to a more convenient location, and that this phase of the question will be investigated. In the meantime, you will hold your commission to investigate the political charges against this postmaster, in abeyance.

Yours very truly,
(Sgd) Hector B. Verret,
Assistant Deputy Postmaster General.

H. P. Duchemin, Esq.,
Barrister,
Sydney, N.S.

Apparently, when they found that they could not substantiate any charge against the postmaster of Bridgeport of political partisanship, the Conservative politicians down in that part of the country decided that they might get around it in another way and on August 17, 1912, they sent a memorial to the Post Office Department asking for the removal of the post office from the site it then occupied to another place in the village, which is really a part of the town of Glace Bay. With this object in view they sent to the Postmaster General, or his department, a petition signed by a great many people. I was rather surprised to see certain names on this petition. I am finding fault with the Postmaster General in this particular—and I asked three or four gentlemen whom I did not think would sign any petition of this kind what they did it for and their answer was that they had never signed it. I find there are the names of ten persons on this petition who do not get their mail in the Bridgeport post office at all and who would have no reason for asking for the removal of the Bridgeport post office from the former to the present location.

10 p.m.

Mr. BLAIN: What does the petition say?

Mr. CARROLL: The petition says:

We, the undersigned residents of Bridgeport in the town of Glace Bay, do humbly petition you to cause the post office at Bridgeport on the South riding in the county of Cape Breton to be changed from its present location to one which will be more convenient to the great majority of the residents of this section.

Mr. BLAIN: Is that it all?

Mr. CARROLL: Then it gives the prayer of the petition and the signatures. There is a report and it is on this report that I want to say something that perhaps may be offensive to certain gentlemen who are in the Post Office Department. I do not wish to say anything that may hurt their feelings in any way but I do not believe that the gentleman who presumed to make a sketch of the situation of the post office, and a general sketch of the village itself, ever saw the place or, if he did, he must have known that he was making a sketch that was absolutely wrong. I do not charge Mr. W. E. MacLellan with it but I do charge somebody in his department.

Mr. McKENZIE: Have you the request of the inspector asking him to report?

Mr. CARROLL: That is here but I did not read it. The report is as follows:

I enclose a sketch of the district showing the present and proposed sites of the office, the line of the Sydney and Louisburg railway, the line of the Sydney and Glace Bay Electric Tramway, the Bridgeport colliery, etc. The two sites are little more than one-eighth of a mile apart, but it will be seen from the sketch that the present site is not on the main road,—

That is falsehood No. 1.

—but on a side road and out of the way for the miners and the majority of the population. The proposed site is almost directly opposite the railway station—

That is correct.

and in the immediate vicinity of the colliery.

That also is correct.

The office is served from the Electric Tramway which has stopping places near the present site and also near the proposed site. The contract for carrying the mails between the post office and the tramway is held by the present postmaster, J. McMillan, for which he is paid $40 per annum. In the event of the transfer being authorized, the service would have to be put into the hands of the proposed postmaster, Dan. Cameron.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd) W. E. MacLellan,
Post Office Inspector.

The Hon. the Postmaster General,
Ottawa

When the papers were brought down, a copy of the sketch which Mr. McLellan said he enclosed in this letter, was not brought down.

Mr. PELLETIER: What is the date of Mr. McLellan's report?

Mr. CARROLL: The 21st of September, 1912.

I want to point out that the post office, where it was originally, was on the only main street in that section of the town. It was on the line of the Sydney and Glace Bay Tramway company; the cars stopped in front of it and always put the mails off there. The present locality is not on the main road; it is now not even on a public road, but on a road used by the Dominion Coal Company. So far as accommodating the people is concerned, the post office where it was, was in the only business section of the town. There are five or six stores in that section of Glace Bay, every one of which circles the post office where Mr. McMillan kept it; but where it is at present, there is no business carried on except in the railway station across the way of the Sydney and Louisburg Railway Company, which is a steam road.

Then comes a letter, dated September 26, from the hon. Postmaster General to Mr. J. W. Maddin. I want to be fair in the matter, and I do not know that I have any other criticism than this to make of the Postmaster General. In the first place, Mr. Maddin asked for the dismissal of Mr. McMillan on the grounds of political partisanship. The Post Office Department asked Mr. McMillan if he was a partisan and he replied that he was not. Oh, well, said Mr. Verret, of the Post Office Department, either one or the other is not telling the truth. Then Mr. McMillan was asked to make a declaration; and he did so, declaring that he had never, since the time he was installed as postmaster at Bridgeport, taken any part either directly or indirectly in political matters, and I believe him. He was appointed to that position, not because he was a Liberal—because he did not vote Liberal previous to that, although he may have voted Liberal after that—but on account of being a friend of a certain gentleman in that district and on account of his place of business being in a central locality. I hardly thought there was a man in this country who could sign such a declaration; but Mr. McMillan having signed it, I believe that he swore to what was absolutely the truth. Then Mr. Verret, an officer of the department, says: Mr. Maddin said that you acted in a partisan manner; you have sworn to the contrary; we will investigate the matter, and find out who is telling the truth. That was in the ordinary course of business, but the department although they searched high and low, could not find any evidence against Mr. McMillan to convict him of political partisanship. This is the criticism I have to make of the Department of the Postmaster General, that, those gentlemen having started to secure the dismissal of this man on the grounds of political partisanship and having failed in that, as shown by their own letters to the department, the Postmaster General and his department should have shown more caution in accepting the reports that came to them in connection with the second ruse that was being played for the purpose of getting this gentleman out of his position. When this matter was brought to my attention, I went to the trouble of writing to Mr. McMillan, asking him for a sketch of this particular part of the town. I knew it pretty well myself, but I wanted to have it in case it was ever asked for. I have the sketch now, and there is absolutely no truth in the statement made in the letter of Mr. McLellan, that this sketch would show that the present site of the post office was better than the last. As a matter of fact, there are false statements contained in that report. I do not say that Mr. McLellan made the false statements; I do not even say that the gentleman who reported to Mr. McLellan did so; but they were made somehow. That is evident to any man who knows the town of Glace Bay. The most startling thing is this, that, when I asked for this return, I asked for a report of the gentleman who investigated this matter, namely Mr. H. P. Duchemin of Sydney. I also asked how much the investigation cost. I think I have shown to the House that no investigation was ever held in connection with this matter at all. Yet the Department of the Postmaster General brings down a return showing that the cost of the investigation against the postmaster at Bridgeport was $17.75. This amount is not given in detail, and I am not very much surprised at that. A charge of $17.75 was made by the gentleman who was asked to investigate this matter and who in his own letter said that the matter was not investigated because there was no evidence forthcoming and because he was told by the officer of the department, Mr. Verret, that this matter should be held in abeyance, and because it was held in abeyance, where then comes the charge of $17.75 for making an investigation when no investigation was made?

Mr. WILLIAM CHISHOLM: Scores of similar cases.

Mr. CARROLL: If there are, I take the ground that a most rigid investigation should be held into all these matters; and I think that I am only doing my duty in bringing to the attention of the Postmaster General, first, that he and his department should have exercised more caution in having this man dismissed on the ground that his post office was in a certain position, when the thing was started first on the ground that he was a political partisan; secondly, that Mr. Duchemin has charged $17.75 for investigating this case which, on his own testimony and on the testimony of letters from the department, is shown never to have been investigated.

It is outrageous that men should be allowed to lose their offices on pretences of this kind. There are many people in my constituency who have lost postmasterships and other offices; but I am making no great complaint about that; if they have taken part in politics. If they are officials of the Government, and take an active part in politics, they should be willing to pay the penalty. The most of those who have been dismissed, with some notable exceptions, about which I am not going to say anything, are satisfied to pay the penalty by losing any little positions they may have had.

I think I have put this case plainly and quite mildly before the House. The Postmaster General should investigate this matter of Mr. Duchemin making a charge of $17.75 for work he never did. While I do not pretend to be in a position always to advise the Postmaster General, I would advise him in cases of this kind, which on their faces are suspicious, that he and the officers of his deparment should take care to see that no injustice is done as certainly has been done in this case.

Mr. PELLETIER: The fact that there was a bill put in and the amount paid, $17.75, is not explained on the file, and I shall be glad to look into it. If there was no investigation, if Mr. Duchemin did not go to Glace Bay, certainly there was no justification for the charge. We must have had an account of some kind. The fact that he wrote to the department letters about it and looked into the matter and obtained information would take him a full day at all events, and the instructions were that he should have $15 a day. This is a small matter, but still my hon. friend has the right to know facts, and I will certainly look into it.

Mr. CARROLL: This man never got any summons to appear, never was asked to appear, and did not appear.

Mr. PELLETIER: My hon. friend has read the instructions given Mr. Duchemin and knows that he was instructed to notify the postmaster if he held an investigation. If the postmaster did not receive a notice, clearly there was no investigation. My hon. friend has gone over a whole file, and I understand that there is no report by Mr. Duchemin that the case was investigated. Now, that the department should have been told that this postmaster should be dismissed for partisanship and yet no evidence adduced is a fact to be regretted. I myself have written letters which were easy to understand telling people who made charges, yet who did not come forward and prove them, that their action was unfair.

Mr. CARVELL: Locking the door after the horse is stolen.

Mr. PELLETIER: The hon. gentleman does not understand what I say. When people have made charges of partisanship against officials, yet have not done anything to prove those charges when the time came, I myself have reproached them for it.

Mr. CARVELL: You did not bother your head very much about that in my constituency.

Mr. PELLETIER: I have bothered my head about it wherever it occurred. I do not think it is fair to the department or to myself to make charges against an official which cannot be sustained. And it looks like striking below the belt besides. Whether done by my political friends or others, I say it is not fair. Whether this is a case of that kind I do not know. From what was read by the hon. member for South Cape Breton, I should infer that these people, when the time came to prove their charges, said that the time was not opportune.

Mr. CARROLL: No, there was simply no evidence forthcoming.

Mr. PELLETIER: At all events, the letter will appear on 'Hansard.' It may be that the witnesses who could prove the charges were away at the time. But, let it be remembered, this man was not dismissed on account of these charges; the charges not having been sustained, the man was not dismissed on that account. But we find that a largely signed petition was sent to the department, in which it was alleged that the post office was not at the point where it ought to be. I did not act in this matter, but the action was taken in this case which is invariably taken—it was referred to the post office inspector. Now, officers of the department are not entrusted as a rule with the investigation of the charges of partisanship. But invariably, or with very few exceptions, allegations about the management of the offices or their location are investigated, not by outsiders, but by officers of the department, and almost always by the post office inspector. In this case requests for the change in the site of the post office was referred to the post office inspector in Halifax, Mr. Maclellan. I will not say anything either in favour of or against Mr. Maclellan; I have not the pleasure of knowing him. But I appeal to hon. members of this House from Nova Scotia, and I think that there is not one but will tell me that Mr. Maclellan is a reliable officer and an honest man. He was simply asked to report, and no pressure was put upon him. His report practically says that there should be a change in the site of the post office for the reasons he gives.

Mr. CARROLL: But his facts are not correct.

Mr. PELLETIER: My hon. friend says the facts are not given correctly and that the sketch accompanying the letter is not right.

Mr. CARROLL: I am not in a position to speak as to the sketch, not having seen it. Mr. Maclellan may have been misled as to the facts by some one in the locality.

Mr. PELLETIER: But are the facts correct?

Mr. CARROLL: No.

Mr. PELLETIER: If they are not correct the department will have reason to doubt the efficiency of that officer. This I would regret very much, for I have always been told that Mr. Maclellan is an absolutely trustworthy and reliable official. The hon. member for South Cape Breton says that he has no fault to find with Mr. Maclellan, but Mr. Maclellan is responsible.

Mr. CARROLL: I take the ground that if he is responsible he should be held responsible for the false report which he has made to the department, and he should be asked to give the Postmaster General a reason for that false report.

Mr. PELLETIER: I am not going to disagree with that view. Having been informed by a member of this House, who is familiar with the place in question, that a report made by one of my officers is not correct, I shall certainly send a copy of 'Hansard' to this officer and ask him for an explanation. If what my hon. friend says is true, we have been deceived by that officer. Mr. Maclellan had no business to write to the department anything which was not true. His report shows that this post office should be changed; if we have made a mistake, we have made it because of this report made by our inspector.

Mr. CARVELL: I suppose you will reinstate the dismissed official if you find that the report is wrong?

Mr. PELLETIER: Certainly, if we have been deceived by our officer. The hon. member for South Cape Breton will agree with me when I say that this man was dismissed because the site was changed and for no other reason. If Mr. Maclellan deceived us in sending the document upon which was based the changing of the site; if the statements he made are not true, we shall certainly see that the matter is righted.

Mr. SINCLAIR: The minister is very angry—at least, he pretends to be very angry—about getting incorrect information, but the fact that these two matters followed one another in direct sequence is a very suspicious circumstance. When my hon. friend attempts to dismiss a postmaster and is unable to do so for one reason, he invariably finds another reason for taking action. I wish to draw the attention of the Postmaster General to a similar case which occurred in my own constituency. He says it is not fair that the people in the country should complain about postmasters and then fail to substantiate their complaints. According to my view of the way the Postmaster General administers his department, it is a foolish waste of energy for persons to make these partisan complaints, because the Postmaster General is so fertile in resources that he will find some way of getting rid of the officer whether there is a complaint or not. The case to which I wish to direct my hon. friend's attention is the dismissal of Charles McPherson, a postmaster at North Riverside in the county of Guysborough. I had a good deal of difficulty in finding out the name of the man who made the complaint against Mr. McPherson; I suppose that the name McPherson makes my hon. friend a little suspicious because, no doubt, he had in mind the celebrated case of the McPherson whom he tried to dismiss four years after he had departed this life. If my hon. friend would consult us on this side about these matters it would be better for himself. The hon. member for South Cape Breton could have told the Postmaster General all the details about the facts in relation to the matter to which he has referred: If the hon. gentleman had taken the trouble to ask me about the case of the late John McPherson of Tracadie Road I would have been able to inform him that Mr. McPherson had been dead four years and the Postmaster General would have escaped the odium of being charged with digging around in a graveyard and attempting to dismiss a man who had long since departed this life. I want, however, to be permitted to point out how this man Charles McPherson happened to be dismissed. The first communication on the subject is a letter from a man by the name of James R. McPherson, written to the Right Hon. R. L. Borden, Prime Minister of Canada. It is as follows:

Honourable Sir,—Charles McPherson, postmaster of this place, was appointed postmaster on the eve of the last election under the Laurier Administration and he is a strong Grit, always was and always will be. And he supported the Liberal councillor on the 4th of November last. Ever since the Conservative Government came into power I have been looking for his dismissal and I want to be appointed postmaster myself. I have been a Conservative all my life and a near neighbour of Mr. Charles McPherson and as yet I have not got much satisfaction concerning his dismissal and my appointment. Enclosed please find last letter from Mr. G. A. R. Rowlings, which speaks for itself.

Mr. Rowlings was the defeated candidate in the constituency in the last election, and resides in the city of Sydney, N.S. (Reading):

Now, Sir, I wish you to look in this matter and see that this Grit is removed from office.

I am, Sir,
your obedient servant,
(Sgd) James R. McPherson.

This man evidently is not afraid to speak up to the Prime Minister of this country. He charges the man who holds the office with being a strong Grit and with having voted at the municipal election for a Liberal candidate. The following letter was written by Mr. Rowlings:

Sydney, N.S., December 13, 1913.

Mr. James R. McPherson,
South Intervale,
Guysborough county, N.S.

Dear Sir,—I have had considerable correspondence with the department about the North

Riverside post office, but I regret to say that I have not had any attention as yet. I have asked for an investigation and they have told me that they would like to know what specific acts of partisanship can be proved. Of course I have submitted the fact that the present postmaster got his position on the eve of the last election.

Yours very truly,
(Sgd) G. A. R. Rowlings.

This letter does not seem to have been answered by the Prime Minister. It is answered by the Deputy Postmaster General, on January 22, 1914, as follows:

Sir,—It is represented to this department that since your appointment as postmaster at North Riverside, you have taken an active part in federal, provincial and municipal elections.

I am therefore directed to request that you will be good enough to say whether this is true. If the accusation is not well founded I presume you will have no objection to signing the solemn declaration herewith enclosed which should be attested before a justice of the peace.

An early reply is requested.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd) R. M. Coulter,
Deputy Postmaster General.

Mr. McPherson had apparently had no difficulty in making the declaration asked for because there had not been an election since the date of his appointment. It happened this office was open about the time of the last general election and there was no postmaster. The office had been opened but no one had been appointed. After the defeat of the late Government, and about a fortnight before the present Government came into power, I was asked to recommend a gentleman for the post office and I recommended Charles McPherson. His place was centrally located, and he was acceptable to the people, both Liberals and Conservatives. Mr. McPherson makes this affidavit:

I, the undersigned, postmaster at North Riverside, do solemnly declare:

1. That I was appointed postmaster in the year one thousand nine hundred and eleven.

2. That since my appointment as postmaster, I have taken no active part in federal or provincial elections.

I have not canvassed or taken any voters to the poll, nor have I offered or given money or liquor, or represented any candidate at any polling division. I have not checked or verified any list of voters outside any polling station, neither did I take part in any committee or organization or address a meeting in favour of any candidate and I did not interrupt any public speaker during the course of any meeting.

3. That I have taken no part in the Liberal interest in the municipal election held on the 4th November, 1913.

4. All I did was to quietly cast my vote. And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing it to be true, and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act.

And I have signed,
(Sgd) Charles McPherson,
Postmaster.

Declared before me at Boylston this 27th January, 1914.

(Sgd) William G. Simpson,
A Justice of the Peace, for the county of Guysborough.

This postmaster was able to comply with all the stringent rules of my hon. friend. He swore that since his appointment he had taken no part in federal, provincial or municipal elections, except to quietly poll his vote. But that does not seem to have helped him very much. Then we have a letter written to the department by Mr. Rowlings. There is consternation now in the department because all the props have been knocked from under their feet and there does not seem to be any way of getting this Liberal postmaster out of office. A letter was written from Ottawa on February 5, 1913, to Mr. Rowlings:

Ottawa, Ont., February 5, 1914.

Dear Sir,—This department lately received through the Prime Minister a communication from Mr. James R. McPherson charging the postmaster of North Riverside with political partisanship and also a letter addressed to Mr. McPherson on the subject by you.

The postmaster, I may say, was asked to sign a solemn declaration in connection with the charge, and he has returned the declaration duly signed. A copy of the declaration is enclosed herewith for your information and for any observations which you may care to make in the matter.

Yours very truly,
(Sgd.) Hector B. Verret,
Assistant Deputy Postmaster General.

G. A. R. Rowlings, Esq.,
Sydney, N.S.

To this, Mr. Rowlings makes this reply:

Sydney, N.S., March 3, 1914.

Hector P. Verret, Esq.,
Assistant Deputy Postmaster General,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir,—Referring to your favour of February 5, I beg to say that I would recommend that the application of Mr. James R. McPherson for the appointment of postmaster at North Riverside, Guysborough county, be granted. The establishment of this post office was made after the defeat of the late Administration and the present officials appointed sev--eral days after the late Government was defeated at the polls There is little doubt that the present official, Mr Charles McPherson, received the appointment as a reward for political services, and I hardly see how the present Administration can endorse his appointment and ratify the same under the circumstances mentioned.

Yours very truly,
(Sgd) G. A. R. Rowlings.

You will see that he shifts his ground now and tries to find some other reason that will satisfy the Postmaster General for dismissing this man. He makes no reference to the affidavit, but knowing that there is always some way of getting Liberals out, either by changing the site of the post office or otherwise, he thinks of this device and presents it to my hon. friend. Then we have the order to dismiss Charles McPherson. There is a letter of protest, however, from William A. McDonald, who describes himself as a staunch Conservative. Mr. McDonald says:

North Riverside, March 27, 1914.

The Post Office Inspector,
Halifax.

Dear Sir,—I am taking the liberty of writing you a few lines concerning our post office here at North Riverside, which was established about two years ago, it being one of the acts of John Sinclair when the Liberals were going out of power. This office is situated about midway between Boylston and Intervale, about three and a-half miles from each. The present postmaster is Charley McPherson, who had been a Liberal in politics. I may say of him he has kept the office in an honest and trustworthy manner, it has been a benefit to us. Now, a word about myself.

I am a staunch Conservative, and was appointed a delegate by the Conservatives of this polling district, and the Conservatives of this community have asked me to speak in our defence.

There is a man by the name of James McPherson agitating for to get this office for nearly two years. He reports now that he will have it first of April. Now, I will reluctantly have to tell you the truth. The office is in a central place, convenient to the people, held by a Liberal, and Liberals at both sides of it for some distance.

The Conservatives are in the west corner, and just at present we are satisfied where it is, as we sometimes get more flies with honey than vinegar.

In the meantime, if any good honest Conservative will take the office we are satisfied.

I am going to send you a list of property owners so you may know if you receive the right names.

David O'Connor, Thomas Gillie, James Clarey, William A. McDonald, James A. McDonald, John McDonald, Angus McDonald, William McPherson, Edmond McDonald—all Conservatives.

James Fraser, Charles McPherson, Thadeus Leet, Alex. Delroy, Joseph Delroy, C. Bryner, Cris. McDonald, William Cleary, William McPherson—Liberals.

Your obedient servant,
(Sgd) William A. McDonald.

It appears the Mr. McDonald's appeal had no effect on the Postmaster General. The facts that this office was in a central place and convenient to the public and that there was no Conservative in the centre of the district who could take this office, seemed to have no influence at all with the Postmaster General.

I have cited this case to show the methods applied by the Postmaster General in getting rid of Liberal postmasters. There was no pretence of any complaint against this man. He was satisfactory not only to the Liberals of the district but to most of the Conservatives as well. The office was in a central place and everything was going along first rate until this man, James McPherson, cropped up who says that he has been a Conservative all his life and wants the job. There is no evidence that a single person wanted that man removed from office, except McPherson who wanted the job for himself.

Mr. STEELE: What salary is attached to the office?

Mr. SINCLAIR: I have no doubt it is $35. The salary does not amount to much; the point is the inconvenience that is caused the people of the district by having to go to the west end in order to get their mail, whereas the former office was central. I am only bringing this up as a sample case. I have a number of other such cases in my desk showing the fertility of resource of the Postmaster General in finding reasons for dismissing Liberal officials who are not guilty of partisanship.

Mr. PELLETIER: My hon. friend has explained the facts pretty well, I think, and I do not need to add much to what he has said. I think this office can be regarded as the legitimate patronage of the party coming into power.

Mr. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Kamouraska). —Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to take up the question of the dismissals of postmasters in my constituency, as most of them have been relieved of office for various reasons. Let me refer briefly to one case: that of Miss Paradis, of Kamouraska, who was dismissed on account of her political leanings, and also because on the evening of polling day she had put up lights in her window to celebrate the victory of the member for Kamouraska.

Before going any farther and launching into any crilticism of his management of the Post Office Department. I would like to enquire from the Postmaster General whether he will be so kind as to consider an application which I myself submitted, in the course of last summer, for the opening of a post office at a certain point of Kamouraska county called River Menie. That thriving centre is situated on the line of the Transcontinental railway and has a great future in store, for people are bound to settle within a few years in numbers at that point where large sawmills are already in existence. I forwarded to the department a petition bearing many signatures. The locality referred to is situated within the limits of the municipality of St. Bruno where the River Menie Pulp Company has a mill.

I fail to see why that petition has not been granted. It seems to me a post office in that locality would be as much in the public interest as the numerous post offices which have been granted to my hon. friend from L'Islet (Mr. Paquet), whom—though I do not see him at his seat just now—I wish to congratulate on the activity he has shown in the matter of the opening of post offices throughout his constituency. I have in hand a report showing that during the year 1912-13, fourteen new post offices have been opened in the county of L'Islet.

The hon. Postmaster General stated the other day that he managed his department on business lines. However, I do not think the report I have in my hand supports his contention, at any rate as concerns the county of L'Islet. These fourteen post offices bear historic names for the most part. My hon. friend is entitled to our encomiums, the selection of the names bearing testimony to his literary, political and even military tastes. We have, in the first place, Chapais, a beautiful name, well known in the county of Kamouraska. Then we have Berryer and Artois, the latter I imagine, to satisfy his warlike disposition; Bégin, as evidence of his religious faith, La France, Frenette, Ozanam, Deniau, Bourgault, Botrel, the French national bard, Pasteur, the great healer of hydrophobia. However, when I reached Pinquet, I was astounded, and also Lachance.

Of course these are beautiful names, but from a business standpoint, I fail to perceive how the department will make a success of it. The total revenue forthcoming from these post offices was $710.81; salaries paid amount to $549.05, and the total expenditure for the carrying of the mails reached $1,093.99. So that the expenditure under all heads made up a total of practically $1,600, while the revenue barely reached $700. As regards some of these post offices, the revenue accruing from the sale of postage stamps reached for a period of two years the fabulous amount of $22. In another office, the revenue from that source did not exceed $19.50, while the carriage of the mails cost $37.50, to which should be added $21.50 for the salary of the postmaster.

I should add that more post offices have been opened since. I am not jealous of the favours granted to the county of L'Islet, and I am pointing out the fact solely for the purpose of showing that the department is not managed in a business way and to show how constituencies represented by liberals are dealt with in comparison. Subsequent to the date of that report, the Giasson post office, among others, has been opened in the parish of St. Aubert. The application was made by my hon. friend from L'Islet, and I cannot do any better than read his letter.

St. Aubert, April 1, 1914.

Hon. L. P. Pelletier,
Postmaster General.

Dear Sir,—I recommend the opening of a post office at a point situated one mile and a half to the east of the St. Aubert central post office, at the place of Mr. Georges Fournier, farmer. There are eight families residing at distances of four miles and four miles and three-quarters from the church and central office. On account of the peculiar way in which the settlement is laid out, the new post office cannot be located any further from the central office.

Close to Mr. Fournier's place there is a settlement of labourers, without means of conveyance. We have a storekeeper, a school, a real estate man, a flour mill and fifteen labourers living there. That office would be helpful more particularly to the labourers who, in winter time, cannot easily get their mail. I suggest the name of Giasson. I suggest that the service be daily and the contract awarded to Mr. St. Pierre, at 25 cents per trip, $77.50. I am sending the names of those who are asking for that new post office. Thanks.

Yours,

Dr. E. Paquet.

And the hon. member followed up that letter with a list of names. It is not the signatures of residents of St. Aubert that appear on that list, it is merely a list of names supplied by the hon. member.

Mr. PAQUET.—Will the hon. gentleman read the names?

Mr. LAPOINTE.—I say that these are not the signatures of these people.

Mr. PAQUET: Will the hon. gentleman take note that in one instance the application is signed by Cyrias Dubé?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The return which I have in my hands does not bear the signatures of the people who are supposed to ask for opening of a post office. The statement is merely that the families whose names are given request the opening of a new post office at Mr. George Fournier's, St. Aubert. I shall now read the list of names:

Zéphirin Dubé, farmer; Auguste Dubé, farmer; Joseph Dubé, farmer; Widow Aubert Pelletier; Widow Hozanna Pelletier; Charles Morin, farmer; Octave Picard, labourer; Philias Dubé, farmer; Maximin Pelletier, farmer; J. B. Pelletier, farmer; François Pelletier, farmer; Aubet Fournier, farmer; Prudent D'Aigle, farmer; Abondance Thibault, labourer.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Abondance!

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes, Abondance Thibault.

M. Daigle, labourer; George Pelletier, mill-owner; J.-B. Pelletier, mill-owner; Silva Riou, storekeeper, School House.

The hon. member for L'Islet will not contend that he got the school house to sign.

(Reading)—

Joseph Fortin, sr., labourer.

Mr. PAQUET: Does the hon. gentleman say that I got the signatures of these people?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am only reading the names which have been forwarded to the department.

(Reading)—

Joseph Fortin, jr., labourer; Cyrias Dubé, labourer; Calixte Fournier, labourer; François D'Aigle, labourer; Désiré D'Aigle, labourer; Salluste D'Aigle, real estate agent; Georges Fournier, farmer; Calixte Jeais, farmer; David Jeais, farmer; Amédée Langlois, jr., labourer; Arthur Fournier, farmer; Gaspard Caron, farmer; Georges Tremblay, labourer.

St. Aubert, January 3, 1914.

Mr. PAQUET: Does the hon. member contend that I got the signatures of those people?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I contend nothing of the sort; I am simply reading the names supplied to the department.

To that letter the Postmaster General replied on January 10, 1914, stating that he was instructing the inspector to prepare a report on the matter. Forthwith the post office was opened a mile or a mile and a half away from the office already in existence at St. Aubert.

I now find included in the report a letter addressed to the Postmaster General protesting against the decision, and giving reasons in support. That letter is signed by Mr. Cyrias Dubé and eighteen other citizens of St. Aubert. The letter reads as follows:

Quebec, March 17, 1914.

To the Hon. Louis Philippe Pelletier,
Postmaster General,
Ottawa.

Sir,—I beg to forward to you herewith a petition from twenty ratepayers of St. Aubert, all affected by the opening of the new post office in that parish, below the church, and designated 'Giasson.' The residents in that township never requested the opening if that town-office, which far from accommodating them is a nuisance, and that, for the reasons stated in the petition I am forwarding to you.

I trust you will have the kindness of duly considering our request and that you will do away with that post office, which is of no use to us and is rather an inconvenience.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your most humble servant,

(Signed) Cyrias Dubé.

Province of Quebec,
Parish of St. Aubert.

The undersigned ratepayers of the parish of St. Aubert beg to submit to the consideration of the honourable Postmaster General the following facts:—

(1) That they are residents in the district wherein a new post office bearing the name of Giasson has been opened.

(2) That they never requested the opening of that post office, which is of no service, and is rather an inconvenience.

(3) That it is much easier for the residents in that vicinity to receive and deliver their mail at the post office close to the church, as that has always been the case heretofore, their business calling them at frequent intervals to the village.

(4) That on Sundays especially, the necessity under which they are put of calling at that post office to get their mail, instead of getting it at the post office next the church, after service is over, is of great inconvenience to them, as it occasions delay on their way home and impedes circulation.

For the above reasons the undersigned request that the honourable Postmaster General close that post office and allow the undersigned to get their mail at the post office next to the church, as they have always done heretofore.

(Sgd.) Cyrias Dubé, his x mark; Philias Dubé, Joseph C. Bernier, Joseph Gagnon, Omer Gagnon, Aubert Fournier, Prudent D'Aigle, Désiré D'Aigle, François D'Aigle, Auguste Dubé, Joseph Dubé, Honoré Robichaud, Wilfrid Robichaud, Xavier Robichaud, François Pelletier, Amable Pelletier, Jean-Baptiste Pelletier, Octave Picard, Joseph Picard.

St. Aubert, March 16, 1914.

As will be noticed, nineteen residents have signed that protest. The representative of L'Islet stated in his letter requesting the opening of that post office that there are not more than twenty persons interested, and, out of that number, nineteen have signed a petition requesting that this post office be closed.

I see by the return that this request was immediately forwarded to the hon. member for L'Islet under cover of a departmental letter dated March 24, 1914. To that letter I find the following answer addressed to the department by the member for L'Islet:

To Mr. H. B. Verret,
Assistant Deputy Postmaster General,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—I am in receipt of your letter in reference to the opening of the Giasson post office. I shall take the first opportunity of passing at your office.

Yours,

Dr. E. Pâquet.

The return contains nothing further, which goes to show that he is responsible for the opening of that post office, and that he had been begging to get that post office opened. There is no politics in this connection, and the member for L'Islet will admit that, barring one or two exceptions, all these people supported him at the last election and belong to the Conservative party. That post office was opened with the sole object of enabling some one to earn a few dollars as postmaster and in the shape of house rent. And it is known that in a locality such as this where there is no need for it whatever, the opening of further post offices is rather harmful. As a matter of fact those interested have been refused their mail at the St. Aubert post office, where they go every Sunday to attend at church, and they are obliged to stop at Giasson to get it.

Mr. LEMIEUX: What was the minister's answer to that protest?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The answer was as follows:

Ottawa, March 19, 1914.

Mr. Cyrias Dubé,
St. Aubert, L'Islet Co., Quebec.

Sir,—I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 17th instant, enclosing a petition in reference to the Giasson post office, in the Parish of St. Aubert, county of L'Islet.

I have the honour, etc.,
A. W. Throop,
Secretary.

Mr. PAQUET: Will the hon. gentleman hand me over the papers?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Certainly. I have found fault with the policy followed by the department as regards the opening of further post offices in the county of L'Islet. I have now to find fault with the opening of a post office—it was not opened on any application from me—in the parish of St. Philippe de Néri, in the county of Kamouraska. That parish, according to the last census, has a population of about nine hundred souls. I am sure that the hon. gentleman is well posted on the question. Following on the last election, in that parish as well as in all others, it was deemed proper to dismiss the postmaster if he happened to be a Liberal. The postmaster I refer to did not await dismissal, he resigned at once. A Mr. Roy was recommended by Mr. Potvin, my opponent who was defeated at the polls. The majority in the parish were in favour of appointing some one else, a Mr. Lebrun. Mr. Potvin's nominee was appointed all the same. But a protest was forwarded to the hon. minister. Matters remained at that point until the month of May, 1912, when the provincial elections took place. My hon. friend the Postmaster General remembers no doubt the trip he made in company with the Minister of Railways, to hear complaints and endeavour to create a better feeling. In the parish of St. Philippe de Néri, an ultimatum was delivered to the leader of the Conservative party, intimating, that, unless the post office was removed from Mr. Roy's to Mr. Lebrun's, forty-five Conservatives, to say the least, would abstain from voting. Those who are familiar with that constituency know what that meant. There followed an exchange of messages between Ottawa, Quebec and St. Philippe de Néri, and finally, on the eve of polling day, an official of the Post Office Department arrived from Quebec, and to the utter surprise of all, a new post office was opened at a distance of about four arpents from the other, under the name of St. Philippe de Néri West. So that, in a parish with a population of nine hundred souls, comprising a small village, of thirty or forty households, as is to be found in all parishes of that size, there are two post offices. East and West, within an area of a few arpents only. I imagined that would last only until after the election; but I must congratulate the hon. gentleman, he was persevering, and both post offices are still in operation.

Mr. LEMIEUX: What was the effect on the result of the election?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The Liberal candidate was not injured, but the insurgents were soothed and went to the polls, in accordance with the wishes of the hon. Postmaster General. It was a fine exhibition of electoral diplomacy; but from the view-point of the management of postal affairs, it did not turn out so satisfactorily. I have secured a report of the business of those two offices since their opening, that is, from June 1, 1912, to December 31, 1913. The St. Philippe de Néri West post office has yielded a revenue of $592.01, while the expenditure on the same account totalled $394.02. That is a better showing than that of the new post offices in the county of L'Islet, since there is a surplus of about $200. The report of St. Philippe de Néri East has not been so satisfactory, since the earnings have reached the figure of $311.34; postage stamps sold, $280.43, commissions on money orders, etc., $31.02; while the expenditure amounted to $305.54; the surplus then only amounted to $6, and the postmaster's salary has necessitated an expenditure of $233.16, covering a period during which he sold for $280.32 worth of postage stamps. Hence it will be seen that the salary has practically absorbed the whole revenue of the post office. It will also be noticed that in the above mentioned expenditure the cost of the carrying of the mail is not included. I say that under the circumstances the opening of these two offices, East and West, does not by any means show that the Post Office Department is administered on the same lines as a bank.

Mr. ETHIER.—On the same lines as the Farmers Bank.

Mr. LAPOINTE.—As suggested by my hon. friend from Two Mountains, it is rather on the lines of the Farmers Bank that the Post Office Department was managed in that case, and I do not think such a state of things is allowable. Should the hon. gentleman be anxious to open new post offices, I am in a position to point out to him places where they are actually needed. But those two post offices at St. Philippe de Néri are a scandal, and I do not think the voters in that county feel grateful on that account either to the minister or the government.

There is another question which I wish to deal with, and it is preferable that I should do so right now. It is in connection with a contract for the carrying of the mail between St. Eleuthere and a place called Sully on the Transcontinental. Mr. Alfred Levasseur had that contract at $220 per annum. It expired on October 1, 1913. On September 9, Mr. Levasseur wrote to the Department the following letter:

St. Eleuthère, September 9, 1913.

Post Office Department,
Ottawa.

Sir,—As my contract for the carrying of the mail between St. Eleuthère, in the county of Kamouraska, and Sully, in the county of Temiscouata, was due to terminate on October 1, I wrote in that connection to the Post Office Department, Quebec, asking $150 instead of $220 per annum, as renewal price of my contract, seeing that I had the horses and vehicle to carry on the work, that being $70 below the original contract price. The Quebec department writes me in this connection stating that any representations I may have to make should be transmitted to Ottawa. Accordingly I am forwarding you that same tender.

(Signed). Alfred Levasseur.
by J. Z. C.

Mr. PELLETIER.—Is that the former contractor?

Mr. LAPOINTE.—Yes he was the former contractor, and he received the following reply:

September 18, 1913.

To Mr. Alfred Levasseur,
St. Eleuthère, Quebec.

Dear Sir,—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 9th instant, by which you offer to undertake the carrying of the mail between St. Eleuthère and Sully at the rate of $150 per annum.

In reply, I must say that the department has concluded other arrangements for that service.

Yours, etc.,
G. C. Anderson,
Superintendent.

Now I see by the contract which is included in the return that the work has been awarded to Mr. Christophe Lévesque, on October 1, 1913, at the rate of $200 per annum, without tender, after the Department had refused to renew the contract with the former contractor, who offered to carry on the service for $150. It was awarded to that man Lévesque at $50 more than Levasseur offered to do it for.

Mr. PELLETIER.—How much did the former contractor get, was it not $220?

Mr. LAPOINTE.—He received $220 and he had written to the department that he would carry on the work for $150. But a new arrangement was entered into whereby $50 more were given.

Mr. PELLETIER.—The contract was awarded at $20 less than previously.

Mr. LAPOINTE.—Certainly, but you might have got the work done for $50 less by accepting the last offer made by the former contractor.

Mr. PELLETIER.—But our arrangements were concluded then.

Mr. LAPOINTE.—Mr. Levasseur's offer was dated September 9, and the contract was not awarded until the 1st of October, 1913. As early as the month of June, the dispenser of patronage, Mr. Potvin, wrote to the department and requested that this contract be awarded to Christophe Lévesque. He was informed in reply that the said contract being for an amount exceeding $200, it was necessary to call for tenders. Mr. Potvin wrote back that Lévesque was ready to take the contract at $200, with a view to doing away with the call for tenders. Nothing was done until the end of September, that is one month previous to the expiry of the contract, though Levasseur had written in September that he was willing to carry on the work for $150. The department refused and awarded the same contract to another at the rate of $200. That is another instance of the minister's unbusinesslike management of his department.

Mr. PELLETIER.—In the case of St. Philippe de Néri, there is room for discussion, but this one is perfectly clear. Here is a man who has a contract at the rate of $220. It should be noticed that the rule of the department is to renew these contracts a long time before the date of expiry is at hand. In this instance we have a service which costs $220 and we find a man who is ready to do it for $200. The distance to be covered would even justify a contract for a larger amount, and even $220 was not too much pay, considering the work to be performed. When the former contractor learned that we had made arrangements whereby that work was to be done for $20 less, he wrote to the department offering to carry on the service for $150. At that price the man could not make a living.

Mr. LAPOINTE.—Why did you not call for tenders?

Mr. PELLETIER: Because tenders are never called for in connection with contracts for $200 or less. The cost of advertising, etc., would not justify such a course. Our rule is always to award the contract whenever we are satisfied that the price asked for is reasonable. In the case referred to by my hon. friend, we renewed the contract at $20 below the price paid the previous year. That is why Mr. Anderson answered that our arrangements were concluded.

Mr. MICHAUD: Was the contract signed?

Mr. PELLETIER: No, but that does not make any difference, provided the head of the branch has committed himself, it is not necessary that the contract be signed, to bind the department; the contract may be signed only a month or two later, it makes no difference. My hon. friend spoke of what we had done at St. Philippe de Néri—

Mr. LEMIEUX: Your patron saint.

Mr. PELLETIER: Yes, that may explain why I was generous in my dealings with that parish and granted two post offices. There are many localities with no more than 900 souls and where two post offices are in operation.

Mr. MICHAUD: There are many places with a population of 900 souls and that have only one post office.

[Mr. E. Lapointe.]

Mr. PELLETIER: If my hon. friend from Kamouraska has requests to forward for more post offices, it would be a mistake on his part to believe that I would refuse because the county is represented by a Liberal. I would not think myself justified in so doing. My hon. friend from Rouville stated last year that in following that policy I was only doing my duty. That may be, but I would like people to realize that such is the case. There are a good many constituencies in the province of Quebec where we cannot hope to win, because the Liberal majority is so overwhelming, that it seems impossible that we should overcome it. I shall not give out any names; I would rather continue entertaining some hope. Take for instance rural mail delivery. Is it not a fact that this service is being carried on in constituencies strongly supporting the liberal party as well as in others?

Mr. LEMIEUX.—It is no doubt because liberal constituencies are more enlightened.

Mr. LAFORTUNE.—I have been applying for such a route for two years past and as yet have not obtained anything.

Mr. PELLETIER.—The rules laid down by the department should be complied with. Let us take the county of St. Johns and Iberville for instance, that is one of the constituencies in the province of Quebec where rural mail delivery is organized on the widest scale. That service is not managed to subserve party ends, but on a strictly business basis. When I made that statement last year, my hon. friend from Rouville replied that I was only doing my duty. I know it, and that is my policy on every occasion.

My hon. friend from Kamouraska may rest assured that if he shows that more post offices are required in his constituency, the fact of his being the representative of the county will not by any means be in the way of granting his request.

Mr. LAPOINTE.—There are too many in some places, while there is a deficiency of them in others.

Mr. PELLETIER.—That is a matter of opinion. But as regards the question of deficiency, my hon. friend is not the only one to complain. We take into consideration to a certain extent the question of expenditure and probable earnings of the office; but when the opening of a new post office appears to be needful, particularly in a locality where vehicles are wanting and the distance to go over considerable, to reach the nearest post office, we take the view that the Post Office department exists to cater to the wants of the public, and we are not overweening on the question of the earnings exceeding the expenditure. For example, if it were shown that twelve or fifteen families are cut off from the rest of the world, their small number would not prevent us from coming to their assistance, and I think that is the right conception of the duties incumbent upon me.

Mr. LEMIEUX.—An application has been made by St. Jean Baptiste de Rouville. Number of citizens have signed that application and are willing to comply with the conditions laid down the the department for the establishment of a rural mail delivery route. However, nothing as yet has been done, and I would ask the minister to be so kind as to look into the matter as soon as possible.

Mr. GAUVREAU.—Before the Minister leaves this subject, I would like to ask for some information. Was there a petition forwarded to him on behalf of the residents of the western portion of L'Ile Verte, known as Rivière des Vases, for the opening of a post office?

Mr. PELLETIER: I cannot say offhand.

Mr. ETHIER: Mr. Chairman——

Mr. PELLETIER: The hon. member for L'Islet wishes to offer some explanation in reference to the opening of those new post offices in his constituency, and I trust the hon. gentleman will allow him to address the House for a few moments.

Mr. ETHIER: Very well, provided the hon. gentleman agrees not to move for the adjournment of the House previous to my being heard.

Mr. PELLETIER: Certainly, you will have plenty of time left to address the House.

Mr. ETHIER: I see the hon. gentleman from L'Islet is better acquainted with what is going on in the Post Office Department than the minister himself apparently is; why not appoint him deputy minister?

Mr. PAQUET.—I must thank the hon. member for Kamouraska who takes such warm interest in the welfare of the people in the county of L'Islet. If only he interested himself to the same extent in the experimental farm of Ste. Anne de la Pocatiere.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Does the hon. gentleman think that my suggestions would be favourably considered by this Government?

Mr. PAQUET: I regret that my hon. friend should have thought fit to speak sneeringly of the names of electors in my constituency. It is not the privilege of many to be known under the name of Lapointe. I must say that I represent a county comprising many new settlements, a thriving region, and I am not backward in requesting the opening of post offices in sufficient numbers. Long enough that county had been neglected; long enough our friends on the other side had dismissed all applications, however reasonable, submitted by the representative of L'Islet. Since the coming of the Conservatives into power, I found in the hon. Postmaster General, a man who understands what are the needs of the settlers in the county of L'Islet.

Before we reached power, the settlers and farmers of the county of L'Islet, in order to get to a post office, had to travel over distances varying between seven and twelve miles. That was satisfactory to the member for Kamouraska, but as regards farmers and settlers, the story was a different one. I thought the Postmaster General would be able to do something in their behalf, and I congratulate and thank him for having given some relief to that class of sturdy workers. That may be the reason why the member for Kamouraska is so sour on the Postmaster General and the member for L'Islet who both work in their interest.

In cities such as Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa and others, the people are not any better than those I represent, notwithstanding which the mail is distributed from house to house. Why should we not have in our rural districts as many post offices as are required to dispense people of the necessity of travelling over distances of ten miles to get their mail, as was the case under the Liberal rule. The county of L'Islet is progressing, and I am ready to discuss that question with the hon. member for Kamouraska; let him come into my county and upbraid the minister for having done his duty towards that fine agricultural class.

Mr. LAPOINTE: If the hon. member heard what I said, he must know that far from criticising him, I congratulated him on wielding such influence over the Postmaster General, as evidenced by the fact of his obtaining fourteen new post offices with a resulting total deficit of $1,000 per annum.

Mr. PAQUET: I stated and I repeat that the county of L'Islet had been shamefully neglected under the Liberal rule. To-day a work of regeneration is being carried on, since we have come into power. The hon. gentleman has referred to my parish. The hon. member for L'Islet is a genial fellow, but he made a sad mistake when he tried to cast ridicule on the names of my fellow citizens. I would not advise him to repeat the experiment in the parish of St. Aubert. When a man puts his name to a petition but has not the courage to himself sign it with his own name, I say I have a perfect right to wait until the session is over to personally investigate the facts. And if the Giasson post office should be closed, I shall be the first to call on the minister to do it. I am up against a plot engineered by a Liberal who wanted to get both the post office and the mail contract. Through spite, he got that petition signed, and forwarded it under cover to the hon. minister; however, he had not the courage to sign his own name to the petition, only putting his cross thereto, while he duly signed the covering letter. Under the circumstances, it seems I am justified in postponing until after the session is over the settlement of that matter, and finding out whether the Giasson post office should be closed.

I propose following up the work of providing postal facilities throughout the constituency, so as to put our poor settlers on a footing of equality with city people. I wish to work with all my might in the interest of my electors and let them enjoy the advantages of rural mail delivery.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I wish to protest against the statement made by my hon. friend that I sneered at the names of those who signed the petition. I did nothing of the sort, and if the hon. gentleman gathered that meaning from my utterances, he is utterly at sea. As regards Cyrias Dubé whom he taunts for not having had the courage of signing his name to the petition, contenting himself with putting his mark, well the Postmaster General will tell him that one is just as good as the other.

Mr. PELLETIER: Not when a man is able to sign.

Mr. LAPOINTE: But somebody else writing to the minister in Dubé's name, may have signed for him.

Mr. PAQUET: Is not that sufficient reason for me to delay giving the decision which should be taken under the circumstances?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Does the hon. gentleman contend that the names of the nineteen persons who are mentioned in that petition are not actually voters of the parish of St. Aubert?

Mr. PAQUET: They are voters of St. Aubert, but I do not know whether these are their signatures; as a matter of fact, I see that Cyrias Dubé who signed the letter addressed to the minister, has not signed his name to that petition, but merely put his mark.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I do not think the hon. gentleman should put forward such a contention. So far, I have had only complimentary references to make to him, but now I am bound to find fault with him. The hon. gentleman was advised by the department that a petition had been received bearing a certain number of signatures and asking that the said post office be closed. His reply to that letter was that he would take the matter up and call at the department. How is it that he has not yet been there, and has not secured the requisite information?

Mr. C. ETHIER (Two Mountains): Mr. Chairman since we are dealing with the dismissals of postmasters, I may be allowed to enquire from the minister whether he recalls the incident which took place on Tuesday evening when the removal of the Ste. Scholastique postmaster was considered. I complained on that evening of the action taken by the department on the petitions sent in by certain parties, asking for the removal of Mr. Raymond and recommending as his successor two persons, the present postmaster, Mr. Presseault, and Mr. Sauvé, who, by the way, is not related to Mr. Sauvé, M.L.A., at Quebec. The minister answered me as follows:

Mr. Pelletier: I will look into that.

Mr. Ethier: There were many persons surprised that these petitions were not on the file. I am certain they are not of a private character.

Mr. Pelletier: I will instruct the officer in charge of the branch to look into it to-morrow.

It is now Friday, and we have not yet had the promised information. That same evening the Postmaster General, basing himself on the precedent and principle laid down by the former Prime Minister, to-day leader of the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), that all letters addressed to the department and marked 'Personal," should in no case be brought down on an order of the House for a return, declared himself to be in perfect sympathy with the views then expressed. That is actually the principle laid down by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. PELLETIER: Without the consent of the writer. Occasionally, I have had letters marked 'Personal,' which I brought down after getting the consent of the party who wrote them.

Mr. ETHIER: Well, since Tuesday I have not yet had an answer to my request for the bringing down of those petitions, which are in the hands of the minister or filed in the department.

Here is a second question. In the return which was handed to me in connection with the removal of Mr. Raymond, I see there is a letter marked 'Personal.' Now, either the minister has been deceived or is trying to deceive others. How explain the inclusion of that letter in the return, if the rule is not to lay before the House a letter marked 'Personal'? Even the copy I have in my hands is marked 'Personal.' That letter is dated December 10, 1913. Again I ask, why is it included in the return? I fancy that when it suits the convenience of the department letters are sent down; if not, they are withheld.

This letter was laid before the House on March 6 last and it reads as follows:

Montreal, December 10, 1913.

(Personal)
The Hon. L. P. Pelletier,
Postmaster General, Ottawa.

My Dear Sir,—In answer to your letter of the 3rd instant, I must say that the gentleman I recommend to succeed Mr. Raymond as postmaster at Ste. Scholastique, is Mr. Wilfrid Presseault. I have no doubt that the aforementioned gentleman will make an excellent postmaster.

Please accept, &c.

G. A. Fauteux.

This Mr. Fauteux is the same who failed in securing his election, because he did not even know how to prepare his nomination papers. Now, I wish to draw the attention of the House to the manner in which the removal was effected of the postmaster of Ste. Scholastique, which is the chief town of the district of Terrebonne. I might explain that removal was effected through the intervention of the hon. member for Terrebonne, and if Mr. Nantel were present, he might be in a position to enlighten us.

In the redistribution of electoral seats which is being effected, it is proposed to annex the whole or part of the county of Two Mountains to that of Laval. Well I accept that proposal, for I am satisfied that I would get along very well with the good people of Laval. But it would have been a much simpler proposition to unite my county with that of Argenteuil, my natural neighbour. I invite the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) to come and discuss that question in my constituency, and he will be quite nonplussed at the result.

Mr. PELLETIER: He might take a lesson in the art of securing an election by acclamation.

Mr. ETHIER: Now let us come down to business, I mean let us revert to Ste. Scholastique. Is there a rule laid down for Ste. Scholastique and another for Kamouraska? In this matter as in the matter of banks, is the principle to be laid down that what is fair as regards Ontario is not fair as regards Quebec? But let us stick to the question, that is, the removal of Mr. Raymond, and let us see under what circumstances it was demanded. In 1896, the postmaster of the district town of Terrebonne was Mr. Antoine Fortier—what I am about to narrate is a matter of history in the county of Two Mountains. Mr. Fortier was revising officer under the Electoral Franchise Act and he had been appointed by Mr. Chapleau. Mr. Fortier was postmaster, he was also a Conservative leader in the county. In 1896, when the Liberals reached power, he was, in consideration of his advanced years, retained from 1896 to 1898, the year of his demise. After his death, was he replaced by a Liberal? No, Mr. Minister. You are familiar with Quebec, but you are not quite so familiar with the district of Terrebonne, concerning which you might be posted by your colleague, Mr. Nantel, that silent Mr. Nantel, who is never seen in the House.

In 1898, we appointed notary Forest, a Conservative also, who had always worked against the Liberal party. He kept the position some time, and then resigned to be replaced by his brother-in-law, Vincent Fortier, always in the same family, and also a Conservative. He resigned for reasons, which I do not wish to state here, and the Government appointed his sister, Miss Annie Fortier, to take his place. In 1903, Miss Fortier got married. I recall these facts in order to show to the Postmaster General that the Liberals did not show any spite, as you are showing against the Liberals.

Mr. BLONDIN: I would suggest that the hon. gentleman address the Chair, and not the minister.

Mr. ETHIER: I beg your pardon, Sir, I thought I should address the superior.

Mr. BLONDIN: Such is the rule of the House.

Mr. ETHIER: After Miss Fortier married, we appointed Mr. Felix Raymond, who was a Liberal. But, please note, Mr. Chairman, that we dismissed no one to appoint Mr. Raymond. Between 1896 and that date Conservatives had been appointed, and they were people who gave no cause for complaint, and properly fulfilled their duties. When Mr. Felix Raymond was appointed, the position was vacant and we did not remove any one to find a place for him. He is a respectable citizen, and the only fault to be found with him is that of being a Liberal.

After the elections of 1911, the Conservatives asked for his removal through the petition a copy of which I applied for the other evening. Mr. G. A. Fateaux, the would-be candidate in the county of Two Mountains, thus expressed himself on November 19, 1912, in a letter addressed to the minister:

Montreal, November 19, 1912.

The Hon. Postmaster General,
Ottawa.

My Dear Sir,—The post office of the village of Ste. Scholastique is at present under the care of Mr. Felix Raymond. That gentleman received that appointment from the Liberal party on account of exceptional services rendered to that party, and he has been in the meantime maintained in office owing to his constant participation to the Liberal organization in the county. My desire would be that in future that post office be confided to the care of Mr. Wilfrid Presseault, of Ste. Scholastique.

I trust therefore that you will give the requisite instructions to have my request complied with under the shortest notice.

I have the honour to remain, &c.,

G. A. Fauteux.

On the other hand, I had never asked for the removal of any one. On December 21, 1912, the department wrote as follows to Mr. Raymond:

Ottawa, December 21, 1912.

Mr. Felix Raymond,
Postmaster,
St. Scholastique, Que.

You are charged with having, since your appointment as postmaster, taken part in the Dominion and Provincial elections. I am directed by the Post Office Department to inquire whether that is a fact. If the charge is foundationless, I imagine you will have no objection to signing the inclosed solemn declaration, which should be received before a justice of the peace or a notary.

Should there not be any justice of the peace or notary in your locality, the declaration may be received before the mayor of the parish.

[Mr. Ethier.]

Kindly forward me your answer without delay.

I remain, &c.

H. B. Verret,
Asst. Deputy Minister.

It will be noticed that the form never varies. That printed form was submitted to me, and I advised Mr. Raymond not to sign it, and to return it to the department.

The following is the declaration which Mr. Raymond sent to the department:

Solemn declaration made under the Act for the prevention of extrajudiciary oaths.

I, the undersigned, Felix Raymond, postmaster of Ste. Scholastique, Quebec, do solemnly declare:

(1) I was appointed postmaster in the year 1907;

(2) Since the date of my appointment as postmaster, I have not taken an active part in the elections, whether Dominion or Provincial, I have not done any canvassing or taken voters to the polls, or offered or given money or liquor; neither have I represented any candidate at the polls, except at the Provincial election of 1908, when I represented a candidate late in the afternoon. Neither have I voted, checked off voters at the door of any poll. Neither have I taken part in any organization committee. I did not address any meeting in favour of any of the candidates, and I did not interrupt any public speaker at any public meeting.

(3) All I did do was to peacefully record my vote. In 1908, and at the elections, Dominion as well as Provincial, of 1911 and 1912, I abstained from voting.

And I make this declaration knowing it conscientiously to be true and to have the same effect as if given under oath under the Evidence Act of Canada.

And I have signed,
F. Raymond.

Then an inquiry was ordered. On December 30, 1912, after a year's delay, Mr. Bergeron was appointed to inquire into the charges brought against Raymond. It will be noticed that there were about fifteen similar cases. Postmasters whose salaries did not exceed $30 were dismissed, and for what purpose? Mr. Bergeron was employed as investigating commissioner at a salary of $15 per diem, plus $3 per day for his living expenses, besides his travelling expenses. It cost $75 to remove some poor fellows, whose only offence was that they were Liberals. In every case, it is always the same form which the minister uses:

Your fees will be $15 per day, plus your actual travelling expenses and $3 per day as a living allowance. It will not be necessary to employ a stenographer or copyist; you will hear the witnesses brought forward for and against, and you will base your report on the evidence.

Please advise Mr. G. A. Fauteux, barrister, 97 St. James street, Montreal, and the interested postmaster, of the date at which you will proceed with the inquiry.

I give herewith the report of Mr. Bergeron, in the case of Ste. Scholastique, dated January 30, 1913. Mr. Raymond had been dismissed in December, 1912.

Montreal, January 30, 1913.

To the Hon. L. P. Pelletier,
Postmaster General,
Ottawa.

Re Felix Raymond, postmaster of Ste. Scholastique, county of Two Mountains.

Sir,—Acting under your instructions received on December 30 last, I proceeded to Ste. Scholastique, where, on Tuesday the 28th instant, I conducted an inquiry into the charges brought against Postmaster Raymond, for political partisanship. I had advised Mr. G. A. Fauteux, barrister, and Mr. Felix Raymond of the date and place when and where I would proceed with such inquiry. I had assigned as witnesses Mr. J.-Bte. Legault, Mr. Wilfrid Presseault and Mr. Guillaume Sauvé, all three of the village of Ste. Scholastique. These witnesses have sworn that Mr. Raymond was a Liberal in politics. Mr. Legault swore that Mr. Raymond discussed politics at Mr. Barsalou's on the evening of the votation in 1911, stating that the Laurier government was going to remain in power as strong as it was previous to the elections. He swears, moreover, that Mr. Raymond went to congratulate Mr. Ethier, member elect, following on the decision rendered in June, 1912, confirming him in the possession of his seat.

Mr. Guillaume Sauvé corroborates Mr. Legault's statement as to Mr. Raymond congratulating Mr. Ethier after the judgment of June, 1912. Mr. Felix Raymond who has been postmaster for the last ten years, he says, though very active in politics, previous to his appointment as postmaster, swears that he has not taken any part in politics in the meantime. He does not deny having met Mr. Fauteux, the Conservative candidate, at the registrar's in 1911, during election time, and having expressed his views. He does not recall the conversation with Legault at Barsalou's, but he will not deny the truth of Legault's statements. There is no doubt that Mr. Raymond, a former Liberal leader, has in a great measure altered his ways since becoming postmaster, but he did not refrain from expressing his views in the presence of Mr. Fauteux, Conservative candidate, at the registrar's as also in the presence of Messrs. Legault and Sauvé at Mr. Barsalou's.

I have the honour to be, &c.,

J. G. H. Bergeron.

The elections had been held in 1911, and that report came out only two years later.

On January 30, 1913, Mr. Fateaux wrote as follows to the minister:

Montreal, January 13, 1913.

To the Hon. L. P. Pelletier,
Postmaster General,
Ottawa.

My Dear Sir,—Mr. Bergeron, who has been appointed by you to carry on an investigation at Ste. Scholastique into the charges of political partisanship brought against Mr. Raymond, has given me communication of the report which he is addressing to you. Will you be so kind as to suspend all further action in the matter until I see you again in this connection?

Please accept, &c.

G. A. Fauteux,

Since when has a judge the right to communicate his decision to an outsider before sending it to the proper authority? We have witnessed that once before in the saloon prosecutions in Montreal; but Mr. Justice Charbonneau quashed the decision of the license commissioners.

Is there a word in the report of Mr. Bergeron, stating that he recommends the removal of Raymond? No, Mr. Bergeron's report is rather favourable. But it was Sauvé who made use of this report. The following is the copy of a letter he wrote to the minister on December 16, 1913:

Mr. Minister,—I have just learned that the postmastership is vacant. I have applied many a time for the position. You invariably answered that it was not vacant, but that my request would be considered. I hope to receive a satisfactory answer, as one of the principal leaders of the party in my county had promised that in the case of a change taking place, I would get it. That is my reason for applying once more. I have been for many a year a supporter of the Conservative party, and I trust it will grant me this favour now, as I was given to understand that it would be, ever since a change is being talked about.

An answer will oblige.

William Sauvé.

On the 28th of November, Mr. Fateaux, who had been carrying on an ex parte investigation, sent to the minister the following letter:

My Dear Minister,—Herewith you will find two statements, one signed by Mr. Jean-Bte. Legault, and the other by Mr. Wilfrid Presseault, both electors of Ste. Scholastique, showing that Mr. Ethier has been making political capital out of the fact that we are not taking action towards removing Mr. Raymond, the present postmaster of Ste. Scholastique.

Trusting that these statements will prove the correctness of what I asserted in a previous letter and will justify you in effecting the removal which I urge, I beg of you to accept the expression of my most cordial feelings.

Yours, &c.,

G. A. Fauteux.

Presseault and Legault are two retired gentlemen who never go to Montreal unless somebody else pays their expenses, and it will be seen that their statements are headed Montreal. They read as follows:

Montreal, November 24, 1913.

On or about the last days in May, 1912, while we were three or four people congregated in front of the court house at Ste. Scholastique, Mr. Calixte Ethier, of the village of Ste. Scholastique, advocate and member of parliament, came towards us, unprovoked, and addressing Mr. Wilfrid Presseault, who was one of our group, he said sarcastically: 'Are you going to get the post office? If you get it, you won't keep it long. There is going to be a change of Government within six months, and I shall not defer the matter for a year or two. On the day following you will be put out. If I were in your place, it would not take twenty-four hours.'

(Sgd) J. B. Legault.

Sworn before me at Ste. Scholastique, this 25th day of November, 1913.

(Sgd) Narcisse Forest,
Notary.

Montreal, November 24, 1913.

On or about the last days in May, 1912, while we were three or four people congregated in front of the court house at Ste. Scholastique, Mr. Calixte Ethier, of the village of Ste. Scholastique, advocate and member of parliament, came towards us, unprovoked, and addressing Mr. Wilfrid Presseault, who was one of our group, he said sarcastically: 'Are you going to get the post office? If you get it, you won't keep it long. There is going to be a change of Government within six months, and I shall not defer the matter for a year or two. On the day following you will be put out. If I were in your place, it would not take twenty-four hours.'

(Sgd) Wilfrid Presseault.

Sworn before me at Ste. Scholastique, this 25th day of November, 1913.

(Sgd) Narcisse Forest,
Notary.

As a matter of fact, I may have uttered those words, but would that be sufficient ground to dismiss Mr. Raymond? It was no fault of his. Political turncoats are to be found everywhere, at Ste. Scholastique as in Quebec. One sure thing is that Wilfrid Presseault was the man who took the cake. That is the whole story of Mr. Raymond's removal. Who asked for it? André Fauteux, the defeated candidate. Mr. Bergeron had not recommended his dismissal, as his report clearly shows.

So I say that the removal of Mr. Raymond is an insult to the whole county of Two Mountains, and particularly to the parish of Ste. Scholastique. As no one had been removed to make place for Mr. Raymond, there was no occasion for reprisals. It is a case of gross injustice and the people will keep it in mind for the next general elections.

I might mention all the post offices in the county. It is well known that in Two Mountains there is no patronage to distribute, however, I never got a single postmaster removed, even of those who were appointed previous to 1896. In 1897, a post office was opened at the Côte St. Vincent, at the request of the public; the postmaster, Foisy, did not replace any one, nevertheless he was removed. Everywhere it was on the part of our opponents a revelry of dismissals.

[Mr. Ethier.]

Now, I wish to refer to an incident which occurred the other day in this House, while I was absent, in reference to the Oka postmastership. The question was raised by the hon. member for Rouville and the right hon. leader of the Opposition, who inquired from the Postmaster General whether he would not do something for the widow of the postmaster of Oka, who lost his life in the autumn of 1911, on the lake of Two Mountains while transporting the mails. The member for Rouville recalled to the memory of the minister that I had made an application to that effect.

I must admit that $1,000 has been granted to the widow; but my hon. friend was right, I had applied for it, and the minister told me at the time that was too late. Call later on, he said, and we shall see what can be done. I did not fail to do so, and at the session of 1912, there was in the supplementary estimates a thousand dollar vote intended for the widow. Reference was made to a lettre of thanks from the family addressed to the minister. It was the member for Two Mountains who made the request, and it is the minister who gets the thanks.

Mr. PELLETIER: It is understood you gave the money.

Mr. ETHIER: No, but it is understood that if I had not asked for it you would not have allowed anything. Any way that $1,000 does not come from your pocket, but from the Dominion Treasury. If it is expected that some political capital is to be gained at Oka through the granting of that $1,000, that is a mistake. In 1896, there were only four people who voted Liberal; but in 1908, there were 95, and there will be 150 or 200 at the next general elections. That $1,000 will not change the Liberal majority of the parish of L'Annonciation d'Oka.

I now resume my argument. The hon. Postmaster General stated further in reply to the hon. member for Rouville, that instead of granting her a 'compassionate allowance,' he had appointed her postmistress. However, he did not state that he had deprived her of the mail contract, though she had horses and vehicles which had cost her between $1,500 and $1,800, so as to let a Conservative get the advantage of it.

That is not all, the minister has fixed matters so that her son will not be able to do the work which his father used to do; the father was a baker by trade, and the son used to carry the mail. The minister says he appointed her, but she was postmistress already.

Mr. PELLETIER: No.

Mr. ETHIER: That is mere word play.

Mr. PELLETIER: Not at all, her husband had the post office.

Mr. ETHIER: But the post office was in Mrs. Laberge's house, and since when was she separated from her husband? I notice the sneering smile of the minister, but if ever he comes to Oka, Mrs. Laberge will tell him: You ruined me, even if you did leave the post office to me. As postmistress she draws $36 per annum, but she has been deprived of the mail contract between Oka and Como, and Como and La Trappe, a contract which brought a good deal more. That is what I would have stated the other day, had I been present, and I wish to lay these facts before the House and the electors of Two Mountains, so that all may know what it amounts to.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I might refer to other dismissals which have taken place in the county of Two Mountains, and particularly, that of Mr. Lalonde, at Côte Double, that of a Emile Brazeau at Côte Rouge, that of Amédée Vaillancourt at Côte St. Etienne, who was replaced by Xavier Desjardins; of Louis Vermette, at Côte St. Vincent; of N. Laviolette, at Petit-Brulé; of Edmond Lalonde, at St. Benoît; of A. Labelle, at St. Canut-East; of Edmond Lacroix, at St. Joseph du Lac; of Zéphirin Raymond, at St. Placide. Mr. Zéphirin Raymond was hit harder than anybody else, because he happened to be the uncle of the member for Two Mountains.

All those dismissals are mentioned in Report No. 44, of the Department of the Secretary of State, brought down on January 22, 1914.

In all that correspondence relative to those dismissals, it is always the same Mr. Bergeron who is investigating commissioner, and who receives letters signed L. P. Pelletier, stating that he will be paid 15 per diem, plus his travelling expenses, plus $3 per day as living allowance. Before ordinary courts of justice—I appeal in this connection to the Crown prosecutor for the district of Montreal (Mr. Lafortune)—no such bills were ever filed.

Mr. Chairman, I revert once more to the case of Mr. Zéphirin Raymond, of St. Placide, and I assert that he was persecuted even when on his death bed. He had tendered his resignation, it was not accepted; they waited until he had gone to the hospital in Montreal, to notify him of his dismissal. He had been postmaster 44 years. He was the oldest postmaster in the county. He had carried on a large trade at one time. Such has been the work of the Postmaster General in the county of Two Mountains, and if ever he shows himself again in that county he will get a thrashing such as that he got on a former occasion and which he richly deserved.

Mr. PELLETIER: I shall send a copy of 'Hansard' in the county of Two Mountains and to Mrs. Laberge, so that she may read what the hon. gentleman stated to-night and judge for herself.

Mr. ETHIER: She knows it all.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Pelletier, the House adjourned at 12.35 a.m. Saturday.

Saturday, May 16, 1914.

The House met at Eleven o'clock, the Speaker in the Chair.

INTERNATIONAL PURITY CONGRESS.

Right Hon. R. L. BORDEN (Prime Minister) laid on the table of the House the report of the delegates appointed by the Government of Canada to attend the International Purity Congress held in Minneapolis, Minnesota, November 7-12, 1913. He said: There does not appear to have been any formal published official report of the congress as a whole, but what is understood to be a report of the proceedings has been published in successive numbers of a magazine in the United States. These have been bound and are placed upon the table of the House for the information of the members.

YUKON PLACER MINING.

Hon. W. J. ROCHE (Minister of the Interior) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 200, to amend the Yukon Placer Mining Act. He said:

Several amendments have been prepared to the Yukon Placer Mining Act, but owing to the advanced stage of the session it has been deemed advisable to drop them all save one, the purpose of which is more particularly to facilitate the carrying out of the intention of the existing Act. The existing Act provides that any number of claims owned by one individual company or group of individuals included in a registered partnership may be grouped for operation, but subsection 2 of the section of the Act which so provides, grants the grouping privilege to large holders of placer mining property companies and registered partnerships, which cannot be taken advantage of by groups of individual miners operating together, and the amendment is for the purpose of extending the scope of the Act so as to provide that the grouping privilege shall extend to groups of individual operators as well as to companies and registered partnerships.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

PRIVATE BILLS.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill No. 197, for the relief of Robert Markle Richardson.—Mr. T. J. Stewart.

Bill No. 198, for the relief of George Andrew Crooks.—Mr. Schaffner.

Bill No. 199, for the relief of Florence Merritt.—Mr. Boys.

DEPOSITORS OF DEFUNCT BANKS.

On the Orders of the Day being called:

Hon. W. T. WHITE (Minister of Finance): The hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux) asked me to obtain for him certain information with regard to La Banque du Peuple, La Banque Ville Marie, and La Banque St. Jean. I find that La Banque du Peuple suspended payment in 1895. No liquidator was ever appointed. By special legislation, chapter 75 of the Acts of 1897, and chapter 123 of the Acts of 1899, the affairs of the bank were wound up by the directors. The Act of 1899 confirmed a composition at the rate of forty-five cents on the dollar with the creditors, and this composition was paid. There is no available information as to the number of depositors. With respect to La Banque de St. Jean, I find that the amount due ordinary depositors at the time of the suspension, 1908, was $301,000. The liquidator advises that the probable dividend will be between twenty and thirty per cent of this amount. He further advises that the approximate number of depositors was 3,000. With respect to La Banque Ville Marie, I find that the deposits at the time of failure, 1899, are reported to have been $1,504,665. Seventeen and one-half per cent was received by the depositors. The liquidation was closed and the liquidator is dead. There is no information available as to the number of depositors. I am unable to obtain any further information for my hon. friend.

ANTIGONISH CUSTOMS COLLECTOR.

Mr. WM. CHISHOLM: On the 16th of March an Order of the House was passed

For a copy of all recommendations, protests, petitions and representation received by the Government or any department or minister thereof, regarding the appointment of the present collector of customs at Antigonish and of all the letters, telegrams and correspondence relating thereto.

Yesterday what purported to be a return in answer to this order was placed on the table of the House from the Department of Customs. That return consists only of a letter dated 22nd October, 1913, signed by John McDougald, commissioner of customs, addressed to Wm. Chisholm, Antigonish, N.S., informing him that the Minister of Customs has been pleased to authorize his appointment as acting collector of customs at Antigonish, N.S., at a salary of $1,100 per annum. I desire to say that I never received such an appointment or such a letter, nor have I any expectation of receiving an appointment. This return is certainly not a compliance with the order of the House. I happen to know that there are on file in the Department of Customs petitions and representations respecting the appointment that was made. There is a representation from the president of the Conservative Association, and I happen to know what it contains. The order is so worded as to call for the production of any correspondence or documents from any department of the Government, and, as I happen to know that this letter of the president of the Conservative Association was written as an official document from that association and not as a private or confidential letter, it should be produced.

Hon. J. D. REID (Minister of Customs): The return as brought down by me contains all the official documents in the department. If there is any other correspondence it is private and confidential and my own.

Mr. CHISHOLM: I want a compliance with the Order of the House so far as the other departments are concerned. I suppose the same protection will be sought by the other departments, of saying that the documents are private.

Mr. SPEAKER: An hon. member in asking for a return to be brought down cannot enter into a discussion any further than to explain the matter so that the minister will understand it.

Mr. REID: The hon. member complained the other day that the return had been asked for some time ago and had not been brought down. I find that on March 18 it was sent to the Secretary of State. His attention was called to it. I laid the return from the Customs Department on the table yesterday. This morning I handed in the return from the Secretary of State and it is now in the hands of the Clerk, with any other correspondence, if there is any, from any other department.

Mr. CHISHOLM: I would ask the minister whether a document relating to a public appointment, not marked personal or confidential, is considered by him to be of a private character?

Mr. REID: I judge whether a document addressed to me is private or official when I receive it.

CANADA GRAIN ACT AMENDMENT.

On motion of Hon. George E. Foster (Minister of Trade and Commerce) Bill No. 170, to amend the Canada Grain Act, was read the third time and passed.

COMPANIES ACT AMENDMENT.

On motion of Hon. Louis Coderre (Secretary of State), Bill No. 177, to amend the Companies Act, was read the second time, and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Blondin in the Chair.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I understand that the principal feature of this Bill is the creation of share warrants. Would the hon. minister kindly explain?

Mr. CODERRE: The memorandum attached to the Bill explains it pretty well, I think. It says:

A share warrant is a share certificate transferable by delivery without any record of such transfer being made in the books of the company. The warrant usually provides that when dividends are declared by the company, an advertisement thereof setting out the rate and time of payments must be inserted in certain newspapers, and also that the dividend coupon attached to the warrant may be cashed at certain banks. On the appearance of an advertisement of a particular dividend the holder of the warrant may then present the coupon for that dividend and obtain payment thereof. Share warrants may at any time be exchanged for ordinary share certificates. This section was first enacted in Great Britain in 1867 and is taken without substantial change from section 37 of the present Imperial Companies' Act. It is similar to sections 61-69 of the Ontario Companies' Act. The main object of the section is to enable a company to issue a kind of security which is probably the most important dealt in on the European exchanges. This kind of security is particularly popular in France with small investors, and the French law renders share warrants more easily dealt with. There is no change from the Imperial Act except where the necessities of our Act demand verbal changes.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

REGULATION OF EXPLOSIVES.

Mr. CODERRE moved the second reading of Bill No. 189, to regulate the manufacture, testing, storage and importation of explosives.

Mr. DEVLIN: Would the minister kindly explain?

Mr. CODERRE: In 1908 the attention of the Government was directed to the many fatalities that had occurred through explosives in railway camps and mines throughout the country. Dr. Haanel, Director of Mines, considered it advisable to have Mr. Desborough, one of His Majesty's inspectors of explosives, look into the matter. Mr. Desborough visited the provincial Ministers of Mines, and various construction camps and mines throughout the country, and made a report containing some very valuable data. In 1909 a conference met in Ottawa at which were present Dr. Haanel, Mr. Desborough, representatives of mine owners and manufacturers of explosives, and delegates from some of the labour unions in the country. The conference listened with great interest to the memorandum read by Mr. Desborough, and, acting on the suggestion contained therein, Mr. Templeman, ex-Minister of Mines, drafted a Bill which was brought down in the last session of the old Parliament. The Bill reached the committee stage, and ten clauses were passed, but it was found impossible to get the Bill through that session. The present Government realize that this is a very important matter, and steps were taken last year to bring a Bill before the House, but on account of the length of the session it was impossible to do so. It is the desire of the Government to get this Bill through this session. The officers of the department and Mr. Desborough believe that by the enactment of such a law the number of fatal accidents through explosives would be considerably lessened, although of course the danger can not be entirely eliminated. To give the House an idea of the risks undergone by those who use explosives in mines and on railway construction work, I may quote some figures taken from the Labour Gazette. In the year 1912-13, 92 fatal accidents occurred in this country through explosives; 19 in mines, 47 in railway construction, and 26 in other employments. We believe that if this law had been on the statute book many of these accidents would not have occurred.

Mr. DEVLIN: Does it in any way affect provincial laws?

Mr. CODERRE: This Bill, before being introduced into Parliament during the session of 1911 by Mr. Templeman, was examined by Mr. Newcombe, the Deputy Minister of Justice, and he gave the following opinion with regard to it:

I have examined the draft Bill respecting explosives which you left with me a few days ago and return the same herewith.

The point which you particularly submitted for my consideration was as to the constitutional authority of the Parliament of Canada to enact such a Bill. The Bill contains a variety of provisions, many of which are doubtless of a general character, while there are others, such as for instance, those providing the precautions to be observed in the manufacture of explosives which have a local aspect. In respect to such provisions, and possibly in its entirety, the Bill covers debatable ground, but I should anticipate that the Bill if enacted by Parliament would upon the principles of construction of the British North America Act already laid down by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, be upheld as competent Dominion legislation. If the Government consider that it is expedient for the peace, order and good government of Canada to enact such a measure, I see no sufficient reason to advise that they should refrain from promoting the Bill for any reason based upon doubt of the constitutional authority of Parliament to enact it.

I may add that the Minister of Justice concurs in the view above expressed.

Mr. Newcombe had some doubt as to whether clause 11, as it originally appeared in the Bill, came within the jurisdiction of this Parliament. But this section will not be found in the Bill at the present time, as, at the suggestion of the present hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty), it has been struck out.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and the House went into Committee thereon, Mr. Blain in the Chair.

On section 2—interpretation:

Mr. CARROLL: Are there any inspectors at the present time, appointed by the Department of Mines, for the purpose of looking after explosives?

Mr. CODERRE: No, there is at present no law.

[Mr. Coderre.]

Mr. LEMIEUX: I called the attention of my hon. friend the other day to a very serious fatality which took place at Beloeil two years ago at a manufactory of explosives, when, I think, ten people were killed. Coming and going between here and Montreal, my hon. friend may see, on Ile Perrot, another manufactory of explosives. I do not know what manufactory it is, but it is close to the track of the Canadian Pacific railway and the Grand Trunk railway, and it is common talk among travellers when trains are passing that a fatality may occur at any time. Sparks from the engine may cause an explosion, which would be most serious in its consequences. I beg to call the attention of my hon. friend to this and to remind him that if his inspectors do not see at once that this manufactory is removed from near the railway tracks the Government will be held responsible. I do not say the Government will be held responsible in law, but the Government will certainly be held morally responsible. It is located at a very dangerous place. We have already suffered in our province from two or three fatalities, and I think the time has come when such a danger should be removed.

Mr. CODERRE: Is my hon. friend speaking of the manufactory on Ile Perrot?

Mr. LEMIEUX: Yes.

Mr. CODERRE: It belongs to the Canadian Explosives Company, I am told by Mr. Hudson of the department. My hon. friend will find in subsection (j) of section 19 that the Government will have power by regulation to act in cases such as this. The subsection provides that:

The Governor in Council may make regulations—

(j) governing the establishment, location and maintenance of factories and magazines, and the manufacture and storage of explosives.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Will this Bill be retroactive?

Mr. CODERRE: An Order in Council can be passed regulating such a case as that which has been mentioned by my hon. friend.

Mr. LEMIEUX: It should be very clearly stated that the section is retroactive. I would like to hear from my hon. friend the Minister of Justice on this point.

Mr. DOHERTY: I see no reason why it should be retroactive. We cannot make it an offence to have had a magazine where it has been, but we can pass a regulation determining that in future no magazine shall be allowed to remain within a certain distance of railway tracks without the law being retroactive. From the passing of the regulations the existence of magazines in such places will be prohibited.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I do not wish to injure the company at all, but I think in the public interest my hon. friend should not allow this manufactory to be maintained right beside the tracks. A spark from a locomotive might cause an explosion and consequent disaster. There have been explosions at Isle Perrot, Hull, Belœil, causing loss of life. This powder mill on the railway track near Vaudreuil is a constant danger to all who have to pass in that vicinity.

Section agreed to.

On section 3:

This Act shall not apply to the Department of Militia and Defence or the Department of the Naval Service.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Who regulates the carriage of explosives on railways?

Mr. CODERRE: The Board of Railway Commissioners is empowered to make regulations.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I am told that some railway companies take great risks and that explosives have been carried even on passenger trains. The most stringent regulations should be enforced.

Mr. CARROLL: I can quite understand that these departments should be excepted, but I would like to know if there are any regulations governing the carriage and storage of explosives belonging to the Militia and the Naval Service Departments.

Mr. CODERRE: These departments have their own regulations which are given effect to.

Mr. CARROLL: There should be regulations in these departments as stringent as those which apply to mines. In the mines we have experts who understand explosives and even under the present law accidents in Nova Scotia, where mining is carried on to a greater extent than in any other province, are comparatively few. In other provinces forty per cent of the injured in mines are injured through explosions while in Nova Scotia it amounts to only one per cent.

On section 4—explosives prohibited unless authorized:

Mr. CARROLL: Is it the intention of the department to pass regulations declaring what are explosives?

Mr. CODERRE: Yes.

On section 7—licenses:

Mr. DEVLIN: Will this section if passed do away with the necessity which exists at present of applying to the different provincial authorities for certificates to establish powder magazines in any locality?

Mr. CODERRE: The provinces will still legislate within the scope of their powers. This will not apply to cases already provided for by the provincial law, but to other cases which evidently would fall under the jurisdiction of this Parliament.

Mr. DEVLIN: Section 7 of this Bill provides:

The minister may issue licenses for factories and magazines, and no one shall manufacture, either wholly or in part, or store explosives except in licensed factories and magazines.

In the Revised Statutes of the province of Quebec, article 1269 reads:

Every person keeping a magazine for the storage of powder, or who sells or holds for sale any quantity of powder, must obtain from the collector of provincial revenue a license to that effect.

Article 1270 provides:

Powder magazines shall be constructed in the manner and at the place determined for each such magazine by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council with the consent of the council of the municipality within which said magazine is situated, and no license shall be granted for keeping a powder magazine unless such magazine be constructed in conformity with the authority of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council.

Article 1268 enacts:

'Powder magazine' means every building used for the storage or keeping of any quantity of powder more than twenty-five pounds in weight.

It appears to me there is a direct conflict between the provincial regulations and the regulations which we are seeking to pass now. If this section 7 be passed, then any person wishing to keep a powder magazine will have to apply to the federal minister, and when he comes to the province of Quebec to build that magazine he will find that the permit he has received from the minister is practically useless, because he is confronted with sections 1269 and 1270 of the Quebec law. He will find further that, under the British North America Act, section 92, subsection 16, among the matters assigned to the control of the provinces are:

> Generally all matters of a merely local or private nature in the province.

I would call the minister's attention to the fact that a powder magazine located in the province of Quebec is entirely under the provincial law which I have just read, and it should not fall under any law or regulation of this Parliament. I would point out also that the parties most interested in this legislation are the municipalities concerned, and the minister is taking away all their protection.

Mr. LAMARCHE: My hon. friend will notice also that in certain municipalities they have certain regulations on this subject, and it seems to me that when a company wishes to operate a powder magazine or a powder factory it must comply with those regulations.

Mr. DEVLIN: They must first, as I understand it, get the permission of the municipality before they can even apply to the Lieutenant Governor in Council. Section 1270 of the Quebec law reads:

> Powder magazines shall be constructed in the manner and at the places determined for each magazine by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, with the consent of the council or municipality within which such magazine is situate.

The municipalities are well protected now, but I think that under the law proposed by the minister they would lose that protection.

Mr. DOHERTY: There cannot be any question of the right of the province to require licenses for businesses of this kind. But that is given them under power conferred upon them for the purpose of raising a revenue—the power to issue licenses. But we are dealing with the question of importation, manufacture and storage of explosives with a view to meeting dangers that present themselves equally all over the Dominion generally, the dangers that attend the presence of explosives. There is certainly no intention to interfere with such regulations as, under a provincial authority, the municipality may be authorized to make for its own special protection, but rather a general provision that the provincial authorities may regard as supplementary. If necessary, we might add to this Bill a clause specifically providing that its requirements shall not obviate the necessity of complying with any local regulations.

Mr. DEVLIN: I would suggest that the minister add some such words as these in section 7:

> The minister may, subject to provincial laws and regulations, issue licenses—

And so on. That would cover the difficulty.

Mr. DOHERTY: That might mean that we could not issue any licenses. What is contemplated is that the party shall have the two licenses—from us and also from the province. The province has the right, by means of its license, to collect revenue, while this is not a revenue measure but is for general protection. Unquestionably, the province has power to make regulations or conditions upon which its license shall issue. I think that probably the better way to do would be, not by adding something to this particular clause but by another clause declaring that the provisions of this Act shall not so operate as to relieve any person from the obligation to comply with the requirements of local laws on the subject.

12 noon.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: But there is more than that in it. This Bill is intended for the protection of the public. The local legislatures, in Quebec at all events, have also that in view. They provide that no powder magazine shall be established in any locality except with the consent of the municipal authority. There are some municipalities in which it would be very dangerous to have a powder magazine established, and therefore the provision subjecting the matter to local consent seems wise. It would be better that we should provide that before a powder magazine is established anywhere the consent of the municipality must be obtained.

Mr. DOHERTY: The object is not to put us in a position of interfering with the provincial law. The suggestion of the leader of the Opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) had also presented itself to my mind; but it appeared to us that to put a clause in this Bill requiring the consent of the municipality might subject our law to the suggestion of interference. We could hardly undertake to deal with special local conditions from the point of view of the protection of a particular municipality. I am inclined to think that if that were the sole purpose, then the whole affair would be a local matter, to be dealt with by the provinces. But what we were trying to deal with were the general conditions that exist everywhere, regardless of the presence of municipalities, leaving to the provinces their power and right to deal with special requirements in special localities. For instance, it was suggested that we should put into this Bill a provision that there should be no powder magazine within a fixed distance of a town or village. But after consideration, we thought that it would be more proper to leave to the municipal authorities, acting under the authorization of the local legislature, the determination of what distance from the town a factory would be considered dangerous, because what might be necessary with regard to one village or town might not be, for one reason or another, necessary with regard to another. As I have said, there is no intention and no desire under this Act to relieve any person of the obligations imposed upon him for the protection of the public. What we want to make is a law that will be of general application where the province may fail to legislate or, at all events, of general application to protect the public of the Dominion against the dangers connected with this matter. As I have suggested, It seems to me that any possible objection would be overcome if there were added to this Bill a general provision stating that nothing in this Act shall so operate as to relieve any person of any obligation of that nature imposed upon him by the laws of the province or by the municipal authorities acting under the law.

Mr. DEVLIN: I understand that under the provisions which my hon. friend suggests putting in, section 1271 of the law of the province of Quebec, to which my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition referred a moment ago, will be protected. It is as follows:

> A municipal council desiring, for valid reasons, the removal from within its limits or from one part of its territory to another, of an existing powder magazine, shall have the right to obtain such removal upon payment to the company or person owning the magazine, of an indemnity to be determined by arbitrators appointed by the interested parties, subject to the decision of the provincial treasurer.

Mr. DOHERTY: That is a provision giving power to a municipality to enforce removal from one place to another for the protection of the people of the municipality. The added clause may easily be so worded as to preserve that provision, as well as similar dispositions made by a provincial authority or by a municipal authority authorized by the legislature.

Mr. CARROLL: I wish to draw attention to subsection g of the Interpretation Act, which is as follows:

> Magazine means and includes any building, storehouse, structure or other place in which any explosive is kept or stored, other than at or in and for the use of a mine or quarry in a province in which provision is made by the law of such province for the efficient inspection of mines and quarries.

It seems to me that this section excludes the inspection of explosives in the mines in the province of Nova Scotia, because in that province we have an efficient law for the inspection of mines and quarries. In the short time which I devoted to the Revised Statutes of Nova Scotia this morning, I could not find that we have any laws dealing with the inspection of explosives that are used in or about or around these mines. The minister will readily see that if the Act remains as it is, it will exclude inspection of explosives in and around the mines in the province of Nova Scotia and I do not think that that would be desirable.

Mr. SHEPHERD: I would suggest to the hon. member that in all Coal Mines Regulation Acts, it is provided that no explosive shall be stored in any mine. This section, so far as I can read it, will not prevent the provincial Government of Nova Scotia from passing such regulations as the hon. member refers to.

Mr. CARROLL: I understand that very well.

Mr. SHEPHERD: The Coal Mines Regulation Acts usually deal with the use and storage of explosives in mines, and there is nothing in this section which interferes with the passage of such regulations by the Government of Nova Scotia.

Mr. CARROLL: I understand that. My point is that perhaps the Government will say that it is the intention to exclude the mines in Nova Scotia. If that is the intention and they are doing that under this Act, all well and good; but this Act, notwithstanding that we have not efficient inspection of explosives in that province, will not apply there. I agree with the hon. member from British Columbia that the Government of Nova Scotia may have regulations and may pass very stringent laws; but I want to find out if it is the intention of the department to exclude from its operation the mines in the province of Nova Scotia. That is the effect of this subsection as I read it.

Mr. CODERRE: My hon. friend alluded to the use of explosives in mines and to the inspection of these explosives. The words 'use of explosives' have been eliminated as far as possible from the Bill with a view to preventing conflict of authority where provisions have already been made under the Provincial Mines Acts regulating the use of explosives. On railways, canals or other construction work not so governed federal Orders in Council will be issued to provide for the proper use of explosives, so that adequate protection will be given to the men employed and also the general public.

Mr. CARROLL: The word 'magazine' is defined here and it excludes from the provisions of this Act the storage place of explosives in and around a mine where there is an efficient inspection by the legislative authorities of the province of such mines and quarries. Thus the place where those explosives would be stored around a mine in Nova Scotia would not be called a magazine at all, and would not come under the operation of the Act.

Mr. MACDONALD: I think the power of inspecting the conditions under which explosives are stored in and about the mining industry of our province is vested in the general inspector of mines, in the general power that is contained in the Mines Regulation Acts. I know, as a matter of fact, that in all the mining districts especially prepared magazines exist in and about the mines. I was going to ask him whether or not this Act had been submitted to the mining authorities, that is the executive authorities, of the different provinces.

Mr. CODERRE: It has.

Mr. MACDONALD: And what was their position in regard to it?

Mr. CODERRE: Mr. Hudson, one of the officers of the department, went through all the provinces to meet the ministers of mines of the several provinces. He saw Mr. Duncan, the deputy minister, in Nova Scotia, who approved of the law submitted to him, that is substantially the law as it is before the committee to-day.

Mr. MACDONALD: I am inclined to agree with the hon. member from Cape Breton that the Act will not apply to Nova Scotia in regard to mining.

Mr. CARROLL: In connection with the definition of 'magazine,' it certainly does not apply to the mines of Nova Scotia. Has Nova Scotia been purposely exempted or have the officials, in drafting the section, unintentionally exempted Nova Scotia from the Act?

Mr. CODERRE: I do not think that this section particularizes Nova Scotia; it refers to all the provinces.

Mr. SHEPHERD: If I understand correctly, the hon. member contends that this does not interfere with the provisional regulations in regard to magazines around mines, but that the exemption might empower a colliery company to erect a magazine that would be in conflict with this Act. Is that the idea? I agree with the hon. gentleman that provision should be made that no colliery magazine should be erected unless it conforms to the federal statute.

Mr. CARROLL: It is exempted from the statute as it now reads. It is the intention of the department to exempt the magazines, storage places of explosives around mines, from the operation of this Act, or is it not? If you have good reason for the legislation as it stands all very well, but I wish to know if a mistake has been made in the drafting of the Act?

Mr. CODERRE: I do not think so.

Mr. CARROLL: Was it the intention of the minister to exempt mines?

Mr. SHEPHERD: Around all collieries and mines there is a daily storage magazine, which must be provided for, wherein a certain amount, only enough for the 24 hours' use, is allowed to be stored nearer towns or habitations than is allowed for in this federal statute.

Mr. CARROLL: My trouble is that the laws of Nova Scotia do not cover the matter at all.

Mr. CODERRE: Then, of course, the subsection will not apply.

Mr. CARROLL: That is what I say, that in Nova Scotia, even if we have no law at all that requires inspection of explosives, we have a law which is for the efficient inspection of mines and quarries. The Minister of Justice follows me in that? And therefore the word 'magazine' will not cover any province where there is an efficient inspection of mines and forests, but no inspection, efficient or otherwise, in regard to explosives. This is a very technical point, probably.

Mr. DOHERTY: I am not quite clear that I grasp the point of my hon. friend. I understand that what he suggests is that powder and explosives used in connection with mines in Nova Scotia would be exempt from any inspection at all under the operation of this Act, combined with the provisions of the provincial Act. Is that the suggestion?

Mr. CARROLL: Will the minister follow me while I read the interpretation of the word 'magazine'?

'Magazine' means and includes any building, storehouse, structure or place in which any explosive is kept or stored—

Then comes the exception:

—other than at or in and for the use of a mine or quarry in a province in which provision is made by the law of such province for the efficient inspection of mines and quarries.

—not for the efficient inspection of explosives, but for the efficient inspection of mines and quarries. If there is no law in the province of Nova Scotia in regard to explosives, the storage of explosives around mines would not be covered by the word 'magazine'.

Mr. DOHERTY: I think that objection is sound, and we could cover the case by adding after the word quarries in the twelfth line, the words 'or of explosives used in connection therewith.'

Mr. CODERRE: I beg to move that the words 'or of explosives used in connection therewith' be added after the word 'quarries' in the twelfth line on page 2, section 2.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON: I would like to ask the minister as to the condition of inspection in the province of Ontario. Has Ontario an efficient inspection or is it the intention that this law shall apply to the province of Ontario?

Mr. CODERRE: I have a letter here from Mr. Miller, provincial geologist for Ontario, regarding explosives, in which he says:

The Mining Act of Ontario only regulates the storage and use of explosives at the mines. There is no regulation regarding the manufacture or statistics to show the amount used.

The manufacture of explosives is a matter of trade and commerce, and as the explosive remains in the form of a commodity which is open to purchase and sale, it is subject to the supervision and jurisdiction of the Dominion Government. As soon as it is brought for use on the mining property, regulations passed by the provincial legislature govern.

It has been felt for some time that the Dominion Government should bring in legislation respecting the manufacture and sale of explosives in Canada, in view of the numerous accidents resulting from explosives.

Mr. HENDERSON: What I had reference to was not the use of explosives at the mines, but at the works; say, at a quarry. I would like to know whether we shall have to rely on this Bill for guidance in this matter, or whether there is a law in the province of Ontario regulating the use of explosives at the works. I speak of this matter because I have personal knowledge of what is being done; in fact, I am interested, and I think this is the easiest way for me to find out just what the law is on that point. By the way, in the definition of explosives I see no reference to the word 'rack-a-rock,' a very common explosive used in the quarrying of stone. I am unable to determine from the definition, either special or general, whether rack-a-rock is covered.

Mr. CARROLL: Is it in the shape of rockets?

Mr. HENDERSON: Yes; it is in the shape of a Roman candle.

Mr. CARROLL: I think it would be covered by this definition.

Mr. HENDERSON: It may be. Rack-a-rock is practically a non-explosive unless interfered with, and I do not think there is any danger at all from it in storage. It is regarded as a very harmless explosive, and very easily handled. I never heard of any accidents resulting from the use of it. It is used very extensively.

Mr. CODERRE: In answer to the hon. gentleman's first question as to the storage and use of explosives in connection with quarries, I believe, after reading Mr. Miller's letter that this Bill would cover that point, and I think it is also covered by the Ontario regulations. In regard to my hon. friend's other question, rack-a-rock is manufacured by a Sherbrooke company. I have a letter in reference to this Bill written by Mr. White of that company. It will show the reason of a certain amendment which will be found in clause 7. The letter is as follows:

I represent two companies, the principal one of which is the company which manufactures an explosive known as Rack-a-Rock. This explosive has a great many advantages over any of those manufactured by the trust, one of the principal reasons being that it is absolutely harmless up to the very time of its being used. It consists (when shipped from the factory) of two parts, a solid and a liquid, the first being in the form of a fine powder. These two substances can be shipped by freight or express in the same manner as ordinary merchandise, inasmuch as until they are mixed in the proper proportions, they are absolutely non-explosive.

The consumer is able to purchase Rack-a-Rock in this form in a great many places where it is very difficult to obtain dynamite, owing to the great danger of transporting the latter. Under the proposed Act, you will see section 1, subsection (e) says:

'Factory' means and includes any building, structure or premises in which the manufacture or any part of the process of the manufacture of an explosive is carried on, and any building or place where any ingredient of an explosive is stored during the process of manufacture.

Section 7 provides:

'The minister may issue licenses for factories and magazines, and no one shall manufacture, either wholly or in part, or store explosives except in licensed factories and magazines'.

I am afraid that under the wording of these two sections it might be held that the place where, for instance, a farmer wishing to blow up stumps mixed the solid with the liquid would be held to be a factory and consequently he would be unable to do it except under the conditions provided for by the Act. An interpretation of this kind would put both of my companies out of business. My clients tell me that at a meeting of the explosive manufacturers and the late Government, when it was contemplated to draft an Act, they were promised that the Act would be drafted in a most elastic form to begin with. Under the Act as drafted there is little or no elasticity at all. I am told that the English Act contains a clause under which, by Order in Council, an explosive may be declared not to be an explosive within the meaning of the Act.

The Bill has been amended to meet the cases referred to by Mr. White, and this amendment will be found in subsection 2 of section 7 as follows:

2. Notwithstanding any provisions contained in this Act the Governor in Council, upon the recommendation of the minister based upon the report in writing of the deputy minister accompanied by certificates from the chief inspector and chief chemist of explosives approving of the nature of the components and of the final explosive product, may allow the inexplosive component parts of an authorized explosive from licensed factories and magazines to be assembled and blended at or near the point of use and such place of blending shall not be deemed a factory or magazine within the meaning of this Act.

Mr. HENDERSON: I think I understand it.

Mr. LAMARCHE: I understand that, while you might have an explosive that was not dangerous, such as Rack-a-Rock, it would be treated either in transportation, in manufactories, or in magazines, just the same as if it were very dangerous. My hon. friend has just read a letter from the attorney of the Rack-a-Rock Company, Mr. White, and I understand that he refers to the regulations in England as to explosives. The regulations in England provide for different grades of explosives, that is, grades are established not according to the explosive force but with reference to the amount of danger of such explosive in transportation. In Canada and the United States there are different kinds of explosives. Some of them are very powerful, but they are found to be absolutely without danger while in transportation. Some others are less powerful, but are very dangerous if you transport them, and very dangerous especially in the case of concussion. Others cannot be exploded unless by the use of detonators or percussion caps. I do not know whether it would not be well to provide in our law for a certain class of explosives; that is, apply very stiff regulations to some of them, and to be a little more generous with regard to others. I agree with my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) in that respect.

Mr. CODERRE: Does not the hon. gentleman think that this point might be met by paragraph A of section 18 concerning regulations?

The Governor in Council may make regulations—

(a) for classifying explosives, and for prescribing the composition, quality and character of explosives.

Mr. LAMARCHE: Yes, but this would apply to the terms of the certificate to be given to the different classes of explosives. I would like to ask the minister by what process or procedure the regulations of the Bureau of Explosives are made to apply in this country. I understand that these regulations, although I do not question the merits of them, are made and modified in the United States, and that we have no control whatever over them. If you want to deal with a railway in regard to the transportation of explosives, they will always refer you to the regulations made by the Bureau of Explosives. I would like to know if these regulations are applicable to this country as the result of an agreement between the railway companies, or if they come under the Railway Act or any regulations made thereunder. I have never been able to elucidate this point.

Mr. CODERRE: In conformity with the Railway Act, the Board of Railway Commissioners have issued regulations for the transportation of explosives.

Mr. LAMARCHE: But these regulations are the same as the regulations made by the Bureau of Explosives which emanate from a United States body. What control have we over those regulations in the way of making or modifying them?

Mr. CODERRE: The Bureau of Explosives is an American body located in New York. It has its own regulations, but they do not apply here.

Mr. LAMARCHE: If you apply to a railway company they will tell you that you have to comply with the regulations of that American body. I do not object to these regulations, but I would like to see a procedure of some kind emanating from this Government so that we would have some control over the regulations. I do not dispute the merits of these regulations, but it is awkward to have to comply with regulations that we have no control over whatever.

