Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The difficulty might be avoided in future if the translators were instructed not to translate the name of any bank or any institution, which applies for a change of name either into French or English but retain the name asked for in both languages.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Not to translate the name?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—To transfer the name.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, not transfer it at all. If La Banque Jacques Cartier should ask to have its name changed, it should appear in both English and French copies of the Bill in the same way. Just as in the case before us, the Bank of Halifax applies for a change of name and gives it an English name. In the French version the translator has translated those words into a French name, so that on the statute-book the bank would bear, under the circumstances, two names, one French the other English, and it suggested itself to the committee whether the bank could not issue bills under the two names, which would create great confusion. The whole difficulty might be avoided if translators were instructed in no case to change the name of any bank or any corporation, but to adopt that applied for by the parties interested.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—To retain the English or French name as the case might be, both in the English and French copies.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes.

The motion was agreed to.

CROWN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY'S BILL.

AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN, from the Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported Bill (82) 'An Act to incorporate the Crown Life Insurance Company,' with amendments. He said: This is precisely the case of the preceding Bill. In the French copy the company bears the rather long name of 'La Compagnie d'Assurance sur la vie de la Couronne.' It is proposed in both versions that it shall be 'The Crown Life Insurance Company.' I move that the amendments be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

THE CASE OF LIEUT.-COL. WHITE.

MOTION POSTPONED.

The notice of motion being called,

By the Honourable Sir Mackenzie Bowell, K.C.M.G.:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before the Senate all correspondence between the Minister of Militia and Defence, Major General Hutton, Lieut.-Col. Foster, chief staff officer; Lieut.-Col. Holmes, D. O. C. Military District No. 1; the Deputy Minister of Militia or any other official of the Department of Militia and Defence, and Lieut.-Col. W. W. White, of Guelph, Ont., relating to or in any way connected with the selection of, and subsequent removal of, the said Lieut.-Col. White's name from the list of officers of the Canadian militia to undergo a course of instruction in the duties of general staff officers at the Military College, Kingston.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL inquired: Is the hon. Secretary of State in a position to furnish the information called for in this motion?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No. I wrote to the minister about it to-day.

The motion was allowed to stand.

THE MANITOBA SCHOOL QUESTION.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired:

Whether, since the commencement of the present parliament, the government, or any one of the members of the present administration in the name or for the government, has received from the government of Manitoba, or from the Catholic minority of that province, or from the episcopate of any of the provinces, or any member thereof, any communication whatsoever, in the form of a demand, of a claim, of a protest, or otherwise, on the subject of the Manitoba school question?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Since my hon. friend put the question on the paper, I have not had an opportunity of speaking to my colleagues on the subject. At this moment I could only answer for myself. I would, therefore, request him to allow his question to stand for a day or two, and I will endeavour to get answers to the whole of them. Let them stand, say until Monday. I will endeavour to get the information by that time.

The inquiry was allowed to stand.

THE POST OFFICE IN MONTMAGNY.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired:

1. Is the building acquired by the government from the Seminary of Quebec for the use of the post office in the town of Montmagny, by consent of the government simultaneously employed for other uses?
2. To what other uses does the building serve in which the post office of Montmagny is held?
3. Who is the guardian of such building?
4. What is the salary of this guardian?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I would ask the hon. gentleman to let this question also stand until Monday next.

The inquiry was allowed to stand.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS IN GASPE.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY moved:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General praying His Excellency to cause to be laid before this House a copy of all letters and correspondence exchanged between the government or any of its members, and the interested parties, on the subject of the Baie des Chaleurs Railway, of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway, and of the projected railway known under the name of the Short Line Railway of Gaspé; as well as a copy of all requests, petitions, resolutions, or other documents relating to either of these lines.

He said: If the House will permit me I will add after the words 'Short Line Railway of Gaspé,' 'And of the South Shore Railway Company in connection with the granting or payment of subsidies to any of the said companies, or the granting of any privileges to any of them.'

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I see no objection to the hon. gentleman's motion passing, and to the information being given, so far as we have it. Does the hon. gentleman require telegrams and everything of that sort?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Official.

Hon. Mr. MILLS.—I have myself received a large number of telegrams from people along the lines, asking for the passage of this Bill.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I have also received resolutions and telegrams.

The motion was agreed to.

DELAYED RETURNS.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I should like to know from the hon. Minister of Justice, if there is any progress made in the preparation of the answer to be given to the motion I made a month ago. The hon. minister promised he would give me a reply to-day.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—What motion is that?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—For the production of the deeds of the property acquired by the government for the site of the post office at Montmagny.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am unable to give an answer to-day, because the officer from whom I would have to get it is away.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—In South Africa, I suppose?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No, he is in Montreal. He was summoned there as a witness in court.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—When will he be back?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I expect him back to-night.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—When shall I get the answer?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—On Monday.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I suppose he will go back again to Montreal to-night.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am not sure of that. I want to be quite sure that I will be able to give the hon. gentleman the information he seeks.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman may make up his mind that I will come here every day, and ask for that information.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am anxious to give the hon. gentleman the information which he is asking for.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It looks like it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My instruction has been to my officers to keep note of the Order paper and prepare the information that is asked for upon the paper, and I can assure the hon. gentleman that there is no desire on my part to treat with indifference his inquiries. In these matters he is within his right, and I am anxious to give him the information at the earliest possible date.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman is perhaps desirous to move for an inquiry into this transaction. I understand that the parties interested in it are as desirous to have the inquiry started as the hon. gentleman himself is.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If everybody is desirous, I do not see why we cannot get the information.

Hon. Mr. O'DONOHOE—Monday is set apart for the hon. gentleman almost exclusively.

TRAFFIC ON THE I. C. R.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I should like to call the attention of the government to the reckless manner in which Sunday traffic is being carried on in the maritime provinces on the Intercolonial Railway. On Sunday last no less than thirty trains passed in and out of Truro, and the Christian community of that place were shocked at that amount of traffic on the day of rest. There was more traffic on that day than there had been on any day during the previous week, and if the same diligence had been used during the week as was used on Sunday, there would have been no necessity for Sunday traffic. So much were the people annoyed about it that the ministers called attention to it in the pulpits, I was present when one minister spoke of it, and the sound of his voice was drowned by the noise of the whistles of the passenger trains. I hope the hon. Secretary of State wil admonish his wicked partner about this matter.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD (C.B.)—I wish also to call attention to the way in which the eastern section of the Intercolonial Railway is run from Cape Breton. In coming up there were no less than 319 cars sidetracked from Truro to Sydney, a thing that had never happened under the old management, and I was told that it was the incapacity of the officials appointed on that road of late that caused the trouble. The question was discussed in the House of Commons, and reports of the discussion appeared in the papers of Cape Breton when I was at home. It was reported that one of the members of the House stated to the Minister of Railways that the cause of it all was that the Liberal-Conservative officials of the road had not been dismissed. But it is just the other way. The competent Liberal-Conservative officials on that road have been dismissed, and their places filled by men incapable of doing their duty. I was told the other day that a gentleman from Moncton has to go down regularly every week to see that these new men are taught their duties, and when he got to the Sydney station, lately, he found three men arranging the freight that had gone down from Montreal or Halifax to places east of Sydney. He found the car-load from Halifax or Montreal had been divided, a portion of it returned on the Intercolonial Railway to North Sydney and another portion to Louisbourg and other stations east of Sydney. The new officials knew nothing about the matter, and were totally incapable of arranging the freight for the road, of which they had been placed in charge. The state of affairs is deplorable. Merchants with whom I am acquainted told me that they found some freight returned from Sydney to Truro, and they say it is a frequent occurrence. It is impossible that this state of affairs should be continued, and I call the attention of the hon. Secretary of State to it in the hope that he will again ask the Minister of Railways to see that it is remedied.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Before my hon. friend the Secretary of State, replies to these observations, I wish to add a word or two. Before the acquisition of the Drummond Road, it had been a matter of complaint that the train connections were not good with connecting boats and roads, and we were told, after the acquisition of the Drummond Road, that all cause for such complaints would be at an end. Last year new train arrangements were made by the Intercolonial Railway which gave some hope that this promise was going to be made good. The train departing for Halifax left Montreal in the evening about the same time as the Canadian Pacific Railway train left, and the result was good connections were made at Truro and New Glasgow with steamers going to Prince Edward Island. That was so last year. This year the train goes out from Montreal at eleven o'clock in the day, a most unsuitable time for business men, because it breaks into the middle of the day, and worse than that, all the good connections we had last year in the east are broken. There is no close connection with the boats for Prince Edward Island, and I am told there is no close connection with the trains for Cape Breton. What has brought about this change—a change disastrous to the business of the road, and which breaks into the connections not only for Prince Edward Island, but Cape Breton, I wish to call the attention of the Secretary of State to it, so that these complaints may reach the ears of the Minister of Railways. I daresay that the answer may be, as it was on a similar occasion when I brought up matters connected with the government railways in this House, that it is a pity I did not get some one to make these complaints in the other Chamber, where the Minister of Railways has a seat and could reply to them. On looking carefully into that matter, however, I find it makes very little difference whether complaints are made here or there, because the minister is very often absent from his seat, and when he is in it, he is not very prompt or courteous in giving attention to these matters. The hon. Secretary of State is very patient and attentive to the views expressed in this House, and I hope to accomplish more through his kind and diligent mediation in bringing the Intercolonial Railway under proper management, than by addressing the Minister of Railways direct.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I shall bring the observations of the hon. gentleman to the notice of the Minister of Railways and Canals. I do not know whether he directly guides the running arrangements of the government railways. I supposed they were under the control of the officers who had been holding those positions for many years.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—There is not one of those left.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Mr. Pottinger and Mr. Schreiber are the officers, and they are still left. There has been a large increase of traffic; and there has not been a corresponding increase in the roling stock. I know the Minister of Railways has frequently brought the subject to the attention of Council, more particularly as to the increase of rolling stock. The increase of business on the line makes it necessary that sufficient rolling stock to meet the demands of the country should be furnished. I am quite sure parliament will vote the money if it is really needed. I shall, however, call the attention of the Minister of Railways to the remarks made by hon. gentlemen, and I hope that some change may take place.

THE MAIL SERVICE ON THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Would the hon. Secretary of State also call the attention of the Postmaster General to the arrangements for the delivery of postal matter on the Intercolonial Railway. The trains leave Montreal in the morning at eight o'clock, and other trains later, and yet people on the Intercolonial Railway from Point Lévis to Rivière du Loup do not get their mails and papers until the day after. If the train leaves at 11 or about noon, for Halifax, they should be delivered on the same day.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I shall be very glad to include the hon. gentleman's complaint in my observations to the Minister of Railways.

THE GREAT FIRE AT OTTAWA.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I consider it my duty to bring to the notice of the government the disastrous fire which took place in this city yesterday. As hon. gentlemen all know, it is of a very serious character, involving the loss of an immense amount of property, and a considerable number of lives, and depriving an immense number of people of their means of living. I attribute this fire, in a great degree, to the immense piles of lumber that has been allowed in the city for many years. I bring this matter before the government of the present time, as I have on previous occasions, to warn them of the great danger of allowing lumber to be piled in vast quantities, as it has been for years, in proximity to these buildings. Had the wind been in a different direction yesterday, and had the lumber piles on this side of the river caught, I have no doubt that to-day we would not have this building to meet in. Therefore, it is a very serious thing for this city and for the whole country to be exposed to such a danger as it has been exposed to for many years past. I have, as you all know, brought this matter before the House on many occasions without obtaining any satisfaction. Now is the proper time to bring it to the notice of the government and of the municipal authorities. A recommendation from them would have a very salutary effect in preventing a recurrence of such a calamity. Another source of difficulty, I am told, is that the western end of the Lovers' Walk is a dumping ground for paper and refuse from the buildings. It is an element of danger from fire. I bring the matter again to the attention of the government and I trust they will see the necessity of taking some prompt action. Our Geological Museum is in a very exposed position, and would have gone, to a certainty, had the fire occurred in that locality, and its contents could never have been replaced by any expenditure of money. It is an important consideration for the government, and now that this conflagration has occurred, I trust they will not allow an hour to elapse without taking steps to prevent its recurrence. That is my object in bringing the matter up to-day. Hon. gentlemen will agree with me, I know. The subject has been discussed many a time before. It is a most extraordinary thing that the government should allow these piles of lumber so near the centre of the city when they must know that it is a menace of the worst kind to these great expensive buildings, and they are guilty of negligence in not attending to the interests of the Dominion. I hope steps will be taken to prevent a repitition of this calamity in the future.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—It may seem rather presumptions in one who is not a citizen of Ottawa to speak on this subject, but I think every citizen of the Dominion has an interest in Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Certainly.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—Admitting, then, that every Canadian has, or ought to have, a very great interest in the capital of his country, I may say that I was very forcibly struck with the fact, when watching the progress of the fire yesterday, and following its progress across the Richmond Road and up the low ground where the railways cross, what a fearful train there was laid for the progress of the fire all round the city of Ottawa. When we got up to the Canada Atlantic Railway, the fire had not crossed to the southern side of the railway embankment which goes over the low ground there. While we stood there watching the fire which was raging on the north side of the bank, one house catching after another and going like tinder, we saw a flame come flickering up from one of the piles of lumber on the south side. Some men were there endeavouring, apparently, to pull down part of the pile, and others were throwing water on it. Of course, it was futile, and in a short time that pile was on fire, and I presume the fire swept the whole way through to St. Louis Dam. The city of Ottawa, with all its public buildings and the valuable records preserved here, its handsome residences, hospitals and churches, is completely surrounded by piles of this inflammable material.

Beginning at the Chaudière, these lumber piles extend to the Richmond Road and through the low ground south of the Richmond Road all the way to St. Louis Dam and the Experimental Farm, and beyond that again until they almost form a complete belt round to the eastern side of the city and down the Rideau and on all the flat ground along the Rideau River, extending up as far as Earnscliffe, while in front, across the river, we are surrounded with more or less danger from the enormous piles of lumber on the opposite bank of the Ottawa. Had the wind been in a different direction yesterday, I do not think anything could have saved the greater part of Ottawa, and perhaps these very buildings. Another thing that struck me very forcibly while watching the fire from the terrace was the fact that, owing to the shameful way in which the grounds about the buildings are kept, notwithstanding remonstrances have been made on previous occasions, there is any amount of debris, waste paper, dead branches and limbs piled up and thrown down the lower slopes towards the river. Had any of these lighted pieces of timber which we saw floating down the river yesterday been carried towards the bank, or any sparks flying across fallen in among the inflammable material, the whole of the Lovers' Walk, as it is called, around the cliff and the trees and everything on the slope of the hill would have been swept off, and this place ruined as completely as Nepean Point has been by the construction of the approach of the Interprovincial Bridge. I think there ought to be enough public spirit among the citizens of Ottawa and all who have, as I said before, a stake and interest in the capital of the Dominion to see that something should be done to avert the fearful danger threatening this place by the amount of inflammable material which forms a sort of cordon round the city. Of course, my hon.

friend would have as much difficulty in bringing about any remedy as he had with reference to the sawdust nuisance, but it does not seem to me impracticable to have piling grounds at certain distances from the city, where the lumber could be piled, and to have legal regulations to compel mill-owners to pile their boards there, and I hope that this notice which has been given by my hon. friend Ottawa will bear fruit in the introduction of some legislation on the subject.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—This is an important matter and does not affect Ottawa alone, because when a calamity like the present one overtakes a city, it becomes a matter of national and Imperial interest. Of course, the piling grounds in the very heart of the city are and must ever be a menace to the whole of the property in the city of Ottawa, and the city itself ought certainly to be disposed and impelled to make some regulations to prevent the piling of lumber within such dangerous proximity to the dwelling-houses. It must have struck every one who witnessed the calamity of yesterday that one particular cause of the rapid spread of the fire was the fact that nearly every building in the city is roofed with wooden shingles. As soon as the fire touched the roof, the shingles ignited and the upward draft of the fire carried them in all directions. I myself was witness to the fact that the conflagration leaped from Hull over to the Ottawa side, passing over to the island across the full width of the river, and that there were lumber piles on this side of the river ignited long before the piles on the opposite took fire. Not only that, but any one who saw the conflagration going on must have seen that various points, all in the line and direction of the wind, were burning at the same moment, not directly connected with the conflagration, but ignited by the flying burning material such as the shingles. In the city of Montreal the erection of wooden buildings is prohibited by the city, and the roofing with wooden shingles is also prohibited. I think it is the direct business of the government to endeavour to arrange that the piling grounds shall not be in such dangerous proximity to the city. It is the duty of the city of Ottawa, by municipal regulations, or otherwise, to prohibit, if they can, the roofing of buildings with wooden shingles. It might be a very serious business. Of course it is well to count the cost beforehand, but I do say that if nothing is done, if the old state of things is allowed to be repeated the city of Ottawa will forfeit to a large extent the claim which it now possesses, and which I think will be responded to by the whole Dominion, and not only by the Dominion but by England as well, and I commend it most seriously to the attention of the government and the municipal authorities.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not intend to pursue the debate upon the line indicated by the hon. gentlemen who have spoken. What they have said has been ample to call the attention of the government and the municipal authorities to the necessity of taking some precautionary measures. While I know it is not in the province of the Senate to act, it may be in the province of the Senate to suggest—and I am sure it would meet the approval of the whole Dominion under the circumstances—were the government to make an appropriation, and it could be done without waiting for the assembling of the House on Tuesday next, because I am sure all would approve of an appropriation in aid of the poor people who have been thrown out of their homes. Thousands have lost their all, scarcely knowing where to get their breakfast, or where to sleep last night. Any one who went into that portion of the city which was destroyed by fire, and saw the hundreds of women and children of the poorer classes, dependent, no doubt, upon their daily earnings for their living, thrown upon the world without a sixpence, would, I am sure, approve of the appropriation, and the whole Dominion would approve if it were made of fifty or one hundred thousand dollars in order to aid these people until they could obtain employment and secure homes for themselves, I offer this suggestion with some diffidence, because I know we have no authority to make it, but while we have no authority we have the right to suggest and throw out a hint as to what we deem the duty of the government in such a calamitous case as this.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am very glad to hear the opinion expressed by the hon. leader of the opposition in reference to the course that the government ought to take in the contribution towards alleviating, in some degree, the suffering of those who have been burnt out. The government placed ten thousand dollars at the disposal of the committee for the immediate relief of these people, and on the assembling of the House of Commons on Tuesday it is proposed to submit for the approval of that Chamber—and I am quite sure it will be approved of by this House—a vote of one hundred thousand dollars towards the fund. In reference to the larger question to which attention has been called, and which periodically has come to the minds of thoughtful men who have considered the subject during the last thirty odd years—because ever since the erection of those buildings in 1866 the presence of the lumber piles has been a menace—we have all appreciated the fact that the day would come when some terrible calamity would overtake us owing to the piling of lumber within the precincts of the cities of Ottawa and Hull. Several calamities have occurred in the last twenty-five years. Hull has been burnt out on two different occasions. The mills at the Chaudière have been burned out. The lumber piles have been burnt out. Fortunately, the occasions when the fire arose in the past were when the wind was not blowing a gale like it was yesterday, when the great velocity, created largely by the vacuum owing to the ascent of the flames tended to carry the fire long distances beyond what one ordinarily observes on occasions even of great calamities. Some of the burning embers from the piles of lumber were carried a distance of a quarter of a mile to other piles and ignited them. so that it was absolutely impossible for the firemen—even when reinforced, by a considerable number, to cope with the calamity, and we all recognize how important it is that the suggestion of my hon. friends who have spoken, and should receive attention and be reinforced on the present occasion if it is at all possible. Whether this parliament can do it, I am not at all prepared to say. My hon. friend blames the government for allowing the boards to be piled where they were. The boards were piled on private property.

Hon. M. CLEMOW—No, government property.

Hon. Mr SCOTT—Then the lots are held under long leases.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—They can be cancelled at a moment's notice.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know that.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I know that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The piles of boards, which are the principal danger, are behind the Perley Home for Incurables. Unfortunately, in erecting these buildings wooden tops were put on. The attics of the eastern block and the main building are a mass of wood. In the near future I hope copper tops will be constructed in lieu of the dangerous roofs that cover the public buildings. Hon. gentlemen will remember how hopeless it was, when the western block took fire, with all the firemen concentrated here, to subdue the fire from the Mackenzie portion of the block round the front on Wellington street and up the side facing the square. It was just like one mass of wood. Since that time, it has been constructed of metal and covered with copper, and is now safe, but the eastern block is in the same condition in which it was when erected thirty-four years ago. I do not know so much about the parliament building, although I presume the roofs are in very much the same condition. But the question of parliamentary interference with the piling of lumber within the city limits is a very important one. There is but a small portion of the ground that is leased from the Crown, and that portion has been held for the last twenty-five years under lease. My hon. friend says we could cancel the lease. One does not like to cancel leases.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Why not ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think my hon. friend called attention to it ten years ago when his friends were in power.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I did.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am glad to hear that, but I am sorry his voice was not heard. A menace of that kind should be removed, but piling lumber on private grounds is a matter within the control of the owner, unless municipal regulations prevent it. The only way we could interfere with it—and I presume it would be one of the methods we would have to resort to if it was continued—would be to make it a misdemeanour to pile within a certain distance of those buildings or within a given distance of the capital of the country. It is a very easy matter to do that. We could stop it in that way, but that is the only way in which it could be done, as far as I can see. The city of Ottawa could stop it under the authority of the municipal regulations. I do not know what the powers of the city of Hull are, and I do not know whether they could stop it or not, but hon. gentlemen know that the influence of men who have such vast sums invested in property of that kind is always an obstacle to municipal bodies interfering. The time has come when prompt action should be taken, and the piling of lumber in the future within a certain distance of these buildings should be stopped, even if it is necessary to make it a criminal offence. The facilities which now exist, owing to the electrict power here and the character of the country round Hull and Ottawa, render it very easy to run the piling grounds out a distance. That can be done as it is in other localities. At one time Ottawa depended on the lumber trade for its industry. There was no other industry here, and the practice of piling boards round here grew from that fact, and men were given bonuses to build mills and no restraint put upon them about throwing sawdust in the water or piling lumber in the immediate vicinity of their mills. Any one witnessing the fire yesterday must have felt that it was simply the direction in which the wind was blowing that prevented the fire sweeping over the city of Ottawa. It was absolutely idle to attempt to cope with a fire which carried embers a quarter or half a mile, and started fires at remote distances. I have no doubt observers at the time thought that it was not possible that such buildings could be reached. Take the gap between Hull and Ottawa. Who would have dreamt of the fire crossing the river? The mills of Lord & Hurdman, on the other side, were burned, but Booth's mill on this side was not burned.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Because they had lots of water.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The wind cut a swathe in a particular line, but certainly it would not have crossed the Ottawa River if the embers had not been carried from the lumber piles on the other side. I shall be very glad indeed to call the attention of my colleague to the observations made by hon. gentlemen with the hope that the subject will receive due consideration, and if possible, that some proposal will be made which will render it impossible for a similar catastrophe to happen in the future.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—This is a very opportune time for public opinion to be fully expressed upon this very important subject. I do not think it is desirable to make any extended remarks after what has been said by different hon. gentlemen, and I am only sorry that the hon. gentleman from Ottawa has not embodied the sentiments he has expressed, and which I am sure are entertained by all members of the House, in a resolution. I believe it would pass unanimously in this House. It would have the effect of every member of the House giving his assent to the proposition, and this is the most opportune time to bring such a pressure upon the government, so that they may come to a prompt decision on this matter. We know they have to contend against powerful influences. Money has great influence in this Dominion of ours and all over the world, and those men who are storing their lumber near these buildings are men of very great influence and wealth, as the hon. gentleman who has been fighting the sawdust question for a number of years without success knows. I think at the present time we could bring such influence to bear upon the government that they could act with a firm hand and pass legislation necessary to protect this city and the parliament buildings in connection with it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I agree with the hon, gentleman from Murray Harbour that it is a good time for speaking out. I quite concur in what has been said with respect to the calamity of yesterday. No doubt the lumber piles very considerably increase the danger, and as suggested by the hon. Secretary of State, it is barely possible that parliament might be able to deal with the question of the lumber piled in these places by making it a criminal offence to pile lumber within a certain distance of these buildings. but we must all realize that if there had not been a lumber pile in Ottawa or Hull the number of persons rendered homeless by yesterday's fire would have been just about the same.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Calamities of the same kind happened in Hull on, I think, three different occasions previously. The city of Hull has been nearly destroyed by fire on two occasions within my memory, and when one asks why are not regulations made by the municipality of Hull to prevent the erection of inflammable wooden shanties there, he is told that the people are too poor to build in brick or stone; but I think that as a rule the people who own those wooden buildings are not the poor people who live in them, but comparatively wealthy people who lease the houses to tenants. That is the case on the Ottawa side of the river at any rate, The municipality of Hull may not be willing to act, and I do not think that there is in this parliament any power to compel them to act, but that is not altogether the case with the city of Ottawa. The government have undertaken to do certain things for the city of Ottawa. They are making a large annual payment to the city; and it occurred to me, while this discussion was going on, that in order that the lesson of this fire may be made useful, the payment of this hundred thousand dollars for the relief of the distress in the city of Ottawa might be made conditional on the city council passing regulations to prevent the erection of wooden structures in the city.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD (C.B.)—And Hull also.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There would be the same opportunity to act there. It may seem a heartless proceeding; but it is kinder, in the long run, to insist that those wretched tinder boxes shall not be re-erected. If the town of Hull had been build of brick the conflagration of yesterday would not have taken place, nor the two former conflagrations. As a matter of justice, not only to Hull and Ottawa, but to the country generally, and with a view to preserving this and other public buildings, the government should insist that the city council of Ottawa and the city council of Hull shall pass such regulations as will provide for the construction of less inflammable buildings in the two cities.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—My experience of fire has been similar to this which occurred yesterday, and while I have listened with a great deal of pleasure to the views expressed by several hon. gentlemen, I think a good deal of blame has been laid upon parties who, in my opinion, after all are not so much to be blamed for what has taken place. In 1877 the city of St. John, had one of the greatest fires that ever occurred on this continent. By that fire we lost solid buildings covering an area of two hundred acres. It is well known at that time we had no lumber piles in the neighbourhood. The fire originated in a wooden barn and extended to other wooden houses along the course of that fire. It has been said by some hon. gentlemen who preceded me that sparks were known to float from this fire across the river and ignite houses on the other side. At St. John, where there was no river for the sparks to float over, I have known sparks to fly a distance of nearly a mile from where the fire originated. I was myself helping with other gentlemen to extinguish the sparks that floated through the air and fell on the roofs of buildings, and while I was there I observed a small spark about the size of a honey-bee moving through the air. It lit upon the side of a building and in an instant it broke into a flame as large as a sunflower, and from that spark the fire spread in that locality. From the experience we have had in St. John, where there were no lumber piles, but simply a continuation of wooden buildings, it is necessary to pass a law to prohibit the erection of wooden buildings. As far as I am aware, no authority in Ontario has the power to do that, except the local legislature. I do not think the municipality of Ottawa has such power, unless they got it in the past through the local legislature.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The Municipal Act gives the municipalities in Ontario power to pass by-laws.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—It is hardly fair to expect the general government to interfere in a matter such as this, because it is not in their province; but the municipality of Ottawa should make application to the legislature of Ontario for power to enable them to prevent the piling of lumber within the city limits, and also preventing the building of wooden buildings within the city boundaries. But when we take into account the effect on poor people, what are they going to do—they cannot re-erect brick buildings.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Brick is cheaper now than wood.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—I doubt that.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I do not doubt it; I know it.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—We passed a similar law in New Brunswick, and there are sections of our city now in which we cannot build anything but brick covered with slate or gravel. As far as the slates are concerned I think they are a great protection against fire, but gravel roofing, in my opinion, is very little better than shingles. In fact, in the great fire in St. John in 1877, expensive buildings covered with gravel roofing ignited just as rapidly as if they had been covered with shingles, and the consequence was there was nothing left of them after the fire but piles of ashse. The subject is one worthy of a good deal of consideration. Nothing can be done until it is worked out by some commission which will study the question fairly, and bring home to the proper authorities such views as will induce them to adopt laws that will meet the necessities of the case without oppressing the poor. I am very much pleased to hear that the government is about to act in supplying immediate relief for the suffering which must prevail in Hull and Ottawa at present. In St. John when we had that great fire we were very much gratified to receive help from the world. Our fire caused such suffering then that no local aid that we could render was sufficient to supply the wants of those who had been completely denuded of everything they possessed in the world.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—What was the loss in St. John?

Hon. Mr. DEVER—With a population of 45,000 we lost $27,000,000 in that great fire, we had only $7,000,000 insurance, and the balance of the twenty-seven millions was lost by the people of the city. The loss by fire here will not amount to so large a sum, still it is so general, from what I have observed from parliament hill, the desolation is so extensive that I think it behooves the government to act promptly and see that no hardship from hunger and exposure shall be permitted. I am very much pleased to learn from the remarks of the hon. Secretary of State, that the government have already advanced a small amount which will perhaps meet the immediate wants of the destitute people, but a very large amount, in my opinion, will be required to be of any adequate service, for the large population deprived of their homes and means of living.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is another point to which I should like to call the attention of the Secretary of State. I do not vouch for the truth of it, but I heard it mentioned that the supply of water in connection with this building is so small that there would not have been enough yesterday had it been necessary to utilize the hose which was placed across the lawn in order to put out any fire which might take place amongst the debris on the slope of the hill. I am informed that all the appliances for supplying water in large quantities have been removed, and that we are dependent altogether upon electric power to secure the quantity of water that would be necessary in case of a fire either in the building or on the grounds. The breaking of a wire or the burning down of a pole, of course, would render all the appliances for fighting the fire useless, if they are dependent on electric power generated at the falls. Whether that is correct or not, I cannot say, but it has been so stated on the street and in the press, and if such be the case it is the duty of the government to adopt such means as will prevent us from being at the mercy of the cutting the wires which supply the power to work the fire appliances. There should be, in addition to that, some other power, I saw some men pouring water down the slope yesterday, and I was told that it came from a tank, but that it would be of no use in case of a large conflagration. I thought it my duty to call the attention of the Secretary of State to what is said on the street and in the press, and if any defects of that kind exist they should de remedied.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My hon. friend is misinformed. When the western block was destroyed it was found that the supply of water was wholly inadequate.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Was it not because the hydrants were frozen up?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, it was because the pipes were too small.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It was so stated.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The chief difficulty was that the pipe on the north side of Wellington street was entirely too small. An arrangement was made with the city in consideration of the money we are paying them, that a large pipe should be put in exclusively for the use of these buildings, and that has been done, but up to the time of the fire in the western block there was no direct supply. The water was pumped into tanks above. Those tanks were wholly inadequate when the supply was needed, so a direct pressure was obtained from the power house. It is not electric but water pressure, and is not at all dependent on the wires or the poles that hold the wires.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Supplied by the water works of the city?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, through a large pipe. Ordinarily there is a very good pressure, but yesterday all the hydrants in the neighbourhood of the fire were open, and everybody had opened the faucets who had a faucet to open. Even in lower town, believing the water works might be destroyed, they accumulated a body of water for fear they might need it, and that reduced the pressure considerably, and it would explain why there was no pressure in the hose which the hon. gentleman noticed. Ordinarily we have very good pressure, and the pipe is large—twelve inches I believe, and supplies the buildings from the power house itself.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (122) 'An Act respecting the Lake Erie and Detroit River Railway Company.'—(Hon. Mr. Power.)

Bill (117) 'An Act respecting the National Sanitarium Association.—(Hon. Mr. Scott, in the absence of Hon. Mr. Mills.)

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (72) 'An Act respecting the Merchants Bank of Halifax, and to change its name to "The Royal Bank of Canada,"' as amended.—(Hon. Mr. Power.)

Bill (82) 'An Act to incorporate the Crown Life Insurance Company,' as amended.—(Hon. Mr. Macdonald, B.C.)

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (M) 'An Act for the relief of Gertrude Bessie Patterson.'—(Hon. Mr. Clemow.)

Bill (N) 'An Act for the relief of Gustavus Adolphus Kobold.'—(Hon. Mr. Clemow.)

CANADIAN LOAN AND INVESTMENT COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW moved the second reading of Bill (76) 'An Act to incorporate the Canadian Loan and Investment Company.'

He said: I believe there is some objection to this Bill by some hon. gentlemen, but they have come to an understanding with the promoters that they will state their objection before the Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—I imagine there will be some objection raised to the name, because it is borne by other companies. That can be remedied in committee.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD (C.B.)—This is a very important Bill. It transforms a terminating company into a permanent stock company and the stockholders of the terminating company should be properly protected in the permanent company to be created by this Bill. All that I am interested in is that the rights and interests of the stockholders of the terminating company should be thoroughly protected in this Bill. I think the period of the existence of the terminable company was limited to fifty years. Ten years of that time has elapsed, and any reserve funds or money matters in connection with the old company that the stockholders would be entitled to from now to the end of the term should be secured to the stockholders in the new company. The solicitor of the company is willing to make a concession on this point, but not altogether to the extent that I would wish. I am willing that the Bill should go to the Committee on Banking and Commerce and be discussed there. I have no doubt that the committee will amend the Bill so as to make it satisfactory.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There are some other features about this Bill beside that to which the hon. gentleman from Cape Breton has referred, which deserve the attention of the Committee on Banking and Commerce The fourth clause of the Bill provides:

Ninety thousand shares of permanent preference stock, which shall be entitled to such cumulative dividend, not exceeding six per cent per annum, as shall from time to time be declared by the directors, and shall be provided for out of the net earnings of the company before any dividends are paid upon the ordinary permanent stock of the company, but the said permanent preference stock shall not be entitled to participation in any further profits of the company.

As I read the Bill, that accumulated preference dividend to all the holders of preference stock—there are ninety thousand shares—takes precedence of the payments to the present holders of the terminating stock of the old company. That is manifestly unjust. The fifth clause of the Bill provides that the terminating stock—that is the stock held by the present members of the company—shall be entitled to such dividends as shall be declared from time to time by the directors. Under the original Act these stockholders were entitled to the whole of the dividends—to all the net profits, and under this fifth clause of the Bill they will be only entitled to such dividends as shall be declared from time to time by the directors, out of the net earnings, and they will be postponed to the payment of the 6 per cent accumulated preference dividend on the ninety thousand preference shares. It is clear that that is a very unfair proceeding. Then the seventh clause says:

The shareholders of the old company holding shares of terminating stock therein are hereby declared to be the holders respectively of shares of the terminating stock of the company to the same extent and with the same amount paid up thereon as they are holders respectively of such shares in the old company.

But there is no protection to the rights of these terminating shareholders which have already accrued. They are left to be dealt with by the directors. The fourteenth clause of the Bill provides a thing which I think is objectionable, that the company may lend upon its terminating stock. I think the general Act prohibits a company from lending on its own stock. I particularly direct the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fifteenth clause. The Loan Companies Act has put wise restrictions on the powers of corporations to lend money. The fifteenth clause of this Bill undertakes to ignore these restrictions. In addition to the securities on which they are allowed to lend by the Loan Act of last year, this clause empowers the directors to lend to any body corporate, or to any municipal or other authority, or to any board or body of trustees or commissioners, upon such terms as to the directors seem satisfactory. There is practically no restriction on the lending powers of the company. There are other clauses, the sixteenth for instance, which are objectionable; but I do not wish to take up the time of the House. I simply wish to emphasize the necessity of considering the Bill with even more than the usual care and attention which the committee bestows upon the Bills brought before it.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—The promoters of the Bill, and also those who are opposed to the Bill will no doubt be present, and the hon. gentleman's suggestion will be carefully considered.

Hon. Mr. POWER—If the objection of the hon. gentleman from Cape Breton is removed, he naturally does not trouble himself about other things; and very often objectionable provisions escape the attention of the committee if they are not directed to it. I am not a member of the committee.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The Act of last year gives power to loan on the stock of a company on certain conditions. This provides for loaning on 80 per cent of stock. The restriction in other companies is, I think, much less. It is also provided that it must be on paid-up stock and not on the full amount of the stock held.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

AN ADJOURNMENT.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hon. gentlemen will notice that the Minister of Justice is absent from his place to-day. He was slightly indisposed and called in a physician, who advised him to lay up for a day or two. As we shall have very little on the Order paper for Monday, I would suggest that when the House adjourns to-day it stand adjourned till Tuesday. Yesterday the House of Commons adjourned till Tuesday. If this meets with the approval of hon. gentlemen I move that when this House adjourns to-day it stands adjourned till Tuesday at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It has been suggested by a number of hon. gentleman around me that it would be much more convenient for them if we could adjourn until Wednesday, as the Commons has adjourned until Tuesday. It would give hon. gentlemen an opportunty to reach their homes and transact any business they require to transact. The chances are we will be here pretty late in the summer. If I thought it would interfere with the business I would not suggest it, but looking at the paper before us we have little to do, and considering the probabilities of the debate continuing in the lower House for some time to come. I throw out the suggestion to meet the convenience of hon. gentlemen.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Make it three o'clock.

Several hon. MEMBERS—Eight o'clock.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I think it will suit the convenience of the majority of the House if we ajourn until Wednesday at eight o'clock.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If we have to meet at three o'clock on Wednesday it necessitates a night journey to get here, unless we come the day before, and we are all getting so old and feeble we do not want to travel at night.

The motion was amended and agreed to.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, May 2, 1900.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (S) 'An Act to secure proportional representation to Shareholders on Boards of Directors of Corporations.'—(Hon. Mr. Lougheed.)

Bill (T) 'An Act respecting Uusury.'—(Hon. Mr. Dandurand.)

THE CASE OF LIEUT.-COL. WHITE.

MOTION ALLOWED TO STAND.

The order of the Day being called:

By the Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell, K.C.M.G. :

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before the Senate all correspondence between the Minister of Militia and Defence, Major General Hutton, Lieut.-Col. Foster, chief staff officer; Lieut.-Col. Holmes, D. O. C. Military District No. 1; the Deputy Minister of Militia or any other official of the Department of Militia and Defence, and Lieut.-Col. W. W. White, of Guelph, Ont., relating to or in any way connected with the selection of and subsequent removal of the said Lieut.-Col. White's name from the list of officers of the Canadian militia to undergo a course of instruction in the duties of general staff officers at the Military College, Kingston.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is my hon. friend the Secreatry of State ready to consider this question?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I wrote to Dr. Borden the day that my hon. friend mentioned this matter before, and received the following reply :

The General did not reply direct to the Deputy Minister, so far as I remember. Any communication which he may have made was confidential to myself, and is not on the files of the department. In reference to Lieut.-Col. Holmes, I do not think there is any such letter, probably a simple memorandum on the letter to White. I will, however, make further inquiries.

The motion was allowed to stand.

DREDGING AT ST. MICHEL WHARF.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired of the government :

1. Did the government cause to be made, during the years 1898 and 1899, any works in the River St. Lawrence, in the neighbourhood of St. Michel wharf, in the county of Bellechasse?
2. To what amount in each year?
3. What is the name of the dredge employed for these purposes?
4. Who had the direction of these works, and what was his share in the amount disbursed?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The answers to the hon. gentleman's questions are : 1. Yes. 2. In 1897-8, $591.92 ; 1898-9, $5,873.86. 3. In 1897-8, the dredge St. Louis and the Twin, stonelifter ; in 1898-9, the dredge Nithsdale and stonelifter No. 1. 4. The work was under the general superintendence of Mr. Jas. Howden and the special supervision of the captain of the dredge—they each received their regular salaries.

PENITENTIARY BINDER TWINE.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER inquired :

What quality of hemp, sisal or other material has been purchased by the government since the 1st day of July, 1899, for the purpose of manufacturing binder twine in the penitentiaries of the Dominion, the price paid therefor, and the names of the parties from whom said materials were purchased?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The answer sent to me by the Department of Justice is as follows :

It is deemed prejudicial to the interests of the department and unfair to purchasers to give information regarding the cost of materials or the prices at which the twine is sold until the output of the year has been marketed. This principle has been adhered to since the inception of the industry.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think there is a mistake in the wording of this motion, and the word 'quality' should be 'quantity.'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is 'quality' in my copy. I have sent the question down to Mr. Stewart who has charge of it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The answer is not pertinent to the question. My hon. friend asks what quantity of material has been purchased. There is nothing in the answer relating to the question.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—It refers to quality.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There are various qualities.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I want to point out that the question asked by the hon. gentleman for Brandon has no reference whatever to the price at which the government has sold it to the parties who are speculating in it. It is simply asking how much raw material has been purchased and the price paid for it and the parties from whom it is purchased.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The question is as to quality, and the answer relates to the question.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—I will amend the question, and substitute the word 'quantity' for 'quality.'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The same objection would apply as to the price of the article. It is now on the market and it would not be quite fair that the price paid for the article itself should be announced.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—My hon. friend misapprehends the question. The question is as to the quantity of raw material out of which binder twine is manufactured and the price paid for it, and the parties from whom it was purchased.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Then my hon. friend must change his question.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—I will alter the question and make it read in the way suggested.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Then I will send it to the department.

The inquiry was allowed to stand.

THE MANITOBA SCHOOL QUESTION.

INQUIRY

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired :

Whether, since the commencement of the present parliament, the government, or any one of the members of the present administration, in the name or for the government, has received from the government of Manitoba, or from the Catholic minority of that province, or from the episcopate of any of the provinces or any member thereof, any communication whatsoever, in the form of a demand, of a claim, of a protest, or otherwise, on the subject of the Manitoba school question?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think not, as far as I have been able to find out.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—How far ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—All the inquiry I could make from those who would have the information—from members of the government.

MONTMAGNY POST OFFICE.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired :

1. Is the building acquired by the government from the Seminary of Quebec for the use of the post office in the town of Montmagny, by consent of the government simultaneously employed for other uses?
2. To what other uses does the building serve in which the post office of Montmagny is held?
3. Who is the guardian of such building?
4. What is the salary of this guardian?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—To inquiry No. 1, the answer is, yes. 2. Occupied by town and parish council, a bank and is used as a public hall. 3. John Lespérance. 4. The rents derived from the above leased rooms go to pay the caretaker's salary and minor expenses, &c. The department pays no regular salary.

CONSTRUCTION OF THE STEAMER MINTO

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON moved :

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before the Senate:

1. Copies of specifications used in making contracts for the construction of the steamer 'Minto.'
2. Copies of all notices calling for tenders for offers to build said steamer.
3. Copies of all tenders received for the same.
4. Statement showing actual cost of said steamer, contract price and extras being stated separately.
5. Statement of extras, showing their nature in detail.

The motion was agreed to.

DELAYED RETURNS.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I should like to ask the Secretary of State whether he is prepared to submit the papers moved for some time ago with regard to the supply of oil to the Intercolonial Railway.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have heard nothing more of them. The Minister of Justice wrote to the department about them, and, I think, saw the minister several times. They have not been sent over to me.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Will my hon. friend inquire when they will be brought down ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I shall.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I should like to know if the hon. gentleman is prepared to submit to the House the return to the address that I moved for on the 23rd March, relating to the deeds passed by the government and the seminary of Québec for the purchase of the site on which the post office is built at Montmagny, and which was promised.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I shall make inquiry.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—While the hon. gentleman's mind is being refreshed, I would call his attention to the fact that some returns moved for last session have not been brought down. I should like to call his attention to the promise he made lest session that these returns should be brought down before the next election. I suppose if they do not come down this session there will not be an election until after another session. If we are to have an election before another session, I should like to have them this session.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I thought the return was brought down ; I know some supplementary ones have been brought down. I make appeals to my colleagues for them, and use every effort I can to obtain them. Will my hon. friend mention what particular ones are still missing ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The Railways and Canals.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think I brought that down.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, not complete.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think the hon. Secretary of State should join this side of the House in voting want of confidence in his colleagues.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If the papers were under my control they would be brought down, certainly.

COMOX AND CAPE SCOTT RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN, in the absence of Hon. Mr. Reid, moved the second reading of Bill (35) 'An Act to incorporate the Comox and Cape Scott Railway Company.' He said : The hon. gentleman from Caribou (Hon. Mr. Reid) has left for home, and will not return this session, and he has requested me in his absence to move the second reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (88) 'An Act to incorporate the St. Mary's River Railway Company.'—(Hon. Mr. Lougheed.)

Bill (R) 'An Act to incorporate the St. Lawrence Terminal and Steamship Company.'—(Hon. Mr. Casgrain, de Lanaudière.)

Bill (111) 'An Act respecting the St. Clair and Erie Ship Canal Company.'—(Hon. Mr. Clemow.)

Bill (122) 'An Act respecting the Lake Erie and Detroit River Railway Company.'—(Hon. Mr. Power.)

NATIONAL SANITARIUM ASSOCIATION BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (117) 'An Act respecting the National Sanitarium Association.' He said: This Bill consists of two clauses only. Clause one authorizes the company to borrow moneys, and clause two provides for the appointment of trustees. I find that the association was incorporated in 1896. Mr. Massey, of Toronto, Lord Strathcona, Mr. Gage, of Toronto, Senator Cox and other gentlemen were its promoters. It is for a very excellent purpose.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

The Senate adjourned.

THE CASE OF LIEUT.-COL. WHITE.

The Order of the Day being called:

By the Honourable Sir Mackenzie Bowell, K.C.M.G.:—

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General; praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before the Senate, all correspondence between the Minister of Militia and Defence, Major-General Hutton, Lieut.-Col. Foster, Chief Staff Officer, Lieut.-Col. Holmes, D. O. C. Military District No. 1, the Deputy Minister of Militia or any other official of the Department of Militia and Defence, and Lieut.-Col. W. W. White, of Guelph, Ontario, relating to or in any way connected with the selection of, and subsequent removal of, the said Lieut.-Col. White's name from the list of officers of the Canadian Militia to undergo a course of instruction in the duties of General Staff Officers at the Military College, Kingston.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The Hon. Secretary of State said yesterday, in the memo. which he read, that the Minister of Militia and Defence would make further inquiry as to the existence of a letter from Lieut.-Col. Holmes.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He has not given me further information.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then I shall let this motion stand until Monday.

The notice was allowed to stand.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT.

OTTAWA-HULL FIRE RELIEF BILL.

FIRST, SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (147) 'An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the Public Service for the financial year ending 30th of June, 1900.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This Bill has been introduced for the purpose of giving effect to the proposal of the government to contribute one hundred thousand dollars to the Ottawa-Hull Fire Relief Fund and also the sum of twenty thousand dollars for the erection of a post office in Hull, and twenty-one thousand dollars on account of the iron bridges over the slides, which the government will have to re-construct. With the consent of the House I move that the Bill be read the second time at length presently, suspending Rule 45.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second and third times and passed.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (121) 'An Act respecting the Ontario Power Company of Niagara Falls.'—(Hon. Mr. McCallum.)

NOVA SCOTIA STEEL COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. McKAY moved the second reading of Bill (24) 'An Act respecting the Nova Scotia Steel Company.' He said: This Bill is to empower the Nova Scotia Steel Company to dispose of their entire business and also to give them power to sell it, either by accepting stock in another company, or to sell for cash. It also gives them power to wind up the old company without resorting to the Winding Up Act, but it does not go into force until sanctioned by a two-thirds majority of the shareholders. I am told there are some serious objections to the Bill. It accidentally fell into my hands one evening, and I have no instructions about it whatever. The objections I presume can be better laid before the committee than anywhere else, and for that reason I propose to send it to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, where all persons interested can have due notice of it.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I understand my hon. friend from Cumberland (Mr. Dickey) had some objection to the Bill, particularly to a clause that he thought gave the company very wide powers of amalgamation. I have not myself looked into the Bill, and am not in a position to make any comments on it.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—I had a conversation with the hon. gentleman from Amherst this morning, and he decided that whatever objections are to be made to the Bill shall be made in committee. I therefore move that the Bill be referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—The Committee on Private Bills.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—It is an important Bill, and I think it would be better to send it to the Banking and Commerce Committee.

The motion was agreed to.

LOAN COMPANIES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (Q) 'An Act to amend the Loan Companies Act, Canada, 1899.' He said: It will be within the recollection of hon. members that last session an Act was passed respecting loan companies which gave provincial companies power to take out charters under this Act. Under sec. 6 the application may be for power to acquire the franchise and assets, &c. It has been found, in the working of the Act, that a company which has a charter from the province has no authority to transfer the franchise. It can transfer its assets, but not its franchise. The object of this Bill is simply to strike out the word 'franchise' where it occurs in the several sections of the Act. The attention of the Department of Justice was drawn to it by Mr. Lash, who was employed to secure an incorporation under the Act, and it was found that Provincial Loan Companies had not power to transfer franchises, and were unable to secure the benefit of the Act.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I would call attention to the second clause which substitutes the words 'assets, rights, credits, effects and property' for the word 'franchises.'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In the Bill it reads 'franchises and assets.' I presume assets would cover everything. I regard the words in the second clause as only surplusage. I presume whoever drafted this Bill thought he was going to make it more full by adding those words, but 'assets' includes everything, in my judgment.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It would not include credits and rights.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, I think it would.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

DELAYED RETURNS.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the House adjourns I should like to inquire of the Hon. Secretary of State if any progress has been made in the preparation of that return which I asked for a month ago.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—What return does the hon. gentleman refer to?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Respecting the deeds and titles of property in connection with the purchase of the Montmagny Post Office by the government.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will make inquiry.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. minister took a note of it yesterday.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, I have it in my notes in my room and will make inquiry.

COMOX AND CAPE SCOTT RAILWAY BILL.

REFERRED BACK TO COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. BAKER, from the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours, reported Bill (35) 'An Act respecting the Comox and Cape Scott Railway Company,' without amendment. He said: Being apprised of a mistake in the passage of the Bill, I abstain from moving the adoption of the report, leaving the parties interested to take such action as they deem best on the presentation of the report to the House.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I move that the report be not now received, but that it be referred back to the committee. I might say that the reason of this is that in the passage of the Bill this morning, an amendment which the promoters desired to incorporate in the Bill was omitted, and this mistake can be rectified by sending it back to the committee.

The motion was agreed to.

COLONIAL LOAN AND INVESTMENT COMPANY'S BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN, from the Committee of Banking and Commerce, reported Bill (76), 'An Act to incorporate the Colonial Loan and Investment Company,' with amendments. He said: The first amendment is a change in the name of the company. The House will remember that the Bill, as originally introduced in the House, was entitled 'An Act to incorporate the Canadian Loan and Investment Company,' and this was objected to by a good many other companies whose names are almost similar. The result has been that the committee and the promoters of the Bill have altered the name to 'The Colonial Loan and Investment Company,' so that there may be no confusion as to names. The next amendment is the clause relating to dividends. The words 'on the ordinary shares' were struck out. Two clauses have been added after clause 7. Then the clause which made the by-laws and regulations of the old company subject to repeal is struck out. The clause relating to the agency association is also amended. The Bill, after being discussed in the committee, was referred to a special sub-committee and carefully considered by them, and then submitted to the full committee, approved of by them and concurred in by the promoters, and by those who had been opposing the Bill on several points. Perhaps the House will allow me to move concurrence in the amendments now.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I think we had better have the amendments printed and consider them on Monday.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD (Cape Breton)—This is an important Bill, and the amendments are important, and I think the House would like to have the Bill printed as amended before finally passing it.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—I move that the amendments be taken into consideration on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

HOLINESS MOVEMENT CHURCH INCORPORATION BILL.

THIRD READING POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day being called,

Third reading Bill (51) 'An Act to incorporate the Holiness Movement Church in Canada.'—(Hon. Mr. Lougheed.)

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I wish to call the attention of the hon. gentleman who has charge of this Bill, to some of its provisions. I am not objecting to the Act of incorporation. I think these people are entitled to their Act of incorporation if they desire it, but there are some provisions in the measure which my hon. friend, I think, has not carefully examined. First, with regard to the holding of real estate of a certain value, of course we can clothe a corporation with capacity, but where they acquire real estate the terms upon which they hold it will be determined by the policy of the local authorities. I would call the attention of the promoters of the Bill also to clause seven, which reads:

All conveyances and instruments of the corporation shall be executed by affixing the corporate seal of the Movement and the signatures of the bishop, secretary and treasurer for the time being of the Movement.

I suppose those parties are entitled to say what particular members of the society shall be authorized to make conveyances, but we could not decide what the form of the conveyance should be, except in the Territories. That would be for the legislature of the province, where the property is situated, to decide.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This does not deal with the form of the conveyance. It only deals with the execution.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—And with regard to some of the provisions of clause five, I think there would be objection. Of course the parties are entitled to take the Bill for what it is worth, but it seems to me that these provisions relating to real estate, only clothe the body with the power to take, but the province is the source from which that power is to be obtained.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am quite willing that the Bill should stand, to permit hon. gentlemen to examine its provisions; still I cannot appreciate the force of the contention that this parliament cannot legislate as to the particular manner in which corporations shall execute a deed of conveyance. It is not seeking to legislate with regard to the from of conveyance, but the manner in which the property shall be conveyed. It simply designates the particular officers of the corporation who shall execute the deed of conveyance. It seems to me it is simply a precaution taken by parliament to dispense with any promiscuous way of alienating property.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am not going to press the objection.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I have no fixed opinion on the subject, because I have not looked into it. If my hon. friend desires it should stand——

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No, I am not asking that it shall stand, I am simply calling attention to the matter.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This Bill will come before the Minister of Justice for his report by and by, after it becomes law, and it is possible that then the views which the Minister of Justice has expressed here might prevail, and that would be awkward for the corporation. I make that suggestion to the hon. gentleman from Calgary.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It might depend on who the Minister of Justice was.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It does not matter who is Minister of Justice. I think it is better in the interest of the promoters of the Bill, that any doubt as to the constitutionality of their action should be removed.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am quite willing that the Bill should stand until Monday or Tuesday, and I shall direct the attention of the Ottawa solicitors who have charge of the Bill, to the suggestion made by the hon. Minister of Justice. I move that the Order of the Day be discharged and placed on the Orders for Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

Bill (U) 'An Act to incorporate the British American Pulp and Paper Company. (Hon. Mr. Landry.)

DELAYED RETURNS.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the House adjourns, I should like to inquire of the hon. Secretary of State if he has sent the note, which he took yesterday, to the proper officer to ascertain if any progress has been made in the preparation of the return that I called for?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, I have made the inquiry.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Has any progress been made?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—These returns are made up in another department I am dependent entirely on the deputy minister for getting the information.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that I moved, on the 2nd of April last, for a return of the number and names of all persons to whom commissions had been given in the Mounted Police. Is there any probability of getting it?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will inquire at once and give the information on Monday.

THE CASE OF LIEUT.-COL. WHITE.

MOTION WITHDRAWN.

The notices of motion being called.

By the Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before the Senate all correspondence between the Minister of Militia and Defence, Major-General Hutton, Liut.-Col. Foster, chief staff officer, Lieut.-Col. Holmes, D. O. C. Military District No. 1; the Deputy Minister of Militia, or any other official of the Department of Militia and Defence, and Lieut.-Col. W. W. White, of Guelph, Ont., relating to or in any way connected with the selection of, and subsequent removal of, the said Lieut.-Col. White's name from the list of officers of the Canadian militia to undergo a course of instruction in the duties of general staff officers at the Military College, Kingston.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL, said:—The question involved in this notice has been so thoroughly discussed in the Lower House that I do not think it necessary to proceed with it. I merely take this opportunity of saying that I think if the communication which took place between the Minister of Militia and the Major General was made public, the Major General would not be considered as guilty as those who have opposed him, have lead the public to believe. It will be noticed in the papers laid before parliament that the letter of the Major General written on the 2nd February, giving his reasons for the course which he had pursued, had not been made public when my motion was placed upon the paper, and in that letter, it will be observed, he states distinctly that he approves of the course suggested by the Minister of Militia in removing—I am not sure that is the word he uses, but I have the letter under my hand—the name of Col. White from the list of officers whom he had suggested to take the course at the Military College at Kingston, owing to the fact that they had taken an active part in politics. The redeeming feature, to my mind, in connection with the General is, that he must have had communication from some one that a conversation had taken place between the Minister of Militia and Col. Foster, or that the reason given for the removal of the names of Cols. White and Vince from the list of those who were to take a course at the Military School in Kingston was a pure invention on the part of the General himself. The latter supposition I do not think it possible for any one to conceive or believe. It will be noticed, however, that the Minister of Justice stated, in defence of the Minister of Militia, when this question was under discussion a short time ago in this House, that he ventured the assertion that no conversation had taken place between Col. Foster and the Minister of Militia leading to anything like a supposition that politics was the reason for the removal of these names from the list. The impression left upon my mind, and the impression that must be left upon the mind of any one who reads the remarks of the Minister of Justice on that occasion, is that no communication took place between Col. Foster and the Minister of Militia upon the question. If hon. gentlemen refer to the letter written on the 3rd of February, by the Deputy Minister of Militia, they will find that he states distinctly that there was a communication between the Minister of Militia and Col. Foster. The Deputy Minister states: You were informed of the purport of the conversation that took place between the Minister of Militia and Col. Foster, and therefore the Minister is at a loss to know how you came to the conclusion that these gentlemen were removed for political purposes. Any one reading the papers must come to but one conclusion, and that is, that there was a conversation between Col. Foster and the Minister of Militia in which the question of politics was discussed. If you want evidence of that, read the speech of the Minister of Militia himself, in which he produces to the House of Commons extracts from different papers that had taken exception to the alleged remarks of Col. Foster at certain public gatherings, which by the by, Col. Foster denies that he ever uttered. That shows this beyond a peradventure, that they did discuss the question of politics, because the minister had in his possession extracts from La Patrie and other papers abusing Col. White for the course that he was supposed to have taken on a political question. Then take in connection with that the fact that Col. Foster and Col. Aylmer both wrote letters to the Minister informing him that Major General Hutton had intructed them to inform him of any conversation that might take place between them upon political matters during his absence from the city. Now the inference is clear that Col. Foster, acting on these instructions, reported to the Major General at Halifax what had taken place between the Minister and himself. Based on that, the Major General wrote the letter of the 2nd.

It is intimated to me that His Excellency is waiting to sanction some Bills, and I shall defer any further remarks for the present.

BILLS ASSENTED TO.

His Honour the Speaker informed the Senate that he had been notified by the Secretary of His Excellency the Governor General that His Excellency the Governor General would proceed to the Senate Chamber this day at 3.30 o'clock P.M., for the purpose of giving assent to several Bills passed by the Senate and House of Commons during the present session.

May it please Your Excellency :.

The Commons of Canada have voted certain supplies required to enable the government to defray the expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons I present to Your Excellency the following Bill :—

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the public service, for the financial year ending the 30th June, 1900.

To this Bill the Clerk of the Senate, by His Excellency's command, did thereupon say :—

In Her Majesty's name, His Excellency the Governor General thanks Her loyal subjects, accepts their benovelence, and assents to this Bill.

After which His Excelency the Governor General was pleased to retire, and the House of Commons withdrew.

THE CASE OF LIEUT. COL. WHITE.

Hon Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—When interrupted I was calling attention to what I considered an important point in connection with the action of the Minister of Militia and also of the Major General. I will read now from the official paper that was laid upon the table of this House. The Major General wrote, on February 2, 1900, as follows :—

In accordance with the wishes of the hon. minister, Lieut.-Cols. White and Vance were removed from the list of officers selected by me for the staff course in consequence of their having taken a prominent part in party politics. I fully concur in the objection raised by the minister on this score, that officers who take a prominent part in politics should not be selected for the staff course, or for prominent positions on the Canadian General Staff, except when unadvoidable, or when it is advisable in the public interest. The two officers in question have been informed accordingly.

If hon. gentlemen will refer to the letter of the Deputy Minister of Militia, written to the Major General the day after the receipt of the General's letter, they will find he uses this language :

I am further instructed to inform you that the reason assigned in his letter for the minister's action is entirely erroneous and misleading.

The party referred to is Col. Foster :

And as the minister understands that Col. Foster reported to you what actually did take place when the minister struck off Lieut.-Col. White's name, he cannot understand why you should have attributed to him the reasons you assigned.

Then he adds :

The minister then told Col. Foster that he struck off Lieut.-Col. White's name because he was obviously unfit for such appointment, having only recently been retired from the Lieut.-Col. of the 30th Battalion on account of his length of service, being too old and maimed.

In the first place, he had not been removed. His time had been extended. In the second place, he had not reached the age when it would be necessary to retire him, being unfit for the position, and in the next place he is not maimed any further than the loss of one or two fingers, and the loss of those fingers occurred some years ago. During the whole time that he had been serving as lieutenant-colonel, this so-called incapacity existed. I know nothing of it beyond what I have been told by lieutenant-colonels of battalions with whom he served in brigade camps a number of years, and he is represented to be most active and energetic, and one of the best colonels there is in the country, but apart from that, it will be seen there was a conversation between Lieut.-Col. Foster and the Minister of Militia upon the question of the removal of this gentleman from the list to take the course at the military school. So that the statement made by my hon. friend opposite, that he did not believe there had been anything of that kind—or rather that he had been so informed—was not correct. I repeat, the fact that the minister had extracts from different newspapers, calling attention to the fact of Lieut.-Col's. White's speech, is an intimation that a conversation did take place, and that politics was one of the reasons why he was to be removed. What does the Minister of Militia say in his defence ? When asked if he gave any instructions upon the question, he repeated two or three times very emphatically in the House that he had given no 'official' instructions to have these names struck from the list for the reason given by Col. Foster. You can only draw the inference from that declaration that though there may have been a conversation, and though that reason may have been discussed by Colonel Foster and the Minister of Militia, he gave no 'official' instructions to have such a letter written. But the fact remains that Colonel Foster reported to Major Hutton the purport of the conversation which he had had with the Minister of Militia under the circumstances to which I have already alluded, acting under instructions he had had from the Major General some time before the conversation that had taken place. The Minister of Militia, through the Deputy, says distinctly that there was no such reason given, but he does not deny that there was any conversation of that kind which led the General to take the position that he did. Then if hon. gentlemen look at the answer which the hon. Secretary of State read the other day, in reply to a question which I put to him, they will observe that even in that there is not that frankness which should characterize an answer given by a minister. The answer cannot but lead any one to the conclusion that there are reasons for withholding the statement made by the Major General in reply to the Deputy Minister's letter, and that those reasons are such as would bring the Major General and the Minister of Militia into direct antagonism. The minister places in the hands of the Secretary of State a reply which he read on the 2nd May. It appears at page 191 of the unrevised edition of the Senate Debate. It must have been prepared by the minister himself, or under his instruction. The minister says :

The General did not reply direct to the deputy minister so far as I can remember.

Now, is it possible that a minister, the head of a department, was not in a position to say distinctly and positively that there had not been any communication ? All he had to do was to touch the bell, call in the deputy minister and put the question clearly to him : Did Major Hutton ever reply to your letter of the 3rd ? The answer would have been, yes or no. It appears to me the answer given by the minister is evasive. The Major General did not reply direct to the deputy minister, so far as I remember, so says the minister. I can only repeat he could easily have jogged his memory by sending for the deputy or his private secretary. He adds :

Any communication which he may have made was confidential to myself, and is not on the files of the department.

We can easily understand that if there was nothing further than a conversation between these two gentlemen, it would not be on file, but it is due, I think, to General Hutton that the character of that conversation should be made known. I cannot conceive it possible that the Major General, under the circumstances, would desire to conceal any conversation which he might have with the Minister of Militia, dealing with a letter that had been written to him by the deputy minister saying that he had given instructions to write certain letters to these Lieutenant-Colonels upon a false basis. If you look at the correspondence laid before parliament in reference to Colonel Hughes, and the Major General, you will find that Colonel Hughes's private and confidential letters, written not to the department here, but to the commanders at Kingston, are published. Why ? Because these letters would lead the public to form, probably, an erroneous and unfavourable opinion of the action of the Major General. But these letters are published, and if they could be published and sent broadcast throughout the country, though marked private and confidential, why should a conversation between the head of the Militia Department and the Major General, acting under him, be considered so confidential that it cannot be made public ? The reply read by the Secretary of State goes on to say :

In reference to Lieut.-Col. Holmes, I do not think there is any such letter, probably a simple memorandum on the letter to White. I will, however, make further inquiry.

Now, when he was furnishing my hon. friend opposite with this information he could have ascertained in five minutes whether any such letter was on file in the department. I think I intimated, when I called attention to the omission of this letter from the correspondence, that Colonel Holmes's letter might not be on file in the department because it was written from London, and it is based upon a letter written by Colonel Foster, informing Colonel White that he had been removed on account of his political proclivities and the action he had taken at certain meetings. Taking that whole answer, I do not hesitate to say, without desiring to be offensive, that it is evasive in character from beginning to end, and that it is not of that frank nature which should characterize an answer given on such an important question. All that the Minister of Militia had to say, if such were the fact, was, there is no such letter in defence of the action of the Major General written by himself, and there is no letter from Colonel Holmes, or there is such a letter. I saw the letter, not in the official record, but it was given by Colonel White in the correspondence which he published, and has been made public in the manner I have indicated. Colonel White, in the letter, repeats what Colonel Foster says, that he was removed for political reasons. I do not propose to pursue this subject any further. It is only to this point I desire to call the attention of the Senate. I hope that in the future we shall not be called upon to discuss questions of this kind, affecting the militia, the volunteer force or the regular force. Notwithstanding the accusation made by the senior member from Halifax, that I have been actuated by political motives in the course I have taken, I am utterly opposed to the introduction of politics in any way, directly or indirectly, into any matter affecting the militia force of this country. It would be ruinous to the force itself. Every man, Liberal or Conservative, no matter what he may be, if a loyal subject, should be treated in precisely the same way under any policy of the government, where the defence of the country is at stake. This whole discussion, to my mind, is exceedingly unfortunate. I know, from what I have heard among the volunteer force that it is likely to do a very great deal of harm. I trust sincerely that we shall never have occasion again, no matter who may be in power, to find fault with the head of the Militia Department, or that any such reason should be given for the removal of an officer from the position he holds. We all know what taking the course of instruction suggested means. It is not for active service. It is more to give advice in case of trouble. Lieut.-Col. White is one of the most active volunteer colonels we have in Ontario. He has devoted his time and money to the maintenance of the force, and when you look at the gentlemen who are on the staff now in South Africa, I do not think you will come to the conclusion that, because a man happens to be fifty-five or sixty years of age, he should be thereby disqualified from taking a course which would enable him to give information and advice in time of need. When you look at the ages of the gentlemen who are serving in South Africa at the present moment, hon. gentlemen will see that age adds at least to their experience, and experience in giving advice to younger men to perform their duties is of equal importance to their fighting capacity, General Buller is sixty-one; Gatacre is fifty-seven, Methuen is fifty-five (the age of Lieut.-Colonel White), Cleary is sixty-two; Kelly-Kenny, sixty; Warren, sixty; White, sixty-five, and Lord Roberts has reached the mature age of sixty-eight, yet he is considered not only sufficiently intellectual and vigorous for his position, but is one of the best generals in the British army, and he is placed in the important position of Commander-in-chief of the whole South African force. I say the whole course pursued by the Minister of Militia in this case—the evasive answers he has given—and I use that word with the full responsibility of its meaning, taking the facts as they exist, is not such as to redound to the credit either of the minister or those who have taken an active part in this matter. Having said this much, I desire to withdraw the motion, for the reason that the correspondence has already been laid before both Houses of parliament.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend has one advantage over me—he has read the correspondence, and I have not seen the correspondence to which my hon. friend has made allusion—but there are certain things that are patent upon the face of this correspondence. The hon. gentleman has stated that the Minister of Militia has refused to permit Colonel White to attend the course of special instruction at Kingston, because he was a political partisan—that this had been stated in a communication which had been made to him. The Minister of Militia has denied that statement, and he denied it as soon as the fact was brought to his notice that it had been made. That statement was denied through the Deputy Minister of Militia. It was stated by him that that was not the reason given by the minister for objecting to Colonel White taking this special course of instruction. The minister himself stated the reason, that he considered Colonel White too old, and that he was maimed. Those were the reasons that were assigned. The minister also says that he was on the retired list. My hon. friend says Colonel White is not too old, that there are men in the British army engaged on active service in South Africa, some of whom are quite the age of Colonel White and some older than Colonel White. I do not know how that may be, but my hon. friend knows that regulations were made—I believe at the time he was a minister of the Crown, responsible for the advice he gave—which fixed the age for retirement at what it now is.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—My hon. friend is astray as to the age at which an officer may take the course of instruction suggested by General Hutton.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I know myself that political considerations did not govern gentlemen in my office. One of the clerks, a man who has always taken a great interest in military matters, holding the rank of lieutenant-colonel was recommended by the Major General to take this course of instruction at Kingston, but he has some fifteen years of life before him, before he reaches the age of sixty, and it is supposed that he could be of some service, I endeavoured to make some arrangements, and did, that the other officers in my department should undertake his work during the four or five months that he would be away in order that he might attend this special course of instruction. He is a Conservative. I did not make any objection to him on that ground. On the contrary, I endeavoured to facilitate his attendance, because I knew that he would like very much to attend, and I believed that he was a good officer and took an interest in the profession. I am quite satisfied that political considerations have never influenced the present minister with a view of doing an injustice to those who are Conservatives. There has been, I know, an anxiety on his part that men who are of the same political opinion as he is himself should have fair consideration, and I have yet to learn that because a man is a Reformer, and because a Reform administration is in power, that therefore he ought to be regarded as disqualified from receiving military employment or instruction. I believe that the present minister has been anxious, most anxious, that men of both political parties should have a fair show in all matters of promotion, and in all matters of employment. What has happened is the best possible evidence of that, and the prompt denial on the part of the deputy minister of the reasons that had been assigned by Colonel Foster for the refusal to permit Colonel White to attend the school is an evidence that that was not the reason assigned by the minister. Further than that, I know my hon. friend opposite well, and when he and his colleagues dismissed large numbers of Liberals from office they never assigned as a reason that they were political opponents. They had more sense than to give any such reason. They stated that such officials were not required in the public service. I might instance scores of cases where that answer was given. I say that it is, on the face of it, an absurd statement that the Minister of Militia should assign as a reason for not permitting Colonel White to be on the list of those who attended the Military College of Kingston to take a special course of instruction, that he was a Conservative. I say the reason itself is preposterous. No minister, if he were to act on that rule, would be disposed to put it prominently forward as a special reason. I say that the reason given by the minister is, I have no doubt whatever, the real reason that actuated him. My hon. friend says the matter must have been mentioned that he was a strong political partisan. It may have been. I do not know, I cannot say whether it was or was not, but what I do say is that it was not stated as a reason on the part of the minister for the course that was adopted.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Not an official reason.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon friend alludes to what was said in the papers and to the speeches that Colonel White delivered in which he attacked with a good deal of violence the present administration, and it would not be a matter of surprise if he were regarded as objectionable, after taking the very strong course that he did, and making the very violent speeches which he did make.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does my hon. friend say he did make those speeches ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I say it is so reported in the papers.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—He denies it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—One of the papers which gives the report is a paper of the same political complexion as Colonel White himself. It is rather an extraordinary thing that a speech should be put into the mouth of a man in two newspapers that are on opposite sides politically, both of which should make the same statement. But I do not care how that may be. It is, in my opinion, a matter of no consequence, so long as it was not the reason which actuated the minister and the reason which the minister himself assigned. I am not going into a discussion of General Hutton's position, or any communication he may have made. I do not know that he made any at all. I have no information upon that subject, further than that he corrected the misstatement upon the communication of the deputy minister. I understand that General Hutton corrected the statement that Mr. White had been refused permission to attend on account of his politics.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is nothing on the record to justify that statement, and, more than that, if my hon. friend will excuse me, the Minister of Militia states distinctly that he knows of no communication of that kind, but that there was a private conversation the purport of which he refused to give.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I have not followed the correspondence or have not looked at any communication since this matter was up for discussion some time ago, but I understand there was a communication made that Colonel White was informed that that was not the reason for the course that was taken.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—On the contrary, he is told that that was the reason, both by Colonels Holmes and Foster.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—But the correction was made, so far as the deputy minister was concerned, by a communication to Colonel Hutton.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is evident my hon. friend has not read the correspondence. The deputy minister denies nothing. All he says is, I am instructed by the Minister of Militia to do so and so.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Certainly. That is all he need say. He is not entitled to say anything except under instruction from the minister, and that instruction is explicit that that was not the reason assigned by the minister for the refusal to put Colonel White upon the list of those who were to attend the Kingston Military College. That I think is perfectly clear. I need not enter into a discussion of any differences that arose between the Minister of Militia and Major General. Of course they are a common occurrence. My hon. friend has been acting Minister of Militia, and I do not think he got on any more smoothly with the Major General at the time than my hon. friend who is now Minister of Militia. There has not yet been a Major General sent out from the War Office for the purpose of appointment here as Major General of the Canadian militia who has got on smoothly with the Minister of Militia.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There was one, General Selby Smith.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend reminds me that General Selby Smith was an exception. That may have been.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—As to what?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—He had no difficulties or differences with the Minister of Militia. I say that there has been no other Major General who has got on smoothly with the Minister of Militia. Difficulties and differences are matters of common occurrence. If there should be one who would get on smoothly it would be an exception to the general rule. It always has so happened in this country that the party who is selected must have a certain military rank in the Imperial army before he is eligible, and, being selected, he seems to be under the impression that he is here as a military officer and not as a Canadian officer responsible to the Minister of Militia, who is responsible to parliament for everything that is done by the Major General in his official capacity. I say then, that this is not an unusual occurrence. But we have parliamentary government in this country, and where you have parliamentary government you have some minister responsible for every act done by every public officer, whether a military or civil officer. And that being so, a minister cannot be held responsible for the conduct of the officer unless that officer is subordinate to him in matter of authority.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Nobody denies it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend's experience all points in the opposite direction and therefore, I say, my hon. friend and every other member of the House ought to take great care and not to criticize unduly and unfairly the conduct of the Minister of Militia, because he requires the support of every hon. gentleman in this country who is anxious to uphold and maintain the principles of parliamentary government. A minister must be responsible for the efficient discharge of his duties, and still it is his duty to listen to everything that the Major General may say with regard to the organization of the force. When it comes to action, when it becomes necessary to make appointments, when it becomes necessary to approve or disapprove of a particular course, he must, after listening to everything that is said by his military officers, be prepared to assume the responsibility of deciding how far he will be guided by their advice. He is the authority whom parliament will hold responsible, and he must decide whether, in his estimation, it is proper advice to follow or not. That being so, I think that my hon. friend has pressed unduly a case against the Minister of Militia. If my hon. friend can show that by leaving out Colonel White, other parties were selected who were less competent, who were his seniors in years and less qualified to take the course which was suggested should be taken at Kingston, he would have made out a case, but to say that Colonel White was qualified, that he was not too old, that the injury which he had received in his hand did not unfit him for the work, is not sufficient. It is necessary to show that the parties who were selected as fit and proper parties to take that course, were less fit and less qualified to do so than Colonel White.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I never discussed the question of the responsibility of the minister at all. The only point I attempted to discuss was whether a certain officer was refused a right that was granted to others, on account of his politics. My hon. friend and I will not differ to any very great extent upon the question of ministerial responsibility, but that has nothing whatever to do with the question we are discussing. It is simply a question as to whether Major General Hutton deliberately concocted a scheme by which he would tell a deliberate falsehood and attribute it to the minister, or whether the minister made any statement of the character attributed to him. The minister does not deny that he had a conversation with Colonel Foster in connection with the politics of this gentleman, and I have given instances to show that the probabilities are that he had, from the fact of his producing extracts from the newspapers. Then his denial of the occurrence, that he ever gave any official instructions cannot but leave the impression upon the mind of every one that he did discuss the question of politics when he and Colonel Foster were discussing the question when he ordered the name removed. Do not understand that I concur with the Major General in his approval of the conduct of the minister. I say a volunteer officer of this country, who spends his own money, gives his own time in learning a science which may be required in defence of his country, has a right to express his opinion of any ministry who may be controlling the affairs of this country at the time, without being removed from the position in which he received not one single cent from the government for the services which he rendered. I would claim the right for myself, when I held that position, to express just what opinions I liked, and I did in the House and in the journals I controlled at the time, and on the stump, and in the administration of the affairs of the country, and I hold that no matter what the volunteer officer may be, he has a right to do that. Perhaps it would not be expedient for an officer holding a position in the permanent force to do it, but a volunteer officer who gives his time and spends his money—and I know what it requires to do it—should not be ostracised because he dares to give expression to his views upon political questions.

The notice of motion was withdrawn.

THE MANUFACTURE OF BINDER TWINE.

INQUIRY POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day being called :

By the Honourable Mr. KIRCHHOFFER :

That he will inquire of the Minister of Justice, what quantity of hemp, sisal, or other material has been purchased by the government since the 1st day of July, 1899, for the purpose of manufacturing binder twine in the penitentiaries of the Dominion, the price paid therefor, and the names of the parties from whom said materials were purchased.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman from Brandon, asked me to make this inquiry for him to-day. It will be remembered that when the question was put before, the word quality was substituted for quantity. The only information sought is as to the quantity, price paid, and from whom purchased.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I may say that there is some information in connection with this which I have not yet got.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I would rather have it all together, so the notice might be allowed to stand.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes. We cannot give the price at which we purchased until after the hemp is manufactured into twine and disposed of. It has always been contrary to the policy of the department to make such an announcement for reasons that are very obvious, and which would govern the case of private parties. The difficulty we may have in getting the information for which the hon. gentleman asks, as to the quantity, is that sometimes the hemp that is purchased in one year is not manufactured until after the beginning of July of the year following.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That would not affect the quantity purchased since the first of July.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No, but the quantity purchased since the first of July might not show the quantity of hemp manufactured and disposed of since.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I did not ask that question. I simply want the quantity purchased and price paid and from whom purchased.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—We do not give the price until after the year's manufacture is disposed of. There is very great variation in the price, and has been in the past twelve or fifteen months. At the present time we are unable to purchase sisal for less than 13§ cents, the very lowest figures quoted to us. Other varieties are less, but some that we purchased before may have been purchased at a lower rate, and it would be obviously against the interests of the institution to give at the present moment the prices at which we purchased. We may be obliged to sell at even a lower rate than the price we paid for the raw material, but we do not want to do so if we can help it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I wish to express my very great surprise at the position taken by the hon. Minister of Justice. He says it has been the policy in the past. I never knew it to be the policy in the past to refuse information as to what an article cost that was purchased by the government, and there can be no reason why the people in this country should not know what the government pays for the raw material, what it costs to manufacture and the price at which it was sold, unless there is a combination between the government and the purchasers to enable them to extort from the consumer a larger sum than he should pay. Those are the only conclusions at which any one can arrive, and there is a clause in the Customs Act providing for punishing monopolists by placing articles on the free list if there is a monopoly or combination of that kind. It was only this morning I was reading a case in a work published by Sir Henry Wrixon, probably my hon. friend has had a copy sent to him, on socialism, as a result of his visit to Canada and the United States, in which he gives a case in the latter part of the last century in which a judge in the Superior Court in England severely punished and sent a man to jail for entering into a combination to raise prices at the expense of the consumer. What reason is there why Mr. Hobbs, or any other purchaser, should have the fact kept from the public that he is making 100 or 150 per cent profit upon his purchase ? I cannot see any reason for the course adopted. It is inexpedient and impolitic, and cannot do the government any good to keep this information from the people. I might also point out to my hon. friend that all I would have to do would be to investigate the market reports in the Philippine Islands, or wherever the manila or sisal comes from, and ascertain what the price was at the time. That would take some time, and I thought it much easier to get the information by asking the government how much did you pay for it? The trade returns and trade circulars that are issued by boards of trade and by stock exchanges in New York would give me all that information. My hon. friend may say why did you not look there for it? As I have already explained to the House, I thought it easier to ask the government what they paid for it. That is all I asked them, I did not ask what they sold it at. The country has a right to know what they paid for it and at what price they sold it to the farmers. That is a responsibility, of course, that they have assumed and it is their business.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—We assume exactly the same responsibility as the hon. gentleman's government did, and the government which preceded it, and that is to give the price when the article is marketed and not before. We give the price of the raw material and the price at which we have sold it. It is given every year. My hon. friend knows it would be putting the department in a very false position to publish the price at which we purchased the hemp. If we were always able to say, the raw material has cost us so much, the labour is worth so much and the machinery is worth so much, and there ought to be such an allowance for wear and tear of machinery and therefore the article has cost in its production a certain sum and we will sell it at that—if we could do that absolutely, there might be some propriety in what the hon. gentleman suggests. But we cannot do that. We must sell at the market price, and that price may be even less than we pay for the raw material. The government have never made anything in the manufacture of hemp.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It was never intended that they should.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That may be. What we ought to do would be to have the same advantage as any other manufacturer, and prevent its becoming a burden and a loss on the public treasury. We are seeking to give employment to the criminal classes and seeking to do so in such a way as not to add further to the burdens of the community, and in order to do that, we must have the same right of protecting ourselves that any other manufacturer may have. To-day we may pay a very high price for raw material, and to-morrow the manufactured article may fall in price, so that we will get for the manufactured produce no more than the raw material cost us. When that is the case we are manufacturing at a loss. But when the prices are rising and the manufactured article is high, we are enabled to compensate ourselves and to protect the public against the loss that may have been sustained on former sales. We are in the manufacture endeavouring to do the best we can in the public interest, and in order to do that, we must be at liberty to withhold the statement as to the price at which we purchased the raw material until the manufactured product is disposed of, and then the public have both the price of the raw material and of the manufactured product.

The inquiry was allowed to stand.

RAILWAY BRIDGE OVER LACHINE CANAL.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. O'DONOHOE moved:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before the Senate a copy of the communication of J. L. P. O'Hanly, C.E., to the Governor in Council on the dangerous state of the railroad bridge over the Lachine Canal at Wellington Street, Montreal.

The motion was agreed to.

THE MANITOBA SCHOOL QUESTION.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY, rose to Call the attention of this House to the following facts:

1. On the 2nd day of May, the following question was put by the Hon. Mr. Landry to the government:

'Whether since the commencement of the present parliament, the government, or any one of the members of the present administration in the name or for the government, has received from the government of Manitoba, or from the Catholic minority of that province, or from the episcopate of any of the provinces or any member thereof, any communication whatsoever, in the form of a demand, of a claim, of a protest, or otherwise, on the subject of the Manitoba school question?'

2. On the same day the following answer was given by the Hon. Mr. Scott, as reported by the Debates of the Senate, May 2, 1900:

'Hon. Mr. Scott—I think not, as far as I have been able to find out.

'Hon. Mr. Landry—How far?

'Hon. Mr. Scott—All the inquiry I could make from those who would have the information—from members of the government?'

And moved—

1. That such an answer does not settle the question, as it gives only what the hon. Secretary of State thinks, and that not further than what he could make out himself from those who would have the proper information, leaving open to further inquiry what may be the limit of the searching powers of the hon Secretary of State.

2. That it is an easy matter to ascertain if the documents asked for do not exist, are or are not in the possession of the government, and that the only proper way to give a proper answer is to say so.

3. That unless the government declare that they are not in possession of any documents of the kind, an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before the Senate a copy of all communications whatsoever received by the government since the commencement of the present parliament on the subject of the Manitoba school question, from the government of Manitoba, or from the Catholic minority of that province or from the episcopate of any of the provinces or any member thereof.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have to be rather guarded in making statements absolutely in this chamber. The department over which I preside is the ordinary channel through which communications of that kind should be sent to the government. There are not communications of the kind in the department of the Secretary of State. I asked one minister, who might possibly know something about it, and he said he knew nothing about it. Since my hon. friend has referred to the subject again, I have made further inquiry, and I find that a communication has been sent to the Governor General which should come to the Privy Council, or has come to the Privy Council, and I have asked the Clerk of the Privy Council to look it up. I shall bring it down, and also any further papers I find on the subject. Many of these communications are sent to the ministers individually. Really they are not official papers. They are not put on file. They are not papers which are available to some other member of the government Where papers come through the official channel they are regularly filed. A paper coming to the Sectretary of State and intended for any member of the government, or His Excellency in Council, would go to the council in the ordinary way. I have no doubt, in matters of this kind, letters which are semi-official are addressed to individual members, are not put on the file. However, I shall have a careful inquiry nade as to all communications received on the subject.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—May I ask if the communication is from the hierarchy of the Church or the government of Manitoba ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Not the government. I think there were letters from the hierarchy, or probably individuals, and perhaps school bodies.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The reason I asked the question whether any communication has been received from the government of Manitoba was, I saw in the proceedings of the Manitoba legislature that some members of the legislature had moved for correspondence—it was somewhat of an unusual character I admit—between the present Premier of Manitoba and Sir Charles Tupper and Sir Mackenzie Bowell, as individuals, upon the question. All I have to say is I have not the slightest objection that any communications with which I have been connected should be brought down, but it is rather unusual to move for a return of correspondence that has taken place between gentlemen who are not acting in an official capacity. What the Premier will do in Manitoba I do not know. All I know, from reading the proceedings, is that he consented to the passage of the motion, which I presume would lead to bringing down the correspondence, if he has any. I might still further remark, in explanation of the remarks the hon. gentleman has made, it very often occurs that upon important questions of this kind the parties write direct to the Premier

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear !

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—From experience I know that to be the case, and I presume it might be continued in this case, the parties not knowing that the official channel by which to reach the Governor General is the Secretary of State. As a rule parties writing on a subject of this kind write direct to the head of the government. My hon. friend might ask the Premier if he has the information sought by the hon. gentleman ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I shall make further inquiries.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is why I asked for copies of communications with the government or any member of the administration, because parties might, as the hon. gentleman has said, address themselves direct to the Prime Minister. In that case I think it might be considered official correspondence.

Hon Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It ought to be.

The motion was agreed to.

THE POST OFFICE AT MONTMAGNY.

INQUIRY POSTPONED.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY, rose to inquire :

1. What amount has the government collected from the rental of Montmagny post office buildings, year by year, up to date, since the acquisition of said buildings?
2. From that amount, how much was paid to the caretaker of said building?
3. How much for the minor expenses pointed out in the answer given by the hon. the Secretary of State on the 2nd of May, and what are those minor expenses?
4. How much for the 'et cætera, given in the same answer, and what are those 'et cætera?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Will my hon. friend let that notice stand ? I sent twice to the department and they have sent me a volume of papers which I am not in a position to examine. The categorical questions might be answered by the department.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Perhaps the papers sent are an answer to the return I asked for a month ago.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think I answered that the other day.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The minister said he would inquire.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This return is not in a form to present to the House. I will present it to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I shall let my motion stand.

The motion was allowed to stand.

TRAVELLING ALLOWANCES OF JUDGES IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (British Columbia) inquired :

Whether the travelling allowances of the judges of the Supreme Court of British Columbia, withheld for several months on the caprice of the Auditor General, have been paid? If not, is it the intention of the government to bring in an Act of parliament to place this matter beyond the unnecessary interference of any subordinate official?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The allowances were paid on the 6th and 7th of April, 1900, the Treasury Board having decided against the contention of the Auditor General.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (British Columbia)—I am very glad to hear it. That is satisfactory.

FREIGHT ON THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. WOOD moved :

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before the Senate:

1. A return showing the number of cars that had arrived at Halifax and St. John respectively, previous to April 10 last, and which had not been unloaded at that date.
2. The dates upon which such cars arrived.
3. The names of the consignees of such cars.
4. The stations where such cars were loaded.
5. The names of the shippers.
6. The dates of shipment.

He said: I may say that my reason for making this motion is, as hon. gentlemen know, there have been a great many complaints during the last few months by shippers on the Intercolonial Railway regarding cars. They have found it impossible sometimes for weeks to obtain cars necessary for their shipments. I am informed, whether the information is correct or not, that the practice has prevailed of late of allowing persons to load cars and forward them to their destination, and that they are allowed there to stand without being unloaded for several days. I am told that in some cases they are allowed to stand weeks and even months before they are unloaded. If such practice prevails on the road it is not surprising that there is a scarcity of cars. It would be impossible for any railway company under such conditions to provide sufficient rolling stock to accommodate its patrons. My object in moving this motion is to ascertain the truth of these assertions. I may say that the complaints do not relate entirely to St. John and Halifax, but to other places along the road. I have only mentioned St. John and Halifax in order to get the return more quickly. I notice that I have omitted the words on the Intercolonial Railway. I do not know whether that is understood.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is understood.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There can be no objection to the motion which the hon. gentleman has made. I am rather surprised at the statement that a car should stand for weeks and months without being unloaded. Certainly the Intercolonial Railway adopt the same rule that is adopted by other railways, and charge demurrage, and I would not think it would pay any party to allow a car to remain without unloading it where he was compelled to pay for detention, so I think my hon. friend must have been misinformed on the subject. There has been a wide extension of the commercial business of the country, and all the railway corporations of Canada have felt it necessary to increase their rolling stock in consequence. It is not at all surprising that the Intercolonial Railway should have such an extension of business as to be unable to meet the requirements with the rolling stock which it at present possesses. I will obtain for the hon. gentleman the information which he desires.

The motion was agreed to.

DELAYED RETURNS.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, I would call the attention of the Minister of Justice to the fact that I moved on the 2nd of April last for a return showing the number of Bills of provincial legislatures that have been disallowed, and also correspondence in connection therewith.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am aware of that, and I have inquired lately. I do not know whether the returns have been prepared or not.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I wish to call attention, also, to the motion I made on the 26th of April, for a return of all the correspondence that took place between the government and other parties in connection with the subsidies to the railways in Gaspé. I would ask the government to hasten that return, because we shall need it when we come to discuss the question of the Gaspé short line.

Hon Mr. SCOTT—I shall make inquiry about it and try and get it.

ONTARIO POWER COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day having been called

Second reading Bill (121) 'An Act respecting the Ontario Power Company of Niagara Falls.'—(Hon. Mr. McCallum.)

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM said:—When I moved the other day that this Bill be put on the Order Paper, it was an orphan in this House, and I wanted to advance it a stage; but on looking at the matter, I wanted to ascertain, as it was an orphan, whether it was a legitimate one or not. I found that it was not altogether straight. The Bill originated in the House of Commons. It does not call for anything, so far as I can see, except an extension of time. In 1887, the company was incorporated and got three years to go on with the work. They came last year before this House and got the time further extended for two years from July next before the charter runs out. Now, they are making an application to parliament for a four years' extension. They want six years now. It may be all right, but it needs an explanation. There was no petition presented to the House for the Bill. I do not want, at this stage, to take all the objections I have against the extension of time. It is very desirable that we should utilize Lake Erie as a mill pond and Niagara River as a race to develop electrical power in Canada. We know there is great jealousy in New York State against any Canadian company doing work on this side, and now if we are going to give these parties the extension of time that they seek, the people on the other side can afford to deal very liberally with them. They can pay them a large amount of money to block this Canadian enterprise for six years longer. That is my warning. If they want an extension of time (they have two years to run yet) let them come here, and I am sure the House of Commons and the Senate of Canada will give them what time is reasonable and right in order to do the work. Therefore as the Bill is not legitimately before this House, I move:

That the order for the second reading of this Bill be discharged from the Orders of the Day, and that the Bill be referred to the Committee on Standing Orders in accordance with the 59th rule of this Senate.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This is another illustration of hon. gentlemen being too courteous and extending too much consideration to Bills that come from the ower House without the parties interested asking senators to take charge of them. A session or two ago I called attention to this, and suggested that when a Bill comes from the lower House, either of a public or a private character, when those who are interested in it have not taken the trouble to extend the ordinary courtesy to a senator to ask him to take charge of it or explain it, it should be allowed to drop. It would teach those who desire to have Bills passed a lesson that probably they would not forget. The motion now made by my hon. friend from Monck, I think is a correct one. He has found out, since he took charge of the Bill, that the parties have not complied with the rules enabling them to come before parliament, and he has taken the proper course in sending the Bill back to committee, and either have the Bill dropped, for the reasons he has already given, or have the rules suspended to enable him to go on with it. I am very much inclined to agree with him that there is something more behind this Bill than appears on the face of it. If the company have two years now to begin work, why should they ask for four years more? I am glad my hon. friend had sufficient industry to look into this Bill, and I hope that we will treat all Bills in future as I have suggested.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned.

THIRD READING.

Bill (51) 'An Act to incorporate the Holiness Movement Church in Canada.'—(Hon. Mr. Lougheed.)

RENTAL OF MONTMAGNY POST OFFICE.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired :

1. What amount has the government collected from the rental of Montmagny post office buildlings, year by year, up to date since the acquisition of said buildings ?
2. From that amount how much was paid to the caretaker of said building?
3. How much for the minor expenses pointed out in the answer given by the hon. the Secretary of State on May 2, and what are those minor expenses?
4. How much for the 'et cætra,' given in the same answer, and what are those 'et cætera'?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The amount of rental is not collected by the department, it is received by the caretaker as a salary for the caretaking of the post office. The minor expenses referred to are petty repairs and supplies in connection with that part of the building which is rented. As this department does not pay for the above repairs and supplies, we have no records showing amount expended.

A CORRECTION.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the House adjourns I should like to call attention to the minutes of the proceedings of the Senate of yesterday. I made a motion yesterday which was carried and notice of it appears in the minutes to-day. I move, therefore, that an entry be made in the minutes of proceedings of the Senate of Canada of Monday, 7th May, 1900, of the following motion, which was regularly moved in this House on the said date and carried, and that such entry be in the following words :

The Hon. Mr. Landry called the attention of the Senate to the following facts :

1. On the 2nd day of May the following question was put by the Hon. Mr. Landry to the government:

'Whether since the commencement of the present parliament the government, or any one of the members of the present administration in the name or for the government, has received from the government of Manitoba or from the Catholic minority of that province, or from the episcopate of any of the provinces or any member thereof, any communication whatsoever, in the form of a demand, of a claim, of a protest, or otherwise, on the subject of the Manitoba school question?'

2. On the same day the following answer was given by the Hon. Mr. Scott, as reported by the Debates of the Senate, May 2, 1900:

'Hon. Mr. Scott—I think not, as far as I have been able to find out.

'Hon. Mr. Landry—How far?

'Hon. Mr. Scott—All the inquiry I could make from those who would have the information—from members of the government.'

And that he will move—

1. That such an answer does not settle the question, as it gives only what the hon. Secretary of State thinks, and that not further than what he could make out for himself from those who would have the proper information, leaving open to further inquiry what may be the limit of the searching powers of the hon. Secretary of State.
2. That it is an easy matter to ascertain if the documents asked for do or do not exist, are or are not in the possession of the government, and that the only proper way to give a proper answer is to say so.
3. That unless the government declare that they are not in possession of any documents of the kind, an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before the Senate a copy of all communications whatsoever received by the government since the commencment of the present parliament on the subject of the Manitoba school question, from the government of Manitoba, or from the Catholic minority of that province, or from the episcopate of any of the provinces or any member thereof.

The question of concurrence being put thereon, the same was resolved in the affirmative.

THE COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND COMMERCE.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. MILLS, moved that the Hon. Senator Power be appointed a member of the Committee on Banking and Commerce in place of Hon. Mr. Lewin deceased.

The motion was agreed to.

DELAYED RETURNS.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I would ask the hon. Secretary of State if there is any news of that report relating to the post office of Montmagny.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not aware that I have not brought down all the reports about the Montmagny post office.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. minister yesterday received the report, but I think he wanted to put it in proper form. If it takes less than a fortnight to put it in form, I might get it to-day ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It was sent here partially prepared and I will bring it in to-morrow.

THE USURY BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND, moved the second reading of Bill (T) 'An Act respecting Usury.' He said: Last year this House passed a Bill limiting the rate of interest upon loans to 20 per cent. I remember that when we first discussed this question, some hon. gentlemen were frightened at the high rate which the Bill would sanction. I explained at the time that to restrict moneylenders to 20 per cent was still doing some extraordinary work in the right direction, because to-day they are lending money at frightful rates, as high as three hundred or four hundred per cent per annum. Some persons were considerably disturbed at the idea that we were laying our hands on their business. Fortunately for them, they got twelve months respite, and have been able to continue to prey on the population and lend money at average rates of from sixty to a hundred per cent per annum. Cases have come to light every week during the last twelve months in the large cities where such extortionate rates have been charged. In moving the second reading of this Bill, which is word for word the one passed by this chamber last session, I have the hope that, as the Criminal Code Bill is now before the House of Commons, the penal clause of this Bill will be incorporated in that measure. If this Bill should share the fate of last year's Bill, and fail to pass through both Houses, we will have the satisfaction of knowing that we will be able to reach usurers through the criminal law. I have every hope of seeing the penal clause of the present Bill incorporated in the Criminal Code amendments. Then we would have of course, to consider those criminal law amendments again in this chamber. I need not dilate upon the details of this Bill. We may examine them anew when we go into committee. I will only say that after three years of arduous labour on the part of a select committee in the House of Lords in England, a Bill, on similar lines to this one, was passed by that House and is to-day before the British House of Commons, and I find the rate of interest is there limited as follows: it is in sterling in the Bill, I shall mention the amount in dollars. On all sums below ten dollars a rate of twenty-five per cent is allowed. On all sums between ten dollars and fifty dollars, a rate of twenty per cent, is allowed, and on all sums above fifty dollars fifteen per cent. I have struck the medium rate of twenty per cent on all transactions. I know that it is an extortionate rate for large sums, but the people we want to protect are the needy ones who have no mortgage to offer, nor very solvent names to give, and these people generally need sums below two or three hundred dollars. I think if we limit the lenders to twenty per cent, that it is not an excessive rate on small loans. Twenty per cent on fifty dollars for a few days does not involve a large amount. I would have no objection to even a higher rate if the lender would content himself with charging that large rate of discount, and not exact at each renewal the same rate. I have found that when a man presents himself for a loan of fifty or a hundred dollars and is asked a large discount, the immorality of the act is not very great, because the lender not only charges interest upon the same loan, but charges for the risk incurred by him in dispossessing himself of his money; but where the immoral act comes in, is when he continues to charge at every renewal which may take place, every thirty days, besides interest, the same premium for the risk which he has already incurred and which has not changed. It is our duty to limit the lender to a certain rate. I find by fixing twenty per cent we will still be far above the rate fixed in very many countries upon such contracts. But this is a new country, with natural resources undeveloped, with people seeking money in mining districts and ready to pay a high rate, and I think that twenty per cent is not too much.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—What will prevent the lender from giving a receipt and taking a new loan? Then you will have interest on the interest which is not paid.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentlemen will find, on reading the Bill, that we compute the yearly interest upon not only the note which is in existence, but upon the renewal of the original note, in order to find what interest is charged.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—I do not think that meets the case. Suppose a man lends one hundred dollars and takes a note for it. When the note falls due the debtor cannot pay. He says, I cannot allow you to go on, because I will lose that interest. I shall give you a receipt for a hundred dollars, but give me a new note for the principal and interest, and I will renew the loan.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The lawyers in this House, and the Minister of Justice himself, will admit that the provisions of this Bill cover the two transactions and make them but one, so that we could re-open t em.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I understand the hon. gentleman to say that a similar Bill had passed in the English parliament or was under consideration there at the present time?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I said a Bill on the same lines had passed the House of Lords and had not yet passed both Houses, because it had not time, but that it was at present before the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—Was that the same Bill that was before the House of Lords when this Bill was under consideration here?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—It is pretty much the same Bill. I have not examined it. I have just glanced over the Bill, which I obtained through the kindness of the Minister of Justice this morning, and I find it is generally on the same lines. The great difference between the Bill passed by the House of Lords and this one is that there the whole system is organized for the registration of the money lender. I do not know if the conditions there as to the trade carried on by the people are different, but I do not see the necessity of forcing the money lender to register himself. Our money lender is well known. I think we describe him sufficiently, and forcing him to register would simply give us a right to accuse him of a second offence—the offence of not having registered—in addition to the charge of having violated the law. We have described the money lender in a sufficiently clear way to reach him if he breaks the law. The present Bill reads:

> The expression 'money-lender' in this Act shall include any person who carries on the business of money-lending, or advertises, or announces himself, or holds himself out in any way, as carrying on that business, and who makes a practice of lending money at a higher rate than 10 per cent per annum.

So we only reach one class of people—the professional money lenders.

Hon. Sir. MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not think the hon. gentleman answered the question put by my hon. friend from Montarville. His question was, does the Bill provide for renewal notes by which the man who lends could secure compound interest?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I have answered in the affirmative.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Or, in other words, if a man took a note bearing 20 per cent for six months, and at the end of the six months the borrower was unable to pay, could he not give a note for $110? That would be interest which would have accrued, payable in another six months, and at the end of the six months the interest would be concluded on $110 for six months, and that would be added to the original note and continue renewing in that way. I do not think there is any possible way of reaching a case of that kind. Under the present law, we know that mortgages are given with a provision in them that in case the interest be not paid at the time of maturity, then the interest due is to draw the same rate of interest that the principal draws until it is paid. That would be the case, I fancy, under the law even if this Bill were placed on the statute-book. Might I ask, in addition to that, what is the rate of interest which a man may charge, or does this restrict the rate, providing the amount is over $500? From a cursory glance at the Bill it does not seem to me that it does—you could take any interest you pleased. Apart from that, the provision placed on the statute-book legalizing 20 per cent upon a loan of $100, or $500, is—I would not say an absurdity—is like turning legislation into ridicule. If we are to have a usury law under which the usurer is to be prevented from taking an exorbitant interest, we had better place it at something like a reasonable sum, I think that 20 per cent is an unreasonable sum and would turn the legislation into ridicule, rather than in the direction that my hon. friend desires it to take. I commend him for the course he is pursuing, but I certainly would not sanction a higher rate than ten per cent. If upon a small loan, or any loan under five hundred dollars, a money lender can obtain ten per cent he is doing well. You can get money at four and five per cent on gilt-edged loans. It is only the class to which the hon. gentleman refers, that exists in large cities, particularly in Montreal, in this city and in others, where impecunious clerks and others, who allow themselves to be led into borrowing money at three hundred and four hundred and five hundred per cent, as I have had brought under my notice. These are questions, however, that we can discuss before the Banking and Commerce Committee. I should be very glad to see a restriction to prevent this species of robbery which is carried on throughout the whole country, and if it could go further, as suggested by the hon. gentleman who introduced this Bill, and be made a penal offence in the code now before the Lower House, I should be better pleased. I have always been of this opinion, although free-traders say that money is the same as any other commodity; that is a theory in political economy that I have never been able to accept, because to my mind it occupies altogether a different position, even as a commodity, from wheat, flour, or other articles that we buy and sell, for reasons which it is quite unnecessary to enter into a discussion of at the present time; but I would rather have the law as it is than to see a limitation of 20 per cent placed upon the statute-book, for the reasons that I have suggested.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon friend the leader of the opposition misapprehends the object and scope of this measure. It is precisely the same in its object and scope as the Bill introduced in the House of Lords in England, after very full inquiry and full consideration of the subject. This is not an attempt to deal with ordinary money transactions. There is no intention of interfering with the liberty of contract. If men choose to borrow money at a high rate of interest in ordinary transactions of a commercial character, this measure does not interfere with them. This Bill is intended to give a certain amount of protection to parties whose financial circumstances are such that they are unable to protect themselves. It also recognizes the fact that loans to such parties are, to some extent at least, of a desperate character, and those who make the loans are obliged not only to take the ordinary rate of interest, but also that amount of interest which will insure the principal, so that there is interest and insurance practically charged upon the loan which is made. The hon. gentleman says that 20 per cent is a very high rate of interest—a preposterously high rate. So it would be in ordinary transactions, but a man, for instance, who requires to make a loan for a fortnight is quite ready to pay a higher rate of interest than he would pay upon a transaction where the money was borrowed for a period of twelve months. It is a matter of accommodation to him. It may be a matter of very considerable consequence that he should obtain the money for that short period of time. It may prevent him sacrificing property which he would otherwise be compelled to sacrifice in order to meet the transactions for which he has borrowed the money. But my hon. friend by this Bill aims mainly at meeting the case of parties who are borrowing money under very needy circumstances at a very high rate of interest from parties who do not scruple to charge enormous rates. It is with a view of protecting the men who otherwise are unable to protect themselves, and so he proposes that the rate of interest which the parties obtain shall not exceed the rate of 20 per cent per annum. That rate, I apprehend, covers the rate of interest added to the face of the transaction. At all events, if that is not perfectly clear it can be easily made clear, so that the rate of interest charged by these professional lenders to persons who are needy shall not exceed the rate of 20 per cent per annum. I believe my hon. friend gave last year a number of instances where very high rates, amounting to over three and four hundred per cent a year, were charged in the city of Montreal in transactions of this sort, and the evidence taken before the House of Lords in England shows that equally high rates of interest had been charged by the ordinary professional money lender there, and the object there is not to interfere with ordinary transactions, but to regulate transactions of that sort and to give protection to those whose pecuniary circumstances have become such that they are no longer able to protect themselves.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—It appears to me that it will be necessary to mention the period, and that the rate of interest ought to change with the period of time as well as with the amount. If five hundred dollars is borrowed for five or ten days, it does not mean much at twenty per cent. This Bill does not provide any limit, and twenty per cent can be charged for three months, which means a great deal.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is twenty per cent per annum.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Still that means a great deal. It may be continued for a year at that rate. My hon. friend mentioned that it would be wrong to charge the same rate at the end of the period if the money was not paid, because the risk, according to his idea, would be lessened. I do not think so.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—It is the same risk. You insured the risk at the beginning and you should not charge again for that same risk.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—But I have taken that risk for three months. At the end of the three months you want me to leave the money with you at the same rate of interest for the next three months. I am running the same risk for the second three months as for the first, and for that reason I cannot see that the risk is lessened. For instance, a man insures his house for one year. The insurance runs out. The risk is not less at the end of the year than it was at the beginning. If it is continued the risk ought to be continued at the same rate. For that reason I will take exception to this Bill, when it goes before the committee and suggest the propriety of having a limited time for a limited amount, if you are to allow the excessive rate of twenty per cent, I look upon twenty per cent as very high, and I repeat, it makes a great difference when you consider the length of time for which the money is loaned. If it is loaned for a short time, it does not amount to much, but if it is loaned for a long period, it makes a serious difference. For that reason I would limit the length of time.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Last year the Bill went before the Committee on Banking and Commerce and the rate of interest was reduced to 10 per cent. When the Bill was reported to the House, in committee of the Whole House the rate was increased to 20 per cent. The matter was examined minutely before that committee last year, and I would move that the Bill, be referred to a committee of the Whole House tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It would be very much better to pursue the same course that was adopted last year. There will be a great deal more information elicited, and I think the points of the Bill will be far better tested by going before the Committee on Banking and Commerce. It might afterwards be referred to a committee of the Whole House, but it should go to the Committee on Banking and Commerce first. I hope the hon. gentleman who has charge of the measure will accept my suggestion. I would have made some observations on the second reading if I had thought the Bill was not going to the Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—After the experience I had last year of the useless work we did in the Committee on Banking and Commerce, I prefer to send it to a committee of the Whole House. Last year we came back to this chamber with a changed jury, or a changed committee, a number of gentlemen we had in the Committee of Banking and Commerce being absent, and we altered completely the measure. We can discuss and sift the measure thoroughly here, now that it has already passed the Committee on Banking and Commerce, and been considered by a sub-committee of that committee, and I think that we should keep the measure in this chamber.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—For my part, I do not object to its going to a committee of the whole. Could the hon. gentleman bring before us the English Bill? Very few of us have seen it. If we had that Bill it would not take long to read it, and we could see any difference there is between the two. They have studied the question more deeply in England than we have studied it here.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I shall have that English Bill here to-morrow if we go into committee of the whole. It is a Bill of only two pages.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I sympathize with what the promoter of this Bill has said with regard to sending it to the Committee on Banking and Commerce. He has reminded us that the Bill was before the committee last year, and I was on the sub-committee which tried to get this Bill into a shape which would be acceptable to this House. I confess I was one of the members of that committee who had very grave doubts as to the utility of legislation of this kind, but if we are to have legislation of the kind at all, the provisions of this Bill come about as near to what would be useful in this regard as any Bill we can propose. I can hardly conceive that anything very new can be brought before the committee on the subject. It is a very old subject—one that has been discussed before a great many different assemblies. I do think, however, that to consider this Bill to-morrow would be hastening it a little too much. I for one would like to have a little more time than that to consider the measure and particularly to look into the discussions that may have taken place in the House of Lords and to get a better knowledge of what is being done there. The Bill might be taken up on Friday.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I would prefer Thursday.

It was ordered that the Bill be referred to a committee of the Whole House on Thursday next.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, May 9, 1900.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

DELAYED RETURNS.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I should like to inquire of the government if they have the return I moved for concerning the petitions, documents, and all correspondence relating to the Baie des Chaleurs Short Line Railway?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I have not received anything in relation to that motion.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have received nothing.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The motion was adopted on the 26th of April.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will make inquiry.

SECOND READING.

Bill (U) 'An Act to incorporate the British American Pulp and Paper Company.'—(Hon. Mr. Landry.)

THE MANUFACTURE OF BINDER TWINE.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman opposite (Sir Mackenzie Bowell), asked me for information with regard to the quantity of material purchased for binder twine between the first of July, and the 31st of December. I may say there was purchased of sisal in October, 1899, 53,049 pounds, and in October, 1899, of New Zealand hemp, 55,198 pounds. Of course there was a considerable quantity of raw material on hand at the time the year began. That is not included in this quantity, because it was purchased prior to the first of July, 1899. I have given here what was purchased between the first of July and the 31st of December.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That information is satisfactory as far as it goes. The question was not what quantity was on hand at the beginning of the year. It was simply the quantities that had been purchased since the first of July, which the hon. gentleman has given, but he has not given the price paid for it, nor has he given the name of the party or parties from whom it was purchased, nor the market from which it came.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then the information which the hon. gentleman has given is of very little value so far as the object we had in view in asking the question, is concerned. The Auditor General's Report gives the information which the hon. gentleman refers to—that is, the quantity purchased prior to the first of July, and the price paid for it. What we wanted to know, and what the country would like to know, is from whom sisal and manila have been purchased since the first of July, and the price paid for it. That information I understood the hon. gentleman to say the other day, when referring to this question, it was inexpedient to give for fear the world would know what they paid for it, and the price at which they sold it, as it would interfere with the market price which the parties who purchased would demand from the consumer. Against that doctrine I have already, so far as I am concerned, entered my protest. I think the farmers of this country who consume binder twine, and the people of this country who have to pay the expenses connected with its manufacture are entitled to full information. However, the government have taken the other ground, and we have no means of compelling them to deviate from the policy they laid down. I can only enter my protest against a policy of that kind.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—We have laid down no new principle. The rule was adopted in 1894, when the manufacture of twine was begun, and has been continued ever since, and it is in the public interest that it should be the rule. The men who are, above all others, interested in obtaining information of this sort are the manufacturers who are engaged practically in conducting rival establishments. While we have no desire to injure them, we have no desire to injure a government department by disclosing information of this sort. On the contrary, we purchase our raw material at various prices. Sometimes we get enough at a very low rate, a lot perhaps that has been on hand for some time. We again purchase at a very much higher rate, and people would at once begin to see what you could afford to put the article on the market for. Now, the result is the average for the year, and when we manufacture and market the product there is no objection whatever to giving the prices, both of the manufactured article and the raw material, but I say that no establishment could be conducted, and escape bankruptcy, on the line which the hon. gentleman suggests, and as long as the government are engaged in the manufacturing business, they have to pay the same regard to those principles which every other manufacturing establishment in the country must regard. As I said before, we are not entering on the business of manufacturing to help any particular class in the community.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Oh yes, you are.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The only way we could do that would be to prohibit others from engaging in rival production and undertake to manufacture for the entire community. If we were manufacturing for the whole community, then we could fix the price, and we could fix that price with reference to the raw material. We could charge accordingly, but we cannot do that at the present time. My impression is that there may be a considerable reduction in price before the harvest season arrives, and we may be obliged to sell binder twine at less than the actual value of the article. So that in the manufacture we have to pay some regard, not to what this particular quantity cost us in October, or some other period, but what has been the general cost for the year. At the present time the value of manila is 13½ cents. That is the lowest price quoted to us. We are offering the manufactured article at fourteen cents retail in small quantities to farmers, and it is certain that unless we purchased a portion of the material at less than we are obliged to pay at the present time, we could not offer it at that figure without sustaining a very serious loss, and so the fair way, in the interest of the public—because the public are interested in the conduct of this business—is to sell on terms which, while not affording to the government an exorbitant profit, will, at all events, protect the department against actual loss. There is no class of the community that constitute a charitable institution: all of them may fairly be called upon to pay what is a fair price for the article which they expect to purchase, and we have no intention, and it is no part of our duty, to undertake to put our products on the market at a rate that would be ruinous to other manufacturers. Hon. gentlemen who have adopted the principle of protection, and who have sought to secure a high market price for manufactured products, can hardly consistently ask us to engage in competition with other manufacturers and produce an article and put it upon the market for less than it has actually cost us. I am perfectly satisfied that if the result of the conduct of our business for a series of years went to show that we were manufacturing at a loss, the department would be blamed for bad management. I wish to escape that censure, and while not charging more than a fair price, considering what the article cost us, I wish that we should by protected against actual loss, and I also think that the public get all the information which they may fairly claim when the article is marketed, when we give the price of the raw material for the year and the price for the manufactured product.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—After it is sold.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, that is the right time. My hon. friend knows that that is the principle upon which all business is conducted, and the government must conform to those rules which universal experience shows to be necessary.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—I sympathize with the position which is taken by the hon. leader of the House in not wishing, at the present time, to disclose what the prices are and thus making apparent to the country the profit which is made between the original buyer and price which is paid by the farmers, when this commodity comes into their hands. As the hon gentleman has said very rightly, it is a question of the time when this is to be disclosed, and there may be many reasons which, from his own point of view, it would be inadvisable to disclose it at the present time. For instance, there might be a general election coming on before the government disclosed the price, and it would be advisable for the government not to disclose the price paid by the parties who were the recipients of great favours from the government, and the price paid by the farmers, because that is the most important, as far as we are concerned. At the same time I would point out that there is a part of this question which might be answered, and I cannot see that the country at large would be hurt by our being informed as to it—that is, the names of the parties by whom the materials were purchased, that should be furnished us. There is no disclosure of any secret in giving the names of any of the parties, and I think the hon minister might perhaps give me those names.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—While I regard with a certain degree of reverence the precedent established by the late government, I cannot fully appreciate the precedent already referred to, that there should be no disclosure of the cost of the raw material for the manufacture of binder twine until after the product is marketed and sold. It seems to me that if the government had belonged to the binder twine combination they could not pursue a course more in harmony with the course usually pursued by trusts and combinations than upon the present occasion. I certainly cannot appreciate the logic of the position taken by my hon. friend, and apparently by the late government, in reference to not revealing the cost of the raw material particularly when we take into consideration that the cost of this material is obtainable from a dozen sources. It does not require to be extracted from a Star Chamber institution. One could go to the market, I apprehend, and readily ascertain its cost. But when my hon. friend suggests that there possibly may be a loss by the government in the manufacture of this twine and that the giving of the information might disclose a loss on the part of the government, it certainly, to me, is an astounding revelation, when one takes into consideration the fact that the labour practically costs them nothing for the manufacture of this twine, and I apprehend that labour is the costliest commodity that enters into the manufacture of this product. This leads us, therefore, to sympathize very deeply with other binder twine industries, and I have been endeavouring to reconcile that statement with the statement that has recently been made in the public press and through several channels, that the Brantford manufactory announced, and also paid, a dividend of 100 per cent on its recent operations. If, therefore, a private institution, like the Brantford company, can pay 100 per cent dividend, and pay the going prices for labour in the manufacture of the product, what then must be the administration of the government in the manufacturing of this product, if on the manufacture of the product itself there is not a profit made, or that the raw material costs more than the manufactured article. It seems to me that the government can only have two objects in entering into the manufacture of binder twine! One is to keep employed the prison labour, and the other is to sell to the farmers a manufactured product at a very low profit. If that be the case, it seems to me there is no necessity for showing the deep solicitude which seems to be shown on this occasion, and by previous governments, with regard to other corporations, or other individuals, who have entered on the manufacture of binder twine. Why this deep solicitude? Why should the interests of a combination, or trust, be consulted with reference to an article which enters into the life and the industry of the agricultural community? It seems to me that unnecessary solicitude has been shown by this government and previous governments with regard to this question, and, certainly, so far as the present government is concerned, I see no reason why it should hesitate for one moment to take, not only parliament, but the public into its confidence with regard to the cost of the raw material, and the profits and the losses which are occasioned in the manufacture of the product.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I must confess that I could never understand the reason why the government should refuse to give us this information. Parties who are engaged in this branch of trade, and other branches of trade, are perfectly well conversant with the prices of the raw material and the finished product, and all circumstances attending the manufacture, and it is utterly impossible to keep from those people the position which the government would occupy with respect to the purchase of this or any other article. We know that every man who is engaged in a certain trade makes himself conversant with every detail and knows exactly the price paid, and puts himself in a position to cope with it, and makes arrangements accordingly.

The government, I presume, take the opportunity of finding out the probable cost of this raw material either at the present time or some future time, and are governed by the circumstances of the case. If they find that the prices are likely to be lower in the future, of course they will naturally say we will abstain from buying at the present time; but we know in some cases the government have not acted in that way. We know at the time of the purchase of steel rails by the Mackenzie government some years ago, the government purchased when the figures were highest and afterwards prices were greatly reduced. At that time we were engaged in constructing waterworks in this city, and had to pay high prices for the pipes that we required immediately, but with our later information we governed ourselves accordingly, and did not buy more than was absolutely necessary. What was the result? Instead of paying sixty dollars a ton for the pipe required, long before the work was completed we bought the same class of pipe at thirty dollars a ton, whereas the government at that time bought the whole quantity of rails required at an excessive price. Therefore, I cannot understand why the government should think they are doing a benefit to themselves or the country by abstaining from giving this information, because in reality it is not withholding information from the parties concerned. Everybody interested in buying sisal or manila knows the prices, and as prudent men they govern themselves accordingly. It might be as well for the government to say we have bought a certain quantity of material, up to the present time, thinking it would not increase in value, or we have bought sufficient to meet our present requirements, trusting to a great reduction in the price in the future. That is a business like view that a business man would take of it, and I cannot understand why the government should, on all occasions, refuse to give information of this nature. As a business man, I say that is a principle which should govern business men in transactions of this nature. The hon. gentleman says that the same principle was acted on by the Conservative government. We always thought that this government was so opposed to the preceding government that they would take a different course when they found that their predecessors had taken an erroneous one. Those who are engaged in agricultural pursuits are entitled to information in a matter of vital importance to their interest ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I do not pretend to say that whatever a Conservative government did was right. I am of opinion that a good many things were done by Conservative governments which were not right, but I have not said that everything that was done by a Conservative government was wrong. My hon. friend (Mr. Clemow), kept quiet a good many years with reference to this policy, while it was pursued by the Conservative government, and it is a rather suspicious circumstance that he complains now.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I never heard of it before.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend is mistaken with regard to this matter. We adopt the same rule that business establishments adopt throughout the whole country in the conduct of their business.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I do not think it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I ask the hon. gentleman to say what manufacturing establishment in this country has given the price at which it purchases its raw material ? We have no agents going through the country for the purpose of selling our binder twine. Do we want the agents who are engaged in disposing of the products of various establishments in the country to know the price at which the government purchased the raw material, and say it is an inferior article, you cannot make good twine out of such material ? All sorts of misrepresentation may be made to the disadvantage of the penitentiary.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Is it not really to the disadvantage of manufacturers in the United States ? We have no such thing as manufacturers of binder twine in this country, except at Brantford.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend is mistaken. We have.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Where ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—At Central Prison.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—The others were closed by the abolition of the duty on binder twine.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is to the advantage of our establishment that we should conduct it on precisely the same lines on which it has been conducted up to the present time. My hon. friend has said that it might be of advantage in the elections if they had more information. I have no doubt my hon. friend would use any statement I might make, as to the price paid, against the administration, if by any possibility such could be done. My hon. friend has spoken of there being combinations. There is no possible combination on this subject. I have pointed in a small blue-book which I have submitted to parliament, to this fact, that the binder twine of last year was put upon the market at about six cents a pound all over the country. Now, if that were so,—if there had been any combination at that time it would not be amongst the wholesale dealers or manufacturers, whether in Canada or abroad. It could only be amongst the retail dealers throughout the country, and I do not think any hon. gentleman will undertake seriously to argue that there has been a combination amongst the retail dealers to put up the price on the farmer. The truth is this, that while we have offered the article to the farmers, they seldom buy from us. They wait until the harvest season comes on, and then they buy from some retail dealer in their own neighbourhood. That is the way they make their purchases, and the retail dealers everywhere throughout the country purchased the binder twine in the year 1898, as hon. gentlemen will see from the report submitted, at about six cents a pound on the average. That is a very moderate rate, so that it is quite obvious there is no such thing as a combination amongst wholesale dealers. The retail dealers purchase it at a moderate rate, and sell it at the best prices they can get for it. If the article is scarce, they ask more for it and make a profit on it. If the article is abundant, they take the risk of carrying over to the next year a portion of what they purchased on speculations. That is precisely what is done, and will be done, as long as the business is conducted as it is at the present time. The only way we could put an end to that would be by undertaking to manufacture all that was required in the community. We could not do that at the penitentiary. We do not command a sufficient amount of labour for that purpose. At the present time we manufacture about five hundred tons a year, and there are at least five thousand tons a year consumed in Canada, so hon. gentlemen will see that, even if we offered the article at half its cost, there would be but a very small fraction of the farming population of Canada that would be benefited by an offer of that sort. It is true we might seriously affect the value of the article produced by private parties.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—There are no private manufactories.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There is the Brantford establishment. Does the hon. gentleman say it is any part of our duty to make war on them ? The hon. gentleman favours the principle of protection.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I do not want to favour United States manufacturers and combines and have them raise the price here, the government assisting them.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The government have not assisted them. The repealing of the duties has not increased the price. The hon. gentleman puts a duty on for the purpose of increasing the price. That is what he has contended for. All the advocates of the national policy have maintained that doctrine. The hon. gentleman talks about the increased price, but the price of the manufactured article has reference to the price of the raw material.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Not when they make a hundred per cent profit.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is easily understood. If the price went up after a large portion of the raw material had been purchased, the parties engaged in the manufacture profited on the transaction just as the hon. gentleman does in any business he is engaged in.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—What put the price up, last year ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—He told us last session. Now he is combating the the reasons then given.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—It is the combine in Canada.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I say there is no combine in Canada. The fact is there are at least three United States establishments selling their goods in Canada, and I took the trouble of going over the list. There is the McCormick Company, the Plymouth Manufacturing oCmpany, and the Deering Company. All those companies, and the Canadian company at Brantford, sold their twine at about the same price. Our average price was about six cents a pound. The lower grades sold at about five and a quarter and the highest at seven and a quarter. We got the full market price for what we sold as compared with the price at which all these establishments that I have mentioned sold their products in Canada. It is as clear as noonday that there could be no combine, and was no combine. But the fact is this, you cannot buy manila at the present time under thirteen cents, 13§ cents is the lowest price at which it has been offered to us, and, that being so, does any hon. gentleman in his senses suppose that the manufactured product could be put upon the Canadian market at the same price at which it was sold on the Canadian market when the raw material was four and a quarter cents a pound ? Is there common sense in maintaining that the present price is the result of a combination when every man must see, by looking at the price at which the raw material is purchased, that it is three times as high to-day as it was in the spring of 1898 ? That being so, the price of the manufactured product is higher, and whether it comes from United States, or whether it is manufactured in Canada, the price must be higher. It seems to me the pettiest kind of politics, wholly unsuited to this Chamber, to undertake to represent the present prices of twine as the result of the repeal of the duties upon the manufactured article. It is not the result of anything of the sort. It is the result of the very high price and the scarcity of the raw material. The war in the Phillipine Islands, makes it impossible to get the raw material out on the same terms, and with the usual facilities. There is much less of it got out, and the result is the article is scarcer and the prices are higher, and that being so, the public who require it are compelled to pay more than they would pay under other circumstances.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We have had a very good lesson as to business transactions in reference to binder twine, which has very little to do with the question put on the paper. The hon. gentleman has stated on every occasion, when attention has been called in this House to the question of binder twine, that he is pursuing the same policy that was pursued by the late government.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I did not say that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You did not say that?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then what was the reference made by the hon. gentleman? What I understood the hon. gentleman to say was this, that in refusing to give the information which was asked for, he was pursuing the same policy as the late government.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I ask the hon. gentleman to give this House proof of the statement. Can he point to any order in his department which governs the output of the penitentiary to the effect that he mentioned in this House Can he point to any instance in the House of Commons or this Chamber where such information as this was asked of the late government and refused? If he can, I will accept the statement, but not until then. I kept tolerably well posted in the policy pursued by the late government—at least while I had anything to do with it—and I here state that I have no recollection of any such policy having been discussed or laid down, or of any instance in which information was refused when asked for in either House. I make this statement in justice to the late government, more particularly as the hon. gentleman from Calgary (Mr. Lougheed), and the hon. gentleman from Rideau (Mr. Clemow), seem to have accepted the statement of the Minister of Justice. I put my statement against his, and I do so on the ground that I have no recollection of the question ever having been discussed, or information sought as we have endeavoured to obtain it in this House or in the House of Commons. All the information that we ask for is, how much did you buy? Where did you buy it, and how much did you pay for it? With that information before us, we can draw our own inferences, if there are any to be drawn, as to the policy pursued in selling the binder twine. The hon. gentleman has told us a good deal about combinations that exist, or do not exist. I say no circumstances ever existed, while the late government was in power, that would justify any one in taking the position that we have taken in reference to this question at the present time, and consequently the same statements would not apply to the action of the late government that apply to the actions of the present government. I am not going to enter upon the question of free trade or protection in this discussion. I take issue, however, with the hon. gentleman when he says that in all cases the imposition of a duty increases prices. He asked this question—to my mind a very childish one—of the hon. gentleman from Glengarry: If the hon. gentleman thinks that removing the duty increases the price, why does he not favour free trade? The object of imposing duties is not to increase the price of a manufactured article so as to mulct the people who consume it out of a large amount of money. The object of protection, and of protectionists, in imposing duties, is to encourage the production of an article in the country by our own artizans, instead of importing it from other countries. We go further, and say that after these industries have been established, experience shows that the price goes down lower than before the imposition of the duties. I go further, and say that taking the duties off and admitting the importations free into a country like this, may increase prices because it enables the United States producer to control the market. If the United States producers are sufficiently wealthy and their output is sufficiently great to crush out the industries in a smaller country like Canada, they can put the prices at what they please. They can combine with the manufacturers in this country, and the admission of their products into this country free puts them in precisely the same position in our market that they would occupy in a state of the neighbouring Union. The only difference in the price would be the addition of the freight in carrying the article from the manufacturing centre in the United States into Canada. I do not care anything about your theories; you may talk of political economy and the theories of political economists as long as you please, but one solid fact which we know to exist will counterbalance all the theories you could preach till doomsday. I have no doubt that sitting down at a table and arguing the general principle, the hon. gentleman might be able to show that free trade is best for the world, but we have not free trade all over the world, and practice has established the position that I take on this question, namely, that the imposition of a duty does not necessarily enhance the price of an article. Situated as we are, in many instances prices are increased by taking off the duty. However, I do not intend to further discuss this question on the present occasion. What I want is evidence of the statement which the hon. minister has made, that the late government pursued any such policy in reference to this question when asked for information as to the value of an article that they may have purchased for any purpose whatever, that they withheld it from either the Senate or the House of Commons. I deny that the late government ever refused such information.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (79) 'An Act to amend the General Inspection Act so as to provide a grade for Flax Seed.'—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

Bill (78) An Act to amend the Gas Inspection Act.'—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

Bill (98) 'An Act respecting the Yarmouth Steamship Company Limited.'—(Hon. Mr. Lovitt.)

DELAYED RETURNS.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I may point out to my hon. friend the Secretary of State that there are two motions for papers, the returns for which have not yet been produced. I refer to the motion for a statement of the earnings of the winter boats on the Prince Edward Island service covering a period of many years. Then there is the question of the supply of oils to the Intercolonial Railway. My hon. friend will, I hope, make a note of both of these, and endeavour to have them brought down as soon as possible.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Thursday, May 10, 1900.

The Speaker took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

LETTERS SENT TO EUROPE.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired.

Out of the number of 150,375,000 letters deposited in the post offices of Canada during the year 1898-9, as given at page xv of the official report, what is the figure representing the number of letters sent to Europe during the same period?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The answer I have received from the department is that in the enumeration on which the estimate of 150,375,000, as the total number of letters posted in Canada during the year ended 30th June, 1899, was based, no distinction was made between letters addressed to places in Canada and letters addressed to other countries, and the department is unable, therefore, to supply information as to the proportion of letters sent to Europe, included in that total.

RE-OPENING OF TRADE ON SOUTH EASTERN RAILWAY.

INQUIRY POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day being called.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired:

Has the government or any of the members of the present administration received, at any time from July 1, 1896, to this date, any petitions or communications whatsoever on the part of boards of trade, of municipal corporations or of any private individuals coming from the city of Sorel, or from the municipalities of St. Michel d'Yamaska, de Yamaska, de St. David d'Yamaska, de St. Guillaume d'Upton, de St. Pie de Deguire, de St. Bonaventure d'Upton, de St. Germain de Grantham and Drummondville, in relation to the re-opening the trade of that part of the South-Eastern Railway which united Sorel to Drummondville and which seems to have been abandoned and not worked since April, 1892?

If in the affirmative, in whose name have these communications been sent?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Communications of the nature described in the hon. gentleman's question would necessarily have been intended for the government. None have come to the department of the Secretary of State, nor have any come to the Privy Council office. Without further information I am unable to give my hon. friend any advice on the subject. I will inquire of the Department of Railways and Canals. That is the only other department, I suppose, that would have any other communication. There may be letters to the individual ministers, but of course communications of that kind on questions of policy would be by the minister transferred to the Privy Council office. An exhaustive search has been made there and no communication of the kind has been found. If the hon. gentleman could give me any clue to the inquiry it would help me.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—As I understand, there is only the Department of Railways and Canals——

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think that is the only department that a communication of that kind would go to, and I have not their answer, but communications of that kind, which involve questions of policy, would even if sent direct to the minister, be forwarded to the Privy Council. An exhaustive search in the Privy Council shows that no communication of the kind described in the hon. gentleman's question had been filed there, nor had any come to the department of the Secretary of State.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. minister will inquire ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will inquire of the Department of Railways and Canals. That is the only department to where there would be any use in making a reference.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—In the future I should like if the hon. minister would inquire before giving an answer.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I might call the attention of the hon. Secretary of State to the fact that this inquiry is as to whether any member or members of the present administration have received such documents. What the hon. Secretary of State says is quite correct, as to a change of policy, but that can only be upon the recommendation of the head of the department to which the policy would refer. The Minister of Railways might have received communications and not have made any report to the Privy Council, nor would he do so until he had come to some decision as to the policy which he would recommend the government to take. It seems to me that all the hon. gentleman has to do is simply to refer the question to the Minister of Railways and Canals, and let him say whether these communications have taken place or not. I know that was the old practice.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That has been done.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We will get the answer to morrow.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I thought the hon. gentleman said he had referred to the department and got no answer.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I understand the answer has not been given yet.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We will let the motion stand.

The motion was allowed to stand.

THE OYSTER BEDS IN SHEDIAC BAY.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER inquired :

On what dates did the government cause oysters to be sown in the Shediac Bay in New Brunswick?

How much money have these experiments cost in all?

What has been the result of them?

Has the Minister of Marine and Fisheries caused these oysters to be fished for, or does he propose to do it?

What system of fishing does he intend to adopt?

Have other similar experiments been made in Canada, since 1892, elsewhere than at Shediac?

How much money have they cost?

He said: It is with some apprehension that I rise to put this question, remembering my experience on the last occasion on which I put a question to the government. On that occasion, I had the honour to find out that the hon. minister had not taken the trouble to read my question, and when he condescended to read it, he found out that it was irregular, that it was stating facts, while I had simply asked a question. He went further and once more undertook to look into it closely and I finally got his answer. The matter was in reference to some remarks made by the hon. Minister of Public Works in Toronto, remarks which were rather silly in their nature, but intended to throw discredit on the Senate. I simply asked whether the minister had made those remarks or not. The hon. leader of the government answered that he was not in Toronto. I expect this time as the question is about oysters, that he will answer that he is not in the oysters. However, it is a question of serious importance, and I venture to put it, and I hope that the hon. minister will give me some reply, and, if he condescends to do so, that it will be a proper, a parliamentary and a decent one. The oyster trade is a very important one in the maritime provinces. A very considerable amount of money has been spent in the maritime provinces to cultivate oysters in the same manner as in the old country, France and Belgium, and also in the United States. In the Bay of Shediac, on the coast of which I happen to live, a considerable amount of money has been spent for the purpose of testing whether we could cultivate oysters and replenish the beds. I know personally that experienced men sent by the government worked there for two or three summers. I know that oysters were planted there, but I have not been able to ascertain, after going to the department several times myself, what the government intends to do with those oysters. As a matter of fact, those oysters are matured, and have been matured for several years, and nothing whatever has been done with them. My question is to ascertain if the government have any idea of the result of those experiments, and, if they have not, what they intend to do. I repeat, it is a question of some importance to us, as it means the revival of an industry which has fallen into decay and which is, I believe, susceptible of being made a paying one of great importance to the maritime provinces.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The answers of the department are as follows:

1. During the seasons of 1893 and 1894. 2. Several beds were in course of preparation at the same time; and owing to the destruction of the detailed accounts by fire, it is impossible to now give the cost of preparing each bed. The total amount expended for oyster culture in 1893, was $5,-010.00, and in 1894, $6,136.00. 3. Experiment very successful; but good results much interfered with by poachers, owing to neglect or inability of guardians to properly protect the oyster beds. 4. No; but it is proposed to allow them to be fished for. 5. It has been decided to adopt the system which has worked admirably in North River, Prince Edward Island, and to allow licensed oyster fishermen to fish for a certain number of days each season, under the supervision of a fishery officer. 6. Yes. 7. Answered by No. 2.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say they propose to adopt the system of fishing in the Harbour of Shediac that is described in the reply from the department?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—To what particular question does my hon. friend refer? There are seven questions on this paper. First, as to the season, next the cost of the experiment, then the result, then has the Minister of Marine caused the oysters to be fished for, what system does he propose to adopt? Is that the one?

Hon. Mr. WOOD—That and the next one.

Hon Mr. SCOTT—The answer placed in my hands is as follows:

It has been decided to adopt the system which has worked admirably in the North River, P.E.I., and to allow licensed oyster fishermen to fish for a certain number of days each season, under the supervision of a fishery officer.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—Do I understand from that answer that they intend to adopt that system in Shediac?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not able to give the hon. gentleman the answer. I am not at all familiar with the question. The hon. gentleman knows far more than I do about it. The answers are given categorically on the supposition that the hon. gentleman who puts the questions, understands them.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I understand they all refer to oyster beds in Shediac Habour. My reason for pressing this point is this : I took a good deal of interest in the Shediac oyster beds, and in this experiment to restock them. I had the honour of representing the county at the time the oyster beds were planted, and I followed the reports of Mr. Kemp, who was in charge of the oyster beds, very closely. During the first two or three years the reports were very favourable. The experiment promised to be a very great success. The oysters grew very rapidly, and the report of 1897, that is, covering the season of 1896, reported that the first oysters that had been planted had grown to maturity and were in fine condition and fit for market. In the report of 1898, this same condition of things continued, but he adds that he has discovered a good deal of poaching on the beds. In the report of 1899. I find no reference to the beds in Shediac at all. It is currently rumoured down there, and there is good foundation for the rumour, that the officers in charge have entirely neglected their duties with regard to the oversight of these beds, and they are really being destroyed by poachers, and that the amount of labour and money that has been expended there, which, if followed up might have been a great success, has been an entire failure.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The answer to question No. 3, is quite in accord with what the hon. gentleman has said 'Experiment very successful, but good result much interfered with by poachers, owing to neglect or inability of guardians to properly protect the oyster beds.' Then the answer to question No. 5, states that it has been decided to adopt the system which has worked admirably in North River, Prince Edward Island, and to allow licensed oyster fishermen to fish for a certain number of days each season, under the supervision of a fishery officer.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I would remark that the case of North River, Prince Edward Island, is not altogether on all fours with that of Shediac. They were natural oyster beds that had been depleted by fishing.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—So they are in Shediac.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Are the Shediac beds also natural beds ?

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It is only restocking them ?

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I can bear out what my hon. friend says about North River, Prince Edward Island. The measures adopted there have resulted in reviving the fertility of the oyster in that river, so that excellent results are now being obtained.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—It is gratifying to me, and I am sure will be to the people of the maritime provinces, to hear from the hon. minister that the government intend to do something to regulate the oyster fisheries. Over eleven thousand dollars have been spent in restocking those natural beds. As a matter of fact, those beds were several years since susceptible of being fished. The oysters were matured for the last four years, and nothing had been done. They had been simply left to poachers who have fished them. It is not very creditable to the department officers who have allowed the results of those experiments to be for the benefit of poachers, when they simply needed an officer and some permission to fish those beds regularly and with profit. I understand that from the actions of poachers which have not been guarded against, those beds are again depleted. As I said before, I went to the department on several occasions and asked them to do something, to adopt some scheme to protect those beds, and not allow that large amount of money and experience to go for nothing, but could get no satisfactory answer. Therefore, again I express my gratification to hear that the government intend to do something, but I would be better satisfied if the hon. minister had told us when the government intend to apply to the Shediac beds those regulations which have been in existence in Prince Edward Island. Let me hope that they will do something this year, before the beds are entirely destroyed.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—Does not this oyster ground belong to the local government ?

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—Are not the fishery officers the same men that we had under the late government ?

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—No. I have no charge to make against the officers, it is against the department. The officers have been changed, but the former officers had no particular commission to look after the beds, though they had the authority. When the oysters became fit for market, they should have been fished, but they were left to the poachers. It might be as well to allow poachers to fish them by night as to let them rot. The government should have appointed an officer and adopted some regulations, and allowed either the public, or individuals under license, as is now proposed, to fish them, and see what the result of those experiments, which have cost, as we have heard, $11,000, has been. It is not only the money, but the result of a valuable experiment, which is lost to the country.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I shall have a copy of the hon. gentleman's remarks sent to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries for his consideration ?

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—No doubt those beds at Shediac have been planted, but they were only planted on a very small scale for the large extent of coast suitable for oysters. They should have been allowed to remain. If they are fished out when they came to maturity, how are we going to replant the beds ? I believe we have too many inefficient officers on our coast. The remarks which have been made apply not only to Shediac, but to Buctouche and the whole of the Miramichi. The beds are being destroyed by being over-fished. If the department would appoint efficient officers and allow the oysters to grow to maturity and restock the whole of the bays, as they would do if protected properly for a few years, then they might be fished, but to let the oysters merely come to maturity and then fish them out before the beds are replanted is entirely wrong.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I might say, in reply to the remarks of the last speaker, a very large area was stocked by the government at Shediac. The first year there were upwards of two hundred barrels of young oysters planted, each barrel containing something like 1,700 oysters. Next year upwards of 300 barrels were planted, and Mr. Kemp's report of 1897, states that the oysters he had first planted were then ready for market and could be fished. The mode of fishing, which the Secretary of State says has been established in North River, Prince Edward Island, should have been adopted in Shediac in 1897-98 and prevailed since; but instead of that, apparently these beds have been almost abandoned. A new officer has been appointed, who certainly had not taken any interest in the matter, so far as I understand. He himself keeps an oyster saloon in Shediac and sells oysters. At all events, the report of Mr. Kemp for 1897-98, was that up to that time he had discovered no signs of poaching, but since then poaching has been carried on, he presumes, during the night season, and the beds have been depleted by poaching. In the report of 1899 there appears to be no reference to it.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—What the hon. gentleman says is quite correct. He says there were 300 barrels placed in the Shediac Harbour one season and 200 another. When I was young, Shediac Harbour was capable of producing 500 barrels a day. If that harbour was capable of producing that amount per season what does 500 barrels put in now amount to ?

Hon. Mr. WOOD—The hon. gentleman might take 500 barrels, and 1,700 oysters to the barrel, and make the further calculation that each female oyster produces something like a million every year, and he could then get the information. If he will examine Kemp's report, he will find that oysters reach maturity in three to four years from the time they are planted. So that these oysters reached maturity, the first in 1896, and the last in 1897.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—In the discussion of this question hon. gentlemen overlook the point made by the hon. gentleman from Montarville, that the proprietary interest in these oyster beds belongs to the local legislature. The question was before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and there is little room to doubt that oyster beds in harbours and oyster beds in bays are under the local jurisdiction. I am under the impression that the local jurisdiction rests with the territorial right of the province, and that all bays and harbours that may be regarded as territorial waters, as lying within the limits of a province, so called, in the territorial sense, are the property of the province. Whether that could apply to a belt of water which may be commanded by a cannon shot from the shore, and which is held by force of arms, is a matter of which there may be a great deal of doubt. It is a question which has yet to be determined, whether the proprietary interest of the province will extend beyond low water mark. If the belt that surrounds our coast may be regarded as territorial waters in the same sense as a bay or harbour is territorial water, then no doubt the proprietary right would extend to those waters as well as to others, but so far as the bays and harbours are concerned, I think there can be no doubt of the proprietary right of the province, and while parliament has, under the British North America Act, the right to make regulations for the government of the fisheries, which I apprehend would apply also to oyster beds, it has not any proprietary interest in them, and so, until that question is finally determined, so far as the water belt is concerned, we are not supposed to have the same interest in the matter as we had before the recent decision of the Privy Council was given. That decision makes it perfectly clear that in all the fresh waters, in the harbours, the bays, and possibly, in the water belt around the shores, the fisheries are the property of the province. Until that question is determined ultimately, of course we are not in a position to exercise that jurisdiction which was assumed to belong to the Dominion of Canada for the first 30 years of our existence.

LOSS OF THE STEAMER 'PORTIA.'

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON moved:

DELAYED RETURNS.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I should like to remind the hon. Secretary of State of the fact that I moved for a return in 1898, asking for certain information in reference to dismissals and the cost of the commissions. In the latter part of that session, just about the close, I called the hon. gentleman's attention to the delay in bringing down the return, and he said it was not ready. Looking at the debates, I see that my reply to the hon. gentleman was that if he would have it prepared for the next session—that would be the session of 1899—I would be quite satisfied, providing the dismissals and the expenses of the commissions and the investigations were brought down with it up to date. We are now in 1900 and the return is not here yet. I might add that the hon. Secretary of State did bring down a part of the report from the Department of Railways and Canals, giving certain information. When I called his attention to the incomplete state of the return laid before the Senate, the hon. gentleman agreed with me that it was not in accordance with the motion passed by the Senate, and that he would call the attention of the department to the fact and have it rectified. Since that period we have had no further returns. If the officials of the Department of Railways and Canals have made up their minds that they will give no further information, and if the minister of that department is sustained by his colleagues in the course which has been adopted, of course it is impossible for this House to compel him to do so. If they decline to give any further information I would ask the hon. Secretary of State to let us have the report as it was presented in its incomplete state.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I understand all the reports, except the report from the Department of Railways and Canals, were brought down, and I quite recollect my hon. friend handing the return back to me for the purpose of getting full information. I gave it to the Minister of Railways and Canals, and I sent over for it this session, but it appears they have mislaid or lost it. They state that it cannot be found. I told them that they must have some copy and to prepare me a copy of it. I shall do my best to obtain it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Will the hon. gentleman ask the department whether they intend to do it, because if I receive an answer that no further return will be furnished, I shall not bother my hon. friend about it any more.

THIRD READING.

Bill (N) 'An Act for the relief of Gustavus Adolphus Kobold.'—(Hon. Mr. Clemow.)

THE PATTERSON DIVORCE BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW, moved the third reading of Bill (M) 'An Act for the relief of Gertrude Bessie Patterson.' He said: This Bill and the report of the committee have been before hon. gentlemen for some time, and every one, no doubt, is familiar with the facts.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I do not wish to be placed in the position of remaining passively opposed to this Bill, as I did with regard to the former one. As the hon. gentleman who moved the Bill said, the evidence has been in the hands of hon. gentlemen for some days, and I have no doubt they have read it carefully. With regard to the first there cannot be any possible objection on the ground of not having made out what would be considered a good case, but I join issue with my hon. friend as far as this Bill is concerned, for I think it is due to this House and due to society generally, that we should not encourage such legislation as this and pass it upon such flimsy evidence as is here produced. The facts are that a young woman, about 18 or 19 years of age, comes before the hon. gentlemen who sat as a committee in this case, and she gives evidence that is damaging to herself, that will ruin her character and put her outside of society for all her life. I have a little experience in this House in matters of this kind. I have been here sixteen years—short years I may say when I look back. I have known females to be brought here from houses of prostitution to give evidence, and it was always with the greatest difficulty that you could get them to acknowledge having had criminal connection with the respondent. What do we find in this case? The young woman, merely upon the advice of the counsel for the petitioner, and upon being served with a subpœna and conduct money, travels all the way from Calgary to give the evidence hon. gentlemen have read, acknowledging criminal connection with this man on several occasions, the first having been an assault. It does not stop there, on the advice of the counsel for the plaintiff, she lodges information before the police magistrate of Calgary, three years after the act had taken place. When she did that, according to the evidence, this man Patterson was in England. The evidence shows that the assault was committed in July, 1896, and on May 30, 1899, she lodges this information before the police magistrate. In the month of June, which may be perhaps a few days after that, he returned from England and went to live with the parents of this young girl, with whom, she said she had had criminal connection. She was asked, when giving her evidence, if you will remember, why the defendant was not prosecuted after he returned from England. She said that this same counsel had told her that there was no use following up the matter; and when pressed still further, she said she was told he had nothing and therefore there was nothing to be gained by a prosecution. The extraordinary feature of it beyond all is that this man went to live in the house of her parents, remained there for a week, slept there, took his meals there, was in conversation with this girl and on terms of intimacy with the family, and yet no prosecution followed. What are we to conclude from all that? We must conclude that this young girl came here and gave evidence which was entirely false in order to make out a case against the respondent, or that there was connivance and motive in the matter. These are the facts as they appear in evidence. I ask hon. gentlemen if it is not their experience—I am sure it is the experience of most people who have watched cases of this kind—that it is not characteristic of females to give secrets of that kind away; on the contrary, they are more discreet about it while, on the other hand, as is shown in the evidence, men will often boast of such things and brag of what they have accomplished in that direction. Even women of loose habits have to be pressed strongly before questions of that kind are answered. That has not been the case with this girl. She came here and gave her evidence, without hesitation or shyness. I am told that she was a good-looking girl, and apparently respectable; that only confirms the view that I take. If she is the presentable girl that she is described, she would not, if she is in her right senses, give away her character as she did. For these reasons, and for the sake of the Senate, I cannot allow this Bill to pass. I am sure it will be challenged in the other House, and it is our duty to see that it is properly dealt with here, on its merits, upon the evidence as produced by the committee and submitted to the House. I therefore move:

That this Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be read this day six months.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—I have listened with a good deal of regret to the speech which the hon. member from Glengarry has made to the House. He is a gentleman whose opinions I value equally with those of any hon. gentleman who sits in this Senate. He has put the matter before the House in a manner not at all to his own credit. One would suppose, from the hon. gentleman's strictures, that the Divorce Committee was composed of gentlemen who are either interested in passing divorce Bills without proper evidence before them, or else that their judgment is so poor that they are unable to form a correct opinion on the evidence submitted to them. The hon. gentleman said, and I did not like the way he said it, that this divorce Bill was passed by the committee and that the principal witness for the petition was a good looking girl. The inference is, that if a good-looking girl comes before the committee they will, on that account, grant a divorce when they would not otherwise do it. That is the only inference to be drawn from the hon. gentleman's statement. With regard to the remarks which he made on the evidence, every member of the committee, and indeed every member of this House, knows that the evidence which is brought before us does not always come from the very highest class of society, and when he speaks about a respectable woman not wishing to come into court and give evidence to injure her own character, I say certainly a modest and proper minded woman would object to do a thing of the kind. But we are obliged, in most cases, to go below the strata with which the hon. gentleman apparently is best acquainted to get evidence. With regard to the girl Ianson, whose evidence he speaks of, and the course she adopted as to pressing the charge against this man, whether she was induced to delay the charge or withdraw it, is not a matter for us. The question before us is, was the man himself guilty of the offence which we are obliged to find he was guilty of—that is, the evidence of immorality? While some hon. gentlemen may criticise this evidence and cast strictures upon us, the committee is one which takes the greatest care and interest in sifting cases thoroughly and establishing the fact which is necessary for us before we recommend the Senate to grant a Bill of the kind. I say, without fear of contradiction, the members of that committee were in a better position to judge than hon. gentlemen who did not see and hear the witness, and we gave a unanimous verdict on that case. We all believe the evidence given by the girl Ianson with regard to the important fact of her relations with the respondent. But it was not alone upon the evidence of that girl that the relief is granted. It is corroborated by other evidence so entirely satisfactory to the committee that there was not one dissentient voice with regard to what our report should be. I think the attack on the report of the committee and the motion to reject the Bill on such an extraordinary statement as the hon. gentleman has made is one which should not be encouraged in the House, and I should certainly feel it was a very serious blow to the committee if the House, when called upon to adopt this motion, to adopt the six months hoist, were to do so and would not support the committee.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I desire, as a member of the Divorce Committee, to emphasize, if possible, the appropriate and very correct remarks of the hon. Senator from Brandon. As a member of that committee, I may say that I approach every one of these cases with a sense of very serious responsibility, and, I might say, with some reluctance. I sympathize very largely with those hon. gentlemen who have conscientious convictions against granting Bills of this kind. At the same time, I am bound to say in vindication of the action of that committee, that the case was thoroughly sifted, and evidence fully and carefully examined, and not only moral but legal guilt fully established. I am only speaking so much for myself now as for the other members of the committee. A little circumstance occurred which caused myself, at least, personally to take a more active and fuller part in the examination of the witnesses than perhaps I otherwise would, and I have no doubt whatever that the committee came to a very wise and proper conclusion, and I agree with the hon. senator that the adoption of the amendment would be attended with very serious results and would be practically a vote of want of confidence in the legal acumen, and in the fairness and justice of the action of that committee. I hope, therefore, that the amendment will not be pressed. I have great respect for the hon. gentleman from Glengarry, but I am satisfied had he been a member of that committee, he would not have moved this amendment. The members of the committee must be, while they are entrusted with that responsibility, considered proper persons to discharge the duties that are cast upon them. So far they have proved themselves capable, and the same conduct will characterize their course to the end. They will take care that no divorce Bill will be recommended by them unless they conscientiously believe that the evidence adduced before them leaves them no other alternative.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—It is to be regretted that the case should be put as it has been put before the House by the members of the committee who have spoken. If their theory, that we should not question the action or judgment of the committee, is correct, then the action of no committee could be questioned, and we would have only to adopt the finding of any committee of this House. I do not think that is a right view to take. The committee on divorce is only an investigating committee. The evidence is printed and placed in our hands here. What for? These gentlemen have exercised their judgment. We have no doubt as to their integrity and impartiality, but we also are called upon to exercise our own judgment. Why these gentlemen should take this opposition to their report as a personal reflection on them, I cannot understand. It is nothing of the kind. We are simply exercising our own judgment on evidence which the law obliges them to put before the House. As to the merits of the evidence, I have no hesitation in saying that, as I read the report, it struck me that there was connivance between all these people, and, being of that opinion, why should we be taxed with making reflections on hon. gentlemen when we are simply exercising our own judgment? Such an argument is not justified, and it is deeply to be regretted that it has been used here. We are simply, I repeat, exercising our own judgment on the evidence furnished us by these hon. gentlemen. If the theory they are advancing were to be adopted by this House, we would have no right to take action against the report of any committee.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—I perfectly agree with what has just fallen from the hon. gentleman from St. Boniface. In voting on this question we are not reflecting on the judgment or ability of those gentlemen who investigated the case. The Divorce Committee as now constituted, and Judge Gowan, who is not here this session, deserves great credit for having brought it into such perfect organization—does its work thoroughly. Its members are no longer appointed at haphazard, but are selected to serve on the committee because they are familiar with the law, and however we may differ from them, we must all acknowledge that the court, as constituted, is as well constituted as it possibly can be. In this case there is evidence from two witnesses against the respondent. One witness repeats a conversation he had with the respondent in which he boasted of having had connection with a woman he met on a Pullman car. The boast does not establish the fact, it only proves that he was a blackguard. The question is, do you believe him ? Then we come to the evidence of this woman Ianson, who swears that the respondent had connection with her on several occasions. Am I to believe a woman who acknowledges that she was assaulted by this man and afterwards had connection with him at various times ? She had no regard for her own character, or religion or anything else. We should look with suspicion at her evidence, and when she swears she has had improper relations wth the respondent, I do not think her evidence is worthy of credence. I have the greatest confidence in the committee, but on this occasion I shall vote for the amendment.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend who has moved the amendment for the rejection of this Bill does not do so upon the statements contained in the evidence, but on the ground that he does not accept the statements contained in the evidence. My hon. friend opposite (Mr. Bernier) says that this is no reflection on the committee. Hon. gentlemen will bear in mind this rule, that with regard to the evidence taken, with regard to the credibility of the witness, you always attach the utmost importance to the opinion of the judge in the first instance who has had an opportunity of observing the witness and hearing the evidence. A court of appeal very seldom undertakes to question the conclusion that the court in the first instance have arrived at upon a question of fact. In this case the parties who heard the witnesses and had an opportunity of observing the demeanour of the witnesses, and of forming an opinion with regard to the credibility of the witnesses from their demeanour and conduct, are the members of the committee who took this evidence, and what my hon. friend (Mr. McMillan) proposes is to set aside the conclusion of the committee and substitute his own judgment upon the evidence without having heard or seen the witnesses. My hon. friend says here is a girl who has come forward and borne testimony to her own misconduct —to her own improper relations with the party who is accused in this case, and that, therefore, she is not to be credited. I do not draw that conclusion. The girl, was still immature, still a child under fourteen—

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—She is nineteen.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—She was thirteen, according to testimony when she was assaulted by the respondent. A girl's mind was immature, she was under the protection of the Criminal Law, and it is not strange that when she arrived at maturity and formed an opinion of the improper conduct of the man who misled her, and realized the infamy of his conduct, she comes forward and bears testimony to the fact which happened when she was still a child. These are the facts, if you are to believe the witness.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—She swore to having committed adultery with this man long after that.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That woman, Ianson, swore to having had improper intercourse with this man. Where is he ? Is he living with his wife ? Is he taking care of his family ? Is not his present relation in harmony with the testimony that is given ?

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—We do not know that.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The evidence so declares. He is living away from his wife; he is not caring for his family, and all the circumstances go to point out that if he ever had affection for the woman whom he pledged to protect, that affection is gone, his attachments are elsewhere, and the evidence is in harmony with the conduct of the man. I think everything goes to show that the committee arrived, on the evidence given, at a proper conclusion. Holding that view, entertaining the view that the committee formed a proper judgment—and, further than that, I would say they had opportunities better than I have of determining the credibility of the witnesses—I am inclined to stand by the report which the committee has made to this House.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—In this case the woman Ianson was assaulted before she knew the nature of the crime. Can I believe that she came here, all this way, to perjure herself ? Is there anything to show that this woman is not a credible witness ? Members talk here about her good looks. I have not seen her and do not know what she looked like, but I believe her evidence. I do not care for the report of the committee. I have read the evidence and have come to my own conclusion. We are asked why she did not prosecute this man. She was merely a child at the time he assaulted her, and could not do so. Her parents should have done it for her. I do not believe that this woman was brought into this action to perjure her soul by giving false evidence.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—She was not obliged to come.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—She was subpœnaed. and it was her duty to come here, if she possibly could, and help to punish this man.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—She was compelled to come.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—And you say you do not believe her ! I cannot believe that she perjured herself. I have read the evidence for myself and I shall vote to sustain the report of the committee.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I regret that the hon. chairman of the committee and another member of the committee should have felt that the motion of the hon. gentleman from Glengarry was to be looked upon as in any sense a reflection on the committee. These hon. gentlemen are comparatively new members of the Senate. If they had been here some years ago, they would have known that very often we had long discussions and divisions on reports of the Divorce Committee. In the Campbell Divorce Case, the committee reported in favour of granting the divorce to the husband and, if my memory serves me right, the House took the matter in hand and turned the case round about and reported a Bill compelling the man to give alimony to his wife and refusing his petition for divorce. Within the last ten years we have had important discussions, mainly on legal questions it is true.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Two years ago a report of the committee was reversed.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I hope the chairman of the committee will disabuse his mind of the impression that seems to be on it that if a member of the House differs from the report of the committee that difference is to be regarded as a censure on the committee. Instead of looking at it that way, the hon. gentleman might look at it in this way, that during all the years he has been here there has been hardly any discussion on the reports of the committee at all. They have gone as a matter of course. Members have accepted the decision of the committee as satisfactory. The hon. gentleman from Glengarry in this case thought that there were certain suspicious circumstances shown by the evidence, and I think he did his duty, as a member of the House, in calling the attention of his brother members to these circumstances. The hon. Minister of Justice made some reference to the fact that this girl who gave evidence was only thirteen years of age. When she gave her evidence she was of the age of eighteen, and the argument of my hon. friend from Glengarry, as to the unwillingness of a woman to give evidence reflecting upon her own character, might not have applied to a girl of thirteen, but it does apply to a young woman of eighteen. As to whether the case has not been fully established or not, I do not propose to say anything, but I think there is a good deal of foundation for the view taken by the hon. gentleman from Glengarry.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My excuse for making any observations upon this case may be largely due to the fact that the parties affected by it have come from the section of the country in which I live, and I have a personal knowledge of all the parties involved in it. Permit me to say, in the first place, that I quite appreciate the standpoint from which the hon. gentleman from Glengarry has approached the discussion of this matter. I have no doubt—in fact I am sure —that it is from a deep sense of conscientiousness and from conviction, but I cannot overlook the fact that my hon. friend's article of faith is unalterably opposed to the law of divorce, and it is very natural that any hon. gentleman approaching the consideration of this case from that standpoint of faith must necessarily look at it, in my judgment, from anything but a judicial standpoint. Therefore, I would appeal to that gentleman's generosity, so to speak, or width of view in weighing the evidence which has been placed before him.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I must tell the hon. gentleman that I tried, as far as possible, to discard all feelings of that kind, and I took the evidence as it stood, and read it carefully, and came to the conclusion I did.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—As a jury.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I quite appreciate what the hon. gentleman says, but yet one cannot shake off convictions of life long standing, and approach a matter of this kind from the standpoint of one who believes in granting divorce under certain circumstances. Let me say, in the first place, that I quite concur in the views which have been expressed relative to this motion of the hon. gentleman from Glengarry being equivalent to a vote of want of confidence in the committee that have sat upon and weighed this evidence, and made its report, which report has been carried by the House. I have had the honour of occupying a seat upon that committee since 1890, and within my recollection no case has arisen in this House in which the Divorce Committee has been attacked, or a want of confidence expressed in them in regard to weighing the evidence. There have been cases in which hon. gentlemen in the House have said that the committee did not draw a proper inference of fact from possibly circumstantial evidence. Hon. gentlemen would be at perfect liberty to take that position, but when hon. gentlemen will say that seven or eight members of that committee sitting round the table cross-examining the witnesses, observing their demeanour, were imposed upon by a girl of seventeen years of age, and were hoodwinked to the extent of believing in her statements when they were absolutely untrue, is certainly, if not impliedly in express terms as direct a vote of want of confidence in the ability and in the competence of that committee as words could express.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I think that is a poor defence. We had better have the committee decide the matter entirely if the hon. gentleman takes that stand.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Permit me to repeat what the hon. Minister of Justice has said with reference to the trial judge weighing the evidence. There is no better established principle of law than that an appellate court will not review the findings of fact of a jury or a trial judge. I hope that I am not trespassing upon the House in going to the very fountainhead of our jurisprudence in reference to this particular point, but I wish to read from a case of Jone vs. Hough, where Lord Justice Cotton says :

> Of course, I need not say, in all questions of fact, especially where there has been viva voce evidence before the judge in the court below, the court of appeal ought to be most unwilling to interfere with the conclusion which the judge has arrived at when he has had the opportunity, which the court have not, of seeing the witnesses and judging of their demeanour.

And the late master of the rolls, Lord Esher in the case of the Colonial Securities Company vs. Massey, said :

> The judge in the court below may have heard witnesses, and if so the court of appeal would be more unwilling to set aside his judgment, especially if there was a conflict of evidence, than in a case tried on written evidence where the witnesses were not before the court, because of the opportunity afforded of judging how far the witnesses were worthy of credit.

I point out that there has been no conflict of evidence in this case. In another case, which is equaly important, in the Probate and divorce division, the presiding judge said :

> When a case has been tried alone by a judge, without a jury, the court of appeal, following the practice which we have seen is pursued in the analogous case of appeals from the discretion of a judge as to allowing or disallowing amendments, will not, except in an extreme case, reverse the decision of a judge on a question of fact, when he has arrived at a clear conclusion after hearing the witnesses; but this last rule only applies to cases where the judge's decision depends on the credibility of the witnesses as evinced by their demeanour, and not on inferences drawn by him from the facts deposed.

This was a case in which the committee were not called upon to draw any inferences. There was a direct statement made by this witness, and the question is as to whether that witness was telling the truth or not. There were some experienced lawyers upon that committee. There was the hon. gentleman from Cobourg (Hon. Mr. Kerr) who, I understand, has been Crown prosecutor for a great number of years in Ontario. There was the present Chairman of the Railway Committee, a gentleman who has been engaged in a large and extensive legal practice for years. There was my hon. friend from West Northumberland, and my hon. friend from Victoria, and yet not one member of that committee, after cross-examining the witnesses, disbelieved for one moment the statement made by the witness Ianson. The hon. gentleman from Glengarry seemed to think that before we could place any reliance upon a witness of that nature, the witness should be a paragon of virtue. What did my hon. friend expect ? Did he expect a virtuous woman to come here and give evidence upon this particular question ? Did my hon. friend expect a woman whose character was unimpeachable to come and give evidence as to her chastity having been stolen when she was thirteen years of age ? The very fact of the girl's willingness to come forward and to state openly before that committee these facts, I think should appeal to the House as establishing, beyond all peradventure, the truth of her statements. What were the other facts ? Here is a man, the respondent in this case, who married a girl when she was sixteen years of age, who from that time up to the time he abandoned her, seems from the evidence, to have illused and abused her, made her work as a servant, and in other ways misconducted himself with regard to her. For the last couple of years his whereabouts have been unknown. As the hon. Minister of Justice has said, if this man had not committed this offence which is charged against him, would not the probabilities be that he would not abandon his wife and children and cease to make provision for them ? Hon. gentlemen are asked now to prevent this woman from obtaining a divorce, which, by the law of the land, she is entitled to, and to cast her and her family upon the wide world, without a husband. She knows not his whereabouts. The evidence, both at the hearing and in the earlier stages of the case, established the fact that his whereabouts cannot be ascertained. You are asked to cast that woman and her family upon the world, without any support whatever, and deprive her of any opportunity in the future of being again married. That will be the consequence if the motion made by the hon. gentleman from Glengarry is carried. I, therefore, submit that this evidence not only should be accepted as true by the House, as it was by the committee, but that the House should take into consideration the fact that there was corroborative evidence. There was the evidence of this man's statement to the witness Brown of his having cohabited, for a short time at any rate, with another woman ; there is the fact of his having been seen frequently in the company of the Ianson girl, and there is the further fact, if we are to take the statement made by the hon. gentleman from Glengarry, that when the respondent returned from the old country he put up for a full week at the girl's house. Why did he put up there ? It is an easy matter for hon. gentlemen to draw an inference ?

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—No. He came back in June. In the first place she lodged this complaint on the 30th of May, 1899. He was back in June last, she says in her evidence. That would be June immediately following the 30th of May, 1899.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am alluding to the statement made by my hon. friend that the respondent returned after his visit to England and put up at the house of the parents of the girl Ianson. Will my hon. friend point that out in the evidence ?

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Yes, it is in the evidence.

The House divided on the amendment which was rejected by the following vote :

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Read the names.

The names were then read by the Clerk.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I call attention to the fact that the hon. gentleman from De Lorimier has not voted.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I am not sure that I was in the House when the question was put, and I should like to have given my reasons for my vote if I had voted..

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—And the hon. gentleman from Acadia did not vote.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—I did not hear the question put, and just arrived as the vote was being taken. I did not listen to the debate and did not think I would be justified in giving a vote where I did not hear the discussion.

The motion for the third reading was agreed to, and the Bill was then read the third time and passed.

RED DEER VALLEY RAILWAY AND COAL COMPANY BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. WATSON, moved the second reading of Bill (W) 'An Act respecting the Red Deer Valley Railway and Coal Company.'

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is not usual for me to oppose a Bill, particularly a private Bill, at this stage, but this is a matter in which I feel, not only personal concern, but in which I feel satisfied that I am representing the views of the people of the section of the country in which I live as to further legislation being granted to this company. Hon. gentlemen who are members of the Railway Committee will doubtless recall the fact that during the last session of parliament the Railway Committee appointed a sub-committee for the purpose of investigating the bona fides of the representations made by this company, relative to their proceeding with the construction of the road and that sub-committee listened to certain representations made by the promoters as to the then immediate construction of the road. I might say that no progress whatever has been made with its construction. In 1897, I presented to the Railway Committee a lengthy resolution of the city of Calgary, signed by the mayor and the clerk, against the continuance of this legislation. This resolution of the city council so clearly embodies the views of the district in which I live and through which the road is projected, as well as the facts relating to the charter itself, that I cannot do better in presenting the case than to read this resolution to the House and ask the House if it will further continue to permit the passing of legislation year after year with reference to this enterprise, thus thwarting public opinion and the progress of that particular district. The resolution of the city council of Calgary reads as follows:

City of Calgary, April 30, 1897.

To His Excellency the Governor General in Council.

May it please Your Excellency,—

We, the council of the city of Calgary, beg to submit the inclosed resolution regarding the application now before the hon. Senate and House of Commons of Canada, for an extension of time of five years to the Red Deer Valley Railway Company, in which to build the said railway from Calgary to Knee Hill coal mines, a distance of about sixty miles.

Reasons Why Extension Should not be Granted.

The present company and their predecessors have held a charter to build the road for about thirteen years; during six years at least of said time, the charter has been in the hands of present company; during the whole of said thirteen years not over $5,000 have been expended in construction work.

The franchise granted by the government of Canada, computing coal and agricultural lands at government price, exceeds one million dollars in value.

This property has been locked-up for thirteen years, and now another period of five years is asked for, in which to build an easily constructed prairie line of only sixty miles.

The company have been asking a government guarantee of 2½ per cent for fifteen years on bonds of the company to the amount of $1,100,000, whereas it can be demonstrated that for $675,000 the whole line can be built and equipped, stations built, sufficient rolling stock provided, and the necessary allowance made for discount on bonds, which we have been assured by London brokers can be sold, if so guaranteed, for 80 per cent of their face value, showing a clear gain of at least $400,000.

Your Excellency's honourable advisers will readily understand that it would be impossible to earn a dividend on the sum of $1,100,000, and the government would inevitably be called on to make good the guarantee, while the most damaging effect would result against the credit of all such Canadian undertakings.

It has been claimed by a representative of the company, before this council, that they have spent $125,000 on this road, of which $25,000 was paid for the charter and $25,000 on work.

The first statement is probably correct, but there never has been over $5,000 spent on construction.

Therefore, for the foregoing and many other potent reasons that might be cited, your petitioners claim and pray that no extension be granted except on satisfactory proof that construction will be proceeded with this year and a guarantee given of its completion at an early date, and that no government guarantee be given beyond 2½ per cent on $700,000 for a term of fifteen years.

And as in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

WESLEY F. ORR,
Mayor.

CHAS. McMILLAN,
Clerk.

Council Chamber,
Calgary, February 2, 1897.

Moved by Alderman Brown, seconded by Alderman McTavish,—

And resolved, that whereas the government of Canada did many years ago make a large grant of coal and agricultural lands to the Red Deer Valley Railway and Coal Company on the condition that said company would proceed to construct and operate a line of railway from the Knee Hill coal mines to the city of Calgary, a distance of about sixty miles;

And whereas, the said company have not so constructed said proposed railway and the time for building said railway having been several times extended by the government;

And whereas, the company are now asking for a further extension of the time in which to build the line, without giving any guarantee that it will be built;

And whereas, we have good reason to believe that the construction of the line can be secured with a much smaller guarantee from the government than is asked by the London contractors, and at once built, provided the government give a guarantee of 2½ per cent interest on the sum of $700,000 of the company's bonds for fifteen years, instead of on $1,100,000 asked by the London firm.

Therefore, be it resolved, that this council petition the government not to grant the extension of time asked for, except on a substantial guarantee that the road will be built within the year 1897.—Carried.

WESLEY F. ORR,
Mayor.

The history of the road is simply this, that in the eighties a certain promotor secured a charter for the building of this short line of railway which runs from Calgary to a point called the Knee Hill coal mines. Shortly after that English capitalists were induced to put a very considerable sum of money into this particular enterprise, and I think I am right in saying that the credulous English public put almost a hundred thousand dollars into this paper enterprise which has remained on the statute-book for the number of years to which I have alluded. I know that for a very considerable time a coterie of promoters have been practically living upon the profits which have been made upon the various exploitations and floatations of this wretched little charter. Last session of parliament the assurance was given to the committee that an agreement had been arrived at between the promoters of the company and Messrs. MacKenzie & Mann that they would take over the charter and build the road last summer. It was agreed that they would pay something in the vicinity of ten thousand dollars for this charter, which I say to you is simply so much money for so much paper.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—How much work has been done on the road ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No work has been done.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Are we to understand that the ten thousand dollars was simply for the charter ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—For the franchise. Some years ago there were about five miles of prairie ploughed up, which, to-day you would not know from the rest of the prairie. It was simply a technical commencement. The prairie was simply ploughed up for the purpose of making a commencement within the Act. Messrs. MacKenzie & Mann were willing to go up to ten thousand dollars for the franchise, and upon the assurance made before the railway committee last session, I and the people of my district felt confident that this promise would be carried out and the road commenced at any rate. During the summer I saw Mr. MacKenzie when passing through Calgary and asked him, in view of the fact that the railway committee had practically taken the assurance that he would build the road in the interval, why he had not proceeded with the work. He told me then that there were different parties interested in the charter, and $10,000 would not begin to purchase it. The $10,000 would have satisfied a small number who thought they controlled the charter, but when he came to deal with the other parties who were alleged to be interested, he found it impossible to close with them, and these gentlemen now claim that more than $10,000 has been spent already in parliamentary fees for the purpose of keeping the charter alive, and that it was necessary to spend forty or fifty thousand dollars before the charter could be acquired by a substantial and bona fide railway firm able to construct the road. It is simply a question as to whether the Senate will permit itself to be an instrument in the hands of promoters who are not railway builders or capitalists, and who in no sense approach parliament with the idea of building the road itself. I say it reduces itself down to the question whether this parliament will be an instrument for the purpose of assisting such promoters in stripping the credulous English investor of money which he desires to invest in this country and thus injure bona fide enterprises which substantial capitalists may be prepared to proceed with. I might say that during the number of years to which I have alluded, this charter has been, to a certain extent, a derelict in the financial market of London. Different capitalists have been approached with regard to it, and when substantial capitalists from our section of the country go to London to float a bona fide enterprise, this wretched charter rises like Banquo's ghost before them and they find it is almost impossible to float an enterprise within that particular district of the Northwest on the London market. That is naturally the result of parliament year after year, doing more than a decade of years, renewing charters of this kind and permitting an abuse of the legislative functions of parliament with regard to assisting promoters in realizing money on paper franchises. I might further say that this charter has kept falling into the hands of different individuals, and to-day, there is only one gentleman interested in it who appeared as an original promoter of the Bill. So many people have come and gone, and have appeared and disappeared in the handling of this charter, that it is difficult for me to represent to the House the number of gentlemen who have been interested in the scheme. It has become a by-word and a reproach in the money market and has stood in the way of the development of the district of country over which it is projected, and I ask this House to refuse the further extension of time prayed for by the promoters on this occasion, and particularly in view of the fact that good faith has not been observed, by reason of the promises made last session, in the carrying on of the enterprise. Some hon. gentlemen may ask me why I do not permit this Bill to go to the Railway Committee. My answer to that is simply this: I am opposed entirely to the principle of the Bill. It is not such a Bill as the Railway Committee may discuss the details of and make inquiry into. The Bill simply asks for a further extension of time for the construction of the road. The principle of the Bill is extremely objectionable, and in the face of the case which I have already reviewed, and in view of the facts that the city council of Calgary since 1897, have taken this position, and have put their views in the shape of a resolution which is on file in the proper offices here. I ask the House to say that these representations made by parties residing in the vicinity and who have no interest in this charter, except to see the country developed, should have due weight at this time. I therefore move:

That this Bill be not now read the second time, but that it be read the second time this day six months.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I dare say all that my hon. friend has said is strictly accurate, at the same time, I think that this Bill might be allowed to go to the Railway Committee. The promoter of the Bill may have some bona fide scheme to put before us; at all events, no harm can be done to let it go to the committee. For my part, this is the last extension I am prepared to sanction for this project. The promoters may place something before us to show that the road will go on, and for that reason I hope my hon. friend will withdraw his motion and that the House will allow the Bill to go to the Railway Committee.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—It appears to me it would be only fair to the promoters to let the Bill go to the committee, to show why the time should be extended. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman from Calgary that this Bill is somewhat ancient. I can remember some years ago the original Bill was introduced in the House of Commons, but it appears to me that no reasonable argument has been adduced why a further extension should not be given. The hon. gentleman has read to the House a portion of a petition presented to parliament in 1897, asking that this charter be not extended. I am informed that the mayor of Calgary last year appeared before the Railway Committee and urged the extension of the time. The hon. gentleman has informed us that that section of the country is suffering and being held back because of this charter. He has not offered evidence to show that others wanted to build a road into that country. I am informed that the gentlemen have had difficulty in the past in securing capital to construct this road, but that they have now completed arrangements to build it. They ask for an extension of two years to complete fifty odd miles, and in the event of their doing that, they ask a further extension to complete the road to the Saskatchewan. It appears to me, under the circumstances, we ought to let the Bill go to the committee and evidence will be furnished to show that the extension should be given. The country cannot be developed without a railway. The hon. gentleman from Calgary has not always been so much opposed to the extension of these charters. I have read a speech of the hon. gentleman from Calgary, where he has favoured extensions of time to people who have not given the same evidence of good faith in the expenditure of money in the building of a road, as this company has. I understand they have graded some eight miles of the road. The hon. gentleman says they have done nothing, and that they ask $10,000 for a charter, which is simply a paper charter. It appears to me, if people can get a charter with eight miles of the road graded, they are getting something for their money. I hope the reasons given by the hon. gentleman from British Columbia will prevail, and that the Bill will be allowed to go to the committee, where the promoters can give reasons for an extension of time.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I have a distinct recollection that when this Bill was before the Railway Committee last year an extension of time was granted on the understanding that the company would go on with the construction of the road before now. They only had one year, and if I understand the situation at present, I am told that not a dollar has been spent since then. They have failed in carrying out their pledge before the committee, and there is a good deal of ground for the stand that the hon. gentleman from Calgary has taken, that they do not deserve any further recognition at the hands of the Railway Committee, and that this House should deal with them summariiy. On further consideration, it would be perhaps acting unfairly not to let it go before the committee, because these gentlemen may have some new ideas. They may be quite prepared to go on with the work, because I understand the time that was given to them last year has about expired. It would not be fair, perhaps, to choke them off, and I would ask the hon. gentleman from Calgary, with whom I sympathize in the stand he has taken, to withdraw his motion, and let the Bill go to the Railway Committee.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The plea for going before the Railway Committee is a very good one, and under ordinary circumstances, I think, should be accepted. The question is whether this is one or not, and whether the parliament of Canada is to continue the practice of granting paper charters to speculation mongers continually. The question ought not only to be considered now, but considered very seriously. The charge that the hon. gentleman from Marquette has made against the hon. gentleman from Calgary, that he has consented to charters in the past much more objectionable than this, cannot apply to myself. I have objected over and over again in the Railway Committee, since I have been a member of this House, to the extension of charters which appear to be obtained for only one purpose, that is, speculation. The hon. gentleman says that my hon. friend from Calgary has given no evidence that any one is prepared to go on with the construction of this road if the Bill is rejected. If the gentlemen to whom he referred—knowing as we do that they are the most eminent railway builders in this country, MacKenzie & Mann, were willing to invest $10,000 in obtaining the rights which these gentlemen who now ask for an extension have in this road, it is very good evidence, to my mind, that if this Bill be rejected and they get a charter themselves the road would be built without buying out these people.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I simply pointed out that no one else had asked for a charter to build through that section of country but these people.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That may be what the hon. gentleman meant; it is not what he said. Is it likely that any one else would ask for a charter for the construction of this road while another company holds a charter for doing it? The only way possible to get another charter will be to first get this out of the way. I have a distinct recollection, like the hon. gentleman from Calgary, of what took place during last session. I took the same objection then to the extension of the charter that I am taking now, and for the same reasons. The committee was assured and a positive pledge was made that there were gentlemen who were prepared to go on with that work, and names were given to us of men in whom we had the fullest possible confidence, knowing that they are men of enterprise and wealth, and that if they entered into an engagement of that kind, they would carry it out. I shall not mention the names here, but there were others besides MacKenzie & Mann whose names were given—men who are eminent in the financial world, particularly in our provinces, whose names were given to us as a guarantee and assurance that this work would be proceeded with if they were granted the extension of time. Taking their representations at that time that the work would be proceeded with, the extension was granted, and it may be possible that what the hon. gentleman from Marquette says is perfectly true that the mayor of Calgary was willing to give this extension of time. Why was he prepared to give the extension of time? Because the same assurance had been made to him that was made to the Railway Committee when they recommended the extension.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It was on that assurance.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I know it was on that assurance that the action of the committee was taken, and I presume it would be on that assurance, believing as we did, that the mayor of Calgary took the position he did. I think it is high time that we should put our foot down on these speculative operations of men who have no interest in that country except what they can make out of a charter. If what the hon. gentleman says be true, here is a charter in existence sixteen years, which has been hawked about the country from one end to the other, and has been on the financial market of England for years, and it stands as a bugbear against other legitimate enterprises put on the same market. Those who have invested their money in this road in England say 'Here is an enterprise which has taken money out of our pockets.' If it be true as they claim that one hundred thousand dollars has been expended, and nothing done but support a lot of promoters, it is no wonder that railway charters in the British market stink in the nostrils of those who wish to invest in legitimate enterprises. For that reason, I would vote for the six months' hoist. I shall take the same position, I presume, on the committee that I took last year. What evidence has been given that there are any gentlemen of financial means behind the enterprise? Names have been given to me as being interested in carrying out the old enterprise. I know that these gentlemen, while some of them are well off, are not railway men. They do not come into this scheme for the purpose of constructing the road in order to develop that country. They enter into this speculation for the purpose of making money out of it, and if they could get this time for construction again extended, it would be dangled before the money markets of the world by the people who expect to make money out of it. If the representation made here to-day be true, it ought to be a good enterprise. There is a large amount of land locked up for the purpose of building this road. There are representations that there are five or six miles of coal area in it which is very valuable.

If all that be true, and these advantages attached to the charter, the question may be fairly asked, if the men who have had control of the charter in the past are in any better position to carry out the enterprise and develop these coal lands and add to the wealth of the North-west Territories. My own convictions are that if this charter is got out of the way, there will be no difficulty whatever in getting a solvent company to construct the road. For these reasons, speaking for myself, I shall vote for the six months' hiost, and I repeat, the sooner the parliament of Canada puts a stop, by its action, to this sort of charter-mongering, and taking money out of innocent people who take the word of those who have pledged themselves to us that they would do certain things which they have failed to do, the better. That is one reason why I think we ought to reject this Bill.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am not going to question the principle which the hon. leader of the opposition has laid down, that those who are seeking railway charters ought to satisfy parliament of their ability to undertake the construction of the work. But unfortunately that is not a rule which parliament has proceeded on during nearly twenty years of its existence. If I remember right, this charter was granted at the instance, or at all events at a period of time when Mr. Daly was Minister of the Interior.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, when Mr. White was Minister of Interior.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend knows how many railways have been projected in the North-west Territories by parties who had no capital to undertake the enterprise, which they sought to obtain control of by a charter from parliament. I know my hon. friend will remember a case in which Mr. Beatty, of Toronto, and Mr. Woodworth were engaged when a dispute arose between them as to the amount of money in the enterprise for 'the boy.' I proposed in parliament many years ago, when I was Minister of the Interior, a measure for the incorporation of railway companies upon the depositing of the necessary plans, and upon the payment of ten per cent, as an evidence of good faith and ability to go on with the work but that proposition I am sure, did not receive the support of my hon friend opposite at the time.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That policy was first adopted by the Hon. John Sandfield Macdonald, in Toronto, and I have always supported it as far as I could individually.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon friend will remember I introduced a colonization railway Bill based on that principle, and it did not receive the support of the government of the day.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It was not the principle that you have laid down, that we objected to then.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon friend has not looked up the debate on that subject. If he will do so, he will see that it was on that principle largely that that measure was opposed. However that may be, my hon. friend knows that those who have obtained railway charters have been treated with a very great deal of forbearance. Charters have been renewed over and over again, and some of these railway promoters have succeeded in constructing the roads for which they obtained charters—at all events, the roads have been constructed under these charters. As I understand, the company itself has been reconstructed in this case. The charter has passed into the hands of parties who are ready to go on with the enterprise. My hon. friend asks that this charter be brushed aside, and that parties having the means and ability to construct the road may have an opportunity to obtain a charter. I understand that this charter is now in the hands of parties who are able and willing to go on with the construction.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—So we understood last year.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend will not prevent these parties having a hearing. The committee will have an opportunity of questioning them upon their good faith and ability to go on with the construction of the road, and the information which he would require according to his views, if persons were to come before parliament for the first time, he will have an opportunity of obtaining from the present charter holders in the committee if he gives them an opportunity of going there. I trust, therefore, that the House will not refuse those parties a consideration which has been almost uniformly extended to parties heretofore. If the Bill be allowed to be read and referred to the committee, we can question the parties there, and if the hon. gentleman finds that they have not the ability or the intention of going on with the construction of the road, he can move against it in the committee. He will have there an opportunity of obtaining the information which we have not at the present time, so I hope that parliament will not do these parties an injustice, for these men would not be heard if they did not feel that they would be able to go on with the enterprise. I trust that the opportunity of being heard will not be denied them by a refusal to read the Bill and refer it to the committee.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—While I do not change my mind in the least from what I said before, I will suggest to my hon. friend to adopt the policy proposed by the hon. Minister of Justice, for the reason it might be understood that we were preventing certain information being given which would induce us to change our minds. I have to hear something more before I change my mind.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman speaks of representations made to the Railway Committee last year by these gentlemen: will he dismiss their petition, before hearing them, on the representation they made last year? They may give satisfactory reasons for not having proceeded with their enterprise during the year. We should at least not non-suit them before hearing them.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Sufficient and satisfactory explanations have been given. Mackenzie & Mann would not give them as much as they wanted for the charter.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—If that was substantiated in the committee, I think that this Chamber would be far better enlightened.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The explanation is clear enough, that they could not get the money to do it, and they could not sell the charter for enough. That is the explanation that has been made to me.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In view of explanations which have been made, I beg to withdraw my amendment.

The amendment was withdrawn and the Bill was read the second time.

ONTARIO POWER COMPANY OF NIAGARA FALLS BILL.

RULES SUSPENDED.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (British Columbia), from the Standing Committee on Standing Orders and Private Bills, presented their report, recommending the suspension of the rules of the Senate with relation to Bill (121) 'An Act respecting the Ontario Power Company of Niagara Falls.'

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW moved that the rules be suspended in so far as the same relate to this Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This is another case—a most extraordinary one—of an extension of the right to commence a work. Here is a company that has two years yet in which to commence operations. They are asking for an amendment extending the time for four additional years, as I understand it, making six years altogether. What reason has been given to induce the committee to ask this House to set aside the rules? My experience is leading me to the conclusion that rules in this House amount to very little, that no matter what any one asks for, the rules are set aside, and all the usages of parliament go for naught, when it is desired to accomplish any particular object, and that is the object of private speculators. I know nothing of the merits of this Bill, beyond the remarks made by the hon. gentleman from Monck, when the question came up a short time ago. It is asked that the rule be set aside to accomplish that which, I suppose, hon. gentlemen had in view, of blocking any further procedure. If an objection to the suspension of the rule has any effect, I shall certainly object to it, and for the same reason which I gave with reference to the other charter, and for the additional reason that the company have two years yet within which to commence work. They are now asking for an additional four years before they shall be asked to do anything, giving them plenty of time to speculate throughout the whole country, endeavouring to sell that charter or hand it over to the gentlemen interested in this great power, in the United States. I do not say that this is the case, but it places them in a position to do that, and the Senate is asked to give the four years more to block an enterprise which must be of importance to this country.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—The hon. gentleman is perfectly correct, as a matter of general principle, but I think this Bill is an exceptional one. It appears that this company had some difficulty with the Park Commissioners and the Ontario government, and the Ontario government will not let them proceed with their contract unless they obtain additional time for the performance of the work. That is the reason they assigned to us to-day, and that is the reason we ask the Senate to suspend the rules. If their statement is correct, there is no alternative. The Ontario government and park commissioners refused to let them proceed with their contract unless they succeeded in obtaining additional time for the construction. For those reasons the committee made this report.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I want to show my hon. friend the leader of the opposition the inconsistency of the position we are taking. The Committee on Standing Orders recommended that this rule be suspended. Now, certainly if we took that same stand we did on the divorce case, I do not see how we could very well reject it. It would be a reflection on the committee.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I must join with the hon. gentleman from St. Boniface upon that point. I never considered it a reflection upon a committee to object to any report they might make, and neither should the committee look upon it in that light. If that principle is to be adopted, there is no necessity for reporting to the House. All the committee would have to do would be to affirm something, and we would have to take it holus bolus, whether we believed it or not. A committee is appointed to do certain work, and the functions of the Senate are to approve or disapprove of it, and if the Senate disapproves of that which is being done, it is their duty to say so, and no reflection is cast upon the committee. I do not wish to say anything disrespectful, but I look upon that suggestion as absurd.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.) I look upon it as no reflection if the House rejects a report of the committee. We make our report in good faith. We are extremely careful not to recommend a suspension of the rules without good cause. When Bills of importance to corporations, or of importance to the Dominion of Canada, have passed the House of Commons and come before us within a few days of the end of the time for receiving them, we recommend a suspension of the rules, where we think the case warrants it, and I think the House always agrees with us. We will only ask for the suspension of the rules, when we think a proper case for it is made out.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I object. Rule 17 says:

> Any rule may be suspended without notice by the unanimous consent of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I understand the report has been adopted.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.) No motion is ever made to adopt these reports.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The motion put by the Speaker was as to whether the report should be received.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I hope my hon. friend will not object to the suspension.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Is not the explanation I gave satisfactory?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I did not hear it.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—This work had to be commenced at a certain time, but it interfered with the Park commissioners and the Ontario government, who insisted before they went into this contract to have the time extended for four years, and they have no alternative but to come to this parliament and get an extension. They have the contract before them, which is perfectly fair on the part of the Ontario government and the Park Commissioners, and it merely requires this extension.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Although I do not know that the explanation is altogether satisfactory, the matter will have to go before the committee, where it can be discussed, and I therefore withdraw my objection.

The motion was agreed to.

DELAYED RETURNS.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the House adjourns, I desire to call the attention of one of the ministers of the government to an humble address that was voted the other day for a copy of all letters and correspondence exchanged between the government, or any of its members, and the interested parties on the subject of the Baie des Chaleurs Railway, of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway, and of the projected railway under the name of the Short Line Railway of Gaspé, and I wish to inquire if any progress has been made with this return.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I may tell the hon. gentleman that my secretary has written to the department for the necessary information, but it has not yet come into my possession.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is the hon. gentleman's secretary going to write after dinner?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The letter has been written.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—And there is no answer yet?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Then I will inquire again to-morrow.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

THIRD READING.

Bill (R) 'An Act to incorporate the St. Lawrence Terminal and Steamship Company.'—(Hon. Mr. Dandurand.)

GAS INSPECTION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (78) 'An Act to amend the Gas Inspection Act.' He said: The proposed changes are not very great. The Bill will make inspection more frequent during the year, but there will be no further charge upon the gas companies, inasmuch as the Minister of Inland Revenue advises me that it is intended to lower the fees so as to make the proportionate charge about the same as it is now.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—This increases the necessity for obtaining certificates?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The companies must obtain them more frequently.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—It is only required to procure certificates once a month now; under this Bill they must procure them once a week.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No. The Act provides that every undertaker shall keep the public informed of the power of the gas supplied by him, and so on. Undertakers having more than 4,000 meters shall procure such certificates once a week.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—At present it is once a month.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, for that particular class. Those having less than 4,000 and more than 2,000, once in each month. Those having less than 2,000 and more than 500 once in three months. Instead of that, those having 3,000, or more than 2,000 meters, once in each month. The intention is not to increase the charges on the company.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—There will be a charge for the certificate?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am told the fees are fixed by order in council and it is intended to reduce the rate so that the charge will be about the same as it is now.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—It should be stated in the Bill that there will be no additional charge. I cannot understand why it is necessary to have inspection once a week. It is almost impossible to comply with such a requirement.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—When the House goes into committee we can consider that matter.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I do not think there should be an additional charge. The charges are sufficiently high at present. I think the gas companies are pretty well fleeced with the present rate, and I do not see the necessity for charging additional rates for these certificates. They are posted up in the offices, and I have never seen a man come to look at them. They get their fee for inspection, and that is the benefit derived by this government. It comes out of the company, and though the companies are obliged to pay enormous increase of cost of coal oil and coal, they cannot raise the price of gas one cent. I think the hon. Secretary of State had better look into the matter and see that there is no additional charge to be imposed on the companies in the future.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not think the changes are as great as the hon. gentleman from Rideau imagines. The law now provides that undertakers having more than 4,000 purchasers shall procure said certificate once in each week. That is just what this Bill provides. The changes made as to undertakers having more than 3,000 and less than 4,000 are that under this Bill they would have to get a certificate once in two weeks. At present it is once a month.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P. E. I.)—It bears very heavily on the smaller gas companies. The gas company in Charlottetown do not do a large business, and when they have to pay for additional inspection it becomes a serious charge. I do not think this inspection is any benefit whatever. The gas was just as good before it was inspected as after the inspection. There has been no improvement by the inspection and it is altogether unnecessary. It would be just as well for the consumer if there were no inspection at all. The company would give us just as good a quality of gas and it is not improved by the inspection.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is not at the instance of the department that this change is made, but at the instance of the consumer who has been pressing the change on the department. At the same time the minister assures me that he does not intend there shall be a further tax on the companies, that there will be a corresponding reduction in the fees, so as to make the gross amounts now paid by the companies for inspection no greater.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Let us understand that.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW.

GENERAL INSPECTION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (79) 'An Act to amend the General Inspection Act so as to provide a grade for flax seed.' He said: In the General Inspection Act no provision whatever was made for the inspection of flax seed. At the time the Act was prepared it was not so important. Its production was not so great as it has been since then in Manitoba and the North-west. The quantity sown in Manitoba was 300,000 bushels last ear. The Board of Trade of Winnipeg strongly advises the passing of an Act to provide for the inspection of flax seed, and it is at the instance of the board of trade at Winnipeg that this Bill has been introduced.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Will the hon. gentleman inform us why a distinction is made between Manitoba flax seed and flax seed grown in other parts of the Dominion? I think it is not cultivated to any great extent in Ontario; still, it is cultivated in some places. Why is the distinction made between Manitoba flax seed and any other?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This was specially intended to apply to Manitoba because it is the only part of the Dominion that has asked for inspection, and they ask that the flax seed that they grow shall be graded. I am not aware that it is grown in any other parts of the Dominion.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—It is grown in Waterloo.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If others do not desire it, we have no intention of forcing it on them. It is asked for in Winnipeg.

Hon. SIR MACKENZIE BOWELL—By the people who are purchasing it?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Very likely.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I can understand the necessity and propriety of having a law grading grain of any kind where it is cultivated to any extent. What I cannot understand is why it should not apply to the whole Dominion instead of confining it to Manitoba. If it be necessary to grade flax in Manitoba, it must be equally necessary to grade it, so as to know its quality and purity, in Ontario, or any other section of the Dominion.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I scarcely think so if the quantity grown is infinitesimal. If it is grown in such small quantities they would not desire inspection. If it is asked for at any future time they can have it.

INSPECTION OF FOREIGN GRAIN BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (142) 'An Act respecting the inspection of foreign grain.' He said: This Bill authorizes, when the parties desire it, the inspection of foreign grain. During the last two or three years a very considerable quantity of foreign grain, particularly Indian corn, has gone from the Western States via the St. Lawrence to Europe, and the parties shipping it desire to have it inspected. It goes as foreign corn, and is classified according to its character. The Bill is asked for at the instance of the Montreal Corn Exchange and the trade generally. It is not compulsory, and its object is to identify the grain as grown outside of Canada, and to give it its proper classification.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—It applies to United States wheat I suppose?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It includes wheat, but is mainly intended for corn.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And is intended to prevent an inferior quality of foreign corn being passed off in the European market as Canadian grain.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I wish to call the attention of the hon. Secretary of State to the fact that there is a certain ambiguity about the first clause of the Bill. 'The inspectors of grain shall when required, &c.' It does not say by whom?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It could only be by the owner.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It might be required by the Minister of Inland Revenue. I think it would be better to insert some words to remove any possible doubt as to the meaning.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That can be done in the committee.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

MILITIA LAND GRANTS IN THE NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved the second reading of Bill (107) 'An Act to make further provision respecting grants of land to membesr of the Militia Force on Active Service in the North-west.' He said: This measure is one which has, on many occasions, appeared on the statute-book, as hon. gentlemen will see by looking at the margin—in 1885, 1886, 1891, 1892, 1893, 1894 and 1898, and now again, in order to give the parties an opportunity of complying with the provisions of the law, and in this case especially those who are at the present time in active service and who are not here for the purpose of complying with the law of last year.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (98) 'An Act respecting the Yarmouth Steamship Company, Limited.'—(Hon. Mr. Lovitt.)

Bill (71) 'An Act respecting the Dominion Cotton Mills Company, Limited.'—(Hon. Mr. Forget.)

Bill (92) 'An Act to incorporate the Royal Marine Insurance Company.'—(Hon. Mr. Casgrain, de Lanaudière.)

Bill (54) 'An Act respecting the Ontario Mutual Life Assurance Company, and to change its name to "The Mutual Life Assurance Company of Canada."—Hon. Mr. Kerr.)

REPAIRS TO TIGNISH BREAKWATER.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Before the House adjourns, I wish to call the attention of the hon. Secretary of State, who, I think, answered my question, to the fact that the reply which he gave to some questions of mine regarding the Tignish breakwater were erroneous. They were made under an inadvertence of some nature. I think that the department understood, or at least answered the question as if it applied to a contract on the Tignish breakwater itself. The question was with regard to the breastwork running along the beach from Tignish.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—What was the date of the motion ?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It is on the Order paper for the 4th of April. I think the question was asked on that date. I am not very sure when it was asked, but the answer entirely refers to the main contract on the breakwater itself, and not to this contract on the beach leading to the breakwater. It appears $1,700 was spent on the work on the beach leading towards the breakwater, which is plainly enough described in my question, and the answer has reference to a large contract which was let to Mr. Burns by tender, and afterwards transferred by him to Myrick & Company. It will be seen that the department misunderstood the question. It did not refer to the main contract let to Burns and afterwards assigned to Myrick, but it referred to extra work done on the beach, another part of the work altogether, for which, it appears by the Auditor General's Report, that $1,700 was paid. If my hon. friend who has this matter in charge will be kind enough to call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to it, and obtain the answer that was sought for by the question, I shall be very much obliged.

REPAIRS TO STEAMER MINTO.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I desire to call the attention of the government to the fact that the return brought down with regard to the repairs to the seamer Minto, about which we had some observations at the time, are all right as far as they go. I made two motions, one with reference to the repairs to the Minto, and another with reference to the first cost of the boat. The information asked for with regard to the first cost of the boat has not been brought down. The information with regard to the repairs has been furnished.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have just received a return moved for by the hon. gentleman showing the expenses and earnings of the steamer Stanley while engaged in the winter service during the years of 1894-5-6-7-8-9, and the expenses and earnings of the steamer Minto. I have also obtained a copy of the report that was missing last year. I secured it from the Department of Railways. I hope my hon. friend will find it sufficient, because I am afraid it will be all I shall be able to get. I had to make great efforts to obtain even that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does the hon. gentleman know whether there is any change made in it ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I only received it a few minutes ago, but I do not think there is any change.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This is the same return brought down a year ago without any addition or change.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

RE-OPENING OF TRADE ON SOUTH-EASTERN RAILWAY.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired :

Has the government, or any of the members of the present administration, received, at any time from July 1, 1896, to this date, any petitions or communications whatsoever on the part of boards of trade, of municipal corporations or of any private individuals coming from the city of Sorel, or from the municipalities of St. Michel d'Yamaska, de Yamaska, de St. David d'Yamaska, de St. Guillaume d'Upton, de St. Pie de Deguire, de St. Bonaventure d'Upton, de St. Germain de Grantham and Drummondville, in relation to the reopening the trade of that part of the South-eastern Railway which united Sorel to Drummondville, and which seems to have been abandoned and not worked since April, 1892?

If in the affirmative, in whose name have these communications been sent?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I have made inquiry and have not yet received an answer. Perhaps my colleague may have received one; he will be here in a few minutes. On Friday last my private secretary asked for the information, inclosing the question to the department, and up to the present time no answer has come to me.

GASPE SHORT LINE RAILWAY.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I may say to my hon. friend from Montmagny (Hon. Mr. Landry) that I received from the department a verbal answer to his questions in regard to the Gaspé Railway. The statement given to me was that it would take some time to prepare a return, and they would like a more definite statement from my hon. friend, as to the period from which the information was to begin.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is in relation to the Short Line Railway Bill.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That line is not in existence yet. At the opening of this session of parliament, a Bill was introduced for the incorporation of that private company. I should think it would not require a great effort of genius to ascertain from what period they should begin. It is the period from which they first received the documents relating to that proposed legislation.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I give my hon. friend the answer I received from the Railway Department.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD (C.B.)—I cannot but observe the large amount of work which the Minister of Justice in this House has to do, and the burden which is imposed upon him by his colleagues in the lower Chamber. In his reply to the hon. gentleman he says that his private secretary asked for this information on Friday last.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—And before.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD (C.B.)—And that he has not received an answer, and he is the one that ought to receive that answer. The Department of Customs, I believe, is the department referred to. The question did not involve very much work, and I think it is not showing proper courtesy to the hon. leader of this Senate to furnish him with verbal answers from the other ministers, and I think that he should insist upon his rights. It is impossible for one hon. gentleman in this House to do all the work of thirteen or fourteen ministers in the House of Commons, and the least they ought to do is to give hon. gentlemen in this House, and especially the leaders of this House their answers in writing.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—On Friday last this question was put on the paper. I answered that I had made careful inquiry in the Department of the Secretary of State, where ordinarily such communications would be received—that I had inquired of the Privy Council Department and the Department of Railways and Canals, and also in the Public Works Department and found nothing in any of them. There is one other department that may possibly know something about it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—From the Department of Railways and Canals nothing has been received ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They had no correspondence. I sent specially over to the secretary of the department, and also to the secretary of the Public Works Department, and they have had no communications on the subject.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I fancy there will not be any letters in the other departments.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There may be private letters to the Premier. I have asked the secretary of the Premier to look in his private correspondence and to let me know if he can find any. Of course it is impossible to trace these matters unless the letters are sent officially to the government. Letters intended for the government are properly put through, and can always be found, but private letters are treated differently and it is only by inquiry through the channels I have mentioned that one can get information.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—An outsider would be surprised to find so many vexations questions asked about a matter dating so far back. I find this refers back to 1892. If the thing is of such importance, I am surprised the hon. gentleman, or some friend on his behalf, did not ask for it in 1893, 1894 or 1895. It looks very strange to me. Of course, the hon. gentleman may be able to explain it, but I should be rather inclined to put it down as trying to be vexatious and annoying, because these questions have been asked so often. I like to see fair-play. It is high time this Senate should conduct itself in such a manner, especially among certain members, as to appear sincere. Instead of that, it looks as if there was a good deal of desire on the part of certain individuals to irritate, annoy and impede legislation. I hope it will cease and that hon. gentlemen will apply themselves to something practical, and not act in such a captious way by asking petty questions every day. When proceedings come down to be a farce, I think it is time it was ended.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—My hon. friend should sit on the other side of the House. Before giving us lessons he should take one. If he wants to hit me I do not want to be hit in the back. Let him take a seat on the other side of the House if he wants to attack us on this side.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—Does the hon. gentleman own this side of the House ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am on this side of the House properly. I beg leave to tell the hon. gentleman he has no right to say I am coming here with vexatious questions. The first thing he should try to do is to understand my question.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—Understand ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Try to understand. If he would read it carefully he would see that I never asked a question relating to anything as far back as 1892. If he had read the question properly he would have found this that I asserted as a fact that the railway had been abandoned since 1892. I did not ask any questions about 1892 or 1893. At all events, if the hon. gentleman thinks he has the department in charge, and that he could give the proper answers, I am willing to let him cross the floor, and sit alongside of the minister, so that I could enjoy myself putting questions. I can assure him I will not ask any vexatious questions. The only trouble will be for him to try and understand them.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—It would be a difficult matter.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Yes, a difficult matter for the hon. gentleman. As to the answer given by the hon. ministers, I quite understand that if a positive answer came from the Department of Railways and Canals that they had received nothing, that ends the question, and I take that as a satisfactory answer.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I sent to Sir Wilfrid Laurier's secretary, and he promised to look it up. That is the only other one that could possibly have it. He might have received a letter which, not being regarded as official, would not be put on file. I inquired of the Railways and Canals and Public Works Department and they have no communication.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—With reference to the Gaspé Short Line I would just ask the hon. minister to bear in mind that it is very essential for the legislation to come before us in this House to have the different petitions relating to the Gaspé Short Line, and I shall avail myself of my right, if those petitions are not brought down in time, to ask that the measure be delayed until we have them.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I will make further inquiry.

CASTINGS FOR PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND RAILWAY.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL, (in the absence of Hon. Mr. Ferguson), inquired :

1. Were tenders called for the supply of castings for the Prince Edward Island Railway in the present year?
2. Was the call for tenders public, or were offers solicited privately?
3. If the latter, who were asked to tender?
4. What prices per pound is being paid for the said castings?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Tenders were called for the supply of castings for the Prince Edward Island Railway in the present year. 2. They were asked by circular dated August 18th, 1899. 3. Circulars were sent to T. A. McLean, A. White & Son, and Bruce, Stewart & Co., of Charlottetown. Bruce, Stewart & Co. were the lowest and were awarded the contract for one year, on the 12th of October. 4. 2¾ cents per pound is being paid for the said castings. The contractor taking it part payment in equal quantity of scrap iron from the railway at $14 per ton of 2,000 lbs.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understand, from the answer, that they were not public tenders.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

MAILS BETWEEN KENSINGTON AND PRINCETOWN, P.E.I.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL, in absence of Hon. Mr. Ferguson, inquired:

1. If a new contract or renewal of a former contract for carrying the mails between Kensington and Princetown, P.E.I., has been made?
2. Who is the contractor?
3. How much is being paid for the service?
4. Were public tenders called for?
5. Did the department receive offers other than from the present contractor?
6. If so, who were they from, and what amount did they offer to perform the service for?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—A contract was made for the Kensington and Princetown mail service, which went into operation on the 1st of October last. It was made with Mr. Alvin Glover, the brother of the late contractor, and the rate of payment is the same as it has been since the service was established in 1891, viz., $125 a year. Public tenders were not invited, nor was the department in receipt of private offers from any person other than the late contractor. The service was up for public tender in 1895, and it was ascertained then that $125 was the lowest amount for which a responsible person would undertake it, and as the conditions had undergone no change and no complaints had ever reached the department as to the manner in which the late contractor, Mr. John Glover, had performed his duties, a new contract was authorized with him on the same terms and conditions. He died before the contract could be executed with him, and as the inspector reported Mr. Alvin Glover to be a suitable contractor, the contract was made with him.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The answer given by the hon. minister is very full, and no objection, I think, has been taken to the policy which has been adopted, but it is, I may intimate, in direct contravention of the policy which was announced to be pursued in the future by the Postmaster General. The answer is a justification of the course formerly pursued by the late Postmaster General, under the late government, in renewing small contracts to parties without asking for public tenders, and it is a very good answer to the policy which was pursued by the Postmaster General, in annulling scores and scores—I think I am safe in stating that—of contracts in the province of Ontario, because they had been let in the manner indicated in the answer given by the hon. gentleman. I know nothing of these cases personally, but I know the policy that was laid down by the Postmaster General. I know the reasons that were given for annulling contracts which were renewed in the same manner and under the same circumstances and for the same reasons by his predecessors, that this has been renewed. What object the hon. gentleman from Marshfield, had in asking the questions I do not know.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I may say to my hon. friend, that the law does not care for little things.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understand that.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—And I think the Postmaster General has adopted that rule. What was most complained of in the other cases, to which my hon. friend refers, and what the Postmaster General complained of before he came into the government, was that the policy of renewals had been applied to contracts for very large amounts.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, I am perfectly sure of that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does the hon. gentleman mean beyond the limit laid down by the law? The law lays down a limit for tenders. You can renew up to a certain amount. Do I understand the hon. Minister of Justice to say that Sir Adolphe Caron, the late Postmaster General, renewed contracts that exceeded the limitation.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I think so. I think in the North-west Territories there were several contracts of that sort. That is my recollection, and I know in Ontario there were other tenders offered, not by parties of the political faith of the government, but men of the same political views as the men who had the contract, and where there were three or four parties offering to tender, and some of them tendered at a lower rate than the rate contracted for, although that was perhaps very moderate, nevertheless, it was thought prudent on the part of the Postmaster General, that fresh tenders should be received, but that was not the case in this instance, and my hon. friend will see that there is a careful statement made in this answer that in that case there had been no complaint and no offer to carry at a less rate.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, I accept what the hon. gentleman says, I refer him to the elaborate report on this question in the blue-book. Speaking of my own personal knowledge in the county of Hastings, in which I live, in the riding I represented for a quarter of a century, I know the contracts for carrying the mails were taken from those who were of the same political faith as myself, and given to parties of the political faith of my hon. friend opposite, without asking for any tender—just simply taken away and given to others. That seems to have been much the case here, and the present Postmaster General is adopting precisely the same policy which he has condemned.

A CORRECTION.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—With the permission of the House, I wish to move a resolution. On the 9th of May, I presented Bill (U) 'An Act to incorporate the British American Pulp Company.' At that time I proposed that the Bill be referred to the standing committee on Railways, Telegraphs, and Harbours, but I was corrected and the Bill was referred to the Miscellaneous Private Bills Committee. Through an error it appears on the Order paper as having been referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, I therefore move that the order of Wednesday, the 9th inst., in relation to Bill (U) intituled, 'An Act to incorporate the British American Pulp and Paper Company,' referring the Bill to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, be rescinded, and that the said Bill be referred to the Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

The motion was agreed to.

USURY BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into committee of the whole on Bill (P) 'An Act respecting usury.'

Hon. Mr. MILLS.

On the first clause.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I move that the title of this Bill be amended so as to read 'This Act may be called the money lenders' Act.' The English Bill, of which this is almost a copy is called the money lenders' Act, and it does not deal with usury in a broad sense at all. It simply deals with the transactions of money lenders, and I think the term money lender is the proper term to insert in the title of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I do not object to this change in the title, because we are not doing away with all forms of usury. The title suggested by my hon. friend commends itself to me.

The amendment was adopted.

On clause 2.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I move that the rate of interest referred to in this clause be changed from 10 per cent to 8 per cent.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I am afraid if you reduce the rate from 10 to 8 per cent you will disturb business in a considerable part of Canada where the rate at which money is loaned is higher. We have already had usury laws allowing only 6 to 7 per cent, which were repealed in 1854, because they interfered with trade and commerce. But now I want to reach a certain class of money lenders, and I am afraid of too severe a measure.

The amendment was declared lost and the clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—What is the reason for departing from the English law in making no provision for the licensing of usurers? Would they not be more under control if licensed?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—We have completely defined the party we want to reach, the party who makes it a practice of lending at a high rate. If we should declare that such parties must register, if they only occasionally loan beyond 10 or 12 per cent. they may refuse to register, and we would have to establish that they make a practice of lending at 10 per cent, and also that they failed to register, we would simply establish two offences, the fact that they make a practice of lending at more than 10 per cent and the fact that they have not registered. I do not see the necessity of it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If two or three cases could be proved, would the court construe that into a practice ? I doubt it very much. They will not be found out in all cases. Would the courts construe two or three cases as involving the practice of usury ?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I think that isolated cases would not bring the party under the scope of this law, but the man to be reached is the professional money-lender who lends to the public at usurious rates. I have made it a point to see that no private individual lending to his neighbour, or lending occasionally, doing a good turn to a friend, shall be harassed if he makes a short loan beyond the figure established by this Bill. I am dealing with the man who makes a practice of lending money at a higher rate than 10 per cent. It would be incumbent on the complainant to establish that the party really makes it a business to lend money at high rates.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It seems to me that there is a good deal of force in the statement of the hon. Secretary of State. I have received a letter from a gentleman in Montreal, in which he calls my attention to the fact that a friend wanted to borrow a hundred dollars for fifteen days. The writer of the letter does not say that he makes a practice of lending money ; but he gave his friend the hundred dollars and charged and received one dollar. At the end of fifteen days the loan was renewed and the lender received another dollar. You can imagine what rate of interest that would be at the end of a year if the loan were renewed every fifteen days on the same terms. He says 'you can use this fact, only do not use my name.' It is better, he says, that this man should pay a dollar for the use of the money for fifteen days than to have to submit to being sued in court. That is the sort of lender, I take it, that the hon. gentleman wants to exempt from the Bill.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—He would be exempt, because I am assuming that he does not make a practice of lending money on such terms. It seems to me you should strike out the word 'practice,' and you would avoid the difficulty pointed out by the hon. Secretary of State.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—My object is to disturb as little as possible the public at large. I want to reach the usurer, and I think that we would have very much difficulty in passing through both branches of parliament a Bill which would reach people who only occasionally make a loan, and might not notice that what seems a fair rate on a loan for a week or ten or fifteen days, was going beyond the letter of the law.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Would it not be better to compel the man to signify in some way that he is to be considered a money-lender under this Act ? As it is now, it is very indefinite—'Who carries on the business of money-lending' or 'holding themselves out in any way as carrying on that business'—would it not be as well to say that he should be obliged to advertise or publish the information that he was enaged in the business, and then people would know ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is just what he would not do.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Then he would not come under the provisions of this Bill.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It seems to me the persons who are aimed at by this Bill are really not any more deserving than pawnbrokers are, and if pawnbrokers are obliged to register, the money-lenders should be obliged to register also. As it is now, there is really no sort of restriction over the money-lender. If a chartered bank goes into business, it is subject to inspection by the government, and has to make returns regularly, and is kept under the public eye. It seems to me these money-lenders ought to be kept under the public eye at least as much as the bankers. The English Act provides that money-lenders shall register. With the permission of the committee I shall read the clause in the English Bill :

2.—(1.) A money-lender as defined by this Act :—

(a.) Shall register himself as a money-lender in accordance with regulations under this Act, at an office provided for the purpose by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, under his own or usual trade name, and in no other name, and with the address, or all the addresses, if more than one, at which he carries on his business of money-lender ; and

(b.) Shall carry on the money lending business in his registered name, and in no other name and under no other description and at his registered address or addresses, and at no other address ; and

(c.) Shall not enter into any agreement with respect to the advance and repayment of money, or take any security for money otherwise than his registered name ; and

(d.) Shall on reasonable request, and on tender of a reasonable sum for expenses, furnish the borrower with a copy of any document relating to the loan or any security therefor.

That all seems very reasonable, and I do not think that the difficulty which the hon. gentleman in charge of the Bill seems to anticipate from causing the money-lenders to register would really be found to arise, because the second subsection of this section of the English Bill says :

(2.) If a money lender fails to register himself as required by this Act, or carries on business otherwise than in his registered name, or in more than one name, or elsewhere than at his registered address, or fails to comply with any other requirement of this section, he shall be liable on conviction under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts to a fine not exceeding one hundred pounds, and in the case of a second or subsequent conviction to imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for a term not exceeding three months, or to a fine not exceeding one hundred pounds, or to both : Provided that if the offender be a body corporate, that body corporate shall be liable on a second or subsequent conviction to a fine not exceeding five hundred pounds.

Then there is a subsequent clause. The provisions of the English Bill are carefully guarded, and it really would be in the interests of the public that we should adopt the system which they have in England. As the Secretary of State has pointed out, the first thing that a prosecutor would have to do, acting under the Bill of my hon. friend, would be to prove that the person against whom he made the charge practised lending money at exorbitant rates, and that might be a very difficult thing to do, for the people who borrow money would not, as a rule, be very anxious to come forward and disclose the condition of their business affairs to the public, and I really do not see any reason why we should not have the English provision.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The objection that I have to this registration is that if you want to strike at the money-lender because he is not registered, you have to establish that he should have registered because he makes a practice of lending at a higher rate than 10 per cent. That is all I need prove under the present Bill. What I would need to establish the offence for not registering, is just what I would need to bring the offender under the scope of the present Bill, so that really I am simply establishing a second offence against him —that he failed to register. I care not whether he registers or not, if I establish that he is a money-lender under this Bill, then he falls under the provision of the Bill. As a matter of fact, three-fourths of money lenders whom we want to reach, and perhaps 95 per cent of them, will not register. They will try to violate the law as best they can, so that I would have to establish the fact, and at the same time establish the second offence, if the English system is adopted,—the offence of not having registered ; but I would have to make the same evidence to force them to respect the other provisions of the law.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not think the hon. gentleman is making his case any better, because if we adopt the principle of the English Bill, then, in the case of every man who has registered, it is unnecessary to prove that he carries on the business. The fact that he has registered settles that question. The hon. gentleman says these men would not register. I think the average man, who proposes to lend money, would register rather than expose himself to the serious penalties for not registering which are imposed by the English Bill. I have not understood that people are in the habit of doing business as pawnbrokers without registering, and one would suppose the temptation to a pawn broker to do business without registering would be as great as to the money-lender. I do not think there is much force in the argument which the hon. gentleman has addressed to the committee. I shall move that the clause of the English Bill defining the money-lender, be inserted in this clause as a subsection.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It seems to me that the fact of making them register would destroy the object of the Bill. I can understand the registration of a class of men dealing in money who desire to carry on what might be called a legitimate business. The men whom the Bill is designed to reach do not, and they would evade the law under any circumstances. If you say a usurer must register, he will take good care not to register, and will loan money surreptitiously, and exact from the borrower still larger rates because he takes the risk of exposure. That was the policy pursued by this class of money-lenders before the usury laws were repealed. From my observation of the matter, the suggestion made by the promoter of the Bill will enable one to reach the usurer much easier than if registration is required.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I do not know that there is any great harm done in requiring registration, but there is this: the same evidence that would convict under this Bill is required to punish a party for not registering. He may be disposed to take the risk of refusing to register, even though you provide for registration, on the assumption that you may not succeed in proving that he was a money-lender according to the definition in the statute. I can see that if this Bill becomes law, and is found to work on the whole fairly satisfactorily, you may find it necessary to provide for registration, and also find it necessary to provide for inspection. If the inspection were required, then registration would become a matter of very great importance, because your inspector would have to know who were engaged in the business. It would become a necessity, but it seems to me if we get the Bill on the statute-book in its present form, and have an opportunity of observing its operations for the course of a year or two, that parliament will be in a better position to determine whether they ought to go further and provide for registration and inspection of those engaged in the business.

The clause was adopted without amendment.

On clause 3.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—If this Bill is intended to curb the usurer, why allow this high rate of interest, 20 per cent? If the borrower refuses to pay and the case goes to court, he only pays 10 per cent from the date of judgment.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I agree with what the hon. gentleman from Victoria (Hon. Mr. McDonald) when he says that 20 per cent is too high. I should say 12 or 15 per cent would be high enough.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—A large portion of that would be insurance.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I stated that I want to limit the time. I would have it read like this:

Notwithstanding the provisions of chapter 127 of the Revised Statutes, no money-lender shall stipulate for, allow or exact on any negotiable instrument, contract or agreement, the principal of which is under $500, a rate of interest or discount greater than 12 per cent per annum, nor shall such loan be made for a longer period than thirty days from the date thereof. And the said rate of interest shall be reduced to the rate of 6 per cent per annum from the date of the judgment of any suit, action or any proceeding for the amount due.

I submit that in place of 20 per cent we should make it 12 per cent, and we should reduce the 10 per cent to 6 per cent.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I will second that motion. I would point out to the promoter of this Bill that clause 3 would have the effect of throwing every borrower into court. Supposing a man borrows money and declines to pay, he goes to court? They would all go to court so as to avoid paying 20 per cent. Then why are sums above $500, liable to 20 per cent? There is no limit.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—There were two reasons given which seemed to commend themselves to the judgment of the committee. I have not, in my original draft, mentioned $500, or any sum, but it was represented that parties who were patent inventors, or mine discoverers, who have no capital, and who need a partner will sometimes ask of a capitalist a sum of $5,000, or $10,000, or $15,000, to throw into the venture, the capitalist would lend five, ten or fifteen thousand dollars, but would not accept the responsibility of partnership. He would risk the amount against the other parties work or brain, and would accept, under the form of interest, a share of the profits. There were various other reasons given to limit the amount, and I have no objection to the sum of $500, for the simple reason that the money lender whom I want to reach does not lend sums beyond $500. The usurer lends sums ranging from ten dollars to two hundred and fifty, and perhaps three hundred. The party who can secure a loan of $500 is generally solvent enough to command a low rate of interest. I have no special objection to limiting the sum to $500, or $400, because I know I can reach ninety-nine per cent of the cases where an extortionate rate has been charged.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I have no doubt the hon. gentleman means well, but what is to prevent four or five men combining to borrow $500? Supposing five men want one hundred dollars apiece, and they say, 'We will not go to this man and pay 10 or 20 per cent, but we will make it one lump sum by which we can get a lower rate of interest?'

Hon. Mr. POWER—They would have to pay more.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—It would be a combine between the money lender and the people who want to borrow the money.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is no danger of that. We cannot imagine five men combining in order to be obliged to pay a higher rate of interest. I was present at the meeting of the committee at which this subject was discussed, and the general feeling of the committee seemed to be that if there were no limit, the tendency of this measure might be to interfere with legitimate enterprise. I think it is better not to meddle with the amount. There is a great deal at first sight in the objection made by the hon. gentleman from British Columbia, that if a man is to pay 20 per cent and then, if a judgment is entered up, he pays less, he is likely to contest a claim just in order to reduce the rate. But the fact is that he pays the lower rate only after the judgment has been recovered, and, at any rate, if the sum is less than $500, the cost of the suit would be probably more than the addition to the interest. I think we had better let that clause alone.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—I should certainly like to assist the hon. gentleman promoting this Bill, but I have read the measure with a good deal of care, and have come to a conclusion hostile to the Bill. I am a free trader in money, as well as in other articles. I do not believe in interfering with the business of money lending and putting such restrictions on it, so as to multiply lawsuits. A party comes to me and borrows a certain amount of money. I lend it to him and get a high rate of interest, and why? Because the man could not get the money from the bank. He is not a first class man, and, in consequence of that, I have to run a risk, and I have to charge more interest on that account than the legal interest of the country.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Does the hon. gentleman go beyond 20 per cent?

Hon. Mr. DEVER—No matter what the bargain is, if it is reduced to writing, it should be adhered to. It is wrong to go into court and reduce the interest. I lend my money at a certain rate of interest. Should I be compelled to lend my money for probably three years longer at half the rate because that man goes into court? It is not a business transaction. I was one of the first men in this chamber who took upon myself the responsibility of getting the usury laws of my province repealed since we came into confederation, and the change gives so much satisfaction that we are not anxious to restore usury laws, and this is a usury law. I could not justify myself in voting for it. It would be far better for us to allow the government of the country to be responsible for the proper rate of interest. The people in New Brunswick, do not know that such a Bill is being passed. If we make it a Dominion law, everybody knows of it. I am strongly opposed to restrictions on money lending. Why should not money be as free in the market as any other commodity? Why should not money be bought and sold the same as flour, or any other article of merchandise. I am sorry to see so much interference with the business of the country. At last we will have so many laws restricting business that we will all be driven into one corner. A man does not know where to go to establish a business. Money is an article that might be traded in in this country and a large number of men deal in it to the advantage of the country and to the advantage of the borrower. The hon. Minister of Justice says he thinks that the usurer man should register his business. What ordinary man wants to give out to the public to know his capital? No ordinary individual wants the public to know his means or have parties coming in to inspect his business. No tea merchant would want any inspector to come in and know what capital he has. The banks may do it, because they are issuers of paper money, floating their notes, and it is necessary that the public should know their standing on a basis of gold? Why should the individual be interfered with? His capital is not paper dollars. He is simply lending his money. He is not asking the public to trust him. He simply has his money, or merchandise, as capital and lends it. Most of the people of this country will not be satisfied with this Bill as it stands at present, and I shall oppose it.

Hon. Sir MACKEIZIE BOWELL—I was going to suggest that if we made the time longer, say ninety days instead of thirty, it would prevent renewals.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I am very willing to make it ninety. I look upon the time as very essential in matters of this kind, because if you close up the deal you will not be so likely to hurt any person as you would be by dragging it along from six months to nine months.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—I apprehend that clause 3 will cause unnecessary confusion in commercial affairs. I mean that part of it which says that the rate of interest shall be reduced to the rate of 10 per cent per annum from the date of judgment in any suit, action or proceeding for the recovery of the amount due. Perhaps I do not exactly understand the remote meaning of the clause, but if it means that all judgments for debts will hence forward carry ten per cent, I will certainly not vote in favour of that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—There is an amendment proposed reducing the 10 per cent to 6 per cent.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—I shall vote for the amendment. In New Brunswick, judgment debts carry six per cent. This Bill, instead of reducing interest, would increase it, and I do not believe it is the intention of the promoter to raise the rate of interest. It would be disturbing the whole economy of contracts and money lending and commercial affairs in the country, and most unnecessarily. I shall vote in favour of reducing the interest on judgment debts to the rate existing in the province from which I come. On the face of it, 20 per cent is really usury, but there may be reasons for permitting that, and I would rather have 20 per cent fixed as the limit than to lead the note shavers to charge unlimited interest, which they otherwise could, and it appears they do collect it now, especially in the city of Montreal. I know that many note shavers in the county adjoining the county where I reside, did charge as much as 40, 50 or 80 per cent on renewed papers. Therefore, although 20 per cent seems on the face of it exorbitant, I would be ready to vote for the 20 per cent provided that interest on judgment debts be reduced in all cases to 6 per cent.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I wish to direct the attention of the hon. gentleman who has charge of this Bill to the 8th clause. It says:

> Nothing in this Act shall operate to increase the rate of interest that may be recovered in any case where by law the rate is fixed at less than 20 per cent per annum.

That would cover Ontario.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—Even then there would be confusion. If money is loaned at 7 or 8 or 10 per cent per annum, it may be a case of litigation to know whether the judgment debt will carry ten per cent after judgment.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I am ready to accept 6 per cent. I accepted 6 per cent last year, but it was raised by the committee to 10 per cent.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—What is the rate of interest on judgments in Manitoba?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think it is 6 per cent everywhere?

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—It is 6 per cent in Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The statute provides that whenever interest is payable by the agreement of parties or by law, and no rate is fixed by law, the rate of interest shall be 6 per cent per annum. That is the rate all over the Dominion.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I will not press the first part of the amendment. I will press the portion fixing 6 per cent after judgment?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is carried.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I sympathize with the hon. gentleman from Glengarry, but it does not seem to me that the language of his amendment harmonizes with the rest of the clause. There is no provision for a loan in that clause. It occurs to me that if you put in this limitation of ninety days, it will simply give occasion to further difficulty to the borrower. If the borrower is not in a position to repay the money at the end of ninety days, then he has to make another loan at the same rate for a period of ninety days, and he will probably have to pay something for the privilege. He may be referred by the money lender to some friend of his.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—He could not charge more. He might render himself liable to prosecution.

Hon. Mr. POWER—If you limit the rate, I think that is really enough.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does the hon. gentleman withdraw the portion of his amendment relating to 20 per cent?

The CHAIRMAN—Yes, he withdraws that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think the hon. gentleman had better adhere to his amendment to change the 20 to 12 per cent, and then make a limitation of the time as well. I think that will meet the approval of the people better than 20 per cent. What is the necessity for that portion of the clause after the words 'per annum,' when you provide in the 8th clause that nothing in this Act shall operate to increase the rate of interest that may be recovered in any case where by law the rate is fixed at less than whatever rate you fix by this Bill?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The interest stipulated by contract continues to be the rate of interest on judgments, in the province of Quebec at all events. I do not speak for the other provinces. That is why you have to-day judgments bearing 5 per cent per month, which the judges are obliged to condemn the parties to pay—equal to 120 per cent per annum. That is of weekly occurrence.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—That does not apply to Ontario. I do not think a judgment bears more than 6 per cent in Ontario, no matter what the contract or understanding, or agreement may have been.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—The declaration made by the promotor of this Bill is really surprising. I know a good deal about money lending. I have been many years in business, and in a commercial city all that time, and I never knew any money lender to ask a man 5 per cent per month on the face of a $500 note. For three months 5 per cent is only 20 per cent per annum. If money lenders get 120 per cent in Montreal, there must be something wrong. I have no objection to a Bill being passed relating to Montreal. In my city any man asking for 120 per cent, or half that, would be drummed out of the town. I know a private banker who had $100,000 to loan, and he never charged more than 10 or 12 per cent on any loan, however small the amount or short the time. A man who has the money in his safe is not like a bank. He does not issue paper money. He must get a higher rate of interest, and when he gets 5 per cent off the face of a bill for three or four months, he is not getting too much, because he runs a risk and may have to wait a long time and perhaps have to sue for it, and the consequence is the lender has not a large profit on his loan. It is a great mistake to say that a money lender has an excessive rate of interest. If it is so in Montreal let us know it, but they are not to be found in St. John or Halifax.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—If the hon. gentleman will go to the street in front of this building, close his eyes and throw half a dozen stones at random, I venture to say he will strike one of those money lenders.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—I doubt it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I take exception to the amendment limiting the time to ninety days, because my hon. friend wants to decree that the borrower shall have the money to pay at maturity. My hon. friend wants those loans to terminate at the end of three months. They will terminate if the borrower has the money. If he has not, there will be a renewal. I have stated an annual rate of interest. I do not see how this amendment could be carried out.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—Would not the borrower be better off if the contract should terminate then?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—If it terminates, it can only be by a judgment against the borrower, or by payment of the debt. If my hon. friend means that after three months the 20 per cent shall no longer run, that it will be the end of the 20 per cent, then we fall upon the legal interest 6 per cent. The party loaning the money will know that he can only claim at the rate of 20 per cent per annum for three months, and that after the three months he will have to content himself with six per cent.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Hear, hear!

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—If that is what my hon. friend wants, he will have to say it in other words.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I am not a lawyer, and I may not have put it in the right language, but I could not state my views better than the hon. gentleman has stated them himself. I want the contract to terminate at three months, and after that the interest to be 6 per cent. Then parties will not be as likely to be ruined as if the high interest were carried on for term after term.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—That will be the best check we could put on the usurers.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Yes, the very best check.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I have no objection to turn the screw on them as much as possible, but I should like my hon. friend to put his idea in black and white.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Do I understand my hon. friend from Glengarry, to have withdrawn his amendment to fix the rate of interest at 12 per cent?

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I do not care to press it. My own feeling is for 12 per cent.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Try 15.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend will see this, that there is a difficulty in fixing a very low rate. No one will borrow under this provision, except some one who is in very needy circumstances, and he has not the security to give or he would get the money at a very much less rate than 12 per cent. What he is obliged to do is, not merely to pay interest, but to give security, or a species of insurance, that he will pay, and so the lender takes the risk, where he has a large number of borrowers, that a sufficient number of them will pay to cover, by this large rate of interest, the loss of the principal in other cases. That is the principle on which these parties are lending. It seems to me that if you make the rate of interest 12 per cent, you simply prevent the desperate class from obtaining loans altogether.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I do not think it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I think that would be the case. Further than that, if you limit the time to ninety days, and prevent renewals, you hold out strong temptations to both parties to violate the law, but if you say the rate of interest shall not exceed 20 per cent per annum, and provide that the loan should not be renewable beyond the year, it seems to me you give as great protection as you possibly can. If you go below that, either in the length of time, or the rate of interest, you will have parties evading the law altogether instead of undertaking to comply with its provisions.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD—That argument simply means that we are asked to sanction the robbing of one man to make up the loss in the case of another man.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The principle is the same with fire insurance.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B. C.)—The object of the Bill is to crush the usurer, and I would have only two or three lines in that Bill, that no one should lend money at a higher rate than 12 per cent, and that no man should recover principal or interest if money is loaned at a higher rate. I do not care whether he be a usurer or banker, I would limit it to that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—My hon. friend can easily calculate what 20 per cent is upon a small sum for thirty or sixty days. It comes to very little. I think it is simply in accord with the law on the statute-book which allows pawnbrokers to collect 20 and even 24 per cent for the first period, after which it slides down. I think I stated last year that it was 18 and a fraction per cent, and yet the pawnbroker has in his possession an article of furniture, or silverware, or something which absolutely guarantees the loan. The law allows him to collect 18½ per cent on loans absolutely secured, yet he has some obligations to the public. He must pay license, and parliament has not thought his rates too high. At all events, no one has to this day complained of the extortionate rates allowed to the pawnbroker. When you come to money lenders, who have no security but the signatures of young men who have, as capital, only their future, you would give that money lender a less rate of interest. I think we should follow the same lines that parliament has fixed for pawnbrokers and allow usurers to charge 20 per cent. Twenty per cent on $50, for one month is a fraction under one dollar. As the hon. Minister of Justice says, the man who loans fifty dollars of his hard-earned money to a needy borrower has, in the first place, to insure not only the collection of this interest, but the collection of the capital he has risked, and I quite understand, when people present doubtful names, that he should go beyond the legal bank rate of interest. On short loans the lender never goes beyond ninety days. I do not think it is extortionate.

The CHAIRMAN—I shall take the sense of the committee on the reduction of the rate from 20 to 12 per cent.

The committee divided on the amendment, which was carried.

Contents 12, non-contents 11.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I would urge a reconsideration of that, because we to-day are facing an unlimited rate of interest, and we have to come back to the usury laws, to a certain extent, and I wonder if we are not imperilling the passage of the measure by making it too harsh. Time will tell, but I thought, as a first step, if we stopped at 20 per cent it would be wiser. Will the hon. gentleman from Glengarry drop the ninety day's clause ?

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—No, I consider that the most important amendment.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—To my mind, it is nonsense to say you will prevent renewals. You cannot do it. You have two men in a firm. You borrow from one to-day and from another to-morrow. That can always be done. Speaking of the effect of the operations in Montreal, I know a very respectable man who was driven out of that city. As soon as his employer knew he was in the hands of these sharks, they dismissed him, and he had to come back to Belleville. I would prevent it altogether if I could.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—So would everybody?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There is no doubt every hon. gentleman would like to prevent it, but we are not dealing with usury laws generally. We recognize the right to contract for the use of money, the same as we do for any other article of value, but there are certain parties whose circumstances compel them to pay extortionate rates, and if you limit the rate and the time, it will render it impossible for them to borrow at all.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—The time is not of so much importance when the rate of 12 per cent is adopted.

The CHAIRMAN—Is it understood that the 10 per cent is reduced to six ?

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That makes it 12 per cent, and 6 per cent, without the limitation.

The clause as amended was adopted.

On clause 5.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I should like to ask the promoter of the Bill whether bona fide holder means a holder without notice for value.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The bona fide holder is one who has given value.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Would it mean that he was a holder without notice ? A man who had notice that a security was in contravention of this Bill, when it becomes law, would be a bona fide holder for value, but would not be a holder without notice, and if he had notice, he ought not to be allowed to recover.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If he had notice he would not be a bona fide holder.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—It seems to me this clause would afford a way of evading the law entirely. A man cannot be a bona fide holder when a note comes to him bearing on its face a rate of interest higher than is stipulated here. Still, by this clause it is intended that any man holding a note may recover the amount of it, even if the rate of interest is higher than is decreed here.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No, he could not do that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—If the note bears the rate of interest on the face of it, no one would be a bona fide holder of it, because the rate of interest would be there to be seen. This protects only the party who holds a note which has been discounted at a higher rate than the one allowed by law without showing the rate on the face of it, it is in a measure, concealed by the discount.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—Then the clause is not sufficient.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Cannot a man agree to pay any amount of interest he likes ?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The amount collectable would be only 12 per cent.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I wish to ask the hon. gentleman another question. Clause 3 refers to a 'negotiable instrument, contract or agreement.' Clause 5 refers only to 'negotiable instruments.' Do you not propose to protect a man who enters into a contract or agreement ? The English Bill makes such provision.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—'Negotiable instrument' covers that.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It does not cover the case of a bond or agreement.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It strikes me there is a good deal of force in the remarks made by the hon. gentleman from St. Boniface. I understand that if the note shows on the face of it a higher rate than the one allowed by this Bill, the holder of it would not be a bona fide holder ; but if it were given without any rate of interest being mentioned on the face of it, then, though the lender may have exacted 50 per cent, he would be a bona fide holder and could collect it. Or, in other words, if a man gives a note for a hundred dollars and gets but fifty dollars, the lender could sell the note for $75 to another person and he, being a bona fide holder, could collect the full amount.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Would not that have exactly the effect pointed out by the hon. gentleman from St. Boniface ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The borrower could collect the difference from the lender.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Could the borrower sue the lender and make him pay that $50, under this clause ?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Certainly.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I do not see how it could be done.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I would ask my hon. friend to make provision for contracts and agreements as well as negotiable instruments.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The negotiable instrument passes from one hand to another simply by endorsement, and we are bound not to disturb banking transactions, so I put in clause 5 in order to protect the bona fide holder. I think he is the only one who should be protected.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—That is all right. That is the general principle in the transactions. But the result will be that every note will be made in such a way that it may be transferred to a third party, and that third party will be a bona fide holder, and the borrower will be cheated.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The party who pays more money than he should under this law can always reach the shaver, the one who has obtained on the discount of the note more than he was entitled to. He cannot turn round to the second or third holder, who has paid the full amount of the note or draft, and say I will not pay for more than 50 cents on the dollar because it is all I got. He will have to pay him 100 cents, but he can turn round and collect the difference from the usurer.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 7,

Hon. Mr. POWER—Will the hon. gentleman explain this clause ?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—This clause covers all notes that have not matured to this date, before the sanction of the Act, but which will mature after the sanction of the Act. The court will not re-open transactions. There will be no retroactive effect, but at maturity they will cease to bear a larger rate of interest than the rate provided by this measure, so that if a note has been discounted at a higher rate of interest than the rate allowed in this Bill the borrower will not be able to recover it, but the money lender will have to content himself with the rate of interest fixed in this Bill although the note may bear a high rate of interest ?

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—In other words, they will have to comply with this Act after the maturity of the note ?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Yes.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—How will this affect chattel mortgages ? They are a very uncertain kind of security. Then there are warehouse receipts and a variety of transactions of that kind. Will this Act interfere with them ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think not.

Hon. Mr. POWER—In order to make the meaning of the clause clear, I think the hon. gentleman should insert a few words after the word 'instrument' in the first line. It says : 'In the case of any such negotiable instruments.' What negotiable instruments does that refer to ? We might add the words 'made before the passing of this Act and maturing after the passing of this Act.'

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I think the clause is clear as it is ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—In Ontario, if you owe a merchant a debt he takes, sometimes, a chattel mortgage in security for that debt. A man wants to borrow money but he has not security other than a chattel mortgage. If he borrows the money at a higher rate than 12 per cent, would it affect the chattel mortgage to the amount over 12 per cent only ? A man borrows a hundred dollars. The party charges him 10 per cent. He will charge him ten dollars for drawing the mortgage and make the mortgage bear 10 per cent. A man borrows one hundred dollars and the lender, being a lawyer, deducts 10 per cent from the amount and charges $10, for drawing the mortgage, and then makes the mortgage bear 10 per cent interest, so that he gets 30 per cent for the first year. How would this law affect such a case ?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—My opinion is that whatever collateral security you give the money-lender, you fall under the operation of this law. If you borrow money under five hundred dollars, whatever the security, let it be chattel or otherwise, this law will cover the contract. But I wonder why a party who gives, in addition to his own signature, a chattel mortgage, should pay a heavier rate than 12 per cent. This law is general. We have clause four which says :

—and if any such excess has been paid, or allowed in account, by the debtor, may order the creditor to repay it ; and may set aside either wholly or in part, or revise, or alter, any security given in respect of the transaction.

That may be a chattel mortgage.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—Supposing a note is given at 50 per cent, and that note matures after the passing of this Act, it seems to me that this Act should be made to apply to that transaction. It seems to me fair, because I consider such transactions are immoral. I should like to call the attention of the hon. gentleman to the drafting of this clause. It says :

In the case of any such negotiable instrument maturing after the date of the passing of this Act.

I quite understand that, but is seems to me there should be something more, because every transaction which originated before the passing of this Act will mature after its passage.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The word 'such' refers to the negotiable instrument in clause six.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—What is the meaning of the expression 'to be performed after the passing of this Act ?'

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—There should be an amendment to say they were executed before the passing of this Act. I move that this clause be amended as follows :

In the case of any such negotiable instruments, made before the passing of this Act, and maturing after the date of the passing of this Act.

And I move that the same words be added after the word 'agreements' in the same clause.

The amendment was adopted.

The clause, as amended, was adopted.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I move that the title of the Bill be 'An Act respecting money-lenders.'

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. McKAY, from the committee, reported the Bill with amendments, which were concurred in.

GAS INSPECTION ACT.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (78) 'An Act to amend the Gas Inspection Act.'

(In the Committee.)

On clause 1.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Did the hon. minister obtain information respecting the point I raised yesterday ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. I have the assurance from the Minister of Inland Revenue that he will propose to council a reduction of the fees, so that they will not be more than the gas companies are paying at present.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Can the hon. minister put a few words in the Bill to that effect ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, because the statute authorizes it to be done in council.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—One company here pays $152 a year for an inspection every three months, and under this Bill they would have to pay every month.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—How many meters are there in Ottawa ?

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Less than a thousand. We have an inspection every three months, for which we pay $152. This Bill would compel an inspection once a month.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, once in two months. At all events, the inspection fees will not be increased.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (Windsor), from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

GENERAL INSPECTION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (79) 'An Act to amend the General Inspection Act.'

(In the committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Flax seed has never been subject to inspection, and there is a quantity of over three hundred thousand bushels of flax seed grown in Manitoba, and the Board of Trade in Winnipeg have asked that it be included in the articles to be inspected.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The only objection I have to this Bill is that it is provincial legislation. I do not see why it should be confined to one province. If it be necessary to inspect flax seed grown in Manitoba, it must be equally important that the flax seed grown in the other provinces should be inspected. The hon. gentleman will remember that we had a discussion upon this matter of class legislation sometime ago, in reference to bags. A special size of bags was provided to meet the case of the habitants of Quebec. They were in the habit of purchasing the bags containing sugar, imported from Manilla and other places, which did not hold the quantity that the bags used in other provinces held. I remember objecting to that, not as class legislation, but as provincial legislation exclusively, although perhaps it could fairly be called class legislation. It seems to me that on questions of this kind we should deal with the whole Dominion. What possible harm could arise from striking out the word 'Manitoba' ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The answer to it is this, that in the case of bags they are in universal use.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, not universal.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They are used all over the Dominion. Flax seed is grown only in Manitoba to any extent.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is a mistake.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is grown in very small quantities elsewhere. The other provinces do not want inspection and there is no reason why we should force it on them. Flax seed has been mentioned in our Inspection Act. It is an exception to the general rule. If other provinces want it at any time, we can amend the law, but until they do, we should not force it on them.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I cannot see what harm it will do. If they want inspection, it will be on the statute-book, and I think the Secretary of State would be very much surprised if he knew all the flax seed that is produced in Ontario. I agree with the hon. leader of the opposition that the law should be made to apply to the whole Dominion, if it is any good at all.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—Hear, hear!

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I know there is a good deal of flax seed raised in the province of Ontario, and I do not see why the farmers of the province of Ontario, if they want clean flax seed, should not have this law as well as the people of Manitoba. What have the people of Ontario, Quebec and the Maritime provinces done that they are to be excluded from the operation of this Act? The Secretary of State says they do not want it. Does he mean to tell us that he never gives people what they do not want? It is his duty, when making the laws, to do justice to all.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The people of this country have been consulted time after time with reference to the Inspection Act. It has been on our statute-book for probably twenty years. They have never thought proper to include flax seed, because it has never been of sufficient importance to be included. I do not believe in forcing it upon parts of the country where it is not required.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—We are all against multiplying officials. If we extend this Bill to the other provinces, where so small a quantity of flax seed is grown, we shall be imposing more officials on them. I think it is judicious on the part of the government to have inspection only in the provinces where large quantities of this seed are grown.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The reason for asking for this Bill is, that flax seed is grown in Manitoba for the sake of the seed. It is grown in Ontario for the fibre as well as the seed. The seed is sold on sample and shipped to Ontario, and they want to establish a grade on which they can sell the seed. It is not unusual for this parliament to legislate for Manitoba especially. For instance, the grades of wheat which apply to Manitoba do not apply to the other provinces. Purchasers in Manitoba have found difficulty in placing flax seed upon the market and have asked for this legislation. It is similar to the Act in the United States which applies to the Western States, where flax is grown for the seed and not for the fibre. This legislation will give our flax seed a standing on the market. It has been asked for by the board of trade of Winnipeg.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—The hon. gentleman is mistaken when he says that flax is grown in Ontario for the fibre only. Farmers in Ontario raise flax seed for the oil and for feed. We do not object to Manitoba getting this amendment to the Inspection Act, and I do not see why my hon. friend should so far forget himself as to object to this Bill applying to the whole Dominion. Flax seed is grown in Ontario to some extent for the fibre, but the seed is also used extensively. Manitoba wants everything. All its geese are swans. It seems to me they should allow us to have something too. I wish them to prosper, but they cannot prosper much if they deny to others what they want for themselves.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I do not for a moment suggest that flax was not grown in Ontario for commercial purposes. I said that it was grown for fibre as well as for the seed. In Manitoba the flax is grown for the seed exclusively, which is shipped to the oil factories in Ontario, and they want to establish a grade by which they can sell it. I must admit what the hon. gentleman says, when Ontario geese come to Manitoba they become swans, they are so well fed and cared for. But there is no use in objecting to our getting this legislation simply because other provinces don't need it.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—We do not object; we want to give it to you.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—As soon as the boards of Trade of Ontario want such legislation they will ask for it. This is asked for by the Corn Exchange and the Board of Trade of Winnipeg, and by grain dealers generally, and it is but right and proper that we should pass an Act to facilitate the handling of flax seed which is raised and sold in Manitoba.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman is arguing on false premises altogether. No one is objecting to Manitoba getting this legislation. What we objects to is that it should be confined to one province. Flax has been raised in Canada for a great many years. When I was Minister of Customs the question was brought under my notice scores and scores of times as to the duty on flax seed and fibre also. What they do with fibre in Ontario I do not know, but I know there is an oil factory in the County of Waterloo, run by the member from South Waterloo, and there are hundreds and hundreds of acres of flax raised annually, more for the seed than for the fibre, and for that reason I contend that the law of inspection should apply to the whole of Canada and not to one province only. The analogy the hon. gentleman tries to draw between the grades of wheat and flax seed is not applicable at all. We know that Manitoba hard wheat and the mixed and soft wheat are altogether different from wheat produced in the other provinces; ergo, there should be a special provision for the inspection of Manitoba hard and the different grades which would not apply to wheat grown in Ontario, or in any other part of the Dominion. As to the inspection of flax seed, I do not know whether there is more oil in the seed grown in Manitoba than there is in that grown in Ontario; my only objection to this Bill is that its provisions are confined to one province when they should be applied to the whole Dominion.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is a question of fact whether it should be applied to every province or not. There is no doubt that flax seed is more extensively grown in Manitoba, apparently at all events, than in any other province. It is also true that in Manitoba the season is shorter—that the autumn is followed by an earlier winter than in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Some parts of it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—In some parts of it I know. We never have had anything said in Ontario about an inspection of flax seed. In west Ontario, so far as flax seed is grown, it is only in limited quantities for the purpose of feeding stock. The autumn is long, and I do not know that I ever heard of an inferior grade of flax seed. I do not know that I ever heard of flax seed being injured by immaturity, or frost, or an early winter season.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Oh, yes.

Hon. M. McCALLUM—It needs to be cleansed like other grain.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is generally sold, where it is sold, to the hardware men, who purchase clover and timothy and seed wheat.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Don't you sell the fibre ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is sometimes sold, but it is sometimes wasted. We have had no inspection, so far as I know, of timothy and clover seeds, and I do not see any necessity for the inspection of flax seed. At all events, if there was a very great difference in the varieties produced, the quantity is so small that it would not pay the public to appoint an inspector for the purpose of grading it. We can hardly provide for the appointment of an inspector of flax seed in every section of the Dominion, without having applicants for the position, and my hon. friend will know whether in his section of the country it would pay the public to provide for the appointment of an inspector of flax seed. I do not think it would in my section at the present time, because we go more extensively into other lines of production which are found more profitable to the farmer.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Corn, for instance.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, corn. On account of the extent to which flax is produced in Manitoba, there is a necessity at the present time for an inspection of flax seed in that province. I doubt if there is a necessity for it elsewhere. As soon as any one can show a necessity for the appointment of such an inspector in any other province, I shall be prepared to make provision for it. My hon. friend, like myself, is inclined to follow British practice. That practice is practically not to say good morning to the devil till you meet him, and we provide for the evil when the necessity arises. At the present time, I do not think that necessity has arisen, and my hon. friend is hardly serious in his criticism of the Secretary of State in the submission of this Bill—he is rather amusing himself, because he thinks we have not a great deal to do.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—I have a very great objection to any difference being made between the provinces of the Dominion to which we belong, and of which we are so proud. This Bill being confined to Manitoba implies that we cannot raise flax in Nova Scotia. On the contrary, the production of flax was in the early years of the history of Nova Scotia, one of its principal productions. The production of flax seed has fallen off as this Bill would indicate, but the measure should apply to Nova Scotia. I understood the Minister of Justice to say that it might involve unnecessary expense. They need not appoint an inspector until his services are required. I believe even New Brunswick can produce flax seed, much as it has been decried by this Bill. Therefore, I shall oppose it unless it is made to apply to every province of the Dominion.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—Nova Scotia can raise flax on the north shore, of course, but not in large quantities. I have seen linen made there from native flax. The argument of the Minister of Justice is so powerful that I should think no one would care to oppose it. He has shown that there is no necessity for applying this legislation to any other province than Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I move that the word 'Manitoba' be struck out of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I have no objection to the Bill passing if it is to apply to the whole Dominion. Though I live in the North-west Territories, I might want to buy flax seed from Ontario.

Hon. Mr. POWER—You would be foolish to buy flax seed in Ontario, when you can get it in Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—If I buy it in Ontario, I want to know what I am buying. If this Bill applies to the whole Dominion, I would have my redress if an inferior article were sold to me.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This regulates the weight of flax seed to the buyer. There is no regulation in the law regarding the weight of flax seed in Ontario, or any other part of the country?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There has been no law hitherto on the subject.

Hon. Mr. MILLS.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You are enacting that a bushel of flax seed in Manitoba shall weigh fifty pounds, but if, as my hon. friend from Wolseley says, a man wishes to buy flax seed in Ontario, he should know what it is. There is no provision in this Bill to regulate what the weight of a bushel of flax seed should be in any part of Canada outside of Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, it only applies to Manitoba.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If you strike out the word 'Manitoba' there will be no difficulty about it. It cannot possibly hurt Manitoba to apply the Act generally.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—For the last twenty-five years we have been going on without the inspection of flax seed in Ontario. No one has ever suggested, when the Inspection Act was before parliament, that flax seed should be inspected. It is very curious this new-born zeal to introduce it now when it is found to be a commercial necessity in Manitoba. Manitoba grows four times more flax seed than all the rest of the Dominion. The quantity grown in Ontario is nominal.

Hon. Mr. McKINDSEY—How much is grown in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It has diminished rather than increased in twenty-five years. To apply the Act generally would involve the appointment of inspectors in different districts of Canada.

Hon. Mr. POWER—If I were the Secretary of State, I would let the majority of the House have its way. The inspection is not compulsory, and it is hardly worth discussion.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. Secretary of State is surprised at our new-born zeal. He should remember that the hon. gentlemen who take the position we do are progressive reformers, and I am rather surprised that he has become an old fogey Tory, and wants to stick to the practice of twenty-five years ago. Liberal-Conservatives like progress wherever it is necessary.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Both parties are represented in the House of Commons. The public are there represented. The gentlemen who sit in the House of Commons are specially interested in meeting the public wishes and public requirements.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—No more than we are.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The obligation rests on them more than it rests on us.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Not at all.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I dissent from that view entirely. The point is that these men are elected there, and if they do not meet the wishes of the people who sent them to parliament, they will incur the public censure. If the Conservative party, or the Liberal party, in the country want an inspection of flaxseed in Ontario, or New Brunswick, or Nova Scotia, or Quebec, or in the Yukon country, they will make a representation to that effect. Will my hon. friends opposite tell me, who in the House of Commons, one party or the other, has asked for a measure like this, beyond the district covered by the Bill? It is proposed to inspect flaxseed grown in Manitoba, because there it is a general article of merchandise. It is not so anywhere else, and, of course, this is a government measure, proposed by the Department of Inland Revenue, and if my hon. friends opposite think that for that reason it ought to be amended——

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—The government is not in danger.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No, and not likely to be for some time to come.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Not before the end of the session.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—And it does seem to me that it is scarcely fair opposition to undertake to amend this Bill as proposed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not want to interrupt too often, but I take exception to the statement made by the hon. Minister of Justice. He has no right to impute to the members of this House a motive which does not actuate them.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I have a right to draw an inference.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the doctrine of the hon. Minister of Justice is accepted, that when the government bring a Bill before us, all we have to do in future, is to swallow it without comment. The question of party has nothing whatever to do with this matter. I started out with the declaration that I was opposed to provincial legislation for any one section of the country, when it can apply, with the same reason, to all other sections of the country. The question of party had nothing whatever to do with it. This is no attack upon the principle of the Bill. It is a mere detail. If we were objecting to the principle of the Bill, the Bill being a government measure, he might accuse us of party feeling and motives. But we are simply dealing with the details of the Bill, and advocating an amendment that does not affect the province that the measure is intended to benefit. All we ask is to extend the same privilege and the same benefit to other sections of the Dominion, in case it may be required. It does not follow that the government must appoint a number of inspectors. If there are inspectors of grain, they will perform the duties that an inspector of grain would perform in Manitoba. There is no necessity for any new officers under the Bill. The board of trade of Ontario have something to do with the appointment of inspectors. If it be necessary to inspect wheat, oats and barley, they can do the same with regard to flaxseed. In every case where we take exception to the wording of a government Bill we are told that we are obstructing. For my part, I repudiate any such charge.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend has not stated my position quite accurately. I did not simply say that hon. gentlemen were opposing the government measures on every occasion, nor have I contended that verbal suggestions or changes were objectionable. I have not taken that position, but I have pointed out that here is a measure in which both great parties in the state, elected by the people and interested in meeting the wishes of the people, did not propose to extend the measure further than it is extended by the provisions of the Bill. There are two classes of flaxseed mentioned in this Bill, one weighing fifty-three pounds, and the other fifty pounds, and anything less than that cannot be graded. That may be the weight of the flaxseed in Manitoba. I do not know what the weight of flaxseed in Ontario is, nor do I know that it is the same in the eastern portion of Ontario as in the western portion. I do know that a bushel of oats will vary several pounds in weight. We have a different weight in Prince Edward Island from what we have elsewhere, and I venture to say to my hon. friend opposite, who is proposing to amend the Bill, by striking out Manitoba and inserting Canada, that he does not know whether a bushel of flaxseed, of good quality, will weigh five pounds more or five pounds less to the bushel in Ontario than in Manitoba. I have not that information, and I do not know that any hon. gentleman here has it, and without that information you could not legislate intelligently, if legislation were desirable. In Ontario the quantity produced is so limited that to appoint an inspector would be improper.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The government might do in this case, as they do with my inquiries. Where I put a question, and they have not the information, the matter stands. I think this measure should stand until they obtain the information.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—The hon. minister says that no hon. gentleman in the House knows the weight of flaxseed, and he does not even know it himself. Before my hon. friend undertakes to classify any grain for inspection, he should establish the number of pounds a bushel should contain.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—We are doing it in Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Well, do it in every part of Canada. The hon minister gives us a lecture about what the House of Commons does. I have every respect for the House of Commons. I was there for a long time myself, but I do not think the hon. minister should claim that the House of Commons is the best judge of every measure the government lays before this House. I am not going to accept that as gospel. With all my respect for the Minister of Justice, I will not swallow that doctrine. I respect him very much. Before my hon. friend undertakes to establish a grade for flaxseed, he should state the number of pounds a bushel should contain. He could get that knowledge from the Department of Inland Revenue. This is a very important measure, but let us pass a uniform law, to apply all through this Dominion and not have one law for one place, and a different law for another place. We have 60 pounds to the bushel for wheat all over. Talk about expense; even in Manitoba it should not cost anything to inspect the flaxseed, because those that inspect wheat should have power to inspect flaxseed. It should involve no additional expense to the country, and no additional expense to the government. I insist upon dividing the committee on my amendment.

The committee divided on the amendment, which was lost on the following division:—

Yeas, 12; Nays, 14.

Hon. Mr. BURPEE, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

NOVA SCOTIA STEEL COMPANY'S BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN, from the Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported Bill (24) 'An Act respecting the Nova Scotia Steel Company, Limited.'