Mr. CODERRE: I do not know that our people should be forced to follow those American regulations unless they are applicable to merchandise shipped from a point on the other side of the line. As far as transportation in this country is concerned, we have our own regulations passed by the Board of Railway Commissioners under the Railway Act.

On section 8—permits for importation:

Mr. ARTHURS: This section will possibly have an effect not contemplated by the framers of the Act. In the interpretation clause it says:

—and includes fireworks, fuses, rockets, percussion caps, detonators, cartridges, ammunition of all description.

Then, section 8 says:

The minister may issue permits for the importation of authorized explosives.

That, it seems to me, would include cartridges for small arms and prohibit the importation of cartridges even by tourists, without a permit. This would work a great hardship. In subclause (j) of the Interpretation Act, safety cartridges mean cartridges for guns, rifles, pistols, revolvers and other small arms, of which the case can be extracted from the small arm after firing. I would suggest that the words 'other than safety cartridges' be inserted in clause 8 after the word 'permit', so as to make it read:

The minister may issue permits for the importation of authorized explosives, and no one shall import any explosive into Canada without such permit, other than safety cartridges.

Mr. CODERRE: There is no objection to adopting that suggestion.

Section as amended agreed to.

Mr. CARROLL: Is it the intention of the Government to appoint local inspectors at centres where explosives are very much used?

Mr. CODERRE: That seems to be a good suggestion, but I cannot say now if it is contemplated by the Deputy Minister of Mines.

Mr. CARROLL: An official at Ottawa would not be in a position to inspect explosives in the mines of British Columbia or of Nova Scotia.

Mr. CODERRE: I will consider that.

Mr. CARROLL: Before the third reading of the Bill I would like the minister to give due consideration to section 20.

Mr. DOHERTY: I move that the Bill be amended by adding as section 27:

Nothing in this Act shall relieve any person of the obligation of complying with the requirement of any license law, or other law, or by-law, of any province or municipality, lawfully enacted with regard to the storage, handling, sale, or dealing with explosives, nor of any liability or penalty imposed by such law or by-law for any violation thereof.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON: A serious accident occurred some years ago at Essex Centre in connection with railway carriage of explosives. I am unable to say just now what the provision in the Railway Act is with respect to that, but I have in my hand a memorandum which I shall pass to the minister and ask him to consider it before the Bill is finally disposed of.

Bill reported.

At one o'clock, the House took recess.

The House resumed at three o'clock.

MONTREAL HARBOUR COMMISSION.

On motion of Hon. J. D. Hazen (Minister of Marine and Fisheries), Bill No. 191, to provide for further advances to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal, was read the second time, and the House went into Committee thereon, Mr. Blondin in the Chair.

On section 1—short title:

Mr. LEMIEUX: I am in sympathy with this legislation brought down by my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I am glad to hear that the members of the Harbour Board are back to work after their visit to the various ports in England. When I remarked upon their absence a few weeks ago, my hon. friend, I hope, understood that I did not wish to reflect upon their conduct, because I am bound to say that generally speaking these commissioners are following in the footsteps of their predecessors, and everybody knows that their predecessors administered most efficiently the work carried on in the harbour of Montreal. The hon. gentleman has himself declared on various occasions that if it had been possible for him to retain their services he would have been only too pleased to do so. I understand that the season of navigation of 1913 was marked by several important works carried on in the harbour of Montreal. Some work has been done in connection with the harbour railway line from Molson's creek to Racine pier. My hon. friend will probably be able to give us a synopsis of what has been accomplished in that direction. Two permanent transit sheds on the Tarte pier have been completed, also elevator No. 2 and its conveyor system in the central part of the harbour. I would like to know what additions have been made to elevator No. 1, and what area of reclaimed land has been provided in connection with the dry-dock and the shipyard. I understand that last year new quay walls of standard crib-work, substructure and complete superstructure have been built. My hon. friend will be able to tell us briefly what work has been done in this connection. I should like to know also what is the mileage of railway track in connection with the harbour proper and how far the tracks will be extended this year. I understand that the commissioners have removed some artificial work at Moffat's island, and that there has also been carried on the construction of what is called the industrial wharf at Point aux Trembles. Is that industrial wharf to be used by a private company, or is it for the general use of the public? I understand that two sheds on the high-level shore wharfs, sections 24 and 25, are under construction. My hon. friend will be able to tell us if they are going to proceed this year with the work on those sheds, and whether, in order to expedite matters, they will work during the winter as well as during the summer months. My hon. friend might give also some details about the electric hoist on the Alexandra pier and the paving on the wharfs. Is this work completed, and if not, when is it intended to be completed? There are some wooden piers still left in the harbour of Montreal. I would like to know if it is the policy of the department to transform these wooden piers into concrete piers. I would like also some information with regard to the additions and improvements to the construction and operating plant. With regard to the dredging of the harbour, I would like my hon. friend to give me the pay-list and to tell me how many men are employed, and how the materials are purchased.

[Mr. Lemieux.]

Everybody knows that the harbour of Montreal is possibly the most important point in our whole transportation system. Being at the head of oceanic transportation, it has become practically, de facto, the national port of Canada. A few figures will show its importance in connection with our whole transportation system. The total quantity of grain handled during the last eight years by the Montreal Harbour Commissioners elevator system, exclusive of the grain handled by the Grand Trunk and other local elevators, shows what improved facilities have accomplished. The figures are shown in the following table:

Total quantity of grain handled or transferred.

Year.	Bushels.
1906	944,321
1907	1,078,289
1098	8,661,350
1909	11,691,071
1910	21,526,727
1911	21,007,164
1912	25,561,655
1913	44,000,000

This enormous figure for 1913 shows what modern improvement can accomplish in the handling of our western grain.

Let us take now the total quantity of grain received at the Grand Trunk and Harbour Commissioners elevators. I spoke of the quantity of grain exclusive of the Grand Trunk. The total quantity received at the Grand Trunk and Harbour Commissioners elevators, including the floating elevators, which are slowly but surely disappearing, has measured up to 62,562,549 bushels, of which 53,351,388 bushels were exported, as compared with 37,800,000 bushels in 1912, an increase of 15,551,388 bushels.

The maintenance of the channel is of great importance. So far, the material dredged by the Harbour Commissioners' dredges, and most of that dredged by Government dredges, has been saved and used in the construction of embankments and in reclaiming land areas for the harbour.

The following table gives the average monthly depth of water in the ship channel in the harbour during 1913 as compared with the reports for 1912:

	1913.	1912.
May	35′ 8″	35′ 5″
June	33′ 3″	35′ 10″
July	31′ 8″	32′ 0″
August	30′ 9½″	30′ 11″
September	30′ 4″	30′ 8″
October	30′ 6″	30′ 8″
November	31′ 5″	32′ 2″

In connection with this, I might recall to my hon. friend what was said by the president of the Shipping Federation, Mr. Andrew Allan, in addressing the powerful corporation of which he is the head. I quote from the Montreal Daily Mail of a few weeks ago. This address was made on the occasion of the re-election of Mr. Andrew Allan. In it he referred to the report of Mr. Arthur Surveyer, a member of the Canadian Society of Civil Engineers, upon the water levels in the port of Montreal. Mr. Allan said:

> Last year I had occasion to refer to the probable lowering of the water in the river, as a result on the proposed Chicago drainage scheme. I now call your attention to a report by Mr. Arthur Surveyor, dealing with this matter. I might state that the federal Government have appointed a commission, consisting of Dean Haskell, of Cornell University; Mr. Forneret, superintendent of the Ship channel, and Mr. Stewart, chief hydrographer, to inquire into and report on the whole matter.

In his report on the depth of water in the St. Lawrence channel, Mr. Surveyer says:

> The lowest water occurred in November, 1911, when the level receded to less than 28 feet in the so-called 30-foot channel. It is evident that we are still far from the 35-foot channel and, with the lowest water plane steadily receding, it will take probably more than dredging before a 35-foot channel is obtained.

Mr. Surveyer goes on to say that he is convinced that the low water plane has subsided in the last forty years anywhere from two and a half to three feet, and that this fall has practically all taken place in the last twenty-five years. He thinks the three causes of the subsidence are the deforestation of the St. Lawrence basin, the enlarging by dredging of the controlling sections of the river, and the diversion towards the Mississippi river by the Chicago main drainage canal of a large volume of water which formerly passed to the sea via the St. Lawrence river.

I have read carefully the report prepared by Mr. Surveyer, and it is appalling to think that the river St. Lawrence may show further decreases in water level, so that possibly the interests of Montreal may be endangered and navigation between Quebec and Montreal may suffer seriously. I hope my hon. friend can give the House the benefit of his latest information on the subject and give some heart to the people of Montreal. The intelligence that the two new Allan liners, the Calgarian and the Alsatian, cannot come up to Montreal has created a sensation in shipping circles not only in Montreal but the country at large. After the millions and millions that have been spent in equipping Montreal harbour, and dredging the channel between Montreal and Quebec, it would be a thousand pities if this strategical point in our transportation system should now be jeopardized. I do not wish to delay the business of the House any longer, and I simply offer these remarks in order to get some assurance from the hon. gentleman that under his care the harbour of Montreal will be well looked after.

Mr. HAZEN: I will endeavour to give my hon. friend, as far as I can, the information which he asks regarding the Harbour Commissioners, the work they did last year, what they propose doing this year, and, generally, the information he is very properly seeking from me at this time. My hon. friend has very properly referred to the great growth that has taken place in the business of the port of Montreal. It is in order to continue that work, and to provide further facilities for the port that this Bill has been introduced. The purpose of this Bill is to provide a further advance to the Harbour Commissioners of $9,000,000 to defray the cost of additional facilities that have become imperative by reason of the very great expansion of trade at that port, which is the great entrepot of Canada. The development has been very rapid indeed, as may be understood by referring to the revenues of the commission. In 1909 the total revenue derived from all sources amounted to $687,772; in 1912, it had increased to $1,049,311; and for the year ending December 31, 1913, $1,361,964; and, as my hon. friend pointed out, during that period there has been an enormous increase in the total quantity of grain handled by the commission, increasing from 565,355 bushels in 1904 to 43,349,291 bushels handled in 1913. The increase in 1913, over the grain handled in 1912, was between 17,000,000 and 18,000,000 bushels, which is an indication of the great improvement that has recently taken place in the facilities for handling grain at that port.

Mr. LEMIEUX: What are the prospects at present?

Mr. HAZEN: It largely depends on the harvest in the West.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I understand that there is more grain there now than they can handle.

Mr. HAZEN: The present facilities will be able to handle that grain. As to the quantity that will be taken out during the year, that depends largely upon the crop that is produced in the Northwest during the present season. We are all glad to know that the prospects for a bountiful harvest are very good indeed. The increase in traffic in 1913 was particularly gratifying, but with additional facilities the growth will be even more marked. It is anticipated that with the extra facilities that are being provided the revenue of the harbour at the close of 1917 will reach the $2,000,000 mark, and that is without the imposition of tonnage dues on shipping. The various rates charged by the commission compare more than favourably with those charged at competitive ports in the United States. I might read a short extract from the report of the commissioners and one or two extracts from the report of the old commission bearing on this matter. In this year's report the commissioners say:

> Notwithstanding the marked depression in trade in the commercial world during the latter part of the season, due to which it was not expected that the tonnage of the port would show great increase, it is most gratifying for the commissioners to be able to announce that the past year has been a record one, as far as shipping is concerned, returns eclipsing by far those of any previous year, as may be seen from the statements appended hereto, showing respectively, for the past ten years.

I have here the last report made by the old commission, Messrs. Stephens, Ballantyne and Geoffrion, and I think it might be well to place one or two quotations on 'Hansard' for the information of the House. On the first page of the report the commissioners say:

> It is perhaps pardonable to restate here that the development plan authorized by the Canadian Government in the progressive enlargement of her seaport facilities at Montreal, has met with the approval of the highest authorities on transportation.
>
> To quote the words of Calvin Tomkins, commissioner of dock and ferries of the port of New York: 'I believe at the present time, while suffering from the disadvantage of ice obstruction in winter, Montreal nevertheless affords the best example of modern seaport organization.'
>
> In point of monthly volume of business, the port of Montreal takes its place as the second largest port in North America. Without imposing tonnage dues upon the ships, with a tariff of charges one-half of what existed twenty-five years ago, with a handling cost on all her through business reduced 50 per cent in six years, the port of Montreal though only at the inception of its development and far from realizing its ultimate economic possibilities, is able to pay out of a modest revenue all charges of maintenance, running expenses and the interest on every dollar invested in its development.
>
> Canada's national port is, therefore, being developed by money borrowed from the national treasury and upon which the current rate of interest is being paid out of the revenues from the port's business.
>
> Its boundaries have been extended, and the people of Canada now own, in fee simple, 16 miles of water front on either side of the river, untrammelled by a foot of vested interests.
>
> Not alone has an attempt been made to meet the requirements of the great shipping interests in the development of port facilities, but the great railways of Canada have been afforded access to the ships and sheds; the cartage companies have been provided with accessible means of reaching the merchandise warehouse within the harbour limits; while plans have been laid for the creation of an industrial harbour that will afford to all great industries taking advantage of the facilities of rail and water access to their own establishments on an economic basis that will bring power to the prestige of the port.
>
> There has, therefore, been achieved, with a measurable degree of success, a solution of one of the biggest problems which transportation presents, in the co-ordination of rail, river and road traffic, all meeting at a point of interchange, with possibilities of assembling cargo with economy and dispatch.

Passing over to page 249, I might read this, under the heading of General:

> Though something has been done to equip the port of Montreal in a manner befitting its importance as the head of ocean navigation, it must be remembered that many problems of great import yet remain to be worked out. In carrying on this work it will be wise to maintain the authority of the port executive in a manner which will permit of all interests using its facilities receiving equal and fair treatment. The administrative staff must understand that upon loyal service and merit alone depend their positions and advancement, and that no outside authority can appoint, promote or dismiss them.

The report is a very interesting one and would repay reading by gentlemen who are interested in the development of the great port of Montreal:

Some years ago the question of providing port facilities at Montreal was referred to a board of consultative engineers. In 1909 this board submitted a report outlining a definite programme of harbour improvements and in the following year legislation was obtained authorizing an advance on account of this programme of $6,000,000. Immediately thereafter plans, specifications, etc., were approved for work estimated to cost $5,242,207.

In 1912 authority was obtained from this Parliament for a further advance of $6,000,000 and subsequent to this, plans, etc., were approved estimated to cost the whole amount of $12,000,000.

Mr. LEMIEUX: What is the debt of the port now?

Mr. HAZEN: Up to the 31st March last $9,150,706 of this amount had been advanced. There was some debt on the harbour then with regard to which I will get the figures for my hon. friend. This left a balance available at the first of the present fiscal year of $2,849,294 and as the result of the progress made upon the various items of harbour improvements, this amount will be all expended before the end of the present fiscal year. The present proposal to advance an additional $9,000,000 is considered sufficient to meet all requirements up to 1918, and it is not considered necessary that the expenditure of any one year shall exceed $3,000,000.

To meet the requirements of the traffic offering at the port of Montreal, it will be necessary to undertake, and, if possible, complete during the year 1914, an extension to the elevator system. The proposal is to add to elevator No. 1 an extension with a capacity of 1,400,000 bushels and at the same time to improve the unloading facilities there.

It will also be necessary during the present year to extend the railway system to meet the growing traffic. The construction of additional sheds in order to furnish accommodation for the increased needs of the various steamship lines will also have to be undertaken at once. Speaking more in detail, I may say to my hon. friend that the proposed programme for 1914 is about as follows:

Harbour grain elevator system	$ 800,000
Harbour railway system	282,674
Victoria pier and market basin	293,000
Permanent wharf transit sheds	477,990
Warehouse, Beaudry street	200,000
Shore wharfs sections 24 to 30	764,789
Dredging and filling in general	284,738
Paving and railway tracks on wharfs	150,000
Improvements to eastern section, below St. Mary's current, floating dock site	165,000
General improvements and plant	200,000
Permanent sheds, Tarte pier	28,474
Pointe-aux-Trembles wharf	$ 130,000
St. Lambert-Longueuil road and sewer	100,000
Retiring maturing debentures	200,000
Traffic department plant	192
Aylwin street subway	50,000
Unforeseen items	47,660
Total	$3,674,517

As to what has been done during the past year I might call the attention of my hon. friend to the report of the Harbour Commissioners for the year ended 31st December, 1913, which is not printed in the Report of the Department of Marine and Fisheries yet. We have printed, in this year's report, the report of the Harbour Commissioners to the 31st December of the previous year. This report, which I hold in my hand, has just recently come into the office. With reference to the progress of the harbour improvements perhaps I could not do better than to read selections from this report to my hon. friend. At page 11 they say:

Harbour Improvements.

A successful construction season, no serious accidents in the port, satisfactory labour conditions and the best season on record with regard to the operation of harbour facilities.

The Harbour Commissioners' railway line was completed to high level along the river front from Molson's creek to Racine pier.

Two permanent transit sheds were finished and opened for traffic on Tarte pier.

The Harbour Commissioners' elevator No. 2 and its connecting conveyer system to all the berths in the central part of the harbour, was operated during the whole of the season with perfect success.

Harbour Commissioners' elevator No. 1, situated in the most favourable position in the harbour for receiving and delivering grain was fully operated during the season, although an addition of one and a half times its present storage capacity was being constructed.

The dry-dock site, providing a large basin for the floating dock 'Duke of Connaught' and a large area of made land for the shipyard, was advanced almost to completion.

New quay walls of standard cribwork substructure and concrete superstructure were completed, having a total length of over 2,200 lineal feet and 2,000 lineal feet partly constructed.

Railway tracks to the extent of about four miles were constructed and an additional one mile improved and relaid.

The removal of the artificial works at Moffat's island was greatly advanced and its ameliorating effect on the St. Mary's current towards the close of the season was very marked.

One of the important items of new work commenced was the construction of a large industrial wharf at Pointe-aux-Trembles.

Another new work commenced was the construction of two new transit sheds on the high level bulkhead wharfs, sections 24 and 25.

A new electric hoist, with bridges, connecting with the upper stories of the sheds on the Alexandra pier was constructed during the season.

Important items of paving on the wharfs were completed and the roadways were put in a very much improved condition.

A commencement was made towards the reconstruction of the superstructure of the wooden piers in the central part of the harbour, consisting of the substitution of concrete for the portion of the quay walls above low water level.

Important additions and improvements were made to the Harbour Commissioners' construction and operating plant.

Then details of the work are given which it would take a very considerable time to read. My hon. friend also made some inquiries regarding the machine shops and shipyards which form part of the work. I find these matters referred to at page 33 of the report:

Machine shop and shipyard.

The machine shop and shipyard, situated on the Mackay pier, are fitted up specially for the construction and maintenance of the dredging and construction plant.

The shop is an old wooden structure, but well equipped with excellent tools and machinery. There is also an excellent smith shop and boiler shop, both equipped for building and repairing.

The shipyard is very conveniently located for the hauling out as well as the construction and repairing of vessels.

Since 1910, the entire machinery of the two dredges has been built, as well as the hull and machinery of a floating derrick, a tug and eight large flat scows.

The usual maintenance and repairs to the commissioners' fleet were well and economically carried out during the year.

My hon. friend asked in regard to the expenditure on the Harbour Commissioners' railway tracks to the end of 1913. The figures are given in detail, but the grand total of the tracks is placed at 37·3042 miles or about 37⅓ miles. Then my hon. friend also asked about the number of people who were employed. I find a table showing the maximum and average number of workmen employed directly by the Harbour Commissioners during the season of 1913. The maximum number employed was 1,797 and the average 1,283. They are divided as follows:

	Average.
Construction of wharfs, etc.	610
Maintenance, cleaning, removing ice, etc.	58
Harbour yard, carpenters, blacksmiths, etc.	25
Sawmill and timber room, sawyers and handymen	26
Machine shop, machinists, blacksmiths, etc.	74
Shipyard, carpenters, labourers, etc.	85
Dredging fleet, crews of dredges, tugs, etc.	297
Grain elevators, foreman and operators.	76
Floating elevators, foreman and operators	22
Shed repairs and maintenance	10
Total	1,283

[Mr. Hazen.]

The disbursements on capital account were $2,461,794.62. The principal works of improvement carried out were:

Harbour dredging	$252,742 61
Real estate	99,671 35
Wharfs, piers and basins	779,052 80
Plant	90,544 09
Shops and buildings	14,924 12
Railways	118,007 52
Permanent sheds	190,100 70
Electric hoists, etc.	31,213 49
Grain eleavtors	884,837 93

The debenture debt of the commission on the 31st of December, 1913, was $21,542,000 of which $1,672,000 is due to the public, and $19,850,000 to the Dominion Government. The average rate of interest on these debentures is 3·344 per cent.

The level of the water in the harbour is a most important matter. My hon. friend (Mr. Lemieux) probably recollects that last year I got authority from Parliament for the appointment of a commission to consider the question of the effect the dredging in the St. Lawrence is having upon the level of the water in the harbour of Montreal. The commission was composed of Dean Haskell who has had large experience in that work on the Mississippi and other large rivers in the United States, W. J. Stewart, head of the Hydrographic Survey, and Mr. Forneret, superintendent of the work on the St. Lawrence channel. It was hoped that the report would be ready for discussion in Parliament this session, but the work was more complicated than expected, and the report will not be ready before next session. We will then have scientific data which will enable us to decide what should be done. If it should be found that the work going on in the ship channel is lowering the level of the water in Montreal harbour, then the question of constructing compensating works to hold back the water will have to be dealt with promptly, because it affects the trade of Montreal, which is a matter of great importance to the Dominion.

Mr. LEMIEUX: The explanation of the hon. gentleman is very satisfactory. What proportion of the work in Montreal harbour is done by the commissioners themselves and what proportion by outsiders? Are tenders called for all the work which is not done by the commissioners?

Mr. HAZEN: All the work is done under the direction of the commission, but for the erection of the last sheds they called for tenders and awarded the contract to the lowest tenderers. The last elevator was built on the same principle as that adopted by the Canadian Pacific railway in constructing its elevators. They get a reputable firm of elevator-builders to do the work for the cost of labour and material, and above that a commission for their services. The former commission built one of the elevators in the same way. I doubt very much myself whether it is the wisest course to follow. The Quebec Harbour Commissioners recently asked for tenders and made a contract for a lump sum, and I think perhaps the result may be more satisfactory. I talked the matter over with Mr. Ballantyne, who is a sound business man, and he believes that the system gives splendid work and is in the end more satisfactory, and the fact that a great corporation like the Canadian Pacific railway, which conducts its business on most approved lines, builds its elevators on the same principle, is no doubt a strong argument in its favour. All the work in the harbour is done by the commission, with the exception of that part of the St. Lawrence channel which runs through the harbour, and that is charged against the appropriation for the deepening of the St. Lawrence channel.

Mr. LEMIEUX: The debt of the harbour of Montreal is at present $19,000,000?

Mr. HAZEN: Yes.

Mr. LEMIEUX: How much will it be if this legislation passes ?

Mr. HAZEN: They probably will have spent this money in four years from now and the debt then will be $28,000,000.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Will this be enough to finally equip the port of Montreal?

Mr. HAZEN: I do not think it will. If the country continues to grow we will have to be working all the time at the port of Montreal. The progress of this country will to a great extent be measured by the volume of the business in the port of Montreal. If we have only sufficient facilities for doing the business of to-day, then if the country develops these facilities will have to be increased. I have no doubt that whatever Government happens to be in power the commissioners will be asking Parliament to make provision for advances so as to keep the harbour at Montreal abreast of the times. I sincerely hope that will be the case.

Mr. SINCLAIR: We shall all be glad to see that happen. I would not, however, like to see the idea go abroad that the Government should be responsible for all the expenditures at these ports. In improving the port of Montreal we increase the value of every house and every business stand and every piece of property in the city, and the city of Montreal should bear some part of the burden. I understand that at present that is the system adopted in Montreal, and so far I am in accord with it. We are borrowing money and lending it to the Harbour Commissioners, and they pay interest at the rate of three and a half per cent on the loan. I think that is the proper policy. We sometimes hear people advocating that the Dominion at large should bear the expense of equipping what are called the national ports, but that is not the policy in vogue in Great Britain. The harbour trust in Glasgow looks after the equipment of the port in that great city, and it is one of the best equipped ports in the world. The port of Glasgow does not depend upon the Government to sustain it, and the trade of the port pays the interest on the money expended. I am not objecting to the present Bill; it is largely in the line I would advocate, and I simply want to place myself on record in favour of a policy by which the trade of the port of Montreal should bear the greater portion of the expenditure necessary in order to provide for the necessities of that trade.

Mr. LEMIEUX: If I mistake not the harbour of Montreal is the only harbour in Canada that pays the interest on its debt.

Mr. HAZEN: It is the only port that is self-sustaining. When the Government constructs wharfs in other harbours the dues on these wharfs are collected under the Harbour Masters' Act and they go into the consolidated revenue of the country. The port of Montreal is absolutely self-sustaining. On every dollar that is advanced by the country the Harbour Commissioners, out of the revenues of the harbour—elevator charges, shunting charges and other items of revenue—have paid the interest.

Mr. SINCLAIR: It is not altogether self-sustaining, because we loan them the money at three and a half per cent, and we are paying more than that.

On section 3—interest on debentures:

Mr. LEMIEUX: Following the line of the remarks of my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair), the Minister of Marine and Fisheries may know that action was taken lately by the city of Montreal against the Harbour Commissioners for the payment of taxes. So far the Harbour Commission has always contended that it, being a commission receiving its power from the Crown, was not liable for taxes. I understand that action was taken and judgment rendered, Mr. Justice Weir declaring that the Harbour Commission was not liable. Has there been an appeal from that judgment, or has the city of Montreal agreed to accept it?

Mr. HAZEN: I understand that it is the intention of the city of Montreal to appeal from the judgment of Mr. Recorder Weir, who decided that the commissioners' property is not liable to taxation. It certainly seems to me that some action will have to be taken about the matter if the decision should ultimately be that the property is liable to taxation. It has never paid a dollar of taxation in the past, nor has any attempt been made to levy taxes upon it. While, in a sense, this is the property of the Harbour Commissioners, it is public property in the broader sense of the term, and it would be a monstrous thing, it seems to me, if this Parliament should be asked to make these large appropriations for the port of Montreal and for the enlargement and improvement of the harbour, and then find itself faced with charges to a very large amount—for it would reach a very large amount—for taxes. I understood from the previous Board of Harbour Commissioners that they discussed this matter with the civic authorities, those authorities took the position that they could not do otherwise than impose taxes upon the Harbour Commissioners' property, but that they are quite willing, if the courts decided that the property was subject to taxation, themselves to apply to the Quebec Legislature for an Act exempting it from assessment. I understand, however, that that is not the attitude of the present civic government in Montreal. That being so, the matter is still in our hands. We are not obliged to make advances to the Harbour Commissioners, and I think we should carefully consider the matter before making advances, and ascertain whether the civic authorities intend to make us pay large sums in taxation. Every citizen of Montreal with whom I have spoken about the matter feels that it is not right that the property should be asked to pay taxes, but that it should be regarded the same as any other property belonging to the Crown.

4 p.m.

Bill as amended reported, read the third time and passed.

QUEBEC HARBOUR COMMISSION.

On motion of Hon. J. D. Hazen (Minister of Marine and Fisheries), Bill No. 192, to provide for further advances to the Quebec Harbour Commissioners, was read the second time and the House went into Committee thereon, Mr. Blondin in the Chair.

On section 1:

Mr. HAZEN: The purpose of this Bill is to authorize a loan to the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec of $2,000,000 to continue the plan of harbour improvements which was commenced under the authority of the legislation of last session. It will be recalled that during the last session authority was obtained for an advance of $3,500,000 to the commission. Immediately following the passage of that measure plans for a comprehensive scheme of harbour improvements were prepared under the direction of the commission, which, in turn, received the approval of my department. In carrying out the work contemplated by this scheme some $2,960,363 was expended up to the end of March last. This left a balance unexpended of $539,637 available for the operations of the present season. Up to the present time very satisfactory progress has been made with the work undertaken by the commission, and it is confidently expected that before the expiration of the present year there will be available at Quebec accommodation that will substantially assist the growing need of shipping at that port. One of the most important items of the scheme of harbour improvements is the construction of a first-class modern elevator with storage capacity of 1,000,000 bushels. This elevator, including a complete electric power plant, is now practically in readiness to receive grain. Substantial progress has also been made with the extension of the piers at the Louise embankment which, when completed, will afford much needed berthing accommodation for the additional ocean steamships coming to the port.

As the result of what the commission has been able to accomplish in the short time that they have been in charge of operations, a very satisfactory increase in the traffic, as evidenced by the increased revenue, is to be noted. For the year 1912, the gross earnings of the harbour were $126,131.39.

For the year ending the 31st December last, the earnings had increased to $176,020.80, exclusive of an annual rental the commissioners propose to charge for the site occupied by the new Dominion Immigration building of $50,000. When the improvements contemplated by the proposed loan are completed there is every reason to believe that the increased traffic will yield ample revenue to provide for operating and interest charges.

Mr. LEMIEUX: To cover the old debt?

Mr. HAZEN: Not the old debt; I am afraid it will be some years before they will be able to discharge the old debt.

Mr. LEMIEUX: What is the amount of the old debt?

Mr. HAZEN: I will give my hon. friend the figures in a moment. There are certain amounts owing not only to the Government but to individuals, and these latter were made a charge ahead of the interest charges on last year's advance. The revenues last year and this year will, we expect, be ample to pays interest on the advance of last year and this; but not for many years to come will they be able to pay the interest on the old debt, which has been standing for quite a number of years and which amounts to a considerable sum. The expenditures last year were made up as follows: Foundation and channel work under contract with the Dominion Dredging Company, $642,361.

Mr. LEMIEUX: How many dredges are employed by the Dominion Dredging Company?

Mr. HAZEN: Two. The next item is that of the quay extension, Louise embankment, providing for bulkhead, engineering, timber for new crib, general plant and bulkhead contingency, amounting to $764,000. The amount of expenditure upon grain elevator under contract with the Canadian Stewart Company was $739,000, and upon car ferry terminals, $117,523.

Mr. LEMIEUX: What are these car ferry terminals?

Mr. HAZEN: That work is being done under arrangement with the Commissioners of the Transcontinental railway. There will be, as I understand it, a considerable sum of money, on the settlement of accounts between them, to be paid back to the Harbour Commissioners by the Commissioners of the Transcontinental, an amount that will run up to about a quarter of a million dollars. Other expenditures were floating crane, $51,000; service boat, $22,000; floating fenders, labour, timber, etc., $3,000; dredging plant, $271,000; crib-work at Fly bank, $92,000; elevator dredge, $57,000; new dump-scows, $72,000, and so on, amounting to the sum which I have mentioned.

As to the work which is to be done this year, the dredging contemplated includes a trench for the proposed quay wall and the channel approach. This work involves the removal of 2,000,000 cubic yards of material. The estimated cost of this dredging amounts to $400,000. With regard to the quay extension, Louise embankment, this item covers the construction of 1,818 lineal feet of substructure and 1,200 feet of superstructure, of a crib-work retaining wall extending along the northern face of Princess Louise embankment on the lines laid down by Messrs. Coode, Matthews, Fitzmorris & Wilson, together with the necessary filling in. Then there are railway tracks on two other properties amounting to $50,000; purchases of Indian Cove property, purchase of new locomotives and the construction of conveyor galleries. The latter will probably not be required this year, but the contract will probably have to be entered into this year.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Will that be covered by the $2,000,000?

Mr. HAZEN: Yes. I may say that the old debt, exclusive of the loans of last session and this, is about $5,415,722.

Mr. LEMIEUX: That is very satisfactory. I wish to call the attention of my hon. friend to a statement which he made not very long ago, and which was received with great satisfaction by Canadians at large, namely, that, as far as possible, any ship or any material required by the Government in connection with shipping would be purchased or built in Canada. I was very much surprised to learn that the Quebec Harbour Commission had recently placed orders abroad for a large crane, a large dredge, a floating grain elevator, and a steam tug. The value of this equipment will amount to several hundreds of thousands of dollars, in fact, my hon. friend, in answer to a question which I put lately, stated that this will entail a very large expenditure. All of this equipment could have been constructed at different Canadian works, at Levis, near Quebec, or at Montreal, at the Vickers' works, or on the Great Lakes at Collingwood, or elsewhere. There are several structural steel companies in Canada fully prepared to accept an order for the construction of such vessels. There is a plant at Levis, the Davey plant, one at Kingston, one at Montreal, one at Collingwood, one at Toronto, one at Port Arthur, capable of building the whole of these different appliances. There are more than a dozen engine builders and boiler builders in Canada fully equipped to produce the engine plant and boiler plant required, of the highest possible quality. In fact, we know that lately possibly the largest grain carrier ever built was launched at Collingwood on the Great Lakes. As a Canadian and a moderate protectionist, I cannot see why this Government of high protectionists should go abroad to get the appliances and the ships and the dredges and the engines and boilers required for the Harbour Commission of Quebec, or any other commission in the country. We have the Canadian Westinghouse Company, the Canadian General Electric Company, each of them having an output equal to the largest British companies, each fully prepared to deliver all electrical appliances required on the shortest notice, of the very highest quality, not to speak of several other electrical works in Canada. Every dollar's worth of material and every day's wages that have been put on the building of these harbour appliances abroad for the harbour at Quebec could have and should have been provided in Canada. It is true my hon. friend may say that after tenders were called he found that the prices in England were a shade cheaper than the prices in Canada, but it has always been the policy of this Government and of former Governments to give the preference to Canadian firms. You must bear in mind the Customs duties which enter into the account, and in that way you can give our Canadian firms the preference. The Marine Department has recently announced, through a statement of my hon. friend in the House, that it is the policy of the Dominion of Canada to place all orders of the Department of Marine, for shipbuilding, in Canadian works. Does this rule not also apply to other public works, and will not the Government state that instructions will be given to all harbour commissioners and all bodies having authority to place orders for marine or other appliances to be used in harbour improvements or other public works, that all such orders must be given to Canadian manufacturers. We have the Westinghouse Electric Company at Hamilton, the Steel Company of Canada, also at Hamilton, the Bridge Works at Hamilton, the General Electric Company, the Polson Iron Works at Toronto, the Collingwood Shipbuilding Company at Collingwood, the Western Dry Dock Company at Port Arthur. So, not going outside the province of Ontario, these appliances could have been supplied by the firms which I have already mentioned. These works, with the capacity for employing 50,000 workmen, are curtailing their operations and discharging their workmen because of lack of orders, while these public bodies, like the harbour commission, are sending public money abroad to employ foreign workmen in the same occupations. The Vickers Company, of Montreal, could have filled the whole order in its own works for these harbour appliances.

Mr. HAZEN: I do not think they could then, as their works were not ready. They could now.

Mr. LEMIEUX: With all due deference, I met the other day one of the members of the firm, who had read the answers given to my questions on the Order Paper. He said that he felt very sorry that his firm had been forgotten in the distribution of orders and that the Vickers in Montreal could have supplied all those appliances. At all events, I simply call the attention of my hon. friend to the announcement made some months ago that in future his policy would be to give the preference to Canadian firms as regards Canadian ships, and, generally speaking, Canadian appliances for our Canadian public works and for the use of the harbour commission, etc.

There is another point about the harbour commission in Quebec. Of course we all have a great deal of confidence in Mr. Price, the chairman of that board; but some facts have come to public notice lately which lead me to believe that it would be a good thing if Mr. Price could be at the office every day because these facts would lead to the belief that the administration is somewhat lax. I shall give an instance. The Harbour Commission purchased lately a quarry at a place called St. Nicholas in the county of Lévis, just across the river. The property, three acres by five, approximately, was purchased on the 2nd of April, 1913, from a gentleman by the name of Jules Giroux. The price paid was $4,500. This Jules Giroux had purchased the property from a man named Desjamin Demers, on the 29th of March, 1913, for $2,000; that is to say, in less than a week a profit of $2,500 was realized on a property which had been bought just a few days before for $2,000. That may be a small amount, but it enables one to judge of the other things that are being done by the Harbour Commission. I do not wish to detain the House at any length because every minute of our time probably costs $2,500, but I simply leave this fact with my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and the hon. gentleman who is leading the House, the Minister of Public Works; $2,500 made out of the people of this country in less than five days. Surely there is a nigger in the fence.

Mr. ROGERS: In the quarry, you mean.

Mr. LEMIEUX: This man, Jules Giroux, who sold the property to the commission, states in the deed of sale that he received no consideration, that he is only a go-between; but it is known that he is a brother-in-law of the son of one of the Harbour Commissioners, Mr. Gravel. Far be it from me to impute motives, but I say to my hon. friend that he had better tell Mr. Gravel, that his son has a brother-in-law who is rather costly to the country, because in four days he was able to shave off a nice little profit of $2,500. If we must judge Mr. Gravel in big things as he has been acting in small things, I say to my hon. friend be careful of this $2,000,000 that you are advancing. That is a large amount of money, and I say: keep your eye wide open, Mr. Minister. I hope my hon. friend will read the Riot Act to Mr. Gravel and tell him to stop all such nonsense. This little graft of $2,500 is unworthy of the Quebec Harbour Commission. I am sure that if Mr. Price had known of this deal he would not have sanctioned it. On the whole, the explanations of the hon. gentleman are quite satisfactory, and I leave him with this little grab of $2,500.

Mr. HAZEN: I may say to my hon. friend that he and I agree entirely as to the policy of having Canadian ships built in Canada, and to show how that policy is being carried out I may say that all tenders that are now being asked for, for the construction of ships for the Canadian Government contain the clause that the ship must be built in Canada. We have given notice to the world to this effect. We gave the contract for that great ice-breaker we are having built for the St. Lawrence to the Canadian Vickers Company, Montreal, who were the lowest tenderers complying with the clause that the vessel must be built in Canada. In regard to the vessels to which my hon. friend has referred, the Quebec Harbour Commissioners tell me that they were not aware of our policy of having all Government vessels built in Canada at the time they gave those contracts, and they said it would have been impossible for any shipyard in Canada to have delivered the boats in time. That is the statement made by Mr. Price, through the secretary of the board, and I have no doubt it is correct. With regard to the sale of property to which my hon. friend has referred, I might say that as soon as I heard of it I at once brought it to the attention of the chairman of the Quebec Harbour Commission. Mr. Price tells me that he is satisfied that Mr. Gravel, who has, I believe, an admirable reputation in Quebec, and is one of its leading business men, had no knowledge whatever of the transaction; that, so far as he was concerned, there was no wrong-doing at all, and that he did not in any way convey the information which led to the persons speculating in and making a profit out of this land. The matter has not come up for the first time now. It was first brought to my attention in a newspaper article, and I at once communicated with Mr. Price, who said that he was satisfied that there was no wrong-doing on the part of Mr. Gravel.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Does not my hon. friend think it strange that a property bought on the 29th March, 1913, for $2,000 should be sold four days afterwards to the Harbour Commission for $4,500? Does not my hon. friend think that that increase is rather questionable?

Mr. HAZEN: I admit it was a pretty rapid increase.

Mr. LEMIEUX: It is a half-confessed sin, and I forgive my hon. friend.

Section agreed to.

On section 5—plans, etc., to be approved before work is commenced:

Mr. LEMIEUX: Going back for a moment to the Calgarian and the Alsatian: whereabouts are they going to dock at Quebec? Will they lie at the old Allan wharf or the Empress wharf?

Mr. PELLETIER: Next to the Empress wharf.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Is it a permanent arrangement that the new Allan liners shall stop at Quebec instead of coming up to Montreal. I should like to know, because some little surprise has been caused at Montreal by this change.

Mr. PELLETIER: There is nothing in the mail contract to the effect that those steamers should come to Montreal.

Mr. HAZEN: My hon. friend knows that the Empresses have stopped at Quebec for years past.

Mr. LEMIEUX: It is said that the new liners cannot come to Montreal because they draw too much water. As a matter of fact, the Laurentic and the Megantic have a greater draught, and they come up to Montreal. I may just as well frankly say that the impression in Montreal is that the Allan people were told that the mail contract would not be increased unless the new steamers made Quebec their terminus, instead of Montreal. I do not know whether it is true or not.

Mr. PELLETIER: There is not a word of truth in it. I suppose my hon, friend saw that in the papers. No such suggestion was made; the steamship companies are absolutely free to go to whichever port they like. There is no pressure, and I do not see why my hon. friend should begrudge Quebec the privilege of having one or two ships stop there. I understand that my hon. friend represented the district of Quebec in the late Government for some years.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Yes.

Mr. PELLETIER: And this is the second time this afternoon that he complains of these two ships stopping at Quebec.

Mr. LEMIEUX: No, I do not.

Mr. PELLETIER: It looks like it. At all events, the Government, or the Post Office Department, has nothing to do with it.

Bill reported.

TORONTO TERMINALS.

On motion of Hon. J. D. Reid (acting Minister of Railways and Canals), Bill No. 196, respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada, and the Toronto Harbour Commissioners was read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time, and passed.

ST. JOHN AND QUEBEC RAILWAY.

On motion of Hon. J. D. Reid (acting Minister of Railways and Canals), the House went into committee to consider the following proposed resolution, Mr. Blondin in the chair:

[Mr. Lemieux.]

Resolved, that it is expedient to provide for the cost of building three railway bridges in the province of New Brunswick, one across the St. John river at or near Andover, in the county of Victoria; one across the St. John river at or near Mistake, in the county of Kings; and one across the Kennebecasis river, at or near Perry Point, in the said county of Kings.

Mr. REID: In the year 1912 the Dominion Parliament passed an Act by which they agreed to guarantee the bonds on the bridges mentioned in this resolution in connection with the St. John Valley Railway Company in New Brunswick. The railway company and the province of New Brunswick have found on further investigation that the railway company will not be able to build the bridges for the amount originally estimated by them. They are unable to proceed with the construction of the bridges without further assistance from the Dominion Government. As it is the intention of the Government to take this railway over and operate it in connection with the Intercolonial railway when it is completed, the Government have decided to give further aid towards the bridges mentioned. However, instead of guaranteeing the bonds, as was originally done in the Act of 1912, the Government have come to the conclusion that it would be much better for them to build the bridges themselves. They will call for tenders and let the contract and the work will be carried to completion through the Department of Railways and Canals. When the bridges are completed, they will be owned entirely by the Dominion Government. In the former agreement the Dominion Government agreed to allow the railway company to use all the bridges for fifteen years without interest, and after that the provincial Government was to get a certain percentage of the earnings on the St. John Valley railway, and the St. John Valley Railway Company were to get any profit there might be over and above the earnings and the payment of the interest on the bonds that will be issued against the bridges in connection with this railway. In this Bill it is proposed that the bridges, including all necessary approaches, will be built by the Dominion Government and that they shall belong to and be the property of His Majesty. After the bridges are completed the Minister of Railways may enter into an agreement with the Government of the province of New Brunswick and the St. John and Quebec Railway Company, under which agreement it will be provided that for the fifteen years after the bridges are completed no charge shall be made in respect to the cost of construction of the bridges. In other words, the original arrangement of allowing the bridges to be used for fifteen years free of interest will be carried out, but after the fifteen years His Majesty shall be entitled to the gross earnings of the bridges; being such proportion of the said gross earnings of the railway, exclusive of the railway and of the bridges, as the cost of the bridges bear to the combined cost of the railway and of the bridges. The earnings of the bridges in proportion to the total cost of the railway will be paid to the Dominion Government.

Mr. CARVELL: I am happy to say that the minister and myself are very nearly in agreement over this Bill, and I congratulate the minister and the Government on the course they have taken in absolutely eliminating the St. John and Quebec Railway Company from having anything whatever to do, either directly or indirectly, with the construction of these bridges. I only wish it were possible to go to the same extent in the province of New Brunswick, that my hon. friend the minister is going in so far as the federal Government is concerned. I do not like to say to him, that I told him to do this, but I want to say to the people of this country that in the speech I delivered here three or four weeks ago I advised him to do it, in view of the great scandal that is going on in the province of New Brunswick at present.

Mr. LEMIEUX: He put it in the Bill on account of what you said.

Mr. CARVELL: I will not go to the extent of saying that, and I give the minister credit for wanting to do what is right.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Do not give him too much credit.

Mr. MACDONALD: You will spoil him.

Mr. CARVELL: I pointed out that things were not going on properly in our province in respect to this railway question and I say so now, but if the minister carries out the proposals in the Bill—an advance copy of which he was good enough to send me a few moments ago—I am satisfied that so far as the bridges are concerned the thing will be carried out fairly and honestly. I know the minister will carry it out according to his promise, and that he will call for public tenders, and I believe there will be no boodling so far as that part of the transaction is concerned. I have not had time to examine the details of the Bill, but they will come up for discussion later. The Bill, of course, is not yet before the House, but I call the attention of the minister to that clause in it with reference to the proclamation which would mean that the construction of these bridges might be postponed for a year.

Mr. HAZEN: The Government could proclaim it at any time.

Mr. CARVELL: They cannot proclaim this Act until after legislation is passed in New Brunswick and that might be a year hence.

Mr. HAZEN: Would it not be sufficient if there was an Order in Council passed by the provincial Government agreeing to bring in legislation at the next session? There would have to be legislation by the province, and of course my hon. friend sees the difficulty there.

Mr. CARVELL: We want this work finished as quickly as possible, so that we may be able to forget this thing altogether. We want these bridges built now. When the Bill comes to its second reading, possibly some arrangement can be made with respect to that. I am satisfied that the Minister has worked out this scheme properly. The original scheme was that the Government was to guarantee the bonds to the extent of one million dollars, upon which the federal Government was to pay the interest for fifteen years; now the federal Government owns the bridges, and the same idea will be carried out by charging no rental to the railway company for fifteen years. After the fifteen years the Government will charge the railway company along the same lines as those in the original agreement. I think the minister has his Bill properly drawn along these lines, and I therefore have great pleasure in congratulating the minister and stating that he has my hearty approval for this resolution, subject of course to the necessary amendment to which I have called attention.

Mr. MICHAUD: I congratulate the acting Minister of Railways, and I am sure he is filling well the position of the Minister of Railways during his absence, in so far as these bridges are concerned. I am glad to see by this Bill that the building of three bridges means that one bridge will be built over the St. John river at Andover, in my constituency, which means that the railway will be built as far as Grand Falls. Last year we endeavoured to get a subsidy from this Government to build the railway from Andover to Grand Falls, but the Minister of Railways refused, telling us that it was not advisable to build a railway parallel to the Canadian Pacific railway for that distance. The fact that they are going to build a bridge across the St. John river at Andover means that the St. John Railway Company will run on the other side of the river, and it will not necessarily parallel the Canadian Pacific railway. Like the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) I believe in the good will of the acting Minister of Railways. I hope he will endeavour to see that these bridges will be constructed as soon as possible, and if the Bill is not what it should be with regard to the proclamation, we have his assurance that nothing will be allowed to interfere with the speedy construction of these bridges. I hope that will be the case.

Mr. REID: The Bill has been prepared with that very object in view, and it shows very plainly that our intention is to carry out this work.

Mr. McKENZIE: Is this not a new departure? Is there a precedent for action of this kind? The Government propose to build and own bridges on a line of railway which is under different ownership, and on which they will own nothing except the bridges. If there is precedent for this in Canadian railway building, I am not aware of it.

Mr. REID: I do not know if the hon. member is aware that it is the intention of the Government that the Intercolonial railway should operate the St. John Valley road—that is, this road when completed will be really a part of the Intercolonial Railway system. The original arrangement was that a bridge company was to be formed to build these bridges, which were then to be leased to the railway, and we were to guarantee the bonds. But it has been decided that we should build the bridges on this line, which as I say, will be part of the Intercolonial railway, so far as operation is concerned.

Mr. McKENZIE: But I understand that no part of this railway becomes a part of the Intercolonial railway.

Mr. REID: Under lease.

Mr. McKENZIE: By agreement between the company and the Government on a percentage basis, the Intercolonial Railway system is to operate this road. That is all.

[Mr. Michaud.]

Now, it strikes me as peculiar, and a very radical departure, for the Government to build expensive bridges upon a road which they do not own. Certainly, these bridges will be a white elephant on their hands if the road should prove unsuccessful. I cannot understand why the bridges could not be built under an agreement similar to that made with regard to the rest of the road. There may be good reasons for it, but I do not know what they are. If the building of these bridges means the difference between New Brunswick having this road and not having it, I should be glad to see the Government assist in building the bridges. But I think it must appear to the acting Minister of Railways himself that it is an anomaly to have a railway partly owned by the Government and partly owned by others.

I must say also to the Prime Minister (Mr. Borden) that while he is dealing with a lavish hand with the province of New Brunswick so far as railways are concerned, he is, I fear, neglecting his own province.

5 p.m.

The province of New Brunswick has advantages in railway facilities which the province of Nova Scotia never had. The further you go east, the further you go out on what has been called the 'Long Wharf' of the Dominion, the province of Nova Scotia, the further you go from the railway centre. The province of New Brunswick is crossed and recrossed by lines of railways. In Quebec they have very great advantages in the extent of their railway facilities; and, when you come to Ontario, you find that from east to west, it is gridironed with railways. When the Prime Minister proposes that this extraordinary course should be adopted to give further railway facilities to a province that is already well served, he should not forget his own native province. He must not forget that we have no other representative in the Cabinet but himself, nobody else to whom we can go about such matters. I know that his attention is burdened with great questions of many kinds, but his native province looks to him and expects him to see that its railway interests are not neglected. He is making a new step in the history of railway building under this measure. And while he is assenting to dispositions of this kind for railway development in one part of the country, I hope that the railway projects of his own province, which we have been putting before the House and before himself, will receive serious consideration at his hands.

Mr. BORDEN: I shall bear in mind the suggestion of my hon. friend and shall endeavour to see to it that the interests of my own province are not neglected. As to this particular case, we had undertaken to guarantee the bonds for $1,000,000. It turned out that nearer $3,000,000 was required. We had the choice of one of three courses: First, to do nothing; second, to increase the guarantee of bonds to $3,000,000 or thereabouts, and, third, to build the bridges ourselves. Upon consideration of the whole question, a question that was not without difficulties, we concluded that the last-named course was the best. And while I am mindful of the claims that my own province has upon me, I can hardly refrain from what seems reasonable in this case, merely for the reason that I did not happen to be born in the province of New Brunswick.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Will the acting minister tell us if he has estimates of what these bridges will cost?

Mr. REID: I am informed that they will cost less than $3,000,000; I think the estimate is something like $2,800,000; but we ask for $3,000,000.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Was that an estimate made by an engineer?

Mr. REID: Yes, the estimate was made by Mr. Montserrat, chairman of the Quebec Bridge Commission, who is supposed to be one of the best bridge engineers in Canada. He made a careful investigation and a report with an estimate of the cost.

Mr. CARVELL: Do I understand that we have the promise of the minister that these bridges will be built by contract after public tender?

Mr. REID: By tender, with public competition.

Mr. CARVELL: I am glad to hear that. For fear of agreeing with the minister to too great an extent to suit some of my hon. friends around me, I wish to say that I cannot agree with him in the statement he made some time ago that they found the million-dollar guarantee not sufficient to build these bridges.

I wish to congratulate my hon. friend upon this. I think the Prime Minister put it very fairly when he said that three courses were open: the first was that of doing nothing; the second was that of carrying out the bond guarantee or increasing it, and the third was that of building the bridges themselves. I think that they have done just what they ought to have done. I want to tell the committee that it was not necessary to increase the bond guarantee, and it was not necessary to change this legislation one iota, because if the money which had been voted by the province of New Brunswick had been honestly accounted for, there would have been enough money to have built the road. However, I congratulate my friends for taking the next best step with a view to creating some sort of order out of chaos.

Mr. HAZEN: I cannot allow my hon. friend to make the assertion which he has made before this committee without saying that he has no justification or warrant for making it. Certain charges have been made in connection with the Valley railway and the party who made that charge in the legislature of New Brunswick asked that a committee be appointed to investigate the matter. The legislature, composed almost entirely of supporters of the present local Government, amended the resolution and provided that a commission should be appointed to investigate these charges. A commission was named consisting of Sir Frederick Barker, ex-chief justice of the Supreme Court of the province of New Brunswick, Hon. H. A. McKeown, judge of the Supreme Court and Mr. W. S. Fisher, a leading merchant of the city of St. John. Unfortunately, owing to the state of his health, Sir Frederick Barker declined to act, although he expressed his entire willingness to do so when approached on the subject before the commission was appointed. Another commissioner is to be appointed to take Sir Frederick Barker's place; I understood that he was to be appointed this week. Who he is, I do not know. That commission is to inquire into these charges and I think that until these charges are inquired into and until the evidence is brought before the commission my hon. friend is not warranted in making the assertion that he has made before this committee. This whole matter, therefore, is now under consideration and will be inquired into by this independent commission composed of gentlemen in no sense partisan; gentlemen on one side or the other of politics, who have the confidence of the people of New Brunswick. In view of these circumstances, I do not think that my hon. friend ought to make such assertions as he has made and I do not feel that I ought to allow them to go unchallenged. With regard to the cost of the bridges, I may say that the estimate made by Mr. Montserrat for the bridge crossing the St. John river is about $2,063,000. The bridge is expensive because of the great difficulty experienced in getting satisfactory foundations, Mr. Montserrat, after having inspected the different sites along the river, has made the estimate which I have mentioned. It is estimated I believe, that the crossing of the Kennebecasis river will cost something in the neighbourhood of $500,000. These are the facts and figures as I have them; I have seen Mr. Montserrat's report and I can speak with absolute accuracy as to his estimate of the cost of the bridge. Probably $3,000,000 will be more than enough to cover the cost of all these bridges.

Mr. CARVELL: I appreciate the little lecture which my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has given me, but I do not know that it was entirely unexpected, because this is a rather sore point with my hon. friend. I do not wonder that he objects to having these skeletons dragged out into the open, but the skeletons are there just the same. It is all very well for my hon. friend to say that the committee of the legislature, because it was practically all on one side, did not think it fair to investigate the thing. Let me tell my hon. friend that the gentleman who took the responsibility of making these charges wanted to have them investigated by that very same unfair tribunal. It is rather a remarkable thing that when the man who made the charges wanted them investigated by that tribunal, that tribunal was not willing to grant the investigation. It is another remarkable thing that six weeks after the charges were made no other tribunal has been appointed for purposes of investigation. I do not intend to quarrel with my hon. friend about this matter here; we may quarrel about it elsewhere, but I do want to tell him that he cannot find another instance where a man having laid certain charges against members of a provincial Government, after a lapse of six weeks there are still no signs of the charges being investigated.

Mr. FOWLER: I thought that there was some prospect of the dawn of a millenium so far as the hon. member for Carleton is concerned because of his having approved anything done by this Government, but that prospect is as far away as ever. The hon. member could not possibly voice his approval without putting in what might be called a joker; without dragging in some extraneous matter that has absolutely nothing to do with what is before the House, but which is introduced simply to display to the committee the fact that the hon. gentleman still retains all that virulence of feeling and violence of language that is so characteristic of him. My hon. friend seems to experience some suspicion because the legislature of the province of New Brunswick saw fit, instead of appointing a committee of the House to investigate the charges that have been made against the provincial Government by a member of the legislature, to appoint a Royal Commission. They appointed upon that Royal Commission men, one of whom at least was not of their own political faith. My hon. friend cannot understand, it seems, that men in political life may be actuated by a spirit of absolute fairness to an opponent and so he attempts to cast some suspicion upon that commission, because there are upon it two judges of the Supreme Court of the province of New Brunswick, one a retired chief justice, Sir Frederick Barker, a man who stands high in the estimation not only of the people of the province which has been honoured by his services but by the whole of Canada; a man who is known from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I understand that he has refused to act.

Mr. FOWLER: I am speaking now of the men who were appointed, as showing the desire for absolute fairness on the part of the legislature of New Brunswick, so that there should be no abuse cast upon them by reason of the fact that practically all the members of the legislature of the province are of one political stripe. But my hon. friend would not be very glad if a committee of the House had been appointed, all of whom would not be Conservatives, and if their findings were adverse to the side which he represents. My hon. friend in this House and everywhere else would say that it was a packed committee. He knows—and hence his bitterness—that that excuse is taken from him because of the fact that the gentlemen who have been appointed on that commission are men of high standing, men absolutely removed from politics, men whose findings will be received by this country as based upon absolute facts and fully justified. Is that what is the matter with my hon.

friend, and is that why he could not even allow this harmless Bill, which he admits is in the best interests of the country, to pass without sneering at the Legislature and the Government of New Brunswick?

Mr. CARVELL: Fortunately, the somewhat violent exhibition of temper on the part of the hon. member for Kings (Mr. Fowler) will not defeat this legislation. I am very glad indeed for that. I have been dressed down by the hon. member three or four times during this session, and I am still living. I am not sure that this thing can go on forever without something being said in return. I wish to tell my hon. friend that I do not often have suspicions that I do not voice, and my friend knows too much about what has taken place in New Brunswick in the last six or eight weeks to talk very much in this House. There is no necessity for him and me quarreling over what has taken place down there in the past, we will have something to say about that in the future. I agree with him in one thing, and that is the complete suitability of Sir Frederick Barker to act as commissioner. I am somewhat surprised that he should have been appointed one evening at eight o'clock and that he should have declined the next day to act. It may be that there was a good excuse. It may be that the Government believed that Sir Frederick Barker would act, and had he been able to act no one would have been better pleased than I. It may surprise the hon. member for Kings, when he talks about my not having the ability to appreciate a fair man, that I was the first person to name Sir Frederick Barker to the Government. I stated before it was decided to appoint a Royal Commission, that if a commission were appointed I would be willing to accept Sir Frederick Barker as sole commissioner. There is no gentleman in Canada for whom I have a higher regard than for Sir Frederick Barker, and there is not a man in New Brunswick, Liberal or Conservative, who does not feel great regret that that gentleman has not been able to act upon the commission. I know there was not a newspaper in New Brunswick that did not approve in the heartiest manner of the personnel of the commission. The fault I find with the Government of New Brunswick is the delay in filling up the breach. Surely they should be able to get some man in New Brunswick to take Sir Frederick Barker's place, because it is now nine or ten days since he was appointed. I think that is too long to wait in the case of an important matter like this.

Mr. FOWLER: I do not think my hon. friend is entitled to claim credit for suggesting the appointment of Sir Frederick Barker, as, when the appointment of a royal commission was first suggested, practically everybody suggested Sir Frederick Barker for that position. My hon. friend must share the credit with a great many people in New Brunswick. If Sir Frederick Barker does not act, it is simply because the condition of his health prevents him. The position may be filled by a judge who also holds the full respect of the people of New Brunswick. I do not know of any judge on the Bench who does not hold that respect, but I am sure that the gentleman who will take the place of Sir Frederick Barker, who is unable to act, will be just as well deserving of respect as Judge Barker himself.

Mr. CARVELL: That might be quite a contract. However, that is all that we want.

Mr. FOWLER: That is quite a contract, but I think there are also other judges who hold the respect of the people of New Brunswick, and that this commission will be one with which no one can find fault. As far as any disclosures that are to be made, of which my hon. friend speaks, I am always glad to have these things come out if there are any things to come out. There is nothing that can affect myself in regard to the matter and I expect to meet my hon. friend at the investigation, where we will be able to thresh out a whole lot of things.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Will the minister say if he has consulted the general manager of the Intercolonial in regard to the structures to be built under this Bill?

Mr. REID: No, I have not.

Mr. SINCLAIR: I wished to know that as we have had the doctrine laid down by Mr. Gutelius that we ought to have wooden trestles on roads of this construction, that it is a mistaken policy to erect steel bridges on a road such as we are building in New Brunswick. I am surprised that my hon. friend did not draw that matter to the attention of the general manager and have his advice, as this road was to be erected by the Intercolonial. I have no doubt he would be very much opposed to the expense of erecting steel bridges on a road of this character, in New Brunswick or anywhere else. The minister should explain why he has adopted steel in place of wood in this case.

Mr. REID: I am acting on the report of the engineer who was sent down to look into the matter, Mr. Montserrat.

Mr. OLIVER: Is it the intention, in the construction of these bridges, to have provision on them for highway traffic? If so, will the Dominion Government supply that, or will it be provided by the provincial government? I am not particularly interested in these bridges, but in the West we find that there has been a great waste of public resources in building railroad bridges across large rivers when a small additional expenditure would have provided traffic facilities and furnished a tremendous advantage to the people of the locality. I quite appreciate that it is not the business of the railway company or of the Dominion Government to do that, but there would be such a tremendous advantage and economy in using the main structure of the railroad bridge for the carrying of the roadway that I would think it would be sound policy, wherever such a bridge is being constructed within the knowledge or on the responsibility or in any way under the aid of the Dominion Government, that the government of the province in which the bridge is situated should be approached with the offer that they would have the privilege of making arrangements for the adding of traffic facilities on fair terms.

I do not urge that the Dominion Government is responsible for this matter, but it has a general interest in everything that concerns the welfare of the people of this country, and I would suggest as a matter of policy in the public interest that when such cases arise, particularly in the West, the provincial authorities be given an opportunity of making some such arrangement.

Mr. REID: Of course an agreement will be made between the province of New Brunswick, this Government, and the railway company in connection with the building of these bridges. I think the point taken by my hon. friend is a good one. I understand him to mean that provision should be made for traffic teams alongside the railway. I would be glad to direct the attention of the Minister of Railways and Canals to my hon. friend's suggestion, and if it is at all feasible in this particular instance I have no doubt the minister will carry it out.

Mr. OLIVER: I am not particularly interested in this case. I just wish to bring the idea to the public mind with a view to instances that might arise later on in the western provinces.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. REID thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 201) to amend the St. John and Quebec Railway Company Act.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

JUDGES ACT AMENDMENT.

On motion of Hon. C. J. Doherty (Minister of Justice), Bill no. 190, to amend the Judges Act was read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Blondin in the Chair.

Mr. DOHERTY: It has been suggested to me that a difficulty has arisen in the Maritime Provinces under the provisions of the present Judges Act. What is complained of is that certain judges who do not reside in the county town—and they are not bound by law to reside in the county town—are, under the present Act, precluded from receiving the travelling allowance for holding court in a county town, and also precluded from receiving the travelling allowance when they hold court in the town in which they reside. It has been represented that there are two or three cases where the judge resides in a town other than the county town, but in which the business to be dealt with is as large as, or possibly larger than, the business to be dealt with in the county town. Those being the facts, the result is that that judge has to go to the county town to do his work and gets no travelling allowance; while he is also exempting the country from paying him any travelling allowance when he does the work in the town in which he has chosen to reside. I quite realize that under those circumstances the country is getting an unfair advantage because of the fact that the judge does not reside in the county town. Of course, if he were bound by law to reside in the county town, there would be nothing more to be said, but he is not. I think that is a situation that in fairness to the judge ought to be met, and to meet it I am proposing, and I move now, to amend the present Bill by adding as section 5, the following:

5. Subsection (c) of section 18 of the principal Act is repealed, and the following substituted therefor:

(c) No judge of a county court shall receive any travelling allowance for courts or chambers held at the county town of the county or union of counties wherein he resides—provided, however, that this subsection shall not apply to any such judge residing at a town (other than the county town) at which the volume of court or chamber work done is established to the satisfacttion of the Minister of Justice to be as great or greater than that done at the county town.

Mr. KYTE: Inasmuch as I happen to be the person who brought this matter to the attention of the Minister of Justice, I thank him for the consideration that he has given to it. While his amendment to some extent meets the objection that I raised against the existing provisions, I think it throws on the Minister of Justice a certain amount of responsibility, and perhaps attention, that he ought to be relieved of. I think that if his amendment were to the effect that where the town in which the judge resides is larger in point of population than the county town, it would fairly meet the objection that has been raised. Where the population is larger the presumption is, of course, there is more legal business to be done, and I would suggest that he accept the change in the amendment that I have proposed.

Mr. PROULX: I think it would be preferable to specify the particular cases instead of making the application general, because it might open the door to judges living elsewhere than in the county towns. Conditions in the Maritime provinces are a little different from those of Ontario. I understand that a judge in the Maritime provinces has to look after two or three counties, whereas in Ontario there is only one county town for each district. I think that if the law is made general it will militate against the county town.

Mr. DOHERTY: Under the provision I have suggested the judge would have no pecuniary object in living in any other town than the county town, because this amendment would only apply to him if he selected a town where there was at least as much judicial work to do as in the county town itself. He would be giving at least as much of his time without any travelling allowance charged to the country as he would be if he lived in the county town. He would not in any way benefit if he lived elsewhere than in the county town. Whether there are other temptations to take judges away from county towns I do not know. Of course, this would not affect any judge in any province where his residence is fixed by law. He will have to live where the law tells him to live. But I understand that in the Maritime provinces the present law does not determine where the judge must reside, and I understand there are actually existing cases where a judge lives in some other place than the county town where the business is greater than it is in the county town. I am told that the judge of the county in which Campbellton is situated resides in Campbellton, that some other place is the county town, and that the business done at Campbellton is as large, or larger, than that in the county town. If these facts are correct, then the judge is being unfairly treated. I think the same thing happens in regard to Dorchester, and also in New Glasgow and Pictou. My hon. friend from Kings tells me that the same thing happens in his county. We ought to make provision to meet every case wherever it arises. I cannot, nor can the members of the House, verify the cases in which it happens. The suggested amendment will entitle a judge to his allowance at the county town wherever he satisfies the department that there is no loss to the country by reason of his residing elsewhere than at the county town because there is as much work at the town he resides in as at the county town. I think that in the province of Ontario the residence of judges is fixed by statute, so that this legislation would not affect the judges of that province in any case.

Mr. PROULX: The residence of the judge is fixed by the Ontario statute in the county for which he is appointed, and under the Judges' Act he is not entitled to any travelling allowance if he takes up another place of residence than the county town.

Mr. DOHERTY: That is the way it stands at present. A judge is not allowed anything at all if he does not live at the county town. If he chooses to go and live elsewhere he forfeits any allowance for work done in the other place that he has gone to. When he chooses to live elsewhere no doubt the country escapes paying him an allowance if he works in either one of the two places. If he chooses to live in the county town, he has his allowance if he goes elsewhere. If he chooses not to live in the county town, he forfeits his allowance in the place where he resides and also in the county town. That is the penalty of his not living in the county town. Where the fact is that at his place of residence he is called upon to devote just as much of his time to judicial work as he would be in the county town, the country suffers in no way if he is paid his allowance when he is at the county town. The country is put in the same position as if he had lived in the county town. I understand that in the particular cases that are referred to, the places where the judges do actually live, are now, whatever they may have been in the past, more important centres than the county towns actually are.

Mr. PROULX: I do not dispute that but I am afraid that if you make the law general it will induce judges in other counties to reside elsewhere than in the county town and we do not want to encourage them to do that. I think that we should encourage them to live in the county town where most of the business is done. When judges sit in chambers they leave the papers to be filed with the clerk of the court. It is much more convenient to do legal business in the county town than in other places.

Mr. MACDONALD: I think the proposition submitted by my hon. friend from Richmond (Mr. Kyte) solves the difficulty that the minister wants to overcome. In a great many cases it would be almost impossible to ascertain the amount of work that is done in one town as compared with another. But speaking for the situation in the Maritime provinces, and particularly for my own county, I think the criterion of population is one which ought to satisfy the department and one which is eminently fair.

Mr. DOHERTY: The population could not be regarded as a very good indication of the time that a judge has to spend in holding court. If we allowed the judge to go away from the county town to a place where there might be very little judicial business, when there was a great deal to do in the county town, it might result in the country having to pay a great deal more for allowance than if he lived in the county town. I am willing to meet the judges if I can meet them without imposing on the country a larger burden than the country would have to bear if they did live in the county town. Population would be a very unreliable basis to go upon because a great deal of business will have to be done at the county town, because it is the county town, without regard to population. For instance, the criminal business will have to be done there and it is a large item. I feel that in making this suggestion I have gone as far as I can to meet the wish and desire of the judges.

[Mr. Doherty.]

Mr. MACDONALD: In my own county the judge lives ten miles away but communication between the two points is very easy. You go to where the judge resides and get an ex parte order, or you have an unopposed motion to make in chambers, the judge initials the order and then you take the order back to the county town and the clerk signs it there. It would be impossible to get any data as to where the greatest amount of business is done; in fact, it is just where the judges happen to sit and where they happen to be when they make the order. The judge may hear a motion in the town in which he resides, he may send his judgment to the county town, the order would be taken out and consented to, perhaps, and would be dated from the county town, and the seal would be affixed there. Naturally, a difficulty would arise under these circumstances. But I do not see where the difficulty could exist if you made population the criterion because more population naturally produces more business. I remember that some time ago an attempt was made in our province to get some data to indicate the relative amount of business in the town for the purpose of making some representations to the Justice Department and the Bar had the greatest possible difficulty in getting that data together. I repeat, I do not see where the difficulty could arise if my hon. friend would make the population the criterion because, prima facie, the more population the more litigation.

Mr. DOHERTY: Unfortunately for that theory, one of the learned judges who is interested in this legislation, makes his case on the strength of the fact that, not living in the county town, he had to go there a large number of times and get nothing for it. I think it is the very judge that my hon. friend refers to. His letter says that there is more criminal work in his county than in the town he actually lives in. He is able to ascertain that. I think we ought to give a certain amount of credence at least to what a judge represents to us. We pay these bills now on the judge's own certification, or practically we do so, because we have no reason to suspect the information which a judge gives us. I think I have gone as far as I would be justified in going.

Mr. McKENZIE: Is it the understanding of the minister that a county court judge residing in a county town is entitled to his travelling expenses if he has to go to another town in the same county to hold a court?

Mr. DOHERTY: Yes, under this amendment.

Mr. McKENZIE: Does the minister say he would not be so entitled now?

Mr. DOHERTY: Under the section as it stands the judge gets no allowance for work done in his county town, and no allowance for work done in the town in which he resides.

Mr. McKENZIE: My question was: If the judge is residing in the county town now and there is another large town in the county where he holds court, is he entitled to his travelling expenses, under the law as it now stands, if he has to go to that town and hold a court?

Mr. DOHERTY: Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE: When the legislature of any province imposes a duty upon a county court judge of an important character and creates a county court judge's court, a particular tribunal, to deal with that matter, and when the judge goes there holding his court under that statute, I should think there should be no question in the world about his being paid his travelling expenses as a judge of the county court. I have a case in mind where the judge of a county court had to go outside of his county to hold a court, under a statute of our province in connection with a municipal election petition, and I am sorry to say he was not paid, although he sent in his bill. I cannot appreciate where the line is to be drawn. I think he should be paid for work of that kind.

Mr. DOHERTY: The legislature of that province attributed that work to the judges and attributed pay to them for doing it, so that the legislature dealt with it as something quite outside of the functions of the county court. It provided that these gentlemen should do that work and provided pay for them for doing it. I should think that one would have to draw the line between duties attributed to a county court judge which are properly of a judicial nature and duties which may be of a kind that might well have been assigned to any other intelligent person. What the hon. gentleman is discussing is something that does not bear upon any amendment to the law; it is a matter that would have to be determined in accordance with what would be determined to be a judicial duty. Does the hon. member suggest that if the legislature chooses to say that a county court judge shall do work that has no connection with any judicial proceeding, we should pay his travelling expenses for doing it?

Mr. McKENZIE: I do not think the minister will contend that the trial of election contested cases is a matter that could be assigned to any one but a judge or someone learned in the law. In the revision of the Nova Scotia statutes a few years ago, the parties who had charge of that revision made the trial of election petitions, in connection with municipal elections, Dominion elections, and provincial elections, precisely the same, so that the man who sits on the Bench to try a question as to a municipal election is adjudicating on exactly the same law as if he were trying a petition against a member of this House. Surely the minister would not think that work of that kind could be entrusted to a layman?

Mr. DOHERTY: Does not the province pay for it?

Mr. McKENZIE: I would like the Prime Minister to pay attention to this because it is a matter affecting his province of Nova Scotia. Before the Judges' Act of 1905 there was a provision in our law that the county court judge should get a standing allowance of two hundred dollars a year for the outside work he did, and for many years there was a petty allowance of two and a half dollars a day for a judge in Nova Scotia when he went to try these election cases. Under the Judges' Act of 1905 the two hundred dollars' allowance was wiped out and a new provision took its place. It so happened that the province of Nova Scotia did not repeal its two and a half dollar a day business when the new Judges' Act came in, and up to the instance I have in mind I think the judges were always allowed travelling expenses when they went outside their own county. I do not know of a single instance, except this one, where the line was drawn. I submit that when a county court judge has to do important work of this kind he should be allowed his travelling expenses. I shall take care to ask the Legislature of Nova Scotia to repeal this tuppeny-hapenny allowance of two and a half dollars a day, if that is all that stands in the way of judges getting their travelling expenses under certain circumstances.

Mr. PROULX: This amendment changes the law in another respect. It says: that no judge of a county court shall receive travelling expenses for courts or chambers held in the county court or of the union of counties in which he resides, whereas the present law says: where he is obliged by law to reside. The senior judge of my district resides in Ottawa. He would not be entitled to an allowance for sitting in chambers at Ottawa, but under this amendment he would be allowed for sitting in chambers in the county town of Prescott and Russell.

Mr. DOHERTY: If by law his residence is fixed in Ottawa then that is the place where by law he is bound to reside, and therefore he gets no allowance in Ottawa. The intention of the law was that there should be one place where a judge would not be entitled to an allowance, namely, the place where the law says he must live in, or, if he lives at some different place then the place in which he actually lives. Where the law prescribes no place of residence the assumption is that he should live at the county town and therefore he gets nothing for services at the county town and nothing at the town he does reside in if he wishes to reside away from the county town. Where the law fixes the place where he does reside, then the section applies to that place and to no other place.

Mr. PROULX: His residence is in Ottawa, but it is not recognized by law.

Mr. DOHERTY: If it is not, then he has no right to live here.

Mr. PROULX: He has been charging travelling expenses for sitting in Three Rivers and Ottawa. He asked for permission by Order in Council of the Lieutenant Governor to sit in Chambers in Ottawa, and he has been charging travelling allowances for sitting in Ottawa, though he resides here, pretending that he was residing in the county town of Prescott and Russell.

Mr. DOHERTY: I will look into the facts. If they are as stated, the judge is wrong.

Mr. PROULX: He claims he is right, and I claim he is practising a fraud on the Government.

Bill, as amended, reported.

Mr. SPEAKER: Before dealing with this amendment, I desire to say that it appears to me, in the short time I have had to give attention to it, that it is scarcely regular. It would increase the expenditure of money beyond that contemplated both in the resolution and in the original Bill. Bourinot says:

> It is not allowable at this stage, more than at any other, to increase or alter the destination of a grant of money recommended by the Governor General.

I would suggest, therefore, as the Bill is not likely to be read just now, that the amendment be allowed to stand.

Mr. DOHERTY: I must say, Mr. Speaker, that I concur in your view, that the amendment is not covered by the resolution; and, more particularly as it does not seem to have met with the approval of the hon. gentleman at whose suggestion it was made, I do not wish to press it now.

Report of committee stands for consideration.

QUEBEC BATTLEFIELDS COMMISSION.

On motion of Hon. W. T. White (Minister of Finance) Bill No. 193, to amend the Act respecting the National Battlefields at Quebec was read the second time and the House went into Committee thereon, Mr. Blondin in the Chair.

On section 2—seven commissioners appointable by Order in Council:

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: What is the object of this change? I understood the hon. minister to say on introducing the Bill that it was the intention to increase the number of commissioners from five to seven, but he gave no reason for it.

Mr. WHITE: The Government has thought it desirable that the commission should be enlarged to seven. In the first place, there are, I think, three residing outside the city of Quebec. In addition to that the commission has no member or members who have been appointed by this Government. I have discussed the matter with the chairman, Sir George Garneau, and he agreed that so far as he was concerned, there should be an increase. We have not interfered with the commission, which, I think, is proper. The commission consists of men of high standing, including Sir Edmund Walker, Hon. Mr. Taschereau, Hon. Mr. Turgeon, and Mr. Bickerdike. Nevertheless it has appeared to the Government desirable that there should be an increase.

6 p.m.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: The reason given by my hon. friend is not much of a reason—simply that the Government desires to increase the number. He says he has conferred with the chairman on the subject. Has there been any official communication, or has there been only verbal communication, between my hon. friend and the chairman?

Mr. WHITE: There has been no official communication from the commission desiring an increase in the number. But I have discussed the matter with the chairman, and so far as he is concerned, he is agreeable that the number should be increased. And, for the reasons I have given, we are of opinion that the number should be increased.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I am sorry, but I cannot share that opinion. I cannot see any good reason, even after hearing my hon. friend, why the commission should not be composed as it is composed at present. He admits that the commission is one of high standing, and I do not think he can improve the commission in that respect. Of course, we shall have to submit, but I do not think this is an improvement.

Mr. LEMIEUX: There is this also to be said: the personnel of the commission was made by the late Administration irrespective of politics. Sir Byron Walker is a member of the commission, and I understand Colonel Dennison is on it. And is not Colonel Hendry on this commission also?

Mr. WHITE: He is officially by law.

Mr. LEMIEUX: That shows, as I have said, that the personnel was made irrespective of politics. But this Bill shows that politics is gaining ground in that commission. I see by the papers of Quebec constantly that the commissioners are approached in the awarding of contracts and expropriation proceedings. But every one who knows the personnel of the commission knows that in such a body there is no patronage question. Of course, there are people who think that if they were appointed members of the commission, it would mean for them the millenium. It is a great pity indeed that the personnel of the commission has to be changed. There is no necessity for it, and the change is only a mark of want of confidence on the part of the Government in the present incumbents.

Section agreed to on division.

On section 3—purchase of lands:

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: What is the meaning of this?

Mr. WHITE: At present the commission is authorized to purchase land after obtaining the authority of Parliament and after it has funds at its disposal. But it must obtain the consent of the Governor in Council. It has been found in the practical working out of the plans, that there have been delays which have resulted in loss of favourable opportunities to buy. As I have said, the commission is one of high standing in which the Government has full confidence, and we have thought it advisable, at their express request, to change the Act so as to permit them to buy land without obtaining the approval in each particular case of the Governor in Council.

There are two provisos which safeguard the matter: first, they must be authorized by Parliament before purchasing these particular lands, and second, there must have been appropriated and be available for the purpose, the necessary funds. That is to say, Parliament must give authority to purchase the land and Parliament must have provided the money which must stand at the credit of their capital account for that purpose.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I understood my hon. friend to say that the previous consent of the Governor in Council has been the cause of delay, and that the amendment is to allow the commissioners to make purchases without the previous consent of the Governor in Council.

Mr. BORDEN: I think there is some error in this section in its reference to sections 10 and 11. I will read section 10 of the original Act for the information of the right hon. gentleman:

> No land or removable property shall be purchased or acquired by the commission except with previous authority of Parliament, and no expenditure shall be made by the commission until it has been approved by Parliament.

Mr. WHITE: That has, I think, been changed in subsequent legislation.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: The minister says that the law to-day is that no purchase can be made by the commission unless it is authorized by Order in Council. This has caused delay and the delays have caused losses, and, in order to obviate these delays and losses, it is proposed now that the commission shall be authorized to make purchases without the consent of the Governor in Council.

Mr. WHITE: Provided that the lands purchased are lands whose purchase has been authorized by Parliament and provided, consequently, that money has been appropriated by Parliament and is at the disposal of the commission for the purpose.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: At all events, you take away one of the restrictions placed by Parliament upon the commissioners and I do not think that that is an improvement.

Mr. BORDEN: The section as it is at the present has a reference to sections 10 and 11 of the Acts, which are repealed. Section 10 of the Act consists of a section and a subsection. It seems to me that section 10 alone ought to be repealed, because section 11 is repealed by the terms of this section which says that previous to the commission from time to time making expenditures under this Act they must submit detailed estimates to the Finance Minister. I think that the form of this amendment will require to be looked into.

Mr. WHITE: The Bill was drafted by the assistant deputy minister and Mr. Gisborne, the parliamentary counsel, so that every care has been taken. Speaking only from recollection, I think that there is an amending statute to the section that has been read by the right hon. Prime Minister. With regard to this particular section, which gives the commission permission to purchase without the consent of the Governor in Council, I may say that it was introduced upon the express and repeated requests of the commission. However, I am quite content to let the matter stand, because it is important.

Section stands.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Borden, the House adjourned at six o'clock.

Monday, May 18, 1914.

The House met at Eleven o'clock, the Speaker in the Chair.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

On the Orders of the Day being called:

Mr. AIKINS: Mr. Speaker, I desire to direct attention to a remark concerning myself that was made by the hon. member for Thunder Bay and Rainy River (Mr. Carrick), on Friday last, during the discussion of the Canadian Northern resolution. The hon. member said that I, 'after taking a good look at the Government forces, decided that discretion was the better part of valour; whereupon he purchased a ticket to parts unknown, having said:

> He who fights and runs away,
> May live to fight another day.

This statement is absolutely untrue, and equally silly, nevertheless calculated to do mischief, for this House is a deliberative assembly, and every member who speaks on the floor of the House is supposed, and properly supposed, by the people to speak forth the words of truth and soberness. The statement made by the hon. member for Thunder Bay was devoid of both.

THE LABOUR SITUATION.

Mr. OLIVER: I wish to inquire if the Government have received a communication from the civic relief officer at Edmonton, and if any conclusion has been reached upon the matter referred to.

Right Hon. R. L. BORDEN (Prime Minister): The telegram which was received from Edmonton was as follows:

> Edmonton, Alberta, May 14, 1914.
>
> Premier Borden,
> Ottawa, Ont.
>
> The Welfare League consisting of merchants and profession men of Edmonton petitioned the city council as follows: Therefore this association respectfully urges upon the council of the city of Edmonton to take up the matter with the Dominion Government with a view to securing legislation. 1. Providing for the establishment of free employment bureaus throughout the Dominion for the purpose of supplying reliable information regarding the demands for labour in any particular locality and to give every man a free and equal opportunity to secure employment and to safeguard those already employed; and, (2) To restrict immigration by holding back from entrance into the country or by discouraging in the country from which they come all who belong to the unskilled labouring class except bona fide agricultural labourers, and, (3) To provide work for the unemployed by utilizing the surplus labour now in the country for the construction of public works. The City Council of Edmonton therefore urge you to use your influence to have the Government by grants of money or by furnishing work assist the western cities to care for the unemployed.
>
> Thos. R. Turnbull,
> Civic Relief Officer.

The first suggestion in the telegram, that free employment bureaus should be established for the purpose of supplying reliable information regarding demands for labour in any particular locality, would, of course, require more consideration than the Government have been able to give to it in the interim. So far as the question of immigration is concerned, I understand that, not only under this Administration but under the former Administration, the ideal which is set forth in the second clause of the memorial has been followed; there has been no change made in that regard under the present Administration. The third suggestion is that work for the unemployed should be provided, as far as possible, by utilizing surplus labour for the construction of public works. We shall, of course, give that the very best consideration that can be given to it, and such attention as may be possible in the public interest. The reply which I have sent to Mr. Turnbull is as follows:

Ottawa, Ont., May 18, 1914.

Thos. R. Turnbull,
Civic Relief Officer,
Edmonton, Alberta.

Telegram received. Your suggestions will received immediate careful consideration of Government. Meantime representations of City Council as to providing work for unemployed have been placed before such departments of Government as employ labour to considerable extent and have been commended to consideration and attention of the ministers of those departments.

R. L. Borden.

Immediately on receipt of the telegram on Saturday, I addressed letters to the Minister of Public Works, the Minister of Railways and Canals, and two other ministers—I think the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was one—commending to their attention the suggestions contained in Mr. Turnbull's telegram.

Mr. OLIVER: I think it would be well for a special official of the Government to make an investigation into the conditions referred to in the telegram.

Mr. BORDEN: I think a suggestion of that kind also came to us in another telegram on Friday. It was at once transmitted to the Minister of Labour, to whose attention it was commended.

ALLEGED INCOMPLETE RETURN.

On the Orders of the Day being called:

Mr. W. CHISHOLM: I desire to call the attention of the House to a case of contempt of the high court of Parliament by the Minister of Customs. On the 16th of March last, an order was passed:

For a copy of all recommendations, protests, petitions, and representations received by the Government or any department or minister thereof, regarding the appointment of the present collector of customs at Antigonish, and of all the letters, telegrams and correspondence relating thereto.

The return brought down by the Minister of Customs contains only one letter from the Commissioner of Customs, and the minister justifies the non-production of the papers by stating that he regards them as private, and that he is the judge of what is private. The recommendation of the collector of customs cannot be considered a private document, nor can the protest that was made against that appointment; and I submit that it would not detract from the dignity of the position which the hon. minister occupies, and would only be treating the House with proper respect, if he would comply with the order of the House. I think it would also facilitate the business of the House very much. I do not think any minister has the right to say that he is to be the sole judge of documents which have been received in regard to public appointments, protests, etc., and to defy this House by refusing to comply with one of its orders.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member is certainly out of order in discussing this at the present time.

Mr. CHISHOLM: I will bring this matter to the attention of the minister and the House on another occasion, unless the order is complied with in the meantime.

THE NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY.

On the Orders of the Day being called:

Mr. CARVELL: Would the Minister of Railways inform me whether any new arrangement has been made with the Grand Trunk Pacific for taking over the Transcontinental or any portions of the line that have been completed?

Mr. J. D. REID: No.

PRIVATE BILLS.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill No. 195, to incorporate the Canadian General Council of the Boy Scouts Association.—Mr. Currie.

Bill No. 197, for the relief of Robert Markle Richardson.—Mr. Stewart.

Bill No. 198, for the relief of George Andrew Crooks.—Mr. Schaffner.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

SHERBROOKE LEASED PROPERTY.

Mr. McCREA:

1. What arrangements have been made by the Militia Department, who have leased Mrs. Worthington's house as quarters for the accommodation of the officers of the 53rd, with the St. George's Club who were occupying the property?

2. Is the St. George's Club still occupying the building? If so, under what conditions or terms?

Mr. S. HUGHES: The officers of the 55rd Regiment have not yet been provided with quarters in their armoury, and, upon the recommendation of the officer commanding the 4th Division, the house referred to was temporarily rented. The members of the St. George's Club, who had quarters therein, were allowed the use of the building pending the completion of their new club house, now under construction, and for this privilege, the officers of the 53rd were to have, meanwhile, the use of certain rooms in the building absolutely to themselves. also the use of the club furniture, reading room, etc., until the club moves out in the course of some weeks.

DEPOSITORS OF DEFUNCT BANKS.

Mr. LANCTOT:

1. Is it the intention of the Government to refund, in future, all the losses arising out of the failure of all the great commercial corporations in which the public have lost money?

2. What amount of money was lost by the depositors of La Banque de Saint Jean, and what was the number of depositors?

3. What amount was lost by the depositors of La Banque Ville Marie, and what was the number of depositors?

Mr. W. T. WHITE:

1. It is not.

2. The obligation of the Banque de St. Jean at the time of its failure to ordinary depositors was $301,000. The liquidator now reports that between twenty and thirty per cent will be payable to them when the liquidation is completed. The number of depositors, the liquidator states, is approximately three thousand.

3. The Banque Ville Marie had deposits of $1,504,665 at the time of its suspension in 1899. The ordinary depositors were paid 17½ per cent of their claims. On this basis the loss to depositors was $1,241,349. There is no available information as to the number of depositors.

Mr. LANCTOT:

1. Is it the intention of the Government to indemnify the depositors of the Farmers' Bank?

2. Is it the intention of the Government to indemnify the depositors of the Banque de St. Jean and La Banque Ville Marie? If not, why not?

[Mr. Schaffner.]

3. Is the Government aware as to whether or not the directors of the latter two banks for several years submitted false reports to the Minister of Finance as to the financial conditions of these banks?

4. If so, was the failure of said banks caused, in whole or in part, on that account?

5. Is it the intention of the Government to propose an amendment to the banking laws to the end that the Association of Banks and the Government shall be equally and mutually responsible for losses caused in future by similar failures?

Mr. W. T. WHITE:

1. Yes.

2. No. There are no grounds which would justify such action on the part of the Government.

3. No.

4. Answered by answer to No. 3.

5. No.

*Mr. BARRETTE:

Besides La Banque Ville Marie, La Banque du Peuple and La Banque St. Jean, are there any other Canadian banks that have failed without the depositors thereof being refunded their losses? If so, what are the names of those banks?

Mr. W. T. WHITE: Yes. Bank of Acadia, Mechanics' Bank of Montreal, Bank of Liverpool, Bank of Prince Edward Island, Exchange Bank of Canada, Maritime Bank of Dominion of Canada, and Central Bank of Canada.

FENIAN RAID BOUNTY.

Mr. SINCLAIR:

Referring to the statement made by the Minister of Militia and Defence, as found on page 3644 of Hansard, to the effect that approximately 300 claims for the bounty to Fenian Veterans in Nova Scotia have been disallowed, have these applicants whose claims have been disallowed been notified of the fact?

Mr. S. HUGHES: Yes, and in most cases amended applications have been received, which will be considered at a later date.

L'ASSURANCE DE RIMOUSKI.

*Mr. GAUVREAU:

1. When was the first deposit made by the l'Assurance de Rimouski with the Government treasury and what did it consist of?

2. If that deposit was made in currency, is it still in the treasury, or have any other securities been substituted therefor?

3. If so, what was the nature of such securities, what is the value thereof and are they still in the possession of the Government?

4. Has anybody tried to have these securities abandoned? If so, who did, and by whose authority?

5. Is the Government aware that during the year 1913-1914, the La Compagnie l'Assurance de Rimouski has, as alleged, been paid over $300,000 in premiums, and that at the time of the winding up of said company a sum of about $100,000 was due, arising from unsettled losses?

6. When was the last inspection of the books of said company by Government officials made?

7. How long after that inspection did this company continue to issue policies and collect premimums?

8. Is the Government aware that this company is said to be insolvent, and is it the intention of the Government to cancel its license?

9. When and at whose request was the license of said company maintained?

10. Is it the intention of the Government to protect the insured and the shareholders?

Mr. W. T. WHITE:

1. July 19, 1907: $55,000 debentures of the town of St. Germain de Rimouski.

2. Deposit was not made in currency.

3. The $55,000 St. Germain de Rimouski debentures were accepted at $51,680. They are still on deposit with the Receiver General.

4. No.

5. No.

6. February 7, 1914.

7. License was withdrawn March 14, 1914.

8. The Government is aware of the insolvency of the company. License has been cancelled.

9. License was continued until March 14 to give the company an opportunity to be heard in accordance with the provisions of section 41 of the Insurance Act and to permit the company, if possible, either to secure reinsurance or to obtain additional capital, for both of which reasonable hopes were at the time entertained and negotiations in progress.

10. The assets of the company will be distributed by the liquidator by order of the court under the Winding-up Act.

Mr. BELAND: May I ask the hon. Minister of Finance whether the inspection he refers to in February was the regular yearly inspection or a special inspection of the books of the company?

Mr. WHITE: I understand that it was the yearly inspection; but if, upon further inquiry, I find that it was a special inspection, I shall take the opportunity of informing my hon. friend.

UNOPPOSED AND UNDISCUSSED MOTIONS.

Mr. Knowles.—For a copy of all letters, reports, memoranda, recommendations, telegrams, and other papers in connection with the north-east quarter of section 22, township 11, range 5, west 3rd meridian, subsequent to the 9th February, 1914, and exclusive of a copy of the evidence taken at Gravelbourg on the 8th April, 1914.

M. A. K. Maclean.—For a return showing the details of moneys paid to J. F. Farrington, $248.25, B. H. Smith, $469.50, and H. C. Dash, $182.40, as set forth in 'Hansard' of this session, page 3071.

Mr. Sinclair.—For a return showing the names and post office addresses of all Fenian Raid veterans in Nova Scotia whose claims have been presented and disallowed.

Mr. Hugh Clark.—For a return showing all cases in which Charles Seager, of Goderich, acted as Government commissioner in the investigation of officials charged with partisanship, or other offences, from and including the year 1896 to the year 1900; and the names of all officials dismissed by reason of the reports of the said Charles Seager, the positions held by such officials, and when such dismissals took place; with a copy of the evidence taken in all such cases, together with the commissioner's reports thereon, and also showing what fees were paid to the said Charles Seager for conducting such investigations.

Mr. J. J. Hughes.—For a copy of all letters, papers, telegrams and other documents in connection with the dismissal of Alex. McRea, late lighthouse keeper at Point Prim, Prince Edward Island, and the appointment of his successor.

Mr. J. J. Hughes.—For a return showing the names of the men who have been appointed to positions in the Prince Edward Island Railway service from the 1st January, 1912, to the 1st May, 1914; the positions held by such appointees and the salary or wages attached to each position.

Mr. A. K. Maclean.—For a copy of all papers, documents, reports and evidence relative to the dismissal or proposed dismissal of W. A. Case of the Government Quarantine service at Halifax, N.S.

Mr. A. W. Chisholm.—For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, letters, tenders and documents of all kinds in possession of the Post Office Department received since 1913 up to the present date in any way referring to the mail contract from Mabou to Wycocomagh.

Mr. A. W. Chisholm.—For a copy of all correspondence, papers, tenders and other documents in any way referring to the transfer from J. A. Campbell to Alexander Macdonnell of the contract for carrying the mail from Port Hood to Southwest Port Hood.

ADJOURNMENT OVER HOLIDAYS.

Mr. BORDEN moved:

That when this House adjourns on Wednesday next, the 20th instant, it stand adjourned to Friday next, the 22nd instant.

Mr. HENDERSON: May I ask the Prime Minister if it is the intention to adjourn over Monday next, the 25th instant?

Mr. BORDEN: No.

Motion agreed to.

THIRD READINGS OF BILLS.

Bill No. 189, to regulate the manufacture, testing, storage and importation of explosives.—Mr. Coderre.

Bill No. 192, to provide for further advances to the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec.—Mr. Hazen.

RAILWAY LEVEL CROSSINGS.

On motion of Hon. J. D. Reid (Acting Minister of Railways and Canals), the House went into Committee to consider the following proposed resolution, Mr. Blondin in the Chair:

Resolved, That it is expedient to provide that the sum of two hundred thousand dollars per annum be appropriated and paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund for five consecutive years from the first day of April, 1914, to aid actual construction work for the protection, safety and convenience of the public in respect of highway crossings at rail level, in existence on the first day of April, 1909.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Has the minister any programme as to how this money will be expended ?

Mr. REID: The expenditure is under the control of the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I am aware of that, but has any programme been laid down ?

Mr. REID: No.

Mr. MURPHY: When does the original Act authorizing this expenditure expire ?

Mr. REID: On the 4th of April, 1914, and this Bill extends the time for five years.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. REID thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 204, to amend the Railway Act.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

THE CANADIAN NORTHERN RAILWAY AGREEMENT.

Consideration of the proposed motion of Mr. Borden that the House go into Committee to consider certain resolutions respecting the Canadian Northern railway and the amendment of Mr. Macdonald thereto, resumed from Friday, May 15.

Mr. WILLIAM GERMAN (Welland): Mr. Speaker, considerable has already been said on these proposed resolutions, and it probably will be difficult to introduce any new matter. However, as I feel somewhat strongly on the question, I believe that I should say something regarding not only the resolution, but as well the amendment of the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald). Last session, when the promoters of the Canadian Northern came to Parliament for a grant of $15,000,000, they stated that they believed that amount would be sufficient to enable them to complete the line, and the Government so informed the House. I took the liberty at that time of predicting that $15,000,000 would be but as a drop in the bucket to these gentlemen, and that it would be practically worthless to them as a sufficient amount for the completion of the Canadian Northern railway. And, Sir, notwithstanding the statements of the Prime Minister and the gentlemen supporting him, made this session on the introduction of these resolutions, and notwithstanding what has been said by the promoters of this enterprise to the effect that $45,000,000 will be sufficient to enable them to complete the line, I venture to predict, in my humble judgment, that $45,000,000, or the proceeds of the guarantee, will not be more than half sufficient to put this line on the standard of a transcontinental railway, and it will not be more than two years, or three years at the outside, when these gentlemen will be back to Parliament again asking for further aid, and one of the strong arguments they will then make in favour of their request will be that the Government of Canada is a partner with them in this enterprise to the extent of $40,000,000.

I think there should have been a very much more sweeping investigation by the Government than there has been, as to whether or not this $45,000,000 will be sufficient to complete this Canadian Northern Railway system. The Government have really made no investigation into that matter, as they made no investigation during the last year or two into the statement made by these promoters that $15,000,000 would be sufficient. Last year they accepted the statement of the promoters, and this year they have accepted their statement and have come to Parliament saying that $45,000,000 will be sufficient. I have heard gentlemen, who are railway men and who know the condition of the Canadian Northern lines of railway, say that this amount of money will not be more than half, if half, enough to complete these lines to the standard of a transcontinental railway, and I have no doubt that such is the case. This summer there should be a thorough investigation to discover whether or not this is the last call of these promoters. I submit that as one strong reason why the amendment of the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) should prevail in regard to these resolutions.

The hon. member for South Ontario (Mr. Smith), in his speech on Friday afternoon, stated that the amendment moved by the hon. member for Pictou, indicated that there was a difference of opinion on this side of the House. A similar statement has appeared in the Ottawa Citizen. If hon. gentlemen opposite are taking any consolation to themselves from the supposition that there is a difference of opinion on this side of the House with regard to these resolutions, they had better disabuse their minds of that at once, because there is absolutely no difference of opinion on this side of the House with regard to what should be done with these resolutions. My right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition stated that we were in favour of coming to the aid of this great enterprise and that it should not be allowed to fail; the hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. Graham) took practically the same position; but there is no difference of opinion on this side of the House that before any aid is given there should be a thorough investigation into the whole undertaking and positive knowledge on the part of the Government that this aid not only is required but, when granted, will be sufficient to complete the line. I believe that that same opinion prevails throughout the country. So far as I have been able to ascertain, in going about the country, there appears to be very little difference of opinion in regard to the matter. I believe that the people, with great unanimity, are of the opinion that the stand taken by the Opposition in regard to these resolutions is the correct one, and that this money should not be voted without a full and searching investigation, and that, if it is voted, the Government should have a greater security than they are taking by these resolutions.

I feel that the people of Canada are getting tired of this continual bleeding of the finances of Canada for the exploitation of railway charters. Canada has invested enormous sums of money and has given heavy guarantees in aid of railways; and the people, I believe, are of the opinion that no further aid should be given to this undertaking until it is decided by the most thorough investigation that such aid is necessary, and that the moneys heretofore granted by the Parliament of Canada and by the provincial legislatures have all been devoted exclusively to the construction of this road, and that none of them have gone into holes and corners where they should not have gone. I have no quarrel with Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann, nor with the enterprise. They have been energetic Canadians, and they have entered upon the building up of an enormous system of railways. I, for myself, am perfectly willing to aid them in a proper manner, as I have by my vote in this House assisted to aid them in the past. But I do not think that these gentlemen should object if they are seriously and strongly criticised in this House. They have received enormous subventions; they have received great aid from the Parliament of Canada, and that money has been spent by them without any supervision on the part of the Parliament or the Government of Canada. There is a strong feeling throughout the country, true or untrue—for myself, I believe it is very largely true—that these men, notwithstanding the statement of the Prime Minister that they have made no profits out of the construction of these railways, have made enormous sums of money, not perhaps out of the construction of these railways as out of their dealings with them.

I do not know that it is necessary to say anything very harsh about the resolutions, as it is not necessary to say anything harsh about Mackenzie and Mann. The resolutions in themselves are bad enough, even clothed with the bright colours painted by the right hon. the Prime Minister, without our casting any reflections upon them. In my opinion, the conduct of Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann in regard to this undertaking should be fully investigated and thoroughly understood.

One objection raised by the right hon. the leader of the Opposition was that, by reason of the agreement entered into between the British Columbia Government and the Canadian Northern Pacific management, this transcontinental railway would be tied up in such a way as to be detrimental to the people of Canada. The Solicitor General rather impugned that proposition, saying that section 6 of the Railway Act was sufficient in scope to override that agreement and to give the Parliament of Canada exclusive jurisdiction, irrespective of the agreement. Section 6 says:

> Where any railway, the construction or operation of which is authorized by a Special Act passed by the legislature of any province, is declared, by any Act of the Parliament of Canada, to be a work for the general advantage of Canada, this Act shall apply to such railway, and to the company constructing or operating the same, to the exclusion of such of the provisions of the said Special Act as are inconsistent with this Act, and in lieu of any general railway Act of the province.

That is, the Special Act of Incorporation. Section 6 does not say: to the exclusion of any special agreement that may have been entered into between the British Columbia Government and the particular railway. Therefore, as a matter of law, this Parliament has no jurisdiction to deprive the people of the province of British Columbia of any rights which they have under the agreement entered into between them and the Canadian Northern Pacific railway. It would be absolutely ultra vires of this Parliament to pass legislation which they might consider might affect that agreement. It is absolutely impossible for legislation to be passed in this Parliament which will prevent the operation of that agreement, whatever its operation may be.

The agreement is there, made between a railway incorporated by the province of British Columbia and the British Columbia Government and ratified by the legislature of that province, and under these resolutions nothing can deprive the British Columbia Government of the advantages which they have under that agreement, whatever those advantages may be. I submit that before the Bill to be based upon these resolutions becomes law, the province of British Columbia should consent to the withdrawal of their agreement with the Canadian Northern Pacific railway or that some means should be taken, either by testing the matter in court or otherwise, to ascertain definitely what are the rights of this Parliament in regard to the matter. Surely the Government of Canada should not become a partner in a railway concern a portion of which railway is under the control or supervision of one of the provinces of Canada. If we are to have a transcontinental railway in which the Government is to be a shareholder, that transcontinental railway should be exclusively and in every particular under the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada and under that jurisdiction only; no part of it should be in any particular under the jurisdiction of a provincial government or a provincial legislature. For that reason I say that further consideration of these resolutions should be postponed until the matter is fully and finally settled.

There is no doubt that the chief considerations in this matter are financial considerations. The Government states, and the right hon. Prime Minister stated, as well as his Solicitor General, that this enterprise is bankrupt. At page 3799 of 'Hansard,' May 13, the Prime Minister says:

It became apparent some months ago that the enterprise could not be carried to successful conclusion without further assistance.

And then he states the various reasons why that assistance is necessary. The Solicitor General, as reported on page 3823 of 'Hansard,' says:

But the fact remains that the system at present stands in a position where it cannot, in the nature of things, be made a paying investment, be made a turn on the way to success and away from the road to failure, unless funds are provided to take care of the completion of that road.

The Government is proposing to go into partnership with a bankrupt concern, as hon. gentlemen opposite themselves say, in order to relieve that concern from insolvency by the use of the money of the people of Canada. If this concern, as the Prime Minister and the Solicitor General have said, is insolvent, I cannot for myself understand where they can get security for the moneys which they propose to advance. The Solicitor General says they are taking ample security, yet in the next breath he says that the concern is insolvent and cannot be made to turn to success and away from the way to failure unless funds are provided to take care of the completion of the road. It seems to me that the Government are taking a peculiar position. They say in one breath that the enterprise is a failure and in the next breath they say: have no fear; the assets on which we are taking a mortgage will amply protect the people of Canada for the investment of this money. If hon. gentlemen opposite can work that out consistently, they can do something more than I can. Why should this concern be bankrupt? Bonds representing millions of money have been guaranteed by the federal Government and by provincial governments; why should this enterprise be bankrupt? Has the Government made any investigation as to why it is bankrupt? I venture to think that they have not. The Government to-day are as ignorant as I am of the reasons why this enterprise is, as they say, in a bankrupt condition, and perhaps more so, because they are not, perhaps, as suspicious as I am of the reasons for its being bankrupt. I have my own opinion as to why the promoters of this railroad enterprise are coming to Parliament now for money. I submit that they have received sufficient aid up to the present time to have enabled them to complete the road. I do say—and I hope that the promoters will not take umbrage, because their conduct is entitled to criticism, considering the amount of money which they have received—that this enterprise has been milked to too great an extent by its promoters to permit of the completion of the road with the money which has been put into it. The prevailing impression throughout the country is that Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann are multi-millionaires, and I am of the opinion that they are. They started this enterprise, I believe, in 1896, by taking over a small line of railway in the province of Manitoba. At that time these gentlemen were far from being wealthy, and when men in this country suddenly spring from a position of small financial standing to a position of enormous wealth, the general public usually arrive at a fairly correct idea as to where the money came from. It cannot be controverted that these men, as I have said, when they first started this enterprise and took over the railroad in Manitoba in 1896, were far from being wealthy, and that they are exceedingly wealthy to-day. They have devoted their time, as stated by the Prime Minister, and as the fact is, from then until now in railroad construction. In what way would these men acquire this enormous wealth except in the construction of these railways and in the manipulation and investment of the moneys which they have received from the Parliament of Canada and from the provincial legislatures throughout the length and breadth of this country? My right hon. friend said that Mackenzie and Mann have made no profits out of the construction of this railroad. If they made no profits out of the construction of the railroad, I fail to see how they have acquired the wealth which they are credited with having at the present time. My right hon. friend read an affidavit of a clerk in the office of the promoters, a Mr. Mitchell, I believe, which is set out on page 3803 of 'Hansard.' Mr. Mitchell swears that, to the best of his knowledge and belief, these gentlemen have made no profits out of the construction of this railway, and have taken no profits. It struck me as being a most peculiar thing that if this was the case Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann did not make the affidavits themselves. If these gentlemen had made no profits it would have done them no harm to make an affidavit to that effect. Sir William Mackenzie did publish a statement in the Ottawa Citizen some time ago refuting a charge which he said had been made that moneys which had been raised for the purpose of the construction of these lines had been devoted to other purposes. I do not know that I ever heard that the moneys had been devoted to other purposes, but he says nothing in that connection of profits made by himself and Sir Donald Mann; and they take very good care not to make any affidavits, just to put up a clerk in their office to make an affidavit that, according to the best of his knowledge and belief, they took no profits out of the construction of this work. I submit that if there is one thing more than another which should cause this Parliament to approve of the amendment of the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) that this matter be postponed for six months, it is the very fact that these gentlemen have not seen fit to repudiate that statement. There should be a full, frank and complete investigation of these whole proceedings, and if these men have had profits unduly, and if the moneys have been devoted to purposes for which they should not have been used, this Parliament should be fully seized of all those facts. The Prime Minister further stated that these gentlemen had the right to take certain public lands in Manitoba. The right hon. member said:

12 noon.

> It is, however, proper to say that it has been represented to us that Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann have put into this enterprise very large assets which they might, under the law of the land, have retained for their own benefit in the early stages of the development of this system.
>
> I think it ought to be said in justice to these men that all those lands, which under the law of the land they might have retained if they had desired to do so as their own property absolutely, were not retained by them, with the exception, I believe, of one hundred thousand acres.

I wish to join issue with the Prime Minister on that subject. Those lands were appropriated by the provincial legislatures for what? To belong to Mackenzie and Mann? Not at all; to be used for the construction of these roads, and it was the duty of these men not to own these lands themselves unless they put up their own money to build the railroad. Will any one say they did that, that they have put up and have been putting up from the beginning of this enterprise one dollar of their own money, either in construction or otherwise? They used these lands, or should have used them, and I suppose did use them, with the exception of one hundred thousand acres, which they apparently have kept to themselves, and which they had absolutely no right to keep unless they earned them under the provisions of the Act by which they were appropriated, for the construction of these lines. To say that these gentlemen are so particularly philanthropic that they, in their great liberality, gave back to the country or for the purposes of the country, four million acres of land which they could have kept themselves and out of which they could have made great fortunes, I say is insulting the intelligence of this Parliament and the intelligence of the people of Canada; because they had no right from the beginning to take those lands for their own purposes. They were to be used for the construction of their railroads and, with the exception of one hundred thousand acres which they kept, they have been used, I presume, for that purpose. I understand that from a part of these lands they have already realized $17,000,000, and that there is enough left to realize some $12,000,000 more to be used in the enterprise of the construction of these lines. What further ? It is contended, and I contend, and it is generally believed that Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann have made very large fortunes out of their manipulation of these railways and that they have got the money either in cash or in enterprises outside altogether of the Canadian Northern Railway system. But what more have they got ? There is issued of capital stock of this whole enterprise, $158,611,000. The Solicitor General contends that that stock is a valuable asset. He has taken credit to himself for securing a mortgage on that stock in connection with these resolutions. Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann own, I say, practically every dollar of that stock. It is turned over under these resolutions to the Canadian Northern railway, and Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann own the Canadian Northern railway. Out of $77,000,000 of capital stock issued by the Canadian Northern Railway Company, Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann own $70,000,000, and last year, as one hon. member said, they started the printing press and turned out a certificate of $7,000,000 stock for the Government of Canada; so that they practically own, outside of any wealth which they may have acquired in the construction and manipulation of these railroads, $158,611,000 capital stock of these companies, subsidiary and otherwise. Why should not these gentlemen go on and build this railroad ? The Solicitor General says, in speaking of these securities and stocks:

> Consequently the Canadian Northern own all these companies, both the bonded indebtedness and the stock issues, subject only to the charge created by that trust deed or mortgage of 1903.

Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann, it is conceded, own the Canadian Northern railway. Consequently, Mackenzie and Mann own the whole enterprise here, from one end to the other, and why should they not use some of this wealth, acquired in the construction and manipulation of these railways, to complete the railways? They have not paid one dollar of their own money for any of this stock, which they have acquired through their manipulation of railroad charters; and I venture to say that if Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann were placed on the stand, under oath, neither of them would swear that they had paid one dollar of their own money for any of this stock. Then why should they keep it and ask the Government for $45,000,000 more to increase the value of the interest they obtained for nothing. To me, it is inconceivable. Why should not the stock be used for the purpose of constructing the railway? Why is the issue of stock authorized by this Parliament or the provinicial legislatures? A company is incorporated by Parliament with capital stock of a certain amount, and with power to issue stock certificates to a certain amount, in order to allow the promoters to raise the money necessary to complete their enterprise—not to allow the promoters to put the certificates in their own pockets, as has been done in this particular case. This stock should be used for the purposes for which it was intended, and used to the fullest extent to which it can be made available. I have been told on good authority—I believe on just as good authority as the Government have on this matter—the authority of Mackenzie and Mann themselves—that these two gentlemen two years ago could have secured on the London market all the money that was necessary to complete this line if they had been willing to give up the controlling interest in the stock, but they insisted on controlling the enterprise themselves. I am strongly of the belief that to-day, on those terms, they could get all the money necessary to complete the line. In regard to this phase of the situation the Premier spoke frankly. He said:

> I am free to confess that I think it would have been better, when the idea of that enterprise became fixed in the minds of Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann, if they, by means of their large holdings of common stock and by their almost sole proprietorship of the enterprise, had seen fit in years gone by to associate themselves with large financial interests which, I think, could have been brought in to the enterprise, so that the condition which confronts the country at this time might not have been before us to-day.

I give the Prime Minister credit for that very frank statement, and that is exactly the position which the people of this country have had in their minds continually: that Mackenzie and Mann could have associated financial interests with them in this undertaking sufficient to complete the line—and perhaps it could have been completed by now—but for their inordinate greed—their pride, perhaps—to hold the majority of the stock themselves. The stock has not been used for the purpose for which it was intended, that of raising money to complete the line. I believe they could have got the money to do that—but no, they keep the stock themselves. They wish to own the road themselves, and they are endeavouring by their manipulations through these resolutions to own the Government as well; and that they will pretty nearly do if they get the Government tied up in this enterprise as a minor shareholder, with $45,000,000 or more invested, the controlling interest of which is in the hands of Mackenzie, Mann and Company.

Assuming that the Government must come to the rescue, what should be done? The Solicitor General states that they have done everything that could be done. In criticising the statement of the right hon. leader of the Opposition that the security which had been taken was illusory, the Solicitor General said: 'Can the right hon. gentleman name anything possessed by the Canadian Northern or by the other companies that we do not take security on?' I am free to say that, so far as these companies themselves are concerned, the Government has taken security on everything they have in the way of corporate property, but, notwithstanding that, I claim that the statement of the right hon. leader of the Opposition that these securities are illusory is well founded. On page 9 of the blue book is given the total mileage in operation of the whole system, amounting to 7,236.51 miles. One of those railways I know something about, and if this blue book is no more accurate in regard to the other lines than it is in regard to the Niagara, St. Catharines and Toronto railway, it is rather unreliable. The mileage in operation of the Niagara, St. Catharines and Toronto railway is given in the blue book as 75 miles. This road runs through a portion of the county of Welland. It runs from Port Dalhousie on lake Ontario to Port Colborne on lake Erie, a distance not exceeding 24 miles. It runs from the town of Thorold in Welland county to Niagara Falls, a distance of about 10 miles. There is also a line, recently completed—whether in operation, I do not know—between the city of St. Catharines and the old town of Niagara at the mouth of the Niagara river, a distance of about 12 miles. That totals up to 46 miles. The same company owns street railway lines: one between Thorold and St. Catharines, and one operating in Niagara Falls, which, I presume, are included in this 75 miles. These car lines are from four to five miles in length. The mileage probably also includes certain sidings in St. Catharines of a very minor and inexpensive character. Including all these, the total mileage of the Niagara, St. Catharines and Toronto railway will probably not exceed 50 miles. I venture this statement against anybody, that 55 miles will cover the entire mileage in operation of the Niagara, St. Catharines and Toronto railway, including terminals, sidings and street railways. They are out twenty miles in their length there. If the same proportion of error, or misstatement, is applied to the entire length of the line in operation throughout the whole country they are only out about 3,000 miles, I presume, because, if in fifty-five miles they are out twenty miles, what would they be out in 7,236 miles? It would be something over 3,000 miles. But taking their statement as being correct, what do we find? On page 30-32 we find a statement that the securities against these lines amount to $312,818,910 and the fixed charges against this mileage. The securities issued amount to $312,818,910 and the fixed charges are $12,927,983, or a total of securities and fixed charges of $325,746,893. This total is somewhat higher than the figures given by the Prime Minister but these are the figures contained in the blue book. On the 7,236 miles in operation we find that there are securities issued and fixed charges outstanding of $325,746,893 which would represent over $46,000 a mile against the various parts of the line which are in operation. Then, in this statement, certain lines have been eliminated; for instance, the Niagara and St. Catharines railway is not included and there must be fixed charges in connection with that line. Whether there are bonds or securities issued against that line

I do not know. The Canadian Northern Saskatchewan is not included in this statement with reference to fixed charges and securities. Why these lines are not included it is impossible for me to tell.

What security is there in the mortgage? You have $46,000 a mile or more of securities and fixed charges against the railway and I venture to say that these cannot be considered to be any very great security for this mortgage. You also have a first mortgage on the stock as set out in sub-clause (a) of section 2 of the resolution:

> Grant a first, fixed, and specific mortgage or charge upon the shares mentioned in the first part of the second schedule hereto.

The total amount of shares mentioned in that schedule is $62,487,500. I would like to ask the Solicitor General if he will be kind enough to tell me what value he places on these shares or if he places any value at all? There are certain companies which apparently have not yet issued any stock; for instance, the stock of the Canadian Northern Manitoba railway and the Mount Royal Tunnel and Terminal Company is to be handed over when issued.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No separate valuation has been made of them.

Mr. GERMAN: Does the Solicitor General put no value upon them?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Undoubtedly; the value is a value depending on the success of the system and any valuation you might fix upon them now would be of very little assistance.

Mr. GERMAN: So that the Government is lending $45,000,000 on the security of something that is to be made valuable by the money which the Government advances?

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is partly true.

Mr. GERMAN: If the $45,000,000 does not make this security valuable they will come back and say that the $45,000,000 is not sufficient and next year the Government will have to go down into the treasury and dig up another $45,000,000 to further make these securities valuable.

The balance of the property, excepting as stated by my hon. friend from South Renfrew (Mr. Graham), is at this minute mortgaged for all it is worth. I will venture to say that there is no man who knows anything about the situation who will not say so, or will not also say that the security is illusory. I am inclined to think that it is too illusory to form a shadow. Let us take the mortgage already existing against the property. There are securities outstanding at the present time to the extent of over $47,000 a mile, and then you are taking a first mortgage on $60,000,000 of stock which did not cost Mackenzie and Mann one penny, at least of their own money, and which the Solicitor General at the present moment cannot give a value to. Then, you have a second or third mortgage on other securities, which are at this moment under the trust deed of 1903, and which are mortgaged for every dollar they are worth. That is the position and that is the security which the Government have taken for their grant of $45,000,000. The Solicitor General makes a further statement at page 3825 of 'Hansard,' and it is this:

> In that way we take everything these companies have and we place it under our mortgage as our security against our guarantee. Who is there who can suggest anything more that we can do?

Mr. Speaker, I think I can suggest something more that they can do and do to advantage. I would like to know from the Prime Minister or the Solicitor General why, if they thought the shares in any of these companies were of value or were likely to be of value, they did not include in the mortgage the $60,000,000 of stock that Mackenzie and Mann hold in the Canadian Northern Railway Company. They take a mortgage on companies that are not in operation, on the stock of companies which are not worth one dollar, as to which the Solicitor General cannot say there is a dollar of value, and they leave out of the securities only such stock as might become valuable and that is the $60,000,000 which Mackenzie and Mann will hold in the Canadian Northern proper if this scheme goes through. I would like to know from the Prime Minister and the Solicitor General why they did not include that $60,000,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Because, in effect, we have it anyway. If it has any value we have security now on all that represents value, and on foreclosure we have in fact everything the Canadian Northern railway has. What advantage would there be in doing it the way the hon. gentleman suggests?

Mr. GERMAN: What was the advantage of taking a mortgage on the $62,000,000 of other stock which is just exactly in the same position? It is handed over to the Canadian Northern.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No.

Mr. GERMAN: My hon. friend says no, but he has it in the same way because that stock is all handed over to the Canadian Northern and covers every asset the Canadian Northern has, which would include that stock, and the $60,000,000 belongs to Mackenzie and Mann and not to the Canadian Northern railway. The Government does not cover it with their mortgage, and Mackenzie and Mann can do with it what they like. If the interest is paid, Mackenzie and Mann hold the $60,000,000 and they can control not only the company but they can control the Government as well.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Perhaps I can say something that will make it clear to the hon. gentleman. It is quite true that by taking a mortgage against the Canadian Northern, that mortgage would ordinarily cover everything the Canadian Northern own including the $62,000,000; but there is this difference: by taking it the way we do and impressing it with our mortgage we have the first charge on these stocks. By doing it in the way the hon. gentleman suggests, the stocks would first become subject to the $312,000,000, and we would come next. There is that difference. By this method we get a fixed mortgage on the equities of these companies, represented by their stocks, and if we did not do that we would only get physical mortgages on the individual companies to the extent to which they get the money.

Mr. GERMAN: With all due deference to the Solicitor General, I feel that his explanation is as illusory as the security he is taking, because Mackenzie and Mann own this $60,000,000 stock and they can mortgage that stock to this Government and clear from any prior charge of any kind. If the Government said: We want that stock included in this mortgage, it could have been included as a prior incumbrance against any thing and any body.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No.

Mr. GERMAN: There is where the Solicitor General and I differ, and how he can put forth that proposition I cannot understand. Mackenzie and Mann own the stock. There is nothing against that stock. This $60,000,000 is the most valuable stock in the whole concern, because that stock, issued by the Canadian Northern, the parent company, is the stock of a company which the Solicitor General and the Prime Minister have both said is the stock in that part of the line which runs right through the heart of Canada and is indeed the only paying portion of the whole outfit, namely, that part of the system from Port Arthur to Edmonton. Mackenzie and Mann own $60,000,000 of the stock of that company, and they own the subsidiary companies, and still the Solicitor General says that the Government, at the instance of Mr. Z. A. Lash, consented to leave that $60,000,000 stock belonging to Mackenzie and Mann out of these securities. If the hon. gentleman wants a suggestion as to what more he can do, I advise him to include that $60,000,000 in the mortgage, the same as all other stock. There is another thing that can be done, as was suggested by the hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. Graham) and that is to tell Mackenzie and Mann to put some of their own money into this enterprise. I make the statement without fear of contradiction: That not only have Mackenzie and Mann made enormous profits out of this railroad manipulation, but they have never from the beginning to this present hour put one dollar of their own money into the enterprise, and notwithstanding that they control it from one end to the other. They control the subsidiary companies and the parent company, and now they are seeking in this way to get from the Government $45,000,000 and to hand over $40,000,000 stock, and thereby to a large extent control this Government at least, if they do not control subsequent Governments. They should be compelled to put some of their own money into this enterprise. My hon. friend, the Solicitor General, appears to make light of, or to show indifference as to the question of control. As a matter of fact, the stock of all these subsidiary and constituent companies is being handed over to the Canadian Northern Railway Company, and the stock of the Canadian Northern Railway Company is increased from $92,000,000 to $100,000,000. The Government is to have $40,000,000 of that stock, and Mackenzie and Mann are to have $60,000,000. The hon. gentleman has probably occupied the position of a minority shareholder in some company, and he knows as well as any one else that the majority shareholders control the situation. Assuming that there is no default, and that the interest on these guaranteed securities is paid up, what is the position? Mackenzie and Mann control not only the parent company but the Canadian Northern and all subsidiary companies, and the Government has one director on the Canadian Northern and no director on any of the subsidiary or constituent companies.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, we have.

Mr. GERMAN: You have one director on each of these companies?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes.

Mr. GERMAN: You can have two directors in each company if you want to, but that would be of absolutely no use to the Government, because there would be a voting power against them. Mackenzie and Mann control the whole situation, and you see how easy it is for them to simply divert as have been diverted and very likely will be diverted, all the profits of these concerns to purposes, not illegitimate or illegal purposes, but to such purposes as would prevent these companies from ever paying a dividend on that $40,000,000. If it were all in one concern there might be a different consideration, but you have here twenty-nine different, separate entities, including the Canadian Northern, and there are separate boards of directors and separate managements, and separate supervision, and the dividends earned, if any, by each of these companies, will be devoted to such purposes as the majority directors of these separate entities choose to devote them. Wherein can the Government ever secure any compensation for their investment in an enterprise such as that?

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the control of these enterprises means everything, and that the Government should take control. I have made the statement and I reiterate it, that Mackenzie and Mann could have borrowed the money in the open market from capitalists in London, to have completed this line of railway. had they seen fit to give up control. But they feel so strongly the benefit of having control that they are ready to risk entire failure rather than give up that control. They calculated, I suppose, that they could come to the Government, and having full confidence in their influence over the Government, get the Government to give them this money and still retain control of these enterprises. I submit that it is of the greatest importance that the Government should have control before they go further with these resolutions. I say that the consideration of these resolutions should be postponed, first, because there is great doubt in regard to the agreement and the effect of the agreement between the province of British Columbia and the Canadian Northern railway, and that should be settled clearly and definitely before the Government goes into partnership with these concerns. I say further, that the consideration of the resolutions should be postponed until there is a thorough and complete investigation of the dealings of Mackenzie and Mann with these enterprises from the beginning, and as to whether or not there has been any misappropriation of funds as is alleged very openly throughout the country. I say that the consideration of these resolutions should be postponed until the value of these securities is more definitely and fully ascertained, and then when that is found, it should be ascertained whether the amount of money now proposed is sufficient to complete the line. As I have said, I have been told on good authority that this sum is not half enough to complete the line up to the standard of a really good transcontinental railway. If it is not sufficient, the Parliament of Canada should know that before we invest in this enterprise by giving this company a guarantee of $45,000,000. If it is found, after a thorough investigation, that it is necessary or expedient to guarantee the bonds for Mackenzie and Mann to enable them to complete this line, the Government should take a controlling interest, if not $60,000,000, at least 51 per cent of the stock of the company, so that the Government will have it in their own hands, through their own directors, to see that the earnings of this company hereafter go to pay dividends on this enterprise and not into the hands of speculators who will divert them for their own purposes.

For these reason, imperfectly stated as they have been, I believe that this Parliament should support the amendment of the hon. member for Pictou, and postpone the further consideration of these resolutions until this investigation has been held and until Parliament meets again six months hence.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the privilege of supporting the resolution now before the House. I am sure that the people of Canada appreciate the fact that the most thorough investigation has been held in regard to this enterprise, and that the Government have done everything possible to present to Parliament all the facts in regard to it. My hon. friend (Mr. German) states that a further investigation is necessary, but he suggests that we should investigate the private affairs of Mackenzie and Mann to a very large extent. We cannot hold an investigation into the private affairs of Mackenzie and Mann. The Canadian Northern Railway Company is a public corporation, and we have made the most thorough investigation in regard to the proposition now before Parliament. The comptroller of the Department of Railways, the comptroller of the Intercolonial railway, the comptroller of the Department of Finance, and all the best financial men in the Government service were placed at the disposal of the gentlemen who had the preparing of these resolutions. They have made a thorough investigation into the whole proposition, and it ill becomes any hon. member to state that the Government have not investigated the matter thoroughly.

Canada, my hon. friend says, has invested heavily in railway enterprises. That is very true. Since 1825, when the first boat passed through the Lachine canal; since 1848, when the first boat passed through the St. Lawrence canal; since 1853, when the first railway was opened up in Ontario, up to the present day, the people of Canada have been deeply interested in the transportation facilities of our country, both on water and on land, until to-day they have invested in railway facilities $774,000,000, the total capital invested in railways being double that amount, namely $1,548,000,000. In our canal system we have invested over $135,000,000, and by 1920 we shall have $200,000,000 at least invested in them. It is very true, as my hon. friend has said, that the people take a very great interest in the development of the resources of the country, especially as regards transportation.

every hon. member on the other side of the to aid Mackenzie and Mann, and practically

My hon. friend has said that he is willing House, who has spoken on this subject, has made that statement. They have recognized the fact that Mackenzie and Mann are sterling Canadians, who have had the backbone and integrity and the stick-to-itiveness to carry out these great projects and to develop this great Canada of ours as it would not have been developed had they not taken a hand in the work. The right hon. the leader of the Opposition has already made the statement that the charters that Mackenzie and Mann took up in the first instance in Manitoba went begging through the streets of the capital of that great province. He recognized the fact that, had these men not taken up these charters and had they not secured from practically every province in the Dominion guarantees for their bonds in order that they might sell the securities in the markets of the world, we would not have had today this great undertaking with its 10,000 miles of railway spread throughout our fair land, covering the best possible territory. If you go through the Northwest territories, you will find that this railway runs through the very best agricultural sections of those western plains. The railway from Edmonton to Vancouver is built by the very best possible route; it is 200 miles shorter than the Grand Trunk Pacific railway, and its grades are better than the grades of any other road on this continent from the prairie to the Pacific ocean. Therefore, we may feel proud and glad to know that we have such men as have undertaken such an enterprise as the Canadian Northern Railway system.

My hon. friend has apparently no fault to find with the manner in which the resolutions have been framed, and he admits that the assistance is necessary. He asks, however, whether this amount will complete the road or not. The hon. gentleman knows full well, if he will read the resolutions, that it is represented to the Government that this amount will be sufficient to complete the road. In addition to that, the resolutions show clearly that the money which is going to be paid for the completion of the road will be paid out on the advice of the Minister of Finance, and that not a dollar of it will be paid out until his agents have satisfied him that, as far as that money is concerned, it has been earned by this corporation.

The provinces have helped this great enterprise, and I want to emphasize this point especially by placing upon 'Hansard' the correct statement as to what the financial interests of the provinces are in this great undertaking. As regards the cash subsidies, I have had prepared a memorandum that has not been previously placed upon 'Hansard.' The provinces are deeply interested in this great enterprise, and we should have the fullest possible information in regard to the assistance they have given. The table I have prepared is as follows:

Canadian Northern Railway System.
Cash Subsidies, 31st December, 1913.

Dominion of Canada—	Granted.	Paid.
Canadian Northern Pacific Railway.	$ 6,300,000	$ 4,349,930
Canadian Northern Alberta Railway.	3,120,000	2,832,024
Canadian Northern Railway..	2,000,332	2,000,332
Canadian Northern Ontario Railway.	14,762,832	10,122,470
Canadian Northern Quebec Railway.	707,568	707,566

Halifax and South Western Railway..	1,364,210	1,364,210
Total..	$28,254,942	$21,376,529
Province of Ontario—
Canadian Northern Ontario Railway.	1,072,800	1,072,800
Province of Nova Scotia—
Halifax and South Western Railway..	2,804,450	2,804,450
Municipalities—
Canadian Northern Railway..	50,000	50,000
Canadian Northern Ontario Railway.	20,000	20,000
Total..	$32,202,192	$25,323,779

Although hon. gentlemen opposite take objection to the attitude of the present Government in this matter, this statement goes to show that the Dominion of Canada is vitally interested in this road and it is our duty to uphold it under the present circumstances.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

The House resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (resuming): At one o'clock I was calling attention to the development of transportation facilities and to the responsibilities of the Dominion towards these transportation facilities. I was able to show that the Dominion had already invested in this road over $25,000,000 and that in addition to that the provinces had a very great responsibility. Should this road be forced into the hands of a receiver, as hon. gentlemen opposite are desirous it should be forced, there is no question or doubt about the responsibility of the provinces; they will be compelled to pay the interest on the guaranteed bonds, and I shall be able to show that that will amount to a very large sum. The responsibilities of the provinces in connection with this road can be seen from the following table:

Canadian Northern Railway System.
Guaranteed Securities —31st December, 1913.

Guaranteed By.	Total Guaranteed.	Bonds Sold or Pledged.	Proceeds Earned and Paid.	Cash Paid.
British Columbia	$ 42,865,000	$ 29,273,330	$ 21,235,342
Alberta..	29,475,000	18,407,083	12,837,634
Saskatchewan..	21,150,000	10,463,333	8,695,043
Manitoba	30,141,950	25,338,102	23,824,485
Ontario..	7,860,000	7,860,000	6,556,977	$ 1,072,800
	$131,491,950	$ 91,341,848	$ 73,149,481
Dominion of Canada..	59,746,582	59,473,252	39,937,822	21,376,529
Totals..	$191,238,532	$150,815,100	$113,087,303
			Nova Scotia cash subsidy paid..	2,804,450
			Municipalities cash subsidy paid..	70,000
			Cash subsidies total..	$25,323,779

It will be observed that the province of British Columbia has a great responsibility and the members from that province cannot but appreciate that the Dominion, in guaranteeing these bonds, is assisting the provinces throughout the Dominion to bring about a successful conclusion of this enterprise. I am not one of those who criticise the provincial Governments for guaranteeing these bonds, because I readily understand that we could not have expected the development of transportation, especially railway transportation, that has occurred in the provinces of the West had the provincial Governments not guaranteed the bonds in the manner in which they have. The members representing these provinces should be careful and guarded as to the legislation which they oppose. I would be surprised if the members from the West supported the proposition laid before the House by the hon. member for Pictou. I cannot believe that these men by voting for that proposition would willingly be the means of driving these roads into the hands of a receiver. There is no question or doubt in my mind that if the motion of the hon. member for Pictou is carried this road will be forced into the hands of a receiver. It has already been stated and truly stated that Mackenzie and Mann or the Canadian Northern railway owe the contractors and people throughout Canada over $21,000,000. They have reached the extent of their credit, there is no question about that; and the Government have been compelled to take this matter up and have placed before us a resolution which is, to say the least, reasonable and fair. If the members from the West are anxious to have saddled on them the responsibility which I have indicated they will support the motion brought forward by the hon. member for Pictou. The members from Saskatchewan and Alberta are just as anxious to have branch lines developed along the route of this railway as any person can be. The Premiers of these provinces have emphatically and anxiously urged upon the Prime Minister of this country the need of granting aid to this corporation at the present time. There is no doubt in the minds of the members from the West that branch lines are needed far in advance of those that are already under contemplation. Nor is there any doubt in my mind that the men from the West realize that had it not been for the stick-to-itiveness and backbone of Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann in forcing this Canadian Northern into that western country and developing the branch lines in the West, there would not have been anything like the population on the western lands that there is to-day, nor would there have been the prosperity that we have witnessed. Over one hundred and forty thousand homesteads have already been taken up on this great railway and its branch lines, covering 24,000,000 acres of land, and from that you can see that this road has been of material benefit to the West. It will be of the same benefit to the eastern provinces, because in the eastern provinces the Canadian Northern Railway has not only developed branch lines, many of which it is bringing in and making part of its main line, but it has taken up the development of electrical railways in Ontario. The Government of Ontario are practically committed to the development and building of electric railways in that province to a very great extent. They will be most anxious to connect up with a trunk line whereby the the products of the farms and factories of Ontario can be taken to the markets of the world in the very cheapest way. Thus by connecting up these lines, with the Canadian Northern railway and the Intercolonial, and if you like with the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Hudson Bay railways, you will have transcontinental connections for all the provinces in the Dominion and a great railway system for the general building up and welfare of our country.

There is another matter that is worthy of the consideration of this House, and that is in connection with the land grants. The hon. member for Welland (Mr. German) called attention to the fact that Mackenzie and Mann could not possibly have taken for themselves that 4,000,000 acres of land in the province of Manitoba, and that they were compelled to turn that land over to the railway. It is true that they have done so, and that $17,000,000, the proceeds of the 4,000,000 acres, has been put into the road for its general development and successful completion. It is estimated that the amount of land yet to be earned in that province is worth $12,000,000. I have here a statement of the land grants to this company by the Dominion and the different provinces, which I shall place on 'Hansard':

Canadian Northern Railway System.

Land Grants—31st December, 1913.

Granted By:	Lands Granted.	Lands Taken Up.	Lands Earned.
	Acres.	Acres.	Acres.
Dominion of Canada	4,002,848	4,002,848	4,002,848
Lake Manitoba Railway and Canal Co. Winnipeg and Hudson Bay Co. Manitoba and South Eastern Ry. Co.
Province of Ontario	2,000,000	None.	1,700,000
Canadian Northern Ontario Ry.
Province of Quebec	505,650	None	265,650
Canadian Northern Quebec Ry.
Province of Nova Scotia	150,000	150,000	150,000
Halifax and South Western Ry.
	6,658,498	4,152,848	6,118,498

This goes to show that the various provinces have a very great responsibility in connection with this matter. The prosperity of the settlers along the right of way has been greatly brought about by the extension of the Canadian Northern Railway system in the various provinces. The hon. member for Welland said this morning that the Canadian Northern had now sufficient money to complete the road, and that there was no reason why further aid should be granted. The hon. gentleman is well aware though that with the aid granted by this resolution the total cost of the road will not exceed $40,000 a mile. The express, telegraph and telephone companies, the and and terminal companies are in excess. If the Canadian Northern had been built through country such as the Grand Trunk Pacific runs the cost would have been much less. The cost of a large portion of the Grand Trunk Pacific is $102,000 a mile, and yet the hon. member for Welland would have it that these men should complete the road for $40,000 a mile.

Mr. GRAHAM: Is my hon. friend sure about the $102,000 a mile? Those are the biggest figures I have heard yet.

Mr. ARMSTRONG: Without a doubt. The statement has been made time and again, and never refuted. The road from Winnipeg to Moncton cost $102,000 a mile.

Mr. GRAHAM: This is the first time I ever heard that figure.

Mr. ARMSTRONG: I am satisfied that the ex-Minister of Railways recognizes the fact. The hon. member for Welland stated this morning that the Minister of Finance was buncoed in regard to the Canadian Northern last year, and that they ground out $7,000,000 stock by the printing press. The Minister of Finance is quite able to take care of himself, but I might say—I know the Minister of Finance will back me up in this when he has an opportunity to speak—that he could not have taken a different position from what he did on that occasion. If gentlemen opposite will turn up the statutes they will find that the Minister of Finance merely complied with the regulations in regard to that matter. Mackenzie and Mann did not take any advantage whatever of the Minister of Finance or the Government in this regard. The hon. member for Welland also said that all the stock should be taken up by the Government. When this resolution passes, the Government will be in this position: the $60,000,000 being part of the $100,000,000, will not be additional security to what they now have, because if the road is not a paying proposition it falls into the hands of the Government, who become the sole owners, and the $60,000,000, instead of being any benefit to the Government, would be ignored entirely. The directors appointed by the Government would take over the road when foreclosed, and ignore the $60,000,000 of stock put in by Mackenzie and Mann.

The hon. member for Welland (Mr. German) also said there was very little use in the Government's appointing a director, but I say that the Government director is going to be an important feature in the management of the road. He is given very wide powers indeed. He is allowed not only to advise, but almost to dictate to the present management of the road, and if they do not agree with him, he can come before the Railway Commission and compel the Canadian Northern to comply with his advice. The hon. member for Welland said that two years ago the Canadian Northern could have secured on the London market enough money to complete the road, but before he took his seat he said that the securities were not at all sufficient, that we were getting no security at all in this resolution. He said that the financial interests would grant this money even now were Mackenzie and Mann to go to the London market for it. And yet we are not getting any security! He also called attention to the fact that the members on the other side of the House were unanimously in favour of the proposition presented by the hon. member for Pictou. Let me call attention to some of the statements that have been made by hon. gentlemen opposite. The right hon. leader of the Opposition said:

> My right hon. friend said, and I altogether agree with him, that we cannot allow this enterprise to fail. We have too much money in it—not only the money of the country, but of the provinces and of the bond-holders themselves. It is therefore necessary that we should assist this enterprise.

And further:

> I say that not only should we provide for the contingency of possible default by covenant and agreement, but we should have the majority of the stock so that we could control the company.

He closes his argument with this statement:

> I said a moment ago, and I repeat, that this enterprise must go on. It has been conceived for the benefit of the Canadian people. We require this railway. My right hon. friend said he would not let it to go into liquidation. It must not go into liquidation, but we should have the control of it.

According to the amendment presented by the hon. member for Pictou it is impossible to have control of it. The hon. the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham), following the speech made by the right hon. leader of the Opposition, suggested that we should have absolute control of this railway. He and several other hon. gentlemen who preceded the hon. member for Pictou, made reasonable speeches on this question, but practically every one of them was anxious that government ownership should be brought about. How long is it since hon. gentlemen opposite have been converted to Government-ownership in connection with the railways of this country? Will these hon. gentlemen, who in their speeches, advocate government ownership, come forward with a resolution opposed to that presented by the hon. member for Pictou who makes the statement that it is impossible for us to have government ownership? Then we have the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) expressing himself in opposition to government ownership. We still further have the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) taking an entirely opposite position in connection with this matter. The hon. member for Welland makes an entirely erroneous statement when he speaks of their being unanimous on the other side of the House in regard to this question. There is no question about our own position. We must complete this great transcontinental railway, no matter what it costs, because it will not only assist in the development of Canada but it will assist in the development of every farm and factory along its right of way. Hundreds of millions of dollars have been invested along its right of way and it would be ruinous for us to attempt to do anything else than assist the completion and development of the road.

Hon. gentlemen talk about public ownership, but the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals well remembers that in 1904 the Conservative party pleaded with the Government of that day to pay an extra one-tenth of the cost of building the transcontinental railway, so that we could own, control and operate a great transcontinental line from ocean to ocean. Hon. gentlemen opposite, instead of trying to hold up Mackenzie and Mann to ridicule, should realize that this proposition is one that is in the interests of the people and they should therefore support it. In 1911-12 what was the position of hon. members from the West in regard to this question? Man after man on the other side of the House stood up and urged upon the Government the development of railways in that country in order to assist in getting the produce of the farms to the markets of the world in the best possible condition and at the cheapest rate. What is the position to-day? In 1913, 115,000,000 bushels of grain was brought from the western plains to Port Arthur. Over one-third of that was brought by this very railway which is now asking for aid. Seventy per cent more grain was brought to Port Arthur in 1913 than in 1912. The Canadian Northern railway was able to bring to that port over 40,000 cars of grain, or at the rate of 325 cars per day for nearly four months, and yet we hear hon. gentlemen saying that the road is not in a fit condition for the carriage of passengers and freight. When you take into consideration the fact that the passengers carried by that road in 1912 numbered 1,500,000, in 1913, 2,000,000 and that only two men in these two years were killed, you will admit that the road cannot be in as bad a condition as hon. gentlemen would lead us to believe. I understand that it is the intention of Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann to take $10,000,000 out of the amount of money they received from this Government for the betterment of the road between Winnipeg and Edmonton, the replacing of the sixty-pound rails by eighty-pound rails, and in that way assisting in the development of the West, in addition to which they propose to build new branch lines.

There is no question but that this road has been a powerful factor in the reduction of freight rates in the West. Go back to 1901 and you find the Manitoba Legislature taking the position that before they would grant any aid they would compel the Canadian Northern Railway Company to immediately reduce freight rates by four cents per 100 pounds and passenger rates from four cents to three cents, a reduction of 25 per cent in the passenger rate. The people of the West must appreciate the fact that competition brought about by this great transportation system has not only materially assisted in the development of that country but it has materially assisted in the reduction of freight and passenger rates. Can hon. gentlemen opposite appreciate the fact that in building 5,000 miles of railway the Canadian Northern railway contributed to the development of the West in a way that could not have been done by the Canadian Pacific railway. Ask yourselves the question whether the Canadian Pacific railway would have developed the country to a greater extent than it has. The Canadian Pacific railway has developed it along a different line but I do not believe that had the Canadian Pacific railway been left to itself in that great country it would have developed as rapidly as it has during the past few years.

If you drive the Canadian Northern into the hands of receivers you retard the development of Canada for a generation. The Government were not responsible for the conditions brought about by the Canadian Northern. The old Government—I do not seriously blame them—assisted that road in order to enable it to bring the products of the West to the East. The Canadian Northern with their 5,000 miles of road on the western plains, were compelled to get, if possible, to the eastern provinces in order that they might be able to carry the manufactured products of the East to the great West for distribution. The building of the Grand Trunk Pacific compelled them, in order to protect their interest, to build the line between Winnipeg and the East, and I do criticise the action of hon. members opposite who will now try to retard the completion of this line to the East.

Where could Mackenzie and Mann have gone to obtain money at the present time? —only to the Dominion Government. Their credit has been exhausted, and the only place for them to come was to the Dominion Government. Let me call attention to another fact; not only have towns and cities on the right of way been built up and developed, but industries along the right of way have been materially assisted by the building of this road. Consumers, producers, manufacturers, and others will be materially benefited and will endorse this resolution. The people of England must say that we are doing the right thing in submitting the present resolution to Parliament. By the reduction of the stock from $145,000,000 to $100,000,000 the Board of Railway Commissioners will be in a position to reduce the freight and passenger rates both in the East and in the West, because the general fixed charges on the lines of this railway will amount to two million dollars less than they otherwise would when the road is completed. Another material part of the securities taken by the Government consists of the steamships belonging to the company, and I am informed that the Royal George and the Royal Edward are two of the fastest steamers engaged in the Atlantic service. There are 300 townsites included amongst these securities, as well as the express and telegraph lines belonging to the company. The hon. member for Welland (Mr. German) tried to make us believe that the $12,000,000 of annual fixed charges on this road should be included in the indebtedness of the road to the people of Canada, but he must understand that a large portion of that amount is going to be earned by the road. If he looks at page 14 of the documents brought down, he will find that up to the present the provinces and the Dominion have never been asked to pay one dollar of interest on the guarantees they have given. He will find also that the surplus of the road last year amounted to $1,500,000 and the estimated earnings for 1916 will show a surplus of $1,200,000, and for 1917, $2,400,000, and for 1918 $4,000,000. These are estimated surpluses, it is true, but it is a fact that the road is more likely to be a paying proposition because of the Government coming to its assistance at the present time, than if it were forced into the hands of a receiver. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. German) compares the Canadian Northern and its fixed charges with the Canadian Pacific railway, he must take into consideration that while it is true the fixed charges of the Canadian Pacific railway amount to only about $10,000,000 per annum, they pay ten per cent on $260,000,000 of stock in that road, whereas there is only $100,000,000 of stock in the Canadian Northern. If the time ever comes when the people will be compelled to pay the ten per cent on the $100,000,000 stock, in addition to the $12,000,000 of interest charges, then there will be only $22,000,000 per annum to be paid as compared with the $36,000,000 which is yearly paid by the Canadian Pacific railway. I wish to call attention to the attitude of the premiers of the different provinces with respect to granting aid to the Canadian Northern railway, and it is important that the provinces of this Dominion should realize that they have a very great responsibility in connection with this matter. I quote from a letter sent to the Hon. R. L. Borden by the Hon. Mr. Murray, Prime Minister of Nova Scotia:

Halifax, N.S., March 14, 1914.

Hon. R. L. Borden,
Prime Minister,
Ottawa.

Nova Scotia Government realizes that Canadian Northern contributed very largely to railway development in this province, operating at present over four hundred miles. We feel that this progressive railway situation could only have been brought about by the enterprise of such a concern, and the province, by reason of accepting their guaranteed bonds for large sums is vitally interested in the future of this company. Government feels that any reasonable assistance consistent with public interests that can be afforded by the Dominion to the Canadian Northern would be a policy which would be acceptable to our people as it would enhance provincial credit.

(Sgd) G. H. Murray.

Is not this a strong statement from the Liberal Premier of Nova Scotia? Does it not show that so far as he and his government are concerned they are ready and willing to back up the proposition placed before Parliament by the federal Government? There is also a letter from Sir Richard McBride, Premier of British Columbia, strongly supporting this Government in the position they have taken. I quote from a letter of the Hon. J. A. Calder, one of the ministers in the Saskatchewan Government, addressed to the Right Hon. R. L. Borden:

April 17, 1914.

Hon. R. L. Borden,
Ottawa.

Dear Mr. Borden:

Viewing the matter, therefore, from this standpoint, it seems to me that if there is any likelihood that the Canadian Northern railway, on account of the magnitude of its through line undertakings may without additional federal assistance, be left in such a position as to compel it to curtail or hold back its branch line development, the loss to western Canada would be very great indeed.

At present we have thousands of settlers who have been patiently waiting for some of these lines for years, and it would be exceedingly unfortunate, under conditions now prevailing, should there be any further delay in providing the branches required.

To sum up, therefore, it seems to me that not only the West but the whole of Canada is directly interested in the early completion of the through lines of the Canadian Northern railway, as well as the building of those branches so urgently required through large settlements that are at present without adequate railway facilities. If, therefore, upon thorough investigation by your Government, it is ascertained that the company in question must have further federal aid to enable it to complete the undertakings to which it and the country are already committed, it appears to me that there is but one course to follow, namely, to grant the aid required.

Yours truly,
(Sgd) J. A. Calder.

That is a strong statement coming from the province of Saskatchewan, and the members from the West must appreciate the fact that they need branch line development as suggested by the Hon. Mr. Calder, and that he is voicing the sentiments of the people of the West when he urges upon this Government the need of granting assistance to this railway. I read a cablegram sent from Paris to the Right Hon. Mr. Borden by Hon. Arthur L. Sifton, Premier of Alberta:

Paris, 20th March, 1914.

Premier Borden,
Ottawa, Canada.

With present financial conditions would consider advisable federal guarantee with proper safeguards sufficient to ensure the completion and operation main line Canadian Northern. Prosperity settlers on present and prospective branch lines Alberta and west generally should be greatly enhanced by early completion.

(Sgd) Arthur L. Sifton.

Most hon. gentlemen opposite who have spoken on this question have urged the early completion of this road, and I ask them how can we better proceed to do that than by supporting the resolution now under discussion. If the amendment presented by the Opposition were carried, it would retard the development of this road, it would create financial panic in Canada, paralyse the system, and injure our credit abroad; whereas if this road is carried to early completion the general prosperity of the country will be increased.

In conclusion, I congratulate the Prime Minister and his Cabinet on the businesslike manner in which they have brought about this splendid arrangement, and I urge on hon. gentlemen opposite that instead of constantly crying blue ruin they should come forward like men and support this resolution. Not a single man of them is able to make a suggestion that would be better in the interests of the country than the proposal now before us. I accuse hon. gentlemen opposite of, during this whole session, crying blue ruin to the detriment of our country. If there are men out of employment in different parts of the country, these hon. gentlemen rush to Parliament to cry blue ruin. I can only suggest that these hon. gentlemen, who are in the habit of doing this, should join Coxey's army in the country to the south of us. Coxey is marching on to the great city of Washington to-day with some 50,000 followers. Coxey himself claims that there are 5,000,000 idle men in the United States to-day; but, if we have a few idle men in the Dominion of Canada, hon. gentlemen opposite are ready and willing to damage the fair name of this Dominion and interfere with its development.

I can only say again that I strongly support the resolution presented to Parliament by the Prime Minister and his Cabinet. The Right Hon. R. L. Borden is right on this question, as he has been right on all the great questions that have affected the people of Canada in the past, and I can assure him of my very hearty support on this resolution.

Mr. F. B. CARVELL (Carleton, N.B.): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether my hon. friend from East Lambton expects me to reply to the latter part of his remarks or not. Perhaps it is not unreasonable to expect him to congratulate the Premier, whom he follows so blindly; and probably he may convince himself that the Premier has made the best trade possible under the circumstances. I do not think, however, it was necessary so severely to castigate the hon. members of the Opposition for preaching blue ruin; but, as this has nothing to do with the matter under discussion, I do not propose elaborating the subject. Perhaps if the hon. members from the western portions of Canada had told the truth about the actual condition of affairs, my hon. friend might have had some cause to complain; but I am afraid conditions have been so bad in that part of the country as to render it necessary to conceal the real facts. I am not going to spend very much time in showing the reasons for the changed condition of affairs in this country in the last three years, but it is most remarkable that, when this Government came into power three years ago, the country was prosperous; the West was booming; the manufacturers of the East were running overtime and on Sundays; the Canadian Northern Company were not begging us for Heaven's sake to save them from blue ruin and bankruptcy; everything was going on in a prosperous, happy condition. Two and a half years of Tory rule in Canada have seen a wonderful transformation in the actual conditions. I say 'have seen', because I do not want to say that all of this is absolutely due to the bad management of my hon. friends opposite; but I am afraid that, when the history of Canada comes to be written, my hon. friends must be blamed for a great deal of the changed conditions of affairs which have taken place in the last two and a half years.

It is not my intention this afternoon to discuss the general conditions of affairs in Canada. I wish to discuss the condition of Mackenzie and Mann in so far as it relates to the Dominion of Canada; and it seems to me that a discussion of this one phase of Canadian financial affairs is quite sufficient for any one's attention on one occasion, and that it is not necessary to travel over the whole realm of Canadian financial affairs in order to prove that this Government is in perhaps the worst position in which any Government of Canada has been placed since Confederation. My hon. friend from East Lambton has been very fair in his remarks, as he always is. My hon. friend has done the very best he could to bolster up the position taken by his Premier, and I do not find any fault with him for that. My hon. friend has eulogized the Canadian Northern Railway system, I think, a great deal beyond the actual merits of the case, and has tried to show that no better trade could have been made than the one made by the Government. Again, I would rather expect him to take that course; but notwithstanding all these arguments of my right hon. friend, there are millions of people in Canada who will not be convinced by the arguments put forward by my hon. friend from East Lambton.

There has been a most remarkable absence of authoritative statements from the members of the Government, especially the gentlemen who are really responsible for these proposals. My right hon. friend the Premier gave a general statement of what construction he placed upon the resolutions, and satisfied himself with that. The Solicitor General gave a very learned statement of what he thought were the advantages of the contract, but he spent most of his time in trying to show what a wonderful asset the Canadian Northern railway system was. Since then we have not had a word from any member of the Government. It is a most remarkable thing that about the only speeches we have heard from the Government side of the House since then have been the two wonderful speeches made by my hon. friend the member for Calgary (Mr. Bennett) and my hon. friend the member for Kingston (Mr. Nickle). I watched with a good deal of interest the attitude of the old warhorse of the Conservative party, the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster) during the great speech of the hon. member for Calgary. It was a study; it was worth spending two hours in the House of Commons to see, not to say anything about the wonderful array of facts and arguments presented by the hon. member for Calgary. It was amusing to watch the face of my hon. friend the Postmaster General. I have not seen such an unholy gleam in the eye of that hon. gentleman since I came to Parliament as I saw when he was listening with such rapture to the arguments put forward by these two hon. members. Any person could see the great amount of gratification in the mind of the Postmaster General at the scathing rebuke which his party was receiving from these two hon. gentlemen, who have been described by the hon. member for Thunder Bay and Rainy River (Mr. Carrick) as the Bull Moose members of the Conservative party.

We have heard nothing from my hon friend the Minister of Finance, although I understand we are to be favoured with a statement from him this afternoon, to which we are all looking forward with the greatest amount of pleasure. My hon. friend assured the House only one short year ago that if we gave the Canadian Northern Railway Company a subsidy of $15,000,000 their troubles would all be over, and this great transcontinental system would be completed. That was the substance of his words. The hon. Minister of Finance will attempt to explain those words away; and we shall await with a great deal of interest the manner in which he will explain away the fact that, instead of $15,000,000 settling all the troubles of the Canadian Northern Railway Company and putting them on the highway to prosperity —I am almost afraid to state the amount of money which, in my judgment, from a consideration of the undigested mass of documents which have been thrown to us in the promiscuous manner in which the information asked for has been given to this House, will be necessary to complete the road; but I am safe in saying that $100,000,000 will not do what my hon. friend told us a year ago would be done by the payment of $15,000,000; and the company have already got the $15,000,000. If my hon. friend's arguments and assurances this afternoon have no more basis of fact than had his arguments and assurances of a year ago, I am afraid this House will not pay very much attention to them. Therefore I expect my hon. friend to back up the statements he makes this afternoon by something more than a mere assertion of facts coming from, as I believe, Mackenzie and Mann, as they came from them last year. I would be the last person to accuse my hon. friend the Minister of Finance of having attempted to mislead this House last year. I have too much respect for my hon. friend to do that. What I do fear is that my hon. friend was misled by the statements, not so much of Mackenzie and Mann as of a gentleman who has been referred to here a great many times, a gentleman well known to the Minister of Finance; a gentleman very closely associated with him on a memorable occasion in the year 1911; a gentleman who, with my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, led the noble army of martyrs, the eighteen noble patriots who attempted to save Canada to the British Crown and prevent its annexation to the United States; a gentleman who, if common report be true, is responsible for my hon. friend the Minister of Finance occupying the high and exalted position which he occupies in the Government to-day. It is needless to say that I refer to Zebulon A. Lash.

Mr. W. T. WHITE: I thought you were referring to the Prime Minister.

Mr. CARVELL: I was referring to Z. A. Lash, something stronger than the Prime Minister. I am afraid that the mis-statements made by his friend Zebulon A. Lash a year ago put my hon. friend the Finance Minister in the position in which he finds himself to-day. I only hope that the information which he will give us on this occasion will come from a better and less interested source than did the information which he received a year ago from Mr. Z. A. Lash.

Another hon. gentleman from whom we have not heard, and who should know something of this matter, is the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Hazen). I think the hon. minister ought to get far enough away from his old friends the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in order to give some reason for the faith which is in him in supporting these resolutions. I say that it is most remarkable that, with the exception of the remarks of the gentleman to whom I have referred, we have not been favoured with any statement from members of the Government who are on the inside and who should know something about this matter. I do think that we are entitled to more information along these lines than we have received up to the present time.

I feel that it is unnecessary that I should say anything uncomplimentary about Mackenzie and Mann or about any other person in discussing these resolutions; nor do I think it is necessary that members of the Government should spend so much time in eulogizing these two wizards of finance, as they are called; these two empire builders; these two men who have devoted their lives to making Canada the great and prosperous country that it is to-day. This is purely a financial transaction; it is purely a question of whether, in the first place, we should give aid to the Canadian Northern system, and whether, in the second place, the Government are proposing to give this aid in a manner which will be in the best interests of the people of the country as a whole. Therefore, as I have said, I am here neither to praise nor to condemn Mackenzie and Mann; I am here to discuss, very briefly indeed, the financial position in which I find this company placed to-day, and in which I find the Government placed by reason of their yielding to the solicitations of these two railway magnates. I know that we cannot find in Canada another instance of where two men have accomplished such wonders in the financial world as have Mackenzie and Mann in connection with the Canadian Northern railway system; in fact, I doubt very much whether the case has a parallel on the American continent. Just think of what they have accomplished. Without putting in one dollar of private funds; without becoming responsible for the payment of one dollar; without doing anything but beg from everybody whom they met, these two gentlemen have succeeded in getting from the people of Canada, from the Dominion and from the provinces, over $200,000,000 either of money or of money's worth. I say that this is something unique in the history of Canada, and, I believe, in the history of the American continent: over $200,000,000 in hard cash begged from the people of Canada, who were cajoled, and, in some cases, I am afraid, almost threatened into giving this money in order to enrich these gentlemen and make them a pair of millionaires. When hon. gentlemen opposite talk about Mackenzie and Mann being patriots, I am almost compelled to say something unpleasant. My hon. friend the Solicitor General smiles; it is no wonder, because I am afraid that the intercourse which my hon. friend has had with these gentlemen and their solicitor during the last two months has given him an insight into the real condition of affairs which makes him smile in his sleep when Mackenzie and Mann appear to him in his dreams. When attorneys and counsel come into court with a case they take it as it is presented to them and make the best they can of it, and I think that my hon. friend the Solicitor General, who always makes the best of a bad case, has done the best he could in this case. But my hon. friend knows that so much of this story has not been told that he cannot help smiling when the names of Mackenzie and Mann are mentioned to him.

4 p.m.

These men have been referred to as patriots: these men who have almost buccaneered $200,000,000 out of the people of Canada. I went over the matter very hurriedly a few moments ago and, according to the figures which the Government have given us, we find that Mackenzie and Mann have obtained, in the first place, over $25,000,000 in cash and, in the second place, lands in the Northwest which they admit are worth $30,000,000. Further, they have obtained the guarantee of bonds and securities by the Dominion Government to the extent of $58,000,000 and by the provincial Governments to the extent of $76,000,000. This makes a total of $180,000,000 in round figures. In addition to that, they have lands in the provinces of Quebec, Ontario and Nova Scotia, roads which have been built and purchased by them—but all of which have been built practically by public money—all over the eastern portion of Canada and, to some extent, in the province of Manitoba; roads built in the province of Quebec and in the province of Nova Scotia. Adding the sum total of the value of these properties you find that at least $220,000,000 or $225,000,000 of actual money or moneys worth has been given to these two gentlemen for the purpose of building this railway system. They conceived, perhaps, one of the boldest schemes which was ever thought of in America. Two men, who at the time had, I imagine, very few dollars of private funds, but who did not put in a dollar, no matter what they may have had, conceived the idea of building a great transcontinental railway. We are told that we should consider them as patriots because they had imagination sufficient to induce them to go into this great scheme. I do not suppose that there is a member in this House who has not had sufficient imagination during his lifetime to induce him to go into some financial scheme or other. Some of them, I presume, have turned out satisfactorily; many of them have turned out unsatisfactorily. I know that I have gone into financial schemes during my lifetime; many of them, I am sorry to say, turned out unsatisfactorily, but probably the schemes that other members and I myself have entered into are just as important so far as our communities are concerned as is the Mackenzie and Mann scheme so far as Canada is concerned. But when our schemes go wrong, do we go to our municipal authorities, to our city and town councils or to our provincial Governments and say: We conceived the idea of establishing a great institution of some kind, but the thing has gone wrong; we are up against the wall. It is true that we have spent not a dollar of our own money; it is true that we have spent all the money that we have been able to borrow; it is true that we have spent all the money which the people have given us, that we cannot borrow more and that nobody will give us any more money. We cannot go on with this work; therefore it is up to you to finance it for us. Would our people call us patriots, call us magnates, if we did this, or would they call us idiots? I have been all through the mill; I have had financial transactions that have gone bad but I did not find any government or corporation or municipality coming to my aid and putting up thousands of dollars for me. They say: If you are fool enough to undertake a thing that you cannot carry through, put up your own money, put up your own securities; if you cannot pay your way, go to the wall, and let somebody else take it up. That is what you find in the ordinary affairs of life, that is what probably one-half the members of this House have found in ordinary business experience. The hon. member for Lambton says that these gentlemen are patriots and are absolutely bankrupt. The words he used were: They have gone to the extent of their credit, then he says there is no other source to which they can go for money except the Dominion Government; and because these men are bankrupt, and because there is no other source to which they can go, and because they come here and ask us to grant them an enormous sum of money, it is our duty to grant it. This is the logic, and I think the hon. member for Lambton pretty nearly stated the logic of all the members on the Government side of this House who have supported this measure up to the present time. Perhaps you might say that it would be only fair that I should state what my own views are on this matter, and for fear that ony one should claim that I am not frank in discussing it, I wish to admit that this matter has assumed such gigantic proportions that I do not see how the Government of Canada can do otherwise than do something in order to prevent the enterprise going entirely to smash, because that would be a very serious matter for Canada. But when I say that, I am not agreeing in any manner whatever to the scheme proposed by the Government in order to work out a solution to this very unfortunate condition of affairs.

I now want to discuss very briefly the scheme proposed by the Government. A large number of documents have been laid upon the table of the House. Some of these have been printed in a blue-book and some have not. I do not think that I have spent more real time in trying to understand any subject that has come before the House since I have been in Parliament than I have spent on this Canadian Northern scheme; and I am compelled to admit, although it may not be very much of a compliment to my ability, that I have rarely attempted to speak upon a matter about which I could so little understand many things connected with it. If there is any more light to be thrown upon these things, it is the duty of the Government to give us more explicit explanation than we have received. In so far as I have been able to go, and I have read over every word in the blue book and every document laid upon the table of the House, I find that there are present liabilities upon this road amounting to about $42,540,000, not for the purpose of building the road, not to extend the road, not to complete the system, but to pay their debts and put them in a position where it will be safe to run engines and cars over the road. That is the position as I find it, if I am right in my figures. I have made up these figures largely from sessional paper No. 269 I, a portion of which has been printed and a portion not. I find that the liabilities at present outstanding and the immediate necessities are as follows:

British Columbia, loans and debts due, $10,141,780; Canadian Northern Railway lines, (i.e. the lines from Port Arthur to the Yellowhead Pass), $8,348,290; Canadian Northern Ontario lines, debts due, $4,727,698; Toronto and Ottawa lines, debts due, $1,878,726; Equipment trust, debts due, $7,441,086; betterments on all lines, $10,000,000; making a total of $42,540,580.

I was a little in doubt whether I was justified in putting in the $10,000,000 of betterments as a portion of the money to be taken out of the $45,000,000 of guarantee, but if the hon. member for Lambton knows what he is talking about, and I am satisfied he does, then I was right in putting in that $10,000,000 because he makes the positive statement that:

I understand Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann intend taking $10,000,000 out of this grant to pay for betterments.

Therefore I have the story complete so far as that is concerned. The sum of $42,540,-580 is to be taken out of this money to pay the debts and to pay for betterments in order to make the road safe to operate. My friend the Solicitor General shakes his head. I tell him I have not given a statement that I cannot prove by his documents. Every figure I have given I have worked out from these documents. My hon. friend knows that they are there, he can take the documents and verify them. At page 13 of this file he will find a statement regarding the British Columbia road, and he will find that they owe there, of debts, $10,141,-170. That is right, is it not.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have no reason to doubt it.

Mr. CARVELL: If he will go over to page 19 of this file, he will find that there are $8,348,290 due in loans, sub-contractors' drawbacks, and accounts for material on the western lines. At page 20 he will find that on the Canadian Northern lines there are due $4,727,698 for loans, sub-contractors' drawbacks, and accounts for material. On the same page he will find for the Toronto and Ottawa road, loans, sub-contractors' drawbacks, and accounts for material, $1,878,728. On page 24, he will find that in the equipment statement the amount required to pay outstanding accounts and principle due on equipment trust securities in the hands of the public for the year 1913-14 is $7,441,096 And then he has the confession of my hon. friend from Lambton, if it be correct, that the whole of these betterments will be paid out of this amount. Add these together you have $42,045,580.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am sorry I was not present when the hon. member for Lambton spoke, but I scarcely think he was correct in stating that the whole of the $10,000,000 for betterments will come out of the $45,-000,000. The whole of the $10,000,000 for betterments, and the items read by my hon. friend, will come out of the proceeds of the $45,000,000, plus the proceeds of the $58,000,000; that is to say, out of the whole $100,000,000.

Mr. CARVELL: But there is a lot of other things to come out of the proceeds of the $58,000,000. No man knows better than the Solicitor General that you have got to spend the $10,000,000 for betterments or you cannot run your trains over these lines in the West. No man know that better than my hon. friend. He knows that there are hundreds of miles—yes, thousands—that have not a shovelful of ballast on them except what is called dirt ballast; that it will take millions of dollars to replace the wooden trestles, and to fill up the fills; that the roads are in such a bad condition that it is not safe to run a train at more than 10 miles an hour and the Railway Commission has been compelled to reduce the speed of the trains. And yet my hon. friend tells me that they do not intend to take this $10,000,000 for betterments.

[Mr. Carvell.]

Mr. MEIGHEN: Out of the $100,000,000, yes.

Mr. CARVELL: They will take it out of the only money available, and the only money available is the proceeds from the $45,000,000 worth of bonds.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is no more available than any other proceeds.

Mr. CARVELL: My hon. friend knows better. He knows that a Government guarantee makes the bonds saleable, and that they are going to be sold. These 4 per cent. bonds will not sell at par, perhaps, even with the Government guarantee. I doubt if they will bring very much more than $42,500,000. Some gentlemen have said we are going to have a completed system; we are going to have a wonderful transcontinental extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific which will do transcontinental business. But I think I have proved from this document that it will take all the $45,000,000 bond issue to pay the debts owing and to put the road in running shape. That is the difficulty. Mackenzie and Mann or Lash has put it all over somebody; I do not want to say the Solicitor General because I do not hold him responsible more than the rest of them. The fact remains that this $45,000,-000, with the other available assets, will not complete the road or anywhere near it. And next year or two years from now, for they will probably wait till after the next elections, they will come back here and tell us the tale they told us last year, that they are telling us now, and that they will probably tell us on two or three future occasions: for God's sake give us some money that we may complete the road; if you give it to us this time we will never come back any more. But they will come back just the same.

Mr. GRAHAM: This Government does not expect to have to meet them again.

Mr. CARVELL: No, the Government expects the burden will fall on other shoulders, and acts on the principle that 'sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof.' They relieve present necessities, and then hand the matter over to their successors.

Another thing is revealed by this document—and I do not think my hon. friend will disagree with me in this, because I am quoting the figures practically as they are given on page 10 of the blue-book, which seems to be the financial statement of the company. I figure that to complete the road will take as follows:

British Columbia lines..		$13,505,712
Canadian Northern lines..		6,694,606
Ontario lines—main line.	$11,387,324
Toronto-Ottawa line ..	258,143
		11,645,467
		$31,845,785

According to the estimate that Mackenzie and Mann have given to the Solicitor General, it will take almost $31,000,000 or $32,000,000 to complete the road, not including all the branch lines, as stated by my hon. friend from Lambton—not by any means. That amount will only cover the main line and the branch lines at present under construction. To that I have added what I think I am perfectly justified in adding, $20,000,000 for equipment, making a total of $51,845,785 required, according to the admission of the Government themselves, to complete the road at present under construction. Does any man on this side of the House or the other, or in the country, who knows anything about railway construction, believe that the estimate given by Mackenzie and Mann is correct? I do not say that offensively. Possibly they may believe it is a reasonably correct estimate, but the history of every railway in Canada and of practically every other great work shows that nothing in this world is so unreliable as engineers' estimates. It is almost a disease with these gentlemen. I never could understand why it is that while they are never right, they always err on the one side; they always estimate these works to cost less than they actually do cost, and when these gentlemen tell you it will take $50,000,000 to $51,000,000 to complete the road, you will be almost safe in adding fifty per cent to that. Take the Grand Trunk Pacific for instance. Estimate after estimate was made and exceeded, and the same with the Canadian Pacific railway, the Intercolonial railway, and every other great work in Canada. Take the Welland canal. I venture to say that when the Welland canal is completed it will cost twenty-five per cent more than the Government say it will cost.

Mr. EMMERSON: And the Soulanges canal.

Mr. CARVELL: Yes. I tell my hon. friends that $52,000,000 will not complete this work. And besides that there are thousands of miles of branch lines to be constructed, which are not commenced at the present time. If the people demand them, they must be built, and this Government must build them, as I will try to show. The moment this Government becomes a partner in this enterprise—the only partner who has any money—no matter what improvements, extensions, or betterments are required, the partner with the money must furnish them because you cannot get blood out of a stone nor money out of a partner that has not any. To my mind, that is one of the greatest objections I have to the whole scheme.

In the blue-book I find a sort of a summary of my figures with certain additions. It shows that for debts due and betterments, $42,540,580 is required; amounts necessary to complete lines under construction, $51,845,785; floating liability, $10,408,128; loans secured by pledged securities, as I figure it out, $15,423,170, but against that there are securities as collateral; loans due to banks, $20,703,865, there being collateral securities against these too. These total up to $140,921,528 of debts due, including certain debts which are covered to some extent by securities, and amount required to complete. But you have the enormous sum of $141,000,000 of debts due by this concern; and they are asking this Government to step into the breach and become the junior partner. We are asked to put ourselves in the position where, no matter what happens this amount must be paid by the people of Canada. In order to place the matter fairly before the House, I want to state that there are securities held against the two last amounts.

Mr. BURNHAM: Is the hon. gentleman in favour of granting these people anything at all?

Mr. CARVELL: To put it in a very terse way, I am not at all in favour of granting Mackenzie and Mann anything at all. I am in favour of keeping the Canadian Northern Railway system as a going concern in Canada. I hope my hon. friend understands me.

Mr. BURNHAM: I do, because your statement contradicts your leader.

Mr. CARVELL: All right; I am talking for myself. We will be pleased to hear what my hon. friend from Peterboro (Mr. Burnham) is in favour of. We know that there have been various reports around this country stating what he is in favour of and what he is against. Some of these reports have been of such a nature that my hon. friend has felt it necessary to try to make his position clear in the House. But my hon. friend usually makes a show of trying to disclose his position by means of asking questions. We would be delighted to have some extended statements from him and then we really would have some idea of what his views may be. I was referring to the two latter amounts which are covered by securities. As I have figured it out from page 44, the Government believe there is a sufficient equity in the collateral to pay the debt. I have very grave doubts about that. I know that the list quoted looks like as if something could be got out of it and it might have that appearance if put before the public. I can imagine I see the Solicitor General out in one of the townships in Manitoba, spellbinding the natives and telling them: We have $7,000,000 of an equity in this to pay these bills with and they are just as sure as the debt of a farmer who has a good wheat crop coming on for this year, but when you come to analyse the various items on this list, I am afraid they will not bear the reputation which the Solicitor General would like to give them. We have almost £1,000,000 of these collaterals which it must be remembered is only Canadian Northern debenture stock not guaranteed by anybody. I know that this debenture stock was put up in one place as being worth 75½ last December. I do not say that there were not a few shares of this debenture stock sold at 75½, but Mackenzie and Mann cannot sell that stock for 75½—they cannot sell it for 25½ to-day. They could not put that debenture stock on the market and sell it at all, and if they could they would sell it, because there is quite an amount of that debenture stock still available. When you talk about this debenture stock being some sort of a guarantee of this loan, you are only deceiving the people. When you talk about $1,000,000 of this debenture stock being a security, or being something which is a first mortgage, you lose sight of the fact that this security is entirely ephemeral.

[Mr. Carvell.]

It is composed altogether of debentures of the company without any guarantee behind them. You have also other guaranteed stock, some three and one-half per cent and some four and one-half per cent which would not bring anything like their face value. Notwithstanding the fact that there is an apparent equity of $7,000,000, the fact is that there is really a deficit, and that somebody will be compelled to pay some millions of dollars in order to redeem these pledges.

Then, if you turn over to the next page, and take the amounts due the banks, you will find that the condition is even worse. The Solicitor General refers to a particular claim of $3,000,000 in that connection. But instead of it being an equity, he will see that there is a liability of $3,000,000 when he works that out. You have £1,301,590 sterling of perpetual consolidated debenture stock of the Canadian Northern guaranteed by nobody put up as collateral for a loan of $6,500,000. Then you have some 5 per cent land debenture stock which would probably be fairly good. There is also some 4½ debenture stock guaranteed by British Columbia, and some 4½ debenture stock guaranteed by Alberta. It is all covered by the guarantee of Alberta and of British Columbia and the land debenture stock. But will this British Columbia and Alberta and land stock bring par? It will not bring anywhere near par. You would not have anything like a $24,000,000 guarantee altogether, because the banks cannot realize on that stock. There is no use of talking about the banks attempting to realize on that because they cannot do it. Therefore, I state that in place of there being an equity of $3,000,000 on these securities, you will be nearer the mark if you say that there will be a deficit of $3,000,000 or $4,000,000, because the banks could not realize on these securities. The statement that there is an equity of $3,400,000 is not correct. It is correct, I will admit, so far as the documents go, but it is highly misleading as far as the results of these documents are concerned.

It seems to me that the very least that my hon. friend the Solicitor General (Mr. Meighen) could have done was to try and make Mackenzie and Mann personally responsible for at least seeing that these debts were paid. But my hon. friends have not even gone that far. There is no guarantee even that these debts will be paid, although they try to make the people believe that they will be paid. If you look at sections 4 and 5 of the resolutions you will see that they are the most misleading statements that are to be found in all these documents. Section 4 says that:

That covenants or undertakings to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council shall be given that all outstanding temporary loans to the Canadian Northern or any of its Constituent or Subsidiary Companies secured by the deposit or pledge of securities, will be paid out of the proceeds of such deposited or pledged securities when the same shall be sold or disposed of, and that no proceedings against the Canadian Northern or any of said other companies will meanwhile be taken for the collection of such temporary loans.

I would like to know who is to prevent the man who has $1,000,000 of Canadian Northern securities attempting to collect the money. Who guarantees that he will not collect this money, and who guarantees that anybody will pay this money if he does try to collect it, except the Government of Canada? We can see the result already. Immediately these resolutions are submitted to Parliament proceedings are taken to put one of these companies in liquidation. Who is going to come to the rescue? Who is going to put up the money to keep this concern from going into the receiver's hands? My hon. friend knows the concern I refer to. Action has already been taken in the courts at Montreal to put it into the hands of the receiver. Who is going to keep it out of the receiver's hands, in the final analysis, unless it be the Government of Canada? It is true that Mackenzie and Mann may finance it in some way for the present, but they will have to come back to the Government, because it is the only milch cow that they can come to now.

Now, having assumed this position, we become the bankers, the second mortgagees in possession, we are the people who must pay up all these liabilities, and every one of these bankrupt concerns comes back to the Government of Canada now and says: You are behind this enterprise, pay up; and you will pay up. Then we have section 5 of the resolution, which reads as follows:

That covenants or undertakings of the contractors and such other covenants or undertakings as may be required by the Governor in Council shall be given that the current indebtedness of the Canadian Northern and of the said Constituent and Subsidiary Companies will within one year from the passing of the Act to be based upon these resolutions be reduced to the normal or usual current amount to be determined by the minister and that meanwhile all such current indebtedness other than such as may be the subject of bona fide dispute, will be either paid or arranged in such a manner that no proceedings for the enforcement of payment thereof will be taken or pressed.

That is a little better than the other, because we have here one entity at least. And, who are going to guarantee that these debts will be paid? The contractors are to give the guarantee. And who are the contractors, under these resolutions? I turn to the first page and I find that the 'contractors' mean Mackenzie, Mann and Company, Limited, and Mackenzie, Mann and Company, Limited, guarantee that these debts will be paid. What have Mackenzie, Mann and Company, Limited, got? As far as the evidence goes they are not worth a dollar. All the evidence we have is the other way; they are absolutely a bankrupt concern, and yet a bankrupt concern without a dollar in the world is allowed to guarantee that this $10,000,000 will be reduced to $3,000,000 of current liability. Let me show you wherein the Government are being—I think I will say buncoed, because I do not think any other word will express my meaning so clearly. When you go to the agreement, the meaning of which we know, we find that the word 'contractors' means 'Mackenzie, Mann and Company, Limited, Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann.' There, Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann covenant to do certain things, but all they covenant to do is that they in the first place will assign this stock to a trustee, who will hold it for them and for the Government, and that in the second place they will assign $33,000,000 of this stock over to His Majesty, to make up the total of $40,000,000: $7,000,000 having been assigned last year. They covenant further that they will hand over the Brockville, Westport and Western Railway Company, free of charge, and that they will do any other acts necessary to carry out the intentions of this covenant, and, lastly, that they will make no claim for their twenty years' services. When Mackenzie and Mann become personally responsible, all they agree to do is to hand over the common stock, which to-day is not worth the paper it is written on. If the Government were sincere in trying to make the people of this country believe that Mackenzie and Mann were behind this thing personally, they would make the word 'contractors' in the resolution mean the same thing as the word 'contractors' in the agreement. If they will change the interpretation of the terms of the resolution and make Mackenzie and Mann personally responsible, we would at least have something to show. When they insert in section 4 of the resolution that covenants or undertakings on behalf of the contractors will be given to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council, we then would have something to go on; we would have Mackenzie and Mann responsible that these guaranteed debts would be paid and responsible that the floating indebtedness of ten million dollars would be brought down to three million dollars.

The more one considers these resolutions and the documents which have been flung at us, the more he must be convinced that there is a deliberate attempt here by somebody to save Mackenzie and Mann harmless. Mackenzie and Mann are entirely out of it when it comes to paying anything, but Mackenzie and Mann are entirely into it when it comes to receiving anything.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What are Mackenzie and Mann receiving?

Mr. CARVELL: I will come to that in a little while.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not think you will.

Mr. CARVELL: Yes, I will; it is early in the day yet. I admit that the evidence is very incomplete as to what they have received up to the present time. I wish I had the evidence which the Solicitor General possesses, or, better still, the evidence which his friend Lash kept away from him. If the Solicitor General has the information which Lash has, and if he will give it to us, then I can answer the question as to what Mackenzie and Mann have received, with a great deal more certainty than I can now. The Solicitor General listened on Thursday last with a great deal of attention to the statement of the member for Calgary (Mr. R. B. Bennett) as to what Mackenzie and Mann had received. I do not need to go into that question in the exhaustive manner in which the member for Calgary treated it; in fact I have not the ability to do so, if I wanted to. The hon. member for Calgary disposed of that question, and it is unnecessary for me to repeat his arguments. The hon. gentleman gave to the Government certain statements as to where Mackenzie and Mann have received something, and I want to know if there is any member in this House, including the learned Solicitor General who is so innocent, who belives that Mackenzie and Mann have handled $244,000,000 of hard cash obtained from the people of this country and from their unguaranteed securities, and have acted the part of two magnanimous patriots. Does any one believe that they have simply acted as agents, to whom this money was paid, that they did not receive a dollar out of the whole transaction, and that every dollar of that $244,000,000 is represented in the undertakings referred to in this resolution. Why, even the Solicitor General does not believe that. Why on earth did they create these subsidiary companies, if the whole thing was a bona fide transaction and there was no money being made out of it? You sometimes can argue backwards, and when you have not the evidence it is the only way you can argue, and we know that there has not been a mile of road built in Canada by the Canadian Northern system. We at all events have no evidence that there has been, and I think I am safe in making that assertion. Money by the millions, the ten of millions, and the hundreds of millions, have been granted to the Canadian Northern Ontario, the Canadian Northern Alberta, the Canadian Northern Saskatchewan, the Canadian Northern Pacific, and all the rest of the Canadian Northerns, but not one of these Canadian Northerns has ever built a mile of railway. What did they do with the money? They have handed $244,000,000 of that money over to themselves, only under a different name, the name of Mackenzie, Mann and Company, Limited, and William Mackenzie and Donald Mann own all the stock.

Mr. PARDEE: And Lash.

Mr. CARVELL: My hon. friend says 'Lash,' and he is no doubt a little deeper in it than some of us think he is. But on the surface it is Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann. All this money is handed over by Mackenzie and Mann and the Canadian Northern Railway Company, to Mackenzie and Mann as a contracting company, and neither of them has built a mile of road. Mackenzie and Mann, as a contracting company, go out through the world and make bargains with every person they can find to build the road as cheaply as possible. It is all very well to bring an affidavit of a clerk in their office stating that he believes no money should be made out of it. On what does he base that belief? Why does he not give us some information as to his belief? As was said so forcibly by my hon. friend from Welland (Mr. German), why did not Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann make affidavits that they would receive no portion of this money.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Would that satisfy you?

Mr. CARVELL: It would be more satisfactory than the declaration of a clerk in their office.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It would not satisfy my hon. friend.

Mr. CARVELL: Your hon. friend would still reserve the right to do a little thinking for himself, but if the Solicitor General will give us a chance to get these two witnesses in the box I will try and be satisfied with the result. I think there are a great many members on the other side of the House as well as on this side who would like to have the opportunity of examining them. I do not profess to be such an authority on railway matters, that I could cross-examine these two gentlemen on all the ramifications of this great Canadian Northern system, but I think, with the assistance of my hon. friends, I could touch the fringe of the matter, and, Mr. Speaker, you will only have to touch the fringe of the garment in order to show one of the greatest stock-jobbing transactions and one of the greatest manipulations of securities and cash that has ever taken place in Canada. You do not have to get inside of it. I asked the question before: Why do they create these subsidiary companies, if it is not to make money out of them? My hon. friend the Solicitor General said that they did it so that they could handle the securities better. I admit that, probably so far as the equipment trust is concerned, that is true. I dare say it is necessary to have a separate organization so far as the equipment is concerned, because I know that the equipment trust can purchase the rolling stock. It gives a mortgage, and the rolling stock is not covered by the general mortgage upon the road. That is the object of the equipment trust. It may be a means of helping the company to finance, because, if all the rolling stock went into a general mortgage, the company might have difficulty in purchasing it. Therefore, so far as rolling stock is concerned, I believe there is some reason for a separate organization. But when it comes to building the Canadian Northern Pacific and the Canadian Northern Ontario, which are the two gigantic portions of the system, there have been paid out in the last three years $45,000,000 or $50,000,000 to Mackenzie and Mann, Limited; or to Mackenzie and Mann in one case and to the Northern Construction Company in the other, which is about the same thing. Why could not the Canadian Northern Pacific Company call for tenders and let these contracts to the lowest tenderer? Why could they not have done as the commissioners for the National Transcontinental railway did? Why could they not have done as the Canadian Pacific Railway Company did? When the Canadian Pacific Railway Company wanted to build their Seaforth line, when they wanted to build their line from Toronto to Sudbury, when they wanted to double track their main line from Vaudreuil west, when they wanted to build their Lake Shore line to connect with the main line, they did not organize any subsidiary companies, like Mackenzie and Mann, Limited. You do not hear of any Shaughnessy-Van Horne, Limited, on the Canadian Pacific railway —not by any means. They simply went out into the world and asked contractors to tender for the work. I know intimately the men who built the Toronto-Sudbury line; I know the men who are building the Lake Shore line to-day. They are men who were contractors on the National Transcontinental railway, men who were simply asked to tender in the ordinary course of business, and the lowest tenderers got the contract and are doing the work.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Canadian Northern Railway Company are actually doing it in the way my hon. friend describes.

Mr. CARVELL: That only shows the necessity of an investigation. We have no evidence of that, and it is the first time we have ever heard of it. If all this is true, how does it come that Mackenzie and Mann hand over these millions to themselves, without a contract, without even an agreement ?

Mr. MEIGHEN: They do not.

Mr. CARVELL: The evidence here is that they do.

Mr. BURNHAM: Would it not be possible to summon Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann before the Public Accounts Committee, by virtue of the guarantees formerly given by this Parliament ?

Mr. CARVELL: It might be possible.

Mr. BURNHAM: Then, why not try it?

Mr. CARVELL: I will tell you what I would rather do. I would rather put a firm like Price, Waterhouse and Company on their books for a month or six weeks, and then have a Royal Commission or a Committee of this House investigate the matter. I would like first to get some information, and then bring them here. My hon. friend speaks about summoning them before the Public Accounts Committee. It is late in the session, and I am afraid we would not get very far before the Public Accounts Committee this session in unravelling this monstrous financial transaction.

To come back again. Why do they not call for tenders? Why do they hand over these millions of dollars to themselves without asking for tenders? Would it not be interesting to know the prices which the Canadian Northern paid to Mackenzie and Mann, Limited, and the prices which Mackenzie and Mann, Limited, paid to the contractors? No man need tell me, in the absence of pretty good sworn testimony, backed up by documents, that there is not an enormous difference between the amount of money paid to Mackenzie and Mann, Limited, and the amount of money paid by Mackenzie and Mann, Limited, to their contractors. You can take all these subsidiary companies; you can take all the manipulations of the bonds and stock referred to by my hon. friend from Calgary (Mr. Bennett) the other day, and you can show in every one of them that there is no reason for creating these subsidiary companies beyond the fact that they are the mere agents to register the transactions—because the Canadian Northern Railway Company is an entity, the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Company is an entity, and the Canadian Northern Pacific Railway Company is an entity; they are all entities; they all have the power to contract; they all have the right to sue and to be sued; they all have the rights and powers which all other public corporations in Canada have; and there is no necessity for handing over these contracts and building the line in the way in which it was done, unless it is to cover up something.

Mr. BLAIN: Has my hon. friend no faith whatever in Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann?

Mr. CARVELL: Yes, I have. They are two of the shrewdest men who have ever lived in Canada. But my hon. friend forgets that Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann are coming to Parliament as suppliants. They say: We have come to the end of our tether; we cannot get any more money; we have come to you, and we ask you to furnish the money. What I am complaining about is that we have not a statement before us at the present time which justifies us in giving them the money. Under this resolution, all this $45,000,000 will go to Mackenzie and Mann. They are the men who will handle that money, not the Government of Canada. They say that they have not made any profits; at least, an affidavit to that effect by some gentleman connected with the Northern Construction Company has been read here. It says that there have been no profits made by Mackenzie and Mann on the construction of the British Columbia end of the road. That may be very true; but that is not saying that Mackenzie and Mann will not get profits out of it in the end. The Northern Construction Company is the same family in the end: it comprises Sir Donald Mann's brother and Sir William Mackenzie's nephews, who are no doubt very estimable gentlemen. I give these men credit for being big men. I am afraid they are a little too big for the men with whom they are dealing. They say that they have not made any money out of this thing yet; but my hon. friend does not realize that it is going to take between ten and eleven million dollars to pay their debts, and about thirteen million dollars to finish the work. I just ask my hon. friend to have a little patience and wait until Mackenzie and Mann get the $10,000,000 of our good money to pay their debts with and the $13,000,000 more to complete the road. Then I would like to have an affidavit from Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann that they have not made any money out of this transaction. These are the things we are complaining about. We object to this enormous amount of money being handed over to the men who have made a failure of the whole thing. We consider that the money should be handled by the Government; and I think we are paying a compliment to this Government of spendthrifts when we say that they should have the handling of this money. We are taking chances in so doing, but the chances are nothing compared with the chances we are taking in handing the money over to Mackenzie and Mann. That is the point we are trying to make and the fault we are finding.

I want to go back to the question of the equipment trust; I am afraid that I was only too truthful when I stated a few minutes ago that Mackenzie and Mann had not properly instructed the Solicitor General; and, that certain important matters had been withheld. I will say this, that my hon. friend is not the first counsel in the world who has been misled by his clients. Any gentleman in this House who has had experience in counsel work knows that the great and almost insuperable difficulty is to get his client to tell him the whole truth. We have all had the experience of going into court and getting into difficulties because the client did not tell the whole story, and I am afraid that the Solicitor General is in that position; in fact, I know he is. It was proved by a remark made by him the other night when the hon. member for Pictou was referring to the equipment trust. The hon. member for Pictou was asking why in the world it was necessary that this equipment should be bought by Mackenzie and Mann and not by the trust, and my hon. friend the Solicitor General said, that is not true. I want to tell my hon. friend the Solicitor General that it is true.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I did not say that.

Mr. CARVELL: I understood my hon. friend to say that. It is true. The Imperial Rolling Stock Company do not buy the rolling stock; the rolling stock is bought by the Mackenzie and Mann Company, Limited, who give their notes for it and then transfer it to the equipment trust. Why is that necessary?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Because the rolling stock company is a mere intermediary. The Mackenzie and Mann Company, Limited, purchase because they have sufficient assets; they merely turn it over to the rolling stock company.

Mr. CARVELL: That is a plausible explanation, but it is hardly effective, because the rolling stock company issue bonds, and they are the men who ought to have the money to pay for this rolling stock. Every time my hon. friend the Solicitor General attempts to explain the matter, he shows that he has not been properly instructed. He shows that these men are intermediaries for the purpose, I believe, of making money out of the transaction. I would like to have the chance to examine them; I would like to have the chance of bringing here the Canada Car Company and other car companies in Canada and the United States from whom Mackenzie and Mann have bought equipment in recent years; I would like to have the opportunity of examining this transaction and seeing whether or not this rolling stock has been handed over to the equipment trust at exactly the same price which the Mackenzie and Mann Company, Limited, paid the manufacturers for it. It may be possible it has been, but we hae oor doots.

Let me now come back to the financial statement on page 10. My hon. friend admits that they are going to take the whole of the proceeds of the bonds to pay their debts. But, he says, they are going to complete the road out of the $58,000,000. Let us for a moment examine that assertion. The $16,496,332 of equipment bonds are put in as an asset. How can the equipment company have $16,000,000 of 5 p.m. bonds at the present time to put up on the market? If they had $16,000,000 of bonds upon the old worn-out material of the Canadian Northern railway, at what price do you think they would sell? Although I admit that this $16,000,000 is a mere bagatelle in the financing of the Canadian Northern Railway system, it is $16,000,000 out of the $100,000,000 which they set forth as being the amount required to complete the work. It is put forth as a gilt-edged security, worth dollar for dollar, and if it does not produce dollar for dollar then they are far astray in their figuring.

We come next to the Canadian Northern Tunnel and Terminal bonds, $5,995,734, or practically $6,000,000. It is true that they put that in as the amount required to complete the Montreal terminals, and that they have $6,000,000 worth of bonds. But who is going to buy these bonds and pay par for them? Who is going to buy these bonds at any price? My hon. friend the Minister of Finance—he knows something about the financial side of the matter, and that is why I appeal to him—will not tell us that these two last items are worth anything at all like the amount of money which is set forth in this statement. Then, in addition tc that, they have $36,000,000 of bonds at par value which might produce $30,000,000, possibly a little less, but how are you going to get it? The remainder of those bonds, $35,981,960 of par value, worth possibly $30,000,000, they say they are going to earn—from whom? From the people of Canada. That is, the people of Canada put up $45,000,000 in order to put Mackenzie and Mann in a position to earn $35,000,000 more from them; some of it in subsidies from the federal Government and some from the provincial governments by way of bond guarantees and subsidies. Thus it goes on; it is like an immense snowball; the more you roll it the bigger it gets; the more money these people get out of the coffers of the Government the more money they are going to get out of the people. They say they have $312,000,000 of outstanding securities at the present time. I want to tell my friend that he is a little wrong in his addition; as I make it, the amount is $314,000,000 or $315,000,000. The error may be found in connection with the British Columbia four per cent debenture stock. I took the trouble to look the matter up and I find from the stock exchange book of 1913 that while the proceeds were $17,418,000 they are given here as being $19,500,000. They could not get that much out of $16,412,000 worth of securities. Of course, it is only an error.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There is no error; the explanation is this: other items mentioned in that same column are placed with that one to produce that total. These items do not alone produce the amounts set opposite them in every case; that is on account of the combining of the items which are necessary for the purpose of financing.

Mr. CARVELL: I thank my hon. friend for that information; with the documents that I had I could not figure it out. We start now with the assertion that there are $312,818,910 of securities issued against this road at the present time. We are going to issue $45,000,000 on that and then we are going to issue $30,000,000 on other securities after that, because by furnishing $45,000,000 we put these people in a position to earn the additional amount from the provinces. The result is that we are going to have a mortgage of practically $400,000,000 against the road as at present constructed and under construction.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There is just one point that my hon. friend overlooks. The securities that we enable them to issue are for loans on lines on which there has been practically no construction: for example, the Canadian Northern Saskatchewan railway. I understand that the Saskatchewan Government have guaranteed bonds for some 600 or 700 miles. That road is just being commenced. Consequently the mileage will be very much increased and will be away above the 9,000 miles that was in our lease, when that is all expended.

Mr. CARVELL: I see, but it makes very little difference because somebody has to furnish the money to build the road before they are of any value, and there must be a prior mortgage on them before our mortgage comes in, so it makes little difference.

[Mr. Carvell.]

Mr. MEIGHEN: There will be more mileage.

Mr. CARVELL: I see what you mean. We will have liabilities of $400,000,000, but a little more mileage.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not say that the figures are right, but the principle is right.

Mr. CARVELL: That is the load that we are assuming, that is the load which my friends say is a good business transaction.

Let us go back for a moment. In my judgment the worst mistake which the Government has made is to take the $40,000,000 of common stock. I look upon that partnership business as being the most vicious portion of the whole transaction. See what happens. Here are $400,000,000 of securities or mortgages, to use plain English, against this institution. We become partners and we take four-tenths of the common stock. We have got to make that common stock pay because Mackenzie and Mann Company, who are the big end of the show, will say: You have got to make it pay, you have got to keep up the rates where it will pay; you dare not cut the rates, because if you do it will not pay and then you will foreclose your mortgage and we will lose our equity. Therefore the Government will be compelled to keep the rates up. If I lived in western Canada, there is no part of this whole bargain that I would vote against with as good relish and with such a feeling that I was doing the Lord's service and the service of the country, as I would against assuming that $40,000,000 of common stock, because from the moment we become partners in this scheme we will be compelled to keep rates up, and if we keep them up on the Canadian Northern railway so as to pay dividends on the common stock, the Grand Trunk Pacific will have an absolute right to keep up their rates and the Canadian Pacific railway must keep up theirs, so that every railway company in Canada must keep its rates up and the people of the West, instead of getting the reduction on freight rates for which they have been praying for ten years, will find themselves saddled with a condition of affairs which makes it absolutely impossible to reduce rates in the future because the Government have assumed the position of partner in this concern. We are practically third or fourth or fifth mortgages of this concern. We all know the position of the second or third mortgagee. He is at the mercy of the first mortgagee in every instance. The moment the first mortgagee wants his money the second mortgagee must pay it. If there is one thing which I think is the result of this transaction more than anything else, and this may not be an unmixed evil, it is that all the provinces who have assumed liabilities for the Canadian Northern railway are absolutely wiped out, so far as liability is concerned, and it is handed over on the shoulders of the Dominion. Take British Columbia, which is perhaps the most outrageous example of guaranteeing railway bonds in Canada or any other country in the world. That little province of considerably less than half a million people, although it has a vast area and great natural resources—although the resources are not of very great value without people and I am sorry to say the province of British Columbia is not increasing in population to anything like the extent it ought considering its natural resources—has assumed liabilities of $48,000,000 in order to help out the Canadian Northern Railway system. A debt of $48,000,000 is placed upon the heads of less than half a million people, to build a road which is absolutely unnecessary, which is the worst piece of railway building I have ever heard of, a road which parallels the Grand Trunk Pacific for the first two hundred miles and which parallels the Canadian Pacific railway for the last two hundred miles or more, and which has only about one hundred and fifty miles in the middle between the two which goes through new territory. Nearly $40,000,000 of our money are being expended to build that road, which is practically all the way paralleling existing lines; and there is no doubt that the British Columbia Government have been in a terrible position during the last year on account of it. We know that they have guaranteed bonds to a large amount on this railway, during the last year for $10,000 a mile additional, making $45,000 a mile of bond guarantee upon this road. I am told, and I do not think that my friends opposite will deny, that this last $10,000,000 has been advanced very largely for the purpose of providing interest charges. The Government will have to pay it in the end, but we will provide the bonds and we will borrow the money to pay the interest with, and it will not look so bad to the people of British Columbia. What is true of British Columbia is true of the other provinces to some extent, although not nearly to as great an extent as in that province. When you come down to Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba, I do not look upon the assistance given there as being so vicious, because, while they have gone into the matter pretty largely, yet they have roads in the prairies which are of some value and the roads go through a country where there are people and where there will be more people, and the more people there are the more dividends there will be, and, therefore, even if the Canadian Northern railway defaulted in these provinces I imagine that the first mortgages which the provinces hold on the road would probably be all right. But when we come to British Columbia, if the Canadian Northern railway defaulted on these bonds, I do not believe you could sell that road for one-half of what they are putting into it, not to say anything of the enormous amount which the Dominion has put into it. What is the result? We are taking the load off the shoulders of the British Columbia people, we are assuming the entire responsibility. Just imagine for a moment what will happen when they attempt to foreclose the bonds and the mortgage held by the province of British Columbia if the interest is not paid. We will have to pay the money. If we do not they will foreclose the mortgages, and if they foreclose the mortgages who will pay them? Not Mackenzie and Mann Company, Limited, because they have nothing to pay. Not the Canadian Northern railway, because they have no money. Who but the people of Canada will be compelled to stand in and pay the mortgages if they are foreclosed—and rather than have them foreclosed we will pay up the interest and the result is that the Dominion of Canada are assuming the entire interest charge, not only of British Columbia, but of all the other provinces in Canada. This brings us back to my original proposition. We are assuming a burden of $400,000,000 for which the Dominion of Canada is liable and responsible in order to help out this concern. I wonder if the game is worth the candle. It looks to me as if no financial transaction has ever been carried out that will compare with it for a moment for lack of business ability. When I heard my hon. friends compare this road with the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Canadian Pacific railway, when I considered the condition of affairs existing to-day as compared with the condition in 1884 when the Canadian Pacific railway came to this Parliament for assistance, the condition of affairs so graphically described by the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. Bennett) on Thursday of last week, when those great railway magnates who had put up every dollar they had in the world when they had almost gone to the extent of putting up securities which they did not have to put up, when they had pledged the credit of the Bank of Montreal for every dollar it would stand, when those people came here and said they would put up every cent they had, when they became personally responsible for it, when they had advanced every dollar they had in buying stock—compare the attitude of those great men with the attitude of those two patriots, who are coming here to-day. These patriots have had $300,000,000 out of the people of Canada and the lending public of England. They have never put up a dollar themselves, and are not willing to pledge their own personal property even to the extent of a guarantee of $4,000,000 or $5,000,000. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to compare these two conditions of affairs and then say whether there is any parallel between the conditions when the Canadian Pacific railway came to us thirty years ago and the present state of affairs. Take the Canadian Pacific Railway system. Let any man travel over the Canadian Northern railway and the Canadian Pacific railway, and see if he can find any parallel in the physical condition of these two undertakings. The Canadian Pacific railway has some roads, I admit, which are second or third class, but it has thousands and thousands of miles of the finest road on the continent. In the last ten years they have spent millions of dollars on their roadbed from the Atlantic to the Pacific—a road which must be worth twice as many dollars per mile as the Canadian Northern railway. And yet my hon. friend talks about comparing these two! He talks about the cost of the Grand Trunk Pacific. A man would only have to ride over the Grand Trunk Pacific and look over the other road in order to form an appreciation of the character of the Grand Trunk Pacific as compared with the Canadian Northern railway. My hon. friends admit that there is not a road in America to equal the Grand Trunk Pacific. They complain of the cost, but I say that if they multiplied this $45,000,000 three or four times, they would never make the Canadian Northern railway into a road the equal of the Grand Trunk Pacific. They could hardly have such a road. It is true the Canadian Northern railway has about as good grades through the mountains as the Grand Trunk Pacific.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Better.

Mr. CARVELL: I deny that. The Canadian Northern railway's grade going east is seven-tenths of one per cent, except for a twenty-mile stretch where it is seven-tenths, the Grand Trunk Pacific grade is only six-tenths.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Canadian Northern railway is seven-tenths for only a short stretch of less than eight miles.

Mr. CARVELL: I will accept my hon. friend's figures.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Now compare the grades going west.

Mr. CARVELL: I have not the figures.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Canadian Northern has no grade at all.

Mr. CARVELL: That is all right; I want to give this concern every credit that is due. There are so many items on the other side of the scales, that we should not refuse to gratify my hon. friend with the few little crumbs of comfort that may fall to him. When you come to compare the cost of these roads for the whole system, there is no comparison at all, and no man knows it better than the Solicitor General.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I thoroughly agree. There is no comparison at all.

Mr. CARVELL: My hon. friend will admit that the Grand Trunk Pacific through the prairies has cost an average of $40,000 to $42,000 a mile. In the case of the Canadian Northern railway what have we: sleepers almost laid upon the prairie; no ditches; hundreds and thousands of wooden trestles and wooden culverts; one and one-half to two per cent grades; a mere surface road.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, no. I have the profile here if you wish to see it.

Mr. CARVELL: I am talking about the branch lines, not the main line, and there are hundreds of miles of the character I have described. They all go to make up the 5,350 miles in the central section. My hon. friend admitted that even with hundreds of miles of that character to make up the 5,350 miles in the central section, there are securities outstanding to the extent of $35,000 a mile.

Mr. MEIGHEN: With this $45,000,000.