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—I take the earliest opportunity of expressing to the House my very deep regret that I had no notice of the meeting at which this report was agreed to, and had no expectation that the meeting would be held. In the absence of the chairman, I understood that the meeting would not be held. I make no charge against anyone; at the same time, although I am not a member of the Banking Committee, I had mentioned to several members that I had objections to this Bill. It is a very important measure, and I should have liked to be present. I do not rise for the purpose of making any charge against any one, but to express the opinion that this Bill ought to receive the attention of the members of the government, who are mainly, although not exclusively, responsible for the legislation in this chamber. I state this in view of a precedent which has occurred this session on the same subject, the subject of steel companies, in which the hon. Secretary of State denounced, in the strongest terms, these enactments for the amalgamation of two or more companies of this great vital interest, and this House acted, as the House of Commons had previously acted, upon the Bill which was the subject of the debate, by striking out a clause which enabled them to do what this Bill enables this company to do, and that, when it came up here, after consideration was unanimously struck out of the Bill. There is, therefore, a great question about the true policy of legislation at stake in this matter, but fortunately there will be an opportunity before the third reading to consider the matter. I mention it now, I hope in no offensive terms to any one, in order that the government may have an opportuuity of stating their policy upon the subject, whether it is really to give legislative sanction to what I consider dangerous combines, or what is their policy upon the subject, so far as this Bill is concerned, I do not desire to repeat myself, but will resume my seat expressing my very great regret that I was not present. It certainly was not my fault, for I knew nothing of the meeting. I had no notice of it, and no expectation that it was to be held. I do not mean to say that I was entitled to a courteous notice that a Bill, in regard to which I had expressed a desire to be heard, was to come before them, but, as it happens, I have neither the strength nor the inclination to initiate a debate upon this very vexed question of combines and competition. Every hon. gentleman must act upon his own responsibility, and I discharge mine when I call the serious attention of the government to this measure, and I trust before the third reading they will state what their policy is, and with that statement I shall be quite content.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—I have no intention of discussing the merits of the Bill. The committee have passed upon the measure and I have presented the report which they desired me to make, but I must correct a statement which my hon. friend has made, which will produce an erroneous impression upon this House. In the first place, it is perfectly well known to most members who take much interest in the business of the House that the Committee on Banking and Commerce meets on Tuesdays and Thursdays, whenever there is any business to be done, and the Railway Committee meets on Wednesdays and Fridays. This Bill had been on the Order paper of the Committee on Banking and Commerce for some little time. When I was leaving last week, not wishing to leave any work undone if there was work to be done, I was anxious to ascertain whether there would be any Bills before the committee on Thursday, if I remained here. I spoke to my hon. friend about the Bill and found from him that he was not at all anxious for that Bill to come up, or to be pressed, and therefore that removed any trouble on that score. I knew that that Bill would not come up on Thursday, but I told my hon. friend then that I should be back before the next meeting of the committee, when this Bill would come up as a matter of course, and therefore I supposed, if he followed the business of the House at all, he would be perfectly well aware that when the next meeting of that committee was held this Bill would be on the Order paper. Not only that, but when the committee met I sent a messenger twice to see if he could find the hon. gentleman from Amherst. Not knowing that he did not come up to the House in the morning, I sent a messenger to his room next to the post office, and he was not there. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition, will bear me out in that statement. My hon. friend could not be found and the committee decided to go on with the consideration of the Bill. That is all I have to say. It was certainly not from any want of consideration due to my hon. friend, who is the last man to whom I should be desirous of seeing any want of courtesy or consideration shown.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am rather pleased that this little difficulty has arisen, because it has given the House an opportunity to hear my hon. friend from Amherst once again in the Chamber, where he was so prominent a member for many years, and I think the little speech he has made goes to show that if he would take the trouble he would still be nearly as valuable a member of the House as he was in former years. I can assure the hon. gentleman that there was no desire on the part of the committee to show want of courtesy to him, and also that the objection which the hon. gentleman has taken to this measure was taken in the committee and was discussed there. Of course it might have been taken in a more effective manner if the hon. gentleman had been present, but the objection was taken and was discussed, and I really do not think that, under the circumstances, he would have continued to press his objections. The condition of things is this, that in Sydney there are at the present time two large undertakings, the Dominion Coal Company, and the Dominion Steel and Iron Company, both controlled to a very considerable extent by capitalists belonging to the United States. These two corporations will probably work harmoniously, because the shares in the two corporations are held largely by the same persons. The gentlemen who compose the Nova Scotia Steel Company, whose property is dealt with by the Bill which has just been reported, have large works at Ferrona in the county of Pictou. They are desirous of competing with the United States companies in Sydney, and in order to enable them to compete on even terms with the other companies, they have entered into an arrangement with the owners of what are known as the Old Sydney Mines, so that this company, when they begin their works at Sydney, will have the same advantage in the way of coal as the existing companies possess. This steel company, and the owners of the Old Sydney Mines, have entered into an arrangement to pool their interests, and are securing a charter, or have already secured a charter in England, and they propose to establish at North Sydney works which will compete with the works now conducted—chiefly by United States capitalists—in other portions of Cape Breton. I do not see why this House should interfere, particularly as the interests of the shareholders of the Nova Scotia Steel Company are carefully guarded. There is a provision made for paying them all off at par. It was shown that common stock of this steel company has not cost the present holders anything like par. They are to get par for it, and the whole thing is put under the control of the existing shareholders of this company, because the amalgamation cannot take place without the consent of two-thirds in value of the whole stock of the company. The General Mining Association own North Sydney mine, and their incorporation is in England. I presume the English authorities will look after that; so I do not think there is very much substantial foundation for the dread of my hon. friend, particularly as the Bill provides, as I say, that the shareholders of this steel company should be paid in full at par.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—I might say, in addition to the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Halifax, that the promoters of this Bill appeared before the committee this morning and stated that 80 per cent of the shareholders were in favour of the provisions of the Bill, and I think that is a pretty good endorsation of it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—While the principle stated by the hon. gentleman from Amherst is a sound one, that parliament does not, as a rule, authorize a company to amalgamate with any other company they may select, in this instance the company is named, so the objection is removed. I suppose there is no objection to the amalgamation with this particular company.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The proposal is to construct a new company out of two existing companies.

Hon. Mr. De BOUCHERVILLE—Is there anything in the Bill to prevent them from amalgamating with another company after this amalgamation? If it only applies to these two companies there is no objection.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There is a difficulty suggested by the Bill, but it is one for the companies to consider, and one which existed in our Loan Companies Bill last year, and which we have met by an amendment to the Act this year. In the Loan Companies Act of last year we provided for taking over, not only the assets, but the franchises of other companies, which were, for the most part, incorporated by the provinces. It is pretty clear that, while we could take over the assets, we could not take over the franchises, because the franchises had their origin with another parliament. In this case, I understand, the coal companies have their franchises from the parliament of Nova Scotia or the Imperial parliament.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD (C.B.) Both.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—This company might lease, sell, transfer and convey the whole, or part, of its property or business, but I do not see how it can convey its franchise. It could, of course, take over its property. It could take over its business and it would cease to be the business of this company; but to take over its franchise, its political powers, is something wholly different. For instance, you have two corporations, one originating in the province and another in this parliament. You agree by a Bill here that there should be a union. That union may extend to the property and assets of the companies, but they must be under the one charter or the other. The charter does not cease to exist with the company that is practically being wiped out. It still continues to exist. Here you propose to effect, not merely a union, so far as assets of the two companies are concerned, but so far as the franchises are concerned. If they have not a common origin, I do not see how that is to be done. This parliament can provide for the union of the two companies, and for the franchises of both being possessed by one of them, or by the new company that has taken the place of both, but I do not see how it is to do that with a franchise obtained from the province. But that is something which concerns only the parties who are interested in the business.

The Bill was ordered for third reading tomorrow.

ROYAL INSURANCE COMPANY'S BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN, from the Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported Bill (92) 'An Act to incorporate the Royal Marine Insurance Company,' with amendments. He said: There are only three amendments to this Bill. The first one is as to the capital stock. It was thought by the committee that the amount of capital stock was altogether too small for the large business which the company propose to carry on, and therefore they raised the amount from $100,000 to $150,000. Then they have increased the number of shares which a shareholder must hold to be a director from ten to twenty, and, seeing the amount which had to be paid before the company commenced the business of insurance, they altered that in proportion to the increased capital from $15,000 to $17,500. These are the only alterations.

The Bill was ordered for third reading tomorrow.

BRANCH RAILWAYS IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

MOTION.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL, (in the absence of Hon. Mr. Ferguson), moved:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before the Senate copies of all petitions, memorials or other communications received by the government since 1895, in regard to the construction of branch railways in Prince Edward Island.

The motion was agreed to.

THE P. O. BUILDING AT CHARLOTTETOWN.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL, (in the absence of Hon. Mr. Ferguson), moved:

1. Were tenders called for the plumbing work now being done to the post office building at Charlottetown?

2. If so, what tenders were received, and what was the amount of each tender?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The answers that have been put in my hands are as follow: 1. Yes. 2. T. A. Maclean, $1,925; Shaw & Beairsto, $2,180. As the lowest tender exceeded the amount voted some $2,000, neither tender was accepted.

Bill (34) 'An Act respecting the incorporation of Live Stock Record Associations.'—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

SEED GRAIN INDEBTEDNESS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (143) 'An Act to amend the Act respecting securities for seed grain indebtedness.'

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT, moved that the Bill be read the second time on Thursday next.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Would the hon. gentleman explain the Bill ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—At present, the security is held in addition to the land and it is releasing the bondsman. It is found quite unnecessary to continue to hold the bondsman.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But not releasing the lands ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, not the land.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Does it release everybody, or is it at the option of the minister ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It appears to be limited to sureties.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—But it is in the discretion of the minister.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It does not say so. It is the Governor in Council.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Is it imperative that all parties should be discharged ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I should say so. Whatever rules are applied to one should be applied to all. I will ascertain from the department what their view of it is. Of course it would be uniform.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This gives the Governor in Council power to discharge or release any or all of the sureties. Clause one reads :

> The Governor in Council may discharge from liability persons who are liable to the Crown as sureties upon bonds given to secure repayment for seed grain furnished by the Crown to persons in the North-west Territories.

It will be the prerogative of the Governor in Council to say whether or not they will release them, and consequently they can release some of the sureties and refuse to release others. That is generally done, or will be done, at the discretion of the Minister of the Interior. In fact, no action will be taken under this Bill except upon the recommendation of the Minister of the Interior, who can recommend whom he pleases ; but it does not follow that the Governor in Council will adopt the recommendation. As a rule, it is adopted. He may exercise favouritism or he may not.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is true of every administrative Act. You have to leave it to the discretion of the minister. It is some years since the advancing of seed grain commenced, and now the land itself is ample security, and those who became sureties may fairly be discharged.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It would facilitate the discussion of this subject if my hon. friend, when he again comes down with additional information upon the subject, would ascertain whether there is any dissimilarity with reference to the various guarantees given by the different sureties. If they are all placed upon an equality, if they are all in the same position, it seems to me that the statute should make it imperative that they should be released. It seems to me it is not a case for the exercise of the discretion of the minister or the Governor in Council.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Unless the security is insufficient.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If they are not all upon the same plane, then I can understand the necessity for exercising such a discretion as is outlined in the Bill. There is another phase of the subject, and that is that the government have always forced many sureties to pay the amount in default. Will those parties be indemnified, or will they have the same justice meted out to them as is proposed by this Bill to be meted out to the others ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will make the inquiries from the Department of the Interior.

The motion was agreed to.

EXPERIMENTAL FARM STATION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (135) 'An Act to amend the Experimental Farm Station Act.'

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. MILLS, moved that the Bill be read the second time to-morrow.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Will the hon. gentleman explain the character of the Bill ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I will read the Bill so that hon. gentlemen will understand it. It is as follows:

Sections 5 and 6 of the Experimental Farm Station Act, chapter 57 of the Revised Statutes, are hereby repealed, and the following substituted therefor:

5. The said farm stations shall be under the direction and control of the minister, subject to such regulations as are made by the Governor in Council.

2. The Governor in Council may appoint, and fix the remuneration of, a director and such chief officers as are necessary for each farm station.

3. The minister may employ, and fix the remuneration of, such other officers and employees as are necessary for each farm station.

4. Such remuneration, and all expenses incurred in carrying this Act into effect, shall be paid out of such moneys as are provided by parliament for that purpose.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Can the hon. gentleman inform the House what was the character of the provisions under the old Act which this will amend? How were the directors appointed, and how were they paid under the old Act?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I have not the Act here, but will give the explanation to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

VOTE OF RESIDENTS IN NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to invite the attention of the Minister of Justice to a matter which requires an amendment. There is an amendment here to the Franchise Act, but that does not affect us in the North-west Territories. We have manhood suffrage there, and have no property qualifications for electors. A man must be a resident of the Territories for twelve months preceding the date of the issuing of the writ, and must be a resident of the particular district in which he is voting for three months immediately preceding the date of the writ. A great number of our people come down to Ontario and the Eastern provinces in the winter time. The Canadian Pacific Railway issue excursion tickets, which enable farmers to come down East for a three months' visit. Supposing an election comes on within a short time after that, as was the case in 1896, these farmers cannot take the oath. I went up to vote, and a gentleman challenged me and said I could not take the oath and vote. The returning officer put the bribing oath to me instead of the qualification oath. I was sharp enough to detect the difference and was able to take that oath, but I could not have taken the other oath, which was as follows:

I, W. D. Perley, do hereby state that I am a male British subject by birth and naturalization, that I am not an unenfranchised Indian, that I am of the full age of twenty-one years, that I have resided in the North-west Territories for at least twelve months, and in this electoral district for at least three months immediately preceding the present time, that I am a resident of this polling division, and that I have not voted at this election either at this or any other polling place.

A great many persons in the North-west, as well as other parts of Canada, object to taking oaths in any case, particularly at elections, no matter how well qualified they may be. They say that if they cannot vote without taking an oath, they will not vote at all. Take the case of a farmer who has resided in the country fifteen years. I have been there since 1883, and if this oath was put to me, that I have been a resident for three months immediately preceding the date of the issue of the writ, perhaps I could take it, but a great many men would refuse to take that oath. They would not care to do it. If they had put the proper oath to me, I could not have taken it, or would not have taken it, because people might have said to my family 'Your father took a false oath and said he was up here when he was down in Ottawa., I think the oath should be amended so as to remove any doubts. In December last the trains were loaded for a number of days with farmers coming to Ontario. They had a limited ticket for three months, and then they returned. An election comes on and I see a man who is going to vote against me as I think, and I say 'Swear that man.' He has to swear that he was in the electoral district for at least three months immediately preceding the date of the issue of the writ, and the man will not take the oath. I think the Minister of Justice should see that the law is amended so that those people who visit the Eastern provinces will be able to vote when we have an election this summer, as we may have. There are many men who will not take that oath if they are required to do it. I call the attention of the hon. Minister of Justice to these facts in order that the oath may be altered so that one man cannot say to another that he has taken a false oath.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The oath is clear as it is. A man being out of the Territories for three months, or six months, if his domicile is in the Territories, does not cease to be a resident of the Territories because he has been away. My hon. friend may be five months in Ottawa, but he is still a resident of the Territories, and if he were describing himself in any conveyance, or document, he would describe himself as a resident of the Territories, not as a resident of Ottawa, simply because he happened to be here for three or four months. It is the place where he has his residence, whether he is present at that place constantly or not. He is entitled to vote at that place and entitled to take that oath even though he be away twelve months in Europe.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—It is where a man's domicile is.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Until he acquires a new domicile, he must be a resident of that place, but if a man has no home, if he is a labourer, or a man who is in the employ of another, and he ceases to have employment and goes elsewhere, his residence accompanies him. He resides where he happened to be for the time being. Practically, he is a nomad and will be counted in law as a resident of the place where he is for the time being. But that does not apply to a man who has a real home in any section of the country.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—It says 'Three months immediately preceding.' That will prevent a great many people from putting the same interpretation on it that my hon. friend does. Besides, I may say that people in the Northwest have been largely trained to regard residence as being right on the spot. Now, for instance, I know of my own knowledge several men who have made application to get their patents. They have resided six months and some even three years on their land. I know lots of cases where a man has gone ten miles away to work for his neighbour, and come back to his home and family on his place. Mr. Morgan, in my district was living on his land, and his team and sons were working it, and he could not get his patent because he went away a few miles to work for another man. The people are trained to believe that you have to be on the land in order to count residence. This oath is worded very strongly. If you put some other wording to take away this meaning, it will be all right. For the benefit of a man who is not willing to take the oath on trivial matters, the Act should be made plain so that any man could conscientiously take the oath. When you say 'the three months immediately preceding' this time, it is too definite.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I should mention what my hon. friend has stated to the Solicitor General in the other House. My hon. friend will see this, that you do not want to make a change in the Bill that will put a man, who has no actual domicile in the territory, on the footing of a man who has been there and may be absent for two or three months.

DELAYED RETURNS.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I should like to inquire from the Secretary of State if he has any news from the Prime Minister about the document he was to search for. I am speaking of the Sorel and Drummond Railway.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I have not received any yet. They were to make a search for the paper. I gave the motion to the secretary of the Prime Minister with a request that he would look among his own private papers to see if there was anything of a public nature on the subject.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—And the secretary has done nothing yet?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He has not sent anything to me yet.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—While I am on my feet I should like to know, also, if there is anything about the petitions in the Gaspé Short Line question.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, I am having them copied and will bring them down in a few days.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—There is another item which should not be forgotten. The other day I made an inquiry, and the hon. gentleman told me that a paper had been laid before the Privy Council on the school question. Of course he did not know what was the nature of the paper, because it did not pass through his hands, but as it came to the Privy Council perhaps he might know.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know really what the hon. gentleman is referring to.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I asked the other day if any correspondence had taken place between the Manitoba government, the hierarchy, or any municipal institution or corporation whatsoever and the federal government relating to the school question, and the hon. minister told me first that there was none, and, subsequently, that he had cognizance of a paper that had been placed before the Privy Council.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There was a document sent to the Governor General, and there were some documents or papers or letters sent to Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Those I have found. There were none sent officially to the Secretary of State or to the Governor in Council. I am having those copied and will bring them down in a day or two.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to ask the Minister of Justice if he is preparing that return of the disallowance of provincial Acts.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I gave instructions to my deputy to have the return made up. I have not spoken to him lately on the subject.

THIRD READING.

Bill (T) 'An Act respecting Usury.'—(Mr. Dandurand.)

INSPECTION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the third reading of Bill (79) 'An Act to amend the General Inspection Act so as to provide a grade for flax seed.' He said: There seems to be an opinion in the minds of some hon. gentlemen that this Bill is a departure from a principle which is always recognized in passing Acts of parliament, but there are exceptions to that rule, and this is one of the exceptions that I think, is only proper to be made. I explained, when the Bill was before the House at a previous stage, that it could properly only be applied to Manitoba. In the general inspection Act we find there are special grains known as Manitoba grains. The fact is that the soil and climate of Manitoba differ very materially from soil and climate of other parts of this wide Dominion, and therefore the standards which are established for Manitoba would be altogether unsuited to the whole Dominion. Apart from that, the quantity of flax-seed grown outside of Manitoba and the North-west is very small. I am advised by Mr. Livingston that the whole quantity grown outside of Manitoba is only 75,000 bushels. The Bill was first asked for by the Dominion Oilcloth Company of Montreal. They are purchasers of the Manitoba flax seed, and they first brought the subject under the notice of the Department of Inland Revenue, which is charged with matters of that kind. Mr. Livingston, of Livingston Bros., the head of the firm, is a member of the House of Commons. The firm have an establishment in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—They did have. They have not now.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I was under the impression that it was being continued. At all events, I was led to believe that those were the only two large purchasers of flax seed. The standard required for the flax seed grown outside of Manitoba would be very different from the standard that could be laid down in Manitoba, just as the standard for Manitoba is different from the standard of wheat in other parts of Canada.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—What is the authority for that?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—For instance, there is Manitoba fife wheat. There is no fife wheat graded outside of Manitoba. Parliament has thought fit to grade that grain for Manitoba. There is just the same principle applied to flax. We recognize a departure from the general in defining standards for our grains. We recognize that this is a very wide country, extending four thousand miles from east to west, and therefore what would be a suitable standard for one part of the country would not be a suitable standard for another.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is one point on which I am anxious for information. This Bill says Manitoba flax seed No. 1 shall weigh not less than 53 pounds to the bushel. No. 2, not less than 50 pounds to the bushel. Can the hon. gentleman tell the House whether the flax seed of Ontario weighs the same as Manitoba flax seed or not?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am advised that it does not. I stated yesterday most emphatically that the flax seed grown in Manitoba was very superior in quality, and it would be manifestly unfair to require the grower in other parts of Canada to accept that standard. It is not grown in sufficient quantities to justify the grading outside of Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—How does the hon. gentleman know that ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I got the information from the officer of the department who is specially charged with the study of this question, and he informs me, on the authority of Mr. Livingston, that the whole quantity grown outside of Manitoba is about 75,000 bushels, and it is an inferior grain as compared with the flax seed of Manitoba. It would be manifestly unfair to force on the growers of flax seed outside of Manitoba standards that they did not desire. They sell it for what the purchasers choose to pay.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—How many pounds of flax seed constitute a bushel.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is fifty-three pounds under this Bill.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—In the Act generally ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This is the first time that flax seed has been introduced in the Act. It was never graded or recognized as one of our regular grains, for the reason that it was grown in comparatively small areas.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I thought a bushel of flax seed weighed 56 pounds.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Who asks for this inspection—the purchaser or consumer ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is asked for by both. The grain trade of Winnipeg and purchasers of the Manitoba grain outside of Winnipeg. Both parties want it graded in order that, in giving orders, they may know exactly what they are obtaining. I do not know that there is anything more to be said on the subject than to call attention to the fact that we recognize the same principle in grading wheat. We have the red fife wheat graded for Manitoba only. The soil and climate of Manitoba are peculiarly suited for the production of flax seed, and therefore it is only reasonable that the particular grain which is grown there to greater perfection than elsewhere, should have a standard. If it were grown widely outside of Manitoba, it might be desirable to establish a grade, but you might find it impossible to establish a grade that would be satisfactory. Under the circumstances, the House, I hope, will have no hesitation in passing the Bill in its present shape, because it would be inflicting a great injury on people who grow flax seed outside of Manitoba to reject it.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I cannot understand what is to prevent the grading of flax seed anywhere in the country where it is grown. I venture to say it is the consumer that wants this flax seed graded. The hon. gentleman speaks of Mr. Livingston as an authority. He may know a good deal about growing flax seed, but when he says that only 75,000 bushels of flax seed were produced last year in this country outside of Manitoba, I ask where does he get the information ? Flax seed is grown all over the province of Ontario. At one time there was a great deal more grown than there is now, and if the hon. gentleman will think for a moment he will see why. While cotton was dear, flax was used a great deal, but since cotton got cheap, there is not so much flax used. I cannot see why the government should make an exception in favour of Manitoba against the balance of this Dominion, and I cannot sanction anything of the kind while I am here as a representative of the people. I want equal justice to all and special favours to none. I therefore move

That this Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred to a Committee of the Whole with instructions to strike out the word 'Manitoba' and insert 'Canada' in lieu thereof.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not propose to argue the question, but simply to call attention to the reasoning of the hon. Secretary of State. In the first place, he tells us that if this amendment be adopted it will inflict great injury on the people of Ontario ? If there is no flax seed of any consequence grown in Ontario, how is the injury to arise? It is not a very difficult problem to solve. When we are told that it is not necessary to apply this to Ontario because there is no flax seed of any consequence grown there, how then can it be of any great injury? The hon. Secretary of State called our attention to the fact, in reply to the hon. gentleman from Halifax, that there might be a difficulty in determining the weight, and that the seed which is grown in Ontario is not of the same quality as flax seed grown in Manitoba, in weight. Supposing that to be true: apply the same reasoning to oats, and what is the result? We know that Prince Edward Island is pre-eminently fitted for raising a certain quality of oats. We know that if anything a better quality is produced in the North-west, heavier grain and a greater quantity to the acre than we can produce in Ontario or Quebec. I cannot speak of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, because I have no information on the subject. We know that you can get oats in Ontario that will not weight thirty pounds to the bushel. You can get oats in the North-west Territories and Prince Edward Island, that will far exceed the weight required under the law, to constitute a bushel of oats. If you measure a bushel of oats in the North-west Territories or Prince Edward Island, you will find it to go as high as thirty-six or forty pounds. You do not buy oats by measurement, but by weight, and the same principle will apply to flax seed.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend will see that the first grade for flax seed is fifty-three pounds, and the second grade fifty pounds.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understand that. It only makes a provision that does not exist in reference to oats. You may have a crop of oats one year, owing to drought and other conditions, that will not have the weight required by law to the bushel. Another year it will far exceed it. In the article of flax seed you recognize that principle, you sell it by weight, and if it be of an inferior quality you require more of it to make the necessary weight. My objection, as the House knows, to this kind of legislation is, that it is local in its application. If we establish a grade for Manitoba, it cannot do any possible injury to other sections of the country if the law is made applicable to the whole Dominion. If we in Ontario do not grow as good a quality as they do in Manitoba, we must make up the difference. I can see no logic or reason in the argument of the Secretary of State.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN.—I think the admission made by the Secretary of State, that this Bill has been asked for by the consumer, is an admission that goes to show that they want to get the benefit of it as introduced here, and that it is to the disadvantage of the farmers who may grow flax seed in Ontario. Grade one brings such a price; grade No. 2 brings a lower price, but the farmer in Ontario, who may grow flax seed, cannot have it graded at all. For that reason, he is at the mercy of the purchaser and must sell his flax seed at whatever price the purchaser may give him. This Bill ought to be amended so that no advantage can be taken of those who produce flax seed in Ontario and Quebec. As the hon. leader of the opposition has said, I cannot see why the Bill could not be amended so as to apply to the Dominion generally.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The argument advanced by the hon. leader of the opposition would go to show that, in his opinion, because a bushel of oats might weigh forty pounds in the west, and thirty-four in the east, so long as they are sold by weight, it does not make much difference. He ought to know that a bushel of flax seed weighing fifty-three pounds is worth more than fifty-three pounds of flax seed which weighs only fifty pounds per bushel.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—It is the same with wheat.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Yes. This Bill does not take away from the value of flax in Ontario, but simply facilitates the handling of flax seed. The dealer wants a grade to know what he is buying from the producer in Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—If an order is received in the province of Ontario for a thousand bushels of No. 1 flax seed, can that be filled?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—No, it could not be filled under this Bill. You could not get a thousand bushels of flax seed in Ontario when the flax is pulled green to secure a better quality of fibre, that would weigh fifty-three pounds to the bushel. Flax in Manitoba is grown exclusively for the seed. It is allowed to mature, and is only cut when it is ripe. In Ontario it is grown for the fibre as well as the seed, and as it produces a better fibre when it is pulled on the green side the seed does not fully mature. In Manitoba, the flax is ripened and harvested. The crop in Manitoba last year amounted to 275,000 bushels. The total crop of Ontario last year, on the authority of Mr. Livingston, who is in a position to know, only amounted to 75,000 bushels, against 275,000 bushels in Manitoba. The Bill does no injustice to the producer. It was suggested by the consumers in Ontario and Quebec for the purpose of enabling them to buy on grade. The standard bushel of flax seed is fifty-six pounds to the bushel. The fifty-three pounds mentioned in this Bill is only for the purpose of ascertaining the value of the flax by grading it. If the hon. gentleman's amendment should prevail, the government, who have charge of this Bill, might feel disposed to drop it altogether, because it would, in effect, force an inspection in the other provinces, outside of Manitoba, which would be altogether unsuited to the grain grown there, and which they had not asked for. The only reason why it is necessary to have an inspection of flax is the fact that probably no grain that is grown is marketed in as dirty a condition as flax. It is only by cleaning a small quantity, and ascertaining the quality in that way, that its value can be arrived at. This Bill does no injustice to the other provinces. As the Secretary of State has said, it is in line with standards in other Inspection Acts which have been passed, and which apply exclusively to the grain of Manitoba. The flax seed of Manitoba is of better quality than the flax seed of Ontario. It produces more oil. A bushel of Manitoba flax seed will produce a pound and a half more linseed oil than Ontario flax will. I daresay, if the farmers of Ontario paid as much attention to the growth of flax as the farmers of Manitoba do, they might produce as good a quality of seed. There is not sufficient moisture in Manitoba to rot the fibre, and consequently it is used exclusively for the seed. It is cut and harvested the same as an ordinary grain crop. Last year there was about seventy-five cars of flax seed inspected by the grain inspector, by mutual consent of the buyer and seller, for the purpose of facilitating trade in that particular quantity from Manitoba. There was no Act to guide the inspector, but the grain inspector at Fort William did inspect it and gave it a value, and his inspection was accepted by the buyer and seller, and the figures arrived at are set forth in this Bill, as the figures recommended for No. 1 flax by the inspector as the result of the inspection of seventy-five cars last season. It must be very nearly right. I hope that the House will not insist on making the proposed change, because it appears to me if they did, the government being responsible for the legislation, would be inclined to drop the Bill altogether, and in the interest of the people of Manitoba, not only the buyers and consumers, of flax seed, but also the producers, the Bill should pass. It is impossible for the farmer in Manitoba to sell his flax seed in the same way as the farmer of Ontario—that is, on samples, because the farmer in Ontario has opportunities to take a sample of his grain to the people who use it, and sell it on sample. In Manitoba it would be impossible to send down samples to the consumer of flax seed in the east, in sufficient time to be in a position to make shipments before the close of navigation, but having a grade, the purchasers will know exactly what they are buying and what it is worth. I hope this Chamber will not see fit to adopt the amendment.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Are there no oil mills in Manitoba?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Yes, there is one.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—They manufacture linseed oil from this seed?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Yes, but only a very small portion of the seed grown in Manitoba. This year there will be a much larger crop of flax seed than before, not only on account of the early spring, but on account of the rise in the price of flax seed. Flax seed is worth $1.50 a bushel, I understand.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—You get an inspection under this amendment.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The hon. gentleman is mistaken in his ideas. He is under the impression that he is doing something in the interest of the people of Ontario. But he is not. If the farmers of Ontario found their flax seed would have to be inspected, they would not have a bushel of first quality. It is better to let the Bill apply only to Manitoba, or, if the hon. gentleman wishes it, he can consult with those who understand the trade before applying it to his province, the same as the Act for the inspection of wheat, which was prepared by men who knew something about it. He ought to get his—

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I will do my duty without the hon. gentleman telling me what I ought to do.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—That ought to be done with flax seed as well as with wheat. A fair grade should be arrived at after a careful investigation.

Hon. Mr. BOLDUC—Supposing the law were made general, will the hon. gentleman tell me how it would affect Manitoba ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Not at all.

Hon. Mr. BOLDUC—Then there can be no harm in the amendment.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—I may be mistaken, but it seems to me that the argument of the hon. gentleman from Marquette (Hon. Mr. Watson) is more against Manitoba than in favour of it. What is the object of grading the grain ? It is to establish the relative value of all grain produced in the country. If any province outside of Manitoba has a chance to produce a superior kind of grain, should not that province have the advantage of it ? On the other hand, if Ontario, Quebec or any other province produce an inferior quality of grain, let them take their inferior rank, and let them do the best they can with it. I do not see how, in making it general, we can hurt Manitoba. If Manitoba produced superior flax seed, then the whole advantage would be in favour of Manitoba, and the trade itself would be in a better position to deal with it. The objection of the hon. gentleman from Manitoba is solely that he is afraid that the government will drop the Bill. I have more confidence in the government. I think they will try to do justice to Manitoba, and all the other provinces, and the government will not drop this Bill simply because we happen to be of opinion that the Bill would be a better one if the law was general ; but they will at least try to have it passed, and give it a trial and if experience shows it is impossible to work it out as it is proposed, then we might further amend it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman says that the proposed change will do Manitoba no harm. That is not the question. The question is, is it going to do Manitoba any good ? Does the hon. gentleman deny that the Bill, as it now stands, is not a proper Bill for Manitoba ?

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—No.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman cannot call that in question. It is all right, so far as Manitoba is concerned, and it is framed upon Manitoba information, and is suited to the climate and circumstances of Manitoba. It is not suitable to the climate and circumstances of the province of Ontario. If my hon. friend, when the Bill relating to the San Jose Scale was before us, had insisted that it should be extended to the Yukon Territory, and refused to support the Bill relating to diseased peach trees because it did not extend to the North-west Territories, and the Yukon, he would be adopting quite as rational a course as that which he is taking now with reference to this Bill. Would the hon. gentleman not have objected to it because the Yukon was not mentioned ? If the Yukon had been excepted from the Bill, would any wrong have been done to the public ? Let us see how this measure stands and upon what theory and information it is framed. The people of Manitoba last year produced about three hundred thousand bushels of flax seed. They were interested. They had a sufficient quantity of flax seed produced for the purpose of inducing them to look for a market. They gave information with regard to the flax seed. They point out what the difficulties sometimes are in the flax seed that is to be marketed and they give information as to the weight of the flax seed per bushel, and what the weight ought to be in order that that flax seed might be of the first grade and what the weight ought to be of the second grade. Have we that information with regard to any other portion of the Dominion ? Are the people of this Dominion in the province of Ontario, or Quebec, or the maritime provinces, sufficiently interested in finding a market for flax seed to come to the government or to any board of trade and give in formation as to the districts in which it was grown, and its weight per bushel, in order that a proper grade may be established for any other portion of the Dominion ? I say no such information has been given, and therefore the grades established in this Bill are suited to the climate and circumstances of Manitoba and the North-west Territories. They are not suited to the climate and circumstances of Ontario. My hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, says what matter does it make whether the flax seed in Ontario weighs fifty pounds to the bushel or less than that ? It makes all this difference, that if the flax seed in Ontario to the measured bushel weighs less than 50 pounds, it could not come under the first or the second grade. It could not be graded at all.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, it could.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I should judge that my hon. friend has not read the Bill. The Bill says that No. 1 Manitoba flax seed shall be mature, sound, dry and sweet, free from mustiness and containing not more than 10 per cent of damaged seed, and weighing not less than fifty-three pounds to the bushel. If it weighs less than that, it would not come under that class. No flax seed would come under that class, as the Bill stands, unless it weighs fifty-three pounds to the bushel. Then No. 2 Manitoba flax seed shall be mature, dry, sound, and sweet, free from mustiness and containing not more than 20 per cent of damaged seed, and weighing not less than 50 pounds to the bushel. Supposing Ontario flax seed weighs 48 pounds to the bushel—and if I remember well that is its ordinary weight—it could not be graded as first or second class.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Supposing it is sound, dry, sweet, free from mustiness and comes up to the standard in every respect except that it does not weigh fifty pounds, where would it be classed ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It could not be classed under this Bill. My hon. friend from Monck has proposed an amendment, to substitute Canada for Manitoba. Supposing we make the amendment, then if the flax seed in Manitoba weighs forty-eight pounds it is not in either of these classes. The hon. gentleman would require to make some further amendment to make it apply.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I will do that.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I do not possess the information to do it. I pointed out that in discussing this Bill there was no objection made to the Bill by any one of the friends of the hon. gentlemen who have supported this proposition. If it had been a matter of great consequence to Ontario, these gentlemen would have more information with regard to it. I do not say that there ought not to be a classification for Ontario. I do not think it would do much practical good, because it is not one of the cereals that is produced in the province to any extent, and put upon the market as an article of merchandise that is being sold. Nobody has felt sufficient interest in the matter to give the government information, or to give hon. gentlemen in this House or in the other House the information necessary to make a general Bill. We have that information in the case of Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Where did the hon. gentleman get his information ? He had none yesterday.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—We have the information and this Bill was based upon the information we possessed, and it was confined to Manitoba because our information related to Manitoba and not to any other province, and by the provision of the Bill it is stated that flax seed of the first class shall weigh fifty-three pounds, and flax seed of the second class fifty pounds, and Manitoba does not want a lower standard, because the quantity of oil produced from a bushel of flax seed that will weigh 53 pounds is more than will be yielded by that which will weigh 50 pounds, and the quantity of oil produced from flax seed weighing fifty pounds is more than would be produced from flax seed weighing forty-eight pounds. What is guarded against by this inspection ? In the first place, it is to see that the flax seed is not foul, to see that there is not a large percentage of inferior foul seed in the sample. Then there is the further provision which relates to the short season of Manitoba and to the moist climate in the autumn season, which we do not have in Ontario. Our seed may have merits of another sort, but that is due largely to the fine autumn we have here.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Not in the case of flax seed.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes. The next provision in the Bill reads :

All flax seed which is immature or musty, or which contains more than 20 per cent of damaged seed, and which is not too damp or unfit for temporary storage, shall be graded as 'rejected.'

That is the third grade. That is a defect that does not exist in the case of flax seed grown in Ontario. That is a defect which is an incident of the short season in Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—Is the flax seed in Ontario grown for the fibre or for the grain ? If people in Ontario grow for fibre, thy cannot get the same grain.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I may say to my hon. friend that they grow for the fibre. A great many farmers grow a small quantity for the grain and use it to mix with their oats to feed to the horses to keep them in better condition. Therefore, it is not an article of merchandise, and they do not care whether it is graded or not, and I apprehend it is the same in Quebec and the maritime provinces. When the time comes when there is any considerable quantity of flax seed grown in Ontario and Quebec, those who produce that seed, and those who purchase it from the producers, will have an interest in grading it, and that grade will have relation to the circumstances under which it was grown. But this provision has no suitable application to the flax seed that may be grown in Ontario or other portions of the Dominion, and therefore, I trust that hon. gentlemen will not undertake to support the amendment, or vote to amend the Bill in this particular. That amendment would, in a measure, destroy the Bill, because it would make it impossible to meet the wishes of the people of Manitoba without doing serious injury to the few parties who may produce seed for sale in the province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I consider the whole difficulty has arisen from the fact that the government did not take sufficient pains to ascertain the position of this matter in Ontario and Quebec and other provinces before they framed this Bill. It was their duty to make all these inquiries and to be in a position to state distinctly to the House the circumstances under which this Bill was framed, and why they did not include the other provinces in it. It appears to me that the Inland Revenue Department fritter away time in proposing Bills of all kinds and natures, and some of them very silly ones. They might have taken more trouble and found out the position of affairs and saved us the necessity of amending this Bill. It was their duty to do it. They should go to the people and find out the circumstances of the country in every particular, and it was their bounden duty to find out whether an inspection of flax seed was necessary or not.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend is assuming that responsibility, and he should have that information.

Hon. M. CLEMOW—No, I am merely giving my opinion. I am told I am debarred from expressing my opinion because the matter has received the sanction of the lower House, and I must simply say amen to it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Nobody said that.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—As long as I occupy a position in this Chamber, I want to have an opportunity to express my opinion. I was told yesterday that because the Bill had passed the House of Commons we had to assent to it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Who said that ?

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I understood the hon. Minister of Justice to say it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, he said that because it was a government measure and the opposition suggested a change, we were exhibiting partizanship.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I have been told time and again that because a measure received the assent of the government, as at present constituted, I was debarred from saying a word in opposition to it. I have my own opinion, if it is worth anything. As long as I am asked to give an opinion I will do it fairly and conscientiously. This is an important matter. A large combine of flax seed men will take place in the United States in a few days. A company is being incorporated with a capital of $8,000,000. This Bill, if applied to Ontario and the other provinces, will increase the standard of flax seed raised in these provinces. Is that not a desirable object to obtain? I think it is the duty of the government to ascertain everything which is in the interests of the country, and if it is going to promote the welfare of the country to have an inspection of flax seed, I think the government should grant it.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—It seems to me there is only one question before us. Everybody admits that an inspection is desirable. The government wants this inspection, which everybody admits is a good thing, to take place in the province of Manitoba only. Why not give the good thing to every other province? If the government think that flax seed cannot be grown in the province of Quebec, they are mistaken. People seem to think that it is only Ontario that can come in competition with Manitoba. I can remember the time when flax seed was grown in Quebec, but they used it only for the fibre. After a while the price was raised, and it sold for two dollars and two and a half. Subsequently it came down and lost its price, and finally was given up. Some people grow it at present, but not very many. The hon. gentleman from Manitoba has told us that flax seed sells for $1.50 a bushel. If that price were to hold on, we would have plenty of flax seed in Quebec. How can the government say that the flax seed in Quebec is not as good as the flax seed grown in Manitoba? How do they know that? If it is a good thing to have an inspection in Manitoba, why not give it to the other provinces as well?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Because we have not the information.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—If flax seed is grown in Ontario and Quebec, why should we be placed in a worse position than Manitoba? It is well known that people from the United States and England will be purchasers. If they find that there is only an inspection in one province, they will come to the conclusion that the grain grown in the other provinces is inferior to that grown in the province where there is an inspection. I do not see why the government should not make it applicable to the other provinces.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—In the Wheat Inspection Act we mention the different varieties in Manitoba, and the different varieties in Ontario. With regard to flax seed, we have not the information with respect to the other provinces, and the people produce so little that they have not interested themselves in getting a grade.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—Does the Act provide a different grade of wheat for Manitoba and Ontario? Is there any different grading for the same kind of wheat in the different provinces?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is a special grade of wheat for Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—And a special grade of oats for Prince Edward Island.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—I think it is a wrong principle to have a different grade of the same variety of grain for the different provinces.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—The Minister of Justice thinks it would be a grand thing for Manitoba to have this grading of flax seed. What harm will it do to have it applied to the other provinces, even if there is no flax seed to be inspected? It costs nothing. I do not credit one-tenth part of what I have been told about flax seed in Ontario not weighing what it does in Manitoba. I have not very much knowledge about flax seed, but what knowledge I have does not lead me to that conclusion. The hon. Minister of Justice tells us about the climate of Manitoba, the frost getting in and freezing a good deal of it. In Ontario we do not have very much frost, and flax will mature all right. We are told that we should pass this Bill in order to give an advantage to Manitoba, that the rest of the Dominion will not have. To-day the government have a lot of knowledge about flax seed, but they did not have so much yesterday. I do not know where they got it. They should have obtained the knowledge before they prepared the Bill. I know that the time of the Minister of Justice is fully occupied. I regret very much that his health has been impaired so that he has not been able to attend to this personally; but we are not to take his dictum when he says that because the House of Commons has passed this measure, we should pass it without question. He speaks of his friends in the House of Commons. I hope I have friends there on both sides of politics. I used to have, and I hope I still have. If we took the dictum of the House of Commons where would we be? If we had passed all the measures sent to us from that Chamber, Canada would be a poor country to-day.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—Hear, hear!

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—And I cannot see why they object to have this measure apply to the whole Dominion. I respect very much my hon. friend from Manitoba, but I am surprised that he wants to deny us what we are perfectly willing to give him. He talks about what they have, and I know what they have, and I am willing to extend this legislation to his province: but I cannot understand an hon. gentleman coming from Manitoba saying that they will not give Canada the same advantages that they have.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Because it does not suit Ontario.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—If the hon gentleman knows what suits Ontario better than I do, all right. But I know what the people of Ontario want, and I take it that the hon. gentleman knows what Manitoba wants, and I am willing to take his word, but he is not willing to take mine. This Bill is submitted to us before the government have given mature consideration to the subject, and they could not at first explain it. I venture to say I am as good an authority on flax seed as some of these gentlemen the government have been consulting. I am asking for the people of this country equal rights. I want no favours for Ontario, Quebec or any other province. I want them all treated alike. The representatives of Manitoba want this legislation, and they have the assurance to come here and say that the rest of the Dominion should not have the same advantage that they seek for themselves. I do not want to see anything of the kind.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD (C.B.)—What about the Territories?

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—My hon. friend opposite (Hon. Mr. Perley) will look after that. I suppose they grow flax seed in the Territories too. I do not know whether he is favourable to the balance of Canada having equal rights or not, but judging from his course last year, I think he is liberal enough to give others what he wants to give Manitoba.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I want to call the attention of the Minister of Justice to the fact that he was in error when he stated just now that there were different grades specially in Prince Edward Island for oats. I hold the statute in my hand, the grades No. 1, 2, and 3 of oats apply to the whole Dominion.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I was mistaken. I know when a Bill was before us a proposition was made by some members from Prince Edward Island, that No. 1 oats should be forty pounds.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—The Bill was amended in that direction, so this should be amended now.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman stated if the article did not come up to a certain standard it could not be graded at all.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No, I did not say that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If I understand the object of grading it is that the weight shall govern the quality. If a bushel should weigh thirty-four pounds, and it weighs only thirty-two, you make up the difference by adding two pounds. In the North-west, where the grain weighs forty pounds, you would not fill up the measure, but reduce it to the extent of six pounds. It would be just the same in flax seed.

Hon. Mr. POWER—What is the use of a bushel measure if you have to take six pounds out of it?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The law makes that provision.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman from Monck said he thought that enough had been said about this Bill. I agree with him. I sympathize with the hon. gentleman and the leader of the opposition in thinking that our legislation should not be local, but should extend to the whole country, and if we had in our possession the information necessary to frame a general Bill for the inspection of flax all over the country, I should be quite prepared to support the hon. gentleman's amendment; but I wish to direct the attention of my hon. friend to the fact that his amendment will not do what he wishes to accomplish. What he wishes to do is to provide for the inspection of Ontario flax seed. Now, Ontario flax seed, as I understand, does not weigh fifty-three pounds to the bushel.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—How does the hon. gentleman know that?

Hon. Mr. POWER—That has been stated on very good authority. The hon. gentleman is not in a position to say that the authority is not correct. He simply says he does not think so. I am surprised that the hon. gentleman should try to impose a law on Ontario which he does not know would suit the people of Ontario. I do not believe that Ontario flax seed weighs fifty-three pounds to the bushel. I very much doubt if it weighs fifty pounds, and if it does not weigh fifty pounds to the bushel, you place the Ontario farmer in the position that he cannot get his flax seed graded at all. I think it is a great misfortune that an hon. gentleman who wishes to be a friend of Ontario should propose an amendment which would place the Ontario farmer in a worse position than he occupies to-day? He would do better to move that the Bill be referred back to the committee for further consideration. Coming to the province of Nova Scotia, I complain of this proposed extension on a different ground. I have no doubt, although my knowledge of flax seed is not extensive, that first quality flax in Nova Scotia weighs at least fifty-five pounds to the bushel, and I do not wish to have the flax seed of my native province degraded. As we are not ready to give this Bill to the whole country, we might as well give those people in Manitoba what they want, and next year, when the hon. gentleman from Monck, and gentlemen from other provinces come back loaded with information, we can extend the measure to the whole Dominion if it is thought advisable to do so.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—The hon. gentleman from Halifax suggests that I had better do so and so. I usually take his advice, and I consult him very often. He says I should refer the Bill back to committee? When we get into committee, he can move any motion he likes. When the hon. gentleman undertakes to tell me that I am working against the interests of the farmers of Ontario, he forgets himself. I do not think I have shown that I worked against any interest that is for the welfare of this country. I am surprised not only that he says I am doing so now, but that he should advise me. I do not know very much about flax, and do not consider that I am to be monarch of all I survey like some people, but I have my own opinions, and I am not going to be advised by the senior member from Halifax as to what I should do about this Bill. I shall not shed any tears if the government carry their Bill, but I say it will be against the interests of this country. I am satisfied that I am standing up on behalf of the farmers of Canada. It is in the interests of Manitoba, as well as in the interest of everybody else, that we should have uniform legislation that applies to the whole country rather than have legislation of one kind for one part of the country, and a different legislation for other parts. I shall stand to my guns.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—The speech which was made by the hon. member from Manitoba showed a great knowledge of flax seed in general, and of the capability of his province to raise it, but I do not think it had any bearing on what is now before the House, that is, the amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman from Monck to extend the provisions of the Bill to all the other provinces. Flax seed, as the hon. member from DeBoucherville has said, was extensively cultivated in the province of Quebec, and the only thing that prevented its extensive cultivation from being continued was that for a time it did not pay. How do we know that flax may not again be raised extensively in Quebec? Nova Scotia when it was first settled, raised a great deal of flax. It raises very little now, but the production may be increased. The Minister said wait until that takes place. Do the government always wait until laws are required? I wish they did. They built an elevator at Halifax for which the city had to pay $50,000. Our city now is taxed more than it can stand—in fact, is almost ruined by civic taxation, yet two years ago the government got the city to vote $50,000 towards this elevator. I ask, what have they done with that elevator for the past two years ? Does any grain go down to it ? I think not. Why build an elevator before you have the grain ready ? I wish the hon. gentlemen had carried out the principle they lay down to-day when they undertook to build that elevator.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—On the general principle I agree with the hon. member from Monck, that the laws should be uniform in Canada, but in this particular case, before it is proven to me that flax seed grown in Ontario and New Brunswick can come up to the standard of fifty-three pounds to the bushel, I do not see that I would be justified in voting for the amendment. On principle, my hon. friend is right, but in its application in this case I shall have, with regret, to vote against the amendment, because I am not at all satisfied that we in the lower provinces can come up to that standard, and if we cannot do so, the law will be detrimental to us. My hon. friend who proposes the amendment is not very sure about Ontario himself. Therefore, while I have no advice to give to anybody, I believe we might in the meantime pass the Bill as it is, and see what investigation can be made, and if we find that the rest of the Dominion can produce flax seed that will grade as well as Manitoba flax seed, we can then make the law uniform. As it stands now, it does not discriminate against any province.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—How does the hon. gentleman know what the grade is until he tries it ?

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—This Bill applies to Manitoba only and does not discriminate against the other provinces. Therefore pending further knowledge of the matter, I shall vote against the amendment.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I think the argument of the Minister of Justice is a little weak with respect to the seasons in Manitoba. He says because of the shortness of our seasons the flax seed is better. I think the long season produces the best quality, and therefore Ontario should produce the best flax, because flax like buckwheat, requires but a short season. I would judge so from the fact that this Bill does not make any provision for frosted flax seed. I am sure the flax seed of Ontario, New Brunswick and the other provinces is quite up to the standard and quality of Manitoba flax seed. Manitoba seed may yield more oil ; if so, that is the only advantage in it. They would be more likely to have musty flax seed in Ontario than in the North-west, because our climate is drier. Ontario needs her flax seed graded the same as Manitoba does. I think the proper weight for a bushel of flax seed is fifty-six pounds. The hon. gentleman justifies the weight by saying they have to cut the flax on the green side. The Bill should apply to the whole of Canada and I cannot see how the eastern provinces can suffer in the least by it, for I believe they can produce as good flax seed as Manitoba. There is a disposition sometimes not to grade products in Ontario. Take the item of apples ; if they would apply the same inspection to the fruit that is sent west that they do to fruit that is sent across the ocean we woud get better value for our money. I cannot see why my hon. friend from Marquette is so opposed to having Ontario included in the provisions of this Bill. I bought some flax seed the other day and had to pay a high price for it. When I buy flax seed, I want to know what I am buying. If I send word to Ontario to buy oats, I know I get thirty-four pounds to the bushel. If I send for flax seed, I do not know what sort of trash I am getting, I cannot see, as a western man, any reason why Ontario should not have this legislation.

The Senate divided on the amendment which was lost on the following division.

INSPECTION OF FOREIGN GRAIN BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (142) 'An Act respecting the inspection of foreign grain.'

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Bill provides for the inspection, when required, of foreign grains. There is a considerable amount, particularly of corn, shipped through Montreal.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Will the hon. gentleman explain to the House why this Bill is asked for?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Because there is a considerable quantity of foreign grain going by Montreal, and the parties interested desire to have it go forward as inspected, and it is an advantage to us to have it known that it is foreign grain. It is only when the parties themselves require it, however, that it is inspected.

Hon. Mr. YEO, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

LAND GRANT TO MEMBERS OF THE MILITIA FORCE IN THE NORTH-WEST BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House on Bill (107) 'An Act to make further provision respecting Grants of Land to members of the Militia Force on Active Service in the North-west.'

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This applies exclusively to the volunteers who served in Manitoba during the late troubles?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend will see that this was, in 1885, enacted in precisely the same words that it is here, excepting the date that the Act was to operate, and it has been re-enacted at the various times mentioned in the margin in precisely the same words, and now is being enacted again. I have no doubt we may have to re-enact it further to enable them to complete their titles to their property.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understand it applies to those who were on active service, not to those who are on active service now.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, to those who were in active service during the rebellion of 1885.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And who have not yet obtained their scrip?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

Hon. Mr. POWER—After the statement made by the hon. Minister of Justice, that it is probable another Bill will be introduced for the purpose of extending this period of time, would it not be well to limit it to any one who may make the application before the day of judgment?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend will see that it is proper legislation.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

PROPORTIONATE REPRESENTATION OF SHAREHOLDERS BILL.

SECOND READING POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day being called.

Second reading (Bill S) An Act to secure proportionate representation of shareholders on boards of directors of corporations.—(Hon. Mr. Lougheed.)

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED said: I move that the Order of the Day be discharged and placed on the Order paper for Tuesday the 4th of June. I have to apologize for asking the indulgence of the House so frequently, but I have been in communication with parties in various states of the neighbouring Union where the system has been in force, and I should like to obtain information as to its operation there.

The motion was agreed to.

A PROPOSED ADJOURNMENT.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I should like to ask my hon. friend, the leader of the House, when the adjournment, of which notice has been given, will take place?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There is a notice that will appear on the paper to-morrow for an adjournment on Thursday, and I hope we will make such progress with the business before us that we will be enabled to adjourn then, perhaps for a little shorter time than is mentioned in the motion.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—I hope the matter will be left in the hands of the government. I am not going to give up my opinion when a government Bill is presented to us, and will vote against it if I think proper, but as to adjournments, I think the matter should be left to the government. If the hon. leader of the House says our adjournments will not interfere with the business of the House, then I shall vote for them, but I should like to know explicitly from him that our adjournment is not going to interfere with business.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I will say to my hon. friend that he, with many others, holds the government responsible for the legislation, while he would deny to us all power in the matter. But on the subject of adjournment, in which the government are in the hands of the House, he wishes to put it entirely at the disposal of the government.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—I may be charged with being captious, but I think the leader of the House knows, better than any one else, the business that will likely be brought before us and the time it will take, and therefore I will insist on leaving it entirely with him, and will insist also on my right to vote against any government measures of which I do not approve.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The Minister of Justice has drawn an altogether improper deduction from the remarks of the hon. junior member for Halifax. The government should know what business is coming before us better than any other member of this House, and I am quite prepared to accept the statement of the hon. leader of the House as to the adjournment. At the same time, I would not give up my own individual opinion as to what I consider right and wrong. If the business will not justify it, we should not have a long adjournment; and for my own part, I think the proposition in the notice is far too long a period. I think if we adjourn till the 28th, which is the Monday after the 24th, that there would be business here from the other House for us. But if the hon. minister thinks we will not have business to do then, we might as well adjourn till a later date. If we say Monday it will necessitate a large number of members leaving home on Sunday.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Wednesday would suit the members from maritime provinces better than Monday or Tuesday. We can discuss that matter when the time arrives. I hope that we may have some further business coming up from the House of Commons that we can dispose of before the adjournment. Of course, the House of Commons have the estimates to pass, which do not occupy very much time here, and so they necessarily require more time for the consideration of public measures than we do here, and the adjournment does not at all imply that there may not be important matters to be dealt with that will occupy the attention of the other House. I do not wish to keep this House in session, when members perhaps feel that they could make a better use of their time elsewhere, longer than is necessary, and I felt myself that the government measures should come up to this House early now, so that we might dispose of them, and then we would have but little to do at the end of the session, because there would not be a very great deal beyond the estimates, and three or four government measures, which I apprehend will not occupy a very great deal of time in this House. That we can consider better on Thursday, when we see what the state of public business is.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

AN ADJOURNMENT.

MOTION ALLOWED TO STAND.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (Windsor), moved:

That when the Senate adjourns to-morrow, it do stand adjourned until Monday, June 4, at three o'clock in the afternoon.

He said: I do not want the business of the country to be neglected, and I leave this motion entirely in the hands of the leader of the Senate. We have been here three months and a half, and I think, by the looks of things, we are going to be here two months more, and probably we could have the adjournment and return and finish the work in ample time.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—The hon. gentleman could not have read this morning's paper in which it is stated that the government are not going to allow the investigations into the Ontario election fraud to be proceeded with. That would have occupied some time and prolonged the session.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is premature to propose this motion at the present time. We certainly could not answer the hon. gentleman until to-morrow, and I think that we will not be able to adjourn before Friday. There are some officers for whose payment it is necessary to make provision, and I apprehend the Auditor General will not agree to make payments until after the appropriation is made, and that matter is coming up for discussion in the House of Commons to-day. I think it will be necessary to get fresh supplies to pay the officers of this House and to pass the appropriation before an adjournment can take place.

The motion was allowed to stand.

DELAYED RETURNS.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I should like to inquire from the hon. minister if he has any return to the address voted some time ago in relation to the Gaspé Short Line.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No, I have not. If the matter was in my own department, I could give a specific answer and let the hon. gentleman know when he might expect it, but the matter is in another department, and the pressure at the present time, on account of the number of returns and deputations and matters to be considered, has delayed the preparation of the return for which my hon. friend has moved. I will, at a very early day, make inquiries with a view of meeting my hon. friend's wishes. I am anxious that his wishes may be met.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I suppose we may expect that after the adjournment all those papers will laid on the Table.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—All I can say to my hon. friend is that I hope that may be the case.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I will renew my declaration that I will oppose the Bill taking any further step until those petitions are brought down. I should also like to inquire of the hon. Secretary of State, if he has laid his hand on a petition that was brought before the Privy Council on the School Question?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, I gave instructions about it. I do not do those things personally. I have not time.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Then there is a chance for us to expect that it will be brought down, if the hon. minister has laid his hand on it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, I hope it will be brought down before the adjournment.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—And the Prime Minister had in his possession, or might have had in his possession, petitions regarding the road from Sorel to Drummond.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, I will make inquiry about that.

NOVA SCOTIA STEEL COMPANY'S BILL.

THIRD READING POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day being called.

Third reading Bill (24) An Act respecting the Nova Scotia Steel Company (Limited).

Hon. Mr. MILLS said: I would ask my hon. friend not to press the third reading of this Bill to-day. I have no doubt that if the Bill is got through immediately after our meeting again, it will be sufficient for the hon. gentleman's purpose, and at the special request made by the hon. gentleman from Amherst (Mr. Dickey), I thought that I would like to look with some care into the matter, in order to satisfy his wishes.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—I have no personal objection to let it stand over, but the promoter in the other House urged me to press it through, because he wished to telegraph to parties in London.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It was stated before the committee that gentlemen are now in London, including the late member for the county of Halifax, making final arrangements with capitalists there to float the new company, and people in England are slow to go into large undertakings of that kind unless they are quite sure as to the legislation on this side, and I think that the minister must see that it may cause very serious inconvenience, perhaps cause the arrangements to go over altogether, if these gentlemen are obliged to wait three weeks until we meet here again.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I will say to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I was just going to say if the hon. minister would ask to have the Bill stand over until to-morrow, it would probably meet the purpose.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I shall try and look into it by to-morrow.

The Bill was ordered for third reading to-morrow.

THIRD READING.

Bill (92) 'An Act to incorporate the Royal Marine Insurance Company,' as amended, (Hon. Mr. Power, in the absence of Hon. Mr. Dandurand).

ONTARIO POWER COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW moved the second reading of Bill (121) 'An Act respecting the Ontario Power Company, of Niagara Falls.' He said: I suppose it will be necessary to give some reason why this Bill is introduced on this occasion. I have been innocently brought into the matter, I knew very little about it, but when I attended the Standing Orders Committee I found that the Bill was all right, and I consented to become its mover in this House. I know there is opposition from a gentleman for whom I have the greatest respect, and I shall bow with great pleasure to any motion he may make or any desire he may express in order that the Bill may receive proper consideration in this House. Perhaps the best way would be to let the Bill go to the committee to which I propose to refer it, and he can there make his objections. If he consents to that, I shall not go into particulars here.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Let us have the particulars.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I have here a statement of the whole case from its inception to the present time.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Dispense.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD (B.C.)—We can have that in the committee.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I want to hear it. If you put it in the Debates it will be information for the committee when they get the Bill before them.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I am in the hands of the House. The case is as follows:

Incorporated to develop power by using waters from Welland River discharging into Niagara River.

It is necessary that the canal for the discharge should pass through Queen Victoria Niagara Falls Park controlled by the government of Ontario through the park commissioners.

By contract with the park commissioners approved of by the Ontario government, dated April 7, 1892, the Canadian Power Company had the exclusive power for twenty years to use the said park for works to generate water power and discharge waters into the Niagara River through said park.

By Act of the parliament of Canada of last year the time to complete the Ontario Power Company's works so as to develop 15,000 horse-power was extended until 1902, but work could not be begun in said park without the consent of the park commissioners and the government of Ontario.

The park commissioners and the Ontario government had always refused permission to work in the park owing to the above twenty years' contract with the other company.

Until after the session of the Ontario legislature of 1899 the Ontario government and the park commissioners had no power to break that twenty years' contract, and give the right to work in the park to any other company.

By that Act the government was given that power.

Immediately thereafter the Ontario Power Company applied to be allowed to work in the park, and ever since negotiations have been going on to get a contract made with the park commissioners and the Ontario government.

The company cannot undertake to complete its works for 10,000 horse-power in less time than six years.

The company satisfied the Ontario government and the park commissioners of this fact and they gave that time by their contract.

As the company has only two years by the Act of 1899 the counsel for the Ontario government and the park commissioners advised that the company should apply to the parliament of Canada for a six years' extension as mentioned in the contract.

The company's hands were tied until it got permission from the park commissioners and the Ontario government to enter the park, and only on March 15, 1900, after many interviews and much information had been obtained, were the terms of an agreement arrived at between the park commissioners and the government and the Ontario Power Company.

One of the terms of that agreement is that the company must complete the development of 10,000 horse-power within six years from the date of the contract, besides doing other work.

Immediately thereafter notice was given of an application to this parliament for further time to complete the works.

Annexed hereto is a copy of a letter from the counsel for the park commissioners and the Ontario government, stating that they wish the Bill now before the Senate to pass.

The clauses as to commencement and completion of the work in the Ontario Power Company's contract with the Ontario government, dated April 11, 1900, are as follows:

31. The company undertake to begin the works hereby authorized within two years from the date of this agreement and to have proceeded so far with the said works on or before April 1, 1906, that they will have completed within the park water connections (that is to say: headrace, forebay, penstocks and tailrace) for the development of 25,000 horse-power, and have actually ready for use, supply and transmission 10,000 developed electrical pneumatic horse-power by said last mentioned day, and if not then completed, the Lieutenant-Governor in Council may declare this agreement, the liberties, licenses, powers and authorities so granted and every one of them to be forfeited and void, and thenceforth after such declaration the same shall cease and determine and be utterly void and of no effect whatever.

Provided always that unless the company has on or before the 10th day of July, 1902 completed works capable of delivering at least 15,000 horse-power, or unless the time for the completion of such works, limited by section 2 of chapter 105 Dominion Statutes of 1899, is duly extended by the parliament of Canada, the Lieutenant-Governor in Council may, on and after the 10th day of July, A.D. 1902, declare this agreement and the liberties, licenses, powers and authorities hereby granted, and every of them, to be forfeited and void, and thenceforth after such declaration the same shall cease and determine and be utterly void and of no effect whatever.

Provided always, that no extension of time by the parliament of Canada shall extend or affect the time for completion under this agreement beyond the 1st day of April, 1906.

Toronto, April 18, 1900.

The Honourable the Chairman,
Private Bills Committee,
House of Commons, Ottawa, Ont.

Re Ontario Power Company of Niagara Falls.

Sir,—Under instructions from the government of Ontario and as counsel for the commissioners, Queen Victoria Niagara Falls Park, acting in connection with the agreement between the park commissioners and the above company, I beg to say that an agreement dated April 11, 1900, between the above company and the park commissioners has been executed, and with the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council of Ontario.

One of the clauses of the agreement requires the company to have completed certain works within the park on or before April 1, 1906. As the time for the completion of their works, limited by section 2 of chapter 105 of the Dominion statutes of 1899, will expire on July 10, 1902, I suggested to the counsel for the company that it was necessary to obtain from the parliament of Canada an Act extending the time under this section for four years longer.

The government of Ontario and the commissioners authorize me to assure you and your committee that it is desirable that the Bill to extend the time for the completion of the works by the company should be passed.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) ÆMILIUS IRVING.

Those are the facts connected with this case, so far as I am advised, and I think, under all the circumstances, that their request is reasonable, and I see no reason why it should not be granted. However, the matter is in the hands of the House, and I shall have much pleasure in hearing the objection of the hon. gentleman from Monck, and if the House thinks proper to refuse the Bill, it will be thrown out and not allowed to go to committee. But if it is referred to the committee, they will inquire into all the circumstances and decide upon the question in a satisfactory manner.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—This is a very innocent little Bill, merely an extension of time. These gentlemen have had thirteen years already within which to complete this work. My hon. friend did not tell us whether they had made a start yet. We chartered this company in 1887. We extended the charter from time to time until to-day, and now they have three years from the 10th of July next.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Two.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I said two the other day, but I was mistaken: I should have said three. My hon. friend has been quoting here from an agreement with the Ontario government. The Ontario government is very much mixed up in this project. Why do not these gentlemen go to the Ontario government? I do not think they should come to this parliament for their charter. I know some of my hon. friends will talk about our constitutional power, but I stand here as a layman and I venture to assert that they should go to the local legislature of Ontario for legislation. The local government are mixed up with the undertaking and are the proper parties to give the company relief.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I do not understand the matter. The hon. gentleman says there is a charter in existence that this company obtained in 1887 from the Dominion parliament. What is the objection to their continuing to come to this parliament for a renewal of their charter? Why does the hon.

gentleman want them to go to the local legislature ?

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—They have an agreement with the province of Ontario. It is a local work. Why should they not get their legislation there ? These people have been getting money from men on the other side of the line. It has been a mine for them. I can trace back what they have received. They have obtained $110,000, and the amounts of two years I have not yet been able to get. I sent to headquarters and the information has not yet arrived. I asked the hon. gentleman from Rideau yesterday privately, if he would postpone the second reading of the Bill, to see if I could not get that information. He kindly promised to do so, and from the way he speaks to-day, I think he would be willing to postpone it still further. I do not want to take the company short, but what have they done ? These people have had a charter for thirteen years with three years still to run, making sixteen years, and they have done nothing. When this Bill first came to the House it was an orphan. The company had not even petitioned the Senate to pass it. They treated the Senate with contempt, and the other day, in the kindness of my heart, I thought I was doing good to some one by advancing the Bill a stage, and I moved that it should be read on a certain day. After I had taken charge of it, I wanted to see what it was, and I found out that it was not legitimate. If it is a proper Bill why smuggle it in the House like this ? Why should they travel all the way to Nova Scotia to entrust this Bill to a friend in Yarmouth. It does not look well. That was the first incident that aroused my suspicions about it. I do not want the Senate to accept my statement, but I want them to look into the matter themselves. I know the hon. Minister of Justice will contend that this is the proper place to come for this legislation, but I do not think so. Hon. gentlemen will remember the Cataract Power Company Bill. I took an active part against that Bill, and succeeded in defeating it, and why ? Because I thought they were destroying the Welland Canal. They were taking ten thousand cubic feet of water out of the Welland Canal, and then, when they did not get the power here what did they do ? They got it from the local legislation. What is there to hinder these people to go to local legislation if they cannot complete their work within the remaining three years ? There is something mysterious about this Bill which I do not understand. I have searched the sessional papers of the province of Ontario as far as I could, and it is very hard to get them, because there is not an Auditor General in Ontario. If we have an Auditor General, we have no Auditor General's report ? I see that in 1893, the government of Ontario got $35,000, from the people across the river.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—For what ?

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—To not allow that work to go on, and they kept doing that until it got so hot for them in Ontario that they had to stop. Now they want to come here and get us to help them out of the scrape. I could not get any figures for 1894, and that is why I want the hon. gentleman to postpone the Bill. I have no figures for 1894-5. In 1896, they got $25,000, in 1897, $25,000, in 1898, 25,000, making in all $110,000. The Ontario government got all that from United States people across the river, besides the payments in two years that I cannot trace, for keeping back this improvement. But they could not delay the work any longer. The people were up in arms against it; but they still want to get more money out of it. As far as I am concerned, there is no man in this country to-day who is more desirous of having the power used for electric purposes than I am. But why come here at all. Why not go to the local legislature ? I know very little, but what I do know I know, and I am perfectly satisfied to follow precedent. We ought to defeat this Bill and send it to the local legislature, particularly when they have three years from the 10th of next July, to go on with their work, and they have had thirteen years already, and they have not stuck a spade in the ground yet. It is trifling with parliament. They do not even send in a petition, and some of them have the assurance to say it is not necessary. Their solicitor says it is not necessary to do so, because the Bill has passed the House of Commons. Are we to accept what the House of Commons may do ?

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—There was a petition to the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—We know there was, but there has been none sent here, and that is why the Bill is an orphan here. As far as I am concerned, I would prefer to have a day or two before the second reading of the Bill. I should not move the six months' hoist if the hon. gentleman will postpone the second reading until after the adjournment. Nobody will be hurt by it, for this reason, the company has three years from the 10th of July, to do this work, and if we refuse to give them this Bill, they have the local government of Ontario to fall back on, and the local legislature ought to deal with it.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—The committee will have an opportunity to hear all evidence. It could not come before the committee untill after the adjournment.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Postpone it until after the adjournment.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I am in the hands of the House.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This is a case where the question can be better fought out in the committee than in the House. The strongest point made against the second reading of the Bill is that the charter has been in existence for thirteen years, but the paper which the hon. gentleman from Rideau division read, on moving the second reading, shows that it was only the other day that the road was made open to this company to do the work—that another company had a charter to do the work, and the Ontario government would not allow this company to proceed until after the other charter had expired.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Who gave the other charter ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is not a matter of any consequence. We are dealing with the conduct of this company. They are not to be blamed for not going on with the work when they were prevented from doing so by the Ontario government. I am surprised that a gentleman so fair-minded generally as the hon. gentleman from Monck, should attribute blame to this company for not going on when they could not do so, because their work was stopped by the existence of the other company. Now, the other company is out of the way, and this company have made a contract with the Niagara Falls Park Commission and are ready to go on, and it seems essential, in order to complete this contract, that they should have the time they ask for. The details of the Bill can be better fought out in the committee than here, and as the hon. gentleman from Rideau does not intend that the committee should consider it until after the adjournment, I think the views of the hon. gentleman from Monck are met.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—When my hon. friend says I am fair-minded, I would be very sorry indeed if I was not as fair-minded as he is. I have already stated that I am not going to divide the House on the second reading. I appeal to the generosity of the hon. gentleman from Rideau to postpone the Bill, and I stand by that. If he insists that the Bill should be read the second time now, I say amen ; but I would prefer him to put it off until we can get more information.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

SECOND READING.

Bill (102) 'An Act to confer on the Commissioner of Patents certain powers for relief of James Milne.'—(Hon. Mr. Loughreed.)

FROST & WOOD CO.'S RELIEF BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. POWER moved the second reading of Bill (113) 'An Act to confer on the Commissioner of Patents certain powers for the relief of the Frost & Wood Company, Limited.' He said : This is a Bill somewhat similar to the one that has just had its second reading. Under the patent law an inventor has an exclusive right in his invention for eighteen years, but in this particular case the fee was paid only for the first six years, and then the patentee had the right to extend for an additional twelve years by paying the fee. The patent was originally owned by some person in the United States, and was purchased by the Canadian concern whose names are mentioned in the Bill. The expiration of the first six years was not noticed by the Canadian purchasers. They spent a good deal of money in erecting works and machinery for the purpose of manufacturing the patented article, a kind of harrow, I believe, and they discovered that the six years had expired. Since that discovery they made application to the patent office and offered to pay the fee for the additional twelve years. The officer told them that he was not in a position to accept the money, unless the patent was extended by Act of parliament. The object of this Bill is simply to put the company in the same position they would have been in if they had paid the money at the proper time, saving the rights acquired by any person.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does not the Bill go further ? In the second clause it guarantees any right that may have been acquired 'by assignment, user, manufacture or otherwise any interest or right in respect of such improvements or invention.' If I understand the words 'user' and 'manufacture,' they would apply to some firms that have had a privilege from the patentee to continue the manufacture of this article by paying to him a royalty. The patent having expired a few days before the patentee applied for the renewal, would leave that manufacturer, who formerly paid a royalty to the owner of the patent, the right to continue it. If that be the case, we would deprive the patentee of the rights which the law is supposed to give him as the owner of the invention. I call the attention of the House to it, so that when the Bill goes to committee it may be considered. In the Bill which has just passed its second reading, the wording of the clause is not, I understand, the same as it is in this Bill. It simply grants the request of the patentee who is asking for the renewal, and reserves the rights of those to whom the patent may have been assigned, either partially or whole. The House will see the effect of this if the Bill becomes law. I am simply calling attention to the wording of this clause and the effect which it may have in case it is not amended in committee.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am unable to see any difference between the language used in the Bill before the House and the language used in the Bill which has just been passed. They both include 'assignment, user, manufacture or otherwise.' The wording is exactly the same, and that provision is inserted in all Bills of this kind, because it would be very unfair that any person who had lawfully and properly begun to use the invention, when the right of the patentee was in abeyance, should be interfered with afterwards. It would simply be making him suffer for the negligence of the patentee. A provision of the kind is inserted in all these Acts, and I think very properly.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The matter may be discussed in committee better. In the one Bill there was no right given by royalty or otherwise to continue the manufacture, and the party claiming the extension of the patent, in the one case, applied before the expiration of his patent. In this case, as I am informed, through neglect, the patent had ceased to have force and effect for a few days before the attention of the patentee was called to it, and the party who was manufacturing the article, paying a royalty, ceased to do so the moment the patent expired, and not until he had called the attention of the owner of the patent to the fact that it had expired, which the patentee did not know.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—In clause 2 the hon. gentleman will see that there is protection to the parties who hold any right by assignment or had acquired it by user or manufacture.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Or otherwise.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I do not know just in what other way it could be acquired, but, at all events, if there is any other way than the three mentioned it will be protected by this. For instance, when a patent is assigned to a man and he acquires a right by that assignment, that right, by the revival of this, is not taken away, and I do not see that there would be any continuous right if the assignment, after the period for which the patent was issued, had expired. If it had expired and the party continued to manufacture the article, my impression is that his right to manufacture would be a matter of use or of manufacture. If he had not any assignment and begun his manufacture, then he would have that, because there was no impediment in his way, and this clause, as it stands, I take it, protects him, no matter how he acquired the right to manufacture in the first instance because there was no right standing in his way, or because he obtained an assignment he will continue to have the right notwithstanding the revival of the patent under this Bill, and that is all the interest there is to protect. Of course, after this Bill is passed no one could acquire by manufacture or user a right to manufacture, because the right is absolutely vested in the party who has obtained its revival, except as against those who had a right by assignment to use or manufacture before the revival, and I think these three parties, or users, are protected by this Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the man is manufacturing under the royalty which he pays to the owner of the patent, would he have the right to continue the manufacture of articles without paying the royalty? I infer, from the argument of the Minister of Justice, that he could continue the manufacture without paying the royalty after the passage of this Bill.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Without the payment of the royalty.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What I should like to know from the minister is this: would he have the right to continue, independent of the owner of the patent, by paying the royalty? If the patent lapses and the man commences to manufacture, he has the right to continue that unless he is prevented by law?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Would the case of the man who is manufacturing under circumstances I have indicated, that is paying the royalty, have the right to continue after this law passes, though the application for manufacture was not made until after the expiration of the patent?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—To my mind, it is clear that the moment the period for which the patent was issued, his duty of paying royalty to the original patentee would come to an end. He may continue, therefore, to manufacture without the payment of any royalty, the same as the manufacturer who has acquired his right by use. He does not stand in a different position. There would be no difference between him and any other person who had a right before the revival of the patent.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This patent appears to have expired on the 6th of June last. After that it was free to anybody to manufacture. If anybody did commence to manufacture and use, that person can still continue to manufacture, notwithstanding the passage of this Bill.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—For how long?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—For all time.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Unless you prevent him.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This does not interfere with him. It only interferes with those who are not within the exceptions.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

LIVE STOCK RECORD ASSOCIATIONS' BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (134) 'An Act respecting the incorporation of Live Stock Record Associations.' He said: This Bill authorizes the incorporation of any five persons to become a live stock record association. It is for the purpose of giving facilities for the formation of these associations over the whole Dominion. By filing an application in the Department of Agriculture and conforming to some ordinary regulations they become incorporated for any special breed—short-horns, Ayrshires or any other breed of live stock. There is a provision that if they do not go into operation, or if they cease acting for a year, the charter expires. It is simply for the purpose of giving facilities to persons to form an incorporation of the kind.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Is this for the whole province?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Anywhere in the Dominion; any five persons can associate themselves together and make application to the minister to be registered as an association for short horn cattle for the Dominion.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What particular cause has given rise for this Bill? Wherein should this particular industry be treated differently from others, thus dispensing with all the requisites of other corporations?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is a very important one, and it is not one of pecuniary benefit specially to the parties. It is to keep up particular breeds of animals, in which men are known to take particular interest. The whole public are interested in our having excellent breeds. They are improving Canada, and this is rather to stimulate associations of the kind in order to keep a proper record of high bred animals.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—If I understand the Bill properly, it is to be for a province. Agricultural associations, as a rule, have provincial exhibitions. I cannot understand how we can have an organization of that kind that will extend all over the Dominion.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It has nothing to do with county associations. It does not interfere with them.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I know that, but I thought it would be a provincial matter instead of a Dominion matter.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Take the case of a wealthy farmer residing in the North-west Territories. He writes to a friend in Ontario, and says: Will you go into an arrangement with me for the purpose of importing a certain stock from England.' And another man may write from Quebec, making the same request.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This is done now by some association, is it not ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Largely.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is a Canadian stock book which contains the pedigree of each animal. I understand that is done by the Provincial Agricultural Associations.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know how many corporations there are now, but there are certainly some corporations with reference to certain special breeds, but not of all the breeds. This is for the purpose of enabling those who are taking an interest in any particular breed, whether of cattle, sheep, hogs, or horses, to unite together, and keep up the record of that particular breed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is done now. I have in my library a stock-book of horses, cattle, sheep and swine, and if I want to trace the pedigree of any animal I look in these books for it. I understand this is simply to organize a company for the purpose of doing that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not aware that there is any regular organization for all breeds. There may be of some.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am endeavouring to elicit information. I am not opposed to the principle of the Bill, but the Bill seems to be entirely without machinery for raising sufficient funds for accomplishing the object in view. There are no provisions with reference to the subscription of stock or obtaining capital in any way except by membership fees.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Fees that they regulate by themselves.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It will be very difficult to carry out such an object as the Bill has in view by membership fees; that is to say, such an association can scarcely contemplate what its outlay during a current year might be, and how they will arrive at the amount to be raised, by simply fixing a membership fees. It seems to me there should be a greater elasticity about it than the payment of fees. If liabilities are contracted, there are no means, apparently, of collecting from the association. I notice that the members are simply held liable for the amount of their membership fee. It seems to me that this is establishing a precedent extremely dangerous, and liable to abuse. If they contract a liability, that liability should be placed upon some shoulders by which the creditor may be able to recover the amount due him.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—When the Bill goes to committee we can further discuss the details of it.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

EXPERIMENTAL FARM STATION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved the second reading of Bill (135) 'An Act to amend the Experimental Farms Station Act.'

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

The House resolved itself into committee of the whole on the Bill.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I may say to hon. gentlemen that this Bill repeals sections 5 and 6 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, Chapter 57, and substitutes the brief provisions contained in this Bill in place of those two sections. The sections in the original Act are very brief. Section 5 reads as follows:

The same farm station shall be under the control and direction of the minister, subject to such regulations as are from time to time made by the Governor in Council, and the Governor in Council may appoint a director, and such officers and employees as are necessary for each farm station.

Section 6 reads:

The Governor in Council may fix the rate of remuneration of the directors and officers and employees of each farm station, and such remuneration and all expenses incurred in carrying this Act into effect shall be paid out of such moneys as are provided by parliament for the purpose.

The Bill before us reads as follows:

1. Sections 5 and 6 of the Experimental Farm Station Act, chapter 57 of the Revised Statutes, are repealed and the following is substituted therefor:

5. The said farm stations shall be under the direction and control of the minister, subject to such regulations as are made by the Governor in Council.

2. The Governor in Council may appoint, and fix the remuneration of, a director and such chief officers as are necessary for each farm station.

3. The minister may employ, and fix the remuneration of, such other officers and employees as are necessary for each farm station.

4. Such remuneration, and all expenses incurred in carrying this Act into effect, shall be paid out of such moneys as are provided by parliament for that purpose.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is very little change. Perhaps the hon. gentleman could explain why the changes are made?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend will see that there are subordinate duties connected with these farm stations, and it is simply provided that the minister shall not be obliged to go to council with every detail. It is made an administrative act on the part of the department, instead of being compelled, as under the provisions of the existing law, to go to council. It is simply to facilitate the work of administration. Instead of the Governor in Council making the regulations, and also carrying them out, the minister carries them out.

Hon. Mr. MILLS.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The regulations must be adopted by the Governor in Council. Then the administration of the Act devolves upon the minister under regulations. The change is in the third clause, which reads:

The minister may employ and fix the remuneration of such other officers and employees as are necessary for each farm station.

That gives him the administrative power of making an appointment and fixing a remuneration without going to the Governor in Council. The fourth provision is the corollary of the other. The salary must be paid out of the money voted. It is a question of policy altogether as to whether the minister should have the individual power of making these payments without consultation with the Governor in Council. There are many reasons why this sytem should be adopted. There are reasons which I could give why they should not be adopted, but it is quite unnecessary to do so now. It is a question that occupied the attention of the government very many times in the period during which I had anything to do with it. It is a power that, if properly exercised, should, I think, be in the hands of the minister. It is a power that may be—and I have known it to be—fearfully abused. However, the minister must take that responsibility, and be held responsible to parliament for any abuse of that power.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

The Bill was then read the third time, and passed under a suspension of the rules.

MANITOULIN AND NORTH SHORE RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. WATSON moved the second reading of Bill (109) 'An Act to incorporate the Manitoulin and North Shore Railway Company.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Will the hon. gentleman explain where this road is to be built and its purpose?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I may say to the hon. gentleman that I know very little about it. The Bill comes from the House of Commons, and I understand any necessary explanations will be made in the committee.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Is this the Bill Mr. Clergue is interested in, from Sault Ste. Marie ?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—No, it is not. I was in the Commons when this Bill came before them, and I may inform the House that the road starts from Manitoulin Island, and the intention is to build it as far as Sudbury, in order to allow the ore to come to the water front, and to develop that part of the country. Manitoulin Islands have been clamouring for a number of years for railways which would bring them in contact with civilization. For a number of months they cannot cross over to the mainland and they hope by the construction of this railway to see their fertile lands settled to a considerable extent Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Do they propose to bridge the portion of the Georgian Bay at Little Current ?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Yes.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

THE POST OFFICE AT MONTMAGNY.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired :

1. What part of the Montmagny post office is rented, and on what flat are the rooms that are leased?
2. What is the amount of the rental?
3. What are the names of the parties who have leased those rooms, and how much each of them do pay?
4. Are there any other parts of the Montmagny post office which are occupied by parties who pay nothing for such occupation?
5. Who are such parties, and what rooms do they occupy?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I have received the following answer to the hon. gentleman's question : The following rooms are rented—viz. : Ground floor. One room to 'La Banque Nationale.' Rent, $60.00 per annum. One room to Council of St. Thomas Parish. Rent, $30.00 per annum. First floor. One room to Catholic Order of Foresters. Rent, $30.00 per annum. There is also on this floor a large room which is rented, from time to time, as a concert hall. Two rooms on ground floor are occupied, free of charge, by the Municipal Corporation of Montmagny one as the Municipal Council Hall, and the other for housing the fire apparatus of the town. As per arrangement contained in Order in Council dated April 14, 1898, the Corporation of the Town of Montmagny retained the right to occupy two rooms in the building, as above stated, in consideration of a free transfer of lot on which the building is situated.

BRITISH AMERICAN PULP AND PAPER COMPANY'S BILL.

AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY moved concurrence in on Miscellaneous Private Bills, reported Bill (U) 'An Act to incorporate the British American Pulp and Paper Company' with amendments.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY, moved concurrence in the amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY moved the suspension of rule 70, so far as the same relates to this Bill.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I regret that I should be called upon to do anything that might cause the hon. gentleman from Stadacona any dissatisfaction, but I feel it my duty to object to the suspension of the rule in this case.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If the hon. gentleman objects, I shall withdraw the motion.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I was going to say why I objected. The committee have made improvements in the Bill, but this House should consider whether they should allow a company, incorporated for the purpose of conducting pulp manufacturing, to build railways in various portions of the province of Quebec, and it is in order to give hon. gentlemen an opportunity to consider that question that I take the objection.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—In answer to the objection made by the hon. gentleman, I call his attention to the fact that that power has been taken out of the Bill. They are now limited to a tramway to connect one mill with the other. They have no right to build an ordinary railway from one point to another. If that is the only objection the hon. gentleman has, he might drop it. However, the hon. gentleman has a right to object, and if he insists upon his objection, I shall move that the Bill be read the third time to-morrow.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This is one of the cases where necessity exists for an explanation of the character of a Bill when it is introduced by any member of the Senate. When the hon. gentleman moved the second reading of the Bill he proposed it should go to the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours. The Senate, having no information as to the full character of the Bill, said: No, we will send it to the Committee on Private Bills, it being a Bill simply to incorporate a pulp company, but when the committee considered the Bill this morning, they found there was a clause in the Bill giving very extraordinary powers for the construction of tramway lines to be worked by electric power. It went so far as to give power to this company to construct these roads from Chicoutimi to Montreal, through different parts of the province of Quebec. That was objected to. Then the hon. gentleman from Stadacona waived the right to go to Montreal, limiting the balance of the clause for the construction of railways in connection with their enterprise.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—One mill might be many miles from the other.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—To what extent that power would enable them to go, I am not prepared to say. That question was not discussed. The hon. gentleman from Stadacona probably could inform the House: but I merely rose to call attention to a request that I have individually made very often, when a member is introducing a Bill, that he should explain to the House the full powers asked for under the Bill. The hon. gentleman admitted, in the committee to-day, that in the notice asking for incorporation of this company nothing was said about the railway; consequently, there may be other railways which would be affected by the power given under the clause in the Pulp Mill Bill. These are deductions one may draw without knowing all the facts. Perhaps by to-morrow the hon. gentleman may be able to satisfy the Senate that there is no extraordinary power given by the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—When I introduced the Bill, as the hon. leader of the opposition has said, I proposed to refer it to the Committee on Railways, because last year that Bill was brought up in the last days of the session, and was referred to the Railway Committee, and therefore I took a similar course this year. It was not passed last year because the committee could not get a quorum. It came up again this year.

and I adopted the same course that was followed last year in referring it to the Railway Committee. In reply to the hon. leader of the opposition, I may say that I never admitted in committee what he says I admitted, that the public notices did not cover the Bill. It was not this Bill. It was another one.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I stand corrected.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I move that the Bill be read the third time to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

AN ADJOURNMENT.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN moved :

That when the Senate adjourns to-day, it do stand adjourned until Monday, the 4th of June, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

He said : The hon. leader of the House, promised to give an answer to-day whether we should adjourn or not.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I see at present no objection to adjourning to-day when the House adjourns, until Wednesday the 30th of May, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. We have been in session for a long time—since the first of February. The House of Commons, so far, has not been making very rapid progress, but for the remainder of the session they may get on very rapidly, and we have several Bills that require careful consideration. For instance, the measure relating to the elections, which is a somewhat long Bill, although there are not many new features in it ; the Bill relating to the Banking Act, which will occupy a good deal of time, and also a measure relating to the warehousing of the grain of Manitoba and the North-west Territories. All these Bills are pretty long, and will require considerable attention on the part of the Senate. Therefore, while I should be pleased to adjourn until the date mentioned by the hon. gentleman, I understand that it does not make very much difference to the maritime men whether we adjourn to May 30, or June 4 : if we adjourn only until the 4th of June they would be obliged to leave home nearly as early as if we adjourned until Wednesday the 30th of this month. However, I am not wedded to that particular day. Within that period we are in the hands of the House and our wish is to meet the expectation of hon. gentlemen.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—Gentlemen who go to the lower provinces could not very well get here on Monday, unless they left their homes on Saturday. I would say Wednesday the 6th of June—either that or the proposition of the Minister of Justice.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I might say, further, the reason I spoke about sitting longer than to-day was that I hoped that a Supply Bill would be presented to-morrow for our approval. Of that there is not any prospect now, unless we remain here until Monday. I have no doubt, if the payment of certain officers can be made without the formal sanction of this House before we meet again, as they are officers in the public service, that the proposed payment, with the approval of the Auditor General, will be sanctioned by the Senate. Although the proceeding is not strictly regular, it is, nevertheless, one which I presume they will approve of as a matter of course. If that statement is concurred in by the House, perhaps the Auditor will venture to carry out the wishes of the House without its being put in the form of an Act.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not think any possible objection would be taken. I have made some inquiry to-day of members of the House of Commons as to the probable length of the debate in the other Chamber, and from what I can learn, if we wait until that supplementary estimate comes down, we shall remain here until the 24th of May, and perhaps longer. There is no telling when the debate will end. Then, I learned, as the Minister of Justice has told us, that the appropriation for legislation—not for the ordinary civil service, but for carrying on legislation—had been exhausted, and that the sum asked for is to pay the officers of both Houses. If the Auditor General has qualms of conscience as to whether he would be justified in advancing the sum until the Senate had approved of the appropriation, I do not think the Senate would object, under the circumstances, to indemnify him if it should be necessary to do so, and therefore that need not stand in the way of an adjournment as proposed by the hon. gentleman opposite ; whether it should be to the 30th of May or the 4th of June is a matter for the House. I think the Auditor General may rest assured that any appropriation of that kind which comes up will be voted by the House without any difficulty.

Hon. Mr. BOLDUC—From the remarks made by the leader of the opposition, it seems to me we will be sitting here for a couple of months more. If the discussion going on at present in the House of Commons should last a couple of weeks, then July will see us here, and I would suggest instead of June 4 that it should be Wednesday the 6th of June.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—The question of adjournment was discussed in the Railway Committee this morning informally, and in anticipation of the action of the Senate, it was thought that the longest adjournment would be to the 5th of June, and it was decided that a Bill, which is engaging the attention of a good many people, would be taken up on the 6th. Notice has already been given to the parties to that effect, but I can change that notice.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I should like to bring to the notice of hon. gentlemen the fact that there is a divorce Bill which has been hung up for the necessary time.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The relief cannot be given until the Governor General sanctions the Bill.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I do not like to see those Bills treated as they have been. The people pay their money and, as we all know, it is an expensive business to get a divorce Bill, and their cases ought to be considered. I mention it, so that they will know, if any obstruction takes place owing to this adjournment, who are to blame for it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is not the fault of the Senate that this Bill has been delayed, but the fault of the applicants. They were late in their notice of application; consequently the Senate is in no way involved in the delay.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—That is true, but the Bill has been hung up for fourteen days. If there should be sufficient time to get the Bill through the House of Commons after we meet again, I have no objection.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL.

Hon. Mr. BOLDUC—I move that Wednesday, the 6th day of June be substituted for the 4th day of June in the motion.

The amendment was agreed to, and the motion as amended was adopted.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (151) 'An Act to amend the Act relating to Ocean Steamship Subsidies.'—(Hon. Mr. Mills.)

Bill (112) 'An Act to incorporate the Quebec and Lake Huron Railway Company.'—(Hon. Mr. Landry.)

QUEBEC SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.), from the Committee on Standing Orders and Private Bills, presented their 20th report recommending the suspension of rule 54 so far as it relates to the Bill (75) 'An Act to incorporate the Quebec Southern Railway Company.' He said: In regard to this Bill, no peitition for it was sent to the Senate. It was explained to us that by mistake the petition was sent to the House of Commons, and the Committee recommend that the rule be suspended and that the Bill be allowed to pass.

The report was adopted.

BRITISH-AMERICAN PULP AND PAPER COMPANY'S BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. POWER—At the request of the hon. gentleman from Stadacona (Hon. Mr. Landry) who has charge of this Bill, I wish to say that I withdraw my objection to the third reading.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I tender my thanks to the hon. gentleman, and I move that the Order of the Day fixing the third reading for to-morrow be reconsidered and that the Bill be now read the third time.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

NOVA SCOTIA STEEL COMPANY'S BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. McKAY moved the third reading of Bill (24) 'An Act respecting the Nova Scotia Steel Company.'

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Justice if the government has taken into consideration and is prepared to-day to give a decision with regard to this measure ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I have looked over the Bill with a good deal of care, and it does not seem to me to go further than some of our Bills which have been introduced here before, so far as the general principle or policy is concerned. Last year, in the general Bill for the union of loan companies, we gave powers similar to those conferred by this Bill. Whether the policy of uniting mining companies would be advantageous or not, I am not going to discuss at all. All I can say is that parliament has heretofore, on many occasions, permitted this: The only thing that I see in the Bill that seems to me questionable is a question of ultra vires that arises with reference to the proposed transfer of franchises, which, on a reconsideration of the General Loan Companies Act of last year, I came to the conclusion—and that view is supported by eminent lawyers—that we cannot transfer franchises that have been conferred by another legislative body.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That I think is very clear. The franchise conferred by the province is a distinct franchise from anything that can be conferred by us, and we cannot, under one charter, unite those two franchises and constitute a single company. The franchises will still be the franchise of the companies incorporated by the province, but you can authorize such an incorporation to transfer its property and business and rights, so far as assets are concerned, to another company incorporated by another body, but the company, in the abstract, as created by the Act of Incorporation, would remain, if it were a company incorporated by another legislative body. As I understand it, some of these companies have been called into existence by the local legislature. Their franchises are derived from the local legislature, and they cannot be transferred to a company created by the Dominion, unless the legislature that called into existence the company were to give power to the company to do an act of that sort. I think that all that could be done, without some special authority of that sort, would be to transfer the property and assets and business. That, I understand, is practically what will be done in this case, and I understand that it is a matter of great interest, that negotiations have been carried on, and there is a large amount of money ready to be invested, and that it was almost vital to the parties that this measure should not be further hindered or delayed, and under these circumstances I do not feel warranted in delaying the measure. All I do is to call the attention of the promoters of the Bill to the fact that if the union is to be effected between companies incorporated in England and the Dominion, or of companies incorporated in the provinces and the Dominion, that the franchises of the different corporations cannot be united under the jurisdiction of one company—that a Dominion company cannot have its franchise enlarged in that way.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—While I agree with the doctrine laid down by my hon. friend generally, with regard to the question of franchises, yet I think my hon. friend has taken too comprehensive a view of the construction that would be placed by, say, a court of law upon the Bill before us. It does not purport to say, or this Bill does not give it power to absorb the franchises granted by a local legislature, and, therefore, I think the canon of construction which would be applicable to this Bill would be that this parliament meant, or intended, that it would only acquire other franchises granted by the federal parliament and not by a local parliament. It seems to me that in the absence of any express provision as to its power to acquire local franchises, no other construction could be placed upon the Bill than that which I have indicated, that that it would be necessarily limited to that.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—Is there, or is there not, any objection on the part of the government to the Bill being carried ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No, the government does not make any objection.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—The House will recollect that, on the former occasion on which I had the honour to address it, I stated that it was a point of state policy, and that I should leave the matter entirely in the hands of the government who have assumed the responsibility and acted upon it, and as the government are not asking the House to reject the Bill, I shall certainly not feel myself warranted in taking any further action in the matter.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

SECURITIES FOR SEED GRAIN ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (143) 'An Act to amend the Act respecting securities for seed grain indebtedness.' He said: Last session an Act was passed authorizing the Minister of the Interior, when he was satisfied that the land which had been given as security for the advance of money to purchase seed grain was a sufficient protection to the Crown, to discharge the sureties. That was a permissive power, and it is proposed now by the Bill that the sureties in all cases shall be discharged, retaining only the land as a security for the original grant. I find, on looking over the records of the debt, that there has been a very considerable absence of any principle that has prevailed. I have a short summary in my hand with reference to dealing with the seed grain indebtedness. In 1886-7-8, advances of seed grain were made to settlers, the government taking bonds. They did not always take sureties. Sometimes they simply took the land as security. These transactions were carried on at Winnipeg and not at the head office. In 1894, advances of seed grain were again made to settlers, secured by liens and bonds, as was done in 1886. In many cases the sureties have left the country, and in other cases they were insolvent, and it is found that the fairer way will be to release the sureties in all cases, holding only the lands where the lands are held by the Crown, and in order to remove any question as to the discretion of the minister I propose, when the Bill goes to committee, to insert the word 'all' in the Bill, so that it will read in this way:

The Governor in Council may discharge from liability all persons who are liable to the Crown as sureties upon bonds given to secure payment for seed grain furnished by the Crown to persons in the North-west Territories.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Would it not be better to substitute the word 'shall for 'may'?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My hon. friend knows what the word 'may' in an Act means. The Crown never use any other word than 'may.' All persons will be on the same plane. The Bill consists of only four lines, and perhaps, by permission of the House, we might take the second and third readings to-day.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a second time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the Bill be read at length at the Table, and that the word 'all' be inserted in the Bill before the word 'liability.'

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I quite agree to the Bill as it now stands. I was proposing to offer an amendment, but after the explanation given by the hon. Secretary of State, I have nothing to say.

The Bill was then read at length at the Table.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My hon. colleague suggests that it would be more correct that the House should go into Committee of the Whole on the Bill.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—What is the great hurry?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is only four lines.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—We might as well leave it till we meet again.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Some importance is attached to the Bill, from the fact that persons cannot obtain their patents until they are relieved from this security.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Then, in that case, let us go on with the Bill.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Bill.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Has it been the practice of the department to refuse the issue of a patent to a settler who had become security for another settler, though his full time had expired which was necessary under the law to entitle him to a patent? I understood from the hon. gentleman behind me just now that that was one of the reasons why he was urging the passage of this Bill at once, so as to enable the sureties who had complied with the laws in every other respect to obtain their patents.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I questioned Mr. Rothwell, the solicitor of the department, and he tells me that the practice has not been uniform. They had not sufficient data to guide them. The records in Winnipeg had not been kept with care in former years. In many cases, the patents have been issued, and the sureties practically discharged, and it was thought proper to place them all on the same level.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER, from the committee, reported the Bill with an amendment, which was concurred in.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

TORONTO HOTEL COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL moved the second reading of Bill (114). 'An Act respecting the Toronto Hotel Company.' He said: I desire to give the reasons why, though it appears to be a private Bill for the incorporation of a hotel company, this Bill should be presented to this parliament. There are provisions in the Bill affecting loan companies and the banks. There are certain loan companies who have, as I am informed, made loans on portions of the property which this hotel company proposes to purchase, and also the banks have made advances on them. The Bill gives power to the loan companies and to the banks to continue their loans on the hotel property. Therefore, I propose to refer it to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, because it refers particularly to money matters and commerce.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It practically amends the charters of other companies, and authorizes the dealing with trust funds, a very important matter for the Banking and Commerce Committee to consider.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—The hon. leader of the opposition has told us that all private Bills introduced here should be explained at the second reading. I am not satisfied with his explanation of this Bill. Why does this Bill come here at all? It is a local matter altogether. It is a matter affecting Toronto. Why not get a charter there to carry on the business without coming to parliament?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It comes here because, as the hon. Minister of Justice has just stated, it interferes with the loaning powers of banks and loan companies acting under Dominion charters. If it were merely a local Bill, for the purpose of purchasing property and erecting a hotel in the city of Toronto, then there would be no necessity for coming to this parliament for a charter; but it interferes with the operations of banks and loan companies acting under Dominion charters.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—That explanation is satisfactory as far as it goes. I think it would be a bad thing for the people of Canada that these financial institutions should get power to build hotels. I do not think it is right that they should have that power. I do not happen to have much bank stock, but I know some who have, and I do not think it is right to give those banks power to invest the stockholders' money in hotel speculations. If we adopt the motion for the second reading of the Bill, we adopt the principle of it. Now, I protest strongly that this Bill should not come here at all. It is a matter altogether for the local legislature. The Bill provides:

> The Ontario Companies Act (chapter 191 Revised Statutes of Ontario) shall apply and relate to the said company as if the several provisions thereof were incorporated herein, excepting sections 9, 10, 12, 14, 15, 23, 24, 98, 99 and 101.

My hon. friend did not tell us what effect this has. I am sure I do not know, and before supporting the second reading of the Bill, we should know something about it. I do not intend to oppose the second reading, but I think we should have an explanation, according to the doctrine laid down by my hon. friend. I may have a Bill here some day myself. It may be an orphan, and my hon. friend may expect me to give all possible explanations about it. I wish to protest against the bankers of this country taking the money of the people and speculating with it in hotels. It is a principle which should not be allowed.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Although I am strong in my own faith, I agree with my hon. friend in being a strong protestant on this subject.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am not going to prolong the discussion. I was asked to move the second reading by my hon. friend from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Allan) who made this explanation to me. The clauses of the Act to which he refers, as I understand them, are to give additional power to the banks and to the loan companies to loan money, or to take security for loans of money, on this building which is to be erected. As far as the principle of the Bill is concerned, I am very much of the opinion of the hon. gentleman who has spoken, and I told one of the directors from Toronto, when he spoke to me a short time ago, that I had very grave doubts as to the propriety of allowing loan companies, who are handling the money of other people, to invest in hotel property. The reason I gave for it was, that some of the largest and most extensive hotels in the Dominion at the present time had been unprofitable for a great number of years, and if loan companies cannot obtain some return for the money they invest, the stockholders must necessarily suffer. So far as I understand the Bill now, I am very much inclined to the opinion of the hon. gentleman from Monck, and that is one reason why I shall ask the House, when the time comes, to refer it to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, which deals exclusively with banking and loan companies.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I agree entirely with the remarks of the hon. leader of the opposition. If we carry this principle further, almost every transaction would come under our jurisdiction. Banks give accommodation and get security. The banks have sufficient power now, under the Banking Act, to carry on the legitimate business of banking. I do not think they should go beyond it. This is purely and simply a local Bill, which should be dealt with by the legislature at Toronto. I strongly believe it will not be assented to by the Committee on Banking and Commerce.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

The Senate adjourned.

LAND TITLES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (139) 'An Act to amend the Land Titles Act, 1894.' He said: This Bill is of a somewhat technical character, and has been asked for by the lawyers in the North-west. It is amending and explaining various clauses of the Land Titles Act, fifty-four different sections. Probably the better way to proceed will be to give the explanation in committee. The first clause removes doubts which existed since the repeal of the Title's Act, in 1894, as to the proper proceedings for discharging mortgages and loans on land. The second clause provides that writs against land which have been registered in the district shall not bind the land for a longer term than two years, unless renewed from that date.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

LIVE STOCK RECORD ASSOCIATIONS INCORPORATION BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (134) 'An Act respecting the incorporation of Live Stock Record Association.'

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This Bill is asked for at the instance of the live stock associations, particularly that association having in view the improvement of high class live stock. It appears the pedigrees are not recognized in the United States where companies are incorporated under provincial register, and it is for the purpose of overcoming that difficulty. It does not interfere in any degree with the live stock associations that are already incorporated. It in no way disturbs or affects them. It simply gives to a Dominion association the right to associate as they please for the benefit of the individual and for no other purpose. It is a formal Bill, simply giving an opportunity for breeders to associate themselves under letters of association from the Minister of Agriculture.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The the object is, I suppose, to have an authorized stock-book ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—So that we can trace the pedigree of all cattle presented therein—a stock-book similar to that which exists in the United States and England?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, that is it. The United States will not recognize pedigrees unless they are verified by the association.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Have we not a Canada stock-book now ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think they are incorporated by the Dominion. I think they are incorporated under general laws in the province of Ontario. I do not think there is any special Act.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—Are these the same people that are in the other associations who are now applying for incorporation ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is open to any parties who are interested in live stock to form an association under this Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I intended to look at some two or three volumes of stook-books that I have at home, in which are recorded the pedigrees of cattle in Canada, but I must confess that I forgot to look at it to see how far this Bill would affect it, or whether it would establish an additional record of the stock for the whole Dominion. I do not know that any harm will come of it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is a permissive Bill for those who choose to take advantage of it. It does not affect any other corporation.

On clause 4,

Hon. Mr. WOOD—If I understand the hon. gentleman aright, clause 4 is not intended to interfere with any of the associations that are formed now.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It does not affect them.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—The associations now in existence are not under this Act, but if another association should be formed under this Act, would it not interfere with the existing one ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If, for instance, breeders of Ayrshire cattle all over the Dominion wished to associate themselves together as one body, they could incorporate under this Bill, and so with any other stock breeders. This Bill enables those who are interested in a particular breed of cattle to associate together for the purpose of keeping up the record of that particular breed.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I understand that, but the minister did not catch the point I was making. Take, for instance, the Ayrshire breed. I think there is an association now in existence of Ayrshire breeders, and a stock-book. I know there is a Shorthorn association, because I am connected with it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They would not want to come under this.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—The point I was making was this, that under this Bill there could be another association formed? The association in existence is not under this Bill. There could be only one under this measure. Where an association is already in existence, you authorize another one under this Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This is for the whole Dominion. It is asked for by those who want a Dominion association for the benefit of any particular breed.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Can you have more than one ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, not of that particular class of animals. It is limited to one.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—Will not the two clash, those in existence now and those to be formed under this Bill ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The object of this association, as I have explained, is that the breeders of each particular class of animals can form a Dominion Association if they like. It does not interfere with any existing associations, or any which may be formed in the future under provincial laws. It is entirely at the instance of special breeders that this has been asked for. It can do no harm to others.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—Probably of persons who could not get their cattle into existing stock registers. They will perhaps be able to run in animals that fault was found with and which could not be registered in other herd-books.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman from Westmoreland asks a pertinent question. I do not think the Secretary of State quite understood it. He says there is an association now of cattle breeders of Shorthorns, to which he himself belongs.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Dominion or local ?

Hon. Mr. WOOD—Dominion.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They would not come under this.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Suppose parties in New Brunswick form another association under this Bill, with books that are printed giving a record of the particular class of cattle which the incorporation gives them power to establish, which record book is to be the authorized reference if a man is buying and desires to have a pedigree of his purchase ? A man may have an animal that the present association would reject and would not record as a pure-bred animal, and might gain admission to the new association. How is the purchaser to know which is the proper register ? I think the present registration gives general satisfaction, I am at a loss to know why the individual breeders of any particular class of cattle require a special association and a special record of the cattle they raise. The book that is now printed and has been printed for some years, if my memory serves me right, by the Provincial Agricultural Association of Ontario, contains a record of the pedigrees of the particular classes of cattle in which people deal. Now, you are going to have a lot of separate associations throughout the Dominion in the different districts, and the idea suggested itself to me before, but has been more clearly defined by hon. gentlemen around me, as to the conflict which might arise and the difficulties it would raise in securing a proper register of pure bred cattle.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have here a memo. from Mr. Fisher on the subject :

> In negotiations with the United States to secure recognition by their customs authorities of our registration of live stock, so as to secure free entry for thoroughbred stock, they refused to recognize our provincial associations, but I have reason to believe they would recognize a Dominion association. My live stock commissioner, Mr. Hodson, has been discussing this matter with the live stock men of Ontario, and has their endorsation of the request.

This Bill does not interfere in any way with the various provincial associations, which can still go on with their work, but provides for their becoming Dominion associations, if any of them choose, or they all choose, by means of a combination. At present, most of the live stock associations in Canada are entirely Ontario ones, and they have expressed at meetings held this winter, at which Mr. Hodson was present and discussed the matter, their approval of this Bill. It seems to me this Bill is in the interest of breeders.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I would suggest that this clause 4 should stand for the present, and the minister's attention be called to it. I am really raising the objection in the interest of the Bill. If the clause said that an association should not be incorporated under this Act where a Dominion association already exists, I could understand it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is no other Dominion association that I am aware of. If there is such a one, this Act does not interfere with it at all. For instance, if there is already a Shorthorn association prevailing over the Dominion, the minister would not permit an incorporation under this Bill. There would be no reason for it. It is only where none exists, and it must be limited to each class of animals.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—The difficulty might arise with persons dissatisfied with the present association, who might wish to form an association under this Act, and they could do so.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Does the hon. gentleman wish the clause to stand ?

Hon. Mr. WOOD—Yes.

The clause was allowed to stand.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN, from the committee, reported that they had made some progress with the Bill and asked leave to sit again.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

THE NICKEL STEEL COMPANY OF CANADA INCORPORATION BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (68) 'An Act respecting the Nickel Steel Company of Canada.'

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER moved that the Bill be read the second time on Friday next. He said: When my name was first mentioned in connection with this Bill, I had a vivid recollection of the last great steal that was before this House, and I objected to taking charge of it, but I observe that the word is spelled 'steel' in the present Bill, and I therefore have no objection to it.

The motion was agreed to.

COLD STORAGE CONTRACTS BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (152) 'An Act to authorize contracts with certain steamship companies for cold storage accommodation.'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This measure authorizes the government to enter into contracts with the Allan and the Reford companies for this year and next year.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Only for two years?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, only for two years.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Are the contracts confined to any amount?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Not to exceed $28,750 a year.

The Bill was read the first time.

EXPROPRIATION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (160) 'An Act to amend the Expropriation Act.'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Bill simply reduces the rate of interest to be paid, from 6 to 5 per cent, in accordance with another Bill which is before parliament reducing the rate of interest on claims of that kind.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understood that the Bill introduced by the Finance Minister reduced the legal rate of interest from 6 per cent, to 5 per cent in case of a judgment, and where no bargain was made ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then it would not be under similar circumstances. This Bill is to place judgments obtained through the Exchequer Court in the same position as though they were under the general Act.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This applies to cases where an expropriation is made and the Crown takes possession of the property and does not pay over the money at the time. The Crown is liable to pay 5 per cent, instead of 6 per cent as heretofore.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—It is not retroactive ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

The Bill was read the first time.

DOMINION ATLANTIC RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (83) 'An Act respecting the Dominion Atlantic Railway Company.'

Hon. Mr. POWER moved that the Bill be read the first time.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I see this is a voluminous Bill, and I should like to know what its object is ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is simply intended to consolidate the existing Acts relating to the Dominion Atlantic Railway Company in Nova Scotia, and to make some changes in the law.

The Bill was read the first time.

DELAYED RETURNS.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I should like to know, from any one of the ministers, if that return to an address for all petitions and correspondence in connection with the Gaspé Short Line Railway, for which I moved some time ago, has been prepared ? If not, can any of the ministers say whether it will be ready before the Railway Committee meets ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—We promised the hon. gentleman to bring the return down. I will make immediate inquiry; I have not received it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—An address was voted by this House for the return.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—What department would it be with ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It ought to be with the Department of Railways.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I should like to know, also, if that solitary document which the vigilant eye of the Secretary of State caught one day on the table of the Executive Council has been found, and if we can expect to have it placed on the Table of this House during the present session ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Which one was that ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The correspondence relating to the Manitoba school question.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Since the last return was brought down ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Yes. Perhaps, also, the hon. minister would be good enough to complete the return which he submitted the other day in connection with the Montmagny post office. The deed has been produced, but the titles which the deed recites are missing.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That would be in the Post Office Department, I suppose ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—In the Public Works Department.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will inquire about it.

ROYAL TRUST COMPANY'S BILL.

WITHDRAWN.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN, from the Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred Bill (D) 'An Act respecting the Royal Trust Company,' reported that the promoters desired not to proceed further with the measure this session, and recommended that the fees paid by the promoters of the Bill be refunded, less the expense incurred in printing the Bill.

The report was received.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN moved that the report be adopted.

The motion was agreed to.

THE POSTMASTERSHIP OF NEW WESTMINSTER, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL, in the absence of Mr. Macdonald (B.C.) inquired:

If Mr. Brown, who has accepted a provincial office, has resigned the postmastership of New Westminster, British Columbia? If so, has it been accepted unreservedly?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I may say that Mr. Brown, the late postmaster in New Westminster, B.C., resigned the postmastership of that office. In reply to the second portion of the question I may say that his resignation has been accepted unreservedly.

CLAIMS OF MACKENZIE & MANN.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL inquired:

1. Has any claim or claims been made by Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann for compensation, by the government, for alleged expenditure incurred by them on account of the non-ratification by parliament of a contract entered into by them and the government for the construction of a railway from the waters of the Stikine River, in British Columbia, to the waters of Teslin Lake?

2. Does the government admit or recognize that any legal or equitable claim exists on the part of the said Mackenzie & Mann, arising out of the non-ratification of the said contract?

3. What sum has been claimed in payment of such expenditures, disbursements and losses, and what evidence has been laid before the government sustaining such claims?

4. Has the government taken any action in connection with such claims? If not, do they propose doing so?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I may say, in reply to the first question of my hon. friend opposite, that the answer is yes. In answer to the third question, I may say that the amount and interest is $303,433.24. The evidence produced in support of the claim consists of vouchers duly certified, approved and receipted and in nearly all cases the retired bank cheque is attached. In answer to the fourth question, I may say that no decision has yet been arrived at in respect of this claim, and therefore my hon. friend will see that I am not in a position to answer the second question.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then the matter is still under consideration?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The matter is still in the hands of the government and has not yet been concluded.

SENATORS GOWAN AND SULLIVAN.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I might say a word or two which, I am sure, will meet with the hearty approbation of hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House. I am pleased to see that my hon. friend, the Senator from Barrie (Hon. Mr. Gowan), and my hon. friend the Senator from Kingston (Hon. Mr. Sullivan), both of whom have been somewhat indisposed for some time, are able to be present here with us again. The hon. gentlemen have performed, both of them, long and important public services as members of this body, and I am sure that I but express the sentiment of hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House when I say we are pleased to see them here, and it will be a matter of congratulation with every member of the Senate that those hon. gentlemen should long enjoy such health as will enable them to adorn the positions which they occupy in this House. (Applause).

LAND TITLES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 139) 'An Act to amend the Land Titles Act, 1894.'

(In the Committee.)

On the 1st clause,

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Some doubts have existed whether the repeal of what was known as the Territories Real Property Act of 1894, affected proceedings that were then being enforced for the payment of judgments in existence, and it was thought best to remove any doubts, and the object of the first clause is to remove any doubt that proceedings can be continued, notwithstanding the repeal of the Act.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—I have looked over the Bill, and it seems to me to be necessary.

The cause was adopted.

On the second clause,

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This clause is for the purpose of limiting writs filed in the reigstry office to two years, unless they have been renewed. It would be improper to allow them to remain if the amount were really discharged. If the amount has not been paid, the writ must be renewed to keep the claim alive.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I propose to add two amendments to the Bill. The hon. gentleman from Calgary had a Bill which was promoted by Mr. Davin in the other House. It came here, and it was rather uncertain whether the language of that Bill was really in accordance with what the parties desired, or in accordance with the practice in the North-west. It has been a subject of a good deal of discussion, and Mr. Bradshaw and one or two judges of the North-west have been in communication with the solicitor of the Interior Department on the subject. I propose to add, as clause 5, the following :

5. Subsection 1 of section 89 of the said Act is hereby repealed, and the following subsection substituted therefor:

89. Whenever the owner of any land, for which a certificate has been granted, dies, such land shall be subject to the provisions of this Act, vest in the personal representative of the deceased owner, who shall, before dealing with such land, make application in writing to the registrar to be registered as owner, and shall produce to the registrar the probate of the will of the deceased owner, or letters of administration, or the order of the court authorizing him to administer the estate of the deceased owner, or a duly certified copy of the said probate, letters of administration or order, as the case may be; and thereupon the registrar shall enter a memorandum thereof upon the certificate of title, and for the purpose of this Act the probate of a will granted by the proper court of any province of the Dominion of Canada, or of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or an examplification thereof, shall be sufficient.

I thought it proper, before the Bill was read the third time, that we should have this amendment and another amendment printed, so that members of the profession, interested in the North-west should have an opportunity to read them, and see if they meet with their approval, and settle matters that have been the subject of a good deal of discussion.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Why are letters of administration omitted in the last provision ? For instance, if a party dies in England and administration is taken out, why should not an exemplification of letters of administration taken out in England be recognized as well as if taken out in one of the provinces ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Because they may be open to question, and may require to be confirmed. That has been the feeling of the Bar, that while they were quite prepared to accept an authenticated copy of a probate of a will they were not ready to accept the probate of a letter of administration.

Hon. Mr. POWER—As I understand, the Bill provides that copies of letters of administration granted in any province of Canada will be accepted.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not see that there is any greater objection to accepting letters of administration taken out in the United Kingdom than there is to accepting letters of administration granted in one of our provinces.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have not undertaken myself to judge this question. It has been the subject of a good deal of correspondence between Mr. Bothwell, the solicitor of the department, and persons in the North-west Territories. I move the adoption of the amendment.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—I think it was considered that there would be opportunities for verification here that would not be had in England.

Clause 5 was adopted.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I would just call the attention of my hon. friend from Brandon (Hon. Mr. Kirchhoffer) to another new clause which I propose to add to the Bill. It is as follows:

6. It is hereby declared to have been the intention of the Acts known as the Territories Real Property Acts, chapter 26 of the Statutes of 1886, and chapter 51 of the Revised Statutes, and of the Acts amending the latter Act, as well as that of the Land Titles Act, chapter 28 of the Statutes of 1894, and of any Act in amendment thereof, that land in the Territories devolving upon the personal representative of a deceased owner thereof, shall be dealt with and distributed as personal estate, and that shall be taken and held to have been the law and the true intent and meaning of the said Acts from the date upon which the said first-mentioned Act, chapter 26 of the Statutes of 1886, came into force, that is to say, the 1st day of January, 1897.

I understand there has been some doubt on the subject, and the Deputy Minister of Justice, to whom the matter was referred, thought it would be advisable to remove all doubts. There is no doubt as to what the intention was, that land was to be treated as personal property, and whether the language fully expressed that or not, I am not going to discuss the point; but the opinion of some lawyers is that it is not as clear as it ought to be.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—That is in the Territories?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—It is assimilating it to the province of Manitoba.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. BAIRD, from the committee, reported the Bill with amendments, which were concurred in.

LIVE STOCK RECORD ASSOCIATIONS INCORPORATION BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resumed in Committee of the Whole consideration of Bill (134) 'An Act respecting the incorporation of Live Stock Record Associations.'

(In the Committee.)

On clause 4,

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I was looking up the point whether the shorthorn associations have been incorporated by the Dominion, and I find they have not been.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—That is quite correct. I thought they were incorporated by a Dominion Act, but on looking up the matter I find they are incorporated under an Ontario Act although their membership extends over the whole Dominion.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We have all been turning our attention to it. I find that my understanding of it was correct, in regard to the herd book for Ontario. The first herd book was printed in 1867. There are nine volumes extending up to 1886, it was then called the Canada herd book. After 1886, the title of the work was changed to that of the Dominion herd book, of which there are five volumes under the latter title, but none of these works have any reference to any breed of cattle other than shorthorns. Now, that I understand the measure, I may say that I think it is a very good one. In the library we have some United States herd books, and also English herd books, giving the pedigrees of all kinds and classes of cattle, but I found that we have nothing of that kind in Canada, very much to my surprise.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to call the attention of the hon. Secretary of State to a change which has been made. It is true it might be called a clerical error, but it would have an important bearing on many a Bill—the changing of the word 'and' to 'or.' Using the word 'and' might be interpreted to include the whole. The word 'or' would mean an association, perhaps for each. The change being of that character, is it not proper that it should be sent back to the Commons as an amendment rather than that we should just call it a clerical error?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No. The Commons intended that the association should be limited to each breed, or they could not have an aggregate. They could not include several in one. The Ayrshires must be distinct, and the pigs, or sheep, must be distinct. The word 'or' is in conformity with the meaning.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The point to which I called the attention of the Senate was as to whether we should make an important change without reporting it to the Commons. The hon. gentleman says the intention was so and so. I do not know that we have to deal with the intention of the Commons. We have to deal with the fact as it comes before us in the Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think it is one of those changes that the law clerk usually makes in the final preparation of the Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not think so.

Hon. Mr. POWER—As the hon. leader of the opposition has pointed out, the amendment makes a very serious change in the meaning of the Bill, and unless the thing is done in a regular way there would be no authority for the clerk to alter the Bill, and as there is plenty of time, I think the wiser way is to place ourselves on the safe side. The clerk would have no authority to alter this Bill unless there was an order of the House. It is a matter of some little consequence, and there is no necessity to rush the Bill through.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is quite clear that in issuing letters of incorporation they would only issue them in accordance with the Bill. They could not include swine and sheep in one class. The minister would understand what parliament meant by it. It is an incorporation for each particular class of animals, not for a number in the aggregate.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No harm could possibly arise by calling it an amendment; what necessity is there for leaving any doubt?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Very well.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN, from the committee, reported the Bill with an amendment, which was concurred in.

OCEAN STEAMSHIP SUBSIDIES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (151) 'An Act to amend the Act relating to Ocean Steamship Subsidies.'

(In the Committee.)

On clause 2,

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I propose to strike out of clause 2, the quotation marks.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That simply makes it a new Bill containing the same principle?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes; as it stood it would be a Dominion Act from 1899.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What a valuable body this Senate is!

Hon. Mr. POWER—Has the hon. Minister of Justice considered the important question as to whether we can originate a money Bill?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We are not originating it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend will see we have not altered or amended a Bill in any way as respects money appropriations. It is practically correcting a clerical error.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The Bill did not originate here.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY, from the committee, reported the Bill with amendments which were concurred in.

ROYAL BANK OF CANADA BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. POWER moved the second reading of Bill (170) 'An Act to amend the Act respecting the Merchants' Bank of Halifax, and to change its name to the Royal Bank of Canada.'

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I find that this Bill is a material amendment to a Bill that has already passed both Houses of parliament this session. This, being a new Bill, should have been referred to the Committee on Standing Orders before the principle of the Bill is adopted by the second reading. We passed Bill No. 72 a short time ago, when it came up to us from the House of Commons, changing the name of the Merchants' Bank of Halifax, to that of the Royal Bank of Canada. The second clause of that Bill reads:

2. Before this Act shall take effect, a general meeting of the shareholders of the said bank shall be called for the purpose of considering it, and a resolution accepting and approving thereof shall be passed by the shareholders present or represented by proxy at such meeting, and a certified copy of such resolution shall, within fifteen days after the passing thereof, be transmitted to the Secretary of State of Canada, and shall be by him published in the 'Canada Gazette,' and this Act shall take effect from the date of such publication.

Now, a Bill is introduced to repeal that section and substitute the following:

2. The first section of this Act shall come into force upon its publication in the 'Canada Gazette,' and the Secretary of State of Canada shall cause it to be so published upon receiving a certificate under the hand of the president of the said bank and the seal of the said bank certifying that the said Act has been approved by a vote of the directors, and upon receiving a sum sufficient to pay the cost of such publication.

The change is to take the power out of the hands of the shareholders, as I understand it, to bring it into force, and place it in the hands of the directors. The point I want to call the attention of the House to, is this: No notice having been given that such a Bill was to be introduced, and no petition having been presented praying for this change, should we not send the Bill to the Standing Orders Committee, who could recommend that compliance with the rules be dispensed with, in order to allow the Bill to be proceeded with? I do not know that there is any objection to the Bill. I merely pointed out what the changes are, and I ask whether the point I have taken is correct or not?

Hon. Mr. POWER—I know that in the House of Commons this Bill, which is now before us, passed through all its stages under a suspension of the rules, in order to allow it to go through. The original Bill only provided for changing the name of the bank. It did not affect the position of the shareholders or creditors, or any other person interested, in the slightest degree. I suppose it would involve a good deal of expense and trouble to have a general meeting of the shareholders of the bank for the purpose of ratifying what, I understand, the shareholders had already agreed to at a previous meeting. It simply provides, in order to avoid expense and trouble, that the Bill may become law upon the receipt, by the government, of a report that the directors have passed the necessary resolution. If it affected in any way the interest of any other persons, there would be a great deal of force in what the hon. leader of the opposition says, but inasmuch as it is a mere change of name, which I understand had been agreed to by the shareholders previously, it seems to me that there is no object in raising any serious question about it, particularly as, in the House of Commons, where the matter was discussed, this Bill was put through all its stages with wonderfully rapidity.

Hon. Sir MACKENZE BOWELL—I am not objecting to the change made by the amendment, taking the word of the hon. gentleman that the shareholders had already approved—

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not pledge myself to that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am only suggesting that we are not complying with the rules relating to the introduction of private Bills.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—If the Bill were referred to the Standing Orders Committee, they could report that it would be a proper measure to pass.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I move that this Bill be referred to the Committee on Standing Orders and Private Bills, in compliance with rule 59.

The motion was agreed to.

INSCRIBED STOCKS OF CANADA IN THE UNITED KINGDOM BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (149) 'An Act respecting the inscribed stock of Canada in the United Kingdom.' He said: This Bill authorizes the Governor in Council to direct that any part, or the whole of the funded debt of Canada may be inscribed in registry books to be kept in the United Kingdom, for the purpose of further securing the co-operation of the Imperial government, and the recognition of the Canadian funded debt as capable of being used for investing what are called trust funds. Hon. gentlemen are aware that a very large amount of money is held in England by trustees. Those trustees are limited now as to the particular channels in which they can invest moneys, and it would be a very great advantage to our securities if they were authorized to invest in Canadian securities when offered any of them. It has been discussed for the last twenty years, and efforts have been made to secure that advantage to Canada. I do not know what particular difference it would make, or that it would make a marked difference in the rate we would be able to float our loans at. Correspondence has been going on between the government of Canada and the Imperial government on the subject, and the Imperial government have finally acquiesced in recommending to the Imperial parliament an Act authorizing Canadian securities, under certain conditions, to be listed for the investment of trust funds. They conform to an old Act known as 'The Colonial Investment Act,' under which we have to give security that if a judgment be rendered we shall see that it is paid. That is not a very onerous condition; as hon. gentlemen will see, the third clause of the Bill provides:

3. The Minister of Finance and Receiver General may, out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada, pay, satisfy and discharge any judgment, decree, rule or order of the court in England, which under the provisions of section 20 of 'The Colonial Stock Act, 1877,' is to be complied with by the registrar of the inscribed stock of Canada in England.