Mr. CARVELL: None of this $45,000,000 is going on that section.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Oh, yes; about $15,000,000.

Mr. CARVELL: No; $8,000,000 is going to pay off their debts, but that does not improve the physical condition of the road at all.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It has been already helped.

Mr. CARVELL: And it is still in the deplorable condition I have described. In addition to that $8,000,000, $6,694,000 goes towards betterments, and when you take that into account you have a mud road, costing $35,000 a mile, and you are going to pay interest on it. Is there a man in this House that will say that a road like that could have cost $35,000 a mile?

Mr. MEIGHEN: My hon. friend has made an error, perhaps unintentionally. How does he say that this whole $45,000,000 is to be charged against that section to make up the $35,000 a mile.

Mr. CARVELL: I took the $6,694,000, which is all that goes into the road.

Mr. MEIGHEN: You cannot make it $35,000 a mile. Start in to do it.

Mr. CARVELL: I have my hon. friend's statement for it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Show it to me.

Mr. CARVELL: He will find it in his remarks.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Never in the world. I said, including all this $45,000,000.

Mr. CARVELL: What is the use of talking like that? My hon. friend knows that that $45,000,000 is not going into that part.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I said that if it all went there, it would only be $35,000 a mile.

Mr. CARVELL: My hon. friend said $40,000 a mile, although 'Hansard' has it at $35,000 a mile; I do not know why. I know my hon. friend said $40,000, because I sent him a note asking him how he made it up.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, $35,000.

Mr. CARVELL: I have the note here in my desk.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I did not make it up to $40,000; you cannot show me my note.

Mr. CARVELL: That is what you stated.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, I did not.

Mr. CARVELL: I knew I would bother my hon. friend when I came to this.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Not a bit.

Mr. CARVELL: My hon. friend knows the weak spots. He knows he has a cheap mud road.

Mr. J. D. REID: Did the hon. member ever see the road?

Mr. CARVELL: No, I have not been west of Winnipeg.

Mr. REID: Then, you do not know anything about it.

Mr. CARVELL: There are oceans of proof that the road is of the character I have described, and thousands of miles of it are not as good.

Mr. REID: Produce your proof.

Mr. CARVELL: It is easy to say, produce your proof. The proof is in the minds of millions of people in Canada, and in the minds of all those who have lived in the Northwest, and it is in the minds of dozens of members of this Parliament. It all comes back to this question. We are taking over a road of that character and are agreeing to pay fixed charges up to pretty nearly $35,000 a mile. It cannot be done. At the very moment we enter into partnership there will be a demand from the people to have these roads brought up to the proper standard, and the Dominion Government will simply have to put up millions of dollars to bring the road up to a decent standard. There will be a demand for additional branch lines—a perfectly proper demand, which must be complied with-which will cost the Dominion Government millions of dollars. Would it not be better to take the railroad over now than to allow these men to manipulate this $100,000,000 of funds for three or four years longer, and then come back and say: We cannot carry it on any longer, we must have further aid or you must take it over. What happens when we do take it over? If there was one portion of the address of my hon. friend from Calgary which impressed me more than anything else, it was that in which he described the foreclosure of this mortgage. I thought that my hon. friend got down to the existing facts and to real human nature a little closer than in any other portion of his great speech. As the hon. member for Montreal, St. Antoine (Mr. Ames), stated: It is true these men have been pretty bold actors; it is true these men have had very grave charges laid against them; it is true these men have been tried by the Government and have been found wanting, but we are going to give them one more chance, and, if they default again, down comes the axe and off go their heads. Talk about trying to foreclose this mortgage; you would see a lobby around here such as had never been heard of in Canada before. There would not be a contractor, a business man, a politician, anybody in Canada who had ever done business with these people but would be brought here in order to appeal to hon. gentlemen opposite to prevent this taking place. In the end, if it did take place, instead of foreclosing on $60,000,000 worth of stock we would be more likely to have to pay them $15,000,000 or $25,000,000 to get rid of them. That is the true inwardness of giving them this $60,000,000 of stock. It gives them absolute control of this money; it gives them the right to manage the business; it gives them the right to keep rates up against the western producer, and, more than that, if we want to attempt to foreclose this mortgage, it will give them the right to come here and demand from $15,000,000 to $25,000,000 in payment for their equity.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Would my hon. friend prefer the ordinary methods of foreclosing mortgages as embodied in the agreement of 1911?

Mr. CARVELL: I prefer the kind of agreement that the Government entered into with the Canadian Pacific railway thirty years ago.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am asking my hon. friend if he would prefer the ordinary methods of 1911?

Mr. CARVELL: My hon. friend must remember that in 1911, when we guaranteed the bonds, we had a mortgage upon this road. We had a security that there was something in; we had something which nobody could allow to be foreclosed. But here my hon. friend has as security merely a bankrupt concern. My hon. friend is putting up $45,000,000 when he knows that there is not more than 75 or 50 per cent of actual value behind it. There is as much difference between the North Pole and the South Pole as between the deal in 1911 and that in 1914. If my hon. friend wants a parallel, let him go back to the agreement with the Canadian Pacific railway in 1884. When the Canadian Pacific railway came here and said: We are up against the wall; we cannot sell our bonds and we cannot get any more money, Sir John Macdonald did not say: We will foreclose this mortgage if you come back to Parliament again, but Sir John Macdonald and the Conservative party of that day provided that automatically all their rights, all their equity of redemption, were gone if they defaulted upon the bonds.

Mr. MEIGHEN: After a year.

Mr. CARVELL: Yes, after a year. My hon. friend provides that there cannot be any default for three years. They can go on and ask the Dominion of Canada to pay the interest for three years, and they will ask us to pay every cent of it. We do not give them only $45,000,000, but we are compelled to pay the interest on that amount for three years, and all they have to do is to pay the interest upon the rest of the securities. After three years, if the interest is not paid upon these or any other securities, we cannot forclose them; we cannot cut their heads off, but they will simply come back to Parliament, and we are going to go through all this lobby again that many of us here have been watching for the last three months. We shall again have the lobby at work, but to a much greater degree than we have had it before, and, instead of foreclosing their equity, we will be compelled to pay them an enormous amount of money to get rid of them I have taken longer than I had intended, but this subject is so fascinating that one is apt to be carried away by it. When you see the blunders made by hon. gentlemen opposite, when you see how Mr. Z. A. Lash has taken these hon. gentlemen into camp and disposed of the whole of them, when you see the great benefits that he will get out of it as contrasted with what we get out of it, if you have any interest in this country you must find it a fascinating subject. I have tried to point out that we are not giving Mackenzie and Mann enough money to finish this road. We are only giving them money enough to pay their debts, and, worse than that, we are allowing them to handle this money and to pay these debts themselves. We are giving them the right to pay construction accounts about which we know nothing. We are giving them the right to use this money for betterments about which we know nothing. We are giving them the right to the use of this money and to the use of it at once, and yet the road will be left in the same position as it is. I do not know where they are going to get money, but if they can get the money, we are giving them the right to go on and finish the road which will take from $25,000,000 to $40,000,000 more. We are giving them the right to take $35,000,000 more out of the people and they own the road, or they own 60 per cent of it while we own 40 per cent. We are giving them the right to control freight rates and to keep them at any point they have a mind to. We are assuming the responsibility not only of paying $400,000,000 of a mortgage, but of paying the interest and of the foreclosure of these securities as they mature.

I say that we ought to have some light on this subject. We ought to have an investigation. We ought to know where the money has gone and to whom it has gone, how much has gone into the railway and how much into somebody's pocket. We want to know how much these two gentlemen have got out of it. We are giving them $60,000,000 of stock and up to the present time not one dollar of their own has gone into it. We ought to have an investigation into that. We ought to know what the road has cost. We ought to know what it is going to cost to complete the system, what it is going to cost to build new branch lines and where this money is going. Then, Sir, I am satisfied that the condition of affairs will not only be shown to be bad, but that it will be shown to be so bad that this company will be compelled to come back to this Parliament in two years from now and ask for further advances. My hon. friends opposite ought to give us some light upon these matters, they ought to have an investigation and find out the true condition of affairs and, if they are as we suspect they are, they ought to eliminate these two men. I am not finding fault with Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann; they are big actors, they are men who have played the game and lost. They gambled in the biggest way that men ever did in the Dominion of Canada. They gambled and lost, and now my hon. friends come to the rescue and say: Let them go on and gamble and win. If my hon. friends opposite are putting up the money to help them to gamble, we should have the equity and not they, and that would mean that the people of Canada would get it.

While I have never been very much enamoured of government ownership, and while I would not look forward to the adoption of that principle with any great degree of comfort, still I would rather see this handed over to a commission to be operated by this Government than that it should be handed over to these two gentlemen. It is better for us, it is better for the people, it is better for the farmers in the western country to reduce the freight rates on the system, because it will not have earned sufficient money to pay dividends. You give Mackenzie and Mann this $60,000,000 of stock and you are compelled to keep the rates where they can earn dividends. If you take over the road, and if you put it in the hands of a commission, you can run it as you are running the Intercolonial railway—at cost. You do not have to earn dividends, you only have to charge sufficient rates to pay the fixed charges, and while you are bringing down the rates on the Canadian Northern railway you are at the same time bringing down the rates on the Canadian Pacific railway and Grand Trunk Pacific. You give the people transportation at the cheapest possible cost under existing circumstances. For these reasons, and considering the very great paucity of information we possess, the terrible responsibilities we assume, and the condition of affairs which is likely to ensue, I shall have great pleasure in voting for the amendment of my hon. friend from Pictou.

Hon. W. T. WHITE (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I must crave the indulgence of the House; a bronchial cold has almost robbed me of my voice and what I have to say must necessarily be said briefly. My hon. friend (Mr. Carvell) has commented upon the fact that hitherto no minister other than the Prime Minister has spoken on this question, but that only goes to show how unreasonable my hon. friend can be at times. It shows his lack of appreciation of a very delicate compliment on our part, because we desired to have the benefit of the lucubrations of the hon. gentleman from Carleton on this question. We knew he would illumine it. It is not my intention to follow him in his excursion into the realm of figures. My hon. friend is always interesting as a dialectician, but as a mathematician he is a hopeless failure. His literary training I think was reasonably good, but he has grave cause for dissatisfaction with the teacher of his youth who instructed him in arithmetic. I have no doubt the Solicitor General will straighten out all the tangles which befog his brain when we get into Committee on the Resolution.

The issue before the House is simple: shall the Government afford aid to the Canadian Northern system? Is this the time to afford it, and if so have we adopted the best method of affording it, and has the public interest been sufficiently safeguarded by the proposals of the Government? These are in general terms the questions which are involved in the consideration of the resolutions now before the House.

It is customary in dealing with financial legislation affecting railways to dilate upon the importance to the people of Canada of the transportation problem. That problem is of vital and paramount importance; it is common ground to both political parties, and there is no necessity to touch upon it now.

There is another question which has been much controverted;—has our railway policy in Canada been mistaken; have we aimed too high; have we sought to accomplish too much; have we, as has been said by some, one transcontinental railway too many in Canada? Are there too many lines traversing the north shore of lake Superior?

Much can be said for this view, but the time has gone by for debating the question. We have three transcontinental railway systems, one the greatest in the world; the other two nearing completion. The past is irrevocable. The book is closed, no matter whether its pages may have been writ well or writ ill. The die has been cast, and we have to deal with the situation as we find it. Whether mistakes have been made or have not been made, it is idle now to discuss. It is, in my judgment, the wisest policy to make the best of things, to accept what is inevitable, and above all to strongly believe that with courage and with hope and with resolution affairs can be made to work out satisfactorily. I firmly believe that the railway situation of Canada will work out. This country has resources illimitable; wealth beyond the dreams of avarice for those who will succeed in it. The various geographical sections of Canada are empires in extent, and variety of natural production capable of sustaining a population many times as numerous as that we have inhabiting our Dominion to-day. Is the population of Canada to remain fixed, crystallized, and stereotyped, and is the transportation policy of Canada to have regard to the present only? Is imagination to play no part in our policy? Must the railway follow the plough rather than the plough the railway? Would the Canadian Pacific railway ever have been constructed had the vision of its builders seen only the population of the eighties? Would the Northwest be the Northwest of to-day, or the boundless and barren prairie of years ago, had it not been for the vision of statesmen and of railway builders who, with enterprise unparalleled, have carried their lines of railway to its uttermost parts, bringing colonization and civilization in their train? Situated as we are geographically, what has the opening of the West meant to the East? I say, Sir, that it has meant advantage incalculable. We have manifold return for the money spent in railway development, even though millions may have been needlessly and mistakenly expended. We are only on the threshold of our great adventure in the extension of civilization to the vast plains of the Canadian West.

Shall we stop now? Shall we lose courage upon the very verge of success? Shall we lose sight of the millions of population still to come? As for me, I have an abiding faith in the destiny of this country. No other creed can permanently be in keeping with the spirit, the determination, and the aspirations of the Canadian people. Parliament, I am sure, will never be wanting in imagination in dealing with the larger problems of this great Dominion.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what is the existing railway situation in Canada? What is the situation with which this Government has found itself confronted? We have had to finish the eastern section of the National Transcontinental railway; the money has been found and will be found as required. The road is almost completed. The year before we came into power the late Government had taken a step which determined that the Canadian Northern railway should be a transcontinental system, by guaranteeing securities to the extent of $35,000,000 upon the line of the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway, from Montreal to Port Arthur. Construction upon this and other lines of the Canadian Northern Ontario was well advanced. There was then the action of the Government of British Columbia in guaranteeing securities upon the line of the Canadian Northern Pacific, which was then under way through the Rocky mountains from the Yellowhead Pass to New Westminster, a most expensive line, costing in some places $100,000 per mile. During our first year in office we granted a subsidy at the rate of $12,000 per mile to this line, and I say that if under any circumstances whatever railway subsidies are justifiable, the subsidy of $12,000 per mile which we granted to the Canadian Northern Pacific in respect to its lines through the Rocky mountains, was abundantly justified. This brings me to the year 1913, a year of stress, a year of strain, a period of financial stringency the most severe—

An hon. MEMBER: Hear, hear.

Mr. WHITE: My hon. friend may laugh. I do not know whether he understands the severity of the financial stringency, the most severe, the most widespread, that has been experienced I believe during the lifetime of any member of this House. That stringency was due to world-wide causes which stopped the supply of capital at its source, the great international money centres, causing retrenchment and embarrassment to enterprises in all parts of the world. It was in this posture, in this extremity of affairs that the Canadian Northern Railway Company last year made application for aid by way of subsidy and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company for aid made application by way of loan. The subsidy in the one case amounted to thirteen or fourteen million dollars and the loan amounted to fifteen million dollars. The subsidies were given by this Government and the loan was made. Had the Government not taken the action it did, railway construction must have ceased in Canada upon the two lines in question. What the result would have been to Canadian securities in London and, by consequence, upon Canadian credit and prosperity, I leave to the imagination of this House. There is no need to apologize, and I do not apologize for the action of the Government last year. I say that it was strong, courageous, timely, necessary action. Had it not been taken, those of the public who have criticised us for taking it would have to-day execrated us for not having taken it. In connection with these subsidies, we obtained stock in the Canadian Northern Railway Company to the extent of $7,000,000, par value. My hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald), for whom I always cherish, as he knows, a high regard, the other evening indulged in some caustic witticism at my expense with reference to the issue of the stock certificate covering these 70,000 shares. I think he said that they had turned on the printing press.

Mr. MACDONALD: That is what the hon. member from Calgary (Mr. Bennett) said. I just adopted his statement.

Mr. WHITE: I thought my hon. friend had not only adopted it, but made it his own. If he has not made it his own, I will consider it withdrawn and will forget it.

Mr. MACDONALD: No.

Mr. GERMAN: Is not that what they did ?

Mr. WHITE: I will come to what they did.

Mr. CARVELL: They turned on the printing press later on.

Mr. WHITE: My hon. friend says that they turned on the printing press in order to print a stock certificate. I have had some experience with stock certificates; and as a general thing they are printed or engraved, so far as I know. I think my hon. friend will agree with me so far. Let us see what happened with regard to this issue of stock certificates for 70,000 fully-paid shares of the Canadian Northern Railway Company stock. There was absolutely no deception of this House on the part of either the Canadian Northern Railway Company or Mackenzie, Mann and Company. The Subsidy Bill showed as clearly as words could show the intention of the Government, the intention of Parliament, in the legislation relating to the issue of the 70,000 shares of the Canadian Northern Railway Company stock, that it was in part consideration of the subsidy which the Government was granting to the system. I am going to put on 'Hansard,' because this matter has been discussed very widely, and because some most unjust statements have been made respecting the Canadian Northern Railway Company with regard to the issue of this certificate, sections 8 and 9 of the Subsidy Act of last session, which is as follows:

8. No subsidy shall be granted under this Act unless and until there shall have been issued and transferred upon the books of the Canadian Northern Railway Company to the Minister of Finance and Receiver General of Canada, in trust for His Majesty, shares in the common stock of the Canadian Northern Railway Company of the par value of $7,000,000, which said stock and all rights appurtenant thereto shall be held for the benefit of His Majesty absolutely, and shall be deemed to be fully paid up, non-assessable and not subject to calls; provided that the said stock or any part thereof may be disposed of under the authority of Parliament upon such terms and conditions as it may determine and the proceeds of the sale thereof paid into the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

9. The Canadian Northern Railway Company is hereby authorized and empowered to issue and transfer to the Minister of Finance and Receiver General of Canada, in trust as aforesaid, from and out of the authorized capital shares of its common stock of the par value of seven million dollars fully paid up and non-assessable and not subject to calls as aforesaid, upon the consideration of the Governor in Council undertaking to grant to the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Company and the Canadian Northern Alberta Railway Company the subsidies referred to in section 2 of this Act upon the terms aforesaid, and such stock when so issued and transferred shall be deemed fully paid without further or other consideration.

What was the position? The Government of Canada gave $15,000,000 by way of subsidy to the Canadian Northern Railway system, and the Canadian Northern in part consideration issued $7,000,000 par value of fully paid shares of its stock. If any stock in the world was fully paid, that was, because it was paid in full in part consideration of the subsidy granted by Parliament to the Canadian Northern system. I wish to clear up that point, because a great deal too much has been made of it.

Mr. MACDONALD: Will my hon. friend go on record as telling the House and the country last year that the stock he was getting, apart from the technical interpretation of the Act, was entirely new stock that was to be issued, or that it was to be part of the stock already in existence?

Mr. WHITE: I certainly did not tell the House or the country that it was part of the stock already existing.

Mr. MACDONALD: You did not tell the House that it was not.

Mr. WHITE: The legislation was before the House. It was open to my hon. friends. Every section in the Act, including the two sections I have read, were discussed in committee. There was absolutely no mystery about the matter whatever; and it is unjust to the Canadian Northern Railway Company that it should be spread broadcast throughout the country, under the authority of so eminent a parliamentarian as my hon. friend from Pictou, that they had printed stock certificates and given illusory stock, because, as a matter of fact, the Parliament, of which he is a member, enacted that the stock was fully paid and issued as part payment for the subsidy granted by Parliament.

Mr. GERMAN: Was the $7,000,000 worth of stock issued to the Government part of the $70,000,00 that had already been issued?

Mr. WHITE: I do not know what my hon. friend had in his mind?

Mr. GERMAN: Did not my hon. friend have that in his mind?

[Mr. W. T. White.]

Mr. WHITE: I had this in my mind, that the Canadian Northern Railway Company was to issue this stock as fully paid, as set forth in the legislation already before the House.

Mr. GERMAN: Of that which had already been issued?

Mr. WHITE: The legislation is absolutely contrary to the views expressed by my hon. friend from Welland. He was in this House and the legislation was before him. The legislation expressly stated that the 70,000 shares were to be issued from the authorized capital. There is a difference between authorized capital and issued capital. There is not one word in the statute to say that it was to be from the issued capital; it was to be from the authorized capital.

Mr. MACDONALD: My hon. friend did not say that to the House.

Mr. WHITE: The stock certificate was issued in accordance with the legislation of Parliament. What I did say to the House was that the Government would hold one-tenth. There was $70,000,000 worth of stock outstanding; and if I had taken into consideration the additional $7,000,000 which we would receive, it would then be one-eleventh. That would be a difference of one-one hundred and tenth. If my hon. friend in his debates in this House will come within a fraction of one-one hundred and tenth of the truth, he will be doing much better that is usual for him.

What is the position to-day? The Canadian Northern Railway Company comes before the Government and shows a condition of affairs in which $100,000,000 is required to finish their line. Of this they have resources to provide $58,000,000, and they ask for a guarantee sufficient to produce the balance of $42,000,000. I desire to point out that this is the actual position of affairs. Here is a road in the condition disclosed in the financial statement which has been laid before the House. The Government has been confronted with a condition, not with a hypothesis. It is not very often that I tell a story in this House; but I believe it is allowable. When I consider the railway situation bequeathed by my right hon. friend for the solution of this Government, I am reminded of the story of a beneficiary of an estate the affairs of which were much complicated. She said: 'If I had known that we would have so much trouble with the affairs of this estate, I would much rather that uncle had never died.'

At six o'clock, the House took recess.

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. WHITE (Resuming): When the House rose at six o'clock, I was dealing with the railway situation with which we were confronted. I said that we had to deal with a condition and not a hypothesis. The Canadian Northern Railway system requires $100,000,000 to complete its enterprise. It is prepared to provide $58,000,000 and it has asked the Government of Canada to provide the additional $42,000,000 by guarantee of an issue of 4 per cent bonds of the par value of $45,000,000, which may be expected to realize in the neighbourhood of the required $42,000,000. The question, therefore, before the House is whether we shall grant the aid which is sought by the Canadian Northern Railway system or allow it to go into default. Let us consider for a moment the railway system in question. It has main lines extending from Quebec to Vancouver. It has feeders in almost every province. It has the constituent and subsidiary companies specified in the schedules to the resolutions, exceeding, I think, thirty in all, a system of railway, express, transfer, telegraph, steamship, land and tunnel and terminal companies. It represents at present 7,000 miles of railroad and when it is completed it will represent 10,000 miles. Upon this system some $300,000,000 of securities have been issued and it is to-day confronted, as I have said, with the necessity of obtaining further aid from the Government of Canada or a receivership. A system so vast and complicated as the Canadian Northern Railway system has necessarily involved itself with the vital interests of the country and we find iron and steel companies, rolling stock companies, supply companies, great mercantile and manufacturing establishments, all dependent in some measure, and some in large measure, upon the continuance of the immense activities of this system. The Canadian Northern Railway system has received sums exceeding $20,000,000 in subsidies, has received in guarantees some $130,000,000 from the federal and provincial governments, and has raised in the neighbourhood of $170,000,000 on its own securities. Almost every province in Canada has pledged its credit in connection with the securities of this road and therefore we have the situation that, by reason of the interest which they have in this system, the Dominion and provincial governments and the industrial and other establishments I have mentioned, are all vitally interested in this company and its system being maintained as a going concern. Of its securities there are hundreds of millions upon the London and European markets. It has done much to develop the West, and the West to-day is calling for more rolling stock, for better service and for extension of the Canadian Northern railway to the unsettled districts. The question, therefore, which we have to determine, and which the Government has determined, is whether this system, which is on the very verge of completion, shall be allowed to default on its securities and go into the hands of a receiver. I say that no thinking man in Canada can answer that question in the affirmative. I say it is unthinkable that the Canadian Northern railway, with these thirty subsidiary companies, railway, express, telegraph, steamship line and terminal companies, shall be allowed to go into the hands of a receiver, having regard to the interest that I have described of the Dominion and of the provincial governments in the road, and to the importance of the continuance of the activities of this system to all the manufacturing and business interests in Canada. Can the matter be allowed to stand for six months? I say the answer to that is supplied by the financial statement which has been laid upon the table. I say that prompt and immediate action by the Government and by Parliament is required in this matter. It is true that this road has been generously helped by the Dominion and other governments in Canada, in other words by the public, in the past. My hon. friend from Carleton (Mr. Carvell) this afternoon said that they had 'buccaneered' $200,000,000 out of the people of Canada. Well, they have not buccaneered any such sum out of the people of Canada since this Government has been in power. I would like to point out to my hon. friend that the late Government gave guarantees to the Canadian Northern railway to about $58,000,000. One of the last acts of the late Government was to give a guarantee of $35,000,000 upon the securities of the Canadian Northern Ontario line from Montreal to Port Arthur. That sum is only $10,000,000 less than the guarantee that we are giving to-day, so that if the promoters of this road have buccaneered the people of Canada out of $200,000,000, my hon. friend must assume responsibility for his share of complicity in respect to the guarantees so given.

There has been a great deal of confusion of thought in this matter. Attention has been fixed upon Mackenzie and Mann. I desire to say that Mackenzie and Mann as individuals are of absolutely no interest or concern to this Government. If the question at issue related only to the advantage or disadvantage of Mackenzie and Mann the Government would not waste a moment upon it. The only basis of the action of the Government is the interests of the people of Canada, and I say that it is in the interests of the people of Canada that this system—the Canadian Northern with all its subsidiary and constituent companies, 7,000 miles of completed line, and, later on, 10,000 miles—should receive the aid which it seeks in order that the road may be completed. The personal vicissitudes of Mackenzie and Mann, enterprising railway builders as they have been, are of no interest to us; if no public interest were at stake there would be no basis for action on the part of the Government. I repeat that the foundation of the action of the Government in this matter is the public interest. It is in the interests of the people of Canada that this vast system should be completed, linked up, and made productive.

There is another consideration. Shall we allow the general credit of Canada to be impaired in the London market by default on the part of this railway company, and shall the provinces be called upon for their guarantees? That is a question of interest to every member of this House. I have heard men speak lightly of putting a system like this into a receivership. Considering the many classes of securities which have been issued by this company, ranking as they do in their several orders, I put forward the assertion that in the event of a receivership for this system it would be years before the road was on its feet again. Does any member of this House seriously say that a receivership of this complicated body of corporate enterprises could be carried out without enormous legal and other costs, and without a most injurious influence upon the business of this country as a whole, because you find this company's lines in every province, and I have explained that this Government and the provincial governments, and all the manufacturing and mercantile establishments of Canada, are interested in the continuance of the activities of this system. I sometimes think we do not realize how vastly complicated a system the Canadian Northern railway is. I say, therefore, that if any other solution can be found a receivership should be unthinkable, and I am glad that my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. Graham) and other gentlemen opposite agree with me in that. I say, and they say, that the road must go on to completion in the interests of the people of Canada. In the case of a single corporation where no question would arise as to constituent or subsidiary companies a receivership would be serious, but it would be infinitely more serious where you have not one company but twenty or thirty to be dealt with under the slow process of a receivership. Only one thing could happen: The dispersal or disintegration of the whole system. Even with the Government as a receiver, as one hon. gentleman has suggested, damage beyond repair would be done to the credit of the company.

The Government has given the question prolonged and painstaking attention and consideration. I venture to say that no question that has ever come before a government of Canada has received more profound and more serious consideration than this application of the Canadian Northern Railway Company for aid. Upon a review of the whole situation, of all the considerations involved, we have come to the conclusion that I believe every thinking man has come to who has had the facts before him that it is the clear duty of the Dominion of Canada to come to the assistance of the Canadian Northern Railway Company. We were not without precedents for such action. As I have said, in 1911, the Government under the leadership of the right hon. leader of the Opposition gave the Canadian Northern railway a guarantee to the extent of $35,000,000 upon its line from Montreal to Port Arthur, and when they did that they cast the die that determined the Canadian Northern railway as one of the transcontinental systems of Canada. My hon. friend from Carleton talks about 'buccaneering' the country by getting these guarantees. Did he protest in 1911 against that $35,000,000 guarantee? Where, where was Roderick then? He may have been in the House, but he did not act like Roderick. So far as I can make out, he said very little.

My hon. friend the Solicitor General says he spoke eleven words. Well, sometimes silence is golden, and I am not sure that my hon. friend was not as wise in giving utterance to those eleven words as he was in his discourse of an hour and a half this afternoon, although I listened to him with much pleasure. What about the Grand Trunk Pacific?

Mr. CARVELL: All right.

Mr. WHITE: My hon. friend says 'all right.' What about the Grand Trunk Pacific? My hon. friend institutes a comparison between the cost of the Canadian Northern and the Grand Trunk Pacific. Does he know what the Grand Trunk Pacific will cost? How much will the Grand Trunk Pacific cost between Winnipeg and Edmonton? Will it cost from $45,000 to $50,000 a mile before it comes out of the construction stage? How much will it cost from Edmonton to Prince Rupert through the Rocky mountains? Does my hon. friend know that £14,000,000 Government guaranteed securities have been issued in respect of the western division?

Mr. MACDONALD: How much will the Canadian Northern cost?

Mr. WHITE: We will come to that. For a man of his appearance, ancestry, and place of residence, my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) loses his patience upon occasion to an extent greater than we would have reason to expect. My hon. friend must cultivate the gift of patience because when I am talking about the Grand Trunk Pacific I propose to talk about the Grand Trunk Pacific, and nothing that the hon. gentleman may say is going to deter me from speaking about it. I was referring to the £14,000,000 mortgage outstanding on the prairie and mountain sections of the Grand Trunk Pacific. I am making no adverse comment, but I am pointing out, in regard to the $200,000,000 which my hon. friend from Carleton says was buccaneered from the people of Canada, that we have in connection with the Grand Trunk Pacific from Winnipeg to Edmonton guarantees by the Dominion Government at a rate not exceeding $13,000 a mile, and we have from Wolfe Creek, west of Edmonton to Prince Rupert, a guarantee equal to three-quarters of the cost of the mountain section, and that, with reference to these two sections, the Dominion Government have already guaranteed securities to the full par value of £14,000,000, or nearly $70,000,000. My hon. friend says 'all right.' My hon. friend should look at the cost of the Grand Trunk Pacific from Wolfe River to Prince Rupert. I think he will find—and I am not in any way criticising adversely the Grand Trunk Pacific or its construction, which is not pertinent to the consideration of the present question—that the cost of the construction of the Canadian Northern in the three prairie provinces and the cost of the construction of the Canadian Northern Pacific through the Rocky mountains will compare very favourably—more than very favourably—with the cost of the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific from Winnipeg to Edmonton and from Edmonton, or Wolfe Creek, to Prince Rupert. My hon. friend will say that one is a better built road than the other.

Mr. CARVELL: How much did the Grand Trunk Pacific people put into the road themselves?

Mr. WHITE: I can tell my hon. friend. In addition to the guarantee of $13,000 a mile, the Grand Trunk Pacific people put in the balance themselves up to the cost, say $45,000 a mile, which it will probably amount to before it is taken out of the construction stage.

Mr. CARVELL: $45,000 when equipped?

Mr. WHITE: $45,000 a mile.

Mr. CARVELL: When equipped?

Mr. J. D. REID: No, not equipped.

Mr. WHITE: The Government of Canada has guaranteed securities to an amount equal to three-quarters of the cost of the mountain section. There is only one-quarter of the cost supplied by the Grand Trunk Pacific and that is the place where the cost is greatest. Then my hon. friend from Carleton probably knows that the late Government gave the Grand Trunk Pacific interest for seven years upon the securities issued with respect to the mountain section without recourse. Next year I must begin paying $1,500,000 or $2,000,000 per year at the rate of three per cent upon the Government securities outstanding in respect to the mountain section of the Grand Trunk Pacific. I do not know whether my hon. friend will apply the term 'buccaneering' to the assistance given to the Grand Trunk Pacific. If so, I would like to know how he differentiates it from the assistance which has been given, not only by this Government, but by the late Government. to the Canadian Northern. Why is the one buccaneering and the other not buccaneering?

The Government has reached the conclusion that it is its clear duty to give assistance to this road and to meet its request for a guarantee of $45,000,000 for its completion. The hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. Graham), in a speech the other day, favoured a loan instead of a guarantee. I think it was in his mind—I am not sure that he so expressed himself—that money could be raised by way of loan at a less rate of interest than it could be raised by way of guarantee. That is true. But I would point out to my hon. friend that the Government itself has to resort to the English money market from time to time and place issues of its four per cent or standard security. There is a market for a direct security of the Dominion that does not exist for an indirect or guaranteed security. That market is the trustee market of Great Britain because a Dominion security is a trustee security. The guaranteed security finds a little wider market, it appeals to a different class of investors who are not restricted to a trustee security, and the Dominion can offer its own direct securities on the so-called trustee market, which is a comparatively narrow market. There is a very much wider market for the guaranteed securities. Forty-five million dollars is a large sum of money and, having regard to the finances of the Dominion, it is very much better that the assistance should be rendered by way of a guarantee rather than by way of a direct loan. Even if such a loan were secured, the guarantee will be secured by the trust mortgage, as indicated in the resolution. The Government, therefore, reached the conclusion, as my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition reached the conclusion, and, I think the majority of the members of this House—in fact I think every hon. gentleman in this House—reached the conclusion that some assistance must be afforded to this system, that it cannot be allowed to default not by reason of the fact that Mackenzie and Mann asked for aid but by reason of the interest that the people of Canada have in its completion and operation of the system. The Government having reached the conclusion that aid should be afforded, the question came up as to security. We have in this system a parent company, the Canadian Northern Railway Company, and we have all the constituents, railways, telegraphs, express, terminals, land, bridge and other companies mentioned in the schedule to this resolution forming part of the Canadian Northern system but not yet linked up, not joined, by amalgamation and not united by ownership of stock in the parent or chief company. My hon. friend the leader of the Opposition, in his speech the other day, made a point which was well worthy of attention. It was a point that would occur to any one thinking of the matter earnestly, as no doubt he did—to any one familiar with railway questions. He said: Why not amalgamate all these companies? Why not a physical amalgamation, why should these properties not all be under one single ownership? That was a very important and proper question for my right hon. friend to ask. My hon. friend the Solicitor General gave a number of reasons why that was not feasible. There is a reason which, I think, he overlooked, and which, I submit, to my right hon. friend. All these companies have done their financing to a certain extent separately, and a number of them have bond issues outstanding secured by trust mortgages upon their assets and undertakings. Some of these bonds have been issued, and some of them remain to be issued, under the provisions of the trust mortgages under which they were created and under which they may be issued. It will be obvious to my right hon. friend that if we should amalgamate in a physical sense all these properties we would immediately confuse the financing, the security would become mingled and it would be impossible to issue, on behalf of certain companies bonds heretofore authorized but not yet issued, because the mortgage securing the perpetual debenture stock of the Canadian Northern Railway Company which constitutes a charge upon its whole undertaking—the widest word in company law would at once attach to all property conveyed to the Canadian Northern Railway Company. Therefore, no matter what may be done in the future, it is impossible at the present time, having regard to the existing financial situation, to physically amalgamate these properties. The Government did the next best thing; the Government did what alone could be done; the Government insisted that the Canadian Northern, the parent company, should get into its treasury the capital stock of all these constituents and subsidiary companies. There has been a good deal of talk of watered stock and reflections have been cast, I will not say upon the good faith of gentlemen on this side of the House, with regard to the arrangement outlined in the resolution as to getting in the stock of these subsidiary and constituent companies. Let me call attention to something that has been overlooked; paragraph 14 of the resolution reads:

> No shares of the capital stock of the respective companies mentioned in the first schedule hereto, other than the Canadian Northern, beyond the amounts heretofore issued, shall be issued without the consent of the Governor in Council.

I call the attention of the House to that. All these companies, or most of them, at all events a number of them, have authorized stock issues, and I pointed out to the House last year that if there is one respect in which the Parliament of Canada, in my judgment, has been lax, it has been in permitting the overcapitalization of railway companies. Both sides of the House are responsible in a large measure for that. There has not been the attention, and thought, and judgment, given to the question of how much capital should be allowed to a railway company, as there ought to have been, and in the result some of these constituent companies have had a very large authorized capital, the balance of which they could have issued in the future as they have issued what is now issued in the past. I say that paragraph 14 of the resolution which I have just read is a long step forward in legislation of this kind.

But, in addition to that, what has been done? Stock to the amount of $68,000,000, in constituent and subsidiary companies, has been brought into the treasury of the Canadian Northern. My right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) says: Does not that stock exist? It does exist. Each company is an entity; its issued stock exists and will be in the treasury of the Canadian Northern. I have called the attention of my right hon. friend and others to the fact that no further stock can be issued without the consent of the Governor in Council, a most wise provision of this legislature. What is the position with regard to the stock that is in the treasury of the Canadian Northern Company? That stock, as long as it was outside the treasury of the Canadian Northern Company, would belong to holders other than the Canadian Northern Railway Company, and might in time get into the hands of the general public. Let us assume it was watered stock. The argument against watered stock proceeds largely upon the line that the public having acquired the securities of a company which has issued watered stock, and assuming, as legally they would be entitled to assume, that this stock had been issued for valuable consideration, dollar for dollar, the public would say: we are entitled to dividends upon this stock. No such argument arises if the stock does not get into the hands of the public. The whole argument against watered stock proceeds upon the basis that the public, getting the watered stock and paying for it in the stock markets of the world, claiming to be entitled to receive dividends upon their stock. This $68,000,000 or part of it might get into the hands of the public. We have closed that door. The $68,000,000 of common stock of the constituent and subsidiary companies goes into the treasury of the Canadian Northern Railway Company to stay there. Further, the capital of the Canadian Northern Railway Company is fixed at $100,000,000 subject to a proviso which I shall refer to later on. The owners of the $100,000,000 stock would own the stock in the constituent companies in a sense, because it is the treasury of the Canadian Northern Railway Company, but legally they do not own it because the company is different from any and all of its shareholders. What I mean to say is that, in substance and in fact, the shareholders of the company would own the stocks that were in the treasury of the company. Now you have $145,000,000 of stock in the Canadian Northern Railway Company and in its constituent and subsidiary companies at the present time, all of which might get into the hands of the public, but, under this legislation, $68,000,000 of that stock goes into the treasury of the Canadian Northern Railway Company and cannot get into the hands of the public, and $40,000,000 comes to the Government of Canada and cannot get to the public. So that, instead of $145,000,000 stock, watered or otherwise, which might get upon the markets of the world, you have at the present time $60,000,000 which could so get into the hands of the public, the Government of Canada having the balance, to wit, $40,000,000 of stock.

Some hon. gentlemen have asked: why is the Canadian Northern railway financed through individual and separate companies? Well, Mr. Speaker, that is as plain as noonday; there is no other method under which they could have financed. Let me explain. The Canadian Northern perpetual debenture stock is secured by a trust mortgage which constitutes a charge upon the entire undertaking of the Canadian Northern Railway Company. The word 'undertaking' is the widest word known in company law; it embraces all assets, real and personal, effects, franchises, rights, privileges and appurtenances of every kind. Supposing the Canadian Northern Railway Company, which to-day has its perpetual debenture stock, out on the market and elsewhere, charged upon its undertaking, desired to finance, let us say, the purchase of rolling stock, or the construction of terminals at Port Arthur, or any other of the enterprises which are at present owned and operated by its constituent and subsidiary companies. If the Canadian Northern Railway Company acquired a site at Port Arthur on which to build a terminal elevator, at once that land becomes subject to the charge created by the mortgage securing the perpetual debenture stock. How can they issue perpetual debenture stock in respect of it? The mortgage attaches not only to present property —to property at the time the mortgage was made, but to all future property, as those mortgages do. Then how is the financing done? The perpetual debenture stock of the Canadian Northern Railway Company may be issued according to mileage, as described in the trust mortgages securing it, and subject to certain prior charges which are mentioned; It may also be issued to the amount of the purchase price of securities which have been purchased by the company and lodged with the trustees. Suppose that terminal elevators are built at Port Arthur and they cost, let us say, $2,000,000. A company is incorporated which owns the terminal elevators. A bond issue is made for $2,000,000 representing the cost of the site and of the construction of the elevators. These bonds are not saleable. You cannot go on the market and sell $2,000,000 worth of bonds of a terminal elevator company in respect of an elevator which has just been constructed, and where the par value of the bonds represent the whole or nearly the whole cost of the elevator. But the Canadian Northern perpetual debenture stock is a standard security listed upon the London market; and by creating a separate terminal company and by the Canadian Northern purchasing those bonds of the terminal company at par and lodging them with the trustees as additional security for the debenture stock, further perpetual debenture stock can be issued against that security to the like amount, and as a result the money is obtained that has in reality built the terminal elevators.

My hon. friend from Carleton (Mr. Carvell) dwelt upon the subject as regards rolling stock financing. He admitted that it was justifiable to finance by a separate company in the case of rolling stock. It is quite simple. If a railway company, which has a mortgage such as I have described on all its undertakings, real and personal, buys rolling stock, and uses it upon its system, so that the ownership vests at once in the railway company, the mortgage immediately attaches and the railway will be unable to finance for its rolling stock. Therefore a rolling stock company is created; rolling stock is purchased from the manufacturers of rolling stock and vested in the rolling stock company. The rolling stock company makes a contract with the railway company under which the railway company undertakes to buy the rolling stock on what is known as a conditional sale agreement, each payment embracing a certain amount of interest and a certain amount of principal, as stated by my hon. friend the Solicitor General. I have used the term 'a conditional sale agreement.' What is the condition of the sale? The condition is that the property does not pass from the rolling stock company until all the payments have been made by the railway company. When the railway company has paid all the instalments, including both principal and interest, then the rolling stock belongs to the railway company and the transaction is cleaned up. How does the rolling stock company finance? It issues its debentures, usually in series. They are secured upon these conditional sale agreements which are pledged and hypothecated to a trustee as security for the rolling stock company's bonds which are sold in Canada, or New York, or London, or in other parts of the world. That is a very simple transaction. There is nothing mysterious about it. It is a well known expedient of railway financing; and so far as I can see, there is no objection to it in the world. It is the same with other subsidiary companies. I do not desire to enlarge upon the question; but the trust mortgage that the Canadian Northern Railway Company has made, which constitutes a charge upon everything present and future, securing its perpetual debenture stock to the amount of its authorized issue, would attach at once to any property that the company might acquire and prevent it from financing. The only way it can finance is through subsidiary companies, until such times as its earnings are much larger and it is able to buy, as the Canadian Pacific railway does such of its rolling stock as it desires to buy. Whether the Canadian Pacific Railway Company finances in that way now, I do not know; but the Canadian Pacific Railway Company formerly created a subsidiary company, known as the Victoria Rolling Stock Company, and financed in exactly the same way. The same principle applies to all the other companies. You cannot sell four or five million dollars' worth of bonds of an express company. You can only sell bonds readily when the net earnings are something like double the interest. That is trite knowledge in this House. But you can get the same result if you take the bonds of an express company or of a telegraph company and pledge them with the trustees of a railway company which is authorized to issue its debenture stock, listed upon the London market in respect of securities so deposited.

I have been speaking of the question of securities, and I have shown that a physical amalgamation is impossible. I have shown that all the stocks will come into the treasury of the Canadian Northern; and that, instead of $145,000,000 which might be outstanding at some times in the hands of the public, only $60,000,000 can by any possibility get out.

There is one other point which I wish to touch upon, because I desire to clean this matter right up. I refer to the stock issue. It was stated: You are going to issue $25,000,000 more in exchange for income convertible bonds. That was held up as something extraordinary that the House should prevent being done. Let us see what that amounts to. Here you have $25,000,000 of income bonds in the hands of the public representing an indebtedness on the part of the Canadian Northern of $25,000,000. Suppose the holders of those bonds surrender them and get $25,000,000 stock from the Canadian Northern. Is there any man in this House who will say that that stock is not fully paid up? The indebtedness of the Canadian Northern has been reduced by $25,000,000, and it has issued its stock in order to accomplish that.

What is the difference between that transaction and selling $25,000,000 worth of stock at par and using the $25,000,000 in cash so realized for the purpose of redeeming the $25,000,000 worth of bonds? Therefore, so far as any criticism of that transaction goes, it is a mare's nest, pure and simple.

We have required of the Canadian Northern Railway Company that they shall combine all their securities and subsidiary companies under one company, the Canadian Northern; that is, all the stock of the outlying companies shall go into the treasury and that stock shall be divided as I have indicated. What further have we done? We have taken a charge, because the question of security arises next, upon all the stocks of the constituent and subsidiary companies that come into the treasury of the Canadian Northern. We have taken it in this way: Those stocks, which are not subject to any charge at present, are vested in the trustee and become part of the mortgage premises. The other stocks are at present subject to the perpetual debentures' mortgage charge, and, of course, I need not point out to hon. gentlemen in this House that the charge is not solely upon those stocks, but upon the whole undertaking of the Canadian Northern; nevertheless the stocks that I mention are part of the security which the perpetual debenture stockholders of the Canadian Northern Railway Company have. Therefore we can only get them under our mortgage and as part of our mortgage premises subject to the charge which has already been created. It is impossible to do more. We have done all that we can do, as far as obtaining a charge can be effectuated upon the stocks of the subsidiary and constituent companies specified in the schedules to these resolutions.

What more have we got? We have taken a charge, next after all existing charges and subject to the issue of such securities as are authorized to be issued under the mortgages securing them, upon the physical assets of the parent company, the Canadian Northern Railway Company. My hon. friend the Solicitor General pointed out quite justly the other night, and the argument cannot be evaded or eluded, that having regard to the fact that the Canadian Northern railway is spread throughout the prairie provinces and having regard to the fact that the Canadian Northern Ontario line runs a thousand miles largely through wilderness between Montreal and Port Arthur, if we had nothing by way of security except the charge upon the assets and undertakings of the Canadian Northern in the prairie provinces, we are taking a better security than was afforded under the $35,000,000 guarantee upon the first mortgage of security of the Canadian Northern Ontario line.

Mr. MACDONALD: It would exceed it by $9,000 a mile.

Mr. WHITE: No; my hon. friend is good at rhetoric, but bad at figures.

Mr. MACDONALD: I put the figures on 'Hansard' the other night.

Mr. WHITE: I know that, but that would not make them right if they were wrong before you put them on.

Mr. MACDONALD: You cannot prove that they are wrong.

Mr. WHITE: My right hon. friend gave a guarantee of $35,000,000 or $35,000 a mile upon thousand miles from Montreal to Port Arthur. I am not criticising him for it, but let me say that we did not then hear—at least I did not hear—of 'bucaneering' on the part of the promoters of the road. The matter seemed to have gone quite peacefully through the House, so far as hon. gentlemen opposite are concerned.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Unanimously.

Mr. WHITE: Well, we will say unanimously. I am always distrustful of measures in respect of which both parties are unanimous, but I accept my right hon. friend's word that it was unanimous. I would point out to hon. gentlemen opposite that $35,000,000 is only $10,000,000 less than we are giving, and was upon the line between Montreal and Port Arthur.

Mr. GRAHAM: First mortgage.

Mr. WHITE: First mortgage, I agree; but $35,000 a mile. I ask my hon. friend to look at the bond issuing powers of the Canadian Northern and to look at the mortgage securing the perpetual debenture stock of the Canadian Northern in respect of its lines in the prairie provinces and I ask him after he has looked at these to come back and tell me which is the better security. I know which is the better security; there is no question about that, but as a matter of fact it was intended that the different parts of the line should be linked up and that the line between Montreal and Port Arthur, 1,000 miles, should be joined up into a transcontinental system between Quebec and Vancouver.

Mr. GRAHAM: In addition to the first mortgage upon the line from Montreal to Port Arthur there was a general charge on the line from Ottawa to Niagara and then a guarantee of the Canadian Northern on top of that again before the Government would become liable.

Mr. WHITE: I agree with my hon. friend, but let me say that if this Government brought down the legislation which he brought down, with as little information as the Solicitor General says he brought down with it in 1911, and if this Government contended that the security was not only a first mortgage upon the line between Montreal and Port Arthur but a general charge upon another line between Ottawa and Niagara and then a guarantee of the Canadian Northern railway on top of that, I can well imagine how my hon. friend the member for Carleton, New Brunswick, would criticise the value of that guarantee. He would point out all the bond issues that he talked about to-day and he would say: This is held up as conclusive evidence that the security is absolute. I can just imagine the hon. member for Carleton cutting loose, to use a vulgar expression, upon such a situation as that if it had developed under this Government, but under the other Government, of course, he is mute and voiceless. As I said, it is a case of: Where, where was Roderick then? I am sure I do not know where he was; perhaps he himself knows where he was.

9 p.m.

We have, therefore, taken a charge upon the stocks; we have taken a charge upon the undertaking of the Canadian Northern proper. Further than that, this money is to be used for the purpose of completing several constituent undertakings, and the further provision is made that to the extent that this money is used for the construction and betterment and improvement of these constituent railways, a charge shall be taken back upon their physical assets, upon their corporate undertakings, to the trustee as part of the mortgage premises which we shall have as security for this $45,000,000 guarantee. In addition to that, we have insisted that the Mackenzie, Mann and Company, Limited, shall pledge as part of the mortgage premises $10,000,000 of stock of the townsite companies connected with the Canadian Northern Railway system.

The hon. member for Welland (Mr. German)—I am sorry that he is not here to-night, because he has a strong, vigorous, masculine understanding—spoke about taking a mortgage upon an insolvent concern, and I think the hon. member for Carleton also said something along that line. I would like to cite an illustration—and the hon. member for Carleton will appreciate the point as quickly as anybody will—drawn from a situation that is close to the hon. member for Welland. Let us assume that the development of power by a great power company at Niagara Falls is to cost $10,000,000 before it is completed and becomes profitable or fruitful. Let us say that, by reason of some financial or other conditions, after expending $5,000,000 they find themselves unable to pay their contractors and to raise additional money, and have to seek assistance from bankers. If they do not obtain that assistance, what is their position? The enterprise is confronted with a receivership. But would anybody call that an insolvent concern? Would it not rather be said that if they could obtain the additional $5,000,000, the enterprise, would be able to pay the interest upon the cost of installation and possibly produce dividends upon stock? The cases are not quite analogous, but I would point out to my hon. friend that one reason and one justification for our action so far as security is concerned is this: that if by the joining up of these isolated or detached links of the Canadian Northern Railway system the Canadian Northern gets a transcontinental line with all its feeders in full operation, what at present looks like a losing venture may and probably will be turned into profitable enterprise. It is commonplace to remark that if you have a railway system consisting of isolated units scattered throughout a country as large as Europe, it is not to be supposed that you are going to get the earning power before these units are joined up; you do not get the earning power until they are all linked up and in this case it is to link up and to complete these undertakings that this aid is required. They cannot become fully productive: they cannot pay their fixed charges; they cannot yield any profit to capital invested in them; they cannot serve the people of Canada until they are all joined together and until the system is in operation as a transcontinental road, serving the people of Canada to the best of its capacity both as to through and local traffic.

My hon. friend from Carleton (Mr. Carvell) this afternoon drew attention to the list of securities which are held as collateral for the temporary loans. He called attention to the perpetual debenture stock of the Canadian Northern railway, and he said: Does anybody suppose that can be sold? I do not quarrel too much with my hon. friend for that remark, for this reason, that the situation has been that that stock and other securities of the Canadian Northern railway have not been saleable; they have not been saleable for many reasons. In the first place, there is the reason of the financial stringency of last year, and, further than that, it has become known that the Canadian Northern railway would require assistance from the Government before its enterprise could be completed. I point out that once the aid is given, once the road is on its way to completion, with the prospect of the earnings that its directors and management expect, this debenture stock, which has not lately been saleable, will become saleable. In other words, as soon as the credit of the system is restored, the collateral becomes available which in the recent past has not been available for the liquidation of debts. I pointed out to the hon. member for Carleton that, according to the balance sheet of the Canadian Northern railway of June 13, 4 per cent perpetual consolidated debenture stock of the Canadian Northern railway to the amount of $45,000,000 has been issued and is outstanding. My hon. friend is intelligent enough to know what that means. He knows that that has been the standard security of the road, and that that has been for some time on the market, and if the company could have continued to sell that security, in all probability it would not have been necessary for them to come here to-day.

Mr. CARVELL: If they could sell enough of it.

Mr. WHITE: If they could sell enough of it. But my hon. friend knows the market conditions well enough to know that they could not sell that stock all at once; it has taken them a long time to put that out. But the effect of the Government guarantee, insuring completion of the road, will be to make that perpetual debenture which in the immediate past has not been saleable again saleable, and consequently the temporary loans will be cleared up. The question has been raised: Who is going to spend this money that is to be raised by this $45,000,000 guarantee. I am quite sure my hon. friend could not have been in the House in 1911 or he would have asked that same question then. He wants to know why the Government should not spend it instead of the Canadian Northern railway or Mackenzie and Mann. It is going to be spent on the same principle as the money was spent under the mortgage which he approved as a member of this House in 1911.

Mr. CARVELL: Oh, no.

Mr. WHITE: The language is almost identical. I ask my hon. friend to look as I did this morning at the statute authorizing the guarantee of $35,000,000 per mile upon the line from Montreal to Port Arthur. He will find that in almost identical words, and in substance not in the least degree different. The same provision is in here as to the mortgage which is to secure this guarantee of security.

Mr. MACDONALD: How much more is against the enterprise now than then?

Mr. WHITE: My hon. friend knows that there is more against the enterprise now than then, but there is a greater mileage that has been completed since that time. My hon. friend must not think that the progress of Canada stopped in 1911.

Mr. MACDONALD: Pretty near, it has not gone ahead much this year.

Mr. GRAHAM: It is hesitating a great deal.

Mr. WHITE: I am dealing with the disposition of the proceeds of these guaranteed securities, and I say to the hon. member for Carleton that if he looks at the measure introduced by the hon. member for South Renfrew, then Minister of Railways, in 1911, he will find the words almost identical:

> The forms and terms of the new trust deed, and the times and manner of the issue of the guaranteed securities, and the dispositions of the moneys to be raised thereon by sale, pledge or otherwise, and the forms and manner of guarantee or guarantees shall be such as the Governor in Council approves, and such terms, provisions and conditions as the Governor in Council may consider expedient or necessary shall be included in the new trust deed.

What does that mean? It means that these moneys will be paid out for the purpose for which they have been provided according to the terms of this resolution, that they will be paid out according to the provisions of a trust mortgage which will ensure control of their destination in the hands of the Government. We pay out money from month to month under the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway mortgage which was given to the Government in respect of the $35,000 a mile guarantee on that line of which I am speaking. How is it done? All possible safeguards are thrown around it. I have taken great pains to inquire from the Railway Department how the inspection is made on the strength of which the certificates are given upon which the Finance Department acts in paying out these moneys in connection with the issue of $35,000,000 upon the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway line. The proceeds went into a bank, and have been checked out in the last two years. There are several millions lying to the credit of the account to-day which will become available in due course for the completion of the line in respect of which the guaranteed securities were issued. The inspecting engineer of the railway with the chief engineer goes carefully into the question of the cost of construction of the line. He sees the profile, he knows the quantities, he makes his calculation, he estimates that the line will cost so many million dollars, let us say $45,000,000, between Montreal and Port Arthur. The guarantee is at the rate of $35,000 a mile. Let us say that yields $31,000 a mile, because it is a three and one-half per cent security. Now, when $2,000,000 worth of work has been done on the construction of that line from Montreal to Port Arthur, the inspecting engineer certifies, after making his inspection, to the chief engineer. The chief engineer, after giving the matter his attention, reports to the Minister of Railways that $2,000,000 of work has been done upon that line; that the total cost of the line will be, let us assume, $45,000 per mile; that the proceeds of the guaranteed securities is only $31,000 a mile, and that therefore the road is entitled to have paid out of the proceeds standing to the credit of the Minister of Finance and Receiver General, thirty-one forty-fifths of $2,000,000. I ask if there could be any greater safeguard thrown by Parliament around a situation of that kind, that is if you can rely upon your officials? You have your inspecting engineer taking out his quantities, making his calculations, and saying that the road will cost so much, whether built by Mackenzie and Mann or by anybody else. You have, in addition to that, the chief engineer revising his work, and reporting to the minister and, finally, there is paid out only the proportion that the amount realized of that $35,000 of securities per mile bears to the actual cost, the $45,000 per mile which has been assumed to be the cost arrived at by the engineer. Therefore, so far as the destination of this money is concerned, hon. gentlemen opposite did not worry in 1911, and here are provisions identical with those of the statute of 1911, under which these moneys will be paid out. The same officials are going to make the inspections and reports.

Mr. CARVELL: The minister has very correctly described the manner in which the proceeds of the guaranteed bonds are paid out. Will he now describe how the company is going to pay out something like $31,000,000 or $32,000,000 of this money that is required to meet pressing liabilities at the present time.

Mr. WHITE: There are not $30,000,000 of pressing liabilities at the present time.

Mr. CARVELL: I tell the minister there are.

Mr. WHITE: The Solicitor General told my hon. friend this afternoon there were not.

Mr. CARVELL: No.

Mr. WHITE: I will take a ticket on the Solicitor General.

Mr. CARVELL: I would like some figures to prove it.

Mr. WHITE: My hon. friend is so bad at arithmetic that I might waste half an hour teaching him.

Mr. CARVELL: Teach the rest of the House then.

Mr. WHITE: They do not need it. My hon. friend from South Renfrew (Mr. Graham) does not need to be taught anything in arithmetic. My right hon. friend is a past master in the subject. He never dealt with figures at all, whereas my hon. friend from Carleton wasted an hour and a half this afternoon talking figures. Of course, he was mistaken throughout his computation. There is no sense in discussing figures unless you get a common basis; I might say $10,000,000 and my hon. friend $30,000,000 and we could go on asserting and reasserting without making any progress at all. I want to be serious now, although occasionally I am playful. My hon. friend knows there are temporary loans to the extent of $20,000,000.

Mr. CARVELL: I was not talking about temporary loans. There are $30,000,000 of debt.

Mr. WHITE: Then, you are all wrong.

Mr. CARVELL: No, I am right.

Mr. WHITE: This is the debate on the resolution, and when we get into committee I have no doubt at all that my hon. friend the Solicitor General will show my hon. friend (Mr. Carvell) without my aid, and if he needs it he will get it, that he is entirely wrong; that is, if my hon. friend keeps an open mind.

Mr. MACDONALD: You cannot show him now or any other time.

Mr. CARVELL: Describe the manner in which you are going to pay whatever is owing.

Mr. WHITE: My hon. friend had a fair field and no favours this afternoon. I did not disturb him in his discussion, and if he does not mind I am going to direct the course of my own speech. I do not say that in any offensive way, but when a man is making a speech of this kind the symmetry should not be marred by interjections even although my hon. friend may have no such design.

Mr. GRAHAM: Then there is trouble.

Mr. WHITE: I have dealt with the question of securities, and come now to the question of remedy upon default. Some hon. gentlemen have said: why do you not take security upon the stock? I need not tell the lawyers of this House that a creditor stands in a higher position than a stockholder, and that except for convenience it is not at all necessary to take the stock of any company for security. If I have a mortgage on a company's undertaking I do not care very much for the stock as security except that it is advisable to have the stock in order that I can take possession of the company, put in my own receiver, and operate the company with my own board of directors. That is the only advantage. The stock does not give any higher security, but it makes the realization of the security a little more convenient. What security have we? I have seen a good deal of financing in my time, and I know something of law although my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) does not think so, and I want to say this: I have never seen as effectual a means of entering into possession of a property upon which a mortgage is held as has been devised by the Solicitor General in connection with this transaction. And further—he will not mind this, coming from me—I take off my hat to the Solicitor General for the way in which he has performed the legal work in connection with this transaction, which is one of the most complicated that has ever come before the House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Hear, hear.

Mr. WHITE: My right hon. friend says 'hear, hear'. I say it is one of the most complicated transactions ever dealt with in Canada, and necessarily so, and the Solicitor General deserves the greatest possible credit for the pains and surpassing ability he has bestowed on the legal work of this transaction.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Do not forget Mr. Lash.

Mr. WHITE: Mr. Lash has often been mentioned in this House, and considering our many years of friendship, I think it is only proper for me to say that there is not a more respected man in the city of Toronto than Mr. Z. A. Lash.

Mr. CARVELL: Nor an abler lawyer.

Mr. WHITE: Nor an abler lawyer in Canada. I was dealing with the question of remedy upon default, and was pointing out that we have a much better control than would be afforded by the security of a majority or all of the stock of the Canadian Northern. What have we? Upon default, the Order in Council at once becomes a rule of court, and is absolutely beyond question so far as its authority is concerned. We can displace the board of directors of any or all of the companies by directors of our own choice, who are given power to carry on the road as provided in the resolutions, and it is open to the Government through Parliament to deal with that road by way of sale or otherwise, as may be expedient and in the public interests. It can be sold in whole or in part to a corporation, or it can be operated in the interests of the public of Canada. I repeat there never was a simpler or more effectual method devised of realizing a security than has been worked out in connection with this transaction. The hon. member for Carleton says: Parliament will be lobbied, and you will not be able to deal with the property at all. I have greater faith in this Parliament than has the hon. member for Carleton, and if I had not I would still say this: A stream cannot rise higher than its source; Parliament is the supreme authority in this country, and if Parliament will not act, I have very little hope for the Canadian people. Parliament will act, and my hon. friend is simply begging the question when he says that Parliament will not act. I ask him, in what better form this transaction could be left, so far as the realization of this security is concerned, than by providing that the property of these companies shall be at the disposal of Parliament? What higher authority could we appeal to, or invoke? It is preposterous. We cannot raise ourselves by our boot tops. If we do not leave the supreme power of dealing with this with Parliament, where shall it be left? I do not know, and my hon. friend from Carleton does not know.

I have indicated the grounds upon which the Government decided it was its duty in the interests of the public of Canada to render aid to this road at this time. I have shown the security which we have taken, and mentioned the remedy in case of default. I now come to a further consideration, which I regard as one of the most important in the transaction, notwithstanding the opinions to the contrary of the hon. member for Carleton. My hon. friend from Carleton and some other gentlemen say that we should not have taken any of the common stock of the Canadian Northern because that at once makes us a partner. Before dealing with that argument, just let me say, in developing my discourse, that we get $33,000,000 of stock which we have exacted as consideration for our guarantee. The public would not believe at first that we had got that except by way of security, but we insisted that we should have $33,000,000 of stock outright as the property of the Dominion of Canada or of His Majesty in the right of this Dominion. Nothing of the kind has ever been done by a Government before except last year when we took $7,000,000 of stock in part consideration of the subsidies which we then granted.

Mr. CARVELL: Now you are paying $45,000,000 because of that.

Mr. WHITE: Let us see if that is so. My hon. friend says that because of that we are paying $45,000,000. In other words, a certain situation existed last year, we met it to the extent that we advanced $15,000,000, and yet my hon. friend says that by reason of the improvement which we effected in the situation we now have to guarantee $45,000,000 more. His argument can only mean either one of two things; it can either mean that he is not arguing logically or that the road should have been allowed to go into the hands of a receiver. It is to prevent such an alternative that we are coming to the aid of the road and giving a guarantee of $45,000,000.

Then, the most frequent criticism made of the action of the Government in granting this guarantee is that it is a partnership; they say you are going into partnership with Mackenzie and Mann. I am now directing my argument particularly to the hon. member for Carleton, because I cannot direct it, in his absence, to the hon. member for Welland (Mr. German), who took a similar view. What is the status of a partnership? Is it community of interest, is it giving guarantees for subsidies that constitutes a partnership? Let us see how that works out. My right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition gave a guarantee of $35,000,000 to the Canadian Northern Ontario; my right hon. friend gave a guarantee of $13,000 a mile in respect to the prairie section of the Grand Trunk Pacific; my right hon. friend gave a guarantee of securities equal to three-quarters of the cost of the mountain section of the Grand Trunk Pacific, the total security on the prairie and mountain sections aggregating £14,000,000; my hon. friend made a loan of $10,000,000 to the Grand Trunk Pacific secured by a mortgage next after all existing charges, and in addition my right hon. friend entered into an agreement whereby the Government of Canada, as owner of the eastern division of the National Transcontinental, became lessors to the Grand Trunk Pacific railway. Is that a partnership?

Mr. McKENZIE: No.

Mr. WHITE: I think my hon. friend (Mr. McKenzie) is right; it is not a partnership, or, if it is a partnership, it is one of a limited character. If it is a partnership, it is a partnership as to loss only, and no consideration comes to the Government in respect to the building of the line.

Mr. McKENZIE: If I endorse a man's note and he fails to pay up and I have to pay the note, am I in partnership with him?

Mr. WHITE: Legally speaking, that is not a partnership.

Mr. McKENZIE: Certainly not. Why then claim that it is a partnership as to loss? It is no partnership at all.

Mr. WHITE: My hon. friend has a legal mind. I am meeting a perfectly captious criticism that is made with reference to this proposition. My hon. friend will agree with me that because we give $45,000,000 of a guarantee to the Canadian Northern we are not partners with Mackenzie and Mann. As far as he is concerned I have no quarrel; he admits that we are not in partnership with Mackenzie and Mann because we have given $45,000,000 of a guarantee. I am using the word 'partner' in the looser sense in which it is used by hon. gentlemen in this House, from which reports go out all over the country to the effect that the Government has become a partner with Mackenzie and Mann. Is the Government a partner, in the looser sense, with the Grand Trunk Pacific by reason of the consideration which I have mentioned My hon. friend (Mr. Mackenzie) will say 'no.' If the Government is a partner, it is a partner only as to loss. Take the Canadian Northern situation; the late Government and this Government guaranteed the securities of the Canadian Northern system just as the late Government guaranteed the securities of the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Canadian Northern Ontario. Partners as to loss up to the time we take stock. If the roads default we pay; we lose. We run the risk. If the Grand Trunk Pacific succeeds, who will benefit? I hope it will succeed. I have done everything I could, since I have occupied this position, to make it succeed. But if the Grand Trunk Pacific succeeds who will reap the benefit?—the Grand Trunk which owns $25,000,000 of fully paid common stock which it obtained in consideration of its guarantee. The Grand Trunk, under the legislation of my right hon. friend during the time of the late Administration, got $25,000,000 of fully paid common stock of the Grand Trunk Pacific in consideration of its guarantees to the Grand Trunk Pacific and my hon. friend from Carleton, endorsed, or at all events did not speak against that legislation. When the Grand Trunk got $25,000,000 of common stock for its guarantee equal to one-quarter of the cost of the mountain section and the remainder of the prairie section, should not the Government of Canada have got some common stock interest for its $13,000 a mile guarantee of the prairie section, and its guarantee of securities equal to three-quarters of the cost of the mountain section, in all aggregating over £14,000,000. What would have been the effect if the Government and people of Canada had got $25,000,000 of the fully paid-up capital stock of the Grand Trunk Pacific? Would that have been a partnership

Mr. OLIVER: Sure.

Mr. WHITE: My hon. friend from Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) says that it would have been a partnership. Does my hon. friend seriously say that such a partnership would be objectionable?

Mr. OLIVER: Sure.

Mr. WHITE: You have taken the risk; the Government stands to lose if the enterprise does not succeed and the other party would stand to gain.

Mr. CARVELL: You would have to meet that by charging higher freight rates.

Mr. WHITE: We will come to that in a moment. Before I get through I will have boxed the compass and the hon. gentleman will be fully answered. My hon. friend from Edmonton says that would be a partnership, and that such a partnership would be objectionable. He says that it would not be a partnership to guarantee $70,000,000 of securities, and my hon. friend from South Cape Breton could tell my hon. friend from Edmonton that the word 'partnership' could not legally be applied to this resolution. But if you come to apply the word 'partnership' to a proposition of this kind, it must mean that the Government gives everything and gets nothing. My right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition gave a guarantee of $35,000,000 to the Canadian Northern Ontario and got no common stock. The right hon. leader of the Government (Mr. Borden) gives a guarantee of $45,000,000 to the Canadian Northern, exactly the same thing, and gets $33,000,000 of common stock, and yet my hon. friend from Edmonton says it is objectionable. He says, in substance—that is the logic of his argument—there is no objection to your giving a guarantee, but I protest against you getting any common stock; I want Mackenzie and Mann to get the whole $100,000,000 of common stock. That is precisely what we do not intend to let them do. The people of the country are going to get 40 per cent of the fully paid up common stock, and Mackenzie, Mann and Company can have the 60 per cent of stock in the Canadian Northern and subsidiary and constituent companies. That must be regarded as a most laudable transaction on the part of this Government. Let me put it in this way: the only difference between a partnership and a non-partnership, on the argument that is put forward by the hon. gentleman, is that if the Government becomes entitled to share in the enterprise it is a partner, but if it only shares in the losses or risks of the enterprise it is not a partner. Then I ask: Will the hon. member for Edmonton, or any other hon. member in this House, stand up and affirm this transaction in every other respect, but say: Give back the $40,000,000 of stock to Mackenzie and Mann? I do not believe there is a man who will stand up and say: I affirm the transaction in every other respect; give back the stock; give your guarantees but by no means take this fully-paid common stock; we agree you should give the guarantee but thrust back upon Mackenzie and Mann the thirty-three million dollars of common stock. I tell you, you will make two hearts beat as one if you could induce the Government to do that; there will be two glad men in Canada if the thirty-three million dollars are thrust back upon them by a reluctant and unwilling government, and these two men are Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann. But neither my hon. friend nor any other man dare stand up and tell the people of Canada that he affirms this transaction in regard to the guarantees and at the same time that he will not have placed in the Dominion treasury the forty million dollars of common stock.

The railway legislation of this country in the past has been fatuous in the extreme. I admire the enterprise of the Canadian Pacific railway. One of the most marvellous transactions in the history of the world was the carrying out of the Canadian Pacific railway in the eighties, linking up the East and West, rounding up Confederation and making it possible. These men had courage. But supposing the Government of that time, in consideration of what had been done for the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, had said: we will take forty million or fifty million dollars of stock in the Canadian Pacific railway, what would the result be to-day. Suppose the Grand Trunk Pacific should turn out to be the great success my right hon. friend prophesied for it when he brought down his legislation; suppose it come up to the vision of his imagination which he has told us of on more than one occasion, and suppose the right hon. gentleman when he brought in the legislation had said he would take for the Dominion treasury twenty-five million dollars of the stock of the Grand Trunk Pacific, would there be any wrong in his doing that? I think not. Let me say to my hon. friend from Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) that notwithstanding what he says about the undesirability of the Government of Canada becoming a partner with a railway company, the Government of Canada in a sense has become a partner with the Grand Trunk Pacific, and on a much more logical basis than the holding of common stock, because if he will turn to the National Transcontinental Railway agreement he will find that the Government of Canada appoints a director on the Grand Trunk Pacific. Am I right?

Mr. OLIVER: Yes.

Mr. WHITE: And yet my hon. friend now holds up both hands in holy horror and says: do not be a partner with shareholders in these railway enterprises, but at the same time he defends the action of the Government of which he was a member in nominating a director of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company. Surely we have reduced the argument about partnership to an absolute absurdity.

I say that the people of this country would never hear of the Government giving back this stock. If this enterprise succeeds that stock will become valuable; if this enterprise does not succeed notwithstanding the aid we are affording it, then of course we have incurred the risk and will have to take over the system. And if we did not take the common stock and it succeeded, the beneficiaries of our action which will enable the Canadian Northern to complete its enterprise, would not be the people of Canada—our action would result only in the aggrandizement of Mackenzie and Mann, the holders of $100,000,000 of common stock, $40,000,000 of which the Government is taking and leaving them $60,000,000. As I said, if our credit saves the road, then Mackenzie and Mann should not be the beneficiaries alone, but the people of Canada should share in whatever benefit will come to the stockholders in this great enterprise.

My hon. friend (Mr. Carvell) was greatly concerned about the freight rates and he said: it follows as the night the day that if you take this forty million dollars of fully paid stock of the Canadian Northern you are going to prevent the freight rates from being reduced. Remember, he is dealing with two situations: one in which we do not take the stock and the other in which we do take it. If we do not take it Mackenzie and Mann will have $100,000,000—

Mr. CARVELL: No.

Mr. WHITE: How much will they have?

Mr. CARVELL: I would give them about $10,000,000 of stock in that agreement.

Mr. WHITE: I did not think my hon. friend would be so generous as to give them $10,000,000 stock, but he was more generous to the Grand Trunk when he allowed them to get $25,000,000 in consideration of their guarantee. I am afraid my hon. friend (Mr. Carvell) is not consistent. His argument this afternoon went along the line: if you do take this stock then you are in a much worse position than if you do not; if you have the $40,000,000 of stock the people of Canada will be in a much worse position as to freight rates than if the Government did not take the stock. But if that were the only thing in the world that stood in the reduction of freight rates, I could understand some big Prime Minister of Canada saying: if our $40,000,000 of stock stands in the way of a reduction in freight rates then we can do several things with it: we can, for example, surrender it for cancellation if we want to. So that my hon. friend need not worry about the Government going to impose burdens on the people of Canada by holding $40,000,000 of Canadian Northern fully-paid up stock. And if that contingency does not arise which he dreads, then the Government of Canada will hold this $40,000,000 of fully-paid up stock in the Canadian Northern, and they will be able to take whatever benefits may come from that ownership. Then the hon. gentleman asks: What would happen if Mackenzie and Mann should come back? Well, there are the resolutions, and hon. gentlemen can interpret them just as well as we can. I know what power we have under these resolutions in case of default, in case of receivership, in case of the road being unable to carry on its enterprise. It means that the Government of Canada could at once enter possession of the whole line, to be disposed of as Parliament may direct at its next session. I say that this is the most progressive legislation that has ever been introduced into this Parliament affecting the giving of any guarantees or aid to any railway company.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when I started out I said I had been suffering from a severe bronchial cold, which has almost deprived me of the power of speech; but my hon. friend from Carleton (Mr. Carvell) seems to have stimulated me to super-exertion, and I have spoken at much greater length than I had originally intended. It only shows the resources of the human voice when it is properly exercised and in a good cause, as this is. I remember that the late Sir John Macdonald once expressively said that a parliamentary speech should be animated conversation. In the remarks which I have addressed to the House this afternoon I have been grave and gay by turns.

I desire now, at the end, to be serious because this is one of the most important questions that has ever been before the Government or the Parliament of Canada. We realized that when it was first presented for our consideration, and, speaking for myself, and speaking for the Prime Minister, because I know the earnest, painstaking, and sleepless consideration he has given to this matter, I say that no question which has ever come up in Canadian politics has been given more full, more sincere, or more conscientious consideration than these resolutions which are now before this House. We have not had to deal with an hypothesis, we have had to deal with an actual condition. It is easy to criticise but it is hard to create, and the Government must take constructive action notwithstanding any criticism that may be brought against it.

I have shown what the enormous and far-flung activities of this tremendous railway system means to the Dominion of Canada; I have shown that it embraces over thirty companies, subsidiary and constituent; I have shown that it has 7,000 miles of completed line and 3,000 miles still to complete; I have shown numerous industrial companies in Canada are interested in its continuance—steel companies, rolling stock companies, manufacturing and other companies from Halifax to Vancouver—are all interested in the continuance of this great enterprise. It has involved itself with the very vitals of this country. Almost every province in Canada is upon its securities and concerned in its success. The Dominion of Canada has given no less than $58,000,000 of guarantees in connection with it, and between the Dominion and the provinces the people of Canada have paid over $20,000,000 in subsidies. I say that, having regard to this vast and complicated system, with its ramifications extending in every province of Canada, with the pressing demand of the West, as my hon. friend from Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) knows, for more rolling stock, for better service, for extensions to the newer districts, with all these conditions, it is unthinkable that the Government should allow a system such as this to go into the hands of a receiver, if it can be saved. It is not a question of Mackenzie and Mann; it is a question of the interest of the people of Canada. For months past the Canadian Northern situation has troubled the money market of London, affecting adversely all Canadian securities and stopping the sources of supply of capital needed for our many enterprises. It has hung like a cloud over the business situation in Canada, just recovering from the terrible financial experience of last year. The most severe financial depression that has ever been known in my time we are now merging from; and in due course I hope to see the normal activities of the nation resumed, as we have reason to expect, on the experience and analogy of the past. The sooner that this situation is cleared up, the better for this and all other Canadian enterprises. I am speaking not only as a member of this Government; I am speaking as a Canadian and, I hope, as a patriot. I am satisfied that the sober business sense of this House and of this country will approve the proposals of the Government as the best solution of a trying and most difficult problem.

Mr. W. A. BUCHANAN (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I have some hesitation in following the hon. Minister of Finance in this debate; but I have followed his extended remarks on the financial side of this agreement, and I expected that he would deal with that side of the question, because there is no doubt that, as the Minister of Finance, he should have a wide knowledge of the financial features of this agreement. But what I would like to have heard and what the country would like to have heard from his lips is a statement as to the financial capacity of the Canadian Northern Railway Company and the financial abilities of the men behind that company, because that is more important to the people to-day than the financial terms of this agreement. The Minister of Finance says that the Government inherited the Canadian Northern difficulties. I think that when the Minister of Finance left the Liberal party, he was anxious to assume all the inheritance possible from that Government. During the time he was a member of the Liberal party, I do not know that he ever offered advice to the members of that party that they should deal with the Canadian Northern railway in any other way than they did at that time. Yet he says to-day that we are responsible for the creation of this transcontinental line. Conditions have changed in the last four years. During the time that the Liberal party in this country was dealing with the railroad problem, this country was developing very rapidly, and we were assured in 1911, as I understand it, that once the thirty-five million dollars was given to the Mackenzie and Mann interests, they would be able to complete their transcontinental railway, and that no further requests would be made. Since that time the Conservative party has come into power and the Canadian Northern railroad has made demands every year and those demands have been yielded to. The country has gone through a crisis, as the hon. minister has mentioned. He says that we are merging from it. I come from western Canada and I see no signs whatever of an emergence from the crisis of 1913. I think we are in just as serious a financial crisis now as we were a year ago; and I do not see that this Government is doing anything to relieve the conditions which exist throughout this country at the present time and which have existed for the last year or two. But I say that the Government lacks foresight in continuing to follow a policy in western Canada that has caused more or less stagnation. That condition is one of the reasons why the railroads are finding it difficult to make their lines profitable and to continue the work of building new lines, and why this railway is finding it difficult to continue the construction of this particular line. The Minister of Finance finds himself and the Government confronted with a condition of their own making. If I were to place the credit for this particular arrangement, I would place the credit at the door of the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. Bennett), and of the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Nickle), who have started a revolt against the Government and have indicated to them that the public demands that, if anything is given to the Canadian Northern railway, something should be given in return. If it had not been for that movement on the part of the supporters of the Conservative party, the Government would not have had any arrangement of this character to boast of, although it is one which is not satisfactory either to members on the Government side of the House or to the mass of the people of the country. But I believe the creation of the desire to have an arrangement with the Canadian Northern Railway Company was started by the movement within the party, by the knowledge that the people did not want any more trafficking with the Canadian Northern railway unless the country got something in return out of that particular road. I do not think, however, that this Government has gone about the matter in such a way as to get what they should have got out of the Canadian Northern railway.

Before going any further, I want to give credit to the position taken by my hon. friend from Calgary, because he comes from a part of the country where railroads are in demand and where in the past we have made many sacrifices in order to get railway lines. I believe that the position taken by the hon. member for Calgary is the position of the western people. The Minister of Finance boasts of this partnership as though it were something to be proud of. I believe that the opinion of the people of this country is that there is nothing to be proud of in a partnership with Mackenzie and Mann or with the Canadian Northern railway, especially when it is a minor partnership in which we have no control over this concern owing to the amount of stock we hold. That is the objection I have to this partnership. I would rather have a partnership with the Grand Trunk railway, which is an old and respectable railroad corporation which has been in this country for years, and which has met the demands of the people to a very large extent. But, if I were to express my opinion of the Canadian Northern railway, and the way in which it has been financed, and the way in which its promoters have dealt with the people of this country, I do not think that my language would be parliamentary. The hon. member for Thunder Bay and Rainy River (Mr. Carrick) spoke of the hon. member for Calgary as a bucking broncho. As we know, bucking bronchos in the West are inclined to throw people; and I would not be a bit surprised that the attitude taken by the hon. member for Calgary and the hon. member for Kingston on this particular occasion would be very much the same as that of a bucking broncho, and that the Government might be thrown as a result of their particular policy on this question at this particular time.

I desire to state my views on this question as briefly as possible; but before doing so I would like to refer to the assertion of the Finance Minister that the Canadian Northern railway cannot wait for this aid for six months. I believe that if this Parliament had met last fall and this demand had been made, it would have been considered as an urgent demand and that the help would have been needed at that time. There is no question that the demand has been made for the last six months, and the Canadian Northern is still in existence, still doing the same construction work and still creating more debts throughout this country. I think that the people of this country are prepared to accept a delay of six months if it will enable them to get more accurate information as to the financial position of the Canadian Northern railway and of the men behind it. The men behind this railroad claim that they are almost bankrupt, and the Government joins with them as junior partner and lends its credit for $45,000,000 and takes $40,000,000 of stock in a concern controlled by two or three men who are, might I say, of the Get-rich-quick Wallingford type. I object as a citizen of this country and as a citizen of western Canada to this country being linked up as junior partner with men of that type. My view is this: That if we have to assist this railway and if further money is to be voted for the completion of the Canadian Northern system, the best way out of the difficulty is either control of the stock or complete ownership of the system by the people of Canada. We were reminded by the hon. member for Kingston in his speech the other evening of the policy in 1904 of the then leader of the Opposition, the present leader of the Government, when he declared in favour of government ownership of railways. He declared that that was a proper policy, and now when the opportunity comes for him to carry out the policy which he then believed in, he links the people of Canada up as junior partner with the Canadian Northern railway when he could just as well demand control and ownership of the road for the people of this country. This promise is very much like other promises which the leader of this Government has made; it is a promise made to the electors and a promise which he is not prepared to carry out when the party 10 p.m. which he leads comes into power. I say that if this country is to be a partner with this railroad, it should be a senior partner; if it can be only a junior partner, it is better for Canada that it should not be a partner at all.

I want to say something along the line of what I consider to be the public sentiment with regard to the men behind this particular railroad—and I believe that the members on the other side of the House realize this. The sentiment of the people of Canada is that the men who control the Canadian Northern railway have made vast fortunes; that individually they are in strong financial positions and that they are ambitious to control and possess, practically to own, a transcontinental road. The people of Canada believe that those men should sacrifice their private fortunes in the effort to realize their ambition. This Government has not established to the satisfaction of any one in this House that the persons behind the Canadian Northern railway have made any attempt to sacrifice their interests in other large concerns in an effort to save this railroad. All they have done is to use their influence with this Government with a view to inducing them to take such steps as will save them and leave them in control of the stock of the company. Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann and others associated with the Canadian Northern railway have vast interests throughout this country, apart from the Canadian Northern railway. We know that they control the street railways of the cities of Toronto and Winnipeg. They control large coal mining interests on the Pacific coast and they are interested in large mines on the north shore of lake Superior. They are interested in the fisheries and in the timber of British Columbia. They have vast private holdings of real estate. They are interested in power companies and radial roads in the province of Ontario. They are interested in very large enterprises in Mexico and in Brazil. The conclusion of the people of Canada is that they should get rid of their other interests; and, if they want to retain the Canadian Northern railway and to save it from bankruptcy, let them save it by using the financial interests which they have in other concerns throughout Canada, and throughout the North and South American continents. That is my view, and I believe it is the popular view of the people of this country. Pressure should have been brought to bear on these men to force them to use all their private fortunes to save the road if they wanted to possess control of it, and if they would not do that, then if Canada was to give any assistance to the road, it should mean control and ownership of it. That is my position, and I desire to place it before the House, because I believe it is a position which represents the views of the majority of the people, at least of western Canada.

One feature of the arrangement proposed to be made by the Government with the Canadian Northern railway which is most disappointing to the people of western Canada is the fact that no provision is made for branch line construction. What we want in the West are branch lines, and in my view, if it was the intention to have a third transcontinental railway in this country, the Canadian Northern could have held back for some years the construction of that portion of their line over the Rocky mountains to Vancouver. If they had devoted to the construction of branch lines in western Canada, the money which has been raised for the construction of that portion of the Transcontinental line, it would have been much better for this country, and would have meant a greater development of and probably more prosperity in western Canada. They might have waited until they had developed their branch line system, fed by the lines already constructed, and then, as they made that particular part of the system profitable, they would have been able to complete the main line to the Pacific coast by their own resources, practically without assistance from the people of Canada. I have had occasion in this House to point out the system under which the Canadian Northern operates with regard to projected branch lines in western Canada. I have told the House of the hardships which the men and women who have gone to that country have had to put up with by reason of the promises made year after year by the Canadian Northern Railway people to build branch lines and their failure to carry them out. The head of the Canadian Northern railway is the best promiser in the country; but I do not know of a man who fails to carry out his promises to the same extent as Sir William Mackenzie. When we are sitting in this House, when Canadian Northern railway legislation is before us, we have many requests to assist that legislation. We happen to be in control of things, and they come to us on bended knees and ask us to do certain things. Then they say what they will do in return. I am speaking now about the construction of lines. Last year I had occasion to see the head of the Canadian Northern railway and speak of the construction of a branch line which had been promised for a certain number of years into a country where people had been living and trying to develop land fifty, sixty and seventy miles away from a railway. I went to him and urged that something should be done to construct that particular line. His argument to me was: We have not the money, we are trying to get it—practically telling me that if I supported that particular measure, they would do something on that particular line. That might be the interpretation of his reply. I find that they got the money and did nothing whatever in regard to the construction of that particular line. What the people in my part of the country want to know from this Government is: With this $45,000,000, do they intend to do something for the construction of branch lines where they are absolutely needed and have been promised for some years? That is the position I take on this particular question, which is a vital one with my people and with the people of southern Alberta. The head of the Canadian Northern railway is very anxious to meet our wishes when we were at Ottawa. But I want to point out the position taken by that gentleman when we are away from Ottawa. Petition after petition, signed by hundreds and hundreds of the people in that particular district, was presented to me. I forwarded these petitions to the president of the Canadian Northern railway. I happened to attend a demonstration there last July, between sixty and seventy miles away from any existing railroad. There were over 1,200 people in attendance at that particular demonstration and I think I can safely say that ninety per cent of them were fifty miles away from a railroad. They were in a district through which a Canadian Northern railway branch line that had been promised from year to year would go. I had a photograph of that group taken which I sent to Sir William Mackenzie with a letter saying that these people were gathered in the part of the country which the Canadian Northern Railway Lethbridge-Maryfield line would serve, 1,200 people, the majority of whom were fifty miles from a railway. I have not yet received an acknowledgment of either the photograph or the petitions. I point that out to show that the heads of the Canadian Northern railway are not showing any anxiety to serve the people of western Canada. The great anxiety they are showing is to complete a transcontinental road that will give distinction to Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann. I say that if they had abandoned the idea of completing a transcontinental railway, in so far as the line from Alberta through the Rockies to the Pacific coast is concerned, and had used the money devoted to that purpose to the construction of branch lines in Alberta and Saskatchewan, they would have been serving the people of Canada much better than by the transcontinental railway proposition, which could have waited for a while. We have been told that branch lines may be completed under this arrangement. My own judgment and the judgment of other speakers who have opposed this particular agreement is that practically all of this money will be required to complete the transcontinental railway; and I think I can say that during the time that the Canadian Northern railway has had the link between Alberta and the Pacific coast under construction the construction of branch lines in the prairie provinces has fallen off to a considerable extent. It seems to me that if they devote all of this money, as they will likely be compelled to devote it, to the completion of the transcontinental system, there will be very, very few branch lines placed under construction and that is the urgent matter, as I have said, in western Canada. Until the value of the Panama canal is established, the western route is of little service to the people of western Canada. I believe that eventually it will be important, probably the most important route for the Alberta farmer; but our outlet now is by the East, and if the Canadian Northern railway had adhered to the construction of feeding lines to their transcontinental line on the prairie and had carried the grain down to the head of the lakes for the present, they would have been serving the urgent need of the people of western Canada. As the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Nickle) declared in his speech, the Canadian Northern railway commenced as a colonization road and if it had adhered to that purpose it would have been of greater benefit to the people of western Canada than by devoting all its energies in recent years to the completion of a transcontinental line to meet the ambitions of the promoters of that particular railroad. I would like to place before the Government the request that there should be some guarantee offered before this debate concludes that a portion of this money will be devoted immediately to the completion of branch lines now under construction and to the construction of branch lines that are absolutely needed in well-settled portions of western Canada. If they fail to do that it will be double evidence that all of this money will be required for the transcontinental railroad, and that there will be delay in the building of branch lines and in the development of western Canada. In this way the discontent which exists there at the present time will be developed to a very large extent because there is nothing that provokes discontent among the settlers of the western country to such an extent as lack of transportation facilities. There is nothing that will drive people out of the country more than the lack of transportation facilities. If branch lines that have been promised are not built, then settlers will lose confidence in Canada and in transportation companies, and in this way we may lose many citizens who would be valuable to this country. Since it will be said that this arrangement is to help western Canada, and some of the eastern members who support the Government will take that view, if they want to help the West they can help it in a better way than by providing a guarantee of $45,000,000 to complete the transcontinental project of Mackenzie and Mann.

I said at the beginning that I favoured government control or absolute government ownership of the Canadian Northern railway. I have had petitions from my part of the country since this matter came before the House, and the sentiment there seems to be in favour of government ownership. There is no question that the Canadian Northern railway as it exists to-day has practically been built by the people of Canada, and that it could not have reached the stage it has if it had not been for the assistance of the people of this country. Why should we give that road any more assistance unless we secure control of it either through holding a majority of the stock or by absolute ownership of the road. We have been liberal with the Canadian Northern railway; we have given them grants of money and land, and guarantees, and after telling us in years gone by that they would not come again they come to this House in 1914 and ask for $45,000,000 to complete their transcontinental. There is no guarantee that they will not come again next year, and the year after that asking for more. Why not deal with this proposition now by getting control of it? That is my view, and I believe it to be the view of those whom I represent in this House.

I am in accord with the position taken by the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. Bennett), and by other gentlemen who have participated in this debate, that a commission should investigate the finances of the Canadian Northern railway and of the men who are in control of it. The people of this country want to know exactly where we stand in our dealings with the Canadian Northern and exactly where the Canadian Northern stand, and whether the men behind that road have made fortunes out of its construction or not. Some people have talked about the benevolence and generosity of Mackenzie and Mann, of how they have made practically nothing out of the construction of this road; that their fortunes have been made in other enterprises. I believe that their fortunes did not commence to develop until they went into railroad building, and after they went into that they were able to make investments in other enterprises and so increase their fortunes. A great many people in this country still cling to the idea, no matter how much it may be denied, that much of the assistance which has been given the Canadian Northern by the governments of this country, Dominion and provincial, has gone into other enterprises with which the Canadian Northern as a road was not related. We have had denials of that fact, but an inquiry into the finances of the road and into the financial condition of the men behind it, would establish whether that was true or not; whether all the money that had been voted by the governments of this country, Dominion and provincial, had gone into the construction of its transcontinental and branch lines.

As I said before, we in western Canada want railways and branch lines; but the people of western Canada are radical to a great degree and they do not want Canada to be tied up to any transaction that is not going to be in the interests of the people of this country. I believe that to be the view of those I represent, and I know that no legislation of last session was so unpopular with the people I met during recess as the $15,000,000 gift to the Canadian Northern. It was unpopular in a part of the country that needs railways, and if that is the case I believe this transaction will be even more so because it brings us into a junior partnership with men in whom the people of this country have more or less lost confidence; and unless we now get control of that road or bring it into the possession of the people of Canada I do not believe we are serving the best interests of this country by supporting the arrangement proposed in the resolution now under discussion.

Mr. F. F. PARDEE (West Lambton): I do not propose at this time to go particularly into the figures that have been quoted so many times by members on both sides of the House, but for a little while I want to review this matter in a general way. The manner in which this bargain was put upon the table of the House in the resolution now before us, appeals to my mind. I was very much struck by the speech of the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bristol) in that nearly the whole plaint of it was that greater consideration should be shown to Mackenzie and Mann. With that statement I entirely disagree. It appears to me that the history of the Canadian Northern railway since its inception, during the many years they have come to this House and to the legislatures and municipal and township councils of this Dominion, has been one long train of consideration shown to Mackenzie and Mann. The Canadian Northern railway has been practically fondled and petted and nursed up to what it is to-day. Therefore, when an hon. member asks the House to favourably consider this resolution because Mackenzie and Mann should receive some slight consideration, it does appear to me, with all due deference, that that argument ought not to hold water for a single moment, seeing that every consideration that could be shown to human beings has been given to Mackenzie and Mann for the carrying on of a project in which they never put a dollar of their own hard cash.

The one thing this House has to consider is whether or not this bargain is a good one. The Minister of Finance may, if he sees fit, split hairs on the question of partnership. I am not going to quarrel with him along those lines, but, at any rate, there can be no partnership unless it is entered into for the sake of making profits; and from the information that has been laid on the table of the House it cannot very well be said to be a partnership because the Canadian Northern shows no profit at all in any of its branches. But it is a partnership in the sense that these two men in control of this great undertaking, with all its ramifications, have come to this House—as has been ably shown by the hon. member for Calgary, the hon. member for Kingston, and other members on this side of the House—and held up both hands and said: come and save us, without your aid we are absolutely gone. Therefore, the Government stands in the position of entering into a partnership with a concern that is absolutely broken. The Government are the rich people coming to the aid of the Canadian Northern railway at the present moment, and the more they put into that railway the more they will have to put in, in order to save their necks. That is the whole story, in short. How good are the promises and the statements that have been made by these men in times gone by? If I mistake not, the Minister of Finance stood in the same place last year as he did to-night, and what did he say: Mackenzie and Mann want $15,000,000 of a cash gift; give them that and the road will be completed. The words are hardly out of his mouth before Mackenzie and Mann come back, and this time they do not want $15,000,000, but three times $15,000,000. Again they say that the road will be completed. I do not believe that $45,000,000 will complete the road, and I propose to give figures in support of that to-night; and if $45,000,000 will not complete the road we are going to have the same spectacle in this House next year. Mackenzie and Mann will come back with the same old story, the same statements will be laid on the table of the House and information will be dragged up by the hair of its head just as it has been to-day.

Ah, this splendid Government, this farseeing, astute Government, with all the acumen possessed by every one of its members, including the Solicitor General, have made a bargain with these people. A prominent part has been taken in this transaction by the Solicitor General, and a great many of the wisest people in this Dominion are wondering how such a head could carry all the knowledge he possesses.

The argument that has been put up by the Minister of Finance, and the one argument that he seems to base his whole case on, is that you must not appoint a receiver. Nobody says you should appoint a receiver. It is not necessary to appoint a receiver. We do say that there should be control of the stock of the Canadian Northern, and that the allied companies should be given into the hands of the Government, that the Government should appoint a majority of the directors, persons who are actually railway men and not contractors, and that the money should be expended under their supervision. There is no necessity of a receiver. Nobody is anxious to see the Canadian Northern go to the wall. I do not want to see the Canadian Northern go to the wall, but I do want to see it managed as a railway ought to be, instead of the money being squandered here, there and everywhere, and perhaps devoted to purposes extraneous to the railway altogether.

Hon. gentlemen say that they are going to get stock and mortgages on stock as security, and that they cannot lose. Of what value are the stocks that have been offered to the Government by way of security? Does anybody know? We have only security upon one property, and that is the Brockville road, upon which we get a first mortgage. I defy Mackenzie and Mann to stand on the floor of this House and tell us how many mortgages and encumbrances there are on the rest of the stock offered to us. I do not believe they know, because I do not believe they have a proper system of audit in their business. Mackenzie and Mann told us last year that $15,000,000 would complete the road, and if they tell us this year that $45,000,000 will complete it, to my mind that is the best evidence that Mackenzie and Mann know not where they stand themselves. This action is being taken by the Government wholly on their say so. There is an agreement, they say, but it has been drawn by two of the most skilful lawyers in the city of Toronto, who have inserted conditions which ought not to have been agreed to. Mackenzie and Mann are handing over stocks, the value of which nobody knows, and they are getting from the people of Canada $45,000,000 in cash. How much have the people of Canada already contributed to this Canadian Northern railway?

	Land. Acres.	Cash.	Guarantees.
Ontario	2,000,000	$ 1,825,000	$ 7,860,000
Quebec	.....	3,526,000
Manitoba. ..	.....	641,000	24,408,000
Saskatchewan.	.....	.....	8,258,000
Alberta	.....	.....	8,719,000
British Columbia ..	.....	.....	33,175,000
Dominion. ..	4,000,000	28,354,000	104,746,000

From beginning to end the Canadian Northern railway has got out of the people of Canada, besides $70,000,000 from the rural municipalities, $337,100,000. Do they need consideration? Do they need still to be nourished? It only goes to show that if we had Mackenzie and Mann, practical railway men, as operators, and not as contractors, the road would have been completed and completed well, and the people of Canada would have been getting a return for the money that they had given to them. If you look at the list of securities which the Government is to get a mortgage upon, it would rather strike you that the Canadian Northern, coming and asking as they are, would give to the Government mortgages on all their assets. I am not talking of personal assets that they may have, but I should like to know why it is, that, when you look over the list of assets, contained in part 1 of the second schedule, the Toronto, Niagara and St. Catharines railway, a paying proposition, the Toronto, Niagara and Western railway, a paying proposition, and the Inverness Railway and Coal Company, with a coal mine attached to it, a very paying proposition, are left out. Why is not the Government given the benefit of these securities and why is the Halifax and South Western left in which has never paid, and upon the bonds of which the Government has to pay $190,000 yearly interest ? Why not put them all in ? Why not come, if you come at all, with clean hands ? Why not come here and say: We will give you such securities as you like but we will take ample care that the good ones are retained ? They are allowed to select the securities which they hand over to this all-wise Government with all its business acumen. Why does the Government not get the rest ? Does the Government, as a matter of fact, know to-day just what Mackenzie and Mann have and what they could give, or have Mackenzie and Mann simply come and said: We will give you this, you can take it; we must have the money, and the Government capitulate and practically accept Mackenzie and Mann's terms ? That is exactly what happened.

What else happened ? We advance the money and we take the securities. But this money that they are asking for will not complete the road. Then what happens ? We take on, by reason of the money that we are putting in, a present indebtedness upon the Canadian Northern amounting to $312,000,000. We have to stand behind it in order to save the money the people of Canada are putting in. But we have to put somebody to operate that road in order that the money may be got out of it by proper operation, something that Mackenzie and Mann have amply shown they are not able to do. We have to go on and practically take hold of the road and operate it in order that there may be a chance of getting our money back. When you consider the fact that the moneys that are to be advanced and have been advanced, represent a liability for every man, woman and child in Canada of $26, with a benefit coming back of only $5 in the shape of worthless stock, you realize exactly to what length the Government of this country has gone. They say that $45,000,000 will complete the road. Now, Sir, as you will see by looking at page 42 of the blue-book, their floating liabilities are $10,408,000; there is due on construction $21,262,000; there is balance for completion $41,905,000; there are amounts owing to the banks, $20,703,000; or, in other words, for completion these people need absolutely $94,279,000. Even, if as good a mathematician as in his own mind the Minister of Finance is, can show me where he can pay up $94,000,000 indebtedness with a paltry $45,000,000, then I will take off my hat to him as he did to the Solicitor General. The figures are there and they cannot be got away from. It will take, to complete the Canadian Northern railway, $94,279,000, and yet Mackenzie and Mann are telling this Government, and this Government are attempting to tell the people of Canada, that $45,000,000 will complete the road. Why, it is the veriest buncombe; it is nothing more; it is nothing less. The Government know, and Mackenzie and Mann know better than the Government, that with this $45,000,000 they are dealing out one more sop to these railroad contractors, and the people of the country are getting in further and further, and that sooner or later they will have to take over the road and operate it themselves in order to save the money they have already put into it. The Government say that the $40,000,000, with the right they would receive by reason of any default that may take place, is better than $51,000,000. I say that the right of default cannot come until after three years, because the Government has guaranteed the payment of the loans for that period, and in three years Mackenzie and Mann may have squandered the road over again and the $45,000,000 with it. Why should not the Government now take control themselves, and put in a majority board of directors to operate that road? If the evil day is to come for the people of the Dominion why may not the people of the Dominion just as well, have the evil day come now, rather than give more money to Mackenzie and Mann day after day and year after year as they are doing. There is no sense in making two bites of a cherry in regard to this matter. By no method that the Finance Minister or the Solicitor General can devise can they make $45,000,000 do the work of $90,000,000, and by no method can you complete this railroad with the money that is now being given to it.

I repeat, Sir, that there ought to be a majority of this stock given to the people of Canada and that the people should operate the road. It is a well known fact that so far as Mackenzie and Mann are concerned, they are not railroad operators at all, and they admit that themselves. They are purely contractors in every sense of the word, and the operation of a railroad is not in their line at all. I say, Sir, that to allow men who have not put one single dollar of their own money into this enterprise to have control of this stock is an absolute breach of faith on the part of this Government, and in permitting it they are not standing by the interests of the people. We have had cited to us to-night the advances that were made in aid of the Canadian Pacific railway in years past, and the Minister of Finance told us he admired the courage of the men who built the Canadian Pacific railway. So does everybody admire their pluck, but it must not be forgotten that the men of the Canadian Pacific railway proved to the country the faith that was in them because they put up their own money in it to as great an extent as they were able to, and they risked their all for that railroad. But far be it from Mackenzie and Mann to advance one single dollar of their own personal security, and in the agreement, as drawn with the Government, mighty good care is taken that Mackenzie and Mann should be clear so far as their personal securities are concerned.

In conclusion, I say, Sir, that the contract as drawn is not calculated to protect the interests of the people of Canada. I agree entirely with the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. R. B. Bennett) and the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Nickle) and with those who have spoken on this side of the House, that in so far as the figures go they show to a definite conclusion that these people are involved to such a hopeless extent that I doubt if they know just where they stand themselves. I say that Mackenzie and Mann in coming to this House to-day are absolutely groping in the dark; they are asking for $45,000,000 knowing they will get it and knowing well that all they will have to do is to come back again and another advance will be made by this Government because the money already invested in the road—will have to be protected. That is my belief, and I say, therefore, and I cannot say it too strongly, that so far as this agreement is concerned it is bad from beginning to end. I say that Mackenzie and Mann are in all probability getting something for nothing. Again, I repeat, that in only one of those securities do we get a first mortgage, and that the securities taking them all in all are of no intrinsic value whatever. Mackenzie and Mann are not putting a five cent piece of their own money into the venture. They are afraid themselves to come in where they ask the people of Canada to enter. They have not the courage of their own convictions, and before one single dollar is given them under this resolution Mackenzie and Mann should be told in the strongest tones: if you say that $45,000,000 will complete the road; if you believe that the road when completed will be a paying proposition, then show your own faith in it by pledging your own securities, do not ask the people of Canada to get in and assume the whole load which is almost too heavy to bear now, while you, Mackenzie and Mann, keep out there and save your own hides; at least have the courage of men and show your own faith in the proposition.

[Mr. Pardee.]

On motion of Mr. Bradbury, the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Borden, the House adjourned at 10.40 p.m.

Tuesday, May 19, 1914.

The House met at Eleven o'clock, the Speaker in the Chair.

PRIVATE BILLS.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill No. 202, respecting the Grand Council of the Catholic Mutual Benefit Association of Canada.—Mr. Macdonell.

Bill No. 203, for the relief of Gustav Oscar Lindquist.—Mr. W. M. Martin.

JUDGES ACT AMENDMENT.

On the order, receiving report of Committee of the Whole on Bill No. 190, to amend the Judges Act, as amended—Mr. Doherty:

Mr. SPEAKER: After looking into this amendment carefully, I have decided that it is out of order, as it contemplates a larger expenditure of money than was provided for in the original resolution, which received the assent of His Royal Highness. The amendment reads:

5. Subsection (c) of section 18 of the principal Act is repealed, and the following substituted therefor:

(c) No judge of a county court shall receive any travelling allowance for courts or chambers held at the county town of the county or union of counties wherein he resides—provided, however, that this subsection shall not apply to any such judge residing at a town (other than the county town) at which the volume of court or chamber work done is established to the satisfaction of the Minister of Justice to be as great or greater than that done at the county town.

Therefore, for the reason given, I rule this amendment out of order. The question is now on the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. MACDONALD: Will not the Minister of Justice provide, by resolution, for the proposal which His Honour has just ruled out of order?

Mr. DOHERTY: I might be disposed to do that were it not for the fact that the proposed amendment, which I think ought to be passed, did not seem to meet the wishes of the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Kyte), or of the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald), I think. If the amendment is not going to remedy the evil complained of, it is hardly worth while resorting to new procedure to give effect to it.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time, and passed.

RAILWAY LEVEL CROSSINGS.

Hon. J. D. REID (acting Minister of Railways and Canals) moved the second reading of Bill No. 204, to amend the Railway Act. He said: This this Bill is to renew the $200,000 per annum to be expended on level crossings. Somebody on the other side of the House has asked me for a statement as to how much has been expended each year. The total amount expended during the five years up to January 1, 1914, is $60,991.22. I will bring down a detailed statement later on. The hon. member for South Renfrew said he was quite willing to let the Bill go through if he had this statement.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House went into Committee thereon.

On section 1—time extended:

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: What changes are made by this amendment in the law as it exists at the present time?

Mr. REID: There is no change in the law as it exists. This is simply extending the time for another five years from April 14 of the present year. There is to be no change in so far as the expenditure is concerned.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: The provision which was made to assist in the work of the separation of grades expired on the 14th of April?

Mr. REID: That is the date.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: And this Bill is to make provision for another five years?

Mr. REID: That is all.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Is there any change in the amount?

Mr. REID: No, the amount remains exactly the same.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Do I understand that during the past five years only $60,000 was expended?

Mr. REID: I called up the accountant of the commission this morning and asked him to give me a detailed statement of the amount expended each year. He told me that the total amount up to January 1, 1914, was $60,991.22. I thought the amount very small and could not understand how that could be all that was expended during five years, but he assured me that was the total amount expended from the time the Act was first passed. He promised to send me a detailed statement of the amount expended for each year.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I think the amount is very small. I would have expected a very much larger sum would have been expended. If my hon. friend will give us the information on the third reading, that will be satisfactory.

Mr. MACDONALD: I would assume that, by reason of the fact that the minister has introduced this Bill to amend the Railway Act, it is not expected that the Bill to revise the Railway Act will be proceeded with at this session. I think it would be wise that it should not be.

Mr. BORDEN: It seemed doubtful if sufficient time remained for taking up the consolidation of the Railway Act and amending Acts, and, as this is a matter that should not be neglected in the meantime, it was thought desirable to introduce this Bill so as to make provision for these crossings in any event.

Mr. OLIVER: With reference to the railway crossings of a city street, under what circumstances, and in what proportion is the cost of making the separation of grades provided for? On whose initiative is the undertaking to be done and afterwards what is the proportion of the cost? I am deeply interested in this matter.

Mr. REID: The municipality may make application to the Railway Commission to take the question up and decide whether a level crossing should be eliminated or not. The Railway Commission decide what proportion of the cost the municipality and the railway shall pay. The Government pay a certain proportion also. The whole matter is entirely in the hands of the Railway Commission.

Mr. OLIVER: There are two railways coming into the city of Edmonton, the Canadian Northern and the Grand Trunk Pacific. I do not think the rights of way actually join, but they are very close together. They cross a number of streets. In providing for the separation of grades, would the two railways be treated as one, or would they have to be dealt with separately? The one work would make a subway under both.

Mr. REID: The Railway Commission really have full powers in respect to any city, town, village, or municipal district. Whatever decision the Board of Railway Commissioners may give is law unless it is appealed to the Governor in Council.

Mr. OLIVER: Is there any general understanding as to what proportion of the total cost is borne by the two parties?

Mr. REID: The Railway Commission decides that.

Mr. OLIVER: What is the precedent in the matter? I do not wish to suggest to the city of Edmonton that it make application for subways and overhead crossings, and then have the city stuck for a large proportion of the cost. I would like to have some idea as to what the understanding has been in the past, so that we may know what to expect in the future.

Mr. REID: I must confess that I am not really well posted with reference to what has been done in the past, but, as far as I can remember, the city makes the application. Of course, the railway may also make application. In that case the city would have to appear and be heard, and it would have to abide by whatever decision the Railway Commission might give. In so far as Edmonton is concerned, if it should appear that a subway would be in the interest of the city, the city would be the one to make the application. I am quite satisfied that the Railway Commission would do what was fair as between the parties.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: It seems to me quite evident that either the Act is not what it ought to be, and the municipalities have not taken advantage of it to the extent that they should have done, or there have been more applications than the commission have been able to dispose of; because if, during the five year period which expired on the 14th April last, the expenditure by the Government for the removal of these level crossings has been only $60,000, the amount is absolutely insufficient, and shows that the Act has not been availed of as it should have been. I believe that in the case of Edmonton, the thing to do, as stated by the hon. acting Minister of Railways and Canals, is to apply to the Railway Commission to pass upon the matter. The commission simply orders the work and apportions the cost between the interested parties—in this case the city and the two railways—and the Government comes in with its share. I forget at the moment what is the share supplied by the Government, but my impression is that the Government pay one-third, the railway one-third, and the municipality one-third. It matters not whether the apportionment is made by the statute or by the commission. Though the procedure is easy and summary, the municipalities have not taken advantage of it. Perhaps it is that the commission has not been able to hear as many applications as are made to it. On the third reading my hon. friend should present a statement as to how many applications are now pending before the commission.

Mr. REID: I shall be glad to get that information.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The board has almost absolute control over these crossings, and can apportion the cost as between the railway companies and the municipalities, and can also order that a certain sum be paid out of the fund, which is not to exceed in any single instance $5,000. It is rather a surprise to me that the amount expended in five years is only $60,000. My city, on two occasions, made application under this statute, and, speaking from memory, we have received nearly $10,000 to build two subways, which were very expensive structures. The fact that there is so much expense in connection with an over-crossing or an under-crossing deters the ordinary municipality from making application, and the reason some municipalities do not apply is because the aid from the Government is limited. In Toronto they are building a structure over twenty-five streets, and surely the Government's expenditure this year alone will be more than $60,000.

Mr. REID: I was very much surprised when the accountant told me over the telephone that the expenditure had only been $60,000. I told him I thought he must mean the expenditure for one year, but he was insistent that it was for the five years. I shall have a statement prepared in detail as to the expenditure by the Government and by the municipalities, and the number of applications now pending before the board.

Bill reported.

ST. JOHN AND QUEBEC RAILWAY.

On motion of Hon. J. D. Reid, Bill No. 201, to amend the St. John and Quebec Railway Act, was read the second time, and the House went into Committee thereon, Mr. Blondin in the Chair.

On section 2—agreement with Government of New Brunswick and the company:

Mr. CARVELL: As I understand this section, after the expiration of fifteen years the Crown is to receive forty per cent of the earnings of the bridges, worked out on the basis of the cost of the bridges as compared with the total cost of the railroad. Is that the idea?

Mr. REID: Yes.

Mr. CARVELL: If the bridges cost one-fourth or one-sixth of the cost of the road, they would receive forty per cent of one-fourth or one-sixth of the total earnings.

Mr. REID: Whatever the cost of the bridges may bear to the total cost of the road.

Mr. MACDONALD: How many bridges are to be built and what is the estimated cost?

Mr. REID: Three bridges. The estimated cost is a little less than three million dollars, but we put in three million dollars to be certain to have sufficient to complete the bridges. Tenders will be advertised for in public competition and the work will be carried out under the Department of Railways and Canals.

Mr. MACDONALD: Is the minister considering putting in wooden trestles and using train fill?

Mr. REID: I do not think so.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: That is only done on the National Transcontinental.

Mr. MICHAUD: Is it the idea that the work cannot be started without the consent of the Government of New Brunswick?

Mr. REID: When this Bill is passed, negotiations must be entered into with the provincial Government in order to come to some understanding as to the new agreement that will be necessary. The Government will proceed at as early a date as possible to get matters into such a shape that they can go on with the erection of the bridges.

Mr. CARVELL: I do not know that it makes very much difference leaving subsection 1 of section 10 as it is, but there is certainly a good deal of verbosity in the subsection. I see that it leaves intact the provisions of the agreement; but, so far as that is concerned, I will allow the matter to go through, and, if necessary, on the third reading I will bring the matter again to the attention of the minister.

Mr. BORDEN: We will let the Bill stand for the third reading, and, if necessary, it can be referred back to the committee. The Bill was gone over pretty carefully by the law clerk of the House, and also by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries; and they assured me, when I looked over the Bill, that it was in proper form.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: This legislation seems to be very sweeping, because practically the whole of the Act is repealed. Now, the Act contains certain provisions which, I believe, in view of what we have heard in regard to section 2 of the Bill, ought to be carefully considered. For instance, rates and tolls are to be considered under section 6 of the Act which reads as follows:

> The rates and tolls charged by the bridge company upon or in respect of any of the said bridges so aided shall, before being levied or charged by the bridge company, be first approved of by the Governor in Council.

That seems to be a very wide provision. As I understand it, the bridges are to be built by the Government, and for fifteen years the Government receives nothing. At the end of that period, they receive a certain proportion of the rates and tolls charged by the road. Section 6 of the Act provides that the rates and tolls shall be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council; but according to the Bill now before us, you repeal that section altogether.

Mr. REID: We own the bridges now.

Mr. CARVELL: I think it is all right, because the Government own the bridges now.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: But the public is interested in knowing what the rates and tolls shall be.

Mr. CARVELL: But the bridge company has now power to charge any tolls whatever, because the bridges are taken out of the hands of the company and placed in the hands of the Government.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Are the bridges free?

Mr. CARVELL: They will be free for fifteen years. At the end of fifteen years the Government of Canada will receive whatever their proportion will be of the forty per cent of gross earnings, because, according to the original scheme, forty per cent of the gross earnings of the railway go to the Government of New Brunswick, out of which the Government pay the interest on the bonds guaranteed under this arrangement. As I understand it, that proportion of the forty per cent which would be the bridge company's proportion comes back to the Government of Canada. The remaining portion of the forty per cent, which would be about five-sixths, goes to the Government of the province of New Brunswick; and, after paying the interest on the bond issue, the balance goes back to the St. John and Quebec Railway Company. But our proportion of the forty per cent comes directly to the Government of Canada.

Mr. REID: That is exactly it. We have control of the rates.

Section agreed to.

On section 5—commencement of Act:

Mr. CARVELL: I must protest against this section. This raises the question that we have been discussing in New Brunswick for three or four years. We want this road built, and we want these bridges built. If section 5 goes through as now proposed, these bridges cannot be touched for a year. The province of New Brunswick is guaranteeing bonds to the extent of $7,000,000, paying it over to a lot of bright, shrewd Yankees in New York, who are using up what little is necessary to build the road, and are putting the balance into their pockets, or paying it out for political purposes. That railway is of no use without these bridges; and, if section 5 goes through these bridges cannot be touched for a year, because the legislature of New Brunswick will not meet until say March of next year.

Mr. BORDEN: Has the legislature prorogued?

Mr. CARVELL: Yes, and it simply means deferring this matter for a year. If a bridge across the St. John river is going to cost $2,000,000, it cannot be built in one year, or in two years. If the work is to be postponed for a year, it will take three or four years after that to complete the bridge, so that it will be four or five years before Grand Trunk Pacific business can go into the city of St. John. It is a fact that neither the Government of New Brunswick nor the Government of Canada will be justified in spending a dollar on this road if it is not for the purpose of opening up a highway from the West into the city of St. John. Of course, some money must be spent in building branch lines, but the idea is to build a through road, and, unless it be a through road, the province of New Brunswick will be bankrupt, because it will have $7,000,000 tied up in one road, and that will be a tremendous financial strain upon the province. Unless this road is so built that it makes a through highway for western business into the city of St. John and gives the people of the province something to do, I do not know what will become of the province. I wish I could make my hon. friends opposite realize the importance of this matter to the province from a financial standpoint. Very serious charges have been made in the provincial legislature regarding the construction of this road. I have made the statement here, and nobody has dared to deny it, that it is not a first-class or a second-class or even a third-class road that is being built. I do not believe it is the intention even to go to Grand Falls. I listened the other day to my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in regard to this matter; and, without cross-examining him, I thought we would have an opportunity of discussing the matter at the committee stage. I understood him to say that, according to Mr. Montserrat's estimate, $3,000,000 would be necessary to build the three bridges—one across the St. John river at or near Andover, one across the St. John river at or near Nistake, and one across the Kennebecasis river at or near Perry Point.

Mr. BORDEN: The Minister of Marine and Fisheries has been detained owing to an important engagement. He is much more familiar with the object of this legislation than either the acting Minister of Railways and Canals or myself. Therefore, I would suggest to the hon. member for Carleton that we let the Bill remain in Committee until the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is able to be here, and then we can consider my hon. friend's suggestion as to the elimination of this section.

Mr. CARVELL: That is satisfactory to me. The whole gist of the Bill is contained in section 5, because, if this goes through and we cannot commence the building of the bridges for another year, it will be four or five years before they can be completed.

Progress reported.

DRY-DOCKS SUBSIDIES.

On motion of Hon. Robert Rogers (Minister of Public Works) the House went into Committee to consider the following proposed resolution, Mr. Blondin in the Chair.

Resolved, that it is expedient to provide that the subsidy payable in respect of first-class dry-docks under section 8 of the Dry Docks Subsidies Act, 1910 (1910, chapter 17) be increased from three and one-half per cent to four per cent per annum of the cost of the work as fixed under the Act, during a period not exceeding thirty-five years.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Will the minister please explain this resolution?

Mr. ROGERS: This resolution is presented to meet the difficulties that are found in raising the necessary capital for the construction of a first-class dry-dock. Hon. members will understand that a first-class dry-dock is one that is not less than 1,150 feet in length, with a width of 116 feet and a depth of 37 feet. Under the old Act, the subsidy was based upon an amount equal to three and a half per cent of the cost of such a dry-dock. Section 8 of that Act provided:

The subsidy payable in respect of dry docks which have been constructed under this Act shall be—

(a) if of the first-class, a sum not exceeding three and one-half per cent of the cost of the work, as fixed and determined under subsection 2 of this section, each year during a period not exceeding thirty-five years from the time the Governor in Council has determined, under this Act, that the work has been completed.

Subsection 2 provides:

The cost on which the subsidy shall be calculated shall be fixed and determined by the Governor in Council, upon the recommendation of the minister, based upon the report of the chief engineer of the Department of Public Works, accompanied by plans and specifications of the proposed works, and such cost shall include the cost of all necessary equipment, machinery and plant, and any sum bona fide expended or to be expended by the company in the purchase of a site for the dry-dock, but shall not include the value of any site received or to be received by the company by way of bonus or gift; and the amount of the subsidy shall be so fixed and determined before the agreement for payment of the subsidy is entered into.

In view of the cost of money at the present time it has been found impossible for companies to undertake the construction of a first-class dry-dock on the basis of a subsidy of three and a half per cent, and it is proposed to increase it to four per cent. We have at present a crying demand from Vancouver for a dry-dock of first-class dimensions, and it is apparently impossible to get any company to undertake the work on a basis of a three and a half per cent subsidy.

Mr. CARVELL: I presume that I shall be correct if I understand the minister as saying that this applies to docks for which contracts have been entered into as well as for those to be contracted for in the future?

Mr. ROGERS: No; this applies to the future only; there is nothing retroactive about it.

Mr. CARVELL: Does not the hon. minister think it could be extended? For instance, take the case of the dry-dock at St. John. As he knows, a company is building a dry-dock, and I think I am safe in saying though I have no personal knowledge of the matter, that on account of the financial stringency about which we heard so much from the Minister of Finance last evening, they have difficulty in financing on a basis of three and a half per cent for thirty-five years. Would not he feel justified in extending this increased subsidy to the dry-dock at St. John just as though the work were in the future? It is true, the dry-dock has been commenced and a large amount of work has been done; but it seems to me it would be reasonable and fair, and in the public interest, that this should be made retroactive to cover the case of dry-docks in the course of construction. Let me point out another thing. The dry-dock in St. John, as I understand it, may not come under the head of a first-class dry-dock as the minister has described it or in commercial language. It is only 900 feet long, but they are building in Lévis, and I think on the Pacific coast, docks 1,100 feet long. Would it not be reasonable for the minister to include the St. John dry-dock in this resolution and provide that it be made a first-class modern dry-dock in every respect? I hope he will see his way clear to carry out this idea.

Mr. ROGERS: The same conditions that apply to St. John would apply to other cases as well—to the case of the Montreal dock, for instance. And I do not see how it would be possible to stop even there. We should have to go back to other docks that have been subsidized under contract made with the Government and with Parliament. In the case of the dry-dock at St. John, we have there a reputable company, as I understand it, that has undertaken to construct a dry-dock and has made a definite and specific contract to carry out that work on the basis of three and one-half per cent. I do not see how it would be possible for me to recommend that we make this legislation retroactive. In the case of the St. John dry-dock, we have offered the contractors who have made a contract on the basis of a dry-dock of 900 feet that whatever amount a dock of 1,100 feet would cost, we will extend the contract on that basis should they desire it. I do not think it would be the part of wisdom to make the legislation retroactive, because as I have said, it would be impossible to stop at the case of St. John, but we should have to include the dock at Montreal and even go back to the beginning of the building of dry-docks. I do not think it would be possible.

Mr. CARVELL: I do not think there are as many lions in the path as the hon. minister seems to think. He is looking at this matter through distorted glasses. Not many dry-docks have been constructed under this Act. I do not think there is a first-class dry-dock in Canada, except the floating dock at Montreal. I speak subject to correction. I think the minister would not be violating any principle if he extended the scope of this resolution to include the St. John dry-dock. He says he will agree with the contractors to build a dock of 1,100 feet if they do it on the same basis as that on which they are now building the dock of 900 feet. But these terms are very onerous; the more docks you build on those terms the poorer you are. When you have a bond the interest on which is guaranteed for thirty-five years at three and one-half per cent, you have not a very saleable proposition under present financial conditions. When my hon. friend asks this company to extend their dock 200 feet under the present conditions, he is only putting them in a position to lose more money.

Mr. ROGERS: We did not ask them to do it.

Mr. CARVELL: When the people of St. John asks them to do it and my hon. friend comes back with this offer, it is only asking these people to lose more money than they are doing now. It seems to me that if the minister would make this retroactive so far as the St. John dock is concerned, he would give us in St. John the opportunity of having a really first-class dry-dock 1,100 feet in length, the same as those at Levis, on the Pacific coast, and, I believe, at Halifax. I consider that this is only a reasonable request and I still hope that, notwithstanding my hon. friend's rather pronounced views on the subject, he and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will be able to get together and put St. John in the same position as these other great national ports.

Mr. ROGERS: The considerations that would apply to first-class dry-docks would also apply to second-class dry-docks, so that this would have to be done at Port Arthur, Montreal, Prince Rupert, Sault Ste. Marie, Toronto and St. John. But I do not see how it would be possible to carry out such legislation as the hon. member has suggested by reason of the fact that if we adopt any retroactive legislation it would have to be applied to all of these dry-docks.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I quite sympathize with the view taken by the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell). I do not know personally of the case at St. John except by rumour and by what is being published in the press. I know that this great dock will revolutionize things at St. John. The effect of the establishment of a floating dry-dock in Montreal by the Vickers firm has certainly been to improve the condition of our whole transportation system. As pioneers in that new industry, the Vickers are certainly entitled to preferential treatment, and I know that they are at present asking the assistance of the Government to recoup them for the very large expenditure which they have made in order to give Montreal and the St. Lawrence the benefit of their dock. Since the establishment of that floating dock many ships which have suffered accident have been repaired in Montreal. Still it has not yet become a paying institution and I am quite sure that if the Government would apply the present legislation to the few cases which exist, making it retroactive for these few cases, it would be simply doing justice to the pioneers. I would like to put in a good word for the Vickers Company because they have certainly improved considerably the conditions of transportation in the St. Lawrence, and especially in Montreal.

Mr. ROGERS: We all appreciate what the Vickers Company have done in the construction of the dry-dock in Montreal which is giving, as I understand, entire satisfaction. At the same time in view of the fact that a strong company, such as the Vickers, have made a contract for the construction and operation of this dock, I do not see how we could fairly ask Parliament to amend the subsidy after the work has been practically completed and give them an advance on the subsidy for which they had already contracted to build the dock. It is true that there was an understanding, implied or otherwise, at the time they made the contract, that they were going to have the opportunity of building a navy for my hon. friends opposite in the city of Montreal, and that, in view of that prospective work, they made a contract for the building of a dry dock at a lower rate than they probably otherwise would have asked. I for one would be very glad, if possible, to amend the Subsidy Act in some way that would lend them assistance, because of the fact that their dock is giving entire satisfaction; but if you do that in the case of Montreal, why not in the case of Prince Rupert or Port Arthur or the Sault or Collingwood? That is the difficulty that confronts us. Otherwise I would be very glad to yield to the recommendation of my hon. friend, but I do not think it would be possible to do so.

12 noon.

Mr. LEMIEUX: The answer of my hon. friend is so far very satisfactory. I wish to say something, however, as to the suggestion thrown out by my hon. friend as regards the proposed Canadian navy. My hon. friend has supplied us with an excellent argument which was combatted by hon. gentlemen opposite when the discussion took place last year, namely that we were in a position to build a navy in Canada. Now, it is perfectly true that when the Vickers established their floating dock in Montreal, with their shipyards, they had in mind that, possibly in the near future, they would receive orders for the proposed Canadian navy. They were entitled to expect that, and if it is true that they believed that they would receive such orders. Is it not then surprising that the Prime Minister last year contended that for fifty years Canada would be unable to build ships? I remember perfectly the circumstances of the establishment of the Vickers shipyard in Montreal. They stated then, and they state today, that if the Government would live up to the expectations which were given in 1910, they would certainly undertake to build, not the dreadnoughts but the smaller cruisers which would be a part of the Canadian navy. I do not wish to start a debate on the Canadian navy, but I am glad to hear my hon. friend confirm the statement made by several members of the Liberal party last year that if Canada wanted a navy our own shipyards could build the vessels.

Mr. CARVELL: Perhaps it would not be out of the way for me to recall to hon. gentlemen opposite that what has been said about Montreal is true of St. John to a greater degree, because in the case of St. John there was a tender to build part of those vessels, and it was the lowest tender; and my hon. friends opposite had the deposit in their hands when they came into power, but they returned it. I have no doubt whatever that the promoters of the dry-dock in St. John believed—I happen to know they had very good reason for believing—that a portion of those vessels would be built in St. John. I happen to know, and I think the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and the Minister of Public Works know, that Norton, Griffiths and Company were working in conjunction with Cammell, Laird and Company, who were the contractors for the war vessels; and there is no doubt that the Government have obtained a better contract with Norton Griffiths and Company for the construction of the dry-dock and harbour works by reason of that company's expectation of building a portion of those vessels. Norton Griffiths and Company were influenced, no doubt, by a contract which they had with Cammell, Laird and Company for the construction of the war vessels. I have some knowledge of this, for I was present when the contract was drawn up between these companies, and I repeat that Norton Griffiths and Company were largely influenced in their tender for the construction of this dry-dock and harbour works by the fact that they expected to work in conjunction with Cammell, Laird and Company for the construction of a portion of these war vessels. I believe the Government to-day has a much more favourable contract with Norton Griffiths and Company by reason of that expectation, which has not been fulfilled, than they would have got without it. I had not intended to refer to this, but as the Minister of Public Works has brought the question up, I give it as an additional reason why the St. John dry-dock and harbour should be treated as generously as the dry-dock at Levis, at Halifax, and the one on the Pacific coast.

Mr. HAZEN: I regret I was not here when this discussion commenced regarding the dry-dock at St. John, for which Norton Griffiths and Company have the contract, as I was attending a meeting of the Marine and Fisheries Committee. The contract at St. John included the dredging of the bay, the construction of certain dry-docks and the breakwater there, and the construction of a dry-dock which is being constructed under the Dry-Docks Act. Although they are constructing that dry-dock under the Dry-docks Act, in a sense, it is well known to the Public Works Department that Norton Griffiths and Company would never have entered into a contract for the building of a dry-dock if it had not been linked up with the other work I have mentioned. The contract calls for a dry-dock 950 feet long which, when completed, will be one of the largest in the world. Contracts have since been entered into for dry-docks at Levis, Halifax, and I think in British Columbia for dry-docks 1,100 feet long, and while the 950 feet dry-dock at St. John will probably meet all the requirements for a number of years to come, it might be wiser to make arrangements with Norton Griffiths and Company to extend it to 1,100 feet.

Mr. CARVELL: That is what I am asking for.

Mr. HAZEN: There is no doubt that Norton Griffiths and Company would not have entered into a contract for the construction of the dry-dock unless there had been linked up with it this other work, and all those who tendered for the other work knew that one of the conditions to be complied with was that they were also to construct a dry-dock at St. John under the provisions of the Dry-Docks Act. Consequently, when they were making up their estimate for dredging, building a harbour and piers, they had to take into consideration the fact that they were also required to build a dry-dock under the provisions of the Dry-Docks Act.

My hon. friend has said that if the Norton Griffiths Company had got the contract for building certain cruisers and destroyers they would have been built at St. John, but we have the statement of his leader that if the Government had proceeded with that policy those cruisers and destroyers would at the present time have been under construction at the city of Montreal.

Mr. CARVELL: Only a portion of them.

Mr. HAZEN: My right hon. friend made no exceptions. As a matter of fact, it has always been claimed by the representatives of the Canadian Vickers that they have assurances that the work will be given to them when they have completed their floating dock and shipyards at the city of Montreal.

Mr. CARVELL: There is no proof of that.

Mr. HAZEN: We have their assurances. My hon. friend's statement is certainly not in line with that of his leader that these ships would now have been under construction in Montreal. Certainly they could not have been under construction last winter at St. John, under the terms of the Norton Griffiths contract, because the shipbuilding plant at Courtenay bay could not have been ready for carrying on the work, no mattter how much expedition Norton Griffiths had shown. It is desirable that some arrangement should be made with Norton Griffiths and Company, if possible, to modify their tender so that the dock can be extended to 1,100 feet. That matter is now under consideration by the company and the Public Works Department. It will mean certain changes not only in the tender for the dock, but in the tenders for the construction of the whole work, because in figuring on the work they had in mind what it would cost to build the dry-dock over and above the assistance they could obtain under the provisions of the Dry-Docks Act. It would therefore, mean a reconstruction of the whole contract from first to last. Representations have been made by Mr. Norton Griffiths who is expected in Canada, I believe, in the course of a week or two, when, no doubt, the matter will be taken up.

Mr. CARVELL: I quite agree with much that my hon. friend has said as to the harbour works being linked up with the dry-dock, and probably it would have been hard for any person to undertake the construction of the dry-dock if the other works had not gone along with it. I take full credit in so far as I had anything to do with the matter, and accept full responsibility for anything I did in connection with linking up these works. But my hon. friend missed the important part of my argument, which was that the tender of Norton Griffiths and Company was very much lower than any other tender for harbour work and dry-dock combined, and it was so because they believed they were going to build a portion of the cruisers and destroyers. For that reason the department are getting the work done cheaper than any other contractor would have done it for. Therefore, the Department of Public Works is getting this work done at a very much cheaper rate than any contractor would have done it for because, relying upon their contract with Cammel, Laird and Company, and believing that they would have the right to construct a portion of these works, the tender was very much lower than anybody else tendered for. I hope my hon. friend's statement is more than the ordinary polite way of getting around an unpleasant political condition of affairs when he tells us that Mr. Norton Griffiths is expected in Canada soon, that he has made application to the minister and that the minister is in hopes that some way may be found of working out this matter. It rather smooths it over for the present, but it does not help to improve conditions in St. John.

Mr. HAZEN: Why did you not make it a first-class dock, 1,100 feet long, when you asked for tenders?

Mr. CARVELL: Because a 900 foot dock at that time was considered a first-class dock. Now my hon. friends are going beyond that. Before this work is actually commenced, they have decided to put in an 1,100 foot dock. It is very much easier to have this dock built up to a higher standard by increasing the bond guarantee or the interest on the bonds than by rearranging the whole of the contract. I hope the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will consider this and see if he cannot induce the hon. Minister of Public Works to bring this dry dock under the Act.

Mr. HAZEN: When my hon. friend states that a more favourable offer was made by Mr. Norton Griffiths because of some visionary arrangement they had with Cammel, Laird and Company about other contracts, I can only say that I do not believe that to be the fact. I think I would have been informed by Mr. Norton Griffiths if that had been the case. After the present Government came into power the tenders of Mr. Norton Griffiths Company were reduced by about $250,000.

Mr. CARVELL: But you reduced the specification.

Mr. HAZEN: Without any change in the specification at all. The figures were reduced upon one item of $250,000, showing that the figure which was put in in the first instance was very high.

Mr. CARVELL: But my hon. friend must know that they changed the specifications of the breakwater.

Mr. HAZEN: They had nothing to do with the breakwater; they had to do with cribwork piers but not with the breakwater. That was another matter. They reduced their figures by about a quarter of a million dollars and my information is that the figures at which the contract has been awarded to them leaves them, provided proper methods are adopted, as good a margin of profit as is generally obtained by contractors on work of this description.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Rogers thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 205, to amend the Dry-Docks Subsidies Act, 1910.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

YUKON PLACER MINING.

On motion of Hon. W. J. Roche (Minister of the Interior), Bill No. 200, to amend the Yukon Placer Mining Act, was read the second time and the House went into Committee thereon, Mr. Blondin in the chair.

On section 1—owners of adjoining claims concentrating work on one or more claims,—s. 51 amended to facilitate such agreements between individual miners:

Mr. ROCHE: I explained when I introduced this Bill that it is intended to amend section 51 of the Placer Mining Act. Section 51 as it now stands provides that any number of claims owned by one individual company, or a group of individuals included in any registered partnership, may be grouped for operation, but it does not provide for any group of individuals who have not formed a registered partnership. This amendment goes farther so as to enable a group of individuals to operate a number of claims by signing a document and producing it before the gold commissioner in which they assume severally and jointly all liabilities in so far as the operation of these particular claims is concerned but not in regard to such other things as a registered partnership would entail.

Mr. MACDONALD: Why do you dispense with some of the conditions which usually occur in a regular partnership? It seems that you are providing for some kind of a legal holding entirely apart from those relations which are recognized as existing in a partnership.

Mr. ALFRED THOMPSON: It was found that when the Act was put in operation it did not carry out the spirit of the law as it was intended. It gave certain privileges to large operators which were denied, under the construction of the Act, to the smaller operators and this clause is to remedy that apparent defect. In reading the original clause it is not easy to see where the difficulty occurs but it does occur under the ruling that the officers administering the law gave it in the Yukon. This clause has been drafted to remedy that difficulty.

Mr. MACDONALD: What is the legal relation to each other and what is the provision in regard to the creditors of the parties who have a holding of this kind?

Mr. THOMPSON: The legal relation in regard to these gentlemen who combine to group their claims under this proposed legislation confines their liability simply to the operation of these particular claims and does not proceed beyond that. It is a simple method of making it possible for small individual operators to group their claims in order to do the representation work. The law demands that $200 worth of work shall be done on each claim. This work is known as representation work and this clause is to make it possible for the individual owners to group their claims. If there are ten or eleven claims in one group, all that is necessary is to do $200 worth of work for each claim on one claim. The liability extends simply to the claims concerned owned by each group of miners.

Mr. MACDONALD: Would the effect be that with parties associated together in this way these holdings would only be liable to the extent of the interest of these parties in this property? Supposing the case of a creditor against the partnership for goods purchased or a case where a party had been injured—would he need to realize his claim out of that particular holding and would he be unable to proceed against them to recover out of any other property they might hold?

Mr. THOMPSON: That is the point.

Mr. MACDONALD: Why has this exception been applied to the Yukon?

Mr. THOMPSON: The idea is to confine the liability of these operators and to make an easy form of partnership which they can enter into for the representation work on these individual claims, and it was not thought desirable to extend the liability beyond that particular thing.

Mr. OLIVER: If a party of miners group their claims and the assessment work that is contemplated on one claim is not fully done, what happens? Do all the members of the group lose their rights or is there an apportionment of responsibility so that only those who did not contribute lose their rights?

Mr. THOMPSON: They are jointly and severally liable for the amount of work required to represent the group, and as this legislation is framed especially to meet their wishes, I fancy it would be incumbent upon each individual to satisfy himself that the necessary amount of work on the whole group was performed.

Mr. OLIVER: In case the mining inspector gave a decision that the work had not been performed, would all the claims concerned in that group be thereby forfeited?

Mr. THOMPSON: If the necessary amount of work was not done, the effect would be that the claims combined in that partnership would be subject to forfeiture. There is, however, a clause by which the original owners may, by doing certain things, get their claims back if through a technical error they place themselves in a position where they might lose their claims.

Mr. OLIVER: It would be well while the Bill is in Committee to have that point definitely settled and the minister might make a clear statement as to it. Would the whole claim be liable to forfeiture and what conditions would surround the recovery of rights.

Mr. ROCHE: The latter portion of section 2, referring to the partnership, reads:

Such agreement shall state the address within the Yukon territory at which the notice of cancellation, hereinafter referred to, may be served upon the said partnership; service of such notice at which address shall be good and sufficient notice to all parties to said partnership agreement and to all persons interested. Such permission, however, shall be subject to cancellation at any time by the gold commissioner, with the approval of the commissioner, after sixty days' notice to the persons interested, in case it appears from the report of the mining inspector or otherwise that the system of mining contemplated when such permission was granted is not being installed or operated with reasonable diligence.

I would gather from this clause that it would be subject to cancellation, if the operation of this particular group of claims is not pursued with reasonable diligence.

Mr. OLIVER: The department takes supervision of the work, and if it is not going forward, ultimately forfeiture would result. But under mining conditions, where property is valuable, the law is made plain so that everybody can understand and satisfy himself whether the requirements of the law are being fulfilled. Then, it is a thoroughly understood principle of the administration of the mining law that if the requirements have not been fulfilled by 'A' the property becomes available to 'B,' and 'B' forthwith insists upon his rights. If the minister says that on the failure of the joint representation work to be completed within the time and to the amount required by law, all the claims are forfeited and the rights of other men may be asserted in regard to these claims, that is a perfectly clear statement, and we understand exactly where we are. I may point out that it is rather a serious situation, and that it detracts somewhat from the advantage of the grouping, if a man who enters into a group is liable to lose his claim through no fault of his own and without his knowledge of the conditions that render him liable. As long as the law is understood by all parties, that is really the main thing, and after all it is not so much what is said in legislation as what is done in administration. It is not so much what the law says, as it is what the officer of the department says it says, that counts.

Mr. ALFRED THOMPSON: That is exactly the point. My hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) was Minister of the Interior when the law was first made, and it was thought to represent exactly what we in the Yukon intended, but when it was administered in the Yukon this defect cropped up and this legislation is to remedy it. There is a process of law whereby each of these individual owners shall be notified and have an opportunity of proving that the total representation work required by the section shall have been performed before their rights will be cancelled.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

CANADIAN NORTHERN RAILWAY AGREEMENT.

Consideration of the proposed motion of Mr. Borden that the House go into Committee to consider certain resolutions respecting the Canadian Northern railway, and the amendment of Mr. Macdonald thereto, resumed from Monday, May 18.

Mr. J. H. BURNHAM (West Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the enthusiastic reception accorded me by my fellow members when I arose, I do not intend to go into this matter at any length. I would like, however, to say a few words upon what might be called the more general features of this question. The problem that presents itself at the present juncture to this Parliament and to the people of Canada is one not only fraught with very serious difficulty, but, with the natural fruition of errors committed in the past, which are gradually developing and coming to the surface, and which in course of time have been dealt with and dismissed from the public mind.

The whole system of Government, like the solar system, is proceeding towards the polar star of control. Hereafter there will be no such record on the part of the people of this country as there has been in the past of handing over the natural resources and the hard-earned savings of the people to financial buccaneers of any type whatever, that choose to foist themselves upon the Canadian people. One of the great privileges of belonging to the Conservative party and of serving under the distinguished Prime Minister of the present day is that of being able, nay, of being invited to express one's opinions freely. The only necessary qualification known in conservatism is that people shall speak their opinions with sincerity, having given the matter in question some thought, and with a sincere desire to serve the state. It was therefore with pleasure that we all listened to the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. Bennett) and the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Nickle). These gentlemen have given the very best that was in them to the service of the State, and they are thanked accordingly by the people and by this House. There can be no question that they have given a vast deal of thought to this question and that they have done admirably in that service. I am sure, whilst they may not be able to see eye to eye with us all, nevertheless, realizing the necessities of the situation and having made their protest, they will agree that in order to fulfil the purposes of party Government, it is necessary to fall in line at some time or other.

It is not by any means an admirable thing that an opposition or any other body of men should have so few ideas that they can be all knocked together in a few minutes and dismissed as casually. It would be better for the Opposition, I fancy, if they differed more on this question, so vital to the interest of the country. Then we would have something worth considering in the way of an amendment instead of one simply to give the matter a six months' hoist. It must surely be a very severe criticism upon the functions of an opposition that, after having debated this question for nearly a week, the only way they can see out of the difficulty is to give it a boost into eternity. That I am sure will not commend itself to the people of the country who admire a brave opposition rather than a cowardly one.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BURNHAM: When I say 'cowardly' I do not mean that they funk the job; I mean that, instead of setting their face one way, they have set it in another and an unusual way. But the people of the country, however, think, as I know the Government know and we all realize, that Mackenzie and Mann have been allowed too much rope, and that there was very great danger at one time that they would be allowed a little more for the express purpose of hanging themselves with it, if necessary, and there would have been no general regret had they done so.

As the distinguished Prime Minister said on one occasion, the Government were not sent here by the people for the purpose of sidestepping their difficulties; they were sent here by the people for the purpose of transacting the business of the people, and therefore they must boldly face the problem and boldly solve it. They have unquestionably done their best; and while I presume they do not think that their best may necessarily be perfect, yet it lacks amendment. on the part of the Opposition, and we can at least lay that flattering unction to our souls. We may safely say that the people have got tired of being deprived of their just rights, of being made to pay the piper. They no longer intend to do any such thing; and I venture to say that, if Mackenzie and Mann or the Canadian Northern come back here next year seeking anything further, if they are not given the foreclosure but are given any further assistance, there will be not a riot but a revolution in this country.

Mr. KYTE: It is coming.

Mr. BURNHAM: Yes, it is coming, but it will take a long time if you give this matter a six months' hoist.

But this is thoroughly realized by the Conservative party; and, apart altogether from the other financial considerations such as the great stringency of the financial world, we must consider the question directly and immediately at issue. That question is whether or not, by a little successful financing, which will not in any way injure others or ourselves to any appreciable extent, we shall be able to tide this great undertaking over a serious difficulty and place the Canadian Northern Railway Company, not for their benefit but for ours, upon a sound footing. That is the question before us; and I am sure it is fitting for us to give it our serious consideration and to hasten to give the aid if possible, and we are so doing. It is, of course, gratifying to hear plenty of criticism. It is only in that way that the general knowledge of the country and of the opponents and critics of the resolution can possibly be made use of by the Government. That is desirable; and since we now know that the only thing that can be urged against this resolution is that it had better be postponed, we are thoroughly well satisfied to go on with it without delay. The people of this country, I fancy, do think in that way. They are absolutely tired of grafters, of being made use of, of being made hewers of wood and drawers of water for financial giants, men who, having acquired the distinction and the fortune which they have, put handles to their names in order to distinguish themselves from the common multitude. Are those titles put into this resolution? Are they a security? I fancy not, because they do not furnish any security. They do not indicate the facts of the case, and therefore never should have been bestowed. I say, however, that in view of the fact that this great undertaking is at stake; that this great difficulty must be faced, the general proposition of aiding and assisting at this juncture is admitted. The right hon. leader of the Opposition, with that patriotism which characterizes him, has himself said that aid should be given. Therefore the rest is merely a matter of detail. That is something for the lawyers to settle, or for those upon whom rests the responsibility of furnishing a measure which will escape the criticism of the judges—and if they do that, they will accomplish more than anybody else has ever accomplished yet. But that is a matter of detail and is not germane to the question that is now before us. We are, and have been, discussing the principle of the Bill, and that principle has been endorsed from the first, the criticism that has been hurled at it by a large number of speakers being based upon an entire misconception. The principle of the Bill has been endorsed even by the leader of the Opposition. Criticism of the principle from that or by the hon. gentleman's followers is entirely unwarranted—let these hon. gentlemen dispute with their own leader and not with this Government. They have endorsed the principle. Very well, then, let us hasten the introduction of the Bill and the discussion of the details, and then let them fight about the details as much as they like. But the fact is, we must help the Canadian Northern railway system out of the difficulty in which it is—we must do that for our own benefit; no one denies that. So, let us get out of this quarrel, let us be done with this furnishing of items for the newspapers and material for tremendous headlines. If there be a man in this House who does not endorse the principle, let him stand up and say: Not a dollar shall be spent to give this enterprise assistance. There is not a man in this House who will rise and say any such thing. We simply must decide whether we shall go into public ownership or whether we shall assist this enterprise at this juncture. I think it must be admitted that it is for us to accept the statement of those who are most intimately connected with the management of our finances; and that statement is that however desirable it might be for us to acquire this whole system—and very likely that may be proper in the future when we are in a position to do it—yet we are not able to do it now for the reason that we have too much else on hand. What else can we do except take the word of those who are managing our finances and bow to their judgment? Undoubtedly the time will come when we shall own all great public works, all means of transportation and communication; and possibly all means of production; and so, instead of having a system of free trade by which people can rush in and grab what they like leaving the rest to take what they have left, we shall have established and demonstrated the true function of government, the public control for the benefit of the people of all the country's resources. Therefore, I say that we ought to get out of the slough of despond ln which we are at the present time. Canadians are not the people to lose their nerve in face of impending catastrophe. I admit, and admit readily, that Mackenzie and Mann ought to put every dollar they have into this enterprise and that if we could we ought to compel them to do it, and fight it on this principle. But now the only thing we can say is: Who allowed these men to start out on this voyage of discovery? Which has got us into this difficulty? Who allowed these men to bind down the provinces, and then having got them tied down, having got them firmly anchored for their own purposes, simply to laugh at us and say: Help us out of the difficulty or else you and yours will meet with misfortune. Who did that? The person who did that, the person who set them on their way, is the person who is guilty of bringing about this catastrophe without the least doubt. The difficulty could never have arisen if it had not been for the fact that the man—or woman—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BURNHAM—who started this enterprise, must have been exceedingly stupid not to have foreseen that financial men, or indeed, the common run of humanity would sooner or later get them into serious difficulty. Now, are any hon. gentlemen prepared to say that British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and the other provinces shall be thrown like bones to the dogs? Are we not to rescue them if possible by using our financial ability, and if necessary our resources? Unquestionably. Therefore, I am sure I am speaking for the larger number of the people when I say: Get over this political bickering and discuss the principle whether we shall save our own credit and our own selves by helping this undertaking. If we should not do so, then let us tell these people to go hence and settle their difficulties among themselves. They have not done the chivalrous thing, and the decent thing of putting their own property into this enterprise by way of security. But let us aid them nevertheless, and then when the time comes we can foreclose and put the screws on them all the harder, for the reason that they deserve no mercy.

At one o'clock, the House took recess.

The House resumed Three o'clock.

Mr. E. LAPOINTE (Kamouraska): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I can be charged with unfairness towards the few hon. gentlemen who have spoken in support of the proposed resolutions, without even excepting the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Burnham), if I say that they have failed to meet the precise and peremptory objections raised by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House.

I am free to admit that their task is an unsavory one and that the Government's policy on this question cannot be defended before the country with any chance of success.

Since the opening of this debate, a question occurred to me as it must have occurred to every hon. gentleman who occupied seats in this House last year: How comes it that we should be just now confronted with this contract-making business? During the session of 1913, the owners of the Canadian Northern stoutly assured the Government that their railway system would be carried to completion by them, once for all, if only the country assisted them with a further grant of $15,000,000. They even bound themselves to it. That assurance and that agreement were laid before us by the right hon. Prime Minister and the hon. Finance Minister, and the Government assumed before the public the whole responsibility under the circumstances.

As regards ourselves, we did not have much faith in that statement, and we refused to ratify that extravagant gift of $15,000,000 to Mackenzie and Mann; but the Government did not stop at that, and the majority in this House passed the Government resolutions, on the guarantee given by the Prime Minister that it was the last grant of public funds which was to go to the Canadian Northern.

To-day that $15,000,000 has been swallowed up, expended, we know not how or where. No satisfactory explanation has been forthcoming, and the Government does not seem to have exercised any supervision over the expenditure of such a large amount of public moneys. It seems to me that the primary duty of the Government was to watch over the use which was being made of our moneys, so as to protect the public. Nothing of the sort has been done. Previous to granting this $15,000,000 no inquiry was made into the busines of the Canadian Northern; the Government admit themselves that they have gone into it blindfolded, they allowed themselves to be fooled like children by the magnates of that railway company, and the Prime Minister has made himself sponsor that this $15,000,000 application was final. Then they took no steps whatever towards supervising and checking the use to which this money was put.

I say that under the circumstances, in view of the further legislation which is being submitted to the consideration of the House, such a line of action makes of them, not only the victims, but also the accomplices of the false representations made last year by Mackenzie and Mann to the Dominion Parliament. These same financiers come back a year later and apply to parliament for a further grant of $45,000,000; the country will not permit that its administrators should so complacently let themselves be guided by the men who have just deceived them. In spite of the heaps of figures brought forward—and two of the Government's supporters have shown that those figures are fanciful, and in many cases false—in spite of the efforts made to turn this into a purely technical question, nothing will prevent us from showing it in its true light, and viewing it from the standpoint of public and political honesty.

Before binding us irretrievably to such a gigantic enterprise, before entering into further agreements with the Canadian Northern Company, the Government is in duty bound to require full explanations and a clear statement of the liabilities.

The only measure that might satisfy public opinion and justify the granting of assistance on the part of the Government, would be, to start with, a thorough and searching inquiry into the business of that company. Such an inquiry is what we demand, what the country demands, and the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. Bennett) is not the only one in the ranks of the Conservative party who is clamouring for it.

But we are told this is a case of emergency. Under this Government there always exists an emergency. Last year, had it not been for the immediate granting of $35,000,000 to the British Admiralty, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland was threatened with utter destruction. Already in the distance one could hear the roaring of the enemy's guns; the Empire was in a sad plight. This year it is the credit of Canada and the nation's financial standing which are at stake; bankruptcy is staring us in the face, and the only way out of the difficulty is the granting of $45,000,000 to Mackenzie and Mann.

Such an argument is not far from being an attempt at blackmail. If it is to be understood that in this country promoters can with impunity spend right and left the moneys of governments and municipalities, handle and invest for their own personal profit, the funds which are put in their hands for the purpose of ensuring the success of some great public undertaking; and if it is understood, besides, that after managing things in such a way as to bring the whole undertaking on the verge of bankruptcy, they can come back to the Government and say: Unless you give us more money, we will have to assign and there will result for you a still more grievous situation, I say that is encouraging the improper use of public funds as well as reckless financing.

Before entering into any such arrangement with the Canadian Northern, let us do what travellers over some portions of that route are, it seems, obliged to do: Let us clear the road. And to start with, let us do away with the originators of the disaster, let us get rid of Mackenzie and Mann.

Sir Wm. Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann are two strong men, wizards of finance. They have succeeded in launching and organizing with public funds, a great undertaking, and in surrounding themselves with subsidiary ventures of all kinds. The small company which originated in the province of Manitoba and was a long time at constructing a few miles of railway has become a powerful corporation, with twenty-eight subsidiary companies. They have established a system which is well connected and spreads over the whole country. They have taken advantage of that system to develop all the resources which the country puts at their disposal. They have laid hands on everything worth having. They have meddled in politics, they have purchased newspapers. Nay it is rumoured that they were consulted in the making up of the cabinet. They are most certainly great handlers of money and great handlers of men; but I object to letting them continue doing that with the help of public funds.

The hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Nickle) put on record in Hansard the other day a statement of the amounts received by Mackenzie and Mann from governments and municipalities. That statement shows that the figures which have been supplied by the Government are very incomplete:

Here is the summary of the whole statement:

Land grants—
Dominion		$ 29,392,404
Ontario		10,000,000
Quebec		3,000,000
Bond guarantees—
Dominion		60,940,539
Manitoba		24,059,446
Alberta		35,349,000
Saskatchewan		18,590,000
Ontario		7,860,000
British Columbia		47,966,000
Subsidies granted—
Dominion and municipalities		31,318,420
Ontario		2,001,413
Manitoba		641,575
Quebec		3,413,541
Total		$274,531,338
Loan given by the Nova Scotia legislature to the Halifax and Southwestern of $13,500 per mile, for 372 miles		5,022,000
Subsidies granted to Bay of Quinte	$159,228
Central Ontario	219,018
Iredale, Brancroft and Ottawa	250,569
James Bay	27,612
		656,427
Sum total		$280,209,765

And it is after drawing on the public to the incredible extent I have just mentioned, it is after giving a year ago the formal assurance that those $15,000,000 they were receiving would be the last they would call on the country to grant them, that those two financiers now beg for a further advance of $45,000,000.

I admire the candour, or rather the impudence of those magnates. It appears in full light in the letter written by Sir Wm. Mackenzie to the right hon. Prime Minister on the date of March 5, 1914, a letter which is to be found at page 5 of the blue book distributed by the Government.

Ottawa, March 5, 1914.

To the Right Honourable
R. L. Borden,
Premier of Canada.

Dear Sir,—For the reasons mentioned in the memoranda and statements respecting the Canadian Northern Railway System, submitted, it is essential that the company should receive further Government aid. The amount required is forty-two million dollars ($42,000,000).

Recognizing the difficulties in the way of a cash loan, I beg to apply for a guarantee of securities to the extent of forty-five million dollars ($45,000,000), par value. The discount on the disposal of these securities would probably reduce the proceeds below the forty-two million dollars ($42,000,000).

I have the honour to be,
Your obedient servant
Wm. Mackenzie,
President.

Is not that a simple way of settling matters? For Mackenzie and Mann, this Government is like the Kingdom of Heaven: Ask and thou shalt receive.

It seems to me the Government's first answer ought to have been: Gentlemen you are worth several millions, you have money invested in all sorts of profitable ventures in this country and abroad. Show as much disinterestedness and as much confidence in your undertaking as Donald Smith, Stephens and the other great builders of the Canadian Pacific railway. Before calling on us for further contributions, invest some of your own money.

That is not what the Government say. On the contrary they submit a measure involving the credit of Canada for a further amount of $45,000,000 in favour of Mackenzie and Mann, and binding forever the country, by holding it responsible for the future liabilities of the company and putting us under the necessity of advancing further amounts which will be required for the completion of the road, whatever that may be.

All the securities which the Canadian Northern is supposed to give us are worthless. Before they could be converted to any use, we would have to pay off the $312,000,000 of liabilities which are a lien on all the assets of the various companies subsidiary to the Canadian Northern. The stock which is handed over to us is not worth a single cent on the money market. And by accepting that stock, we enter into partnership with Mackenzie and Mann, in a company whose managers and directors they are.

I say that besides incurring immense liabilities, the Government endorses a wrong principle by making the Government enter as a partner in a private undertaking. The State should not be a party to any private venture; it should regulate, control, and supervise all of them.

Neither do I approve the appointment of a representative of the Government on the board of management of the Canadian Northern. That privilege is quite useless as an adjunct to the controlling power which is vested in the State; such a representative will only act as a connecting link between politics and finance, and that, with reference to negotiations which may not always be in the public interest. In the management of the affairs of the company, that director will be a nonentity; his power will be of no avail whatever.

Mr. Speaker, the legislation which is submitted to us strikes me as pernicious and contrary to the public interest. If Mackenzie and Mann are unable to meet their liabilities and to build the Canadian Northern, if the country is to pay the cost of that undertaking, let these financiers relinquish their control and hand over the property to the people of Canada.

I, for one, speaking on behalf of my constituents, object to our becoming the subordinates of Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann, and I shall vote against the resolutions submitted by the Government.

Mr. F. N. McCREA (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address the House briefly on this important question, which is a business question and should therefore be approached and dealt with in a business spirit. It appears to me that Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann started out to build a transcontinental railway with public money. They have got all the money they could from all sources but the road is not yet completed and they have come back to this Government and asked for more assistance. It is our first duty to look carefully into the matter and see how the money that has been committed to their charge for expenditure in this enterprise has been expended. In order to do that it will be necessary to examine their books not for one or two years but from the inception of the enterprise, about 1896. From that time until the present they have been constructing branches and roads with public money. It would be necessary to examine thoroughly not only their books but also the quality and character of the construction work on the different roads. A short time ago this Government appointed a commission to examine with care into the construction and expenditure of money on the Grand Trunk Pacific. That commission examined very carefully not only the books but every feature of the road, every piece of rock-cut and trestle work to see the quality of the work and the classification that had been made. It would have been quite in order to have done the same thing in this case, and I do not think that this Government have looked into the question as fully as they should have done. It would have been impossible for them to have done so in the short time that has been at their disposal. The very formation of so many different companies controlled by two men would look to me suspicious. It would look as though there might be some room for side-stepping. One of the first necessary steps would have been a thorough examination of all of these matters. Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann are practically the owners of the Canadian Northern railway, and whenever they undertook to build either the whole line or a branch they first got their charter, then they got all the aid they could from all sources, municipal, local Government and Dominion Government, and then, after making their financial arrangements, they let the work to a construction company which was still Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann. This, to my mind, would indicate that there might be a chance for a little rakeoff. Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann may be a special brand of humanity, more honest than the ordinary run, but the poet, a wiser man than I and one who understood human nature better than any other man of his day or generation, has said:

> But, och! mankind are unco weak
> An' little to be trusted;
> If self the wavering balance shake,
> It's rarely right adjusted!

So it appears to me that when Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann, owners, let the contract to Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann, contractors, without competition, the work to be supervised, examined and looked after by their own engineer, and the classification to be by their engineers, it is very necessary to examine into all these matters with great care and to see if the money that this country has paid from all sources has been legitimately and honestly expended in the construction of this road. After that examination has taken place if it is found that they have administered the money committed to their charge honestly and fairly, if no misappropriation has been made, and no money has been devoted to other uses, then it might be well and wise to entrust them with more money or credit to finish the road. If, on the other hand, it is found that a part of the money has been appropriated to outside enterprises, and not to the construction of the road, it would appear to me to be very bad judgment and very bad policy on the part of the Government who have trusted them to entrust them with any further public money.

There are in all some 28 or 30 subsidiary companies mentioned in the resolution that has been placed before this House. There is, however, another little organization that is not mentioned. I do not know whether that is organized under letters patent or how, but in this little organization there is perhaps the most serious question as to the proper method of dealing with this matter, and that is: if public gossip is to be relied upon, and if my information is correct, this present Government owes its existence as a government to a large extent to the influence of Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann in the last election. Not only that, but if public gossip is to be relied upon and my information is correct, some of the Cabinet ministers owe their seats in the Cabinet to the advice and influence of Mackenzie and Mann. That being the case, it strikes me as though these gentlemen could not approach this question with an unbiased mind and deal with it absolutely on its merits. I would be inclined to think that they might be prejudiced a little bit; they might feel that they owed a debt of gratitude or a debt of something to those to whom they owed their positions in the Cabinet; and, while, perhaps, they might intend to be honest and fair, they would be prejudiced. For that reason, when Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann came before this House at the opening of this session, I think the wise thing for the Government to have done would have been to appoint a committee selected from both sides of the House to investigate this whole matter. The construction of the Canadian Northern railway is a public enterprise, and I think it is agreed on all sides that it is one which cannot be allowed to go to the wall. It must be finished in some shape. But before money is asked for, the first thing that we should know is that the money already granted has been honestly expended. The next thing is that the money we are about to guarantee or grant will be expended honestly without any question. It would be necessary to know the past records of these gentlemen before we entrusted them with further credit. That is how the matter appears to me. I understand that the Solicitor General drafted this resolution. I do not know to whom he owes his debt of gratitude or his seat in the Cabinet, but evidently not to the hon. member for Calgary.

It was stated in this House during the debate on the Grand Trunk Pacific that the commission appointed by this Government to investigate the construction of that road came back to this House and reported that the road had been extravagantly built. They reported that it cost a lot of money, but they could not point to a dollar that had not been honestly spent. In this case we find $100,000,000 of watered stock. I think the wisest thing to do is to cut out all watered stock. I am satisfied that when the road is completed, if it ever is, it will have enough to do to pay interest on the actual money expended on the road without having to pay a dividend on watered stock. You may say that we will not have to pay dividends on the water until the bonds are taken care of. That is true, but the owners of the road will say: We have a certain amount of stock on which we have never paid dividends, and consequently we are entitled to charge higher rates; and when the Board of Railway Commissioners is called upon to adjudicate between the public and the road built with their own money; the then holders of this watered stock will point out that on $100,000,000 of stock no dividends have been paid, and from that they will argue that the rates should not be reduced until a dividend has been paid. I say that there should be no watered stock at all. This resolution, as I understand it, proposes to reduce the stock to $100,000,000, but I say there should be no stock at all except what represents actual cash. The Minister of Finance, in his speech yesterday, said that this road was a legacy handed down by the late Government. All I can say is that the Minister of Finance is more generous than he was two years ago when, shortly after this Government came to power, he boasted of having a surplus of $39,000,000 and gave the present Government credit for that although they had only been in office about three months. The Minister of Finance did not give credit to the late Government for that legacy, but when he comes to something that is a little knotty—a proposition to which they have granted assistance in two successive years without taking the members of this side of the House into their confidence at all, or giving any reasons, and now, when they come back for the third time claiming to be bankrupt and broke, he says it is a legacy left by the late Government. That is not very logical.

There is just one other point with which I would like to deal and upon which I would like some information. Has any arrangement been made between the Government and Mackenzie and Mann for taking over the Quebec and Saguenay road? My impression is that some arrangement has been made for taking over that road when this assistance is given, and I think we should be given some information on that point.

Before I take my seat, I wish to appeal to the fair and unbiased minds on both sides of the House. While the Canadian Northern cannot be allowed to go into bankruptcy, this House is not justified in putting through any deal or granting any assistance until we know absolutely what these men have done with the money they have received, and how they are going to dispose of the money that is provided for in this resolution. It is absolutely necessary for us to know whether they have legitimately, honestly and faithfully expended the money that they have received from the Governments of this country, Dominion and provincial, or whether it has been put into side enterprises of their own. It seems to me that Mackenzie and Mann must have received a profit or rake-off out of their railway construction. Mackenzie and Mann, if my information is right, started life like myself without any worldly goods, and to-day they are rated as very wealthy men altogether outside of the railway business. I want to know where all their money came from. Did it fall like manna to the children of Israel? If they are millionaires outside of their interest in the Canadian Northern and other railroads, where did their fortunes come from? It is something I cannot understand, and which we should know before we guarantee their securities to the extent of $45,000,000.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York): Mr. Speaker, the amendment before the House in substance denies that the company is in distress, and therefore denies that it is incumbent on the Government, in the public interest, to come to the succour of the company. I take the proposition before the House as involving that this company, and this great proposition, are in distress, that the Canadian Northern railway needs money to complete its line, and that the Government regard it as a public duty to come to the rescue of the company to prevent what would be substantially a panic. I believe the credit of Canada would be greatly injured if this company and this proposition were allowed to go down at the present time; and if that is the case the amendment does not meet the situation. It proposes to put off something that nearly everybody in this House says must be dealt with: the government say so, the majority on this side of the House say so, a great many members on the other side of the House say so, and the last speaker has said so. Therefore, it is incumbent on Parliament to deal with this proposition not only because of the company, but because of the credit of Canada. We could not afford to have the credit of Canada jeopardized, to-day in any way by reason of the collapse of a great transcontinental road that was put into existence by this Parliament, whether by one party or another. This Parliament of Canada is responsible for the fact that we have one great transcontinental road in this country and are building two others on the money and on the credit, principally, of the people of Canada. The Government, apparently seized with that idea, proposes to do something, and they have introduced a measure which will give relief to the company and will, we trust, allow the road to be completed, and I trust that in the end it will be an advance on what we have done here in the past. To my mind, the proposal before the House is the first step toward public ownership of a transcontinental road in which this Parliament has invested a lot of money. It is true it is not complete public ownership; perhaps it is a partnership; or, as I would prefer to say, by consolidating these companies into one proposition we are putting the system in shape so that in a short time it may be acquired by the people of Canada and linked up with the Intercolonial. We should then have in the hands of the people of Canada, and in the hands of Parliament, a great transcontinental line owned by the people of this country. Having done that, we may go a step farther and complete our own transportation system by steamships on the ocean.

There is no solution of the transportation problem other than public ownership, and I welcome this as I would welcome any other step in that direction. The only particular in which this proposition does not quite commend itself to me, as an advocate of public ownership, is that when we take 40 per cent of the stock and assume this responsibility, the least we ought to do is in some way or other to take an option on the remaining 60 per cent. Now probably is the time to do it. I do not know but that the owners of the road, the Mackenzie and Mann interests, are prepared to entertain such a proposition. It is true it would cost some more money, but it would only be fair to take over that interest. I do not say that we ought to do it just to-day but we ought to be able next year, or the year after, to know how much of an additional cash payment to these owners would give us complete control of the road. It will be three years before we can get possession of the road in case of default. I do not want to see a default, but I do want to see the road linked up and got together, as it is being got together by this resolution, and I want to see the country get 40 per cent of the capital stock because that is a substantial approach to public ownership. Next, I would like to see provision made in this resolution whereby we would have an option on the 60 per cent of the capital stock that the proprietors still hold. I do not believe it would take a very large sum to acquire that ownership. If we do not find the road going as it ought to go, if the money is not put where it ought to be, we would be able to exercise immediate ownership and enter into possession and we could proceed to do what we must do in any event in a short time; that is, take control of one and perhaps two of the transcontinental railways. I have been an advocate of public ownership for many years and I seek to advance it on every occasion. It may only be a small step forward, but I am prepared to support any step in the direction of public ownership. If there is anything that has failed it is the system of private ownership of railways wherever it has been tried, whether in the United States, in Canada, or even the mother country.

Mr. MACDONALD: Does this proposition secure public ownership?

Mr. MACLEAN: It establishes forty per cent of public ownership. It goes that far, and this is the first time it has ever gone that far in this country. Private ownership has failed. The present system of railway building has failed. What is the situation in the United States to-day? The present system has brankrupted most of the great railways because they have been exploited by private individuals and companies and by interests that were not identified with the public. It is abundantly evident that in the United States the big corporation system in relation to railway construction and management has failed. The roads have been exploited, looted, so much money has been taken out of them, so many unnecessary securities have been put upon them, that they cannot pay their way and they are imploring the country to allow them to increase their rates. I do not think they will get that increase in rates and they will put the railways into the hands of the Government in the interest of the public and try to save something for themselves.

Mr. GERMAN: Does the hon. gentleman think that forty per cent is of any use as far as public ownership is concerned ?

Mr. MACLEAN: It may be. I hope it is. It makes the acquirement of whatever remains much less onerous and it enables us at once to connect up the Intercolonial in the direction of public ownership. It does not go all the way, but I want to see it go the full length, and, either by an immediate settlement with the company for its whole interest, or by an option on that interest, acquire possession of this road. We have in this country at the present time the Transcontinental railway. It is almost ready for use. There is an agreement which sets out that until the whole line is completed the Grand Trunk do not need to take it over. It may be on our hands next year. The Grand Trunk may say: We will take it over under modified terms. Therefore, we may find ourselves with a transcontinental railway on our hands and we may find ourselves with a Canadian Northern railway on our hands. There is a problem coming, and it is one which this Parliament and the public must get ready to deal with. I am just as surely convinced as that I am standing here that within two years this Parliament and the people of Canada will have to take over the Grand Trunk Pacific—a transcontinental railway—as well as the Canadian Northern, and link them up with the Intercolonial railway. We may be forced into public ownership, and the consolidation of all these lines in an effort to serve the people and not to serve the exploiters or shareholders.

The great thing in connection with public ownership is that the effort of those in charge of a publicly owned concern is to try and serve the public in the best possible way, to give them the lowest possible rates, not to make a profit and to avoid all unnecessary charges. The conditions that we have in Canada to-day are the result of the system under which we have operated our railways up to the present time. We have an immense and unnecessary duplication of lines and of construction, but compared with unnecessary construction and duplication, what are the charges for maintenance, the overhead charges, the unnecessary services in connection with these lines once they are constructed? This country will be bled white in maintaining these great transcontinental lines and a lot of unnecessary, duplicated lines and services.

The Grank Trunk, the Canadian Pacific railway and the Canadian Northern have been telling the people that they cannot stand a reduction in rates. They say that the rates must be kept high, and there is to be no reduction for the farmer or for those who pay the railway rates because of the competition of other lines. Not only have we an unnecessary duplication between Port Arthur and Sudbury and across the Rocky mountains, but we have unnecessary duplications in all directions. It costs a lot of money, and the rates are unnecessarily high in consequence. Therefore, the only real relief, the only possible relief, will be the consolidation of these lines into one system, and the only interest that can consolidate them is that representing the Parliament and people of this country. We have built at an enormous cost four lines across the mountains. The Canadian Pacific railway are constructing a second line, the Canadian Northern will have a line, and the Grand Trunk Pacific will have one. One double track line between Edmonton and the Pacific coast would be worth all the other lines put together, considering the matter from the point of efficiency and reduction of rates. While we have built these roads, we still have the problem of finding a way of making them profitable. My contention is that the only way is to consolidate them in the one system and have that system controlled by the state. Between Toronto and Ottawa, within the next few weeks, we are to have four lines competing for passengers and freight. I believe that one line double tracked would do all that work much better. We have got to wipe out this unnecessary duplication, even if we have to take up the rails of some of them and put them down in other places where they will give better service. To my mind the problem before us is to recover our mistakes, to try to come to public ownership in connection with one or two of those lines, and then to approach the real problem and work out the consolidation, wipe out the unnecessary lines, and try to give good service. We have been trying to build railroads, but we have not been giving the service we ought to give to the people, and we will never be able to give a proper service with all these competing roads. You cannot do all this in a moment, but you can begin to get ready, and my appeal here to-day is based on the idea that we must begin to get ready, and this legislation before us is the first sign I have seen in the history of Parliament that we are getting really ready for the public ownership of our railways, in part if not in whole.

This road came before the attention of Parliament in 1898, when I was a member of this House, and I then urged, in connection with the proposal to subsidize the Canadian Northern from Winnipeg to Port Arthur, that it be made a public road. Mr. Robertson, then member for East Toronto, and Mr. Richardson, then Liberal member for Lisgar, urged with me that the road should be nationalized and that it be thrown open to the Intercolonial railway, and had that been done it would later have been open to the Transcontinental railway. But that was not done; we subsidized the Canadian Northern then, and we have been subsidizing it ever since, and the result is that we are in a mess. We have now three transcontinental railroads; we do not see how they are going to maintain themselves, but we do see that they are coming back here year after year for additional consideration. The Grand Trunk Pacific, I am told, will be back here again for assistance, the Canadian Northern is now asking for assistance, which means that they are to have one hundred million dollars to spend. We do not quite know if that will complete the Canadian Northern railway, and, although we were warned years ago that it was a mistake to unnecessarily duplicate these lines and to spend money on them, we have continued to do so right up to the present hour, and we find ourselves where we are to-day. We must try and recover our ground, we must try and get rid of these unnecessary lines. How it is to be worked out I do not know, but I say it can be worked out if men who do believe in public ownership have the responsibility of doing it. A party is growing up in this country in favour of public ownership, and when we have public ownership we will have the means of regulating transportation charges in an effective way, and we will be in a position to regulate ocean freight rates also. I am ready to-day, on the lines of public ownership, to subsidize or purchase a line of steamships that will give relief from the exorbitant freight rates that prevail on the Atlantic. Our farmers in the West are not making as much as we expected they would, because they say they are unfairly treated in the matter of ocean and railroad freight rates. And yet we have spent hundreds of millions, a billion of money almost in building railways, and we propose to continue it and to duplicate railway lines unnecessarily, and to pay overhead charges that we ought not have to pay. If we now begin to cure these mistakes of the past, and if we can get one or two of these lines into our hands and use them to that end, we will begin to effect some kind of reform.

The question of public ownership came up when this railway first came to us for aid fifteen years ago. The right hon. gentleman who then led the House said he did not believe in public ownership, and he repeated that statement when the Transcontinental Railway Bill was introduced, but he now shows signs of change of view because he says that we should get all the stock of this railway. If there is a way that we can get it now, even by additional expenditure or by taking an option on it, I think we ought to try and do so. As it is, this measure seems to me to be somewhat in the right direction and it does seem to me to be in the line of upholding the credit of the country and of getting rid of a situation that otherwise will bring discredit on us, will injure our credit, and will impede the settlement of the country generally.

There are some things in connection with this deal I wish to point out. The Minister of Finance said last night that for one thing it meant the limitation of the capital stock of the Canadian Northern railway, and of the subsidiary companies, and it does do that. The minister claims credit for that and I heartily congratulate that gentleman on his conversion, because I have heard ministers of finance and other ministers, and I have heard the law officials of the Government say that it is not necessary to control the capitalization of railways. Now, for the first time we have it on the statute book in connection with one company, and if we have it in connection with one company we must have it in reference to all, and this Parliament ought not to prorogue until it takes control over the capitalization of all railways. The principle is contained in a Bill now before the joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons, to regulate the capitalization of all railways, and there is a rumour that this Bill will not go through this session. If that be so, my advice to the Government is that they should pass a Bill with a single clause in it, taking complete control over the capitalization of the Canadian Pacific railway and all other railways. I have pointed out to this House on several occasions that the increase in the capital stock of the Canadian Pacific railway was against the public interest and that it ought to be controlled. I was voted down time after time, and at one period I could hardly get a seconder for my motion, but now the principle is admitted. What has been the net result of the watering of the stock, or the cutting of melons in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway stock? It has been this: that while they cut melons for the benent of the holders of the Canadian Pacific railway stock and divided $80,000,000 amongst them, the shrinkage of value of the stock since the Canadian Pacific railway began this system of cutting water-melons, has amounted to over $100,000,000. It is foolish any longer to allow these companies to unnecessarily increase their capital. There was a time when the Canadian Pacific railway was capitalized at $50,000,000, and it should have been kept there, and had it been kept there the people of this country would have owned the Canadian Pacific railway. To-day it is capitalized at over $200,000,000, and the stock is owned outside of Canada, and the capitalization is so great that Canadians can never buy control. The capitalization of the Canadian Pacific should have been kept largely to the issue of bonds and debenture stock, and the control should have been in the common stock, which should have been limited. Had it been limited, the people of Canada, as individual investors, would to-day have had the control of it and we would have been in better shape. Therefore it is quite clear that, if we are limiting the stock of the Canadian Northern, as we are doing to-day, we ought to limit the stock of all the railways of this country and not allow them to increase their capital or to water it when they like, so that their stock may be what it has never been yet in this country to any great extent, namely, devoted to the purposes of the undertakings. If this stock of the Canadian Northern railway had been kept in the treasury, it would have been almost sufficient for the needs of the company to-day; but it has been allowed to be taken out of the treasury, and the result is that the stock has never played any part in the financing of the railroad. Therefore it is now incumbent upon Parliament to see that all the railroads in Canada are this session put under a general Act, which will compel them to secure the approval of the Railway Board for their financial propositions. That is one good result that has come from this proposed deal with the Canadian Northern railway.

As to whether or not it will be possible for this House at this time to find a way whereby we can get an option on or can purchase the 60 per cent of these shares, I do not know. The Prime Minister, however, has invited suggestions and this is one I throw out to him, that he should see whether it be not possible to secure at a reasonable price the controlling shares of this railway. Perhaps the owners would object to that; perhaps they have other ends in view; but I would like to see at least negotiations opened up, and not only an effort made now to complete this road and to maintain our credit, but a real, earnest effort made to have the state and the people control at least one transcontinental line. Now that we have started to secure 40 per cent of the stock of one railroad, there must be no further change in the status of the Intercolonial railway, nor must any railroad be allowed to get rights over it other than other roads have. While they may have common use of it and running rights over it, its integrity must be maintained absolutely. During the last few years these have been proposals in this House and in the country at various times that the Intercolonial system ought to be allowed to lapse into one of the other roads, or that its usefulness ought to be interfered with by unfriendly agreements, tie-ups and things of that kind. We have to maintain the integrity of the Intercolonial. We are to have 40 per cent of the stock of one transcontinental road. We should try to get the rest of the stock of that road. Whether we will or not, we have to get ready to deal with the National Transcontinental system or the Grand Trunk Pacific. It is not a settled proposition to-day; it is taking a long time to build, longer than we expected; and a condition that perhaps could not be foreseen has arisen whereby the Grand Trunk, as I understand it, are not compelled to take over the railroad until the bridge at Quebec has been completed, and to complete that bridge will take some years. If that is the case, we shall have the National Transcontinental railway on our hands. There is no solution to this situation and it becomes more grievous every day. Therefore, we ought to get ready, by a system of public ownership, to take one road, to couple it up with the Intercolonial, and to deal with the Grand Trunk Pacific if we have to do so. If the Grand Trunk can deal with the Grand Trunk Pacific and take it up and give a service with it, so much the better; but, in any event, the country must have one transcontinental line and they must have, in association with that transcontinental controlled by the people, some system of ocean transportation also controlled by the people. We shall soon have the Hudson Bay railway on our hands and we shall have to supply a boat connection for it on the Atlantic. We shall have to get ready for that. There is no use in building a Hudson Bay railway and then being at the mercy of the steamship lines as we are to-day. There is no use in building canals of all kinds in this country, and then being at the mercy of the inland transportation companies, as we are to-day. In some way we are in an impassé; but we must find a way out; and if anybody has a suggestion to make which will give the people of this country relief, I would like to know what it is other than public ownership.

We have a problem with the people of the West. The West has come, for a time at least, to somewhat of a standstill, and the people there blame various things for their position. One thing they blame above all things is the exorbitant freight rates. By that they mean ocean freight rates and railway freight rates. This Parliament has actually put them into the condition that they must pay a higher freight rate in the West than we pay in the East. I have argued against that for a long time. The railways think they have a right to charge more to the people of the West than to the people of the East. The rapid and quick cure and the way to bring about an equalization of the rates is to have a national road under the control of Parliament and of the people. A national railway can no more discriminate against the people of the West in the matter of transportation charges than we can discriminate against the people of the West in the matter of postage stamps. What is fair for one is fair for the other. Inasmuch as this country has paid for all these railways and the people of the West have paid their fair share for them, the people of the West are entitled to equality of rates; and the only way to get equality of rates and improvement in our transportation problem is to nationalize one railway, and to get it into the control of the people. While I do not deprecate the work that the Railway Commission is doing, it is not quite their duty to deal with such a problem as the equalization of rates. That is for Parliament to deal with; and while the railways at present might complain if a reduction in rates were ordered by Parliament, they could not say a word if a reduction in rates were forced by a state-owned railway. Therefore all I have to say at this stage of the debate, although I may have something more to say later on is, that public ownership of at least one transcontinental road is the easiest and the quickest solution of the situation. I take this movement here to-day, small as it may be or great as it may be, as one step in the direction of public ownership as applied to the Canadian Northern railway.

Mr. L. T. PACAUD (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate, I do so with no intention of discussing at any length the resolutions presented to us for our consideration. I do not pretend to be able to handle this great question, involving as it does so many important features of financial intricacies. But, Sir, the discussion that has been going on, the speeches which have already been delivered during this debate, have cleared the air considerably. They have dissipated many misapprehensions which have been expressed throughout Canada during the last few months concerning the financial standing of the Canadian Northern Railway system, apparently intended to justify in the eyes of the people of this country the action this Government intended to take in this matter. But the speeches in this debate have been of greater value to the people and have given us a great deal of the inside history of the Canadian Northern railway. The hon. member for Calgary (Mr. Bennett), in his eloquent and most interesting speech, told us that a great deal more could be told to this House and the country if only the proper means could be taken to achieve this end. For my part, I should like to have the whole truth and nothing but the truth.

At the outset let me say I absolutely agree with the opinion which has been expressed during this debate that a third transcontinental railway was an ultimate necessity for this country, if it was not actually a present and immediate necessity. These words to me are words of hope and confidence in the future of this country. It is a policy which has been adopted, it is a hope which I believe is shared by the vast majority of Canadians. But, Sir, this fact alone does not justify us in acting hastily with regard to the resolutions now submitted to us. To-day this Parliament is called upon once more to come to the assistance of the Canadian Northern railway to the extent of $45,000,000. We have been generous to this railway enterprise in the past. We are told that, by this agreement to-day, we are becoming a partner. Then, I say, Sir, it is our first duty as representatives of the people to see what this new partnership means for the people; for we know just what we are going to pay, but we do not know so fully what we are to receive for our money. I go further and say I believe it is our duty, before even discussing the merits of this resolution, to know the men with whom we are called upon to deal. We have been told in this debate that Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann have given ample evidence of pluck and courage. That is true, and it cannot be denied; and we may say without fear of contradiction that they have shown special zeal in looking after their own interests. For this we cannot blame them—far from it. But their action during the experiences we in this House have had with them should bring us to the view that we also have interests to protect—the interests of the people of Canada. And if we were to go back and review our dealings with these men and the results of those dealings, they could be summarized in one word; that that word would spell 'deception.' Last year we voted millions to the Canadian Northern, but we voted them upon one condition, because we were told that that money would be sufficient to complete the line. To-day these men are again at the door of Parliament seeking new assistance. Last year we were told that if we voted these millions we would have one-tenth of the stock of the Canadian Northern railway. But we have not one-tenth of the stock of the Canadian Northern railway. And when to-day the Solicitor General comes forward and tells us that by this new arrangement we are to have a two-fifths proprietorship, I ask, what greater guarantee we have this year than we had last year that these terms will eventually materialize? With these facts before us, I claim that we should pause and we should investigate. Let us know upon what grounds we were deceived last year; we may then be able to prevent a repetition of such actions. Sir, there is no need to hurry this proposal through. There is no financial crisis before us such as has been so vividly portrayed to us by the Tory press of Canada. The Canadian Northern railway can meet their liabilities—Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann tell us so. And these resolutions tell us so, for they stipulate that not a dollar of this $45,000,000 shall go to meet the liabilities of this company. Therefore we can pause and we can investigate, and that is our duty under the present circumstances.

One word about the security we are to receive for this money. In the first place, we are told that we are to have a mortgage on the stock of the subsidiary companies; but we are told that ten of these companies are already mortgaged for $18,000,000. We are told that we are to get a floating mortgage on the property of the Canadian Northern railway. But we see that that property is also mortgaged to the extent of $312,000,000. Then, we are also to have a mortgage on the property of subsidiary companies, but this is limited and will not cover the whole amount of the $45,000,000 we are asked to vote, but every one of these subsidiary companies will have the right to give a mortgage only for that part of the $45,000,000 which is to be expended in the territory in which it operates. And lastly we are to have forty per cent of the common stock of the Canadian Northern railway. As has been said, though we are giving the bulk of the money, we are getting a junior partnership and will have no control. To me this is not satisfactory. The Solicitor General (Mr. Meighen), tells us this is the best security we could have. The hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) tells us that it is a splendid bargain. But, immediately after, the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. Bennett), rises, and after a four hour speech giving the history of the Canadian Northern railway, he warns us: Do not act hastily, for the basis of these resolutions is deception, and deception again. I say it is our duty to look into these matters; and these contradictions we have heard from the other side of the House afford us much stronger reasons for investigating this matter before proceeding any farther.

What has been the result as it has developed from the discussion which we have heard? What will be the position of Canada? We are told, and it is the only conclusion which we may draw from the arguments which we have heard in this House during this debate, that if we adopt these resolutions, if this measure goes through, Canada will be fourth mortgage behind an enterprise which is already soaked with watered securities and watered stock. For my part I cannot accept these proposals and I intend to vote against them.

There are many other points upon which I would have liked to have touched, which only go to strengthen my conviction that the Government have not safeguarded sufficiently the interests of the people of Canada. If we give assistance that assistance should be coupled with an assurance that the money which we are voting will be used to pay the debts, to complete the line so that these gentlemen will never have to again return to this House for further assistance. I do not believe that that assurance is guaranteed to us in the resolution. Finally, and this is my last grievance, I fail to see why the Government did not exact from the Canadian Northern railway what the Parliament of 1884 exacted from the Canadian Pacific railway under circumstances similar to those of to-day. These promoters, if they wish to impress faith and confidence in their enterprise upon us sitting here as representatives of the people, should first pledge their personal wealth to the final success of their own work and undertaking.

Mr. ALPHONSE VERVILLE (Maisonneuve): Mr. Speaker, I shall take but a few moments to express my views, not so much on the financial character of this transaction as it has been exposed, as on other points. While this discussion is going on in this House the masses of the people of the country are looking upon us as jugglers. They say, and rightly so, that we have been juggling with millions for the last couple of years. Last year we were juggling with $35,000,000, and this year it has been increased by $10,000,000 so that it is now $45,000,000. It is a question whether we are doing right or wrong, but from my point of view I would strongly favour some of the arguments that have been advanced as to public ownership. If we are to grant the guarantee of $45,000,000 to this company, or I might say to two men, why not go a little further and establish immediately the public ownership of railways in Canada? There is much to be said against that, and the argument that may be advanced is exactly the same as the argument used so many years ago in European countries whenever that question was proposed. I read only a few days ago that in Switzerland in 1900, 1901 and 1902, when the question of nationalizing the railways was under discussion, much the same arguments were used. In Switzerland as well as in other European countries they bought out the railways from the private companies and for the first year of Government operation in Switzerland there was a large deficit. The existence of this deficit was, of course, used as an argument against Government ownership in other countries where it was proposed. But the movement for the nationalization of railways has been steadily gaining ground in Europe. Railways have been nationalized in Switzerland, in Germany, in Belgium and in parts of France; and what has been done in those countries can surely be done in this country. Those who use the deficit that occurred in Switzerland on the first year of Government operation as an argument against nationalization always omit to state the cause of that deficit. They omit to state that a large increase of wages was given to the employees of the roads, and also fifty-two days per year of holidays. Of these fifty-two days eight days were consecutive days of holidays without loss of salary. Of course, at the outset, for the first year, there was a deficit. But when we go further in the operation of the road we find that in 1903 there was a surplus larger than the deficit of the first year. I may be told that Switzerland cannot be compared with Canada as it is a small country; but if Government ownership can be conducted in that country with success and if it can be conducted with great advantage in Germany and in Belgium, although Belgium is a small country, I am sure it can be done in this country. If we were to ask the people of Canada to-day to impose on themselves a tax for the buying of the railways, I am almost sure that a large majority of the electors would respond and state plainly that they were in favour of such an operation. At the present time we are taxing the people indirectly. For instance the guarantee we are liable to pay of this $45,000,000 means $6 on every man, woman and child in the country. If we were to ask an intelligent man, not a member of the House or a man in the same category as Mackenzie and Mann, but a common man of the country, a labourer if you like, if we should impose a mortgage on the head of his little boy, three months old, of $6, what would he say? That is what we are doing by the present method of indirect taxation under that system. We have a surplus at the end of the year and the Government do not know what to do with it. This year they will have a surplus of $50,000,000 and they feel that they must either diminish the taxation or else spend that money somehow, probably they decided that the best way to dispose of the surplus money that we now have was to grant the guarantee of that $45,000,000.

Mr. A. DeWITT FOSTER: The hon. gentleman contends that we are going to pay the $45,000,000 out of the surplus? I do not follow the drift of his argument.

Mr. VERVILLE: I do not expect that the hon. gentleman will follow my argument. I have stated and I state again that we have a surplus of $50,000,000 in our revenue. That, of course, is in one way a great asset to the country; and so we have the money to guarantee that $45,000,000 which we may become liable to pay. I do not say that we will pay it to-morrow or the next day or next year, but we are liable to have to pay it; and from the arguments I have heard in this House we may as well admit that the Government will be obliged to pay this money.

We have also paid out a large amount of money. It seems to me that it would have been far better for us to wipe off some of the national debt. We should not be in a hurry over this thing, although the rap at the door of the Government states plainly that they want quick action. I have heard it stated during this discussion that many miles of that railroad will have to be rebuilt, and if that is so it will be admitted that it will cost double what it did a few years ago. Some hon. gentlemen have suggested that we should have a commission, but I remember that last year the present Government did not ask for a commission for another line of railway. We have had commission after commission, and I am sure that if a commission had made a report to this House during the present session they would have found a good place for the surplus we now have in the treasury of this country. In passing, I might mention the high cost of living commission, although I know this is not the proper time to discuss that matter. We heard a great deal about the high cost of living commission some months ago, but we have heard nothing about it for a long time now. When the proper time comes we will be able to show just how this commission works. I have heard, as has every member of this House, that Mackenzie and Mann are worth millions of dollars. There seems to be a very staunch and strong organization among millionaires, which exploits the people of this country through freight rates, and through labour. If there is one reason more than another why I object to Mackenzie and Mann coming to this House, it is because they are members of this get-rich-quick society. They are responsible for the much talked of coal strike on Vancouver Island. It has not been mentioned in this House before, but every member knows that that famous strike was started in the mines of Mackenzie and Mann. If they are so rich, why could they not grant the reasonable demand of the men? Why have they not shown some justice in that matter? That is how they act in the West. Every time Mackenzie and Mann come before this House it seems to me they have more friends than any other company. On two occasions I have heard gentlemen in this House state that they have been indirectly threatened by Mackenzie and Mann. What power is behind their threats? Is it the mighty power of their money, or something else?

I have stated that I am strongly in favour of public ownership. If we do not have public ownership we are indirectly asking the country for direct taxation. I do not know that I would vote to-morrow for direct taxation. If it was proposed to raise $35,000,000 to-morrow for the militia of this country, or say $2 a head, I would probably be against it. Not only are we forcing direct taxation on this country by granting railway and other companies the powers we do grant, but this federal Parliament is becoming a Parliament of private interests. The very rules of this House seem to favour private interests, because if any member of this House wishes to present a matter of public interest the rules debar him from doing so. We are forcing the discontent of the masses of the people in a wrong direction, and sooner or later we must assume the responsibility.

It has been said that we are going into a partnership with Mackenzie and Mann. I, for one, do not want to go into partnership with those gentlemen, because if they were absolutely honest I believe they would have put their own fortunes into this enterprise. We are also told that we are going to have forty per cent of the common stock of this company. I have read enough of trusts and mergers and over-capitalization to know how much that is worth. When a railway is over-capitalized it has to pay dividends on two shares instead of one, and it stands to reason that we must have high freight rates; and it is impossible for the Government, either through the Railway Commission or otherwise, to dictate to these magnates what their freight rates shall be. I would favour even a greater guarantee than this $45,000,000 providing we got control of the company. If it is necessary, let us eliminate altogether Mackenzie and Mann who have been spoken of so often here as 'Sir' William Mackenzie, and 'Sir' Donald Mann. I do not believe in that kind of thing, and I am not going to do it; there is too much of it already in this country. If this road can be run by two men, surely it can be run by the Government. Only last year there was a rumour that the Intercolonial railway was to pass into the hands of Mackenzie and Mann. Of course, there would have been a great protest against that as the Intercolonial railway is the only government-owned road in this country. I claim that a government-owned railway should not make any profit. Any one who has read about the government-owned railway system of Australia knows that it has been a great help to the farming industry in that country. The same is true with reference to any other part of Europe where railways are being operated by the Government.

I want to go on record as being against this proposition for the reasons I have just mentioned. I do not want to be charged by the people of this country with having gone into partnership with Mackenzie and Mann. I would rather go into partnership with anybody else than these gentlemen. I would be willing to vote for the expenditure of even a larger amount, if necessary, and I would be willing to appeal to the country on that issue, provided we were starting immediately the government ownership and operation of railways. It was said a moment ago by my hon. friend from South York (Mr. Maclean) that we are coming to it. He is right; we are coming to it. I am sure that if there were a referendum on the question of the adoption of public ownership, at least 70 or 75 per cent of the vote cast would be in favour of that proposition. He is right when he states that some years ago he brought this question before the House and that there were then very few to help him. But the people have read since that time, the people have studied, they have become familiar with the operations of the financial and railway magnates, such as Mackenzie and Mann, which operations have been fully exposed and explained. The light which has been thrown on the subject has driven the great mass of the people to the conclusion that it would be in the interest of the country generally, and particularly in the interest of farming and industrial life, to have public ownership. I simply desired to place on record the reason why I am opposed to this grant of $45,000,000 to Mackenzie and Mann and why I am against entering into a partnership with railway magnates of that kind.

Mr. A. DeWITT FOSTER (Kings, N.S.): Mr. Speaker, I do not rise to make any extended remarks upon this subject; but inasmuch as I come from the Maritime provinces, and as the subject under consideration is one of paramount importance to the people of the Maritime provinces, and considering the conditions which have been placed in the resolutions submitted to this House, I feel it incumbent upon me to say a few words in favour of the agreement which the Government has made and to take advantage of the offer that was made by the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Meighen) in his speech the other evening, in which he asked the members of the House, at the proper time, to make any suggestions they might have to better the agreement. It does seem to me that the spirit in which the resolutions were brought before us was the proper spirit for the introduction of such resolutions to the House and to the country. If there is one feeling apparent on this House on both sides, a feeling that is shared in by every member, it is that this country is face to face with one of the most gigantic problems with reference to the transportation business that we have had to solve or that any government or people has had to solve. There seems to be an accepted realization of this fact on both sides, and there seems to be also a realization of the further fact that something has to be done. That much is admitted by the right hon. leader of the Opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), by the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. Bennett), and by the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Nickle). Let me say here that these two hon. gentlemen, the hon. member for Calgary and the hon. member for Kingston, delivered speeches, the equal of which has seldom been heard, and the superior, rarely within the four walls of this Chamber, if I can read and judge the speeches that have been placed upon the pages of 'Hansard' in the past. Volumes of information in detail were given to the House by these hon. members, and while the majority cannot agree with their viewpoint, I, for one, am proud to stand up in my place and say that I believe each one of these hon. gentlemen was actuated by the highest possible motives of service to the country, and that, from their own point of view, both performed what they regarded as a public duty.

On the opposite side of the House there seems to be a scattering fire directed against these resolutions, but as has been pointed out, that fire is not directed to the principle of the measure which has been brought forward by the Government. From the viewpoint of a young man in politics, it seems a good omen that there are occasions when the sound common sense of both sides of the House, realizing a national duty, will accept the principle of a measure and direct its criticism to working out the details. While the Opposition has a duty to perform in criticising the details of public measures, and while, though our views differ from their's, we must in all fairness submit to such criticisms, it does seem to me that they are actuated by a desire to perform a service to the country and that all the enthusiasm for public service is not confined to the side which happens to be behind the Government benches.

I have, at the opening of my remarks, to congratulate the Government upon the manner in which they have settled this very serious problem. I am glad to be able to congratulate my right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Mr. Borden) upon the brave, bold and definite manner in which he has taken up the difficulties that he has found himself confronted with, and has applied himself, together with his colleagues, to the solution of these problems. I have heard nothing so far in the country, nothing from my own constituents, but commendation of the Government for having taken hold of this proposition at a time when the financial conditions were suffering somewhat and at a time when foreign credit could be materially hurt by any failure of the Government to act promptly in dealing with great national problems of which this one, if not the chief. Probably 75,000 or 80,000 men in the old country have put their money into this Canadian Northern proposition, realizing that it was backed by the Government of Canada; whether wisely or unwisely is a matter of viewpoint. But they put their money into this proposition, and under those circumstances what would be thought of this Government and of this country should that proposition fail and go into the hands of a receiver? What would be the impression created in the minds of those 70,000 men who had put their money into this enterprise in this young country? These men are living at the very heart of the country to which we will look in the future for a great amount of capital to further develop this country in order that it may take its place amongst the foremost nations of the world. What would be the result, I ask? It does seem to me that nothing short of a panic would be created in the minds of these people and, instead of capital flowing into this country, it would seek an outlet in other directions, where governments, when they embarked upon a proposition, were strong enough to see that proposition was carried out to a successful conclusion. It is a fundamental principle of economics that capital is very shy; men do not put their money into enterprises unless there is a reasonable return and unless that reasonable return is surrounded by safeguards. It is for this reason that those who have money to lend in the old land have invested in Canada, because they have faith in the country and they realized that our railway and municipal securities were safeguarded by the people speaking through their representatives in the Dominion and provincial parliaments. I believe that the Opposition in this House realize that were they in power to-day facing this problem, they would have to do the same as the Government has done. It appears to me that we should set ourselves not so much to carping criticism as towards the task of showing the people of this country the absolute necessity for the proposition which has been presented to the House by the Government, and which has been agreed to in principle by both political parties. There is a disposition amongst some politicians to mislead the people with regard to great issues, and it does seem to me that above the desire to obtain a petty party advantage it is the duty of public men to instill into the minds of the people the truth about public questions. It is, in my opinion, the duty of the Opposition in this House to admit the facts, and to tell the people of Canada that the Government has endeavoured to extract the country in the best possible way out of the difficulty in which it found itself in connection with this Canadian Northern railway. I am a firm believer in the principle that the representatives of the people should always trust the people. I was somewhat interested in the remarks made by the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Verville), because I think that sometimes he does endeavour to place before this House the views of the labouring people of the country. In my humble opinion, he often beclouds his better judgment by his partisan bias, but for all that I give him credit for placing before us what he conceives to be the ideas of the labouring people. I could not, however, understand the drift of his argument this afternoon. I have no doubt he thinks I am rather dense, and I do not take credit for any great ability, but when I asked him the question I did, it was not in the way of captious interruptions, but in order to get the drift of his mind, as I supposed he was presenting the viewpoint of the people whom he claims to represent. I confess he left me as much in the dark when he answered my questions as I was before. We are about to guarantee the bonds of this company, and if the company goes into liquidation we will take over the road subject to the indebtedness thereon. If the Liberal party were in power they could not do better than that unless they gave a greater guarantee than it is now proposed to give, and so, where was the argument of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Verville). He says we pay this $45,000,000 out of surplus, and I asked him if that was what he meant, and I confess that his answer did not clear up the situation. The hon. gentleman did say that this Government, since it came to power, had been juggling with millions, and it seems to me that the hon. gentleman having supported the Liberal Government for a number of years knew something about their juggling of figures, and that perhaps when he used that language he had remembered things that had happened in the past and was speaking out of meeting. We know that in the matter of railroad construction the late Government juggled with something like $234,000,000 and we had a report before us which said that $40,000,000 of that was juggled uselessly and needlessly from the public treasury. It may be that the hon. member for Maisonneuve was thinking of the past experience of his party in that respect. And notwithstanding the fact, that the hon. member for Maisonneuve was opposed to the proposition now before us, he went on to say that he would be willing to support the vote of a larger sum of money if he could be sure that the Government would have control of the situation. It seems to me that the hon. gentleman has had a change of heart on the question of public ownership. I have never heard him speak in this House in favour of it, nor have I been able to find any of his speeches in 'Hansard' in which he advocated the principle of public ownership. At any rate, he supported a Government whose declared policy was against public ownership.

I want now, Sir, to address myself for a few moments to a point which I think was admirably taken by the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. R. B. Bennett), and that is, the question of whether or not this country, with its seven millions of people, is in a position to support three transcontinental railroads with an aggregate of thirty-three thousand miles of rails? I am aware that I shall be confronted at once with the oratory of the right hon. leader of the Opposition, for whose oratory no man in this country has a more profound regard than I. I yield to no man in my admiration for the right hon. leader of the Opposition in certain respects. I am aware that I shall be confronted with his oratory, which will say to me that there are men in this country who believe that if our population is not to be greater than ten millions, these three transcontinental railways are too many. I do not think there is a member in this House, nor is there a thinking man in this country, who believes that Canada will remain with a population of seven millions, or eight millions, or even ten millions.

The normal increase in our population is 400,000 per annum. For a country of this size and of the diversified conditions that we have 400,000 people are far too many for us to assimilate and to make good citizens of in one year. Supposing we are willing to grant that Canada will increase at a normal rate as regards population, I take absolutely the same position as the hon. member for Calgary took in saying that this country is not to-day and will not be for some years to come in a position to support three national transcontinental railways with all their branch lines, with all their extensive capitalization, and at the same time to give to the people, what the hon. members from the West on the opposition side of the House have been clamouring for, namely, lower freight rates.