The Imperial legislation has not taken place. I believe that a Bill is now before the Imperial parliament, but we require to give authority to the Governor in Council to complete the arrangement when the Imperial Act has been passed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I congratulate Canada on having obtained another concession from the Imperial government that will no doubt be of great advantage, as pointed out by the Secretary of State, to this country when it is asking for a loan in England. It has been a source, not only of correspondence, but of very earnest effort during the last ten or fifteen years by our late High Commissioners, and more particularly by Sir Charles Tupper, to obtain this concession from the Imperial government. They have steadily refused it in the past. The concession made to-day is another evidence of the confidence which the people of England have in the securities of their colonies, and more particularly of Canada, and I am very glad to know, from the correspondence which has taken place, that the present government have continued, under their present High Commissioner, to press the same demand on the Colonial Secretary and that it has been acceded to. It will be, as the Secretary of State points out, of great advantage to us from a pecuniary standpoint. It must give every Canadian a great deal of gratification to know that we are gradually obtaining the same position in the money market in England in respect to our securities that the Imperial government itself has, and when they have gone so far as to consent to pass a special Act of the Imperial parliament granting this concession, which has been refused for very many years past, I think we may congratulate ourselves on another step towards the confederation of the empire.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am pleased to hear my hon. friend congratulate the government on the success of this matter.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Why should I not? We have been fighting for it while I was in office.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I think it is very commendable. I cannot suppose for a moment that the Imperial government, during the past few years, while this subject was under discussion, could have had any doubt as to the character of the securities that Canada afforded, and not having any doubt, it has always been a matter of surprise why they should hesitate to permit investments being made in these securities. But there is no doubt of this, that the government there has been subjected to pressure, as every government is, by those who feel that the larger the number of securities in which parties may be permitted to invest, the greater is the extent to which those which are purely local in the United Kingdom are affected. Of course people would not invest in Imperial securities, if they felt that those of Canada were perfectly safe at higher rates, and I am sure that the action of this country in reference to matters which concern vitally the empire, has had its influence upon the Imperial government itself, and it did not feel that it could fairly hold the people of Canada at bay any longer in this regard.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is no doubt of it.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

ALGOMA CENTRAL RAILWAY BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. WATSON moved the second reading of Bill (No. 125) 'An Act respecting the Algoma Central Railway Company.'

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Will the hon. gentleman explain the nature of the Bill ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The Bill is simply making some amendments with reference to the terminals of the road. The charter was granted some two or three years ago.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The road starts now from Sault Ste. Marie ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Yes.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—A survey was made lately, and it was found that the terminals mentioned in the Bill could not be reached because of obstacles in the way, lakes, and so on, and they asked for a change in the route.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is a good job some hon. gentlemen knows something about the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

COLD STORAGE ACCOMMODATION CONTRACTS BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (152) 'An Act to authorize contracts with certain steamship companies for cold storage accommodation.' He said: In 1897 parliament gave authority to the government to make contracts with a number of steamship companies for the providing of cold storage. The amount paid last year, I find, was $47,000. The period was limited for the three years. It was thought then that the amount advanced by the government to assist in putting in order the necessary changes required for the cold storage would have been sufficient to have justified the steamship company to have continued to provide the cold storage without any additional subsidies. However, in consequence of a large number of vessels having been taken off the regular route last year, owing to the war in South Africa, it has been found that there is a considerable deficit, and it is necessary now to make further provision. It is proposed under the Bill to limit the amount to $28,750. The amount paid last year was $45,695, by the Auditor General's Report.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Was that all for 1899, or part of it for 1898 ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I presume for the third year, 1899. The Auditor General's Report could only be down to 30th June.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But there might be a payment in that sum for a debt due in 1898 ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It was assumed that a sum of $10,000 would be necessary to equip certain steamers. For steamers going to another port, I think it was $13,000, and the government were to pay one-half, divided over the three seasons. The three seasons had terminated, and looking up the Auditor General's Report, I find that last year the amount paid was $45,695. It will be observed that this Bill limits the power of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council to a payment of $28,750, in any one year, and the Bill is confined to 1900 and 1901.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is $19,850 less than was paid last year ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Could the hon. gentleman state the average amount paid for cold storage during the last two or three years ? The hon. gentleman understands what I mean. I asked if that $45,000 was for the service of 1899, or whether any portion of it was for a debt due for services rendered in 1898. Perhaps the hon. gentleman could find that out when we come to the third reading?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The payments were to extend over three years, 1897-8-9, so that it would make very little difference, so far as the Auditor General's Report is concerned. All the payments would be made after the last session of parliament. Under the arrangement the government paid in three equal annual instalments. The Allan & Torrance line had four steamers. The Allan & Thomson line three steamers, the Reford two steamers, the Elder Dempster five. That makes fourteen steamers. Then there was a steamer to Avonmouth, and that steamer was allowed the high subsidy, for some reason which I cannot explain, of $13,325. The government, as I said, were to pay one-half. The total amount, exclusive of the Prince Edward Island service, as I make it out, would be $76,662. One-third of that in each year would be $25,554. But from the Auditor General's Report the sum of $45,695 has been paid. That does not cover all the items that are chargeable against cold storage, because my hon. friend knows there were advances made to the railway companies to put on the refrigerator cars, and then the creameries were subsidized to put in cold storage, and in a variety of ways the amount was swollen very much larger than $45,000. The gross amount in the Auditor General's Report was $83,000; but that included many things outside of cold storage. It included spraying and trial shipments, and a variety of things. But the real cold storage items were limited on the steamships to $45,000.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—May I ask the hon. gentleman if the subsidies proposed under this Bill are to be paid to the same steamers receiving them in the past?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, it is limited to the H. & A. Allan, and the Robert Reford line. Evidently the Elder Dempster line are not in it. It may be that all the other vessels running to Canada are provided with cold storage accommodation. When the contract was made three years ago, the government paying one-half, extending over three years, they were then to continue providing the cold storage, and I assume that is the reason, although I do not know.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—If the steamers which have been doing this work, and are already fitted, are to continue running without any subsidy, is it proposed to fit out a new lot?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Additional steamers are wanted.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—Can the hon. Secretary of State say how many additional steamers they intend to fit up?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The amount is limited to the $28,750 in any one year. That is the whole sum that will be allotted in the present year, and a similar sum for next year. I noticed in the public press a considerable amount of butter was delayed, and I think a remark was made in the other House, when this Bill was before them, that a considerable amount of butter had not gone forward owing to lack of cold storage. It was all due to the large number of steamers taken away to South Africa.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No. It was due to the negligence of the Minister of Agriculture in not renewing the contracts.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Because the Minister of Agriculture had not foreseen that President Kruger was going to kick up a row? Is that it?

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I confess I do not quite understand the hon. gentleman yet. These steamers that have been fitted up with cold storage, where the government bore half the expense of fitting them up, I presume were under contract to run in service during the season. Surely those steamers could not have been taken away to South Africa after they were fitted up with cold storage?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. The contracts were only for three years, and we had no control over them. We are now in the fourth year?

Hon. Mr. WOOD—And have those steamers all been taken away?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Some of them have.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—And those that have not been taken away will run without any subsidy?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I presume so. I do not really know.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I do not wish to appear to be too captious. I am asking for information. If there are a number of steamers which have already been fitted up, and which will continue to run without subsidy, then this appears to be a very large amount to be voting for fitting up additional steamers, because the amount, if I understand the figures which the hon. gentleman has mentioned, is larger than the average amount which has been paid during the last three years, and I presume would fit up a larger number of steamers than we have had running in the last three years, and that in addition to those we have already fitted up. It appears to me that it is a very large amount, until I hear further explanations.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will inquire from the Minister of Agriculture and will be able to advise the hon. gentleman at the next stage of the Bill. The contracts were made for three years on the assumption that, having once been provided with cold storage, the trade would be sufficient to justify their continuing cold storage, and after that the enterprise would take care of itself, that there would be so much demand for it that the steamers would keep it up. I do not know what the result has been, but I see by the newspapers that there is a shortage in the cold storage accommodation.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I hope before the next stage of the Bill, that the hon. Secretary of State will procure the information as to the number of vessels proposed to be subsidized, and the amount of cold storage upon the ocean, exclusive of creameries and railways to which the hon. gentleman has called attention, which make up a very large amount. This Bill confines the subsidy for cold storage to the steamship service. The hon. gentleman might also let us know the amounts that have been paid for the last three years, and, if he can, give us an explanation of why it was not continued. From the debates which have taken place, and the articles in the press, it would appear that the fact of the expiry of the contract had been overlooked by the hon. Minister of Agriculture. If hon. gentlemen will refer to the Hansard of the House of Commons they will find that the Minister of Agriculture acknowledged it himself, and it is owing to that negligence that the loss, to which the hon. Secretary of State refers, has occurred. They were unable, from the subsidy not having been revoted, to carry the butter and other articles.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think my hon. friend is quite clear. The Act of 1897 was perfectly clear. It authorized the Governor in Council to enter into contracts and to pay subsidies for three years, and I remember distinctly that at that time it was thought that if we paid one-half of the cost of fitting up cold storage, the trade in the third year would be sufficient to justify the steamers in continuing. It was never intended that we should vote a further subsidy at the end of three years. It is owing to the condition of things at present existing that it is necessary to supplement the amount, because had the war in South Africa not occurred, and had all the steamers which were provided with cold storage still continued to run to Quebec, there would be no necessity for this legislation. I think that is a fair deduction to draw. It was supposed that the enterprise would be sufficiently supported to justify the steamers in continuing after the third year. In 1897 we did not propose to continue the subsidy beyond three years.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

EXPROPRIATION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (160) 'An Act to amend the Expropriation Act.' He said: This is a very small Bill. It is simply changing the rate of interest that will be allowed hereafter to parties whose lands are being expropriated by the Crown, limiting the rate of interest that will be paid to them, in case the Crown does not promptly pay the money. They will be entitled to draw 5 per cent instead of 6 per cent, as at present. It is following a Bill which the hon. Minister of Justice has charge of, and which will come before us in a few moments, authorizing the payment of 5 per cent instead of 6 per cent on claims established in the Exchequer Court.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—I wish to make one remark in reference to this Bill. I think it is a question worthy of consideration whether in changing an enactment of this kind, the whole section should not be repealed and a new section put in its place, instead of simply changing the word 'six' to 'five.' Unless hon. gentlemen have the original Act before them, they cannot understand the Bill. If the original section was repealed, and a new section, with the amendment embodied in it substituted, it would be very plain to ordinary men as well as to lawyers themselves. While I am on my feet I may compliment my hon. friend, the hon. Secretary of State, on giving the explanation which he has made, because without that explanation it would be quite ambiguous to all persons who had not heard his remarks, and I think that we are getting into a very loose habit in this House in reference to motions that are made for the second reading of Bills. In the good old days it was generally understood that a Bill should be explained by the gentleman who has charge of it at the second reading, but it is the exception now to give an explanation at that stage. I must except the hon. Secretary of State in this regard, because he has given the explanation, but in many other Bills the motion has been made for the second reading to-day and no explanation given at all. In many sessions past we have motions made in the same way for a second reading, and then a motion to refer to a certain committee, and we are not all members of that committee, and really we are largely in the dark in reference to the nature of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—Might I ask the hon. Secretary of State why the government should not pay their debts when they are due, and why they should come here and ask to have the interest reduced from 6 to 5 per cent? Why not pay their debts when due? Some land of mine in the North-west was taken for government purposes, and I had to wait for months before getting paid. I think I should have got the money as soon as the land was taken.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman is quite right: the government ought to pay its debt as soon as the award is made, but unfortunately for the government delays arise through red tape. As far as I am concerned, I do not consider 6 per cent is too high where the government defer payment. However, the rate of money has gone down now, and 5 per cent is considered a good investment, and it seemed right that the law should be brought in harmony with a law to be passed during the present session.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman expresses no opinion in reply to the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have no objection to making the change that he suggests. I presume we shall have a revision of the laws in a very short time, and I have no objection, if it is the desire of the House, to rearrange the Bill in the way indicated. I shall have the change made for to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

INTEREST ACTS AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved the second reading of Bill (161) 'An Act to amend the Acts respecting interest.' He said: The House will see, in looking at the provision of the Bill, that it refers to the particular Acts where the rate of interest is mentioned as 6 per cent, and it is a substitute of 5 for 6. The matter is very simple and requires no further explanation than that which I have already given. In the consolidated statutes, chap. 127, the rate of interest mentioned is 6 per cent, and then in the Act of 1889, the rate of interest is mentioned as 6 per cent. In the Act of 1894, the rate is mentioned at 6 per cent, and in the Act of 1897, at 6 per cent. I propose, by this very brief Bill, in each of these statutes to substitute 5 for 6.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is simply making the legal rate of interest, where no contract exists, 5 instead of 6 per cent.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Will this affect the rate of interest that banks can charge?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—They can still charge 6 per cent ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They can take all they can get.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understand they can get any rate of interest they please, provided they make a bargain.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—They have a right now, I understand, to charge 6 per cent. According to this amendment it will be reduced to 5 per cent.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—On all judgments, after the passing of this Bill, the rate of interest will be 5 per cent.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—The other day we passed the Usury Bill, allowing 6 per cent.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The statute of 1899 provides that the rate shall be 6 per cent until the judgment is satisfied. If this becomes law, every judgment debt shall bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent until settled.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Then the Usury Bill which we passed the other day will have to be amended.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Not at all.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—As far as I am personally concerned, I am opposed to this Bill. I do not see the necessity of it. I do not believe it is demanded by the people of Canada generally, by the commercial community or any other class that I know of. I have not seen the subject referred to in the public press. I am not aware that there has been any discussion of the subject, and the public generally are not aware that such a Bill is before parliament, or is likely to be passed. I desire to call the attention of the House to this fact, that in the different sections of the Dominion—at all events wherever I have been, or have any acquaintances with business transactions, the legal rate of interest is always 6 per cent. The public generally have learned to regard that as the legal rate, and I do not see what object there is in changing it. I do not know of any part of the Dominion where the 6 per cent rate is considered unjust or oppressive. In the Maritime provinces, at all events, 6 per cent is not regarded as too high a rate of interest to be paid on ordinary business transactions. There are securities on which you can obtain loans at 5 per cent, and some at 4 or 4½ per cent, but they are a special class of loans and the securities on which they are made are of a very high character. Usually, such loans are made by trustees of estates, or persons having money to invest in exceptionally good investments for a number of years. I shall regret very much if this Bill passes into law this session. I think public attention should be directed to it, so that public sentiment could be more fully expressed with regard to it. I think we should hesitate before making what I regard as a revolutionary change in the method of doing business, in this hasty way, without public attention being more generally directed to it, and without obtaining a more general expression of public opinion on the subject.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I was very much surprised to find that the hon. gentleman from Sackville objected to this Bill. I was expecting that the hon. leader of the opposition would have congratulated the government on having introduced a Bill to which no exception could be taken.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Don't you think one congratulation is enough for one day ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—The government should be congratulated as often as they deserve it. The hon. gentleman does not confine his condemnations to one per day ; and he should not confine his congratulations either. It is perfectly true, as the hon. gentleman from Sackville has stated, there has not been much agitation or discussion of this measure, simply because there are no politics in it. Probably if there had been politics in the measure there would have been agitation or discussion. It is not a matter out of which newspapers can make much capital. It is business and common sense, and those do not often lend themselves to politics ? The hon. gentleman has surprised me. This Bill does not at all interfere with the right of parties to make any bargain they please with regard to the rate of interest; it simply provides that, where no bargain is made, the rate of interest shall be 5 instead of 6 per cent. There is not a gentleman in this House who knows better than the hon. gentleman from Sackville that 5 per cent today is a higher rate for money than 6 per cent was twenty years ago.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—We all admit that.

Hon. Mr. POWER—In the province of Nova Scotia the legislature has acted on that general feeling and has reduced the rate of interest, where no contract exists, from 6 to 5 per cent. I think the government would have been justified if they had reduced the rate to 4½ per cent, because 4½ is as much as 6 per cent was twenty years ago. It does no injustice to anybody. In the province of Nova Scotia, at any rate, it is very difficult now to get 6 per cent on a real estate loan if the security is at all good. The regular rate is 5 per cent. In the cities it is very difficult to get even that. Money is often loaned at 4, and large quantities at 4½. If the rate were left at 6 per cent we would have this consequence. A loan is bearing a rate of 5 per cent. The creditor secures judgment, and the rate becomes 6 per cent. That is most unfair to the debtor. I think the general feeling throughout the country, whatever the feeling of the hon. gentleman from Sackville may be, is that this is a step in the right direction, and that the government might have gone further without doing injustice to anybody.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I think the biggest farce in the country is the interest law. We have been discussing and legislating on the subject of interest for many years, and today we have to pay as much for money as one's necessity demands. If you are a poor man you have to pay a high rate of interest, regardless of the laws on the statute-book. We have in the North-west private banks which do not pretend to loan for less than 10 or 12 per cent. If one man has money and another has not, and has to borrow, he must pay what the lender wants in the way of interest. The rate is governed by a man's necessity. It is the same all over Canada. The moment a man who has money finds that another wants it, he fixes his rate. If you could make a penalty for exceeding the rate, it would be all right, but you leave a loop-hole through which the lender can escape, so that all this kind of legislation is a farce.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

DOMINION ATLANTIC RAILWAY BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. POWER moved the second reading of Bill (83) 'An Act respecting the Dominion Atlantic Railway Company.' He said: I find that I was in error yesterday when I answered the hon. leader of the opposition with respect to this measure. The substantial object of this Bill is to validate two agreements which have been entered into by the Dominion Atlantic Railway Company with other parties. The Bill appears to be voluminous, but it is not. The schedules are voluminous, and they can be considered by the committee to which the Bill will be referred.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (115) 'An Act to incorporate the Canadian National Railway and Transport Company.'—(Hon. Mr. Clemow.)

GRAIN TRADE INSPECTION BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (141) 'An Act respecting the grain trade in the inspection district of Manitoba.'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the Bill be read the first time.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I would ask the hon. Secretary of State what effect this Bill will have on our present trade?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It arose out of an agitation in the North-west to establish what are called flat warehouses instead of elevators, and allowing the farmers to insist on having one flat warehouse at least at each station, and afterwards increasing the number.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the first time.

BANK ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (163) 'An Act to amend the Bank Act.'

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved that the Bill be read the first time.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This is a very important Bill. Are there any material changes made in the law? Of course, we all know that the bank charters expire at the end of every ten years, and that this is a renewal of the bank charters. I presume experience has led to some material changes in order to protect depositors and others. Are there any greater restrictions or any greater liberties given to the banks?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I shall give full explanations when I move the second reading, but the hon. gentleman will find, on examination of the Bill that it is substantially the same as the law is now. The principle is exactly the same. There are very few alterations, and those are of a subordinate character. But the banking association is given some supervision over the issue of notes so as to prevent some of those frauds which have been committed under the present law.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Will the bankers' association have power to regulate the issue, and relieve the government of the responsibility now devolving on them to see that the law is carried out?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No.

The Bill was read the first time.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

TORONTO HOTEL COMPANY'S BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN, from the Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported Bill (114) 'An Act respecting the Toronto Hotel Company,' with amendments, and moved that they be concurred in. He said: There are just two amendments made to the Bill, in conformity with the views expressed by the committee. The one is that the site on which this hotel is to be built shall be more definitely set forth, and this amendment describes exactly where the hotel is to be placed. The other amendment is in reference to the subscription to the stock on the part of banks and corporate companies, and the committee required that in any case where subscriptions of that kind were given by a bank, or corporate company, the matter should be submitted to the shareholders, either at a general or a special meeting. The second amendment embodies that.

Hon. Mr. POWER—As this is a measure about which there was a good deal of difference of opinion, and as it is not always easy to catch the exact nature of an amendment when it is simply read at the Table, I should ask the hon. chairman of the committee if he will not defer the consideration of the amendments till Monday?

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—The two amendments are very simple. The committee objected to the site being mentioned in general terms. The amendment states exactly where their building is to be erected. I will read the amendment again so that there will not be any mistake about it. The site the building is to occupy is to be within the area in the city of Toronto bounded on the north by King St., on the east by Leader Lane, on the south by Colborne St., and on the west by Yonge St. Anybody who knows the locality at all will see that it is as distinct as it can be. The other amendment reads:

> In the case of any such corporation, so subscribing, whether before or after the passing of this Act, if the assent of its shareholders or any proportion of them would otherwise have been necessary to validate such subscription, then the approval of such subscription by a majority of the votes of the shareholders present or represented by proxy at the annual meeting or at a special general meeting shall be requisite in order to bind the corporation as a party to the agreement.

I submit that makes it perfectly clear.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—There is no doubt the amendments proposed are improvements upon the Bill, but I oppose the measure on general prinicples. I consider that it is establishing a very bad precedent for the future. It is a kind of discrimination of which I cannot approve. The banks and these people who are now interested in this project are very wealthy men and the country has every confidence in them, but there is no guarantee that other men, who are not of the same character as these parties, will not apply for similar privileges in the future. I think it is wrong in principle, and I hope it will not have a detrimental effect upon the banking institutions of this country. So far we have been very fortunate in our banking affairs with very few exceptions, and I should regret exceedingly if we should do anything whereby the stability of these institutions should be impaired. That is my chief reason for opposing this measure. I look upon it as a local Bill, and I think the matter should have been decided by the local authorities if it was possible. I have no doubt that they will get a meeting of the shareholders, but it will be a meeting of such men as are interested indirectly in the acquisition and increasing the value of this property for the purpose of building the hotel. The great majority of the people who subscribed for stock in the past were not aware at the time that such a privilege was to be granted to the banks. I do not know what the effect might have been, whether it would have been injurious to them or not, or whether they would have taken stock, knowing that this power was to be granted to the bank. However, there is the naked fact that the great majority of the stockholders of this company are scattered over the whole world, and it is utterly impossible that these matters can be brought to their knowledge by a meeting in compliance with the requirements of the Act, but three or four men, controlling as they do the majority of the stock, will meet and take upon themselves to say that they acquiesce and agree to this resolution introduced by my hon. friend from Toronto. I oppose this measure in all sincerity, and with the full knowledge of the responsibility of parliament in reference to the banks of the country. I think it is a discrimination of the worst kind. It is true, a great many parties are interested in this Bill, but whether it is going to be a general benefit to the city of Toronto or not, I do not know and do not inquire, but I know that they are doing something now which they could not have done without this Bill. It is contrary, in my opinion, to the best interests of the country and our financial institutions. It is establishing a bad precedent which may hereafter be acted upon. I intend to oppose this measure on the motion for third reading. I do not oppose the amendments, because I think they are an improvement. At the third reading we will ascertain the opinion of the House as to whether my view is acquiesced in by a majority of the members.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I hope that this measure will be allowed to stand over until next week. I was not at the meeting of the Committee on Banking and Commerce. I am not a member of that committee, but I have strong convictions on this question, and I hope that concurrence in the report will be postponed until some time next week, so that we can have an opportunity to see what we are asked to do. If I understood the chairman of the committee aright, he says they have fixed the area in the city of Toronto where the hotel should be built. Is not that presumption on the part of the Senate of Canada to say where the company shall build a hotel in the municipality of Toronto? We assume too much responsibility. I have no objection in the world to these people, who are wealthy men, subscribing their own money to build hotels, if they want to do so. I agree with my hon. friend from Rideau (Mr. Clemow), on principle, in objecting to banks speculating in hotels with the stockholders' money, and I ask the chairman of the committee to postpone the consideration of the amendment until next week. I am proud of the banking institutions of this country, and what they have done. They have enough to do legitimately, without speculating in hotels, and asking the Senate of Canada to fix the area in the municipality of Toronto where a hotel should be built. I hold the Minister of Justice responsible for this measure. He knows whether there is power enough in the municipality of Toronto or in the local legislature to fix the site for a hotel in the city of Toronto, without coming to this parliament. I want to hear his opinion, and I should be guided a good deal by it. I agree with my hon. friend from Rideau division, on the general principle, in opposing this Bill. It is wrong to come to parliament and get a privilege to speculate with other people's money, when they do not risk their own. If the chairman of the committee persists in pressing concurrence in the amendments now, I shall have to oppose the motion.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—It is but just to the committee to say that what we authorize these institutions to do, is mentioned in the Bill, and so stated as to give us an idea of the responsibility that they will assume. The committee took the Bill as it came from the House of Commons, but went still further, and in order to protect the vested rights of the shareholders in these companies, have made it imperative that the directors shall consult the shareholders. Although the Bill is exceptional, it seems there is no very strong objection to allowing those flourishing institutions to contribute to the progress and prosperity of the city of Toronto.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think the hon. gentleman who has charge of this Bill will consent to the request made, to put off the consideration of the amendment for a day or two. I would also suggest that the amendments be printed in the proceedings, so we can study them. I agree with the hon. gentleman from Monck (Mr. McCallum), in saying that it seems presumptuous to define the area in which the hotel shall be built. The promoters did not ask to have it described, but in compliance with the wish of some of the members of the committee, it was done. I also took exception to investing the money of banks in the manner proposed in this Bill, and in order to remove the objections which I and others had to the Bill, as proposed, the promoters consented to submit the question of subscription by these different institutions to the approval of the stockholders, and a motion was made by myself, that before any subscriptions would become valid, made by any of the corporations mentioned in the Bill, it should first receive the approval of the stockholders at a special or general meeting. That amendment the promoters of the Bill also accepted. The committee were informed that the stockholders had in many cases, he believed, approved, but the committee deemed it advisable that there should be no possible misunderstanding upon that point—that an institution which had to deal with large sums of money owned by the stockholders, who might be living in all parts of the world, should not be permitted to divert any of the funds from the purposes for which the institution was organized, unless it received the approval of the stockholders themselves. That amendment was accepted, and that, as my hon. friend has explained, is the purport of the amendment. The first amendment is to locate the hotel.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—You located it without being asked to locate it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The committee insisted upon it. The promoters did not ask for it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—It was done because the area had been fixed by the House of Commons.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The Bill restricts the corporations who are empowered to invest money in this undertaking, which are doing their business within a radius of one mile. The principal amendment—I think the Senate will concur in that view—is the one which I am about to read. After stating that certain corporations may have power to subscribe a certain amount of money, to the extent of $2,500 per annum, for twenty years, it says: 'In case any such corporation shall subscribe, whether before or after the passing of this Act'—that was in order to include the subscriptions which have already been made, the Bill as introduced would validate those subscriptions without the consent of the stockholders—'that in the case of any such corporation so subscribing, whether before or after the passing of this Act, if the assent of its shareholders, or of any proportion of them, would otherwise have been necessary to validate such subscriptions, the approval of such subscription by a majority of the votes of the shareholders present, or represented by proxy, at the annual meeting, or at a special general meeting, shall be requisite in order to bind the corporation as a party to the said agreement.'

I think that protects properly the interests of the shareholder. Had not that been put in, I think the committee would have rejected the Bill.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—I think notice of this Bill should have been published in the Canada Gazette. If the directors choose to risk the money of a bank in such a doubtful venture as a hotel, I think it should be made public. It does not follow that a majority of the stockholders present at the annual meeting, represents the vast majority of the shareholders. I know from experience, that the annual meeting seldom calls out anything like a majority of the shareholders. If proper notice has been given, and no objection has been taken, then I have no objection to the bank acting with the consent of their shareholders.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—I have no objection to allowing the report to stand over until tomorrow. In answer to the hon. gentleman from Halifax, I may say the law provides the way in which notice shall be given.

The report was allowed to stand until Monday next.

THE MANITOBA SCHOOL QUESTION.

INQUIRY POSTPONED.

The notice of inquiry being called :

By the Hon. Mr. Landry, that he will inquire of the government :

1. Did the Governor General in Council, on the 21st March, 1835, render judgment upon the appeal brought before his tribunal by the Catholic minority of Manitoba, and is that judgment known under the name of 'The Remedial Order.'
2. Did not that judgment order the legislature of Manitoba to do justice to the recognized grievances of the Catholic minority of that province
3. Has the legislature of Manitoba complied with that judgment, and has it remedied the grievances of the Catholics?
4. If justice has not yet been rendered to the minority injured in its rights, does the government intend to exact that the judgment rendered shall be executed, and is it going to take the steps to have it executed?
5. The case which this school question caused to rise having been appealed to the federal tribunal, and a judgment having been rendered by that tribunal, is it not precisely upon that tribunal and upon no other that the obligation falls of causing its judgment to be respected?
6. When is the government going to cause the constitution and the judicial decrees to be respected, and when will the Federal government, which, by law, is constituted the protector of the rights of minorities, treat this school question from the point of view of right and duty, and not at all as a question serving as a stepping-stone for certain politicians?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I should like to have that motion stand until Monday or Tuesday next. I have only partly looked for the information for which the hon. gentleman asks, and I have been far too much engaged to complete my investigations. I find, for instance, the hon. gentleman refers in his question to a judgment of March 21, 1885.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That should be 1895. The original notice was correctly written and printed in French, and it was translated for the purposes of this House by one of the clerks. I am not responsible for the error in translation.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend will see I am getting my information from what stands on the paper.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman does not need to lose any time looking for a judgment in 1885, when it was given in 1895.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am looking in 1895. I apprehended that it was intended for 1895, but there are a number of other matters connected with the hon. gentleman's questions that I wish to look further into, and up to the time the House met, I had no opportunity to get the information which will enable me to give a satisfactory answer to the hon. gentleman's questions.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I suppose the hon. minister is not confounding that first question with the other one ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Because the first one requires only one search of that judgment. There was only one judgment, and it was in 1895. It should not take twenty-four hours to find it out. If the hon. gentleman wants it, I can give it to him immediately.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The date is 1895 in both these notices.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is in the other motion to be called on Monday next, but it is the same judgment as the one referred to in the first notice. In the English edition it is 1885, but it should be 1895. I think the hon. Minister of Justice should be the last one to shelter himself behind a clerical error.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am not sheltering myself at all. I called the hon. gentleman's attention to that, but I am telling the hon. gentleman I have been engaged all morning, meeting various parties who have been before me, and have not had an opportunity to examine into the questions that the hon. gentleman has put on the paper, and I have asked him to let it stand until Monday or Tuesday.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I misunderstood the hon. gentleman. I thought he said he had been taking a great part of his time searching for a judgment of 1885. I hope he will not lose his time searching for a judgment in that year, but will take it for 1895. Will Monday be a suitable day for the hon. gentleman? If not, Tuesday will be satisfactory to me.

The notice was allowed to stand.

A SUPPLY BILL.

FIRST, SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

A Message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (178) 'An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the public service for the financial year ending June 30, 1900.'

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—This Bill contains the suplementary estimates for the balance of this month, and if the House has no objection, I will move the suspension of the rules, and have the Bill passed to-day.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What is the amount voted? If I understand the Bill correctly, it is to pay the salaries due the officials of both Houses?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Are we to understand that these estimates are for the sessional staff, in addition to the sessional clerks, during the present session, and the estimates necessary to meet the expenses of the staff as laid before parliament, of $18.278, are in excess of the amount voted at the last parliament for their services? Last session I understood that the same amount was voted that was necessary for the staff the year previous. Then this is an increase in the expenditure in that particular branch of the service, of $18,278.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Part of the estimate last year, I think, was a supplementary estimate for this purpose. The ordinary estimate for sessional purposes was for a period of about three months. With the ending of this month we will have been exactly five months in session, so that the expenditure for such a purpose is always a little more when the session is very long.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We are likely to be a month longer, I suppose.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It may be.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Will they increase the members' indemnity accordingly?

The Bill passed through all its stages, under a suspension of the rules.

THE WAR IN SOUTH AFRICA.

MOTION.

The SPEAKER—A message has been received from the House of Commons which reads as follows:

To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty:

Most Gracious Sovereign,—We, Your Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the House of Commons of Canada, in parliament assembled, desire to offer to Your Majesty our heartfelt congratulations on the approaching termination of the war in South Africa, as foreshadowed by the recent successes, culminating in the fall of Pretoria, which have attended the British arms.

The feelings of pride and satisfaction with which we hail every fresh addition to the long and glorious roll of deeds wrought by British valour and resource, are enhanced on the present occasion by the proud consciousness that through the active co-operation of her sons on the battlefield, Canada is entitled to share in a new and special manner in the joy of the present triumph.

We rejoice that the conflict, now happily drawing to a close, will result in the removal of those disabilities under which many of our fellow-subjects have laboured for so long, and we cannot doubt that the extension of Your Majesty's gracious rule over the whole of South Africa will be attended by those blessings which flow from a wise and beneficient administration of just and equal laws.

We pray that for your people's sake the blessings of Your Majesty's reign may long be continued.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I move the adoption of this address by this honourable body, seconded by my hon. friend opposite, the hon. leader of the opposition. I think there will be no dissenting voice in this House. We all rejoice at the prospect of an early peace. I do not think that this war in any degree had its origin in a jingo spirit.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There was no one within the limits of the British Empire, so far as I know, who desired that a war should be undertaken against the Orange Free State or against the Transvaal Republic for the mere purpose of conquest. We know that the vast majority of the people of this country desired that the empire should remain in security and at peace, but no one who has read the correspondence that has taken place between the Transvaal

Republic and the Secretary of State for the Colonies, and the High Commissioner in South Africa, can fail to see that it was impossible that peace could be maintained without British subjects within that republic being subjected to very gross injustice, to tyranny and to oppression, and the British government and nation being placed before mankind in a position of humiliation, utterly incompatible with the independence and sovereignty of the great empire. (Hear, hear.) The people of the Transvaal Republic acquired the limited independence which they possessed upon certain conditions, which were set out in what is called the Sand River Convention, subsequenty in the convention at Pretoria, and lastly in 1884 in the convention at London. Those Boers, a population of Dutch origin, were British subjects by birth. They were as much the subjects of Her Majesty as any part of the population in this Dominion. They emigrated from Cape Colony because they were dissatisfied with the abolition of slavery, and with the amount of compensation which they received when their slaves were liberated. The views which prevailed in the parliament of the United Kingdom in respect to the subject of slavery, were views which they did not adopt and with which they did not sympathize, and so they moved beyond the limits of Cape Colony with the expectation that they would be in a larger degree at liberty to exercise a control over the dark races that surrounded them, that they could not if they remained within the limits of the British Empire. But there is no principle of our law better settled than that a subject of the British dominions cannot divest himself of his allegiance and of his responsibility as a subject by going beyond the territorial limits of the empire. So that these people when they crossed the Orange River, and when they crossed the Vaal, were still the subjects of the King of England and of Her Majesty after she succeeded to the Throne—as much so as they had been when they remained within Cape Colony. After the Sand River Convention their independence for the purpose of local self government was recognized. They were not recognized as a sovereign state having the right to enter into treaties or negotiations with the sovereign countries of Christendom. Before 1877 they had entered into conflict with the Zulus and with other native tribes and nations, and they were defeated on three successive occasions. Their government was disorganized. They were without the necessary revenues to sustain their government. They were in a condition of chaos and disorder and when Sir Theophilus Shepstone came into the country they, practically without protest, acquiesced in his proclamation embracing the territory within the British dominion. From 1877 until 1881 they acquiesced in that state of things, but when the British army defeated King Cetywayo and the Zulus, and when they were no longer in danger from the attacks of native tribes, they again sought their independence. They surprised and defeated some British troops that were scattered through the country, and the British government of the day, not being anxious to undertake to govern any section of the people of South Africa against their will, acquiesced in the understanding that was arrived at in the convention, negotiated in 1881, at Pretoria. Any one who will take the trouble to read over the convention that was agreed upon on that occasion, and the declaration of facts upon which that convention was based, will see that it was understood, both upon the one side and the other, that the two European races that were found in the country, the English and Dutch, were to stand upon a footing of perfect equality. That was the declaration of the Dutch delegates. That was the basis upon which the negotiations proceeded. It was upon that basis that, so far as these two populations were concerned, the treaty was agreed to. Hon. gentlemen will also see that there was a declaration made to native chiefs who were present on that occasion, and in that declaration to the native chiefs the British commissioners announced the condition upon which the authority of the Boer population of the country, or of the native population of the counrty was again re-established. They were told that their rights were secured, that they were not to have those rights encroached upon, and that if there was any departure from the principles that were agreed upon, and upon which they should be treated, the British government would intervene for the purpose of protecting them. That right of intervention was reserved again under the London convention of 1884, and it is very difficult to see how, in the face of a declaration made by the British delegates in the presence of the Boer delegates and acquiesced in by them, in which it is clear that the suzerainty of Her Majesty was asserted, that that suzerainty can be subsequently, with any degree of force and reason, called in question. After the convention of London was agreed to, there is no doubt the reserved power to the British authorities was greatly restricted. It was restricted by the concessions made from what had been reserved under the convention of Pretoria, but it was not until after that second convention was agreed to, not until the gold mines began to be worked and a large European population floated into the country that the Boers, through their legislature, undertook to restrict the rights and liberties of the English-speaking population and place them in a condition of marked inferiority to those who were Boers. It was before understood that any British subject who became a resident of the country, and who swore allegiance to the government, should be at liberty to exercise all the rights of citizenship. But that period was first increased to five years, and then increased to fourteen years, and then at the end of fourteen years, without the concurrence of a majority of the Boer population of the district in which the English resident had taken up his abode, he could not be admitted to full citizenship; so that at the end of two years he was required to take an oath of allegiance to the authority of the Transvaal, that he was to wait twelve years longer, and after he had denationalized himself and become a subject of the Boer authorities and was liable to perform all those duties which they chose to impose upon him, then he might perchance be entitled to the full right of a burgher, if the majority of the burghers in his locality chose to confer those rights upon him or to acquiesce in them. Not only were disabilities imposed in that regard, but we find that in the matter of education the same policy which had been adopted towards the French settlers, while the territory was still a Dutch colony, was adopted in the Transvaal towards the English. After the English children had passed the third form in the school, they received no English instruction. In the city of Johannesburg 19-20ths of the European population were English. The children of English parents heard nothing but English spoken. They were sent to schools taught by men from Holland. They were taught in schools in which the teachers were natives of Holland who had spent three months in England, as a qualification to teach English, who scarcely knew a word of English, and who were, therefore, utterly incapable of giving instruction to children of English birth, who spoke English, and who knew no other language than English; and although the English population were subject to an enormous tax for the purpose of maintaining the schools in the district in which they resided, they were utterly incapable of availing themselves of the schools which had been so established, and were obliged to establish schools supported by their own voluntary contributions in order that their children might be educated at all.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Was that a wrong?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Then there were not only the disabilities in this way, but there were also disabilities with regard to their legal protection. The courts were placed absolutely under the control of the president and the Volksraad, and the Volksraad resolution was to rank above the constitution and the judges who were not disposed to acquiesce in this tyrannical regulation were compelled to obey or were expelled from the bench. That was not all. We find they had frequent quarrels with their neighbours and the English population were commandered, as it was called, the moment they arrived in the country, which was wholly contrary to their obligation under international law. British subjects were compelled to enter into the active militia service of the Transvaal Republic. They were sent to fight the natives who were in arms against the oppressive measures of the republic, and they were subjected to military duties from which the Dutch population themselves were exempted. There were regulations exempting Frenchmen who were in the country, and exempting Portuguese and Germans, but there were no regulations to exempt the English population, and that exemption unquestionably they were entitled to under the well-settled rules and principles of international law. In one instance it was reported that a cripple from Cape Colony was ordered to the north, commandered by one of the cornets. He refused to go. The cornet was on horseback armed with a long leather whip, with which he flogged him along the street. the man being a cripple, utterly incapable of resisting; and when the cornet was called to an account they did not object to executing the law against him so far as bringing him to trial was concerned—so far as imposing a fine upon him—but they put their hands into the public treasury and paid the fine that this ruffian had incurred under the law as it then stood. Now, that is but a single instance of the sort of treatment, the vexatious administration of the law, the tyranny and the oppression practised towards the English population, and here was a great powerful empire having a colony alongside in which Dutchmen and Englishmen stood upon a footing of equality, in which, in the Dutch districts, all schools were conducted in the Dutch language, in the courts of justice men were allowed to plead in the Dutch as well as in the English language, and in the legislature they could speak the Dutch as well as the English; but in the Transvaal the English was not permitted to be used, and a magistrate, who understood both languages, and who, for the purpose of convenience, took the evidence of the witnesses in the English language, was fined for having done so, because the law required that his record of the proceedings of his court should be kept in Dutch. Now, I say I cannot understand how any man, or any number of men, in this country could have any sympathy with a population who undertook to conduct a government upon the lines which have been adopted by the government of the Transvaal under the presidency of Mr. Kruger. A more narrow-minded, a more heartless tyrant has not governed a civilized community during the present century. (Hear, hear). I think it is impossible to read the proceedings of the legislature and the executive government of the country and come to any other conclusion. I say, therefore, that I am pleased that the British troops are in possession of the capital of the Orange Free State. I rejoice that they are in possession of the capital of the Transvaal Republic (cheers), and I shall still further rejoice when British troops are in the peaceful possession of every town and hamlet within the limits of these two republics. (Renewed cheers). I trust that no hysterical sympathy will permit any section of the British people to oppose the permanent establishment of British authority in these two republics. We can give them a better government under our system than they have hitherto had—a less corrupt government than that which they have had in the Transvaal republic. No one desires to deprive the Dutch population of the freedom which they possess and to place them in a position of inferiority as Dutchmen. I would rejoice to see them in the possession of all the rights that belong to an Englishman, an Irishman, a Scotchman, or the citizen of any other country who would become a resident and citizen of that country, but I do not want to see power put into the hands of men who, instead of undertaking to carry out the authority of the government under the sovereignty of the Queen, undertake to use the power with which they are possessed to intrigue against the government of Her Majesty, and overturn her authority in South Africa. There is but one thing possible, and that is the paramountcy of the British government must be established in that country. (Cheers). It is necessarily the half-way house between the British islands and Australia and India. It is essential to the maintenance of the integrity of the empire, and in the maintenance of that integrity, I believe that the people of this country feel just as keen an interest, no matter whether they be of English or French origin, as do the people of the United Kingdom. There was a period in the history of this empire when we thought we were like a family—that the government in the British islands were the parent government of the empire, and we would all grow up and reach maturity and that each one would politically set up, each section in business for itself. That notion prevailed at one time in the United Kingdom. It is elaborately and very ably argued in John Stuart Mill's work on representative government; but I apprehend there is no leading statesman, whether Liberal or Conservative, in the United Kingdom, who subscribes to those notions to-day. (Cheers). We occupy a higher eminence politically than those who stood at the head of affairs twenty-five or thirty years ago. We have a clearer view of what the constitution of the empire is. Since then great and powerful states have grown up, have assumed large proportions, and the very necessity of our existence, if we are to remain an independent and self governing people, capable of protecting ourselves, imposes upon us the duty of holding together. That being so, I feel that all the people of this country will be disposed to cordially acquiesce in the sentiments expressed in this address. We congratulate Her Majesty. Every person is loyal and devoted to Her Majesty. Every person recognizes that she stands easily first of all the people who for a thousand years have been charged with the government of the British Empire. (Cheers). Her influence has always been an influence in favour of virtue and against vice—in favour of honesty and against dishonesty, in favour of liberty as against oppression, and it is because of the character of Her Majesty, perhaps even more than on account of her position as sovereign in the empire, that the people in every portion of the empire are devoted to Her Majesty as much so as a child is devoted to the parent that he loves. I therefore move the adoption of this address, which is seconded by my hon. friend who sits opposite. (Cheers).

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am relieved to a very great extent from making any lengthened remarks after the speech which has just been delivered by the hon. Minister of Justice. He has dealt with the question in such a lucid manner, particularly with the historical portion of it, that it would be a waste of time to add anything to that branch of the subject. I shall, however, revert to one remark that he made in which I anticipated, and on which I thought he would have elaborated a little more. He referred to the conduct of the Dutch in South Africa prior to the British government obtaining possession of that section of Africa. The conduct of the Boers towards the French population at that time was precisely the same as that which the English population have been to the present time subjected to. I heard Sir Henry de Villiers, whom we all had the honour of meeting during the colonial conference, make the statement in the province of Quebec, when calling attention to the loyalty of the Dutch population and of the French who inhabited Cape Colony under British rule, he attributed it in a great measure to the liberty which was given to and enjoyed by all classes of the community, no matter of what race, no matter what religion they might profess, while the disloyalty that existed prior to the acquisition of that country by Great Britain arose from the tyrannical administration of affairs by the Dutch in refusing to the French portion of the population the right to speak their own language, and even the right to enjoy their own religion, so that that race, at one period of the history of the world, occupied about the same position towards the Dutch rulers in Cape Colony that the English people have of late occupied towards the Boers in the Transvaal. I have very great pleasure in seconding an address of this kind. I would have still greater pleasure if we were enabled to congratulate Her Majesty upon the end of the war. I am not of those who think that the struggle is not yet over. There may be a system of guerilla warfare carried on under the direction of the ex-presidents of the Orange Free State and the Transvaal. However, I have not the slightest doubt as to the ultimate result, and that is, that the British flag will float over the whole of that portion of South Africa, and that when it does so, and peace is obtained, I think the people of Canada will agree with the utterance of Lord Salisbury and Mr. Chamberlain, when they said that England canont allow that country to remain in a position to repeat the experiences of the last twelve months—which simply means that the two republics—the Orange Free State which has already been annexed to Great Britain under the proclamation issued by Lord Roberts, and another one which I hope soon will make its appearance annexing the Transvaal—will be brought under the British flag, and that when peace is proclaimed, these portions of South Africa will be placed in the same position now occupied by Cape Colony; and that so soon as they are prepared for it will receive that measure of self government which we enjoy in Canada. (Cheers). Until that is done, I have very little hope of tranquility existing in South Africa? While regretting sincerely the loss of life and the circumstances which compelled the taking up of arms and the sending of a large force into that country by Great Britain, I am not prepared to say that in the end it will not be without benefit to the civilized world. It will show to the nations—as it has done already to those who have been jealous of the power and prestige of Great Britain—that ours is a united empire, that when necessity requires it Britain can defend herself and her colonies; and what is of a still greater source of gratification to every lover of his country, the war has tended to unite the empire in one indissoluble whole. (Cheers). There was a time, not far distant, when the outside world looked upon England as a nation of shop keepers, that Britain was becoming effete—that she would not be able, under such difficulties as have recently arisen, to defend herself, and that the colonies had not any attachment to the empire. All this the events of the last year have proved to be not only an absurdity but a fallacy. The war has tended to bring together the subjects of Her Majesty, no matter in what part of the world they have taken up their abode. It has shown to the world that whenever the centre of the empire is attacked, Her Majesty's subjects in all sections of the globe are ready to rush to the rescue and defend her even at the risk of their lives. It will have the effect of preventing war, which otherwise might possibly arise between European nations, and which we have been fearing for so long a period, for this reason: they have learned the important fact that if war does break out, no matter with what nation it may be, British subjects as a whole, from whatever race they may have sprung or whatever religion they may profess, will be ready to defend the empire at all hazards. One reason why I am gratified particularly at the results so far, of the war, is that Canada, as an important portion of the empire, has lent her aid in securing the victory. What will be equally gratifying to us as Canadians is the fact that one of the boldest dashes made in the whole war, and which led to the capture and surrender of Cronje and his army, was led by Canadians. (Cheers). Showing, as the Premier very justly said in the few remarks he made when moving this address, that the same blood courses through the veins of the present generation as coursed through the veins of their ancestors, when they achieved victory in almost every contest that they had in every portion of the world. I am delighted to know that the end of the war is approaching. There may be, and I have no doubt there will be, struggles in the future, but that the end must soon come, I think is beyond a doubt. We have had battles in the past. We have had contests of which we British subjects often boast at our convivial meetings. In past wars in which Canada was interested, when backed by a few British soldiers, Canadians showed that they were able to defend their own borders. Events have shown that the same feeling which existed in the past continues to exist. As the age advances we advance in thought. The ideas of British statesmen of twenty-five years ago of the value of the colony no longer prevails. The Manchester school of politicians has died out, and it has been brought home to British statesmen that if Britain is to maintain her supremacy in the world she must be backed by what are termed her outlying dependencies. The time has arrived when we no longer will be looked upon as a dependency, but as a part and parcel of the empire. The word colonist will cease to have any application to us, and we shall be properly designated British subjects, and that alone. Nothing has done so much to unite the people of the empire as this war, and I believe that the result, sad though it is that so many lives should be sacrificed, will be the strengthening of the empire. I second the motion with pleasure, and I hope that ere another session of parliament takes place—I might say before this closes if it should last a month longer—we may be able to pass a resolution congratulating Her Majesty and the British Empire on having obtained a complete and absolute victory over the Boers, and that peace may reign for many years to come. (Cheers).

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise, not for the purpose of making a speech, but simply to offer a suggestion to the hon. minister who has introduced this motion for the adoption of an address to Her Majesty. I have listened with great attention to the speech he has made. I did not find that it had great relevancy to the subject before this House. I thought it was a chapter from the book which he is now preparing as a maker of history, but what amused me very much was when the hon. gentleman found tears to show the deplorable position in which the Uitlanders of the Transvaal were placed in regard to their schools and their liberties, and I thought to myself of that passage of the scripture where it is said to the daughters of Jerusalem 'do not weep for me but weep for your own sins.' If the hon. gentleman had looked not far away over the sea, but on this continent, he would have seen the same condition of things for which he found such pathetic words to express his feelings, existing in this country, and I would suggest that he should add to the address the following words if it be possible :

We rejoice also that the example given by the people of this Dominion in co-operating with the empire for the removal of those disabilities under which the Uitlanders of the Transvaal have laboured so long, will be looked upon as a precedent applicable to our own country, and we feel assured that the present government will take necessary and urgent measures to grant to the Catholic minority of Manitoba the restoration of the rights, recognized by a decision of your Privy Council, the execution of which will be attended by the same blessings which flow from a wise and beneficient administration of just and equal laws.

I suppose the hon. gentleman, who stands up here in the name of justice and liberty, will accede to my suggestion and will have those words placed in the address.

Hon. Mr. GOWAN—I rise with great pleasure to concur in the address to Her Gracious Majesty congratulating her on the success of British arms in South Africa. That it has the full concurrence of the people of Canada no one can doubt who has followed the events of the last few months. From the Atlantic to the Pacific the people of Canada spoke out loyally, intelligently, plainly and emphatically. They remembered the obligations they owed to Great Britain—that they were protected in their infancy by Great Britain,—that they had the institutions of Great Britain to look to in all that made for the peace and prosperity of the empire. Take our commerce. We boasted, and with truth, at one time that our commercial navy was amongst the first of the world ; our ships traversed every sea, and with safety, and why ? Because British ironclads were on every sea, and if our ships were interfered with, would have asked the reason why. We owe a deep debt of gratitude to the mother country for the way in which we have been protected and fostered, so to speak, to nationhood by the motherland, and it well becomes us to feel as we do, and the resolutions I think fitly and wisely express the sentiments of the people of Canada. They desire, we desire all of us, peace, but peace with honour. There can be no peace in South Africa until British rule is there supreme. The Boers have been tried. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice and my hon. friend the leader of the opposition have brought out clearly the unfitness of the Boers to rule a free people. They never will have in South Africa a free government until the British flag waves supreme. History shows that wherever that flag floats it is the emblem of freedom, civilization and justice, that freedom which is calculated to ennoble a people, and when that flag floats supreme in Africa, I have no doubt the day will come when a government will be granted to the whole of South Africa as a united country, confederated under a common sovereign, and that such rights and privileges will be granted to them as may be compatible with the existing condition of things there, and will lead ultimately to the establishment of a free government as we have it in Canada. I said we owed much to Great Britain from the very first—from 1792, I think it was when we were granted a constitution, which, in the words of Governor Simcoe, was the very image and transcript of the British constitution, finally responsible government was conceded. We worked under that for some time, and now, the government in accordance with the well understood wishes of the people as expressed through their representatives is firmly established. Under that government we have lived and flourished, and I hope and trust the day is not far distant when we shall have closer relations with the mother country even than we now enjoy The British constitution is not a thing merely of parchment. It is not a matter of writing. It consists in the aggregation of principles brought out from important events and doings, and any one who studies the British constitution will see that the agenda of ages and dynasties have been the bases which have established the great principles of the British constitution, and so it will be with regard to an Imperial constitution. I believe that when the government of this country listened and responded to the mandate, the clear mandate of the people, and with, I will say, all reasonable despatch—at least that is my view seeing the matter was of first instance and paramount importance—and when they acted and obtained the sanction of parliament to their acts from that moment the foundation of an Imperial constitution was laid, and when our gallant fellows stood beside the soldiers of the Queen, prepared to shed their blood in defence of the empire, that moment their blood sealed the compact of the foundation and beginning of an Imperial constitution. It will grow. Events will spring up from time to time and I believe that it is not by proposing this scheme or that scheme that it will come, but by acting upon the clear feeling of the people of this country, which is loyal to the empire which recognizes the overpowering advantages of Imperial Federation. That will develop in time into the formation of an Imperial constitution, and my own deliberate impression is that it would be unwise by any act of ours to try to prematurely force the result. Some have put forth the view that we should have a representation in the British House of Commons, but that never could be accomplished. Another scheme is that we should have a representation in a certain council representing the whole empire. That may be feasible but it is beset with innumerable difficulties. Time and the feeling of the people of United Canada will accomplish it, because I believe there is no difference of opinion with regard to it. It has been said that in some parts of the country there is a want of such feeling, but I cannot believe that there is. The people are accused of certain want of loyalty and want of love for the mother country, and attachment for the empire, but they cannot fail to remember that the treaty made by Britain was religiously and faithfully kept, and rights guaranteed to them which exist in no other province of United Canada, and they cannot fail to bear in mind that if their place was in the United States, the moment there was a population far and away beyond them of different nationalities, their guaranteed rights would not stand for an hour. But it is not considerations of that kind which will alone be operative with a chivalrous people. They feel and know the grandeur, the safety and the advantage of being part and parcel of the greatest empire the world has ever known. We cannot fail to appreciate the immense advantage of being a colony of England. I am one of those who think that ere long the whole family will be united, all who have become part and parcel of the British Empire will be one people, and wherever the British flag floats it will be a true emblem of rational liberty.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved that His Honour the Speaker do sign the said address on behalf of this House.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before that motion is carried I would ask if that address, which will be signed by the Speaker, is to be sent to the Queen ?

Some hon. MEMBERS—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Then I would call the attention of the House to the fact that the French translation is very poorly done and contains grammatical faults.

The motion was agreed to.

BUFFALO RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM moved the second reading of Bill (100) 'An Act respecting the Buffalo Railway Company (Foreign.)' He said : I must say, in looking over the Bill, that without further explanation I should not be favourable to it, but I think hon. gentlemen will be kind enough to let it be referred to the Committee in Railways. The company are asking too much and offering too little. They want to control a lot of railways on this side of the line. They want to control the franchise and good will of the Niagara Falls Railway Company and the Queenston Heights Company and a Bridge Company. It may be all right, and no doubt they will furnish us with any necessary information when it comes before the committee. They should let us know who the stock-holders of this company are. We know nothing of them. This country was invaded by foreigners not long ago, and we do not wish that class of people here, but at the same time in order to do justice to all I think we should read the Bill a second time now. I do not bind myself to support the measure, but merely ask that it be sent to the committee as a matter of form.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—If the hon. gentleman is not the father of the Bill he must be the step-father ; otherwise he would not have given us so many reasons why we should not pass the measure.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I was wondering, when I looked at this Bill, what sort of a speech the hon. gentleman from Monck would make in its favour ; and I must say that he has preferred to be consistent rather than to vigorously support his own measure. I think it is safe to let it go to the committee with the endorsation the hon. gentleman has given it.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

SECOND READING.

Bill (20) 'An Act respecting the British Yukon Mining, Trading and Transportation Company, and to change its name to the British Yukon Railway Company.'—(Hon. Mr. Clemow.)

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT BILL.

CONSIDERATION OF AMENDMENTS POST-POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day being called,

Consideration of the amendments made by the House of Commons to (Bill K) 'An Act to further amend the Criminal Code, 1892.'—(Hon. Mr. Mills.)

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I had not been able to consider the amendments made to this Bill, and I therefore move that this Order of the Day be discharged and placed on the Orders of the Day for Tuesday next.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If hon. members of the House are in the same position as the hon. Minister of Justice, and have not looked at the amendments, I should like to call attention to one or two changes which it would be well to consider. The House of Commons has made a number of amendments to the Bill to which I think the concurrence of the House would be readily given, but it is a question whether we should accept some of the other amendments. I am calling attention to them now, so that members may consider the question of the rejection of the amendments or concurrence in them. In the first place, there is a provision that the Bill shall not come into force until the first day of January next. I cannot understand why that provision is added to the Bill. If there are clauses in the Bill which are intended to prevent immorality and swindling which is being carried on in the way of lotteries, it should come into force at once, because these evils should be stopped. They have struck out of the Bill the clause which was inserted at the instance of the hon. senior member for Halifax, providing that in cases of seduction there should be corroborative evidence. That is struck out of the Bill. They have also added to the Bill that short proviso which was struck out by the Senate, on the motion of the hon. gentleman to whom I have referred, and supported by the Senate, which exempts certain trades union from the effect of combinations ; rejected on the ground, I take it, that there should be no class legislation. No matter what the other branch of parliament may do for the sake of securing votes, by passing measures which are really class legislation, the sooner this House puts a stop to this kind of legislation the better. That which is wrong when committed by one class of the community is equally wrong when committed by another class, though they may have the greater number of votes at an election. For that reason I opposed it years ago, and I think we should continue in that line. The clause providing for the whipping of children is also struck out of the Bill, and there are a number of other amendments, which are of a technical character, affecting legal proceedings in courts, of which I have no knowledge, and which the legal members of the House must deal with when the matter comes up. I dare say the Minister of Justice will be able to explain these amendments, but I thought it well to call attention to the important changes which have been made, in order that members who have not taken the trouble to study them may be in a better position to give an intelligent vote when the Bill comes before us.

The motion was agreed to.

COLD STORAGE ACCOMMODATION ON STEAMSHIPS BILL.

POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day being called,

Committee of the Whole House on Bill (152) 'An Act to authorize contracts with certain steamship companies for cold storage accommodation.'—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have not been able to obtain the information asked for when this Bill was read the second time, and I move that the Order of the Day be discharged, and placed on the Orders of the Day for Tuesday next.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the hon. gentleman would be good enough to lay on the Table of the House on Monday the information asked for, we would be able to look at it, and consider it intelligently.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman from Westmoreland asked a question with reference to the vessels which had been subsidized continuing to provide cold storage in future. Their contract was limited to three years. I do not know what they are doing. My hon. friend inquired what position they were in, and whether they would continue to afford the cold storage.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—Yes, and how many? I also desired to know if the minister could give us the number of additional steamers it was proposed to subsidize under this Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, and how much it cost last year?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—From the Auditor General's Report, under the head of subsidies for steamships for cold storage, I find an amount of $45,695.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Was that exclusively for steamships?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, it is put down as expended entirely on steamships.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—The hon. minister stated that the expenditure for the three years had been some $76,000.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is the calculation that I had made up, of what was expended in 1897. When the Act of 1897 was passed, there were resolutions laid on the Table in answer to a request from this House, or the other Chamber, giving the steamers in which cold storage facilities were to be constructed, and four vessels were to be constructed. Allan and Thompson three, Allan and Reford two, Elder Dempster five. On that the cost was assumed to be $10,000, and the government was to contribute one-half, and it was to be spread over three years, and I made up the calculation, taking the fourteen steamers, that the government's portion would be $70,000. Then there was a steamer to Avonmouth, for which a larger sum was to be paid. I made it up at $76,000. Looking at the Auditor General's Report I found the amount was very much larger than had been contemplated.

The motion was agreed to.

INTEREST ACTS AMENDMENT BILL. BILL.

POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day being called,

Committee of the Whole House on Bill (160) 'An Act to amend the Expropriation Act.'—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island objected to the figure '5' being substituted for the figure '6,' and suggested that the section of the Act had better be recast, and I have framed the Bill in that way. I move that the Order of the Day be discharged, and placed on the Orders for Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

INTEREST ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (161) 'An Act to amend the Acts respecting interest.'

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I may say to my hon. friend that I thought perhaps it would be well to amend this provision by excepting transactions where the interest had already begun to run, and to confine the Bill to liabilities hereafter to be created. That would not affect transactions of which any person could complain. After the word five I propose to add the following:

Provided this statute shall not apply to liabilities created before the passage of this Act.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Does not the hon. minister think that too wide an extension is likely to be given to the word 'liabilities'? I can understand that the law should not apply to instruments made before the passing of this Act; but supposing a debt is maturing after the passing of this Act, the liability exists, but the debt may not be in the form in which it bears interest. I do not think this Act should be made applicable to such a case.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I would suggest to the minister that he should give notice of this amendment, and have it printed in the minutes of proceedings, and bring it up another day. It is a matter of importance, and it is difficult to say just what the effect of the wording would be when it is not before us, and we have not had time to consider it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—When the committee reports the Bill we shall have an opportunity to see it, and have time to consider it before the third reading.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I think it would be a better way of proceeding to give notice of the amendment and have it printed in the minutes, and let us have an opportunity of considering it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If I understand the amendment, it is simply to confine it to future operations, and not give it a retroactive effect of any character. Is that the object of it?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is the object.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think it is a very good provision, so as not to affect existing contracts, or existing debts. It comes into operation when sanctioned by the government and not before. If I understand the decisions given in Ontario on this interest question, say you have a mortgage or note drawing 8 per cent; if it is not paid at maturity the lender can only collect 6 per cent afterwards, and in the case of a note, even if you say 'until paid,' the decisions have been that you can draw only 6 per cent. Under this measure you can draw only 5 per cent. You have to specify distinctly that unless the amount of the note is paid at maturity, and the interest which it is provided to be paid on the face of the note shall be the interest to be drawn until it is paid, it cannot be collected. It has to be peculiarly worded if I recollect right.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I take it if we were to pass the Bill as I introduced it without any amendment, after it becomes law, the rate of interest on all transactions, where there is no agreement as to the rate would be 5 instead of 6 per cent; and if the rate of interest had been running at 6 per cent, it would cease at that point, and begin then to run at 5. The amendment I suggested would have this effect, that with regard to all transactions, where the rate of interest has not been agreed upon, they will continue to draw 6 per cent and the 5 per cent rate would operate after the sanction of this Act to all future transactions.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—So far as I have been able to study the Bill since yesterday, I think it goes even further than the Minister of Justice says. If I read the Bill correctly, and the statute which it amends, on any contract or agreement where the interest is already running at 6 per cent, it would not stop when this Bill was passed, but it really would have the effect of making the rate of interest, from the time that contract was made 5 per cent until the transaction was closed—that it not only has the effect of changing the rate at the time of passing the Bill, but has a retroactive effect, and makes the rate 5 per cent from the date of the transaction.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is what the Minister of Justice wants to prevent.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—The amendment of the Minister of Justice certainly makes the Bill more acceptable, so far as I am concerned. I feel that it is a matter of importance that the wording of an amendment of this character should be carefully considered. It is very evident the Bill passed through the House of Commons without receiving full consideration.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is a reflection on the House of Commons. The hon. gentleman's opinion happens to be different from the opinion of the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I am not here expressly to please the hon. gentleman from Halifax. I cannot say that I have any more respect for his opinion than for those of other hon. gentlemen. Although he feels it his duty, when I make a suggestion, to interject remarks before I have explained my views, I think I have a right to express my opinions. I only regret that they are so very often resented by the hon. gentleman. I should like to again ask the attention of the Minister of Justice to the suggestion that I have already made, that a notice of the amendment which he proposes should be placed upon our proceedings, so that we should have an opportunity of fully considering its effect.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman has undertaken to say that I wish to interfere with his freedom of action in this House. The hon. gentleman is quite wrong. He undertook to say that he was satisfied, from the character of this Bill, that it had not been considered by the House of Commons. That is a reflection on the action of the House of Commons that I do not think the hon. gentleman, as a member of this House, has a right to make.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—He did not mean that.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Whether the hon. gentleman meant it or not, he said it; and further, it is a reflection on the government who introduced the measure. The hon. gentleman is a wise man; still I do not think he embodies in himself all the wisdom of both branches of parliament.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Is this the proper time to introduce this legislation? Interest has gone up in England. We want to induce capitalists to come to this country. Will it have the effect of bringing capital into this country when we reduce the rate of interest?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—A man can make his own contracts.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Those people do not know that. At this time we want to bring in capital. Will capitalists have the same advantage with this reduced rate of interest? It is well to bring the matter before the House in order that they may consider it. I agree that the rate of interest should be changed, and probably 5 per cent is enough at the present time; but is it wise or prudent to make a change when we know that money in England has been quoted as high as four and a half per cent?

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—We do not want the votes of the people of England just now.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—We might want their money.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—This is not the time to discuss the principle of the Bill or its opportuneness or inopportuneness, because that we passed upon when we read the Bill the second time; nor do I think it is a matter merely of public opinion, because hon gentlemen know right well that it would be the duty of parliament in this matter to ascertain what is the ordinary average rate of interest and approximately to fix that as the rate where no rate of interest has been agreed upon. Every one knows that six per cent was fixed at a period when the profits of money in the form of interest was considerably more than it is at present; so if six per cent was a proper rate twenty years ago, five per cent is quite high enough to fix at the present time, and what I propose is this; as the Bill stands it was suggested to me that we ought not to touch transactions where the rate of interest had already begun to run. That seemed to me not an unreasonable proposition. They will stand undisturbed, and the only transactions affected by the Bill will be those transactions which will arise after the measure goes into operation, so I thought an amendment such as I suggested would meet the requirement. I would suggest that the amendment be adopted, and I shall ask the committee to rise and report the Bill as amended and treat it as a tentative proposition to be considered before the Bill receives its third reading.

The amendment was adopted.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER, from the committee, reported the Bill with an amendment.

Bill (55) 'An Act to incorporate the Canadian Bankers' Association.'—(Hon. Mr. Lougheed in absence of Hon. Mr. Kirchhoffer.)

GRAIN TRADE IN MANITOBA BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (141) 'An Act respecting the grain trade in the inspection district of Manitoba.' He said: Hon. gentlemen are aware that for very many years a considerable amount of dissatisfaction and discontent has prevailed in the North-west and Manitoba between the farmers and the elevator people. The farmers had a number of grievances that from time to time had been pressed on the attention of the government, but up to the present time no actual legislation has been enacted. In October last the government appointed a commission to inquire into those grievances. That commission consisted of the late Judge Senkler, and the gentlemen associated with him, Mr. Slocum and Mr. Casault. They issued notices to the farmers of Manitoba and the North-west to meet them at a number of centres, and a considerable amount of evidence was taken on the points at issue. Unfortunately, Judge Senkler died before very much progress had been made, and a chairman was appointed in his place, who is now the present Judge Richard, of Winnipeg. The result of their inquiry was embodied in a return which I think has been laid before parliament, and has been printed. I have not a copy of it now myself, but this Bill is the outcome of the suggestion made by the commission. I may say that the grievances of the farmers of Manitoba and the North-west might be placed under three heads. One was that the vendor of the grain, the farmer, was subjected to an unfair and excessive dockage at the time of the sale of his grain and the reception of it at the elevator. This dockage means the amount of inferior grain or seeds in wheat, or broken wheat, which of course were objectionable, and had to be removed. There was a method of removal, not by actually testing the quantity of foul seeds or defective wheat that was in the aggregate quantity, but by testing with a sieve, which was known as the dockage tester. This had often proved very unsatisfactory, and the farmers objected to its continuance. They objected, also, to the fact that they had not those ample opportunities that are usually afforded in matters of trade between people, of witnessing the weighing of their grain, and a good deal of dissatisfaction arose from that cause. A third was that, as the trade was carried on under the elevator system, it practically gave to the owners of the elevators a monopoly of the purchase of grain. The farmer practically, when he came to the railway station, had no alternative but to hand over his grain to the elevator, and he was from that time powerless to remonstrate in any effective way with the results that were handed out to him, either as to the quantity or the quality of his grain; and as the farmers maintain, whether rightly or wrongly, they were, under those conditions, forced often to sell their grain at less value than the market price justified. One of the proposals under this Bill, therefore, is to authorize any ten persons to unite together and construct what is called a flat warehouse, where the grain may be housed in separate bins in the name of each owner of the grain, awaiting shipment to a terminal elevator, or such other disposition as the farmer might wish to make of it. One would readily recognize that the shortest, cheapest and easiest way to deal with the grain is to have it weighed, cleaned and distributed through the elevators if the terms were reasonable, rather than have it housed in a flat elevator where the labour of housing it would be greater than placing it in an elevator, and where the labour of removing it to a car would be greater than taking it from the elevator. When this Bill passes, its provisions may be such as to really avoid the necessity for the construction of those flat elevators. That, I should hope would be the result, though, as a relief to the farmers, they are now authorized under this Bill to construct one flat elevator or more, if the commissioner, who is charged with the carrying out of the provisions of this Bill, is of the opinion that more than one flat elevator is wanted. The Bill authorizes the appointment by the Governor in Council of a skilled person, known as a warehousing commissioner, for the inspection district of Manitoba, which would of course embrace Manitoba and the North-west. He also would have the power, under this Bill, to inquire into the various grievances that are now unsettled between the farmer and the elevator man. The difficulty probably arises from this fact: The building of elevators is rather over done. The amount of wheat produced in Manitoba and the North-west is not equal to the capacity of the elevators now in existence. At present the number of the various kinds of elevators is 447, and in the opinion of the commissioners who inquired into the subject, in order to pay a fair dividend on the outlay, each elevator would be required to be filled at least three times during the season. As we all know, the season in Manitoba and the North-west—particularly the remote parts of the North-west—is very short, and the rush is in all cases, to get the grain to tide-water or some point where it can be regarded as cash before the navigation closes in order to avoid the carriage by rail—to get it down to Fort William so as to have it sent to Montreal, Buffalo, New York, or whatever point it is destined for. The time is very short, and therefore the chance of filling the 447 elevators three times during the brief season is not to be hoped for under present conditions. Therefore, the elevator men, I presume, feel that the investment has not been to them as profitable a one as they expected it would be in the beginning. We must all concede that, so far as the opportunities for the buyer and seller to watch the weighing of the grain, the widest and most ample protection should be afforded by some official examination that would prevent anything like a difference of opinion based upon facts. Therefore, this Bill provides that the freest facility must be given to the seller at the time his grain is being weighed. Beyond the general points to which I have adverted, the Bill is replete with very many details which can be much better explained and examined when the House is in committee.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Did I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the building of elevators had been overdone?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. In the report the commissioners put down the number of elevators of various kinds at 447. Two large milling concerns own each between forty and fifty of those elevators. In other cases they are put up by companies, and in some cases by parties who trade in wheat, and when the farmers come the effort is to force a sale to the elevator. Practically, at present the only way the elevator man can be recouped on his outlay is by purchasing the grain and taking advantage of the market.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

EXPROPRIATION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (160) 'An Act to amend the Expropriation Act.'

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—When this Bill was up for second reading the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island expressed some criticism, which I think was fairly well founded, that in Bills of this kind it would be much more satisfactory if, instead of altering one word in a section, where the word was of so important a character, it would be better to substitute the section with the altered word in it. Therefore, instead of the first clause of the Bill reading simply that the word 'six' be struck out and 'five' inserted, without explaining what the object and purpose of the Bill was, I have had it recast in the direction the hon. gentleman suggested. As the House will probably remember from the explanation given when the Bill was up for second reading, it is to adopt the rate of interest in the Bill that, I suppose, will be passed by parliament, reducing it from 6 per cent to 5, so far as government payments are concerned, and in cases where no previous contract or agreement had existed. Under the Expropriation Act, where the government takes possession of a man's land before the final settlement, it is only reasonable that he should receive interest on the amount of the purchase. The rate of interest heretofore has been 6 per cent. It is proposed now to reduce the rate to 5 per cent.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I do not know whether it is the intention of my hon. friend that the effect of this clause should relate back to the time when the money was tendered to the parties from whom the land was expropriated.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It should not affect any transaction now pending.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I fancy the intention of the government is not to make it retroactive, but would point out that the language of the Bill will clearly make it retroactive. By this Bill we now enact, in specific terms, that the principal money shall bear interest from the time the land was expropriated or injuriously affected, at the rate of 5 per cent. It seems to me that the Bill ought to provide that it should bear 5 per cent from the passage of this Act and not from the date of the tender of the money.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think the better way would be to add a clause that the Bill shall not apply to any case where the land had been expropriated before the passing of this Act. I move that the following be added as an additional clause:

This Act shall not apply to any case where the land has been expropriated prior to the passing of this Act.

In all cases where expropriation proceedings have been begun they will get the benefit of the 6 per cent.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED. The hon. gentleman should add 'or injuriously affected.'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, I will add those words.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That might enlarge the provisions of the law beyond what it has heretofore been. Where a property is injuriously affected by a railway running near it, but not touching it, it has been held that the party has not been entitled to recover.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am only referring to cases dealt with by sections 29 and 30.

The amendment was agreed to, and the clause as amended, was adopted.

Hon. Mr. BOLDUC, from the committee, reported the Bill with amendments.

INTEREST ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved concurrence in the amendments made in Committee of the Whole House to Bill (161) 'An Act to amend the Acts respecting interest.'

The motion was agreed to.

The Bill was then read the third time, and passed.

CANADA NATIONAL RAILWAY AND TRANSPORT COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW moved the second reading of Bill (115) 'An Act to incorporate the Canada National Railway and Transport Company.' He said: This Bill is to provide for the construction of a line of railway from Toronto to Collingwood, to connect with a line of steamers, for the purpose of inducing, if possible, a large amount of traffic along the St. Lawrence route to the ocean. It has received the endorsation of the cities of Hamilton, Toronto and Duluth, and is looked upon as an important Bill in this country.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

TORONTO HOTEL COMPANY'S BILL.

AMENDMENT CONCURRED IN.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN moved concurrence in the amendments made by the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce to Bill (114) 'An Act respecting the Toronto Hotel Company.'

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I have considered these amendments, and it appears to me that we are undertaking to do something which we should not do. We are undertaking, by an Act of parliament, to locate a site for an hotel in the city of Toronto. Now, we all know that that is local work. I have the British North America Act in my hand, and if any hon. gentleman can show me that we have the power to do what we are doing by this Bill, I should be very glad to support it. What powers have we ? This matter belongs entirely to the local legislature, and these people simply come here in order that they may obtain power from this parliament, so that the banking and money institutions of the country will invest money in the hotel. When the parliament of Canada undertake to select a site for a hotel in the city of Torornto, they are doing what, in my opinion, they should not do, and I am sure that the hon. Minister of Justice, who knows the constitution and who understands all about this matter, will not give his sanction to anything of the kind. What matters can we legislate on ? The British North America Act tells us that we can legislate on the regulation of trade and commerce, the raising of money by means of taxation, borrowing money, postal service, military service, naval service, and things of that kind. I might go through the whole chapter, and there is not one word that we should legislate about property and civil rights. That belongs to the local legislature altogether, because the Act says : 'Property and civil rights in the province.' That is where we stand exactly. I therefore, move that the said Bill be referred back to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce with instructions to strike out the words:

Bounded on the north by King Street, on the east by Leader Lane, on the south by Colborne, and on the west by Yonge Street.

It is the local legislature that should deal with this matter, if it is to be done at all. They should not come to the Dominion parliament to ask us to do it.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—I will venture to suggest to the hon. gentleman, to save the necessity of referring the Bill back to the committee, that I am perfectly willing that that amendment should be struck out. I was obliged to report the amendment to the House, because the committee adopted it, but so far as the interests of the Toronto Hotel Company are concerned, I am willing that the amendment should be dropped, rather than to send the Bill back to committee. If the hon. gentleman has no objection, I will move that that amendment be not concurred in.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I shall be most happy to accept that suggestion. Drop that amendment from the Bill and it will be perfectly satisfactory to me. As for the remainder of the Bill, we may discuss it on the third reading. I am opposed to the principle of the Bill, but I do not think the other part is so objectionable as this. If the hon. gentleman is willing to drop that first amendment, it is perfectly satisfactory to me, and I hope it will be satisfactory to the people of this country.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman had better change his motion, and simply move that the first amendment be not concurred in.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—The motion has been made by the hon. promoter of the Bill to concur in the amendment. A vote can be taken on that motion.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The motion is to concur in the amendment. There are two amendments, and if you act upon the suggestion of the hon. gentleman from Richmond, then you defeat the second amendment, which is very essential for the safety of the shareholders.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I know there are two amendments, but the proper course is to move concurrence in the amendments consecutively.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—That being the proper course to pursue, I move concurrence in the first amendment.

The motion was declared lost.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN moved concurrence in the second amendment.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I might say, with regard to this Bill, at first blush I was opposed to it ; I considered it should be a measure for the local legislature, but when it was explained to me that there was a doubt to be removed in connection with the Bill which could only be done in this parliament, then I thought it assumed a different phase before the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce. My second objection to the Bill in the committee was that it contemplated appropriating the stock of shareholders of banking corporations without their authority. That was amended by making it necessary that all such subscriptions to the stock of this hotel should receive the approval of a meeting of shareholders before it became binding on the corporation. I thought that amendment removed the most serious objection to the Bill. I must say that the objection taken by my hon. friend did not appear to me to have any great force. I did not consider there was anything unconstitutional in the first amendment, or that it was a matter which called for much discussion; but the important feature was the appropriation by the directors of the stock of the company without the sanction of the shareholders. That was amended by the resolution moved by the hon. leader of the opposition in the committee, and which made the Bill satisfactory to me, and I think to the whole committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—Perhaps if I move the third reading of the Bill the hon. gentleman from Monck will be ready to state his objection to it now.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—There is no hurry about it.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—It has to go back to the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I know it has. There will be time enough. I am sure we will not get away from here for a month yet. Better postpone the third reading until to-morrow.

The Bill was ordered for third reading to-morrow.

COMPANIES CLAUSES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

Hon. Mr. MILLS introduced Bill (X) 'An Act to amend the Companies Clauses Act.' He said: This Bill consists of two clauses. It was introduced in the House of Common by Mr. Gilmour, was considered in committee, and reported, and is on the list of Public Bills, and therefore, is not likely to be reached this session. The Bill is a very proper one, and I thought that it could be introduced here and passed and sent to the House of Commons. The Bill authorizes companies to change their head office, with the consent of their shareholders?

Hon. Mr. DEBOUCHERVILLE—Could they change their head office anywhere, say in the United States for example?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Certainly not. We cannot authorize them to do a thing which is beyond our control. My hon. friend will see that the general Act makes provision, and that this does not in any way alter the general Act in that respect.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Could they change an office from Montreal to Toronto?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, if the shareholders approved.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Would it not also enable them to change their head office from Montreal or Toronto, to London, England?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No, that is outside of our jurisdiction.

The Bill was read the first time.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

MANITOBA SCHOOL QUESTION.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY rose to inquire:

1. Does the government know that the Catholic minority of Manitoba contends that it has been injured in the exercise of its rights with respect to the maintenance of its schools, and that it has demanded, as a remedy for its grievances, three things:
   (a) Separate schools.
   (b) A grant to sustain them.
   (c) Exemption from taxes for the maintenance of Protestant schools?
2. By the judgment rendered on January 29, 1895, by the Lords of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council and by the order in council of Her Majesty the Queen in Council, dated February 2, 1895, is it decreed that the Catholic minority of Manitoba has just grievances, the redress of which, as a question of appeal to be decided, falls within the jurisdiction of the Governor General in Council?
3. Did the Governor General in Council, by an order dated March 21, 1895, order the legislature of Manitoba to modify its school legislation in such a way as to give the Catholic minority in Manitoba:
   (a) The right to construct, maintain, furnish, manage, conduct and sustain Roman Catholic schools in the manner provided for by the Acts which the statutes of 1890 have repealed;

(b) The right to share in any subsidy made out of the public funds for the needs of public instruction;

(c) The right of the Roman Catholics who shall contribute to sustain the Roman Catholic schools to be exempt from all payments or contributions destined for the maintenance of other schools?

4. Has the legislature of Manitoba conformed with these prescriptions of the remedial order?

5. Has not the legislature, on the contrary, answered in the negative:

(a) By a first refusal given on July 25, 1895;

(b) By a second refusal given on December 21, 1895, rejecting an attempt at reconciliation;

(c) By a third refusal of the propositions made by the delegates sent to Winnipeg on March 28, 1896?

6. In the face of this triple refusal, did not the Conservative government propose for adoption by the Canadian parliament certain legislation, called remedial legislation, substituting the Canadian parliament for the Manitoban legislature in the measures of justice to be granted the Catholic minority of Manitoba for the redress of their grievances?

7. On March 22, 1896, did not the House of Commons accept the principle of federal intervention in the settlement of the Manitoba schools difficulty by adopting, by a vote of 112 to 94, the second reading of the Remedial Bill?

8. On April 14 of the same year, did not Sir Charles Tupper read to the House of Commons the following telegram from Monseigneur the Archbishop of St. Boniface, making known the adherence of the Catholic minority to the remedial measure:

Montreal, April 13, 1896.

In the name of the Catholic minority of Manitoba, that I represent officially, I ask the House of Commons to pass the whole Remedial Act as it is now amended. It will be satisfactory to the said Catholic minority, that will consider it as a substantial, workable and final settlement of the school question according to the constitution.

(Sgd.) ADELARD LANGEVIN.

9. Was not the final adoption of the Remedial Bill prevented only by an interminable discussion, which was prolonged until the last days of parliament?

10. In the general elections of 1896, did not the Liberal party make to the electorate the solemn promise to render full and entire justice to the Catholic minority, as appears, amongst other things, by the following declarations published by the press and brought to the knowledge of the voters:

(a) Extract from a speech made by the Hon. Mr. Laurier at Jacques Cartier Hall, in Quebec, May 7, 1896, as published by 'L'Electeur' of May 8, 1896:

(Translation from the French.)

'Do not misunderstand my intentions. I repeat here that I wish the minority in Manitoba to obtain entire justice. It is a principle written in letters of gold in the programme of my party that the rights of the minority must be respected. . . . .

'If the people of Canada bring me into power, as I have a conviction they will, I will settle this question to the satisfaction of all parties interested. I shall have with me in my government Sir Oliver Mowat, who has always been in Ontario, at the peril of his own popularity, the champion of the Catholic minority and of separate schools. I will put him at the head of a commission where all the interests at stake shall be represented, and I affirm to you that I will succeed in satisfying those who are suffering at this moment. Is not Sir Oliver Mowat's name alone a guarantee of the success of this plan?

'And then, finally, if conciliation does not succeed, I shall have to exercise that constitutional recourse which the law furnishes, a recourse which I shall exercise completely and entirely.'

(b) Declaration signed by the Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick:

'Being sincerely disposed to put aside all party spirit and all questions of men, in order to secure the triumph of the Catholic cause in Manitoba, I, the undersigned, promise, if elected, to conform myself to the bishops' mandement in all points, and to vote for a measure according the Catholics of Manitoba that justice to which they have a right by virtue of the judgment of the Privy Council, provided that the measure be approved of by my bishop. If Mr. Laurier reaches power, and does not settle the question at the first session, in accordance with the terms of the mandement, I promise either to withdraw my support or resign.

'(Sgd.) C. FITZPATRICK.

'B. PH. GARNEAU, Priest.
'Secretary of the Archbishop of Quebec.'

(See also House of Commons Debates, 1897, page 163.)

(c) Declaration of the Hon. Mr. Geoffrion, published in 'Le Soir' newspaper, of Thursday, June 11, 1896, reproduced in the House of Commons 'Hansard' of 1896 (2nd session), page 230:

'I am here to make the declaration imposed upon me by my bishop in the mandement which has been read in all the churches of the province. That mandement presses upon the voters the duty of registering their vote only in favour of those candidates who shall take the solemn and formal pledge of supporting an adequate remedial law, restoring to the Catholic minority the rights which have been taken away from them. Now, gentlemen, I am here to publicly make in your presence the declaration imposed upon me by my bishop, and I now take before you a solemn pledge to that effect. I shall vote in favour of a remedial law such as required by the bishops, an operative law restoring to Catholics of Manitoba all the rights adjudicated upon by the Privy Council judgment, but at the same time I declare that I shall see to it that their rights and not crumbs be given back to them, for the Catholics do not ask charity, they are not mendicants, they claim their own rights.'

11. After the general elections, during the first session of the eighth parliament, did not the Hon. Sir Charles Tupper, the leader of the opposition, on August 24, 1896, from his place in the House of Commons, make the following declaration, to be found in the Official Report of the Debates of the House of Commons of Canada, vol. xliii., column 57:

'In the future, as in the past, the cardinal principle with the great party to which I have the honour to belong, will be: Equal justice to all, without respect to race or creed. I am glad to know that the responsibility of settling this question—an important question, although not so gravely important as I had supposed—I am glad to know that the responsibility rests no longer upon my shoulders, but upon those of the hon.

gentleman who is now the First Minister of the Crown. I can only say that I trust and sincerely hope that he will be most successful in obtaining such a settlement of this question as will do justice and give satisfaction to all parties. I can assure the hon. gentleman not only that he has my most cordial wishes for a happy, and early, and fair settlement of this important question, but that anything that I can contribute to that end will be at all times most cheerfully done.'

12. Has the present government availed itself of this offer of the leader of the opposition, and has it profited by it to settle the Manitoba schools question in such a manner as to render justice to the minority?

13. If not, why not ?

14. Did the hon. the Secretary of State, on May 2, 1898, make the following declaration to the Senate:

'Hon. Mr. SCOTT.—The present government have settled the school question with Manitoba. They adopted the same channels to settle that question as the late government did. The late government sent delegates to Manitoba and had a conference and failed to come to any agreement. The present government had a conference with representatives of the government of Manitoba, and they came to an agreement, which was confirmed by the Manitoba legislature, and that is the end of it, so far as the public are concerned.'—(Senate Debates, 1898, page 663.)

15. Was not the Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier reported by 'La Patrie' of September 28, 1899, to have uttered at Drummondville, on September 26 last, the following words :—

(Translation.)

'You know that in 1896 an irritating question was causing trouble in the country. It was a question where religion and politics were confounded. We came into power. We have promised to settle the question in six months. You are witnesses that this promise has been fulfilled to the letter. The school question does not exist any longer, although our friends the Blues seek to bring it up again.'—(House of Commons debates, 1900, March 28, rev. ed., col. 2749.)

16. What is the position taken by the federal executive towards the parties in the case, the government of Manitoba of the one part and the Catholic minority of Manitoba of the other part, in that understanding which was officially announced by the hon. the Secretary of States on May 2, 1898? Is it the position of a judge before whose tribunal the question in litigation had already been brought, and who had rendered a decision known as the remedial order?

17. Did the present government, when holding a conference with the government of Manitoba, simultaneously treat with the other party in the case, the Catholic minority?

18. Was that minority a party to the said conference, and has the arrangement which was made been accepted by the Catholic minority?

19. On the contrary, has not the arrangement in question been repudiated and denounced—

(a) By the head of the Catholic Church;

(c) By the Catholic minority of Manitoba ;

(b) By the episcopate ?

20. Has the government ever taken knowledge of the following words of Leo XIII., in his encyclical letter ('Affari Vos', of December 8, 1897, concerning 'the understanding ratified by the legislature of Manitoba,' of which the hon. the Secretary of State speaks:

'The law which they have passed to repair the injury is defective, unsuitable, insufficient. The Catholics ask, and no one can deny that they justly ask, for much more. . . . . In a word, the rights of Catholics and the education of their children have not been sufficiently provided for in Manitoba.'—(See House of Commons Debates, 1898, column 5338.)

21. Is the government ignorant that the Canadian episcopate has pronounced in an unequivocal manner upon the value of the Laurier-Greenway arrangement, and has it read the following declarations:

(Translation.)

'(a) A new government replaced the old one, and one day we learned that between it and the government of Manitoba an understanding had come about. a compromise had been drawn up.

'This compromise was not the restitution of the violated rights, it was not even an amelioration which might be reconciled with the formal prescriptions of the church. How could the episcopate approve of it? It therefore declared it unacceptable, and the Catholics of Manitoba continued to maintain their own schools at the price of the greatest sacrifices.'

'The agreement effected between the federal authorities of Ottawa and the provincial government of Winnipeg, an agreement to which they would like to give the name of settlement of the school question, is declared' (by the Holy Father) 'defective, imperfect, insufficient, and therefore cannot be accepted as an equitable solution of the question. It is, therefore, with reason that that agreement has been repudiated by the episcopate, and that the Manitoban minority would not submit thereto.'—(Pastoral letter of Mgr. Begin, dated January 6, 1898.)

(See also House of Commons Debates, 1898, column 5342.)

'(b) The negotiations which have taken place between the local authorities of Winnipeg and the federal authorities of Ottawa, have ended in an understanding which is given as the settlement of the grave school question. First of all, I protest against this word settlement. In a question in litigation, nothing is settled if the two interested parties do not agree at all between themselves.

'What is the contract that it is wished to impose upon us?

'The sum of the eight articles concerning religious instruction is the official proclamation of the principle of common and neutral schools. . . . . Let me tell you immediately that common and neutral schools have been condemned by the church. . . . . No Catholic, therefore, can approve of these schools unless he wishes to separate himself from the centre of unity.'—(Sermon of Mgr. the Archbishop of St. Boniface, dated November 22, 1896.)

'(c) As you know, quite as well as I, in spite of so many emphatic promises, the Manitoba school question has not been settled at all according to the rights of honour and justice. The understanding come to between the representatives of the central government of Ottawa and of the local government of Manitoba is only a sacrifice of the rights and interests of our co-religionists of this province, without an acceptable compensation. Also, have not the terms and conditions of this understanding, which is only a cowardly and shameful capitulation, accomplished in the shadows and in secret, been revealed to the public when its authors had acquired the certainty that the enemies of our religion and of our race would aid them to impose upon a minority which had been persecuted and despoiled for six years past. . . . Let it suffice me to draw your attention to the fact that the pretended settlement of the Manitoba schools question does not mean anything definite, but the criminal sanction of the establishment for the Catholics of this province, "of neutral schools," which the Holy Church has always repudiated and condemned.'—(Circular of Mgr. Blais, Bishop of Rimouski.)

'(d) Like my venerable colleagues, I do not hesitate an instant to disapprove of it absolutely myself (the Laurier-Greenway settlement), and I add, with Mgr. Begin, that no bishop will or can approve of the so-called settlement of the Manitoba schools question, which is not definitely based upon anything but an unjustifiable abandonment of the best established and the most sacred rights of the Catholic minority.—(Circular of Mgr. Laflèche, bishop of Three Rivers, February 11, 1897.)

'(e) All the bishops of Canada, after receiving the encyclical, 'Affari Vos,' unanimously repudiated and denounced the Laurier-Greenway arrangement in the terms employed by Mgr. Begin.'

22. Does the government not know that in a memorandum prepared for the Holy See by the Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and signed by him, and bearing date November 23, 1896, it is written:

'The population of Manitoba at the last census was 152,506, of whom 20,571 were Catholics, disseminated over ninety municipalities.'—(See House of Commons Debates, 1898, column 5378.)

And is the government ignorant that out of these 20,571 Catholics of ninety different municipalities, only forty-one Catholics have made known their approval of the present Laurier-Greenway settlement in a document produced before parliament, whilst the Catholics of Winnipeg, Ste. Pierre Joly, Ste. Anne des Chênes, St. Charles, Lorette, Ste. Agathe, &c., have made indignant protests and passed resolutions condemning the pretended arrangement, copies of which protests and resolutions have been laid upon the Table of this House.—(See Document No. 35, second session, eighth parliament, 60-61 Vict., 1897.)

23. In the face of multiplied condemnations, does the government really think that an arrangement to which the Catholic minority has not even been a party, but which was concluded without its necessary participation, without its knowledge, and contrary to its interests, can be considered as an arrangement putting an end to the Manitoba schools difficulty, as the government, by the mouth of the hon. Secretary of State, has declared it to be?

24. Cannot the present government, which has regarded neither pecuniary sacrifices nor the more severe sacrifice of human lives, when it was a question of causing a coercive policy to be adopted, and imposing by force of numbers on a South African people the obligation to grant British subjects advantages which they did not have, now find the moral sense, the energy and the means, and can it not submit itself to the imperative duty of imposing upon those who violate the treaties and misuse the constitution the obligation of respecting both, by granting the British subjects established in Manitoba the exercise of their religious rights, and especially of granting to fathers of families the sacred right of bringing up their children and having them instructed in conformity with the dictates of their consciences?

25. Does the government wish to continue to ignore the decrees of the Privy Council in England and the obligations of the remedial order, which exist in all their force and fulness, or does it intend to put them in force in accordance with the promise so to do, solemnly made to the electorate by him who is to-day Prime Minister of this country, and upon whom is incumbent the duty of safeguarding the rights of the minority and not prostituting the honour and dignity of the Crown?

I may also put the second question now, since it relates to the same subject:

1. Did the Governor General in Council, on the 21st March, 1895, render judgment upon the appeal brought before his tribunal by the Catholic minority in Manitoba, and is that judgment known under the name of 'The Remedial Order?'

2. Did not that judgment order the legislature of Manitoba to do justice to the recognized grievances of the Catholic minority of that province?

3. Has the legislature of Manitoba complied with that judgment, and has it remedied the grievances of the Catholics?

4. If justice has not been rendered to the minority injured in its rights, does the government intend to exact that the judgment rendered shall be executed, and is it going to take the steps to have it executed?

5. The case which this school question cause to rise having been appealed to the Federal tribunal, and a judgment having been rendered by that tribunal, is it not precisely upon that tribunal and upon no other that the obligation falls of causing its judgment to be respected?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I intend that the answer which I shall give the hon. gentleman shall be an answer to the series of questions which he has put and also to those questions which are still on the paper to be put to me, as they relate to the same subject and in order that there may be no misapprehension as to what my answer is, I shall read it to the House for its information. It is as follows: The hon. senator has put to me a very long series of questions containing a great many details. These questions do not relate to matters of information that are within my special keeping, or within the special keeping of the government, but with regard to what has transpired in the legislature of Manitoba, in the parliament of Canada in former times, in the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and in the Privy Council of Canada.

The hon. senator, I think, entirely misapprehends the law of parliament in respect to questions put to ministers of the Crown. Sir Erskine May, in his 'Parliamentary Practice,' says: 'Questions addressed to ministers shall relate to the public affairs with which they are officially connected, to proceedings pending in parliament, or to any matter of administration for which the minister is responsible.' The questions which the hon. senator has put, do not come within any of these provisions of the law of parliament.

If the hon. gentleman is not satisfied with the settlement of the school question in Manitoba, he may, upon a substantative motion, bring the matter before the Senate for discussion. This he has not chosen to do, but to put a series of questions to me, as if I were a witness summoned before him for examination, compelled to answer questions relating to matters that are not before parliament. The matter about which the hon. senator makes inquiry in this long series of interrogatories, is one which led to a very great deal of acrimonious discussion, and to not a little political excitement; and as I am not seeking any official appointment at the hands of the hon. senator, nor do I know that any member of the government is, it is not necessary that I should undertake to pass an examination upon the list of questions which he has submitted to me, and to which he demands an answer. Every member of this House, including the hon. senator, knows something of the discussions that took place on the question of separate schools in Manitoba just as well as they are known to the government. The hon. senator has made long quotations from various speeches and papers, whether accurately made or not, I do not know. Nor is it at all my duty to inquire for the purpose of answering the hon. member's question.

The hon. senator knows what the line of action, which was proposed by a former administration, was. He says that it was approved of by a majority of the members of the House of Commons in 1896. That may be so. But it did not become law. It was made an issue in the elections, and upon that issue those who favoured the policy which the hon. senator favours were, as a ministry, defeated, and a majority returned favourable to a different mode of settlement.

The hon. gentleman ignores the fact that Sir Charles Tupper has said on this subject: 'Under these circumstances, as I say, I find that I attached much greater importance to this question than the result of experience has shown to belong to it.'

Sir Charles Tupper, after the elections were over, also said that he was defeated by the division of his own party on this question, and that 'a large section of independent, intelligent, able men all over the Dominion thought that the government had taken a wrong step, and,' he added, 'I am not going into that question to-night, because it is a dead issue, and is past and gone, therefore there is no occasion to go into it.' The hon. leader of the Conservative party, in stating that it was a 'dead issue,' also intimated that he was not going to fight for a policy which those who were affected by it did not sustain him in pursuing.

In August, 1896, Mr. Taylor, the whip of the Tory party, at Owen Sound, said, 'the Conservative party is now through with remedial legislation.' He said: 'That the circumstances of this campaign were different from the last, as the Remedial Bill was no longer a part of the Conservative policy. Sir Charles Tupper had sent word by him to this effect to the electors of North Grey: That good feeling had now been restored between Sir Charles and Hon. Clarke Wallace and the other anti-remedial Conservatives.' And the Hon. Clarke Wallace said on the same occasion: 'It has been announced that the erroneous policy of forcing separate schools on Manitoba had been abandoned. The gentlemen who lent themselves to this policy were seeing the errors of their ways. He was rejoiced to know it; he would take them back into the Conservative party, and use them well.'

Mr. McLean, Conservative M.P. for East York, in speaking at Henley's school house, Grey County, in August, 1896, said that Sir Charles Tupper had personally informed him: 'We have got rid of the question of the Remedial Bill for ever.'

It is not necessary that I should undertake to discuss the Remedial Order, and the legal objections which may be made to the course of action therein suggested. The hon senator knows what the line of action was that was proposed by the present administration, and acted upon, in conjunction with the government of Manitoba. He knows that the entire Roman Catholic population outside of the city of Winnipeg have come under the provisions of the amended school law of 1897, which superseded the Act of 1890. It is reported to me that there were eighty-one (81) Roman Catholic schools outside of Winnipeg, and that all these have accepted the settlement effected by the Act of 1897, and have no desire to return to the condition of things existing before 1890. In the city of Winnipeg, in principle, the settlement has been effected. There has been some hitch in undertaking to carry out its details. My information is that under the Act of 1897, the trustees of the school in this city have not the power of binding themselves by compact, that none but Roman Catholic teachers shall be employed in certain schools. As a matter of fact, I understand they are prepared to do this, and this is, so far as I know, the only point at issue there, and, indeed, in the whole province.

I have no doubt that if the parties are left alone, this matter will be arranged, and the features of the settlement that may at the present moment be attended with some friction, within the city of Winnipeg, may be safely left to the softening influence of time, and to those concessions being made in a period of quiet which are not so likely to be carried out satisfactorily in a period of excitement. I am sure that the hon. senator's line of action upon this subject cannot be otherwise than injurious to the minority whose privilleges are affected. The course which the hon. gentleman is endeavouring to take, not in the interest of the minority, but most mistakenly with the view of serving the interest of party, is one that is in the highest degree mischievous; and I feel that I best serve the public interest, and especially the interest of the minority, by declining to submit myself for an examination by the hon. gentleman in the various questions which he has proposed, but which are wholly outside of any right that the law of parliament confers upon him.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If the hon. minister, who has just read his written answer, thinks that I am influenced by political motives, and not by a desire to serve the interest of the minority, he is mistaken. If he thinks his assertion is true, I might say that he opens himself to the same accusation in his answer to me. The answer given cannot come from the Minister of Justice, nor from a minister of the Crown; it is the answer given by a man who puts aside all sentiments of justice and fair play to work in the interest of his own political party. That is what he does to-day in this chamber. And what do we see? The Minister of Justice declares himself unable to ascertain if a speech made by the chief of his party, the Prime Minister of this Dominion, has ever really been delivered to the electorate of this country. He is unable to ascertain if declarations made by his colleague in this House, the hon. Secretary of State, are true or false. He is unable to ascertain if the voice of the Catholic minority in Manitoba has been heard in the councils of the nation. He is unable to ascertain all those things, but what he is willing to find out is what Mr. Taylor, Mr. Wallace and Mr. McLean said in different parts of the country. But why does he not tell us that those three men are precisely those who voted against the Remedial Bill in 1896? The principle of the Remedial Bill was adopted in the House of Commons on the second reading, and those three gentlemen, whose remarks have been quoted by the hon. Minister of Justice, are amongst the Liberals who voted against that measure. They were defeated, defeated with the Liberals who opposed the Conservative policy, and to-day the hon. Minister of Justice brings before this House the sayings of those gentlemen to prove what? Is it to prove that justice has been done? No. What does he want to prove? I fail to see; perhaps he does not see himself, but blinded by the interests of his party, he comes with quotations which set forth the views of those who were, like the honourable minister's friends, opposing the measure of justice submitted to parliament. But all what said those opponents are not at all satisfactory answer to the question. I claim that my questions are fully in line with all the authorities on the matter. I have alluded to a public question, and the hon minister ought to know or ought to acknowledge, because he knows better, that this Manitoba school question is still before the government. He ought to acknowledge that the government of this country, acting in a judicial manner, rendered a judgment. Has that judgment been complied with? Is that judgment wiped away now? It still remains, and is still an obligation resting on the ministry of the day, and it is their imperative duty to see that the judgment rendered by the judicial committee of their administration should be complied with. They have addressed themselves to the legislature of Manitoba. Manitoba gave its answer. Manitoba refused on three different occasions to comply with the judgment which has been rendered. That refusal placed the question in the hands of this parliament, and it is now the bounden duty of the ministry to see that the constitution of this country is vindicated—to see that the judgment of the Privy Council, in England, and of their own Privy Council should be executed. They have failed in their duty. They do not want to discharge their duty? True, the hon. Secretary of State told us that the question was settled. settled by whom? By a compromise that took place between whom? Between the government, which was the judge, and the legislature of Manitoba, one of the parties. But where was the other party? Was the other party asked to assent to that compromise? Never. When the delegation, sent by the former government, left Ottawa, in 1896, and went to Winnipeg, to try and make a compromise which would be acceptable to both parties and acceptable to the minority, they failed in their mission, but their instructions obliged them to consult the minority and to assent to nothing that that minority would not be prepared to accept. Nothing of the kind was done by the present administration. This new government made a compromise, but made a compromise behind the back of the minority, against their interest, without asking the interested party to accept or to refuse the compromise. What have we seen? We have seen the Catholic minority rejecting that compromise, and to-day if the hon. minister is not deaf—if he wants to listen to the voice of the minority in Manitoba, he will hear the representatives of that minority crying out that justice has not been rendered yet. He will hear the representatives of that minority telling him that that question has not been settled yet. The hon. minister refers to what took place in the last election in the province of Quebec, but he seems to be mixed up and to ignore totally what took place. In our province the question put before the electors was very clear and well defined. The Prime Minister, at that time the leader of the opposition, said: 'Sir Charles Tupper and the Conservative party have tried to settle the Manitoba school question by a Remedial Bill, but that Remedial Bill was not worth the paper on which it was written. I will do better. I will give to the Roman Catholic minority of that province all its rights and if I cannot succeed by conciliation, I will have recourse to what the law empowers me to do.' The hon. gentleman promised the province of Quebec that he would do better than his predecessors, and the vote of the province of Quebec was given to Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Why? Because he promised to do better than Sir Charles Tupper and the other leaders of the Conservative party. In the province of Quebec all the candidates of both parties were in favour of the remedies that were asked for the Roman Catholic minority in Manitoba. The elections of 1896 were not a condemnation of Sir Charles Tupper's policy. If Mr. Laurier secured a majority in his favour, it was solely because he promised that he would do more than Sir Charles Tupper had done, and yet the hon. minister says that the province of Quebec and the majority in the other provinces condemned the course taken by the late government. It might be that persons who know nothing may, at first sight, look at those elections as a condemnation, but how could they at the same time ignore that the people that were elected were obliged, in order to be elected, to sign a declaration by which they pledged themselves to grant more than was promised by the late government. Does the hon. minister ignore those facts? If he ignores them, he is not fit to occupy the position he occupies as one of the advisers of the Crown.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If he does not ignore them, why does he try to-day, by his answers to serve the interests of his own party against all notions of justice, by a fantastical relation of facts which did not happen? That Manitoba school question brought the hon. minister's party to power. We can see now in what way. The hon. gentleman says no. What was the division in all the Dominion? Setting aside for the moment the province of Quebec, both parties in the rest of the Dominion were about equally divided. The majority gained by the government in the elections of 1896, was composed of precisely the majority obtained in Quebec. That was their position and we see now how their majority was obtained. Will the hon. gentleman now deny that he did not come into power solely by that question? I will venture to make a prediction to the honourable minister; I can tell him that he will go out of power on the same question. His party promised justice. What has it given? It has given us stones in place of the bread promised not only to the people of Quebec but to all the provinces. Those flagrant violations of their most solemn pledges will turn against the Liberal party. The hon. ministers to-day are unable to face the situation. They have failed in all their efforts to try to remedy that question. And why? Because they did not accept the offer made by them by the chief of the Conservative party in the House of Commons, when Sir Charles Tupper rose in his seat in the House of Commons to promise to the Prime Minister to give him all his help to settle that question. Here is without any possible doubt a question of public policy. It was put to the hon. minister, and I ask him why did not the Prime Minister accept this offer? What is the answer of the hon. minister? The only answer he gave was to tell us that Messrs. Taylor, Wallace and McLean have made certain declarations on another subject. We know all that, and it is a very childish answer from the Minister of Justice, who has a reputation to sustain, to come and tell us that the parties who are against the Remedial Bill, who voted against the Remedial Bill, persist in the position they took at the time.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—They took Sir Charles Tupper back into the fold.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—He did not go back into the fold. He wanted and he offered to assist the Prime Minister and the hon. minister refused his help. The hon. minister may laugh, but is there any reason in that laughing? Does he find his smile an intelligent one?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am happy to hear that the hon. Minister of Justice is judge in his own case and that he finds when he laughs that his smile is very intelligent. If any one else does not give him that certificate, at least he finds in his conscience sufficient to tell him that he is intelligent. Where are the others who will find his smiles so intelligent? I tell the hon. gentleman that the stand taken to-day by the ministry will be its own condemnation. They know they have not settled the question. They know they have refused the opportunity they had in their life to remedy the injustices perpetrated against the Catholics of Manitoba. The hon. gentleman might rise once more and recite one of the chapters of the book he has written on the Transvaal. He may boast of the willingness of his government or of the country to run to the Transvaal and take up arms and fight for the Uitlanders there. But we have Uitlanders here in Manitoba, and before going abroad to find grievances to be redressed why did not the government settle similar matters in this country? I was very much amused the other day when the hon. minister said that a burgher had been condemned to pay a fine because he whipped a man, but that the government had taken money out of the public treasury to pay the fine at the expense of the public. But what do we see in this country? Nothing else, or nothing less, when the ministers of the present administration are found remitting fines to persons who have violated the law of the Inland Revenue? When they are remitting such fines what are they doing? They are taking the public money to support their own friends and why? Why should a man who is writing history, who is supposed to have the calm judgment of a historian, should come here and make out a great case against a foreign government when he is doing precisely the same thing? I hope that the government will see its way to do justice. I hope against all hope that the government of the day, containing persons who, one day, pretended themselves so devoted to the interests of the minority, as the hon. Secretary of State, the hon. Prime Minister and the Minister of Public Works, did on more than one occasion will find out what are their present obligations and will be able to fulfil them. Let us all hope that if ever again a man like Sir Charles Tupper offers to aid them they will not commit the blunder to refuse such a help. In 1896, when the present administration came to power, they were offered the best opportunity to settle that school question immediately and for ever. Sir Charles Tupper had made of that school question a plank of his platform when he went before the people. The people who elected the supporters of Sir Charles Tupper had elected men who were naturally disposed to settle that question as the law of the country indicated, and these hon. gentlemen all were in the House of Commons, when Sir Charles Tupper offered his support and the support of his party to settle that question. Not a dissenting voice was heard. I say that the government of the day committed the greatest fault they could commit, in not accepting the aid of Sir Charles Tupper and of his party to settle that question definitely. The question is not settled, and it will not be settled if justice is not done to the minority. It is because they are a minority and have rights that the majority is bound to give them full protection. I hope that the people of this Dominion will see, not only by the events which have taken place, but especially by the answer given to-day by the hon. Minister of Justice, that no justice whatever will ever be rendered to them by the Liberal party. Such is the public declaration, made in this House to-day, by a man who is not, as his title should indicate, a distributor of justice, but who is degrading his position in playing the mean game of party interests.

QUEBEC BRIDGE.

INQUIRY POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day being called:

By the Hon. Mr. Landry:

That he will draw the attention of the government and of this House to the following part of a speech made, on the 27th January, 1897, by honourable R. R. Dobell, one of the ministers in the present cabinet, at a meeting of the Chamber of Commerce of Quebec, published in "Le Soleil" of the 1st March, 1897, and reading as follows:—

'It is the time for you to act,' said he. 'You have a government which is decidedly favourable to you. I do not say that out of political feeling. If you wish to take the initiative in the way of progress, not only in order to build a bridge, but also for the accomplishment of other great enterprises, let me assure you that the government will do more than its part to aid you But, in the case of the bridge, I must tell you that the governement will object to a company in name only; it must have a company in good faith, a company which will give a guarantee to do it duty. I recently learned at Ottawa that great efforts were being made to continue the building of the Intercolonial to Montreal. Halifax is in favour of this project. Now if Quebec does not hasten to build its bridge, the construction of the Intercolonial to Montreal will be accomplished, and then utility of a bridge in front of the city will disappear, perhaps for ever. For the commerce between the West and the Provinces will take this new way.

'Let me tell you that I will not amuse you with false hopes. When I left Ottawa to come down to Quebec, the Hon. Mr. Laurier told me that I could announce to you that the Federal Government will give $1,000,000 for the construction of the Quebec bridge. The city of Quebec will subscribe $500,000: the local government has promised $1,000,000. There, then, are $2,500,000. The railway companies of Canada will subscribe the balance by taking capital stock. . . . . As you see, we can build this bridge as soon as you like, for we have funds ready.'

And that he will ask:

1. Was it in the name of the government and as authorized by it that the Hon. R. R. Dobell put forth the propositions hereinabove enumerated?

2. Was he, at least, speaking in the name of the Prime Minister, and had the latter really charged the Hon. R. R. Dobell to announce what the Federal Governement would do for the construction of a bridge in the neighbourhood of Quebec?

3. Is the extension of the Intercolonial from Lévis to Montreal now an accomplished fact, since the acquisition of the Drummond County Railway and the making of the contract with the Grand Trunk Company for the use of its line from Ste. Rosalie to Montreal?

4. If the extension of the Intercolonial to Monreal is an accomplished fact, what does the governement think of the utility of a bridge at Quebec in face of this general declaration of Mr. Dobell:

'If Quebec does not hasten to build its bridge, the construction of the Intercolonial to Montreal will be accomplished, and then the utility of a bridge in front of the city will disappear, perhaps for ever. For the commerce between the West and the Provinces will take this new way.'

5. Do not the authorities of the Intercolonial at present make, and will they not always make, every effort to secure at Montreal the trade of the West and direct it towards the Maritime Provinces by way of the Drummond County Railway?

6. Has not the policy of the government, in acquiring the Drummond County Railway and thus extending the Intercolonial to Montreal, given a fatal blow to the interests of Quebec, and gravely compromised, in the words of at least one of the members of the government, the question of the construction of a bridge in front of, or in the neighbourhood of Quebec?

7. If the government has decided to seriously aid in the construction of the Quebec Bridge and to promote the commercial interests of that city, is it at least going to give the necessary instructions in order that the Intercolonial shall not persist in turning away from Quebec all the traffic which would pass over the proposed railway if the terminus of that railway were at Lévis in place of being in the very heart of the city of Montreal, that mighty abductor of the traffic from the West?

8. Has the government assured itself as to the amounts of money which are to be furnished respectively by—

(a.) The government of the province of Quebec;

(b.) The city of Quebec;

(c.) The Canadian railway companies which must use this bridge for the passage of their traffic?

9. Does it know that the expectations of the Honourable Mr. Dobell have not been realized, and that the government of the province of Quebec has not been able to give $1,000,000; that the city of Quebec, by its council, has not contributed $500,000; and that not a single railway company has yet subscribed a single penny to aid in the building of the bridge in question?

10. Could not the government, in order to ensure the building of the bridge, ask from parliament an additional grant equal at least to the amount of the differences between the amount of the subscriptions announced by Mr. Dobell and the real amount subscribed or voted by the city of Quebec, the government of the province of Quebec, and the railway companies interested?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I do not know if the hon. minister will find this question is of public interest.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I told the hon. gentleman that I intended the answer which I gave to be a reply to both questions.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It will not apply to the Quebec Bridge.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Neither myself nor my colleagues have received any answer to this question. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will let it stand for a day or two. It was not noticed that it was not a part of the other question.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—There are many other things that the hon. minister has not yet noticed.

The motion was allowed to stand.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (112) 'An Act respecting the safety of ships.'—(Hon. Mr. Mills.)

Bill (108) 'An Act to confer on the Commissioner of Patents certain powers for the relief of J. W. Anderson.'—(Hon. Mr. Perley.)

Bill (120) 'An Act to incorporate the Ottawa, Brockville, and St. Lawrence Railway Company.'—(Hon. Mr. Clemow.)

Bill (116) 'An Act to incorporate Acadia Mortgage Corporation.'—(Hon. Mr. Loughheed.)

INCOMPLETE RETURNS.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I want to direct the attention of the hon. ministers to a return brought down on the 6th June in reply to an address of which I gave notice and which was moved in my absence by the hon. leader of the opposition. It was for a return of petitions, memorials and other communications received by the government since 1885, in relation to branch railways in Prince Edward Island I find that some papers have been brought down, but I notice that most of them are papers that belong to the year 1895, that were brought down long ago, brought down during the time of the last parliament, with some others belonging to the year 1896-7 and 1897, but to my knowledge quite a considerable number of petitions, memorials and other documents that were directed to the Secretary of State, which I should think have reached the government, are not included in these papers. I heard it stated at a public meeting in New London, P.E.I., that a petition signed by some five hundred of that locality on the 6th March last had been read at a public meeting, and sent in to the hon. Secretary of State. I am told that other petitions, one carrying for a branch railway to Crapaud, another to Westgate and several other petitions and documents have been sent to the Secretary of State's Department within the last two or three months. It was not to get these old papers that had long since been brought down, and with which we were perfectly familiar, that I made this motion. It was to get modern documents which relate to the question as it stands at the present moment. I hope my hon. friend will look into the matter.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am quite aware that a number of petitions have been presented, because they passed through my hands and were sent to the Privy Council Whoever got up that return must have omitted applying to the Privy Council. I know there are several of them, because they passed through my hands. I did not, of course, examine the return. I do not examine the returns because there are too many for one person to look over. I will see that the papers are brought down. I know that since the month of March quite a number of petitions have been received.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That explanation would apply to comparatively late petitions, but I cannot conceive how it can explain why this petition from New London, which I know is three years old, and which was made at the time, should have been omitted.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Of course I did not examine this return. I never look at these returns except my attention is called to them. This return evidently was sent to the Railway Department, because I see they are addressed to Mr. Blair. None of the petitions referred to by my hon. friend are included in this return. That is quite evident.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I cannot quite understand why this petition from New London, of which I spoke, and which I think was sent to the government nearly three years ago, having passed through my hon. friend's department, and passed through the Privy Council, is not in the Railway Department. Is it possible that it never was referred to the Railway Department? If the documents in this return come from the Railway Department, and that is all they have, it is clear that this petition from New London, signed by some five hundred persons, has not reached the Railway Department yet. It is a petition praying for a railway from Emerald Station to Stanley Bridge. I think, the petition was sent in as long ago as 1897—certainly as far back as 1898.

TORONTO HOTEL COMPANY'S BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN moved the third reading of Bill (114) 'An Act respecting the Toronto Hotel Company,' as amended.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I have already stated my objection to this Bill. I do not know what the effect of the action of yesterday, in withdrawing one of the amendments reported by the Committee of Banking and Commerce, may be, and therefore I am not going to continue my opposition any further, only to say that I regret extremely that a Bill of this sort has to pass this House. I think the effect will be bad—that the principle is pernicious, and that the precedent will be dangerous. If when the Bank Act was passed some twenty years ago we had incorporated this provision, I do not believe it would have passed. It is a mistake to place the stockholders at this great disadvantage. However, I do not suppose there is any necessity of continuing the opposition further, only I consider it my duty to give expression to the warning I have given so that should the stockholders be affected injuriously by this legislation, the responsibility will not rest with those who have taken the view that I take with respect to the passage of this Bill.

Hon Mr. McMILLAN—The object of bringing this Bill before the Senate of Canada was to enable these monetary institutions in Toronto to take stock in this hotel. The title of the Bill is, therefore, misleading. It reads 'An Act respecting the Toronto Hotel Company.' The title ought to be changed so that any party looking into the matter could more easily ascertain the real object of the Bill. It ought to be called 'An Act for the purpose of empowering certain monetary institutions in Toronto to take stock in a hotel company.' That is really the object for which the Bill was brought here. I do not wish to make a motion to that effect, but I suggest that the Bill should be so amended by the hon. gentleman who has it in charge?

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I agree with the hon. gentleman from Rideau division: I do not approve of this Bill. I look upon it as bad legislation to permit the banks of this country to become interested in the building or running of hotels. My hon. friend from Glengarry (Mr. McMillan) says that the title of the Bill, should be changed. I agree with him. It should be named a Bill to enable bank directors to improve their own property in the city of Toronto and to injure other people who have spent their own money in establishing hotels without assistance from the banks or anybody outside. Hon. gentlemen think they did wonders in the Railway Committee when they provided that the banks must have the consent of the stockholders before engaging in this hotel business That is a step in the right direction, but what does it amount to? The stockholders of these monetary institutions are scattered all over the world. Many of them will not attend, or even send proxies, and we know that these monetary institutions can get anything done that they want. I have an instance in mind now, the Canada Life Company when it came here for legislation. I am a policy holder in the Canada Life. They were to have held a meeting before exercising the power granted them in their Act, and I have never received a notice of such a meeting as the Bill called for. That should be a warning. We say to these banks you must have the consent of the majority of the stockholders. I have no doubt they will get that. It is said the subscription is merely a bagatelle: that any institution can subscribe twenty-five hundred dollars. But the Bill does not say whether they have to consult the stockholders annually or not. It looks to me that any monetary institution which will take stock in this hotel, will have a loss of $2,500 a year, for how long ?

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Twenty years.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I venture to say, in view of what has taken place in this country in reference to hotels, they will not see one cent of return from this investment in that time. It looks to me that if you get the consent of the stockholders once, it is enough—they can keep on subscribing for twenty years. I am not going to show any further opposition to this Bill, but I am opposed to it on principle. It is wrong that the bankers of this country should combine to improve their own property in a certain portion of the city of Toronto at the expense of the stockholders and destroy other people's property when their capital is invested in hotels I would not consider that I was doing my duty if I did not raise my voice against the principle of this Bill. I hope this legislation will not have a bad effect. We have opened the door in one case; when are we going to close it ? Others will apply for similar legislation and this will be quoted as a precedent, but I hope it will not be allowed to be made a precedent. The only excuse the bankers have for coming here at all is to get the privilege of taking stock. All the rest they can get at Toronto. The chairman of the Banking Committee having accepted my amendment yesterday, I am willing to let the Bill go. Those who will live longer than I am likely to live will see the bad effect of this legislation.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time, and passed.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM.

COLD STORAGE ACCOMMODATION BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (152) 'An Act to authorize contracts with certain steamship companies for cold storage accommodation.'

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I was not in the House when this Bill was read the second time and possibly some explanation may have been made, but I should like to be informed, before voting for this first clause, whether the amount proposed to be expended for this service is the same as was paid in former years, or whether this Bill provides for any larger amount.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My hon. friend will see that for the seasons of 1900 and 1901 the amount is limited to $28,750. When this Bill was up for second reading it was pretty well discussed and such information as I could furnish was given. I stated then that the amount expended last year was $45,695, as appeared by the Auditor General's Report. I was asked to give a statement of the number of vessels that would be employed under the provisions of this Bill, and I am advised that they will number five to Liverpool, five to Glasgow and six to London. The six to London belong to the parties who will receive this subsidy, the Allans and Refords. So that practically it means sixteen vessels. In the years 1897-8-9—the three years in which cold storage was in operation and subsidies were granted—there were altogether seventeen steamers employed. The contracts were made for three years under the impression that at the end of that time the companies would find it so profitable that they would continue to furnish cold storage, and so they would had it not happened that the war in South Africa diverted a very considerable number of them, particularly the vessels belonging to the Elder-Dempster Company, to the South African trade. I am advised that the vessels which had been fitted up with cold storage accommodation, that are now on the routes between Montreal and Halifax and British ports, would still continue to furnish cold storage accommodation. The government, however, have no control over the rates on the vessels now on the routes between Montreal and British ports, which had entered into contracts in 1897, as the time has expired. However, they will control contracts made under the present Bill, and it is not at all likely, therefore, that the vessels that have already gone to the extent of furnishing cold storage will charge any higher prices than the rate under the government subsidies. The total number of vessels, as I am advised at present, not counting the Elder-Dempster vessels, a considerable number of which it is hoped will be put on the route when relieved from carrying troops and supplies in connection with the South Africa campaign, under which the government will be able to control the contract, is twenty-three. In addition to that, there are ten steamers still on the route, but the government have no control over the rates of the ten. That would be altogether thirty-three vessels at present engaged on the route between Canada and British ports, having cold storage accommodation. On twenty-three of them the government have a voice in the extra rate charged for cold storage, limiting it, I think, to somewhere about twelve to fifteen shillings a ton. I think that is all the information I could possibly give, that was asked for at the former stage of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—If I understood my hon. friend right, the fleet of steamers equipped with cold storage for the present season will be quite equal to that of former years ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I understood my hon. friend to say that there will be altogether thirty-three steamers equipped under contracts with the government of Canada.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, twenty-three under contract, and ten not under contract, inasmuch as the contracts for those ten had expired.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There is no contract with those ten steamers and they may or may not continue to furnish cold storage.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They do furnish it, but the government have no control over the rates.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Has the government any power to insist that they shall furnish it ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, only they are likely to furnish it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am told that the Furness line, after placing cold storage in one of their boats removed it, although still under contract with the government. The cold storage was merged into the general space although there was actually a contract at the time. What we have now furnished is twenty-three boats under contract with the government, and as regards the other ten, they are equipped for cold storage, but may or may not continue to furnish it. The government is under no contract as to the rates they may charge, but there are arrangements as to the twenty-three boats that my hon. friend has referred to. These boats are not all from Montreal, I suppose : some are from other ports.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I have understood from discussions in another place and in the press, that the amount to be paid by the government of Canada for cold storage this year is largely in excess of former years.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, it is named in the Bill, a sum not exceeding $28,750.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Are not the rates that these steamers are allowed to charge higher than those in former years ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not advised that they are.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I did not expect this question to come up to-day, and have not looked into it carefully. However, when it was discussed elsewhere, I was strongly of the opinion then that owing to the fact that the Minister of Agriculture did not renew those contracts early last autumn, or some time before they had actually expired, having left the matter until now, finds himself entirely in the hands of the steamship owners, and the minister is obliged to come under contracts by which he pays larger amounts than formerly and larger freight rates are charged for the use of this cold storage space in the boats. That is my opinion and I think it is right. I think my hon. friend will find, whatever may be the cause of this over-charge to the government and to the producers of this country,—whether due to the negligence of the Minister of Agriculture or to other causes that the charges for this year are very much higher for the same service than they were in former years. While calling the attention of the House to this point, I wanted also to ask my hon. friend what the government are doing in this connection in furnishing communication by steam from the port of Charlottetown to a British port. We were promised two years ago that we were to get five departures from the port of Charlottetown. In 1898, three departures were made. I remember very well when the mayor of Charlottetown and the president of the board of trade, and other gentlemen came up here to press the matter upon the ministers, that they were confronted with the inquiry as to what the trade would actually be—what freights would be furnished, and before the government would be prepared to go into the question of subsidy, or encouraging the placing of steamships on that line, they wanted to have some assurance from those who had the right to speak with authority in Charlottetown, as to what the trade would likely be. Representations were made on that point and made very modestly, and it turned out when the steamers came, there was more freight offered than they were able to carry. Three trips were made and I had the satisfaction of being able to compliment the Secretary of State and the government across the floor of this House last year on the very great success that had attended the departures of these steamers from Charlottetown during the season of 1898, and of expressing the great regret that was felt there that the full complement of five trips had not been furnished. Last year the government promised that we would get the five trips, but they dwindled down to one, and there was a great deal of dissatisfaction and a great deal of loss caused thereby to shippers who had actully provided cargoes for one or two subsequent departures after the Lake Huron left Charlottetown. A great deal of loss was occasioned by the failure to furnish the other departures from that port. The experience we have had in regard to those ocean steamers from Charlottetown has been highly satisfactory, so far as providing cargoes is concerned. It has been proved, beyond a doubt, that cargoes can be furnished on short notice for at least six departures between summer and autumn, and it has given us a better market for the products of that province and proved in every way advantageous. In connection with this question of cold storage, I may say also the departures we have had have not been satisfactory, in this respect—at least two of them, the steamer Gaspesia, although ostensibly provided with cold storage, was not provided with anything that was entitled to the name, and shippers who had been led to believe that they were having their perishable goods carried by cold storage, were really deceived in the matter, and very serious loss resulted in consequence of that. The cold storage facilities on the Lake Huron were not up to the assurance given in that respect. However, I shall call my hon. friend's attention to this subject on the third reading of this Bill. There is a great deal of interest felt on this question in Prince Edward Island. It scarcely can be conceived by gentlemen that do not live on the island how heavy the freights are to us to make connection with any steamer, whether at Halifax or at St. John. We encounter a short haul rate in Prince Edward Island,and another rate on the steamer connecting with the mainland. Until very recently they would not give a through rate at all. And then we encounter a short haul rate on the Intercolonial Railway, so that the rate to be paid before we get to Halifax and St. John is more than the people of the western part of Ontario have to pay. They can really get their products carried to these ports at a cheaper rate of freight than we have to pay. It seems almost intolerable, considering we are so near these ports, that this should be the case, but we have been protesting and pleading for better rates, and have not got them yet. I can assure my hon. friend that four or five departures from a port in Prince Edward Island of good steamers, furnished with cold storage, will be of incalculable benefit to the people of that province. I wish to impress that upon my hon. friend. It is early yet in the season, but it is not so essential that we should get these departures at this season of the year if they begin in September and follow to the close of navigation, they are what will meet the requirements of the province, and I hope my hon. friend will take early action in the matter and that there will be the required departures from Charlottetown during the present season.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Referring to my hon. friend's remarks, in which he seems to criticize the action of the Minister of Agriculture, charging him rather with an omission of duty, I think it will be in the memory of hon. gentlemen that when the proposal was first made in 1897, it was announced publicly that the contracts were made only for three years. It was predicated on the assumption that, having given a bonus for that period of three years, the vessels having been fitted up, it would be in their interests to continue the trade, and therefore the government, in 1897, did not contemplate that those subsidies were to continue. It never was announced as a part of the government policy. I recollect distinctly what was said when the question came up in 1897. And therefore, it can scarcely be said that the Minister of Agriculture had omitted or forgotton to renew the contracts. He had not intended to renew them. It was not part of the public policy to do so. The war in South Africa disturbed matters very much, because it was the cause of withdrawing from the Canadian trade a very large number of vessels. I think all the Elder-Dempster vessels are still engaged to carry supplies to South Africa, and it would be scarcely fair to hold the hon. Minister of Agriculture responsible for an event which he could not possibly have foreseen. The destination of the new vessels, as I am advised, would be six to London, five to Liverpool, and five to Glasgow. There is a contract existing with the Manchester line, and they carry from Montreal to Manchester. There are three vessels from Halifax to London and there is one from Halifax to the West Indies. I fully appreciate all that my hon. friend has said in reference to Prince Edward Island and to the value of developing the trade. No doubt Prince Edward Island is admirably adapted for the production of two important articles, cheese and butter, and the exports from that island stand very high in point of value. My hon. friend remembers that when he brought up the question in 1898 and 1899, there really was a serious difficulty in getting a vessel to call at Charlottetown. The argument my hon. friend used was, that a full cargo could not be obtained there. I think that was shown to be without foundation. But we were obliged to give $1,000 extra to the vessels that called at Charlottetown. I do not know whether it continued last year, or whether it was limited to 1898. I shall certainly call the attention of the hon. Minister of Agriculture to my hon. friend's observation, and I sincerely hope there will be a proper supply of vessels for any cargo that may be at Charlottetown. I can quite recognize the handicapping it is to have the cargoes sent to Halifax. It must be a considerable charge, and must depreciate the goods, because there is no cold storage between those points, because taking such perishable products as cheese and butter out of the cold storage and having them exposed to the atmosphere for a time, would very seriously affect their quality, and I shall be glad indeed if the hon. gentleman would make arrangements to meet the wishes of his friends.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I suppose the hon. Secretary of State could ascertain before the third reading of the Bill whether the charges, as intimated by my hon. friend on my right, are to be higher under the present subsidized steamers than under the former. That is information which it would be well for those more particularly interested in the trade to know. There is another remark which fell from the hon. gentleman which was rather surprising to those who have watched events as they are passing, and who have paid any attention to the boasting of the Minister of Agriculture and many others on behalf of the government of what they were doing in the way of cold storage in order to assist the producers to place perishable articles on the market in such a state as to command the higher prices. The hon. gentleman has told us that the contracts formerly made would expire at the end of three years, and that it was not the policy of the government to continue those contracts. That justifies the charges which have been made over and over again against the government of neglecting to do that which was most in the interests of this country, and if the statements which have been made in the public press, and by persons who have denied them, that nearly three quarters of a million has been lost to this country from the time that the subsidies that were paid to the steamers that were obliged to procure cold storage, and the time at which they were renewed would be fully verified by the statement made by the hon. gentleman. The hon. Minister of Agriculture himself confessed, in the debates of the other House, that he neglected to attend to his duty, and that the result had been that this great loss has accrued to the farming community, and to the dairy interest especially. The excuse made on his behalf is that it was not the policy of the government to continue this cold storage and consequently was not personally responsible for that neglect. It is well that the statement has been made, and in future we may not expect to hear from ministers such boastings as have taken place in different parts of the province, of what they had done in the agricultural and dairying interests in this particular. If I understand the position of the government at the present time, it is that the contracts which were entered into with steamers for procuring cold storage expired, that they were not renewed, that those steamers which were subsidized, and which had furnished the cold storage, are not now to receive any subsidy under this Act, for the reason, I suppose, that they have been, in the opinion of the government, amply repaid for expenses which they occurred in placing cold storage in their vessels, but that they have now subsidized some twenty-three additional ones. That would be twenty-three additional to the ten which were formerly subsidized, and which are supposed to have the present cold storage. That is what I understood the hon. gentleman to say, that ten were formerly subsidized, which had furnished the necessary requirements for carrying goods in their vessels in cold storage, that the contracts having ceased they were not renewed.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—More than ten.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Ten not renewed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am dealing with what the hon. gentleman says, and that is, that these ten are not to be re-subsidized, but are supposed to be charging what they please for carrying perishable goods, which is quite correct, because if the government give them nothing, they have no right to control the rates. But, with twenty-three additional steamers, which the hon. Secretary of State says have been subsidized, it is their duty to regulate the rates which are to be charged for carrying goods.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is quite correct.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Will the hon. gentleman inform us, before the third reading, what the rates are, whether they are higher than were charged on the steamers subsidized in 1897, or about the same?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think they are the same. I will get more positive information. I was told by Prof. Robertson that the extra charge per ton for cold storage was fifteen shilings. That is the addition to the regular freight rates, which we do not control. We simply control the charge for the cold storage, and I am advised by Prof. Robertson that we are still largely below the rate charged from New York.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does the hon. gentleman say that the rate is to be fifteen shillings per ton in excess of the regular rate, or fifteen shillings per ton in excess of what was charged by the companies formerly subsidized?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, it is fifteen shillings per ton over and above the ordinary freight rate. I will verify my statement as to that. It may be a few shillings more or less than that this year, but that is what they have been paying.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Is the charge for cold storage space under this new contract greater than the charge under the three years contract which has expired?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will answer that question on the third reading.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am surprised to hear, on the authority of Prof. Robertson, that the charges are less than from New York, because it is a matter of constant complaint among Canadian shippers that we pay very much higher rates from Canadian ports than are charged from United States ports. I know that in Nova Scotia the fruit-growers last year found they could actually send apples by the trains and the boats to Boston, and ship them from Boston at a cheaper rate than they could ship them from Halifax, although the Furniss line are largely subsidized.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I said from New York. I did not mention Boston.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I mentioned Boston because it was the port through which these shipments were made, but the general impression among shippers is that the charges from New York are very much less than from Canadian ports.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

A SUPPLY BILL.