I propose to put upon 'Hansard' a few figures which I have worked out and which are of course subject to correction; but I think they will be admitted by hon. gentlemen as being practically in accordance with the facts. We have to-day in this country about 1,300,000 producers of all classes, of whom, speaking in round numbers, 700,000 are engaged in the business of farming and the balance in manufactures or subsidiary employment, but all are in the class of producers. We have in this country 30,000 miles of railway which, as was pointed out the other night, is the largest mileage in any country on this side of the Atlantic with the same population. That is to say there is one mile of railway for every forty-three producers in this country. I take $102,000 per mile as the capitalization of the Grand Trunk Pacific, $75,000 per mile as the capitalization of the Canadian Pacific and about $60,000 per mile as the capitalization of the Canadian Northern railway. Taking the average of these three, I get about $75,000 per mile as the average capitalization upon which the railroads must earn their fixed charges upon their bonds and also a dividend to pay the stockholders, whoever they may be, 6 per cent. Some railroads pay more than that, but other roads will pay 6 per cent. Let us take the average dividend on the three systems at 6 per cent, when they get running in good shape, and after paying interest on their bonds. Some one will say that the Canadian Northern railway and the Grand Trunk Pacific will never pay 6 per cent. I am not saying that they will; but I say that after they pay the fixed charges of 4 per cent or 4½ per cent on their bonds and then pay a dividend on their common stock at the rate of six per cent, we shall have a condition something like this. Forty-three producers in this country will have to support one mile of railway, the average capitalization of which is $75,000. Suppose that the bonds are at four and one-half per cent and the stock of the company averages one-quarter of the total capitalization, upon which stock six per cent dividend is to be paid. Then, the charges will be at the lowest calculation, $4,500 to $5,000 per mile on each mile of those 30,000 miles of railway. There will be therefore, forty-three people taxing themselves for the support of those railroads, and each of them must pay at least $102 per head in order than these railroads may be supported. Just think of forty-three producers being taxed at the rate of $102 per head whether or not they send a pound of freight over the railroads.

To put it the other way, take 30,000 miles of railway capitalized at an average of $75,000 per mile. That will make a total capitalization of something like $2,250,000,000, upon which six per cent has to be earned, or $135,000,000, by 1,300,000 producers, or over $102 per head for each one of them. It seems to me that, in the face of a condition like that, we are certainly in advance of the conditions of this country when we say that we should have three national transcontinental railways. If we had a state-owned system in this country with one main line, 5,000 miles long, running across the country from the Atlantic to the Pacific, with the other 25,000 miles of branch lines connecting with that main line, thereby opening up a tremendous area of territory and lowering freight rates as it would, bringing in a larger number of people by affording them railway facilities, when this country had 15,000,000 or 20,000,000 people, we might then be in a position to support that mileage; but at the present time, in my humble judgment, we do not need three transcontinental systems. That view, however, was not held by the ex-Premier of this country and the gentlemen who supported him. They went out of power in 1911. The King's business must be carried on. We came into power, and we are now face to face with this proposition. Therefore, it seems to me that the Government have set themselves to deal with this proposition in an able and efficient manner.

We have often heard it said in this House during this debate that the security which this Government is getting is of no value. I shall have only one word to say in regard to that. Whether or not it is of value, I am not competent to judge; but I say that, as far as I can understand from listening to hon. gentlemen on both sides, it is all the security we can get. I have never heard an hon. genfleman of the Opposition pointing his finger to one single bit of security that we can get outside of what we have taken. It is true I have heard two or three hon. members say that we should have the majority of the stock, and the next moment some one says that the stock is of no value. If it is of no value, what is the use of having the majority of it? The stock is the controlling power, you say, of the road. Perfectly true. Let the Government take the controlling power of the road, and what does it carry with it? Surely hon. gentlemen will admit that it carrys with it responsibility, and that the present promoters may well say: We will lay down the proposition, having only forty per cent, and the Government can go ahead and finish the road. The minute you have taken that controlling power, you have robbed that enterprise of the driving power of personal profit. I say: Let that driving force actuate through the promoters until the road is finished, and then the agreement on the table of the House provides that, if they do not satisfactorily carry out the conditions, the road comes into the possession of the Government. What better arrangement could you have?

There is, however, one suggestion which I should like to make, a suggestion which, if carried out, would in my opinion, be to the interest of the people whom I represent, firstly, to the interest of the Maritime provinces secondly, and to the interest of the Dominion as a whole. Hon. gentlemen may think that I should put them the other way about and speak of the interest of the Dominion first; but I shall be selfish for the moment. My suggestion relates to the transportation of the products of this country after they reach the Atlantic ocean either at the port of Halifax or the port of St. John. While I have no fault to find with these resolutions, yet when the matter is in Committee of the Whole, I should like to suggest that steps be taken to add to the agreement a clause that Mackenzie and Mann shall withdraw their steamships from the combine that operates between St. John and Halifax and London and Liverpool, and should carry freight from Canadian ports to the other side of the Atlantic at fair and reasonable rates instead of the fifty or hundred per cent increase in rates charged by the transatlantic combine within the last two or three years. But, somebody says: The moment they do that the combine that is left, including the great shipping interests on the other side, will put down their rates and drive the Mackenzie and Mann steamships out of business. Well, Sir, speaking for myself, if they do that, and it can be shown to the representatives of this Government through a commission appointed for the purpose that that has been done. I should be prepared, in the interest of the farmers I represent, who ship nearly two millions of barrels of apples every year, to vote that the Government should recoup to the company every dollar they lose by the action of that combine. I would go further and say that under such conditions the Government could well have its own steamship line. And if the Mackenzie and Mann ships are not enough, I would recommend the Government to ask for a vote for the requisite number of steamers—say five —costing about $2,500,000, so that we could make a beginning of a steamship line with the two or three boats that Mackenzie and Mann already have in operation.

I accept the resolution as brought down to this House as the best bargain with a railway company, or other company, ever made by a Government in Canada and submitted to Parliament. I have made my suggestion of an addition to that bargain. That may be found unworkable by those in charge of the resolution. I give it for what it may be worth. I am not assuming the position of one having superior knowledge or knowing more about the matter than those who framed the resolution. I offer it in the spirit of strong endeavour to assist my constituents and assist the country in the solution of another problem which this Government has to face if it is in power or that the other party has to face, should it come into power, and that is the problem of transporting our products to the world's market in the face of the combine that is extracting from $6,000,000 to $8,000,000 from one class of our people and many millions more besides from other classes. That is the problem the Government must face, and I have confidence in the men who sit upon the Treasury benches that they will take the matter into their consideration and will deal with it as they have dealt with other problems which have faced them, problems which they have solved in the interests of the people.

This bargain is of advantage to the Maritime provinces, as I have said, from the fact that the agreement has given us what we have not had before, transcontinental traffic, instead of being diverted to Portland, as has been the case under previous agreements, must, under this agreement, come down to the ports of St. John and Halifax, and, more than that, must come down at a rate not higher than that upon goods billed to Portland or any other American port which may happen to be a little nearer geographically. That is directly in the interest of the Maritime provinces and of the county I represent. Why? Because the more traffic we have coming down to Halifax and to St. John, the more steamship accommodation will be afforded them. We are spending millions in developing the port of Halifax and putting its waterfront in shape to handle transcontinental traffic. The greater steamship facilities we have, the greater opportunity the farmers of my county and of Nova Scotia and of New Brunswick and as well as of the rest of the Dominion, are going to have for the transportation of their products to the markets of the world.

For the reason that I consider the bargain the best bargain that could have been driven under the circumstances and considering the conditions in which we find this country to-day; for the reason that every safeguard so far as I know has been provided to protect the interests of the people from East to West; and for the reason that it gives us the transcontinental traffic to the Maritime provinces and thus in the future will aid in disposing of the products of the Maritime provinces and of the country generally by better steamship facilities that I have much pleasure in supporting the resolutions this Government have introduced into this House.

Mr. ROCH LANCTOT (Laprairie-Napierville): Mr. Speaker, the resolution proposed by the hon. Prime Minister in order to give aid by granting the Canadian Northern railway the sum of $45,000,000 is so important that I thought I would fail in my duty as representing the electors of Laprairie-Napierville, did I not express my views on this question.

I must say, first, that I shall not speak at great length. I shall insist but very little upon discussing the report submitted to us after being prepared by the employees of the Canadian Northern railway and also by Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann, the parties most interested. Mr. Speaker, I wonder why the Government did not take as much precaution in the case of the Canadian Northern railway as it did in the inquiry which it made on the construction of the National Transcontinental railway. And why did this Government take such precaution as regards the inquiry held by Messrs. Gutelius and Staunton? Not because they wished to know whether the country should continue that enterprise, but merely in order to find out whether the people's money had been spent honestly by the commission appointed by the former Government to build the National Transcontinental railway. That report as laid on the table of the House states that $140,000,000 have been spent and that not a cent of that sum was converted to the personal benefit of the members of that commission. It is said, in that report that the road costs too much, that we should have built it for less, that everything is first-class, but that we should have built wooden bridges; in fine, that we should have built a second-class or a third-class road, and, that we should, after a few years, have done like the Canadian Pacific railway people, who are now replacing wooden bridges by iron bridges, and 60-pound rails by 85-pound rails.

Is it not true, Mr. Speaker, that the commission has acted, in all this, according to the agreement passed in 1903, between the Government and the Grand Trunk railway? This road has cost more than the Government of that time thought it would; but we all know why there was an increase in the cost, it is because there was an increase in the price of materials, in the price of labour, etc. One must also consider the fact that the part of the line which extends from Quebec to Cochrane runs through a district which is uninhabited; that, as regards some parts, the nature of the soil must be taken into account, that, here and there, mountains had to be cut through, mountains of solid rock, even; that immense lakes had to be crossed over; and that, furthermore, the contractors had to carry the materials necessary to do that work. I say, then, that the cost of that road cannot be taken as a basis for a comparison as to the cost of the Canadian Northern railway. Considering, moreover, the quality of the Transcontinental as compared with that of the Canadian Northern railway, which is, after all, but a colonization road and a road built with a view to earning subsidies in many a case, no reasonable comparison can be made as between those two enterprises.

Mark you, Mr. Speaker, I am not casting any blame on the Government for having inquired into the construction of the Transcontinental. On the contrary, I am glad that they have done so, and this enables me to tell you that if the Government can be justified for having spent some hundred thousand dollars in order to know whether they could find some fault with the former Administration, they would be justified a hundred-fold if they made a complete inquiry under oath on everything connected with the construction of the C. N. R., before asking this House to vote $45,000,000. Such an inquiry would put the Government in a position to submit to this House and to the people of this country a report showing where we stand and what amount is required to complete that railway. It is quite the reverse. What does the Government say? That this road costs more than was anticipated, that there has been an increase in the price of materials and of labour. Mr. Speaker, I am surprised to hear such statements on the part of the hon. Postmaster General, of the Solicitor General and of the Minister of Finance. When the report made by Messrs. Gutelius and Staunton was discussed in the House, did they use that kind of argument, and while admitting that the Transcontinental had cost too much, did they explain as they are now doing with respect to the Canadian Northern railway, what was the cause of it? No, Sir, that report was intended for casting discredit on the former Administration, that is all.

The hon. Solicitor General, the mover of this resolution declares that the Canadian Northern railway cannot go on with their enterprise. By-the-way, I must congratulate the Postmaster General upon having so wisely chosen the present Solicitor General. If that hon. gentleman does but very little work for his country he does a good deal for his party, either by preparing reports against the former Administration or by getting the House to swallow legislation which is not in the interest of the people, but in the interest of certain private individuals, and in this line does the Solicitor General excel.

Mr. Speaker, I am a farmer by trade. I do not claim that I can discuss this question with the hon. Solicitor General from the standpoint of all the craft which could be resorted to by a cunning lawyer, but I wish to discuss it with you for a few moments from a business standpoint, as it should be discussed.

In 1884, the directors of the Canadian Pacific railway wanted government help and what was the position taken by the Government of that time? The Government exacted from the directors that they should make themselves responsible for the full value and then the Government was the second endorser. And how could they do otherwise? Is it not a fact that he who endorses notes right and left and does not look to the solvency of the makers, is, in most cases, called upon to pay those notes? This enterprise was started in 1896 by Mackenzie and Mann. What were these gentlemen in 1896? Not very rich men, were they? Today, they are rich and they are presumed to be the wealthiest men in Canada. In what line of business did they make their fortune? They made it as contractors, in the construction of the Canadian Northern railway. Those funds have not been used for the benefit of the Canadian Northern railway, but they were invested in private enterprises such as the Toronto Street railway, the electric railway which runs from Niagara Falls to Toronto, the Winnipeg Electric railway, coal mines, petroleum wells, timber limits in British Columbia. They own millions of acres of land everywhere in the country. I am told that these gentlemen possess a personal wealth in Canada, in the United States and in Mexico, of one hundred million dollars at least.

Such being the case, Sir, I wonder why this government does not exact from these gentlemen that they should become first indorsers, as was exacted by the government of Canada, in 1884, from the directors of the Canadian Pacific Railway, that is, while the government of Canada would guarantee the balance if the personal property of these gentlemen were not sufficient to pay that balance. In 1884, the government would have been called upon to pay the balance only. In the present case, if the government demanded that the personal property of Mackenzie and Mann should be put in as a first class guarantee, I would not object, as far as I am concerned, to this government being second endorser.

Here is the reason why I am opposed to this resolution. Last year, the Minister of Finance asked this House for $15,000,000 to complete the road and this was to be a final grant. This year we are asked three times as much, and the report now before us shows that it will take $100,000,000 more to complete this same road.

I believe, sir, that this main line, called a new transcontinental will never be operated at a profit for the following reasons: First, this line is not built in such a way as to facilitate the running of heavy trains loaded with wheat from the West, because the grades are too steep, and then, the road as it is built cannot compete to any advantage against the existing lines, that is, the Canadian Pacific Railway and Grand Trunk Pacific, moreover, Sir, I am satisfied that the object of Mackenzie and Mann is not to operate that railway system themselves, but to draw from it as much profit as possible, in their personal interest. I find the proof of this in the fact that the government does not demand these gentlemen's personal guarantee and I am sure that Mackenzie and Mann would have refused it if it had been demanded.

As I said a moment ago, Mackenzie and Mann own millions even in Mexico, as was asserted by the British Vice-Consul at Monterey, in an interview which he gave the reporter of the ' Ottawa Evening Journal' at Ottawa on Thursday last, the 14th instant. Here are the very words of the vice-consul as reported by that paper:

> In Monterey, Mackenzie and Mann own $14,000,000 worth of property. The street railway and the town's lighting and part of the railroads belong to them.

As you see, these gentlemen are not much to be pitied, after all, and those are not their only investments outside of Canada.

Sir, I do not want the government to give Mackenzie and Mann any aid if they refuse to risk their own money in their own enterprise, which they know better than we do, because it would mean that it is not safe for us to put money in it. And if it is in the interest of the people that the enterprise should be continued—and I do not hesitate for a moment in saying that it must be continued—then, let the government undertake to complete the line, let them ask tenders to that effect at once, and the country will, thereby, get its money's worth. Meanwhile, let us make a most complete inquiry, let it be held by competent men, by men who have thrown off all party spirit, so that, next session, the House and the country may know where we stand. When the House has secured, thereby, all the desirable information, it will be in a position to decide knowingly. Otherwise, Sir, we shall get no practical result and the people of this country will not be satisfied. This road owes, now, $312,000,000. This item of $45,000,000, if voted by this Parliament, will bring the debt up to $357,000,000. I think I am safe in stating that it will take many times that amount to complete this line. Last year, the honourable Minister of Finance asked $15,000,000 and said that it was to complete the line. Mackenzie and Mann met with such a success that they are asking three times more this year, that is, $45,000,000. Next year or more certainly in two years from now, they will ask $100,000,000, and we shall hear it said then as we do now, that aid must be given to that extent. I do not think I am misleading you, Sir, in saying that this railway will have cost at least $500,000,000 when completed. Then, additional work must be done on hundreds of miles of this system to reduce the grades, to substitute iron bridges for wood bridges or 85 pound rails for 60 pound rails. I think I am moderate in stating that it will take at least $100,000,000 to put this line in a proper condition. This being added to the $500,000,000, the road will have cost $600,000,000, and the country will be almost sure to take it over some day or other. Then, I wonder why the government should, from year to year, advance such sums as the one which is being asked. If Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann were so able to make a fortune for themselves and so successful in procuring the welfare of the Canadian Northern Railway Company, are we not justified in believing that a good proportion of this $45,000,000 grant will be used to the personal advantage of these same gentlemen? Though the honourable Prime Minister has said that Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann made nothing and realized no profits in this enterprise, the facts are there, and the facts show that these gentlemen are perhaps worth $100,000,000 whereas they were but small contractors when they started this enterprise. They were not having, then, such an easy time as to-day, and far from it.

Owing to this order of things, there will soon be nothing left in the treasury, not even enough to pay the pension of the judges on the retired list, and I hope that the seeds which I have sown will then spring up and that the reforms which I have advocated will be brought about, at last, although they have not been adhered to by a great many people. I even hope that I shall then get the sympathy of certain ministers.

Why, Sir, such a long delay in bringing before the House such important measures? We have been here ever since the 15th of January, and it seems to me that the government has had ample time to submit this question before to-day. If they had done so, Parliament would have been able to discuss it at full length instead of having to make haste because prorogation is drawing near. It is always the same thing in this respect and the present government deserves no more blame than the former. The fact is that, when we were in power, the government used to wait till the end of the session to submit measures of that kind. This item of $45,000,000 savours of elections. Under similar circumstances, general elections would surely be expected, when we were in power.

Would it not be more in the public interest that such matters should be submitted to the House at the very beginning of a session? The honourable Postmaster General cannot help thinking that this is but fair and reasonable. The same may be said about the question of reimbursing the depositors of the Farmers' Bank, the government waited till the end of the session to submit this measure. It is something like going to confession and dealing first with the venial sins while the big ones are left aside till the confession is at an end. I say that the political parties act in like manner most of the time. There must be a change. I have advocated many changes but I have met with no big success as yet. I wish to declare, before concluding my remarks, that governments must, hereafter, keep on the lookout and beware of magnates such as Mackenzie and Mann. Rumour has it, even, that those magnates dictate to the Prime Minister the choice of his colleagues, as the case requires. Moreover, part of those millions granted by Parliament must be set aside in view of the elections. Well, I say here to the government: Deal with politics for the benefit of the people and you will need no election fund in view of the coming elections. But should you keep on administering the common weal as you do now, Mackenzie and Mann will never be able to give you enough money to bring you back to power.

For all those reasons do I say that I am against the idea of granting Mackenzie and Mann those $45,000,000.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILL.

SECOND READING.

Bill No. 199, for the relief of Florence Merritt.—Mr. Boys.

CANADIAN NORTHERN RAILWAY AGREEMENT.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Rouville): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to detain the House more than is necessary in order to take a stand on the question which is at issue before the country; and I shall condense my remarks, I hope, within a very short space of time. Nothing can be added to the very able arguments which have been adduced pro and con on both sides of this House. Sir, this is the most important piece of legislation which has come up before us this session, and I daresay it is the most important piece of railway legislation which has come before this Parliament since the inception of the National Transcontinental railway in the year 1903. I must confess my regret that my friends on the Government side have thought it proper to bring in these resolutions in the dying days of this session. I say that though we on this side of the House may have been guilty of that same error of judgment, yet were we not told at the last federal election that this Government would be so superior to all others that the people would never hear of such weaknesses, of such sins and crimes as had been imputed to their predecessors? I say, Sir, that this Government has gone against one of its most cherished pledges, namely that no important legislation would ever be brought in in the dying days of a session. I still remember the resonant tones of my friend the right hon. gentleman who leads the House (Mr. Borden) when he sat on this side, complaining bitterly of the attitude taken by the Liberal Administration because, forsooth, some legislation had been brought in on the eve of prorogation. He rose in his might, as representative of the people, in protest against such methods. I say, turning his argument against him to-day, that it is most unfair on the part of the Prime Minister and of my hon. friend the Solicitor General and all of those who have conceived this iniquitous measure, to come at this late hour and force it on us. The Liberal party take their orders from the people. They do not take their orders from corporate interests; and their orders at the present moment are to oppose this hasty legislation. I will go so far as to say that even if these resolutions were justified in the least, it is too late now to deal intelligently with them and it is improper to seek to get the endorsement of the House of Commons, because it is not sufficiently informed to pass judgment on the matter. Let us for one moment compare the attitude of the right hon. gentleman when he was the leader of His Majesty's Opposition with his attitude now that he is the honoured Premier of the Dominion of Canada. You, Sir, remember how in 1897 the Laurier Administration introduced in this House a Bill by which a contract was to have been ratified with the same gentlemen who are before us to-day, Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann, for the construction of a railroad binding the settled portions of Canada with the new gold fields of the Yukon. The Liberal Government did not even give subsidies to that company; it only provided that, in order to get an all-Canadian road built for the gold diggers and for the traders and business men of Canada, alternative blocks of land in the far-away district known as the Yukon were given to Mackenzie and Mann, and I remember the condemnation, the very severe and striking condemnation, which my hon. friend passed on the Government of the day because, forsooth, it had dared to sign a contract with Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann under the circumstances to which I have just alluded. The measure was combated on the floor of this House, and you will permit me to say that I especially remember the speech you yourself, Sir, delivered on that occasion, when you pictured with your imagination—you were a much younger man in those days—the crops of gold that Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann would reap in the solitudes of the far north. The measure was strongly opposed by gentlemen then sitting on this side of the House, and finally, when it emerged from this House and was transferred to the Senate of Canada, there was then a Conservative majority in that venerable body—where the measure was ultimately defeated.

What happens to-day? In the dying days of a long session we are asked by the Prime Minister and his associates, without having any mandate from the people of Canada, and with a levity unknown before in the annals of Parliament—some hon. gentlemen opposite, however, are less enthusiastic than others; we have not yet heard from the Minister of Trade and Commerce on this question—no, we are not asked, we are railroaded, nay dragooned, into a questionable partnership, to say the least. Mr. Speaker, you might perhaps think I was exaggerating, if you did not know I am not given to exaggeration. I take my incentive, so to speak, in opposing this legislation from the very words spoken by the staunchest friend of the Government. I do not know within the precincts of this House or anywhere north of the forty-fifth parallel a stronger partisan than the hon. gentleman who represents St. Antoine (Mr. Ames). I do not know a better Tory than he. At the last general election he paved the way for the then Opposition to reach the Government side of the House by concocting the unholy alliance we heard so much about during the first two sessions of this Parliament. He more than paved the way; I should have said that he financed the then Opposition to where they are at present sitting. Sir, how can I approve of these resolutions presented to us to-day after listening to the description of the bargain as given by my hon. friend the member for St. Antoine? I hold my brief in my hands and it is prepared by the hon. member for St. Antoine. After having exhausted all possible and impossible arguments in favour of the proposed guarantee, he said:

> To conclude, I will simply summarize in a word what I have been endeavouring to demonstrate. This is a bad situation at the best.

So, we are begged to help the Government in a bad situation at the best. But the hon. gentleman went a little further:

> I have heard this agreement described somewhat as a case where the culprit has confessed judgment and has been let out on suspended sentence. Some elements of the agreement certainly can be compared with such a case.

With all apologies to my hon. and learned friend the Solicitor General, I would ask him to listen to this description of the transaction given by the hon. member for St. Antoine:

> I have heard this agreement described somewhat as a case where the culprit has confessed judgment and has been let out on suspended sentence. Some elements of the agreement certainly can be compared with such a case.

I would not libel my candid friend the Solicitor General by saying that he is responsible for this agreement by which we are asked to join into a partnership with a set of culprits who have confessed judgment and been let out on suspended sentence. The hon. member for St. Antoine continues:

> The trial is over. We have undertaken to give them a last chance and it will never be necessary for them again to come here and undergo a complete discussion such as is taking place this session. They have been tried; I may almost say they have been found guilty and let out on suspended sentence. If there is an event of default; if they fail to perform the obligations that by this new trust deed are placed upon them, the axe drops and that is all there is to it.

Mr. Speaker, have you ever heard such a melancholy tale as the one told this House and the country by a gentleman of the standing of the hon. member for St. Antoine, who represents perhaps the wealthiest constituency of Canada, and who is an honest business man and, also, a dyed-in-the-wool Tory jingo? We are coolly asked to join in a bargain with culprits let out on suspended sentence and who will again come before this House; yet such is the faith of a good Tory that we must give them another last chance! I say with my hon. friend from Calgary (Mr. Bennett) that we should pause, ponder, and reflect before entering into this disastrous bargain. For what does it represent? It is all very well to say that the Government is not giving spot cash to the railway company, but only guaranteeing its bonds; but we must not becloud the issue. When a friend in need comes to me with a note and asks for my endorsement, I know what I am doing. If he is solvent and has the necessary backing, if he has never defaulted or deceived me, I cheerfully grant him my endorsement; but if he has deceived me, if, admittedly, he is insolvent I know what are the consequences of my endorsement. And what does our new guarantee represent to the country at large? By the census of 1911, the population of Canada is estimated at somewhere around 7,100,000. This $45,000,000 guarantee represents a sum of $6.32½ for each man, woman and child in the country to pay when called upon. The population of Canada, according to the last census, is made up of 1,420,000 families. This $45,000,000 guarantee represents for each family a sum total of $31.75. The province, which I have the honour to represent with my fellow members from Quebec, has a population of 2,100,000, and this guarantee represents for that province a liability of $15,800,000. Therefore, with the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. Bennett) and the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Nickle), I say: Let us pause, ponder and reflect before endorsing the note which is handed to us. Last year, again, in the dying days of the session, my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. White) came before Parliament with a request to make a gift of between $15,000,000 and $16,000,000 to Mackenzie and Mann. We were assured most specifically that this would be the last time that assistance would be asked from this Parliament for Mackenzie and Mann. We have been sadly deceived. Every one on this side of the House said that these gentlemen would not have enough of this $15,000,000 and that they would come back again at the next session and urge Parliament to give them further assistance.

Sir, if I am a little outspoken in my opposition to this assistance I may say that it is because, during the recess, while visiting my constituency, I was taken to task by some of my electors because, forsooth, we who belong to the Liberal party, did not oppose as strenuously as we should have this gift of $15,000,000. I explained to my electors that the Opposition was not responsible for the procedure in the House of Commons, that it had to consider legislation at the date of its presentation in the House at the hands of the Government. I explained to my electors that this legislation was introduced during the last hours of a protracted session, after the Liberals had fought the battle of the people on the $35,000,000 gift to the Admiralty. I said to my electors that the Liberal party had opposed with all its might and courage the raid made upon the treasury. You remember, Mr. Speaker, that three important amendments were moved, one by my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), one by my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham), and one by my hon. friend from Edmonton, the ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver). One amendment was to the effect that instead of making a gift we should make a loan to the Canadian Northern Railway Company, taking the proper securities, as we had made a loan previously to the Grand Trunk Pacific, taking the proper securities. Another amendment, which was moved by my hon. friend from Edmonton on behalf of the western farmer, was one according to which Parliament was to insert in the Bill a clause by which there would be no discrimination, no differentiation, as between eastern and western rates. The third was an amendment moved by my hon. friend from South Renfrew, by which he insisted that a clause should be inserted to the effect that a Canadian railway system taking assistance from this Parliament and receiving millions by way of pure gift, should at least, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, come under the control of the Railway Commission at Ottawa. You know, Mr. Speaker, that these three important amendments were defeated in the House. What could the Liberal Opposition do more than oppose the measure as it was presented by the Government? There is an old French proverb which I would not care to translate, because proverbs are hard to translate, but those of my fellow members who understand the French language will see the pith of the proverb, 'Chat échaudé craint l'eau froide.' Sir, we were deceived last year when we were assured that $15,000,000 would be the last assistance of that kind. I do not intend this year to accept the promise of the Government that this will be the end of all assistance required to build the Canadian Northern railway.

Even during this session, when the attention of my right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Mr. Borden) was called to some articles in the press which prophesied that within a very short time legislation would be introduced to further aid Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann, by way of a large guarantee, the Prime Minister rose in his place and declared that all these rumours in the press were a tissue of falsehoods. Not very long ago my hon. friend the Minister of Finance made the following careful denial of these rumours to the House of Commons:

> I can give an explanation of the statement which I made to the press, but as to the statement of Sir Wm. Mackenzie, or as to any remarks that may be attributed to him, of course I cannot speak. My hon. friend has correctly read what I stated to the press, namely, that no application had been received for assistance by way of loan to any railway company, nor was any expected to be received. So far as I am aware, that is a correct statement of the facts.

Any one listening to the candid denial of the Minister of Finance would have thought that this session would not have seen the spectacle which it now enjoys. But the two gentlemen who came to us last year for the last time are again before us. No one who listened to that denial, no one who listened to the denial of the right hon. gentleman who leads the Government would ever have believed that those resolutions would be introduced.

What does this bargain mean? The country has already provided two-thirds of the capital which has gone into the construction of the Canadian Northern railway. The country now becomes a junior partner with Messrs. Mackenzie, Mann and Company. Forty million dollars in common stock will be allotted to Canada and sixty million dollars to Mackenzie and Mann, who, besides having control of the road, will have control and ownership of the stock. If the bargain should happen to be profitable, they will reap all the profits, but Canada being the junior partner assumes all the liabilities, past and future. If peradventure the enterprise should become insolvent, Canada will bear all the burden, and these two senior partners will not risk a dollar of their money in the venture. The people of Canada as a whole are opposed to this bargain on its very face, and when I speak of the people I refer not alone to those who profess the Liberal faith; but as well to all the independent citizens of this country. The Orangeville Sun, a paper very friendly to this Government and a dyed-in-the-wool Tory paper, recently contained a statement which summarizes the strong opposition there is in the farming community of Canada against this bargain. The Orangeville Sun said:

It would be high treason against the people for the Borden Government to give Mackenzie and Mann another cent.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That paper supported reciprocity.

Mr. LEMIEUX: So much the better, for it shows that the paper is a friend of the farmers. The hon. gentleman will not deny that it is a Conservative newspaper.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is anything but that.

Mr. LEMIEUX: My hon. friend seems to be sure of that and I will look for the next issue of the Orangeville Sun to see what it thinks of the Solicitor General. The present Government, I am sorry to say, always stands for the interests. In spite of the large delegations which came from the farming constituencies of Ontario and the West before this session, demanding free wheat, the Government has persistently refused to give the American market to the Canadian wheat growers. This Government has refused and still refuses to reduce the taxation on food, when there are thousands of hungry unemployed in the large industrial centres of the country. This Government has refused, in the interests of the powerful manufacturing corporations which control that industry, to reduce the duties on agricultural implements. The friends of the Government are the interests and the big corporations, by whom they faithfully stand. This legislation is all the more opposed by the farmers of Canada in that it has been conceived in secrecy. Until I am better informed as to the approximate date when this railway can be completed, and as to the nature of the securities which are offered by the Canadian Northern Railway Company, and until I know all the intricate details of this bargain, I will let the Government stand for the corporate interests, and I, as a Liberal with my fellow-Liberals, will stand for the interests of the people of Canada.

The Government comes at this late hour, with this huge expenditure of $45,000,000, when there are bread riots in the city of Montreal every morning. When the Government should put the brakes on the Canadian Northern railway its orders are to go full steam ahead. Sir, I am unprejudiced. The Postmaster General knows that of all the provinces of the Dominion the least involved in this bargain is my native province; the province of Quebec has been conservative in its dealings with the promoters of the Canadian Northern railway. I am unprejudiced, therefore, when I say that the people are opposed to this hazardous venture, or, to use the words of Disraeli: to taking this extraordinary leap in the dark. I am not against a third transcontinental railway; I am a believer in the great potentialities of Canada; I am an optimist, but, Sir, we must look at the facts as they are and not as they should be. After years of unbounded prosperity, thanks to the Liberal regime of fifteen years, we are now face to face with lean years, with years of falling revenue, of large borrowings, of increased current expenditure, of extravagant militia expenditure, of increased net debt. Under these circumstances I am opposed to going full steam ahead with such an undertaking. Can any one say when the Canadian Northern Railway Company will earn enough interest on this huge undertaking to meet its obligations? It certainly cannot within a great many years, and possibly not before a generation has passed. The Government in tying the people of Canada to the Canadian Northern railway, for an alleged allotment of forty million dollars of common stock, bargains that the country will be obliged to meet the interest not only on the bonds guaranteed by the various legislatures, but on the unguaranteed bonds as well. Canada is a junior partner in the enterprise, although Canada has unlimited credit and, I was going to say, unfathomable cash. Yet, if anything happens and the worst may happen —Canada will be called upon, although the junior partner, to save the firm and prevent national discredit abroad.

We have learned enough from even hon. gentlemen opposite, and especially from two of the most prominent members of the Conservative party, the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Nickle), and the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. Bennett); and if all those on the other side of the House, who are conscientious, would speak their minds openly, there would be many Bennetts and many Nickles to be heard from. We are, if we believe the language of these gentlemen to become partners, I am sorry to say, with a bankrupt concern; but at the same time, whilst Mackenzie and Mann, Limited, may not be worth much money at the present time, it is admitted that individually they are millionaires, and my hon. friend from Calgary stated the other day—and his statement has remained unchallenged—that the wealthiest Canadian to-day is Sir William Mackenzie. Sir, the situation is not new when a wealthy man involved in a great undertaking has to come before Parliament to ask for some further assistance. Sir, we remember what happened in 1884. I believe, Mr. Speaker, you were a member of the House at that time. I think my hon. friend the genial Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster) was also a member of the House in those days. But lest you, Sir, and my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce should have forgotten what took place when the Canadian Pacific Railway Company found itself in straightened circumstances, let me recall just a few lines from the recollections of Sir Charles Tupper. Speaking of the vicissitudes of the Canadian Pacific railway, he says:

> The year 1884 was a critical one in the history of the company. Committed to enormous expenditure during the preceding three years owing to the magnitude of the work, its directors had got to the end of their tether. They could not raise any more money in London, where the Grant Trunk Railway Company then exerted a considerable influence. The same fate met them in New York, owing, it is alleged, to the hostile attitude of the Northern Pacific railway, and Mr. J. J. Hill, then engaged in financing and building the Great Northern railway.
>
> I had gone to Birmingham to propose a vote of thinks for an address on Canada to be delivered by the Marquis of Lorne, a former Governor General. Lord Norton, the Under-Secretary of State for the colonies when federation was carried, presided, and it had been arranged that I was to spend a holiday with him at his country seat at Hams. During the course of the lecture I received a cable from Mr. Pope, acting Minister of Railways, informing me that the Canadian Pacific railway was in financial difficulties, and urging me to return home at once. At that time I was acting High Commissioner, but still held the portfolio of Railways and Canals.
>
> I crossed by the first steamer, and on reaching Ottawa found everybody in despair. My first act was to send for Mr. Miall, an expert accountant in the Government service, and Mr. Collingwood Schreiber, Government chief engineer, and instructed them to proceed to Montreal to examine the books of the railway company. As soon as they had reported I recommended that Parliament be asked to authorize the Government to advance the Canadian Pacific railway $30,000,000 for four years at 4 per cent per annum, on the condition that the company agreed to finish the road five years sooner than the contract called for—namely, by 1886 instead of 1891. In Parliament I advocated the granting of the loan on that ground.

He goes on:

> The settlement was effected when the Hon. A. W. McLelan was at the head of the Finance Department. It included the surrender to the Government, in part payment, of lands to the value of seven and a half million dollars, valued at one and a half dollars an acre, which I strongly advised. In this instance, as well as in many others, all the great constructive measures tending to the upbuilding of Canada were carried by the Conservative party at the point of the bayonet.

Sir Charles Tupper has often said what these vicissitudes were, what troubles were met, what breakers there were ahead. We know that what induced Sir John A. Macdonald to help the promoters of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was the proud fact that Donald Smith, Stephen, MacIntyre, and their associates had staked their last dollar to the benefit of that enterprise. It is the unwritten history; but you, Sir, and the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce know that when, one certain evening, Donald Smith, Stephen and MacIntyre came out from the office of Sir John A. Macdonald, where my right hon. friend the Prime Minister now is, with the sad intelligence that the Canadian Government would not give them the further assistance they had been asking, they returned to the Russell hotel as ruined men, who on the next day would have to face bankruptcy. It is to the credit of the late Sir Frank Smith, then a minister without portfolio in the Macdonald Government, and to the late John Henry Pope, then Minister of Agriculture, that a new meeting of council was convened late in the evening, when at last the Government yielded and agreed to give to the Canadian Pacific railway promoters the necessary aid for the completion of the railway. But if the people in 1884 supported the loan policy of the Government, it was because the promoters of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company had heroically staked their last dollar in that enterprise.

What are the facts in the present instance? The promoters of the Canadian Northern railway are said to be millionaires. We have the statement made by my hon. friend the member for Calgary, and it is common knowledge in the province of Ontario and in the other provinces of the Dominion that they are exceedingly wealthy. It is true that one of their officials, Mr. Mitchell, states that they have made no profits. It is true that some of the accountants in the Government service, Messrs. Bell, Shannon and Saunders, have investigated and made a report accordingly; but the country will not be satisfied to hear that clerks and officials believe that Mackenzie and Mann, Limited, have made no profits out of the three hundred million dollars, in round figures, which this country has contributed towards the construction of that transcontinental line.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that besides Mackenzie and Mann, Limited, there are Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann, and they, as individuals, should have been called upon to give their personal affidavits and state whether or not they had the wealth behind them which they are supposed to have. It was stated this afternoon that they had invested enormous sums in Mexico and in Brazil. It is known that they have vast interests in traction systems in Toronto, in Winnipeg and in Vancouver; and I, as a Montrealer, know what is of common knowledge in Montreal. In this blue-book, which my good friend the Solicitor General has laid on the table, mention is made of the Mount Royal tunnel. But is mention made of the investments in the townsite known as the Model City right at the entrance to Mount Royal tunnel? I am told that when this construction of the Mount Royal tunnel was decided upon, Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann began by securing several thousands of acres of land, most valuable land, near the entrance of the tunnel. I am told further that they went to New York and interested the famous firm of Lazare and the no less famous firm of Pierpont Morgan. These firms and Mackenzie and Mann were given a proportionate interest in the townsite, and then Pierpont Morgan and Lazare financed the bonds of the Mount Royal tunnel. Then, when the sale of the townsite known as Model City is completed—and I know whereof I speak—Mackenzie and Mann and the firm of Lazare and the firm of Morgan will pocket a profit of something like $20,000,000. And those who are familiar with the land values around Mount Royal know that I am not exaggerating. Now is that true or is it not? That is the rumour; I only voice what is current public opinion in Montreal.

Mr. CARVELL: Did that go into the road?

Mr. LEMIEUX: No, I put that question the other day to my hon. friend from St. Antoine (Mr. Ames). I quote from the 'Hansard' report of that hon. gentleman's speech:

> And the $10,000,000 of capital stock, and $10,000,000 of debenture stock which Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann Company, Limited, have as their share in this townsite property are placed in escrow for us and come into the list of securities which are given as pledges for the purposes of this undertaking.
>
> Mr. Lemieux: Will the securities in townsites include the townsite near Montreal?
>
> Mr. Ames: No, these are townsites throughout the Northwest.

These are barren acres in the far West which go as security for this transaction; but the golden acres of land around Mount Royal, where streets are laid, where squares are already planned, where sites are sold at enormous figures, are not mentioned in the list of securities under the present contract. I say that investigation would show exactly how individually Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann stand financially, and what share of their personal security could be obtained to back the guarantees which the Government is giving them.

9 p.m.

Now, let us for one moment consider what this country, this benevolent country, has been doing for Mackenzie and Mann. Up to the 30th of June, 1913, the Canadian Northern Railway system, or Mackenzie and Mann, had received from the people of Canada cash subsidies totalling $41,977,741, as follows:

Dominion subsidies	$32,048,244
Quebec subsidies	3,562,946
Nova Scotia subsidies	3,899,605
Manitoba subsidies	641,575
Ontario subsidies	1,825,371
Total	$41,977,741

Up to the same date, Mackenzie and Mann had been given, by the Dominion and several of the provinces, bond guarantees amounting to $135,715,833. These guarantees are as follows:

Dominion guarantees	$60,446,625
Nova Scotia guarantees	5,022,000
Ontario guarantees	7,860,000
Manitoba guarantees	24,408,446
Saskatchewan guarantees	8,258,966
Alberta guarantees	8,719,796
British Columbia guarantees	21,000,000
Total	$135,715,833

During the last session of the British Columbia Legislature, however, a further guarantee of some $12,000,000 was given Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann by the McBride Government. The land grants made to Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann have been as follows:

	Acres.
By the Dominion	4,102,848
By Ontario	2,000,000
Total	6,102,848

It is not possible to set down the precise value of this amount of land; it has increased in value, and will go on increasing from year to year. But a reference to the Canadian Northern Railway report for the yyear 1910 will show that the company estimate that 1,151,017 acres of land granted to it were worth 'not less than $14,000,000.' So, it is not unreasonable to set an average value of at least $10 an acre on the lands so granted. On this valuation, the total land grant would mean that $60,000,000 will have to be added to the cash and guarantee. Adding this $60,000,000, you reach the huge figure of almost $300,000,000 in guarantees, in cash and in land values given to these two gentlemen. Now, granting that Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann have pluck, energy, grit and courage, which I do not deny, because I admire the valour and spirit of enterprise of these two Canadians—granting all that, we must face the situation as it is. Three hundred millions of dollars have been handed over to two Canadians who have the ambition to link the Pacific with the Atlantic; and we are now asked to give them $45,000,000 more by way of guarantee, when only last year this Government gave them a clear gift of $15,000,000. With my friend from Calgary (Mr. Bennett) and my friend the member for Kingston (Mr. Nickle), who spoke with their lips unsealed and stood before us with their hands unfettered, I ask that this Government, before guaranteeing any $45,000,000 to two gentlemen who have already received $300,000,000, should investigate the circumstances of the construction of the Canadian Northern railway. We should investigate the whole situation, first as regards the estimate of the cost of the completion of the road; second, as to the securities offered by the Canadian Northern railway, and third, as to the further personal individual securities which Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann could offer. When that investigation has taken place, if it should be deemed necessary, we might loan to Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann the amount of money required to complete the road, but we should first get proper securities. If we must go into partnership with them, after a thorough investigation has been made, the least we should do is to give this Dominion the dominant place in that partnership. Canada, first of all, should not go into partnership with individuals, into a private concern, but, if Canada must go into partnership with a private concern, the least we should do for the sake of our country, for its honour and credit, is to make of her the dominant party in that enterprise. Sir, this policy means the completion of a third transcontinental railway, and I say that the Government has no mandate to commit the country to the immediate completion of that third transcontinental railway. What are the circumstances? We all know that a census took place in 1911. A committee of this House is presently engaged in the process of redistributing the constituencies of Canada. In a few days we shall have added quite a number of new constituencies to the electoral map of Canada. I say that, pending this Redistribution Bill, the Government cannot consistently commit the new electorate to that huge guarantee. The new constituencies have a right to be heard from in reference to the new venture of the Government. We cannot and we must not saddle the new electorate with this guarantee of $45,000,000 without the consent of that new electorate.

For these reasons I intend to vote for the amendment moved by my friend the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald).

Mr. EDWARDS: Would the hon. gentleman argue that action should be deferred until after the next election?

Mr. LEMIEUX: Yes, and the people would then condemn the action of the Government.

Mr. W. A. CHARLTON (Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, before the vote is taken on this important matter, I feel it my duty under the peculiar circumstances to make a few remarks; but, in doing so, I shall speak in as condensed a form as possible, and from what I consider to be a national standpoint. The question before the House is the motion by the right hon. the Prime Minister that the Speaker leave the Chair for the House to go into committee to consider the resolution and the proposed agreement with the Canadian Northern Railway Company. The amendment moved by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) is to the effect that we delay this matter for six months. When the right hon. the Prime Minister made this motion, he spoke at some length in explanation of the resolutions and of the proposed agreement. After speaking for a considerable length of time, he made the following statement which I quote from 'Hansard':

> I start with a premise with which I think every hon. gentlemen in this House will agree, and that is that that system cannot be allowed to remain uncompleted. To leave a road upon which so much money has been expended, into which so much of the money of this Dominion and of the provinces has been poured, a road which has been endorsed by the financial guarantees, not only of the federal but of provincial governments—to leave that with two thousand or two thousand five hundred miles of road necessary to link up the whole system in an unfinished condition, is, it seems to me, a proposition to which no hon. gentleman on either side of the House would give his support and sanction.

He was followed by the right hon. the leader of the Opposition, who spoke at some length, and finally made this statement which I quote from 'Hansard':

> My right hon. friend said, and I altogether agree with him, that we cannot allow this enterprise to fail. We have too much money in it—not only the money of the country, but of the provinces and of the bond-holders themselves.
>
> [Mr. Lemieux.]
>
> It is, therefore, necessary that we should assist this enterprise; but the provisions made to carry it to completion are altogethr deficient.

These two leaders gave their opinion in almost identical words, with the exception that the right hon. the leader of the Opposition added the words:

> The provisions made to carry it to completion are altogether deficient.

That is the only difference between the pronouncements of the two leaders on this great question. Both, however, take the position that we cannot allow this enterprise to fail. The hon. Solicitor General, who has had much to do with the framing of the resolutions, and the proposed agreement, followed, giving a full explanation of the resolutions and of the proposed agreement. That was nearly five days ago, and the discussion which has since taken place from various points of view has been on this single text of the right hon. the leader of the Opposition: 'The provisions made to carry it to completion are altogether deficient.' Some have said we have no security, others that we have too much; some have said that we should not have taken any of the stock because by so doing we are becoming partners in the road. I cannot understand how a man becomes a partner in a company by purchasing some of its stock. A great deal of criticism has been directed against the personnel of Mackenzie and Mann. They have been called all sorts of names across the floor of this House; one speaker declared that they must be eliminated entirely, that they were not railroad men, but only contractors; and so forth. The history of all great railway men has been the same. They all have had to commence at the bottom of the ladder and make their way to the top. A good many years ago a boy in Illinois was lying in a wagon under some hay with his feet sticking out. Some railway men had called to dine with W. H. Pratt. Mr. Pratt, looking out of the window, saw the boy's feet sticking out of the hay, and said: 'What boy is that whose feet I see sticking out from under the hay in the wagon?' They replied: 'That is a little chain boy; his name is Van Horne.' Mr. Pratt said: 'Bring him in to get something to eat.' That was the boy who became Sir William Van Horne, whose career was so illustrious that in 1894 Queen Victoria knighted him for his great enterprise, not only in railway construction but other works. E. H. Harriman was a broker's clerk in New York. He went into business for himself and soon acquired the Union Pacific railway, then a bankrupt concern, and made it a paying road. Then he acquired the Southern Pacific and soon became the dominant factor in railroad matters in the United States. Just before his death, he controlled 60,000 miles of railway in the United States, with an annual earning power of $700,000,000. The career of James J. Hill, who was born near Guelph, is known to nearly everybody. In 1873 he interested Donald A. Smith and George Stephen—Lord Strathcona and Lord Mount Stephen—in railway matters in the great wheat belt lying to the west of the Red river. We all are familiar with the career of the late Lord Strathcona, who, on the 5th day of November, 1886, drove the last spike on the Canadian Pacific railway, the first transcontinental railway of Canada. I might mention others: the two great Canadian railway men whose loss this country now mourns, Sir William Whyte of the Canadian Pacific, and William Wainwright of the Grand Trunk. Whyte commenced as a brakeman; Wainwright was an office boy. And so Mackenzie and Mann, in like manner, commenced at the bottom of the ladder and have steadily climbed up; and, say what you will of Mackenzie and Mann, they have within the last eighteen years changed the whole map of Canada, and are the wonders of the railroad world to-day. A good many have spoken about a clerk in the office of Mackenzie and Mann making an affidavit—A. J. Mitchell—and have asked why Mackenzie and Mann did not make the affidavit themselves. Who is A. J. Mitchell? He is the comptroller, the head man of his department and assistant to the vice-president. He is the man who knows all about the money matters in connection with the construction of the road, and who supplied the information to Mackenzie and Mann; and if there is a man in Canada whose word can be taken at par, it is Alf. Mitchell. But, Mr. Speaker, this is not a question of Mackenzie and Mann or anybody else. It is the Dominion of Canada that is concerned, and the question before us to-day is, what are we to do? On page 9 of this little blue-book there is a statement about the mileage of the road. It shows that this transcontinental railway has, in round number, 10,000 miles of railway—10,000 miles of a new transcontinental railway of which nearly 9,000 miles is finished and over 7,000 miles in operation; a little over 1,000 miles unfinished, and 850 of that is graded. On the next page we find the statements of D. B. Hanna and of this Alf. Mitchell that it will require $100,000,000 to complete the Canadian Northern Railway system. They have available $58,000,000, and they ask this Parliament to complete the $100,000,000 by a guarantee of $45,000,000 of bonds which will net about $42,000,000 or more. Some say: why do they not sell their own securities, and go as far as they can? This $58,000,000 of securities are not saleable just by themselves. If the company went to Lloyds or any other financial house to sell these securities they would be asked: Have you enough money to finish the road—No, we have not—We do not want the securities. But if they can say, we have the guarantee of the Dominion Government for $45,000,000, then all the $58,000,000 of securities, together with this $45,000,000 from the Government, are saleable and they can go on and finish the road. The question is not, is Canada big enough to do this; but, is Canada small enough to let it go by? The credit of Canada had one jar, not very long ago, brought about by the newspaper blizzard which preceded the report of Gutelius and Staunton. That gave the credit a jolt, and if we let this enterprise fail it will give Canada such a jar that we will not get over it for fifty years. We have no money for armaments, battleships and dreadnoughts, but we have all the money that is necessary to develop this country, by assisting railway enterprises, by assisting in the construction of good roads everywhere, making grants to educational institutions, and making provision for the relief of want and suffering in our cities and elsewhere, so that we shall be a nation that other nations can look to with pride and admiration. Canada is a big country. I have a map which shows the whole of Europe, without Russia, placed out in the north-west. The British isles are in the Yukon and there is almost enough room in the Yukon for another British isles. Europe, without Russia, could be placed in Canada almost four times, and yet we are talking about having too many railways. Immigration is coming and the northwest is capable of supporting 200,000,000 people. We must have railways. There are two things we should do and do right away; there has been too much time lost now. First, we should arrange to give this guarantee for $45,000,000 and, next, we should retain Mackenzie and Mann. We are to vote on this question, I suppose, some time to-night. When a man exercises his right to vote he should do it just as if he were the only voter in the lot, as if he were the only man, as if he were the judge and jury and it were left entirely to him not to refrain from voting because he may think it will carry any way or because he may think it will be lost any way. He should vote for just what he should like to have done with a feeling that he is acting as judge and jury. I intend to vote against the amendment and in favour of the resolution. We are not deciding this matter entirely to-night. The Prime Minister moved that this resolution be considered in Committee of the Whole House. The amendment moved by my hon. friend from Pictou would throw it out altogether. I am in favour of having these resolutions go to the committee so that we may take up the resolutions and the proposed agreement clause by clause, and if there is anything wrong, anything that can be remedied or bettered, I am sure that every hon. member of this House, no matter which side he is on, will be anxious to right the wrong and the committee is the place to do it.

If we do not do this now, we increase the distress of these 21,500 employees of this company, and between 30,000 and 50,000 people who are dependent upon them, and we disgrace this nation. If we go through with this promptly and efficiently, I think it will go a long way towards steadying the universal unrest in financial matters, and it will place not only the honour but the credit of the Dominion of Canada upon a rock in every financial centre in the world.

Mr. D. B. NEELY (Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, I shall not devote any time to answering the speech which has just been made by the hon. member for Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), except to say that the members of His Majesty's loyal Opposition pride themselves on this one thing, that within the ranks of the Liberal party independence of thought is not considered heresy when that thought differs from the opinion of the majority of the party to which we belong. I am sure I am speaking for every member of the Opposition when I say that no gentleman on this side of the House will be put up or will stand up during the course of this debate and try to read out of the ranks of the Liberal party, because of his difference from us on this question, our very much esteemed friend from Norfolk.

Listening to this discussion for the last few days, there are certain grounds of common agreement between the members of this House, I presume, on both sides. One could not but be struck by the unanimity of opinion on one important feature of this question, namely, Canada's duty at the moment in reference to this national undertaking. In so far as my position is concerned, I want to say that any criticism or unfavourable expression of opinion I may offer in reference to the resolution that the House is considering is not attributable to any failure to appreciate the duty of Canada to come to the aid of this great undertaking if this undertaking requires that aid and if we propose to give it in the proper way. I am sure that we all recognize the necessity of a third transcontinental railway. The time has passed for the members of this House to give that question any extended consideration. Canada is already committed, by the Acts of previous Parliaments, to the building of a third transcontinental railway, namely, the Canadian Northern. I must disagree with some expressions of opinion by certain hon. gentlemen opposite as to this proposition and as to the necessity for a third system. I cannot conceive that the Canadian Northern Railway system could ever have been a great system as compared with the Canadian Pacific or the Grand Trunk Pacific if its operations had been bottled up in the three western prairie provinces. There is this to be said for the eastern line of this railway, that it travels through a country that, in my judgment, no member of this House has demonstrated will be devoid of traffic producing results. I noticed in the newspapers recently a statement to the effect that on the Transcontinental railway west of Quebec and east of Cochrane already a great colonizing movement has developed. By the political opponents of the National Transcontinental railway we were led to believe that that line would pass through a great wilderness that would never amount to anything in the way of producing traffic. Within the past two months that idea has been dispelled and I would look upon the eastern section of the Canadian Northern which travels through the great clay belt of northern Ontario as being a part of the railway that in time will be a profit producing undertaking.

In my judgment this question ought to be considered by this House as a straight business proposition. Personally, it would be absolutely impossible for me to express an unfriendly sentiment against the Canadian Northern Railway system, because I come from a part of the country that owes its being almost to the development of the Canadian Northern Railway system, its main line and branches. The history of the Canadian Northern railway in western Canada is a history that spells very largely the history of the development of northern Manitoba, northern Alberta and northern Saskatchewan, and while it is true that in the northern parts of my own province we have to-day the Grand Trunk Pacific and certain lines of the Canadian Pacific railway, it is a well-known fact that the enterprise of Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann and the development of that enterprise in the building of the Canadian Northern and its tributary branches, is responsible for the branch line policy of the Canadian Pacific railway itself. Everybody knows that for years the Canadian Pacific railway in western Canada played a dog in the manger policy and attempted to make the people coming into western Canada subject to the main line of that railroad, and refused to send branches out into the northern part of these three prairie provinces. But in 1903, with the advent of the extension of the Canadian Northern system westward, we found that the Canadian Pacific railway wakened up. They came to the conclusion that if this new railroad system was going to open up that country they had better get busy and send a few feeders in that direction too. So that, as a result of the development of the Canadian Northern Railway system in the prairie provinces, we have had the development of the other great transcontinental systems. In any criticism of the proposals that are before us at the present time, in view of the history of western Canada and of its development, and especially the developments of the northern part of the three prairie provinces, I am bound to say that for my part I can only have admiration for the enterprise of the men who when others refused to build railroads into that section of the country came forward—it is true with Government help—to supply it with railroads. They had the vision to see the possibilities of these districts that were not served by railroads, and, by Government aid if you will, they extended lines through that great productive area.

When the Canadian Northern main line was extended westward to the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, the people began to come into these provinces in large numbers. They did not stay along the main line but they spread out in various districts throughout the north. It then became immediately necessary for somebody to build branch lines, feeders to the main line of the Canadian Northern, and after the formation of the province of Saskatchewan and Alberta the Governments of these two provinces found themselves confronted with this very serious condition; that we had the main line of the Canadian Northern running through the northern portions of these provinces, and away beyond that main line, forty miles, fifty miles, sixty miles, even a hundred miles, there were settled numbers of people who required service from branch lines. In 1908 the representatives of the Saskatchewan Government came to the Government of Canada and asked for assistance towards the building of a number of branch lines in that province. The Government of the day said to the representatives of the Saskatchewan Government: you have set up housekeeping for yourselves; up to the present time the federal Government has given aid to the main line and to some branches, but we have gone far enough in giving aid to these branch lines in these new provinces which now have their own governments by virtue of their organization into provinces. The provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan were confronted with the problem that they had to do something in order to serve the needs of the people by the building of branch lines that would be feeders to the main line of the Canadian Northern railway. The result was that for three or four years, from 1908 to 1912, the province of Saskatchewan undertook to meet the needs of the people by guaranteeing the bonds of branch lines that were authorized by Acts of this Parliament. That is to say, they guaranteed the bonds of lines that were to be constructed under Dominion charters. But in 1912 the Saskatchewan Government went a step further and they incorporated the Canadian Northern Saskatchewan Railroad Company, and in the session of 1912 the legislature of Saskatchewan not only authorized the building of several hundred miles of branch lines in the province, under this Act, but they actually guaranteed the bonds of 255 miles of these branch lines. It has been pointed out in this House already that under that company's charter up to the present time, from 1912 to 1914, the Canadian Northern have actually only commenced construction on thirty miles out of a total of 255, miles, the bonds of which were guaranteed in the session of 1912. Therefore, for the last two years there has been very little development on the part of the Canadian Northern railway in the prairie provinces; I speak particularly for the province of Saskatchewan. What I want to point out to the people of my own province who are anxious to see the branch lines of the Canadian Northern system in that province extended to the various districts that require these facilities, is that one very serious fault that I find with the proposals now before the House is that in my judgment there is absolutely no provision made for the extension of these branch lines. Further than that, in the consideration of these resolutions, I find that not only is there no provision for the building of these branch lines, so much required by the people of the West, but that by this proposal the Dominion Government purports to take away from the people of Saskatchewan and from the people of my province the rights which they took unto themselves by the incorporation of the Canadian Northern Saskatchewan Railway Company, and by the guaranteeing of 255 miles of their branch lines. If I read these resolutions aright this Canadian Northern Saskatchewan Company is declared to be, with a number of other constituent companies, a work for the general advantage of Canada, and here is the position that that places my province in.

We have, as I said, in one session of our legislature, guaranteed bonds for 255 miles to the extent of $15,000 a mile. By our agreement with the Canadian Northern railway, the Government of the province of Saskatchewan is given the right of decision as to the location of those lines and of the stations, the right of decision as to the standard of the road and the standard of equipment; and also, by virtue of the Saskatchewan Railway Act, the Government have the control of their own rates. Now we have this legislation proposed by the Prime Minister, in which he declares that the Canadian Northern Saskatchewan Railway Company is to be hereafter a work for the general advantage of Canada. When we have about thirty miles out of that 255 miles constructed, this Government comes along and says, ipso facto: All these 255 miles of proposed lines will hereafter be adjudged works for the general advantage of Canada. What does that mean, so far as the people of my province are concerned? It means that, with regard to every mile of the unfinished, the untouched part of the Canadian Northern Saskatchewan system, instead of the provincial Government having the right to decide as to location of lines and stations, and so on, this Government have that right of decision. In other words, the Government of the province of Saskatchewan guarantee the bonds, pay the piper, take the responsibility of guaranteeing $15,000 a mile for every mile of that railroad, and yet the Minister of Railways of the Dominion of Canada shall determine where those roads are to be built. In my judgment, this constitutes an absolute and flagrant breach of provincial rights, and should not be tolerated by this Parliament, especially by members of this Government, who have always, as I have understood it, posed before the people of this country as the champions of provincial rights throughout the length and breadth of Canada.

Where is this going to stop is the question that we in the western provinces are asking. In the province of Saskatchewan we have incorporated a company, authorized hundreds of miles of lines to be constructed and guaranteed some hundreds of miles. That company will be no longer under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Railways of the Government of Saskatchewan. We may, at the next session of the Saskatchewan Legislature organize a new company and give it authority to build some more hundreds of miles. We may guarantee the bonds of that line. Yet, according to the precedent that this Government is establishing in this legislation, no sooner has that company been organized and its bonds guaranteed, than this Government and this Parliament can declare that the works of that company are works for the general advantage of Canada, and so the province of Saskatchewan will again find itself face to face with the situation where it must pay the piper, where it must guarantee the notes of the railway company that wants to build a line in our province, and yet receive absolutely no quid pro quo for the expenditure that it so makes. In my judgment, it is one of the very serious objections that we in the West must find against this arrangement as proposed in the resolutions now before the House.

I have said that this legislation, in my judgment, offers no encouragement to the people of the prairie provinces who want to see money expended in the building and betterment of branch lines in our provinces. Not a dollar, so far as I can figure out from the terms of the resolution, is to be devoted to that purpose. We know perfectly well who will have to pay. We are going to put $45,000,000 more into the Canadian Northern railway towards completing the western end through the province of British Columbia. Yet the people on the prairies must sit and watch this operation, see these proposals go through this Parliament when, so far as they are concerned, there is absolutely no evidence that one dollar of this $45,000,000 will be spent for the development and betterment of a branch line policy in the prairie provinces.

The charge has very often been laid at the door of our provincial governments in the West that they are too extravagant in the building of branch lines; that they are guaranteeing too many bonds and going too deeply into this policy. When we are faced by this situation that the Dominion Government promotes the building of great main lines of railways throughout our provinces; when, as a result of that policy, the people come from all quarters of the globe to settle up our prairies; when they get here and settle miles and miles away from our main lines of railway, will any one tell me what the governments of those provinces can do except to continue the policy that they have already inaugurated, namely, the guaranteeing of bonds for branch lines in those provinces? So far as the province from which I come is concerned, while it is true that we have guaranteed the bonds of several hundred miles of branch lines in that province, our policy has fallen far short of the necessities of the situation, if these people are to have reasonable transportation facilities in that part of the country.

I know there is a sentiment in the prairie provinces in favour of the Government of Canada doing something to assist the Canadian Northern railway. We, in my part of the country at least, do not want to see this great enterprise fall to the ground. Our interests, our necessities, our future, are tied up more or less with the development of this great system, especially as regards its branch lines throughout our provinces. But the people of western Canada, I am afraid, are doomed to very serious disappointment when they discover that, out of this $45,000,000 that is to go into the completion of the outlets of the Canadian Northern main line, they are not to get a single dollar for the benefit of branch lines.

If I have one fault to find with this Canadian Northern railway system, it is that in the matter of railroad construction they have attempted in many cases more than they can finish. In my own constituency there are two or three branch lines on which a certain amount of work has been done—it was done years ago. In one case the bonds were guaranteed by the federal Government many years ago. I refer to the Thunder Hill extension, which goes through the north end of my constituency. Two or three years ago the people had the assurance from the Canadian Northern railway that the line would be completed, that is so far as the bond guarantee extended. I regret to say that since that time, so far as I know, not a bit of work has been done. And there are people to-day in the northern part of my constituency who have to haul the products of their farms thirty-five and forty miles to market as a result of the failure of the Canadian Northern railway to complete the lines whose bonds were guaranteed by the Dominion Government years ago.

But these resolutions have other faults, in my judgment, besides these, and very serious faults. Some criticism has been offered by certain gentlemen as to the character of the road built by the Canadian Northern railway. I think that possibly the strongest ground of objection on the part of the great majority of people to giving further aid to the Canadian Northern railway is the suspicion that much of the money that should have gone into the development of the road, into making the road a first-class road, has been diverted from its proper object and has been used for the private gain of the promoters of the system. I do not wish to discuss that feature of the case further than to say this, that in the building of the Canadian Northern railway there has always been one seriously objectionable feature, and that is that they have let contracts for construction work without calling for tenders. In this they have been unlike other railways in this country, and we cannot but justify to some extent the suspicion of the people that business carried on in that matter has some object of private or personal gain.

Now, I listened to and appreciated the remarks of my hon. friend from Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) with reference to the statement presented to this House on this very point of diversion of the moneys obtained from the sale of securities to other enterprises, and I appreciate the loyalty of my hon. friend from Norfolk to one who, I believe, is a personal friend. Mr. Mitchell, the comptroller of the Canadian Northern railway the hon. member for Norfolk tells us, is the man best qualified to know whether the statements presented to this Parliament are true or not. Also we have the affidavit of Mr. Mitchell to the effect that the moneys obtained from the sale of securities who was the comptroller for the Canadien Northern Railway enterprises for the personal benefit of Mackenzie and Mann. I would like to ask the hon. member for Norfolk if this is not the same Mr. Mitchell who was the comptroller for the Canadian Northern railway last year. And we had the statement presented last year that a subsidy of $15,000,000 would be sufficient to complete this road. Where did these figures come from? Mr. Mitchell was comptroller of the Canadian Northern railway then, I understand, and the statement was presented to the House that $15,000,000 would complete the road. Yet we have the statement from the same quarter this year that we must give them a further $45,000,000 to complete the road. I do not know what to do. Shall I take the statement of Mr. Mitchell of last year, or shall I take the statement this year? It seems to me the conclusion of the whole matter is that this Parliament has not had the right information on this question and that this Parliament is entitled to more thorough and complete information as to the financial interests of the Canadian Northern Railway system than have been presented either by Mr. Mitchell or by any member of this Government.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is scarcely worth while intervening, perhaps, but I think the hon. gentleman should not make a statement concerning an outside party unless he has the evidence. I know of no statement presented by Mr. Mitchell last year. Would the hon. gentleman be good enough to present the statement he is talking about?

Mr. NEELY: I did not say Mr. Mitchell had made a statement last year. I said Mr. Mitchell was the comptroller of the Canadian Northern railway last year, just as he is this year, and if Mackenzie and Mann made the statement to this Government last year that $15,000,000 would enable them to finish the road, where did they get it?

10 p.m. Mr. MEIGHEN: If the hon. gentleman says he did not say that Mr. Mitchell made the statement, I am satisfied. But I would like him to look up the 'Hansard' report to-morrow as to what he did say.

Mr. NEELY: I will take care of my own 'Hansard' if the hon. gentleman will take care of his in this debate,—he will have his hands full with the various positions he has taken on this question in this House. I say Mr. Mitchell gave us a statement this year as to the disposition of the money from the sale of the security. Mr. Mitchell was comptroller of the Canadian Northern railway last year when the statement was prepared in the offices of that company—presumably, I say, by the same Mr. Mitchell—and presented to this Government, and by the Finance Minister presented to this House, that $15,000,000 would complete this system. I say, in view of the fact that we had one statement last year and another this year from the same official, presumably, prepared by the same officials—

Mr. WILCOX: Would my hon. friend read that statement?

Mr. NEELY: I am not a walking library; I do not carry all the volumes of 'Hansard' in my clothes. My hon. friend is able to read, and he can read it. I do not know what statement he refers to, and I do not think he knows himself. So far as the statement this year is concerned, the Prime Minister read it and it is on 'Hansard.' He will find it in the minister's speech of this year as Mr. Mitchell's sworn affidavit. If he turns up the speech of the Finance Minister last year upon this subsidy, he will find it without trouble. We have this astounding situation, and we have this deep-rooted suspicion in the minds of the people, that if $15,000,000 was not enough last year, $45,000,000, under the method of expenditure hitherto followed by the Canadian Northern railway in letting their contracts for work on their lines, will not be enough now. My hon. friend the Solicitor General I am quite sure does not believe that $45,000,000 will complete this system. Why? Because he has provided in this resolution that if $45,000,000 is not enough and the Government are called upon to foreclose their mortgage against the Canadian Northern Railway system, before that foreclosure becomes effective there shall be another appeal to Parliament. In other words, the Solicitor General is providing in this resolution that Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann, the promoters of this enterprise, will have one more chance to appear in the lobbies of this Parliament in order to make an appeal to the sympathies of members to give further aid for the final completion of this road. The Solicitor General has made that provision in this resolution. Why has he made that provision if it is not in view of the fact that he himself anticipates that the Canadian Northern Railway Company will have to come back to this Parliament for further aid?

We are told that we are getting all kinds of securities for this proposed guarantee of bonds of $45,000,000. We are getting by the terms of that guarantee a floating mortgage from the Canadian Northern Railway system itself, the constituent companies, and above and beyond that we are getting $40,000,000 worth of stock in the Canadian Northern Railway system. I am sure that the Solicitor General must have found a very difficult situation when he looked into the securities of the Canadian Northern Railway system and could not find enough there to cover this loan or guarantee of $45,000,000 without laying hold of $40,000,000 of absolutely useless, worthless common stock. What is this $40,000,000 worth to the people of this country? Has the common stock of the Canadian Northern railway any market value? Admittedly this railway is at the present time in a bankrupt position. It ties us up in the bonds of partnership to this railroad without giving us, shall I say, any voice in the control of its policy. I might as well say that. I would be speaking the truth if I were to say without any voice because what value has a minority vote? We are leaving with this railroad the absolute control of the operations and policy of the company and of the expenditure of the money that it obtains through the sale of the securities which this Government propose to guarantee, and we are taking to ourselves a 40 per cent interest in common stock which in all probability will never be marketable, at least in the lifetime of hon. gentlemen who are now members of this House. The only way in which this stock can be of value, as the Solicitor General has himself practically admitted, is that it will become valuable as we make it valuable, as we pour more money into the railroad and bring it to completion, put it in operation so that it can earn money by pouring further millions of the people of Canada into this system which may in time, after many years, make the $40,000,000 of stock worth a little bit more than the paper on which it is written.

Some criticism has been directed against the right hon. leader of the Opposition, especially by the Minister of Finance and some others, to the effect that this Government have come into office facing a very difficult situation as the result of things that had been done by the late Administration. We are told they were up against a bad situation and that that bad situation was a legacy from the Laurier Administration. I would like to know what legacy was left to this country by the preceding Administration in reference to this very Canadian Northern railway. This legacy was left, that the Liberal Government assisted in the building of this railroad by the guarantee of bonds for which guarantee they obtained a first-class security, because they secured a first mortgage on the railroad itself. What is this Government proposing to take? A floating mortgage, which means in some cases perhaps a second, in some cases a third, and in some cases a fourth mortgage on the equity of Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann in the Canadian Northern Railway system. It means that this Government are proposing to come to the aid of every other bond or security-holder who now has a charge against the Canadian Northern Railway system because, in order to make our $45,000,000 bond guarantee effective, we must protect every other security that takes precedence of the one we propose now to guarantee. That is the legacy left by the late Administration, they left a legacy of a railroad practically completed and along with that they left securities which are first-class securities, being a first mortgage on the railroad itself. I would like to know if my hon. friends go out of office very shortly, but not before this legislation goes into effect, what kind of legacy they will leave to a future Administration in view of the resolutions now submitted to Parliament. So far as the extension of the Canadian Northern railway eastward is concerned, I have always been of the opinion that that was a step which was justified and necessary. Why is it that for the past two years there has been practically a cessation of railroad construction on the part of the Canadian Northern railway in the prairie provinces? Is it because those prairie provinces have not come to their assistance by a guarantee of bonds? They have hundreds of thousands, yes millions of dollars worth of provincial securities lying ready to be marketed, and yet for the past two years we have had practically no railroad development on the part of this railroad in the prairie provinces. The great burden that rests today on the shoulders of the Canadian Northern railway, as everybody knows, is the completion of the British Columbia section, undertaken to secure a western outlet at a time when Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann, or the Canadian Northern Railway promoters, thought they saw good business ahead of them.

The result of that has been from the time that work was commenced in the province of British Columbia—as a result not of a Dominion, but of a provincial guarantee—the energies and finances of the Canadian Northern road have had to be thrown into the construction of that part of the system absolutely to the detriment of the lines operating or proposed to be operated in the prairie provinces. Let me say to my hon. friends opposite that the late Administration is not responsible for the promotion of that very expensive piece of road, which, in the minds of many people even in the wast is not considered necessary to the completion of the Canadian Northern system. That section of the road was promoted by an agreement with the province of British Columbia, which guaranteed the bonds to the extent of $35,000 a mile. The late Administration, so far as I know, never put a dollar into the construction of that road because they did not appreciate that it was a necessary part of the Canadian Northern system. But what did this Government do when they came into office? They supplemented the bond guarantee of the British Columbia government by a cash subsidy of $12,000 a mile, and that is not enough to complete the line. This is the situation today: the Canadian Northern are coming to this Parliament for help because they cannot grapple with the problem of the completion of the British Columbia section of their system; but neither my right hon. leader nor the late Government are responsible for that. Any legacy that has been left to the Canadian people in connection with this system is the result of the action of the British Columbia government in promoting the building of that section of the line, and of this Government who propose to take very insecure—if I might use the word—security for the present advance of $45,000,000.

I want to say, in conclusion, that in voting for the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) I do so with a certain amount of reluctance.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

[Mr. Neely.]

Mr. NEELY: There is nothing to congratulate my hon. friends about in that. I vote with reluctance because of this fact: many of the people whom I represent in this House are of the opinion that giving assistance to the Canadian Northern railway means the development of a branch line policy through the prairie provinces. I have read the resolutions and have listened to the explanations of the hon. gentlemen who are supposed to understand them,—and wonderful is the man that does understand them, for they remind me of David's description of man as being 'fearfully and wonderfully made;' but I fail to find anything in the resolutions which would warrant me in carrying any message of hope to the people I represent. I had hoped, before the resolutions were brought down, that this proposal would mean something towards the development of a branch line policy for western Canada and the betterment of the branch lines already in existence; but I find that they mean more money for the British Columbia section, and more money for the Canadian Northern Ontario section, but not a single dollar so far as I can see, for the development of branch lines in western Canada. It seems to do the right hon. the Prime Minister and his followers a lot of good if they can get the sanction of the Liberal Prime Ministers of the various provinces of Canada to any proposal they bring before this House. It seems to strengthen them, and I do not suppose that the Prime Minister would have brought down these proposals if it had not been for the letters of Premier Murray, Premier Sifton, and acting Premier Calder, of Saskatchewan. I know perfectly well that our Conservative friends opposite will attempt to make a great deal of capital out of these letters and telegrams, sent by the various Liberal premiers in support of the contention that it was absolutely necessary for this Government to furnish aid to the Canadian Northern railway. I will take these letters one by one, and I defy any man in this House to find one line in any of them that takes any other position than that taken by my honoured leader in this House, namely, that if this House is seized of the fact that the Canadian Northern railway must have the assistance of this Government to complete its transcontinental system, that assistance should be given. There is not a word of appeal to this Government in any of these letters to aid the Canadian Northern railway, because those particular provinces are not able to help it themselves. We have a policy of our own in Saskatchewan, and they have a similar policy in Alberta; we guarantee the bonds, the bonds are sold, and the branch lines are built. Take, first of all, the letter of Premier Murray, of which I will just read the last sentence, as it contains the point to which I refer:

Government feels that any reasonable assistance consistent with public interests that can be afforded by the Dominion to the Canadian Northern would be a policy which would be acceptable to our people as it would enhance provincial credit.

Premier Murray does not say anything about these resolutions, nor does he ask this Government to aid the Canadian Northern so that they may build branch lines in his province.

Mr. MACDONALD: What is the date?

Mr. NEELY: March 14.

Mr. MACDONALD: He had not seen the resolution then?

Mr. NEELY: Of course not. The dates of these communications would seem to indicate that the Government were in a desperate hurry to get the opinions of the Liberal premiers of those provinces before they brought down these resolutions. On March 3 the Minister of Finance had heard nothing about these resolutions, at least officially, but on the 14th March the Government gets a letter from Premier Murray, and on the 17th April Mr. J. A. Calder, acting Premier of Saskatchewan and Minister of Railways for that province, writes to Mr. Borden a letter which has already been put on 'Hansard' by the Prime Minister. I just wish to quote a sentence or two of that letter to emphasize the point I am making. Mr. Calder said:

As I understand the situation, the company in question has made application to your Government for further Dominion aid, chiefly if not solely on the ground that such aid is required to enable it to complete and put into operation its main line through British Columbia and east of Port Arthur, thereby providing the necessary outlets for the network of branch lines which the company has constructed throughout the prairie regions.

Mr. Calder states plainly in that letter that he understands that this aid is required chiefly if not solely to enable them to complete their main line through the province of British Columbia and east of Port Arthur, and not for the branch lines in Saskatchewan. Mr. Calder did not ask this Government for help in his own province, and I think that he probably would have been very well satisfied if he had been left alone in the pursuit of his own policy. But these resolutions will take away from the Government of Saskatchewan, as well as the governments of those other western provinces, the rights that they already enjoy under their own legislation.

Regarding the necessity which may exist for the assistance applied for I have no opinion to offer as I have no knowledge of the facts.

No doubt, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Calder is very much in the same situation, as far as any information we have been able to get from the Government is concerned, as every hon. gentleman on this side of the House. Mr. Calder does not lay down any position as to the necessity for this aid. He goes further and says that he understands the aid is required for the completion of the line through British Columbia and east of Port Arthur. Surely the Government do not propose to quote these Liberal provincial premiers in support of their contention that they are bringing down a measure for the aid of this system in harmony with the views and position taken by the premiers. If they have taken any comfort from these communications, I am sure it is because they have given them a very superficial consideration, but if they look into these letters a little more carefully they will find no justification in them for the proposals that are before Parliament.

I said a moment ago that in supporting the amendment of my hon. friend from Pictou I do it reluctantly, because I think that aid to the Canadian Northern is necessary. I stand where my leader stands, and where, practically, I presume, every member of this House stands. I lay it at the door of this Government to assist, as they are convinced of the necessity for this aid. They have, as they tell us, information that leads them to believe that this amount of money is necessary to complete this system, but they have not given to this House full and complete information to enable it to unanimously pass a measure for the assistance to this railway. I lay it at the door of this Government that, having decided to give aid to the Canadian Northern, they have attached such conditions to this aid, that I find it absolutely impossible to give my support to the resolutions that are before the House. I have to say that I protest against this arrangement. I protest against it because it interferes with the rights of the western provinces; I protest against it because it promises no aid for the construction and betterment of branch lines throughout the prairie provinces, and I protest against it lastly because I object to a partnership in which Canada must play the humiliating part of being at the back of a great undertaking which already has declared itself to be bankrupt, and yet in which Canada has neither voice nor control as to the policy of the company or the expenditure of the money which we ourselves are voting.

The House divided on the proposed amendment of Mr. Macdonald:

That Mr. Speaker do not now leave the Chair, but that the said resolutions be considered this day six months.

YEAS:

Messieurs.

Béland,
Bennett (Calgary),
Bickerdike,
Boivin,
Bourassa,
Boyer,
Brouillard,
Buchanan,
Carroll,
Carvell,
Champagne,
Chisholm (Antigonish),
Chisholm (Inverness),
Cruise,
Delisle,
Demers,
Devlin,
Emmerson,
Gauthier (St. Hyacinthe),
Gauvreau,
German,
Hughes (Kings, P.E.I.),
Kay,
Kyte,
Lachance,
Lafortune,
Lanctot,
Lapointe (Kamouraska),
Laurier (Sir Wilfrid),
Lemieux,
Loggie,
Macdonald,
Maclean (Halifax),
MacNutt,
McCoig,
McCrea,
McKenzie,
McMillan,
Marcile (Bagot),
Martin (Regina),
Michaud,
Molloy,
Murphy,
Nesbitt,
Neely,
Nickle,
Oliver,
Pacaud,
Papineau,
Pardee,
Power,
Proulx,
Reid (Restigouche),
Robb,
Ross,
Seguin,
Sinclair,
Thomson (Qu'Appelle),
Tobin,
Truax,
Turgeon,
Verville,
Warnock and
White (Victoria, Alta.)—64.

NAYS:

Messieurs.

Achim,
Alguire,
Ames,
Armstrong (Lambton),
Armstrong (York, O.),
Arthurs,
Baker,
Ball,
Barker,
Barrette,
Beattie,
Bellemare,
Bennett (Simcoe),
Best,
Blain,
Blondin,
Borden,
Boulay,
Bowman,
Boyce,
Boys,
Bradbury,
Bristol,
Broder,
Burnham,
Carrick,
Chabot,
Charlton,
Clark (Bruce),
Clarke (Wellington),
Cockshutt,
Cromwell,
Crothers,
Currie,
Davidson,
Edwards,
Elliot,
Fisher,
Forget (Sir Rodolphe),
Foster (Kings, N.S.),
Foster (Toronto, N.),
Fripp,
Garland,
Girard,
Glass,
Green,
Hanna,
Hartt,
Hazen,
Henderson,
Hepburn,
Hughes (Victoria, O.),
Jameson,
Kemp,
Lalor,
Lamarche,
Lavallée,
Lewis,
Macdonell,
Maclean (York, O.),
McCurdy,
McKay,
McLean (Queens, P.E.I.),
McLeod,
Meighen,
Merner,
Middlebro,
Mondou,
Morphy,
Morris,
Morrison,
Munson,
Nantel,
Nicholson,
Paquet,
Paul,
Pelletier,
Perley,
Porter,
Rainville,
Reid (Grenville),
Rhodes,
Robidoux,
Roche,
Rogers,
Schaffner,
Sevigny,
Sexsmith,
Sharpe (Lisgar),
Sharpe (Ontario),
Shepherd,
Smith,
Stanfield,
Steele,
Stevens,
Stewart (Hamilton),
Stewart (Lunenburg),
Sutherland,
Thoburn,
Thompson (Yukon),
Thornton,
Tremain,
Walker,
Wallace,
Webster,
Weichel,
White (Leeds),
White (Renfrew),
Wilcox,
Wilson (Wentworth) and
Wright—111.

PAIRS:

Ministerial.	Opposition.
Guilbault,	Cardin,
Smyth,	Clark (Red Deer),
Coderre,	Bureau,
Brabazon,	Martin (St. Mary's),
Marshall,	Fortier,
Osler,	Pugsley,
L'Esperance,	Richards,
Aikins,	Turriff,
Barnard,	McCraney,
Burrell,	Douglas,
Clare,	Cash,
Northrup,	Lovell,
Doherty,	Marcil,
Cochrane,	Graham,
Fowler,	McLean (Sunbury),
Gauthier,	Ethier,
Lancaster,	Guthrie,
Taylor,	Law,
Clements,	Knowles.

Mr. GRAHAM: I am paired with the Minister of Railways; I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I am paired with the member for Lincoln; I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. CLEMENTS: I am paired with the member for Moosejaw; I would have voted against the amendment

Mr. H. H. McLEAN: I am paired with the member for Kings and Albert; I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. DOUGLAS: I am paired with the Minister of Agriculture; I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. DOHERTY I am paired with the member for Bonaventure; I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. AIKINS: I am paired with the member for Assiniboia; I would have voted against the amendment.

Amendment negatived.

Main motion—Mr. Borden—agreed to, and the House went into Committee on the resolution.

On the interpretation clause:

Mr. MACDONALD: The Canadian Northern system is defined to be the lines of railway mentioned in the first schedule, and such other companies as may hereafter be declared by the Governor in Council to be comprised in the Canadian Northern system as do not own or operate railways, terminals, bridges, or other railway facilities. I would like to have my attention directed to the particular clause that provides for the addition of these companies; apparently they are not to be railway companies.

Mr. BORDEN: I think that was inserted with a view of having a declaration in the resolution such as my hon. friend refers to. That seems to be omitted, but we will let it stand for the moment and if that particular clause is not added this will be eliminated.

Mr. MACDONALD: We might have an explanation now as to what is the nature of these companies that are intended to be declared to be within the first schedule and what is the object of that definition generally. I understand the Prime Minister to say there is no section in the resolutions that provides for the regulation referred to in the interpreting clause; what is the meaning of that definition?

Mr. BORDEN: Just what it says; the other companies alluded to are those of the particular character described here.

Mr. MACDONALD: What was in mind when that was drafted?

Mr. MEIGHEN: There is no provision in the resolution defining under what circumstances a company can be declared by Order in Council to be a constituent or subsidiary company. At the present time it is not thought wise to so define, but at the same time hon. gentlemen will understand that if after a time, another connecting link is found which advantageously to the whole system could be made a part of the system, then an arrangement can be made, but there is no necessity to do so now. But, there is necessity to provide in the definition that when that time comes, and it is added, it shall be included in one of the terms, constituent or subsidiary companies, and then there will be no necessity of amending this definition. I do not think myself it would be possible in advance to define the conditions under which a Governor in Council could declare a railway to belong to the system, but the circumstances as they arise will be treated on their own merits, and if a railway does develop, the Canadian Northern Railway Company, perhaps having seen in it a useful adjunct to the system, will apply to Parliament to have it added to the system, and the Governor in Council will add it, and then it becomes by virtue of this definition a constituent or subsidiary company.

Mr. MACDONALD: That statement is not sufficiently satisfactory. I was not aware from the information given to the House so far, that the Canadian Northern was to be permitted to go on making guarantees on the stocks of other companies. It does not appear to me that right was one which they could exercise in the way in which the Solicitor General indicates they might be able to. I do not think we should recognize a condition of affairs under which any kind of a railway in the country might be added to this system, or that we should proceed on that basis without having some idea in advance as to what is intended as a matter of fact. It is manifest that this particular interpretation clause is put in there for some definite object. It must have existed in the mind of the Government or of the Canadian Northern people, when the clause was drawn, that there were certain other railway companies, speaking of subsidiary companies, not railway companies, which either the promoters or the Government intended might form part of the system. What information has the Solicitor General with regard to that?

There must have been some of those companies discussed or that clause would not be put in. Speaking from my experience as a draughtsman, you do not put things in a document unless you have in view a condition of some kind that is likely to occur.

Mr. MEIGHEN: In the first place, there are no special companies in contemplation which are not now included. At the same time it was thought wise to provide in advance that if by some process that might be necessary another company was included, this definition should cover that. That is all.

Mr. MACDONALD: But you did not put that clause in without something in view?

Mr. MEIGHEN: We had in view this possibility, which is perhaps a probability, that additional companies would be added, but we did not define in advance under what conditions they may be added.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: My hon. friend, judging from what he says, is seeking extraordinary powers which ought to belong to Parliament and not to the Governor in Council. He says he has in contemplation no company which ought to be included in this agreement, and if there were such a company in existence, it would have been brought within the scope of the companies which are included in schedule 1. He says that there is no such company, that all the companies known at the present time are included in schedule 1; but it is not violent supposition that there may be other companies which have charters for roads more or less connected with the Canadian Northern, and which may perhaps be brought later on into the Canadian Northern system, or which certain promoters may be thinking of bringing in. You are giving to the Governor in Council the power to bring any such company into the system, and Parliament has no power to exercise any control over the will of the Governor in Council. The Governor in Council is supreme in this; and, whether its action is wise or unwise, there is no method by which you can prevent it or criticise it after it has taken place. I can conceive—and it is not a violent supposition—that there may be, even at this very moment, companies which have perhaps not made application to my right hon. friend at present, but which are awaiting only the passing of this Bill to come in and endeavour to be taken into this system. I submit for the consideration of my right hon. friend that such a power is not consistent with the object which he has in view at the present time, which is to establish the Canadian Northern Railway system. The Canadian Northern Railway system, as it exists at present, is well-known. We know the companies which ought to be taken into that system; and, if at the present time they have all been taken in, it is all right; but if it is contemplated that some other companies, the existence of which we do not suspect, may be brought in, I do not see why you should take such an extraordinary precaution as to give this power to the Governor in Council, when the hon. gentleman who has charge of the Bill says: I know nothing of any companies that may be brought in. The legislation which we are considering today is for a special object, namely, as stated in the preamble of the resolution, to unite under one management all the companies which are now under the control of the firm of Mackenzie and Mann. It ought not to be extended beyond that; and I cannot see, unless better reasons are given than have been given by my hon. friend the Solicitor General, why such an extraordinary provision as that should be included and why such powers should be vested in the Governor in Council.

Mr. BORDEN: I see nothing of the extraordinary character which my hon. friend finds in the proposal. As far as I understand it, it seems to be this: There may and doubtless in the future will be railways incorporated under charters, perhaps to be created in the future, which, although practically and in effect and physically forming part of the Canadian Northern Railway system, will nevertheless be not legally part of that system. The idea was to make provision that those railways, when they came into existence, might be legally made part of the Canadian Northern system. That does not seem to be a very extraordinary or unusual power. As my right hon. friend, however, finds some difficulty about it, we will let that clause stand for the moment and go on to the next.

Mr. GRAHAM: Under this agreement the Canadian Northern is to be given running rights over the Intercolonial railway. There are many branch lines or lines that touch the Intercolonial. Under this clause could the Canadian Northern lease the best of those lines, attach them to the Canadian Northern in connection with the running rights over the Intercolonial, and have that ratified?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Not under this clause.

Mr. GRAHAM: Under any clause?

Mr. MEIGHEN: They could not do anything whatever of that nature without the consent of the Governor in Council.

Mr. GRAHAM: Is the Governor in Council taking the right to do what I have explained may be done? If so, you are asking for too much power.

Mr. GERMAN: This is just a beginning of the Government becoming a partner in a private-owned concern; and I will tell the right hon. the leader of the Government that this is only a beginning and a very small beginning; that he cannot be or the Government of Canada cannot be a partner in a private-owned transcontinental railway. (Reading):

'Constituent companies' means such of those companies mentioned in the first schedule to the following resolutions, and such other companies, hereafter declared by the Governor in Council to be comprised in the Canadian Northern system, as own or operate railways, terminals, bridges or other railway facilites.

That means every company which the promoters of the Canadian Northern railway, who are the controllers of the Canadian Northern Railway Company, may bring into that concern. If they do not make default, the Government is absolutely in the hands of Mackenzie and Mann who own and control stock hereafter in large and small enterprises in which they have an interest, or which they may undertake to exploit throughout this country.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: In regard to subsidiary companies, I would like to ask my hon. friend the Solicitor General, for my own information, why he has made a difference between constituent companies and subsidiary companies? Subsidiary companies are those which do not operate railways, and constituent companies are those which do operate railways. So far as the object of the legislation is concerned, I have not been able to see why this difference is preserved. There may be a difference between constituent companies and subsidiary companies legally or in any other way, which I have not been able to find out on reading over the resolution; but it seems to me simply to make the resolution more cumbersome than is necessary. I think we should call them all constituent companies or all subsidiary companies. I understand very well the distinction, but I do not see the object of it.

11 p.m.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There is one section in which the distinction is essential. I will find it and show it to the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. CARVELL: In regard to contractors, I want to ask the Prime Minister if there will be any objection to amending that portion of the interpretation clause so that it will include Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann. In discussing the general resolution, I pointed out yesterday that section 4 of the resolution simply said:

That covenants or undertakings to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council shall be given that all outstanding temporary loans to the Canadian Northern or any of its constituent or subsidiary companies secured... will be paid—

I pointed out that there were a large number of securities which were doubtless collateral; but that, in my opinion, and I think I proved it pretty well—those collaterals would not pay the debts. I suggested that section 4 be amended by inserting the words, 'by the contractors' after the word 'undertakings', so that the section would read as follows:

That covenants or undertakings by the contractors to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council—

Then you would have Mackenzie and Mann personally responsible that these debts would be paid. Again in section 5 the same matter comes up:

That covenants or undertakings of the contractors and such other covenants or undertakings as may be required by the Governor in Council shall be given that the current indebtedness of the Canadian Northern and of the said constituent and subsidiary companies will within one year from the passing of the Act to be based upon these resolutions be reduced to the normal or usual current amount—which I think has been estimated here at about $3,000,000. If the word 'contractors' included Mackenzie and Mann personally, you would have the personal covenant of Mackenzie and Mann that these debts would be paid. If these constituent companies and subsidiary companies are all allowed to stand as they are now, then we are giving Mackenzie and Mann the right to bring into this system anything whatever, no matter whether it be a railway company, bridge company, a coal mine or anything else. If we bring this in, we saddle these upon the country, for once they are in the system, the country has got to pay the liability. You can bring in almost anything in Canada, so long as it is a corporation, into this system, and the country becomes responsible to finance that scheme—we have to pay the bills. Yet Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann personally are not responsible for a dollar. It does seem to me that the Prime Minister should consider this very carefully and if necessary allow it to stand. I think it a very important matter, because if what I suggest were done it would take away a great deal of the objection that members on this side, and people all over the country, have to this measure.

Mr. BORDEN: As I understand it, under section 4, and under section 5, as well, it is competent for the Governor in Council to require the personal undertaking of Sir William Mackenzie or Sir Donald Mann, or both.

Mr. CARVELL: But would it not be better if we had the assurance in the legislation that it would be required?

Mr. BORDEN: I do not see that it is necessary.

Mr. AMES: I would ask why it is that the parties of the fourth part in the agreement, called the 'contractors' include Mackenzie, Mann and Company, Limited, Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann, while in the interpretation clause the word 'contractors' means Mackenzie, Mann and Company, Limited.

Mr. CARVELL: That is easy to be answered—it is because in the agreement Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann are only covenanting to hand over stock and not to put in a claim for their services.

Mr. BORDEN: My hon. friend is mistaken.

Mr. CARVELL: Well, it might go a little farther. I stated it yesterday. In the first place they agree to transfer $33,000,000 of stock to the Government; then to transfer the Brockville and Westport line free of charge, and to sign whatever other agreement is necessary to carry out the agreement; and also not to put in a claim for their services. That is all. When they include these gentlemen personally and make them responsible, it is only to hand over stock and carry out these other things that I have stated. When their covenant is to pay money, they are personally carefully left out of the term 'contractors.' I think the hon. member for Montreal, St. Antoine (Mr. Ames), is very well justified in calling the attention of the committee to the condition of affairs.

Mr. BORDEN: It is for the reason I have already explained. It is hardly correct to say that they are left out, because the provisions of sections 4 and 5 are absolutely sufficient to have them included. So far as the agreement is concerned in which Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann are personally and individually made parties, the mere proviso of the clause of the agreement will indicate reasons why they should be parties in that way. Subsection (e) of section 2 provides for the absolute release of all contractors' profits, commissions and claims of every kind against the Canadian Northern railway or against any of the constituent or subsidiary companies. It was for the reason that it was desired to include not only Mackenzie, Mann and Company, Limited, but also Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann individually in respect of these claims that they were made parties as well as the corporation itself, and therefore the clause in the agreement has that operation.

Mr. MACDONALD: Have records been brought down containing information as to who are the shareholders and officers of Mackenzie, Mann and Company, Limited? If not, I think that information should be laid before the committee.

Mr. BORDEN: I could not say at the moment whether the information laid before the committee comprises that or not. But I should think there would be no difficulty about getting it.

Mr. MACDONALD: I submit to the right hon. gentleman that this section should stand until we have that information. I think that is only reasonable. We cannot give a legislative definition of the meaning of the word 'contractors,' declaring it to be a certain company without knowing who are the persons in that company.

Mr. BORDEN: The persons in the corporation may transfer their stock to-morrow, or may have transferred it yesterday.

Mr. MACDONALD: But that information would be interesting—

Mr. BORDEN: Interesting, perhaps, but it does not alter the legal position in the slightest, because the transfer of shares does not affect the entity of the corporation.

Mr. CARVELL: The Prime Minister has stated with practical accuracy the effect of subsection e of section 2 of the agreement. No doubt Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann personally release all these companies from any claim for their services. But it is also true that they do not become responsible for the payment of any money. The right hon. gentleman says the Government might demand it under the covenants and undertakings in sections 4 and 5. But why will not the Prime Minister say that he will demand it? Why will not he say that when the covenants are drawn up Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann will be made personally responsible? And, if he gives that agreement, why will he not go so far as to put it in the document itself? If this were done the country would have it in the legislation, and the very word 'contractors' would mean that they were personally responsible.

Mr. GERMAN: Mackenzie, Mann and Company, Limited, is a limited liability company. But Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann individually may have enormous wealth without having any personal liability in respect of this corporate institution. In my opinion the suggestion made by the hon. member for Carleton, N.B., (Mr. Carvell) is one which should receive not only the attention of the committee but the approval of the Government, and Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann individually should be made liable, and not merely as a limited liability company. It might be that you could not get a dollar from them as a limited liability company, but each of them is known to be a millionaire many times over and capable not only of financing this institution and building this road but of building another transcontinental road as well.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. GERMAN: Hon. gentlemen laugh, but public opinion is—and we all know it—that Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann are able to build a railway if they want to do it. There is no necessity of smiling over it or making it an object of mirth. We know that each of them is a multi-millionaire, and they have made money out of the railway manipulation. I make that statement here as a member of this House and no man dare challenge it.

Mr. BRISTOL: I challenge it absolutely; the hon. gentleman is making a statement without foundation in fact. The evidence before the House is contrary to what the hon. gentleman says.

Mr. GERMAN: The hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bristol) is quite in error in his notion. Both Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann are men of great wealth, which they have made out of the manipulation of Canadian Northern railway transactions. Now, it is asked that they should be made personally liable in regard to these matters. They are being made liable as a limited liability company. And the hon. member for Carleton suggests that they should be made liable individually. I believe that the Government should include under the term 'contractors' not only Mackenzie, Mann and Company, Limited, but also Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann.

Mr. MURPHY: I wish to add my request to those already preferred from this side of the House. I think the Prime Minister will concede that we should not proceed so fast with this particular clause that we have been discussing till, in the first place, the information asked for by the hon. member for Pictou is brought down, that is that we should have full particulars regarding the composition of the firm of Mackenzie, Mann and Company, Limited, the names of those who compose it, the capital stock of the company, and generally all such information as would enable us to determine just what value is to be placed upon any guarantee that may be given by that particular company. In addition to that, I think the request made by the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) is a very reasonable one, that is, that within this definition of the word 'contractors' should be placed Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann, individually. In fact, in view of the discussion that has taken place in the past week, and more particularly in view of the disclosures made by the Government supporters from Calgary and Kingston, I do not think it would be going too far, in fact I think we would only be discharging our first duty, if we asked that in the definition of the word 'contractors' there should also be included the Northern Construction Company. As I understand it, that company is practically Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann. The company has done an enormous amount of work, if my information be correct, and I submit it is the business of Parliament, now that these resolutions have reached the committee, to throw around this agreement all the safeguards that we can possibly avail ourselves of. I do not think, even if the information asked for by the hon. member for Pictou and that asked by the hon. member for Carleton be granted, we will be going too far in asking that the definition of this word should include the Northern Construction Company also.

Mr. BORDEN: I think the hon. gentleman is mistaken about the Northern Construction Company, because I am informed that neither Sir William Mackenzie nor Sir Donald Mann has the slightest interest in that company, directly or indirectly; in fact, if I remember correctly, I read a declaration from the persons who are the officers of that company—

Mr. CARVELL: That they had not received any profits from it.

Mr. BORDEN: That they had no interest in it whatever, either direct or indirect. That is my recollection.

Mr. CARVELL: I have a great deal of faith in the proposition I am placing before the House. I think it is a very material contention. It has been stated here a great many times by my friends opposite that the Canadian Northern system has reached the point where it is compelled to get assistance from some person, and the only person from whom it can obtain assistance is the Government of Canada. That seems to be admitted by all hon. gentlemen opposite, and I think there is no question about it. They have, as has been stated, received nearly $244,000,000 of money from somebody, and they say it has all gone into the system. They say it will take about another $100,000,000 to complete the system, and that they have $58,000,000 of good assets available once we furnish the $58,000,000 to make it liquid, and then all the rest of their assets will become saleable and the country will never lose a dollar; everything will be taken care of, and our $40,000,000 will become one of the greatest assets of Canada. If our friends have such faith as this, and if Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann have such faith, it cannot do any harm to include them in the definition of the word 'contractors' and make them personally responsible, not for the completion of the road but for the loans now secured and also the loans from the banks. I would like to have these gentlemen become personally responsible that these loans will be taken care of. In order to place the matter before the committee in concrete form, I would move:

That the definition of contractors be amended by adding thereto the words 'Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald D. Mann.'

Mr. GERMAN: I have taken the ground in the few words I have said on this matter, that Mackenzie and Mann, to the extent of their financial ability, be it more or less, should go in behind this undertaking with their own personal means. It is their undertaking; we have put up most of the money but still the majority of it remains their undertaking. I think we are not asking too much in insisting that they, as practical owners of this concern, put in their personal obligation with ours; and believing that to be only fair to the people of Canada, I am prepared to vote for this amendment.

Mr. BORDEN: When the hon. gentleman suggests that Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann have not pledged their personal credit in connection with this enterprise, he is absolutely misinformed. Anything that might be called the working capital in connection with the construction of this road, and this amounts to a great many million dollars, has been raised, as I understand, not only by Mackenzie and Mann, Limited, but, in many cases, upon the individual credit of Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann.

Mr. GERMAN: Not a dollar on their individual credit.

Mr. BORDEN: I can only say that my information does not correspond with that of my hon. friend.

Mr. CARVELL: Will the Prime Minister be good enough to point out in the records placed before us where either gentleman is responsible for a dollar?