FIRST, SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (179) 'An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the public service for the financial year ending June 30, 1900.'

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved the second reading of the Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not think there will be any objection to the motion. This is the third Supply Bill we have had this session.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I thought His Excellency would sanction the last two Bills at the same time.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is well that the House should know what is in the measure before the second reading takes place. I will not say that this Bill is an extravagance. In the Department of Agriculture they want an additional $36,000, for the Paris exposition. Can the hon. minister give us any information as to the probable cost in connection with that exposition ? It seems to me, from what I can learn from the debates on the estimates which have already been placed before us, that it will amount to from half to three quarters of a million: whether we are going to receive a benefit commensurate with that amount of money can only be ascertained in the future. Then there are other items here, printing for Patent Record, $4,500 ; superintendents experimental farms, $8,000; drainage at Agassiz, $4,000. I suppose that is the Experimental Farm in British Columbia. Then there is the purchase of books and publications for patent library, etc, $673. What books are these which are necessary to be purchased in connection with the patent library ? I supposed there was sufficient information in connection with a department that has been in operation for so many years without additional works. Then there is the fumigation of stations or nursery stocks, $1,600. That is a good expenditure. Then, under the head of quarantine there is an item for tuberculosis. Immigration, $75,000 in addition to what we have already expended. Militia and Defence, $125,000. That is for the annual drill. Further amount required for the June camps. Can the hon. gentleman tell us the amount that will be required for the camps during the present year for militia purposes ? Repairs to sheds, $500. Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa, balance due contractors for construction of laboratory, etc., a total of $4,600. Then there is $6,000 to be paid for the commission in reference to the half-breed claims, in other words Mr. Côté and Mr. Dionne, civil servants, are paid regular salaries and are to be paid another $3,000 in connection with the investigation of the half-breed claims. I suppose their salaries, as civil servants of this department, were continued and paid during this time.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—With regard to the Patent Record, the expense incurred in the publication of that, of course, was charged against the expenditure of the department, but the revenue received from the publication of that Record is handed over as a portion of the public revenue, and I understand the revenue will far more than pay the expense associated with it; so that in reality it is a question of book-keeping. If they were allowed to retain the money derived from the publication of the Record there would be really a surplus. But it is paid into the public revenue, and the charges made is for the actual cost of publication.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, this is for the purchase of books.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am speaking of the Patent Record, the item before that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not find fault with that.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am making this statement to show that it is not really an addition to the public expenditure, but as the Record increases in bulk and the amount of engraving connected with it increases, of course it will increase the cost from year to year, or will diminish it. With regard to the purchase of books, I understand that Mr. Kaye is a permanent official connected with the patent office, that the books required have really been purchased by himself, and they have been in use there for some time, and so it was only fair to him to take over the books relating necessarily to carrying on the office of the department and to pay him for them.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Are they placed in the library archives and become the property of the government?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Then there is the Paris exposition.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, and the militia charges. I understand that the charges of the campaigns for this year will be somewhere in the neighbourhood of $50,000. The leader of the opposition speaks of our expenses in connection with the Paris Exposition as being between half and three quarters of a million. I do not think the cost will be one-half of the smallest sum he has mentioned. I need not discuss that now, but my hon. friend will have an opportunity of fully considering it when the main estimates are before us. With regard to immigration, I feel that there is no expenditure made by the government that is more defensible than the expenditure on immigration.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—We spent millions of money in the building of railways through the Great Lone Country in the west. We did that for the purchase of furnishing facilities for those who would enter that country for the purpose of taking up land and making the country their home and becoming Canadians. That can only be a proper expenditure upon the condition that the country will be settled up and that the railways will be utilized for traffic and travel, and that they will assist in developing that country. We have a great many people who come to this country at the present time who are not wealthy, some of whom we are obliged to assist, but they have become good settlers. They are being gradually incorporated into the population of the country. We are not establishing additional and distinct communities to those that already exist within our borders, but we are introducing into the country people who are becoming merged into the existing population. I remember last year, when I was up at Yorkville, among Doukhobors and Galicians, who had been in the country for only a short time, most of them for a less period than a year, and there were children ten and twelve years old to whom one could speak in English, who understood a little English and were capable of answering in the language of the country. Of course their English was not always excellent, but they were rapidly learning, and I said to myself at the time 'those boys and girls, by the time they grow up to be men and women, will know nothing of the country from which they came and will be as completely Canadians as those born in this country.' We have an area of three million square miles of territory, the greater portion of which may be occupied either as mining territory or for agricultural purposes, and it is of the greatest importance, in my opinion, to secure the settlement of that country. We make our country defensible by the settlement of those unoccupied lands and by the cultivation of the spirit of patriotism which is abroad in the country. We are doing the best to make it a permanent portion of the great empire of which we are a part, and so far as I am concerned, I rejoice to see people coming from the British islands, from the neighbouring republic from the continent of Europe, all actuated and animated by the same spirit, to cast in their lot with those who are already in the country and to contribute towards the increase of its wealth, its commerce, and its influence. So that if my hon. friend will look at the large number of people who have come here, and the growth of our commerce which is an indication of the fact of their being here—because they are contributing to swell the amount of products,—he will see that there is no money appropriated for any purpose that will yield a more satisfactory return than that which has been expended on immigration.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—I also earnestly hope that the Minister of Justice's anticipations with respect to the absorption of foreign immigation into the great body of the people may be fully realised. I very much doubt it myself. It has not been the experience of the United States. We know that the labour troubles and other disorders that have occurred in that country have almost invariably been traced to the foreign elements there—the Hungarians, Poles and others who have come out, in some instances largely induced to do so by the employers of labour, and who certainly had not amalgamated to any extent with the native population of the country, and are confessedly, by the people of the United States themselves, found to be in many parts of their country a very turbulent element of the population. I quite agree that money could not be better spent than inducing people to come out to this country and settle upon the extensive and splendid lands of Manitoba and the North-west, but I should very much prefer to see that immigration more largely composed of people from the British Islands than from the continent. As to making the country more defensible, I do not know that we can get much from the Doukhobors, beause they never take up arms.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There are two means of defence. There is production as well as fighting.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—I hope, for the future at all events, we shall see a much larger proportion of our own English speaking people coming out and settling in the North-west than has been the case within the last year or two, and fewer from these foreign elements on the continent.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—I am very much pleased to hear what fell from the hon. Minister of Justice, because I know, from what he has said, there will be nothing done to increase the tax on Japanese and Chinese. They are honest, sober people. They have not settled in this country, because they have not been able to bring their wives with them. We tax their wives and they cannot afford to bring them, and as our women will not marry them, eventually they go back to their own country. They are honest. They do not drink, and they have every element to make them good labourers. Therefore, instead of increasing the tax I should prefer to see it removed entirely, and let Chinese be admitted in the same way as Doukhobors and Galicians. We pay large sums to encourage the immigration of people who are not nearly as useful labouring men as the Chinese. I do not know that the Chinese have learned to drink, but they will likely do so after they acquire the virtues of Anglo-Saxons. The Chinese take opium. When they do they sleep and do not paint the town red as Anglo-Saxons do. I am very much pleased to hear what the Minister of Justice has said, and I am sure the hon. gentleman from Sarnia will join me in congratulating him on his speech.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I cannot take the view the Minister of Justice does as to the assimilation of the foreign elements in the North-west. My hon. friend is willing to postpone that happy consummation of affairs, apparently, until the second generation grows up and the children become qualified to adapt themselves to the condition of that country.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I did not say that.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My observation has been, with most of those foreign elements, that it is utterly impossible to have them apply themselves to the development of the country the same as the Anglo-Saxon and French speaking races who settle there. It has always appeared to me that the action of the Department of Immigration, whether under this government or under the late government, has been impelled by anything but an intelligent force. It has always seemed to me, and I speak now after a close observation of the action of the Department of the Interior, or Department of Agriculture when immigration belonged to that department, that the transportation companies, particularly the steamship companies, were the force behind the immigration policy of the Dominion government. Almost every year one will observe in the public press that the agents of the transportation companies have met in the city of Montreal, or elsewhere, and decided practically on a policy of immigration to this country. Hon. gentlemen who have acquainted themselves with this very large question cannot fail to be aware of this fact. Now, what is the object of these transportation companies—those interesting themselves in so large a subject? Not that this country may be settled by an intelligent class of people from foreign countries, but rather, that they may be able to participate in the profits which must necessarily ensue from the transportation of large bodies of settlers from the most distant points. We know that the most distant points where immigration can be secured will result in the largest compensation to the companies to which I have alluded. It is very seldom that you find railway companies in the Dominion interesting themselves in this great question. Why? Because it does not mean the same large source of revenue to them that it does to the steamship companies. What is the result? The best class of settlers this country could secure are naturally omitted from the programme of the government. I say it advisedly, there are several millions of Canadians to-day in the United States, who could be induced to become settlers in the Dominion of Canada if the same expenditure for transportation and expenses were made.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—Why did the Canadians leave Canada?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Because they thought they could better themselves in the United States, but they found their mistake. The reason they are not repatriated is that no adequate effort has been put forward commensurate with the task to induce them to return to the Dominion. The very best settlers who are going into the North-west Territories are Canadians who settled a generation or so ago on the other side of the International boundary. The men who are possessed of the best experience—the settlers who have the most capital to invest in the North-west to-day among the various classes of settlers coming in, come from the United States. I regret very much to see that there is not the same expenditure of effort and capital made to secure those people as we find expended in securing foreigners from Europe. I am not captious in finding fault with the course that is pursued by the government in bringing in foreign settlers, but I point out a fact, which has obtruded itself on the attention of people in the North-west, that the steamship companies have been for some years past at the bottom of the immigration policy, not only of this government, but of the last government, and they did not care what class of immigrants they got, or where they settled, whether in Canada or the western states. I therefore simply suggest to my hon. friend opposite that this is a matter worthy of consideration. It cannot be impressed too strongly on the government that the attention of the government of Canada cannot be too strongly called to the necessity of expending more effort amongst those in the United States who are anxious to settle in Canada, and who, I may state, could be secured by thousands if attention were directed to the advantages of this country, and any inducements of settlement presented to them.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—I have no doubt the hon. gentleman from Calgary will be glad to hear that Preston, who has been on the other side of the great fish pond to secure emigrants from Europe, will likely be on the other side of the border, when the election investigation comes on, and will probably be able to get some of those desirable immigrants.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—It is unfortunate that we have not had this Bill distributed before this discussion. I am very much obliged to the leader of the opposition for mentioning the items which the leader of the House failed to give us when he introduced the Bill. In reference to the question of immigration, it appears to me that the interests of Canada will be served better by the public men of the Dominion paying more attention to the reputation and character of our immigrants than to the number they bring into the country. I do not think that it would be in the best interests of Canada that we should flood our country with an undesirable class of immigrants. The hon. leader of the House referred to the charming and interesting Doukhobor girls and boys he met in the North-west. I take it that their knowledge of English has been brought about by these people being mixed up with the English speaking classes; but if you bring large colonies of Doukhobors, Galicians, or other foreign speaking people into the country, and place them in colonies by themselves, they will keep up their own language and become a source of weakness to Canada instead of a benefit. However, that is not the question I rose to speak of. It is the $30,000 that is asked for the Paris Exposition. I think the House is entitled to a little explanation in reference to that subject. We know that the head of our department in the exposition is controlled by the Minister of Public Works, a gentleman occupying a position, which one would suppose would have demanded his full attention and effort to manage it thoroughly, and represent in parliament. I heard that my hon. friend from New Brunswick was to be appointed to that position some months ago, and I am sure he would have filled the position in a satisfactory manner. The Minister of Public Works should have been retained in his position here, and be in his place in parliament to answer for his department. I am sure if my hon. friend from New Brunswick occupied that position to-day, he would give greater satisfaction and inspire greater confidence in the people of Canada than the present representative. What do we see in the press? That the present commissioner in Paris—I do not know what he insisted upon for Canada, whether it was to be recognized as a separate nation or not—but he threatened to lock up the Canadian section of the Paris Exposition unless his department was placed in a different position from that of other portions of the British empire. He brought the president of the French Republic to his knees and made him apologize. He did not exactly succeed in carrying out his policy with regard to the opening of the doors on Sunday: the pressure was too strong from Canada for that. The Paris Exposition is likely to prove expensive: $50,000 was granted a little while ago; $30,000 is granted now, and we should know something more about what Mr. Tarte is going to do, and what the money is required for, and how much more money will be required and if it is really his intention to close up the exhibition until he can have his views prevail in every instance.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I suppose this Bill applies more to Manitoba and the North-west Territories than to any other part of Canada. There has been a disposition on the part of some people in the North-west Territories to ask for moneyed men to come to the country. If the immigration were of that character we would not have enough labourers. So far as my observation goes, in East Assiniboia, and I have endeavoured to look over the situation favourably, I find that a good labouring man is about as good a settler as you can bring to the country. In harvest time, if it were not for the efforts generously made by the Canadian Pacific Railway in bringing people from Ontario into the country for a small fare, we could not possibly run our farms, and a great deal of the crops would be lost. I have seen a good many of the Doukhobors in my district. I do not hesitate to say that although they do not speak our language, they are nevertheless good workers. I have not had any of them on my farm, but one of them worked on a farm near mine last summer, and he was the best man employed on that farm. The Galicians are a class by themselves. They have good horses and stock and are doing well. If we encourage a good labouring class of people to come to this country, we are getting about as good immigrants as we can secure. A man might have a pocketful of money, but if he could not hold a plough or feed stock, he would not amount to much in the North-west. We cannot expect all our people back from the United States, because those who emigrated there in years past were young men full of enterprise, and they occupy positions which were not available at the time in Canada. They have made money and have acquired good positions in the United States, and I do not believe you could get one of them back again. A few years ago, a gentleman in my town was appointed, partially through my efforts, to go down to Minnesota to secure quite a number of French settlers who had gone there from Quebec. He brought some fifteen or twenty back with him, and I think they have all gone back to the United States again. They did not prove to be half as good setlers as people coming from Europe. Take an Englishman or Scotchman who comes to the North-west; he is not as good a settler as a Canadian, because he does not understand the work as well. There is quite a large colony of Germans in my district, and they are the best settlers we have there now. They were very poor when they came, but they have, by industry and frugality, got on very well, and they supply a good class of labour that we could not possibly do without to-day. I am in favour of the government bringing in working classes. No doubt there will be a certain number of inferior characters amongst them. We find it with our own people, but on the whole, so far as I am concerned, I think a good class of working men, whether they speak English or not, would be desirable. I would say further, that if there were some attention paid to securing servant girls it would be a great advantage to that country. We find it very difficult in the North-west to get help of that kind, and it is a great want in the North-west to-day. Girls would get plenty of work, good pay and husbands. I want to call the attention of the government to this fact: they are spending large sums of money to bring immigrants into the country. Along the lines of railway the lands are occupied, or in the possession of the railway companies, and consequently are not available for poor people to settle on, and those people have to go to more remote districts. They must have roads and bridges built to give them facilities to get to the railway stations. We have now a good school system in that country that requires a good deal of money to maintain. The point I want to make in this connection is that the government should furnish our North-west government with ample funds to educate those people and place them on an equality with other settlers, by furnishing them with roads. A man who is living far from a railway is at a great disadvantage in the North-west and requires a better road than the man living near by. A matter of equal importance to bringing settlers into the country is this question of roads. I hope when the estimates come in next year, whatever government is in power, they will have an appropriation made for this purpose.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—In the matter of immigration I heartily agree with the hon. gentleman from Wolseley. I think he has taken the right view of the matter. The government of the day deserves all credit from the people of Canada for the class of immigrants they are bringing into the North-west. At no time in the history of that country has there been so large a number of immigrants and of such a desirable class as during the last two years. The hon. gentleman from Calgary refers to the number of Canadians residing in the United States and the desirability of repatriating them. Last year about the largest number of immigrants we have had coming into Manitoba and the North-west came from the United States through the efforts of the agents appointed by the Immigration Department. As a member of the late government of Manitoba, interested in the matter, I know what has been done by the department in that regard. The best immigrants we get are from the United States. A large number of them are Canadians who are returning to Canada. I noticed only two weeks ago, while up west, a number of those people coming over into our country to become prairie farmers. I noticed at one place, which until recently was considered unfit for settlement, where an immigrant from the United States had taken up two sections, and had ten teams at work breaking up the land. A large portion of the vacant lands south and west of Winnipeg is being occupied by settlers from the United States. Some reflection has been thrown on the Doukhobors and Galicians. I have simply to repeat what has been stated by the hon. gentleman from Wolseley when he commends the government for the class of people they have brought into the country. Those who disparage the Galicians and Doukhobors do not know what they are talking about. They cannot know those people, I can corroborate what has been said by the Minister of Justice, when he speaks of the children he met at Yorkton? Doukhobors who have only been in the country three or four months speak fair English. Those people want to get away from the old world and become citizens of Canada. That is particularly so in the case of the Galicians. I have conversed with many of them who had been only a few months in the country, and they spoke good English. We in Manitoba have no objection to the class of immigrants being brought into the country. They are poor, but they are able to take care of themselves, and there is no class of people who can assimilate themselves to the conditions which prevail in our province as quickly as the Galicians. They are all industrious. The women work as well as the men. All you have to do to settle a Galician in that country is to put him on land with a sack or two of corn meal or flour. He sets up poles and builds a mud house, and the Galician himself works out to earn money and procure supplies that could not otherwise be had. Last year's harvest could not have been saved had it not been for the Doukhobors and Galicians, notwithstanding the fact that some 10,000 people from Ontario were brought up to help us. These immigrants have been settled by the government in separate sections of Manitoba—that is the Galicians, because the Doukhobors are all in the North-west Territories, though some come down to work in Manitoba. But the Galicians have been settled in a portion of the province of Manitoba that would not have been occupied or taken up by people from the United States or by Canadians. It is a rough country, but I have no hesitation in saying that these people will make prosperous farmers, and in a very few years will be not only independent but wealthy, because they are all workers and they are great people to take care of stock. About the first thing a Galician does when he earns a little money is to buy a cow. They take such care of their cattle as people here would take care of thoroughbred horses. They groom them and keep them in good shape. I have no doubt that large sections which would not be settled for many years by people from the United States or Canada will be settled by those people, and will be converted into prosperous settlements. I cannot understand how any person coming from the west, who has any knowledge of the immigration work that has been going on for the last fifteen years, can criticise the government for the way they are handling that department to-day. In no year in the history of the country has the immigration work been conducted so well as during the last two or three years. Everything has been favourable towards them. It was probably just the right time to make an extra effort to induce people to come to this country, and I desire to say here now that this class of people who have been talked about, the Doukhobors and Galicians, have not cost as much per capita to bring them into this country as the ordinary immigrant from the United Kingdom. Take the Doukhobors; the amount of money paid to the steamship company was given directly to the Doukhobors. It was not paid to the steamship company, and that was set aside to assist the people after they came to the country. That has worked well. I would also say that other desirable settlers we have in Manitoba, that is being assisted by this present government and was assisted by the Manitoba government are the Icelanders. I might say, in connection with that work, in one year the Manitoba government saw fit to make an advance of $7,000, to bring some Icelanders to this country. To the credit of those people, every dollar, within a few hundred dollars, of that seven thousand dollars has been repaid. They are a desirable class of people, and too much attention cannot be paid to the settlement of our Canadian North-west with such settlers. Some people say we had better have a good class than numbers. I do not think any fault can be found with the class coming there and the numbers are not too great. In fact, we have room for millions. The efforts that have been made of late will be fully appreciated by the people of the North-west, and that must be satisfactory to the people in the east, because it appears to me the future of Canada depends to a great extent on the settlement of the North-west. The people of Canada have undertaken great burdens for the purpose of opening up and developing that country by building railways, and as has been said by the Minister of Justice, the only way they can be repaid is to have that country settled at an early date.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am not sufficiently acquainted with the success of the importation of the foreign elements of population into the North-west Territories within the last two or three years to give opinions of my own upon the subject. I understood the hon. gentleman from Manitoba (Hon. Mr. Watson) to say that they are the best class of immigrants that have been brought into that country for a long time, and that the introduction of them had been a success, and that they had repaid the amount advanced in connection with them——

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I referred to the amounts advanced by the local government to assist Icelanders. I was giving an illustration of what might be derived from assisting good people, and I did not say that the Galicians and Doukhobors were the best classes. I said the people who came to Manitoba were the best classes on the whole.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I understood the hon. gentleman's remarks were complimentary to the Doukhobors, the Galicians and the immigrants generally brought into the North-west within the past two years.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I must say that my hon. friend's testimony is quite different from what we see in the press, and what we hear from the representatives of the North-west generally. My hon. friend from Wolseley, certainly says that some of those with whom he has come in contact work well on the farms on which they are employed, but the testimony as to their moral character and their adaptability for facing the conditions which exist in the North-west is not at all in accordance with what my hon. friend has stated. As showing that this movement has not been so very successful, and that the foothold that has been obtained in that country for these people is not so great as my hon. friend represented it to be, I may mention the fact that the government of this country has had to invoke the Alien Labour laws to prevent these people going away. I have been a little amused at the discussions which have been engaged in for the last hour or more over this little Supply Bill which is before us. When we remember that this is the last item in the supplies for the year ending the 30th June of the present year, and when we remember that the parliament of Canada has voted over sixty millions already without making many very weary faces over it, I imagine that we can let the tail go with the hide and pass this $271,000 without very close discussion, particularly when we have the assurance of the hon. Minister of Public Works that this is a small thing compared with what is coming. 'Wait till you see us next year' is the assurance of the hon. minister, and therefore I do not think it is necessary to discuss this little Supply Bill, which I suppose is the last of the supplementary estimates for the current year. I want to refer to one item in this Bill, and my object is not to criticise the amount at all, or to find fault with the way which the money has been applied. It has already been expended or pre-empted in some way, and it is not at all my object to find fault with the way in which this particular sum of money may have been applied. The item in question is the $5,000 for tuberculosis in connection with quarantine, and I think it is time that this question received more consideration than has been given to it. I refer to tuberculosis in live stock in Canada. The veterinary and medical professions in Canada are, to my mind, pushing the government and corporations of cities into extreme positions on the tuberculosis question, and a great deal of trouble is arising over this scare. It is largely a scare which is being raised in the country over bovine tuberculosis. It has gone so far in some of the maritime provinces that the people are afraid to consume cows' milk, one of the best of all human foods. The professions and men officially promoting the interests of agriculture are pressing this imaginary danger of human infection from the milk of the cow entirely beyond the point to which it should be carried. I am quite confident that there is too much being made of it, and that that danger is not at all so great as is being represented—in fact, that it is not very great at all. One would think to hear some of our medical men talk, that nearly all the tuberculosis to-day in the human family comes from the milk of the cow. Down in our provinces we have only to run around and look at the Micmac Indians who have not enjoyed that food because they have not been able to keep cows, and their children have not been able to drink the milk of the cow, and we find they are dying out of consumption, while the white population, who exist largely on milk as compared with the Indians, are comparatively exempt from tuberculosis. I raise this point because it is being pressed in an extreme degree, and I do not know that we have any distinct medical data to trace tuberculosis to the milk of the cow, and on that ground I think it would be well to call a halt and to be careful what we are doing on this subject. Very much more harm will be done by alarming people and depriving them of that excellent food for their children and themselves, than is likely to be done by tuberculosis caused by the consumption of milk.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

DELAYED RETURNS.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the House adjourns. I should like to know from the hon. ministers whether there is any prospect of getting that return which I asked for in relation of the Manitoba school question. The hon. Secretary of State saw it one day on the table of the council room, and since that time we have never heard of it. If he could hunt it up and bring it down we would be very thankful.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I had it ready to bring down, and was advised that the address was sent to a gentleman, and subsequently a letter was sent to a party who inclosed the address to say that it was confidential. Whether it will be so regarded, I cannot say.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think the hon. Secretary of State would be to blame because he gave to the public something which was confidential.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I just stated the fact.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Can the hon. gentleman state another fact ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know. It depends what it is ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I want to know if all those petitions that have been sent, either to the Governor General in Council, to the Senate or the House of Commons, against the Gaspé Short Line Railway have been brought down before this House according to an address voted by this House some time ago.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know that there was an address voted by this House. I think the hon. gentleman put a question to me.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If the hon. gentleman does not know it I do, and therefore, I have the advantage of him. If he does not know, he might take the advice of those who do know. I know that an address was voted and I know I put the question more than once to the hon. Secretary of State, and that the hon. gentleman on every occasion said that it was the first time he heard of it, and I know that nothing yet has been done. And another thing I know is that we want that for to-morrow, and if we do not obtain it for to-morrow, the hon. minister will take the consequences.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—Perhaps those papers were burnt or destroyed by spontaneous combustion, as the ballots in one of the Ontario elections were.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The government will understand the importance of having those documents before the committee.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Certainly.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is a great deal of importance attached to the proposition which is made to buy out one line and to leave another, and I know that I have a volume which has been sent to me from that section of the country pro and con, and any official documents that are in possession of the government pertaining to the Baie des Chaleurs Railways are of such importance that they should be laid before the Senate before a final decision is arrived at.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The Railway Departmen was notified of this matter some time ago and we expected the return would have been submitted to the House long before this. I understand there is a Bill coming before the committee to-morrow in considering which it is important to have this correspondence before the committee. I shall draw the attention of the Minister of Railways to the matter, and if it is possible to meet the wishes of hon. gentlemen we will do it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I regret that this is not the first time we have had to complain of the discourtesy of the Railway Department. I know that the petitions referred to are of a somewhat voluminous character, and it is impossible to understand the petitions when we meet in committee to discuss the provisions of a Bill of that character and ascertain what the views of the people affected by the railway are. The Railway Department has not only studiously set the orders of this branch of the legislature at defiance, but has treated them with contempt, and the sooner we resent that the better. I do not know any better way in which that could be done than to stop legislation until they give us the information which is necessary in order to deal with the question intelligently. I do not throw out that suggestion as a threat, but I see no other way of meeting the case we are now considering. We are entitled to this information. We are one of the legislative branches of the country. We have to deal with these questions, and are responsible for what we do, and we should be in possession of such information as will enable us to deal intelligently with them. I do not blame my hon. friends opposite. I am satisfied that they have acted in compliance with the requirements of the Senate by notifying the departments that certain returns are ordered, but these departments pay no attention. The hon. ministers had better inform them that unless the Senate get this information they will have difficulty in having the legislation passed. I am prepared to assume that responsibility, grave though it be, unless we obtain those returns.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think if we look into the matter we will find that this administration has furnished the Senate with many more returns than the previous administration. When I had a seat on the other side of this chamber, I know that on many occasions we could not obtain returns.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—That does not justify the present government in refusing to give returns.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I am not justifying it. As a rule, the same officers are responsible for it as were responsible with the other administration.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, the heads of the departments are responsible, and not the deputy heads.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My experience is that it is the chief clerks and the deputy heads. They hesitate about the enormous expense. The expense this session goes up into the tens of thousands of dollars for returns that are not looked at. I brought up a return about eighteen inches thick, which must have cost $400 or $500, which will never be looked at. It was moved for by Mr. Davin. If hon. gentlemen look up the report of the Printing Committee they will see two or three pages of rubbish which has been demanded and brought down, but the Printing Committee would not order the printing of it because it was only of interest to the individual asking for it. I do not justify the withholding of returns. I think the Senate are entitled to the fullest information. We have certainly time and again begged and pleaded with the minister to order these returns to be furnished, and they have sometimes given the order, and were surprised that the work had not been done.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I must dissent from the views of the hon. Secretary of State, that because the Printing Committee does not order the printing of a return, therefore it is rubbish. Copies are supplied to members, and a member ventilates the information on the floor of the House and furnishes it to the press, and in these ways the information goes out. Apart from information which in that manner finds its way to the country, the asking for returns and bringing them down has a wholesome effect on the government of the day, and certainly the Printing Committee, under instructions from this House, and with a due regard to every public interest involved, exercise a reasonable discretion as to what shall not be printed, and what shall be for distribution, but that decision does not imply that these returns are not valuable.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I think it involves it in a very large degree. There are many returns which are proper and the information necessary, and I do not know that any return has been moved for by the Senate which is not of importance, but in my experience in parliament there are a good many returns that are really of no practical value to the public.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—They are of value to the individual member who moved for them.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Possibly, but where a matter is of interest to an individual member it would be better to let him examine the files of the department than to prepare a return. In many cases that has been suggested by the minister and it has been done. The policy of the government is wholly under the control of the ministers, and not under the control of the deputies, but it is impossible for the minister to look after the administrative work of the department, and in that he must depend upon the fidelity, the diligence and the attention of the officers under him.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is his duty to give the order.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—But when an order is passed in this House, it is the business of some one in every department of the government entrusted with looking after this matter to look at the Orders of the Day and the proceedings of the House, and see that everything carried in the form of an address for papers, or in answer to a question, is prepared, without the minister referring to the matter at all. For instance, my hon. friend may make a motion here to-day for papers, say in the office of the Postmaster General. It is not the special business of the Postmaster General to look after that. It is not a question of policy. It is the duty of some one in the office, either the deputy or some clerk who has been named to look after these matters, to see that that return is prepared, and if it is not prepared he is the officer that should be censured for it, and the minister is only responsible when he has not exercised due diligence in giving the orders. That would be his own act and he would be highly censurable for not giving an order. If he wishes to oppose a motion, he should oppose it in the House, but if it is carried in the House it is the duty of some officer in the department to see that the work is done, and he should do that without reference to his chief, because the chief has enough to do without looking after these matters.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have a word to say about the doctrine laid down by the hon. Minister of Justice. It is quite different from that which was followed by the government of which I was a member. The private secretary's duty was, on instructions from his minister, to examine every morning the records of the Commons and the Senate, and if anything affecting the department to which he belonged appeared on the records, then he was to call the attention of the minister to it, and the deputy head was also instructed to look at the Votes and Proceedings every morning to see if any return was ordered affecting his department, but it was always the duty of the minister, and the minister always did, instruct that the return be prepared at the earliest possible moment. It was alleged that the deputy heads controlled the departments. I combated that statement in every instance, and in the government of the late Sir John A. Macdonald the minister called attention of his deputy to a motion of this kind, and told him positively and distinctly that that return must be prepared for parliament.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—How does my hon. friend account for the scores of motions for returns carried in this House that were never furnished?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not admit that there were motions for returns carried which were not complied with. I know in my own department they were all prepared and brought down. A voluminous return was once moved for by the hon. gentleman from Halifax. When brought down, it was nearly as high as my desk, but the order was complied with and it created amusement when I brought the documents before the House. I do not say that those returns were rubbish. There was valuable information in them. I am glad that this discussion has taken place, because it may facilitate the business of parliament in future. I know that the hon. Secretary of State very often tries to justify the neglect to furnish returns on the ground that the late government did the same thing. It is a pity the hon. Secretary of State did not follow the policy of the late government in other respects. I should like to compare his present speech with the condemnation of Mr. Pope's policy on emigration. I will have to congratulate the hon. gentleman on his change of opinion.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman does not refer to me.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—To the hon. minister's colleague. We will discuss it on some other occasion.

The Senate adjourned.

GASPE SHORT LINE RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

REPORT OF RAILWAY COMMITTEE ADOPTED.

Hon. Mr. BAKER, from the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours, to whom was referred Bill (70) 'An Act to incorporate the Gaspé Short Line Railway Company' reported as follows:

Your committee have, in obedience to the Order of Reference of 26th April last, examined the said Bill, and now beg leave to report that the preamble thereof has not been proved to their satisfaction.

The grounds on which your committee have arrived at such decision are, that the Bill contains provisions of which notice has not been given in the notice published of application to parliament therefor and which are not asked for in the petition presented to the Senate praying for the passage of the Bill; and further, that the passing of the Bill would not be in the public interest.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—This Bill is one in which, I understand, there is a good deal of interest taken by the public, and the hon. chairman of the committee might, perhaps, inform the House more fully what are the objections to the Bill. I perhaps did not catch the exact force of the statements in the report, but I understand that one of the objections is that the Bill contained provisions of which notice had not been given. I apprehend that a committee, when a Bill is before it, has power to amend it, and such amendments may be much broader than any notice given with reference to the Bill. The concluding paragraph of the report stated that the measure was not in the public interest. That is a very important objection if it is well founded, but I apprehend that hon. gentlemen would like to know upon what ground that view was taken.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—I have not had the advantage of being able to hear distinctly the observations made by the hon. leader of the government in this House, but I gather from a portion of his remarks that he wished to have some explanations as to the specific reasons which guided the committee in arriving at the conclusion embodied in the report. Clause 14 of the Bill reads as follows:

14. The company may acquire and operate all or any part of the railways of the Baie des Chaleurs Railway Company and the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railwway Company, and——

Clause 15 embodies provisions that were not contemplated by the notice published, and not prayed for in the petition, something entirely apart from the statements in the notice. There was nothing whatever to justify the insertion of these important clauses in the Bill. The notice and the petition were read before the committee, and there was no pretense, on the part of any one who was promoting the Bill, that the provisions of the Bill were justified either by the notice or the petition. Under those circumstances, it appeared to the committee that there was but one course to adopt and that was to find, as they did find, that the preamble had not been proven. I may say further, there was a most vigorous opposition to the passage of the Bill; in fact, there never has been a Bill presented to the Railway Committee of the Senate, to which there was such vigorous opposition. I may say, without impropriety, that it was made to appear that the object of the promoters of that Bill was to divest creditors of their established rights. No other conclusion could be drawn. Apart from these—I will not call them informalities, because they are more than informalities—apart from these matters, there was very good reason, as stated in the last section of the report, for declaring that the Bill was not in the public interest.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I regret that the committee has not seen fit to pass over whatever informalities may have existed in the procedure, or find a way of remedying them, for it seems to me, that any substantial company that will undertake to carry out the demand of that section of the country, which has been clamouring for years and years for a railway, should have been welcome. This company wanted powers to build a line which will ultimately reach Gaspé basin. It has, at the same time, power to purchase the Baie des Chaleurs Railway. I understood that some safeguards had been placed in the Bill for the protection of the creditors of the Baie des Chaleurs Railway. If those safeguards had not been deemed sufficient, I wonder whether it would not have been possible to add greater safeguards when the measure was before the committee. I will speak my mind very clearly on the subject now. I have been acquainted with the doings and the actions of the principal promoter of the Baie des Chaleurs Railway Company, Charles N. Armstrong. He is an impecunious railway promoter. I will not say anything disagreeable, nor do I want to say anything disagreeable about impecunious railway promoters, for I know that this country owes very much to men having simply their brains and their energy, who have succeeded in interesting capitalists in building railways, and who have done good work for the country. But I may say in this present case, Mr. Armstrong, active, intelligent, and enthusiastic as he is, and more optimistic than any gentleman I have ever met, has nevertheless been an utter and absolute failure in railway building in the province of Quebec. Wherever he has passed, ruin has followed his path. It was a common by-word in the province of Quebec, that Charles N. Armstrong could not walk in three or four places in the province of Quebec, for fear of being boycotted or stoned by the population. I do not know of an undertaking of Charles N. Armstrong, wherein the government has not been asked to step in to pay the creditors. The Baie des Chaleurs Railway has been his undertaking, and I may say that I cannot give that party a single hope or vestige of hope that a railway company or a railway undertaking should be carried on or managed by him. He has been for about twenty-five years railway building or railway promoting, and my experience does not go perhaps beyond the last twenty years, but wherever he has undertaken something, clamours have been heard around our court-houses from the creditors claiming their dues. I represent creditors of the Baie des Chaleurs Railway. I do not know that there is a law firm in the city of Montreal that does not represent creditors of that company. So that if this House knew thoroughly how absolutely impossible it is to confide to that gentleman a railway undertaking, in view of his past, I think that by giving all due safeguards to the honest, substantial creditors of the Baie des Chaleurs Railway, we should welcome any solid company that would undertake to come to the rescue of the Baie des Chaleurs Railway, and the Gaspé Railway, which have been for the last twenty-five years absolutely in the hands of that impecunious railway contractor who has not been able to do anything else but build a few miles of railway, let them rot there, prevent them from being operated, only operating them during a few months. Therefore, I beg to move :

That this report be not accepted, but that it be referred back to the committee for reconsideration.

Hon. Mr. THIBAUDEAU—I am sorry that my hon. friend for Delorimier should have thought proper to make such an uncalled for accusation against Mr. Armstrong, or against any of the enterprises he may have undertaken. The hon. gentleman has gone so far as to say that Mr. Armstrong could not move round in Quebec without being stoned. A more unwarranted statement could not be made. Mr. Armstrong can go anywhere in the province of Quebec, except among certain people, where he cannot go, because they remember certain accusations that have been made against him in that city, and since that time they have retained their hatred against him, and these accusations are carried on by misrepresentation continually. All the accusations that have been made, either in the press, in this Chamber, or in the Lower House, are made by a clique who have undertaken to ruin him, or any enterprise he is connected with. If this House were better acquainted with the province of Quebec, they would see it was the work of a clique and not of good, reasonable men, and I hope that this Senate will stand by the decision of the committee.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think the hon. gentleman from Delorimier, when he accused Mr. Armstrong of being a failure in railway business, forgot entirely that incident which took place in the province of Quebec, when a man called Mr. Ernest Pacaud took out of the pocket of Mr. Armstrong the proper means that the government had to secure the construction of the railway.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Was that a satisfactory transaction ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think it was very satisfactory for Mr. Pacaud, and for all the members who endorsed at the time Mr. Pacaud's promissory notes, which were paid out of this money.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—What did Mr. Pacaud do with the money after he got it?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman from Delorimier might tell us what Mr. Pacaud did with the money. That money was taken away from Armstrong and used for election purposes, to promote the interests, not of the country, but of a political party. I think the hon. gentleman has quite forgotten that incident, or he would not have risen in this House to recall past events.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—I should like to ask a question of the hon. leader of the government of this House. Is this motion supported by the government? Is it considered as a government motion?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—I should like to call the attention of the House to the fact that there has been no motion to adopt that report.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Before the motion it put, I should like to know what is to be accomplished by referring this back to committee. The rules governing this House are pointed and distinct, that under certain circumstances, affecting private Bills, certain notice must be given to enable the committee to entertain any Bill which is brought before them. Now, here is a Bill in which the notice given was simply for the construction of a railway from Gaspé basin to, I think, Causapscal, asking for the necessary power to carry on the enterprises, that are contained in the Railway Act. Now, the Bill that came before the Railway Committee gave powers far beyond those asked for. The point is whether in amendements to the Bill you can go beyond the notice and the petition, particularly when the additional clauses affect materially the private interests of another corporation or of private individuals; and, as the chairman has said, the new additions would affect the creditors of the Baie de Chaleurs Railway, as well as giving the company additional powers to do that for which they had never asked. There are other reasons why many would oppose the Bill which it is unnecessary to discuss now. I do not propose to go on discussing the powers which the committee have under the rules of this House. If you admit the facts, as intimated by the Minister of Justice a few moments ago, that you can amend the Bill which is before you, giving additional powers and adding to the clauses powers which would enable them to do other things than those which they asked for, the public not having had notice, would not that be a violation of this rule? If you admit the right to any extent at all you can go to the fullest possible limit and enable them to carry on any business they please providing they declare it is in the interests of the railway itself. They might erect mills and enter into manufacturing industries as well as build railways, and it was on that ground, and not the one intimated by the Minister of Justice, which I think the chairman did not hear when he called attention to it, in which they declared the preamble was not proven. The preamble points out certain things, and when you look at the clauses of the Bill it goes far beyond them; consequently the committee say the preamble is not proved and we cannot report the Bill. The question whether it was in the interest of the country that this road should be built was not discussed at all.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Which is the primary question?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The provisions of a private Bill and what it proposes to do may be of paramount interest to the community, but if it affects the rights of individuals or corporations, no such Bill could be passed through parliament without violating all the rules of parliament, unless notice had been given in the Official Gazette and local papers that such powers were to be asked for; there would be no safeguard for private rights otherwise. I take it that all railways are in the interest of the public, because no railway can be built without developing some industry? Whether there is any return from the investment or not, is not the question. All public works will benefit somebody, and one might fairly say are in the general interests of the community. I have given the reasons why the committee reported against this Bill, and even if the House sends it back to committee it would be rejected on the same principle. Does this company wish to invade the rights of another company—I am not vindicating the Baie des Chaleurs Railway or defending the interests of anybody—when it goes back to committee, if it should go back, I venture the prediction that it will receive the same fate as it is likely to receive to-day.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—To make the proceedings regular, I move the adoption of the report.

Several hon. GENTLEMEN—Call in the members!

The SPEAKER—Call in the members!

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I wish to discuss the question of order that has been raised. There was a motion before the Chair and that motion has not been declared out of order.

Hon. SIR MACKENZIE BOWELL—The members have been called in.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Called in for what?

Hon Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—To vote.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—For what?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The adoption of the report. The hon. gentleman is out of order.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am quite in order.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The members having been called in, the hon. gentleman has no right to speak.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There was a second motion made which has not been declared out of order, and we must know on which motion we are to vote.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I rise to a point of order. Has the hon. gentleman a right to address the House after the members have been called in?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The question has not been put.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—The motion of the chairman of the committee was that the report be adopted. Now, if my hon. friend behind me (Mr. Dandurand) had moved directly in opposition to that, that it be not adopted, it would have been out of order, because the negative of one would be the affirmative of the other, and the sense of the House would be taken equally well on either motions. But my hon. friend went further, and moved that the motion be not adopted, but that the report be referred back to committee. That goes further and entitles his motion to be put.

The SPEAKER—My opinion is that the question of order can be discussed.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—The question ought to be on the amendment.

Hon. Mr. POWER—On the question of order, I wish to say that the regular proceeding should have been that the motion of the chairman of the committee should be put first. The practice in this House is not as rigid as it might be, and the hon. gentleman did not make that motion when the hon. gentleman from Delorimier moved his amendment, it should have been in amendment to the motion to adopt the report. Then the hon. chairman of the committee, noticing his omission, in order to put himself right, moved the adoption of the report. The regular course now would be for the hon. gentleman from Delorimier to move his amendment after the motion to adopt the report.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—That is the way the matter stands now.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Can that be done after the members have been called in? The hon. gentleman has stated the facts as they really are.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I beg to correct the hon. gentleman. The chairman of the committee wished to make the proceeding regular by introducing his motion after mine. The chairman of the committee said, in order that the proceeding should be in order I beg to move, with the permission of the House, the motion that I should have moved in the first place—a motion that he should have introduced before my amendment. I think it was the intention of the chairman of the committee, that my amendment might be voted upon.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Let me say further, I certainly purposed calling attention to the matter if the chairman had not made the motion that it was important that the motion should be made for the adoption of the report before my hon. friend made his proposition. So what I desired to say, when my hon. friend questioned my right to say anything, was that we would vote now upon the amendment moved by the hon. senator from Delorimier in order that the matter might appear regularly upon the journals.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—I rise to a question of order. I want to ask whether this discussion, after the members have been called in, is not out of order? Is it not out of order for a member even to leave his seat after the members have been called in?

Hon. Mr. BAKER—I wish to state, as an excuse for my apparent neglect to move at the proper moment, that I was under the impression that, the preamble of the Bill not having been proven, the Bill became defunct, and therefore there was no necessity for making a motion; but at the suggestion of one of my hon. friends near me, after the motion of the hon. gentleman from Delorimier was made, it occurred to me that perhaps my impression was wrong, and therefore, to set myself right and to make the proceedings regular, I asked permission of the House to move the adoption of the report, thinking, as a matter of course, that having made that motion my hon. friend would move his as an amendment. But I am still of the impression that, the preamble not having been proved, there is no necessity to move the adoption of the report. I speak subject to correction, however.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—The question is a very simple one, though it has become complicated by the motions which have been made. The position is this: the hon. chairman of the Railway Committee made his report. He did not move its adoption? Then the hon. gentleman from Delorimier made a motion that the report be not adopted, but that it should be sent back to committee. Then the chairman of the committee made a motion which became an amendment to the motion of the hon. gentleman from Delorimier, and it is on that question that the Speaker called in the members, and therefore no one had a right to speak.

The SPEAKER—According to rules when members have been called in no further debate is to be permitted—but in my opinion it is within the right of any member to call the attention of the House to the fact that the proceedings are irregular, and when the leader of the House stated that the proceedings was irregular, though the members had been called in, it should not be considered as a debate, and the Senate in my opinion ought to hear the reasons of the hon. leader, the matter began very irregularly. The proper course would have been for the chairman of the committee to have moved the adoption of the report That motion was not made in time. The hon. member from Delorimier moved that the report be not now adopted, but that it be referred back to committee. Immediately afterwards some member remarked that this was not the proper way to proceed, and it was suggested to the chairman of the committee to make a motion for the adoption of the report. This motion was made with the consent of the House, so I put the motion, and then, after that, the hon. gentleman from Delorimier had the right to make his motion in amendment that the report be not now adopted, but be referred back to committee. I really believe that the House should take the vote on the amendment of the hon. gentleman from Delorimier.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I do not wish to be understood as saying I consider a motion was necessary on the part of the chairman of the committee, but having made the motion, I think the sense of the House should be taken on the amendment moved by the hon. gentleman from Delorimier.

The Senate divided on the amendment which was declared lost on the following division:

ONTARIO POWER COMPANY OF NIAGARA FALLS BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. BAKER, from the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours, reported Bill (121) 'An Act respecting the Ontario Power Company of Niagara Falls,' and moved the adoption of the report.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I do not intend to move strongly against the adoption of this report, but I raised the question, and I say here now that I am satisfied in my own mind that this Bill should not come here at all. It is a matter which should be dealt with by the local legislature of Ontario, because they are very much mixed up in this question. They granted a charter to another company, years and years ago, with equal or greater privileges than they are granting under this Bill, and they received $35,000 a year from that company for a long time in order that they should show them how not to do it. In fact, as far as this company is concerned, I have nothing more to say about it. I hope that water power will be developed, but I must say that I am still of the opinion that it is the duty of the local legislature to grant them the powers that are necessary. However, the committee has decided against my opinion; therefore, I must submit. I am not going to push my opposition any further, because the excuse is given that we have granted this power to this company for thirteen years. If we have been doing what we had no right to do for thirteen years, I say it is about time we stopped, and let the local legislature do their own business. They should not use the fingers of the Dominion parliament to take the chestnuts out of the fire. I hope when the extension of time granted this company expires they will have completed the work and will not have any need to come here again. In fact, the contract with this company, by the local legislature and the park commissioners provides that we are not to grant any further legislation if they fail to act under this. They undertake to tell us what we shall or shall not do. I am not going to divide the House on the Bill. I hope it will turn out all right, though in my opinion parliament is not doing what is right in granting this charter at all.

The motion was agreed to.

THE QUEBEC BRIDGE.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY rose to:

Draw the attention of the government and of this House to the following part of a speech made on January 27, 1897, by the Hon. R. R. Dobell, one of the ministers in the present cabinet, at a meeting of the Chamber of Commerce of Quebec, published in 'Le Soleil' of March 1, 1897, and reading as follows:

(Translation from the French.)

'It is the time for you to act,' said he. 'You have a government which is decidedly favourable to you. I do not say that out of political feeling. If you wish to take the initiative in the way of progress, not only in order to build a bridge, but also for the accomplishment of other great enterprises, let me assure you that the government will do more than its part to aid you. But, in the case of the bridge, I must tell you that the government will object to a company in name only; it must have a company in good faith, a company which will give a guarantee to do its duty. I recently learned at Ottawa that great efforts were being made to continue the building of the Intercolonial to Montreal. Halifax is in favour of this project. Now, if Quebec does not hasten to build its bridge, the construction of the Intercolonial to Montreal will be accomplished, and then the utility of a bridge in front of the city will disappear, perhaps for ever. For the commerce between the west and the provinces will take this new way.

'Let me tell you that I will not amuse you with false hopes. When I left Ottawa to come down to Quebec, the Hon. Mr. Laurier told me that I could announce to you that the federal government will give $1,000,000 for the construction of the Quebec Bridge. The city of Quebec will subscribe $500,000; the local government has promised $1,000,000. There, then, are $2,500,000. The railway companies of Canada will subscribe the balance by taking capital stock. . . . . As you see, we can build this bridge as soon as you like, for we have the funds ready.'

And that he will ask:

1. Was it in the name of the government and as authorized by it that the Hon. R. R. Dobell put forth the propositions hereinabove enumerated?

2. Was he, at least, speaking in the name of the Prime Minister, and had the latter really charged the Hon. R. R. Dobell to announce what the federal government would do for the construction of a bridge in the neighbourhood of Quebec?

3. Is the extension of the Intercolonial from Lévis to Montreal now an accomplished fact, since the acquisition of the Drummond County

Railway and the making of the contract with the Grand Trunk Company for the use of its line from Ste. Rosalie to Montreal?

4. If the extension of the Intercolonial to Montreal is an accomplished fact, what does the government think of the utility of a bridge at Quebec in face of this general declaration of Mr. Dobell:

'If Quebec does not hasten to build its bridge, the construction of the Intercolonial to Montreal will be accomplished, and then the utility of a bridge in front of the city will disappear, perhaps for ever. For the commerce between the west and the provinces will take this new way'?

5. Do not the authorities of the Intercolonial at present make, and will they not always make, every effort to secure at Montreal the trade of the west and direct it towards the maritime provinces by way of the Drummond County Railway?

6. Has not the policy of the government, in acquiring the Drummond County Railway and thus extending the Intercolonial to Montreal, given a fatal blow to the interests of Quebec, and gravely compromised, in the words of at least one of the members of the government, the question of the construction of a bridge in front of or in the neighbourhood of Quebec?

7. If the government has decided to seriously aid in the construction of the Quebec bridge and to promote the commercial interests of that city, is it at least going to give the necessary instructions in order that the Intercolonial shall not persist in turning away from Quebec all the traffic which would pass over the proposed bridge if the terminus of that railway were at Lévis in place of being in the very heart of the city of Montreal, and there be a mighty abductor of all the traffic from the west?

8. Has the government assured itself as to the amounts of money which are to be furnished respectively by—

(a) The government of the province of Quebec;

(b) The city of Quebec;

(c) The Canadian railway companies which must use this bridge for the passage of their traffic?

9. Does it know that the expectations of the Hon. Mr. Dobell have not been realized, and that the government of the province of Quebec has not been able to give $1,000,000; that the city of Quebec, by its council, has not contributed $500,000; and that not a single railway company has yet subscribed a single penny to aid in the building of the bridge in quesetion?

10. Could not the government, in order to ensure the building of the bridge, ask from parliament an additional grant equal at least to the amount of the differences between the amount of the subscriptions announced by Mr. Dobell and the real amount subscribed or voted by the city of Quebec, the government of the province of Quebec, and the railway companies interested?

Hon. Mr SCOTT—I have shown the question to Mr. Dobell, and he says it is asolutely incorrect, and he declines to be catechised on a speech which was not accurately reported. He calls attention to the fact that he never made the statement that the government had promised a million dollars. The speech was alleged to have been made two years and four months ago. However, Mr. Dobell's recollection is, that the speech as quoted is not accurate.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is that all the answer I am to get?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is all I can give my hon. friend.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is very short. I want to know what the policy of the government is?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman put the question and I decline to answer it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Has the government assured itself as to the amounts of money which are to be furnished respectively by the government of the province of Quebec, the city of Quebec, and the Canadian Railway Companies?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have no information on the subject. That is mere matter of opinion and not a matter of policy.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is a matter of fact and not a matter of opinion at all. If the government has not the accurate information, we might perhaps give them the accurate information. Could the hon. gentleman answer this question?

Could not the government, in order to ensure the building of the bridge, ask from parliament an additional grant equal at least to the amount of the differences between the amount of the subscriptions announced by Mr. Dobell and the real amount subscribed or voted by the city of Quebec, the government of the province of Quebec, and the railway companies interested?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No. It is quite impossible for me to answer that question. It is the first time I have ever heard it referred to.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—I do not wish to impugn at all the accuracy of Mr. Dobell's denial. He, no doubt, thinks that he never made that speech, but it was made two years and a half ago. I think we all remember that Mr. Dobell's memory is not a very correct one. I dare say the hon. Minister of Justice will remember that there was a telegram sent by Mr. Dobell which two days after he had forgotten all about. I do not say that he was not perfectly correct in what he said, but his memory is very treacherous.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—He denied having sent a telegram, and two days afterwards acknowledged it.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—Therefore one cannot blame him for forgetting what he said over two years ago. I rise to defend Mr. Dobell against an imputation that he is stating what he does not think is right, but still we must remember that he forgot in two days about sending a telegram. We certainly must pardon him for forgetting about a speech made two years and a half ago.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think the hon. Secretary of State is quite correct in declining to give any further information so far as relates to Mr. Dobell. That is based upon the denial by Mr. Dobell that he ever made any speech of the kind. The hon. Secretary of State gave Mr. Dobell's answer, and consequently removed all the answers which he would necessarily have to give if the statement were true. But are there not other questions which the government should answer in justice to the hon. gentleman who has asked them? Apart from any thing, Mr. Dobell may have said, the hon. gentleman from Stadacona asks:

Is the extension of the Intercolonial from Lévis to Montreal now an accomplished fact?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Since the acquisition of the Drummond County Railway and the making of the contract with the Grand Trunk and the use of the line from Ste. Rosalie to Montreal, an affirmative answer could be given to that question.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is not a proper question to put to the government.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not admit that. It is a simple question as to whether an enterprise which has been entered into by the government in the purchase of a road from one company and making a lease with another company has been accomplished. We all know that such is the fact, but there is the question asked. The hon. Minister of Justice says it is not a proper question.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Supposing the hon. gentleman put the question: 'Is the earth round.'

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That would be a proper question if the hon. gentleman had constructed the world. The hon. gentleman would say that so far as philosophy teaches us it is round.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It would not be a proper question.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then the hon. gentleman asked:

If the extension of the Intercolonial to Montreal is an accomplished fact, what does the government think of the utility of a bridge at Quebec in face of this general declaration of Mr. Dobell.——

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not know that the government would be obliged to state what they think as to the utility of a bridge, because that is a debatable point. The hon. minister might decline to answer that. Then the next question is:

5. Do not the authorities of the Intercolonial at present make, and will they not always make, every effort to secure at Montreal the trade of the west and direct it towards the maritime provinces?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is not a proper question.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is a proper question, because they have spent a large amount of money for the purpose of making the connection between the terminus of the Intercolonial Railway at Lévis and Montreal, and it is very natural to suppose they would not have spent the money unless they intended to divert the trade in that direction. I think it answers the questions he desires to know as to whether the government built the road for that purpose, and I do not see any impropriety in saying that the government did. The next question is of the same character. Then he asked:

Has the government assured itself as to the amounts of money which are to be furnished respectively by—
(a) The government of the province of Quebec;
(b) The city of Quebec;
(c) The Canadian railway companies which must use this bridge for the passage of their traffic.

The hon. gentleman might have put that in different language. The government, if I understand it, appropriated a million of money for this purpose. That was voted upon the presumption that the Quebec government and the railway companies and the city of Quebec would increase that amount by additional subsidies, and the question is simply has that been done, or does the government know whether that has been done, and if it has not been done, then the question is proper to know whether the government intend to do anything further in order to effect the construction of that bridge ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend will see that the answer is assumed in the next question, so that the question is not asking for information.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The next question refers to Mr. Dobell, and the hon. gentleman has repudiated the statement attributed to him, therefore it does not call for a reply. If the hon. gentleman had accepted the statement made by Mr. Dobell as correct, then the ninth question, would have answered the eighth, but as the hon. gentleman repudiated it, then it is not answered. The tenth question refers also to Mr. Dobell. There are points in that question which are answered by the denial that Mr. Dobell made that statement, but there are other questions which, in my mind, should have been answered.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am not going to argue the question with my hon. friend and I can hardly think that he is serious. He is playing the part of an advocate, or counsel, defending a friend who has put himself in rather an awkward predicament.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to call the attention of the hon. gentleman to a simple rule which guides the proceedings in parliament, and which he grossly violated yesterday and is violating to-day, and that is that it is not parliamentary to impute motives to hon. members. If it is done again I shall bring it to the attention of the hon. Speaker. I have a right to express my opinions without being accused of being an advocate of any one.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend is grossly violating one of the rules in discussing what happened in the House yesterday. These are not proper questions to be put. They are not parliamentary questions, they are not questions that a minister could be called upon to answer, and I am quite sure that my hon. friend who has put those questions must himself be satisfied that he is altogether departing from the ordinary practice of parliament when he puts such a series of questions as he has been putting on several occasions this session ? What is the object ? I quoted from May, yesterday, a statement as to the limit of authority with regard to parliamentary practice.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman has no right to refer to a past debate.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am referring to May. The rule laid down in May is as follows :

> Questions addressed to ministers shall relate to public affairs with which they are officially connected, to proceedings pending in parliament, or to any matter of administration for which the minister is responsible.

Supposing one undertakes to try the questions put by the hon. gentleman by these rules, he asks if the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal is an accomplished fact. Is that a matter within the special keeping of the government ? Is that a matter about which the hon. minister has any more information than my hon. friend who travels over the road ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman knows he might as well ask whether the earth is round or whether the Atlantic lies between the American continent and Europe. Then the hon. gentleman asks :

> 5. Do not the authorities of the Intercolonial at present make, and will they not always make, every effort to secure at Montreal the trade of the west and direct it towards the maritime provinces by way of the Drummond County Railway?

Is that a proper question ?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Yes.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I say that if the hon. gentleman is serious in making that statement he has yet to learn the first principles of parliamentary usage and practice with regard to questions that are proper to put upon the paper.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Who is working the railway ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It does not matter who is working it. He is not asking about the working of it. He is asking if the extension to Montreal is an accomplished fact. Every other question the hon. gentleman has put is a question of the same sort. They are not questions for papers. They are not questions with regard to what the government has done in a particular matter in which the House is interested, and which the government ought to deal with, or which the hon. gentleman desires the government to deal with. They do not relate to the business of the House in any way. There is no matter before the House, and there is no matter which the hon. gentleman himself has submitted in which the answer to these questions would in any way be a matter of interest to the House. If a question is put to me, it must relate to something affecting my department as Minister of Justice, or some matter within my department. It may be for papers in a particular case. It may be with regard to some correspondence relating to a particular question which was decided and decided improperly, in the opinion of the hon. member, or which is yet before the department for consideration, and that is true of every other department, and if my hon. friend were serious in putting these questions, it would only go to show that the rule which authorizes a member to put questions has not been properly apprehended by the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—I was going to ask the hon. Minister of Justice, seeing that Mr. Dobell has denied those grave assertions which have been made in the papers, and which have not been contradicted up to this date, what he thinks of himself in accusing Sir Charles Tupper, yesterday, or the day before, of telling a whole string of things which he said Sir Charles has said. Does not the hon. gentleman think it is very possible that if the newspapers misrepresented Mr. Dobell, was he not very wrong yesterday in quoting what the newspapers stated Sir Charles has said? I have noticed a great many times how differently the hon. gentleman regards this matter. Sometimes the newspapers, in his opinion, are infallible; sometimes you cannot quote from them, they are so unreliable. If the hon. gentleman would lay down a rule by which one would know when a newspaper is to be trusted and when it is not, members like myself who are getting old, would be obliged.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. leader of the House, whenever he ventures on a discussion of questions of this kind, seems to live in the past. He seems to be living back thirty or forty years ago, when he was lecturing boys in a school house. He lectures members of this House as though he were at liberty to upbraid and taunt them as he pleased. The hon. gentleman referred to question No. 5 in the notice of the hon. gentleman from Stadacona. He referred to that question as one that was quite unparliamentary and improper to be put by a member of this House. He asked was it a proper question. I said yes, and he tells me across the floor of the House that if I say so and think so, I have yet to learn the first principles of parliamentary procedure, or something of the kind. That is not the proper way to discuss these questions. We are entitled to our opinions. Even though we may not come up to the high standard of the hon. gentleman, we have our rights. I thought the question was reasonable and should be answered. I held that opinion, and I hold it still, notwithstanding the very high authority of the hon. gentleman who reprimanded me in the manner he did. The question is:

5. Do not the authorities of the Intercolonial at present make, and will they not always make, every effort to secure at Montreal the trade of the west and direct it towards the maritime provinces by way of the Drummond County Railway?

Last year we had a great deal of discussion in this House and elsewhere over a traffic agreement entered into between the Intercolonial Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway with regard to traffic going east and west. A part of that traffic agreement was, that all traffic going eastward to the maritime provinces was to be handed over to the Intercolonial Railway at Montreal, and this question after all, stripped of verbiage, is, are you living up to that agreement? Are you securing this trade at Montreal? Is that your policy or is it not? I conceive the question to be a highly proper one. I do not know what object my hon. friend had in asking it, but whatever object he had, I presume that the question was really thought out in a different language and had to be translated by my hon. friend. I am not saying that he is not as adept in the English language as any of us, but I can always discover a tendency to use the idiom of his own language. After all, this question is simply limited to asking whether the Department of Railways is living up to that traffic agreement of which we heard so much last year, and if all this traffic is being handed over at Montreal. Notwithstanding the very severe taunt and lecture which the hon. gentleman threw across the floor of the House to me, I insist that the question was in that respect a very proper one.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I ask the hon. Minister of Justice if the working of the Intercolonial Railway is affecting the public interest, and who is working that railway? If it is the government, I am asking what is their policy in working that railway. Is not that a question that I could properly put before this House, and could I not claim an answer to it? Is my question unparliamentary?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, quite unparliamentary.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Why? The mere fact of saying so does not make it unparliamentary. I am putting a question that relates to a matter of public interest. The government is working the railway, and I put a question about that railway, and I am told that it is unparliamentary to ask a question about it. When I ask if it is unparliamentary the Secretary of State says 'yes,' and the other minister does not know what to say. If I were to ask the government if aid was to be given to build the Quebec bridge, would that be unparliamentary? Yes, or no? They do not know. The government say themselves that they are in a hole.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No, it is the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If the hon. minister knows he is in a hole, it is all right. I am inquiring from him if it is an unparliamentary question to ask the government if they are prepared to give supplementary aid to the Quebec bridge? I think that is a parliamentary question.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I answered that question.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I want to know what is the policy of the government on that question?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend answered that part of the question, because that was a proper question to put; but the hon. gentleman will see that the parts that I read are very different.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is it an unparliamentary question to ask the government if the railway they are working in a certain way is——

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think the character and standing of this Senate is degraded——

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—By the answers given by the government.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—By the questions put by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona. I am sure when my hon. friend opposite (Sir Mackenzie Bowell) was in power, had any one on our side of the House put such questions to the government, he would have been censured. The Intercolonial Railway has been governed for years by Mr. Schreiber and Mr. Pottinger. That this government knows anything about the management of the railway is idle to assume. We interfere only with the general policy. As the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island says, the general principles governing the Intercolonial Railway are laid down by parliament in an agreement adopted some two years ago. Whether that is interpreted correctly or not, I am not in a position to say. If some breach of that agreement were pointed out, and the government were asked whether they approve of it, I could understand it would be proper to call the attention of the minister to it. But my hon. friend must see, in reference to the traffic from day to day which prevails on the Intercolonial Railway, which has connection with many other lines in this country, it is scarcely fair to say that it is a question which the government should be expected to answer—a question relating to matters over which they have no control, and in which they do not interfere. The question whether the government will give an additional grant to the bridge is a proper one. I answered that. I said that it had never been considered by the government. I am always anxious to answer any question in reason—even beyond what is reasonable, according to the interpretation of parliamentary principles, but I think my hon. friend rather exceeds in that direction, if he will look back at the questions he has been putting on the paper.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (100) 'An Act to incorporate the Dominion of Canada Rifle Association.'—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

THIRD READING.

Bill (V) 'An Act for the relief of William Henry Featherstonhaugh.'—(Hon. Mr. Clemow.)

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT BILL.

COMMONS AMENDMENTS CONSIDERED.

The Order of the Day being called :

Consideration of the amendments made by the House of Commons to Bill (K) 'An Act to further amend the Criminal Code, 1892.'

Hon. Mr. MILLS said : The first of these amendments is that this Act shall not come into force until January 1, 1901. That seems to me a long time to wait. Some little time ought to be allowed for the distribution of the law throughout the country, because every one is supposed to know the law, and that which is an offence under the law ought to be fairly known to people in every part of the country ; but unless we suppose parliament is going to sit for a long time before the Royal assent can be had to these Bills, there is no reason why so long a delay should take place and it seemed to me that the first amendment was the most objectionable one that the other House has sent up—in fact, the only one to which I desire to call the attention of the Senate. I should be inclined to say that the Act should go into effect on October 1.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—September 1.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The statutes will not be distributed until almost the end of the year.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—They are published in the Gazette.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I do not object to September 1, as suggested. The population is spread over a great extent of territory, and it would be hard to punish a person in Dawson, say, for an offence committed under this measure, if there was not sufficient time to permit it to reach that country. I think October 1 would be about right.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We might accept that. My own impression was at first that it ought to go into operation immediately, but, as the hon. gentleman says, there should be some time given to enable parties to ascertain what the law is. Bills affecting the liberty of the people, are generally published in the Gazette immediately after they are sanctioned by the Governor General, which, I presume, would be the case here ; and then they find their way into the newspapers of the country. I approve of either September or October 1, as suggested by the hon. minister.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The Official Gazette is not a popular periodical.

Hon. Mr. GOWAN—I know of no precedent for putting off the coming into force of a law like this for so long a period. No doubt the Bill has been distributed months ago throughout the whole country, and while there is a good deal of force in what the Minister of Justice says about not bringing it into operation immediately, certainly I should not be disposed to put it off even as long as he suggests. I should have thought September 1 would have been sufficient.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT. This amendment has been made in the House of Commons. We ought to agree to a reasonable compromise. They are evidently of the opinion that it should not go into operation until it is well understood. I thought October 1 would be a reasonable period.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—This Bill ought to come into force as soon as possible, to put an end to those gambling transactions in Montreal. July and August are the worst months for these gambling transactions which are condemned throughout the whole country. September 1 would, in my opinion, be sufficient notice to give to these people. They all know about this measure now, and we might as well let it go into operation as soon as it receives the assent of the Governor General.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—If that is the opinion of the House, I will move :

That the amendment of the House of Commons be amended by substituting September 1, 1900, instead of January 1, 1901.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The next amendment is :

Page 7, line 29.—After 'labour' insert the following :

'By inserting immediately after section 359 the following section:

'359a. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to one year's imprisonment who, in incurring any debt or liability, has obtained credit by means of false pretenses or by means of any other fraud.

This amendment was suggested by some practitioners in Toronto. I did not accept it when I was preparing the Bill, because it seemed to me that a purchaser, who is anxious to sell goods would, perhaps, after he found he had sold them to a customer from whom he was not likely to receive compensation, would interpret or strain the words used by his customer to embrace him within a section of this sort, and I thought it was rather dangerous legislation. But as it has been proposed in the House of Commons, and carried there, I am not disposed to move to strike it out, although I would have preferred it should not have been embraced in the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Does not the hon. gentleman consider that the present provision in the law against false pretenses is sufficiently wide to cover such cases ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Is not section 358 sufficiently wide ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I do not think it would include a case of this sort. At all events, it has been so held, and that is the reason why this proposition is made. I consulted my officers with regard to it. We discussed it, and concluded that it was rather a dangerous sort of paragraph to insert in the Criminal Code. However, the parties were more successful in the House of Commons than they were with us, and I do not propose to strike it out. I will ask the House to concur in the amendment.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It depends in a great measure, I think, upon the interpretation of the words as to whether it could be abused or not. Lawyers who have had practice will be able to give a more correct interpretation of the words than laymen. What constitutes false pretense ? A man goes to a shop and buys goods on a promise to pay in ten days, and he does not pay in ten days, would that be a false pretense?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It depends upon the representations he made.

Hon. Mr. MILLS.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—He might say a certain sum of money was due him ; if it turned out that there was nothing due to him, would it be a false pretense?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But supposing the money was due him and he failed to get it in time, the question might arise with the magistrate, whether that would be declared a fraud. He might know the character of the man, and say that he knew very well when he got the goods he would not pay for them. It is creating a new offence, and the only point is whether the law of false pretenses does at the present moment go far enough. We ought to be careful in the enactment of provisions creating new offences, that we do not go so far as to place it in the power of ignorant justices of the peace to commit a great wrong. When I read the amendment first, I thought it a good provision, but when I considered the extent to which the abuse of power vested in a justice of the peace might be carried, I had doubts as to the propriety of the clause. I submit my opinion in this matter with deference to the gentlemen learned in the law. In reading the debates of the other House, I find the basis upon which the argument was founded was that many people go to boarding houses and hotels and incur bills, and go away and do not pay them. Is that obtaining goods under false pretenses? I shall be very glad to hear from gentlemen who have had experience in these matters.

Hon. Mr. GOWAN—This has been argued very fully, and I think there has been some decision that false pretenses would come under the common law. If my memory serves me, the courts were not favourable to the view, and thought it might be attended with some danger. I am not strongly against this provision, although I do not quite like it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I must confess that I fail to see a very broad distinction between the law as it at present stands and the proposed amendment. The present definition in the code of false pretenses reads as follows :

A false pretense is a representation, either by words or otherwise, of a matter of fact either present or past, which representation is known to the person making it to be false, and which is made with a fraudulent intent to induce the person to whom it is made to act upon such representation.

I cannot at the present moment conceive of a class of cases that would not come within that, but of course the courts often put a very narrow and limited construction upon statutes, thus occasioning a broadening of the statutes, and without having that class of case before them, it is difficult to say whether the law is sufficiently wide to cover it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—If it does cover it then this clause does no harm.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It seems to me it would be better to leave these parties to their civil rights than to make this offence a criminal one, and I think the deliberate judgment of the Department of Justice, arrived at, after full consideration, is more likely to be wise and sound than the decision arrived at in the other Chamber, where perhaps there was not a great deal of discussion over it, and probably where only one side of the question was very strongly put. This amendment does not alter the definition of a false pretense. Section 359 of the Criminal Code reads :

Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to three years' imprisonment who, with intent to defraud, by any false pretense, either directly or through the medium of any contract, obtained by such false pretense, obtains anything capable of being stolen or procures anything capable of being stolen to be delivered to any other person than himself.

This amendment says that the man who has obtained credit by means of false pretense is guilty of an indictable offence as well as the man who has got an article capable of being stolen. I think it would be wiser to be conservative about this matter and not to change the law.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is not my view, but I would rather accept it than have it sent back the third time. I am anxious that this measure should become law because many of the provisions are very necessary.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I think it is rather an exacting provision of the law : A man may go into a store and obtain goods by representations that he believes at the time to be correct, but which may turn out afterwards to be incorrect. He obtains these goods, and is liable to be sued and to be compelled to pay for them, and I think that that is sufficient punishment, because it may be that the man who obtained the goods in this way was justified in making the representation, although he really had no solid basis for it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—In addition to that, the probabilities are that this enactment will lead to a great deal of perjury. The man whose debtor has failed to pay will find in this section a strong inducement to remember, perhaps, rather more than actually took place when the contract was made, and I therefore move :

That this amendment be not concurred in.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—There is no doubt that parties going to Montreal to purchase goods will make the best representation they can for the purpose of obtaining credit. They may do it with perfect good faith, but their calculations may not be carried out in the future, and this clause may be an instrument by which the man who sells these goods may oppress the party under the threat that he has obtained the goods by false pretenses. I know that parties go to Montreal and make all sorts or representations. Those representations should be put in writing and made before witnesses, so that there will be no mistake in the future. A man goes to Montreal and says to a wholesale man : 'I expect to sell some property and will realize a certain amount of money, and out of that I will pay you.' The man says afterwards : 'You made that representation and did not pay me, and I will invoke this clause of the Criminal Code against you.' I know from personal knowledge that the buyer time and again makes these representations to the seller.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think it is an innovation and liable to cause serious injury to innocent parties. I do not favour the clause at all and the more we discuss it the more I am against it. I suggest to my hon. colleague that we drop it. The provision is liable to be abused.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is the view taken by my department, but it has been put in by the House of Commons. I am not disposed to press the adoption of a clause that is at variance with my own judgment, unless the Senate concurs with the view of the House of Commons on the subject. I gather from the opinion expressed that this House adheres to its original view.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I will second the motion of the hon. senior member from Halifax, that the amendment be not concurred in.

The motion of Mr. Power in amendment was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Then on page 8, line 34, the following amendment has been added by the House of Commons :

Nothing in this section shall be construed to apply to combinations of workmen or employees for their own reasonable protection as such workman or employee.

That was in the Bill as it was introduced in this House, but was struck out by us. It has been restored in the House of Commons. I thought it was an unobjectionable provision, and I therefore move that the House concur in this amendment.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I doubt the wisdom of our concurring in this amendment. As has been pointed out, the Trades Union Act, the chapter of the Revised Statutes which deals with trade unions, offers every reasonable protection to the members of trade unions, and this amendment appears to me to go further than is necessary or desirable. Looking at what is happening across the line now, and the violence which so often accompanies the difficulties between union workmen and their employers, it is not desirable to single out the workmen of these unions as the objects of special favourable legislation. They should be allowed to take their chances under the Trades Union Act, and in other respects they should be on the same footing as other members of the community. I move in amendment :

That this House does not concur in this amendment.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I cannot agree with the view of my hon. friend. This clause reads :

Nothing in this section shall be construed to apply to combinations of workmen or employees for their own reasonable protection as such workmen or employees.

If they have combinations which are not reasonable for their protection they would not be protected. I think this is a reasonable amendment. It allows them to combine in reference to matters that are within their proper powers as an organization. It is not unreasonable and I do not think that it goes beyond the spirit of what is intended by the Trades Union Act.

Hon. Mr. MILLS.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is difficult to understand why there is any necessity for this provision. It declares any one guilty who——

Unduly limits, &c., the facilities for transporting, producing, manufacturing, suplying, storing or dealing in any article or commodity which may be a subject of trade or commerce.

But it shall not apply to trade unions who combine for their own reasonable protection. What combination is there that could exist for their own reasonable protection that would interfere with, or affect that clause ? Then the next subhead is :

To restrain or injure trade or commerce in relation to any such article or commodity.

Then the next is :

To unduly limit, lessen the manufacture or production of any such article of commodity, or to unreasonably enhance the price thereof.

Why is that done ? It is done for the protection of the business in which they are engaged, in order to obtain more money. Under this clause it exempts the combination of men or employees who combine for their reasonable protection. How can it affect them, and if it does not affect them what is the necessity for it ? It is making a special provision to protect a certain class of people against doing that which you declare to be wrong in another class of people. That is the objection I have to this amendment, and I think that the Trades Union Act, which gives them full power to organize and adopt rules and regulations for their own protection, goes far enough. But the great fear on the part of some of these people is that something may possibly be done to interfere with another class of the community. In putting a law upon the statute-book, it seems to me that it should apply to all classes. If it be wrong in one it necessarily cannot be right in another, and as the hon. gentleman for Halifax has just pointed out, the occurrences going on in St. Louis at the present time should make us pause before going too far in the direction which this amendment would lead us. It looks like pandering to a sentiment which is detrimental, when reduced to practice, to the well-being of society at the present time. No one would go further than I would to protect workmen in their rights, but it is going altogether too far to adopt this clause, and, thinking as I do, and having a decided objection to what I consider class legislation, I shall second the motion that this House do not concur in this amendment.

Hon. Mr. GOWAN—I am decidedly in favour of accepting the amendment made by the House of Commons. I think it might be safely left to the judiciary to say what is for the reasonable protection of workmen. The judges will be able to deal with the matter.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The amendment proposes to take it out of the hands of the judiciary. It does not propose to have a judicial construction of it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend will see that he is mistaken. The amendment reads:

> Nothing in this section shall be construed to apply to combinations of workmen or employees for their own reasonable protection as such workmen or employees.

It is of the very essence of the working of the organization that they should have the opportunity of combining. If you take away that right, you practically abolish the Act by which it is intended to recognize their right to organize in that way.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—No, no.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—'To unduly limit the facilities for transporting produce' and so on. Supposing a railway company propose to reduce their rate of wages twenty-five cents and the workmen strike and the operation of the road is stopped for the time being. These workmen are, within the literal meaning of the Act, unduly limiting the facilities for transportation. That is an undue limitation. The transportation is stopped. While you would not give to the railway company the right to refuse to carry forward the products and passengers, so far as it was necessary, you do give that right to the union, because if you do not give them that right, you absolutely take from them all their organization and all their power to protect themselves.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And the right to strike.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—If you can show that what they are doing is unreasonable, supposing they undertake to prevent others going in or otherwise seeking employment, or putting impediments in the way of the road being operated at all, then the court would be at liberty to hold, upon the presentation of those facts, that what they were doing went beyond what was necessary for their own reasonable protection, and they would come under the operation of the law. They are in a different position from the manufacturer or the carrier, because in the one case what they propose to do is absolutely necessary for their existence; it is not so in the other.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is not that word 'reasonable' subject to all kinds of interpretations by the different parties who would have to construe its meaning? The hon. minister could not possibly have given better reasons for the rejection of this clause. He says a certain combination has, for its own protection, the right to strike and to prevent the carrying on of any business. We know what the consequence of such strikes are. We read the other day the results of that which the hon. gentleman is arguing in favour of, the protection of strikers who have stripped women of their clothes and tarred and feathered them in the street. He says that is right. He says if the combination got together and demand a certain increase of wages, or if a railway company, from its lack of receipts, think it is necessary to reduce the wages for the time being because they cannot afford to pay them, they say: 'We must reduce your wages ten per cent,' then they are to be protected in that business whatever it may be; then a strike follows, and business is stopped. I think that is sufficient without going further to prove my argument. If it is not right in the railway people to say 'We cannot afford to pay you what you demand,' is it right for any party to prevent others from working. If it is criminal for the railway company to say that, then it is equally criminal for a combination to say: 'Then you shall not carry on business.' I believe, honestly, from what I have read, and statistics which have been published in the different magazines in reference to strikes, that they have been detrimental to the working classes in Europe and everywhere else, from a pecuniary standpoint, an actual loss; figures will demonstrate that. I am not arguing in favour of oppressing the working man, but what is right for one class of the community is right for all others, and what is wrong and criminal in one class cannot possibly be right in another.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The present law has been upon the statute-book for eight years. This exception has been introduced. We have had the law in operation since the passage of the Criminal Code, and in no case can my hon. friend point out that the courts have held that this section applied to ordinary trade unions. Unless my hon. friend can point out to the House that the law, as it has stood for the last eight years, has been oppressive upon the workmen, there is no reason why we should change it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend is arguing that they have the power already.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Which power?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—This immunity.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The law as it stands to-day does not deal with the exception of workingmen. It is proposed to tack on to the section an exception exempting workingmen from this particular clause, and as I said before, taking it away from the courts. You have tacked on to this clause an exception in favour of workmen.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The second section of the Trades Union Act, chapter 131 of the Revised Statutes, says:

> In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires, the expression 'trades union' means such combination, whether temporary or permanent, for regulating the relations between workmen and masters, or for imposing restrictive conditions on the conduct of any trade or business as would, but for this Act, have been deemed to be an unlawful combination by reason of some one or more of its purposes being in restraint of trade.

The law now exempts that. Then section 22 reads:

> The purposes of any trade union shall not by reason merely that they are in restraint of trade, be deemed to be unlawful so as to render any member of such trade union liable to criminal prosecution for conspiracy or otherwise, or so as to render void or voidable any agreement or trust.

I think these provisions amply protect the trade union. Then this section 520 says:

> Every one is guilty of an indictable offence, and liable to a penalty not exceeding $4,000 and not less than $200 or two years' imprisonment, or if a corporation, is liable to a penalty not exceeding $10,000 and not less than $1,000, who conspires, combines, agrees or arranges with any other person or with any railway or steamship, steamboat or transportation company:
> (a) To unduly limit the facilities of transporting, producing, manufacturing, supplying, storing or dealing in any article or commodity which may be a subject of trade or commerce.

The elder hon. gentlemen will remember that in 1877, the men on the Grand Trunk Railway struck, and hon. gentlemen will remember the very serious inconvenience the whole community was put to because they interfered with the running of the trains on that line and stopped traffic altogether. The public have an interest greater than that of any trade union in seeing that the business of the country is allowed to proceed. Supposing a member of a trade union is indicted under this section of the code for having entered into a combination to unduly and unreasonably interfere with transportation, where will the jury be found to convict him? That is just the point. There would be grave difficulty in obtaining a jury to convict a member of a trade union for conduct of that kind, no matter how clearly unreasonable his conduct had been, and I think the better way is to let them stand in the same position as others.

Hon. Mr. GOWAN—It is left to the court to determine what is the meaning of reasonable protection. The keynote to the clause is the reasonable protection.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am astonished by the line of argument pursued by the senior member for Halifax. He says the Trades Union Act already does what is proposed to be done.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I said it went far enough.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend read it and the words are almost the same. What is the difference? In the first place, that provision is a provision inserted in the statutes passed some years ago. The provision of the law, without this subsection, is inconsistent with that. Does my hon. friend not see that? Then, in the next place, that was the trades union. This provision would apply to voluntary association of workmen, and so, men who are not in the trades union and who prefer the liberty they have outside, will be protected to the same extent as the trades union people.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—They have no business to be.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—And so I say, going no further, being subsequent in point of time, it re-affirms the law as far as the trades union is concerned, and it would also afford the same protection that the Trades Union Act affords to other workmen. It changes the law as it stood for the last eight years.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No. You are proposing here to legislate and make the law more strict than it was before—at all events more precise,—and the result may well be that if the other provisions of the section were to be affected, that provision of the Trades Union Act would be merely repealed so far as they are concerned, and it would not, at all events, extend to any other class of workmen. This would put all associations of workingmen on the same footing.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Will it not cause additional associations to be formed ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I do not think so.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—We have sufficient now, and I do not want to increase the number. You are going to give them additional facilities. In place of having to deal with one set of unions, you will have to deal with a dozen.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—So much the better.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I do not think it. We have had a strike here within the last few days, and we know the inconvenience it has caused to the public. I want to give those parties the same rights and privileges they have enjoyed up to the present time, although they have enjoyed too many, but I do not want to increase the number of those associations. We know they will have their presidents, vice-presidents, secretaries, and all will have to be paid out of the earnings of the workingmen. I do not believe you are going to benefit that class of people by interfering with the law as it stands.

The Senate devided on the amendment of Mr. Power, which was adopted by the following vote :

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved concurrence in the following amendment :

Page 14, line 22.—After 'holiday' insert the following:

'Section 744—by repealing subsections 1 and 2 thereof, and substituting the following:

'744. If the court refuses to reserve the question the party applying may move the Court of Appeal as hereinafter provided.

'2. The Attorney General or party so applying may on notice of motion to be given to the accused or prosecutor, as the case may be, move the Court of Appeal for leave to appeal. The Court of Appeal may upon the motion and upon considering such evidence (if any) as they think fit to receive, grant or refuse such leave.'

Hon. Mr. POWER—This is a matter of some little consequence, and in my humble judgment, the amendment made by the House of Commons is not a desirable one. Every hon. gentleman must recognize how important it is that the decision of a criminal court should be final and that we should not increase the facilities for appeals in criminal cases. One of the features which distinguish our administration of the criminal law in this country from the administration of criminal law in the adjoining republic, is that, as a rule, when a case is tried here that is the end of the matter; and I do not think we should do anything which would increase the facilities for appeal. The practice in the past has been that if the court refuses to reserve a question of law which the counsel for the prisoner asks to have reserved, the party may apply for leave to move in the court of appeal, but he has to get the consent of the attorney general of the province or his representative, to make that motion, and I think that is a reasonable restriction. The attorney general of a province has no personal interest or feeling in the matter ; he has no animus against the criminal, and if there is a good ground around for allowing an appeal he will allow it. There have been one or two recent cases in Montreal which, perhaps, have led to the introduction of this measure. I have an impression that this amendment was made at the instance of legal gentlemen concerned in a recent important trial in Montreal, the result of which is that some gentlemen who had been connected with a certain bank in that city are now in prison. It is a good thing that no facilities for appeal or delay in the infliction of punishment in that case exist; and I think we had better stick to the law as we have it now.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I do not understand this amendment precisely as the hon. gentleman does. At present the practice is to apply to the Division Court, and sometimes the judge has refused an appeal, and this takes away the power that previously existed to apply to the Division Court in the province of Quebec, and makes it necessary to apply to the court of appeal, and so the decision on the subject of hearing the points reserved will always be uniform. We have sometimes had one division deciding one way, and another another way, and so it was necessary to go to the court of appeal for a decision. That will be rendered unnecessary by this provision. Under this second provision there will be permission also to the attorney general, if he is dissatisfied with the ruling of the court, say in favour of a prisoner, the counsel shall have leave to appeal to settle what he considers an erroneous view of the law, as the other party may have the right to appeal and have the question settled possibly in favour of the accused before the court of appeal. You put the Crown and the prisoner in this regard—in respect to appeal—upon a footing of equality, and that is all that is accomplished by the provision.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I think it is desirable myself. I never could reconcile the opposition which has so often been expressed with reference to appeal in criminal cases. It seems to me the liberty of the subject is the most priceless matter which could possibly be dealt with even by the highest court of the realm. You provide a whole gamut of appeals for trifling civil cases. You can start in the lowest court, and, on some questions, go to the highest court, and yet where the liberty of the subject is involved you are bound by the decision of the first court. Why should not the subject be placed in precisely the some position as the attorney general or the Crown itself. Under the law as it stands, the attorney general has the right to go to the court of appeal, whereas the subject has not that right. He must get the consent of the attorney general. It seems to me that the court of appeal is better able to determine question of appeal than the attorney general, who, in many instances, cannot be expected to go as fully as a judge or a court into matters involving the trial of a criminal case. The law, as it at present stands, is very expensive. It multiplies litigation. If the judge refuses to reserve a case you have to fight that out before the attorney general before you reach the court of appeal. The attorney general cannot give a proper opinion on the subject without the evidence before him, and unless it is argued by the parties before him, and that involves expense. If he gives leave to go to the court of appeal you can go and ask leave to appeal. This amendment dispenses with the necessity of going to the attorney general to endeavour to obtain the right to appeal. I think the amendment is highly desirable.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The first and second subdivisions of section 744 read as follows:

If the court refuses to reserve the question, the party applying may, with the leave in writing of the Attorney General, move the court of appeal as hereinafter provided.

The amendment is to strike out the words:

With the leave in writing of the Attorney General.

The attorney general, I think, could usually be trusted to give leave to appeal where there was good ground for appeal. The second subsection is:

The Attorney General, or any person to whom such leave as aforesaid is given, may, on notice of motion to be given to the accused or prosecutor, as the case may be, move the court of appeal for leave to appeal.

I only express my opinion. I do not propose to divide the House on it.

The amendment was concurred in.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The next amendment is:

Page 19, line 10—Leave out from 'defrayed' to ot 'property,' inclusive, in line 34.

That clause was framed upon a decision given by the judicial committee of the Privy Council, in 1893. Since then there has been an amendment to the Imperial Statute making the law as it would stand without this section. I received some communications, which I put in the hands of the Solicitor General, and we thought it was safe to follow the English legislation, and so this clause has been struck out.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This amendment then makes our law in unison with the Imperial legislation ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

The amendment was concurred in.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The next amendment is:

Page 21, line 10.—Leave out from 'suit' to '186,' inclusive, in line 32.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is the clause with respect to whipping, the clause introduced by the hon. gentleman from York?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes. I think it was a very proper provision. Since this Bill came up here, I had a letter from a police magistrate stating that some eight or ten boys had been engaged in stealing iron and brass, and he hardly knew how to deal with them, because they ranged from ten to fourteen years of age. It seems to me that if the law had only permitted what this clause proposes to give the boys a switching and send them home, it would have been a better and wiser course than possibly to send them to a reformatory for some years.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—I can only repeat what I stated when this clause was before the House. The experience of those who have taken the greatest possible interest in the reforming of juvenile offenders, all points in the same direction. In many cases an immense amount of mischief is done by sending young lads to jail, out of which they come worse than when they went in. If they were whipped, this harm would not be done, and they would not appear as heroes in the eyes of their companions. I think it is a great pity that the clause has been struck out, but I suppose there is no use in reinserting it.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Can we not reinsert it ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Of course we can send the Bill back again, and if we desire to retain the clause we can refuse to concur in the amendment. All I can say is that I am quite ready to strike out the clause. I would rather do that than jeopardize the Bill. I have not read the proceedings of the House, and I do not know how unanimous the feeling was against the view taken by a majority of the Senate with reference to this provision, but I am in the hands of the House.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think there was in the House of Commons a general feeling that it was wrong to place the power in the hands of a magistrate to whip anybody's child. That was the sentimental reason which led them to strike it out.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I think it would be a deterrent. I do not think they would require to use the power of whipping except in a very few instances.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I agree with the opinion of the hon. gentleman from Rideau division. An instance has occurred, within a few days, in the city of Charlottetown, in which it would have been infinitely better for the magistrate, or the person having jurisdiction, to have juvenile offenders whipped than to send them to jail for any period of time. Three or four little boys, to whom a whipping would be a deterrent from engaging in crime again, had committed burglary there, not only in one store, but in two. They were led to this by another youngster who had been convicted and sent to the penitentiary, and had returned within a few days ? Those three lads will probably be convicted and sent to jail to associate with hardened criminals and people from whom they certainly would learn nothing for their advantage or benefit. It would be a thousand times better and more conducive to the morality of those children, and would enable them perhaps to grow up to be good citizens, if they got a sound whipping and were returned to their parents. It is the greatest cruelty possible to send offenders of that kind to jail where they associate with hardened criminals.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Some hon. gentlemen think that children can be sent to reformatories, but there are only half a dozen reformatories in the country. As a rule the juvenile offender is sent to associate with hardened criminals, and the chances are he is ruined for life. With respect to the action of the House of Commons, our action is not quite final yet. If they adhere to the amendment the Senate has an opportunity to recede after this, but considering that we sent down a Bill to amend the Criminal Code in 1897, and sent another one down in 1899, I think we might claim that what we do this year is entitled at all events to fair and reasonable consideration.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—I opposed this new proposition when the matter was before the Senate a few days ago, and I have seen no reason to change my views in reference to it. I consider that the system of flogging children with birch rod belongs to the past—that we are in advance of that age at present. And although I agree with some of the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Charlottetown, that there may be cases where a switching—but not with a birch rod, I would say with a birch switch—might be better for the culprit than to send him to the common jail. But this Bill applies not only to cities and towns, but to rural districts also where every Tom, Dick and Harry is appointed constable, and to place it in the power of such men to whip boys with a birch rod would be a mistake. The constables are generally young men, and these young men being instructed by the magistrate to beat their neighbour's child of ten or fourteen years of age with a birch rod, possibly having some little personal spite against the family, is calculated to raise strife and turmoil in a community which would do far greater injury than to commit the child to jail. I think the House of Commons has taken a very proper view of the question in eliminating this clause from the Criminal Code. There ought to be some other way, by very short confinement, and giving them some sort of punishment in the prisons if you do not send them to the reformatories. I do not think they ought to be subject to punishment with a birch rod in the hands of an ordinary country constable.

Hon. Mr. GOWAN—Speaking from a long experience of the criminal law, I am decidedly in favour of this clause which has been struck out by the House of Commons. I find in various quarters a strong opinion amongst members of the other House in favour of striking it out, and I should not like to see the Bill endangered by running counter to the very decided opinion in the other Chamber.

The amendment was concurred in.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—Before we depart from this Bill, I should like to ask the House to go back to clause 449. Perhaps, I do not understand the true meaning of it, but if I do it is going to do harm. Subsection 2, provides :

> 2. The using by any manufacturer, dealer or trader other than such other person of any bottle or siphon for the sale therein of any beverage or the having upon it such trade mark or the name of another person, buying, selling or trafficking in any such bottle or siphon without such written permission, such other person or the fact that any junk-dealer has in his possession any such bottle or siphon having upon it such a trade mark or name without such written permission, shall be prima facie evidence that such use, buying, selling or trafficking or possession is unlawful within the meaning of this section.

Junk dealers are going around the country buying junk, and they pick up ale bottles with Carling's or other trade marks on them. If a junk dealer was carrying home a bottle with one of these marks on it, he would render himself liable to prosecution under this clause.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The necessity for this provision has arisen from the practice of persons who make up certain kinds of mineral and other waters using the siphons and bottles bearing the trade mark of the person who has manufactured that which was in the bottle first, and it is really a sort of forgery. If one wishes to use a bottle which has contained Carling's ale, he can wipe the label off, but this is intended to meet the cases of bottles and siphons which have the original maker's name stamped on the bottle or siphon, and one can readily understaud how fraud is perpetrated by selling an inferior article with one of these trade marks on it.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—Bottlers of aerated waters and that sort of thing buy all the bottles in the country and take the labels off and put their own names on instead. The label is taken off, but the name may be impressed in the glass.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Then they should not use it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I move that the further consideration of this report be postponed until Friday next. It will be necessary to report to the Commons our reasons for rejecting the amendments.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does that require a reconsideration of the amendments ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We return the Bill, agreeing with some of the amendments, and disagreeing as to the others; then the House of Commons will say whether they concur in the amendments we have made, and if they do not, they will send the Bill back saying they do not concur, and it will be for us to say whether we recede or not.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Thursday, June 14, 1900.

The Speaker took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

RESIGNATION OF GOVERNOR McINNES.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL, gave notice that he would

Call the attention of the government to the following statement reported in the Victoria 'Times' of the 2nd of June inst., to have been made by Mr. William Wallace Burns McInnes, son of the Governor of British Columbia, at a public meeting:

'With reference to his father's position, he would let the audience into a little family secret. For the past two years his father had been in communication with the authorities at Ottawa in relation to resigning, being sick and tired of the worry.

'Mr. Turner.—That is untrue.

'Mr. McInnes.—That is not an untruth, and the records at Ottawa will bear me out.'

And inquire whether the Hon. Thomas R. McInnes, Lieutenant-governor of British Columbia, has sent in his resignation to the government, or intimated to the Premier or any of his colleagues a desire to be relieved from the responsibilities of the office he now holds If so, has the government taken any action in the matter? If not, do they intend doing so?

He said: I should not have put this notice on the paper, being a citation from a newspaper, were it not that young Mr. McInnes says that the records in Ottawa will bear out the statements which he has made. It is easy for the government, when the time arrives, to state whether that be the fact or not, because the action of the lieutenant-governor of British Columbia, without commenting upon it, has attracted a very great deal of attention, as we all know, during the last two years, and it is very important, not only to the Dominion generally, but particularly to the people of British Columbia, to know whether he is to be relieved from the responsible duties which he has not been properly performing in the past.

THE MANITOBA SCHOOL QUESTION.

MOTION RULED OUT OF ORDER.

The notice of motion being called:

By the Hon. Mr. LANDRY:

1. Did the Governor General in Council, on March 21, 1895, render judgment upon the appeal brought before his tribunal by the Catholic minority of Manitoba, and is that judgment known under the name of 'The Remedial Order'?
2. Did not that judgment order the legislature of Manitoba to do justice to the recognized grievances of the Catholic minority of that province?
3. Has the legislature of Manitoba complied with that judgment, and has it remedied the grievances of the Catholics?
4. If justice has not yet been rendered to the minority injured in its rights, does the government intend to exact that the judgment rendered shall be executed, and is it going to take the steps to have it executed?
5. The case which this school question caused to rise having been appealed to the federal tribunal, and a judgment having been rendered by that tribunal, is it not precisely upon that tribunal and upon no other that the obligation falls of causing its judgment to be respected?
6. When is the government going to cause the constitution and the judicial decrees to be respected, and when will the federal government, which by law is constituted the protector of the rights of minorities, treat this school question from the point of view of right and duty, and not at all as a question serving as a stepping-stone for certain politicians?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I might call attention to the fact, Mr. Speaker, that this question appeared on the paper the other day and was answered, and it is not regular that it should be placed on the orders again.

The SPEAKER—When I saw that notice on the paper, I inquired of the clerk why it had been placed on the paper the second time, and was informed that some one had given instructions to one of the clerks to put it on the Orders of the Day without his knowledge. I thought that this inquiry had been answered, so that it is irregular to place it on the Orders of the Day again.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I suppose I can give it as a notice of motion?

The SPEAKER—I do not think that the hon. gentleman can place on the Order paper again a question which has been answered by the minister.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY.—That might be so if the question had been answered; but supposing the question has not been answered?

The SPEAKER—I may say to the hon. gentleman that I think it is for the minister to say whether he has answered the question. If he says he has no further answer to make, that is an end to the matter.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I accept the ruling of the Chair, and will give another notice.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think it is quite competent for a senator, or a member of the House of Commons, to put a question on the Order paper, and receive an answer. After that answer has been given, he cannot repeat the question, but he can make a motion for papers, and bring the matter before the House, based upon the answer which has been given. That is the course which has been pursued in the House of Commons repeatedly, because questions are asked in order to obtain information, and upon that information a notice for papers has been based. What the proceedings have been in this House, I am not prepared at the moment to say, because it has never been brought under my notice before, but I know it is a common occurrence in the House of Commons.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman will allow me to remark that the inquiry in question was identically the same as the former inquiry appearing under his name.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am not objecting to the ruling. I was simply pointing out that the question having been answered as decided by His Honour the Speaker, that the hon. gentleman could formulate a motion hereafter in order to obtain the information which he sought by the question. That is the only point I wish to raise.

HILLSBOROUGH RIVER BRIDGE.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON moved :

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before the Senate copies of all plans, specifications, profiles, estimates of cost, and all other papers relating to the construction of the proposed bridge over the Hillsborough River, at Charlottetown, P.E.I.; said papers to include the contract entered into between the government of Canada and that of Prince Edward Island regarding the said bridge; also all correspondence on the said subject between the two governments; and also any Order in Council or of the Department of Railways settling the site of the said bridge.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY.

He said : In making this motion I may explain to hon. gentlemen that the Minister of Railways has given a notice in another place of a Bill dealing with this question, and that I am quite well aware that the Bill is to be submitted to this parliament and is expected to be passed during the present session dealing with this subject, and it will therefore be necessary that we should have these papers before the Bill reaches us. The members of the government in this House will know about what time the Bill will reach us. I make this motion because it is important that we should have those papers before we can properly consider the Bill.

The motion was agreed to.

LAND TITLES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day being called.

Third reading of Bill (139) 'An Act to amend the Land Titles Act, 1894,' as amended.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT said : The third reading of this Bill has been postponed in order that my hon. friend from Calgary might be here, as a clause was added to the Bill on the advice of the law clerk of the Interior Department, to meet a difficulty that was intended to be provided for by Bill No. 31, which was in charge of the hon. senator from Calgary. I am advised that the provision made in subsection 5, of this Bill as now reprinted, covers the point in a satisfactory manner. It would so appear from correspondence received from some solicitors in the North-west. I should be glad to hear the opinion of my hon. friend on the subject.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I regret that I was not present when the Bill reached its committee stage. I had intended discussing some of the provisions of the Bill with the law clerk of the Department of the Interior, which department was in charge of the measure. I may point out that a rather serious omission is to be found in clause 4 of the Bill, inasmuch as it is not sufficiently comprehensive to apply to all the lands in the territories. The hon. Secretary of State will notice that it was the intention that this Bill shall apply to all lands regarding which the ordinances of the North-west Territories, dealing with the Municipal and School Act apply. There are other ordinances dealing with lands, such for instance as special charters granted to municipalities, which ordinances are not included in the Municipal Act, and are entirely distinct from it. Consequently, you would eliminate those lands from the operation of this measure if you adhered to the expressions in clause 4. If my hon. friend will permit the Bill to stand until to-morrow, I will point out to the law clerk of the Department of the Interior wherein the infirmity exists, and doubtless he will at once appreciate the suggestion I am prepared to make. I might say, with reference to clause 5 of the Bill, in my judgment it is more desirable than Bill 31 which was intended to deal with the same subject. I therefore think if these suggestions are embodied in the Bill it will be highly desirable.

The Order of the Day was discharged, and the Bill was ordered for third reading to-morrow.

OTTAWA, BROCKVILLE AND ST. LAWRENCE RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW moved the second reading of Bill 120, 'An Act to incorporate the Ottawa, Brockville and St. Lawrence Railway Company.' He said: This Bill is for the purpose of constructing a line of railway from Ottawa to Brockville, through the counties of Carleton, Grenville and Leeds. It has undergone some change in the House of Commons since first introduced. The company asked for power to operate an electric railway between the cities of Brockville and Ottawa. This was objected to in the House of Commons and removed from the Bill, and there is now no objection to it.

The Bill was read the second time.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

PROPORTIONATE REPRESENTATION OF SHAREHOLDERS BILL.

BILL DROPPED.

The Order of the Day being called:

Second reading (Bill S) 'An Act to secure proportionate representation of Shareholders on Boards of Directors of Corporations.'—(Hon. Mr. Lougheed.)

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED said: As this Bill would involve a very considerable change in the existing law relating to corporations, I was very anxious to obtain all the information I could upon similar laws in force in the United States, and I am not in a position up to the present time to secure the information which I so much desire. Pending the obtaining of that information, I move that the Order of the Day be discharged.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I regret that the hon. gentleman has decided to drop the Bill at the present stage. I had hoped that he would, at any rate, have explained to the House the reasons why he was in favour of this measure. That would have given us something to go upon at another session. I may say, for one member of the House, that I cordially agree with the object of the Bill. I think it is calculated to introduce a much better system in carrying on the business of corporations than exists at the present time, and I trust the hon. gentleman, in letting it drop for the present does not propose to abandon it, but that he will return with renewed strength.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I might say, in explanation of the motion which I have just made, that I would not consider that I was treating this House fairly if I proceeded with so important a measure, involving, as I have already said, such very radical changes in the law of corporations with regard to the election of directors, without securing all the information that might be obtainable on such a measure. As I have already mentioned, a law similar to that proposed in this Bill obtains in many states in the union. I understand that that law has been in operation for many years in several of the United States, and I have been placed in communication with gentlemen who profess to say that it has worked satisfactorily in many of the states. I will be candid with the House in saying that I have also received information to the contrary, and therefore, I do not desire to go into the consideration of the measure without having all the information possible, particularly in the case of such an important measure as this. I therefore consider, in justice to myself, in justice to the House, and in justice to the institutions which this Bill will affect, that I should be able, at the time I introduce it seriously, to place the House in possession of the fullest information possible. Hon. gentlemen will therefore appreciate the position I hold with regard to the Bill. My withdrawal of it for the present does not mean that I intend to drop it, but when I secure the information which I am seeking, I shall ask the House to again permit me to place the Bill upon the Order paper.

The motion was agreed to.

BANK ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved the second reading of Bill (163) 'An Act to amend the Bank Act.' He said: In moving the second reading of this Bill, it is not necessary that I should detain the House for more than a very few minutes. There is no new principle involved in the measure. There is no radical departure from the banking system which at present prevails in this country. Our banking system has grown to what it is by slow degrees. It was not, in the first instance, based upon any abstract theory of banking, but was such as experience suggested as suited to the circumstances of the country. Ten years ago certain amendments were made in the Act, and now the time has come when it is necessary to consider what further changes experience has pointed out as necessary to our banking system. Perhaps in no country in the world has any system of banking worked more satisfactorily than that which has prevailed in this Dominion. We have had a few banking institutions that have failed. That must always happen under any conceivable state of things. You cannot devise a system of banking so perfect that it will obviate the necessity of good business habits as well as high character on the part of those who have the management of those institutions. Hon. gentlemen who have been obliged to consider the failures that have taken place in the case of a few banks in this country during the past ten years, know very well that those failures were not due to any defect in the general system of banking that has been adopted. Our system has, in fact, sprung from the commercial life of the community. It has been carefully considered by those who are interested in it, and who have been carrying it into operation. Experience from time to time suggested the necessity of changes, and the altered circumstances and conditions of the country may suggest further change as well. The changes that are proposed in the Bill, the second reading of which I have moved, are changes, not of principle, but of certain details, and those details can be best considered in committee. There is no general principle running through the various amendments that have been suggested, and so there is no general principle to discuss in connection with the proposed changes. Each is important in itself. Each is easily understood, and I would, therefore, move the second reading of the Bill, and ask for the consideration of each of its clauses when the House goes into committee, and with the indulgence of the House I shall ask that we proceed into committee after the Bill has been read the second time.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman having intimated his intention to go into committee at once, with the consent of the House, it will not be necessary for me to ask one or two questions that I intended to ask. It has been represented to me that in one of the clauses there are certain returns asked for from the banks which it is impossible for them to give, and I intended to ask the hon. gentleman whether he intends to make any amendment that would relieve the banks from the penalty which would be incurred by not complying with the provisions of the clause. It is very important that all the information possible that is in the possession of the banks should be given, in order that the country may know exactly the position in which banks stand. I may add, however, parenthetically, that Canada has been singularly fortunate in the past in her banking institutions, and the management of them. Whereas hundreds of banks have failed in other countries, and in some of the colonies, the banks of Canada have stood the test, and gone through the severe ordeal of depression in trade and failures all over the country, and still remained solvent. One or two banks, to which the Minister of Justice has referred, have failed, not through the system, but, to use a very strong expression, through the rascalities of those who were managing them. I know that under some legislation in the province of Ontario, calling for returns from loan companies and companies of that kind, it has been impossible to give proper answers, and what was the most objectionable part was the fact the officers of the companies were asked to swear positively to the correctness of the returns. I know instances in which the presidents and managers—the presidents in particular—could not by any possibility know the details of the working of their institutions and they refused pointedly to make the affidavit. I know, speaking for myself, that when the affidavit was represented to me which presidents are required to make, I would not under any circumstances do it, and so changed it as to add to the affidavit 'so far as I know,' or 'to the best of my knowledge.' I may add that the Ontario government accepted that. I suppose, looking at the provisions of the Act which they had passed, they found that anybody having any conscience to satisfy would not make the affidavit required. If there is a clause in this Bill, as has been pointed out to me, that cannot be complied with, it would only require a few words to make the change, and I would ask the hon. gentleman whether it is his intention to make that slight amendment.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—If the changes are very slight. I did not think it necessary to mention it at the second reading of the Bill, but the suggestion has been made, and I am prepared to accept the very slight change that is proposed. It is in clause 21.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is a very slight change, but a very important one to the man who has to make the return.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved that the rules be suspended so far as they relate to this Bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole.

(In the Committee.)

On the third clause:

The expression 'warehouse receipt,' defined by subsection (d) of section 2 of the Bank Act, includes receipts given by any person in charge of logs or timber in transit from timber limits, or other lands, to their place of destination.

2. The word 'manufacturer,' defined by paragraph (f) of section 2 of the said Act, includes a manufacturer of logs, timber or lumber.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—This is additional power given to the banks. They have not this power at present.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is a matter of doubt. The clause removes that doubt.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I always understood they had not that power. The hon. minister thinks it desirable that they should have that power ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I do.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—The lumber trade is an intricate trade and it is a matter of doubt whether the bank can carry it out as it has been carried out in the past.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—They have carried it out in the past, acting under the theory that the law is as it is proposed in this Bill to make it.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Does the hon. gentleman declare that that is the case ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is not necessary for me to deliver a judgment upon it. They have not suffered by it. Experience has shown that it is a necessary provision, and we undertake to make clear what might be a matter of doubt under the present law.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I know there is a divergence of opinion with respect to the tenure of this property, whether it is leasehold——

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The hon. gentleman is referring to standing timber. This clause does not deal with standing timber.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This refers to timber in transit.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is supposed to be in the warehouse, and the warehouse would consist of that portion of the Ottawa River on which it was carried until it reached Quebec, and the bank would hold it as security for advances made the same as if it were in the warehouse. The warehouse may be a thousand miles long.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I think a warehouse receipt to-day will cover that class of property. In the Act the expression 'warehouse receipt' means any receipt given by any person for any goods, wares or merchandise, in actual or continual possession. Goods in transit may be in a man's possession just as much as if he had his hands upon them.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The language is broad enough to cover it and it does not require to be in a warehouse.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 15,

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Subsection 2 is a re-enactment without change of the provision to the present section 7 of the Bank Act, declaring that the bank is not to hold real property, except such as is required for its own use, beyond a period of seven years, but with an additional provision, following the Loan Companies Act of last year, that the Treasury board may extend the time for sale from time to time up to a period not to exceed five years more, making twelve years altogether. Then there is a provision that if the property is not sold and the Treasury Department gives notice that a sale must be effected or the property will be forfeited, then the bank has six months within which to sell it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Forfeited to the Crown, I suppose, and not to the individuals ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—To the Crown? Yes.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 16,

16. The bank may lend money upon the security of standing timber, and the rights or licenses held by persons to cut or remove such timber.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This is new ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—But the banks have been doing it for a long time and they have a prescriptive right to it.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—They were never caught.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 21,

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The change of which my hon. friend opposite spoke on the motion for second reading is supposed to be made in this section.

We propose to amend this clause and make it read as follows :

The bank shall, within twenty days after the close of each calendar year, transmit or deliver to the Minister of Finance and Receiver General to be by him laid before parliament, a return of all drafts or bills of exchange.

Then, I strike out the words 'or any other negotiable instruments of the bank.'

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is not here ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It was struck out. I am reading from the House of Commons Bill as amended.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The hon. gentleman is reading from the original draft.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The remainder of the clause reads as follows:

Issued by the bank to any person and remaining unpaid for more than five years prior to the date of such return.

Subsection 2 reads:

Such return shall be signed in the manner required for the monthly returns under section 85 of the Bank Act, and shall set forth, so far as known, the name of the person to whom, or at whose request, such draft or bill of exchange was issued, and his address, the payee thereof, the amount and date thereof, and where the same was payable, and the agency of the bank from which the same was issued.

Hon. gentlemen will see that I have inserted the words 'so far as known,' and I have struck out the words 'if known.'

Subsection 3 reads:

Every bank which neglects to transmit or deliver to the Minister of Finance and Receiver General the return referred to, so far as known, within the time above limited, shall incur a penalty of $50 for each and every day during which such neglect continues.

We have struck out the words 'if known.' The banks shall set forth so far as known the character of the papers for which no demand has been made, and the other expression 'if known' refers to the address.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—But the whole thing is 'so far as known.'

The amendment was agreed to, and the clause, as amended, was adopted.

On clause 24,

Hon. Mr. POWER—I should like to have some information respecting this clause, which enables the bankers' association to appoint a curator in case a bank suspends.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The necessity for this has arisen from the fact that a suspended bank issued notes after its suspension, and this is to enable the bankers' association to appoint a curator to prevent anything of that kind.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—The curator has nothing to do with the management of the bank?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No. He is to prevent the frauds which have been practised.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL, from the committee, reported the Bill with an amendment, which was concurred in.

The Bill was then read the third time, and passed under a suspension of the rule.

The Senate adjourned.

FAST ATLANTIC SERVICE AND PACIFIC CABLE.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL, rose to:

Call the attention of the government to the following:

'(Special by cable from the special correspondent of the Montreal 'Star' in London.

London, June, 13.—Hon. Clifford Sifton, speaking at the Mayoral banquet at Cardiff, said that the fast Atlantic service and the Pacific cable were destined to be accomplished in a very short time.'

And to inquire whether the government has any information other than that already laid before parliament, by correspondence or otherwise, relating to an early commencement of the laying of the Canadian-Australian Pacific cable, as indicated in the cable despatch quoted above. If so, will it be laid upon the Table of the Senate at an early day?

He said: My only object in asking this question is to ascertain whether the government have had any correspondence with the High Commissioner through which they might have obtained further information as to the progress made by the board appointed for the purpose of facilitating the construction of this cable. The country, as we all know, is very much interested in this great work, connecting, as it would, the two continents, and any information which the government have on the subject would be acceptable to those who take an interest in the project.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Since the last correspondence brought down to this House, there has been no further information in the possession of the government on this subject. Mr. Sifton may have discussed the matter with Lord Strathcona, or Mr. Chamberlain, and they may have expressed to him their opinions or expectations or hopes, and he may have given expression to the view set forth in the paragraph in the Star, although I do not know. We have no correspondence and no information beyond what, I think, is already in the hon. gentleman's possession.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I was under the impression, or it was intimated to me, that further information had been received by the government, but as the hon. gentleman says there has not, that ends the matter.

THE POLITICAL CRISIS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL rose to:

Call the attention of the government to the following statement reported in the Victoria 'Times' of June 2 inst., to have been made by Mr. William Wallace Burns McInnes, son of the Governor General of British Columbia, at a public meeting:

'With reference to his father's position, he would let the audience into a little family secret. For the past two years his father had been in communication with the authorities at Ottawa in relation to resigning, being sick and tired of the worry.

'Mr. Turner.—That is untrue.

'Mr. McInnes.—That is not an untruth, and the records at Ottawa will bear me out.'

And inquire whether the Hon. Thomas R. McInnes, Lieutenant-governor of British Columbia, has sent in his resignation to the government, or intimated to the Premier or any of his colleagues a desire to be relieved from the responsibilities of the office he now holds. If so, has the government taken any action in the matter? If not, do they intend doing so?

He said: I think it would be interesting to know whether the lieutenant-governor of British Columbia has intimated to the government at Ottawa, his desire to be relieved from the responsible duties which have devolved upon him since he has occupied that position. All of us who read the newspapers know that he has played a most extraordinary part as lieutenant-governor. His first act was to dismiss his ministry before the elections, which had just taken place, had really closed, and before any one could know whether the ministry was sustained or defeated. Another government succeeded. That government he also dismissed, when he desired to get rid of them, in the face of a clear majority of seven of the legislature in their favour. Then we had the humiliating spectacle of a lieutenant-governor going down to the legislative hall to prorogue parliament, and every member of the House, with the exception I think of Mr. Martin, whom he had called upon to form a government, leaving the place hooting and jeering at the ruler of the province—ruler, I think, I may term him in every sense of the word—absolute ruler. If it be true, under these circumstances, that he has been seeking relief from his responsible duties, and that he is sick of the worry attending his position, the government, I think, would not only have been performing their duty, but would have been pursuing a course that would have met the approbation of every sensible and reasonable man in British Columbia. A statement of this kind coming from the lieutenant-governor's son, induced me to put the question to the hon. minister, in order that the country might know why his resignation has not been accepted, if he sent it in, or if he intimated to the government that he desired to be relieved. I am quite sure it would be a great relief to the people of British Columbia if the government would act upon the suggestion.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I have received no such communication, nor do I believe has any of my colleagues, as mentioned by Mr. McInnes, jr. His honour the lieutenant-governor of British Columbia has not written to any member of the government intimating his desire to retire, or to resign his position as lieutenant-governor of British Columbia. Of course, I can conceive of conditions where a man might offer to retire from office in case he received some other appointment, which would be a very different thing from what has been suggested here.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I never supposed that the lieutenant-governor would write to the Minister of Justice on a question of this kind. He would write to the Premier of the Dominion.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Quite so.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understand my hon. friend to say that the Premier has received no such intimation ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—None whatever.

THE MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS OF THE SENATE.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I should like to invite the attention of the House to a new departure in the recording of our minutes of proceedings. It has been usual, in past years, and it was so at the beginning of this session, when a motion was made calling the attention of the government to certain facts, that that motion was recorded in the minutes and proceedings. I find, at page 75 of this year's record, that the Hon. Mr. McDonald, of Victoria, B.C., called the attention of the government to Asiatic emigration to Canada. I could cite quite a number of such entries, but I shall only mention one in each year. The year before last, on May 26, Mr. Landry made a motion to place the Speaker's ruling on record. Last year, on April 18, Sir Mackenzie Bowell called the attention of the government to a telegraphic despatch which was published in the Evening Journal, quoting the whole article, and ending with an inquiry. It is a well-established rule that all those motions made in this House are put on record in the Minutes and Proceedings. Of late, not one has been put upon record. I do not know who gave the instructions to have those motions omitted from the Minutes of Proceedings, and I should like to know if a new rule has been adopted. There must be some authority. Has the Clerk of the House taken it upon himself to do so, or has he received orders from any authority? At all events, I call the attention of the House to the matter, and I hope that the two questions put to-day by the hon. leader of the opposition will appear in the Minutes and Proceedings. I think the few rights left to us should be kept intact without interference.

The SPEAKER—I do not know anything about what the hon. gentleman is speaking of. If he had been kind enough to communicate his objections before the meeting of the House, I would have inquired; but, as it is, I do not know why the motions have not been put in the Minutes. I shall inquire later, and inform the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I took the same course to-day that I took yesterday. I did not inquire before, nor did I inquire to-day. I was attacked yesterday, and I expected to be attacked again to-day.

COLD STORAGE ACCOMMODATION BILL.

THIRD REARDING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the third reading of Bill (152) 'An Act to authorize contracts with certain steamship companies for cold storage accommodation.' He said: An hon. gentleman desired to know the prices that had been paid for cold storage over and above the ordinary rate last year and the present year. There are twenty-three vessels under what is called 'control'—that is, controlling the rates and the space. Seventeen of those charge fifteen shillings per ton of 2,240 pounds. The charge last year was ten shillings. Freights are higher this year. Of the twenty-three, there are six vessels that are still working under the old contracts, and the charge with them is the ten shillings as before.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is the continuation of the contract into which they entered?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I was asked if I could furnish the rates which is charged from United States ports. I have appealed to Prof. Robertson, and he says the rates from United States ports vary from twenty-five to thirty-five shillings in addition to the ordinary freights. Our rates for cold storage are so much less that, if we did not control the space, the United States exporters would occupy the whole of it, and the vessels would be glad to get it, as they could charge more than they are now receiving.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The United States vessels to which the hon. gentleman refers receive no subsidies from their government?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No. I am illustrating the question which was put to me as to whether rates were higher or lower than from United States ports, and I have given the information I received from Prof. Robertson.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is satisfactory, but it is only fair to state that the charges, varying from twenty-five to thirty-five shillings, are made by vessels receiving no aid from the government, while the new contracts into which the government has entered cost the shippers fifteen shillings a ton, while the extra charge was ten shillings under the old contract.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.) I should like to inquire whether the fifteen shillings a ton charged by these seventeen vessels is in addition to the regular freight ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, that is above the ordinary freight rates.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (68) 'An Act respecting the Nickel Steel Company of Canada.'—(Hon. Mr. Kirchhoffer.)

Bill (55) 'An Act to incorporate the Canadian Bankers' Association.'—(Hon. Mr. Lougheed.)

Bill (113) 'An Act to confer on the Commissioner of Patents certain powers for the relief of the Frost & Wood Company, Limited.'—(Hon. Mr. Power.)

LAND TITLES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

RECOMMITTED AND READ THE THIRD TIME.

The Order of the Day having been called,

Third reading of Bill (139) 'An Act to amend the Land Titles Act of 1894,' as amended.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the Bill be referred back to Committee of the Whole for the purpose of striking a clause out of the Bill. He said : I will explain why in committee.

The motion was agreed to.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The attention of the department has been called by the hon. gentleman from Calgary, who is familiar with the working of the laws in the North-west Territories, to the fact that section 4, will conflict with the laws of the North-west Territories, inasmuch as they have made provision for the evidence upon which the judge may confirm a tax sale, and it would only be interfering with the law already in existence there. I may say the clause was introduced at the instance of a leading lawyer in the North-west, and at the instance of one of the North-west judges. Probably they overlooked this fact.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is needless to say that the Municipal Act provides as to what assessors shall do, and how land shall be assessed, and how notice shall be served upon the parties assessed, and then the extraordinary remedy is given to a municipality to sell the land in relation to which there has been a default in the payment of taxes. This clause provides that the judge may waive all these formalities and practically confirm the tax sale to the purchaser. It seems to me that, in view of the fact that an extraordinary remedy is given to a municipality to sell the land for taxes, and the lands are invariably sold for a paltry sum, all the formalities should be strictly complied with by the municipalities, so that parties owning land may feel that with reference to the assessments, all the formalities have been complied with, and that their lands are not bartered away through the incompetence of some official —who has made a defective assessment. That, in addition to the other defect which my hon. friend has mentioned, I think should warrant this clause in being struck out. I may say that, although I have had considerable experience in reference to tax sales, I have not found or observed the necessity for such a broad and sweeping section as this particular one under consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER, from the committee, reported the Bill with an amendment which was concurred in.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the Bill be read the third time.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Suspend the rule !

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The rule says that where a Bill is reported from committee without any amendment being made, it can be read the third time, but not under other circumstances.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is all right if no objection is made.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not object to the third reading, but the rule should be complied with, in order to keep our records correct.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I do.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman from Stadacona objects.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I asked if the rules were to be suspended.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—We have had Bills reported from committee and read the third time the same day; at other times, when Bills were reported and the third reading was objected to, it was postponed till the next day. As I understand the rule, if a Bill is reported with no amendment, there is nothing to prevent it being read the third time that same day. But it has been objected to, and Bills have stood over for third reading till the following day. In the present case the Bill is amended in committee and the third reading is moved for without a motion for the suspension of the rules.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is a difference in the rules as to private Bills and public Bills. A private Bill shall not be read the third time the same day it is reported from committee, and a public Bill should not be read the third time where an amendment has been made; but I would direct attention to the fact that this Bill hardly comes under that rule, because it was set down for the third reading to-day, and when the Order of the Day was called, the Secretary of State moved that the Bill be referred back to the committee. That would show the wisdom of not having read it a third time on the previous day, but I contend that the amendment that was desired having been made, it is in order to read the Bill. At the same time, I should think there was no objection to letting it stand.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the hon. gentleman from Halifax had read the rule he would not have arrived at the conclusion he has reached. It is true it was set down for the third reading to-day, but was re-committed for amendment, and consequently, when the committee reports the Bill, it reports a Bill with an amendment. Rule 41 says:

No Bill shall be read twice the same day. No Committee of the Whole House shall proceed on any Bill the same day the Bill is read the second time, and no Bill shall be read the third time the same day that the Bill is reported from the committee when any amendments have been made in committee.

That is just what we have done. It is clear enough.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That rule, although universal in form, applies to public Bills.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This is not a private Bill.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is a public Bill, and that makes my point the stronger.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is scarcely within the category, for the reason that it has been amended in committee already and set down for third reading. It would be quite in order to make the ordinary motion, that the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be amended by striking out this clause, and no exception could be taken to that. But I have often heard it expressed by members of this House that they would rather the Bill should be sent back to committee. However, I will change my motion, and move that the Bill be read the third time on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

COMPANIES CLAUSES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved the second reading of Bill (X) 'An Act to amend the Companies Clauses Act.' He said: The object of the Bill is to confer upon a company the power to change its head office. The Bill provides that this may be done by by-law, but that this by-law must receive the assent of two-thirds in number, and at least three-fourths in value of the shareholders of the company, and it subsequently must receive the sanction of the Governor in Council. It is provided by section 2, that this Act shall apply to companies incorporated heretofore, as well as hereafter, but shall not apply to any insurance company, nor to any company which, under its Act of incorporation, or any amendment thereto, has power to change its head office or chief place of business. We do not propose to deal with those who have already this power, but to confer it upon other companies except those mentioned in subsection 2. It was introduced in the Commons by Mr. Gilmour without much chance of its getting through, and we put it on the government orders so as to facilitate its passage.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

SAFETY OF SHIPS BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved the second reading of Bill (12) 'An Act respecting the safety of ships.' He said: This Bill consists of a single clause. It is an amendment of the Act passed last session, which also contained a single clause. The Act of last session reads as follows:

> Notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in section 7 of the Act respecting the safety of ships and the prevention of accidents on board thereof, chapter 77 of the Revised Statutes as enacted in section 3 of chapter 44 of the statutes of 1894, steamships sailing from any port or place in Canada on or before the 12th day of October in each year to any port or place out of Canada, shall not be subject to any of the restrictions therein provided as to deck-loads, and no master of any steamship so sailing shall be liable for any of the penalties therein prescribed.

The Bill before the House reads as follows:

> 2. Notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in section 7 of the Act respecting the safety of ships and the prevention of accidents on board thereof, chapter 77 of the Revised Statutes, as enacted by section 3 of chapter 44 of the Statutes of 1894, steamships sailing from any port or place in Canada between the 16th day of March and the 12th day of October in each year to any port or place out of Canada, shall not be subject to any of the restrictions therein provided as to deck-loads, and no master of any steamship so sailing shall be liable for any of the penalties therein prescribed.
> 3. Chapter 33 of the Statutes of 1899 is repealed.

Hon. gentlemen will see that in this Bill we mention the period in the year at which this Act is to begin, as well as the period at which it is to close.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

DOMINION OF CANADA RIFLE ASSOCIATION INCORPORATION BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (169) 'An Act to incorporate the Dominion of Canada Rifle Association.' He said: Hon. gentlemen are all aware that for many years there has been an association kept up in Canada known as the Dominion Rifle Association. Its benefits have been very apparent, particularly in the last six or eight months. It has had the effect of stimulating the practice of sharpshooting. If our contingents in South Africa have been successful, it is largely due to the fact that they were not mere automatons, that each man exercised a degree of intelligence which he had acquired by the practice, which practice he followed up in the corps and practising at marks. We know very well that the most deadly fighting in South Africa was sniping,—men cutting off each other by sharpshooting at considerable distances, and it is quite important that we should all favour and patronize the extension and enlargement of the sphere of the Dominion Rifle Association. The Bill was regarded as a public one because it was asked for by the gentlemen who have themselves been the leading patrons of the association, and who have, no doubt, spent a good deal of time and money in furthering the objects of the association. It is with a view of giving it corporate powers, to enable it to work more satisfactorily by having rules and by-laws.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

THE MANITOBA SCHOOL QUESTION.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired:

> Has an appeal of the Manitoba school question been submitted to a Federal tribunal?
>
> What was the Federal tribunal?
> Has that tribunal rendered judgment upon such case?
> Has the government any intention to have that judgment executed?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I may say to my hon. friend, with regard to this matter, that under the 22nd section of the Manitoba Act it is only when it is impossible to secure a settlement by negotiation that it is necessary to have recourse to the coercive measures that are provided by the British North America Act and by the Manitoba Act. That question, as to which was the preferable method of settlement, was a question that was at issue at the time that the remedial order was under the consideration of parliament. The remedial order was not adopted by parliament before the time for the continuance of that parliament had expired, and in the elections those that favoured a settlement by negotiation succeeded. Negotiations were had and a settlement was arrived at, and that settlement has been carried into effect from time to time as the opportunity has offered. So far as the rural districts were concerned, there were eighty-one schools in which the system of separate schools had existed, as I understand, prior to 1890. All those schools have accepted the terms of settlement, and I am told are entirely satisfied, and would not return to the former system if they were asked to do so, preferring the system which has been adopted under the settlement which was reached. In the city of Winnipeg there has been no difference in principle, as I understand, between those who supported separate schools and those who supported the national system. The difference has reference solely to the terms. I understand the supporters of separate schools asked that, in taking over those schools, the school board should agree absolutely to the employment of none but Roman Catholic teachers in certain schools, and to carry on the teaching as it was being carried on in the rural sections. The school board were of the opinion that they had no power to agree to that arrangement, although, as a matter of fact, they were prepared practically to carry such an arrangement into effect, and so the matter stands in that way at the present moment. I have no doubt that terms and conditions will ultimately be arrived at, if the friends of separate schools have confidence in the board, that practically will meet their wishes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If instead of my question, I had placed an invitation on the paper, and asked the hon. minister to make a speech, I should have succeeded, but I should like to have an answer to my inquiry. I asked the hon. gentleman if there was an appeal submitted to a federal tribunal. Was there an appeal submitted to a federal tribunal?

Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman puts a question to me, and I have had the courtesy to answer him in the way that I thought was proper. Now my hon. friend puts to me a question categorically, 'was there an appeal.' The hon. gentleman knows as well as I do whether there was or not. I have no special information on that subject to communicate to the hon. gentleman. He knows the facts. Then he asks what was that federal tribunal? The hon. gentleman knows that also. Then he asked has the federal tribunal rendered a judgment upon the case? The hon. gentleman knows that as well as I do. I have answered the inquiry in general terms suitable to the requirements of the——

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Of the situation.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Of the general information which he seeks, and in conformity with the law of parliament.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think the hon. minister, in his answer, has mixed up the remedial order with the Remedial Bill. He told us a moment ago, that the remedial order had been before the House of Commons and failed to become law. That was never the case. If I want an answer, let the hon. gentleman at least give me the correct answer in conformity with the facts. He says that I know all that, but he speaks in a way that leads me to believe that he does not know a word of it himself. If he is unable to answer these very pertinent questions, let the hon. gentleman say he is unable to answer. It is not because I know, or do not know a thing, that justifies him in refusing to answer a pertinent question. I asked him if that tribunal had rendered a judgment. I did not get an answer.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I say that the hon. gentleman has no right to put these questions, so far as the rule of parliament is concerned—he has no right to put questions about matters which are not in the custody of the government, but matters of general notoriety, and on which the hon. gentleman ought to be as well informed as myself.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I deny the assertion of the hon. gentleman. I say it is his duty to answer those questions. It is strange, if the hon. gentleman can rise and give his ipse dixit, and thinks we must be satisfied with it as a proper decision to be given settling a question of order. Let him quote Bourinot or May. He will find, in those quotations, ample reason why he should answer. The other day he quoted May, but he skipped a line or two. We never saw those two lines he omitted. Let him read further, and he will see what May says. I deny the authority of the hon. gentleman to decide whether I am right or wrong in my question. Let the Speaker decide. I will not take my ruling from the Minister of Justice.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—I beg, with the indulgence of the House, to say a few words, not to discuss the matter before the House, because I do not think it is the time to discuss it, but to give the hon. Minister of Justice a flat denial of his statements. He says there has been a settlement of the Manitoba school question. There has been no settlement at all, and consequently the remedial order is still in force, notwithstanding the hon. gentleman's statement. The schools have not adopted the so-called settlement as satisfactory justice extended to them. They are not satisfied as the hon. minister says. The Roman Catholics have put themselves under the public school law, under protest, simply because they were financially unable to support their own schools, and because they wanted their children to have some instruction, but they have not accepted that so-called settlement, which settles nothing. Again, I say, the Roman Catholic minority of Manitoba are not satisfied. Everything that has been done, has been done under protest. The hon. gentleman says we have no right to put those questions. I say that we have the right. There has been a judgment. The remedial order passed in March, 1895, is a judgment, and that judgment has not been executed yet, and we have a right to ask the government whether they intend to execute that judgment or not. The hon. gentleman should have some consideration for his own position, and opinions, when he speaks to the House and to the country on this question. He should not answer hon. gentlemen only with the idea of defending the policy adopted by the government of which he is a member; he should rise above such a disposition, and inform the House and country on the subject.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Before the hon. gentleman from St. Boniface made the statement he has made, and the affirmation that this government should go further than it has gone, it would have been his duty to tell us, on behalf of the Roman Catholic minority of Manitoba, in whose name he, as well as the hon. gentleman from Stadacona, desires to speak, whether since the change of government in Manitoba, the present government has been approached in a conciliatory spirit, to ascertain if the policy of Hugh John Macdonald is different from the policy pursued by the Greenway government. I was present in Montreal when Mr. Greenway, a couple of years ago, said that some concessions had been made to the minority. I know that under these concessions, over 150 schools have been reopened and maintained their Roman Catholic autonomy. Mr. Greenway, in his speech, declared that if these concessions were not deemed sufficient, he was ready to go further. I do not know how often meetings have taken place between the Roman Catholic authorities and Mr. Greenway since he made that declaration, but I know one fact—that he is no longer in power there, and I should like to know from the champions of the Roman Catholic minority, if Mr. Macdonald has been appealed to by the representatives of the Roman Catholics to redress the grievances of which the hon. gentleman complains? If Mr. Macdonald says he accepts the situation as it is to-day, and will not go any further, then I can understand, if there are grievances which cannot be remedied in Manitoba itself, why they should look elsewhere for redress, but I have not heard either hon. gentlemen say that they cannot get full justice from the present government of Manitoba?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman who rises to answer for the government is very much mistaken. A judgment has been rendered by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council here and in England.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—In England.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—And here. There is the remedial order.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is not a judgment.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—It is a judgment.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is a judgment rendered on an appeal.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—A judgment does not require an Act of parliament to enforce it.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—In this case it does.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is not a judgment.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—It is a judgment to all intents and purposes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is not a judgment, in the judgment of the hon. member.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Or anybody else.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman is very much mistaken. A judgment has been rendered, a decision given, and Manitoba has been served with a copy of that judgment, or decision, and put in a position to comply with it. Manitoba has refused to comply. Where is the judgment now? Where is the promise of the government to do justice when the local government does not give that justice to which the minority is entitled? There is a duty devolving upon the government. Is the government to-day doing its duty? Not at all. Yet the hon. minister gets excited, and tries to lecture us because we are asking him what is the intention of the government in the matter. The hon. gentleman from Delorimier told us that Mr. Hugh John Macdonald is now obliged to settle that question. That is not the case. The prime minister of the day in Manitoba has nothing to do with the question at the moment. The Manitoba legislature has given its answer. It is the government of the day here that should act. The refusal of Manitoba has been given. Why should this government wait any longer before taking action? Three, four, five or six ministeries might pass away in Manitoba without anything being done to remedy the grievance of the minority, if the government have decided to wait for the decision of each new administration. There would be no end to the farce; therefore, action should have been taken after the first refusal of the Manitoba legislature. I cannot congratulate my hon. friend from Delorimier (Mr. Dandurand), on having attended that dinner given to Mr. Greenway in Montreal. I know it was made with great display. All the members of the Liberals went, and kissed his hands there, and I suppose the hon. gentleman from Delorimier is one of those who kissed both his hands, as we can see by his course here to-day.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—I might say one word, in answer to the hon. gentleman from Delorimier. As usual, the hon. gentleman has tried to make political capital again. He has tried to remove the responsibility which rests on this government and to place it on other shoulders. It matters not to the Roman Catholic minority of Manitoba whether they receive justice from this government, or from the local government. What we want is justice at present, and for the last four years this governmnent have been derelict in their duty, and we are right in continuing to ask from them full justice, and to use the best means we have to obtain it. The Premier of this government repeatedly said in the campaign of 1896, that he would obtain justice for the Roman Catholic minority, and, if necessary, would have recourse to the means which the constitution places in his hands. That he has not done.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—If conciliation failed.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—I beg your pardon. He said if conciliation failed he would use the means placed in his hands by the constitution. Well, conciliation has failed entirely.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—So much so, that Mr. Greenway, in the last local election, declared in his address to the electors, and in his speeches, that the law as framed by the so-called settlement in 1897, was there to remain so long as he would retain the confidence of the people of Manitoba. Far from being disposed to make any amendment and give justice to the minority of Manitoba, the question now stands in that shape unsatisfactory. I must say that I do not agree entirely with the hon. gentleman from Stadacona. My contention is that this government, and the other government also, at present have jurisdiction. The local government in Manitoba can, of its own motion, give justice to a minority.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—But if it does not, this government is in duty bound to come to the rescue of the minority by passing remedial legislation.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—This is a matter that has engaged the attention of this House, of the House of Commons, and of the people generally throughout Canada for a number of years, and I am rather surprised at the remarks of the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat. He tells us that the Manitoba government have this matter entirely in their own hands.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—Not entirely.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I claim they have it entirely in their own hands. It is a matter affecting the province, and until the minority can show they have a grievance of sufficient importance——

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear. What did the Privy Council say ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—That matter has been decided by the House of Commons and sanctioned by the Senate, and the hon. gentleman knows that when Mr. Greenway made that statement in his address, he made it believing he was right. The settlement of 1897 had been accepted and practically every school that was a Roman Catholic separate school previous to the legislation of 1897, has come in and accepted that settlement, all except the separate schools in Winnipeg, and the friends of the hon. gentleman from St. Boniface. The Roman Catholic minority in Winnipeg have interviewed Hugh John Macdonald. Have they obtained any satisfaction from him ? He said : 'No,' he would not pay any attention to their representation until he heard the other side. If it had not been for the liberal treatment extended by the Greenway government to the Catholic minority of Manitoba, that government would be in power there to-day. The Greenway government were attacked by Hugh John Macdonald and his friends, who said that they had been too lenient with the Roman Catholics of Manitoba. My hon. friend took part in that campaign, and he knows that. One of the strong grounds advanced by Mr. Hugh John Macdonald and his friends, during the election in December last, was that the Greenway government had been too liberal to the Roman Catholic minority in Manitoba, and I believe that reason tended more to the defeat of the Greenway government than anything else. That is one question upon which the people of Manitoba will not have any trifling. They said it was their right to govern their own country. They stood by the Greenway government in two elections on that question, and it was claimed by Hugh John Macdonald and the Conservative press in Manitoba that the government administered that law so leniently that they should not have the confidence of the people of Manitoba. That is the condition of affairs. In Winnipeg, if the Roman Catholic minority were reasonable, there would be a settlement. I claim that they are not reasonable. The Catholic minority have asked the school board to take over their school and administer it as a public school. The school board are willing to do that under the Act, but the Roman Catholics ask that these schools be maintained with Catholic teachers. The school board, of course, had no power to make such an arrangement to bind the school board of another year. More than that, they asked, as they are practically all Catholic children that go to these schools now, that Protestant children should be excluded. That is unfair, unreasonable, and not within the spirit of the Act, and they cannot agree to that. If the Roman Catholics of Winnipeg are prepared to turn over those schools to the school board of Winnipeg, the school board are prepared to accept them ; that is that secular education shall be taught up to half past three in the afternoon, and then, as in all other schools, they can have their religious teaching. But the Roman Catholics are not prepared to accept that, and I think any reasonable man inside this chamber, or outside it, will say that the position taken by the school board is reasonable and liberal, and there is no doubt at all that with the experience they have had in the settlements where those separate schools existed previous to 1890 and 1897, they would not return, under any circumstances, to the state of things previous to that time. The children are being taught with competent teachers—teachers who are qualified. Previous to that they were not.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—I beg your pardon.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I know whereof I speak, that a great number of the schools before that time were taught by persons who had no certificates, and were not competent. Now they have competent teachers, and come under the law, and the children are being educated, and outside the city of Winnipeg there is very little dissatisfaction. The best evidence of that is that they have complied with the regulations, and have taken the public school grant.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—I am somewhat under a disadvantage, because I have to speak by the indulgence of this House on this occasion and be brief. I suppose we are not going to begin again the political campaign that took place in connection with the provincial election which the hon. gentleman has brought into this debate.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Who brought it in ?

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—The hon. gentleman says the Greenway government was defeated on account of its policy in school matters.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—To some extent.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—I may say there were many other things beside the school question for which that government should be condemned, and it has been condemned, fortunately for the province, and there are certain matters which have come before the public since which justify me in speaking in that way. But I leave that aside. The hon. gentleman says that if the Roman Catholic minority could establish a reasonable grievance, that his government would have remedied it. But I should like to ask the hon. gentleman whether he knows something of the pronouncement of the Privy Council, which stated that the grounds taken by the Roman Catholic minority were just. That pronouncement goes on to say that the remedy must be given to the grievances of the Roman Catholic minority. The hon. gentleman is not willing apparently to accept the decision of the Privy Council, but I hope the majority of this House will recognize that when the lords of the Privy Council, after going into the matter thoroughly, decided that we had a grievance, that they will accept such judgment. As a matter of fact, we relied upon that. The Catholic minority always proceeded with prudence and according to the constitution. It was asked of us that we should refer our grievances to the tribunals of the country. We did so and we have had a judgment in our favour, but now we have a large section of this country, a great political party, not wishing to accede to the judgment of the highest tribunal of the empire, and they persist to stand in defiance of the law, of the constitution, and of the command of Her Majesty. The hon. gentleman disparagingly speaks of the Roman Catholic teachers, and says he knows whereof he speaks. I regret to say in this instance that his statements are not accurate. He is misleading the House and the public. The teachers of the schools of the minority were capable, and, with very few exceptions, qualified teachers from our province, or from other provinces, and consequently he is misleading the House and the country when he speaks in the way he has spoken.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The hon. gentleman says I am misleading the House. I may say that was one of the reasons why a clause was put in that agreement of settlement, that the Manitoba government would issue permits to those teachers who were not qualified until they could get qualified teachers. There were many that were not qualified, and could not pass an examination, and that clause had to be inserted in the agreement that the government should issue permits until they could get qualified teachers.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—Here again the hon. gentleman is misleading the House.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman has no right to say that the hon. gentleman from Winnipeg is misleading the House.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—I withdraw that expression, but I will not change my opinion. However, I will state a fact which disproves the assertion of the hon. gentleman. Most of those teachers who were teaching when that law came into force ceased to teach as the time was going on, and by the time the issuing of permits was inaugurated by the government, it was almost a new set of teachers with whom they had to deal.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—But these people to whom they issued permits were not as a rule the teachers who had been there before. The hon. gentleman in his remarks said that they wanted to maintain the spirit of the Act, and he says also, that the Roman Catholics of Manitoba are not reasonable in demanding certain things. That shows this House the difficulty as it stands in our province. It shows the disposition of the Liberal government and of these gentlemen who have always persecuted the minority. What they want is to maintain the spirit of their law, and they want us to capitulate before their exacting policy.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Hugh John Macdonald can give you all you want.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—This interruption shows how matters go. They want to make political capital out of the school question. They want to throw the responsibility on Mr. Hugh John Macdonald, so as to get rid of theirs. It does not matter to us whether justice is rendered by a Conservative or a Liberal government. We are ready to accept justice from which ever hand it may come, but justice must be rendered, and it is only a way of shirking responsibility to speak of Mr. Hugh John Macdonald in this way. We may ask justice from Mr. Hugh John Macdonald, as we do from this government, but I say that notwithstanding the recourse we may have against the local government, the Dominion government has still full jurisdiction in this matter under the constitution. The hon. gentleman will be held responsible not only in the political arena, but also in history. Every one here, no doubt, has had an opportunity of seeing the letter of His Grace the Archbishop of St. Boniface, in the public press. The Archbishop of St. Boniface has declared that this so-called settlement is not worth the paper on which it is written, in so far as justice to be extended to the minority is concerned, and that all that has taken place, contrary to what has been said here, has not been done with the view of adhering to the so-called settlement, but the schools have been put under the Public School Act under protest, and simply wait until better times, which better times I hope will come soon.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—It is not my intention to discuss the separate school question of Manitoba at this time. I think the less that question is discussed in this House, the better it will be for the country, and the better for the peace, order and good government of the province of Manitoba. I cannot congratulate the leader of this House upon his diplomacy in his answers to the question submitted to him by my hon. friend from Quebec. If he had spoken more mildly and answered the questions as they appeared on the Order paper, this rather heated discussion would have been unnecessary and avoided. The first question is :

Has an appeal of the Manitoba school question been submitted to a federal tribunal.

The answer to that is yes. The next question is :

What was that federal tribunal?

I think every one knows that tribunal was the Governor in Council. The third question is :

Has that tribunal rendered a judgment upon such case ?

I think the answer to that is yes, the judgment was the remedial order. That is a simple answer. The next question is one which the government should answer. The answer to that inquiry may possibly settle the question from one end of the Dominion to the other, but I do not remember the government answering it at all. The question is :

Has the government any intention to have that judgment executed?

The formal questions are matters of history, and perhaps the hon. gentleman was right in saying he should not be called on to answer them, but this last question is not so well known to private members as to members of the government. If the government answer no, so far as this government is concerned, at all events it settles that question. If they say yes, we want to know in what way they are going to do it. It is not for us to know what the intention of the government is. We should have a direct answer to that question, and it would have a tendency to settle the matter, and until it is answered decidedly by the government, the parties interested will not be satisfied.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I agree with the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island to a large extent, but I do not agree with the hon. gentleman from Stadacona. The opinions which that hon. gentleman seems to entertain with regard to parliamentary practice, are, to say the least, peculiar. The object of addressing questions to the members of the government is to obtain from those members information which is peculiarly within the hands of the government, not information as to whether the sun rose yesterday morning, or questions which every one knows as much about as the government do; and I would direct the attention of the hon. gentleman from Stadacona to the fact that when these matters to which the first three questions refer took place, the present government were not in power, and the hon. gentleman's friends were in power, and he was really in a better position to know what was done than the hon. gentleman who is now Minister of Justice. As to the answers, the hon. gentleman from Murray Harbour is not satisfied with that which the Minister of Justice has given to the last question. If the hon. gentleman from Stadacona and the hon. gentleman from Murray Harbour will take the pains to consult the authorities on parliamentary practice, they will find that a large discretion is given to a minister as to the manner in which he will answer the question. I think the answer of the Minister of Justice was, on the whole, a satisfactory one. He pointed out what the policy of the government had been, and what had been the result of the policy in the past, and what he hoped would be the result of it in the future. I do not think that any substantial fault can be found with that, and if the hon. gentlemen will consult the authorities, they will find, as I have already stated, that considerable latitude is allowed to a minister in replying to a question. The hon. gentleman from St. Boniface has told us that the minority in Manitoba have not in any sense accepted the Act of 1897 as a settlement of the question, but the hon. gentleman does not deny the fact that nearly all the schools outside of Winnipeg--all the schools frequented by the children of the minority there, have come in under that Act of 1897, and are now operated in a satisfactory manner.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is a substantial and important thing. The action of the people who are interested directly is the best criterion as to whether the legislation has been satisfactory or not. As to what has taken place in the city of Winnipeg, I confess I only know from what has been stated by hon. gentlemen here. I do not know about it myself, but I know this, that in other places, in the city of St. John, in Charlottetown, and in Halifax, a system which is satisfactory to the minority has been operated under just such terms as, I understand, were offered to the minority in the city of Winnipeg.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P. E. I.)—I hope the hon. gentleman will not include the city of Charlottetown, because there are grievances there.

Hon. Mr. POWER—We do not hear much about them. The hon. gentleman is the first we have heard from on that point. I know in St. John and Halifax, and I have always understood in Charlottetown, there may be minor grievances, but, on the whole, both parties, the majority and the minority, are satisfied. It is perfectly true that the school board of Winnipeg could not make an agreement which would be contrary, on the face of it, to the law, but they could give the minority practically what the schools outside the city had, and I trust, as the Minister of Justice says he trusts, that an arrangement will ultimately be come to. The hon. gentleman from St. Boniface is, I think, in a rather awkward position? He must have felt that, or he would not have deemed it necessary to make three speeches on this question to-day. The hon. gentleman in his first speech stated quite correctly that the remedial order was still outstanding and might be obeyed. If the remedial order is outstanding, as the hon. gentleman says, then his political friends who are led, in the province of Manitoba, by Mr. Hugh John Macdonald, can come in and obey the order and remove the grievance which the hon. gentleman says exists.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—And if they do not, what is your duty?

Hon. Mr. POWER—We have not heard yet that there has been any official application. We had not heard what their answer is, and it will be quite time enough to talk about another remedy when it has been stated that Hugh John Macdonald and his friends will not do anything. The hon. gentleman from St. Boniface spoke as though it was the government, or the friends of the government, who were agitating this question. He said they were endeavouring to make political capital, but it is not generally the man who sits still and says nothing that is trying to make political capital, but the man who complains of grievances, and it is the hon. gentleman and his friends who are trying to make political capital. As history shows, the Conservative party, to which the hon. gentleman belongs, made capital out of this question in Manitoba by condemning the Manitoba government for doing too much for the Roman Catholics, and the hon. gentleman comes into this larger arena and tries to make political capital by claiming that the Liberal government should do more for the Roman Catholics. That is a position, it seems to me, which is rather hard to defend. The hon. gentlemen are apparently making an effort to set the country on fire again for the purpose of doing something to help the party to which they belong. After all, the only substantial grievance now is in the city of Winnipeg, and if things are let alone there I believe honestly before another year is out the difficulty will have disappeared altogether, and the country will be at peace.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—Could I say one word——

Hon. Mr. POWER—Surely the hon. gentleman is not going to make a fourth speech?

THE SPEAKER'S RULINGS ON INQUIRIES.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY moved:

That an entry be made in the Journals of the Senate of the ruling of the Chair on a question of order raised by the Honourable Mr. Mills, and which is to be found in the following extract of the Debates, 14th June, 1900:—

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I might call attention to the fact, Mr. Speaker, that the question appeared on the Paper the other day and was answered, and it is not regular that it should be placed on the Orders again.

The SPEAKER—When I saw that notice on the paper I inquired of the Clerk why it had been placed on the paper the second time, and was informed that some one had given instructions to one of the clerks to put it on the Orders of the Day without his knowledge. I thought that this inquiry had been answered, so that it is irregular to place it on the Orders of the Day again.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I suppose I can give it as a notice of motion?

The SPEAKER—I do not think that the hon. gentleman can place on the Order paper again a question which has been answered by the minister.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That might be so if the question had been answered; but supposing the question has not been answered?

The SPEAKER—I may say to the hon. gentleman, that I think it is for the minister to say whether he has answered the question. If he says he has no further answer to make, that is an end to the matter.

He said: I have moved this motion, because the decision which it recites settles a very important question, and I should like that such a decision be on record in our minutes. It would be a guidance for us in our future deliberations, and one might feel it convenient to have that decision readily available in case of emergency, (no food in that). The question settled is this, if I understand the decision given by the Speaker: A member of this House has no right to put on the Orders of the Day, or give notice in other words, of a motion for an inquiry which has already been answered; that is the first question that this decision of the Speaker settles. It is no more the Speaker in the House, but the leader of the government who will in the future be called to decide. Heretofore a question may have come up in the House and be debated, and the Speaker having decided, his decision would settle the matter. But now all is changed. A question which is on the Order paper in the regular way, and comes for the second time before the minister, though it has no original defect, is liable to become an irregular question by the decision of the minister. If the minister says: 'I have already answered that question,' and as soon as he gives his judgment—I may call it a judgment, because we do not want an Act of parliament to put it in force—as soon as he gives his decision, the matter is at an end. The question becomes irregular by the decision of the minister. This is a very important decision, which should be put on the journals of the House, so that a member need not put a question a second time when he knows that the Minister of Justice can stand up in his might and deliver a judgment declaring that as soon as he opens his mouth the question becomes irregular. I hope there may not be any objection to this motion being put on the journals of the House, because it will settle once and for ever those questions of regularity or irregularity.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—This matter is already settled, and the speech of the hon. gentleman is out of order and the notice on the paper is out of order. The hon. gentleman invites a discussion on a past debate, and makes quotations from that past debate, which took place a few days ago, for the purpose of assisting him in making this a subject of discussion. Now, in the first place, if the hon. gentleman was desirous of taking objection to the ruling of the Speaker, or wanted the reasons put on the journals, he ought to have made that motion, at the time. If made at the time, then his request would have been a proper request, and would have been in order, but now it is days after that debate is over of which it forms, if it exists at all, a necessary part. Now let me refer, and I perhaps am out of order in doing that much, to the statements that the hon. gentleman makes in this motion. The hon. member had on the paper at the time a notice consisting of a great number of questions which, in my opinion, were altogether unparliamentary and which the usages of parliament did not warrant him in putting.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Will the hon. minister allow me to ask what questions he alludes to ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I refer to the questions the hon. gentleman asked at that time. There were two notices on the paper. This is what I said :

I intend that the answer which I shall give the hon. gentleman shall be an answer to the series of questions which he has put and also to those questions which are still on the paper to be put to me, as they relate to the same subject and in order that there may be no misapprehension as to what my answer is, I shall read it to the House for its information.

Now, the question which I answered on that occasion, the hon. gentleman puts on the paper again ? That is clearly contrary to the settled rules and usages of parliament, even if the question had been a proper one.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is another point with respect to this notice. The hon. gentleman from Stadacona said it was desirable to have a decision which would form a precedent. If the hon. gentleman will turn to page 846, of the Senate Debates for 1898, he will find a precedent exactly in point.

The Hon. Mr. Landry moved :

That an entry be made in the Journals of the Senate of any ruling of the Chair on questions of order, and that the following special ruling given on Monday, the 9th instant, be put upon record, so as it may read as follows, immediately after the word "Debated," in the 44th line of page 386:—

And a question of order being raised, the Honourable the Speaker ruled:—

The SPEAKER—When a minister is asked a question and when he declares to the House that he has answered it, and professes to have answered it fully, I know of no rule by which the Speaker could coerce a minister to answer any more questions, and I believe that all other questions which follow that are entirely out of order.

Now, the hon. gentleman himself made this motion in 1898, and set a good precedent when this decision of the Speaker, on a similar question to this one, was entered on the journals. The Speaker gave a decision which I am not going to read, because I think the House is not anxious that there should be a long discussion on it. His Honour the Speaker also read a long communication from Bourinot, showing that there was no authority whatever for entering on the journals the decisions of the Speaker, given on questions, not decision ruling motions out of order ? Those are part of the proceedings of the House and must appear, but there was no authority whatever for saying, that the decisions of the Speaker as to questions should go on the minutes of the House. There was some discussion on the matter and it was made clear that it was quite out of the power of the clerks of this House to enter the questions of order which arose in the course of debate. We would have to employ another clerk whose sole duty it would be to listen to what was going on and to take down the words used by His Honour the Speaker in giving decisions. The hon. gentleman says that he wishes to preserve these decisions for future reference ? These decisions are preserved in the best possible place, the most proper place, in the reports of our debates. In 1898, the hon. gentleman did not force the House to a division on the question, and I assume that he will not force it now. It would be most inconvenient and contrary to all precedent to say that the ruling of His Honour the Speaker in a case of this kind should be placed on the minutes. It goes in the report of our debates, and every hon. gentleman can refer to it there.

The motion was declared lost on a division.

CORRECTING THE MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I should like to have an explanation on the question I raised the other day about the entries in our records of motions that are put before the House. I think there were two of last Friday which were not entered in the Minutes of Proceedings in the Senate, put by the hon. leader of the opposition, and I should like to have information of what has been decided on that question. As I have already pointed out, last year and the year before, and in previous years all similar motions were recorded in the Minutes of Proceedings, but a new departure has taken place this year, and since the beginning of the session, because a motion was made here in the first days of the session by the hon. senator from British Columbia, was reported, and similar questions are no more reported in the minutes. Two motions made last week by the leader of the opposition, calling the attention of the leader of the government to certain facts set forth in the notice of motion, were not recorded in the minutes.

The SPEAKER—In answer to the hon. gentleman from Stadacona, I am informed that the clerk inquired of the leader of the opposition if he should enter the notices, and the hon. leader replied that he did not claim that it should, did not care for it and did not want it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The same courtesy should have been extended to myself. I do not see why the clerk should apply a different rule towards me. I am entitled to the same courtesy as the hon. leader of the opposition. If he wished to dispense with his duties and ask permission of the mover of a motion it is all right, but I never was approached and never asked to do so. He should not take one course for one member, and another course for another member.

THE BUFFALO RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

A QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to rise to a question of privilege. Bill No. 100, incorporating the Buffalo Railway Company, has appeared under my name so far, and I wish to state that I do not desire it to be continued in that way, as I am not favourable to the measure. I have consulted the promoters of the Bill and they desire to give it to the hon. gentleman from Brandon (Hon. Mr. Kirchhoffer) and I wish that alteration made, because, when I am opposed to the Bill it would not look well that my name should appear in connection with it on the Order paper. I want to act consistently in the matter, and on the third reading of the Bill I shall explain my opposition to it.

Ordered that the minutes be altered accordingly.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (110) 'An Act to amend the Weights and Measures Act.'—(Hon. Mr. Mills.)

OTTAWA AND HULL FIRE RELIEF ACT.

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS.

A message was received from the House of Commons, with Bill (175) 'An Act respecting the Ottawa and Hull Fire Relief Fund.'

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW moved the second reading of the Bill. He said: This is a Bill for the purpose of incorporating certain parties, to act in the distribution of this fund. These parties were named at the time of the great fire by a vote of the citizens of Ottawa. At the time they did not consider that the amount that would be realized would be as large as it has turned out to be, and therefore they think it necessary, in the interests of themselves, and in the interests of the parties who so generously contributed to this fund, that a Bill should be passed empowering them to dispose of this money in such manner as in their judgment seems meet. The Bill contains other provisions for the purpose of guiding them in all the operations connected therewith. We must all feel that, as the public has contributed to this fund in a generous way, it is right and proper that every means should be taken to make a fair and honest distribution. These gentlemen were considered to be, and are generally known throughout the city as being, most discreet, and in every way properly constituted for carrying out this undertaking. The fire has caused an immense amount of trouble to the inhabitants of this district, and the committee are now industriously employed in trying to arrive at some means whereby an equitable and fair distribution can be made. People on the other side of the Atlantic, as well as on this side, have contributed to this fund. I ask now that the Bill be read a second time, and referred to a Committee of the Whole, and then read the third time, so that there will be no delay in allowing them to proceed with their work. I do not think this will be objected to. The Bill is framed with the best motives, and I know that these men will perform their duty in an honourable and proper manner. It is not necessary to go into the matter further at the present time, but I may say, in reference to this awful fire at Ottawa, that I was under the impression at the time that some steps would be taken for the purpose of preventing, as far as possible, a repetition of the conflagration which took place about two months ago, but nothing has been done, and nothing is likely to be done, and we are in the same position to-day as we were before the great fire. Situated as we are here, with a vast amount of public property, we are peculiarly interested in seeing that certain safeguards should be provided so that if another fire took place it would not be as disastrous as on the recent occasion. Therefore, I call the attention of the government to the fact that nothing has been done, and nothing is likely to be done, by the city of Ottawa. I leave it to the government to say whether they cannot introduce some legislation to protect the property of the public. In a variety of ways it could be done. The city council framed a by-law and it was very nearly carried, but there was some hitch at the last instant. It was describing a fire area where houses of a certain character should be erected and providing that the piling of lumber should be confined to certain distances, which would render another such fire impossible. It would be in the interest of the whole Dominion that some such law should be passed. These buildings belong to the whole Dominion, and the government are deeply interested in having a law passed by which the safety of these buildings will be ensured. Frame structures should not be erected in the city, and the lumber should not be piled in such a way and locality as would intensify the danger from fire in the future. These are matters for the consideration of the government, and I hope I am not out of place at the present time in giving warning that something should be done for the protection of these buildings. If the wind had changed on the occasion of the last fire, I believe we would not be in a position to-day to occupy these buildings. It is a matter that requires consideration, and I am not in a position to say whether it can be done or not. I ask the government to give this matter their best consideration, and, if they think it advisable that such a law should be passed, to make it mandatory not to erect wooden buildings in situations where they may entail serious loss to the public of this country. I think it is very opportune that this matter should come up now when the question of the fire relief fund is before us. Probably I am not in order, but I take a great interest in this question. I have tried to get the city corporation to pass a by-law, which I think is necessary, but they have not done it. If they had passed that by-law, which was framed for the purpose, I would not have one word to say, and we would not have had any further trouble. We all know that a pile of lumber contiguous to the buildings is very dangerous. At one time there was a lease of the land around the Lovers' Walk to some lumberman. I believe it has been cancelled, but there are other places where such piles should not be permitted, such as Mr. Perley's yard, and other places equally dangerous, in proximity to these buildings. Now is the time that action should be taken, and I urge upon the government the necessity of looking into the matter, and if they consider there is nothing in my remarks to induce them to take measures which would have the desired effect, then I leave it in their hands. However, there can be no objection to this Bill being passed immediately, and I ask that the rules be suspended, and the Bill read the second time now.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time under a suspension of the rules.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Does my hon. friend insist on going on with the Bill without copies being in our hands ?

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—It has not been changed in the Commons.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—But we have not seen the Bill. My hon. friend is not in such a great hurry as that.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—It is an extreme and urgent case, and every hour counts.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Bill has been distributed in the House of Commons form.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—I understand this Bill was opposed in the other Chamber, and I think it is a little dangerous to put it through in this form. I think it should be sent to the Private Bills Committee, and if there is any objection to it, the matter can be discussed there.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—There were no amendments made in the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. DOBSON—But objections were raised.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Yes, but if the Bill is read by the Chairman, I do not think he or any other member will object to it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If the Chairman reads the Bill at length, I suppose it will be all right.

On clause 5,

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—Under this clause I understand that if the committee make any mistake whatever, either before or after the passing of this Act, they are not to be responsible in any way. I think that is giving an extreme indemnity to the persons who are taking charge of this matter. It appears to me we are rushing the Bill through without much consideration. It is certainly an important question—a question in which the people of Ottawa have a deep interest, and it should be considered with a very great deal of care, and the clause which has just been read states that the commission are not to be responsible whatever for any error.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—The gentlemen who are undertaking this work are doing it as a matter of love, without any reward, and it is nothing but right that they should not be responsible for anything they do, unless there is fraud in it. I do not think any one will object to that. They will carry out the law to the letter, and I do not think they should be held responsible for any act, unless there is fraud in it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It must be remembered that the persons named here have not sought this position. It has been forced on them. They are anxious to withdraw, and they will be only too glad, if objection is made to the Bill, to withdraw from it, because they are annoyed by the appeals made to them and the insinuations to which they are exposed. It is impossible to satisfy the great body of the people, and they will be only too anxious to get rid of the responsibility. It would be a dreadful calamity to everybody if they were to drop out. The selection was a very wise one. It was made by the council of the city of Ottawa first, and then a meeting of citizens of Ottawa was called and the selection was confirmed. Under these conditions, I do not think we ought to hesitate about passing the Bill.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—For such objects and under such circumstances, I do not think it would be fair that such a body of gentlemen should be made responsible for anything but fraudulent acts.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They are giving up a great deal of time to the work.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I do not know these gentlemen. They may be all that is claimed for them. I believe there is an ssociatiion here in Ottawa called the Trust Company, which was willing to undertake the management and distribution of this fund without any reward whatever. It is a responsible association in which the moneyed men of Ottawa are interested. That is the only reason I have for making these remarks at all.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—The Trust Company could not attend to the matter. There are 2,900 applicants waiting for assistance to build their houses and there is urgent need for this legislation. Not an hour should be lost. These men are doing charitable work, and should receive every consideration from parliament and the people of this country.

The clause was adopted.

On the 16th clause,

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What do the corporation intend to do with this fund? Do they intend to loan it out or distribute it?

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—To distribute it as a gift. The donors have given that money for the relief of these people, and it is intended to give it out in good faith for the relief of those parties who have suffered by the fire.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I do not doubt the good faith of the corporation, but it is a matter of good policy or judgment whether they could not loan this more judiciously.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—No, it is not to be a loan. It is to be a free gift. Every dollar of it is deposited in the bank, and it is to be drawn out by the chairman and secretary of the company, and a perfect record of the whole thing is to be made out by a board approved of by the Governor in Council and published for the information of the people.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Is it intended to apply this fund to the rebuilding of houses which have been burned, or has any definite line of policy been laid down?

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—No, not yet.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (109) 'An Act to incorporate the Manitoulin and North Shore Railway Company.'—(Hon. Mr. Watson.)

Bill (125) 'An Act respecting the Algoma Central Railway Company.'—(Hon. Mr. Watson.)

Bill (20) 'An Act respecting the British Yukon Mining, Trading and Transportation Company, and to change its name to the British Yukon Railway Company.'—(Hon. Mr. Clemow.)

Bill (83) 'An Act respecting the Dominion Atlantic Railway Company.'—(Hon. Mr. Power.)

Bill (139) 'An Act to amend the Land Titles Act, 1894,' as further amended.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

LAND TITLES ACT, 1894, AMENDMENT BILL.

WITHDRAWN.

The Order of the Day being called.

Second reading Bill (31) 'An Act to amend the Land Titles Act, 1894.'

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved that the Order of the Day be discharged.

The motion was agreed to, and the Order was discharged.

GRAIN INSPECTION BILL.

POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day being called.

Committe of the Whole House on Bill (141) 'An Act respecting the Grain trade in the inspection District of Manitoba.'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the Order of the day be postponed until Wednesday next.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Why?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There are some gentlemen who are particularly interested in the matter that wish to see me to-morrow about this Bill. I am not sure whether I shall be able to meeet them or not. However, I will set it down for to-morrow, with the understanding that if I do not meet these gentlemen the Bill will be further postponed.

The Order of the Day was discharged, and made an order for Wednesday next.

COMPANIES CLAUSES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (X) 'An Act to amend the Companies Clauses Act.'

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Is it intended that this Bill shall apply to companies with special acts of incorporation to which the Companies Clauses Act does not apply?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Has my hon. friend considered whether this should not be made also an amendment to the Companies Act in addition to the Companies Clauses Act. I have not had time to examine it myself, but it seems to me the Joint Stock Companies Act should also be amended. The letters patent issued under the Companies Act designates where the head office should be, and this Bill applies only to the Companies Clauses Act.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I think that this is sufficient. However, we can make an amendment another session if necessary.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

SAFETY OF SHIPS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (12) 'An Act respecting the safety of ships.'

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—May I inquire what change this makes ?

The CHAIRMAN—It is only stating when the Act shall commence to have force.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The Act has no meaning as it now stands. It states when the period shall terminate, but not when it shall begin. This is to state when the Act commences to operate.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

DOMINION OF CANADA RIFLE ASSOCIATION BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (169) 'An Act to incorporate the Dominion of Canada Rifle Association.'

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. ALMON—I believe the hon. Judge Gowan has given a very handsome cup to be competed for by this association. It would not be a bad thing to have it put on the table so that we can all see it. The hon. gentleman has been not only remarkably generous, but judicious in the way he has distributed his generosity. I think we should tender him a vote of thanks for his generosity.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—We will take it as laid on the Table.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Is it in Ottawa at the present time ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, in the Militia Department.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We will postpone the third reading of the Bill until to-morrow, so that we can see the trophy.

On clause 8,

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not see why these prize competitions should necessarily be at or near Ottawa. It might be desirable to have them at Montreal or Toronto, or, as the country grows, at Winnipeg.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—At present the headquarters are here.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. McKAY, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

CRIMINAL CODE, 1892, AMENDMENT BILL.

RETURNED TO HOUSE OF COMMONS WITH AMENDMENT DISAGREED TO.

The Order of the Day being called.

Further consideration of the amendments made by the House of Commons to (Bill K) An Act to further amend the Criminal Code, 1892.

Hon. Mr. MILLS said: There is no consideration, I believe, of these amendments, except the reasons to be given for refusing to concur in some of them. I move :

That a Message be sent to the House of Commons by one of the Masters in Chancery, to acquaint that House :

1. That the Senate hath agreed to their 2nd, 4th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th and 14th amendments to the Bill (K) intituled : 'An Act further to amend the Criminal Code, 1892.'

2. That the Senate hath amended the first amendment of the House of Commons by striking out 'the first day of January, 1901,' and inserting in lieu thereof 'the first day of September, 1900' :

Because it is desirable that the improvements made in the criminal law by this Act shall go into operation at the earliest date convenient with the due publication of its provisions.

3. That the Senate hath disagreed to the third amendment for the following reasons :—

(a.) The proposed section 359a would offer great inducements to perjury on the part of vendors ;

(b.) It would give a creditor, who claimed or asserted that there had been a false pretence on the part of the purchaser, an opportunity to practically coerce such purchaser into giving such creditor an undue preference over his other creditors ;

(c.) It would injuriously interfere with the ordinary and long established methods of conducting business between vendors and purchasers ;

(d.) No act should be declared a statutory crime where there is a substantial doubt as to the desirability of such declaration.

4. That the Senate hath disagreed to the fifth amendment for the following reasons :—

Because 'The Trades Union Act,' ch. 131 of the Revised Statutes, gives the necessary protection to combinations of workmen, and because there does not appear to be any substantial reason why any class of persons should be exempted from the operation of section 520 of the Criminal Code.

The motion was agreed to.

DELAYED RETURNS.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I should like to ask my hon. friend, the Secretary of State, whether he is prepared to bring down the petitions regarding the railways which were not correctly brought down on a former occasion.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I gave orders to collect them, and they have been collected. I thought they would have been sent to me to-day. I will see that they are brought down to-morrow. They must be ready. They were distributed and sent to the wrong department.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Tuesday, June 19, 1900.

The Speaker took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

ACADIA LOAN CORPORATION BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN, from the Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported Bill (116) 'An Act to incorporate the Acadia Loan Corporation' with amendments. He said : There are two clauses amended in this Bill. One is amended to give power to the company to prescribe what remuneration should be given to directors who may perform duties in respect of the company that are outside their ordinary duties as directors. The other amendment is in the clause which makes certain sections of the Loan Companies Act to apply to this Bill which was thought to be put in better shape in reference to the clauses referred to, and that has been done in the amendment to that clause.

Hon. Mr. WOOD moved that the amendments be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

THE QUEBEC BRIDGE.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY rose to :

Call the attention of the government to the following facts, namely :—

1. That on the 13th day of June, 1900, an inquiry was made by the Hon. Mr. Landry concerning the Quebec Bridge, and certain declarations attributed to the Hon. Mr. Dobell by the 'Soleil,' the French recognized organ of the Liberal party in Quebec.

2. That in answer to such an inquiry, the following statement was made, and reads as follows:

'Hon. Mr. SCOTT.—I have shown the question to Mr. Dobell, and he says it is absolutely incorrect, and he declines to be catechised on a speech which was not accurately reported. He calls attention to the fact that he never made the statement that the government had promised a million dollars. The speech was alleged to have been made two years and four months ago. However, Mr. Dobell's recollection is that the speech as quoted is not accurate.

'Hon. Mr. LANDRY.—Is that all the answer I am to get?

'Hon. Mr. SCOTT.—That is all I can give my hon. friend.

'Hon. Mr. LANDRY.—It is very short. I want to know what the policy of the government is.

'Hon. Mr. Scott.—The hon. gentleman put the question, and I decline to answer it.'

3. That further on during the debate, the following statement was made:

'Hon. Mr. LANDRY.—I am inquiring from him if it is an unparliamentary question to ask the government if they are prepared to give supplementary aid to the Quebec Bridge. I think that is a parliamentary question.

'Hon. Mr. SCOTT.—I answered that question.

'Hon. Mr. LANDRY.—I want to know what is the policy of the government on that question.

'Hon. Mr. MILLS.—My hon. friend answered that part of the question, because that was a proper question to put.'

And that he will ask:

What assertion is true? The assertion given by the Hon. Mr. Scott that he declines to answer to that part of the question referred to in the present statement, or that other positive affirmation given by the Hon. Mr. Mills, that the hon. Secretary of State has answered that part of the question?

If an answer was given, where is the answer?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The placing on the records of this Chamber of the involved questions which the hon. gentleman from Stadacona persists in submitting leads not only to a great deal of trouble, but I think is highly improper and ought not to be persevered in. When a minister, who is a member of another Chamber, at a public gathering three and a half years ago makes a statement to his constituents in no way affecting the policy of the government, I think it is highly improper that a colleague in this Chamber should be called upon to give an explanation of that gentleman's speech. When I submitted this long proposition of the hon. gentleman's, which was placed on the minutes on June 13, to Mr. Dobell, he said: 'Why I am not correctly reported,' and gave an illustration why he was not correctly reported from his own words that he never said the local government had promised a million dollars. He could not speak for the local government. He was addressing his own constituents at the time, and it was a matter which this parliament had nothing whatever to do with, what the provincial government chose to give; and to show how unfortunate the putting on the paper of those long questions is, I am falsely reported too in saying, as the hon. gentleman states here, that the parliament of Canada would not give a million dollars, whereas, as a matter of fact, parliament has voted a million dollars. I could not, therefore, have made that blunder. I remember saying that Mr. Dobell denied that he had said that the provincial governmeut would give a million dollars, whether he did or did not is a matter of no public consequence. It has no bearing whatever on any question of policy as to whether this government is going to supplement the aid to the bridge. It is premature to ask the question. Parliament has voted a million dollars and the bridge has never been built. I do not know what its financial arrangements are, but certainly we are not in a position to answer any questions as to supplemental aid. The government have never been asked for supplemental aid, and therefore it is a question that could not be answered. If the hon. gentleman would exercise a little judgment it would make it very much pleasanter for members in this House, because it is very unpleasant to rise and contradict statements made by hon. gentlemen which must be contradicted. The hon. gentleman has brought up this matter, but it is a question that is not relevant in any degree to any act of policy of the government.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think the hon. minister did not read my question. If he did, he did not understand it. I am not speaking of the million dollars promised to be granted by the province of Quebec nor of the assertion made by the Hon. Mr. Dobell, that the province would give a million dollars: I am simply asking an explanation of the occurrence reported here. The Hon. Mr. Scott said that he declined to give me an answer as to what may be regarded as the general policy of the government on that question for the future. The hon. Minister of Justice said that the Secretary of State had answered. I want to know where is the truth. If the hon. Minister of Justice said rightly that the hon. Secretary of State had answered, I want to get the answer. If the hon. Minister of Justice said a thing which the hon. Secretary of State cannot back, let him tell me so. The hon. Secretary of State has either answered or not answered. If he answered, where is his reply? If he did not answer, why did the hon. Minister of Justice say that he had answered? Can the hon. gentleman get out of that dilemma? Unable? There is one of them who is deceiving this House, I do not know which one. A thing cannot be at the same time true and untrue. I should think the ministers would have force enough to answer that question. They might take a little emergency food. Can't they give me sixteen per cent out of the answer they are keeping in store? Is the public interest of Canada preventing one of the ministers from answering? I am waiting for a reply. If the hon. ministers are taken by surprise, I am willing to postpone my inquiry. They can have time to look over the matter. Surely this time they cannot cast the blame on an officer of the department. One of the two is guilty. Which of them will sacrifice himself for the other? Neither? One hon. minister said the other day that the spectacle furnished to this House every day was degrading; I say now that they themselves are presenting a degrading spectacle to-day, for either of the ministers has stated wht is incorrect. I think they are unable to answer and that they feel ashamed. They cannot deny their statements, because there are they in black and white in the Senate Debates, and here we find that one of them is misleading the House. I move that they should take a little invigorating feed—something to give them force.

AN OMISSION FROM THE MINUTES.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I should like to know why the minutes of yesterday do not contain the motion which was made by me yesterday, and which was declared lost on a division. I think it should have been put in the record, and I want to know why it has been omitted.

The SPEAKER—If the hon. gentleman's question is addressed to me, I beg to say that it was omitted because it is not customary to insert such motions, and unless it is ordered by the House it will not be done.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I will cite a precedent. It occurred two years ago, and is just a similar case to the one now under debate. The hon. senator from Halifax was good enough to quote it yesterday. I find at page 236, of the Senate journals of 1898, the following:

Thursday, May 26.

The Hon. Mr. LANDRY moved that an entry be made in the journals of the Senate of any ruling of the Chair on questions of orders, and that the following special ruling given on Monday, the 9th instant, be put upon record, so that it may read as follows, immediately after the word 'debated,' in the 44th line of page 368:

'And a question of order being raised, the hon. the Speaker ruled:

'The SPEAKER.—When a minister is asked a question, and when he declares to the House that he has answered it, and professes to have answered it fully, I know of no rule by which the Speaker could coerce a minister to answer any more questions, and I believe that all other questions which follow that are entirely out of order.'

The question of concurrence being put thereon, the same was, on division, resolved in the negative.

Here was a motion made to the House and declared lost, and which was put in the minutes. Basing my action on this precedent, I moved yesterday to have the decision of His Honour the Speaker placed on the journals of this House. My motion was declared lost: have I not a right, under the rules of this House, to have it entered? I do not know who assumes the right to dictate what shall go upon the records of this House and what shall not. There are general rules which must be followed, and those rules have always been followed in the past? Why this new departure? Why am I deprived of the right to have a motion made on the floor of this House inserted in the minutes? It is the first time that we are told we must appeal to the House to know if a motion, made in the House, is to appear in the minutes. If any such doctrine is to be accepted what may we not expect in the future? If an hon. member does not like a motion to be inserted he need only ask the Speaker, or the clerk at the table, to omit it from the minutes. I am claiming a right which every member possesses, a right which cannot be subject to the good or bad will of any official of this House. The motion must be entered, and I ask the hon. Speaker to give the proper orders so that an entry may be made in the minutes. If not, I shall take the necessary measures to have it entered.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—The motion having been put to the House and declared lost, it should be recorded in the minutes. There is no doubt about that. How the omission occurred I do not understand, but it can be easily remedied when the journals are made up.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I did not understand that there was a motion put to the House.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I understood that there was a motion and that it was declared lost.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I understand the hon. gentleman submitted a proposition to the House, but it was not seconded.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I made a proposition to put it on the minutes, and it was declared lost.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman read his motion, but I never stood up to put it, because some one spoke, and before the motion could be put the hon. gentleman from Stadacona himself declared it lost on a division, and I said 'lost.'

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Did the hon. gentleman make a motion?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I made a motion.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—If he made a motion it should appear in the minutes whether it passed in the affirmative or the negative. As to the seconder, a seconder is not required in this House.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I made the motion. As the hon. Speaker has stated, it was not put by the Chair—I admit that—but I have a way to have it put on the records.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—The motion was not made if it was not put from the Chair: it was incomplete, and I doubt if there was any reason for putting it in the minutes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The Speaker declared it lost.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman himself declared it lost.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I was willing to have it declared lost on a division. I will give notice of it again, and it will go in the minutes. I will not be treated in that way.

BUFFALO RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED, in the absence of Hon. Mr. Kirchhoffer, moved the third reading of Bill (100) 'An Act respecting the Buffalo Railway Company. (Foreign.)'

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I had some little connection with this Bill. The petition was handed to me by a member of the other House, and I presented it to the Senate. I was not satisfied with it then, but he urged me to take it, and I presented it to the House, and said the matter would be explained before the Bill was put through. I explained, on the second reading of the Bill, when it was referred to the committee, that I hoped we would get the explanation that was necessary then, in order to pass the Bill. When the Bill came up from the committee I still had charge of it, and I moved the third reading of the Bill for to-day to see if I could not get the explanation that was necessary before I could consistently support the measure. I did not wish to have anything further to do with the Bill, and I consulted the promoters, who desired that I should name the hon. gentleman from Brandon to take charge of the Bill. I did so yesterday. In the first place, I will ask who compose this Buffalo Railway Company? Is there any proof before this House that such a company is in existence? I have been unable to get any such proof; and if there is any such company in existence, what is the motive power? Is it electricity or steam or horse power?

An hon. GENTLEMAN—Electricity.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Some hon. gentleman says electricity, but there is nothing before this parliament to show what its power is, and there is nothing before us to show who the parties are. It is merely the Buffalo Railway Company, in the state of New York. It does not even say 'one of the United States of America." There is nothing before parliament to show why we should hand over the property of the people of this country to that company, without knowing who they are. I did my best to get that information, and, as I tell the House, I was unable to obtain it. I did it because I considered it my duty. I endeavoured, according to rule 63 of the Senate of Canada, to get that information before the committee. Did I get it? I do not wish to reflect upon the committee; far be it from me to do so. There are plenty of members on the committee who profess to know more about legislation than I do, but they do not know it all. Now, let us look at this rule:

> All persons whose interests or property may be affected by any private Bill——

I think this is a private Bill—— > —shall, when required to do so, appear before the standing committee to which such bill is referred, touching their consent, or may send such consent in writing, proof of which may be required by the committee. And in every case, the committee upon any Bill for incorporating a company may require proof that the persons whose names appear in the Bill as composing the company are of full age, and in a position to effect the objects contemplated, and have consented to become incorporated.

Have we got this proof? I say there is not a tittle of evidence before the parliament of this country under this rule. Let us consider the matter. This is an international question. Are we going to hand over the property belonging to the people of this country to a foreign corporation, whom we do not know? I presume they are United States men. But we do not know them. They are not here before us. I suggested that I would send the Bill to the Supreme Court, but on further consideration, I found that the parliament of Canada could do mostly anything. The parliament could make away with the property of the country almost, if they wanted to. At the same time, I thought I would point out to the House what effect the Bill has. It is a question of internal economy. I will read the Bill, and comment a little on it. We are going to hand over to this foreign company the whole Niagara frontier, and we do not know who compose this company. They are not British subjects. I presume they are United States gentlemen, because the law of the United States will not allow any foreigners to hold property or anything of that kind there. What are we doing? Clause 2 of the Bill reads:

The company may purchase the entire assets and acquire and undertake the whole or any part of the business, undertaking, property and liabilities, and the name, franchise and good-will of the Niagara Falls Park and River Railway Company (whose work is hereby declared to be for the general advantage of Canada), the Queenston Suspension Bridge Company, the Queenston Heights Bridge Company, the Clifton Suspension Bridge Company, or of any of such companies.

That is a queer Bill to pass through parliament—"any such other companies." What does that mean? And where? Anywhere in Ontario or in Canada. This is a curious Bill for us to pass. I am a living witness to what took place on the Niagara frontier in 1865 and 1866, when the people of the United States encouraged some of their citizens to invade Canada, giving them money and arms, and encouraging them to drill while they watched them from day to day. We have peace to-day with the United States, and there is good feeling. I hope it may long continue. It may not always be so. But is it prudent or expedient that we should hand over the avenues of this country to United States citizens, when we do not know who they are? I say that it is not. To-day not one of us could go to the state of New York and hold real estate there, without becoming a United States citizen. A poor Canadian who wishes to cross the river to work and earn his living by the sweat of his brow, is turned back and not allowed to remain there. We are asked to grant this legislation to a United States company, without rhyme or reason, and we are to give them the avenues of this country. I suppose there are some men in Canada who wish to make a little money out of it. We should guard against this. I would be ashamed to go home and face my people if I allowed such a Bill to pass parliament, without raising my voice against it. Therefore, I move:

That this Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be read the third time this day six months.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is somewhat unusual, after a Bill has passed the committee stage, to reject it without some consideration of its provisions. I have not given much attention to the matter, but I understand that the Buffalo Railway Company is a company incorporated in the state of New York, and in their corporate capacity have bought up the rights and interests of several companies mentioned on the Canadian side of the river, and that they are seeking to have those companies practically consolidated into one company, and it seems to me that that is not an unreasonable proposition. Of course, it was open to the committee, if they desired it, to ask that information should be given, and a schedule might have been attached to the Bill, stating who the incorporators were, but hon. gentlemen know that in every railway company in every country in Christendom, it is possible for a party to sell out his shares, and so the parties who are shareholders to-day may not be shareholders six months hence, so that you would not get a great deal of information by having that fact stated.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—The rule says that it shall be stated.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I do not see what application that rule has at all.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I think my hon. friend has taken a somewhat extreme position in asking for the rejection of this Bill. I understand that there has been a good deal of difficulty in the way of securing any action for some period of time, owing to the interests of the local government in the park there, and owing to the interests that these parties are desirous of acquiring. Those difficulties, I believe, are removed, and it is possible to secure united action for the first time. Whether it can be thought objectionable that a railway company in New York should become the corporate holder of the interests of these various companies on the Canadian side of the river or not, is a question open for discussion, but I do not understand that there has ever been any serious objection to anything of that sort. In the great railways of the United States, although the corporation itself may be a state corporation, the actual proprietors are persons who live in Germany, in France, in England, and in various parts of the world, and they retain their interest as long as they feel it is to their advantage to do so; and the New York company who have acquired an interest in these various companies on the Canadian side, and are seeking, by this Bill, to consolidate and unite them together, is simply a foreign corporation having a corporate interest in these various institutions that are mentioned. It seems to me that that is not a good reason for rejecting the Bill. I suppose they will run these roads in their own interest and seek all the profit they can out of the enterprises so far as we, by our regulations, will permit them. I do not think it desirable that we should undertake to deny them the right to incorporate under these circumstances. I dare say there are many who would feel some objection to permitting these various institutions to fall into the hands of one company, making the control common on both sides of the river, but that is a matter which ought to have been provided against in the local corporations that are about to be absorbed into one corporation under this Bill. We are simply enabling the company to increase the efficiency of its management and to discharge in a more satisfactory way the duties that devolve upon it as a corporation, by allowing it to combine all those corporations into one.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—And it gives the same right to aliens and foreigners.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No difference in that regard.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I should like to call the attention of the minister to the 7th clause, which reads as follows:

> Nothing in this section shall relieve the company from the observance of the laws of Canada or Ontario, as the case may be, except in so far as such laws are inconsistent with the acquisition and operation of the undertaking as hereby authorized.

That clause leaves it open to the inference that there is something in the laws, either of Canada or of the province of Ontario, which this law is overriding. I do not know what that may be. It should be pointed out whether there is any legislation, either of the province or of the Dominion, which this law is overriding?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—All I understand that provision to refer to is that this is a special Act of incorporation, as every Act of any railway company is. You bring it under the operation of the General Railway Act, but you must also provide in every Act of incorporation that the General Railway Act shall be applicable to this corporation in so far as it is not inconsistent with the provisions of this Act of incorporation. That is the rule in clause 7, only some of these corporations were called into existence or may have had their rights limited by some Act of the provincial legislature as well, and it seems to me that clause 7 is intended for no other purpose than to say that the laws of Canada and the laws of Ontario applicable to this case—that will be the General Railway Act in each case or any subordinate Act as far as Ontario is concerned—shall apply in so far as the provisions of those Acts are not inconsistent with the powers conferred by this legislation. I do not think that provision goes beyond that, and therefore, it is a provision similar to the provision that is inserted in almost every Railway Incorporation Act.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (C.B.)—I wish to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Justice to line 22. In dealing with the Nova Scotia Steel Company's Bills two weeks ago, I think the Minister of Justice decided that this parliament had no authority to authorize the transfer of the franchise of any corporation to any new company. Line 22 in this Bill gives authority to transfer, sell the assets, business, property, name, franchise and good will to the company. It gives power to the local companies affected by this Bill to transfer their franchises to this new company, which is inconsistent with the position assumed by the hon. Minister of Justice.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—If they have not power it carries nothing.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I was about to say that. A franchise that cannot be transferred really transfers no power, and they take it for what it is worth.

Hon Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—If this Bill passes, it seems to me the result will be that the Canadian companies will be under the control, and become part of the United States companies, and the directors of this United States company may not be British subjects. Is that not the position ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—For some years we have insisted in the incorporating of all those companies, more particularly the railway companies, that the majority of the directors should be British subjects. In this company there will not be one British subject concerned in the control of the road, so that I think the objection made by the hon. gentleman (from Monck) is very strong.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I)—I think the principal objection to this Bill is that it is transferring to a foreign company some of the most important bridges between Ontario and the United States. These are very important avenues of trade and commerce between Ontario and the State of New York, and the effect of this Bill is to amalgamate all these into one company, which is not a Dominion company, but a foreign company. That is an objectionable line of policy for the Dominion to adopt.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In the absence of the hon. gentleman from Brandon I asked the House to read the Bill the third time, and I did not make any explanation at the time, but I desire to point out that there seems to be, in my judgment, a grave misapprehension of facts with relation to this Bill in the minds of many hon. gentlemen. I might preface what I am about to say by the statement that the Buffalo Railway Company has already acquired all the interests of the companies which they are proposing to absorb or to amalgamate with. Let me observe here that on the Niagara frontier if there is to be a development of the natural resources and the public interests of that particular district, hon. gentlemen must recognize that the development of any international problem cannot be accomplished alone by Canadians. It must necessarily involve the co-operation of United States capital and capitalists. Another proposition is involved in the development of any international project, and that is that one or the other side must have a dominant interest in the enterprise. While I attach very great importance in regard to what my hon. friend from Monck has advanced with reference to the necessity of our conserving Canadian interests on the Niagara frontier, I cannot overlook this fact, that since I have had the honour of a seat in this House I have noticed that my hon. friend has exerted a vigilance over the Niagara frontier, which, if it had been followed by this House, would have precluded much development in that district of country. I can recall quite clearly that session after session the hon. gentleman from Monck, in his judgment, has considered it advisable to oppose many of the public franchises which have been obtained and are being obtained on the Niagara frontier.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Name them.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I cannot recall them at the present, but I could make up quite a list of public enterprises which have met with the vigorous opposition of my hon. friend. It does not require any demonstration to point out that it is in the interest of our people that this undertaking should be made a success on this side of the line, that it should be run for the advantage, not only of those who are directly interested, but of the Canadian public. It is not necessary that I should point out, because it is a well known fact, that most of the enterprises which this company proposes to absorb, and which have been acquired by this company, have been failures in the past. Surely the people on the Canadian side of the line are not opposed to the successful operation of those lines. In the committee to which this Bill was referred, the hon. gentleman from Monck was the only one who expressed dissent to this proposition, on the ground that it was against the interests of that particular district. I am unaware, and I think my hon. friend does not know—and if he does he has not stated it—that any individual or corporation, or public interest is suffering in any way from the acquisition of these franchises by the Buffalo Railway Company.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I do not know that there is such a company as the Buffalo Railway Company.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If private and public interests in that particular railway district are thoroughly satisfied with this legislation, why should any hon. gentleman here so seriously object to it? If United States capital is to come into the Dominion of Canada and make successful Canadian enterprises which heretofore have proved a failure, surely the people of Canada should not object to such an advent. With reference to the doubt which exists in my hon. friend's mind as to the Buffalo Railway Company having an identity, I would point out to this House that we are not confiscating the interests of Canadian companies. We are in no way interfering with them. We are creating a Canadian corporation of a company known as the Buffalo Railway Company. If hon. gentlemen will look at clause 1 of the Bill they will see that the parliament of Canada makes a Canadian corporation of this company, bringing them under the laws of Canada, and it will be as much a Canadian corporation as if every individual in it were a British subject.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Who is the president of the company?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I cannot tell my hon. friend. I doubt if any hon. gentleman here to-day is familiar with ten per cent of those who constitute the directorate of the various corporations incorporated by the parliament of Canada. That is something into which we seldom make inquiry. So long as the parliament of Canada is satisfied of the good faith of the persons making application for charters of incorporation, they very naturally grant a charter for the carrying out of any enterprises they may have in view. I apprehend the Buffalo Railway Company is a well-known corporation. It might not be amiss for me to say that when this Bill was before the House of Commons it was referred to a sub-committee of the Railway Committee, consisting of the present Minister of Railways, the hon. Mr. Haggart, late Minister of Railways, Mr. Borden, Mr. Gibson, who is the member for the district, Mr. Osler, and Dr. Russell, of Halifax. I understand that this Bill was very closely scrutinized by those gentlemen, who are quite competent to protect not only the interests of the Dominion, but to pass judgment on any Bill that may be brought before them. Under these circumstances, what would be the result if my hon. friend's motion should carry? This company, as I have stated, have acquired the assets of the local companies. It would simply place the citizens of the Niagara district, or those having interests in that locality, at a very considerable disadvantage. It would relegate the undertaking to practically the unfortunate position in which it has been, namely, part of it being successful, part of it being a failure, and the results satisfactory to no one. As I understand it, the undertaking is a self-contained undertaking, a loop-line running partly on the United States and partly on the Canadian side, and therefore it must be an advantage to the residents on the frontier that such a railway should be under one management, under efficient management and should have the necessary financial backing to make it a success in all its branches. Under the circumstances, I am satisfied the House will not hesitate to give a third reading to the Bill. If it is any advantage to the House to know it, there are precedents for this. I could point out a list of thirty or forty Acts of incorporation of which this is but a parallel.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Down to what year?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Down to 60-61 Victoria, when the American Bank Note Company was incorporated. If hon. gentlemen will peruse the statutes they will find that since confederation to the present time we have been chartering companies similar to the one whose Bill is now before us.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Or permitting them to lease roads. The Grand Trunk Railway Company leases the Portland road, and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the Short Line Railway.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway are in a very similar position. In fact, there is not an important undertaking in Canada having international dealings with our neighbours, but has found it necessary to obtain legislation of a similar character. All the legislation in this House with regard to international bridges has involved similar measures for Canadians in the United States, and for United States capitalists in Canada. No international legislation can be carried out otherwise.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I am inclined very much to agree with the views expressed by the hon. gentleman from Monck. It appears to me that this Buffalo company should have sent a copy of their Act of incorporation, to give us an idea of the conditions imposed upon them by that Act of incorporation. In the committee they endeavoured to find out who was incorporated, their position, and whether they were able to carry out the undertaking. I cannot believe in this company delegating and transferring to a foreign company the exclusive jurisdiction over our highway. It may be law on this side of the border, but if any of us went to the other side of the line and asked the people of the United States to give us similar provisions, I do not believe they would accede to it. I think they would tell us that we were British subjects, and that we could not hold property in that country, and, therefore, they could not give us the exclusive right to manage affairs that pertain to people in the United States. That is the policy they have observed. We all know what the Alien Labour Law is. A Canadian nurse, cannot be employed to work in a United States hospital without being sent back out of the country. I believe we ought to treat our neighbours as they treat us. I do not believe in giving them privileges in excess of what they give us in their country. That is why I object to this Bill. They say in this Bill, that they are bound to comply with the laws of Ontario, but what power have the laws of Ontario over citizens of the United States who do not reside in this country ? They reside on the other side of the line, and we cannot enforce the laws of this country there at all. This is hasty legislation. The promoters should have given us more information and show us that the company can manage the road on this side of the river as well as it has been managed in the past. I do not believe in transferring our lines to a foreign company. We are granting privileges to this company, and by a stroke of the pen they are absorbing our railways. It is unfair to the people of this country, and I hope that something will be done to prevent this in the future. This Bill has passed the House of Commons. I have no doubt it was well scrutinized, but unfortunately the information has not been placed before this House.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—To what does my hon. friend allude ? The petition of the Buffalo Railway Company was before the committee, assigned by its officers.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—You mean the Act ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, the petition.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—The petition is in general terms. I want to judge for myself whether they are being given excessive power.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Why didn't you move for it in the committee ?

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I did ask for it.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—There was no motion for it.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I want full information before I can give an intelligent decision on any question.

I asked who was incorporated, and they would not give any names. I know nothing about the men. I know nothing about their corporate power, and I am in the dark as to whether we are granting them power in this country that is in excess of what we could obtain in the United States. If they had come forward with necessary information there might have been no opposition to this Bill ; but in the absence of it, I am not prepared to say that these powers should be given to this company.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I find that upon the petition presented to the committee for this legislation all these companies are owned by the same parties, and this is a matter simply of internal economy by which all the companies are placed under one company, so as to dispense with the cost of management. Instead of there being officials for the three or four companies involved, there will be one set of officials for the whole of the amalgamated companies. They are all the same parties owning the properties.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—They are a combine in the interest of certain parties.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Who presented those petitons ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—They came before the Standing Orders Committee. They do not come before the Railway Committee.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—That is the right place for them.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—There was not a word said about it.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—It went through the House, and was sent to the Standing Orders Committee and reported back.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—This Buffalo Railway Company is a corporation we are legislating for—if there is such a thing in existence. We have no proof yet that they are in existence.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This is a purely sentimental question? It is unfortunate that the name is the Buffalo Railway Company. It appears that for some years United States capitalists have been investing in railways on the Canadian side, and for economy's sake they have decided that it would be very much cheaper to run all those companies under one charter. That is the whole object of this Bill. As to the precedent for it, you have not to travel far from the Niagara frontier. The Canada Southern is owned entirely by a United States company, the Vanderbilts. Their presence in Canada makes them subject to our laws, but their management is entirely in the United States. It has not hurt anybody I presume. Another road was started as a Canadian enterprise—the Toronto, Hamilton, Buffalo and New York Railway—but capital could not be found to take it up. United States capital came and took it up, and it is owned entirely by United States capitalists. It is subject to our laws within the borders of Canada, as this railway company will be subject to our laws. We have a general law passed by the parliament of Canada, authorizing the government of Canada to issue to any foreign corporation the power to come into Canada and do business in Canada, and all they have to do is to name an agent in Canada who will accept service of papers should it be necessary to take legal proceedings against the company. We have in our general policy invited foreign corporations to come into this country. It helps to develop the country, and it does not matter where they come from. In commercial matters of that kind we never hesitate to get foreign capital. On the contrary, we are constantly inviting foreign capital to come in. I do not regard this Bill from the dangerous standpoint that my hon. friend does. It is liable to our laws. The part of it within Canada cannot escape that. It is simply the name that is rather unpleasant to our ears at the present time. The United States policy has not been very satisfactory to Canada, and there is a disinclination to give privileges to those who have treated us in an unneighbourly spirit.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—There is information desired by some members of the House, and I am sorry to say I cannot give it myself. No doubt the hon. member from Calgary can do so. He has alluded to certain railways, and to the Buffalo Company as being, in fact, the owners of those roads. What some of our members want to know is, not about the railroads but the bridges. It is proposed, as far as I can understand the Bill, to allow four of the bridges across the Niagara River to be acquired by the company.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Two of the bridges.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—Are those steam railway bridges?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, they are electrict railway bridges. I might say, in connection with those bridges, that according to the charter under which they have been built, the company has a perfect right to dispose of the bridges to whomsoever they may see fit.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—Then the bridges are in connection with the road?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—They were built to carry the electric cars over them?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, they were built specially for those roads.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The stock of the Queenston Heights Company and the Clifton Company, is held almost exclusively by United States capitalists.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I have made a substantial motion against this in order to have a word in closing. My hon. friend from Calgary suggests to this House that I am always obstructing legislation which may benefit the Niagara district.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I did not say obstructing—I said opposing charters.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I have always acted, and shall always act, in this House, independently of the wishes of my hon. friend whom I respect very much, because I profess to have as much knowledge of the Niagara district as he has. But here we are getting information now. I have got more information, since this discussion commenced, than I ever had before about this Bill. I never had any before. What is the information we have now ? It is all hearsay. Is there any proof ? Talk of sophistry ! The Minister of Justice comes and lectures us here about what has been done. I am dealing with this Bill, and I say we have not the proper information to support it. It has not been proved to this House whether it is a steam railway, an electric railway, or a horse railway. It has not been proved that the company is qualified to go on with the work. We are handing over the whole frontier of the Niagara district, which is a beautiful country, and the bridges over the Niagara River to United States capitalists. It looks very innocent. My hon. friend talks about a loop-line. I do not see where a loop-line comes in. Where are they going to cross ? At Clifton or Queenston ? The most objectionable part of the Bill is we hand control of those bridges over to a foreign corporation. That was the objection that I made to the member for Lincoln when he urged me to present the petition to the House. He said that would be explained. Have I got the explanation ? I have asked for it, and have been unable to get it. I had the Bill postponed a day in order to get an explanation, and it is only now dribbling out from some members of the House. I want to do my duty to the Niagara district, to Canada and to the empire. I remember what took place in 1865-6. I know that I stood up once on behalf of this country to be shot at, and I do not know but I shall have to do it again—to be shot at by these very people who will not allow us to go across the river and get a day's work—who will not allow us to hold an acre of land there. I would be less than a man if I did not raise my voice against this iniquitous Bill. I have been thirty-three years in parliament, and as far as my knowledge goes, I never saw such a measure presented to parliament before. If we pass this Bill in its present shape it will not redound to the credit of the people of Canada. The hon. gentleman from Calgary says that the House of Commons has consented to this Bill. How much attention does he pay to other Bills that the House of Commons pass We are here to do our duty, and I wish to do mine, as far as in my power lies. I hope that there is independence enough in this Senate to show that we will not hand over the whole of the Niagara frontier to United States citizens, not knowing who they are. They may be anti-British, for all we know, and they may possibly be our best friends, but they are not British subjects.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This is an illustration of history repeating itself. I dare say the Minister of Justice will remember that fifteen or seventeen years ago, when the hon. member from Monck and the Minister of Justice and I were in the House of Commons, I then took very strong objection to a Bill which was introduced to incorporate an iron company giving it all the corporate powers which the State of Ohio could give it, and the parliament of Canada incorporated that company without even knowing what the powers were that were given by the State of Ohio. It recognized the existence of the company. It gave them the powers that the company had in that state to carry on mining operations in my own county and in my own riding ; that is, the development of the iron ores and the bringing them to the front, and certain other powers. I took very much the ground then that the hon. gentleman from Monck has taken, but you can look at the different Acts of parliament and you will find quite a number of them of a similar character. As has already been pointed out, in their charters they are simply described as the corporation of New York, the banking company of New York, or some description like that. They are given certain powers. Their names are not mentioned, but simply the name of the company to carry on the engraving of bank notes, or something of that kind The other one to which I allude goes a little further than this ; whether the hon. gentleman from Monck remembers that or not I do not know, but I have a distinct recollection from the fact that the operations that were to be carried on by this company were in the riding I then represented. In the present case we are asked to give powers to a company in Canada to do a business legally and under the supervision of the laws of this country, which they are now doing without an Act of parliament to incorporate them. I do not know who compose this Buffalo company, and I do not know whether there are Canadians in it. The old bridge that united the Canadian side of the Niagara River with the United States side, known as the Grand Trunk bridge, formerly the Great Western before the Grand Trunk Railway acquired that line of railway, belongs exclusively to the Grand Trunk Railway. That is a Canadian company, in existence through English capital. Then the Cantilever bridge, immediately to the west of it, I understand, belongs exclusively to the Vanderbilt system. It is built by United States capital and enables the Canada Southern railway, which takes its western terminus at Detroit, to cross over into the state of New York. The Suspension bridge that connects Buffalo with the Canadian side belongs to the Grand Trunk Railway principally, and certain United States capital I believe is invested in its construction; and then, again, whenever a bridge is built across the Niagara River, whether it be built by Canadian enterprise or by United States enterprise, it has first to receive the sanction of both governments before it can be constructed. The question of where the money comes from to build it has never been one that has been considered, so far as my recollection serves me. We have an instance of it at this moment in that bridge at Cornwall between Ontario and the State of New York. I believe nearly all of that capital is United States capital, though the parliament of Canada did bonus the road which runs from Cornwall into the city of Ottawa; but the rest of the capital used in building the road is United States capital. If I thought that this was handing over the great highways of this country to a foreign company, which they could control at any time to the disadvantage of Canada, as seems to be impressed upon the mind of the hon. gentleman from Monck, I think the Senate would go just as far as the hon. gentleman himself to prevent any evil of that kind being perpetrated upon us. But to my mind the whole thing is in a nut shell. I took the same view the hon. gentleman did when I first began to consider it. Here is an electric railway built by Canadian and United States capital. I think our railway magnates in Canada invested a good deal of money in it. I know my hon. friend who sits behind me—had an interest in it, because I laughingly chaffed him in committee about how much he had made out of it. That road has not proved a financial success. They have lost most of the money which they put into the road at Queenston running up to the park. The United States corporation had a road running from Niagara Falls. I believe it has been since extended to Buffalo, and extends eastward down the gorge of the river to the rapids, at the foot of the hill running to Queenston, whilst the road on the Canadian side is on the top of the bank. They have amalgamated their different interests. This Buffalo company, which I suppose is composed of United States capitalists, have acquired all the interests and rights of the Canadians who held stock in the Electric road in Canada; and now they say, 'owning all this, and owning the bridges as well—because the bridges belonged to these private companies —we want to unite our different interests in one, so that we can carry on our business subject always to the laws of Canada so far as our operations in Canada are concerned.' That is the way I understand the matter, and that being the case, I should not like to see the Bill thrown out. It has been asked if the bridges are the ordinary railway bridges over which the Grand Trunk Railway or the Canada Southern pass ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have been over the bridges, and they are purely for the purposes of the electric railway and carriageways and ordinary passenger traffic. That is what the bridges were built for and used for, and not as ordinary railway bridges. The railway companies have their own bridges ; that is the Cantilever bridge owned by the Canada Southern, and the old bridge that has existed there for a long time, and a new one has been constructed lately owned by the Grand Trunk Railway Company. Then the one at Buffalo is owned jointly by the different railway interests in Canada, and they run over it. These are the facts connected with this company. I should like to see, in all these Bills where powers are given to foreign railways, a schedule showing what powers they have in the other country.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Providing we attempt to give them similar powers here. But all we are asked to do now is to enable them legally to take possession of the different enterprises and works on this side which they have acquired and subject them to our laws. The question is whether we should prevent that or not. If we prevent it, they will go on and do business just as they have done, and nobody will interfere with them. They have the bridges and will use them to the best possible advantage. They have acquired all the interest in the Canadian electric railway, and they will run that to the best advantage and perhaps at a greater cost, and perhaps not in so legal a manner as under this Bill. Under those circumstances I should not feel satisfied in voting for the six months hoist.

Hon. Mr. O'DONOHOE—I rise for the purpose of removing what I believe is a misapprehension in regard to the present Bill. From the arguments advanced by my hon. friend behind me (Hon. Mr. McCallum) it would seem as if we were substituting one set of stockholders for another. If we were going to change the lie of the land, going to change the roads, or going to change anything, it would be a different matter. All that we are asked to do, as I understand it, is to permit several corporations, who now possess the very same field that will be possessed by the corporation contemplated by this Act, to combine, and form one corporation.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is it.

Hon. Mr. O'DONOHOE—The several companies now existing find, as a good many other companies have found, that several companies cannot be managed as economically as one company can. We find our large monetary institutions amalgamating, and they do not change their stockholders, or capital, or offices. All that is done is that the parties concerned come together and say: 'We can manage those five or six corporations by one corporation for much less than we are paying.' We are not changing those corporations that exist at present. We are not taking the capital from the United States and bringing it into Canada, nor are we taking capital out of Canada and placing it in the United States. The capital will be precisely the same after the Bill has become law as it is at present. There will be no change made in it, except a change for economy: and is this parliament to object to the parties who are interested making the most economical arrangement for the management of their concerns? Surely not. We do not do it in any other instance. The proximity of one country to the other at that point has nothing to do with the question. It will not change the banks of the river or the river itself, or change the railway. It will do nothing more than make a large corporation out of several corporations that exist now. That is, as I understand, what is contemplated by this Bill. If that is so, why should we draw the distinction in this case, and not treat them the same as any other corporations coming before us for amalgamation All that they ask for is amalgamation. They do not ask a change of stock, or change of place, or anything else. All that is asked is that we give them leave to operate under one charter, to make it less expensive and more profitable to the owners. As to the other matters spoken of foreign to this transaction, it seems to me to be a misapprehension, and we should endeavour to find what the point is that this Bill asks for. The point is that there are five or six small corporations, losing money, perhaps, by the expensiveness of their management, and the people whose money is invested in these corporations come before us and ask to be allowed to amalgamate so that they can make more money, and make the business more profitable. I should say it is impossible for any reasonable man to draw a distinction between the amalgamation sought here and any amalgamation that is sought under any Act of incorporation in the whole Dominion. In Toronto we find four or five monetary institutions, one of them up in the millions, coming before parliament for power to amalgamate, and in no case have they been refused the right: and the chief reason advanced for the amalgamation sought is that the operations of one corporation can be more cheaply conducted than the operations of several companies. There are less leaks and more profit, and no people can understand better what is to their interest than those whose money and capital are invested, and those people who invested their money are the people who are before us to-day asking to be allowed to amalgamate.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Who are they ?

Hon. Mr. O'DONOHOE—I know a good many of them, but I do not think it is necessary to state their names. If we were making a change of stockholders or anything of that kind, it would be a different matter. But we are not doing that. We will have the same stockholders and the same parties interested under the new company as are now engaged in the several corporations. I think the real question here is, are these people entitled to the amalgamation asked for by this Bill ? If they are we should give it to them without regard to where they live or where they come from.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Read the names.

The Clerk then read the names.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I call attention to the fact that the hon. gentleman from St. John has not recorded his vote. He must have some constitutional reason for not doing so.

The motion for the third reading of the Bill was agreed to on the same division, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

COMPANIES' CLAUSES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved the third reading of Bill (X) ' An Act to amend the Companies' Clauses Act.'

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In supplementing what I pointed out to my hon. friend last night I would point out that since yesterday I looked into it and I find that this Act will not extend to the companies incorporated under the Companies Act.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It applies to companies incorporated by charter.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It does not extend to companies incorporated by Letters Patent ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Not intended so to do ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does not the Companies' Act give power to companies organized under Letters Patent to change the number of directors, and also to make any other amendment they desire to make ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I know it does as far as the reduction of the numbers of directors is concerned. I know that from experience. All you have to do in that case is to give notice in the Official Gazette that you desire to make this change. We had the same thing in a company with which I am connected. We reduced the directors to three, but we could not do that without first advertising in the Gazette what we intended to, and then call a meeting of the directors and pass the by-law. My impression is that if you desire to change the head office from the city of Ottawa to the city of Toronto, for instance, you can do it in the same way, although I am not positive.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I cannot say as to that. My hon. friend mentioned the matter yesterday, and I was too much engaged to look up the statute.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I understood from my hon. friend yesterday that the Bill was of sufficiently wide scope to cover companies incorporated under the Companies Act, and I mention the matter for that reason.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We embody what is called the Companies' Clauses Act in our own legislation here. They are not necessarily embodied in the powers given to companies that are incorporated under Letters Patent.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—They are not embodied at all.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Companies' Clauses Act Bills are introduced for the purpose of shortening legislation. We name certain sections and exclude certain sections. Companies incorporated by Letters Patent would have the power themselves to change their head office from time to time. They have powers for regulating the allotment of transfer, declaration of dividends, term of service and so forth.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What does the hon. gentleman refer to ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is the Act incorporating companies by Letters Patent. They regulate the time and place for the holding of the annual meetings of the company, and calling of meetings, regular and special, and so on. They have all those powers. This Act is not disturbed in its provisions by the amendment made by my hon. friend. They are limited to what is called the Companies' Clauses Act.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There was another point to which attention was called: that is whether under this 6th clause the head office of the company could be changed to a city or town out of Canada. It seems to me a little ambiguous. The clause reads :

> The company may, from time to time, by by-law, change the locality of its head office or may change its principal place of business.

That is they can change the office or they can change the principal place of business, but it says when you change the place of business in Canada—do the words 'in Canada' apply to the head office ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I think that is perfectly clear, because it says head office, or principal place of business.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—One or the other.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—These are not put as two distinct places, but two alternative names for the same place. The principal place of business is the head office, and that being in Canada, it may be changed to any other place in Canada, but not out of Canada.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—If there is a doubt about it, we might add the words 'provided the change takes place in the Dominion of Canada.'

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That would imply that the words in the Bill would mean somewhere else, without that addition. If the House thinks it is not sufficiently clear as it is, I do not object to try to make it clearer, but I think it is clear that the head office or place of business may be changed to another place in Canada, and not to a place outside of Canada, say to the United States.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—Take any company acting here ; its place of business is in Canada. You say it can change its place. What is to prevent it going to New York ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Because it is changing it out of Canada.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—We could not say a company had power to change its place of business from Canada to some other country.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—There is nothing to prevent it. There is nothing to prevent a Canadian company having its head office in London. We have a company like that already.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No Act of the parliament of Canada can operate as an Act outside of the boundaries of Canada. I think that is perfectly well settled.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does that prevent a company organized in Canada establishing their head office outside of Canada ? Because the Grand Trunk Railway is operating under a Canadian charter while its head office is out of Canada.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They are permitted to have their head office out of Canada.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The whole of the Grand Trunk corporate machinery must be England, and its legislation is necessarily Imperial.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—They are not organized there as a company, I think.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The Privy Council has held that an alien who has become domiciled in a colony, and become a citizen of that colony, at once becomes an alien when he goes beyond the limits of where citizenship was conferred upon him. For instance, a man from France, a Huguenot, settled in Virginia, and became a British subject under the laws of that colony, and built a ship there and put on board a cargo of tobacco, and took her to London. She was seized in London as a ship owned by an alien trading between a colony and the mother country.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—How long ago ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—A good while ago, but the doctrine is the same to-day, that a colonial statute does not operate beyond the province in which it has been made law. When you go three miles out at sea, you are from under the jurisdiction of that statute, and come under the jurisdiction of the Imperial parliament. That was decided in the case of Rutlidge and Low.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—If you go out three miles to sea you are a British subject still ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—If a man is made a British subject by a colonial statute, unless there is some Imperial statute declaring that it shall operate to make him a subject beyond the province, he is an alien when he goes beyond the limits of the province. A United States citizen coming into Canada before the Act of 1871, and becoming a British subject, on going beyond the bounds of Canada would be a United States subject again.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then if he went to England he would not be a British subject.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No. That has been made right by modern legislation.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—By what right does the Grand Trunk Railway Company hold its head office in London, unless by an Imperial statute ? I never heard that they had any Imperial legislation.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—They have issued all their debentures in England, and they must necessarily have Imperial legislation.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—We may give them the capacity when we incorporate them, but it is simply an enabling power so far as we are concerned.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—As there is a doubt about this, why not make it plain ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Why not say : 'to any other place in Canada' ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I have no objection at all.

The Bill was amended accordingly, and read the third time and passed as amended.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved the second reading of Bill (110) 'An Act to amend the Weights and Measures Act.' He said : This Bill deals with two or three matters which are outside of the ordinary affairs regulated by the Weights and Measures Act. The first is with regard to the character of apple barrels. The second is with regard to the selling of eggs by weight. The third is with regard to the length of binder twine in a ball, and penalties for contravention. The fourth matter relates to salt—the quantity that constitutes a barrel of salt, and also a provision requiring that salt in bags should be weighed and the net weight marked upon the bag. These are all the matters that are dealt with in the Bill. I have not compared the provisions with regard to the size of apple barrels with the provision of section 18, which, I think, can be more conveniently done when we go into committee on the Bill. I have contented myself with ascertaining what are the general provisions of the Bill, and in what respect it undertakes to amend the Weights and Measures Act.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—This question, especially in its reference to the size of the barrel, coming before us now, is enough to convince hon. gentlemen in parliament that it is not desirable that the House should take too much on trust from departmental officials or anybody else, because when we do we often find that we are passing something that we have not correctly appreciated. I remember when a Bill on this subject was before us last year, chapter 28 of the statutes of last session, that after looking at the Bill I came to the conclusion that it was prepared by those who knew a good deal more about the subject than we did, and therefore we could assume it was right. It was found, soon after last year's Bill became law, that we had actually legalized a barrel for the sale of apples in Canada larger than the barrel authorized in the United States and larger than the Ontario flour barrel. It was difficult to understand why such a barrel should have been attempted to be legalized. It was nevertheless legalized by the Act of last year, but which does not come into effect until the first July of this year, and therefore parliament has still the matter in its hands to provide for a different barrel before that Act comes into operation. I have given this a good deal of consideration, and consulted with parties in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island who are engaged in the apple industry, and who understand this question very well, and with regard to the barrel authorized in the Bill now before us. I find that there is a very general satisfaction with the description of barrel contained in this Bill, and the objection they have, and which I think, is a very strong one, that it permits of the use of a larger barrel, and admits possibly of a barrel of apples meaning one thing in one part of Canada and something else in another part of Canada. The barrel described in clause one of this Bill is described very exactly and appears to be a barrel which meets the requirements of the business, altogether, but it is permitted that parties may use a larger one.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That being the case, it will not ensure that uniformity—that clear understanding that it is desired to have in the transaction of business, if it is possible that a barrel may mean a different capacity in one part of the country from what it does in another. I understand that a good deal of pains has been taken to get the views of those dealing in apples, potatoes and other things as well in different parts of the country, and to endeavour to secure unanimity of opinion with regard to the size of the barrel that should be used. I find, however, that in the Bill, that point has not been reached, and that it is permissible to use a larger barrel. We find section 18 reads :

> 18. All apples packed in Canada for export for sale by the barrel in closed barrels shall be packed in good and strong barrels of seasoned wood, having dimensions not less than the following, namely: twenty-six inches and one-fourth between the heads, inside measure, and a head diameter of seventeen inches and a middle diameter of eighteen inches and one-half, representing as near as possible ninety-six quarts or three bushels.

I think this conforms to the barrel used in packing apples in the United States ? It is a great pity that we could not settle on one barrel for the whole of Canada, and then we should have a uniform barrel in Canada and the United States. I do not see why we could not get perfect uniformity as to the size of the barrel. I notice subsection 2, of this clause goes on to deal with quinces, pears, potatoes, &c. It says :

> 2. When apples, pears, quinces or potatoes are sold by the barrel, as a measure of capacity, such barrel shall not be of lesser dimesions than those specified in this section.

and subsection 3 provides :

> 3. When potatoes are sold by weight, the weight equivalent to a barrel shall be 175 pounds.

By reading that section in connection with subsection 1, this barrel is to hold ninety-six quarts, or three bushels. I think we should say, when speaking of the weight of potatoes, that a barrel should be one hundred and seventy-four pounds, or three bushels. If it is three bushels when filled with apples, it must be three bushels when filled with potatoes.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My reason for taking that view is, that already, in the first section describing a barrel as holding as nearly as possible ninety-six quarts or three bushels, we have thereby settled what a barrel of this capacity shall hold—it is ninety-six quarts or three bushels. When we come to potatoes we say the weight of a barrel—I presume the same barrel—shall be one hundred and seventy-four pounds. Why not go further and say that that shall be three bushels? I know the objection that will come in here will be that in the Weights and Measures Act section 16, provides that the weight of a bushel of potatoes shall be sixty pounds, and sixty multiplied by three would be one hundred and eighty pounds, and consequently six pounds more than this barrel is stated to contain, and this would be a discrepancy, but there is a discrepancy any way. By subsection 1 of this Bill before us we provide that a barrel of these dimensions shall hold ninety-six quarts, or three bushels. Further down we are providing that that barrel, when filled with potatoes, shall weigh one hundred and seventy-four pounds. We are therefore declaring that a bushel of potatoes shall be less than sixty pounds?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—What barrel is referred to? Surely it does not mean any barrel, but the barrel we have been describing. Therefore we should, to make the matter consistent, say that that should be three bushels the same as when the barrel is filled with apples, and amend section 16 of the Weights and Measures Act by making the weight of a bushel of potatoes correspond with what they are doing in this Bill. That is my view. I think really sixty pounds is too much for a bushel of potatoes, for this reason: if hon. gentlemen will turn to section 19 of the Weights and Measures Act they will find it states that the measure shall not be heaped, but filled as nearly to the level of the brim as the size and shape of the article permits. This renders heaping illegal. I know the Imperial bushel, unless it is heaped, cannot be made to contain sixty pounds of potatoes; but the practice in our province has been to heap the bushel. It is strictly at variance with the Dominion statute which says it shall not be heaped. Under these circumstances, I think it would be well, when this Bill is before us, to try if we could not get these discrepancies, which are plainly to be found, removed, so that a bushel, as fixed in section 16 of the Weights and Measures Act, and the barrel described in the first subsection of the Bill now before us, and the barrel spoken of in subsection 3 of the Bill, should be harmonized both for apples and potatoes. It may be that this measure has received all the consideration it could get at this time, but I hope it may be possible to go over the matter perhaps with still greater care, and that we may get legislation on this subject which will remove all discrepancies, and particularly those I have just now referred to. With regard to the other parts of the Bill I have no comment to make, with the exception of the second section—the standard of eggs:

> When eggs are described as sold by the standard dozen, the dozen shall mean one pound and a half.

I have no precise information on this subject. I hope, however, that we are not legislating in the dark on this subject, as we evidently were on the apple question last year, and while it may be a very good thing to recognize the proper weight of a standard dozen of eggs, so that those who produce a breed of poultry of such a character as will produce larger eggs for the market will be encouraged, and will receive as they should receive, a price in proportion to the size—while it is desirable that should be done, I hope that care has been taken that the weight, as compared with the dozen, may be approximately accurate as relating to the average of eggs produced in this country.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. senator has referred to the defects in the Act of last year. The Act of last year was made precisely what apple producers asked for. They passed a resolution and made representations to the department, and the department made the barrel to suit them. The hon. gentleman shakes his head, but I am giving information which I obtained from my colleague, who, when this matter was under discussion, referred to the representations made to him, and the legislation that was had in accordance with those representations; so that if there was a mistake last year, it was a mistake of the apple-growers, and the mistake of the department was simply in conforming to their wishes. The hon. gentleman has expressed his regret that the barrels are not of uniform size. We could make them uniform by declaring that the flour barrel should be the apple barrel as well. That is not what the apple-growers of the maritime provinces are asking for, but it is what the apple-growers of the province of Ontario are asking for. We do in Ontario what our friends do not do in the maritime provinces. We produce a very considerable quantity of wheat for the market, which is converted into flour, and there are, in the towns and villages where the manufacture of flour is being carried on, also establishments for the manufacture of flour barrels. It is easy for a farmer who has a large orchard to go to a manufacturer and buy barrels made for the purpose of packing flour, and they serve his purpose for packing apples; but if he were to ask for apple barrels specially he could not get them. The manufacturer would not take the trouble to make them for him—at all events, manufacturers have not done so heretofore, and it is a matter of great convenience to the apple-growers of the west, who are a numerous class and produce immense quantities of fruit in some seasons, to be able to get barrels for the purpose of packing their apples—a decided advantage to be able to get them from those who make flour barrels. It was a necessary provision, if the law is to conform to the wishes of the population instead of the population being made to conform to a hard and fast law. Now, with regard to the measurement of potatoes, sixty pounds are declared in the statute to be a bushel. I do not think that weight is excessive. If my hon. friend were undertaking to buy very large potatoes by the quart, he would find a good deal of difficulty in not having more space unoccupied in his quart than he would like to have occupied by the potatoes. And so it must be borne in mind that ninety-six quarts represents salt measure, or dry measure, or liquid measure, and so of the barrels spoken of would hold ninety-six quarts of water or spirit, and it will hold, according to its measure of capacity, ninety-six quarts of potatoes. But there is a good deal of unoccupied space, especially if the potatoes are large: and the average weight of a barrel of potatoes, the barrel itself containing a space of ninety-six quarts, will not be more than 174 pounds: and so it was declared that when potatoes are put up in barrels, as you put up apples, barrels of a capacity of ninety-six quarts, that the weight shall be 174 pounds: but that will still leave the bushel of potatoes by weight, when sold by the bushel, to be sixty pounds, and I do not think that is an unreasonable arrangement for the weight of potatoes. With regard to eggs, hens are not a very intelligent class of creatures, and they do manage to lay egs that vary greatly in size, and it does seem to me that when parties go upon the markets, as they do in all the towns and cities, to buy eggs, and buy them by the dozen, they should have an opportunity of saying: 'You shall not give me a dozen small eggs; you must give me a pound and a half.' If the eggs are small they may insist upon their being weighed instead of being counted, and I think that is not an unreasonable provision, and it is one that has been frequently asked for and brought under the attenton of the Department of Inland Revenue.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Could the hon. member state whether that is the weight of a dozen eggs as recognized in England and Europe? The difficulty with the egg buyers in England in particular, has been the size of the egg. There they are purchased by weight, and I am inclined to think that this weight must be nearly correct from the fact that it was suggested and incorporated in this Bill by the member for one of the Hurons (Mr. McMillan), who is a practical farmer and an exporter of cattle, and I think also of eggs, and when I first read the discussion in the House of Commons, I puzzled myself in thinking over the matter, but when he suggested one pound and a half I supposed that this would be in accordance with the weight of the article in England.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—Where the hens are more intelligent.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Oh no. The cocks may be: I do not know. I think it is a good provision and more particularly in reference to the export. It may be a small matter but when we consider the quantity of eggs sent from this country to England and the necessity for having a good quality, it is just as important to have a good article as it is in the matter of apples. There is no population in the world that panders, if I may use that expression, so much to appetite as the English people, and if you want to have a profitable market there, you must send an article that they will buy and consume. I do not know whether my hon. friend knows what the weight in England is.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I could not say. I daresay the department has the information. I will make inquiry and find out upon what they have acted. Of course this pound and a half means two ounces to the egg.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The best fowl in the world are imported from England.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—We can discuss this in committee, but while my hon. friend, the leader of the House, is strictly correct in saying that the barrel described in the Bill of last year was the barrel requested by the Fruit-Growers' Association of Nova Scotia, yet it is necessary to explain that long before the legislation took place the Nova Scotia Fruit-Growers' Association discovered the error that had been made. They had applied to some experts to get a technical description of a barrel which they thought would be an equivalent to the United States barrel. That is what they were aiming at, and they got this description, and made it the basis of their application to the government for a uniform law, and my hon. friend is quite right in saying that this description came to the government from this authority. That is quite right, but it is equally correct that as early as January 1899, the Fruit-Growers' Association discovered the error that they had made, and called the attention of the Minister of Militia, who was attending a meeting of the association, and the Minister of Agriculture who was also present, to the error and to the necessity of having a different description put in the Bill, and therefore they were perfectly amazed when they found that, notwithstanding that they had asked for a change in that respect, a mistake had been made, and that the description of the barrel which they found to be an erroneous description before it became law, nevertheless was made law.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P. E. I.)—I think we are meddling very often with the law in respect of Weights and Measures, and people are really getting confused as to what the intention and purport of the law is.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—Hear. Hear.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P. E. I.)—Last year we passed a law respecting apple barrels and we found it was impossible to procure the barrels described by the Act. It would have given a great deal of dissatisfaction in the country if that law had been enforced, because it described the particular kind of barrel, not a flour barrel, not such a barrel as is ordinarily used, but one which was made on some principle by turning off the round of the log. With respect to the Act now before us, I think we are not legislating in the proper direction when we are describing a different mode and measure for the sale of potatoes from that which is at present the law. The law just now is that sixty pounds of potatoes is a bushel, and we are making a new measure altogether. That matter of the weight of potatoes is a subject which has often come before the legislature and the House and after being discussed for a number of years it was settled at sixty pounds to the bushel, that being the proper weight for a bushel of potatoes. I think it is wrong to interfere with a matter which is thoroughly settled and set at rest as that has been. If we say a barrel of potatoes is to be 174 pounds, we are making an entirely new departure. An ordinary barrel of potatoes would not weigh 174 pounds, and it is very doubtful in my mind whether the barrel that is described here, if used for potatoes, would contain that quantity.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It has been tried.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P. E. I.)—Not having been able to try it, I could not say positively. I am merely giving my opinion. Now, fixing a weight for a number of articles which are usually sold by measure, is an uncalled for proceeding. To enact that the apple barrels shall contain a certain weight is, I think, going to lead to a great deal of difficulty. It is not made compulsory, but why should it become law if it is not compulsory? If we make a law it should certainly be compulsory, to some extent at any rate. Then, again, we are interfering with something to which I have never heard an objection, namely, the mode in which eggs are to be disposed of in the market.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Constant complaints have been sent to the department.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P. E. I.)—We could get ten or eleven eggs in our country to weigh a pound and a half.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—It is a great complaint in England ?

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P. E. I.)—There is another objection with respect to salt. This provision respecting the marking of salt might answer very well for salt that was put up or manufactured in Canada, but an immense quantity of salt comes in bags from the Old Country. Some 60,000 bags came in the other day to Charlottetown in one steamer. It is going to be a serious matter to those who are buying the salt if they have to mark the thousands of bags that pass through their hands in a short space of time, and it is no benefit to the purchaser. The salt is purchased by the ton, and the purchaser gets the number of bags he requires to the ton. They come out without any mark of weight upon them, and it is going to be a serious tax if the parties have to mark the weight on the packages.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—In the next Bill on the Order paper, the Grain Trade Bill, there is a provision that the farmers cannot knowingly mix the grain, and if they do they are liable to a penalty. I think we should have something of that kind in this Bill, because when we buy apples in the North-west we find that the apples at the top and bottom of the barrel are much better than those in the centre. I think we should have some provision made with regard to apples. I would rather have a barrel with a hundred pounds of good apples in it, than the barrels of apples bought last fall.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—We can discuss the details in committee to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

The Senate adjourned.

DEMURRAGE ON I. C. R. CARS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. WOOD inquired :

What are the regulations now in force upon the Intercolonial Railway in respect to demurrage upon cars?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The regulations regarding demurrage on the Intercolonial Railway are the same as on other Canadian railways, excepting in regard to lumber for export; they provide, that when cars are detained over forty-eight (48) hours, after arrival and placing for loading or unloading, a charge of not less than one (1) dollar a car, or part thereof, will be made. Cars containing coal, coke, cordwood, common lumber, bark, stone for paving, lime and ore, are allowed seventy-two (72) hours for unloading. Sundays and legal holidays in all cases not counted. In regard to export lumber, we do not enforce these rules. John Earls, chairman, classification committee and manager car service department, Toronto, considers all claims for refunds. Four wheeled cars are charged fifty (50) cents a day.

UNLOADING OF CARS ON I. C. R.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. WOOD moved :

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before the Senate a return showing:—1. Which of the cars enumerated in the return to an address of the Senate, dated May 7, 1900, as having 'arrived at Halifax and St. John, respectively, previous to April 10 last and which had not been unloaded at that date,' have been since unloaded.

2. Dates upon which such cars were severally unloaded.

3. Amount of demurrage collected on each car.

He said : The returns which I asked for on May 17, 1900, has since been submitted to the House. I assume that very few hon. gentlemen have taken the trouble to peruse that return, and I, therefore, ask the permission of the House to call attention to some of the main features embraced in it. When made the motion for this return, I observed that complaints had been made that the detention of cars was becoming a very serious grievance. The hon. leader of the House thought that there could not be any real grievance, for the reason that these rules respecting demurrage were in force, and that the shippers of goods or owners of goods would find it expensive allowing the cars to stand unloaded and paying demurrage upon their goods. The return which has been brought down, however, shows that this grievance is not an imaginary one. I find that in Halifax on April 10, there were 376 cars standing in the yards unloaded, that one of these cars arrived there so long ago as July 25, 1899, and had, therefore, been standing eight months and sixteen days, that two others arrived August 31, 1899, and two more in September, so that these four cars had been standing there upwards of seven months; that four more had been standing there upwards of five months, thirteen more upwards of four months, forty-four upwards of three months, thirty-two upwards of two months, and ninety-eight upwards of one month, forty-two between three and four weeks, fifty-nine between two and three weeks, and seventy-one between one and two weeks, while only six had arrived within one week. So that of these 376 cars, 370 had been standing in the yard over a week, and more than half of them over a month. The condition of things in St. John was not so bad, although it was bad enough.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Where was this point?

Hon. Mr. WOOD—This was in Halifax. In St. John, one car had been standing there as long as three months, nine cars upwards of two months, twenty-three cars upwards of one month, three cars between three and four weeks, fifteen cars between two and three weeks, and eighty-four cars between one and two weeks, while 116 had arrived within a week before the return was brought down.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The 116 were also there.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—Yes, but they had arrived within a week, and the 135 had been standing there a longer time. It will thus be seen that at these two points there were upwards of 500 cars that had been standing and were unloaded for what I should regard as an unreasonable length of time, over a week at all events, and if the rule to which the hon. gentleman has just referred, is a reasonable rule, that cars should be unloaded within forty-eight hours after their arrival, it is clear that these cars have been allowed to stand much longer than they should have. I desire to say just here, that I merely moved for the returns at these two points, because I thought if I moved for returns at a number of points, it might be a long time before I would get the return, and April 10 was merely fixed because we had to name some day, in order to get a satisfactory return. I sent a copy of the return to a gentleman who has a great deal of business with the Intercolonial Railway, and who has made complaints with regard to this grievance, and I have since received a letter from him, from which perhaps it would be interesting to read some extracts. After expressing the desire that this matter should be straightened out in some way, and some regulations made, demanding the discharge of cars within a reasonable time after they are delivered at the station, he goes on to say:

> I may mention that even the return which we have received does not by a long way cover the grievance, nor even fairly represent the case, because large numbers of cars were left on the sidings at the various railway stations at which they were loaded for weeks together, and were not brought forward here, mostly, I presume, because there was not room, as the entire station yard would be blocked with the large number of cars which are shown as here in the return furnished you.

It is evident that this regulation, with regard to demurrage, which appears to be the regulation enforced on all railways, is not sufficient to meet this case and that some other measures should be adopted. It will be seen that while this may be advantageous to certain individuals to have the cars of the Intercolonial Railway used as a storehouse for their goods, whether it be lumber, coal, agricultural products or any other goods, it is a great inconvenience to the general public and from the letter which I have just read it will be observed that it affects the public first, by making a scarcity of cars so that persons who desire to ship goods are not able to do so when they want to; and, in the second place, it prevents the dispatch of business at these different shipping ports. Where the stations are blocked with cars it is difficult, when other cars arrive, to have them unloaded and despatched within a reasonable time. The inconvenience of this must be obvious to every one. In these days persons who make contracts for the delivery of lumber or agricultural products or manufactured goods, are often bound by their contracts for prompt delivery, and it is very important, in dealing with a railway that they should be able to secure cars and have their goods forwarded and delivered promptly. It is not, therefore, merely a question of the loss which the Intercolonial Railway may sustain by having its cars lie idle, but it is a question of general public convenience. I do not wish hon. gentlemen to conclude that in calling attention to this matter I am reflecting particularly on the present government, or on the present Minister of Railways. It is right to say that I believe this is a practice which has been growing up in connection with the business of the Intercolonial Railway for a long time. The rule which the hon. leader of the House has just read, I believe, gives the clue to the origin of this practice. It originated when the shipments of goods by steamers at seaports like Halifax and St. John became more general than shipment by sailing vessels. It is known that when a steamer arrives it is very important that she should have quick despatch, and I believe some regulations were made, allowing shippers of goods by steamers to load their cars in advance, and if they arrived at the shipping ports a few days in advance of the steamers arrival, they were allowed to stand there without being unloaded and without any charge for demurrage. That seems a reasonable arrangement. I am not finding fault with it, but this practice, introduced in that way, I believe now, from what I can learn, is becoming entirely too general. It applies not only to goods for shipment, but persons doing business locally take advantage of this relaxation of the demurrage rules in some way—I will not say how, but in some ways those rules are not enforced as they should be. I am drawing attention to the matter publicly in this way because I belive it is a real grievance and a grievance which has been growing, and is growing, and has now attained such proportions that it is really becoming a serious matter. I trust that the hon. gentleman who is leading the House will bring this matter to the notice of the Minister of Railways and that some means will be adopted to have this grievance remedied.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I have no objection to the passage of this motion. The information which my hon. friend seeks will be brought down, but I do not understand, from the answer to his questions which I read a few moments ago, that this failure to collect demurrage applies to anything else than lumber intended to be shipped abroad. However, the return, when brought down, will show whether the practice extends beyond that or not.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—I have not had an opportunity as yet of acquainting myself with the return to which the hon. gentleman from Westmoreland has alluded, but it seems to me, from the figures which he has cited, that there, evidently, is something wrong in the detention of so large a number of cars at Halifax as he has mentioned. I may say, in regard to this shipment of lumber, that it is almost unavoidable that detention of cars should occur at times and I will try to explain why. Suppose a merchant makes a contract with one of the lines of steamers at Halifax, that during the currency of, say, three months, they will ship for him to ports in Great Britain a certain number of standards of deals: the shipper receives a notice from the steamship owners that they expect in a couple of days or so the arrival of a steamer, and that that steamer is ready to take a certain number of standards of deals. There is no option left in this case to the shipper. He is obliged to send his deals forward to Halifax for shipment, and the House may not be aware of the particular arrangement which exists with regard to the sailing of those steamers. They come to Halifax from Great Britain, discharge some of their cargo and go on to St. John, afterwards returning to Halifax. Now, here is an instance in which a shipper has received notice from the steamship owners that on such a day the steamer is expected to arrive and they are ready to take a certain quantity of lumber by that steamer. The shipper sends his lumber. In the meantime, the steamer having gone to St. John has taken all the cargo she can carry, and when she returns to Halifax she cannot take the deals to which I have alluded. In a case of that kind, I cannot see how this detention can be avoided. The lumber interest is one of the greatest interests in the country, and in a case such as I have cited, some consideration at least should be given to it in regard to this matter of detention of cars. From what I have said to the House, I think it will be perfectly clear that it is, in a large measure, unavoidable so far as the shipper of lumber for export is concerned.

Hon. Mr. BOLDUC—Can they not unload the cars ?

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—No. There are no facilities for unloading the cars, there is no space for unloading, so that, as far as I can see, there is no remedy for the difficulty. There are certain dates mentioned in the return showing that the detention is longer than should have been allowed. I cannot understand the cause of it, but I want to show the position of the lumber shippers. The House can see for itself the position in which they are placed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—They ought to have a lumber yard.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—There is no lumber yard, and if there were, unloading the cars and then reloading them for shipment would involve an expense which would be a very material consideration for shippers. At the same time, as I said before, it is quite evident, from the figures cited, that there has been in some cases detention, for which some explanation is requisite.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—The mover of this motion has very correctly stated, and I was pleased to hear him say it, that he had no intention to find fault with the Railway Department, that the evil had grown up since the original construction of the Intercolonial Railway and is one for which no administration is specially to blame.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—They are all to blame.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—Yes, the whole of them. I can quite understand the explanation which has been made by my hon. friend from Pictou (Hon. Mr. Primrose) who says that he has not had time to look over the return. I took a casual glance over the return and found that my hon. friend is himself one of the offenders to the extent of thirty or forty cars.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—I have not had time to see whether I was an offender or not. If I am an offender it is under the circumstances which I have explained to the House and which I think are reasonable circumstances.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—Under the circumstances explained to the House, if the case is as my hon. friend puts it, the steamship company should be liable for the demurrage, and if, as he says, they ordered freight for a certain steamer to sail on a certain day, and they fail to take the goods, the steamer should be held responsible for detaining the cars an unreasonable time. While, possibly, the motion will not justify me in stating it, shippers outside of St. John and Halifax very naturally complain of the advantages which these two shipping ports receive by the present regulations of the Intercolonial Railway, one of those regulations being that they do not collect demurrage as is done at outports. If these cars had been sent to another port, the demurrage charges would have been enforced and collected. St. John and Halifax are receiving favours in other ways. Most of these steamers being subsidized for calling at these ports, the shippers at these ports have an advantage over all others in having their freight carried at a cheaper rate than it can be taken from smaller ports, and the smaller ports are placed at a disadvantage. There is another matter of which shippers complain, that the government have spent large sums of money in building wharfs and providing shipping accommodation at those two ports. Ships and steamers go to those wharfs and receive their cargo and are charged no demurrage on the cars they may detain ; they pay no wharfage and thus these ports are made favoured ports. I cannot afford to spend fifty or one hundred thousand dollars building wharfs and give the use of them free to every vessel that comes. There is a rule the world over that every vessel has a right to pay a reasonable sum for the use of a wharf, but this Dominion pays out vast sums of money for accommodation at St. John and Halifax and receives no revenue from the expenditure. It is an injustice which should be brought before the government and remedied. All ships visiting those ports should be put on the same footing as if they went to private wharfs or to smaller ports. The hon. gentleman from Westmoreland has explained that the present administration came in and found the evil of which he complained growing up; he has directed attention to one evil; I am directing attention to another.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—The question before the House presents a rather strange state of affairs, but if there was anything very wrong, I would know something of it, coming from the winter port of Canada. If there is an unusual number of cars detained at St. John, it may be accounted for by the fact that we are doing a more extensive business there since the present government came into power. The general feeling is that the Intercolonial Railway, which was a dead carcass on our hands under the former administration, is to-day alive, and hardly a day passes that a large amount of property does not go over that route. To make this question understood, I may point out that there are two roads leading into the city of St. John, one owend by the government of Canada and the other by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. If the inquiry had been further extended and a return asked for from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company at the harbour of St. John, on the south-western side of the harbour, hon. gentleman would find that a greater proportion of cars are there waiting to deliver freight to the ships coming into St. John in the winter season, than on the other side of the harbour. Travelling along that road I have seen large numbers of cars waiting for steamers to come to St. John. I was completely astonished at the number. They are spread along the roadway for miles and miles out of the city, and I came to the conclusion that the road must be a very paying institution compared with what it was some years ago.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What proportion of the cars belonged to the Intercolonial Railway and what proportion to the Canadian Pacific Railway?

Hon. Mr. DEVER—The Canadian Pacific Railway is on one side of the harbour, the Intercolonial Railway on the other side, and consequently there could be no confusion. The cars are owned by two distinct railways. Therefore I do not wonder at the great number of cars detained at the port, but when the explanation can be had it will be seen that this great display of cars is caused by the improvement in the traffic along the two great highways, and not attributable in any way to the fault of the parties who are conducting the business of those two roads.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—I wish to make a remark in reference to something said by the hon. gentleman from Chatham (Hon. Mr. Snowball) relating to the wharfs. These wharfs to which the hon. gentleman alludes are either government wharfs or wharfs connected with the railways, and wharfage is not charged because these wharfs are built for encouraging the trade of the country, and in that regard they are very different from private wharfs.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—Wharfs are built in every port, large or small.

The motion was agreed to.

ORCHARDING IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON moved:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before the Senate a statement showing in detail the work undertaken, expenditure incurred and results obtained in the experimental operation carried on last year in regard to orcharding in Prince Edward Island, giving the names of all persons employed to carry on the work and the amount paid to each, and stating on whose recommendation such persons were employed.

He said: In rising to propose the motion which stands in my name, I may remark that last year I moved for a return of all the correspondence between the government of Prince Edward Island and the provincial Premier and other persons in relation to experiments carried on in the province last year in spraying and pruning and grafting orchards. Just as my hon. friend has remarked with regard to the subject of an address previously moved by him, these returns are very seldom read. This one is only of a provincial import, and therefore, I presume hon. gentlemen have not read it very closely. I may remark, however, that this return is not complete, that two of the papers referred to in it which passed between the parties were not brought down. I only looked into it very closely quite recently myself. I will point out in the statement which I am going to make what these papers are. They are plainly indicated in the correspondence. This correspondence starts with a letter from the president of the Fruit-Growers' Association addressed to Prof. Robertson, the Commissioner of Agriculture, in which it was proposed that some work should be done in experimental orcharding in the province, and that proposition was that the Fruit-Growers' Association would contribute to the expense of the operations, that the provincial government might be asked to contribute also, and that an equal contribution might be expected from the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa, and the suggestion was that the matter should be placed under the direction of the Commissioner of Agriculture at Ottawa, Prof. Robertson, in whom, I may say, the people of the province to which I belong have the most unbounded confidence, and who has proved by his work in that province, in dairy and other matters, his very great skill in organizing and carrying forward experimental work. That was the proposition, and in a letter dated April 11, the president of the Fruit-Growers' Association made this proposition to Prof. Robertson for the consideration of the federal government. Prof. Robertson replied on April 18, and after consultation with the Minister of Agriculture he said that if the local government of that province and the Fruit-Growers' Association would each assist in the work to the extent which had been proposed, the department would meet the remainder of the expenditure required. That seems to be all right. The matter was stated on that basis, and on May 3, Prof. Roberston wrote a letter to the Premier of the province in which he indicated the lines on which the work was to be carried on, a copy of which letter was sent to the president of the Fruit-Growers' Asociation, Mr. H. A. Stewart, of Hamilton, P. E. I. That letter indicates in detail the manner in which the work, as I said, was to be carried forward, and it was still a clear understanding that the co-operation of the federal government and the Fruit-Growers' Association should be had. On May 9, the Premier of the province replies to Prof. Robertson, in which reply he says that 'the Fruit-Growers' Association here cannot contribute anything to the funds in support of this work, not having the funds, as I to-day learned from the secretary, and Mr. Kinsman would be altogether under the direction of the local government.' This is the letter of the Premier of the province, and I may say, in reference to that letter, that the secretary, Mr. McCourt, of the Fruit-Growers' Association, at a meeting held not very long ago, which will be found on page 14 of the report, places on record these words :

> Rumours being in circulation that I told the Premier, or any one, that the association would not contribute to the salary of the graftsman and sprayer sent here, I wish emphatically to deny the report. There is not a word of truth in it.

I suppose from this letter there must have been some misunderstanding between the secretary of the Fruit-Growers' Association and the Premier, because we can scarcely believe it was misrepresentation. It must have been the result of misunderstanding between these gentlemen. At all events, Mr. Farquharson asked that the provincial government should be placed in entire charge, and the letter goes on to give every assurance that the work will be carried forward without political partiality, and carried forward in the interests of the fruit-growers of the province. The provincial government took charge of the work. A man named Kinsman was sent to the province to carry the work forward, and I have a report of the Fruit-Growers' Association in which the matter has been discussed. I have also a good deal of information of a personal nature with regard to the operations of the province and I have to say that the work was a failure, that Mr. Kinsman did not turn out to be a good man, or was not well suited for the carrying forward of these experiments, and no co-operation was permitted with the Fruit-Growers' Association. Mr. Stewart was notified to go to Charlottetown to meet Mr. Kinsman on the day of his arrival there, but when he went he was not able to find him, and it turned out afterwards that he was with Mr. Farquharson the Premier of the province, who took him away to the country, or something of that kind, and Mr. Kinsman was put under the direction of political leaders in different parts of the province. He was taken out of the hands of the fruit men of the province entirely, was not allowed to consult or confer with the leading fruit-growers of the province, but was put in the hands of the politicians. The correspondence shows all about that.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Have they anybody but politicans down there ?

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—They have clergymen.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think there are just as many fairminded, candid, honest men in Prince Edward Island as will be found in Bothwell. I am told that the president of the Fruit-Growers' Association voted for the Liberal candidate at the last election. He is known to be a man of independent views, and you could not depend upon him to support one political party more than another except where he believed they were right. That is the character of Mr. Stewart in the province, and I think I am speaking the sentiments of every person who knows him when I say that that is the character he bears, and it was a matter of very great surprise and regret to the fruit-growers of the province when they found this movement was taken out of Mr. Stewart's hands. He was not a man who would have arrogated too much authority. He would have co-operated with the Premier in making the work a success, and he would have been able to enlist the sympathy of other fruit-growers, from his position. Assuming Kinsman was able to do good work, which he might be able to do if his surroundings were suitable, a very different result might have been obtained. As evidence of how this matter terminated I will read from the report of the directors of the Fruit-Growers' Association at its last meeting. These directors are composed of men of both political parties. There are several Liberals on the board. I think the board of directors consists of ten men and I know several of them are very strong Liberals. The report reads :

> We wish thus publicly to correct the impression Prof. Robertson received from some source or other, as conveyed in this last letter.

That is, that the Fruit-Growers' Association would not assist——

> And that our association refused to direct this official, after asking for him, and also denied his work the monetary assistance it had previously promised. The fact is, the association was studiously ignored by both the officials who undertook to direct him here, and no sane man could expect us to give our time or money to a work, even if in every way meritorious, when we were never asked so to do by those conducting it, even in the most indirect way. The failure of Mr. Kinsman's mission can, therefore, in no wise be put upon this association. The Fruit-Growers' Association could, without doubt, had it been permitted, have turned it to some good account for horticulture, and thus have saved the large amount of money thrown away—money so very much needed for the fostering of horticultural interests in the province.
> We feel, however, that at least one good end has been served by this complete failure—politics and politicians can make no capital out of an invasion of the proper rights of agricultural associations.