Mr. BORDEN: Will the hon. member point out anything in the record that is against that? I was dealing with a statement made by the hon. member for South Renfrew who has stated, and a great many hon. gentlemen in this House have asserted the same thing, that the position of Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann differed from the position of those who came to Parliament in 1884, in that these men had pledged their individual credit in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway enterprise, while Sir William Mackenzie and Sir Donald Mann have not done so. I say I am perfectly satisfied that that statement is not accurate, and that the working capital for the construction of this road, running into many millions of dollars, has been provided in the way suggested, and we know that ten and a half million dollars, representing half the contractors' claims outstanding, has been raised and provided for. Mackenzie and Mann, Limited, in connection with this agreement, propose to give security to the satisfaction of the Government in respect of what are called the temporary loans and the floating indebtedness. We realize that Mackenzie and Mann must pledge their own assets to a certain extent; indeed, to a very large extent and we have provided by this agreement that they shall do that. In addition to that, we have insisted that Mackenzie and Mann shall risk everything in this enterprise in this respect: that every dollar which otherwise they might have been able to claim against this company in the way of commission or agency work, covering a period of a great many years, shall be absolutely released, and I have no doubt whatever, as I have said in this House before, that that claim would have run into many millions of dollars. So, under the circumstances, I do not think it is a fair case to say that their individual and personal credit has not been pledged. I maintain that it has been pledged, and that the construction of this road could not have been carried on unless it had been pledged to a very large extent indeed.

Mr. LEMIEUX: This is a very important feature of the case. On the one hand we have the statement of the right hon. Prime Minister that Mackenzie and Mann have pledged their credit individually, and on the other hand the statements of members on both sides of the House that they have not pledged their credit, individually. Is this not a case calling for some little investigation? If it be true, as has been said, that Mackenzie and Mann individually are deeply interested in enterprises in Mexico, Brazil, in townsites in Montreal, and in traction companies in the cities of Winnipeg, Toronto, and Vancouver, I say that they should put up something as security themselves. Personally, I do not know whether these are facts, but the statement has been made over and over again by the hon. member for Calgary, the hon. member for Kingston, and other members. Why should we not have an investigation to find out if they really are the possessors of such large incomes? For my part, if I knew that Mackenzie and Mann had practically nothing outside of their interests in the Canadian Northern railway I would certainly alter my mind in regard to these resolutions, but I am morally convinced that one of these gentlemen at least is a multi-millionaire, as was stated by the hon. member for Calgary. In these hard times when money is so scarce, and there is so much unemployed, I say it is not becoming on the part of the Government to take all the chances and all the responsibilities, and to allow these multi-millionaires to reap all the benefits.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is really inspiring to hear the hon. member for Rouville, now that he is a private member, dilate on multi-millionaires and the necessity of getting their covenants in railway undertakings. It has been the policy of Canada ever since there was a Canada to consider railway undertakings as public utilities in which the people as a people are interested, as well as merely business undertakings in which those engaged in them are interested. As a consequence of that, the policy of this country has been to assist railway undertakings. The Canadian Pacific has been assisted by subsidies, and the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Northern railway have been assisted by subsidies and by guarantees. When was it first promulgated by the Liberal party or by the hon. member for Rouville that these railway companies should not be assisted by subsidies or by guarantees unless they were owned by men who had absolutely no other possessions whatever outside the railway company? That doctrine has never been pronounced until to-night. Before a railway company got assistance from the late Government I presume an inquiry was held to see that the stockholders of that company did not possess a dollar beyond their stock in the company. Was that the policy of the late Government? If not, his argument cannot possibly stand.

Mr. LEMIEUX: It is not a parallel case.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There is nothing parallel now.

Mr. MACDONALD: Why do you not discuss the agreement.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I know my hon. friend likes to get away from his votes when he was on the Government side of the House. The question before the committee is this:

what is fair and reasonable under the circumstances? And in discussing what is fair and reasonable and the bona fides of hon. gentlemen opposite, it is not out of the way to remind them that three years ago Mackenzie and Mann, as owners of the Canadian Northern Ontario railway, were before this House and got the approval of hon. gentlemen opposite, and of the hon. member for Rouville as a member of the Government, to a bond guarantee of $35,000,000 and that Government never inquired whether Mackenzie and Mann had put their own money into the road. If they were wealthy men at that time—and I presume they had investments in Mexico and South America then—why did the Government of that day not insist that they put up those investments before they called on the Government of this country for a guarantee? Why did gentlemen opposite not take a chase around the universe to see if Mackenzie and Mann owned a horse in one continent and stock in another, before they came to their assistance in 1911?

Mr. GRAHAM: Does not my hon. friend see a difference? In 1911, the country got a first mortgage as security, and in 1914 it is getting practically no security.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Why, then, did the country have to pledge its credit at all in 1911. If the company was solid in 1911, why could they not go to the money markets for their money? If the doctrine is good now it was good then. Mackenzie and Mann got a bond guarantee from the late Government in 1911, and the hon. member for South Renfrew did not inquire what they had outside the railway.

Mr. GRAHAM: They gave us a first mortgage, which you have not got.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. member for South Renfrew takes this position, that any one who offers the Parliament of Canada a first mortgage will get the aid he requires.

Mr. GRAHAM: Not at all.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The question is, what is fair and proper between the public and the promoters? What have we done in this case? We have heard a great deal of the private property pledged by the owners of the Canadian Pacific railway. I hold no brief for Mackenzie and Mann nor for the Canadian Northern railway. We are the trustees of the people of Canada and the conduct of these gentlemen only comes in question so far as it relates to the merits of this Bill and of the Government's proposal. I say I believe it will be found that what Mackenzie and Mann have pledged of their own assets, not derived from the Canadian Northern railway in any way, towards the success of the Canadian Northern railway transcends, and far transcends, what was pledged by the promoters of the Canadian Pacific railway.

Mr. PARDEE: What have they pledged?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. member is very anxious to know what they have pledged. They have pledged 4,102,000 acres of land.

Mr. GERMAN: Which never belonged to them.

Mr. CARVELL: What was it given to them for?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. member for Welland says it never belonged to Mackenzie and Mann, and the hon. member for Carleton asks me why the land was given. I cannot answer both at once.

Mr. GERMAN: Answer one at a time.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Mackenzie and Mann took over the charters of three railway companies, and upon completing the works called for by those charters were entitled, by the law that gave the charters, to the land grants. They completed the work and became the owners of the land grants for completing the work, they turned over these land grants to the Canadian Northern and when the Canadian Northern Railway Company was formed as a company the lands were granted to the Canadian Northern Railway Company. But the grants that went with the charters went with the completion of the railways, they completed the railways and therefore were entitled to the lands. Does my hon. friend say that there was no legal title to these lands, that they did not earn them?

Mr. CARVELL: I would like to ask my hon. friend a question.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am asking my hon. friend to answer mine.

Mr. CARVELL: Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Not now; answer mine first.

Mr. CARVELL: I say they are not entitled to the land. Now, will my hon. friend allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Now, we will follow that up.

Mr. CARVELL: I have answered my hon. friend's question; will he allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I will allow the hon. gentleman to ask me a question when I come to it and I will not do what he did yesterday—promise to come to it and never get there. My hon. friend says that they were not entitled to it, that they never were in a position to make title to those 4,102,000 acres of land. Let me ask him how is it that they have made title to these 100,000 acres of land of which they own part to-day and have sold part, the titles to which have never been questioned.

Mr. CARVELL: Go on.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Now, I am ready for my hon. friend's question.

Mr. CARVELL: I am very much obliged to my hon. friend the Solicitor General, I am sure. The question I want to ask him is if there were not securities upon these roads when they got them and if the Government or the Canadian Northern Railway Company is not responsible to-day to pay these securities.

Mr. MEIGHEN: On the roads?

Mr. CARVELL: Certainly, on the roads. My hon. friend says that Mackenzie and Mann bought certain roads in Manitoba that carried a land grant. They got the land grant and they were not bound to give it over to the system. We have their mortgages and bonds on these roads, they are there to-day, they have to be paid and I would ask my hon. friend, is not the Canadian Northern system liable to pay them?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I did not say that they bought the roads, but I did say that they bought the charters to build the roads and that when they built the roads they became entitled to the land grant.

Mr. CARVELL: We have to pay the securities.

Mr. GERMAN: They built the roads out of the money derived from the sale of the land.

Mr. MEIGHEN: How is it then that the Canadian Northern got the land?

Mr. CARVELL: Are the mortgages on the roads then?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Certainly, these parts became parts of the Canadian Northern and are subject to all the mortgages on the Canadian Northern.

Mr. CARVELL: Why should not the land go to pay the mortgages?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Because the men who built the road were entitled to the land for building them. They built them and earned the land in the same way as the hon. gentleman would earn his fee in a legal case. If they did not earn them they could not give titles to them. They did give titles to them to the Prairie Land Company to whom they had transferred about 50,000 acres. Consequently, they were the owners of the 4,102,000 acres and they turned them in. I will give my hon. friend a very similar instance that will bring the matter abruptly to his mind. The Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railway Company also had a land grant which they got to construct the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan. The promoters of the road were entitled to the land grant for the construction of the road. They constructed the road and earned the land grant. An hon. member on the other side of the House was one of those promoters and they became interested in that land grant, transferring the road and did not transfer the land grant.

Mr. CARVELL: And another hon. gentleman on the other side of the House.

Mr. MEIGHEN: And another hon. gentleman on this side. They were doing what they were perfectly entitled to do, because they were the owners of the land grant as they were the owners of the road, subject to whatever was against the road. Does the hon. gentleman say that his colleague on that side of the House did something dishonourable when he disposed of his own property in the shape of the land which he had earned? Then why does he say that these gentlemen are doing something which they are not justified in doing?

Mr. CARVELL: I did not expect my hon. friend the Solicitor General to get into such a heat as he has over this matter.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. CARVELL: I thought we were putting up a very fair business proposition, and it is such a good business proposition that my hon. friend cannot answer it without getting ugly over it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I did not get ugly.

Mr. CARVELL: Your manner belied you, then.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I might have looked it.

Mr. CARVELL: Yes, you looked it. There is no parallel between this case and that of the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railway Company. Twenty years ago that road was sold but the land did not go with the road. Mackenzie and Mann saw fit to buy that road seven or eight years ago, and they bought it without the land. If they had got the land with it they would have had a more valuable asset.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is not the question. How did the men who got the land manage to get it?

Mr. CARVELL: I will come to that. Seven or eight years ago the Canadian Northern, or Mackenzie and Mann, bought that road. They did not buy the land with it, but they bought the road with a mortgage against it, and we are going to pay the mortgage. It is a pity we did not get the right to the land with it. But Mackenzie and Mann never owned this land, and were never in a position to sell it or to hand it over to the Government. If Mackenzie and Mann had any land with reference to other roads it was because they built the roads and got the land grants. They mortgaged the roads, and the mortgages are on these roads to-day. They are handing over to the Government these mortgages so that the Government will be responsible for the payment of them. I did not think my hon. friend would commence hair splitting so early in the game. My hon. friend tries to draw a distinction between holding a title and the word 'entitle.' He asked me if they were entitled to this land and I said 'no,' and then he asked me, in order to make a legal quibble, how they got this hundred thousand acres of land if they had not a title to it. I want to give my hon. friend a little advice—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. CARVELL: My hon. friend will get these resolutions through a great deal easier by meeting us in a bigger and broader manner than by trying to draw these hair-splitting distinctions between a legal title and the question whether they are entitled to these lands. Let us try and get back now to the point at issue and talk business.

[Mr. Carvell.]

Mr. STEVENS: Exercise a little common courtesy yourself.

Mr. CARVELL: I think my hon. friend had better get out and look after his Hindus that are landing in Vancouver. He has got all that he can attend to, and he has got his work cut out looking after the Hindus who are landing. If I want any advice from him, I will ask him for it.

Mr. STEVENS: Our Hindus are equal to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. CARVELL: I am sorry I cannot return the compliment. Now, we will leave him out of the question. I would like to come back to the amendment we have moved, because after all that is the important thing? Why do the Solicitor General and the leader of the House object to Mackenzie and Mann personally becoming responsible to pay these debts?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I was getting to it.

Mr. CARVELL: The Solicitor General could not get to the South Pole by travelling north. There must be some reason why they object to Mackenzie and Mann giving personal guarantees. I want the Solicitor General to point out where in these resolutions is there any statement that Mackenzie and Mann will become personally responsible for anything. There is not a word anywhere to that effect. The only inference is that Mackenzie and Mann would not become personally responsible, and the Government did not intend to ask them to do so. If the Government is sincere, and if Mackenzie and Mann are sincere, they ought not to be afraid to become responsible for the payment of the debts. If these securities, which are now pledged as collateral for these debts will not pay them, then as a matter of justice Mackenzie and Mann ought to be compelled to pay them, and if they have not sufficient property to pay off this debt, it is their misfortune and the country will have to become responsible. That is the whole issue.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I was in the middle of a speech which it will not be necessary for me to finish now; I was setting out to show that Mackenzie and Mann had contributed a great deal to this enterprise, but I will not need to pursue the matter further because I see the anxiety of the hon. member (Mr. Carvell) to switch off that subject. I do feel it is due to the completeness of the little incident we had, that I recall the comparison between the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Company, and say, the Manitoba and Southeastern Company. In the case of the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Company, the promoters bonded the road to build it, which they were entitled to do, and got the land grant for building it, which they were entitled to have. In the case of the Manitoba and Southeastern Company they did exactly the same thing. In the case though of the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan, the promoters retained the land grant and sold the road so bonded, as they were entitled to do.

Mr. CARVELL: To Mackenzie and Mann.

Mr. MEIGHEN: They sold it later on to Mackenzie and Mann. They sold the road so bonded and retained for themselves the land grant, and that is exactly what Mackenzie and Mann could have done in the case of the Manitoba and Southeastern. In the case of the Winnipeg and Hudson bay; in the case of the Lake Manitoba Railway and Canal Company, they could have done exactly what the promoters did in the case of the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan, and no one could have criticised them for it, as no one could criticise the promoters of the Qu'Appelle Long Lake and Saskatchewan. What did these latter promoters do? They retained for themselves the land grant and consequently Mackenzie, Mann and Company could have retained for themselves the land grants in these other roads. The cases were on all fours all through their history. I only set out to show that Mackenzie, Mann and Company were entitled to these lands, and they were entitled to hold them and make title for them. They were in a position to sell them and they did so to the extent of 100,000 acres, and the rest of the land grant and the right to the land was transferred to the Canadian Northern. Who will say that that was not a transfer of the property of Mackenzie, Mann and Company to the Canadian Northern. If to-day the promoters of the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan railway were to take their land grant, if they own it, and transfer it to the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan would the hon. member for Carleton say they did not transfer any of their own property to that railroad; would he say they had never put a dollar in the enterprise? Would the hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. Graham) say: hear, hear, when the hon. member (Mr. Carvell) uttered such words? I do not think so. We do not need to go any further on the matter of the land grant.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Who brought it in?

Mr. MEIGHEN: It has been brought in all week; hardly an hon. gentleman opposite spoke who did not assert, and reassert, and reiterate, that Mackenzie and Mann had never put a dollar in the road.

Mr. GRAHAM: I never said so.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. Graham) did not, and he is to be honoured for it. He knew better, but he heard those behind him say it.

Mr. GERMAN: Those behind him expressed the truth.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It will hardly be argued that we have no security on the townsites which were the property of Mackenzie, Mann and Company as their own, but I do not wish to dilate on it at this late hour. It was not my desire to be controversial, and I know I was not ugly, but it was my desire to try and do some little fairness to the men who had done something for this road.

Amendment (Mr. Carvell) negatived.

On the motion of Mr. Pelletier that the committee report progress:

Mr. MACDONALD: It is understood that the particular item we were on still stands.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, subject to the loss of the amendment.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Pelletier, the House adjourned at 11.58 p.m.

INDEX

THIRD SESSION—TWELFTH PARLIAMENT, 1914.

Abbreviations:—1r., 2r., 3r.=first, second, or third reading. Amdt.=Amendment. Com.=Committee. Con.=Consideration. Div.=Division. M.=Motion. Rep.=Report. Res.=Resolution. Sec.=Section.

Acme-Carbon mails, 2687.

Address to H.R.H. the Governor General, on departure from Canada, 5275.

Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 4, 49, 94, 127, 167, 202, 259, 285.
Amendments proposed: Sir Wilfrid Laurier, 22; Mr. Neely, 267.

Adulteration Act Amendment Bill. 1r., 1433. 2r., 2388. Com., 3362. 3r., 3362.

Advertising, fraudulent. See Criminal Code Amendment Bill.

Aerial navigation, 2972.

Agricultural implements
Duties on: m., Mr. Knowles, 1548; div., 1602.
Extent of industry, 572.
Rebate on raw material, 1360.
Tariff on, 3140.
Valuation for duty, 2958.

Agriculture
Department
Employees, 341, 363.
Entomology, division of, 1130.
Estimates, 341, 1098-1111, 1130-1163, 1670-1688, 2370, 3487-3504.
Encouragement of, 6, 8, 76, 81, 84, 109, 171, 179, 225, 292, 301, 303, 358, 809, 1143-1162, 2956.
Experimental farms, 1098, 1135, 1154, 2370, 3487.
Gazette, 1098, 1161, 1670.
Insect pests, 1130, 1155.
Kentville, tuberculous cattle at, 4559.
Quebec, in, 1143, 1148-1152, 1156-1160, 1162, 1676.

Aikins, Mr. James A. M. (Brandon)
Budget, 2645.
Transportation, 2646.
Wheat markets, 2648.
Agricultural implements, 2651.
National Policy, 2652.
Railway subsidies, 2654.
Trade of the West, 2656.
Dominion lands, 201, 3321.
Hudson Bay terminals, 683.
Senate representation, 1496.

Alaska-Yukon railway, 1433.

Alberta
Internal elevators, 473, 572.
Irrigation, 1605.
Natural gas, 357.
Rural mail, 817.

Alcohol, tariff on, 3106.

Aldershot camp, 1435.

Alert, steamer, 308, 325, 423-429, 474, 669.

Alexander post office, 2960.

Alguire, Mr. D. O. (Stormont)
Old age pensions, 1352.

Alpine club of Canada, 4155.

Aluminum leaf, tariff on, 3132.

Ames, Mr. Herbert B. (Montreal, St. Antoine)
Budget, 2501.
Trade outlook, 2501.
Revenue and expenditures, 2503.
Debt of Canada, 2504.
Temporary loans, 2507.
Tariff revision, 2508.
Canadian Northern Railway, 3725.

Amherst armoury, 3714, 4293.

Animals, health of, 3173.

Annapolis county mails, 345.

Antigonish
Customs collector, 3860, 3893.
Food inspector, 666.
Immigration agents, 573, 5210
Mail service, 572
Public works, 5227.

Arcadia rural mails, 701.

Archives, 720, 740, 1769. See also Records.

Armouries, 666, 702, 1890, 1902, 4204, 4576, See also Militia Estimates.

Armstrong, Mr. J. A. Macdonald (North York)
Budget, 2592.
Agricultural implements, 2595.
Senate reform, 2595.
Free wheat, 2596.
Privilege, 3114.

Armstrong, Mr. Joseph E. (East Lambton)
Canadian Northern Railway, 3904.
Militia, 4586.
National Transcontinental Railway investigation, 2132.
Prudential Life of Canada, 2902.
Public buildings, 1900.

Armstrong. J. H., dismissal of, 2179.

Arthabaska public works, 1114. See also Drummond.

Art. See National Gallery.

Arthurs, Mr. James (Parry Sound)
Explosives, regulation of, 3869.
Georgian Bay Canal, 2969.
Indian reserves, 3546.
Iron and steel industry, 1519, 3213.
Timber licenses, 5025.

Asiatic trade, 887, 5035.

L'Assurance de Rimouski, 3894.

Astronomical surveys, 4155.

Athabaska Landing-Fort McMurray telegraph, 354.

Atlantic fishing disaster, 5194.

Atlantic, Quebec and Western Railway, 892.

Auditor General, office of, 723.

Aurora Menace, 2310, 3056, 3236.

Automobile lamp lenses, tariff on, 3133.

Avignon post office, 818.

Bad Throat river water powers, 1913.

Bagot county rural mails, 1694.

Baie des Chaleurs Railway, 358.

Baie St. Paul mails, 1819, 1914, 3058, 4368.

Ball, Mr. R. J. (S. Grey)
Brodeur, Hon. L. P., trips of, 1112.

Bank failures, 3199, 3208, 3860, 3894. See also Farmers Bank.

Bank rates of interest, 5199.

Banks and Banking. See Loan Companies and Trust Companies.

Banque Internationale, 4712, 4753.

Barnard, Mr. Geo. H. (Victoria, B.C.)
Asiatic immigration, 1250.
Divorce reform, 837.

Barrette, Mr. J. A. (Berthier)
Banks and banking, 3894.

Barriefield camp, 3714.

Basic slag, duty on, 444, 511, 630.
Amendment proposed: Mr. Emmerson, 638.

Bassano post office, 472.

Bathurst
Harbour, 348, 4212, 4295.
Public works, 348.

Battlefields, historic, 4183. See also Quebec.

Bear River wharf, 2013.

Beattie, Mr. Thomas (London)
London and Port Stanley Railway Company, 1416.

Beaubien homestead, 1842, 3331-3346.

Beauce rural mails, 1690.

Bedford public building, 2045.

Beland, Hon. H. S. (Beauce)
Agricultural implement duties, 1586.
Agriculture estimates, 1148.
Beauce rural mails, 1690.
Coal resources, 1806.
Franking privilege, 3224.
House of Commons representation, 5316.
Immigration, 1617, 1624.
Inland Revenue estimates, 1377.
Rimouski Insurance Company, 4713, 4807.

Bennett, Mr. R. B. (Calgary)
Advertising, fraudulent, 3469.
Boy scouts, 4132.
Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company, 796.
Canadian Northern Railway, 3734.
Naturalization, 4133.

Bennett, Mr. Wm. H. (East Simcoe)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Pig-iron industry, 230.
Transportation, 233.
Bounties on steel, 1516.
House of Commons accomodation, 4199.
National Transcontinental Railway investigation, 2321.
Post office employees, 2379.
Transportation, 951, 2978.

Bergeron, J. C., payments to, 368.

Best, Mr. John A. (Dufferin)
Lemieux, Hon. R., trips of, 698.
Privilege, 3114.
Tariff, 3062.

Bickerdike, Mr. Robert (Montreal, St. Lawrence)
Death penalty, 4, 483, 4516.
Immigration, 1638.
Judges' salaries, 3611.
Pilotage, 3624, 5069.
Prison reform, 4514.

Biggar, Col. J. L., trip to Europe of, 1217.

Binder twine. See Inspection and Sale Act.

Biological Board, 2434.

Bishop, A., employment of, 3208.

Bisley and Canadian team, 512, 1215.

Black Cape post office, 703, 2178.

Blain, Mr. Richard (Peel)
Dismissals, 1201.
Farmers Bank, 4895.
Public tenders, 1205.

Blood Reserve grazing lease, 357.

Blue-books, translation of, 2436.

Boar's Head fog alarm. 2787.

Boivin, Mr. Geo. H. (Shefford)
Agriculture department employees, 363
Budget, 2891
Agricultural implements, 2894.
Free food, 2895.
Canadian Northern Railway, 3717, 4054
Dismissals, 1405.
Eastern Townships diseased cattle, 263.
Fenian raid veterans, 349, 440.
Granby post office, 363, 697.
Inland Revenue estimates, 1371, 1405.
Judges' salaries, 3605.
Newport Customs employees, 890, 1021, 1332.
Post offices in Eastern Townships, 3647.
Riendeau, S., employment of, 1114.
Shefford county rural mail, 363.
Tariff, 3152, 3157.

Bonaventure
Experimental farm, 357.
Indian reserves, 2544.
Mails, 1692, 2178.
Public works, 892, 1360.

Borden, Rt. Hon. R. L. (Prime Minister)
Address to H.R.H. the Governor General, 5275.
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Delay in meeting of Parliament, 22.
Solicitor Generalship, 22.
Highways improvement, 23.
Senate, 24.
Naval defence, 25.
Quebec terminals, 29.
Cost of living, 29.
Agricultural implement duties, 1558
Atlantic mail service, 5062.
British Columbia Better Terms Commission, 2372, 4628, 4997.
Brooke, Mrs. M. J., pension of, 4964.
Canadian Northern Railway Aid Bill, 3650, 4009, 4025-4089, 4221-4281, 4300-4334, 4376, 4399, 4452, 4548. See also 3252, 3319, 3397, 3453, 3573.
Canadian Pacific Railway and Austrian emigration, 899.
Canadian Peace Centenary Association, 970, 4961.
Charlottetown Confederation Convention, 4960.

Borden, Rt. Hon. R. L.—Con.
Cigarettes, prohibition of, 1478.
Colpitts, Mr., case of, 454.
Confederation, semi-centennial of, 1450.
Conservation Commission, 718.
Divorce
Procedure in parliament, 4882.
Reform, 838.
Dry docks subsidies, 4095.
Electoral corruption, 918.
Empress of Ireland, loss of, 4433, 4552, 4554, 4555. 4628, 4716, 4879, 4894, 4954, 5230.
Explosives, manufacture of, 1810.
Farmers Bank, 4802.
Fenian raid veterans, 4359.
Fishing disaster—appeal for government aid, 5196.
Fuller, Mrs. M. E., pension of, 4998.
Goodwin, Geo., return of deposit to, 2371.
Grand Trunk Pacific bond guarantee, 4831, 4929.
High Commissioner's office, 311.
Hindu immigration, 4295, 4369, 4566.
House of Commons
Business of the House, 1606, 3197.
Debates, French translation of, 5271.
Deputy Speaker, office of, 1365.
Easter adjournment, 2311.
Morning sittings, 2788, 3210, 3310.
Questions and answers, 880.
Representation, See that title.
Saturday sittings, 3784.
Wednesday sittings, 1264.
Imperial Press Conference, 4961.
Indian Act Amendment, 3482, 3540, 3550.
Intercolonial Railway
Canadian Pacific Railway traffic agreement, 594.
Management, 3286.
Suburban trains, 1065.
International Waterways Commission, 1163, 1396, 1483, 4962.
Irrigation Act Amendment, 3485.
Labour conditions
Unemployment, 5032.
Vancouver Island, 1325.
Western, 3892.
Labrador coast line, 2954.
Life-saving rewards, 5177.
Militia and religious processions, 5375.
Monk, Hon. F. D., death of, 3785.
Mounted police, 310, 708-718, 4963.
National Council of Women, 2948.
National Transcontinental Railway
Commission, 4838.
Investigation, 2353.
Management, 5099.
Montreal, connection with, 5128.
Naturalization, 4813.
Natural resources, provincial control of, 1069.
Naval service, 5157.
Navigable waters, pollution of, 1742.

Borden, Rt. Hon. R. L.—Con.

Newfoundland shipping disaster, 2517, 2995.
Newspaper reports of caucus, 1871.
Paris government office, 4966.
Parliamentary procedure
Answers of length, 1061.
Commons admendments to Senate amendments, 5034.
Privilege, basing on newspaper statements, 1121.
Returns and private papers, 4958.
Supply, Committee of, without notice, 307.
Thursday sittings and Government precedence, 696, 706, 708, 721.
Petroleum, export of, 971, 1758, 3463.
Pollution of navigable waters, 1742.
Postal rates to Britain, 3235.
Quebec Battlefields Commission, 3891, 4117.
Railway Act Amendment, 2947.
Records Departmental Commission, 4963.
Representation in the House of Commons, 611, 620, 795, 842, 866, 927, 5306, 5324, 5352, 5364.
St. John Valley railway bridges, 3883, 3959, 4024.
San Francisco exposition, 3255.
Senate representation, 1483, 1911, 3513, 5277, 5296.
Strathcona, Lord, death of, 91.
Tariff, 4432.
Tate, W., claim of, 4967.
Transatlantic mail service, 594.
Unemployed in Montreal, 3176.
Vincent, J. U., appointment of, 1410.

Borden, Sir Frederick, trips of, 570.

Boulay, Mr. H. (Rimouski)
Agriculture, encouragement of, 358, 1111, 1149.
Canada and Gulf Railway, 1022.
Clement, Hon. Justice, 2263, 2367.
Dismissals, 969, 1426.
Farmers Bank, 4896.
French guides for museums, 1816.
Immigration, 1620.
Intercolonial Railway
Appointments of chiefs, 471.
Branch lines, 5126.
Employees' wages, 471, 1016.
Management of, 3311, 4947.
Tie contracts, 1331.
Judges' salaries, 1938.
Marine signals, improvement of, 5182.
Militia, 4596.
National Transcontinental Railway stations, 1604.
Naturalization, 4818.
Naval service, 334, 346. 5173.
Ottawa as a federal district, 1889.
Pedley, F., resignation of, 817.
Pilotage, 3629.
Railway Commission, 2437.
Rimouski land purchase, 1695.

Boulay, Mr. H.—Con.

Sessional messengers, 704.
Smuggling, alleged, 1782.
Trade commissioners, 888.
Vineberg, Helen, divorce Bill, 4880.

Bounties on steel. See Steel.

Bourassa, Mr. J. Boutin (Lévis)
Carrier machine shops, 1819, 2961.
Dismissals, 4369, 5028.
Fenian raid veterans, 1022.
Intercolonial Railway
Double tracking, 4558.
Fire claims, 5029.
'Safety First' engineer, 2262.
Investigations into political partisanship, 2308.
Larose, Wilfrid, 1818.
Lauzon postmaster, 5029.
Lévis
Experimental farm, 369.
Rural mail, 369.
Mail bag locks, 701.
National Transcontinental Railway Quebec terminals, 2177.
Ontario Fire Insurance Co., 4295.
St. Romuald post office, 809, 4021.

Boy Scouts, 4131, 5002.

Boyce, Mr. A. C. (West Algoma)
Electoral corruption, 914.
National Transcontinental Railway investigation, 2180.
Prudential Life of Canada, 2900.
Vineberg, Helen, divorce Bill, 4881.
Wagner, Philip, 1184.

Boyer, Mr. Gustave (Vaudreuil)
Agriculture, aid to, 809.

Boyer, Mr. A. G.—Con.
Bergeron, J. C., payments to, 368.
Butter manufacture, 2385.
Chevrier et Frères, payments to, 368.
Graham wharf, 443.
Intercolonial Railway lumber purchase, 894.
Ottawa river lightkeepers, 574.
Point Fortune wharf, 3398.
Quebec seigniories, 568.
Rigaud
Post office, 442, 3638, 4021.
Wharf, 442.
Wharfs, revenue from, 368.

Boys, Mr. W. A. (South Simcoe)
Barcelona Light and Power Company, 1911, 1981.
W. C. Edwards Company, 3474.

Bradbury, Mr. George H. (Selkirk)
Butter manufacture, 3164.
Central Western Canada Railway Company, 806.
Cold storage, 3568.
Dismissals, 1199.

Bradbury, Mr. Geo. H.—Con.

Fenian raid veterans, 5001.
Indians, 3483, 3545.
Ottawa public buildings, 1878.
Pollution of navigable waters, 1745, 2013.
Tariff, 3124.
Winnipeg-Gimli train service, 4629.

Brantford public building, 817, 871, 5218.

British Columbia-Alaska Railway, proposed, 1870.

Bristol, Mr. Edward (Toronto Centre)
Better Terms Commission, 359, 2372, 4628, 4997.
Canadian Northern Railway, 3787, 4254.

Broder, Mr. Andrew (Dundas)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Naval defence, 177.
Highways improvement, 177.
Cost of living, 178.
Agriculture, aid to, 179.
Cigarettes, prohibition of, 1473.

Brodeur, Hon. L. P., trips of, 1112.

Brome rural mail service, 703.

Brooks, Mrs. M. J., pension of, 4964.

Brouillard, Mr. Ovide (Drummond and Arthabaska)
Arthabaska public works, 1114.
Dismissals, 1023.
Drummond and Arthabaska post offices, 1019.
Le Present printing contracts, 1534.
Newspaper advertising, 1781.
Rimouski government employees, 4021.

Buchanan, Mr. William A. (Medicine Hat)
Acme-Carbon mails, 2687.
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Free wheat, 304.
Transportation, 304.
Agricultural implement duties, 1585.
Alberta
Internal elevators, 473, 572, 1216.
Irrigation, 1605.
Natural gas, 357.
Rural mail, 817.
Bassano post office, 472.
Blood Reserve grazing lease, 357.
Budget, 2660.
Freight rates, 2660.
Tariff, 2661.
Free wheat, 2663.
Agricultural implements, 2665.
Immigration, 2667.
Burns grazing lease, 2591.
Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company, 766.
Canadian Northern Railway, 3948, 4424.
Canadian Pacific Railway irrigated lands, 2785.
Central Western Canada Railway Company, 804.

Buchanan, Mr. Wm.—Con.

Coal lands, 365.
Coutts customs officer, 436.
Dominion lands, 3320.
Glencurrie post office, 4561.
Grain elevators, 1647.
Homesteaders' pre-emptions. 357.
Irrigation, 574, 3596.
Labour disputes, 545.
Natural resources, provincial control of, 1067.
Newspapers, postal rates on, 3238.
Ottawa building leases, 2544.
Railway Commissioners' superannuation, 574.
Ranching Commission, 574.
Rural post office libraries, 892.

Budget, 2440, 2482, 2520, 2547, 2592, 2639, 2690, 2734, 2789, 2841.
Amendment proposed: Sir Wilfrid Laurier, 2849; div., 2898.

Buffalo herd, 4155.

Bureau, Mr. Jacques (Three Rivers and St Maurice)
Cap de la Madeleine wharf, 2959.
Grandmère buildings, 2688.
Ice breaking, 409.
Inland Revenue estimates, 1372.
Judges' salaries, 1932, 3604.
Naval service, 5167.
Penitentiaries estimates, 62368.
Post office estimates, 3647.
St. Maurice boom service, 2688.
St. Maurice Shawinigan public works. 5194.
Three Rivers
Camp, 3509.
Dismissals, 818.
Postal district, 5129.
Post office, 2688.
Preventive officer, 473.
Public buildings, 569.

Burnham, Mr. John H. (Peterborough West)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Naval defence, 46.
Cost of living, 47.
Highways improvement, 48.
Asiatic immigration, 1251.
Battlefields, preservation of, 4118.
Boy scouts, 4132.
Budget, 2629.
Protection and free trade, 2630.
Labour conditions, 2635.
Butter manufacture, 3163.
Canadian Northern Railway, 2262, 2591 3967.
Cigarettes, prohibition of, 1475.
Criminal Code and moral law, 3480.
Divorce reform, 827.
Elections Act Amendment, 478.
Electoral corruption, 907.
Farmers Bank, 3529.
Fisheries of Ontario, 1827, 1916.

Burnham, Mr. John.—Con.
Georgian Bay canal, 2973.
High Commissioner's office, 1768.
Immigration, 1618.
Judges' salaries, 1937.
Naturalization, 4532, 4544.
Ocean transportation, 2932.
Old age pensions, 1340.
Oriental industrial competition, 4558.
Panama canal rates, 3509.
Privilege, 3058.
Tariff, 1358, 3124.
Titles of honour, 479.
Trade, balance of, adjustment, 2016.
Trent canal, 4940, 4994.
W. C. Edwards Company, 3475.

Burrell, Hon. Martin (Minister of Agriculture)
Agriculture, Department of, estimates, 341, 1098-1111, 1130-1163, 1670-1688, 2370, 3173, 3487-3502.
Agricultural Gazette, 1098, 1104, 1161, 1670.
Animals, health of, 3173.
Butter. See Dairy Products.
Cold storage, 1680, 1752, 3559, 4172.
Cow testing, 1673.
Dairy products regulation, 1678, 1751, 2384, 2387, 3162.
Exhibitions, 1684.
Experimental farms, 1098, 1109, 1154, 2370, 3493.
Food products, inspection of, 1672, 1679, 2370.
Fruit inspection, 1674.
Horse breeding, 3493, 3501.
Insect pests, 1130-1133, 1155.
Lévis quarantine station, 1108.
Live stock industry, 3493.
Patent Office, 5200.
Patent Record, 1098.
Patents, renewal of, 1668, 1669, 2948, 3205.
Potatoes, tariff on, 3090.
Quebec, agriculture in, 1677.
Tobacco culture, 1147.

Bury drill hall, 2960.

Butter. See Dairy Products.

Buttons, ivory, tariff on, 3159.

Cable rates, 5246.

Cameron, A. J., Fenian raid bounty commissioner, 2960.

Campbell, Glen, charges against, 622, 1853.

Camperville and Winnipegosis mails, 2686.

Canada and Gulf Railway, 1022.

Canada Grain Act Amendment Bill. Res., 3161. 1r., 3162. 2r., 3573. Com., 3574. 3r., 3861.

Canada Shipping Act Amendment Bills
Coasting privileges: 1r., 90.
Investigations of casualties: 1r., 4552. 2r. and com., 4554. 3r., 4631.

Canada Shipping Act Amendment Bills—Con.
Pilotage: 1r., 3054. 2r., 3621. Com., 3621. 3r., 3631.
Shipping: Res., 1540. 1r., 1540. 2r., 1607.
See also Merchant Shipping.

Canada, Steamship, 2437, 3715.

Canada Temperance Act Amendment Bill. 1r., 3453. 2r., 3588. Com., 3588. 3r., 3717. See also 1760, 2373.

Canadian Northern Railway
Conductors, dismissal of, 2518.
Loan, application for, 1361.
Pacific terminus, 699.
Payments, 345.
Subsidies, 2262, 2591.
Terminals, 2262.

Canadian Northern Railway Aid Bill. Res., 3651, 3717, 3787, 3828, 3896, 3967, 4009, 4025, 4216, 4296, 4323, 4370. 1r., 4426. 2r., 4452. Com., 4525, 4545. Rep., 4551. 3r., 4631, 4675.
Amendments proposed
On res.: Mr. Macdonald, 3833; div., 4008.
In com. on res.: Mr. Carvell, 4014; div., 4019.
On 2r. of res.: Mr. Ross, 4376; div., 4390. Mr. Pugsley, 4391; div., 4413. Mr. Oliver, 4416; div., 4425.
On 3r. of Bill: Sir Wilfrid Laurier, 4634; div., 4663. Mr. Verville, 4664; div., 4674.

Canadian Pacific Railway
Austria, office in, 896.
Irrigated lands, 2785.
Labour award, 2961.
Lachine bridge, 3111.
Toronto-Sudbury line, 1113.
Winnipeg-Gimli train service, 4629.

Canadian Peace Centenary Association, 970, 4961.

Canadians in Mexico, protection of, 2785.

Canals, 365, 1957, 2963, 4162, 5108.

Canning factories, 1605.

Canning public building site, 1899, 4183, 5224.

Canso
Letter boxes, 703.
Reduction works, 1693, 2080.

Cap aux Corbeau wharf, 4293.

Cap de la Madeleine wharf, 2959.

Cape Breton, naturalization in, 1116.

Capital punishment, abolition of, 4, 482, 1731. 4516.

Carbons, tariff on, 3132.

Cardin, Mr. P. J. A. (Richelieu)
St. Joseph de Sorel post office, 572.
Trempe, L. J., employment of, 1434, 1695.

Carleton Centre mails, 1818, 4021.

Carleton Head breakwater, 2178.

Carnations, tariff on, 3043.

Carrick, Mr. J. J. (Thunder Bay and Rainy River)
Canadian Northern Railway, 3811.
Iron and steel industry, 1498.
Rainy River Radial Railway Company, 2950.

Carroll, Mr. W. F. (Cape Breton South)
Alert, steamer, 308, 423.
Biggar, Col. J. L., 1217.
Bridgeport postmaster, dismissal of, 3840.
Budget, 2547
Naval defence, 2548.
Immigration, 2549.
Steel industry, 2551.
Coal industry, 2553.
Cost of living, 2554.
Tariff, 2555.
Labour conditions, 2556.
Canada Temperance Act, 3592.
Canadian Northern Railway, 4027, 4081, 4227, 4667, 4671.
Civil Service, 5373.
Cold storage, 1680, 3565, 4172.
Dismissals, 1171, 3840.
Dry docks, 4092, 4111.
Excise estimates, 1414, 1417.
Explosives, regulation of, 3863.
Fenian raid veterans, 4355, 5000.
Fish and fisheries
Industry, 5275.
Protection, 1794, 1822.
Transportation, 390.
Franklin, B. J., employment of, 5217.
Glace Bay harbour, 4207.
Ice breakers, 402.
Immigration, 1643.
Indians, 3542.
Intercolonial Railway
Appointments, 1113.
Branch lines, 5115.
Management, 3313.
Standard rules, 2957.
Judges' salaries, 1944, 3611.
Labour
Disputes, 532.
Public works, on, 4205, 5202.
Lobster regulations, 5186.
Militia, 4599, 4605.
Mira river steamboat service, 2933, 5038.
Naturalization, 1116, 4139, 4537, 4820.
Naval service, 333.
Old age pensions, 1343.
Ottawa as the Capital, 1884.
Pig iron, drawback on, 3216.
Public buildings in Cape Breton, 1895.
Railway employees—hours of service, 2175.
St. Peter's Indian school, 2479.
Steamboat subsidies, 2933.
Technical education, 5207.

Carroll, Mr. W. F.—Con.
Toronto, Niagara and Western Railway Company, 3476.
Townsend, N. T., resignation of, 2436.
Vancouver Island coal strike, 1276, 4667.
Whitney Pier subcollector of customs, 433.
Winter, Lt.-Col. E. F., employment of, 2840.

Carslake Hotel purchase, 1871, 2436, 4023, 4192.

Carson. See Home Rule.

Carvell, Mr. Frank B. (Carleton, N.B.)
Basic slag, 643.
Bounties on iron and steel, 1520.
Butter manufacture, 2384.
Canadian Northern Railway, 3912, 4011, 4235, 4308, 4525.
Capital punishment, 491.
Carson, Sir Edward, presentation to, 1785.
Dismissals, 1196, 1388, 2424.
Divorce reform, 832.
Dorval land purchase, 1218, 2436.
Dredge Fielding, 2261.
Dredging in New Brunswick, 2078.
Dry docks subsidies, 3961.
Empress of Ireland, loss of, 4556.
Experimental farms, N.B., 1135, 1140, 3489, 3492.
Fenian raid veterans, 3367, 4341.
Fisheries, 786, 1799.
Foundation Co., Ltd., 1876.
Fredericton public works, 705.
Fundy, Bay of, navigation, 165.
Government officials in politics, 436, 1195.
Government Railways Claims Act, 2392.
Government telegraph service, 2375.
House of Comomns Debates, distribution of, 1774.
Indian schools, 2395.
Inland Revenue, appointment of Deputy Minister of, 1411.
Intercolonial Railway—Chatham Junction-Brockville Branch, 4477.
International Horse Show, 2439.
Iron and steel, bounties on, 1520.
Judges' salaries, 3608.
Kelly, W. J., case of, 1696, 1722.
Labour conditions on Vancouver Island, 526, 544, 660, 1288, 1305.
Lévis quarantine, 1218.
Light buoys, 1169.
Marion Bridge-Woodbine mails, 1116.
Militia, 2371, 3412-3440, 4527, 4592, 4620-4628.
Montreal harbourmaster, 4022.
Natonal Transcontinental Railway
Deficit, 1780.
Investigation, 2051.
Operation, 4453, 4455.
Naturalization, 4535, 4537, 4539.
Ottawa
Building leases, 2439, 2519.
Custom house, 2079.
Water supply, 1887.

Carvell, Mr. F. B.—Con.

Patents, renewal of, 2919.
Payne, Stephen, employment of, 1605.
Post Office Department automobile, 3113.
Potatoes, tariff on, 3067, 3085, 3103.
Railway mail clerks, 2381.
St. John
Custom house, 1330.
Harbour, 1331.
Marine service, 1913.
St. John and Quebec Railway, 2997, 3881, 3959.
Souris rifle range, 4592.
Southampton Railway Company, 1455, 3009.
Sussex public building, 1694.
Tariff, 3040, 4335, 4430.
Tobique Indian reserve, 816, 1359, 1535, 1915, 2590, 3534.
Transatlantic mail service, 582.
Vincent, J. U.. appointment of, 1411.
Volunteer bounty, 1396.
West Indies, trade with, 2015.
Woodstock public building coal supplies, 569.

Cassana flour, tariff on, 3043.

Caterpillar moths, 1132.

Cattle
Inspection of, 758.
United States embargo, 3065.
See also Live Stock.

Census, 842, 954.

Chabot, Mr. John Leo (Ottawa)
Civil Service, 4446.
House of Commons representation, 5309.

Chain, tariff on, 3138.

Chairman and Acting Chairman, rulings of Acceptance of member's statement, 2420.
Estimates, though not printed in French, may be considered, 403.

Chambly canal, 2990, 4558.

Charlottetown
Confederation Convention, 4960.
Mails, 2014, 3058.

Charlton, Mr. William A. (Norfolk)
Canadian Northern Railway, 3998.

Chesley post office, 664, 5231.

Chevrier et Frères, payments to, 368.

Chisholm, Mr. Alexander W. (Inverness)
Alexander post office, 2960.
Canadian Northern Railway, 4080, 4219.
Dismissals, 1406, 1418, 1815.
Farmers Bank, 1117, 4798.
Fish transportation, 386, 393.
Fisheries advisory board, 348, 702, 2412.
Government telegraph and telephone system, 4181.
Grigg, trade commissioner, 2435.
Indians, Nova Scotia, 2474-2479.
Intercolonial Railway
Branch lines, 1740, 4867.
Coal contracts, 3194.

Chisholm, Mr. A. W.—Con.

Inverness
Fruit inspector, 1672.
Harbour, 1818.
Postal service, 815.
Steam service, 2943, 5040.
Margaree harbour repairs, 4209.
Militia, 4617.
Port Hawkesbury public building, 1895.

Chisholm, Mr. William (Antigonish)
Antigonish
Customs collector, 3860, 3893, 4435.
Food inspector, 666.
Immigration agents, 573, 5210.
Mail service, 572, 5137.
Public buildings, need of, 1896, 5227.
Cattle disease, 3175.
Decoste, Capt. J., dismissal of, 1783.
Dominion Atlantic Railway, 1115.
Duchemin, Mr., expenses of, 5239.
Eastern Extension Railway, 3183.
Fenian raid veterans, 2080, 4999.
Government officials in politics, 2407.
Guysborough mails, 1914.
Heatherton Indian reserve, 573
House of Commons
Representation, 5344.
Returns, alleged incomplete, 2377.
Immigration, 1629.
Intercolonial Railway
Antigonish bridge, 1016.
Dorchester water supply, 1015.
Extensions, 3179, 4938.
Passes, 4877.
Repairs, 5121.
Judges' salaries, 1930.
Liberator publication, 3236.
Mail clerks, 3241.
Militia, 4608, 4615, 5012.
Nova Scotia immigration agents, 1691.
Plainfield post office, 2016.
Privilege, 2085, 5955.
South Lake, protection works, 5233.
Vancouver Orange Lodge, 2591.

Cigarettes, prohibition of, 1473, 1688.

Cimon, E. H., expenses of, 664.

Civil Service
Appointments, 666, 1164.
Commission, 697.
Superannuation, 1691.

Civil Service Act (Post Office) Amendment Bill. Res., 2378. 1r., 2389. 2r., 3173. Com., 3220. 3r., 3220, 3249.

Civil Service Acts Amendment Bill. Res., 4437. 1r., 4452.

Civil Service Insurance Bill. Res., 1751. 1r., 1751. 2r., 1871. Com., 1871. 3r., 1875.

Civil Service Superannuation Bill. Res., 5364. 1r., 5374.

Clark, Mr. Hugh (North Bruce)
Farmers Bank, 3530.
Militia, 5006.

Clark, Mr. Michael (Red Deer)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Delay in meeting of Parliament, 35.
Redistribution of representation, 35.
Highways improvement, 36.
By-elections, 37.
Tariff, 38.
Free wheat, 42.
Agricultural implement duties, 1587.
Asiatic trade, 5036.
British cattle embargo, 759.
Budget, 2862
Trade, 2864.
Borrowings, 2865.
Home market, 2869.
Tariff, 2871.
Free wheat, 2873.
Iron industry, 2875.
Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company, 802.
Canadian Northern Railway, 4239.
Canadians at Bisley, 518.
Dominion lands, 4890.
Farmers Bank, 4912.
Grain markets, 1658.
House of Commons representation, 869.
Naval service, 330, 5155.
Ottawa municipal government, 1883.
Pig iron, drawback on, 3218.
Steel industry, 1506.

Clarke, Mr. A. H. (South Essex)
Tobacco culture, 1147.

Clarke, Mr. W. A. (North Wellington)
Budget, 2731.

Clement, Mr. Justice, expenses of, 2263, 2367.

Clements, Mr. Herbert S. (Comox-Atlin)
Canadian Northern Railway, 4665, 4672.
Government telegraph lines in British Columbia, 2376.
Militia for Prince Rupert, 4586.
Navigable waters protection, 343.

Coal
Contracts for dredges, 923.
Lands, 365.
Royalties, 1809.

Coasting privileges, 2435, 2915-2925, 5196.

Coasting trade of Canada, 756.

Cobequid, steamer, wreck of, 165, 358, 1166.

Cochrane, Hon. Frank (Minister of Railways and Canals)
Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company, 795.
Central Western Canada Railway Company, 805.
Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, 201.
Hudson Bay terminals, 678.
Intercolonial Railway train service, 258.
Prince Edward Island Railway, 310.

Cockshutt, Mr. William F. (Brantford)
Agricultural implements, tariff on, 3143.
Brantford public building, 873.
Budget, 2529
Agricultural implements, 2537.
Cost of living, 2536.
Naval defence, 2542.
Protection, 2532.
Transportation, 2541.
Canadians in Mexico, 2785.
Confederation, semi-centennial of, 1452.
Immigration, 1624.
Naturalization, 4531, 4533, 4536.
Stone, tariff on, 873, 3127.
Trade agencies, 321.

Cocoanuts, tariff on, 3106.

Coderre, Hon. Louis (Secretary of State)
Archives Department, 1771.
Canada Temperance Act, 1760 .
Companies Act Amendment, 3397, 3861, 4806.
Explosives, manufacture of, 3587, 3861.
French translation, 5273.
Mines Department estimates, 1801-1815.
Naturalization, 1763.
Ores, treatment of, 1803.
Peat, experiments with, 1804-1810.
Printing and stationery, 724-740, 1774.
Secretary of State Department—salaries, etc., 724.
Tar sand deposits, 1812.
Voters' lists, 1760, 5267.

Coke, tariff on, 3137.

Cold Storage Regulation Bill. Res., 1752. 1r., 1753. 2r., 3559. Com., 3559, 4172. 3r., 4173. See also 700, 707, 1680.

Cold Storage in Nova Scotia, 700.

Coldbrook Station postmaster, 1690.

Cole Harbour wharf, 1693.

Colpitts, G. A., case of, 446.

Companies Act Amendment Bill. 1r., 3397. 2r., 3861. Com., 3861. 3r., 3861. Senate amendments, 4806.

Confederation, semi-centennial of, 1444.

Conservation
Commission, 718, 5201.
Natural resources, 3323.

Cookshire public building, 2960.

Co-operative Credit Societies Bill. 1r., 3637.

Cornwall canal, 2990.

Cost of Living, 21, 29, 40, 48, 69, 79, 87, 96, 102, 110, 121, 132, 178, 190, 245, 249, 294, 5376. See also Budget.

Cost of Living Commission, 356, 2436.

Cow testing, 1673.

Criminal Code Amendment Bills
Firearms and detectaphones, 1r., 467.
Fraudulent advertising, 1r., 3397. 2r., 3466. Com., 3466, 3480. 3r., 3481. See also 4215.

Criminal Code revision, 3058.

Cromwell, Mr. F. R. (Crompton)
St. George's Club, 3427.

Crothers, Hon. Thos. W. (Minister of Labour)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Cost of living, 276.
United Shoe Machinery Co., 277.
Canadian Northern Railway, 4665.
Farmers Bank, 4726, 4923.
Labour
Estimates, 339, 523-566, 656-663, 5202.
Montreal harbour, in, 5203.
Matches, white phosphorus, 1536, 1756.
Natural resources, provincial control of, 1093.
Technical education, 4888, 5206.
Vancouver Island labour troubles, 523-566, 656, 1305.

Cruise, Mr. Robt. (Dauphin)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Free wheat, 295.
Cost of living, 296.
Reciprocity with United States, 297.
Budget, 2824.
Farm implements, 2825.
Free wheat, 2825.
Camperville mails, 2686.
Canadian Northern Railway, 2518.

Currie, Mr. John A. (North Simcoe)
Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company, 766.
Militia, 3434.
Tariff, 3149.
Toronto, Niagara and Western Railway, 3275.

Currie, Ronald, 990, 1005, 1361, 1603.

Customs
Appointments, 473.
Dismissals, 963, 997.
Duties, 5363.
Estimates, 400, 422-439, 963-969, 997-1011, 2363, 2374.
Protection service, 423.
Undervaluation, 3318.

Customs Act (Pig-iron drawback) Amendment Bill. Res., 3210. 1r., 3220. 2r., 3510. Com., 3511. 3r., 3511. See also Tariff Bill.

Dairy Products Regulation Bill. Res., 1751. 1r., 1752. 2r., 2384. Com., 3162. 3r., 3173.

Davidson, Mr. Avard L. (Annapolis)
Fenian raid veterans, 3376.
Marine and Fisheries estimates, 2418.
National Transcontinental Railway investigation, 2150.

Death Penalty. See Capital Punishment.

Debt of Canada, 1116.

Delisle, Mr. Michel (Portneuf)
Montcalm, Steamship, 666.
Morrison, Lt.-Col., expenses of, 1915.
Murray Bay steamer service, 1915.
Pilotage, 666, 1219.
Portneuf lightkeeper, 1219, 3510.
St. Casimir post office, 360, 667.
Sessional indemnity, 817.

Demers, Mr. M. Joseph (St. John and Iberville)
Dismissals, 1376, 2689.
Farmers Bank, 4736.
Hansard, omission in, 4886.
National Transcontinental Railway investigation, 2250.
Paradis, L., appointment of, 2840.
Railway Act Amendment, 610, 793.
Ste. Brigide mails, 893.
St. Johns
Bridge, 2689.
Customs collector, 893.
Inland Revenue, 1021.
Rural mail, 366.
Seed grain, 369.

Denison, J. R., postmaster, 3209, 3640, 5259, 5264.

Dental machines, tariff on, 3144.

Dentistry congress, 2957.

Deputy Speaker, office of, 1362.

Des Prairies river dredging, 1731.

Detectaphone, use of, 468.

Devlin, Mr. Emmanuel B. (Wright)
Budget, 2621
National policy, 2622.
Surpluses, 2624.
Immigration, 2625.
Tariff, 2626.
Transportation, 2627.
Agriculture, 2628.
Canal traffic, 365.
Explosives, regulation of, 3863.
Farmers Bank, 4722.
Georgian Bay canal, 567, 1047, 2968.
Grain shipments, 472.
House of Commons representation, 5321.
Hull
Customs office, 568.
Inland Revenue receipts, 473.
International Waterways, 164.
Judges' salaries, 1925.
Mineral deposits, 1023.

Devlin, Mr. Emmanuel B.—Con.
Nova Scotia coal, 365.
Ottawa and Hull Improvement Commission, 697.
Privilege, 1119.
Public buildings, expenditure on, 4190.
Ulster and the Minister of Militia, 1903.
Unemployment, 5031.
W. C. Edwards Company, 3474.
Wright county post offices, 445.

Dismissals, 430, 762, 770, 990, 997, 1170-1188, 1375, 1385-1395, 1401, 1424.
Bigelow, J. E., 1436.
Décoste, J., Capt., 1783.
Drummond and Arthabaska, 1023.
Faucher, E., painter, 1784.
Fish hatchery employees, 370.
Intercolonial Railway employees, 370.
Laing, J. R., postmaster, 370.
Larivière, Mr., land agent, 370.
Leslie, Wm. C., postmaster, 369.
McGillis, J., 1435.
McLeod, M. H., geologist, 1815.
McRae, A., lighthouse-keeper, 1118.
Three Rivers postal officials, 818.

D'Israeli wharf, 1435.

Divorce cases, procedure in, 1118.

Divorce reform, 821.

Doherty, Hon. C. J. (Minister of Justice)
Advertising, fraudulent, 3397, 3466, 3480.
Asiatic immigration, 1258.
Canada Temperance Act Amendment, 3453, 3588, 3717.
Capital punishment, 741.
Divorce reform, 835.
Dominion Lands Act Amendment, 4367, 4821, 4889.
Dominion police, 2368.
Elections Act Amendment, 478.
Electoral corruption, 908.
Exchequer Court, 2367.
Explosives, regulation of, 3863.
Falardeau case, 459.
Fatsari, G., release of, 4056.
Fraudulent advertising, 3397, 3466, 3480.
Haultain, Chief Justice, judgments of, 1265.
Judges, Prince Edward Island, 4887.
Judges' salaries, 1940, 3603, 3886, 3957.
Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, 1955.
Justice Department
Estimates, 342, 2365, 4521.
Salaries, 342.
Juvenile Delinquents Act Amendment, 3251, 3516.
Kelly, Wm. J., case of, 1706.
Labrador coast, jurisdiction on, 2954.
Merchants Accident Guarantee Company, 3512.
Monk, Hon. F. D., death of, 3787.

Doherty, Hon. C. J.—Con.
Naturalization, British nationality, 3249, 4119, 4143, 4173, 4367, 4529-4545, 4808-4821, 4823.
O'Brien, A. H., superannuation of, 1945.
Pembroke Lumber Company, claim of, 5026.
Penitentiaries, 2365, 2368, 4521.
Pension to guard's widow, 3460, 3531.
Prison reform, 4522.
Prisons and Reformatories Act Amendment, 3397, 3466.
Senate representation, 1488.
Supreme Court appeals, 3251, 3462.
White slave traffic, 4523.

Dominion Atlantic Railway, 1115.

Dominion Forest Reserves and Parks Act Amendment Bill. 1r., 2261. 2r., 3512. Com., 3512, 3554. 3r., 3558. See also 4151.

Dominion Lands Act Amendment Bills
Aikins, Mr. 1r., 201.
Doherty, Mr. 1r., 4367. 2r., 4821. Com., 4821, 4889. 3r., 4891.
Roche, Mr. 1r., 2261. 2r., 3249. Com., 3249, 3320, 3511. 3r., 3512.

Dominion Lands and Parks, 1836, 2372, 4151.
Orders in Council approved, 4713.

Dorchester
Government employees, 3638.
Penitentiary, 440.

Dorion dredging, 443.

Dorval militia land purchase, 1025, 1119, 1218, 2436.

Douglas, Mr. James (Strathcona)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Free wheat, 299.
Aid to agriculture, 301.
Unemployed labour, 301.
Budget, 2835
Freight rates, 2837.
Binder twine, 2838.
Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company, 765, 804.
Dominion lands, 3349-3361.
Government officials in politics, 1836
Hudson Bay terminals, 568.
Indians, 2478.

Dredges and dredging
Canada, 811, 1218.
Coal supplies, 2078.
East river, 5363.
Fielding, 2261.
George McKenzie, 1780.
New Brunswick, 2078.
Prince Edward Island, 3058.

Drill halls. See Armouries.

Drummond and Arthabaska postmasters, 1019.

Dry Docks Subsidies Act Amendment Bill. Res., 3961. 1r., 3965. 2r., 4090. Com., 4090. 3r., 4112. See also 5237.

Dubé, P., employment of, 2016.

Duchemin, H. P., payments to, 353, 697, 770, 893, 926, 966, 990, 1111, 1173.

Dunvegan telegraph, 816.

Duthie Point lighthouse, 703.

Eastern Extension Railway, 3183.

Eastern Townships
Diseased cattle, 363.
Experimental farm, 1694.
Post offices, dismissals in, 3640, 5261.

East Jeddore dredging, 925.

East river improvements, 811.

Edmonton and Ft. George mail service, 891.

Edmonton drill hall, 354.

Edmundston immigration office, 704, 1619.

Edson-Grand Prairie mail service, 369.

Edwards, Mr. John W. (Frontenac)
Agricultural Gazette, 1104.
Barriefield camp, 3714.
Budget, 2603
Farm products, 2604.
Free wheat, 2610.
Transportation, 2614.
Agricultural implements, 2615.
Cost of living, 2619.
Steel industry, 2619.
Reciprocity with the United States, 2620.
Capital punishment, 501.
Civil Service, 4449, 4450.
Cold storage, 1681.
Fenian raid veterans, 3509.
Fisher, Hon. S., on Canadian farming, 1110.
Fisheries, 1825.
Franking privilege, 3225.
Frontenac rural mail, 813.
Government officials in politics, 433, 1840.
Kingston causeway, 3509.
Kingston penitentiary, 812, 2365, 2519, 2959, 4484-4504, 4512.
Militia parades, 2178.
Naval service, 5166.
O'Brien, A. H., superannuation of, 1950.
Ottawa as the Capital, 1884.
Pilotage, 3631.
Potatoes, tariff on, 3078.
Printing Bureau, 4370.
Reciprocity with the United States, 1686.
Transportation, 2979.
Unemployment, 4159.

Eganville post office, 353, 2545, 5219.

Election Act Amendment Bill. 1r., 478.

Election laws committee, 1118.

Elections and Government officials. See Government Officials.

Elections, general, résumé of, 2995.

Electoral corruption, 344, 900.

Elevators, grain, 473, 572, 1216, 1646-1666.

Elliott, Mr. George A. (North Middlesex)
Farmers Bank, 4919.

Elmira post office, 702.

Embroideries, tariff on, 3157.

Emmerson, Hon. H. R. (Westmorland)
Basic slag, 444, 511, 630, 2677; proposed amendment, 638.
Battlefields, preservation of, 3198.
Brantford public building, 878.
Budget, 2673
Tariff, 2674.
Basic slag, 2677.
Cut stone, 2679.
Protection, 2681.
Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company, 795.
Canadian Northern Railway terminals, 699, 2262.
Colpitts, G. A., case of, 446, 455.
Dorchester penitentiary, 441.
Franking privilege, 3224.
Fredericton and Grand Lake Coal and Railway Company, 3205.
Governor General, new, 3454.
Herring fishing, 2437.
Hudson, patrol boat, 2687.
Intercolonial Railway
Branch lines, 353.
Canadian Pacific Railway, traffic agreement with, 567, 596, 1534, 1691.
Dismissals, 1017, 2962, 3508.
District No. 3, 1114.
Dorchester water supply, 1015.
Engineers, appointment of, 2176.
French river bridge, 362.
Halifax terminals, 1782.
Hampton station, 1691.
Harris, F., employment of, 2176.
Hay shipments, 922.
Killam, A. E., retirement of, 1724.
Management, 3256; proposed amendment, 3264.
Moncton residence purchase, 893.
Provident fund, 469.
Skeffington, detective, 921.
Suburban train receipts, 1015.
Survey staff, 2261.
Train service, 167, 258.
Wooden cars, 355.
Judges' salaries, 1929.
Maps, incorrect, 2902.
Maritime mail service, 166, 202.
Militia poster, 1536, 2082.
National Transcontinental Railway investigation, 1329, 2331.
Richibucto life-saving crew, 668.

Emmerson, Hon. H. R.—Con.
St. John and Quebec Railway, 2546, 2789, 3030.
Sackville public wharf, 568.
Stone, tariff on, 878, 3125.
Tariff, 3125.
Transatlantic mail service, 376.
Trent Valley Woollen Company, 2177.
Trust companies, 2907.
Volunteer bounty, 1398.
Westmorland harbours, 443.

Empress of Ireland
Loss of, 4433, 4552, 4555, 4628, 4716, 4879, 4894, 4954. See also 5069, 5230.
Court of investigation, 4887.

Esquimalt dry dock, 812, 1433.

Estimates. See titles of departments and subjects.

Ethier, Mr. Joseph A. C. (Two Mountains)
Canning factories, 1605.
Intercolonial Railway, 4949.
Railway subsidies, 4971.
Ste. Scholastique postmaster dismissal, 3634, 3854.

Exhibitions, 359, 1684.
San Francisco, 359, 1686, 3254.

Experimental farms, 1135. 1140, 1148, 2372, 3487.

Explosives Regulation Bill. Res., 3587. 1r., 3588. 2r., 3861. Com., 3862. 3r., 3895. See also 1810, 1815.

Export Act Amendment Bill. Res., 971. 1r., 975. 2r., 1758. Com., 1758, 3463. 3r., 3717.

Express franking privilege, 1018.

External Affairs, Department of, 355.

Extradition cases. See Kelly.

Falardeau case, 455, 699.

Falmouth dyke, 1780.

False Creek Indian reserve. See Kitsilano.

Farmers Bank Relief Bill. Res., 3517. 1r., 3531. 2r., 4675, 4718, 4806. Com., 4894. 3r., 4929.
Amendment proposed: Mr. A. K. Maclean, 4703; div., 4806.
See also 723, 1117, 3197, 3453.

Farnham camp, 1033, 1125, 1435.

Fatsari, G., release of, 464, 1911.

Federal Life Assurance Company, 2435.

Fenian raid veterans, 284, 338, 349, 369, 440, 445, 473, 571, 925, 1022, 1604, 1693, 1783, 2080, 2085, 2787, 2962, 3362-3396, 3509, 3894, 4339.

Ferguson, G. H., commissioner, 1915.

Ferrona-Sunny Brae Railway, 669.

Fielding, P., employment of, 365.

Finance Department estimates, 722.

Financial conditions, 18, 56, 62, 129, 169, 189.

Financial Statement. See Budget.

Firearms, carrying of, 467.

Fish and fisheries
Advisory board, 348, 702, 2398.
Boundary regulations, 1214.
Curing expert, 571.
Exhibits, 2430.
Hatcheries, 2431.
Herring, 2437.
Industry, 5275.
Lobster
Licenses, 815.
Regulations, 344, 5186.
Seed, 816.
Medical aid, 416.
Modus vivendi
Licenses, 1692.
Violations, 1603.
New Brunswick claims, 2374.
Ontario jurisdiction, 1916.
Pickled fish. See that title; also, Fisheries Act Amendment Bills.
Protection service, 2429.
Reduction works, 1693, 2080, 2177.
Shellfish commission, 667,1361, 2418, 4022, 4294.
Smelt licenses, 2178, 2402.
Statistics, 1020, 1361, 2402, 5191.
Transportation, 376, 894, 1114, 1215, 2403, 2937, 5069.

Fisheries Act Amendment Bills
Consolidation. 1r., 793. 2r., 1164. Ref. to select com., 1164. Com., 1793, 1820. 3r., 2384.
Inspection of pickled fish. Res., 3455. 1r., 3460. 2r., 3460. Com., 4435. 3r., 4437.

Fisher, Mr. J. H. (Brant)
Auto-Wheels, Limited, 1668.
Privilege, 3113.

Fletcher, Joshua, employment of, 351.

Food products, inspection of, 1672, 1678, 2370.

Forest reserves. See Dominion Forest Reserves and Parks.

Fortier, Mr. Edmond (Lotbinière).
French translation, 2436.

Foster, Mr. Arthur DeWitt (Kings, N.S.)
Canadian Northern Railway, 3983.
Cold storage, 3563, 5185.
Dismissals, 1182.
Immigration, 1152.
Natural resources, conservation of, 1811.
St. John Valley Railway, 3033.

Foster, Hon. George E. (Minister of Trade and Commerce)
Atlantic mail service, 5066.
Binder twine, 1608, 2913.
British postal rates, 3232.

Foster, Hon. Geo. E.—Con.
Budget, 2849.
Trade conditions, 2852.
Flour industry, 2853.
Trade policies, 2856.
Free wheat, 2858.
Capital punishment, 490.
Census, 954.
China and Japan steamship subsidy, 5034.
Commissioner of Commerce, 316.
Cost of living, 5377.
Fish transportation, 5069.
Grain
Act, administration of, 1646.
Bill, 3161, 3574.
Commission 1646.
Laboratory, 315.
High Commissioner's office, 5378.
Imperial Trade Commission, 927.
Mail subsidies, 2913.
National Transcontinental Railway, 4859.
Ocean freight rates, 2926, 5043.
Parliamentary procedure—Committee of Supply without question put, 521.
St. Lawrence rates, 977.
Seeds inspection Bill, 4167.
Steamship subventions, 2913, 2923-2947, 5034.
Strathcona, Lord, death of, 164.
Titles of honour, 480.
Trade and Commerce estimates, 315, 881, 927, 1646, 2913, 2923, 5034.
West Indies
Cables, 955.
Steamship service, 956.
Trade Commissioner, 882.

Foundation Company, Ltd., 1876.

Fowler, Mr. George W. (Kings and Albert)
Canadian Northern Railway, 4643.
Civil Service, 4449, 4451.
Fenian raid veterans, 3374.
Fisheries protection, 1795.
Hampton public building, 4189.
Judges' salaries, 1928, 3606.
Militia camp grounds, 5017.
National Transcontinental Railway investigation, 2284.
St. John Valley Railway, 3884.
Yukon territory judge, 4022.

Franking privilege, 971, 1018, 3223.

Fraser, J. McL., fishery officer, 5030.

Fraser, W. E., fishery officer, 2405-2418.

Fraserville
Battery, 1021.
Drill hall. 360.
Harbour, 358, 441, 1604.

Fraudulent advertising. See Criminal Code Amendment Bill.

Fredericton
Experimental farm, 1135.
Mails, 2014.
Public works, 705.

Free wheat, 42, 133. 238, 260, 267, 271, 279, 282, 285, 288, 295, 297, 299, 301, 304, 2873, 2825, 2858. 2833, 2723, 2796 2746, 2889, 2816, 2810, 2804.
Amendment proposed: Sir Wilfrid Laurier, 2846, 2849; div., 2897.

Freight rates, 1914, 2196, 2687, 2971-2986, 4327-4331, 4416-4425. See also Ocean.

French
Translation, 1912, 2436.
Official documents in, 4434, 4523.

French river
Dam, 1604.
Improvements, 2081.
Wharf, 1434.

French Canadian Senator for Ontario, 367.

Fripp, Mr. Alfred E. (Ottawa)
Civil Service, 4443, 5373.
Divorce bills, 4881.
Foundation Company, Ltd., 1879.
Goldschmidt, R., patent of, 2918.
House of Commons representation, 5311.
Labrador, Quebec and Southern Railway Company, 2922.
Ottawa water supply, 1886.
Willson, T. L., patent of, 2918.

Frontenac rural mail, 813.

Fruit inspection, 1672, 1674.

Fuller, Mrs. M. E., pension of, 4993.

Fundy, Bay of, navigation, 165.

Garland, Mr. W. F. (Carleton, Ont.)
Budget, 2783.

Gaspé
Public buildings, 4191.
Steamer service, 1433, 3058, 2437, 2939.

Gauthier, Mr. Louis J. (St. Hyacinthe)
Dismissals, 1392.
National Transcontinental Railway investigation, 2264.

Gauvreau, Mr. Chas. A. (Temiscouata)
L'Assurance de Rimouski, 3894.
Cimon, E. H., payments to, 664.
Fraserville
Battery, 1021.
Drill hall, 360.
Harbour, 358, 441, 1604.
Excise officer, 1402.
Public building, 4196.
French Canadian senators, 367.
Government officials in politics, 1402, 2262.
Inland Revenue officers, 1402.
Intercolonial Railway
Dismissals, 370.
Ice contracts, 364, 2016.
Riviere du Loup facilities, 4970.
Investigations into political partisanship, 2262.
Isle Verte wharf, 360, 1604, 2264, 4712.
Judges' salaries, 3621.
Liberator magazine, 3236.
National Transcontinental Railway, 4461, 4463.

Gauvreau, Mr. Chas. A.—Con.

Quebec
Harbour Commission,, 1604, 2263.
Judges, 4807.
Rimouski
Customs, 2015.
Engineers, 2079.
Harbour, 2079, 2310.
Medical service, 2015.
20th Battery, 1361, 2263.

Gelinas, P. and R. Lajoie, employment of, 2688.

Geological Survey estimates, 1815.

Georgian Bay Canal, 352, 567, 1020, 1033, 1732, 2965-2987, 5231.

German, Mr. William M. (Welland)
Bounties on steel, 1523.
Brantford public building, 872.
Canadian Northern Railway, 3896, 4011, 4025, 4039, 4072.
Farmers Bank, 4895.
National Transcontinental Railway investigation, 2118.
Naturalization, 4814.
Senate representation, 1493.
Union Life Insurance Company, 2374.
Welland ship canal, 2965.

Giasson post office, 2177, 2688, 3848.

Gimli lake patent, 1359.

Girard, Mr. Joseph (Chicoutimi and Saguenay)
Agriculture, encouragement of, 1158.
Quebec- Blanc Sablon steamship service, 2946.

Glass, Mr. S. Francis (East Middlesex)
Immigration, 1636.

Glencurrie post office, 4561.

Gold and silver leaf, tariff on, 3133.

Government officials in politics, 423, 621, 706, 741, 1195, 1836-1870, 2308, 2405-2427.

Government Railways Claims Bill. 1r., 1910. 2r., 2392. Com., 2392. 3r., 3058.

Government steamers
Canada, 3113.
Construction in Canada, 3878.
Gulnare, 668.
Gunhilde, 2688.
Hudson, patrol boat, 2687.
Repairs, 1332.
Winter service, 3055.

Governor General
Appointment of, 3454.
Departure of—address, 5275.

Graham, Hon. Geo. P. (South Renfrew)
Calgary and Edmonton Railway, 801.
Canada Temperance Act, 1760.
Canadian Northern Railway, 3252, 3800, 4010, 4038.

Graham, Hon. Geo. P.—Con.

Canadian Pacific Railway—Toronto-Sudbury line, 1113.
Capital punishment, 493.
Chesley public building, 5231.
Conservation Commission, 721.
Eganville post office, 353, 2545, 5219.
Farmers Bank, 4894.
Georgian Bay canal, 2969.
Good Roads Association, 2989.
Government officials in politics, 1836.
Grand Trunk Pacific
Arbitration, 360.
Bond guarantee, 4936.
Cost per mile, 923, 1328.
Harbour commissioners, Montreal and Quebec, 1434.
High Commissioner's office, 311, 1764.
House of Commons
Debates, distribution of, 1775.
Representation, 857.
Hudson Bay Railway, 692, 3112.
Intercolonial Railway, management of, 3295.
Labrador, Quebec and Southern Railway Company, 2952.
Lancaster, Mr., indisposition of, 3204.
Loan flotations, 5032.
Matches, white phosphorus, 1538, 1756.
Mines Department, appointments to, 1801.
Morrisburg
Mails, 1692.
Tin plate manufactory, 3130.
National Transcontinental Railway, 1970, 1982, 2021, 2036 (amdt.), 4840.
Coaling plants, 3113.
Contracts drawbacks, 1329.
Eastern division, 1018.
Grade changes, 921.
Investigating commission, 879, 895, 1328, 1915.
Little Mistongo bridge, 573.
St. Malo
Shops, 360, 701, 1817.
Tunnel, 891.
Shops, 1018.
Transcona shops, 664.
Naturalization, uniform British, 1763.
Naval service, 1914, 5159.
Old age pensions, 1353.
Ottawa and New York Railway Company, claim of, 2991.
Pas Mission bridge, 365.
Pembroke armoury, 5193
Petawawa camp lumber claim, 5022.
Pilotage, 815.
Pollution of navigable waters, 1742.
Post office employees' salaries, 3220.
Printing Bureau, 728, 734, 1774.
Quebec land purchases, 1434.
Radium ores, 1692, 1814.
Railway Act Amendment, 2947.
Railway crossings, 360.

Graham, Hon. Geo. P.—Con.
Railways and Canals estimates, 2970-2944, 4160-4167.
Rainy River Radial Railway Company, 2950.
St. John harbour, 1693.
Spirits and tobacco, 1392.
Steel barrels, manufacture of, 1534.
Tariff, 3157.
Toronto, Niagara and Western Railway Company, 3204, 3270.
Transportation, 2971.
Trent Canal, 1817, 2789, 4162, 4945, 4996.
Welland Canal, 2970, 2988, 5108.

Graham wharf, 443.

Grain
Act, administration of, 1646.
Commissioners, 1646, 2376.
Elevators, 473, 572, 1216, 1646-1666.
Inspection, 1117.
Laboratory, 315.
Sample markets, 2787.
Shipments, 472.
Transportation, 2975-2987.
See also Canadian grain.

Granby postal matters, 363, 697.

Grand Falls-St. John Railway, 365.

Grand Mère building, 2688.

Grand Rapids of the Athabaska, 1361.

Grand Trunk Pacific Railway
Cost per mile, 923, 1328.
Estimates, 4161.
Winnipeg terminals. See Winnpeg Terminals Bill.

Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Bills
Completion of prairie section, time extension. 1r., 201. 2r. and 3r., 749.
Guarantee of bonds. Res., 4831. 1r., 4838. 2r., 4929. Com., 4929. 3r., 5034.

Grand Trunk Railway. See Toronto Terminals.

Granton and Abercrombie mails, 2686.

Grazing. See Homesteading.

Green, Mr. Robt. F. (Kootenay)
Divorce bills, procedure on, 4883.
Labour conditions on Vancouver Island, 1299.

Grigg, trade commissioner, 2435.

Grosse Isle quarantine station, 5028.

Guthrie, Mr. Hugh (South Wellington)
Agricultural implement duties, 1566.
Armouries, 4576-4582.
Canadian Northern Railway, 4419, 4528.
Farmers Bank, 3520.
Militia, 4576-4582.

Guthrie, Mr Hugh.—Con.
National Transcontinental Railway investigation, 2312.
Post Office Act Amendment, 3242.
Prudential Life of Canada, 3478.
Railway level crossings, 3958.
Toronto, Niagara and Western Railway Company, 3204, 3271.
Trent canal investigation, 4975.

Guysborough
Branch railway, 4481.
Public wharfs, 355.

Guysborough-Heatherton mails, 1914.

Hagersville postmaster, 2686.

Halifax
Armouries, 704.
Dennis building, 5031.
Fortifications, 345.
Lightship, 3057.
Militia contracts, 3714.
Post office, 345.
Terminals, 1332. See also Intercolonial.

Halifax county mail contracts, 925.

Hanna, Mr. A. E. (South Lanark)
Tariff, 3144.

Hansard. See House of Commons Debates.

Hants county electoral lists, 817.

Hantsport
Public building, 1023.
Wharf, 4713.

Harbour Commissioners, 1434.

Harbours, federal control of, 2390.

Harbourville lightkeeper, 1434.

Hartt, Mr. Thomas A. (Charlotte, N.B.)
Dismissals, 2427.

Haultain, Chief Justice, judgments of, 1265.

Hay shipments, 922.

Hazen, Hon. J. D. (Minister of Marine and Fisheries)
Atlantic mail service, 5048.
Biological Board, 2434.
Boundary fisheries, 1214.
Canada shipping, 1540, 3053, 3621. See also Shipping Act Amendments.
Collision an dsalvage at sea. See Shipping.
Colpitts, Mr., case of, 451.
Dismissals, 762, 775, 1173.
Dry docks subsidies, 3964, 4097.
Empress of Ireland investigation, 4552, 4631, 4716, 4887.
Fish and fisheries
Act amendment, 793, 1164, 1793. 1820.

Hazen, Hon J. D.—Con.
Bulletin, 5189.
Lobster regulations, 5186.
Pickled, inspection of, 3455, 4635-4436.
Protection service, 5176.
Transportation, 392, 401, 1215, 5185.
Fishing disaster—appeal for government aid, 5182, 5195.
Fredericton experimental farm, 1138, 3487, 3491.
French, official documents in, 4434, 4523.
Fundy, Bay of, navigation, 165.
Government officials in politics, 1839.
Hudson Bay terminals, 1207.
Hydrographic surveys, 5183.
Intercolonial Railway
Management, 3298, 5048.
Suburban trains, 1065.
Karluk, steamer, 4524, 4629.
Kelly, Wm. J., case of, 1711.
Lake Erie buoy service, 2519.
Leblanc, seaman, burial of, 5179.
Marine and Fisheries estimates, 324-328, 402-421, 749-762, 775-787, 1164-1214, 2398-2434.
Merchant shipping. See Shipping.
Montreal Harbour
Commission, 3636, 3871, 4523, 4830.
Harbourmaster. 5188.
Steamer berths, 5188.
Naval service, 326-336, 5146.
North Sydney Harbour Commission, 1539, 1791.
Pelagic sealing, 2372.
Pilotage, 985, 3625.
Pollution of navigable waters, 1740, 1748.
Quebec
Harbour Commission, 3876.
Marine agency, 2996.
St. John, port of, 5048.
St. John Valley railway, 3011.
St. Lawrence route, accidents on, 3253, 3398. See also Shipping Casualties.
St. Lawrence ship channel, 976-991.
Safety of Life at Sea Convention, 787.
Shipping Act amendments, 94, 743, 1786. See also Canada Shipping.
Shipping Casualties investigations, 4552-4555, 4631. See also St. Lawrence route.
Vancouver Harbour Commission, 2175, 2388.

Heatherton Indian reserve, 573.

Hebb, L. J., amounts paid to, 2178.

Henderson, Mr. David (Halton)
Brantford public building, 876.
Farmers Bank, 4778.
Federal Life Assurance Company, 2435.
House of Commons blue books, 1776.
Naturalization, 1763.
Public buildings, 4196, 4199.
Toronto, Niagara and Western Railway, 3276.

Hepburn, Mr. B. R. (Prince Edward, Ont.)
Prince Edward and Hastings Railway Company, 2950.

High Commissioner's office, 311, 352, 1765, 3716, 5378.

Highways Improvement, 15, 23, 36, 48, 52, 55, 101, 116, 129, 147 152, 164, 177, 221, 259, 293.

Home Rule for Ireland
Carson, Sir Edward
Alleged cablegrams to, 2082, 2178.
Presentation to, Mr. Cochrane's presence at, 1785.
Meeting at Toronto, 3573.
Picked men leaving Canada, 1903.
Vancouver Orange Lodge resolutions, 2592, 2785.

Homesteads and Homesteading
Burns grazing lease, 2591.
Entries, 352, 570, 4368.
Land patents, 3113.
Payments, interest on, 1434.
Pre-emptions, Alberta, 357.
Regulations, 2311.
See also Dominion Lands.

Horse breeding, 472, 3493.

Horseflesh abattoirs, alleged, 3487.

House of Commons
Accommodation, need of increased, 4197.
Ascension Day adjournment, 3895.
Ash Wedesday adjournment, 1061.
Business of the House, 1606, 3197.
Committees, select standing, 253.
Debates
Distribution, 1775.
Lengthy answers to questions, insertion of, 1061.
Omissions, 477, 4887.
Translators, chief of, 1818, 5267, 5271.
Deputy Speaker, office of. See that title.
Easter adjournment, 2311.
Government business, precedence of, 1606.
Indemnity to members, 817.
Library and reading room, hours of closing, 4214.
Loucks, H. H., employment of, 2439.
Messengers, 568, 704.
Morning sittings, 2788, 3210, 3319.
Officials
Appointments, 94, 399, 2686, 2947, 4954.
Investigation, report of, 442.
Salary increases, 2481.
Parliamentary Guide, 2373.
Post office, 399, 477.
Returns, questions regarding, 476, 878, 1607, 2364, 2377, 3860, 3893, 5956.
Rooms, use of, 2080.
Saturday sittings, 3784.

House of Commons.—Con.

Stationery, 1370.
Voters lists, 1774.
Wednesday sittings, 1264.

House of Commons Representation Bill. 1r., 611. 2r., 842, 927. Ref. to select com., 927. Rep., 1013. Com, 5230, 5306, 6364. 3r., 6364. See also 5, 35, 112, 123, 203, 707.

Hudson Bay
Fisheries, 347, 5186.
Railway, 364, 924, 4464-4470, 4474-4878.
Contracts, 5030.
Mileage, 364.
Pas Misssion bridge, 365.
Right of way, 1434.
Terminals, 346, 568, 671, 3112, 1207.

Hughes, Hon. Sam. (Minister of Militia and Defence)
Armouries, 4583-4586, 5007.
Bands at political demonstrations, 5011.
Canadians at Bisley, 514, 518, 1215.
Dorval military site, 1033.
Drill halls, 4583-4586, 5007.
Farnham camp, 1033, 1125.
Fenian raid veterans, 3363-3396, 4340-4367, 5000.
Militia
Annual drill, 4999.
Camp grounds, 5017.
Clothing, 5004.
Estimates, 336, 2363, 2370, 3399-3452, 4571-4620, 4990-5025.
Rifle ranges, 5008.
Militia poster, 1607, 2082.
Petawawa camp lumber claim, 5022.
Privilege, 2083.
Religious processions and the Militia, 5003.
Royal Military College, 5015.
Souris rifle range, 4571, 4594.
Trent canal investigation, 4990.
Volunteer bounty, 3363-3396, 4340-4367.

Hughes, Mr. James J. (Kings, P.E.I.)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Naval defence, 99.
Highways improvement, 101.
Cost of living, 102.
Tariff, the, 103.
Militia expenditure, 104.
Agricultural Gazette, 1102, 1671.
Agricultural implements, duties on, 1582.
Basic slag, 638.
Carleton Head breakwater, 2178.
Charlottetown-Crapaud mails, 3058.
Dismissals, 1118.
Elmira post office, 702.
Fenian raid veterans, 440, 2085, 3363, 4360.
Fish, pickled, inspection of, 4436.
French river wharf, 1434.

Hughes, Mr. James J.—Con.

Honorary colonels, 1605.
House of Commons
Debates, official report of: lengthy answers, 1061.
Library and reading room, closing of, 4214.
Representation, 707, 853.
Stationery, 1370.
Hudson Bay terminals, 691.
Intercolonial Railway
Engineers, appointment of, 2176.
Freight cars, 568.
Little Sands breakwater, 445, 1605.
Magdalen islands steamship service, 403.
Militia officer commanding 6th Division, 1783.
National Transcontinental Railway investigation, 2214.
Naval service, 332.
Potatoes, tariff on, 3059, 3084.
Prince Edward Island
Banks, 1781, 2543.
Dredges, 3058.
Freight rates, 1018.
Judges, 4887.
Public works, 4211.
Steam service, 2944.
Transportation, 399.
Railway, 308, 926, 4483.
Representation in House of Commons, 707, 853.
Railway land grants, 5027.
Returns
Alleged incomplete, 476.
Inquiry for, 4296.
Rocky Point wharf, 3113, 3318.
Shellfish commission, 4022, 4294.
Souris rifle range, 1435, 1694, 1783, 4567.
Strong, Heath, payments to, 1116.

Hull
Customs office, 568.
Inland Revenue receipts, 473.

Humboldt homestead inspector, 569.

Hydro-Electric lines, 3474 4716.

Ice-breaking, 402, 2962.

Immigration, 10, 139, 291, 299, 1152.
Asiatic, 350, 351, 808, 1220, 2639, 5026, 5037.
Austrian, 896.
British Columbia, 2264.
Bulgarian and Russian, 4560.
Chinese Act, administration of, 5212.
Deportations, 891, 1636.
Estimates, 1611, 4155.
European, 572.
Hindu, 4022, 4214, 4295, 4524, 4556, 4562, 4717, 4954, 5026.
Inspection, 1437, 1638.

Immigration.—Con.

Regulations, 350.
Statistics, 351.
United States, 697.

Immigration Act (Asiatic exclusion) Amendment Bill. 1r., 5026.

Imperial Trade Commission, 927.

Indian Act Amendment Bill. 1r., 1817. 2r., 2394. Com., 2394, 3481, 3532. 3r., 3553, 3554. Senate amdts., 4839.

Indian Harbour Lakes postmaster, 3055.

Indians
British Columbia, 2477, 5209.
Caughnawaga
Hospital, 422.
Petition, 2394, 3481, 3533, 3537.
Estimates, 422, 2471, 2481, 5209.
Generally, 422, 2480.
Liquor selling to, 3207.
Medical attendants, Nova Scotia, 2474, 2840, 3208.
Northwest provinces and territories, 2478, 5209.
Nova Scotia, 2474-2477, 5209.
Ontario and Quebec, 2472-2474.

Industrial Disputes Act, 1022.

Inland Revenue estimates, 339, 1370-1395, 1400-1432, 2364.

Inspection and Sale Act Amendment Bills
Binder twine. Res., 1608. 1r., 1611. 2r., 2913. Com., and 3r., 2913.
Foods. 1r., 2261. 2r., 4167. Com., 4167. 3r., 4171.

Insurance, 1751, 3199.

Insurance Act Amendment Bill. 1r., 1688.

Intercolonial Railway
Amos, R., dismissal of, 2962.
Antigonish bridge, 1016.
Appointments, 1113.
Responsibility for, 2956.
Block signals, 3318.
Branch lines, 353, 1736, 3181, 4938, 5110.
Canadian Pacific Railway agreement, 567, 585-610, 1534, 1691, 3256-3316, 4099-4111, 5048-5062.
Car charges, 352.
Chatham Junction-Blackville branch, 4477.
Claims, fire, 2959.
Coal tenders, 924, 1332, 1645, 1786, 1911, 2956, 3194, 3280.
Dean Settlement branch, 3318.
Dismissals, 5122.
District No. 3, loss on, 1114.
Dorchester water supply, 1015.
Double tracking, 4558.
Earnings, 2308.

Intercolonial Railway.—Con.

Employees' wages, 1016.
Estimates, 1959, 3178, 4165, 4860, 4938, 4947.
Ferry employees, 1016.
Fish, rates on, 894, 1017.
Flour, rates on, 1021.
Freight cars, 568.
Freight rates, 921. See also Management.
French River bridge, 362.
Grade reduction, 668.
Guysborough branch, 4481.
Halifax terminals, 1782, 4861.
Hampton station, 1691.
Harris, F., employment of, 2176.
Ice contracts, 364, 2016.
Killam, A. E., retirement of, 1724.
King, S., employment of, 895.
Labourers' wages, 471.
Land valuators, 345.
Lévis, fire at, 5029.
Lumber purchase, 894.
Management, 1957, 3256, 3278.
Amendment proposed: Mr. Emmerson, 3264; div., 3316.
Minimum rates, 1434, 1690, 2016.
Ministerial statement, 1959.
Moncton residence, purchase of, 893, 2786.
News bulletin service, 1266.
Ocean Limited, 4630, 4888.
Oxford-Pictou train service, 895.
Pension fund, 469, 572, 5362.
Point Tupper ferry, 894, 3195.
Private cars, 1018.
Refrigerator cars, 1360, 1604.
Repair shops, 2957.
Ste. Louise improvements, 2013.
Sackville dismissals, 1017, 3508.
'Safety First' engineer, 2262.
Sectionmen, 1015.
Skeffington, Detective, 921.
Smith, R. H., employment of, 1690.
Standard rules, 1693, 2957.
Station improvements, 2544.
Suburban trains, 1015, 1062, 4868.
Sunny Brae branch, 894.
Survey staff, 2261.
Tie contracts, 1331.
Tonnage, 3110.
Traffic agreement with Canadian Pacific Railway, 567. See also Canadian Pacific.
Train service, 167, 258.
Water service, 2544.
Williams, T., employment of, 895.
Wireless system, 1782.
Wooden cars, 355.

Interior Department estimates, 338, 1836, 2363, 2372, 4151.

International Expositions. See Exhibitions.

International Horse Show, 2439.

International Purity Congress, 359, 3859.

International Waterways, 164, 4962.

International Waterways Commission Bill. 1r., 1163. 2r., 1395. Com., 1396. 1483. 3r., 1483.

Inverness
Fruit inspector, 1672.
Harbour, 1818.
Postal service, 815.
Public works, 354.

Investigations into political partisanship, 2262, 2308.

Iron and steel industry, 665, 1498, 1802, 3040.
Ores, treatment of, 1802.
Products, value of, 665.
Tariff, 3040.
Bands, 3153.
Bars, 3159.
Pigs, etc., 3133.
Structural, 3135, 3160.
Tubing, 3145.
See also Pig Iron.

Ironworkers, 1115.

Irrigation Act Amendment Bill. 1r., 2261. 2r., 3485. Com., 3485, 3596. 3r, 3717.
See also 4153.

Isle Verte wharf, 360, 1604, 2264, 4712.

Jallet, N., widow of, 1066.

Jameson, Mr. Clarence (Digby)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
By-elections, 95.
Cost of living, 96.
Naval defence, 98.
Dog-fish works, 2177.
House of Commons representation, 5322.

Joliette buildings, 1023.

Joynson, Mrs. Alice, pension Bill. Res., 3460. 1r., 3461. 2r., 3531. Com., 3531. 3r., 3532.

Judges Act Amendment Bills
Mr. Doherty: Res., 3602. 1r., 3621. 2r., 3886. Com., 3886. 3r., 3956.
Mr. Lanctot: 1r., 841.

Judges' salaries, 697, 1925-1944, 3602-3621, 3886-3890, 4807.

Judicial Committee of Privy Council. See Privy Council.

Justice Department estimates, 342, 2365, 4521.

Jute, tariff on, 3153.

Juvenile Delinquents Act Amendment Bill. 1r., 3251. 2r., 3516. Com., 3516. 3r, 3517.

Kamloops
Drill hall, 1331.
Public buildings, 1021.

Karluk, steamer, 352, 811, 2264, 4524, 4629.

Kay, Mr. William F. (Missisquoi)
Bedford public building, 2545.
Brome rural mails, 703.
Farnham camp, 1435.
St. Armand mails, 3208.

Kelly, W. J., case of, 1696.

Kentville
Experimental farm, 1152.
Tuberculous cattle at, 4559.

Kingston
Causeway, 3509.
Penitentiary investigation, 571, 812, 2365, 2959, 4484-4522.

Kitsilano Indian reserve, 664, 922, 3547.

Knowles, Mr. William E. (Moosejaw)
Advertising, fraudulent, 3470.
Agricultural implements
Duties on, 1548; amendment proposed, 1558; div., 1602.
Rebates, 1360.
Asiatic immigration, 1244.
Aurora Menace, 2310, 3236.
Butter, manufacture of, 3165.
Canada Temperance Act, 3589.
Customs duties, 5193.
Dominion lands, 3330, 3341, 3511.
Inspectors, 1845
Franking privilege, 3223.
Government officials in politics, 1378, 1401, 1841.
Grain Bill, 3576.
Grain elevators, 1666.
Homestead
Pre-emption payments, 1434.
Regulations, 2311.
Hudson Bay
Railway, 1434.
Terminals, 685.
Imports and exports, 1332.
Indian Act Amendment, 3484.
Inland Revenue estimates, 1378, 1404.
Interior Department estimates, 1841-1870.
Irrigation, 3486.
Lands unpatented, taxation of, 1923.
McVeigh homestead entry, 2841.
Militia estimates, 3405.
Natural resources, provincial control of, 1094.
Petroleum, export of, 974.
Pre-emption payments, 1434.
Ranching and grazing commission, 2543.
Volunteer bounty, 1398.
Williams, Colonel, 3405, 3454.

Kyte, Mr. George W. (Richmond, N.S.)
Agricultural Gazette, 1099, 1101, 1671.
Bear River
Public building, 1893.
Wharf, 2013.
Bishop, A., employment of, 3208.
Cameron, A. J., employment of, 2960.
Cheese weighing, 1678.
Civil Service Commission, 697.
Coasting privileges, 5196.
Commutation of death sentence, 3252.
Customs
Appointments, 473.
Estimates, 963.
Dismissals, 763, 770, 963, 1009, 1179, 1190, 1376.
Divorce, 4884.
Dredge George McKenzie, 1780.
Farmers Bank, 5285.
Fenian raid veterans, 445, 3383, 4367.
Fish and Fisheries
Act Amendment, 1797, 1820.
Bulletin, 2402, 5192.
Lobster culture, 2432.
Transportation, 382, 2937.
Government officials in politics, 435, 1178.
House of Commons
Loucks, H. H., employment of, 2439.
Messengers, 568.
Officials, 442.
Representation, 5324, 5344, 5359.
Hudson Bay terminals, 689.
Indians, Nova Scotia, 3208.
Intercolonial Railway
Estimates, 3180.
Mines Road station, 2377.
Judges' salaries, 1929, 3620, 3887.
Letter boxes, 353.
Life-saving rewards, 419.
Marine estimates, 762, 770, 1164, 2402, 2432.
Militia, 4605.
Militia, the Minister of, and Irish Home Rule, 1911, 3443.
National Transcontinental Railway investigation, 2138.
O'Brien, A. H., superannuation of, 1946.
Old age pensions, 1333.
Ottawa
Building leases, 2439.
Public works, 1878.
Postal service, 5266.
Public buildings, 1878, 1893.
Richmond county works, 571, 5229.
Royal Canadian Regiment Band, 3111, 3210, 3440.
St. Esprit lightkeeper, 473, 1170.
St. Peter's canal, 1020, 2903, 2963, 2995, 4480-4481.
St. Peter's and Sydney Railway, 4090, 4295, 4369.
Senate and the Farmers Bank, 5285.
Shelburne fishery guardians, 2961.
Vincent, J. U., appointment of, 1410, 1427.

Labour
Employment bureaus, 1818, 3892.
Estimates of Department, 339, 523-566, 649-663, 5202.
Fair wages schedule, 357, 5202.
Hours on Public Works Bill. 1r., 4.
Immigration notices, 1617.
Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, 5206.
Unemployment, 4156-4160.
Circular from Trades and Labour Council, 5032.
Montreal, in, 3716.
Vancouver Island troubles, 345, 523, 572, 649, 699, 4664-4674.
Amendment proposed: Mr. Verville, 1267; div., 1327.
Prisoner's death, 699.

Labrador coast, jurisdiction on, 2954-2956.

Lachance, Mr. Arthur (Quebec Centre)
House of Commons representation, 5313.
Lortie, Mr., appointment of, 5029.
National Transcontinental Railway
Investigation, 2227.
Quebec terminals, 4846, 5096.
Privilege, 1784.
Quebec
Arsenal, 5028.
Harbourmaster, 5029.

Lachine canal, 2989.
Industries, 1913.
Works, 1782.

Lachine rapids dam, 2377, 2438.

Lafortune, Mr. David A. (Montcalm)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Highways improvement, 164, 167.
Naval defence, 168.
Financial conditions, 169.
Tariff, 171.
Transportation, 171.
Agriculture, aid to, 171.
Redistribution of representation, 173.
Manitoba schools, 175.
Agriculture, encouragement of, 1156.
Capital punishment, 4519.
Civil Service superannuation, 5373.
Des Prairies river dredging, 1733.
French translation, 5274.
House of Commons representation, 5319.
Inland Revenue officials, 1391, 1394.
Naval service, 334, 5169.
Postal service in Montcalm, 5256.
Public buildings in Montcalm, 5388.

La Have Islands mail service, 704.

Lake Erie buoy service, 2519.

Lalor, Mr. Frances R. (Haldimand)
Budget, 2826.
Tariff, 2827.
Free trade, 2829.

Lalor, Mr. Francis R.—Con.

Free food, 2831.
Free wheat, 2833.
Fenian raid veterans, 4341.
Fishery regulations, 1827.

Lamarche, Mr. Paul E. (Nicolet)
Explosives, regulation of, 3868.
Farmers Bank, 4798.
Georgian Bay canal, 1036, 1732.
Militia, 4616.

Lancaster, Mr. Edward A. (Lincoln and Niagara)
Alberta Central Railway Company, 1891.
Burrard Inlet Tunnel and Bridge Company, 764.
Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company, 765.
Calgary and Fernie Railway Company, 1667.
Canadian Northern Railway Company, 1760.
Central Ontario Railway, 1892.
Canadian Pacific Railway Company, 769.
Central Railway Company of Canada, 996.
Central Western Canada Railway Company, 767.
Erie, London and Tillsonburg Railway Company, 995.
Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway Company, 995.
Grand Trunk Railway Company, 767.
Joliette and Lake Manuan Colonization Railway Company, 994.
Kettle Valley Railway Company, 1892.
Labrador, Quebec and Southern Railway Company, 2951.
Lachine, Jacques Cartier and Maisonneuve Railway Company, 767.
Lake Erie and Northern Railway Company, 1188.
London and Lake Erie Railway Company, 1891.
Manitoba and North Western Railway Company, 1891.
Norfolk and Elgin Railway Company, 1667.
Ottawa and Ungava Railway Company, 992.
Ottawa Northern and Western Railway Company, 764.
Pacific, Peace River and Athabaska Railway Company, 992.
Pacific, Trans-Canada and Hudson Bay Railway Company, 2948.
Peace River Tramway and Navigation Company, 995.
Prince Edward and Hastings Railway Company, 2949.
Rainy River Radial Railway Company, 2950.
Rio de Janeiro and San Paulo Telephone Company, 1892.
Saskatchewan Central Railway Company, 2956.

Lancaster, Mr. Edward A.—Con.

Thessalon and Northern Railway Company, 993.
Toronto, Niagara and Western Railway Company, 3200.