And I may say further, that the report, after a thorough sifting and discussion, was unanimously adopted by the meeting of the fruit-growers at which there were about a hundred present of both political parties. It was stated and explained to the fruit-growers in the province that Kinsman had not been selected on the ground of politics. I am afraid that that explanation will not hold good. I know, from past experience in the dairy movement and other matters, that the feeling of both political parties in Prince Edward Island was that if the matter were placed in Prof. Robertson's hands, he would get a man independent of politics, who would do good work under his direction. That has been our experience with him. But in this matter the Minister of Agriculture—as he had a right to do, I suppose—consulted the Minister of Militia, and asked him to name a man, and the Minister of Militia named a very strong political supporter of his own belonging to King's, N. S., and I have learned since that the man had no qualifications for the work, at least not in that degree that would be found among the progressive fruit-growers of the province of Nova Scotia. Not only that, but Mr. Hazard, who has not been engaged in fruit-growing, who is a partner of Sir Louis Davies, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, was placed in charge of the movement in Charlottetown, and Mr. Rogers, of Alberton, formerly Liberal member of the Legislative Assembly, who is not engaged in fruit-growing, who knows nothing about it, Dr. Robertson, formerly member of the House of Commons, and Mr. Hughes, the Liberal nominee for the county of King's, were put in charge of this movement, and, while I may be wrong with regard to one or two, I have yet to learn that a single orchard belonging to a Conservative in the province was selected for the purpose of carrying on these orchard experiments. The whole thing was run on political lines. The Fruit-Growers' Association was entirely ignorant of what was being done. The work was in the hands of the party leaders in all the different parts of the province, and the result was, as I have read from the report of the Fruit-Growers' Association, it was a failure. It is a matter of very great regret that it should be so, because fruit-growing is receiving a good deal of attention in our province at the present time, and we have only just awakened to a clear appreciation of the fact that we can grow apples in the province of Prince Edward Island as successfully as they can even in the best apple districts in the Dominion of Canada. That is a power that we did not know we possessed until a few years back, and we stood in the same position with regard to dairying less than ten years ago; but the revolution that was produced in the province by the work of Prof. Robertson, under the direction of the Department of Agriculture of Canada, and without costing the Dominion of Canada anything but the skill and power of organization which Prof. Robertson possesses to such an extraordinary degree, was put in the course of operation and in a few years a province that was importing cheese, if not butter, has become an exporter of dairy products to the value of half a million dollars, as a result of the work of instruction and experimenting that was inaugurated by the Department of Agriculture in the province only six or seven short years ago. From the experiments we have made and the experience we have acquired, although we cannot possibly in apple culture go ahead and develop an industry in so short a time as in dairying, we are quite satisfied from the character our fruit has received in the English market, that we can send an apple which will command the highest price, and it was because of this universal desire for information on the subject that we wished to experiment. That is where our people are very much behind. The progressive horticulturists of the county of King's, N.S., are away ahead in this matter, and I know in the western part of Ontario, in the apple-growing district, the same thing prevails, and although we have the natural facilities for the production of apples, we have not the knowledge, and it was desired that a few simple experiments, which would not cost a great deal, should be had, for the purpose of putting the farmers in the best possible lines for improvement. I am sorry the result has not been as was anticipated, or as has been the case with regard to the dairy industry. I am making this motion with a view of having the papers brought down, showing the expenditure that has been incurred in regard to this work. I am also asking the names of the parties that were employed in connection with it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I have listened carefully to the speech addressed to the House by the hon. gentleman who has made this motion, and I fail to see from beginning to end what it was he complained of beyond the fact that the parties employed were friends of the government, belonged to the Liberal party, and did not belong to the hon. gentleman's party. That is the amount of his complaint, and the failure, as far as I can understand it, was a failure simply because the friends of the hon. gentleman were not appointed to undertake this work. My hon. friend said the work was a complete failure, that they did not accomplish the object they had in view, but my hon. friend did not state a single fact from beginning to end of the observations which he addressed to this House to sustain that proposition. He complains, too, that in the arrangement for the purpose of making some inquiry into the business of orcharding, and for the purpose maybe of giving information in respect of that branch of horticulture, that the Fruit-Growers' Association was ignored. All I can understand from the observations addressed to the House by the hon. gentleman was that the fruit-growers were not a party, along with the two governments, for the purpose of carrying on these investigations. The hon. gentleman has spoken in high terms of Prof. Robertson. I have no doubt that Mr. Robertson is a very competent public officer, but Mr. Robertson, of course, is not the Minister of Agriculture, and the responsibility rests with the Minister of Agriculture, and not with the officers under him. I have no doubt the Minister of Agriculture did not exceed his functions or duties in any action that he took in reference to this matter. The same thing may be said with regard to the Premier and the government of Prince Edward Island. The government there is a responsible government, responsible to the representatives of the people in parliament.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—To Mr. Pinaud.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman had better not mention Pinaud's name after the positive statements he made at the beginning of the session and his failure to establish any of the propositions which he so confidently asserted.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We will have some more about him by and by.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—If the local government thought they could carry on these investigations with the individual aid and assistance of such parties in Prince Edward Island as chose to co-operate with them, it was their business and they had a right to take that course if they saw proper. There can be no question about that, and the hon. gentleman has intimated, in the observations which he has addressed to this House upon the subject, in fact he has read a paragraph from the report of the Fruit-Growers' Association that they declined to co-operate with the government because they had not been made an integral part of it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The report does not state that.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman read from the report in which that was intimated. If he will read the report he will see that it contains those observations and that, in consequence, the experiment proved a failure. Whether it has proved a failure or not I do not know. I knew nothing of it till I listened to the speech of the hon. gentleman, but whether it be a success or a failure, the hon. gentleman has said nothing to show that it was the one or the other. From the beginning to the end of his observations, the burden of his complaint was that the government had acted through their friends and not through their political opponents, and so the matter stands. While my hon. friend may be under the impression that he is qualified by nature to be a minister, and that all those so qualified are on his side of the House and belong to the party of the hon. gentleman, and that it is a usurpation on the part of any Reformer, or any one holding Reform views, to undertake to carry on the government of the country—whatever may be the hon. gentleman's opinion in that regard, I apprehend that those who belong to the Reform party, who are entrusted by the Crown with the conduct of public affairs and are supported by a majority of the people's representatives in parliament, will assume that that is the legitimate source of authority and will undertake to discharge their duties as long as they enjoy that confidence. I think that that is the basis of our constitutional system, and not the inherent qualifications possessed by the men of one political party alone, which qualifies them for the discharge of the duties of government. I have no objection to this motion being carried and the information which the hon. gentleman seeks being brought down, and it will be seen when it is laid before us how far it sustains the position taken by the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Those who have paid the slightest attention to the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Marshfield and the reply made by the hon. Minister of Justice, will come to the conclusion that the minister has a very happy knack of turning a very sharp point upon very little basis. The Minister of Justice says, and says with a good deal of positiveness, that the gentleman who moved this resolution gave as the only reason for the failure that followed, the attempt to improve fruit-growing, in Prince Edward Island, was because his friends were not appointed to that office. I venture the assertion that when any one reads the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Marshfield they will find no such statement made even by innuendo. What he did say was that no one had been appointed except friends of the administration, and those friends knew nothing whatever of the business which they were appointed to perform. That is a positive and distinct statement. He stated, also, that the Minister of Militia was the party who selected the inspector, a friend of his in King's, N.S., and a man who had no knowledge of the business which he was appointed to take charge of. That is the statement which he made. He said more, that Mr. Farquharson, the Premier of Prince Edward Island, had taken Mr. Kinsman in charge and had driven him, or taken him round the island; and, further, that no orchard which was owned by a Conservative, so far as he could learn, had been visited by the inspector. He went further and said that had the matter been left in the hands of Prof. Robertson, in whom the dairy people of this country, and every one who knows him, have the fullest confidence, it would not have proved a failure. The establishment of creameries in Ontario was left entirely to his management, and if the business in Prince Edward Island had been left to him, the probabilities are that success would have followed the attempt to benefit the fruit-growers in Prince Edward Island, as it did the dairy interests in Ontario. I know that in the county in which I live, Prof. Robertson was given the fullest possible control, and there was no interference by the minister. He was simply sent through the county to superintend the establishment of creameries. He selected those who were most acquainted with the business. Some of them, I know, for I was present at the time it was done, were men largely interested in creameries and in the manufacture of cheese, many of whom belong to the Liberal party. Nobody ever thought for a moment of suggesting to him the propriety or impropriety of appointing any man on account of his politics. He acted upon his own knowledge of the requirements possessed by the gentlemen whom he appointed, and in whose charge he placed the creameries. We can easily understand the remarks made by the hon. Minister of Justice, that the Minister of Agriculture is the responsible party, but we have, I think, learned for the first time that the duty of the Minister of Agriculture is to select none but partisans who have no knowledge of the business which they are to perform and pay them out of the funds of the country. The dairy interests and the fruit-growing interests are of paramount importance to this country at the present moment, and are daily growing, and it matters not what the political complexion of the man may be who is engaged in it, he should receive the same consideration as one who does not think as he does. The hon. gentleman paid Mr. Stewart, the president of the Fruit-Growers' Association, a very high compliment as to his honesty and fairness in all his transactions. I am sorry the same compliment cannot be paid the government in matters affecting the interests of the country. The hon. minister said, also, that the fruit-growers' statements and assertions are not borne out by the paragraph which the hon. gentleman read. What the Fruit-Growers' Association complain of is that politics were introduced into the question, that they were not consulted, and had nothing to do with the experiments, and that consequently they were not responsible. I will read it again so that the hon. gentleman may understand it. They say, that the duties were imposed upon politicians and that these politicians were not competent for the work they were called upon to perform, the report states:

> We wish thus publicly to correct the impression Prof. Robertson received from some source or other, as conveyed in this last letter, and that our association refused to direct this official, after asking for him, and also denied his work the monetary assistance it had previously promised.

It appears from this that they asked for the appointment, and it also implies that they had promised to pay a portion of the expenses attending the performance of the work. They deny, however, ever having refused to pay their portion. Then they go on to say:

> The fact is, the association was studiously ignored by both the officials and those who undertook to direct him here, and no sane man could expect us to give our time or money to a work, even if in every way meritorious, when we were never asked so to do by those conducting it, even in the most indirect way.

That is what the association say and not that they failed to do it.

> The failure of Mr. Kinsman's mission can, therefore, in no way be put upon this association.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman says hear, hear. Why should they be blamed for it? He never consulted the association, never asked their assistance, and he spread the report that the association had refused to do what they had promised to do; that the association totally and emphatically denied. The report continued:

> The Fruit-Growers' Association could, without doubt, had it been permitted, have turned it to some good account for horticulture, and thus have saved a large amount of money thrown away—money so much needed for the fostering of horticultural interests in the province.

It is therefore as clear as language can possibly make it that the interpretation put upon it by the Minister of Militia is incorrect. The report goes on :

> We feel, however, that at least one good end has been served by this complete failure—politics and politicians can make no capital out of an invasion of the proper rights of agricultural associations.

Now that is a declaration that I think every one will agree with. In dealing with matters of this kind, while I do not object to friends of the party in power being appointed, I say when they appoint a man to perform a particular duty, that man should understand what he has to do and have sufficient knowledge of the work he is required to perform, in order that he may do it successfully. This association declares positively that the work performed, or attempted to be performed, was a total and absolute failure ; and they go further, and say that the failure was due to the fact that it was conducted by politicians, and that politics had more to do with it than that for which they asked the appointment to be made.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman does not maintain that a politician must necessarily be ignorant of everything else but politics.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am not so narrow-minded as my hon. friend, and consequently I never would advance such an idea. I do not pretend to say that a man could not be employed in other vocations of life and still have a full knowledge of horticulture and what is necessary to advance that industry ; but what I say is, that my remarks are based, not on any personal knowledge, but on the report which I have been reading, which states that this man knew nothing of his work, and that the whole thing was a failure through its being conducted on political rather than scientific and proper principles. I do not propose to be led away from the argument by defending a proposition I never thought of making. I do not suppose for a moment that the hon. gentleman has not a good knowledge of law because he has a farm and conducts it successfully. I think he can conduct both to the advantage of those who desire to use his talents and knowledge of law, particularly constitutional law, and still at the same time be able to conduct his farm so that it will be profitable to himself and advantageous to his neighbours who follow his example. I never laid down such a narrow principle.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I did not attribute it to the hon. gentleman, but that seems to be the doctrine in the pamphlet from which the hon. gentleman has been reading.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. gentleman is equally astray there.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I accept my hon. friend's explanation, but I have a great deal higher opinion of the people of Prince Edward Island than he seems to have. I believe they are as intelligent a class of people as can be found in Canada, and that the agriculturists of that island can produce as much per acre from the land they till, and as much fruit from a tree, as can be grown per acre in other portions of Canada with a similar climate. They are politicians I know, but I will not argue that question now. We are discussing another matter.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Does the hon. gentleman think it is a reasonable thing to suppose that a man would be recommended by fruit-growers from an apple district to carry on this investigation who was absolutely ignorant of everything relating to fruit-growing ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am prepared to believe the Minister of Militia would do almost anything if there were a political advantage to be gained by it, and from what has taken place in Prince Edward Island within the last two or three months, I am prepared to believe that any iniquity which can possibly be perpetrated may be expected from the Premier and the present government of that province. I think before we get through this session the hon. gentleman will not be so bold in telling my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island that he had better not refer to that Pinaud affair again. If there is a foul spot on the political escutcheon of this country more deplorable, when it is considered, or more iniquitous or infamous than another, it is that matter in connection with the Prince Edward Island government and those who had anything to do with Pinaud and his purchase. My hon. friend will find from documentary evidence, before he gets through with this session of parliament, that it is just as well for him not to throw down the gauntlet as boldly as he did to-day without first knowing the ground on which he stands. This is apart from what I intended to refer to in connection with this matter. I say it is to be regretted, apart from anything else, that the experiment in Prince Edward Island was not entrusted to Prof. Robertson. He was appointed by the government of which I was a member. He is a Scotchman and a Liberal. Why was he appointed? Because he had the best reputation for the position he holds of any man in Ontario. He was given a salary of $5,000—an unprecedented salary for such an official, and why did we give it? We did it because the men of the United States who knew Prof. Robertson's reputation and his value, not only as a horticulturist, but particularly his knowledge and experience in advancing the dairy interest, would be prepared to give him that sum, and more, in order to get him out of the country. We did not stop to ask whether Prof. Robertson was a Liberal or not. The Minister of Agriculture at that time determined, if possible, to secure him, to get his services at almost any price, and the government did secure him, and I do not think any one who knows the value he has been to the country, and more particularly to the dairy industry, will regret the apparently large salary which was paid to him. I am one of those who believe that men should be paid for their talents and the services which they render, and a few thousand dollars given to men of that character is of very small importance compared with the benefit that is derived from the exercise of such talent and ability in encouraging important home industries. It is just so with the fruit industry. I do not know whether this man Kinsman has any knowledge of it or not. Experience has taught the people of Prince Edward Island that he has not, and I accept their statement. If any other evidence were required, it is found in that little pamphlet from which I have quoted to show that the whole thing was a political manœuvre—that the man was taken possession of by the Premier of that province, and driven about the country, looking more after politics, I believe, than after the interests of the fruit-growers. It is a pity that it is so, and the sooner that system of government, no matter who may be in power, is wiped out of existence, the better for the country.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. leader of the House, in the address which he made a few moments ago, I will not say intentionally misrepresented—at all events entirely misconceived the scope of the remarks I made to the House. I am in the judgment of hon. gentlemen that I never intimated in the slightest degree, or insinuated in any way whatever, a complaint because a Conservative had not been put in charge of that movement in the province of Prince Edward Island. It is the last thing I would have thought of to make such a complaint, but what I did complain of was, that a special organization, possessing superior qualifications for assisting a movement of that kind, was ignored and insulted and especially after that organization had made the suggestion that this work should be undertaken, and offered to support it with its funds. In corroboration of what I now say, I might mention that at a meeting of the Fruit-Growers' Association, at which this resolution was passed, promising that this work should be undertaken, although I was in Ottawa, I was elected president of the association. When I received notice of that appointment, and when I further saw that this resolution had been passed, I feared that my appointment and the fact of my being president of the association, might throw some difficulty in the way of hearty co-operation between the Fruit-Growers' Association and the provincial government and federal government with regard to that matter. I have no doubt it would not throw difficulty in the way of a co-operation with Prof. Robertson, because my experience of him was that he took hold and worked with those most ready to work for the prosecution of all those things, utterly disregarding what party they belonged to. I saw the provincial Premier and said to him: 'I think I shall decline that appointment. I am going to be away in Ottawa and it will be, possibly, much easier for you to secure co-operation if Mr. Stewart, who has been nominated as vice-president, should be president.' Mr. Farquharson was good enough to say: 'It would cause no difficulty if you remain president,' but I was going to be absent during the session, and for the reasons I have mentioned I declined to be president, and Mr. Stewart became president? He voted for the Liberal candidate at the last election. He is a fair-minded man, a competent man. He was used very badly. He was invited, from Ottawa, to meet Mr. Kinsman on his arrival, who was to be at Charlottetown at a certain day. He lost his time and was at expense in going to that city. He spent a whole day in Charlottetown and was not able to find Mr. Kinsman. Mr. Farquharson had him away somewhere, and Mr. Stewart returned disappointed, and received no further communication with regard to the movement. I make no complaint that the matter was not put in charge of Conservatives, but I say if the Minister of Militia and the Minister of Agriculture had not interfered, Mr. Robertson would have been allowed a free hand, and he would have put the matter in the best hands in the province, just as he did when he inaugurated the dairy movement. What did he do then? He went to the Hamiltons of New Perth, the Lairds of New Glasgow, to Mr. Irving, of Vernon River, all Liberals, as well as to leading Conservatives, and he brought the leading men of both political parties together, and they put their shoulders to the wheel and there never was a jar—never a feeling or a hint or a sugestion, during all the time that work was being carried on, that there was any patronage in it, or that any member of the government or candidate of the government was allowed to make a suggestion for the employment of anybody in connection with the movement. If anything of the kind had been done there would have been trouble. In this instance, instead of following the experience in the dairy movement, Liberals were appointed, and the Fruit-Growers' Association was deliberately ignored in connection with the matter, and Liberal candidates and leaders in the organization of the Liberal party—those who are consulted in matters of political patronage generally, were put in charge of Mr. Kinsman. In one respect I have not been clearly understood. I did not make the statement before, but I make it now that I did not meet Mr. Kinsman. I was here when he was in the province, and until to-day I have not criticised his work, and I am not as inclined to severely criticise him so much as those who put him in a false position and led him into trouble. He came from Nova Scotia, and it was admitted that he did not possess qualifications for the work. I do not say that he might not be, to some extent, a fruit-grower himself, but he was unfit for carrying on those experiments. He had not the qualifications, and anybody who will go through the correspondence will find that Prof. Robertson was fully conscious of that fact at a little later period; but what I do say is, and I say it without hesitation, if Mr. Kinsman had been the best man that could be selected, the mode taken to handle and control him when he was in the province, and the ignoring and fooling of the president of the Fruit-Growers' Association, would have resulted disastrously to the movement. The notice was sent by Prof. Robertson in perfect good faith, but when he went to meet Mr. Kinsman he could not find him, and Mr. Stewart was ignored from that time forward. The Fruit-Growers' Association has nearly 80 members, and besides these others were present at the meeting, when this report which I have read was unanimously adopted. I might say, further, though it is not germane to the subject, that in the matter of refrigerating fish a man was sent to the island who discussed politics wherever he went, and got into repeated arguments on politics on the cars. However, that is foreign to the subject. I wish to remind the hon. Minister of Justice to-day that he referred to a past debate and something which took place in this House when questions were asked in regard to the Paris Exposition. I have a notice with regard to that subject, which will come up in a few days, and the hon. gentleman having referred to what took place on that day, I hope, should I refer to that matter when it comes up again, he will not raise the objection that I am refering to a past debate.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (94) 'An Act respecting the Schomberg and Aurora Railway Company.'—(Hon. Mr. Lougheed).

Bill (118) 'An Act respecting the Temagaming Railway Company.'—(Hon. Mr. Kerr).

DELAYED RETURNS.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would ask my hon. friend the Secretary of State whether the return brought down yesterday contains all the petitions and memorials regarding the railways in Prince Edward Island?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—All that I could find.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It is a supplementary return, but it does not say there may not be another supplementary return.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I gave instructions at the Privy Council office, where I found two or three. There were none in mine. There was another department, but it would be only limited to the Secretary of State, the Privy Council and the Department of Railways.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That ought to cover them.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If the hon. gentleman knows of any others, and gives me a memo. I shall be very glad to make inquiries.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think there were other petitions which may have been sent to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries for transmission to the proper office.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I had only knowledge of those sent this year. Those sent this year came to me. There were four or five, and I think I traced them all out.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. member's department was the right place to send them, but in this case I think they sent them through their representative, the member for West Queen's.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I should not suppose they would send a petition in that way. I will make special inquiry.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. gentleman will see, if he does not find that petition the inference will be that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries did not present it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—What locality was it from?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—From Emerald to Stanley in West Queen's, Prince Edward Island.

THE PACIFIC CABLE.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I wish to direct attention to a cable paragraph that appeared in the London Times lately in reference to the Pacific cable. The hon. gentleman is not prepared to answer the question now, I suppose, and I merely call his attention to it in order that we may be informed of what is being done.

The Pacific Cable Scheme.

(Through Reuter's Agency.)

Sydney, June 6.

Replying to a telegram from Mr. Chamberlain, Mr. Lyne, the Colonial Secretary, has telegraphed that the government of New South Wales agreed to the recommendations of the Pacific Cable Committee, and urged that the work should be pushed on as expeditiously as possible.

If the hon. gentleman has any information he can give the House we should like to have it. Or, if he desires that this should stand as a notice of motion for to-morrow, I shall let it go until then. This is a matter we can all agree on.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The only paper I know of is a letter addressed by Sir Sanford Fleming to myself, which contains extracts from a number of letters he received from the Australian colonies. I do not think there has been any direct communication from the commission. However, I shall make inquiry and bring down, at all events, Mr. Fleming's letter.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It can be added to the information contained in the other document, so that it will be easily referred to.

THE MINISTERIAL CRISIS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to know if the hon gentleman can take the House into his confidence with reference to a paragraph in the Free Press to-day. Those who have read the papers will see that in Vancouver the present opposition (that is to the late Martin government), met and passed a resolution asking for the recall of the lieutenant-governor, and I see in very large and prominent letters in to-night's government organ the following:

McInnes Asked to Resign.

It is understood on good authority that the federal government has asked Lieut.-Governor

McInnes, of British Columbia, to resign. If he does not do so, then it will be necessary to dismiss him.

This is a very significant statement to come from a paper that is supposed to speak the sentiments of the government. There is also quite a long article on the same subject, giving the same information, in the Evening Journal. However, I shall not attach so much importance to that, because the Journal does not occupy to the government, as I understand it, the same position the Free Press does.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—Pretty nearly.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Not quite. All I can say is, speaking from some little knowledge of public opinion in the country, if the government has taken the responsibility of asking that gentleman to resign, and he does not comply with the request and they dismiss him, it will meet with the approval of men of every shade of politics.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am not in a position to make any statement with regard to that matter at the present time.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I did not suppose the hon. gentleman was.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (170) 'An Act to amend the Act respecting the Merchants' Bank of Halifax, and to change its name to the Royal Bank of Canada.'—(Hon. Mr. Clemow in the absence of hon. Mr. Power.)

Bill (81) 'An Act to incorporate the Accident and Guarantee Company of Canada.'—(Hon. Mr. Wood.)

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (110) 'An Act to amend the Weights and Measures Act.'

(In the Committee.)

On clause 1,

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I notice a provision which was in the Weights and Measures Act, as it appears in the revised statutes, and which was also contained in the Bill of last year, is omitted in this clause. I desire to call attention to it and to know whether there is any good reason for omitting it. In section 18, of the Weights and Measures Act, and also in the Act of last year, there is a provision that the barrels shall be fastened with lining. Having a little experience in apples, I know the great importance of the barrels being thoroughly hooped and well nailed, and having these lining hoops put in, and I think it was rather a useful provision in the statute.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My impression is that it was felt that the provision was unnecessary. The parties who were shipping the apples would have a sufficient interest in properly transporting them.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—They ought to have.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The only change that occurred to me as necessary to make would be a change in the 14th line, I think the words 'or three bushels' at the end of the clause, should come out. It is surplusage.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think the fruit-growers are very anxious to have these words left in.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It did not strike me as being a matter of importance, but my hon. friend pointed out yesterday, with regard to potatoes, that we had fixed the weight of a bushel of potatoes at sixty pounds, which I think is proper, and in these words the ninety-six quarts represent three bushels even measure.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Possibly the hon. gentleman is right, and I think it is very likely, from what I now recollect, that the farmers and fruit-growers object in getting the three bushels in was more with regard to potatoes than apples, but if we do not retain it in the clause with regard to potatoes, there is no object in keeping it in with regard to the apples.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—What article is sold at ninety-six quarts or three bushels?

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—Everything.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—No.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—There is not an article.

The clause was adopted as amended.

On subsection 2,

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—We discussed this clause yesterday and the views of hon. gentlemen were elicited so that I do not suppose we can induce any change now. The barrel described in the first subsection is an ideal barrel, I think, for apples. Its description, as given in the clause, involves, as will be observed, a very slight bilge, and it is proved by experience that when apples are shipped in a barrel having a very large bilge and placed in tiers above each other, that the pressure comes on the centre of the barrel and depresses the staves, and when they are brought out and rolled the apples loosen. The ideal barrel is one with very little bilge so that the ends of the barrel will sustain the weight. I regret that we are not securing a uniform barrel, because I know from experience the convenience of being able to go and get say a flour barrel, to ship apples in is not worth considering. I know the cost of twenty-five cents in the price of a barrel is a mere nothing when we consider the result. If we get the right barrel which is recognized in the market and known as the kind of barrel that has contained good fruit for years and years, even if you had to pay almost a dollar a barrel it would pay you in order to get the package that the market really requires. I have had experience in that line which justifies me in making that statement. I think it is a pity that we cannot arrive at a uniform barrel. The barrel desired in the Bill is the Minneapolis flour barrel. This is, I believe, a Minneapolis flour barrel in point of capacity, and I have been puzzling my head a great deal to find out what is the reason that the Minneapolis flour barrel, is not as large as the Ontario flour barrel, and I found great difficulty in getting an answer to the question. I have been trying to work it out in this way, that the wheat that is ground in Minneapolis is all hard wheat, and the flour being dryer, can be packed closer than when the flour is of a softer character. This is uniform in the United States and we are now legalizing the barrel and describing it in the Bill, and I have no doubt the step we are taking will lead to legislation in future to get uniformity. I know it is a step in advance, as far as it goes, and I hope it will be possible a little later, to get a uniform barrel for Ontario.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—We could do that by adopting the Canadian flour barrel.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I should have said uniform for Canada and the United States. We would be getting further away from it by adopting the Ontario flour barrel.

The subsection was adopted.

On subsection 3,

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—I think it is a mistake to have this subsection in the Bill.

Hon. Mr. BURPEE—I think the weight given in this subsection for a barrel of potatoes is a little high. All that can be got into one of these barrels is about two bushels and a half, which is 150 pounds. I think that this subsection might be left out altogether. In Ontario and Quebec they sell potatoes by the bag. I do not think it is necessary to say how many pounds of potatoes a barrel should contain. It is useless to try and put 174 pounds of potatoes in a barrel which will only hold 150 pounds.

Hon Mr. MILLS—I have not the information from the Inland Revenue Department which led them to put this provision in the Bill. I do not know whether this means fifty-eight pounds to the bushel, taking three bushels in a barrel, but certainly it means 174 pounds of potatoes to a barrel. They might not be put into a barrel in this country, but it may be intended that when people speak of selling potatoes by the barrel, although they may not be put in a barrel at all, they mean that 174 pounds shall constitute a barrel and so, even though they are put in bags and boxes or anything else, there will be no objection to their being measured in that way.

Hon. Mr. BURPEE—By this clause we give the size of a barrel and how much it shall contain. I think it is a mistake to insert this subsection in the Bill. Unless we pass a special Act for a certain sized barrel for potatoes—which would be very inconvenient—the clause would not be workable. I think we should drop the subsection altogether.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P. E. I.)—I quite agree with the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, and I urge that this subsection be struck out of the Bill. We have a standard fixed for the sale of potatoes, they are to be sold by weight, sixty pounds to the bushel. We have also a certain tub, as it is usually called, for the purpose of selling them when they are sold by measure, which is calculated to contain two bushels. It is called two bushels and the weight is not fixed at any particular number of pounds, but where potatoes are shipped in large quantities, taken on board vessels in large quantities, they are sold by the tub, in Prince Edward Island, and in Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick. They are not usually packed in barrels for those markets. When potatoes are shipped to markets in the West Indies they are packed either in barrels or bags, and according to the market to which those potatoes are directed, the barrels or bags vary in size. Those that suit one market will not suit another, but I think it will be very objectionable now to make a mixed standard of this kind. The law is quite sufficient as it stands by naming the standard weight of a bushel of potatoes to be sixty pounds, and it will only lead to confusion if we insert this provision. Besides that, as the hon. gentleman from New Brunswick remarked, it is impossible in my opinion to put that quantity of potatoes into a barrel of the dimensions that are here given, although I do not altogether agree with him as to the quantity which can be put in, because I think you can put 160 or 164 pounds into a good sized barrel of potatoes, but I doubt very much whether it would be possible in any ordinary barrel, or barrel of the dimensions mentioned here, to put the quantity that is named here of good, sound well matured potatoes.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—If the barrel only contained 150 pounds, although the standard was 174, would the purchaser pay for only 150 pounds ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Certainly.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—There would be no hardship in that. The standard is made 174 pounds, and if the purchaser only gets 150 pounds that is all he pays for.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—If a man is selling potatoes to a country where they buy them by the barrel, this Bill has been made to conform to what was regarded as a barrel in the country where they are so bought, and it is stated that a barrel contains 174 pounds. I cannot see what possible objection there can be to this subsection. Supposing we fix it at 500 pounds, if that was the size in one of the West India Islands where it was sold, no harm could be done. In most cases potatoes are sold by the bushel, but if they are sold by the barrel the quantity must be as provided in this Bill. They may grow a great many potatoes in Prince Edward Island, but there are other places where they are grown and the Bill is intended to provide for the country generally. I applied to-day for information, but could get none that I could use with regard to this particular section. My hon. friend will see that this can do no possible harm.

Hon. Mr. BURPEE—Oh, yes, it can.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is 174 pounds to the barrel. If there is no objection to its going through, it may go through now and I will endeavour to get from the Department of Inland Revenue the information upon which they proceeded, before the third reading, because these measures are not prepared and submitted to parliament without special application being made for them.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I wish to make an explanation on the point we have now before us. When we were discussing the matter yesterday, it escaped my notice. There is a consideration in connection with this subject that we did not take into account, and it is the fact that potatoes shipped by the barrel are pressed. Potatoes when sold by the bushel measure must not even be shaken, but when they are shipped by the barrel they are shaken into the barrel and then the press is applied in order to put them firmly into the barrel. I looked over the correspondence I have had with people in Nova Scotia. The potatoes from Nova Scotia are shipped to the West Indies and are put in barrels. The barrels are furnished by the shipper, and the farmer I think, in the majority of instances, puts the potatoes into the barrel. At all events they are put in and shaken down and a press applied. We are now legalizing a barrel which is their ideal barrel for apples. They want the same barrel for potatoes. They have found perhaps that 174 pounds is the correct weight when they are pressed, and it will probably exactly meet the requirements of the trade.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—I think it would be a great mistake to pass this subsection. I know from dealing in potatoes with farmers, that there is nothing they are more sensitive about than the potato measure. The buyer wants to get as big a measure as he can, and the farmers do not want to give any more than what is right and fair, and there has been continual friction in reference to the size of the barrel or tub and the weight that the parties have been exacting from them, and I think the more changes we make in reference to the weights and measures the more trouble we are bringing upon the country. We have the measure pretty well established. Everybody understands it; a bushel of potatoes is sixty pounds. There is no objection to that. Then in reference to the barrel, if you were selling by the tub, as the hon. gentleman from Charlottetown spoke about, I think two and a half bushels is fixed as a tub; 150 pounds is supposed to be a tub.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—That is a barrel too ?

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—No, it is not a barrel. I can see no necessity for this 174 pounds being inserted in the Bill. If you are going to establish a uniform size barrel for potatoes, that is all right. Then if you do that you have to fill that barrel, and as my hon. friend from Queen's County said, it must be pressed down to make it safe for shipping, the same as apples. It is well known that in apples there is no uniformity in reference to their weight per bushel. An early apple will be very much lighter than a late apple,and so it is with potatoes. The Early Rose potato is very much lighter than the Chenango or the Calligos and you must establish weight and measure in reference to this matter, but when you establish the barrel for potatoes a uniform size, it must be filled. If 174 pounds will not fill it, you must put in more. If you put in 175 pounds and the barrel is not full, you are going to lose because they will spoil before you get to market. I think there is no necessity for the insertion of clause 3. We have a standard of sixty pounds to the bushel and if you establish a uniform size of barrel, that is quite sufficient.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—Why not adopt the suggestion that the clause should stand and the hon. Minister of Justice will ascertain from the Department of Inland Revenue what the idea was.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—I think I know more about it than the Minister of Inland Revenue.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 2,

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—I think the government is making a little too much law in reference to the standard of eggs. This is a very good arrangement where parties go to a grocery in the city to buy eggs and they buy the eggs they require, but the great business is with the country people and they sell their eggs to the merchants and business men in the country and you are going to introduce a great deal of disturbance and annoyance between the buyer and the seller. Here is a farmer who has a very fine breed of hens, and they produce very large eggs. Perhaps ten will make a pound and a half or nearly so, within the fraction of an ounce and the buyer says, I must have another egg. He will then have too much weight. There has been no trouble about buying eggs. A man goes in to buy a dozen eggs for his breakfast. He sees what he is buying, and if the eggs are small, let him pay a lower price. I think it will cause friction and trouble.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Does not this clause refer to export. There has been a good deal of discussion in England as to small eggs, I understand. If it is simply for export, it would meet the whole difficulty.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No, it would not. It is not for export. In the market in London, Ont., the universal feeling is in favour of allowing a purchaser to buy by weight. It is absurd to suppose that a party should receive as much for a dozen small eggs as he would receive for large ones, and when one pound and a half is declared to be the standard for a dozen, then what you are getting may be tested at once. It is a very necessary provision, and the feeling is entirely in favour of it, and my hon. friend is mistaken in saying that there are no eggs outside of Prince Edward Island.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Supposing a man comes in with a smaller size of egg, what does he do ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—He can sell them by weight or by number.

On section 4,

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I)—I think this clause is very objectionable. I need not repeat the remarks I made yesterday. Anybody who knows anything about salt, knows that the weight of it varies according to the temperature of the air. We know that even in importing salt from the old country, where it is loaded into ships in bulk, and they take in a certain number of tons, allowance is made for the loss of weight when it is delivered on this side of the Atlantic. It would be entirely improper to say that parties should be required to mark on every package of salt which is put up here or imported from the old country, the weight of the contents. It would be imposible, because it might be up to the weight marked on it if weighed to-day, and a few days afterwards it might be found short weight. It is a clause which should not be inserted in the Bill—that is, so far as salt imported into the Dominion is concerned. If it is to remain in the Bill, I would suggest that it be amended to make it applicable only to salt manufactured in the Dominion itself.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—I think the objection to this clause has some considerable weight. It would be very difficult in buying salt in Europe as it is generally bought, to comply with this Act. The exporters from whom you buy salt put it up in bags to suit the requirements of the purchaser. There is an allowance made by the shipper—who ships a few tons over—but when you come to pay freight on this side it is assumed the salt will not turn out the quantity put on board the ship, and it is customary to pay the freight five per cent short to allow for waste. Whether that has been caused by the sea air or otherwise, it is supposed to lose five per cent in weight in transit between Europe and this country. If you had the salt weighed and the bags marked on the other side, it would not be legible here. Many of those bags get torn, and in the ordinary mode of handling there is a certain loss. Then the rate of discharge on this side is another very serious objection. At the present time it comes out by steamer. The steamer insists on unloading two or three hundred tons a day, that would be about three thousand bags, and we have not the means to mark and store the salt here so rapidly. In Halifax they make a storehouse of the ship when it comes in sailing vessels and pay freight accordingly, having forty or fifty days to discharge cargo. Schooners come alongside from different parts of the coast, and take the salt from the ships. It would be a serious matter for them if they had to weigh and mark all these bags. I am satisfied it will not do to mark the bags at the port of shipment, and assume that they will be the same weight when delivered here. The merchants engaged in the business would be so harrassed that they would have to give it up. You mark a salt bag after it arrives here, put the weight, the name of the importer and his address on it: that means some considerable work. The paint used for marking is generally mixed with kerosene oil, and that would injure a considerable portion, perhaps the whole of each bag of salt. Taking the whole clause, without more investigation than we can give it now, and without information from those enjoyed in the business might be very objectionable. I have been engaged in it for some years, and my opinion is that the law cannot be carried out without serious inconvenience to the importer and the seller on this side. At the same time, I see a difficulty with the consumer when he buys a bag of salt, or a dozen of eggs, or a bushel of potatoes. He wants to know what he is getting. It is the only fair way to sell—by weight. In European countries they have adopted that system. In France, for instance, you cannot buy an apple without purchasing by weight. They dare not hand you an apple for two cents or one cent. They have to weigh the article and you pay for it accordingly. The small consumer should be protected, but how it is to be carried out I cannot say without further consideration.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—The whole argument falls to the ground, because we are not dealing with bags. I can understand how a bag of salt would lose weight by exposure, but it is packed in barrels.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL—I have been speaking of bags only.

Hon. Mr. McKAY from the committee, reported that they had made some progress with the Bill.

DELAYED RETURNS.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I should like to call the attention of the hon. Secretary of State to an address which was voted on the 26th of April. It was as follows:

That a humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, praying His Excellency to cause to be laid before this House a copy of all letters and correspondence exchanged between the government or any of its members and the interested parties, on the subject of the Baie des Chaleurs Railway, of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway and of the projected railway known under the name of the Short Line Railway of Gaspé, as well as a copy of all requests, petitions, resolutions or other documents relating to either of these lines.

The address was adopted, and I should like if the Secretary of State would be kind enough to tell me if we shall have that correspondence soon? I called the attenion of the Secretary of State some days ago to the subject, but perhaps he has forgotten the matter.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I have not forgotten. The papers are in the Department of Railways and Canals, and I have been promised repeatedly that they would be sent. I inquired again, and they had not been able to get the whole of them. I shall make further inquiries.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I would also call attention to a part of the answer the hon. gentleman gave me on the 15th of May relating to a paper on the Manitoba school question. It is reported in the Debates as follows:

Hon. Mr. SCOTT.—There was a document sent to the Governor General, and there were some documents or papers or letters sent to Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Those I have found. There were none sent officially to the Secretary of State or to the Governor in Council. I am having those copied and will bring them down in a day or two.

I see there were two kinds of documents—one sent to the Governor General, and others sent to Sir Wilfrid Laurier. The hon. gentleman told us the one that was sent to the Governor in Council had been declared a confidential one. I should like to know if the others are of the same character, or if we may expect to have them laid on the Table of this House.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will have the papers looked up, and will inform my hon. friend to-morrow. I do not know how far the paper sent to Sir Wilfrid Laurier is confidential. The previous ones were confidential. He told me that the person who sent it had asked that it be not made public.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I asked for a return early last session with reference to the school lands sold in Manitoba and the prices obtained for them. The hon. gentleman will remember that a partial return was brought down, and very voluminous correspondence, and I intimated to him if they would complete the return showing the amount of land sold and the amounts received, the return would answer my purpose.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Perhaps the hon. gentleman will make a note of the particular information he wants, and I will see about it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is just to complete the return.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I was told yesterday that every Order of this House had been complied with except the one the hon. gentleman from Stadacona referred to just now. If the hon. gentleman would drop me a note, stating what he wants to supplement the return, I will attend to it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not want any of the correspondence: I simply want the figures so as to show the total amount, so that, in case we have to deal with that question, we may be able to do so intelligently.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Thursday, June 21, 1900.

The Speaker took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

A POINT OF ORDER.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY moved:

That the Minutes of Proceedings of the Senate for June 18, 1900, be corrected by inserting therein, in its proper place, the following entry:

'The Hon. Mr. LANDRY moved that an entry be made in the Minutes of Proceedings of the Senate of the decision of the Speaker upon the point of order raised by the Hon. Mr. Mills, which is to be found in the following extract of the Senate Debates of June 14, 1900:

'Hon. Mr. MILLS.—I might call attention to the fact, Mr. Speaker, that the question appeared on the paper the other day and was answered, and it is not regular that it should be placed on the orders again.

'The SPEAKER.—When I saw that notice on the paper, I inquired of the Clerk why it had been placed on the paper the second time, and was informed that some one had given instructions to one of the clerks to put it on the Orders of the Day without his knowledge. I thought that this inquiry had been answered, so that it is irregular to place it on the Orders of the Day again.

'Hon. Mr. LANDRY.—I suppose I can give it as a notice of motion?

'The SPEAKER.—I do not think that the hon. gentleman can place on the Order paper again a question which has been answered by the minister.

'Hon. Mr. LANDRY.—That might be so if the question had been answered; but supposing the question has not been answered?

'The SPEAKER.—I may say to the hon. gentleman that I think it is for the minister to say whether he has answered the question. If he says he has no further answer to make, that is an end to the matter.'

The question of concurrence having been put upon the said motion, it was, upon division, resolved in the negative.

Hon Mr. MILLS—I think that the motion—

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I ask that the Speaker read the question before the hon. member makes his speech.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The Speaker cannot do that because the motion is out of order.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. member cannot say it is out of order before it is put by the Chair.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, I can.

The Speaker then put the motion to the House.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I wish to call the attention of the House to the history of this motion. The hon. gentleman first proposed, on June 12, in this House that he would inquire about certain things, and the questions embraced in that inquiry are precisely those that are now before us. Then on June 14, the hon. gentleman brought up his motion. When that question was put on June 14, I called the attention of the Speaker and the House to the fact that the same question had been answered two days previously. On the same day the hon. member from Stadacona handed in a notice precisely the same as that which he is now proposing, and on June 15, that motion was reached. The ruling of the Speaker when that motion was reached was the same as the ruling upon a similar motion in 1898. That motion was not put. It was brought forward and the hon. gentleman himself cried lost, and so the motion of the hon. gentleman was dropped. Now the hon. gentleman brings forward the same motion again and adds these words:

The question of concurrence having been put upon the said motion, it was, upon division, resolved in the negative.

The motion was not put. It was dropped, and it was so entered in the minutes of proceedings, and properly entered because the hon. gentleman himself cried lost before the Speaker had an opportunity of putting the question. The hon. gentlemen repeats his motion and adds these words:

The question of concurrence having been put upon the said motion— —

It was not put.

—it was upon division resolved in the negative.

It was not resolved in the negative. The hon. gentleman cried 'lost' or 'dropped' before the motion could be put and so it was not put from the Chair.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Did the hon. gentleman not say 'lost on division.'

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No, I think not. It was not put by the Chair.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Lost on division is my recollection.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My recollection is that he said 'lost' and then said 'dropped.'

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I never said that, but I will answer it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—And that being so, I do not think the hon. gentleman has any right whatever to bring up the same matter again. The hon. gentleman has not accepted the general statement that I made in reply to his question. He has not only refused to accept the statement I made, but he refused also to accept the statement of my hon. colleague, and said that one or other of us had stated what was not true. The hon. gentleman's language towards myself and my colleague is language which is wholly unbefitting this House.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is not a question to-day whether the hon. minister has answered once, and if I have renewed my inquiry twice, or three times. The motion which I have placed on the Order paper concerns the entry in our minutes of a ruling given by the Chair. I made a motion to have that ruling put in the minutes of this House. Either my first motion made the day before yesterday to have that ruling placed in the minutes of this House was put by the Chair or it was not. If it was put by the Chair, it should be entered in the minutes. If it was not put by the Chair I am not out of order in bringing up the question again, because if it was not put, how could the hon. gentleman say that I am putting before the House a question which has already been settled. He must accept one of the two conclusions; either it was put or it was not put. He says it was not. I agree with him to a certain point, and it is for that reason that I am taking to-day the means that that ruling of the Chair be put in the minutes of the journals of this House in having my motion regularly put before this House by the Speaker. Referring to that part of the motion which says that the question of concurrence having been put, it was resolved in the negative. I will remark that that might be a reason for this House to pronounce against my motion, but it is not a reason for declaring my motion out of order.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Why should it be out of order ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend cannot make an inaccurate statement of facts in a motion, and that is what he has done here.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That has been done every day by the government, and they would be always out of order. I think they are not in order when they are keeping their places. It would be a reason for this House to vote against my motion if I insisted to maintain it, is what may be believed an objectionable form, but there is a remedy for that. Supposing this to be the case, and that it would be very shocking for the hon. minister, May points out the proper remedy, which I will quote. What does May say ? He says :

A modification of a notice of motion standing upon the Notice paper is permitted if the amended notice does not exceed the scope of the original notice

Well, to comply with the wishes of the hon. member, I am willing to drop the last phrase of the motion I gave, so that he will not be shocked by the language of the motion. That quotation from May will be found in the tenth edition, page 232. At all events, I propose this motion, and I ask that this entry be made in the minutes of this House.

Hon. Mr. POWER—If at the meeting of the House, when this matter came up, the hon. member had allowed His Honour the Speaker to put the question, I think the resolution should have gone on the minutes of the Senate, because our minutes are supposed to contain a correct report of all the motions duly moved and submitted to the House. The hon. gentleman did not do that. He said 'lost on division,' without waiting for His Honour the Speaker to put the question, and consequently, I think the hon. gentleman is not entitled to have his motion placed on the minutes of that day. The hon. gentleman comes again and asks practically to have the same matter placed on our minutes, and he winds up his resolution with this statement :

That the question of concurrence having been put upon the said motion, it was, upon division, resolved in the negative.

I think the concluding paragraph precludes the House from adopting the resolution, because, as a matter of fact, the question of concurrence was not put upon it, and it was not resolved in the negative upon division, and this House would stultify itself by passing the resolution in its present state. Whether the hon. gentleman can put himself right by giving another notice and omitting that statement, which is not in accordance with the facts, is another matter, but it is quite clear that we would stultify ourselves to-day by resolving that something had been done which had not been done.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman forgets that I stated that I was willing to have that last portion struck out.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes, but I think a resolution cannot be amended by the mover, without notice, except by the unanimous consent of the House.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—The objections taken by the last speaker are not very forcible, and will not bear the comparison we may make with those decisions which have been given in this House on several occasions. We know that when the report of the Committee on Divorce is brought in, an hon. member opposed to the system of divorce says: 'Lost on division,' and it is recorded in that way in the minutes.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is after the question has been put by the Chair.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—The question is never put to the House, and there was no division taken, although it was accepted by the House as a matter of course, and this question put by my hon. friend presumes the same thing. He knows the resolution would be lost, and he was perfectly satisfied to take the decision in that way without the formality of taking a vote of the House, and I think the objections raised against that part of the motion are not well taken. As far as the principle of the matter is concerned, I think it makes very little difference to this House or the country whether the motion should be placed upon the minutes or not, as far as the merits are concerned, but so far as the records of this House are concerned it is important that the records should be an exact representation of what really took place, because if we allow the clerks and officials of this House to change or correct or alter the minutes as they really ought to appear, we do not know where the end would be.

Hon Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I must take exception to the concluding remarks made by the senior member from Halifax, that a motion before the House cannot be amended without notice. That is constantly done in both branches of parliament.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Not by the mover.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am not going to quarrel about that point. The doctrine laid down by the senior member from Halifax was that he did not think under the rules that you could amend a motion which has been put from the Chair. That is constantly done in both Houses of parliament, and as there is a dispute as to what actually took place on that occasion, it would be well that nothing should be placed on the minutes which would apparently contradict that which had been done before. I am strongly of the opinion that any ruling given by the Speaker, particularly on a point of order, should be recorded on the minutes, in order that it may be an instruction to those who hereafter may follow the same course that was pursued by a senator who was ruled out of order or ruled in order, and in order that that may be done, I move that the last two lines of the motion made by the hon. member from Stadacona be struck out. Then there can be no objection to it. I do not suppose for a moment that the record of the ruling of the Speaker is incorrect. If it be, then the Speaker should be permitted to correct the ruling in the way he remembers having made it. There should not be upon the records a ruling that was not strictly correct. If this ruling is strictly correct, I think it should be upon the minutes. In order that there may be no dispute as to the matter of fact contained in the last clause, I move that the last two lines be struck out of the motion.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Supposing these two lines are struck out, I submit to the House that this motion is not in order. It consists of extracts from a debate that occurred here a few days ago. If you can take extracts from a debate and form a resolution from it, such subject may be made again the subject of debate. You might summarize all the leading points in a former debate in a motion of this kind, and so make the subject of yesterday's debate the debate of tomorrow. I submit that that cannot be done, and to undertake to make a motion consisting of extracts from a debate that occurred a few days earlier in the same session, is altogether out of order, and that the amendment moved by my hon. friend opposite would not cure the inherent defects in this motion.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Do I understand the hon. Minister of Justice to say that the ruling of the Speaker shall not be placed on record on any occasion?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No. I am saying that this motion is out of order.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman has given no reason why it is out of order. If these were extracts taken from a newspaper that was not responsible to this Senate for the report, I could understand the reason of it, because it might be inferred that the reporter or the newspaper had not made a correct report. We have an official reporter whom we pay for recording the debates of the House, and this is copied from the official record of parliament, and if I quote, as we very often do, from the official report, the utterance of any member, it is taken for granted that that is correct, as every proof sheet is submitted to each member. The inference is that if it were not reported correctly, he has so changed it as to make it right. The point that I take is this, that every ruling of the Speaker no matter on what question it may be, ought to be on the records, and as this ruling is not on the records, this is the means taken by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona to have it put on record for future reference and guidance. If that is not correct—if there is any doubt upon that point—I would suggest to the hon. gentleman who has moved the resolution to let the matter stand until the Speaker could revise the official report, if he has not done so already, and make such corrections as he thinks proper.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is not the point at all.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is a point I am suggesting. If this cannot go in the Minutes, we have no record of our proceedings.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My point is this: You cannot make the subject of a former debate the subject of a debate in the same session. It is not whether it is a correct or an incorrect record. I say no matter how correct a report is, you are precluded from making observations from a former debate in the same session the subject of debate at some subsequent sitting. The hon. gentleman takes a series of extracts from a debate which occurred in this House, and proposes that as a resolution which may be made the subject of debate. I say that cannot be done.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The point is well taken provided it were correct. We are not discussing the question which was discussed the other day, as to whether the ruling of the Speaker is correct or not. We are discussing the propriety or impropriety of putting the ruling of the Speaker on record. Hence the point of order, to my mind, has no force at all.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I would ask the Speaker if he would be kind enough to put the amendment of the hon. leader of the opposition.

Hon. Mr. GOWAN—It seems to me that this involves a good deal more than correcting the minutes of proceedings referred to. It is establishing a very serious and unfortunate precedent. The right of asking questions of ministers of the Crown, is now a well established practice in both Houses of parliament in England as it is in the parliament of Canada. But the right to ask questions has been strictly limited, and, to use the words of approved writers on the subject, questions must be severely accurate in their allegations of facts. They must not be argumentative or hypothetical. They must not be couched in improper language, or reflect improperly upon a minister or any member of the House. It seems to me that this question involves to a large extent, approbation of the questions that were put and replied to, as alleged by the leader of the House, and ruled out of order by the Speaker when repeated. The questions put originally by the member for Stadacona violate and fall short of the requirements of questions, and were not proper subjects to be answered by the minister, and were framed in a way that was calculated to embarrass; and by affirming the motion now before the House we, in a measure, it seems to me, impliedly approve the form in which the questions were asked. I think the House must be quite tired of this mode of sniping and potting at the ministers and Speaker of the House. I think it not only a waste of time, but injurious to the country as well. My opinion is, that deciding the question, even the first proposition put forward by the leader of the opposition might be understood as affirming or approving the terms in which the question was couched.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL. No.

Hon. Mr. GOWAN—It is perfectly right that the government of the day should be subject to interrogation of a proper character, and there are those, perhaps, not a few, would wish to see, metaphorically speaking, the government blown 'sky-high,' but there is a legitimate and regular way of doing things, without sniping behind the usages and privileges of parliament. I shall decidedly vote against affirming the proposition.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL. I rise to set my hon. friend right. I made no such proposition. I agree, to a very great extent, with the remarks made by the hon. gentleman. My position is simply this—not to affirm the correctness of, not to declare the motions and questions which were put by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona, correct. My position is, that the ruling of the Speaker ought to be put on record, and with this ruling of the Speaker I fully concur, because, if the hon. gentleman from Stadacona took the view as the Speaker did, that it was the same motion as the previous one, already decided, he had no right to put it on the paper at all. All I ask is that the ruling of the Speaker declaring that the hon. gentleman was out of order, should be put on record, not that I am affirming the inquiry and motion made by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona. It is evident I was not understood by my hon. friend or he would not have attributed such motives to me.

Hon. Mr. GOWAN—I heard what the hon. gentleman said, but what he said will not appear on the minutes, and when the minutes are read it might appear that he approved of the course taken by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona. People would say here is an implied recognition that the questions put by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona were correct and within the practice of parliament. I maintain that they were not and are not proper questions such as a minister of the Crown could with self-respect undertake to answer.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is nothing at all in this motion that can lead one who ever saw the motion to the conclusion at which the hon. gentleman has arrived. All it says is that on a certain occasion the hon. gentleman from Stadacona made a motion. The Speaker ruled it out of order, and now the hon. gentleman asks that the ruling of the Speaker shall be put on record. If it were an affirmation of the substance of the question asked of the government, then I would not take that position. It is nothing of the kind.

Hon. Mr. GOWAN.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—Is there before the House any other question than this ? There is a motion made by the hon. Mr. Landry and an amendment made by Sir Mackenzie Bowell. Is there anything else before the House but these ?

The SPEAKER—Yes, a question of order.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—There has been no motion that this is out of order ?

Mr. SPEAKER—No motion is required to ask the Speaker to decide a question of order.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not undertake to say anything as to whether or not a resolution moved and seconded and put to the House is a subject, the Speaker's decision upon which should appear in the Minutes. I only wish to guard the House against the view taken by the leader of the opposition, that is if that view is to be taken in its widest sense. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that if a question—he did not say resolution—were ruled out of order, then that question should appear on the Minutes.

Hon Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, I say nothing of the kind.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I simply wanted to guard against that.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I should like to know what was the point of order that was taken.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD (C.B.)—There is none.

The SPEAKER—I hope the Senate will see that it is very necessary to come to an understanding about the debates and proceedings of the Senate. If I have anything to do with maintaining the usages and the proper manner in which the debates of the Senate are to be conducted, I hope to be allowed to make some suggestions. As to the ruling I made the other day, I have not the least objection personally that it should be recorded anywhere, because I am still of opinion that my ruling was right. It was based on precedent and the rules of the House. But I would remind the House that two years ago, on the 26th of May, 1898, the hon. mover of this present motion, made exactly the same request and the same motion to the House. Then I took particular care, because I wanted to guard the usages of the House, and made strict inquiry about the right of the hon. gentleman to move as he did. His motion was this:

That he will move that an entry be made in the Journals of the Senate of any ruling of the Chair on questions of order, and that the following special ruling given on Monday, the 8th instant, be put upon record, so as it may read as follows, immediately after the word 'debated' in the 44th line of page 386:

And a question of order being raised, the hon. the Speaker ruled:

The SPEAKER.—When a minister is asked a question and when he declares to the House that he has answered it and professes to have answered it, I know of no rule by which the Speaker could coerce a minister to answer any more questions, and I believe that all other questions which follow that are entirely out of order.

I took the precaution, besides the precedents I cited, to have the advice of an authority well recognized by the House, Bourinot, and here is what Bourinot said:

Before considering the suggestion of entering all decisions of Mr. Speaker in the Journals, I may say that the ruling of the Speaker, as cited, is entirely in accordance with rulings in analogous cases in the English House of Commons. For instance, Mr. Speaker Brandt decided (see Blackmore's 'Speakers' Decisions,' pp. 272, 280), that 'an answer cannot be forced from a member;' that 'an hon. member can put a question, but he has no right to insist upon an answer;' that 'a minister is entitled to decline on public grounds;' that 'when an hon. member has put a question and received such an answer as a minister, acting on his responsibility, thinks proper to give, he cannot renew the question.'

In the Lords, when a series of questions have been deemed objectionable, a noble lord has formally moved that 'the question be not put,' and the motion has been carried; and, as in the case of all such matters, the words of the question do not appear in the Lords' Journals. Neither do the questions or Mr. Brandt's decisions thereon, as given above, appear in the Commons Journals, but only in the 'Hansard' Debates.

The reason why such entries are not made in the Journals of either House is this: only 'res gestæ' or proceedings-motions or bills or petitions or returns or other formal matters requiring the action of the House—are ever entered. If, when an order is read, or a petition presented, or a Bill moved (in which cases an entry is necessarily made by the clerk at the table,) a question of order is raised as to the regularity of procedure, and it is ruled that such order or petition or Bill is irregularly before the House, the clerk also enters the decision in the Journals to show why no further action is taken in the matter in question. For instance, in the Senate, during 1887, the order of the day being read for the third reading of a private Bill, an hon. senator proposed an amendment, but it was ruled out of order because no notice had been given of the same under the rules (Sen. Jour., 1887, p. 1857. In 1889, a member proposed that the House should adjourn over until a certain day (Sen. Jour., 1889, p. 52), but it was ruled out of order because the motion was special and requested a day's previous notice. In the Canadian Commons Journal, during 1891, four decisions were entered because, in each case the ruling prevented further action in a proceeding duly entered on the Journals in accordance with the ordinary usage of the House. (See pp. 312, 345, 411, 526 Canadian Commons Journal, 1891.)

I find also the following entry in the English Commons Journal of 1882: 'The House, according to order, resumed further proceedings on consideration of the Prevention of Crime (Ireland Bill) as amended in the committee.' An amendment was then proposed, and the following entry is made: 'And it appearing that the proposed amendment would throw an increased charge on persons liable to the rate, Mr. Speaker declared the proposed amendment out of order.'

In all the cases recorded in the English or Canadian Journals—and in some years there are no decisions at all entered—the entry is made to show how no further progress is made in a proceeding. All the Speaker's decisions arising out of debate must be sought in the 'Hansard' or regular reports of debates, and not in the Journals which are simply records of proceedings (see Bourinot and May where the notes for the most part refer to 'Hansard'). If it should be attempted to record questions or debates, and points of order arising thereon, then the fundamental rules governing the making of the Journals would be broken, and grave inconvenience would arise on account of the disputes that would naturally occur from time to time as to the accuracy of the record. The duty of the clerk, responsable for the Journals, is stated in these words by Hatsell, May and all other authorities. (see Bourinot citing Hatsell, &c., 2 ed. p. 216): 'He takes notes of the proceedings, of the "res gestæ," of the Commons; he is to make true ntries, remembrances, and jouranls of the things done and passed in the House, but it is without warrant that he should make minutes of particular men's speeches.' It is clear if decisions on all matters are to be given, then the speeches relating thereto would have to be entered, if such decisions are to be made intelligible.

The conclusion to which I come after further study of the whole question—a question on which I have had never a doubt?—is that the honourable the Speaker of the Senate decided in accordance with correct usage that the Speaker's ruling cannot be properly entered in the Minutes 'in the case where a point of order is raised in the course of a discussion on a public question or on any inquiry or question put to a minister of the Crown." (See Senate Debates, p. 815, 1898.)

I may also cite May, 10th edition, p. 196, speaking of the Journals of the House, he says:

These records are confined to the votes and proceedings of the House without any reference to the debates.

I want to remind the House what is the motion before us? Not merely that the ruling of the Speaker be recorded in the Minutes of Proceedings, which I maintained according to precedent should not be done, but the hon. mover asks that the whole debate on the ruling be inserted in the Minutes. If it is the pleasure of the House, the House can so decide, but if it is the pleasure of the House to do so, another hon. member may move another day, and instead of moving that one page be inserted in the Minutes and Proceedings, he may ask to have ten or twenty pages inserted. It will be seen that this involves not only the ruling of the Speaker, but the whole debate, which contains nearly a page, in the Minutes and Proceedings. If the House is willing to establish such a precedent it is for them to decide. As to the motion before the House, I think it is irregular in this way. It is against the usage of the House ; it is against precedent, and it is irregular as to facts. I want to state my recollection as to the way the motion was put the day before yesterday—the motion which the hon. mover is making to-day was not put by the Chair. The hon. gentleman only read the motion, and before I had time to get up and read it, an hon. member rose in his seat, and then after a discussion the hon. mover of this motion to-day just said : 'Lost on a division.' I could not allow that to go on a division, because there was nothing before the House, and I said 'dropped' and the hon. gentleman repeated after me 'dropped,' and the Clerk of the House entered in his notes, the word 'dropped.' It would be perfectly irregular to-day to declare that this should have been recorded in the Minutes. To allow the hon. gentleman's motion to-day would be to negative what was decided on the 26th of May, 1898. If it was allowed to a member to have a part of a debate, which may be a page or ten pages, inserted in the Minutes of Proceedings, it would be contrary to what Bourinot and May say, that the Minutes of Proceedings are only to record the proceedings of the House and not the discussion. The object of the official report is to record the debates. I decided in 1898 that the motion should not be recorded. I did so in order to decide what should be done in future, and I again think this motion is not in order, and then if the hon. gentleman is satisfied he can appeal to the House, and I shall be willing, if the House, approves, to allow such motions to pass and be recorded.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the hon. Speaker gives his decision on the question——

Some hon. MEMBERS—The Speaker has decided.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I asked if there was a point of order, and was told that there was not. I have been told that I consented to drop the motion I made the day before. I deny such an assertion, and to prove that I am perfectly right, let me tell this House that I am willing to take what the reporter of the debates has in his notes. I know positively that I never said 'dropped.' I said 'lost on division,' and if the Speaker is well reported he will find recorded in the debates he did not say 'dropped' but 'lost.' I am willing to take what is reported in the debates. I cannot allow myself to be held responsible to this House for statements that I never made, and my intention in bringing up this question is to obtain an official relation of the facts that took place and not to reflect on the decision given by the Speaker. The Speaker gave his decision. I am merely asking that his decision be recorded in the Minutes of the House, nothing else. I could not refer to that decision without using the words in which it was rendered. If it had been given in a shorter way, the motion would have been shorter, but I took the only way that was available to me to put before the House the decision as it was given. That is the only form to be given to the motion which I put before this House, and I think, under the circumstances, the motion should be adopted.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Do I understand the Speaker to rule that it is out of order to ask that any decision which he may have given may not be put to the House.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is the inference. I asked the question so that we may understand definitely what the ruling is, for future reference.

The SPEAKER—If it had only been asking to have the ruling recorded, it would not be so objectionable, but it is not only the ruling ; the whole debate on the ruling is asked to be recorded on the Minutes, which is entirely out of order.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—There is another question.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Chair, Chair.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—I move the adjournment of the House.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I do not think there is any debate——

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is not a motion for adjournment of a debate, but the adjournment of the House that is moved.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is for the purpose of discussing the decision of the Speaker.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman has no right to assume what is going to be discussed. Though he is Minister of Justice he cannot know what I am going to say. He has no right to say that this is done for the purpose of discussing the decision of the Speaker. I will not allow the hon. minister to impute motives.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I imputed no motives.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If the hon. gentleman is so strong about the rules of order, he should be the first to set an example of order. Before the House adjourns I should like to call attention, not to the decision of the Speaker, but to what must appear to-morrow on record. Here is a motion which has been put in the hands of the Speaker. The Speaker put the question to the House. Here is what should follow according to the authority last cited :

> The duty of the Clerk of the House is to put in the record of the day's proceedings what took place. He is obliged to put in the records the motions that the Chair has put before this House.

This is a matter that has been put by the Chair and must go on record. With this entry in the record must be given the decision of the Speaker. These are facts which took place to-day, and I hope to-morrow we will have the records in proper form.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER asked leave to withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Leave was granted and the motion was withdrawn.

GRAIN INSPECTION DISTRICT OF MANITOBA BILL.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (141)—'An Act respecting the Grain Trade in the inspection district of Manitoba.'

(In the Committee.)

On the fourth clause.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I wish to propose an amendment to subsection A of this clause. It is intended that the grain commission merchants shall also take out a license. I move that the clause be amended accordingly.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does that bring the grain commission merchants into the same position as elevator men, so that they will be under the control of the government as the elevator men are.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. The farmers deliver their grain. The grain is gold. It is not fair that the commission merchant should get hold of the article and sell it and make no return to the farmer.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think it is a proper amendment.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—What guarantee does the license give ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He has to give security.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is a further protection to the farmer.

Subsection a was amended and adopted.

On subsection b,

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In this section I move to strike out the word 'and' before the word 'flat' and add the words 'by grain commission merchants.'

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—Would that clause oblige local merchants in any village to take out a license ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Any man who buys direct from farmers as a grain commission merchant must take out a license. The application is one generally understood in Manitoba and the North-west. There will be no hesitation about it if the parties are in a financial position to deal in grain.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—Is it intended to apply elsewhere than in Manitoba ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, it is a Manitoba Act.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Does it not apply to the North-west ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, that is part of the grain inspection district.

Subclause b as amended was adopted.

On subsection e,

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have amended this clause by inserting after word 'railroad' in the last line the words 'or' by any grain commission merchant.'

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Is there to be only one commissioner to do all this work ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—One head commissioner and those subordinate to him.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Because one man could not do a quarter of it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is no power given to the Governor General to appoint more than one that I have seen so far.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think you will find that he has the power to appoint persons under him who will report to him from time to time.

The subclause was adopted.

On clause 5,

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—This clause was taken exception to by members of the other House with regard to giving this information at points where grain is bought. This information is sought to be given by the government to the men dealing in grain, and these men at Winnipeg all have their agents and know quite as well as the government, and perhaps better, with regard to the price of grain in the different markets wherever they are selling, and I do not see any use in having this information posted up at Winnipeg. In the early days of this session I called upon the Minister of Inland Revenue and asked this year, and also asked last year, that this information might be given at the different points throughout the length and breadth of the country where grain is bought from the farmers. Take a farmer living twenty miles from the station, or even a shorter distance: he knows nothing about the ruling price. He has to take the buyer's word. The buyer tells him wheat is worth fifty cents to-day. The farmer does not know any more about it than the man in the moon. It may be higher, but it is never very much lower. But I asked the minister to take the necessary steps to inquire and to see if he could not cause this information to be given at different railway stations where grain is bought, so that the farmer could see whether he was getting a good price for his grain; and so far as Winnipeg is concerned, the information is no earthly use. I was talking to a grain man in Ottawa the other day, and he said it was no use in Winnipeg. He has his agents to inform him as to the price. It was objected to in the other House and the suggestion was made that that clause should be struck out, or the information given at the different points where it is bought from the farmers, so that the farmer could see whether he was getting a fair price for his grain or not. I do not wish to raise any objection, but as far as Winnipeg is concerned the information is useless. This Bill has been framed largely by the Winnipeg Board of Trade, and a man has been in Ottawa for three months this session in reference to it. He accompanied the royal commission last year and has been under pay. He has been framing this Bill, and it has been framed in the interests of the grain-buyers rather than the grain-sellers, and I cannot see any advantage to the grain-buyers because they already have their agents who notify them about the changes in price from time to time.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—It cannot do any harm, can it ?

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I wanted to have it arranged so that the farmers would get this information at country points as well as Winnipeg.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It would be quite impossible to keep on file at all the railway stations in the North-west and Manitoba the quotations as to the price of grain. I assume that this information is kept at the office in Winnipeg, and the daily newspapers get their information from the office.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—That is the only point in it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is an important point. It is a matter of importance to the people in the North-west and, as a matter of fact, the newspapers publish each day the prices of the day before.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 6,

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Where is the weighmaster to be situated ? There are only two points I suppose, Winnipeg and Fort William.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know. There may be other points. If necessity arises I presume subordinate weighmasters would be appointed.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I have no doubt there will be enough appointed.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They would be at the chief grain centres.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—They can only be appointed under this clause where there is an inspection of grain, and that is quite enough.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 8.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What is meant by terminals ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Where there are terminal elevators, as at Fort William and at Port Arthur.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—They are described in clause 14.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That states that the Minister of Inland Revenue shall decide where he will be located.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That might cover an elevator at any point. It only describes an ordinary elevator.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The clause is plain enough. It reads :

All elevators located at any point declared by the Minister of Inland Revenue to be a terminal——

Under that clause the Minister of Inland Revenue can declare an elevator to be a terminal no matter whether it be at Calgary, Fort William or at any other place.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—And from the closing words of the section it would seem that the words 'terminal elevator' are mentioned in sections 14 to 28 and include the warehouse.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They are at only four different points, Port Arthur, Fort William, Winnipeg and West Lynn. They are elevators where the grain has been graded and then it can be stored, and they do not keep the grain in separate bins, because having been graded the parties depositing the grain are entitled to take out the equivalent. The principal one is at Fort William.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 10,

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What is meant by a seal ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have put a query as to that. I will make inquiries .

Hon. Mr. POWER—The certificate does not need any seal. It is better to strike out the word seal.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Better leave it in till I inquire.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It may be an official seal and affixed to the certificate.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—It is an official seal.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This Bill has been drawn by experts, and I should like to make inquiry from them before striking anything out, and I can give the explanation later.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It does not seem to me that it requires explanation. In all laws where it provides that a document shall have a signature and seal, it means the official seal that is put on.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I understand that, but what is the object of sealing it ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It does no harm.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It makes it easier to identify the documents.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 14,

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In this clause you require the name of the individual to be stated, and you do not require the name of a corporation, in the event of its being a corporation. You only require the names of the officials, and not the names of the corporations. It seems to me that the name of the corporation should be given.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The corporation has no soul, and you cannot punish it, but you can punish the officers of the corporation.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There is a provision here as to what has to be complied with in making an application.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not see that it is at all important one way or the other.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If you grant a license you want to know to whom you are granting it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Can you not grant a license to a corporation.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There would be no difficulty putting the name of a corporation with the name of the president. Of course you can hardly have the name of the president of the corporation without having the name of the corporation of which he is president.

The motion was amended and adopted.

On clause 21,

No terminal warehouseman shall insert in any receipt issued by him in any language in any wise limiting or modifying his liabilities or responsibility except as in this Act mentioned and except in so far as all parties concerned consent thereto.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Will not the parties invariably contract themselves out of the Act?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Not necessarily.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It seems to me when you make certain provisions in the Act, and then give the right to parties to waive those provisions, you place simply a premium on the parties contracting themselves out of the conditions.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—They are not a dependent class at all.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Suppose the warehouseman says I will not do so and so unless you modify the condition imposed by the statute.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—He cannot refuse to do it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The clause permits him to modify the conditions.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—There may be circumstances under which they should be waived.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—You must take into consideration the fact that a warehouseman occupies a much more dictatorial disposition than the farmer. He can say to the farmer I will not do so and so unless you waive certain conditions.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Act requires that he shall conform to the law. If the parties choose to waive the conditions they can. That freedom exists in all phases of business.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—This is between dealers largely.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Suppose a man ships grain in a certain condition, there might be an agreement by which the warehouseman is relieved of responsibility for that condition of the grain.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is a reason why the parties should not be allowed to contract themselves out of the conditions. A small quantity of defective grain might destroy all the grain in the building?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—No grain is taken in without the inspector's approval.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—You exempt the warehouseman from a large share of responsibility which should attach to him if he had defective grain in store.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have made a note of it.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 24,

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Should you not impose the duty of furnishing these weekly statements on the person who has personal knowledge of the facts instead of on the warehousemen.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—At the terminal elevator there is some one official who will be in a position to furnish the information. He will know that it is his duty to furnish this information as required by law. It may be the manager or the head book-keeper.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—You impose the duty on the warehouseman to get him to do it.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The warehouseman will have control of this official whoever he may be, who will have a personal knowledge of the fact.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Why not provide that the bookkeeper shall furnish such a statement to the warehouseman ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—You must allow some elasticity in these matters. The important point is to get the information. I feel a good deal of hesitation in altering the clause, which has been carefully thought out. The law casts on the warehouseman the duty of looking after this return. As a matter of fact, we all know it has been given to the public in the newspapers. It is a form that is well recognized now. It is not the introduction of a new principle.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend misapprehends my contention. The warehouseman does not make the declaration. He has to go to some one to make the declaration, and you do not compel that somebody to make the declaration.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The warehouseman is the one who is primarily responsible, and it is his duty to get the best information he can. There are men under his control.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—They are not under his control. The owner is not under the control or supervision of the warehouseman.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Who appoints the warehouseman ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The owner.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then you make the owner the servant of the employee ?

The clause was adopted.

On subsection 4 of clause 26,

Hon. Mr. SCOTT proposed to substitute a clause which was read to the House.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What is the difference between the two ?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I think one difference is this : in the amendment suggested, the grain inspector is called upon to decide whether the grain is out of condition or not. When the warehouseman finds the grain going out of condition, he notifies the inspector, who examines the grain and decides whether it is out of condition or becoming so.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It only applies to terminal elevators.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—And to the bin or bins that have gone out of condition. I fancy it is intended that the bin or bins that have gone out of condition shall suffer, and only those, not the grain in the whole building, so as to bring as nearly as possible the matter home to the actual grain that has gone out of condition.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I had a discussion with Mr. Shaw with reference to this clause. We discussed the matter in detail. It is a long, voluminous clause, and it is difficult for a man who is not a lawyer to understand it, but nevertheless, talking it over with Mr. Shaw, I found the great difficulty was when the grain went into the bin at Fort William. When a receipt is issued for it, they are responsible for the class of grain they give a receipt for, when the government appoint an inspector. The main feature of this clause is to relieve the Canadian Pacific Railway from any responsibility in regard to the grain going into the elevators, when it has been inspected by the government inspector, and not by one of their inspectors. I am in full sympathy with all the provisions of the clause except one. I believe the moment the grain is found to be out of condition in one of the large elevators, due caution should be taken at once to have it checked and preserved as much as possible.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The Act provides for that.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—So far as that goes that is all right. But then it says that the expense of all this is to be borne by the men who have the grain in the bin, I will give an illustration. If five of us send a car-load of grain each to Fort William, it is placed in a bin there. It is inspected. Four of us have been careful, and have sent down good grain, and the man has made a proper inpection, and put it into a bin. The fifth man is not so careful, and his grain is a little damp, and the inspector does not exercise due care, and vigilance in the inspection of it, and he puts in the car of bad grain with our good grain. Fermentation sets in, and the bin becomes bad, and this clause says that the expense shall be borne by the five men equally. I am not going to offer any objection to it, but I think that when the government appoints an inspector, he should exercise great care and see that bad grain is not put in with good grain, because it spoils the whole bin, and the five men have to pay the expense of it. I shipped two car-loads of grain last year. The grain was a little tough. A car-load went to Fort William. It was good grain in every particular, but it was what is termed by the buyers a little tough—a little damp. They sent it to Fort William to be cleaned. Grain out of the other car was good grain, and I received almost the first class price for it from the Lake of the Woods Milling Company, but when the first car went down toFort William they graded it through, and put in through the cleaning process such as provided for by this Bill. When it came out of the cleaning process it was mixed with other grain. It had frosty and smutty grain in it, and when they sent me my sample, it was graded as smutty and frosty, and no grade at all; and I lost 14 cents a bushel on the two car-loads of wheat. I came home to the man whose elevator I shipped it through, and got a sample of the other car and placed it alongside of this, and I sold it to the Lake of the Woods Milling Company for within two cents of the price of No. 1 hard. In consequence of this change from one bin to another, I lost 14 cents a bushel on two car-loads of grain. That is not fair. I say that when they make a wrong inspection they should be liable for it. Why should I be liable for having my grain mixed up with grain that had been injured by frost and had smut in it? That was not fair. My grain was examined by a government inspector, and I had nothing to do with it after it was left in the car at Wolseley. But it was handled by other men who are often times incompetent, and it was handled in such a way, that by mixing with inferior grain, I lost 14 cents a bushel on 1,300 odd bushels. The only fault I find with this section is that it says that all this expense shall be borne by the men who have grain in the bin. You may have five car-loads.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—About 5,000 bushels.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Nearly ten car-loads. The inspector may be derelict in his duty. The inspector, as I understand, does not inpect the grain. He has a lot of men who go out and take samples from this car, and that car, and the inspection is done loosely. They inspect it, and put it in one big bin at Fort William, but one car has been soft wheat or damp wheat and it has fermented the whole lot, and all who have grain in that bin have to suffer alike.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It never should have been graded as No. 1 if it was soft.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Well, say No. 2. Supposing there were five cars of good quality of grain in that bin, and another car-load of poor quality is put with it and you spoil the whole quantity.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Would they mix No. 1 with No. 2?

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—No, but the man might make a mistake in grading. The inspectors should be more careful and cautions and not do it. A mistake is sometimes made. There was a mistake made in my case.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Did it ever occur before?

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—It is the first time I ever shipped grain, so that I do not know. It was a bad start. I am not speaking for the farmer particularly, although the farmer ships his grain. It is a customary thing for the farmers to ship their own grain, and the moment it goes on the car, it is out of their control, and in the hands of other men, and the shipper has nothing to say about it. The government should have responsible men, and when they spoil the grain of half a dozen men, those half dozen men should not suffer by it. It is the men who are handling the grain who would be more affected by this than the individual farmer. I will not take any sharp turn, and move an amendment, but I will say that the government ought to be responsible for the actions of their officers. When they appoint inspectors they should appoint competent men, and they would be perhaps more careful in the discharge of their duties, and not allow it to occur. So far as taking active measures in preventing the grain from spoiling, in place of doing all this work by letter, it should be done by telegram, and the parties should be informed that the grain in a certain bin is wrong.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—They inform them by wire now.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—This Bill does not provide for that.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Does the inspector give a receipt for your two car-loads of wheat as being sound and fresh ?

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Yes.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—And it is dry and no fault to find in that respect ?

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Sometimes a receipt is given for No. 1 when it is really No. 2.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Cannot the inspector discover the defect at the time of making the inspection ?

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—He ought to.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—That is the whole point.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Mistakes will occur.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The case cited by my hon. friend does not apply to this clause at all. This clause applies to grain that has been inspected into a warehouse by an inspector, and a certificate granted. The case in which my hon. friend lost so heavily on his grain was not a case where it was inspected into the terminal warehouse, and a certificate given. He simply got a certificate that it was out of condition. His grain was graded tough. That grain would not come in under this provision.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—It was mixed with smutty grain and frosted grain.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—We are not dealing with the grain which is tough, I might explain that at Fort William the Canadian Pacific Railway have several buildings for storing grain. There is one building, King's elevator, which is sometimes called the hospital elevator, where the grain of the grade which my hon. friend shipped is sent for treatment. He says his grain was cleaned there. I fancy it was dried there. But my hon. friend says his other car at home was more valuable. It may have dried out in the meantime. It may not have been badly damaged. It may have been slightly damp, and it may have been in a little better condition, and it does not reflect on the judgment of the inspectors, because, as far as I am able to learn, the inspectors are very careful to do their work as correctly as they possibly can. They are the same officials that have been there for years and years, and while they may make mistakes, I fancy they do their utmost to do justice as far as we are concerned. But this clause applies to grain that has been inspected in good condition, and afterwards comes out in bad condition, and this clause proposes to limit the responsibility to bins that are out of condition, and it is true there may be some others whose grain will be in that bin who should not suffer. There is a difficulty there, and if, as my hon. friend suggests, the government would become responsible for any grain that gets out of condition after it has been inspected, we would appreciate it very much, and no one would endorse it quicker than I would. Pending their assuming that responsibility, we have to limit the loss as nearly as possible to the owners of the grain which has been put in there which has caused the trouble.

The subclause was adopted.

On subclause 6, relating to the sale of grain out of condition.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—One month is too long to allow the grain to remain before being sold.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That would be the extreme limit. It is always in the owner's interests to remove it as soon as possible. He might complain if we limited it to a week or ten days. It is for the owner to remove it as soon as possible. I propose to amend this subclause by adding the following :

And if the proceeds of such sale are not sufficient to satisfy all the charges accrued against the grain at the time of the sale, then the owner of the grain so disposed of shall be liable to the warehouseman for any deficiency.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would point out what in my judgment is an omission

In subsection 4, of clause 26, it is not provided that the owner of the grain should be notified

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, yes, he is to be notified at once.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Subsection 4 deals with the notice which shall be given, and it says :

He shall immediately, by registered letter, give written notice thereof to the warehouse commissioner, and at the same time give public notice by advertising in a daily newspaper in the city in which such warehouse is situated, and in Winnipeg, and by posting a notice in his elevator and in the Grain Exchange at Winnipeg, of its actual condition as near as he can ascertain.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The grain may have changed hands half a dozen times.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—But there is some particular individual interested in that grain, and in the subsection which we are now proposing, it is provided that if he does not within a certain time do a certain act, the grain will be sold.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Can the hon. gentleman suggest any better way of calling his attention to it than the mode provided in the clause? It passes from hand to hand like a dollar bill. There is no record of it in the warehouse.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Is it proposed to hold the owner responsible when it is not known who he is?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The person who holds the receipt for the grain at the time it is declared out of condition will be held responsible.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—But if there is a deficiency, that person is not going to appear upon the scene.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Then the elevator people lose the money.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Then a notice should be sent out in the name of the person to whom the receipt is issued.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, if there is a record of it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That can be provided for by adding a provision that notice shall be sent 'to the owner if known.'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, that might be added.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Supposing my hon. friend from Wolseley ships a couple of car-loads to Fort William, and notice is given in Winnipeg; my hon. friend lives several hundred miles away, and he is to be shouldered with that loss, without any notice, and without any opportunity of endeavouring to do the best he can with the defective grain. A notice should be sent to the person to whom the receipt is issued.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—When?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—At the time of the happening of the Act mentioned in section 6.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is done by ten days notice in a newspaper in Winnipeg.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Subsection 4 should be made to read in this way:

After such examination has been made, if it be found that the grain is out of condition or its further deterioration cannot by re-elevation be prevented, written notice thereof shall immediately, by registered letter, be given to the owner of such grain, if known, and to the warehouse commissioner of the fact.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have no objection to that.

Subsection 4 as amended was adopted.

On clause 31,

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I have had a good deal of communication, on the subject of this clause, with farmers in the west. Take Broadview, for instance. There are two merchants there who buy grain. There is no elevator there. The merchants buy the grain and pay cash for it at once. They contend that they should not be required to give bonds when they buy the grain and pay cash for it. It may be difficult sometimes for a man to get his neighbours to go on bonds for him.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—These merchants may not always pay cash, and they may allow farmers grain to be stored with them. It is only fair, under such circumstances, that they should come under the law relating to flat warehouses. They are not required to furnish bonds for more than five hundred dollars.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, from $500 to $5,000. Might I ask why such disparity should be embodied in this clause in fixing these two amounts?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Because a flat warehouse may not hold five thousand bushels of grain—perhaps not more than three thousand. Some elevators may hold seventy-five thousand bushels. It depends altogether on the character of the warehouse, and the responsibility depends on the quality.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What is the distinction between an elevator and a flat warehouse ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In a flat warehouse there is no elevator at all.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—A man who has an elevator, no matter how much it holds, has to give security to the extent of from $5,000 to $15,000, but in the case of flat warehouse, the bonds are from $500 to $5,000. The point raised by the hon. gentleman from Wolseley seems to me to be a good one. If I buy grain for cash, I should have no responsibility to the seller beyond that. He has no claim on me.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Unless it is a public warehouse this will not apply. Any man who deals in grain can make an arrangement with the Canadian Pacific Railway and build an elevator near their road for his own use, but the moment he takes anybody else's grain, he must take out a license. If it is exclusively for him he does not take out a license at all.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I think this provision is right and proper, because I believe more money is lost by the farmers of Manitoba through the small grain dealers than through the large ones.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—How is this going to protect them ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The warehousemen to give security. There is hardly any person who will take out a license who will not store grain occasionally. The man who takes out a license and handles another person's grain is subject to inspection &c., and the farmer ought to have some security?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This security will not necessarily protect the farmer who sells his grain to a commission agent or a grain agent who is licensed by the government, unless he is a warehouseman, consequently the security will not be security realisable upon by the farmer ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We provide that persons dealing in grain must take out a license.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—He might take out a license and give out to the farmers that he is a warehouseman when he is not the owner of the warehouse ; consequently the farmer has no recourse against that dealer so far as security is concerned.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Commission merchants are obliged to take out a license.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, but it is not necessary for them to put up bonds.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend refers to the section as a security for the farmers. I have been pointing out that in many instances the farmer would not profit by it.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL from the committee, reported that they had made some progress with the Bill.

SCHOMBERG AND AURORA RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING POSTPONED.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the second reading of Bill (94) 'An Act respecting the Schomberg and Aurora Railway Company.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Has this company a Dominion charter or a local charter ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I must confess I know nothing about the Bill.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—If the hon. gentleman does not know anything about the Bill he should not take charge of it. My advice to him is to postpone the second reading until he understands it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—One Clerk of the Senate yesterday sent me a form of resolution to move the first reading of the Bill, and it has therefore appeared in my name to-day ? I know nothing of its merits. It was introduced by Mr. Landerkin in the other House.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I do not know whether this company has a right to come here at all. The company should get their powers from the local legislature if it is a local charter. I should like to carry out the rules laid down by the leader of the opposition in this House, when he said, that Bills of this kind should be explained fully at the second reading.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In deference to my hon. friend from Monck I should like to have the second reading of the Bill postponed until to-morrow.

The Orders of the Day was discharged and second reading of the Bill was made an order for to-morrow.

THE TIMAGAMI RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. KERR moved the second reading of Bill (118) 'An Act respecting the Timagami Railway Company.' He said: This Bill is of Dominion origin. The company was chartered two years ago. The object of the present Bill, as I understand it, is twofold—to make a slight deviation in the route, owing to engineering difficulties, and as a consequence to extend the time for the construction of the road a couple of years longer.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The object of the Bill is, as I am informed, to change the terminus of the proposed road. The charter was granted by the Dominion parliament in order to accommodate and facilitate the settlement of a certain portion of the country lying in the direction of Timagami. The intention is to change the route through a country that is not fit for settlement. This Bill was promoted principally by a reverend gentleman whose time has been occupied for some years in inducing settlers to come from Illinois and other portions of the United States to settle in Canada. He obtained a charter for a railway to enable them to reach the Canadian Pacific Railway from their settlement. It is now represented that the proposed change of location is to enable the company to run the line through a pulpwood country for the benefit of the pulpwood industry, and not for the advantage of the settlers. I point that out to the hon. gentleman in order that he may be prepared, when the Bill comes before the committee, to inform the committee whether the statement is true or not, and it will be for the House to decide whether the interest of the settler is of greater importance to the country than the interest of the pulpwood manufacturers who have obtained large areas of timber limits in that section of Ontario.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED.

THE ACADIA LOAN CORPORATION'S BILL.

The Order of the Day being called:

Consideration of the amendments made by the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce to (Bill 116) An Act to incorporate the Acadia Loan Corporation.—(Hon. Mr. Allan.)

Hon. Mr. ALLAN said: The only reason for deferring concurrence yesterday was some discrepancy in the portion referring to the Companies Clauses Act which was made applicable to the Bill, but on comparing the Bill again it is found that they are perfectly correct. I therefore move concurrence in the amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (124) 'An Act to incorporate the Lake Superior and Hudson Bay Railway Company.'—(Hon. Mr. Watson.)

THE MINISTERIAL CRISIS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to ask the hon. leader of the House whether he can give us any information with reference to the question I asked him yesterday? I observe that the Premier intimated that he would make a statement to-day in the House, and as it is a matter of some importance, I suppose the Senate is entitled to the same explanation. I see by the newspapers to-night that the Lieut.-Governor of British Columbia has refused to resign. I suppose he was asked to do so by the government. I should like to know whether, under the circumstances, the government have dismissed him, and, if so, whether the rumor is true, as stated positively, that a member of the Cabinet has already been appointed to fill the vacancy in British Columbia in the person of the Minister of Inland Revenu, the hon. Sir Henry Joly de Lotbinière.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am not in a position to give any further information to-day, but as soon as I am in a position I shall be happy to give the information to the Senate and I see no reason why the Senate should not been informed quite as soon as the House of Commons. Further than that I cannot say at present.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Of course the hon. gentleman will not object to my asking the question again to-morrow?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Of course not.

DELAYED RETURNS.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I should like to ask the hon. Secretary of State if he is in a position to give us the information he promised yesterday as to the second series of documents relating to the Manitoba school question.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I regret to say that I am not. I have not had an opportunity of getting the papers.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

CANADIAN NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION COMPANY'S BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. BAKER, from the Committee on Railways, Telegraph and Harbours, to whom was referred Bill (115) 'An Act to incorporate the Canadian National Transportation Company,' reported that the committee found that the preamble of the Bill had not been proven, and moved that the report be adopted.

Hon. Mr. KERR—Before this motion is disposed of, I would crave the indulgence of this House for a few moments to move a resolution in amendment. I move:

That the report of the Standing Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours, on Bill (115) entitled 'An Act to incorporate the Canadian National Transportation Company,' be not now concurred in, but that the same be referred back to the said committee for further consideration.

I make this motion under a sense of duty. I am not singular in my view when I state that a very large number of the members of this Senate regard this Bill as having for its object very important questions. I do not recollect just now that any Bill has been before this House of a similar nature—certainly not since I have been a member of it, of equal importance and that must be my reason for asking that the Bill be sent back to the committee for further consideration. The title of the Bill explains generally its character and scope. It is entitled an Act to incorporate the Canadian National Transportation Company.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—That ought to kill it: it is not national by any means.

Hon. Mr. KERR—The hon. gentleman will please allow me to proceed. That is the title of the Bill, and the hon. gentleman will pardon me if I go further and say that, in my opinion, when the scheme is fully unfolded, as it may yet be in this Chamber, to use the words of another it smacks very strongly of nationality, and is just such a Bill, in my opinion, as ought to pass into law and without delay till a future session. It happened accidentally that some good angel, perhaps, sent me from Collingwood a sheet entitled 'The Enterprise Messenger' and I will read to the House the motto of that paper. I was very much struck with the appropriateness of that motto as bearing upon this Bill, and I ventured to bring the paper to this Chamber to make a quotation, a thing I very seldom do. However, much we may differ in our views upon public questions, there can be but one opinion on this question. The motto reads:

The government of a country ought never to allow that country to be dependent upon any other country for such resources as it can obtain by its own industry.

Now, it is rather a humiliating fact to us Canadians, that for years we have watched a great volume of trade, increasingly large, from year to year, being diverted from what, according to my contention, is its natural channel and its natural outlet, and we should not fail by Providence. It appears from the knowledge and experience of those engaged largely in the transportation trade, that a very large volume of trade which we should have, as a right, instead of going through our own country to the seaboard, is diverted south of the international boundary, and goes to give employment to and enrich the coffers of another country. It is only our bounden duty to see that we secure all that, if we can do so by fair and legitimate means, for our own country. It has been stated, and I believe the fact has not been disputed, that the distance between the Canadian outlet to the St. Lawrence, Montreal and the seaboard, is 500 miles shorter than by Buffalo and New York. I ask hon. gentlemen to consider that. I have always been frank enough to say that our neighbours to the south were standing in their own light, and that it would be wisdom in them, as well as mutually profitable, if there were more interchange of business between the two countries; but the point I want to make is this: That that unwillingness on their part has thrown Canadians back upon their country and upon their own resources, and I am content to take the result. I want to make the very utmost out of our resources. We have a splendid country. Few of us yet, in our wildest and brightest day dreams, have an idea of the extent of our resources, and the magnificance of our heritage, and it does seem to me that this Bill is, if any Bill can possibly be truly pronounced one, a Bill for the general advantage of the country. I am told by those who are largely engaged in business that the transportation question is engaging the attention of the wisest and best business minds of the Dominion, and this Bill is largely, if not solely, the outcome of the agitation to give effect to that view. I have said that it savours of nationality; I cannot conceive anything that would be a greater advantage to the country as a whole, and to the city of Toronto. I consider it would confer untold benefits on that city, and on the city of Montreal, and all along the line of water stretches and railway, and I think we should have that law upon our statute-book to incorporate this company. I happen to know some of the names of the gentlemen who are asking to be incorporated. Those names are to me, and I think would be to those who are well acquainted with them, as I have the honour to be, a guarantee of bona fides, and downright earnestness in business, and it does seem a pity, if they are in earnest, that they should be thwarted. The capital, I see, is to be fixed at $5.000,000. I am told that if there is any lack of capital on the part of those who are immediately promoting the scheme, there is abundance of capital that can be placed, for the asking, at their disposal. If you will allow me, I shall quote a further paragraph, which seems to cover the point I am reading from:

> No bonus is involved, and the public interests are not at stake if this Bill passes. In fact, it would be a serious loss to the transportation interests of the country if it were thrown out, because it is promoted by those interested in transportation rather than franchise-grabbers or stock brokers.

I do not apply those terms. I read them as they are. I should be sorry to think there are land-grabbers or stockbrokers in the company, but at all events, this paper, knowing the promoters of the Bill, says they are not of that class. So far that is satisfactory.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—As far as the paper is concerned, it is.

Hon. Mr. KERR—And as far as it corroborates the knowledge that some of us have of the individual promoters of the scheme. Now, I come to what seems to be the difficulty in the way of the committee finding the preamble proved. I make no reflection upon the committee. They acted upon their sound and independent judgment, but, of course, we are all human and fallible. My point is this, if there are vested rights in the way, so to speak; if there is another train on the track ahead of this train, some terms may be devised by which in an honourable way, that train could be switched aside, to give the larger and national train the right of way. Now, the object I have in view is, that this Bill should be referred back to committee for further consideration, and the committee should give a few days delay, to afford an opportunity for negotiations, and I have no doubt that all obstructions would be easily removed from the track—that those who have what are called vested rights, would not be injuriously affected, for I would guard as jealously as I know how anything that appears to me like vested rights. A number of gentlemen have a charter, I think it was originally termed a ship railway charter, but nothing seems to have come of it. I do not want their rights to be ignored or wiped out simply because there has been delay. As a rule, I think the student of history will rise from its perusal with this impression, that it is not always the men who have the most money that conceive the grandest projects, and if, by the exercise of their talents and intellects, they are the cause of others considering such a project and taking it up and going on with it, they are to a large extent benefactors of the country, and so I will say that much for those who have had a charter for some time, but, apparently, hitherto have not been able to do much with it. It is within my own knowledge that some promoters of that scheme for the last twenty-five years have pushed it and agitated it, and it is a big scheme. They have been, so to speak, the Columbus of this scheme, and it was said that it was easy for any navigator to discover America after Columbus had shown them how. Be that as it may, I do not wish that those who have vested rights shall have those rights ruthlessly destroyed. They should receive fair and reasonable consideration, and I have reason to believe that if this report were referred back we might get further information about it. I desire here to say—and I am happy to be able to say it—that no one promoting this scheme has asked me to favour it, and no one has asked me not to favour either of these parties. So that, speaking as I am speaking this afternoon, I am relying solely upon my humble judgment in this matter and the only object I have is to help this country in its onward march of progress, and depend upon it, this National Transportation Company will be able to give them the rights they are asking. I have reason to believe they are in downright earnest. I shall be one of the first to say 'You must get out of the way and make room for some one else, if you do not carry out what you propose,' but I think an opportunity should be afforded them of making the attempt, and I believe the country would be better satisfied if that opportunity were afforded. I am not finding fault with anybody, but I believe it would be a wise thing to afford an opportunity to see if these vested rights could not be satisfactorily arranged, so that this large transportation company could obtain their incorporation, and get their project under way and bring that trade back to its natural channel before the breach gets any larger. for we all know that the longer anything, trade or whatever it may be, gets running in a groove. the deeper the groove becomes, and in that ratio the more difficult it is to get trade out of that groove. This is a question in which we, as Canadians, can all unite. We have heard a great deal for a good many years about Canada for the Canadians. I endorse that to the fullest extent, but my theory is not only Canada for the Canadians, but Great Britain for the Canadians, United States for the Canadians, the world for Canadian enterprise.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. KERR—And I shall not be fully satisfied, and my ambition as a humble citizen of Canada will not be fully realized, until I see every man acting in that spirit regardless of his political or party views. I did not intend to detain the House so long. It is simply because I feel intensely the importance of this question. I may be entirely in error in my views. There is this much about it, that a man cannot be always right, but he can be always upright. And it is in that spirit that I am speaking to this House and the first men in the Dominion, and I want them to understand that I do not want them to attach any undue importance to what I say, but that in whatever I have said I shall get credit for having been in downright earnest and with a desire not to promote this Bill alone, or not to affect any existing interests, but simply to promote the interests of the Dominion as a whole. I shall be exceedingly glad if all will unite to refer this Bill back to the committee. It would be no reflection upon anybody to let this measure go back to them. Let an opportunity be afforded them to reconsider the matter. We just saw to-day where the difficulty was, and perhaps the committee did the right thing in their wisdom to report as they have done, but notwithstanding that, I should like them to have a further opportunity to see if the parties cannot come together and accommodate their views, and let this project go into effect.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I do not know that I should say anything on this measure, but the hon. gentleman gave us to understand that Canada was slow in this matter.

Hon. Mr. KERR—No. no!

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I say that there are no five millions of people in any country in the world that have done more to develop their resources than the people of Canada. Look at what we have spent on our canals, and here we are asked, by this measure, before we give our highways a fair trial to choke them off and to destroy all the works upon which we have spent so much. Speaking about vested rights, one would think, from the hon. gentleman's remarks, that there were no vested rights except in regard to this railway charter which has yet two years to run. There are any amount of vested rights besides this one. The Canadian Pacific Railway, the Grand Trunk Railway, and the Canada Atlantic Railway have vested rights and many other railways have vested rights. The hon. gentleman would lead us to believe that these railways are not able to carry all the grain grown in the North-west. We are spending a large amount of money at Port Colbourne in order to allow vessels to carry the trade of the country through to Montreal. Does any one fancy for a moment that the goods are going to Collingwood where they are blasting out the rock to make a harbour and where they have scarcely fourteen feet of water now? We hear one member of the House of Commons boasting that they would have twenty feet by and by. What is it going to cost the people of this country to do that? The policy of this government, as I see it to-day in this matter of transportation, is to destroy all the work we have completed in trying to improve the navigation of the St. Lawrence and our canals. Talk about the United States people taking our trade. They do not take so much of it. These people might wait another year or two and see what we can do. We have fourteen feet of water in our canals. If any one will consider the cargo a vessel can carry with nine feet of water, and what she will carry with fourteen feet of water, he will see that it is desirable that we should wait until it is proved what our canals are able to do. Is the canal full now? Has the canal too much business to do now? No. Are these railways which run to Georgian Bay fully employed? Are they half employed? I say no. If you look at the number of places on the Georgian Bay where they have good harbours, such as at Midland, it will be seen that there is not too much grain for them to handle. They are not going to ship the grain to Toronto and unload it there and send it down the canals on fourteen feet of water. They will not do that because it will not pay them to do it. What does the hon. gentleman expect to gain by referring this report back to the committee? Does he think that that committee will go back upon this report? Are they going to swallow themselves? My hon. friend has not said enough to convince me that we should refer it back, and I am desirous that Canada should have all the advantages possible in the carrying trade of this country. Talk about the carrying trade, why not very long ago one would think we had not vessels enough to do our own carrying trade, and we allowed United States vessels to coast in this country. Now they are ready to spend any amount of money, to spend $5,000,000, of money at Port Colborne on the Welland Canal, with their plans and specifications and all that. Now we are asked to give a charter for a railway from Toronto to Collingwood. My hon. friend says no bonus is asked, but they will want bonuses before they do this work. I think I have shown this House that there are more vested rights than the vested rights my hon. friend speaks about in reference to this one railway, but even that ought to be sufficient, because their charter has still two years to run, and the very grounds that they gave, themselves, in the other House for defeating the Bill was, that it interfered with vested rights. I, for one, in the interests of the Dominion, in the interests of those who have to bear the burden of taxation in this country, am opposed to this measure, because I want to see our railways and canals give us some return. When the hon. gentleman said we are not doing what we should have done in this matter, I say look at what we have done, built a railway from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and the St. Lawrence canals, and yet we are asked to go on and expend more money, and told that we are not going fast enough. It was necessary that the Canadian Pacific Railway should be built. It was quite a burden on the people of the country to build it, but it seems we are going on fast enough. Give us a year or two before you interfere to any extent with the carrying trade of this country by water. Give us a breathing spell. How long have we had 14 feet of water in the canals? A very short time, and we have not got it all the way yet. Until we have a 14 feet water route all the way, we cannot get the results in the trade by the St. Lawrence route. I have consulted nobody about this matter. My hon. friend tells us he was not canvassed. I do not suppose he was. I should not venture to tell any one how he should vote upon this Bill. Every member should used his own judgment. I have always done so, and I hope I shall always continue to do so as best I can in the interest of the people, and in doing that, I shall vote with pleasure for the adoption of the report of the committee.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—Referring a Bill back to committe for further consideration is something which should be done with very great caution, and the reasons for making such a motion should be very strong and conclusive. My hon. friend form Cobourg has failed to convince me that such reasons exist, nor has he furnished a single argument which would justify the implied censure on the committee for having reported that the preamble of the Bill has not been proved, on account of interfering with vested rights and interests. It is true a large amount of what my hon. friend has said was gratifying with reference to the greatness of our country, and the large trade which may yet be opened to us, and is all very interesting, but it has nothing whatever to do with the question before us. I believe all those advantages which he says would come from the passing of the Bill are already available. There is now a company in existence having the right to build this railway, and they are in a position to receive as stockholders any who are willing to invest in that enterprise. If they believe it will be profitable to themselves and in the interest of the country, there is nothing to prevent those who are interested in this Bill becoming stockholders of the company already in existence. It is a small company, and seeking funds, and will be very glad, no doubt, to receive the assistance of those who wish to engage in the enterprise. They can engage in it without the necessity for passing this Bill. It would be interesting with the existing rights of a chartered company having yet two years time allowed them by law to make a commencement, and this is a serious matter, and should not be done without serious consideration. The Bill was very fairly and fully considered in committee, not only to-day, but at a previous sitting. Arguments were heard on both sides, and the deliberate conviction of the Railway Committee, by a very considerable majority, was that it would be unwise to recommend the passage of a Bill which would interfere with vested rights. The interests of the country, so far from being jeopardised by the action of the committee, are being protected, and advanced by it. Whatever may be the cause assigned, the inflexible principle from which this House has never departed is that vested rights should not be interfered with. The guardianship of those rights is vested in us, and the passing of this Bill would be, not only interfering with those rights, but would destroy a company already in existence. Although not much has been done by that company, sufficient reasons were given for the delay which has taken place in prosecuting their enterprise. We are all aware that it is only a very short time since the complete depth of 14 feet has been provided in our canals. That has been a reason why the company neglected to take any active measures, but just so soon as our canals were reported as complete, and the 14 feet depth secured, the company exerted themselves and are exerting themselves to-day. They have spent $10,000 in preliminary surveys, investigations and other necessary expenses. Surely this constitutes some claim on this House to protect their rights, especially when no public injury can be sustained by doing so. My hon. friend from Cobourg will be gratified, though in a different direction, from what he says: the confirming of the old company and establishing their rights will be the means of causing those who have been acting against them to go in and co-operate with them heartily in the work. If anything more should be required of parliament in the way of privileges or bonuses, or anything of the kind, they would have a far better chance as a united company when they appeal to us and have no opposition. I think the motion which has been made to refer this report back to the committee should not be sustained by the House.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—This is a matter which has occupied a good deal of attention in the House of Commons, and a good deal of time in the Railway Committee of the Senate. There can be no reflection on the committee in referring this report back for further consideration, because that committee only comprises a portion of the members of the Senate, and the Senators may have different views from the majority on that committee. If the Senate direct that it should be further considered, it is right and proper to refer back the Bill, because without that expression of opinion, the committee would not be able to know the opinion of the majority of the Chamber. Only a portion of the members of the House have declared that the preamble of the Bill is not proven. It is claimed that the Bill interfered with vested rights. Those vested rights are a charter procured some years ago from the provincial legislature. I was surprised to hear the hon. gentleman's remark that these men have vested rights when they have only a provincial charter.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—The hon. gentleman should not misrepresent me. I will not allow him to do so. I showed there were vested rights by the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Grand Trunk Railway, the Canada Atlantic Railway and several other railways. I will not allow the hon. gentleman to misrepresent me.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Even taking the explanation of the hon. gentleman, I do not consider that the existence of those vested rights should be a reason for reporting that this preamble is not proven. The vested rights set forth by the hon. gentleman are those of the Grand Trunk Railway, the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canada Atlantic Railway. To my mind there should be no vested rights recognized in any persons simply because they get power to build a railway. We should have free trade in railway charters and it would do away with charter mongers. You would not then have them holding up any person who wanted a railway because they have a charter. So far as I know, those who hold the Ontario charter can be classed with those men who have held charters for years and have not built railways. I fully concur in the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Cobourg (Hon Mr. Kerr) when he refers to this project as a national one. I think it is properly named, and I would say, in reply to the hon. gentleman from Sarnia, that the company he speaks of, who have the franchise have only power to build a line of railway from Collingwood to Toronto. They have no power to invest in lines of steamships. Anybody who undertakes to establish a route to compete with the railways must have a line of steamships to connect with his railway, and must come to this parliament for the power to own and operate such a line. The gentlemen who have the vested rights claimed here, would be able, if time were given, to come in and join with the present company before parliament, because they would have full power not only to build a railway, wharf and harbours, but also to invest money in steamships to bring trade to the railway line. The line of railway is short, only 70 miles, from Collingwood to Toronto. There can be no doubt in the minds of hon. gentlemen in this House who knew the parties applying for this legislation, that they are competent men to undertake the work. The greater portion of the men who are applying for this charter are interested largely in the gain trade. Not only Canadians, but a number of United States citizens have associated themselves with the Canadians and want to see this railway constructed, because it will create a shorter route to the seaboard. It is only seventy miles in length, and there is no doubt it is a feasible scheme. It is practically all down grade from Collingwood to Toronto, and we in the North-west are interested in cheap transportation. I decidedly object to taking vested rights of railway corporations into consideration. What we want is cheap rates, and the only way we can get them is by competition. In the near future there will be another outlet from our Canadian North-west to Fort William. It will carry a large proportion of the western trade, and must have an outlet coming east. I fully agree with those who speak of the advantages of water transportation, but when we consider that the route from Collingwood to Toronto saves the carriage of freight some 300 miles, and with the facilities that they now have for transhipping grain from cars into steamers and from steamers into cars, the cost is a very small consideration, and it is claimed by grain-shippers that it is worth to the grain the total cost of transhipment, because it improves the quality of the wheat. It is estimated by grain-shippers that it is no advantage to carry grain in bulk from one point to another, because the loading and unloading of grain is done at a cost of about one-tenth of a cent per bushel. The grain of the North-west, not only the Canadian North-west, but a great portion of Minnesota, ought to be carried to Montreal, because the route is much shorter than any other, and both the Canadian and United States governments have been trying to improve the water route. We have spent a large amount of money in our canals, and when the hon. gentleman says we are going to take trade from our own canals, it is not so—we are going to add to it. All the canals along the St. Lawrence route below Toronto will get the additional grain trade which will be diverted that way. Last year some 270,000,000 bushels of wheat were shipped by way of New York, and only some 40,000,000 bushels by way of Montreal. With the advantages we have in the St. Lawrence route, we should bring a large portion of that 270,000,000 bushels to Montreal.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—No doubt you would get it this year.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—If we consider the distance, it will be found that the proposed route will bring us 550 miles nearer the seaboard than the route via New York. Another reason why we should afford facilities for the purpose of getting the grain trade turned in the direction of the St. Lawrence is, Montreal is 300 miles nearer to Liverpool than New York is. That is another advantage in favour of the St. Lawrence route. Last year Manitoba had 25,000,000 bushels of grain to export, and only a portion of that came from Montreal, although a large portion of the grain that came to Montreal was shipped from Chicago to Parry Sound and thence to Montreal. A large portion of our grain went by Buffalo and New York to the seaboard. That should not be. We should keep the carrying trade of our own grain. I have paid some attention to this subject, because we in the west are not so much interested in the number of railways and the protection of vested interests as in securing lower rates, and we have every reason to believe, if this charter was granted, our grain would be carried by the water route, and the rate on grain would be materially reduced. It is claimed by exporters that it will be reduced some four cents on the hundred, and that it will help not only the North-west, but will divert some of the grain trade from United States ports to Canadian ports. The vested rights referred to as the reason for rejecting this Bill are vested rights not granted by the parliament of Canada at all, but by the province of Ontario to a company which has only local powers, and has not any possible chance of carrying out a scheme such as the one before us. There is no bonus given this road at present. It will be for the parliament of Canada to decide whether it shall grant a bonus or not. So far as I am concerned, in the interest of our own people, I would be quite prepared to support a bonus, but, at the present time that does not enter into consideration. The only reason that has been advanced against this Bill for the rejection of it is the fact that some people of the province of Ontario have had a charter for some years and their rights should be protected. There is no reasonable opposition to this Bill from the people of Toronto, Hamilton, Collingwood or anywhere else. I have in my possession some petitions in favour of this Bill from the Board of Trade of Toronto, the Board of Trade and the City Council of Hamilton, from Collingwood, and all the parties interested in the construction of this railway, and, forsooth, the Railway Committee reports that because some gentlemen who hold a charter from the province of Ontario come before them and say they have vested rights, we are to reject this Bill. They quote this charter from the province of Ontario granted in 1892. The same gentlemen are connected with the scheme of the ship railway some twenty years ago. But they changed it and got a railway charter from Ontario in 1892. They did nothing with it until it was about to expire, and then got it renewed, and they have only some maps and plans to show. To hold up such a scheme as this simply because these gentleman have had a charter for eight or ten years, it appears to me would not be acting in the best interests of the people of Canada. I hope that the good sense of this Chamber will see fit to refer this report back to the Railway Committee for the purpose of further considering it, and I would hope that the interests referred to by the hon. gentleman from Sarnia might be considered. If these gentlemen have spent money in making surveys, or otherwise, which the committee think should be reimbursed by this new company, there would be time to consider that, but the company he refers to have not the means to carry out the scheme. The matter ought to be well considered, and if time is given probably a solution might be arrived at, and the interests of the gentlemen referred to might be protected.

THE MINISTERIAL CRISIS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Could the hon. Minister of Justice give us any information relative to the British Columbia imbroglio ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I do not know whether there is any imbroglio in British Columbia or not, but I think I can give the hon. gentleman the information which he desires. I have the honour to inform the House that, for reasons which are well known to the public, but which will be officially communicated to the House under section 59 of the British North America Act, it has pleased His Excellency the Governor General to remove the Honourable Thomas R. McInnes from the office of Lieutenant-Governor of the province of British Columbia. It has also pleased His Excellency the Governor General to appoint the Honourable Sir Henri Gustave Joly de Lotbinière as Lieutenant-Governor of the province of British Columbia. It has further pleased His Excellency the Governor General to appoint the Honourable Michel Esdras Bernier, member for the electoral division of St. Hyacinthe, a member of the Queen's Privy Council, and Minister of Inland Revenue.

GRAIN INSPECTION DISTRICT OF MANITOBA BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resumed in Committee of the Whole, consideration of Bill (141) 'an Act respecting the grain trade in the inspection district of Manitoba.'

(In the Committee.)

Subsection 3, of clause 34,

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—When the grain is placed in a country elevator, it is placed there for a certain number of days, and the elevator company charges so much for cleaning and elevating the grain and keeping it stored there a certain number of days. According to this clause, the elevator company might ship it down to a terminal elevator at any time. Does the clause provide the number of days they can keep the grain ?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—A provision of this kind is necessary in this Bill. A country elevator might be filled with two or three farmers' crops, and would not be useful to any other person, so long as that grain remained in that elevator, and the warehouseman has the right, under this clause, to ship the grain out of his elevator to a terminal point, just as soon as his elevator is getting filled up, and he requires space to accommodate some other customers. The object of this clause is to enable an elevator man to continue his business and not to have his elevator filled up with grain. If the grain is shipped to Fort William, the owner does not suffer, so long as he intended to ship it there himself. He does not suffer from increased charges. This provision enables them to clear the elevator and leave space for other parties. The strongest objection to the clause is to the last sentence, which reads :

Such country elevator or warehouse operator, on so forwarding such grain shall, without delay, notify in writing the owner of such grain of such forwarding.

There may be some little difficulty there, but I do not anticipate it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The ultimate object of the grain is to get forward. It is no use at the country elevator, and it is only sent on its way to market.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The difficulty is in notifying the owner. It changes hands sometimes.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They will notify the owner as far as they can.

Hon. Mr. POWER—We might add 'If known.'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The person depositing the grain is supposed to be the owner, so far as the warehouseman is concerned.

The subclause was adopted.

On subsection 5,

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—In the case of grain in a special bin, there may be an agreement with reference to the insurance.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—If there is no special agreement, is he relieved ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no. The insurance clause is general.

The subclause was adopted.

On clause 36,

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Last session, in the General Inspection Act, we passed a section which reads as follows :

15. Whenever there shall arise a difference of opinion between any farmer selling wheat and any wheat buyer as to the grading of such wheat, the farmer will take the price offered for his wheat as of lower grade on a sample being selected and agreed on between buyer and seller, which sample shall be parcelled and sealed and sent to the chief inspector at Winnipeg, and the said chief inspector shall grade the said wheat without delay, and make a return of his grading to both parties, and if the said chief inspector finds the said wheat to be of a higher grade than that on which the price had already been paid, and that which should have been paid in the first instance had the grade afterwards fixed by the chief inspector been agreed upon at the time of sale.

I am correctly advised, that clause has worked satisfactorily. No objection was found to the mode of operating last session, and therefore I do not know for what reason a change has been made.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I think, myself, the sample three quarts is too small.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—It says: 'Not less than three quarts.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Clause 36 provides for two things. It provides, where a difference of opinion prevails, for an arrangement such as is indicated in section 15, for not only fixing the grade of the grain, but the dockage. If this works satisfactorily in the grading I do not see why it should be referred to in clause 36. If it works satisfactorily, it should not be disturbed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This 36th clause is wider in its application. It applies to every one, whether he is a farmer or not.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I propose striking out the grading in 36, and leaving it to apply only to dockage, leaving the grading to be settled under section 15 of the Act of last year. Now, one of the reasons that prompted me to make that change is this : I find in section 9, if there is a disagreement between the farmer and the elevator man as to the amount of dockage, the farmer can accept his money for the reduced amount, allowing the grade to prevail according to the opinion and judgment of the elevator man. His samples goes down, and if it appears that the farmer has been underpaid by the grade being reduced below its proper standard, then the elevator man is bound to account to the farmer for the additional amount.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Will the hon. gentleman state what is to be done about the price of the grain while this inquiry into the correct dockage goes on ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Section 15 of the general Act provides that, so far as the grading is concerned, the farmer shall be paid. He accepts his money under protest.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Should not the farmer repay the elevator man if he happens to have graded the wheat too high and pay too much for it ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Such a thing has never occurred. The elevator man has always docked more than he should.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It may be that the section in the Act of last year has been satisfactory, and will work satisfactorily. If that is the case, I would suggest to the hon. gentleman it should be embodied in this Bill. The Bill is supposed to embody in a convenient state all legislation with respect to this grain trade. Who would know, on picking up this Bill, that he has to refer to an amendment to the General Inspection Act of last year ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The clauses of the General Inspection Act are enforced.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The farmer and dealer in grain in the west ought to have the whole law relating to the grading and inspection of grain in one Act.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is this difference between the two, as I read them. The amendment to the Bill introduced last year made that provision so as to protect the farmer in his dispute with the grain speculator. It has worked well. As I understand, the hon. gentleman from Monck asked in case the farmer contends that his grain is No. 1, and the purchaser that it is No. 2; the farmer gets paid for No. 2, and on the report of the inspector he is to be paid additional if it is tested No. 1, but the farmer keeps his money if it is decided that the grain is No. 3. It is right enough, because the purchaser is the one who grades the grain himself.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He is the judge.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—He says it is only No. 2, while the farmer says it is No. 1. Afterwards if it is found to be No. 3, the elevator man has to abide by the decision. This clause, as it stands, applies to the purchaser as well as to the farmer. The section of the Inspection Act read by the hon. Secretary of State confined its operation exclusively to the farmer. Let us put it this way. Supposing A B buys from a number of farmers a lot of grain, and puts it in his warehouse. He wants to sell it, and a dispute arises between the owner of the grain and the purchaser. Now, why should not that purchaser be placed in the same position as the farmer when he sells it ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If the hon. gentleman will read the clause he will see that it refers to the same person—to the man who delivers the grain to the elevator.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is no distinction of that kind in this Bill. In section 15 which has been read, it confined it to the farmer and the purchaser.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—And this does practically too.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But it does not actually do so. Suppose a man goes into court and a lawyer says ' this does not apply, you are not a farmer, you are not selling the product of your soil, you are selling products which have been already sold to you by a farmer.' I do not know what lawyers would decide, but common sense would teach me that the provisions of the section in the law now on the statute-book are for the farmer alone, while this extends to every one. I am not going to urge that point. I merely point it out, but I am strongly in favour of the suggestion of the hon. gentleman from Halifax, that all acts of parliament, as far as it is at all practicable, should be embodied in this Bill, so that when the farmer and the purchaser have the Bill before them they will not have to refer to half a dozen Acts. I had a good deal to do in the amending of the Customs Act, imposing duties, and I found that not only the best way, but the only safe way for the officers and those who have to put the Act in operation, was to repeal the section in the old law and re-enact it with the amendments. I think if the hon. Secretary of State had any experience in that regard it would agree with me.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Adverting to the first resolution, just note clause 36, which reads :

In case there is a disagreement between the purchaser or the person in the immediate charge of or receiving the grain——

That is, either the owner or the operator.

—and the person delivering the grain at such elevator.

That is, either the farmer or some one representing the farmer. They are practically the same. The General Inspection Act embraces no less than nine pages. It may be all very well in printing it in pamphlet form to print the other Act in connection with this, but it would be no use to embody one single section of it, because there are a number of other sections which affect the buying and selling of grain.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I wish to call my hon. friend's attention to one important difference between the Act of last year, section 15, and the clause we are now considering. I agree with the hon. gentleman that section 15 of last year seems to be a very reasonable section, and I am glad to hear from my hon. friend to my right (Mr. Perley), as well as from the hon. Secretary of State, that it has worked well. This clause we have now before us extends somewhat the same provision to the question of dockage, as was done last year in the question of the grading of wheat, but the section in the Bill of last year provided that the farmer should be paid for his grain at the time the transaction took place at the rate paid for it on the basis of the grade that the purchaser should fix, and then, if it proved to be of a higher grade, he would be paid the difference. I think this provision with regard to the dockage should be the same, that if a dispute arises with regard to the dockage, the purchaser should pay on the basis of his own proposition, and if the dockage was found to be different, that he should make good the difference, because if you do not make that provision, while the wheat is moving away from the terminal point, where is the money to be ? The farmer is not paid for his grain and the purchaser may not be solvent. There may be a great many difficulties in the matter. The price the purchaser offers after the dockage should be paid up to that point, and the only point in dispute would be the difference.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I do not think there would be any trouble such as is suggested by my hon. friend opposite. In practice the farmer would be paid the price per bushel that was agreed upon before this disagreement took place, and this Bill has been framed altogether in the interest of the parties, and we all heartily agree with that phase of the legislation. This clause is much stronger than the one that was in the Bill of last year in one respect particularly, and, if I gather correctly the meaning of the section in the Bill of last year, it provides that where a dispute arises the sample must be agreed upon betwen the parties.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—This clause provides that where a farmer and elevator man disagree, either of them, or both of them, may send a sample to the inspector. Supposing under section 15 of last year's Act, the farmer and elevator man cannot agree upon the sample, there is a difficulty which might arise, but under this Bill, if the elevator man refuses to send the samples, as I take it, the farmer can send one, and upon the sample that the farmer sends, the inspector is justified in giving his opinion, and that opinion is final. There is that difference between the two. If they do not agree upon the sample, the two parties to the transaction will send a sample, and the inspector will base his opinion upon both. There is, no doubt, an advantage in having all the legislation which deals with this subject in one Act, if it is possible, and every elevator and warehouse and any place where they are doing business in grain after the passing of this Act, should have a copy hung up where any one can have free access to it at any time, and the farmer can find all the provisions governing the handling of grain in one Act, as has been suggested by the hon. leader of the opposition. But the difference between the two is, that this Bill is far stronger than the Act of last year in favour of the producer in the matter of samples and sending away the samples.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—If a farmer brings in fifty bushels of wheat, the purchaser can pick the worst sample he can find and the farmer must abide by that. If I come in with a load of wheat, a man comes up to me, and it is his privilege and right, to all intents and purposes, to pick out a handful of my wheat and take that sample, whether it is good or bad. It is his privilege to pick the worst sample he can get and nobody can say anything about it. I bring in my wheat all together. I cannot bring in one bag of good wheat and then another bag of bad. Let the purchaser take the sample out of the poor bag. I do not object to his taking any sample for grading. I, on one occasion, brought in a load of wheat, the first I had ever sold in the North-west Territories. I had cleaned it well the day before, turned the handle myself, and it was well done too. I turned it very fast. I worked hard at it and cleaned it well. It was the first load of grain sold off the Perley farm at Wolseley. I resoved to sell it for No. 1 or not sell it at all. I was not going to hand down a record to my boys that the first grain off the Perley farm was graded as No. 2 or No. 3. I thought it was good, and it was good. I said to my man, 'John, bring that load down to the market in the morning, and drive it up in front of the hotel, and I will be there when you arrive.' I took some of the wheat in my pocket, and before John turned up in the morning showed it to a dealer, who refused to purchase on that sample. When John arrived with the load I said to the man: 'You refused to buy my wheat according to the sample I showed you last night. Go and look at my wheat now; it is here.' There was only one buyer there, and his name was Maclennan; he was from Montreal, a nice respectable man. He opened the top of the bag and examined it, and was a long time about it. I was annoyed over it, he took so long. He said: 'Senator, your wheat is not as good as I thought it was; it will only grade No. 2.' I said: 'The blooming inspection is a fraud; that is good wheat, and you are taking advantage of me.' And I said to him: 'If that wheat weighs sixty pounds to the bushel you will give me the price of No. 1, and if it does not, I will take it home and feed it to the pigs and make pork of it. If it weighs over sixty I said, I want you to grade it as No. 1 extra and give me 64 cents.' He said he would do that. He had no tester, and he sent and got a bushel measure. I weighed myself on the scales in a store and went to the elevator scales and weighed myself again, to see if the scales were accurate. I said: 'Take off the bag which you say is No. 2 and test it.' He took the bag and tested it. He used the bushel measure first, and took it out as carefully as he could, to get as little as he could, and it weighed 62½ pounds, and he gave me 64 cents for it, and did not say anything more about it. Of course, it is right to take the worst bag. If you have one good bag and one bad one, it is right to take the bad sample. I concede that right to the purchaser. In this case there is no necessity for them agreeing upon a sample; let the buyer pick the poorest, and if I am fool enough to mix my grain, I have a right to suffer by it.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—When a farmer delivers a load of grain, the average sample should be taken, and that is the practice.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is what this law provides.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There is great force in what the hon. gentleman from Halifax says, that it would be desirable to have all the law on this subject in one enactment, and I would suggest that the hon. Secretary of State might hold this clause over, and see whether it could not be all incorporated in this Bill, and make the provision that is now under consideration as much in the interest of the farmer as the other one was, and I think it ought to provide that payments should be made for the grain at the rate of dockage proposed by the buyer at the time of the transaction, so that the farmer would be paid, and the only question would be the difference between the offer and the amount the farmer was to receive.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There are in the Inspection Act some 20 sections. That Act goes by itself. It may be attached to this when it is printed and sent out by the department.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The Inspection Act affects everything, does it not?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, it is a very long Act, and the proper way would be to have it printed in pamphlet form and attach the two together. The question before the committee is my suggestion of allowing section 15 to prevail and strike out the word 'grade' wherever it occurs, and limit the section to dockage. Is that the opinion of the House?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I think you had better leave it as it is. It is more in favour of the farmer than section 15 of the Act of last year.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Would the hon. member from Wolseley explain?

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—A farmer brings a load of wheat to market. It is dumped into the hopper. Everybody knows that the light seeds and foul grain float on top and the heavier seeds go to the bottom, and a man could take out of it three quarts of very inferior grain, and would not have a fair sample of the quality of the wheat at all. But if he simply picks out a handful he is not able to select the inferior wheat. It will do all right for the dockage, and even in that it will give an unfair advantage to the millman, because you sometimes find the whole face of a granary black with buckwheat and stuff, and the shrunken kernels of grain will be on top. If I were buying I would skim them off, because they all work to the top. The section in last year's Act is right and fair to the seller, but if you take out three quarts for dockage, it gives an advantage in favour of the buyer. I can skim grain off the top and show a poor sample of the whole bin. Everybody knows that the light grain floats on top, and the heavy goes to the bottom. Therefore I say the section of last year's Act is all right. They have no cleaners at the Lake of the Woods Company's warehouse, and it is a very dangerous way of making the sample for the farmer, because it is in their power to select a very inferior sample when they select from the top.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—What my hon. friend has said in reference to the practice at a country elevator——

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Do not tell all the practices that prevail at country elevators.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—My hon. friend suggests that this clause in the Bill before us is not so stringent in its provisions as section 15 of the Inspection Act, and I would gather from his remarks that he imagines that in this amendment only the buyer has the right to select the sample which is to be sent to the inspector, and points out that the buyer would select a dirty sample, and subject him to a greater amount of dockage than the average would warrant. If I read this section correctly, the meaning is that the buyer has only the right to select one sample. The farmer, or whoever is selling the grain, whether he be a farmer or not, has a right to select a sample as well and send it to the inspector. Remember that all this occurs after they fail to agree on the dockage and fail to agree on the grade. There is no way they can settle the grade in case of disagreement, except by the inspector. But this Act provides that a testing sieve shall be used where grain is weighed before cleaning, and this testing sieve is found to be a proper way of testing the grain. If I understand the practice correctly, the inspector fixes the percentage of dirt in the car-loads. When he inspects the car, he fixes the amount of dirt that is necessary to remove to clean the grain. All this cleaning and testing that is done previous to sending away the samples, is done in the presence of the purchasers and sellers, and our farmers will not allow the grain men to pick the dirtiest samples, but will see that justice is done in that respect. It is only in case this fails that this remedy is placed in his hands. Take the sample as directed in the clause, and if the elevator man refuses to take the samples, the inspector decides on the sample sent by the farmer, and that sample alone. He gives a judgment upon that, and by that judgment the elevator man is bound. As far as the payment is concerned, there is a clause that provides that as soon as a load of grain is weighed, the farmers must get a ticket for it. That ensures payment. If he has a cash purchase ticket, he goes away and gets paid. Where a dispute arises, the elevator man must pay for the grain and at the rate settled by the inspector.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman might have gone a little further. Under the section in the old Act, apparently there is nothing to compel either one or the other to agree. It provides that in case the price offered for the wheat is the price of a lower grade than that to which, in his opinion, it belongs, he may insist on a sample being selected and agreed upon between buyer and seller. Supposing the seller declines to agree, there is nothing to compel him to do it. The clause provides that the sample selected shall be put in a parcel and sealed. That is a parcel which has been agreed upon, but either the purchaser or farmer do as they like about agreeing. What is to be done if they do not agree? This new clause provides that if the buyer declines to select the sample, the farmer insists upon it, and if there is a disagreement as to samples, the farmer makes his selection and the purchaser makes his selection, and they are both sent to the inspector, and I suppose the practical operation would be that they would mix the two samples together and test it. That seems to be common sense.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Yes, the inspector would do it.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Who pays the thirty cents for the dockage ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not know anything about that. I think the new clause is very much better.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think the clause is open to the objection urged against it, because the farmer may insist upon the sample being sent on. There is no qualification whatever. He has a right to send it on to the chief inspector.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The famer may insist upon it and the purchaser may refuse : what happens then ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Then he commits an offence under the Act.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is for the House to say whether they will adopt the suggestion made.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We will accept your suggestion.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I think we should pass this clause as it appears here. It appears to me the arguments here must show that it is in favour of the farmer more than the section in the Inspection Act, and is a well thought out clause and will answer all purposes, because if they do not agree, each party can select three quarts and send it to the inspector, and he will mix them up. One will take the worst and the other the best, and the inspector will strike an average. It appears to me it is a good clause, and will work out to the entire satisfaction of the buyer and the seller.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—So far as the grading is concerned, the section of last year's Act is all right. There has not been a single fault found with it. Both appeared to do what is right. If you undertake to have a sample of three quarts you cannot have a fair sample. This Bill is entirely right, and I say on behalf of the poor man, if you place him in the hands of one of those men, he can do what he likes with him. I am giving the advantage to the elevator men. If the grain is bad he can take a poor sample and send it down. I was in the grading office last year, and what did I find? All the samples were in small envelopes, and the man graded from those samples.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Last year was a very favourable year.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It would be easy to meet the difficulty by adopting this clause exactly as it is and repealing the section in the Act.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If you adopt clause 36 as it stands in the Bill, you override practically the legislation of last year. That is the reason I call attention to it.

The committee divided on the amendment to strike out the reference to grading, which was adopted : contents, ten ; non-contents, seven.

The clause as amended was adopted.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I now come to a clause to which there is some opposition. I propose to insert as 37*a* a new clause. A very considerable number of representatives in the House of Commons from the North-west—perhaps not all, but a very large majority of those who profess to understand this subject—were of the opinion that a very great wrong was being done by this dockage. This question of dockage was the prominent one which attracted the attention of the inspectors who were appointed to inquire into this question. They set out in the first instance the principle that the grievances that prevailed were that the vendor of grain is at present, subjected to an unfair and excessive dockage at the time of sale. In a number of cases they refer to it as a very serious grievance in the North-west and in Manitoba. I might read here a few paragraphs of the report, which would indicate the truth of the statement I have made, that the great grievance there was that under the system adopted the farmers was docked a much larger proportion of fair grain than was just and right. They say in one place here :

We have reason to believe, from the evidence, that in cases where elevator employees appear to have dealt unfairly with farmers, the elevator owners have not profited thereby, as it has been shown that employees have in some instances not accounted to the owners of their elevators for all the grain taken in by them. There has been no evidence to show that any elevator owners have been consenting parties to any acts of extortion. In view of the above, however, we think it would improve matters very greatly if elevator and warehouse operators, as well as elevator and warehouse owners, were compelled to give security for the proper performance of their duties as such.

Then in another case :

While the evidence taken leads us to believe that from a number of the causes above given, farmers have in many cases been overdocked, and have realized less than they should have, it also shows that since the privilege has been extended to farmers themselves to load cars and ship direct, they have realized not only in that way, but from elevator operators better proportionate prices than they previously got.