Lanctot, Mr. Roch (Laprairie-Napierville)
Agricultural implement duties, 1584.
Banks and banking, 3894.
Budget, 2777.
Tariff, 2778.
Naval defence, 2780.
Highways Bill, 2781.
Canadian Northern Railway, 3988.
Farmers Bank, 723, 4774.
Judges Act Amendment, 841.
Judges' salaries, 1936, 3614.
Lachine bridge, 3111.
Laprairie
Protecting wall, 920, 2688, 3055, 3715.
Public buildings, 4712.
Naval service, 5174.
Pelletier, Hon. L. P., expenses of, 1117.

Land grants to railways, 1916, 5027.

Lands unpatented, taxation of, 1918.

Lapointe, Mr. Ernest (Kamouraska)
Agriculture, aid to, 358, 2956.
Canadian Northern Railway, 3970.
Dorchester County employees, 3638.
Giasson post office, 2177.
Intercolonial Railway
Ste. Louise improvements, 2013.
Train service, 4939.
Kamouraska postal service, 347.
National Transcontinental Railway, 569, 4853.
Ste. Perpetué station, 1913.
Naval service, 5165.
Ste. Anne
Experimental station, 360.
Wharf, 2078.
St. Perpetué food inspector, 359.
St. Roch des Aulnaies excise officer, 360.
Tremblay, A., employment of, 5194.

Lapointe, Mr. Louis A. (Montreal, St. James)
Judges' salaries, 1940.

Laprairie
Protecting wall, 920, 2688, 3055, 3715.
Public buildings, 4712.

Larry's river harbourmaster, 2961.

L'Assomption
Revenue from tobacco, 2958.
Wharf, 2263.

Laurier, Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid (East Quebec)
Address to H.R.H. the Governor General, 5276.
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Delay in meeting of Parliament, 12.

Laurier, Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid.—Con.

Solicitor Generalship, 13.
National Transcontinental Railway, 14.
Highways improvement, 15.
Naval defence, 16.
Financial conditions, 18.
Cost of living, 21; proposed amendment, 22.
Asiatic trade, 5035.
British Columbia, claims of, 359.
Budget, 2841.
Resources of Canada, 2843.
Tariff, 2845.
Free wheat, 2846; proposed amendment, 2849.
Canadian Northern Railway, 1264, 3672, 4010, 4026, 4056, 4225-4282, 4298-4331, 4378, 4526-4528, 4631.
Capital planning commission, 5197.
Cavalry remounts, 2546, 2789.
Civil Service, competitive examinations for, 1370.
Colpitts, G. A., case of, 453.
Confederation, semi-centennial of, 1444.
Cost of living, 5377.
Customs officials, 401.
Deputy Speaker, office of, 1362, 1368.
Divorce, 840.
Divorce bills, procedure on, 4881.
Electoral corruption, 915.
Empress of Ireland investigation, 4553, 4716.
Falardeau case, 462.
Farmers Bank, 3524.
Freight rates, 944.
Georgian Bay canal, 1033.
Grand Trunk Pacific Railway bond guarantee, 4834.
High Commissioner's office, 313, 5378.
House of Commons
Business of the House, 3198.
Debates, French translators of, 5271.
Morning sittings, 2788, 3210, 3319.
Representation, 843, 927, 5308, 5313.
Saturday sittings, 3784.
Immigration, Hindu, 4565.
Imperial Trade Commission, 929, 944.
International Purity Congress, 359.
Labour conditions on Vancouver Island, 1300.
Labrador coast, jurisdiction on, 2954.
Matches, white phosphorus, 1538.
Militia and religious processions, 5375.
Monk, Hon. F. D., death of, 3786.
Mounted police, 708, 4964.
National Transcontinental Railway
Completion, 4456.
Investigation, 2340.
Management, 5084.
Quebec terminals, 4839, 4969.
Naturalization, 4127, 4144, 4174, 4827.
Natural resources, provincial control of, 1077.

Laurier, Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid.—Con.

Naval service, 328, 5146, 5160.
Navigable waters, pollution of, 1744.
Newfoundland shipping disaster, 2995.
Parliamentary procedure
Answers of length, 1062.
Privilege, basing on newspaper statements, 1119.
Returns, private papers in, 4959.
Supply, Committee of, without question put, 307, 512, 521.
Thursday sittings, Government precedence in, 696.
Petroleum, export of, 973, 3464.
Pig iron, drawback on, 3213.
Pollution of navigable waters, 1744.
Quebec Battlefields Commission, 3890, 4114.
Railway level crossings, 3957.
St. John Valley Railway bridges, 3959.
Safety of Life at Sea Convention, 792.
Senate Employees Bill, 4711.
Senate representation, 1483, 3515, 5280, 5297.
Shipping casualties investigations, 4553, 4716.
Strathcona, Lord, death of, 92.
Tariff, 4431.
Titles of honour, 481.
Transportation, 2978.
Trust companies, 1128, 2905.
Volunteer bounty, 1398.

Lauzon, postmaster, 5029.

Lavallée, Mr. J. O. (Bellechasse)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Agriculture, encouragement of, 8.
Reciprocity with the United States, 9.
Immigration, 10.

Law, Mr. Bowman B. (Yarmouth)
Arcadia rural mails, 701.
Bear River public building, 1894.
Canada, dredge, 811.
Cobequid, wreck of the, 358, 403, 1166.
Fenian raid veterans, 284, 1693, 1783, 3371.
Fish and fisheries
Bulletins, 2403.
Protection, 1798.
Transportation, 383.
Fruit inspection, 1675.
Government steamers, headquarters of, 403.
Gulnare, steamer, 668.
Lurcher, lightship, 368.
Marine supplies, purchase of, 1203.
Military works, expenditure on, 816.
Port Maitland and Lower Argyle post offices, 1913.
Privilege, 343.
Seed lobsters, 816, 2431.
Shelburne county works, 1330.

Law, Mr. Bowman B.—Con.

Submarine bell floats, 668.
West Indies trade, 962.
Yarmouth
Customs officers, 968.
Harbour, 1015, 2309.
Light, 1166.
Live stock purchases, 665, 2308.
North post office, 816.
Public buildings, need of, 1894, 1908.
Rural mail, 570.

Le Blanc, Seaman, 667, 815.

Lemieux, Hon. R., trips of, 698.

Lemieux, Hon. Rodolphe (Rouville)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Trade conditions, 183.
Transportation, 185.
Civil Service reform, 186.
Redistribution of representation, 187.
Cost of living, 188, 190.
Unemployment, 189.
Financial conditions, 189.
United Shoe Machinery Company, 193.
Naval defence, 195.
By-elections, 199.
Advertising, fraudulent, 3466.
Agriculture
Disbursement of funds in Quebec, 1162.
Estimates, 1107, 1133, 1162, 1683.
Gazette, 1107.
Apple growing, 1133.
Archives, 720, 727, 740, 1769.
Armstrong, J. H., 2179.
Atlantic mail service, 94, 1645, 5030, 5063.
Baie St. Paul mails, 1819, 1914, 3059, 4368.
Bank failures, 3208, 3199, 3522.
Boy scouts, 4131.
Budget, 2574.
Fiscal policies, 2575.
Imperial conferences, 2578.
Cost of living, 2580.
Militia expenditures, 2582.
Tariff, 2585.
Naval defence, 2587.
Free trade, 2588.
Peace centenary, 2590.
Cable rates, 5246.
Canadian Northern Railway, 3991, 4015, 4325, 4525, 4526.
Canadian Pacific Railway office in Austria, 896.
Canals, 5109.
Cap aux Corbeaux wharf, 4293.
Cattle inspection, 759.
Cheese industry, 1683.
Civil Service, 4441, 4448, 4449..
Insurance, 1872.
Superannuation, 5372.
Coal royalties, 1809.
Cold storage, 1752.
Confederation, semi-centennial of, 1444, 4961.

Lemieux, Hon. Rodolphe.—Con.

Criminal Code revision, 3058.
Dentistry congress, 2957.
Dismissals
Faucher, E., painter, 1784.
Leslie, W. C., 369.
Divorce, 828, 1118.
Dry docks subsidies, 3962.
Dubé, Phileas, employment of, 2010.
Electoral corruption, 344.
Exhibitions, international, 359, 1684.
Explosives, regulation of, 3587, 3862.
Fabre, Madame Hector, case of, 4965.
Falardeau case, 455, 463, 699.
Farmers Bank, 3522, 4748.
Fatsari case, 464, 1911.
Fishing disaster—appeal for Government aid, 5195, 5182.
Franking privilege, 971.
French, official documents in, 401, 427, 4434.
Gaspé
Fishermen, loss of, 5181.
Public building, 4191.
Railway communication, 3181, 5121.
Georgian Bay canal, 352, 1020, 2965.
Giasson post office, 2688.
Hagersville postmaster, 2686.
Halifax lightship, 3057.
Heron Island dam, 2377, 2438.
High Commissioner's office, 352, 1766.
House of Commons
Debates, 1778.
French translation, 732, 5267, 5271.
Post office, 399.
Representation, 5321.
Voters' lists, 1774,5267.
Immigration, 4156, 4214.
Bulgarian and Russian, 4560.
French, 1630.
Oriental, 808, 1225.
United States, 697.
Indians
Caughnawaga
Hospital, 422.
Petition, 2394, 3481, 3533, 3537.
Liquor sold to, 3207.
Intercolonial Railway wireless system, 1782.
James Bay harbour, 1208.
Judges' salaries, 697, 1925, 1933.
Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, 1952.
Juvenile delinquents, 3517.
King's Printer, appointment of, 727, 737.
Lapointe, E., and Post Office Department, 900.
Lévis quarantine station, 1108.
Little River East breakwater, 354.
Lobster fishing, 344.
Lumley post office, 1818.
Magdalen Islands steamer service, 408, 757.
Mail bag locks, 473.

Lemieux, Hon. Rodolphe.—Con.

Marine
Estimates, 405-421, 753-762.
Tenders for supplies, 412.
Matches, white phosphorus, 1538.
Metric system, 1753.
Militia, 4588-4592.
Land purchase, 1025.
Processions, 5002.
Monk, Hon. F. D., death of, 3787.
Montreal
Carslake Hotel purchase, 1871, 2079, 2436, 2962, 3318, 4192.
Harbour
Berths, 2546.
Commission, 3869.
Postal station. See Carslake Hotel.
Unemployment in, 3716, 4156.
National Transcontinental Railway
Expropriation cases, 699.
Montreal connection, 816, 5127.
Quebec terminals, 4845, 4973.
St. Malo shops, 1535, 4845.
Train service, 1691, 2437.
Naturalization, 4176, 4533.
Naval service, 5152.
Navigation
Great Lakes, 349.
Schools of, 753.
Oka postmistress, 3460, 3505, 3532.
Ontario Equipment Company, 699.
Ottawa
Elevators in Government buildings, 4198.
Federal district, proposed, 1889.
Perley, Hon. G. H., trip to London of, 4631.
Petroleum, export of, 1759.
Pilotage, 3621.
Post office
Employees' salaries, 2379, 3222.
Estimates, 2364, 3639.
Mail bag locks, 354.
Money by mail, 3222.
Parcel post, 350, 5246.
Postage on English magazines, 2312, 3226.
Railway mail clerks, 2381, 5360.
Rural mail service, 376, 5245.
Savings banks, 5199.
Transatlantic mail service, 94, 1645, 5030, 5063.
Poulsen wireless, 2687.
Printing Bureau, 727-737.
Prison reform, 4518.
Privilege, 704.
Privy Council, Judicial Committee of, 1952.
Public buildings, 1882, 4191, 5213.
Quebec
Battlefields Commission, 720, 3891, 4117.
Bridge strike, 5030.
Harbour Commission, 3877.
Harbour plant, 2788, 3055, 3398.
Quarantine officials, 354.
Terminals, 4845, 4973.
Quebec and Saguenay Railway, 4557.

Lemieux, Hon. Rodolphe.—Con.

Quebec-Lévis mails, 2263.
Railway freight rates, 2687.
Royal Society of Canada, 350, 720, 5267.
Ste. Adelaide de Pabos breakwater, 5213.
Ste. Anne des Monts wharf, 2687.
St. Jerome wharf, 3113.
St. Lawrence route, accidents on, 3253.
St. Lawrence ship channel, 976.
Slack, W. F., dismissal of, 921.
Tadousac wharf, 2309.
Telescope for observatory, 344.
Tobacco culture, 5200.
Unemployment in Montreal, 3716, 4156.
Valcartier artillery camp, 924.
Vancouver Island labour troubles, 699.
Victoria Memorial Museum, 1882.
Vineberg, Helen, divorce bill, 4880.
Wireless telegraphy, 349, 5183.

Lennoxville experimental farm, 1534, 2015.

Le Present printing contracts, 1534.

Lespérance, Mr. David O. (Montmagny)
Naval service, 201.
Privilege, 126.

Lévis
Carrier machine shops, 1819, 2961.
Quarantine station, 1108, 1218.

Lévis county
Experimental farm, 369.
Rural mail.

Lewis, Mr. E. N. (West Huron)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Shipping disasters, 136.
Transportation, 137.
Banks and banking, 138.
Naval defence, 139.
Immigration, 139.

Liberator magazine, 3236.

Library of Parliament, 1780.

Little River East breakwater, 354.

Little Sands breakwater, 445, 1605.

Live stock
Industry, 3487, 3493, 3501.
Purchases, 470, 665, 2308.
Pure-bred, distribution of, 701.
See also Animals and Cattle Inspection.

Loan Companies Bill. 1r., 970. 2r., 1128. Com., 2913. 3r., 2963. Senate amdts., 4717.

Loan flotations, 5032, 5106.

Lobsters. See Fish.

Loggie, Mr. W. S. (Northumberland, N.B.)
Chain, tariff on, 3138.

Loggie, Mr. W. S.—Con.

Dressed stone, tariff on, 3119.
Fish
Commission, 2413.
Markets for, 2404.
Intercolonial Railway, branch lines, 4478, 4877, 5111.
Nails, tariff on, 3145, 4335.
National Transcontinental Railway investigation, 2256.
Potatoes, tariff on, 3044, 3052 (amdt.)

Longhurst, G., payments to, 925.

Lortie, Mr., weights inspector, 5029.

Lotteries, 2911, 3467.

Lower Argyle post office, 1913.

Lumley post office, 1818.

Lunenburg
Breakwater, 3509.
Fishery guardians, 3715.
Mails, 2788.

Lurcher, lightship, 368.

Macdonald, Mr. Edward M. (Pictou)
Alert, steamer, 425, 474, 669.
Brantford public building, 874.
Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company, 796, 800.
Canadian Northern Railway, 1361, 3508, 3818, 3828 (amdt.), 3833, 4009, 4026, 4032, 4050, 4230-4291, 4307-4334, 4384, 4660.
Canadians at Bisley, 512, 1215.
Currie, R., witness, 1005, 1361, 1603.
Dismissals, 783.
Dredges, 5363.
Canada, 1218.
East River improvements, 811.
Falmouth dyke, 1780.
Fenian raid veterans, 440, 1022, 3365, 4344.
Ferrona-Sunny Brae Railway, 669.
Fisheries protection, 1820.
Granton rural mails, 2686.
Hants county electoral lists, 817.
Hantsport
Building, 1023.
Wharf, 4713.
Horse breeding, 3498.
House of Commons representation, 619, 848, 5307, 5324, 5356, 5359 (amdt.)
Hudson Bay terminals, 4878.
Ice-breaker, contract for, 2962.
Intercolonial Railway
Coal contracts, 438, 924, 1332, 1645, 1786, 2956, 3192.
Earnings, 2308.
Fire claims, 2959.
Management, 438, 3269, 3278.

Macdonald, Mr. E. M.—Con.

New Glasgow and Sydney connections, 3192.
Oxford-Pictou line, 895, 3192.
Pictou bridge, 3193.
Provident fund, 572, 5362.
Refrigerator cars, 1604.
Repair shops, 2957.
Right of way, 3192.
Traffic agreement with Canadian Pacific Railway, 608.
Judges' salaries, 3615, 3888.
Labour conditions on Vancouver Island, 552, 1318.
Labrador coast line, 2953.
Labrador, Quebec and Southern Railway Company, 2922, 2953.
Lightkeepers, age limit, 1177.
Meadowville-Toney Mills mails, 1603.
Militia camp supplies, 2840.
Musquodoboit mails, 1817.
National Transcontinental Railway
Coaling plants, 2787.
Commission Act Amendment, 4856.
Investigation, 2268.
Naturalization, 2312, 4128, 4808.
Naval College, Halifax, 3254.
New Glasgow armoury, 702.
Newfoundland
Fishing disaster. 2916.
Steamship service, 2916.
Niobe crew, 1023.
Nova Scotia water lots, 1022.
Old age pensions, 1347.
Ottawa
Building leases, 2519.
Capital, as the, 1882, 1888.
Water supply, 1331.
Pictou
Bridge, 3193, 5363.
Mails, 572, 1699, 1819, 1913.
Post offices, 1022.
Public building, 809.
Rural mail, 924. 1023.
Pig iron, drawback on, 3212.
Preventive officers' reports, 1423.
Prince Edward Island winter service, 701.
Private Bill legislation, 993.
Pure-bred stock, 701.
Returns, alleged incomplete, 2364.
Royal Canadian Regimental Band, 3317.
Senate representation, 5303.
Skinner's Cove public works, 809.
Smelt fishing licenses, 2178.
Steel industry, 665, 1530.
Tatamagouche rural mails, 3208.
Technical education, 3054. 4888.
Thorburn railway communication, 701.
Transportation, 2985.
Vancouver leased buildings, 2957.
Vincent, J. U., appointment of, 1406.
Vineberg, Helen, diverce bill, 4670.
Weir's Mill fishway, 1820.
West Branch mail service, 924.

Macdonald, Mr. E. M.—Con.

Windsor fish hatchery, 1535.
Young, Angus, customs officer, 669.

Macdonell, Mr. A. C. (Toronto South)
Privilege, 3160.
Toronto, Niagara and Western Railway, 3270, 3476.

Maclean, Mr. Alexander K. (Halifax)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Naval defence, 50.
Highways improvement, 52, 55.
Tariff, 53.
Senate reform, 54.
Election laws, 54.
Financial conditions, 56
Aldershot camp, 1435.
Annapolis county mails, 345.
Basic slag, 647.
Boar's Head fog alarm, 2787.
British Columbia claims, 559.
Budget, 2471, 2482.
Revenue and expenditure, 2482.
Trade, 2485.
Fenian raid bounties, 2487.
Election promises, 2489.
Agricultural implements, 2491.
Free wheat, 2492.
Tariff on food products, 2497.
Canadian Northern Railway, 345, 4025, 4333.
Canadian Pacific Railway labour award, 2961.
Canning public building, 1899, 4183.
Capital expenditure, 1914.
Civil Service, 4447.
Coke, tariff on, 3137.
Coldbrook postmaster, 1690.
Dismissals, 965, 1435.
East Jeddore dredging, 925.
Electoral corruption, 900.
Farmers Bank, 3520, 4693 (amdt.), 4703, 4902.
Fenian raid veterans, 446, 4342.
Fielding, P., employment of,
Fisheries
Advisory board, 348, 2413.
Salt fish shipments to Portugal, 889.
Government officials in politics, 434.
Government steamers
Maintenance and repairs, 405, 411.
Winter service, 3055.
Halifax
Armouries, 704.
County mails, 925.
Dennis building, 5031.
Fortifications, 345.
Militia contracts, 3714.
Post office, 345.
Harbourville light, 1434.
Hebb, L. J., expenses of, 2178.
High Commissioner's office, 313.

Maclean, Mr. A. K.—Con.

House of Commons, accommodation in, 4198.
Hudson Bay
Fisheries, 347.
Terminals, 346, 671, 4466.
Indians, Nova Scotia, 2840.
Intercolonial Railway
Block signals, 3318.
Dartmouth-Dean branch, 4860.
Land valuators, 345.
Suburban trains, 1062.
Kentville, tuberculous cattle at 4559.
La Have Islands mails, 704.
Longhurst, G., payments to, 925.
Lunenburg
Breakwaters, 3509.
Fishery guardians, 3715.
Mails, 2788.
Mortgage Corporation of Nova Scotia, 1416.
Naval service, 326, 346.
Navigation, schools of, 751.
North Shore mail service, 573.
Patronage system, 415.
Public buildings, 1906, 4196.
Senate representation, 1489.
Shelburne county fisheries, 349.
Steamship subsidies, 5041.
Tariff, 3042, 4335; proposed amendment, 4426.
Transatlantic mail service, 577, 5042, 5043.
West Indies
Flour trade, 885.
Steamship service, 439, 957.
Trade commissioner, 440, 882.

Maclean, Mr. William F. (South York, O.)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Parcel post, 237.
Free wheat, 238, 297.
Railway conditions, 241.
Banks and banking, 243.
Cost of living, 245.
Naval defence, 247.
Immigration, 299.
Canadian Northern Railway, 3974, 4304, 4404, 4421.
Cigarettes, prohibition of, 1482.
Confederation, semi-centennial of, 1454.
Federal laws, enforcement of, 1482.
Freight rates, 1608. See also Ocean.
High Commissioner's office, 1768.
House of Commons representation, 856, 5310.
Intercolonial Railway-Canadian Pacific Railway traffic agreement, 602.
Ocean freight rates, 931, 945.
Ottawa as the Capital, 1883.
Pollution of navigable waters, 1746.
Senate, 1495, 5282, 5291, 5298.
Suburban train services, 1066.
Toronto, Niagara and Western Railway, 3274.

MacNutt, Mr. Thos. (Saltcoats)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech—free wheat, 285.
Agricultural implement duties, 1578.
Homestead entry, 4368.
Melville post office, 3111, 3398, 3638, 5240.
Wishart, A., sentence of, 4367.

McCoig, Mr. Archibald B. (West Kent, O.)
Budget, 2597.
Agricultural implements, 2597.
Tobacco culture, 2600.
Free wheat, 2602.
Cavalry remounts, 2602.
Railway subsidies, 2603.
Hydro-electric lines, 4716.
Tariff, 3142.
Tobacco culture, 1374, 2600.

McCraney, Mr. Geo. E. (Saskatoon)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech—free wheat, 279.
Agricultural implement duties, 1581.
Grain markets, 1661.
House of Commons representation, 5309.
Lands unpatented, 1918.
National monuments and land marks, 720.
Natural resources, provincial control of, 1084.
Naval service, 335.
Pollution of navigable waters, 1606.
Rosthern
Customs collector, 573.
Lands agent, 573.
Trade and Commerce bulletin, 474.
Volunteer bounty, 1400.

McCrea, Mr. Francis N. (Sherbrooke)
Canadian Northern Railway, 3972.
Farmers Bank, 4925.
Freight rates, 953.
Militia, 3422.
National Transcontinental Railway, 4454.
Sherbrooke
Agriculture, 5027, 5201.
Automobiles, 5130, 5262.
Buildings leased, 3317, 3894.
Drill hall and post office, 2959, 3111, 3509, 4368.

McCurdy, Mr. F. B. (Shelburne and Queens)
Advertising, fraudulent, 4215.
Fast Atlantic service, 5046, 5057.
Fenian raid veterans, 4345.
Fish transportation, 389, 5069.
Hudson Bay Railway, 4467.
Judges' salaries, 3611.
National Transcontinental Railway investigation, 2243.

McFadden, D. H., employment of, 663.

McKay, Mr. James (Prince Albert)
Advertising, fraudulent, 3472.
Dismissals, 1004.

McKay, Mr. James.—Con.
Dominion lands, 3351.
Forest reserves, 3557.
House of Commons representation, 5360.
Northern Territorial Railway Company, 2175.
University of Emmanuel College, 2398.

McKenzie, Mr. D. D. (North Cape Breton)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Trade policies, 216.
Solicitor-Generalship, 219.
Highways improvement, 221.
Agriculture, aid to, 225.
Tariff, 226.
Transportation, 227.
Advertising, fraudulent, 3471.
Canadian Northern Railway, 4278, 4546.
Cap Rouge wharf, 5243.
Civil Service, 1874, 4441.
Dismissals, 1186.
Drill halls, 4183, 4204.
Duchemin, Mr., legal expenses of, 5238.
Excise officers, 1400.
Farmers Bank, 4706, 4790.
Fenian raid veterans, 1022, 1399, 3394, 4363.
Fish and fisheries
Bulletin, 5192.
Lobster regulations, 5188.
Overseers, 2405, 2416.
Pickled, inspection of, 4435.
Protection, 1798, 1820, 1829.
Fort Cumberland restoration, 1901.
Government Railways Claims Act, 2394.
Harbours, federal control of, 2392.
Hudson Bay Railway, 4468, 4474, 4879.
Intercolonial Railway
Branch lines, 1736.
Cape Breton improvements, 3195, 5122.
Dismissals, 5122.
Judges' salaries, 1931, 1944, 3609, 3889.
Legal expenses, 4160.
Matches, manufacture of, 1757.
Metric system, 1754.
Militia bands, 5011.
National Transcontinental Railway investigation, 2292.
Naturalization, 4145, 4544, 4811.
North Sydney
Harbour commission, 1540, 1791.
Public buildings, 1907.
Pig iron industry, 3219.
Pilotage, 3630.
St. John Valley Railway bridges, 3882.
St. Peter's canal, 2963, 4481.
Shipping Act Amendment, 1788.
Sydney Mines public building, 1707.
Technical education, 5206.
Telegraph service in Victoria county, 1359, 4185, 5237.
Trust companies, 1129.
Victoria county steamship service, 5071.

McLean, Mr. Angus A. (Queens, P.E.I.)
Cold storage, 3563.
Confederation, semi-centennial of, 1451.
Fenian raid veterans, 3365, 4357.
Fish transportation, 385.
House of Commons representation, 859, 5359.
Judges' salaries, 3607.
Newfoundland, steamship service to, 2924.
Potatoes, tariff on, 3087.
Senate representation, 5285, 5299, 5306.
Shipping casualties, 4554.
Southport fish hatchery, 3112.
Stone, tariff on, 3128.

McLean, Mr. H. H. (Sunbury and Queens)
North Sydney Harbour Commission, 1793.
Shipping Act Amendment, 1787.

McLeod, Mr. Harry F. (York, N.B.)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Prosperity of Canada, 5.
Redistribution of representation, 5.
Agriculture, encouragement of, 6.
Naval defence, 7.
Divorce, 4886.
St. John Valley Railway, 3022.
Southampton Railway Company, 1471.

McMillan, Mr. John A. (Glengarry)
Fenian raid veterans, 3373.

McPherson, C., postmaster, 2787.

McVeigh, H. B., homestead entry of, 2841.

Madoc bank failure, 3199.

Magdalen Islands mail service, 344.

Mail Bag Locks. See Post Office.

Mail Clerks. See Civil Service.

Maisonneuve postal station, 441.

Manitoba
School lands, 2786.
Schools, 367.

Map, Interior Department, error in, 2902.

Maple Leaf steamship line, 4294.

Marble, tariff on, 3115.

Marcil, Hon. Charles (Bonaventure)
Agriculture, 1676, 1683, 3487.
Atlantic, Quebec and Western Railway, 892.
Avignon post office, 818.
Baie des Chaleurs Railway, 358.
Black Cape post office, 703, 2178.
Bonaventure
Agriculture in, 1676.
Experimental farm, 357.
Indians, 2471, 2544, 3534, 3541.
Inland revenue officers, 1424.
Mails, 1692.

Marcil, Hon. Charles.—Con.
Public works, 892, 1360.
Budget, 2755.
Cost of living, 2756, 2764.
Development of Canada, 2757.
Transportation, 2758.
Intercolonial Railway branch lines, 2761.
Gaspé peninsula, 2765.
Good roads, 2767.
Fishing industry, 2769.
Butter, manufacture of, 3171.
Carleton Centre mails, 1818, 4021.
Dismissals, 1171, 1202, 4435.
Duthie Point lighthouse, 703.
Elections, resumé of, 2995.
Fenian raid veterans, 4344, 4370.
French
Official documents in, 732, 4434.
Translators, 1912.
Gaspé
Agriculture, 1677.
Petroleum deposit, 3465.
Steamer service, 1433, 2437, 2939, 3058.
Horseflesh abattoirs, alleged, 3487.
Intercolonial Railway
Appointments, 2956.
Branch lines, 353, 2761, 5120.
News service, 1266.
Station improvements, 2544.
Water service, 2544.
Jallet, N., widow of, 1066.
Judges' salaries, 3619.
Lotteries, 2911, 3467.
Manitoba schools, 367.
Militia and religious processions, 5375.
Navigation, schools of, 750.
New Richmond
Freght shed, 2437.
Lightkeeper, dismissal of, 2439.
Mails, 1692, 2178, 3058.
News service on Government railways, 1266.
Petroleum deposits, 3465.
Port Daniel lobster hatchery, 2519, 3318.
Printing Bureau, 732.
Quebec assistant weights and measures inspector, 3318.
Robitaille postmaster, 3058.
Ste. Anne de Restigouche dredging, 3112.
Saturnia, accident to, 3399.
Senate representation, 1497.
Shigawake rural mails, 1692.
Sorel shipyard, 986.
Tide Head salmon pound, 1692.

Marcile, Mr. Joseph E. (Bagot)
Acton Vale mails, 700.
Bagot county rural mails, 1694.

Margaree Harbour, 354.

Marine and Fisheries Estimates, 324, 402-421, 749-764, 967-991, 1164-1214, 2398-2434.

Marine hospitals, 1213.

Marion Bridge-Woodbine mails, 1116.

Maritime provinces mail service, 166, 202.

Marline twine duty, 344.

Marriage laws, 444

Martin, Mr. Mederic (Montreal, St. Marys)
Estimates, printing of, in French, 403.
Unemployment in Montreal, 4156.

Martin, Mr. William M. (Regina)
Judges' salaries, 3613.
Maple Leaf Steamship Line, 4294.
Naturalization, 4129.

Matches, White Phosphorus, Prohibition Bill. Res., 1536. 1r., 1539. 2r., 1756. Com., 1756., 1756. 3r., 1758.

Meadowville-Toney Mills mails, 1603.

Meat inspection, 2370. See a'so Food.

Megantic public building, 2960.

Meighen, Hon. Arthur (Solicitor General)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Free food, 152.
Highways Bill and the Senate, 152.
Agricultural implement du'ies, 1589.
Campbell, Glen, 1863.
Canadian Northern Railway, 3682, 4009-4019-4079, 4217-4292, 4297-4334, 4381, 4526-4529, 4546-4551, 4649.
Co-operative Credit Societies, 3637.
National Transcontinental Railway investigation, 2085.
Privilege, question of, basing on newspaper statements, 1121.
Prudential Life of Canada, 2901.

Melville post office, 3111, 3398, 3638, 5240.

Menace newspaper. See Aurora Menace.

Menard, G., dismissal of, 2689.

Merchants and Employers Accident Guarantee Company Bill. 1r., 1870. 2r., 3512. Com., 3512. 3r., 3513.

Merchant Shipping Amendment Bill. 1r., 94. 2r., 743. Com., 1786. 3r., 1819. See also Canada Shipping.

Merner, Mr. J. J. (South Huron)
Farmers Bank, 4800.

Metcalfe drill hall, 667.

Metric system. See Weights and Measures.

Mica schist, tariff on, 3110.

Michaud, Mr. Pius. (Victoria, N.B.)
Edmundston
Immigration office, 704, 1619.
Public building, need of, 1898.
Fenian raid veterans, 440, 473, 1693.
Government officials in politics, 1841.
Grand Falls-St. John Railway, 365.
Imports from United States, 1117.
Intercolonial Railway private car, 1018.
National Transcontinental Railway, 2161, 4455.
New Brunswick schools, 955.
Quebec and Saguenay Railway, 4022.
St. John Valley Railway, 3020, 3881, 4023.
St. Leonards immigration agent, 569.
Tobique Indian reserve, 1218.

Middlebro, Mr. William S. (North Grey)
Debt of Canada, 1116.
Dry docks, 4093.
National Transcontinental Railway
Cost, 1536.
Investigation, 2036.

Militia
Armouries, 2786, 4576, 5007.
Automobiles, 813, 2081.
Bands in political demonstrations, 2178, 3111, 3210, 3317, 4340, 5002, 5010.
Boat contracts, 2591.
Camp areas, 5017.
Camp supplies, 2840.
Canteens, 2734.
Cavalry remounts, 2546, 2602, 2789.
Dorval camp, 1025.
Drill halls, 2786, 4576, 5007.
Employees in department, 813.
Estimates, 336, 2363, 2370, 3199, 3399-3452, 4567, 4999, 5269.
Amendment proposed: Mr. Proulx, 5270.
Expenditures, 2309.
Honorary colonels, 1605.
Minister of, and Sir Ian Hamilton, 441.
Minister of, and Ulster, 1903.
Minister of, in Europe, 444.
Motor boats, 705.
Officer commanding 6th division, 1783.
Pembroke Lumber Company, claim of, 5022.
Petawawa Camp, detective service, 815.
Poster, 1536, 1607, 2082.
Private car repairs, 813.
Queenston Heights picnic, 441.
Religious processions, Militia in, 2178, 5002, 5375.
Rifle ranges, 5008.
Sham battles, 814.
Special train, 814.
Works, expenditure on, 816.

Mines Department estimates, 1801.

Molloy, Mr. John P. (Provencher)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech—free wheat, 283.

Molloy, Mr. John P.—Con.

Canham, J. E., land agent, 1867.
McFadden, Dr. D. H., 663.
Members of provincial legislature, employment of, 3510.
Morris, public building for, need of, 4199.

Mondou, Mr. A. A. (Yamaska)

Intercolonial Railway branch lines, 1739.

Money Lenders Act Amendment Bill. 1r., 201.

Monk, Hon. F. D.
Death of, 3785.
Resignation of, 1264.

Montcalm, revenue from tobacco in, 2958.

Montcalm, steamer, 666.

Montreal
Carslake hotel purchase, 1871, 2079, 2436, 2962, 3318, 4023, 4192.
Circuit court judges, 697.
Colonization Society, 472.
Harbour
Master, 4022, 5188.
Steamer berths, 2546.
Public Works
Resident engineer, 1117, 2439, 5241.
Staff, 1435.

Montreal Harbour Commissioners Bills
Loan. Res., 3631. 1r., 3636. 2r., 3869. Com., 3869. 3r., 3876.
Taxes, exemption from. 1r., 4523. 2r. and Com., 4830. 3r., 4831. Senate amdts. 5361.

Morphy, Mr. H. B. (North Perth)
Budget, 2770.
Cost of living, 2771.
Wheat production, 2776.
Technical education, 2777.
Butter, manufacture of, 3168.
Experimental farms, 1154.
Farmers Bank, 4703, 4718.
Fenian raid veterans, 3370.
Judges' salaries, 3612.
Naturalization, 4175-4815.
Newfoundland, trade with, 2934.
Pacific, Trans-Canada and Hudson Bay Railway Company, 2921.
Rural mail boxes, 5134.
Tye, W. P., gratuity to widow of, 3634.
Vancouver Island labour troubles, 1270.

Morrisburg mails, 1692.

Morris, Mr. James (Chateauguay)
Budget, 2684.
Naval service, 5175.
St. Lawrence river dams, 3317.
Valleyfield excise, 2958.

Morrison, Colonel, expenses of, 1915.

Moulin Dubois post office, 1019.

Mounted police, 310, 708, 1119

Murphy, Hon. Charles (Russell)
Canadian Northern Railway, 3253, 4013, 4280.
Civil Service, 666.
Civil Service superannuation, 1691.
Cost of Living Commission, 356.
External Affairs, Department of, 355.
French river improvements, 1604, 2081.
Governor General's warrants, 2370.
Halifax terminals, 1332.
High Commissioner's office, 314.
House of Commons representation, 5311.
Hudson Bay Railway, 924.
Intercolonial Railway grade reduction, 668.
Metcalfe drill hall, 667.
National Art Gallery, 811.
National Transcontinental Railway
Contracts, 1115.
Drawbacks on, 1330.
Investigating Commission, 1782.
Naval service, 332.
New Westminster postmastership, 355.
Ottawa
Custom House, 811.
Drill hall, 667.
Property purchases, 666.
Rifle range, 668.
Water supply, 1744.
Peat experiments, 1806.
Port Arthur elevator, 809.
Post Office—temporary appointments, 3239.
Prescott shipyard, 426.
Printing Bureau estimates, 724-740.
Privilege, 257.
Safety at Sea Convention, 358.
Secretary of State's estimates, 724.
Technical education, 355.
Trust companies, 1128, 1130.
Welland Canal, 925.

Murray Bay winter service, 1915.

Nails, tariff on, 3145.

Nantel, Hon. Wilfrid B. (Minister of Inland Revenue)
Adulteration Act Amendment, 1433, 2388, 3362.
Dismissals, 1377-1394, 1401-1406, 1424.
Excise, 1370, 1417, 5266.
Inland Revenue estimates, 339, 1370-1395, 1400-1432, 2364, 5266.
Scales, regulation of, 1419.
Tobacco, stamps for, 1373, 1418.
Vincent, J. U., appointment of, 340, 1406, 1427.
Weights and Measures Act Amendment, 1359, 1753.

Napadogan military camp, 5017.

National Art Gallery, 811.

National Battlefields at Quebec Bill. 1r., 3636. 2r., 3890. Com., 3890, 4112. 3r., 4119.

National Transcontinental Railway, 14, 29, 115.
Coaling plants, 2787, 3113.
Contracts, 1115.
Drawbacks on, 1329.
Cost, 1536.
Deficit, 1780.
Eastern division
Construction, 4877.
Expenditure, 1018.
Operation, 5033.
Rates, 569.
Estimates, 2371, 4453-4462, 5106.
Expropriation cases, 699.
Grade changes, 921.
Investigating Commission, 1328, 1782, 1915, 1970.
Expenses of, 895.
Report of, 879.
Land purchases, 1781.
Little Mistongo river bridge, 573.
Management, 5072.
Amendment proposed: Mr. Pugsley, 5072.
Ministerial statement, 1964, 1982, 2021, 2085, 2132, 2155, 2180, 2218, 2264, 2312.
Amendment proposed: Mr. Graham, 2036; div., 2363.
Montreal connection, 816, 5127.
Payments to contractors, 1781.
Quebec terminals, 1913, 2177, 4839-4857, 4968, 5085-5106.
St. Malo
Shops, 360, 701, 1535, 1817.
Tunnel, 891.
Ste. Perpetué station, 1913.
Shops, estimate of, 1018.
Sillery lands, 1534.
Stations, contracts for, 1604.
Train service, 1691, 2437.
Transcona shops, 360, 664.

National Transcontinental Railway Bills
Extension of time. 1r., 201. 2r., and 3r., 749.
Operation. 1r., 4711. 2r., 4838. Com., 4838. 3r., 4894.
See also Grand Trunk Pacific Railway.

Naturalization, British Nationality, Bill. 1r., 3249. 2r., 4119, 4133. Com., 4142, 4173, 4529, 4807. 3r., 4823, 4830. See also 1763, 2312.

Natural resources, provincial control of, 1067, 1084.

Naval Affairs
College at Halifax, 329, 3208, 3254.
Defence, 7, 16, 25, 46, 50, 61, 79, 89, 98, 99, 111, 120, 127, 139, 145, 177, 247.
Enlistment, 346.

Naval Affairs.—Con.
Naval Service Act Repeal Bill. 1r., 201.
Naval Volunteers, 1914.
Regulations, 976.

Naval service, department of, 5146.
Estimates, 326-336.

Navigable waters
Pollution of. See that title.
Protection of, Bill. 1r., 343.

Navigation
Great Lakes, on, 349.
Schools of, 749.

Neely, Mr. D. B. (Humboldt)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Highways improvement, 259.
Free wheat, 260; proposed amdt, 267.
Agricultural implements
Duties on, 1570.
Industry, 572.
Budget, 2718.
Taxation, 2720.
Free wheat, 2723.
Agricultural implements, 2727.
Steel industry, 2729.
Freight rates, 2730.
Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company, 803.
Campbell, Glen, complaint against, 621, 1853.
Canadian Northern Railway, 4000, 4071.
Central Western Canada Railway Company, 768, 806.
Dismissals, 1003, 1200.
Dominion lands, 3355.
Dominion lands agent, removal of, 1851.
Elevators, terminal, 1216.
Express franking privilege, 1018.
Freight rates, 937.
Government officials in politics, 621, 1200, 1853.
Grain
Bill, 3577.
Inspection, 1117.
Sample markets, 2787.
Homestead entries, 570.
Humboldt homestead inspector, 569.
Intercolonial Railway: Smith, R. H., employment of, 1690.
Labour conditions on Vancouver Island, 561.
Labour Department, employees of, 660.
Manitoba school lands, 2786.
Militia, 337, 3444.
Naturalization, 4173.
Natural resources, provincial control of, 1087.
Public buildings in Saskatchewan, need of, 4200.
School lands, 3638.
Volunteer bounty, 1399.

Neely, Mr. D. B.—Con.

Watrous postmaster, 3715.
Windsor immigration office, 5028.

Nesbitt, Mr. Edward W. (North Oxford)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Naval defence, 127.
Highways improvement, 129.
Financial conditions, 129.
Tariff, 131.
Cost of living, 132.
Free wheat, 133.
Transportation, 135.
Agricultural estimates, 1104, 1142, 1674.
Agricultural implements, tariff on, 3140.
Armouries, 1890.
Brantford public building, 817, 871, 5218.
Budget, 2789.
Expenditures, 2790.
Tariff, 2792.
Agricultural implements, 2795.
Free wheat, 2796.
Transportation, 2799.
Butter manufacture, 2387, 3163.
Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company, 799.
Canadian Northern Railway, 3833, 4327, 4411.
Cow testing, 1674.
Farmers Bank, 4786.
Immigration, 1635.
King's Printer, appointment of, 738.
Loan companies, 4717.
McClary Manufacturing Company, 1216.
Mail delivery, 2014.
Militia, 3449.
Peat experiments, 1804.
Railway mail clerks, 2384.
Rural mails, 5132.
Tariff, 3105, 3149.
Toronto, Niagara and Western Railway Company, 3476.
Trust companies, 1127.

Newfoundland
Shipping disaster, 2517, 2995.
Trade with, 2916, 2923.

New Glasgow
Armoury, 702.
Intercolonial Railway
Surveys, 3193.
Train service, 895.

New Harbour breakwater, 365, 2787.

Newmarket canal, 4368.

Newport customs employees, 890, 1021, 1332.

New Richmond
Freight shed, 2437.
Lightkeeper, dismissal of, 2439.
Rural mails, 1692, 2178, 3058.

Newspapers
Advertising, 1781, 2438.
Postage rates, 2312, 3225.
Tariff on, 3107.

New Westminster postmastership, 355.

Niagara Falls mails, 2014.

Nickle, Mr. William F. (Kingston)
Canadian Northern Railway, 3696.
Capital punishment, 496.
Farmers Bank, 3528.
Kingston penitentiary, 4504-4512, 4513.
Prudential Life of Canada, 2898, 3478.

Nicholson, Mr. Donald (Queens, P.E.I.)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Cost of living, 121.
Reciprocity, 122.
Redistribution of representation, 123.

Niobe crew, 1023.

North Riverside postmaster, 2686, 3209, 3509, 4022.

Northrup, Mr. William B. (East Hastings)
Divorce reform, 821, 4884.

North Shore-Hubbard's mail service, 573.

North Sydney Harbour Commissioners Bill.
Res., 1539. 1r., 1540. 2r., 1791. Com., 1791. 3r., 1820.

Northwest Mounted Police, 2544.

Norton Creek, deepening of, 5028.

Nova Scotia
Coal, Ontario market for, 365.
Immigration agents, 1691.
Water lots, 1022.

O'Brien, A. H., superannuation of, 1945.

Ocean freight rates, 931, 2927. See also Freight Rates.

Officials in politics. See Government officials.

Oil, export of. See Petroleum.

Oka postmistress, 3460, 3505, 3532.

Old age pensions, 1333.

Oliver, Hon. Frank (Edmonton)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Agriculture, 81, 84.
Transportation, 85.
Labour conditions, 83.
Cost of living, 87.
Banks and banking, 88.
Naval defence, 89.
Free wheat, 267.

Oliver, Hon. Frank.—Con.

Advertising, fraudulent, 3469.
Agricultural implement duties, 1595
Asiatic trade, 888, 5037.
Athabasca Landing-Fort McMurray telegraph, 354.
Atlantic mail service, 5065.
Atlin Railway Company, 2397.
Bad Throat river water powers, 1913.
Binder twine, 1609.
Butter, manufacture of, 3162.
Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company, 800.
Canada Temperance Act, 1761, 3590.
Canadian Northern Railway, 3319, 3773, 4083, 4233-4290, 4299-4334, 4415 (amdt), 4545, 4548, 4550.
Capital punishment, 508.
Caterpillar pest, 1132.
Central Western Canada Railway Company, 768, 805.
Cigarettes, prohibition of, 1481.
Civil Service insurance, 1871.
Coal for dredges, 2078.
Cold storage, 3562, 4172.
Conservation Commission, 719.
Customs officials, 423.
Dismissals, 370, 1182, 1644.
Dominion lands, 3326, 3511, 4821, 4889.
  Orders in council, 4714.
Dunvegan telegraph, 816.
Edmonton and Fort George mail service, 891.
Edmonton drill hall, 354.
Edson-Grand Prairie mails, 369.
Exhibitions, 1685.
Fenian raid veterans, 571, 4340.
Fletcher, J., employment of, 351.
Forest reserves, 3512, 3554, 4151.
Freight rates, 938, 947, 2196, 2980.
Gimli land patent, 1359.
Government officials in politics, 626, 706, 741, 1865.
Grain
  Bill, 3161, 3575.
  Elevators, 1646-1666.
Grand Rapids water lease, 1361.
High Commissioner's office, 312.
Hog cholera, 3174.
House of Commons distribution office, 1775.
Hudson Bay terminals, 680, 1209.
Immigration, 1613, 4155.
  Asiatic, 350, 1220, 5213.
  Deportations, 891, 1613, 1640.
  European, 572, 1642, 4159.
  Hindu, 4022, 4130, 4214, 4295, 4369, 4524, 4556, 4562, 4717, 4954.
  Regulations, 350, 351, 4155.
  Statistics, 351.
  Unemployed, 4157, 5211.
  United States, 1616, 1640.
Indians
  British Columbia reserves, 5209.
  Kitsilano reserve, 350, 664, 922.
  Schools, 2397, 3481, 3532.
Irrigation, 3485, 3601.
Kamloops
  Drill hall, 1331.
  Public building, 1021.
Karluk, steamer, 811, 2264.
Land patents, 3113.
Lands unpatented, taxation of, 1921.
Lesser Slave Lake, dredging in, 5236.
Metric system, 1754.
Militia, 5006.
Mounted police, 710, 4964.
National Transcontinental Railway investigation, 2189.
Naturalization, 4130, 4144, 4808.
Natural resources, provincial control of, 1091.
Naval service, 329-336.
Navigable waters, pollution of, 1746.
Pacific, Trans-Canada and Hudson Bay Railway Company, 2949.
Parks, Dominion, 4154.
Patents, renewal of, 1668, 2918.
Petroleum, export of, 972, 1759, 3463.
Pollution of navigable waters, 1746.
Post Office
  Britain to Canada rates, 3232.
  Western service, 3633.
Prince Edward and Hastings Railway Company, 2921.
Public Works estimates, 4201, 5235.
Railway bridges and highway traffic, 3886.
Railway charters, 2950, 2953.
Railway from British Columbia to Alaska, 1870.
Railway level crossings, 3958.
Rainy River Radial Railway Company, 2950.
Rebellion claims, 4967.
St. Peter's Indian reserve, 354, 475, 571, 891.
San Francisco exhibition, 1685.
Seeds Inspection Bill, 4169.
Senate representation, 1492, 5293.
Steffansson expedition, 352.
Tariff, 3038, 3128, 4338, 5363.
Tar sand deposits, 1810.
Telegraph lines, 5242.
Transportation, 2980.
W. C. Edwards Company, 3475.
Western freight rates, 1914.
White Water lake, 1331.
Yukon Placer Mining Act, 3967.

Ontario Equipment Company, 699.

Ontario Fire Insurance Company, 4295, 4713.

Orange Lodges and the French language, 2081.

Ores, treatment of, 1803.

Oriental industrial competition, 4558.

Ottawa
Building leases, 2439, 2519, 2544.
Capital, as the, 1882-1889.
Capital Planning Commission, 2373, 5196.
Coal contracts, 4206.
Custom House, 811, 2079.
Drill hall, 667.
Fire alarm system, 1332.
Improvement Commission, 697.
Property purchases, 666.
Public buildings, 1533, 1875-1890, 4197, 4205.
Rifle range, 668.
Water supply, 314, 1331, 1744, 1882, 4206.

Ottawa river lightkeepers, 574.

Owen Sound mails, 2014.

Pacaud, Mr. Lucien T. (Megantic)
Canadian Northern Railway, 3979.
Dismissals, 1390.

Pacific defence forces, 1751.

Panama canal, 2915.
Effect on Canadian rates, 3509.

Papineau, Mr. Louis J. (Beauharnois)
Valleyfield dredging, 2992.

Paquet, Mr. Eugene (L'Islet)
Agriculture, 1143.
Immigration, 1437, 1639.
Postal service, 3853.

Paradis, L., fumigation station inspector, 2840.

Parcel post, 215, 257, 350, 1360, 5246.
Franking privilege, 621.

Pardee, Mr. Frederick F. (West Lambton)
Brantford public building, 877.
Canadian Northern Railway, 3953, 4036, 4068.
Drill halls, 1890.
Farmers Bank, 4917.
Ferguson, G. H., appointment of, 1915.
Grain Commission, 2376.
Lake Erie buoy service, 2519.
Militia, 702, 2309, 3428.
Minister of Militia and Ulster, 1902.
Newmarket canal, 4368.
Parcel post, 1360.
Petroleum, export of, 3465.
Tariff, 3115.
Toronto harbour, 812.
Trade Commissioners, 886.

Parent, engineer, dismissal of, 5241.

Paris Government office, 4965.

Parliamentary documents, distribution of, 1775.

Parliamentary procedure
See also Speaker.
Answers to questions, lengthy, 1061.
Divorce Bills—printing of evidence in French, 4880.
Estimates not printed in French, consideration of, 403.
Ex-members, statements affecting, as questions of privilege, 1119-1125.
Improper motives, imputation of, to Government, 2009.
Privilege, questions of, 343, 705, 1119, 2016, 2083, 3455.
Question ruled out as improper and frivolous; appeal, 2017; div., 2019.
Questions without notice, 285, 475, 477, 511.
Reply, right of, on adjournment motion, 519.
Senate amendments
Amendment of, 5034.
Discussion of, 4893.
Shipping Bill not preceded by resolution, 743.
Supply, Committee of, without question put, 306, 512, 707.
Supply resolutions, concurrence in en bloc, 2376.
Thursdays, Government business on, 696.

Parliamentary representation. See House of Commons and Senate.

Patents
Office, 5200.
Record, 1098.
Renewal of, 1668, 2918, 2948, 3205.

Payne, Steven, employment of, 1605.

Peace Centenary. See Canadian Peace Centenary Association.

Peat, experiments with, 1804.

Pedley, F., case of, 817.

Pelagic sealing claims, 2372.

Pelee Island steamer subsidy, 5039.

Pelletier, Hon. L. P., expenses of, 1117.

Pelletier, Hon. Louis P. (Postmaster General)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Dismissals, 203.
Redistribution of representation, 203.
Transportation, 206, 209.
United Shoe Machinery Company, 207.
By-elections, 209.
Free food, 212.
Naval defence, 213.
Parcel post, 215.
Atlantic mail service, 94, 5056.
Canadian Northern Railway, 4634.
Civil Service appointments, 1164.
Divorce bills, 4882.

Pelletier, Hon. Louis P.—Con.

Empress of Ireland, loss of, 4556.
Exhibitions, 1685.
Farmers Bank, 4741.
Georgian Bay canal, 2966.
High Commissioner's office, 1767.
House of Commons
French translation, 733, 736, 1779.
Post office, 399.
Representation, 854, 5315.
Intercolonial Railway—Rivière du Loup facilities, 4970.
Lafontaine, Mr., Canada's exhibition representative, 1685.
Lemieux, Hon. R., Asiatic trip of, 705.
Lévis quarantine station, 1108.
Monk, Hon. F. D., death of, 3786.
National Transcontinental Railway, 4462.
Quebec terminals, 4845, 4852, 4974.
Naval service, 432, 5161.
Oka postmistress, 3505.
Pilotage, 3629.
Post Office Act Amendment, 2380, 3222, 5033, 5071, 5360.
Post Office
Automobiles, 5130, 5146, 5262, 5361.
British magazines, postage on, 3227.
Eastern Townships, dismissals in, 3640, 5261.
Employees and salaries, 341, 2378, 3220.
Estimates, 341, 2364, 3572, 3632, 3638, 3843, 5129, 5249.
Franking privilege, 971, 3223.
Indecent publications, 3236.
Letter carriers on electric railways, 3217.
Letters, registration of, 3222.
Newspapers, rates on, 3234, 3244, 5033, 5071.
Parcel post, 215, 5250.
Railway mail clerks, 2380, 3239, 3572, 5360.
Returns, alleged incomplete, 3632, 5145.
Rural mail
Boxes, 5133.
Service, 2364, 3852, 5249, 5361.
Quebec
Battlefields Commission, 4113.
Quarantine station, 1108.
Returns, alleged incomplete, 2364.
Senate representation, 5299.
Transatlantic mail service, 589, 1645.
Truro post office, 1909.
Vincent, J. U., appointment of, 1429.
Voters' lists, 2373.

Pembroke armoury, 5193.

Penitentiary investigation. See Kingston.

Perley, Hon. G. H., trip to London of, 4631.

Perley, Hon. Geo. H. (Argenteuil)
Finance Department estimates, 722.
Loan companies, 970.

Perley, Hon. G. H.—Con.

Ottawa Improvement Commission, 1889.
Trust companies, 793.
Union Life Insurance Company, 723, 926.

Petroleum, export of. See Export Act Amendment Bill.

Pickled Fish. See Fish.

Pictou
Bank, 1696.
Mail carrier, 572.
Mail contracts, 1690, 1819, 1913.
Post offices, 1022.
Public building, 809.
Rural mail, 924, 1023.

Pig iron drawback. See Customs Act Amendment Bill.

Pilotage
Agent, 1219.
Montreal, 1117.
St. Lawrence river, 815, 984, 3621.
See Canada Shipping Act Amendment Bill.

Pilots, superintendents of, 666.

Pioneer settlers, Lord Selkirk's, 3207.

Plainfield post office, 2016.

Plantaganet rural mails, 2840.

Point Fortune wharf, 3398.

Political partisanship, investigations into, 2262, 2308.

Pollution of Navigable Waters Bill. 1r., 4. 2r., 1750. Ref. to Select Com., 1751. See also 1740, 1910, 2013.

Port Arthur government elevator, 809.

Port Colborne elevator, 2990.

Port Daniel lobster hatchery, 2519, 3318.

Port Hood public wharf, 355.

Port Maitland post office, 1913.

Portneuf
Lightkeeper, 1219, 3510.
County post offices, 1690.

Post Office Act Amendment Bill. Res., 2380. 1r., 2384. 2r., 3173. Com., 3222. 3r., 3249. Senate amendments, 5033, 5071, 5360, 5376.

Post Office
Automobiles, 3113, 5130, 5262.
Country post offices and libraries, 892.
English magazines, postage on, 2312.

Post Office.—Con.

Employees' Salaries. See Civil Service Act Amendment Bill.
Estimates, 341, 2364, 3571, 3632, 3638, 3840, 5129.
Letter carriers on electric cars, 3247.
Mail bag locks, 354, 473, 701.
Mail boxes, 2364.
Mail contracts cancelled, 703.
Rural mail service. See that title.
Salaries. See Civil Service Act Amendment Bill.
Savings banks interest, 5199.
Transatlantic mail service. See that title.

Potato embargo by United States, 744.

Potatoes, tariff on, 3044, 3059.

Poulsen wireless, 2687, 5246, 5249.

Power, Mr. William (West Quebec)
National Transcontinental Railway investigation, 2248.

Prescott county mails, 2962.

Press Conference, Imperial, 4961.

Prince Edward Island
Banks, 1781, 2543.
Freight rates, 308, 926, 1018.
Railway, 4483.
Representation, 123, 707, 849, 853, 859, 863, 5285, 5299, 5306, 5359.
Transportation, 399.
Winter service, 701, 757.

Printing and Stationery Department estimates, 724, 1774.

Printing Bureau building, 4370.

Prison reform, 4511, 4522.

Prisons and Reformatories Act Amendment Bill. 1r., 3397. 2r., 3466. Com., 3466. 3r., 3466.

Private Bill legislation, responsibility for, 994.

Private Bills discussed
Acadia Loan Corporation, 1416.
Alberta Central Railway Company, 1891.
Arnoldi, J., Patent of, 2948.
Atlin Railway Company, 2397.
Auto Wheels, Limited, patent of, 1668.
Barcelona Light and Power Company, 1911, 1981.
Boy Scouts Association, 4131. See also 5002.
Brazilian Light and Power Company, 1982.
British American Nickel Corporation, 1982.

Private Bills.—Con.

British Trust Company, 1416.
Burrard Tunnel and Bridge Company, 764.
Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company, 765, 795, 992.
Calgary and Fernie Railway Company, 1667.
Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Company 4470.
Canadian Northern Railway Company, 1760, 4470, 4670.
Canadian Pacific Railway Company, 769.
Catholic Mutual Benefit Association, 4474.
Central Ontario Railway, 1892.
Central Railway Company of Canada, 996.
Central Western Canada Railway Company, 767, 804.
Continental Fire Insurance Company of Canada, 1666.
Erie, London and Tillsonburg Railway Company, 995.
Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway Company, 994.
Farnham and Granby Railway Company, 3505.
Fredericton and Grand Lake Coal and Railway Company, 3205.
Goldschmidt, R., patent of, 2918, 3205.
Grand Trunk and Canada Atlantic Railway Companies, 2922.
Grand Trunk Railway Company, 767.
Joliette and Lake Manuan Colonization Railway Company, 994.
Kettle Valley Railway Company, 1892.
Labrador, Quebec and Southern Railway Company, 2922, 2951, 4473.
Lachine, Jacques Cartier, and Maisonneuve Railway Company, 767.
Lake Erie and Northern Railway Company, 1188.
London and Lake Erie Railway Company, 1891.
London and Port Stanley Railway Company, 1416.
McClary Manufacturing Company, 1216.
Manitoba and Northwestern Railway Company, 1891.
Mortgage Corporation of Nova Scotia, 1416.
National Council of Women of Canada, 2948.
National Wood Distilling Company, patent of, 1668.
Norfolk and Elgin Railway Company, 1667.
Northern Territorial Railway Company, 2175.
North Shore Power, Railway, and Navigation Company, 4471.
Ottawa and Ungava Railway Company, 992.
Ottawa, Northern and Western Railway Company, 764.
Pacific, Peace River and Athabaska Railway Company, 992.

Private Bills—Con.

Pacific, Trans-Canada and Hudson Bay Railway Company, 2921, 2948.
Peace River Tramway and Navigation Company, 995.
Prince Edward and Hastings Railway Company, 2921, 2949.
Prudential Life of Canada, 2899, 3478, 3506.
Queen's University, 770.
Rainy River Radial Railway Company, 2950.
Rio de Janeiro and Sao Paulo Telephone Company, 1892.
Saskatchewan Central Railway Company, 2956.
Saskatoon and Hudson Bay Railway Company, 3827.
Les Soeurs de la Charité de l'Hopital Saint Antoine de Le Pas, 1669.
Sterling Trusts Corporation, 1417.
Thessalon and Northern Railway Company, 993.
Toronto, Niagara and Western Railway Company, 3199, 3270, 3476.
University of Emmanuel College, 2397.
Vineberg, Helen, divorce bill, 4670, 4880.
W. C. Edwards Company, 3474.
Western Dominion Railway Company, 3473.
West Ontario Pacific Railway Company, 769.
Willson, T. L., patent of, 2918.

Privilege, questions of Aikins, Mr., 3892.
Armstrong, Mr. J. A. M., 3114.
Best, Mr., 3114.
Burnham, Mr., 3058.
Chisholm, Mr. W., 2085, 5955.
Crothers, Mr., 707.
Devlin, Mr., 1119.
Fisher, Mr., 3113.
Hughes, Mr. Sam., 2083.
Knowles, Mr., 3454.
Lachance, Mr., 1784.
Law, Mr., 343.
Lemieux, Mr., 704.
Lesperance, Mr., 126.
Macdonald, Mr., 3160.
Murphy, Mr., 257.
Pardee, Mr., 2084.
Rhodes, Mr., 3114.
Smith, Mr., 3114.
Sutherland, Mr., 3114.
Turriff, Mr., 2546.
Walker, Mr., 3114.
Wilson, Mr. C. A., 2016.

Privy Council, Judicial Committee of, appointment of Law Lords to, 1952.

Proportional Representation, 613, 619, 848, 856, 5285.

Proulx, Mr. Edmond (Prescott)
Canadian Northern Railway, 4053.
Capital punishment, 505.

Proulx, Mr. Edmond.—Con.

Carson, Sir Edward, alleged cablegram to, 2082, 2178.
Civil Service, 4446.
Farmers Bank, 4800.
French translators, 5274.
Hay contracts, 1020.
Healey, Mr., dismissal of, 5270.
Judges' salaries, 1939, 3881.
Marriage laws, 444.
Menace newspaper, 3056.
Militia
Automobiles, 813, 2081.
Canteens, 2437.
Employees, 813.
Estimates, 3415, 3419, 5269 (amdt).
Gift of horse, 814.
Private car repairs, 813.
Sham battle, 814.
Special train, 814.
Minister of Militia in Europe, 444.
Ministers' travelling expenses, 610.
Montreal Colonization Society, 472.
O'Brien, A. H., superannuation of, 1952.
Plantaganet rural mails, 2840.
Potts, A., payments to, 369.
Prescott county mails, 2962.
Printing and advertising, Government, 729.
Public buildings, rentals of, 1906.
Queenston Heights picnic, 441.
Royal Military College, 3207.
St. Antoine de Le Pas Sisters of Charity, 1669.
Selkirk's, Lord, pioneer settlers, 3207.
Senate representation, 5298.
Vancouver drill hall, 362, 892, 1021, 1117.
Vancouver Orange Lodge, Irish Home Rule resolution of, 2785.

Provincial members, employment of, 3510.

Prudential Life of Canada, 2898. See also Private Bills discussed.

Public Works Estimates
Buildings, 1533, 1875, 1893, 5218, 5231.
Dredging, 5224, 5236.
Harbours and rivers, 5214, 5231, 5233.
Salaries, etc., 342.
Slides and booms, 5231.
Telegraph lines, 2375, 5234-5245.

Pugsley, Hon. William (St. John city)
Asiatic trade, development of, 5036.
Atlantic mail service, 5050.
Canadian Northern Railway, 4028, 4042, 4058, 4216-4274, 4297-4331, 4391, 4639.
Civil Service superannuation, 5370.
Cost of living, 5376.
Dry docks subsidies, 4090.
Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, 4835.
Hampton public building site, 4189.
House of Commons representation, 5306.
Intercolonial Railway
Branch lines, 5112.
Estimates, 4864.

Pugsley, Hon. Wm.—Con.

Ocean Limited, 4630, 4888.
Militia, 5019.
National Transcontinental Railway, 4457, 4459, 4461, 4854, 5033, 5072 (amdt.), 5090.
Naturalization, 4823.
Pelee Island steamer service, 5039.
St. John
Dredging, 5224.
Railway and steamship service, 5050.
St. John Valley Railway bridges, 4023.
Senate representation, 5290, 5299, 5305.
Tariff, 4336.

Quebec (city)
Arsenal, 5028.
Battlefields Commission, 1783, 1784. See also National Battlefields at Quebec Bill.
Bridge, 4559, 4463, 5030, 5108.
Harbour Commission attorney, 1604, 2263.
Harbourmaster, 5029.
Harbour plant, 2788, 3055, 3398.
Land purchases, 1434.
Marine agency, 2996.
Quarantine officials, 354.
Union station, 1913.
Weights and Measures, assistant inspector of, 3318.

Quebec Harbour Commissioners Bill. Res., 3632. 1r., 3636. 2r., 3876. Com., 3876. 3r., 3895.

Quebec-Lévis mails, 2263.

Quebec (Province) Seigniories, 568.

Quebec and Saguenay Railway, 4022, 4053, 4557.

Queenston Heights picnic, 441.

Radium ores, 1692, 1814.

Railway Act Amendment Bills.
Armstrong, Mr. J. E. 1r., 1013.
Borden, Mr. Joint Com., 2947.
Demers, Mr. 1r., 610, 793.

Railway Commission, Dominion, 574, 2372, 2437, 4160.

Railway Employees House of Service Bill. 1r., 2175.

Railway Level Crossings Bill. Res., 3896. 1r., 3896. 2r., 3957. Com., 3957. 3r., 4023.

Railway Mail Clerks. See Civil Service Act (P.O.) Amendment Bill.

Railways
Charters, granting of, 2953.

Railways.—Con.

Crossings, level, 360, 3200, 3270, 4166. See also Railway Level Crossings Bill.
Government ownership of, 3974-3979, 4391-4413.
Land grants to, 5027.
Suburban trains, 1062.
See also names of railways.

Railways and Canals estimates, 438, 1956, 2963-2995, 4160-4167, 4939-4953, 5106-5129.
Ministerial statement, 1957.
Canals, 1957.
Government Railways, 1959.
Hudson Bay Railway, 1962.
National Transcontinental Railway, 1964.
Salaries, etc., 438.

Rainville, Mr. Joseph H. (Chambly and Verchères)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Free wheat, 288.
Immigration, 291.
Agriculture, aid to, 292.
Highways improvement, 293.
Cold storage, 294.
Cost of living, 294.
Civil Service, 1384.

Ranching and Grazing Commission, 574, 2543.

Real estate advertisements. See Criminal Code Amendment Bill.

Reciprocity with the United States, 9, 117, 122, 297.

Records, Departmental, Commission, 4963.

Red Head harbour, 891.

Redistribution of representation. See House of Commons.

Reid, Hon. J. D. (Minister of Customs)
Alert, steamer, 343, 474.
Basic slag, 639.
Canals, 1957, 2963-2995, 4162, 5109.
Colpitts, G. A., case of, 452.
Customs estimates, 400, 413, 422-439, 963-969, 998-1011, 2374.
Government Railways claims, 1910, 2392.
House of Commons representation, 5307, 5360.
Hudson Bay Railway, 1962, 4464-4466, 4468, 4476.
Intercolonial Railway
Branch lines, 5119.
Estimates, 3178, 4165, 4860.
Killaim, A. E., retirement of, 1728.
Management, 3264.
Ocean Limited train, 4883.
Pension fund, 5362.

Reid, Hon. J. D.—Con.
Labrador, Quebec and Southern Railway Company, 2952.
National Transcontinental Railway
Eastern section, 5033.
Estimates, 4453-4462, 4968, 5106.
Ministerial statement, 1964.
Montreal, connection with, 5127.
Petroleum, export of, 971.
Prince Edward Island Railway, 1962, 4483.
Quebec bridge, 5108.
Railway level crossings, 3896, 3957, 4023, 4166.
Railways and Canals estimates, 438, 1957, 2963-2995, 4160-4167, 4939-4953, 5106.
Returns, alleged incomplete, 4959.
St. John Valley Railway, 3036.
Bridges, 3880, 3959, 4023.
St. Peter's canal, 2963, 2995, 4480.
Southampton Railway Company, 1469.
Toronto terminals, 3784.
Trent canal
Construction, 4163.
Investigation, 4991.
Welland canal, 2963, 2987.
Winnipeg terminals, 3454, 3558.

Reid Mr. Jas. (Restigouche)
Intercolonial Railway car charges, 352.

Reindeer herd, 4155.

Rhodes, Mr. Edgar N. (Cumberland)
Battlefields, preservation of, 4116.
Customs service, appointments to, 969.
Dismissals, 1007.
Fenian raid veterans, 4354.
Fort Cumberland, restoration of, 4183.
Government officials in politics, 435.
House of Commons representation, 5324, 5335.
Privilege, 3114.
Senate representation, 5304.

Richibucto life-saving crew, 668.

Richmond county public works, 571.

Richmond and Wolfe public buildings, 1694, 4294.

Reindeau, S., employment of, 1114.

Rigaud
Post office, 442, 3638, 4021.
Wharf, 442, 574.

Rimouski
Customs, 2015.
Engineers, 2079, 4021.
Harbour, 2079, 2310.
Insurance Company, 4713, 4807.
Land purchase, 1695.
Medical service, 2015.

Robb, Mr. James A. (Huntingdon)
Brome experimental dairy station, 1110.
Budget, 2639.
Agriculture, 2640.
Tariff, 2641.
Dairy products, 2643.
Dismissals, 432.
Explosives, manufacture of, 1810.
Grain Bill, 3584.
Horse breeding, 472.
Live stock purchases, 470.
Naval service, 5164.
Norton creek, 5028.
Transportation, 2987.
Valleyfield
Dredging, 2992.
Wharf, 5234.

Robidoux, Mr. Ferdinand J. (Kent, N.B.)
Fisheries advisory board, 2413.

Robitaille postmaster, 3058.

Roche, Hon. W. J. (Minister of the Interior)
Alpine Club of Canada, 4155.
Astronomical surveys, 4155.
Buffalo herd, 4155.
Campbell, Glen, charges against, 624, 1857.
Dominion Lands Act Amendment, 3249, 3335-3360, 3511.
Dominion Lands and Parks, 1836-1870, 2372, 4151.
Orders in Council approved, 4713.
Forest reserves, 3512, 3554, 4151.
Government officials in politics, 624, 1836.
Immigration
Agencies, 1628.
Asiatic, 1253, 4214.
Bulgarian, 4560.
Chinese, 5212.
Estimates, 1612-1644, 4165, 5210.
Hindu, 4524, 4557, 4564, 4954 5212.
Homestead entries by continental immigrants, 1625, 4158.
Inspection, 1441.
Italian, 1634.
Maritime provinces, to, 5211.
Results of policy, 1612, 1625.
Russian, 4560.
United States, 1625.
Indian Act Amendment, 1817, 2395, 3481, 3532, 4830.
Indians
British Columbia, 2477, 5209.
Generally, 422, 2480.
Northwest Provinces and Territories, 2478, 5209.
Nova Scotia, 2474-2477, 5209.
Ontario and Quebec, 2472-2474.
Interior Department estimates, 338, 1836, 2363, 2372, 4151.
Irrigation, 3599, 4153.
Lands unpatented, taxation of, 1920.
Natural resources, provincial control of, 1079.
Petroleum rights, 975.
Reindeer herd, 4155.

Roche, Hon. W. J.—Con.

St. Peter's Indian reserve, 475.
Seed grain, 5210.
Volunteer bounty, 1396, 1611.
Water-power surveys, 4153.
Yukon, Government of, 1835.
Yukon Placer Mining Act, 3859, 3965.

Rocky Point wharf, 3113, 3318.

Rogers, Hon. Robt. (Minister of Public Works)
Brantford public building, 872.
Canadian Northern Railway, 4416, 4550.
Canning public building, 5226.
Carslake Hotel property, 4023.
Dry Docks subsidy, 3961, 4090.
Ewart, D., chief architect, 5230.
Georgian Bay canal, 1050, 1733.
Government officials in politics, 628, 741, 1846.
Grand Trunk Pacific Railway mechanics' strike, 5034.
House of Commons representation, 5230.
National Transcontinental Railway, 5078.
Public Works estimates
Buildings, 1533, 1875, 1893, 4182-4207, 5218-5231.
Dredging, 5224, 5236.
Harbours and rivers, 4207-4213, 5214, 5231, 5233.
Miscellaneous, 5230.
Salaries, etc., 342.
Slides and booms, 5231.
Telegraph lines, 2375, 5234-5245.

Ross, Mr. Duncan C. (West Middlesex)
Canadian Northern Railway, 4370.
Farmers Bank, 3527, 4921.
Muncey Indians, 2475.
Shipbuilding in Canada, 418.

Ross rifle, 513.

Rosthern
Customs collector, 573, 997.
Lands agent, 573.

Roy, J. N., employment of, 698.

Royal assent, 2376, 2383, 4292 4321.

Royal Military College, 3207, 5015.

Royal Society of Canada, 350, 5267.

Rural mail service, 376, 5132, 5245, 5361.

Ste. Anne de la Pocatière
Experimental station, 360.
Wharf, 2078.

Ste. Anne des Monts wharf, 2687.

Ste. Anne de Restigouche dredging, 3112.

St. Armand mails, 3208.

Ste. Brigide mails, 893.

St. Casimir post office, 360, 667.

St. David de Lévis postmaster, 4369.

St. Esprit lightkeeper, 473.

St. Hyacinthe mails, 2014.

St. Jerome wharf, 3113.

St. John, N.B.
Custom house, 1330.
Harbour, 1331, 1693, 4090-4112.
Marine employees, 1913.

St. John and Quebec Railway, 2546, 2789, 2997.

St. John and Quebec Railway Bridges Bill.
Res., 3880. 1r., 3886. 2r., 3959. Com., 3959, 4023. 3r., 4090.

St. Johns and Iberville
Bridge, 2689.
Rural mail, 366.

St. Johns and Iberville rural mail, 366.

St. Johns, Que.
Customs collector, 893.
Inland Revenue collector, 1021.

St. Joseph de Sorel
Post office, 572.
Trempe, L. E., employment of, 1434, 1695.

St. Lawrence
Accidents, 3253, 3398, 3622. See also Empress of Ireland.
Dams, 3317.
Ice breakers, 987.
Rates, 976, 982.
Ship channel 976-991.
Tug boilers, 1361.

St. Leonards immigration agent, 569.

Ste. Perpetue food inspector, 359.

St. Peter's
Canal, 1020, 2903, 2963, 2995, 4480.
Indian Reserve, 354, 475, 571, 891.

St. Roch des Aulnaies excise officer, 360.

St. Romuald post office, 809, 4021.

St. Theodore D'Acton rural mail, 700.

Sackville public wharf, 568.

Safety of Life at Sea Convention, 358, 787.

San Francisco Exposition. See Exhibitions.

Sault Ste. Marie mails, 2014.

Scales inspection, 1419.

Schaffner, Mr. F. L. (Souris)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Farmers' delegation, 106.
By-elections, 106.
Manitoba boundaries, 107.
Transportation, 107.
Agriculture, 109.
Cost of living, 110.
Naval defence, 111.
Dismissals, 1180.
Freight rates, 940.
Naturalization, 4534.
Natural resources, provincial control of, 1085.
Terminal elevators, 1657.

School lands, 3638.

Secretary of State's estimates, 724, 1760-1780.

Secret Commissions Bill, 4555, 4712.

Seed grain, distribution of, 369.

Seeds, inspection of. See Inspection and Sales Act Amendment Bill.

Séguin, Mr. Paul A. (L'Assomption)
Dorion, dredging at, 443.
House of Commons representation, 5318.
Hudson Bay Railway, 5030.
Joliette building, 1023.
L'Assomption wharf, 2263.
Soulanges canal, 2179, 2263.
Terrebonne postmaster, 1019.
Tobacco revenues, 2957.

Senate Employees Bill. 1r., 4711.

Senate reform, 1495, 5282.

Senate representation—Address to the King. Res., 5277. Com., 5290. Senate amdts., 5376, 5378.

Senate Representation Bills
Alberta. Res., 1498. 1r., 1498.
British Columbia. Res., 3513. 1r., 3516.
Manitoba. Res., 1483. 1r., 1497. See also 1911.
Saskatchewan. Res., 1498. 1r., 1498.

Sévigny, Mr. Albert (Dorchester)
Experimental farms, 1149.
National Transcontinental Railway
Investigation, 2218.
Payments to contractors, 1781.
Sillery lands, 1534.
Portneuf county post offices, 1690.
Quebec Battlefields Commission, 1783.
St. Johns Inland Revenue collector, 1378.

Sexsmith, Mr. John A. (East Peterborough)
Butter, manufacture of, 3166.
Lemieux, Hon. R., trips of, 698.
Trent canal, 4997.

Sharpe, Mr. Samuel (North Ontario)
Divorce bills, 4883.
Farmers Bank, 4764.
Fenian raid veterans, 3373.
National Transcontinental Railway investigation, 2202.
Ross rifle, 517.
Queen's University, 770.
Senate reform, 5284.
Trust companies, 2908.
Unemployment, 4157.

Sharpe, Mr. William H. (Lisgar)
Hudson Bay terminals, 688, 4464.

Shefford county rural mail, 363.

Shelburne
Fisheries, 349.
Fishery guardians, 2961.
Public works, 1330.

Shepherd, Mr. F. H. (Nanaimo)
Duncan's Station public building, 4203.
Explosives, regulation of, 3865.
Labour conditions on Vancouver Island, 539, 1283.

Sherbrooke (city)
Automobiles for officials, 2959, 5130, 5262.
Drill hall, 2959, 3111.
Leased buildings, 3317, 3894.
Militia quarters, 3422-3428.
Post office, 3509, 3715, 4368.

Sherbrooke (county)
Agriculture in, 5027.
Postal inspection, 2959, 3645.

Shigawake rural mails, 1692.

Shipping, registration of, 754. See also Canada Shipping Act Amendment Bill.

Shubenacadie-Deans mails, 1817.

Silk, tariff on, 3159.

Sinclair, Mr. John H. (Guysborough)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Fishing industry, 142.
Naval defence, 145.
Highways improvement, 147.
Mail bag locks, 150.
Amherst armoury, 3714, 4293.
Armouries, 666, 2786. See also Amherst
Banque Internationale, 4712.
Boilers for tugs, 1361.
Budget, 2734.
Election issues, 2735.
Fishing industry, 2738.
Agricultural implements, 2739.
Fishing twine, 2740.
Expenditures, 2741.
Canada shipping, 90.

Sinclair, Mr. John H.—Con

Canning public building, 5224.
Canso letter boxes, 703.
Cattle inspection, 759.
Civil Service, appointments to, 1192.
Coal contracts for Government dredges, 923.
Coasting privileges, 90, 754, 2435, 2915. See also Shipping.
Cobequid, wreck of, 1167.
Cold storage, 700.
Cole Harbour wharf, 1693.
Cost of Living Commission, 2436.
Cranberry Island light, 1175, 1193.
Dean Settlement Railway, 3318.
Dismissals
Fish hatchery employees, 370.
Generally, 1192.
Laing, J. R., postmaster, 370.
Drill halls. See Armouries.
Duchemin, H. P., payments to, 353, 697, 779, 893, 926, 1111,
Electoral corruption, 344.
Esquimalt dock, 813, 1433.
Experimental farms, 1160.
Farmers Bank, 723, 4804, 4895, 4903 (amdt.) 4912.
Fenian raid veterans, 349, 440, 925, 1604, 2416, 2787, 2962, 3368, 3894, 4348.
Fish and fisheries
Advisory board, 2399, 2415.
Curing expert, 571.
Lobster fishing, 815, 5187.
Modus vivendi licenses, 1603.
Pickled fish, inspection of, 4437.
Reduction works, 1693, 2080.
Statistics, 1020, 1361, 2400, 5191.
Transportation, 376, 894, 1017, 1114-1215, 2401, 2937, 3412, 5070, 5184.
Twine, duty on, 344, 3153.
Violations of Act, 1603.
Fraser, J. McL., fishery officer, 5030.
Government railways claims, 2394.
Government steamers
Alert, 326, 343.
Canada, 3113.
Repairs to, 404, 1204, 1332, 2430.
Gunhilde, steam yacht, 2688.
Guysborough public wharf, 355.
House of Commons
Post office, 477.
Representation, 5350.
Hudson Bay Railway mileage, 364.
Indian Harbour Lakes postmaster, 3055.
Intercolonial Railway
Branch lines, 353.
Employees on Ferry Scotia, 1016.
Estimates, 3183, 4865.
Freight rates, 894, 921, 1017, 1021, 1434, 1690, 2016.
Guysborough branch, 4481.
Ice contracts, 364.
Management, 3305.
Point Tupper ferry, 894.
Refrigerator cars, 1360.

Sinclair, Mr. John H.—Con.

Standard rules, 1693.
Sunny Brae branch, 894.
Tonnage, 3110.
Labour strikes at Nanaimo, 345.
Larry's River harbourmaster, 2961.
Le Blanc, seaman, burial of, 667, 815, 5177.
Life-saving rewards, 420, 5176.
McPherson C., employment of, 2787.
Matches, white phosphorus, 1538.
Militia
Armouries. See that title.
Boot contract, 2591.
Generally, 4617.
Political demonstrations, 5010.
Training areas, 5020.
Montreal harbour, 3875.
Mounted police, 2544.
Naturalization, 4817.
Naval College, Halifax, 3208.
Navigation, schools of, 750.
New Harbour breakwater, 365.
Newspaper advertising, 2438.
Newspapers, postal rates on, 3245.
North Riverside postmaster, 2686, 3209. 3509, 3845, 4022.
Petawawa camp, 815.
Provincial subsidies, 344.
Prudential Life of Canada, 3479, 3506.
Railway mail clerks, 2382.
Railway subsidies, 355.
Red Head harbour, 891.
Returns, alleged incomplete, 4960, 5361.
Sand Point wharf, 5229.
Shellfish Commission, 667, 1361.
Shipping Act Amendment, 746.
Shipping
Insurance, 982.
Registry, 754.
Spanish Ship Bay wharf, 3055, 3111.
Steamer subsidies, 2935.
Steam trawling, 471.
Sunny Brae mails, 2309.
Tariff, 3153.
Trade agents, 319, 884.
United States fishermen, 1692.
Vancouver Harbour Commission, 2390.
Vancouver Island public works engineer, 3399.
Victoria rifle range, 3398.
Weights and measures inspection, 2591.

Skinner's Cove works, 809.

Slack, W. F., dismissal of, 921.

Slag. See Basic.

Smith, H. T., emploment of, 812.

Smith, Mr. Wm. (South Ontario)
Budget, 2698.
Free wheat, 2699.
Mixed farming, 2700.
Canadian Northern Railway, 3838.
Horse breeding, 3502.
Privilege, 3114.

Smuggling, alleged, 1782.

Sorel. See St. Joseph de Sorel.

Soulanges Canal, 2989, 2994.
Employees, 2179, 2263.

Souris rifle range, 1435, 1694, 1783, 4567.

South African hay contracts, 1020.

South America trade development association, 1693.

Southampton Railway Company, 1455, 3009.

South Bruce letter boxes, 353.

Southport fish hatchery, 3112.

Spanish Ship Bay wharf, 3055, 3111.

Speaker (Hon. T. S. Sproule), rulings and statements of. See also Parliamentary Procedure.
Adjournment motion on question of privilege, 4958.
Amendment increasing money grant ruled out, 3956.
Amendments, allegations of fact in, 4671.
Answer of minister must be accepted, 705.
Answers to questions
Discussion of, 871.
Lengthy, 1062.
Anticipating notice on Order Paper, 879.
Bills
Certain amendments irregular, 5034.
Divorce bills, right of Commons to hear evidence on, 4880.
On motion to refer back report, evidence not debatable, 4885.
Extraneous matter not debatable on third reading, 4903.
Limit of debate on second reading, 1130.
Must be read a second time before reference to select committee, 1750.
No debate on motion for first reading, 619.
On amendment, discussion must be limited to same, 4646.
On introduction, may be explained, but not debated, 3054.
On Senate amendments, general discussion not admissable, 4893.
Shipping bill to be introduced by resolution, 743.
Ex-member, statement affecting, not a question of privilege, 1119.
Extracts unread not to be reported, 2698.
Government business on Thursdays, 706.
House of Commons
Post Office, 3236.
Library and reading room, closing of, 4215.
Staff, appointments to, 94, 399, 2686, 4954, 5268, 5271.
Stationery, 1370.

Speaker, The.—Con.
Improper motives, imputation of, to Government unparliamentary, 2009.
Incorrect report not a question of privilege, 3455.
Jallet, N., widow of, 1067.
Newspaper articles, irregular to base charges on, 705.
Notices of motion must be taken in regular order, 1362.
Order in the House, 4370, 4411, 4415.
Orders of the Day, debatable questions inadmissable on, 477, 511, 4215.
Petition rejected, 2840.
Privilege, questions of, 343, 705, 1119, 2016, 2085, 3455.
Questions
Irregular, 2017, 2082, 2592.
Statements of fact in, 4561.
Without notice, 285, 475, 477, 511.
Quoting evidence not reported to House irregular, 1344.
Senate, the, to speak disrespectfully of, not allowable, 2596.
Substantive motions, closing of debate on, 464, 1368.
Supply, Committee of, without question put; interpretation of rule, 306, 512, 521, 522.
Unparliamentary expression: 'Boozarium,' 2084.
Voting, member abstaining from, 2021.

Steamship subsidies, 956, 2913, 2923. See also Post Office.

Steel. See Iron and Steel.

Steel barrels, manufacture of, 1534.

Steele, Mr. M. (South Perth)
Budget, 2743.
Prosperity of Canada, 2743.
Taxation, 2744.
Agricultural implements, 2745.
Free wheat, 2746.
Cost of living, 2750.
Milling industry, 2752.
Ocean freight rates, 2930.
Pollution of navigable waters, 1746.

Steffansson expedition. See Karluk.

Stevens, Mr. H. H. (Vancouver)
Alaska-Yukon Railway, 1433.
Budget, 2879.
Fiscal policies, 2881.
Free trade vs. protection, 2883.
Taxation, 2886.
Free wheat, 2889.
Burrard Tunnel and Bridge Company, 765.
Canadian Northern Railway, 4668.
Immigration, Asiatic, 1232, 2639, 5026.
Indian Act Amendment, 3547.
Labour conditions on Vancouver Island, 546.

Stevens, Mr. H. H.—Con.
Money Lenders Act Amendment, 201.
Naturalization, 4150.

Stewart, Mr. Thos. J. (West Hamilton)
Conferences, expenses of, 570.

Stone, tariff on, 3115. See also Brantford Public Building.

Strathcona, Lord, death of, 91, 165.

Strong, Heath, payments to, 1116.

Submarine bell floats, 668.

Subsidies
Mail and steamship, 2913, 2923.
Provincial, 344.
Railway, 355.

Sunny Brae mails, 2309.

Supply Bills
For $52,253,007.71. Res., 2378. 1r., 2r., com. and 3r., 2378.
For $127,831,037.86. Res., 1r., 2r., com. and 3r., 5271.
For details see titles of departments and subjects.

Supreme Court Act (appeals) Amendment Bill. 1r., 3251. 2r., 3462. Com., 3462. 3r., 3462.

Sussex public building, 1694.

Sutherland, Mr. Donald (South Oxford)
Budget, 2815.
Free wheat, 2816.
Agricultural implements, 2819.
Fiscal policies, 2821.
Experimental farms, 1105.
Farmers Bank, 4788, 4911.
Fenian raid veterans, 4362.
Grain Bill, 3575.
Privilege, question of, 3114.

Sydney as an ocean port, 4081.

Tadousac wharf, 2309.

Tariff (Customs) Bill. Res., 3037, 3058, 3114. 1r., 3160. 2r., 4335. Com., 4335. 3r., 4426, 4433.
Amendments proposed
Mr. Loggie, 3052; div., 3106.
Mr. A. K. Maclean, 4426.
See also Budget.

Tariff questions, 1358, 1511.

Tar sand deposits, 1811.

Tatamagouche and Brulé mails, 3208.

Tate, William, compensation to, 4967

Technical education, 355, 568, 3054, 4888, 5206.

Telephone system authorized, 804.

Telescope for observatory, 344.

Terminal elevators, 1646-1666, 3161, 3575-3587.

Terrebonne postmaster, 1019.

Thoburn, Mr. William (North Lanark)
Haultain, Chief Justice, judgment of, on Saskatchewan Companies Act, 1265.
Vineberg, Helen, divorce bill, 4671, 4881.

Thompson, Mr. Alfred (Yukon)
Budget, 2801.
Tariff, 2802.
Yukon, the, 2804.
Free wheat, 2804.
Free trade, 2807.
Government of the Yukon, 1833.
House of Commons rooms, 2080.
Mines Department estimates, 1811, 1814.
Radium-bearing ores, 1814.
Tar sand deposits, 1811.
Telegraph service, 5237.
Yukon Placer Mining Act, 3966.

Thomson, Mr. Levi (Qu'Appelle)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Free wheat, 271.
Agricultural implement duties, 1560.
Budget, 2809.
Tariff Commission, 2809.
Free wheat, 2810.
Agricultural implements, 2814.
Butter, manufacture of, 3165.
Canadian Northern Railway, 4407.
Capital punishment, 499.
Farmers Bank, 4926.
Government officials in politics, 1839.
Naturalization, 4140.

Thorburn railway communication, 701.

Thornton, Mr. Chas. J. (Durham)
Cigarettes, prohibition of, 1476.

Three Rivers
Mails, 2014.
Military camp, 3509.
Post office, 2688.
Preventive officer, 473.
Public buildings, 569.

Tide Head salmon pound, 1692.

Tips Bill. See Secret Commissions.

Titles of Honour Bill. 1r., 4. M. for 2r., 479; negatived, 482.

Tobacco culture, 1147, 1373, 2958, 5200.

Tobin, Mr. Edmund W. (Richmond-Wolfe)
Bury drill hall, 2960.
Cookshire public building, 2960.
Denison, J. R., dismissal of, 3209, 3640, 5259.
Desmarais, A., dismissal of, 1389.
Disraeli wharf, 1435.
Girard, Mr., employment of, 4559.
Land grants, 1916.
Megantic public building, 2960.
Post Office estimates, 3633, 3640.
Richmond and Wolfe
Experimental farm, 1534, 1694, 2015.
Public buildings, 1694, 4294.
St. George's Club, Sherbrooke, 3425.
Weedon public building, 5214.

Tobique Indian reserve, 816, 1218, 1359, 1535, 1915, 2590, 3534.

Toronto Harbour Commissioners. See Toronto Terminals Bill.

Toronto harbour works, 812.

Toronto Terminals Bill. 1r., 3784. 2r., 3880. Com., 3880. 3r., 3880.

Townsend, N. T., resignation of, 2436.

Trade, balance of, adjustment of, 2016.

Trade and Commerce
Bulletins, 474.
Department estimates, 315, 881, 927, 2376, 2913, 2923.

Transatlantic mail service, 94, 376, 577, 1645, 2915, 3226, 5030, 5043.

Transportation, 2971-2986, 3871-3880, 4090-4112, 5082-5106. See also Ocean.

Travelling expenses of ministers, 610.

Trawling, steam, 471.

Trent Canal
Construction, 1958, 4163, 5109.
Investigation, 1817, 4940-4947, 4975-4997.
Water-powers, 2177, 2789, 4162.

Trent Valley Woollen Manufacturing Company, 2177.

Truax, Mr. R. E. (South Bruce)
Chesley post office, 664.
Customs undervaluation, 3318.

Trust Companies Bill. 1r., 793. 2r., 1125. Com., 2903. 3r., 2963. Senate amdts, 4891.

Tubing, brass-covered, tariff on, 3152

Turgeon, Mr. Onesiphore (Gloucester)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Redistribution of representation, 112.
National Transcontinental Railway, 115.

Turgeon, Mr. O.—Con.
Highways improvements, 116.
Reciprocity, 117.
Naval defence, 120.
Bathurst harbour, 348, 4212.
Budget, 2690.
Militia expenditures, 2691.
Free trade, 2693.
Agricultural implements, 2694.
Steel industry, 2697.
Dismissals, 430, 785, 1181.
Fishing disaster: proposed Government aid, 5194.
Fishing industry, 2402, 2415.
Government officials in politics, 348.
House of Commons representation, 862.
Intercolonial Railway
Aird, Wm., employment of, 895.
Canadian Pacific Railway traffic agreement, 605.
King, Samuel, employment of, 895.
Management, 3309.
Moncton property purchase, 2786.
Williams, T., employment of, 895.
Library of Parliament, 1780.
National Transcontinental Railway investigation, 2164.
Navigation, schools of, 752.
Quebec bridge, 4559.
St. John Valley Railway, 3034.
Senate representation, 5295.
Steel industry, 1532, 3034.

Turriff, Mr. John G. (Assiniboia)
Agricultural implements, Customs valuation of, 2958.
Budget, 2510.
Trade conditions, 2510.
Wheat markets, 2512.
Agricultural implements, 2516, 2520.
Cut stone duty, 2525.
Reciprocity with the United States, 2526.
Freight rates, 2528.
Privilege, 2546.
Stone, dressed, tariff on, 3119, 3124.
Trust companies, 2904.

20th Battery, 1361, 2263.

Twine, tariff on, 3157.

Typhoid. See Pollution of navigable waters.

Ulster. See Home Rule.

Union Life Insurance Company, 723, 926, 2374.

Valcartier artillery camp, 924.

Valleyfield
Dam, 2992.
Dredging, 2992.
Excise revenues, 2958.
Wharf, 5234.

Vancouver
Drill hall, 362, 892, 1021, 1117.
Orange Lodge Home Rule resolution, 2785.
Rented buildings, 2957.

Vancouver Harbour Commissioners Bill. 1r., 2175. 2r., 2388. Com., 2388. 3r., 2392.

Vancouver Island
Colliery strke. See Labour.
Engineer, 3399.

Vaudreuil wharfs, 574.

Verville, Mr. Alphonse (Maisonneuve)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Cost of living, 249.
Unemployment, 249.
Canadian Northern Railway, 3981.
Capital punishment, 508.
Chambly canal, 4558.
Civil Service, 4444.
Criminal Code amendment (firearms and detectaphone), 467.
Dismissals, 1375.
Employment bureaus, 1818.
Industrial Disputes Act, 1022.
Great West Saddlery Company and labour, 4594.
Iron workers and fair wages, 1115.
Labour
Department and Minister, 649.
Fair wage officers, 5202, 3709.
Hours on public works, 4.
Importation of workmen, 357.
Montreal harbour, on, 5203.
Wages on public works, 357.
Lachine canal, 1782, 1913.
Militia, 4594.
Montreal
Pilots, 1117.
Public works staff, 1435, 5241.
Resident engineer, 1117, 2439.
Rules of the House, 706.
Smith, H. T., employment of, 812.
South America Trade Association, 1693.
Technical education, 5206.
Unemployment, 249, 1617.
Vancouver Island strike, 572, 1267.

Victoria county, N.S., Government telegraph service, 1359.

Victoria Day, 1916.

Victoria Memorial Museum, 1882.

Victoria
Naval volunteers, 1914.
Rifle range, 3398.

Vincent, J. U., appointment of, 340, 1406, 1427.

Volunteer Bounty Bills
Mr. Sam. Hughes: Res., 3363. 1r., 3396. 2r., 4339. Com., 4339. 3r., 4367.
Mr. Roche: Res., 1396. 1r., 1400. 2r., 1611. Com., 1611. 3r., 1611.

Walker, Mr. Henry J. (East Northumberland, Ont.)
Privilege, 3114.

Wallace, Mr. Thomas G. (Centre York)
Victoria Day, 1916.

Warnock, Mr. David (Macleod)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Free wheat, 301.
Aid to agriculture, 303.
Animals, health of, 3177.
Budget, 2701.
Grazing leases, 2702.
Cattle quarantine, 2704.
Agricultural implements, 2706.
Steel duties, 2708.
Mixed farming, 2709.
Forest reserves, 3557.
Grazing areas, 4152.
Horse breeding, 3495.
Western Dominion Railway, 3473.

Water powers, 3323, 4153. See also Trent Canal.

Waterways. See International.

Watrous postmaster, 3715.

Webster, Mr. John (Brockville)
Budget, 2668.
Dairying industry, 2670.
Reciprocity, 2672.
Butter, manufacture of, 3164.

Weedon public building, 5214.

Weichel, Mr. William G. (North Waterloo)
Budget, 2709.
Wire fencing, 2710.
Trade of Germany, 2711.
Agricultural implements, 2714.
Free food, 2716.
Canadian Peace Centenary Association, 970.
San Francisco exposition, 3254.

Weights and Measures Act Amendment Bill. 1r., 1359. 2r., 1753. Com., 1753. 3r., 1756.

Weights and Measures, inspection of, 2591.

Welland canal, 925, 2963, 5108.

West Branch mail service, 924.

West Indies
Cable, 955.
Steamship service, 439, 956.
Trade, 882, 927, 2015.
Trade commissioner, 440.

Westmorland harbours, 443.

Wharfs, revenue from, 368.

Wheat. See Free Wheat.

White, Mr. Gerald V. (North Renfrew)
Eganville post office, 5222.
Georgian Bay canal, 1055, 2983.
Petawawa camp, 3448.
Railway mail clerks, 3241.

White, Hon. W. T. (Minister of Finance)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Naval defence, 61, 79.
Financial conditions, 62.
Cost of living, 69, 79.
Tariff, 74, 77.
Aid to agriculture, 76.
Agricultural implements, tariff on, 3140.
Bank rates of interest, 5199.
Bounties, 2464. See also Pig Iron and Iron and steel industry.
British Trust Company, 1416.
Budget, 2440.
Revenue and expenditure, 2441.
Special subsidies to railways, 2443.
Loans maturing, 2444.
Net debt, 2446.
Financial conditions, 2446.
Trade conditions, 2447.
Immigration, 2450.
Tariff, 2451.
Wheat and flour, 2452.
Iron and steel, 2453.
Agricultural implements, 2459.
Caustic soda, 2463.
Brass, 2464.
Bounties, 2464.
Flax industry, 2464.
Surtax, 2465.
Canadian Government loan flotations, 5106.
Canadian Northern Railway, 1265, 3929, 4045, 4525, 4526.
Capital Planning Commission, 2373, 5196.
Civil Service, 4437, 4448, 4450.
Civil Service insurance, 1751, 1871.
Civil Service superannuation, 5365.
Correction of press report, 1433.
Farmers Bank, 3518, 4675, 4894, 4913.
Insurance Bill, 1688, 3199.
Iron and steel industry, 1524, 2453, 2464, 3160.
Loan companies, 1128, 4717.
Old age pensions, 1354.
Pig iron drawback, 3210, 3511.
Post Office saving banks, 5199.
Potatoes, tariff on, 3052, 3095.
Prudential Life of Canada, 3478, 3506.
Quebec Battlefields Commission, 3636, 3890.
Sterling Trusts Corporation, 1417.
Tariff, 74, 77, 2451, 3037, 3095, 3115-3147, 4335, 4426.
Trust companies, 1125, 4891.
Union Life Insurance Company, 2374.

White, Mr. William H. (Victoria, Alta.)
Agricultural implement duties, 1599.
Government officials in politics, 1837.
Homestead regulations, 3356.
Militia, 5010.

White slave traffic, 1632, 4523.

White Water lake, 1331.

Wilcox, Mr. Oliver J. (North Essex)
Budget, 2557.
Surpluses, 2558.
Protection, 2559.
Transportation, 2560.
Development of Canada, 2562.
Free trade and protection, 2566.
Rural mails, 2572.
Pledges redeemed, 2573.
Dismissals, 1002.
Dressed stone tariff, 3123.
Technical education, 568.

Wilson, Mr. Charles A. (Laval)
Archives Department, 1773.
Capital punishment, 503, 1731.
Dredging, Des Prairies and Rivière Jesus, 1731, 1735, 5234.
House of Commons representation, 5317.
Italian immigration, 1633.
Judges' salaries, 1939.
Orange Lodges and the French language, 2081.
Penitentiaries inquiry, 571.
Privilege, 2016.
Roy, Dr. J. N., mission of, 698.

Windsor
Fish hatchery, 1535.
Immigration office, 5028.

Winnipeg Joint Railway Terminals Bill. 1r., 3454. 2r., 3558. Com., 3558. 3r., 3621.

Winter, Lt.-Col., C. F., employment of, 2840.

Wireless Telegraphy, 349, 1207, 5183. See also Poulsen.

Wishart, A., commutation of sentence of, 4367.

Woodstock Dominion building coal supplies, 569.

Wrecking plants, 761.

Wright county post offices, 445.

Wright, Mr. William (Muskoka)
Canada Temperance Act, 1761.
Tariff, 3063.

Yarmouth
Harbour, 1015, 2309.
Live stock purchases, 665, 2308.
Rural mail, 570.

Yarmouth North post office, 816.

Young, Angus, customs officer, 669.

Yukon
Government of, 1833.
Judgeship, 4022.

Yukon Placer Mining Bill. 1r., 3859. 2r., 3965. Com., 3965. 3r., 3967.

Y. L.