Now, I maintain that this loading in flat warehouses—loading on car from the wagon or any other unscientific way is wasteful, because a large amount of time is lost, and it is quite ineffective. There seems to be some strong reasons why farmers should insist upon flat warehouses, or depart from disposing of their grain through elevators. To my mind it is the strongest evidence the farmers have that they have not been well treated by the elevator men, and it has given rise to the complaints which led to the inquiry to which I have referred. Other paragraphs appear in this report, all written in the same spirit, that a feeling of very great unrest exists in the North-west, because the farmers believe, under the present system, they are not getting fair play, and it is highly desirable that feeling should be removed. In the opinion of many representatives of the North-west, they thought all elevators should be forced to put in grain cleaners and clean the grain for the farmers at the time it was sold and weighed. The proposition seemed a reasonably fair and proper one, but the answer of the elevator men was this: Our elevators are not equipped for that purpose; it would cost a good deal of money to do it, and we think that fair play can be shown by the methods now used, using a sieve. Of course, the sieve can only be a very partial standard as to the quality of grain or its cleanliness, because the sample will not always represent the whole body of the grain. I realize that. Therefore, I was not prepared, although I was asked, to submit to the consideration of the Senate this proposition, that hereafter all the elevators should be provided with apparatus for cleaning the grain. Some are so provided, but was not prepared to submit to the Senate a proposal of the kind at this time, but I said I had no objection to a modified proposal which I think would be fair and just, and would not entail in any sense loss or inconvenience on the elevator men at the present time. Therefore, I propose that wherever the elevators at present in operation have facilities for doing it—wherever they are equipped with cleaners, they ought to be obliged to clean the grain and account to the farmer for the difference between the clean grain and the screenings and its charges. That struck me as so eminently fair and just that although a good many representations have been made that justice will be done to the farmer without having recourse to that, it has been argued that it will be inconvenient—will take more time—that farmers come up with their sleighs in the winter and there will be considerable delay if the grain has to be cleaned and weighed and the net result handed out to the farmer. I said let it be done, not in all cases, but wherever requested. If the farmer and the grain elevator men or purchaser—and I believe most of the purchasers own the elevators—fully agree among themselves they can dispense with the cleaning. But if they cannot agree, does it not seem that the principle we apply to every other line of life should prevail, that as between buyer and seller, the quality and the quantity should be actually decided by the means the law lays down. We lay down very strong rules here for weighing and measuring in all other matter, and while wheat which is a cash article, should be omitted from the category of articles where accurate weight must be ascertained, I fail to appreciate or understand. I think it is of the highest importance, between the buyer and seller, that the grain should be cleaned and the net weight of the wheat given, so that the farmer would know that he was not being defrauded. In fact, from the general discontent that has prevailed, I think that this House ought to accept the proposition which I propose to lay before them. I have modified it very much from what I first intended, but I am content to modify it still further if necessary. It is headed 'clauses applicable to elevators equipped with grain cleaners.' In these elevators, where they are already equipped with the grain cleaners, after the farmer sells the grain, the grain is cleaned, but they say we can do it at our convenience when the rush of business is not as great as at other times. I do not think that is a legitimate or honest excuse. In the State of Minnesota adjoining, where the volume of wheat is much larger than in the North-west, the country elevators are not provided with gain cleaners. Everything is sent on to the terminal elevator. The farmer and the purchaser make the agreement between themselves. If either is dissatisfied, the consignment goes on to the terminal elevator, and it is there finally settled and adjusted. There is no proposal for any similar system being carried out in Manitoba and the North-west, and therefore, I think, to solve this question, that the proposal I am submitting to the House is one which would receive unanimous approval.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Why does the hon. gentleman not include elevators hereafter built ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think there is any objection, but I have been told by gentlemen deeply interested in the business, 'we accept your amendment, provided you strike that out.' Surely when elevators are going up, the cost is comparatively small to put in cleaners.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—How much would they cost ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I saw a letter from a manufacturer in which he offered to deliver F.O.B. on the cars at Woodstock, or some western point, for $150, cleaners that would clean 1,000 bushels an hour guaranteed. Now, I think where the interests at stake are so very large, that the cost ought not at any time to be a barrier to the proper carrying on of a business of the importance of the grain trade. We want the farmer to believe he is getting fair play. He may not have been robbed to the extent he believes, but witnesses came up and showed conclusively that they have been docked most reasonably in the past. Here are some instances where they had weighed the grain, and received a certificate for it before they took it to the elevator, and after it was weighed, they were told they were so many bushels short. They presented a certificate from somebody else. The reply, in such a case is, 'my employee is to blame.' I shall speak to the man about it, and he shall be reprimmanded.' Somebody must be responsible, or you must adopt some machinery to prevent fraud. In this age of the world you cannot permit anything of the kind to continue.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I appreciate all that the hon. Secretary of State has said. I think that it would be unfair to the elevator men who now have elevators without cleaners in them to force them to make changes in order to clean grain before it is weighed, it would be only fair to make builders of elevators in the future put in cleaners.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman can move an amendment if he desires. The paragraphs as originally framed were, first, to make it the duty of every elevator to clean grain. Second, all elevators hereafter shall have cleaners. Third, farmers interested in weighing grain shall have free access to the scales while grain is being weighed, and the nature of the cleaned grain and the screenings shall be stated. Now, I will take the sense of the House on the first of these paagraphs.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What is really before the House.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The first paragraph :

It shall be the duty of the owner, lessee or manager of every elevator now equipped with grain cleaners to clean the grain before it is weighed, if he is so requested to do.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I move to add the balance of the clause :

All elevators hereafter built shall be so furnished with grain cleaners as to clean all grain offered for sale or storage before it is weighed.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Settle one first and then try the other.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I have moved that the words I have read be added to the clause proposed by the hon. Secretary of State.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I stand in the same position to-day in this matter as I have on many others that have come before the House, where it is exceptional legislation. If the principal laid down by the hon. Secretary of State be correct for Manitoba, it must be equally correct, and just as forcible for every other portion of the Dominion. It is true that in Ontario—I am speaking of the part in which I live—a number of years ago, the product of the farm was exclusively grain, and it used to be brought into our town by hundreds of loads during the week. Of course that has changed, as far as that section of the country is concerned, because the agriculturists have devoted their attention and energy, and intellect I will add, to the dairy business, which has done away to a great extent with the production of grain, and more particularly the coarse grains which are now fed to their stock. But apart from having to dispose of their grain in that way, if this law be right and proper for Manitoba, and if it is necessary to compel those who buy from the farmers to do certain work in order to put the grain in a marketable condition, it is equally forcible for the farmer in Ontario or the maritime provinces where they produce grain. They produce large quantities in Prince Edward Island. Are we not adopting in this class of legislation too much of the socialistic idea? We have had the hon. Secretary of State, we have had the hon. Minister of Justice, we have had the whole party to which they belong condemning the former government because they advocated the principle of protection. They declared it to be paternalism which we were adopting in Canada, and taking under our special care and guidance every industry of the country. Why should we not carry this principle further? Why not pass a law to compel the consumers or the purchasers of grain to see that the farmer sows a clean and pure grain instead of having any defects in it? Why not go a little further, if we are to adopt this system of legislation, and compel the farmer to prepare his land in such a manner as to produce the best quality of grain? If it is right in the one case, it is just as much so in the other. I am not a farmer, although I did a little farming a great many years ago. Any one who has studied the question knows that the great secret in producing a crop is to prepare the land properly for it, and the earlier in the season it is prepared and the cleaner the land is when the grain is sowed, the probabilities are that the grain will be of a much better quality and much cleaner. Why not go the full length and say to the government that they shall have inspectors to go on to the farms and first see that the land is properly prepared for the reception of the grain and then let the grain that is sown be properly and correctly sown, and that it is of a good quality. My hon. friend says that is a good proposition. If it is good for the farmer, it would be equally good for the manufacturer of furniture.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—You would have to regulate the weather too.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We would have to go further and have the government regulate the weather, but I do not think even the most advanced socialist would propound a theory of that kind, because we know it cannot be done, but if we by law can compel a man who enters into the grain business and erects an elevator, to do the work in the manner in which we dictate and put in whatever cleaner we shall describe, and then before he dares to buy a pound of grain we must compel him to clean it, we might as well go that far. If we can compel them to do that, then we can compel the man who produces apples to sell only apples of a certain quality. We can then carry it to an absurdity and apply it to the shoemaker. If you take a pair of dirty boots to him, he will not mend them till you clean them. He will say 'clean those boots before I will mend them! You may say to him: 'There is a law to make you mend them, and I will compel you to do it.' It may be said that that is an absurd comparison, but the principle is precisely the same, and I do think that we are advancing so rapidly that by and by we will have to take under our special care the supervision by law of every industry in the country. If we are to do that, let us carry it to the fullest possible extent. I do not believe that any man when he comes to sell an article to me should be able to say to me 'you must put it in a marketable condition before you buy it.' I think that is a piece of tyranny rather than a protection to any class of people. It is all very well for the farmer to be told when he has a load of wheat. 'There is a pound or ten pounds of dirt in that,' and the farmer says: 'That is not true.' That is a matter between the buyer and seller. You have made a special provision for that in this law, and if the proposition made by the hon. Secretary of State to-day be carried out, you have to repeal section 15 of the Act, otherwise you would have, if not exactly conflicting clauses, a clause here providing for the very object which you have in view which would be nullified by carrying into force that which has been proposed by the hon. Secretary of State. If the farmer goes to the elevator man and says: 'I have a thousand bushels of wheat.' The purchaser says: 'There is so much dirt in it.' The farmer says there is nothing of the kind.' You have made a provision here to make a selection of it and you send it to the inspector to decide between the two. That is quite proper: I agree with that, because there is a board of arbitration at once introduced into the law, which board is supposed to do justice between the parties. But it is proposed to add to that. When there is a dispute between the parties the law says: 'You must clean the vendor's wheat.' The purchaser is compelled to clean it, and if it is clean the transaction can be completed. That is very fair, apparently, to the farmer, but I object to the whole principle. I think it is wrong. I am too conservative in my way of dealing between man and man to think that any government should step in and say you shall do that. The proposition made by the hon. gentleman from Wolseley involves this: if I think proper to enter into the business of purchasing grain, erect an elevator for my own convenience and for the convenience of carrying on that business, it shall be built in such a way and shall contain just such machinery as meets the views of the men from whom I am going to buy grain. That is the proposition. Why do not the government introduce another law providing how a man shall build his house and barn, and have the barn so built that the air shall pass through the hay mow and the stacks of grain so that there will be not deterioration? We might as well do that as do what is suggested. If the principle is to be adopted at all, let us have it in its entirety and then let the government say what kind of boots I shall wear and how they shall be made by the shoemaker. If the shoemaker declines to make them on a certain last, let the law step in and say: 'You shall make it on that last. That fellow has a crooked foot and you will have to fit him.' I know that I have been informed, whether it was for a purpose or not I am not prepared to say, that some of the large millers who buy for the purpose of grinding their grain were about giving orders for the erection of ten or fifteen elevators during the present summer in order to meet the requirements of the trade during the fall. They have stopped and have not advanced one step for the simple reason that they say it will add so much to the expenditure in the construction of these elevators that they cannot afford to do it. That is the position they have taken. Whether they will accept this modified form or not, I do not know, but I think the hon. Secretary of State has not advanced so far in the line he has indicated that he would advocate, on due reflection, the suggestion propounded by the hon. gentleman from Wolseley. I believe in all trades we should allow the manufacturer to deal with the purchaser in the ordinary mode of business and not to compel either the purchaser or the seller to do that which is unnecessary, except for the convenience of one particular class. I hold perhaps some strong views on this subject, but I have been confirmed in them on reading an interesting work written by Sir Henry Wrixon, who was one of the delegates at the colonial conference held here a few years ago, who gave this question of socialism and interference by governments in general trade in Canada and other countries special consideratoin. If the hon. Secretary of State will read that carefully he will not make such a proposition, as he has made to-day. I hope the Senate which is supposed at least to be a Conservative body, will never accept such a proposition.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman has made a plausible plea on behalf of the elevator men.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I deny that. Do not put it that way. I was speaking of the general principle and not referring to the elevator men.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman has drawn a parallel in which the conditions are by no means equal. In the province of Ontario and other provinces if a man has a load of wheat to sell, there are hundreds ready to buy it, but there is just the one man with the elevator who says: 'I will give you so much for your wheat and you may take it or take nothing.'

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The idea is rather to protect those 25,000 farmers against the rich elevator men——

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—The Krugers.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Who are getting the wealth of that country. That is just the question the Senate has to consider. The parallel drawn by the hon. leader of the opposition has no analogy whatever. The conditions are entirely different. The states of Dakota and Minnesota had to make special provisions for it. They are not allowed to sell a bushel of grain from the elevators in the country. It has all to go to the terminal elevators, and they detect whether there has been an over-dockage, and if there has been an over-dockage an investigation is held and they arrive at it in that way? The elevator man in the State of Minnesota is not permitted to retain an ounce of grain. He has to send it all to the terminal elevator and there the inspector detects whether there has been over-dockage. I will read the regulation affecting that. It is as follows:

By this system of reports, as prepared by Mr. Burdick, it is an easy matter to find out and compare the various results of the season's operations of one public country elevator or warehouse with that of all others at same point The average dockage and grade of one country elevator and the average dockage and grade given by the inspector should be about alike from one named country point, that is to say:

If the average dockage at a country elevator as shown by report of the inspector of public country elevators and warehouses for the season's operations was 25 ounces per bushel and the average dockage by inspector at terminal was 25 ounces per bushel and grade maintained, that would go to show that at that particular elevator the dockage was eminently very accurate, seeing that grain is not cleaned in the country elevators in Minnesota or Dakota.

If, on the other hand, the country public elevator's average dockage was 32 ounces and the dockage put on by inspectors at terminals was 16 ounces and the country elevator man's grades were maintained by inspector, it would then be necessary for the commission to inquire into the matter, as in that case the dockage would be excessive.

On December 29 we reached Minneapolis, where Mr. Bell and myself had interviews with several gentlemen connected with the grain and elevator trade, and to whose courtesy I am indebted for the following:

It appears that none of the public country elevators or warehouses in the states of Minnesota or Dakota clean their wheat, nor do they weigh their wheat out.

The idea of elevator owners not allowing their buyers at country points to weigh their wheat out, is for the means of acting as a check on the buyers so that they shall not by reason of docking too heavily, accumulate an 'overage' or surplus quantity of wheat over and above what the elevator books show, and, possibly, if the buyers so willed, ship the 'overage,' either in their own or someone else's name. I would also add that the elevator owners stated that the shipping wheat out of public country elevators as it was received in the elevator, and cleaning the same at the 'terminals' under state dockage and inspection, was considered by them the best system.

We cannot adopt that just now. We are adopting the next alternative. They protect the farmer by their system.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—How?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Because they do not allow a country elevator to ship any grain except to a terminal elevator. and the general average is taken of the amount sent out, and that is compared with the inspection that has been made locally, and where they have over docked, it is made apparent by the returns.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I want to know how the farmer is protected. A country elevator has purchased fifty thousand bushels. When it is sent to the terminal elevator it is tested and cleaned, in order that it may be in a proper state for shipment.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—And checked.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The farmer has sold his grain to the country warehouse and a hundred different farmers have stored their grain in the same place.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The books of the country elevator are compared with the books at the terminal elevators, as to the quantity of wheat cleaned and if there is an excess, it is apparent that there has been an over-dockage.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I want to arrive at an intelligent understanding of the matter. The hon. minister says the grain that is in a country warehouse is sent in bulk to the terminal warehouse. It is there cleaned for the purpose of shipment. Supposing the country elevator is represented to contain fifty thousand bushels. and it turns out they have cheated the farmers out of a thousand bushels, and when it reaches the terminal elevator there are fifty-one thousand bushels, how is the farmer to be recouped? The hon. gentleman says it is done for the protection of the farmer.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is done for the protection of the shipper.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The inspector is sent out to investigate the excessive charge.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The country warehouseman has purchased his grain from fifty or one hundred farmers, and the inspector is sent out to see whether there has been excessive dockage.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The farmers in Dakota and Minnesota are satisfied with the law as it works.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Why cannot the hon. Secretary of State stick to the point? Supposing it is found that the dockage has been excessive, how is the farmer to be reached when the inspector at the terminal point has decided that there has been too much dockage at the country elevator?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—An officer is sent down at once to that country elevator to inquire into it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And how does he know who of the hundred farmers has been over docked?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have not a statement of detail: I have a statement of fact. The farmers are satisfied.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But that is not the question. The hon. Secretary of State said it was for the protection of the farmer, and I want to know how. I am not taking what they say at all. I want to know how the farmer is to be reached. My hon. friend says the farmers in Minnesota are satisfied. My hon. friend says that my statement in reference to Ontario is not analogous to that of the other places—that there are fifty different buyers. I do not think the hon. gentleman has paid as much attention to that as I have. I know, in the city of Belleville they have grain buyers, and in the town of Trenton, ten miles west of Belleville, they also have buyers. There is another place just eastward, and these buyers combine. They control the market just as strongly, and just as improperly as any speculators can in Manitoba. It has been a constant complaint, and as a newspaper man I have published many an article condemning the manner in which these speculators and purchasers of grain have deprived the farmers of the proper grade of the wheat and proper prices. The same combination exists here as anywhere else, and the comparison is analogous.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL, from the committee, reported that they had made some progress with the Bill, and asked leave to sit again.

THIRD READING.

Bill (116) 'An Act to incorporate the Acadia Loan Corporation.'—(Hon. Mr. Power, in the absence of Hon. Mr. Allan.)

LAKE SUPERIOR AND HUDSON BAY RAILWAY COMPANY BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. POWER, in the absence of Hon. Mr. Watson, moved the second reading of Bill (124) 'An Act respecting the Lake Superior and Hudson Bay Railway Company.' He said: This is simply asking for a railway charter in the ordinary form. The company seek to build a railway from a point on the north shore of Lake Superior to a point on the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I daresay there are vested interests that will be seriously affected by the Bill, but we will let the committee decide as to that.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

SCHOMBERG AND AURORA RAILWAY COMPANY BILL.

ORDER OF THE DAY DISCHARGED.

The Order of the Day being called:

Second reading Bill (94) An Act respecting the Schomberg and Aurora Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Lougheed.)

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED said: I have not received such information as would satisfy my hon. friend from Monck as to this Bill, and the promoter of the Bill, whoever he is, has not seen fit to give me the information, and I therefore, move that the Order of the Day be discharged.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That kills the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If parties having Bills before parliament do not see fit to consult some hon. senator, and have him take charge of the Bill in the Senate, I have no solicitude for them, and I am quite willing that the Order of the Day be discharged.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned.

BRITISH COLUMBIA'S CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE REVENUE.

MOTION DROPPED.

The Order of the Day being called:

The Hon. Mr. Macdonald (B.C.)—

That he will call attention to the following statement of commerce and the revenue contributed to the Dominion treasury for the year ending June 30, 1899:

The shipping of the two largest ports in the Dominion are taken, Quebec and Montreal, to show how British Columbia stands by comparison. The tonnage of these two ports, with cargo and in ballast, in British, Canadian and foreign ships being 1,767,190 tons, and that of five ports in British Columbia 1,867,604 tons, which shows a difference in favour of British Columbia of 100,414 tons. The comparison of revenue is made between Nova Scotia and British Columbia as being the two provinces most similar in the natural products of the mine, forest and sea, but the former has three times the population of the latter:

Exports for the year ending June 30, 1899.

Nova Scotia—
Exports	$11,480,120
British Columbia—
Exports	$14,749,032

Difference in favour of British Columbia, $3,268,912.

Imports for the year ending June 30, 1899.

Nova Scotia—
Imports	$7,425,140
British Columbia—
Imports	$8,687,432

Difference in favour of British Columbia, $1,262,292.

Revenue from all sources for the year ending June 30, 1899.

Nova Scotia—
Customs duties	$1,350,284
Inland revenue	228,830
Post office	309,650
Commission, money orders	11,454
	$1,900,218
British Columbia—
Customs duties	$2,111,322
Inland revenue	520,787
Post office	242,355
Commission, money orders	13,648
Chinese tax	215,109
	$3,103,221

Difference of revenue in favour of British Columbia as against Nova Scotia, $1,203,003.

Another evidence of progress is the value of money orders issued in British Columbia for the year ending June 30, 1899, $1,633,143. Value of money orders paid in the same time, $754,329.

Attention is also called to the short-sighted policy of the government, and to its unfair and unjust treatment of British Columbia, a province which contributes more than three times per capita revenue than any province in the Dominion, and yet no return is made, or aid given for public improvements and the development of the country, such as the opening up of avenues of commerce, deepening and improving deep sea harbours and other such like works. The component colonies of the Australian proposed commonwealth stipulate that the larger part of the commonwealth revenue collected in the different colonies shall be returned proportionately to the respective colonies—a scheme to which the North American colonies were not alive at the time of their federation—it would have been a wise precaution if some of them had been alive to it. The government should, as an act of wise policy and as a matter of justice, deal in a fair spirit with so large a revenue-producing province as British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Stands.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—No, dropped. The hon. gentleman from British Columbia will not return this session.

The motion was dropped.

IRREGULARITIES IN PAYMENT OF FISHERIES BOUNTY IN P.E.I.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON rose to,

Call the attention of the Senate to irregularities and favouritism in the payment of fishery bounty cheques in Prince Edward Island, and will inquire what the government propose to do in the matter?

He said: It will be in the recollection of the House that during the last session of parliament I made some inquiries with regard to the distribution and payment of fishery bounties in the province of Prince Edward Island, more particularly in the

Tignish section. Further on, this subject engaged the attention of the Public Accounts Committee of the House of Commons, and I was requested by a member of that committe to furnish the Auditor General with the names of parties to whom, it had been alleged, cheques were given without having been earned by them according to the requirements of the statute. That was done, and it was understood, I believe, that the Auditor General was to institute an inquiry, which he is empowered to do under the statute, into the matter. I have not learned that anything of the kind was done, and it has now come to my knowledge, through correspondence I have had, that irregularities are still going on in the payment and distribution of these cheques. What I desire to-day more particularly to call the attention of the House is the partiality and favouritism exercised in the payment of these cheques. I am not touching now on the question which was before us last year with regard to whether these cheques were fairly earned or not, but I am referring to the payment to the parties claiming the bounties. I have some correspondence before me which seems to indicate that there was something wrong. It was a matter of complaint last year that these cheques, unauthorized by the payees, found their way into the hands of a person of the name of Dr. Wickham, of Tignish, and that when the parties applied for their cheques they were told that they were in the hands of Dr. Wickham, and they experienced a considerable amount of difficulty in getting them. I inquired in the House whether Dr. Wickham was an officer of the department, or whether he was entrusted with any duty whatever in connection with the distribution of these cheques, and the answer I received was that Dr. Wickham had no official relation with the Department of Marine and Fisheries. I find that is still going on, and I have some letters in my possession, which I propose to read to the House, to show that there is something wrong in connection with this matter, and that Dr. Wickham, to use the expression which I find in some of the letters, is running the fishery overseer, and the fishery overseer allows him to get possession of cheques to which he has no right whatever. The correspondence is between Mr. John Albert Brennan, a business man of Tignish, and Mr. Hardie, acting Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries. On April 10, Mr. Gourdeau, who was in Ottawa at the time, was written to by Mr. Brennan, and the following correspondence took place :—

Tignish, P.E.I., April 10, 1900.

F. Gourdeau, Esq.,
Deputy Minister Marine and Fisheries,
Ottawa.

Sir,—I desire to bring to your notice the manner in which I have been used by Mr. John Davison, the fishery bounty officer, and Dr. Wickham, of this place, with regard to cheques for bounty which I claimed. The facts are as follows: Joseph Rielly, a fisherman who had filed his claim for bounty last season, was obliged to go away, and before leaving gave me an order for his cheque. This man since then died in the hospital. When Mr. Davison came here to distribute the cheques a few days ago, I presented my order and was told by him that the cheque was given to Dr. Wickham, who had no authority to receive the same. I have, therefore, through the collusion of those parties, been deprived of this cheque, to which I am honestly entitled. I want to complain generally against John Davison and Dr. W. W. Wickham in connection with the distribution of bounty cheques this season. I have been caused great trouble in obtaining my rights in the matter of bounty cheques, and consider, in justice, the whole affair should be thoroughly investigated. With regard to Rielly's cheque, I still hold the department for it, and trust that you will see I obtain my just rights. As Dr. W. W. Wickham seems to have charge of the bounty distribution, and gives and withholds cheques at his pleasure without any authority whatever, the people here are naturally very indignant.

I may say that John Davison appears to be only a figurehead in the matter. I make those charges fully conscious of their gravity to officers of your department, and demand the fullest investigation. My legal rights in the bounty claim in question are beyond dispute.

Yours, &c.,

J. ALBERT BRENNAN.

Ottawa, April 24, 1900.

Sir,—In reply to your letter of the 10th inst., complaining that Mr. John Davison, the fishery officer for Prince County, refused to deliver to you the fishing bounty cheque of John Reilly, for which you say you hold an order from the payee, I may state that in withholding the cheque the officer was acting in accordance with his instructions, which prevent him from recognizing orders or assignments of any kind in the matter of the distribution of the bounty?

As an order conveys no authority to the person to whom it is given to endorse a cheque, the department cannot recognize your claim to Mr. Reilly's bounty.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

(Sgd.) JOHN HARDIE,
Acting Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

J. Albert Brennan, Esq.,
Tignish, P.E.I.

Tignish, P.E.I., May 3, 1900.

John Hardie, Esq.,
Acting Deputy Minister
Marine and Fisheries,
Ottawa.

Sir,—I am in receipt of your letter of 24th ult., No. 2370 F.B., having reference to my fishing bounty cheque, not paid, as you state, in accordance with the regulations governing the delivery of similar cheques at this place. I am surprised to learn that the officer's instructions from your department are not to deliver such cheques on an order from the payee, as he grossly violated the same in the delivery of cheques here. I may say that I have received a large number of cheques on orders both this season and last, and so much has this been the rule that every business man here received them under the same conditions. I do not complain at all at this manner of their disposition, as under the conditions prevailing here I believe this to be the most feasible way of delivering cheques.

What I do strongly object to is the fact that the cheque for which I had an order for money advanced to a sick man on his way to the hospital, and who died there, was delivered to Dr. Wickham, who had no order or other authority to receive the same. Another complaint I wish to make in this connection is that I held an order for the cheque of Mr. Laurence Gallant, of Tignish, and this cheque was also delivered to the aforesaid Dr. Wickham, who had no order and Mr. Gallant had great difficulty in finding Dr. Wickham and obtaining the cheque for me. This conduct of the official is evidently a flagrant violation of his instructions, as well as a great injustice to me. In view of the fact that the man Joseph Reilly is deceased, and I am the legally authorized person to receive the cheque in question, I must ask the department to forward me the amount. If you do not deem the above sufficient, I request an investigation by a responsible officer of the department, when I will substantiate all the statements herein made.

In this connection, I would suggest that Mr. A. Lord, agent of the department at Charlottetown, be appointed to investigate the matter.

I am, yours truly,

J. ALBERT BRENNAN.

Ottawa, May 14, 1900.

Sir,—I am to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 3rd inst., in which you ask to be paid the amount of James Reilly's fishing bounty for 1899, for which you hold an order from the payee.

In reply I have to state that as the order has no legal validity, the department cannot comply with your request.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

(Sgd.) JOHN HARDIE,
Acting Deputy Minister Marine and Fisheries.

J. Albert Brennan,
Tignish, P.E.I.

Tignish, P.E.I., May 26, 1900.

John Hardie, Esq.,
Acting Deputy Minister
Marine and Fisheries,
Ottawa.

Sir,—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of 14th inst., No. 2379 F.B., and am surprised at its contents. In reply to my letter of 3rd instant, you say that the order received by me from Joseph Reilly, since deceased, is not valid, and the department will not deliver me his bounty cheque. If my order is not valid, how can the department justify the handing over of this cheque to W. W. Wickham, who had no order from Joseph Reilly, or authority of any kind to receive it. As the legal representative of Joseph Reilly, I claim that I am entitled to his fishing bounty cheque for season of 1899, and before relinquishing my rights, I intend having the matter fully investigated. In my last letter to you, I charged John Davison with having paid this same W. W. Wickham several cheques without authority, and that the parties entitled to them had great difficulty in obtaining the same. It appears to me to be outrageous that the department should attempt to shield one of its officers in conduct of this kind. If, as you say, my order is not valid, how do you justify your officer in delivering cheques on similar orders, and as I have shown above, even delivering the cheques to W. W. Wickham without an order or authority of any kind. I have again to ask that you order an investigation into this matter by an impartial man, and see that justice is done. As a citizen of Canada doing business here, I claim this as a right, and trust the department will see that my claim is paid.

I am, yours truly,

J. ALBERT BRENNAN.

Now, I am not going to discuss the propriety of the instructions which, as alleged in these letters of the Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries, have been issued forbidding the overseer Davison to pay checks on the order of the payee, but what I wish to call the attention of members of the government and of this House to is this, the favouritism that seems to prevail, that these instructions which the deputy minister says have been given to this fishery officer, and I suppose to all fishery officers, are being violated by Mr. Davison, who not only violates them, but goes further and delivers checks to men who have no orders for them at all, and the parties who are entitled to them have great difficulty in getting them out of his hands. In the case of the man who is dead, and to whom this kindly act was done by Mr. Brennan, it is certainly a very great hardship and wrong. Of course, if this man Reilly, before he died, had given Dr. Wickham an order also, as well as an order to Mr. Brennan, it would have been a matter of choice, or of the first presentation, but it appears the department does not hold this check, it having been given by them to Dr. Wickham, who, it is alleged here, had no order for it at all, while professing to instruct the officer not to give those checks on anybody's order but only to the fishermen who had earned the money. This matter is,

I might say, creating a good deal of dissatisfaction in that part of the province, and is all the more likely to do so from the fact that Dr. Wickham has made himself notorious in conenction with the Pineau matter, as will be apparent to this House when the whole subject is laid before it, as it will be before long. It would seem that Dr. Wickham has got what they call a 'pull' and can get fishermen's checks and orders and the delivery of those checks is declined to the business man who kindly advanced the money to a sick man going to the hospital, and though he holds the order of this man for the cheque, it has not been given to him, but given to a man who had no authority to receive it, and who received it in violation of the instructions which the deputy minister says have been issued to him not to deliver cheques on orders.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—Does Dr. Wickham hold any official position ?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The answer I received last session was that he held no official position whatever in the department, in the distribution of bounty checks or fishery business.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It will be noticed that while my hon. friend says that the agent of the Fishery Department, Mr. Davison, handed over certain cheques to Dr. Wickham, he does not say that Dr. Wickham held those cheques as owner, and that he received payment thereof. The hon. member does not allege that Dr. Wickham was paid the amount of money to which the payee of the cheque was entitled, so it is impossible to say from what the hon. member has stated whether Dr. Wickham was simply acting as an agent of Mr. Davidson, or whether he was acting as the owner of the cheque. That information the hon. gentleman has not given, and so it is impossible for me to infer from what he said what Dr. Wickham's position in respect to the matter may have been; but hon. gentlemen will understand right well that where cheques are issued to fishermen, the department may find it necessary to make a regulation that they would pay only directly to the party entitled to receive the money, and that they would not pay upon his order to any other person whatever. Because that system, I believe, was introduced at a very early period by the department with respect to these cheques. It did not originate with the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries, as I understand, but was the practice of the department before he became minister. With regard to this matter, I may say the Department of Marine and Fisheries has received no complaints of irregularities and favouritism in the distribution of bounty cheques in Prince Edward Island, except in one case, where a man named Albert J. Brennan of Tignish—I suppose that is the party ?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Yes.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Albert J. Brennan, of Tignish, a merchant, complained because the fishery officer would not give him a certain fisherman's cheque on an order from the payee. The bounty officers are not authorized to accept orders for cheques. They are not recognized by the department, but are specially charged to deliver the cheques to the claimants. This cannot always be done by the officer personally, as fishermen are often absent when the distribution is made. In such case, it is usual to hand the cheques to third parties in the neighbourhood, chosen by the officer, to deliver them personally to those entitled to receive them. The doctor, to whom the hon. gentleman has referred, seems to be a party of this class. He is acting as agent for Mr. Davison, and holds the cheques to be handed over to the person entitled to receive them, and to no one else. It is perfectly clear what the practice of the department is, and it is perfectly clear, also why that practice was adopted almost from the beginning. It was to prevent a fisherman selling out, for a mere bagatelle, his interest, whatever it might be, and to see, as the bounty was a bounty under the law to the fisherman held entitled to receive it, that the money which that law intended to give him should be money paid into his own hands. That, I understand, is the policy, and always has been the policy of the department, and I think it is a policy which will commend itself to hon. gentlemen. I understand from the statement made by the hon. gentleman that there is no other complaint and none seems to have reached the department from Prince Edward Island except this one. That is the complaint of Mr. Brennan, and so far as Dr. Wickham is concerned, it is perfectly obvious, I think, to every hon. gentleman present in what capacity he received these cheques. Not as a person entitled to receive them, but as a person whom the agent of the government could trust to hand the cheques to those entitled to receive them in the locality, and as they state here, because the fisherman may be away at sea at the time the agent was present.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—I do not think the explanation given by the hon. Minister of Justice is very satisfactory to this House, and I do not think it will be satisfactory to the country. As hon. gentleman well know, fishermen, as a class, are poor people, and we know that medical men, as a class, give their services to every individual in the community whether they can pay for their services or not, a very commendable practise. No matter how poor an individual may be, when he requires the services of a doctor he can always obtain such services, and no doubt a number of these fishermen are indebted to Dr. Wickham, as they are to other parties, and it is giving to Dr. Wickham an unfair advantage to place these bounty cheques in his hands, although he is not authorized to endorse the names of the payees on them. Yet he holds these cheques and he goes to the debtor and says: 'Here is your bounty cheque. You owe me a great deal more than this and I want you to endorse this cheque over to me.' This is the position Dr. Wickham is placing the fishermen in that locality.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—What the hon. gentleman suggests is contrary to the rule laid down, and unless the hon. gentleman is speaking from his own personal knowledge that this has been done, I think he should not make the statement.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE -It is a very fair inference to draw from the statements already made to the House. Dr. Wickham has no more right to these bounty cheques than I have. A gentleman is employed to do that very work, and why did he not hold the cheques till the fishermen came for them? Are the fishermen so overburdened with money that they will not spare the time to go to the dispenser of cheques and collect their own money? I see it is rather a sore spot for the hon. Minister of Justice. He does not wish to hear the argument on this point. It is an unfair position for Dr. Wickham to be placed in. It is giving him an advantage that he has no right to have over other creditors in that locality. Here is a man by the name of Gallant. His bounty cheque was given to him after much difficulty. After Mr. Brennan had the order for the cheque, he could not get it from the officer. It was no good to Dr. Wickham until Gallant endorsed it, but as soon as Gallant endorsed it, the cheque became the property of Dr. Wickham. If the department want Dr. Wickham to do the work, employ and pay him, but when they have another individual employed, I think they should not allow any man to have such an undue advantage as Dr. Wickham has in these cases. Let the officer hold these cheques until the parties come for them. In this case, the party to whom the cheque was issued is dead. Who has any right to it? What right has Dr. Wickham to it? The only party who has any right to the cheque is the one who holds the order for it. I consider the legitimate owner, and the matter should lie between him and the heirs of the party to whom it was issued. These are the parties who have the right to that cheque and not Dr. Wickham, and the sooner the official in that locality is instructed to stop the practise complained of, the better it will be for the government and the country at large.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is a practical difficulty in doing what the hon. gentleman from Murray Harbour suggests. The government have not fishery bounty officers for every settlement. There is one officer who takes charge of a certain number of settlements, at least that is the practice in Nova Scotia—and he goes round and distributes the cheques to all the fishermen he can find at home who are entitled to cheques; and if there happen to be two or three fishermen absent, it is the most natural thing in the world that he should hand their cheques over to some reliable person to be by him handed to the fishermen when they return. The government officer cannot be continually running around and accumulating travelling charges against the government. As a matter of practical business, the way in which the thing is done is the best and cheapest and most expeditious way.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—I should like to ask my hon. friend from Marshfield whether this doctor is guilty of offensive partisanship on the right side.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I cannot hear what the hon. gentleman says. Dr. Wickham and Mr. Brennan live in the same village, which is the centre, no doubt, for distribution for that part of the country, the railway terminus at Tignish, and it would be quite as convenient to pass this cheque to Mr. Brennan as to give it to Dr. Wickham, and the fact of Mr. Reilly being dead would have been well ascertained. I cannot conceive for the life of me, in a case where the payee is dead, why this cheque should be handed to Dr. Wickham. The fact of his death was distinctly known at the time, and why this cheque belonging to a dead man should be handed to Dr. Wickman in any capacity, whether as creditor of a dead man's estate, without an order, or as agent of Mr. Davison, I cannot understand. But I want to direct the attention of hon. gentlemen to the fact that Mr. Brennan, in his correspondence, states that a large number of the cheques are paid to parties holding orders—that that is the practise which prevails, and that he himself and others doing business there acquired them in that way. They get the order and the cheque is delivered to them on that order, and although they cannot endorse it, when their customer or friend or whoever it may be comes in, the transaction is completed. The payee endorses the cheque and it is settled. But it appears that this rule is not one which is of general application: that is, that the cheque is not to be paid on order, for Mr. Brennan states distinctly—and I may say he is a highly reputable business man and makes this statement again and again in his letters to the department—that the practise has been there to deliver these cheques on orders. As to whether Dr. Wickham is acting as agent for Mr. Davison, or whether he is trying to collect his own dues or not, I have no personal knowledge. It may be that he is acting as an agent for the fishery officer, but I must say that if he is so acting that a great deal of feeling is entertained in that part of the country on account of these cheques being handed over to this man who is a very active political partisan.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think this House will be quite satisfied before very long that that gentleman is not at all above using these cheques for political purposes, or any other purpose that may strike him.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I think hon. gentlemen will see that the explanation given, accounts for the actual position of things, and that my hon. friend's observations were mere surmise, as are the observations of the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island who followed in the same line. The statement here placed in my hands by the officers of the department is a statement showing that the rule—and that rule is followed—is that the cheque is only paid—the hon. gentleman shakes his head, but he has not given a scintilla of evidence to the contrary—the cheque is only paid to the party to whom it is issued and not to any one else. The rule was adopted the very day after these cheques began to be issued, for the purpose of preventing them passing into the hands of parties who have paid next to nothing for them. It is not intended that a hotel keeper, for instance, should receive a cheque for a treat at the bar, but that the payee should be paid the face value of the cheque. Then, further than that, the hon. gentleman refers to Dr. Wickham. I have pointed out to the House that Dr. Wickham simply acted as agent for Mr. Davison, and was only given the cheques to hand to the fishermen in that locality when they happened to be absent from home at the time of his visit. That is what is done. Dr. Wickham has not been receiving these cheques as payment of any indebtedness to him. The hon. gentleman suggested that, but he does not say he knows of anything of the sort, and, on the contrary, he admits that he does not know, and when he does not know, he should not have made a suggestion of that sort. Then the hon. gentleman opposite, who has brought this motion forward, said that Mr. Brennan had received cheques before, that had been endorsed to him. If the hon. gentleman is speaking of his own personal knowledge, I must accept his statement, but I do not understand that he is so speaking. He is speaking of what has been told him.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I have been speaking of what Mr. Brennan says, that this has been the practice with himself and other business men.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—If that was done, the man would have been paid. I apprehend when the hon. gentleman pronounces the name Brennan, accenting the last syllable, that he is not acquainted with him, because he would not pronounce an Irishman's name in that way. I did not understand, from any papers which the hon. gentleman read, that Dr. Wickham had received these cheques in payment of any money due to himself.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Brennan's statement is that an exception was made against him in the case, and the practice has been to pay these cheques on orders, and he calls the attention of the department to it, and informs the department that he will prove these statemens if they will only send Mr. Lord up there. My hon. friend says that I have no knowledge of the man on account of the way I pronounce his name. In pronouncing Mr. Brennan's name, the accent is on the last syllable, and that is the way it is pronounced in that part of Prince Edward Island, where the people know as much about Irish names as the hon. member for Bothwell.

SCHOMBERG AND AURORA RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—A Bill from the House of Commons, respecting the Schomberg and Aurora Railway Company, was dropped from the Orders of the Day on Friday last. The hon. Mr. Lougheed, in my absence, asked for the discharge of the Bill from the Order paper, and for some reason it was struck out. I would ask the leader of the House to allow me to restore it to the Orders of the Day. It was done through an error of some sort. I therefore move:

That Bill (94) An Act respecting the Schomberg and Aurora Ry. Co., discharged from the Orders of the Day, on Friday last, be restored to the Orders of the Day and read the second time presently.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—My hon. friend from Brandon is a little in error as far as this Bill is concerned. On Thursday last the hon. gentleman from Calgary (Hon. Mr. Lougheed) moved the second reading of this Bill. I asked him to explain the Bill and, not being able to do so then, he put it on the Orders of the Day for Friday. On Friday he was not able to explain it, and he dropped the Bill. Some members said 'dropped' and he said 'dropped' also. I have no objection to the Bill going on the Orders of the Day again, but let us do it regularly. The hon. gentleman can give notice of motion for second reading to-morrow. I do not know by what authority it can be put in the Orders again, after the Bill has been dropped. When it comes up we may find something strange about it which will require an explanation, which I hope my hon. friend will be able to give.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—I have no objection to my motion standing as a notice.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The proper form of notice would be that the order of Friday be rescinded, and that the order be restored to the paper.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—I do not understand on what authority the Bill has been struck off the Order paper.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—A custom has prevailed to a certain extent, and become more general than it ought, of Bills coming up from the House of Commons without instructions to any one in this Chamber. A Bill appears on our Order paper in some person's name, there are no instructions about it. That was the case with the hon. gentleman from Calgary, in whose name this particular Bill appeared. He said he knew nothing about it. No one from the House of Commons had given him any information, and we thought it desirable that a lesson should be administered to those having charge of Bills, and so this Bill was dropped.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I remember distinctly how this happened. The hon. gentleman from Calgary had charge of the Bill, and he deferred consideration of it, owing to a request of the hon. gentleman from Monck for an explanation. It was left over more than once waiting for some one interested in the Bill to give the necessary information. When it came up once more on Friday, he was still not supplied with any information that he could present to the House, and he moved that the Order of the Day be discharged, and the order was discharged accordingly. It had, therefore, no right to appear again, and I do not know how it was printed in the orders to-day, because it had no right to appear again.

Hon. Mr. POWER—In the first place the Bill was improperly placed in charge of the hon. gentleman from Calgary. It should have been placed in charge of the hon. gentleman from Brandon. The statement made by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield is substantially correct; but I might say that I took occasion, when the hon. gentleman from Calgary spoke of having the order discharged, to suggest that a better way would be to let it stand until to-day, and then we might have further information. Notwithstanding that, the hon. gentleman from Calgary moved that the order be discharged. The course indicated by the hon. gentleman from Monck is, I think, the strictly regular one. The hon. gentleman from Brandon gives notice now, that he will move that the motion for the second reading be placed on the Order paper.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—He should also move that the motion to discharge the order be rescinded. There should be a clear day's notice.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I understand that when an order is discharged it means that it is laid on the Table and can be taken up at any time.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The motion was that the Bill be discharged from the Orders of the Day.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I remember distictly what was said. The hon. gentleman from Calgary said 'dropped' and the Bill was dropped. What I want to know is how the clerk put that order on the paper as appearing in the name of the hon. gentleman from Brandon? How are you going to keep our proceedings right if members of this House can go to the clerk and get things changed to suit themselves? I am surprised to see this order on the paper again. Had the hon. member from Calgary said at the time 'I am not ready to go on with this to-day; let it be put on the Orders of the Day for Monday in charge of the hon. member from Brandon.' That is what he should have done. But now, without knowing anything about it, the Bill is transferred from the hon. gentleman from Calgary to the hon. gentleman from Brandon, without anything appearing in the minutes or debates about it all. I do not make it my business to keep the proceedings of the Senate straight. There are others here to do that. It is the duty of somebody to see that our proceedings are correct. I call on the Minister of Justice and the leader of the opposition to see that it is done; otherwise there will be a nice grist of lawsuits in the courts of this country.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—I do not know whether the hon. gentleman referred to me as having gone to the clerk to get this notice changed. I never spoke to him at all.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I entirely exonerate the hon. gentleman from any charge of the kind. It never entered my mind. It was either a mistake or an afterthought of somebody who put it on the Order paper, or direct the clerk to do so.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—I withdraw my motion, and give notice of motion instead.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (120) 'An Act to incorporate the Ottawa, Brockville and St. Lawrence Railway Company.'—(Hon. Mr. Clemow.)

Bill (150) 'An Act respecting the Salisbury and Harvey Railway Company.'—(Hon. Mr. Power.)

GRAIN INSPECTION IN MANITOBA DISTRICT BILL.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

The House resumed in Committee of the Whole consideration of Bill (141) 'An Act respecting the grain trade in the inspection district of Manitoba.'

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—When the committee rose the other day we had passed clause 37 of the Bill, and I had submitted an amendment which I read to the House, and which is now on the Order parer. I now propose asking the approval of the House to the amendments with a very slight change. I drew the attention of hon. gentlemen to the fact that it was on evidence before the commission that was called on to investigate this matter, that a very serious grievance existed in the North-west, in consequence of the general belief that the farmer was docked for a larger amount of grain than was fair and reasonable, and evidence was afforded that there was an overage in the elevators which meant a surplus which should not be there, and was due to overdockage. I said that was obviated in the adjoining states of Minnesota and Dakota by the country elevators not being allowed to clean the grain, but sending it on to the terminal elevators—that they were not allowed to ship out grain to any quarter whatever but the terminal elevator, in order that there might be a check against the dockage charged to the farmer, and in that way there was no inducement for the country elevator owner or his employee to dock a farmer unfairly. It would be detected at once, if he did so, because daily and weekly returns were made from the country elevators to the terminal elevator. It was suggested that the proposed amendments involve a departure from the general rule which applied to contracts between buyer and seller. I submit they do not. In all business transactions there is nothing the law is so jealous about as the care that there shall be no false weights or improper measurements. We appoint inspectors of weights and measures, whose duty it is to inspect the weights. We know at the public market there are regular inspectors, whose duty it is to see that weights are correct. The conditions that I refer to in the North-west are entirely dissimilar from those that prevail in all other parts of Canada. In very many instances the farmer has only one place to take his grain. He takes it to the country elevator, and is entirely dependent on the fair play he gets from that particular elevator. Although I throw out no insinuations against the owners of elevators, the evidence is very strong, that in the minds of the farmers there is an impression that they are not fairly dealt with. The proposition that I made to the House was, that in all elevators already provided with cleaning apparatus, the grain should be cleaned, and the usual certificate given of the weight of the grain and of the cleanings. It was not an unreasonable proposition. My proposition was larger in the first instance, but in deference to the strong objection which were urged, I consented to remove other features that I thought were reasonable and proper. One was that in future all new elevators built should be provided with cleaning apparatus. When the Canadian Pacific Railway first encouraged the building of elevators, they required that they should all be provided with cleaning apparatus. This has been departed from. Why? Why were elevators allowed to be erected afterwards without any provision for the cleaning of grain? No one can say for one moment that it was a departure that was fair or reasonable, and I ask now that the provisions of which I have given notice shall apply only to those elevators that are already provided with cleaning apparatus. The amendments which I submit read in this way:

That the following be added to clause 37:

'37. (a) It shall be the duty of the owner, lessee or manager of every elevator now equipped with grain cleaners to clean the grain before it is weighed, when so requested to do.

'(b) Persons interested in the weighing of any grain at country elevators shall have free access to the scales while such grain is being weighed. The net weight of the grain so cleaned shall be specified on the face of the certificate given the seller by the purchaser.

'(c) The proprietor, lessee or manager of any elevator failing to comply with the provisions of this section shall be guilty of an offence under the Act.'

It may not be necessary in all cases to clean grain. If the farmer agrees to estimate the quantity of clean grain it may be satisfactory, and the elevator man would not be forced to clean the grain. Hon. gentlemen must recollect that the grain is always cleaned at the elevators where they have the cleaning apparatus, but they say 'we prefer to clean it at our leisure.' This amendment does not require the elevator man to clean the grain unless it is asked for by the farmer.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Is this the amendment discussed last Friday?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. I have added words to provide that the screenings shall be weighed.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The reasons assigned for the introduction of this Bill are those given by the Secretary of State, that is, that there was an impression among the sellers of wheat that they were not getting justice from the elevator men in all cases. I think the agitation for building warehouses and loading on cars was started where I live, at Portage la Prairie, were the Farmers' Institute took this matter up, and passed resolutions, copies of which were sent to all farmers' institutes throughout the provinces and the North-west Territories. The resolutions were adopted by the farmers' institute, and I believe were the cause of the government taking up this question and appointing a committee of investigation. The farmers never asked that cleaning machines be placed in elevators. In fact, their resolutions are that farmers be allowed to load from flat warehouses. The hon. gentleman is submitting changes to this Bill as it came from the House of Commons which, to my mind, are not workable. I have no particular objections to the amendment which he proposed the other day, that is that all elevators that have cleaning machinery should be required to clean the grain, if so requested by the seller, but in addition to that, he has suggested to the hon. gentleman from Assiniboia (Hon. Mr. Perley) that he is at liberty to move an amendment which he does not care to move himself, and the hon. gentleman told us how grain is handled in Minnesota and Dakota. The hon. gentleman showed that the grain is not cleaned at the elevators in Minnesota, but sent to the terminal elevators. He also states that one provision that was made when elevators were first built in Manitoba, was, that they should have cleaning apparatus. Now, that was a regulation made by the Canadian Pacific Railway, because they thought it was in the interests of the trade that grain should cleaned before being shipped. At that time they charged a quarter of a cent per bushel for cleaning grain. In Duluth it was cleaned for nothing. The Canadian Pacific Railway within the last year or two have cleaned the grain for nothing. It is contended that the cost of freight on dirt to Fort William would not pay for the cleaning at country elevators. The agitation was to be enabled to load the wheat from flat warehouses, without paying a charge for cleaning wheat at the standard elevators. The Manitoba legislature took this matter up. The railway men were there, and representatives of the Farmers' Intitutes, and it was shown there—and this Bill provides exactly for the conditions—that when they gave a company permission to build an elevator of a certain capacity with cleaning machinery, they must be ready to receive grain from any shipper at any time at all reasonable hours, and pass it through that elevator, clean it and load it on cars at 1½ cents per bushel. The commission which investigated this whole matter was composed of probably the best men that could be selected in Manitoba or the Territories—three farmers, and at the head of the commission was Judge Senkler, who devoted his energies to his work to such an extent that I have no doubt it led to the fatal termination of his career. He sat up long hours and travelled long hours on freight trains to meet people in Manitoba and the North-west Territories, and in the report of this committee they do not suggest what is proposed to-day by the hon. gentleman in charge of this Bill. In fact, they propose the contrary. They say they find it is impossible to run the standard elevators in Manitoba without having them filled twice or three times during the season. They find in their investigation that it is hardly possible to find an elevator man who makes it pay without having to buy the grain. There is one thing we have to remember, that by putting restrictions on the erection of elevators in Manitoba and the North-west Territories, we are doing what the people there do not want us to do. The people there want more storage capacity and more competition. I should like to remind the House that in Manitoba there are only about half the railways where any elevator monopoly ever existed. The whole system of the Northern Pacific Railway was assisted by the province of Manitoba. The Manitoba North-western was assisted, and there is not a mile of those roads where there is any elevator monopoly. At all times, the people have the right, on the agreement of the Manitoba government with the Northern Pacific, with the Canadian Northern, and further than that, with the extensions of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Where they assisted the extensions, they are required to allow people to load their own grain on cars. No elevator monopoly exists at all of flat warehouses or anything of the kind. In fact, they provide there that people can load without using any elevator. That is taken advantage of. On the Northern Pacific Railway there are no cleaners in the elevators, or very few, because the grain is taken in at country elevators and cleaned at terminal elevators. That is the practice that prevails in Minnesota. That regulation also prevails along the Northern Pacific line in Manitoba. It is cleaned at West Lynn, the same as grain is cleaned at Fort William and Winnipeg, where the Great Northern Elevator Company have erected a place to clean grain. It must be understood, notwithstanding the statement made by the hon. Secretary of State the other day, that he thought it cost only $150 for cleaning machinery, that it will cost any man who puts cleaning machinery in at least $1,200.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I said that the machine cost $150 F.O.B. car at Brantford.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—How much does it cost to get it into position ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It costs something, of course.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I am not interested in the elevator business, but I know what it costs to put in cleaning machinery. I know something of what I am talking about, and I know what it will cost to fit up an elevator for the purpose of cleaning grain as fast as it is received—because you have to do that, and you have to put in large machines to clean the grain. You cannot keep people waiting round until you clean the grain, and I know it will cost about $1,200 to put in cleaning machinery. The hon. gentleman has struck out the provision requiring that, but he says that the hon. gentleman from Assiniboia (Hon. Mr. Perley) can move it. The hon. gentleman is incorporating an amendment which was suggested the other day, to give the weight of the screenings: I say that is impossible.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is struck out.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I understood the Secretary of State to say that it is in.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I submit the amendment as it is printed. I thought, myself, that the screenings should be weighed, but I am told that a large part of the lighter grain is blown away.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—That is better. I am glad the hon. gentleman has dropped it, because in cleaning grain they put as much suction on the machines as the grain will stand, and there are probably one or two pounds to the bushel blown outside altogether. Another suggestion made, and it was a matter referred to the other day in this House, was with regard to the disposal of the screenings.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Let us deal with this amendment first. That does not bear on the question at all.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—With that portion struck out, I will state what we want in Manitoba, and the North-west Territories; it is the additional facilities for the purpose of enabling the farmers of Manitoba and the North-west to dispose of their grain as they see fit through the flat warehouse or on cars. To do that, you must encourage the construction of elevators and warehouses. If you are going to require every elevator man to put cleaning machines in, or anything on that line, you are going to stop the milling companies at least from erecting elevators and warehouses. The best evidence I have to offer this House is the experience of elevators which have cleaners. The Lake of the Woods Milling Company have no cleaning apparatus, and they are able to get their grain without it being cleaned before it is weighed, which is an evidence of the farmer being satisfied to sell to elevators and flat warehouses without the grain being cleaned. That is the practice all over Manitoba and the North-west Territories. And this cleaning machine has not been asked for by any persons that I am aware of that are farmers. I have not seen all the evidence submitted to the commissioners, but I know in their report they do not suggest it, and the commissioners are very respectable farmers of Manitoba who have given special attention to the matters which came before them, and in their report, after hearing all the evidence, they do not suggest any provision for the cleaning of grain before it is weighed.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—If I recollect correctly, on Friday when we adjourned, the hon. Secretary of State had moved a certain amendment, and the hon. gentleman from Wolseley had moved an amendment. If I understand the rules correctly, the question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman from Wolseley has not moved any amendment to the amendment. If he moves an amendment, it will be a substantive motion. I gave notive of an amendment on Friday, and that is the only amendment before the House.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I have a distinct recollection that the hon. gentleman from Wolseley moved that cleaners be placed in all elevators.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is not before the House. It is an independent question. It does not bear on this amendment, and it was withdrawn by the hon. senator.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I propose to move an amendment or an additional clause to the Bill, as follows :

That all elevators hereafter built shall be so furnished with grain cleaners as to clean all grain offered for sale or storage before it is weighed.

I say now, having passed the first motion that all the elevators in the country that are furnished with cleaners, shall clean grain before it is weighed, it would be a monstrous thing to give liberty to other people to come in and build elevators and not put cleaners in them. The Canadian Pacific Railway compels all parties building elevators on their line in the North-west Territories to put cleaners in them, and the only question is whether they shall clean the grain before or after it is weighed. I have listened to the hon. gentleman from Marquette (Hon. Mr. Watson) and I take exception to a great deal that he has said. There is nothing in the amendment to say the grain shall be cleaned before it is weighed. There is nothing unfair about it. I take my grain to the elevator, and I want them to clean it before they weigh it. Why should we not compel the man who builds an elevator next month to do the same as the people who have elevators at the present time are compelled to do ? These men, I admit, will have to go to some little expense, but not one-fifteenth part of what the hon. gentleman says. You must have the power in any case. It is absurd to talk such bosh to intelligent men as we have heard to-day. When you have the power to clean the grain after it is weighed, you have the power to clean it before it is weighed. You have imposed upon them the duty to clean the grain before it is weighed. It would be an unfair thing to say that the man who is going to build an elevator next week should not do the same as the present elevator men have to do. They will have to make some little change in their machinery to clean the grain before they weigh, instead of after they weigh. To the man who is going to build an elevator, it would be no additional expense at all. He would put it in first. It would be a most unrighteous act to the men who are compelled to clean the grain before it is weighed, to say that you are going to allow these other men to clean the grain after it is weighed. Any man with an ounce of intelligence would see the injustice of saying to the man who is building an elevator : 'You need not clean the grain before it is weighed.' I am not going to undertake to argue the question. It does not require arguing. I will answer the hon. gentleman's argument later on. I will submit this amendment and no senator who respects himself, can vote against it after having voted for the other clause.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is some doubt in the opinion of the Chairman whether the proposal I made to adopt clauses a, b and c, was adopted.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—A was carried, but b and c were not.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I move the adoption of sub-clause b.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I move in amendment——

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman's motion does not relate to this amendment. It would be better to deal with the one question, which is entire in itself—to deal with elevators already equipped.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Do I understand the hon. Secretary of State to say that the proposed subsections a, b and c are before the House ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, I read them. There is no use in carrying a unless we carry b and c.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman from Wolseley does not propose an amendment to the motion made by the hon. Secretary of State, and the correct course is to let the hon. Secretary of State finish with this particular clause. He has passed one paragraph, and there are two others to pass, and the hon. gentleman from Wolseley can move to insert an additional clause in the Bill.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think the hon. gentleman's amendment must come in after subsection a, the one that has been passed, because if it comes in later, I doubt whether paragraph c would regulate it or not, because these regulations should apply to elevators under my hon. friend's amendment as well as to the others ; otherwise you will have to bring the elevators that are equipped with the cleaners under b and c.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Not at all. That is purely independent. I read to the House the three amendments, and I have suggested a change in b, and the hon. gentleman spoke on the subject. I stated that I was prepared to allow the amendment to go as it appeared on the Order paper, not making any addition to it whatever. I struck out the words that referred to the cleanings.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My point is that these regulations provided in b and c must apply equally to the amendment of my hon. friend as to section a. The hon. gentleman's amendment which has been adopted, subsection a, of clause 37, reads as follows :

37. (a) It shall be the duty of the owner, lessee or manager of every elevator now equipped with grain cleaners to clean the grain before it is weighed, when so requested to do.

My hon. friend proposes an amendment which provides that all elevators now equipped with grain cleaners shall clean the grain before weighing it. He wishes to go further and say that all new elevators shall do it. Then comes b and c which govern both. Therefore the place for my hon. friend's amendment is after 37*a* in order that b and c may regulate operations over both classes of elevators, those which have cleaning apparatus already in them, and those which may be built in future. I think my hon. friend is right in asking that his amendment should be put in after the other.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—If it is put in, it should be put in in this way :

37. (a) It shall be the duty of the owner, lessee or manager of every elevator now equipped with grain cleaners to clean the grain before it is weighed, when so requested to do.

Then to provide for the erection of future elevators. But I think the House should consider very carefully before they adopt a motion of this sort.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Is this the proper place to put it ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It may be put in there. but I call attention to the fact that the people are asking for liberty to erect certain warehouses. Provision is being made for that. They are not in the flat warehouses undertaking to make provision for the cleaning of the grain. They are not doing that. My hon. friend is undertaking to impose upon parties who are investing their money in warehouses, and who are erecting them for their own purposes and what they can make out of the capital they so invest while at the same time accommodating the public—he is requiring them to do what the farmers who erect the flat warehouses are not going to do for themselves. This should be borne in mind, in order that a warehouse may give a return for the money invested in it, a considerable amount of grain must pass through that warehouse every year. The warehouse is not large, and to fill the warehouse once would not begin to pay even a moderate rate of interest upon the capital that is invested in it. Now, what is to be the effect if you go to work and provide that every warehouse erected in the country—for that would apply to the warehouses that the farmers are seeking to erect for themselves—shall have cleaning machinery for the purpose of cleaning the grain before it is weighed ? It will cost a very considerable sum of money. If the law requires them to do that, it is simply putting an impediment in the way of a warehouse being erected at all.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend said the cleaners did not apply to warehouses, but if it is necessary in itself, it should apply to every warehouse. They can send the grain on to the terminal, and there is no difference in that regard. It is perfectly clear that if you undertake to declare that the cleaning shall be universal, it must apply to every possible kind of a warehouse. If it does not apply to every possible kind of warehouse, then you are providing that in the case of the flat warehouses the cleaning shall be done at the terminal elevator, which would be at Port Arthur and Fort William. I say that that will not meet the requirements of the population in that country. What they require is that there shall be warehouse accommodation, and that warehouse accommodation, in order that they may get it, must be warehouse accommodation such as men are willing to invest their money in.

Hon. Mr. MILLS.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I now beg leave to make a statement to this. While I must compliment the hon. Secretary of State on the amendment which he has made, and while my remarks and my resolution will go to the country, I have to withdraw my amendment owing to the opposition of the hon. Minister of Justice, who has so strongly opposed me. I am prepared to accept it without any amendment at all. It will go forth to the country that we have done a very unfair thing, that we have compelled a certain class to put in cleaners and have not compelled another class of men to do it. It will also go forth to the country that we really misunderstand the question, because flat warehouses do not require to have cleaners in them at all. Flat warehouses are no good. I have always taken that stand. This question is now three or four years old. Mr. Douglas, of Assiniboia, has travelled all over the country and has heard grievances from one end of the country to the other which induced him to bring in a motion in order to redress the wrong done to the farmers in the dealings with them in reference to selling their grain? He brought in a Bill three years ago, but the government was not quite prepared to accept it, and the statement Mr. Douglas made in the North-west was that Mr. Sifton gave his Bill the cold steel. Then, afterwards, he introduced a Bill on somewhat the same lines, and the government saw that the man was persistent and knew what he was talking about, and said: 'We will appoint a commission.' And so they did. Judge Senkler told me that whenever the grain was cleaned before it was weighed, it was all right and there was no fault found with it. I shall now ask the government to make another amendment providing that the farmer shall have the cleanings. They may blow out ever so much, but I will lose my cleanings unless they choose to give it to me. The result would be they would reduce the quantity very materially. If the House adopted the motion I suggested there would be no unfairness. If a man wanted to take undue advantage of the seller, what would be the result? Those men who have no cleaners charge me for cleaning the grain. There is not an elevator in the North-west that does not charge me for cleaning my grain, notwithstanding there is not a cleaner in the elevator at all. The Lake of the Woods Company and the Ogilvie Company do not pay more than the other man at that point. But I can sell my grain to the Wolseley Milling Company. They clean it before they weigh it, and I have never had occasion to be dissatisfied. I can send my hired man down with a load of my grain and he can sell it to them. I cannot do the same thing with other firms, because they will cheat me out of a good many pounds. I will be docked altogether too much. Clause 41 provides for my case exactly. The Canadian Pacific Railway provides a platform on which I can load my grain and I go there. I am not now fighting my own battle, I am fighting for the poor farmer in the North-west, who takes his grain to these people and they tell him 'we will give you so much, you can take that or nothing.' In cleaning the grain these men will blow half of it out of the spout, and they will sell the cleanings to another man for half a dollar a hundred, or what ever it may be, I am going to put a prediction on record: I am satisfied that next year there will be a request for legislation on the lines I am indicating. These flat warehouses are no good. The flat warehouse was the remedy for a certain evil,—if you came to market with your load and were not fairly dealt with, you could have it stored in the flat warehouse. This measure was prepared by Mr. Bell, and the grain men of the city of Winnipeg. They have had a man down here three months paying him ten dollars a day, and they have not consulted a farmer at all. The Bill is framed in the interests of the grain men and the mill men of the North-west. Is there anything unfair in my asking to be paid for what my grain weighs? It is only fair that I should be paid on that basis. There is nothing fairer under the sun. I may be a poor man unable to read or write, but I have a right to say 'I have forty-five bushels of wheat; give me forty bushels and five in dirt.' But they do not do that. I have the evidence of the man at Wolseley, a blacksmith, employed to buy grain. They do not keep him two years in the same place. They transfer him from one place to another. This year he is at Wolseley. He does not know the difference between No. 1, No. 2 and No. 3, and he does not know what constitutes No. 1 wheat. Judge Senkler was horrified that they had placed such a man in such a position. They gave this man $60 a month and he is not worth $25. I could get a man to do his work for fifteen a month, and board him for another fifteen. My hon. friend made the statement that the Ogilvie Company had four car-loads more at the end of the season than they had bought.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The hon. gentleman is making a statement that I did not make, in private conversation or otherwise.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—The hon. gentleman said, on the steps, the other day that on one occasion, in the early history, that Ogilvies had four car-loads of wheat in their elevator more than they bought.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I said I heard that.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—The hon. gentleman heard what was true. They take this grain and weigh it in, and the men weigh it out. Mr. Tolton bought for the Ogilvies at Wolseley and had a surplus.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I was present when that conversation took place on the steps, and I did not hear Ogilvie's name mentioned.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I did not mention Ogilvie's name.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I think it would be unfair towards the Ogilvies to have the statement put in that way.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—The hon. gentleman named somebody, and they were the only parties buying there. In the early history of the trade they weighed the grain in, and then weighed it out. The elevator man does not know whether he has too much in his elevator or too little at the end of the season now, because he does not weigh it out. This Bill will have a beneficial effect so far as it goes, and by next year, when the farmers see the result of this legislation, we will probably have improved legislation with reference to the matter.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I do not like to take up the time of the committee longer than is necessary, but after the argument of the hon. gentleman from Wolseley, it would be unreasonable on my part not to say a word and to let his statement go unchallenged. I will endeavour to explain to this committee the existing circumstances in the North-west. My hon. friend from Wolseley has given this House, from his point of view, the circumstances that exist in the North-west and Manitoba with reference to the grain business. I think it is only fair to this committee that I should give the circumstances as I see them. I want to be as brief as possible. We are considering a Bill of very great importance, dealing with our largest industry in the west, and we are engaged in legislation which is new, and should proceed very carefully and know what we are doing. In the nature of things it is reasonable to say that many hon. members of this committee cannot understand the circumstances, and the system that we have up there for the handling of grain, and it is only by getting information from those who know at least a little about it that you were able to arrive at a reasonable conclusion as to what is best to crystallize into legislation. We have our elevator system in Manitoba and the North-west, which we cannot handle our grain without. We have an immense quantity of grain to handle, and there is a rush of grain before the close of navigation, and the bulk of it is handled in our country markets between the hours say of ten a.m. and three p.m. in the day, and therefore has to be handled quickly and conveniently and satisfactorily to those who are bringing the grain to market. We have practically three systems of elevators in Manitoba and the North-west. We have one system which weighs the grain and then cleans it, and this system adjusts the dockage at the time of the weighing, while the grain is in the hopper. We have another system, which my hon. friend has referred to, which cleans the grain first, then weighs, and as a consequence deals only with the cleaned grain as between buyer and seller. We have another system of elevators which do not clean at all—have no cleaning apparatus, and those elevators are largely owned by the two big milling companies, the Ogilvies and the Lake of the Woods. There are other owners still of that class of elevators, and I might point out here too that Minnesota and Dakota, having a longer experience than ours, in grain raising seem to be drifting altogether into that system of country elevators without cleaners. These big milling corporations and others are building elevators without cleaners, because it suits their system best. They clean at some central point, or terminal point, whichever you like to call it. The Lake of the Woods Company clean at Keewatin, the Ogilvies at Winnipeg, and other places. The Great Northern clean at Winnipeg, and the Northern Pacific at West Lynne. Any one shipping on the lines of the Canadian Pacific Railway to Fort William can have his grain cleaned there for nothing. These are our three systems, and therefore we have to be careful that in our legislation we do not in any way restrict the facilities that are offered the farmers. It has been suggested that the cost of cleaning machinery is very low,—that something under $200 is the difference in cost between a cleaning elevator and a non-cleaning elevator. The practical difference is somewhere between $1,000 and $1,200. So we have to be careful in dealing with our elevator system to remember that the cost is in favour of the non-cleaning elevator, and therefore an extension of our system would be more likely if a cheaper kind is permitted in the new settlements. I thought it only fair to the House to explain that we have these three systems. My hon. friend suggests that the Bill which we are considering now is framed altogether in the interest of the grain dealer and the mill man. He points out that the secretary of the Grain Exchange spent two or three months here in the preparation of this Bill. I just wish to call the attention of the House to this:—last year the government appointed a commission to go through the North-west to take evidence at various places, and this commission was composed of three farmers and the judge of the county court. They took evidence in various places in Manitoba and the North-west Territories. The secretary of that commission was a gentleman from Winnipeg, by the name of Mr. Bell, and when that gentleman was putting in the result of the commission, as the report shows he was here as the secretary of the grain commission, and not in any way with reference to the Manitoba Grain Board or Grain Exchange or anything else. I think if my hon. friend will look up the facts he will find that that was Mr. Bell's position in so far as the grain commission was concernel. Mr. Bell did not take part in the conclusion of the commission. Three practical farmers, presided over by the judge, were the court who decided and made the recommendation that we find in their report. The secretary had nothing to do whatever with their deliberations. This commission reported, and in every single recommendation that they made, their recommendations have been in the direction of securing to the farmer fair dealings as between himself and the grain men. The result of their recommendation is this Bill. We have in this Bill first, security—not for the grain man but for the farmer. Secondly, we have provided in this Bill a free court to which any farmer who has any grievance whatsoever, may refer—the warehouse commissioner, and surely when my hon. friend says that this Bill framed altogether in the interest of the grain trade and the millmen who have not taken any interest in this Bill at all, and he reads the clause of the Bill, which provides this security and a free court and further provides the use of the grain inspector free again, if he has the slightest idea that he has a grievance either for weight or dockage, all this is provided free, which has never been provided before, to secure what ? To secure the grain men ? Not at all, but to secure fair dealings to the producer of the grain, as it should be. I only ask you to consider this Bill in the light of what is best in the interest of the producer, and this Bill is framed all the way through in that direction. And besides this free court—besides the services of the inspector free, whenever he feels disposed to call upon him, he has flat warehouses and loading platforms which are frequently suggested as the cure for all the evils that the farmer had to contend with. The grain dealers, under this law, are liable to heavy penalties, are liable to trouble with the warehouse commissioner at any time if any unfair dealing exists as against the producer, and that is right. No grain man, never mind who he is, if he is dealing fairly with his customers need fear any penalties. The answer to this is, if you are dealing fairly you have nothing to fear. If you are dealing unfairly, there are penalties, and the farmer can have them enforced. When my hon. friend suggests that this Bill is altogether onesided, he made but one mistake, and that is on the other side. The Bill is on the side of the producer in every one of its provisions, and we agree with them. I think this House will agree that it is only reasonable that the farmer should have the first consideration, and I am sure when this Bill is passed we shall have on the statute-book a measure which, if the farmer has any grievance whatever, he need not labour under it, because he has a free court to which he can apply, and if any one deals with him unfairly, the offender may be punished as the law provides. We should go slowly this year because this is new legislation, and if anything occurs before the next meeting of parliament, it can be amended with any radical change, and without working injustice anywhere. I am sure the House will be only too pleased to listen to any suggestions which may be made.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—I should like to call attention to the facts as stated by the hon. gentleman who spoke last, and which seemed to me to present rather an anomalous position from his point of view. We have heard some very declamatory speeches on this question, and hon. gentlemen evidently have the matter very much at heart. I do not take part on either side, but I should like to have an explanation made with regard to certain points. The hon. gentlemen who have spoken last have pointed out that the only difference between their proposition and that made by the hon. gentleman from Wolseley is that while the elevator system at present in existence in Manitoba and the North-west Territories all have cleaners——

Hon. Mr. WATSON—No.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—The hon. gentleman said so.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I said there were three systems.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—This applies only to those which have cleaners. Why do these gentlemen object to the new system of elevators, which are going to be put up, having these cleaners ? I understand the hon. gentleman who spoke, is an elevator man himself, and I would suppose that he would invest upon a new system of elevators having the same conditions apply to them that attach to his own elevator. All I want to know is why he seems to be anxious to protect them from incurring too much expense? Either he must be going to engage in a new system of elevators himself, and wants to keep the expense down, or something exists which should be explained. Another anomalous condition is this: The hon. gentleman speaking about the grain commission, of which Mr. Bell was the secretary, and in which the different elevator owners and others were interested, says that with all this power in their hands the only interest they were looking after in framing the Bill, was the interest of the producers. I want an explanation of that.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Yes, it was framed in the interest of the producer.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—It is an exhibition of remarkable unselfishness that these gentlemen frame a Bill in the interest of the producer and not in their own interest. I am an agnostic on the questions: I do not know. I want the truth.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—My hon. friend has asked two questions. One is, how it comes that the grain men and mill men framed this Bill in the interests of the producers. I thought I had made myself clear that the government appointed a commission of three farmers, not men interested in the grain business, presided over by a county court judge, who made certain recommendations, and the recommendations were all in the interest of the farmer. Their recommendations were crystallized in this Bill. If I am not right, some hon. gentleman will correct me. The grain men, therefore, did not take the part of philanthropists and saints, as my hon. friend suggests, because they had nothing to do with it. These three farmers, presided over by a county court judge, made recommendations, and on those recommendations this Bill has been framed, and framed altogether in the interest of the farmer, and secures to him, as far as can be suggested, fair dealing under every circumstances—secures to him free court—secures the services of an inspector, and places him in the position of dealing with men who have put up security, so that they cannot get away with his money—places him in the position of dealing with men who have to take out a license and conform to rules laid down by the warehouse commissioner of the province under this Act. Now, with reference to the elevators in existence, I tried to explain that we had practically three systems, one that cleaned before weighing, one that cleaned after weighing, and then those large milling companies that do not clean the grain at all. They have a light power, run by horse or gazoline, and I thought I pointed out the difference in expense between the two systems was $1,000 to $1,200.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—Is the expense the only objection?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—There is not only the expense, but you curtail the possibility of greater competition in elevators.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—No.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—A man would be more likely to put up a cheap elevator than an expensive one, when the milling company elevators have been put in a cheap way. Take Ogilvie's and the Lake of the Woods Companies. I thought it was unfair to speak disparagingly of one company. I have no interest in those companies, but I think they are too well known in Canada for any suggestion to be made that they are not doing their business in an honest and upright manner. We have every reason to believe that they are men who try to do their business in such a way as will reflect credit on themselves and merit the goodwill of their fellow-men. I may say that our grain men in the west will compare, so far as honesty and integrity is concerned, with any business men in Canada, although it is quite easy to stand up and say this, that and the other thing. As an evidence that they are doing their business fairly and honestly, they do not object to the strict provisions of this Bill, because if they are dealing honestly with the people, they need not care how strict the provisions are.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—In regard to one question that these hon gentlemen have raised, the opposition to the weighing before cleaning, I may say that there is no storage for dirty grain. They weigh it all and clean it at once. I unload my grain as fast as two men can handle it, and they have their cleaner so arrange that the grain is cleaned and weighed promptly. The hon. Secretary of State referred to a letter received from the Brantford Company to the effect that they supply machinery for cleaning a thousand bushels an hour. They can get cleaners to clean from 100 bushels to 1.000 bushels an hour. That is what all the elevators have, a cleaning capacity equal to the unloading capacity. Grain is unloaded very rapidly and cleaned very rapidly. They talk about cleaning at Duluth and Fort William. I am engaged in farming, and come forty miles with a load of wheat. I want to get my money and pay my bills and get home. It is a blind, a piece of deception, to clean my wheat at Duluth or Fort William. They clean it, as I have said, as fast as it can be unloaded. What possible argument is there that they should clean it after instead of before weighing? I say, clean my grain and pay me for whatever is in it. We do not ask to be paid for one bushel more than we deliver, but we do want to be paid for what we sell. I am willing to let the matter go to the country on that.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—It is rather surprising that the hon. gentleman should try to misrepresent what has been said in this House. I referred to the cost of cleaning apparatus. I said that you would have to have large cleaning machines in the elevator if you required to clean the grain before it is weighed, because it cannot be done with small machinery. I probably know as much about cleaning machines as the hon. gentleman does. Those machines have a capacity of a thousand bushels an hour, but I was talking about the cost of the machines in position for working. It might be well for the hon. gentleman from Wolseley—apparently the only farmer from the North-west that is represented here,——

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Every farmer and representative from the North-west voted in favour of this Bill.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The hon. gentleman is willing to abandon the poor farmer so long as he can get what he wants himself.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Mr. Chairman, I will not allow the hon. gentleman to misrepresent me. I said in distinct language that it is the poor man I am representing here. I shall not allow anybody to misrepresent me on the floor of this House.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The hon. gentleman states that the amendment he suggested was in the interest of the poor man. It might be well for me to read a resolution passed by the Farmers' Institute at Portage la Prairie, and endorsed by every farmers' institute in Manitoba and the North-west Territories. This was passed in 1898, when the agitation was felt all over the country with regard to flat warehouses:

Whereas, the railway companies of Manitoba, except the Manitoba and North-western, refuse to allow farmers to load grain on cars without passing through elevators.

Whereas, the said railway companies will not allow farmers to build or operate elevators or warehouses unless they are of a stipulated capacity and have cleaning and other expensive machinery there.

Whereas, the said railway companies do allow milling and elevator companies to load grain through warehouses or uncleaning elevators even at points where cleaning elevators exist.

Whereas, many farmers who have been compelled to ship through these elevators claim to have lost in both grade and price, as the elevator operators will not bind themselves to give out either the farmers' own identical grain or any guaranteed grade of the same.

Whereas, the granting of this privilege has undoubtedly led to the formation of the combination of elevator and other interests, and this combination, coupled with machinations practised in our present grading system, has and is seriously interfering with the farmers' rights, by controlling largely the prices paid for his produce.

Therefore, it is resolved, on behalf of the farmers of Manitoba, this institute would emphatically protest against such treatment, and call upon the federal government to abrogate the unjust privilege granted to the said railway companies, and request the government to exercise its power and, if necessary, compel the railway companies to do justice by accepting grain for transportation from farmers direct from their flat warehouses. And, further, that the provincial government be, and is hereby requested to co-operate with the farmers in this matter, and, if necessary, to make a test case in the courts on their behalf, and that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the federal government through Dr. Rutherford, M.P. Also a copy to the provincial government through James McKenzie, M.P.P., and that the secretary of the institute be instructed to strike off copies of this resolution, and send one to every institute and agricultural society in the province, asking co-operation in this matter.

I might say the Canada Northern and the extension of the Canadian Pacific should have been mentioned there as well as the Manitoba and North-western. You will see that the Farmers' Institute made particular reference to the kind of cleaners installed in the elevators erected on their property, and this is what the farmers are particularly referring to. A copy of that resolution was sent to all the farmers' institutes in Manitoba and in the North-west Territories. I have a resolution passed by the Pipestone Farmers' Institute which I shall read; because Mr. Lothian, one of the gentlemen appointed to the commission, moved this resolution. On account of his knowledge and influence he was selected as one of the commissioners :

Resolution re Elevator Monopoly.

Moved by James Lothian, seconded by Alex. Fairlie, That we, the members of the Pipestone Farmers' Institute, emphatically protest against the treatment farmers and others receive from the railway companies in not being allowed to ship their grain in car lots, unless such grain has passed through a cleaning elevator, thereby creating an elevator monopoly, to the detriment of the financial interests of the farmers of this province; and further, that we heartily endorse the resolution re elevator monopoly passed by the Portage and Lakeside Farmers' Institute; and that copies of this resolution, as passed by the Pipestone Farmers' Institute, be forwarded to Dr. Rutherford, M.P., James McKenzie, M.P.P., and W. J. Kennedy, M.P.P.

Carried unanimously.

ROBERT FORKE,
Secretary.

Pipestone, March 12, 1898.

Now, that shows clearly that the Farmers' Institute never asked for the grain cleaners. They asked to be relieved and allowed to ship from flat warehouses. The commissioners report refer to this as well.

The evidence has shown that where farmers' elevators have been erected, which do not buy, but only ship and store grain, complaints of the grain shipped out being of a lower grade than that furnished, have been very few.

As farmers' elevators, however, have to be standard elevators, the cost of their erection and management debars their use except in a few places.

Showing clearly that they did not want to be required to build standard elevators and have cleaning machinery. With reference to the reference made by the hon. gentleman from Wolseley to a private conversation, I want to call the attention of this House to the fact that the commissioners referred in their report to the position of the elevator men in Manitoba and the North-west Territories, and in speaking of the dockage made by the buyers they say this :

There has been no evidence to show that any elevator owners have been consenting parties to any acts of extortion. In view of the above, however, we think it would improve matters very greatly if elevator and warehouse operators, as well as elevator and warehouse owners, were compelled to give security for the proper performance of their duties as such.

Now, that is provided for in the Act, but there is no charge that elevator companies, or milling companies, as companies, practice extortion or authorize their representatives to do so. Reference has been made to the Ogilvies and the Lake of the Woods Milling Company. As I said in my previous remarks, the fact they did not clean the grain at many points where they buy grain and get their share, is the best evidence that the farmers are satisfied to sell to them. I am satisfied of this that if a provision was placed in this Bill requiring all elevators hereafter erected to have cleaning machines, a great many sections would be without elevators at all. The provision which has been passed requiring elevators, where cleaning machinery already exists, to clean the grain, I think applies particularly to one corporation. The Ogilvies were one of the first elevator builders in Manitoba. They built elevators all over the province. They were required at that time by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to put in cleaning machinery. Since that time, cleaning apparatus has been put in the elevators at Fort William and they clean grain free, because they find it cheaper to close up the cleaning machinery in the elevators already erected, and the change made here will simply put in operation cleaning machinery that has not been in operation for years in the Ogilvie elevators where they find it did not pay them to use the machinery. They put in horse power to get rid of the high insurance, because the moment you use steam you increase your insurance. Consequently, the Ogilvies and the Lake of the Woods Company use horse power especially at smaller point. The effect of this amendment will be to compel these elevators erected in future to put in operation again the machines in them. I do not think they will do it. I think they would prefer to take the machinery out of the elevators altogether and not have them to operate. I am satisfied of this, if the provisions suggested by the hon. gentleman from Wolseley —which I am glad to see he has had the good judgment to drop—were adopted, there are hundreds of places in Manitoba and the North-west which are seeking elevators that could not have them. The milling companies would simply drop out of business and allow the elevators to buy all the grain and they would take the grain from the elevator companies. We have now keen competition, and we know the best men to keep up price are the milling companies. They encourage the growth of good wheat, because they grind it themselves, and they are always open to competition. It has been suggested that where a man charges for cleaning the grain he should not keep the screenings. The screenings taken out of the grain in Manitoba has been a live question. For years the government and people of the province of Manitoba had become alarmed at the spread of noxious weeds throughout the country, and they passed very restrictive laws for the destruction of noxious weeds in the province. To such an extent did they go that an inspector may go into a man's field and cut down his crop if there are large quatities of noxious weeds in it. Legislation passed in the province of Manitoba a number of years ago, referring to this matter provides :

> Any person selling or otherwise disposing of any cleanings or other refuse containing seeds of noxious weeds from any elevator or mill, without first destroying the germinating qualities of such seeds of noxious weeds by grinding or otherwise, shall be liable to a penalty of not less than $25 nor more than $100.

That Act was passed some five or six years ago, and two years ago, notwithstanding that Act was in force and notwithstanding it provided for the killing of the germinating qualities of those noxious seeds before they were allowed to be sold or removed from elevator, the Manitoba legislature repealed that Act, and struck out the words 'First destroying the germinating qualities of such seeds by grinding or otherwise.' It was ascertained that it was impossible by any process made use of in elevators to kill the germinating qualities of the most noxious weed we have known as the French weed seed. This was the amendment passed in 1898 :

> Section 2 of said chapter 109 is hereby amended by striking out the words, 'without first destroying the germinating qualities of such seed of noxious weeds by grinding or otherwise,' in the third, fourth and fifth lines thereof.

I think there is an ordinance in the Territories applying to noxious weeds in the same way. The commissioners dealt with the matter in their report. They said in some places the farmers thought they should have a right to get back the screenings, but the judge pointed out that the Acts passed by Manitoba and the North-west Territories prevented an elevator allowing those seeds to be taken out of their elevators. They said if there is any way of separating the small wheat from the seeds, it would be all right, but they admit that it was impossible and consequently any provision of that kind would not be allowed. I am satisfied that in the province of Manitoba they would never relax that legislation—that they would always hold an elevator responsible for the distribution of any noxious weed seeds. As a rule good farmers will not take those seeds away at all, but there are men on rented farms, or careless farmers who take away the seeds and spread them all over the country, and probably there is a hundred dollars lost through using the screenings for the one dollar they would save.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—The hon. gentleman made a statement that I want him to withdraw. He said that I withdrew my amendment because it did not affect myself.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I must admit that the hon. gentleman's reason for withdrawing the motion was not clear to me. Probably he had better explain it again. The hon. gentleman did say that the argument advanced by the hon. Minister of Justice was sufficient reason for him to drop his amendment, because the Bill as it stood suited him all right.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—No, I did not say it suited me. I said it did not suit me. There were several matters to which I wished to refer, but I will not say anything more at present.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We have been discussing matters entirely apart from the amendment before the House.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—Will the hon. Secretary of State allow me to ask a question, rather for information than otherwise. Under subsection a it is expected that quite a number of elevators will be built in the North-west. Some of them will be flat elevators, and others will have cleaning machines in them. It is not intended that this section shall apply to any elevator which may hereafter be built in which cleaning machinery will be placed—that is, if the elevator is equipped with cleaning machinery that this section a shall apply to it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I gathered that to be the meaning from the discussion. Then the word 'now' in that subsection should be dropped.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have no objection to that. It is simply making it more emphatic.

The subsection was adopted.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—Does the amendment moved by the hon. gentleman from Wolseley come in here?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It has been withdrawn.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—Several members objected to its being withdrawn.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I withdraw the amendment. It was not objected to, and it had not been put by the Chair.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—It appeared to me it was a sensible motion to make, and one which I would have supported. There has been a great deal said respecting this question by gentlemen from the section of country which is supposed to be most affected by it, but even those men are divided in their opinions respecting the benefits of this amendment, or the objections to it. After listening to all that has been said it appears to me it was a very sensible and reasonable clause to include in this Bill. And the principal object to my mind would be that it would cause the grain which is shipped from Manitoba, or marketed in that section of country, to be of uniform quality, and coming from the maritime provinces we know something about the disadvantages of marketing grain which is not uniform in quality, and if that amendment would have the effect of making the grain sent to market or to the mill uniform I think it would be a great advantage, not only to the farmers, but to the country generally, and I certainly would have given my support to the amendment if it had been pressed.

On clause 39,

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I should like to call attention to the first line of this clause. It says: 'Forms of cash purchase tickets, &c.' I see in the Act we have a form of a cash purchase ticket. These cash tickets will do for certain elevators, but where there is a mill and elevator working together, and a mill buys more wheat than it grinds, you have to show on the face of the ticket the part sold and the part ground. A farmer comes in with fifty bushels, and he sells twenty-five and wishes to grind twenty-five for gristing purposes. The practice is to show on the face of the receipt the whole transaction, twenty-five grist and twenty-five bushels sold at such and such a price. I was going to suggest that we should add the words 'where applicable' after the expression 'form of cash tickets.' That would enable those people running grist mills to use the tickets which they find necessary and convenient through practise. Then the ticket would show the whole transaction.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Where the parties have an agreement among themselves, there is no necessity for our describing any particular form.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—If it will permit of that, I have no objection.

The clause was adopted.

On subclause 8 of clause 40,

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—This clause says:

No owner or operator of any such warehouse shall be allowed to store in or ship through grain purchased by or for himself.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If he is keeping a flat warehouse he should not be allowed to use it for himself. It is for the public. Any man can build a warehouse for himself, but then he must retain it for his own purposes. If it is for the public he must take out a license and give bonds. A man who builds a warehouse for himself, and buys his own grain, need not take out a license. He is not receiving grain from the public.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—If a farmer goes to the expense of building a large flat warehouse, he should be allowed to store his grain in it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He cannot have it for himself and the public.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—They all have it for themselves.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—A number can be joined together.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—It takes ten farmers to join together and build a flat warehouse, and then they cannot handle any grain except their own.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Not without a license.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If ten farmers build a warehouse, they can do as they please with it, but if it is a public warehouse, they must take out a license and come under the law.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Ten farmers could not own a warehouse and operate it themselves. One would live in one place, and another would be perhaps fifteen miles away.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It has reference to a public warehouse. I do not think there will be any disposition to build flat warehouses.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—If my amendment had been adopted there would not have been.

The subclause was adopted.

On clause 44,

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Clause 44 reads as follows:

Every operator of an elevator or warehouse shall at the close of every day that such elevator or warehouse is open for business, furnish to the nearest station agent of the railway upon the line of which such elevator or warehouse is situate, a statement of the total quantity of grain that day taken into such elevator or warehouse and of the total quantity of grain in store in such elevator or warehouse at the end of such day.

That would be very difficult to comply with in the very many cases in the North-west because we have, as we all know, elevators working till ten and eleven o'clock at night loading cars, and in many places the station agent has only a day office, and closes as soon as the last train passes, and the elevator man would have to make out a statement which he cannot deliver.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Well, as far as he can comply with it.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The station agents go round to the elevator, and find out their receipts up to a certain point, and report to the despatcher; so that a distribution of cars may take place in proportion to the receipts of the point. We might say 'if possible.'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have the Minnesota law before me, and they have to make a return, not only weekly but daily.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—This is daily.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This is to keep a check on the grain.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—In Minnesota they drifted into two or three large systems, which control the whole business.

The clause was adopted.

On subclause 2 of clause 53,

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There are three words left out of this clause. The clause says that the offence mentioned in this clause shall be punishable with fine, and I wish to add 'upon the guilty party.'

Hon. Mr. POWER—They would not pass a law to punish any one who was not guilty. If the offence is punishable with fine, it would be the guilty party that would be punished.

The subsection was adopted.

On subsection 4,

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—This subclause reads:

No elevator or warehouse shall be operated until the scales are inspected and approved by the proper weights and measures officials.

I wish to add an amendment here to deal with clause 34 and 37. I explained a moment ago that we have three systems of elevators in the North-west, one system, cleaning before weighing, and that class of elevators is largely patronized by farmers. In two of those clauses you call for a statement of gross weight. These elevators never take the gross weight at all. They clean before weighing, and in discussing the matter, we thought it would be wise to add the following words:

Where in any elevator or warehouse grain is cleaned before being weighed, the provisions of this Act requiring a statement of gross weight shall not apply.

Because, as will readily be seen, they cannot give a statement of gross weight where they do not take it, and I want to limit it to the circumstances of such cases.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will consider that at the next stage of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—This refers to the gross weight of the farmer's load which is not taken, nor are there conveniences for obtaining that information.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Perhaps the hon. gentleman can let that stand until the third reading of the Bill?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—It is quite possible to amend it, to conform to the cases in which it is impossible to comply with the law. We could put in one subsection to make it clear that the statement was not to be furnished where it was not taken.

The subclause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL, from the committee, reported the Bill with amendments.

RED DEER VALLEY RAILWAY AND COAL COMPANY'S BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. WATSON moved concurrence in the amendments made in the Standing Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours to Bill (W) 'An Act respecting the Red Deer Valley Railway and Coal Company.'

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—There is a clause in this Bill stating that this Act shall come into force on the first day of July, 1900.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That makes no difference. But I find a provision here which the hon. gentleman from Portage la Prairie can probably explain. I was on the subcommittee, but I do not remember anything about this particular amendment. Page 1, line 24, after 'Saskatchewan' insert 'at a point between Fort Pitt and Battleford.'

Hon. Mr. WATSON—That is the termination of the extension.

The motion was agreed to.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY OF OIL FOR THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

INQUIRY POSTPONED.

The notice of motion being called:

By the Hon. Mr. FERGUSON:

That he will ask the government for a statement showing what proportion of the payments for oils for the Intercolonial Railway made to the Galena Oil Company and the Imperial Oil Company respectively, for the year ending October 31, 1899, as shown by a return presented to the Senate on the 10th day of May last, were for lubricating purposes?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Is the hon. minister ready to answer this inquiry to-day?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—We have received no further information.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Perhaps the hon. minister may be able to inform me when I may expect the information. It is a very simple matter.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is a very difficult matter to see Mr. Blair just now, as the hon. gentleman knows. There are committees of the other House, and the House meets at eleven, and it is impossible to get his ear. I was over to his office to-day trying to see him, or Mr. Schreiber, but I could not see either of them.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—All that my motion asks is that one item in the returns brought down be divided so as to show what part of the expenditure for these oils was for lubricating purposes. It is mere clerical work, and if the attention of the department is directed to it, I think we might expect to get it almost immediately. If the hon. minister would give an order to his clerk, that is all that is necessary.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It rests with Mr. Schreiber, I presume. In all those returns they say they have to get the information from Moncton. There is no other way to do it. There is no use writing to the department with the rush of work there is there.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There has been time to get it from Moncton. We know the hon. Secretary of State gives the greatest possible attention to all these matters. I know he is doing all he can, and I hope he will continue his efforts till he obtains the information, and I hope that it will come before the close of the session, as it is an important matter.

The inquiry was allowed to stand.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (156) 'An Act to amend the Civil Service Act.'—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

GRAIN INSPECTION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The Order of the Day being called :

Consideration of the amendments made in Committee of the Whole to (Bill 141) An Act respecting the Grain Trade in the Inspection District of Manitoba.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—As the committee rose yesterday, the hon. senator from Killarney (Hon. Mr. Young) sent me an amendment which he thought ought to be inserted in the Bill, and I therefore, with the permission of the House, move that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole in order to make that change and a change in another item. Under the Bill, provision is made that in certain cases the grain shall be cleaned before it is weighed. There is a clause also which provides that the gross weight shall be stated in a certificate. Where it is cleaned before it is weighed, the gross weight cannot be given, and the proposed amendment reads as follows :

Where, in any elevator or warehouse grain is cleaned before being weighed, the provisions of this Act requiring statements of gross weights shall not apply to such grain.

I think there will be no objection to that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is all right, unless they weigh it twice.

The motion was agreed to.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Bill.

(In the Committee.)

The amendment was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yesterday, when my amendment was accepted with reference to elevators that are at present equipped with grain elevators, the hon. gentleman from Westmoreland suggested that it should apply to elevators which may hereafter be erected with cleaning machinery. I did not like accepting the amendment at the moment, because it disturbs the phraseology of a Bill very much when amendments are made without fully considering them. I accept his suggestion and move that the clause be amended accordingly.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What would happen if the owner of an elevator now equipped with cleaning machinery should remove that machinery ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not prepared to give a legal opinion on the subject.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It leaves some doubt as to what will be the effect. Perhaps the judge would construe the clause to mean that it would compel the owner to replace the machinery in the elevator. I am not going to discuss this matter any more. I am totally opposed to the principle of the Bill. It would not be so bad if it remained as at first suggested by the hon. gentleman from Westmoreland. However, he seems to have receded from the position he then took, and now wants to apply it to elevators to be erected in the future. Of course, as amended it will not apply to elevators where the owners do not put in cleaning machinery; but if they do put it in, then it is compulsory.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I shall call the attention of the committee to the fact that this amendment, which looks a right and proper one in itself, is going to work a certain amount of unfairness. As I understand, the older elevators, which were built chiefly by the Ogilvies, are equipped with cleaners.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No ; a very small proportion—not one in twenty.

Hon. Mr. POWER—These are the only ones now equipped with cleaning machinery in the west ?

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—No, not at all.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I mention it so that if when the Bill comes up for third reading there is any disposition to discuss that matter it can be done.

Hon. Mr. SNOWBALL, from the committee, reported the Bill with certain amendments, which were concurred in.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resumed in Committee of the Whole consideration of Bill (110) 'An Act to amend the Weights and Measures Act.'

(In the Committee.)

On the fourth clause,

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I do not wish to press this clause without calling the attention of the House to the fact that so far as salt in casks is concerned, there is a very wide difference of opinion between the importers and the salt manufacturers in the west. The salt manufacturers are very much in favour of having the sacks marked with the weight, and the importers are very much opposed to this being done. This particular clause has been framed to meet the demands of the manufacturer in that regard.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think that the interests of the fishermen and other consumers in the lower provinces deserve to be considered also. It is highly objectionable that any difficulty should be put in the way of importers. It is understood what the weight of a bag of salt is, and I do not think there is any justification for insisting that the weight shall be marked on the bags. It would simply tend to increase the cost of the salt to the consumer, and I fail to see that there is any desirable end to be gained by it. I think it would be better to strike out the clause relating to sacks altogether and let it apply only to barrels.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—How can that effect the consumer? Those exporting salt to this country would mark the weight.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It costs something to do it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It would not affect the fishermen who use this salt. The practice has been to bring in salt free for the fisheries. This clause would assist materially in protecting the revenue.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Supposing you put the weight on all salt manufactured in Canada?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is done, but it is not that which is complained of. The salt manufacturers complain of this: We have made certain provisions to permit fishermen to import their salt free of duty. The use of that salt is not confined to fishermen—it goes all over the country, and while they are at the expense of marking their bags of salt, they are brought in competition with bags of salt which contain a very much smaller quantity, for some reason or other, and that they are thus in competition with bags of perhaps very much lighter weight than their own, and they ask that the imported salt shall have the weight marked upon the bag. With the privilege of importing without charge, they think that is not an unreasonable request.

Hon. Mr. POWER—One would suppose that the people who import salt and the people who consume the imported salt would be the persons interested in having the weight marked on the bag, and the hon. gentleman says it is alleged that sometimes the bags are broken and sometimes the salt leaks out. Would not a bag with the weight stamped on it be just as liable to be broken and have salt leak out as another bag?

Hon. Mr. DEVER—Perhaps I could throw a little light on this subject. I think that salt manufactured in Canada might be very well sold by weight, because it is of a dry nature and when it is once weighed it loses hardly anything in leakage, but the salt from Liverpool comes in very large quantities. It is of a very damp nature, and on the voyage it naturally absorbs a quantity of moisture also. If it is weighed in Liverpool and the proper weight put on the sack there, by the time it gets to the seaport cities of Halifax and St. John, there is naturally a deficiency in weight, and, consequently, if a party purchased fifty or a hundred bags of salt according to the weight marked on them in Liverpool, they would not have that weight when they arrived here, and under these circumstances it makes a great deal of difficulty with the purchaser and the merchants themselves. On the other hand, if the salt came without being marked in Liverpool, and if the merchants in Quebec and Montreal, as well as in the seaport cities, had to weigh a large quantity of salt, some fifty or sixty bags at once, one can see what a great expense and trouble they would be put to, and in consequence of that their salt would have to be sold at a higher rate. I throw out these observations to show the House that there is a good deal of consideration to be used with reference to this weighing and marking of the exact weight on the bags and sacks. I think if it could be done, it would be a great protection to the purchaser, but the difficulty is that this salt from abroad is liable to shrink and fall off in weight sometimes five to fifteen pounds.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—They might throw in a shovel or two extra.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—That could not be done, because the bags are closed, and with fifty or sixty thousand bags it will be seen that there would be a large amount of labour in handling them. We generally sold salt by the sacks supposed to contain a certain number of bushels, and I am not aware that there was any great difficulty between the merchants and importers about the weight of the bag, because competition was so great that there never was very much profit on this salt. Fishermen were supposed to get it at a very moderate percentage of profit, and I do not know that they had any great objection to take it as it had been imported, notwithstanding it was deficient in weight two or three pounds. But if this House think otherwise, I have no particular interest in it, further than to point out these facts as being perhaps somewhat troublesome to merchants and making confusion in the market that would be better avoided if possible.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—As far as the sentiment of merchants and consumers of salt in the maritime provinces goes, it will be unanimous against imposing any such condition as is imposed by this clause of the Bill. Indeed, from my own knowledge of the Liverpool salt trade, it appears to me to be practically impossible to carry out the conditions of this Bill. Salt in Liverpool is brought to the side of the ships in large scows, or lighters. It is shovelled into bags. The bags are bought by the shipper, ten or eleven or twelve to the ton, a suitable size, so that ten or eleven or twelve bags will just hold a ton of salt and the salt is simply shovelled into the bag and the bag is sewed up and put on board the vessel. It must be borne in mind that this salt in Liverpool is very little value. It cost only a few shillings for a ton, and it does not pay the shippers there to go to any trouble about weighing the salt. They will throw in a shovelful or two at any time, and they are not particular if it is over weight or not, and I believe they will often put in a few extra sacks if there is any question raised about it. I doubt if we could induce the shippers on the other side to comply with this provision, and go to the trouble and expense of having these bags marked. The time involved would be perhaps a more serious matter than anything else. It must be borne in mind that in late years salt is brought out here very largely in steamers, and that it is necessary in shipping by steamers that it should be handled very quickly. The owners of steamships place a great deal of value upon the time of their ships, and will not consent to have them detained unnecessarily. If there is unnecessary detention, or if this provision in this Bill is forced upon the people in England who ship the salt, I am satisfied that it must add something—I cannot say how much—to the cost of the salt on the other side. If the marking has to be done on this side, when the salt is landed, I really do not see how it can be done. It is dumped or hoisted out of these steamers very rapidly, a great number of bags at a time, loaded into carts and hauled away, and there is really no time or opportunity to have the salt marked. I do not really see how it can be done except at very considerable additional expense. There is, certainly, no demand for any legislation of this kind in the lower provinces, and I am satisfied that if any attempt is made to enforce the provisions of this Act there, it will lead to a great deal of dissatisfaction and difficulty. I have not had much experience during late years, but I am speaking from my experience some years ago. I think the hon. gentleman from Yarmouth has had a great deal of practical experience in this line of business, and his opinion on this question would be valuable. I really hope that if this section is to be passed it will be confined to the salt produced in Canada. My hon. friend says that would not meet the case, but it applies to all the salt handled by the people who are asking for this provision in the Bill. As far as I am concerned I have no objection to their having it, but I do not think it should be imposed on the salt imported from Great Britain.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The law which is proposed to be repealed and amended by this clause, provides that the Bill shall be marked, and the change in the law is simply including the bags. I do not think it is the feeling of the committee that the bags should be included, and if we wish to exclude them, we simply strike out this clause of this Bill, and I, therefore, move that this fourth clause be struck out.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The law as it now stands provides for barrels. This was a proposition to introduce sacks, and to provide for the marking of sacks. If we take out the provision with reference to sacks, then the whole clause should come out, because the law as it stands now adequately provides for the marking of barrels. I judge from the observations and statements made to me from gentlemen from the maritime provinces, that they would be very much opposed to a provision for marking the sacks, because if the sacks are weighed on the other side of the Atlantic and marked, there is no certainty they would weigh the same on this side, and it would seriously interfere with the discharge of the cargo of the ship.

The clause was struck out.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved that the fifth clause be also struck out.

The motion was agreed to.

On clause 3,

Hon. Mr. MILLS—This is a clause about which I had some doubt and the hon. gentleman from Marshfield made some remarks with reference to it. I refer to subsection 3 of the first clause with regard to the weight of a barrel of potatoes. My hon. friend behind me says that they sell a great many potatoes by the barrel, taking an ordinary flour barrel and filling it, and that a barrel of potatoes weighs about 150 pounds. This clause provides for 174 pounds and this weight, I suppose, has been obtained by pressing the potatoes in the barrel. I applied to the department for information upon this subject, in order to ascertain upon what they were proceeding in fixing the weight of a barrel of potatoes containing 96 quarts at 174 pounds, and they have sent me over a statement which I take to be the statement of the municipal council of King's, N.S. That report provides for the sale of potatoes by the barrel, and it says that the weight of a barrel of potatoes is 174 pounds, and a suitable penalty should be provided for the manufacture of barrels of other dimensions than those mentioned. There have been no tests by the Department of Inland Revenue at all and no special pains taken to ascertain what would be the weight of a barrel of potatoes properly put up, containing the same cubical capacity as a barrel manufactured for apples. It seems to me that it would be to some extent taking a leap in the dark to insert a clause and carry it through in a measure resting solely on a resolution adopted by a body that owes no responsibility to parliament in the matter, and therefore, with the consent of the House, I will strike out the first section of the third clause. We can provide for it hereafter when we have the proper test made by the department in ascertaining what is the precise weight of a barrel of potatoes. That being struck out, clause 4 will become clause 3.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Did I understand the hon. minister to say that the department had made no test?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—All I can tell my hon. friend is that I do not know whether they have or not, but I applied to them for the information upon which they had proceeded, and the information they sent me was the resolution passed by the council and board of trade in the county of King's, N.S.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am very sorry, and somewhat surprised, to learn that we are proceeding without precise information. I think it would have been the easiest thing in the world for the Department of Inland Revenue, having had that application made to them, to have made a test.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—They may have made a test, but I have no information and it will only be a few months till parliament meets again and no serious injury will be done to anybody, because if they can put 174 pounds into a barrel of potatoes by pressing them, they, no doubt, will do it, if it is required they should be of that weight, and sold in the West India Islands. There will be no difficulty as to that. My hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Burpee) says they sell their potatoes in barrels not headed up but filled, and they weigh 150 pounds—that being so, it is the weight of 2½ bushels. Therefore, there is nothing to interfere with people in King's County selling as heretofore, and those in New Brunswick doing precisely the same thing. Legislation can be had at another session on this subject if it is found to be desirable.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The view that I put before this committee previously on this question is the view of the potato raiser of King's County, N.S. My opinion has been derived, it appears, from the very same source which the hon. leader of the House has referred to. The trade in that respect is not carried on in that way in our province. The potatoes, as explained previously, are sold either by weight or they are measured in tubs containing about two and a half bushels, and which are stamped, and they are sold in that way. This particular trade, as far as the east is concerned, belongs to the Annapolis valley in Nova Scotia, where they have quite a trade with the West India Islands, and it has been explained to me that they are very desirous to have this provision, because they allege that the barrel which they have been seeking to have made legal for both potatoes and apples, will contain that quantity of potatoes when they are pressed down with a screw and ready for shipment, and as they say the transactions are almost exclusively by the barrel, this would settle all disputes, because they would know, when they were buying a barrel of potatoes, they were getting 174 pounds. That is the proper weight to go into a barrel when properly pressed down. I can understand there are difficulties in the way of this legislation, because it will not be adapted to other parts of Canada, but I am a little surprised that the Department of Inland Revenue did not test this matter so that we could have precise information about it before going this far with the Bill. They have not tested it, otherwise we would not have to depend on the people of King's County, N.S., for information, but would have the opinion of the experts of the department.

Hon. Mr. BURPEE—The barrel is about right. It is about the same as is made for a barrel of flour. By this Bill it is compulsory on those who sell potatoes by the barrel that they shall put 174 pounds into the barrel. It is a fact that they cannot do it. They cannot put any more than 150 pounds. The barrel will hold exactly three bushels of grain, but only two and a half bushels of potatoes. A bushel of potatoes by law should be sixty pounds. They certainly are not more than sixty pounds; that would make 150 pounds for a barrel of potatoes. It is all you can get into the barrel. Potatoes in New Brunswick are all sold by the barrel. The barrels are not headed up, but just taken to market in steamers and on the railroads open, and sold by the barrel. It would be impossible to put the quantity specified here into a barrel and head it up, although you may shake and press the potatoes down. I see that the Bill does not provide that apples shall be sold by weight, and apples, when they are shipped have to go through the same process. When you pack a barrel of apples for shipment you must press them down to prevent them from shaking and being injured. A barrel of potatoes is the same in New Brunswick and in the United States. The question is never asked how many pounds a barrel contains. If every barrel exposed for sale had to be weighed, and was required to contain 174 pounds, it could not be headed up. I am very glad the minister has come to the conclusion to strike out that subsection.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—There is no danger of anybody shipping less than a full barrel of potatoes, because if they are not pressed down first, they will be injured in transit.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I would suggest that the word 'potatoes' should be struck out of clauses 2 and 4.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I think potatoes should come out, because the shippers find when they subject potatoes to pressure they are able to put 174 pounds into one of these barrels, but my hon. friend points out that what they call a barrel of potatoes in New Brunswick, a barrel filled full, but without being pressed, will weigh 150 pounds. I have no doubt that is a correct representation, so, that if we mention a barrel of potatoes here at all, we would be undertaking, from one point of view, to provide for a barrel without declaring that its weight shall be.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is proposed to legislate next session with better knowledge, and it would be well to strike out the reference here to potatoes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not think the clause will bear that interpretation. We first fix the size of the barrel. If that barrel, according to the shippers in King's County, N.S., will hold 174 pounds, what is the necessity of saying anything about the weight ? You do not define what a barrel of apples or quinces shall weigh. You simply say that a barrel shall be of such a size and such dimensions. Then you select potatoes and say how much potatoes shall weigh to the barrel. If potatoes sell by the barrel, why not say that a barrel of potatoes shall be of the same dimensions as a barrel of apples ? If you define the size of a barrel for apples, and they sell potatoes by the barrel in the maritime provinces, let them know what the size of the barrel must be, and there will be no difficulty. It seems to me if you fill a barrel of the dimensions mentioned in clause 18, with very small potatoes, you would have it weigh considerably more than if you filled it with large potatoes. The latter would not lie so closely, and consequently a barrel of small potatoes would weigh more than a barrel of large ones. If you leave the clause as it is, and strike out the third subsection, you declare what size the barrel shall be.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This little discussion shows how necessary it is always to proceed in order. If I had not tried to save time by referring to subclauses 4 and 2 together, this difficulty would not have arisen. It is clear the weight of potatoes must go out of subclause 4 :

> Every person who offers or exposes for sale, or who packs for exportation, apples, pears, quinces or potatoes by the barrel otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of the foregoing section, shall be liable to a penalty, &c.

Now, what is the immediately foregoing provision ? When potatoes are sold by weight, the weight should be 174 pounds to the barrel.

Several hon. GENTLEMEN—That is struck out.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—As I understand, it is intended, in exporting potatoes in future, to use this larger barrel.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, it is smaller.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—A new sized barrel is adopted.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Not larger than a flour barrel. It may be a little smaller.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—Does not this apply to wholesale and not to retail sales ? Why not leave it that potatoes may be sold by the pound for retail ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There is no difficulty about that. That is already provided for. The question is whether you shall apply the barrel measure to potatoes as well as to apples and quinces. I think it is better that potatoes should come out altogether, and let the clause apply to apples, quinces and pears.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The discussion we have had on this measure has revealed one thing, and that is that the Weights and Measures Act with reference to potatoes is in a very bad shape. There is no question about that. Section 19 requires that all articles, including potatoes, shall not be heaped, that the measures shall be a level measure.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—You cannot apply that to potatoes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It does apply to potatoes. You require also that a bushel shall be sixty pounds. Now, they do not correspond. You cannot put sixty pounds of potatoes in a level bushel measure.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The heaped measure makes sixty pounds exactly.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am speaking of the state of our law. Section 19 required that there shall be no heaped measure.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Could you apply that rule to turnips ?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The Act applies to turnips and everything else. It provides that the crevices below the top of the measure shall be equivalent to the bulk of the article that comes above it, or, in other words, shall be equivalent to the lawful measure, and does not make an exception even for turnips. That is certainly an absurd way to measure such an article as turnips. What I want to point out is that the law, as it now stands, provides that a bushel shall be the lawful bushel of potatoes and everything else. Section 16 provides that sixty pounds shall be equivalent to that bushel. We are now in this Bill legalizing a barrel which shall be the smallest used for exporting potatoes. You describe that as holding ninety-six quarts, which has been ascertained to be strictly correct, which is three level bushels. Now, we are told when that is shaken down it weighs only 150 pounds, which shows plainly enough that there are most serious discrepancies in the Weights and Measures Act with reference to potatoes. The barrel in question, in capacity, coincides with the lawful bushel, but the sixty pounds is at variance with the measure. In our province, sixty pounds is accepted as a fair weight for a bushel of potatoes. The law should be made harmonious so that there would not be these discrepancies in relation to this subject. I do not suppose we can do that now, but it shows there is great need of a radical overhauling of the Weights and Measures Act.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There is no doubt the provisions of the Act do not in every respect harmonize. Sixty pounds is represented as the weight of a bushel of potatoes. I have no doubt that is a correct measurement if a bushel was a compact solid body. The experience of those in Nova Scotia who have packed and pressed potatoes for the West India market, shows that although a barrel of ninety-six quarts would hold three bushels level, they cannot put 174 pounds of potatoes in it. The 174 pounds is six pounds short of three bushels in weight, which would represent the interstices which would not be filled up even after pressing. Then my hon. friend points out, following the old practice of heaped measure, that one of these barrels would hold just two and a half bushels of potatoes. It would hold 150 pounds, when not subjected to pressure. That, I think, is the correct statement. I suggest that clause 3 should be struck out altogether, and I propose that the word 'potatoes' shall be struck out of clause 4.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Before doing that, I think if you look at the object of the Bill you must come to the conclusion that potatoes should be left in it. The first clause provides what the size of this barrel shall be.

Hon. Mr. POWER—For apples.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It provides what the size of a barrel shall be. Then the second clause defines exclusively what the size of the barrel shall be for potatoes, quinces and apples. It applies to one just as much as the other. Then you strike out the third clause and make the 4th clause the 3rd, and it refers then to the preceding sections. What are the preceding sections? They relate to the size of the barrel, and provide that when the articles mentioned in the other subsection are sold, they shall be sold in a barrel of those dimensions. If the object of this law is to provide for uniformity in the size of the barrel for the export trade alone—you may say that the word potatoes not being mentioned in that section, therefore it does not apply; but the next section provides that when they are sold for export by the barrel, then the barrel shall be of that size. It does not seem to me to be contradictory at all.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I would call the hon. gentleman's attention to the latter part of the first subclause 'representing as nearly as possible ninety-six quarts or three bushels.' It has been shown that the ordinary barrel holds only two and a half bushels of potatoes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I never saw potatoes sold by the barrel in the market where I live. Apple barrels are supposed to hold three bushels.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—If apples are pressed, of course you will get three bushels, or ninety-six quarts, but potatoes, according to the old measurement, and sixty pounds to the bushel, will certainly not go into a barrel containing ninety-six quarts. I propose in the second clause to strike out the word 'potatoes,' leaving this Bill silent on this subject of potatoes, and silent for the reason that we are not undertaking to define what a barrel of potatoes would be. My hon. friend says that in New Brunswick the practice has grown up of sending them to the market in the open barrel.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is for home consumption.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—He says also to the United States. Then in the West Indies, 174 pounds are packed and pressed into a barrel, which is a larger quantity than can be put into the open barrel. If we leave potatoes out altogether, we are leaving the trade free for the time being.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understand that. I do not object to it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I thought potatoes had better be left out so long as we are not fixing the weight.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—But we are making a barrel a measure by this Bill. Every measure, whether a bushel measure or any other measure, is fixed by the quantity of water it would hold. In a bushel of oats there may be, say, 5,000 grains, and in another bushel of oats here they are not very fine, there may be only 4,000. It is the water which the vessel will hold which forms a measure. Would it not be better to say a barrel shall hold so much? A man might put large apples in a barrel and it would not hold so much as if he put small apples in.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There is no trouble. We quite agree and the Bill provides that the capacity of a barrel shall be 96 quarts. That is three bushels. That is applied to apples, pears and quinces. They are not sold by weight or measure, but the barrel must be pressed in order that it may be put upon the market. You cannot send away a barrel, without ruining them, unless they are pressed. That rule does not apply to potatoes, and unless potatoes are pressed you cannot put the quantity here mentioned in the barrel. I propose to leave out all reference to potatoes.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (Prince Edward Island)—I do not see that it is necessary to strike out the word 'potatoes' in those two sections, because it really does not affect the measure of the potatoes to any extent whatever. In the first part of the eighteenth section we described the size a barrel must be. It must not be less than certain dimensions, which are given here. If you were to fill a barrel of potatoes you would only require, in order to have a legal barrel, to have one which is not less than those dimensions. It may be as much larger as you please. You are not subject to any penalty if you put as much in that barrel as it will reasonably hold, even if it does not hold the 96 quarts, because you are only required to get as near as possible to that quantity in filling the barrel, and these 96 quarts represent water measure. They are not 96 quarts of heaped measure. The Bill as it stands now, with the third subsection of this clause relating to the weight of potatoes struck out, and all that part relating to the weight of salt eliminated from the Bill as it has been already, I think will meet all the requirements of the case without striking out the word 'potatoes' in the subsections in which the word occurs.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I entirely agree with the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, I think it would be a pity to strike out the word 'potatoes' in subsections 2 and 4, because we would be really losing a great part of whatever good there is in the Bill. We are aiming at getting a uniform barrel, and it is hoped that fixing this for apples and potatoes and all similar products, and I think there will be considerable disappointments among the apple growers and potato grower of Nova Scotia if potatoes are not included as well as apples. After all, we are not establishing a measure of capacity. We are only fixing a minimum barrel, in point of size, that shall be used for exportation, and why should we not make the same barrel for apples, potatoes and the other articles mentioned here? I think we will miss whatever good there is in the Bill if we drop the word 'potatoes,' or it will be minimized if the application is not made general. In fact, were it not for the error in the measure last year we would not have this Bill at all. But we must pass some measure in order that the erroneous barrel of last year may not become a legal barrel, and I hope that my hon. friend will consent to allow the word 'potatoes' to remain in. We have struck out the words 'three bushels' in the first section, and the other three sections will entirely harmonize, and it will apply to apples, pears, potatoes and quinces, which should be dealt with in precisely the same way with regard to the size of the barrel.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I do not think my hon. friend rightly apprehends my statement. I pointed out before that so far as the pears, quinces and apples are concerned, when you take a barrel of these they must be pressed. They must all be put in the barrel in the same condition in order to deal with them. There is no difficulty, so far as these things are concerned. But what does a barrel of potatoes mean? Does it mean a pressed barrel, or a barrel that is not pressed?

It is not simply the capacity of the barrel we have to consider. It is the quantity of potatoes we are putting into that barrel. In King's County they put 174 pounds into the barrel by pressing the potatoes. In the county of Sunbury they put 150 pounds, because they are not subject to compression, into the same barrel. There is 24 pounds difference between the barrel of apples pressed and unpressed.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—No.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Supposing this Bill becomes law, you provide for selling potatoes by the barrel. People may voluntarily make such arrangements as they think proper, but supposing a man puts up a barrel of potatoes in the open way, as they do now in the county in which my hon. friend resides, and their right is contested? Supposing the party buying says: 'I have not a barrel of potatoes. You have given me 150 pounds and in the county of King's, in the province of Nova Scotia, they give 174 pounds. I say that the only way you can deal with this matter is to leave out the word 'potatoes,' leaving the people of Nova Scotia to do as they are doing now, and the people in New Brunswick to do as they are doing, until we can ascertain by actual experiment what weight of potatoes can be put into this barrel containing 96 quarts. It is perfectly plain that unless you make provision for packing potatoes in the same way as you pack apples, pears and quinces, it has no applicability to potatoes. It is not a simple question of measurement, because there is no difficulty about it. If this is the only kind of barrel manufactured, it is the kind of barrel the people will use for putting potatoes in, as they use it for every other purpose, but it does seem to me that we ought not to include potatoes until we are prepared to decide what weight of potatoes constitutes a barrel—not simply a measurement, because my hon. friend will see there is all the difference in the world, where you are putting up large objects such as potatoes and apples, whether they are subject to pressure. In the case of apples, quinces and pears, you must subject them to pressure in order to properly pack them but in the case of potatoes you do not do so. I move that the word 'potatoes' be struck out of clauses 2 and 4.

The motion was agreed to.

On clause 4,

Hon. Mr. WOOD—A point has been raised in conversation here with regard to the penalty which is imposed in the fourth clause. I am not clear that, taking sections 4 and 2 together, the penalty of twenty-five cents could not be imposed on any one who was exposing of offering for sale a barrel of apples which were not for exportation—a barrel not headed up in the local market. Clause 2 speaks of apples, pears or quinces sold by the barrel, but it does not say for exportation. Then the fourth clause reads:

> Every person who offers or exposes for sale, or who packs for exportation, apples, pears, quinces or potatoes by the barrel otherwise than in accordance with the foregoing provisions of this section, shall be liable to a penalty of 25 cents for each barrel of apples, pears, quinces or potatoes so offered or exposed for sale or packed.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Does the hon. gentleman think a Canadian has a right to have his barrels inspected as well as others?

Hon. Mr. WOOD—Well if that is the intention all right. I understood it was only to apply to exportation.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I cannot see why we could not make these sections apply to home trade as well as to the export trade. I want to know why a consumer in our own country, who buys apples should not be protected as well as the consumers in foreign countries, and I do not see why in the world this clause should not apply all round.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—So it does.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—Then the words 'for export' should come out.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is all right as it is.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think the word 'export' will have to come out to make it apply to the whole trade. We are fixing a minimum barrel and it protects consumers, when they buy a barrel, from having a smaller barrel than what is a reasonable and equitable one imposed upon them, and I do not see why our own people should not be protected as well as others. In the lower province, we know that in some parts of the valley of Annapolis they have been putting up apples in very small barrels, which would not contain more than two bushels and a peck, and these barrels might still be used in the home trade of Canada. I think, in order to put the business there and every where else on a wholesome basis, that it would be well to make this apply to apples for sale in our own country as well as for export.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—The hon. minister says it does apply.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—Surely the fourth clause is in the alternative. It applies to parties offering apples for sale here, or packing them for exportation.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That is the fourth section.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Why is it necessary in the eighteenth section to insert the words 'for export'? The fourth section gives us the alternative. It compels every person who offers for sale apples in Canada to have them packed in a certain barrel. If we strike out the word 'for export' the clause will read harmoniously.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I think my hon. friend will see that the clauses are all right. It reads:

> All apples packed in Canada for export for sale by the barrel in closed barrels shall be packed, &c.

That is for exportation. Subsection 2 reads:

> When apples, pears, quinces or potatoes are sold by the barrel as a measure of capacity, such barrel shall not be of less dimensions than those specified in this section.

That is not confined simply to export. Then subclause 3 reads:

> Every person who offers or exposes for sale, or who packs for exportation, apples, pears, quinces or potatoes by the barrel otherwise than in accordance with the foregoing provisions of this section, shall be liable to a penalty of 25 cents for each barrel of apples, pears, quinces or potatoes so offered or exposed for sale or packed.

So that the whole ground is covered and the local cases are met by the provision of section 3.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—These people will be back next session for another Bill.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—When will that be?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Oh, January or February.

Hon. Mr. McKAY, from the committee, reported the Bill with amendments, which were concurred in.

SCHOMBERG AND AURORA RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY, in absence of Hon. Mr. Kirchhoffer, moved the second reading of Bill (94) 'An Act respecting the Schomberg and Aurora Railway Company.'

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I do not propose to oppose the second reading of this Bill, but we were to have an explanation of it, and we have not received that explanation.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I have the explanation if the hon. gentleman desires it.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—Let us have it.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—This explanation was placed in my hands to be read to the Senate. This company was incorporated by the parliament of Canada in 1896, chapter 34, with power to build a railway from some point on the northern division of the Grand Trunk Railway, between King and New Market, to a point near the village of Schomberg, in the county of York, passing through or near the village of Kettleby, in the said county. This Bill asks for an extension in a westerly direction to the town of Durham in the county of Grey, and an extension eastward from the present eastern terminus of the company's present railway to the town of Oshawa, making the whole road a distance of———miles. The company asks power to enter into an agreement with the Metropolitan Railway for the conveying, leasing or amalgamating with the Metropolitan Company, subject to two-thirds vote of the shareholders and the approval of the Governor in Council. The Metropolitan Railway has power, under the Act of the Ontario legislature, chapter, 92, 1897, to build from Toronto to New Market and to certain villages in the county of York, and to the towns of Barrie, and Orillia, and an extension from Barrie to Collingwood. The company may use steam as a motive power, with the consent of the municipalities through which it passes. That is the explanation which has been furnished, and I trust that it will be a satisfactory to the hon. gentleman from Monck.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—The explanation is not in accordance with the Bill. Why has this Bill come here at all? Why have they not gone to the local legislature? They obtained an Act of parliament, in 1896, by describing it as a work for the general advantage of Canada. That is the only excuse they can have for coming here; it is a local matter altogether. This parliament passed that Act without fixing a limit of time to build the railway. The company have for ever to build it. If you look at chapter 34 of the Statutes of 1896, you will find no time limit for doing this work. In the Bill now before us we must see that there is a time limit.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is a limit in the fourth clause.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—I have read the Act and cannot find it. It is a matter we can consider if the Bill goes to committee. The company is going to do all this work with a capital stock of $250,000. It is true they have a bonding power of $20,000 a mile. This legislation should be looked into, but it is not my business to look into it.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—What are they here for?

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—They do not say whether they are going to have a steam railway, an electric railway or a horse railway. I suppose if it goes to the Railway Committee they can settle that point. I shall be glad, if I am here, to fix a limit to the time in which the company can do this work. It looks to me like a matter of speculation. The explanation my hon. friend has given is not satisfactory to me, but we can look into the matter when it goes before the committee. The company have not done anything at all, but they take to themselves power to build extensions of the railway. My hon. friend might give us an explanation of what these people want to do.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—It will be explained in the commttee to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—The rule is laid down, as I understand, by the leader of the opposition at least, that at the second reading of a Bill it should be explained, and if the House support it, they adopt the principle of the Bill. There is no principle of this Bill that I want to adopt, except a principle that will not give them, according to the charter they have, for ever, to build the line. My hon. friend from Halston (Hon. Mr. McKindsey) put that Bill through in 1896. Every one felt he would not do anything that was wrong, and I am sure he had no desire to do wong, but it shows that the parliament of Canada was lax in allowing any number of gentlemen to lock up a part of the country for ever in that way, without even telling us whether the line is to be a steam railway, an electric railway, or a horse tramway. I am opposed to any company coming to parliament and getting hold of a charter which will retard the prosperity of the country, and I want to discharge my duty in preventing anything of the kind.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—I do not profess to have any knowledge of the district of country through which these railways pass, or as to the character of the railways, but in looking hurriedly over the Bill, it strikes me that there is one provision which is rather extraordinary. I may not understand it likely, but I wish to be set right if I do not take the proper interpretation of it. In line 25, clause 4, we read:

> And as to the rest of the lines of railway authorized to be constructed, the time for the completion thereof is extended for five years from the passing of this Act.

Is not that an extraordinary time? When we take into consideration the time within which the Canadian Pacific Railway was built, it seems extraordinary to give these people five years to complete their work.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

PENITENTIARY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved the second reading of Bill (174) 'An Act to amend the Penitentiary Act.' He said: The Bill is simply the schedule of the Bill of last year, with a few names that were accidentally omitted from amongst the names of the officers. There is no change in the salaries paid. Everything is precisely as it stood last year. The inspector of penitentiaries was away when the Bill was prepared last session, and the officer who prepared the schedule accidentally dropped out some names. If the hon. gentlemen will look at the Bill, they will see the name of the officers who were dropped out are included in brackets. There is no change in the salaries paid to the officers.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The salaries that they have been receiving are the salaries mentioned here ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved that the Bill be referred to a Committee of the Whole to-morrow.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It appears that the second subsection exempts certain officers from the operation of the Bill. If I understand, it does not interfere with salaries, which in the past were larger than provided for in this Act.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The officer to whom it applies is the superintendent of the Manitoba penitentiary, who was appointed before 1885, and who continues to receive the salary that was fixed at that time. That was exempt last year.

The motion was agreed to.

SAVINGS BANKS IN THE PROVINCE OF QUEBEC BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (177) 'An Act to amend the Acts respecting certain Savings Banks in the province of Quebec.'

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved that the Bill be read the second time to-morrow.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is this the Bill that particularly applies to the District Savings Bank of Montreal ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hon. gentlemen who were here a few years ago will remember the late Senator Murphy, of Montreal, introduced a Bill allowing the banks to invest in additional securities. A good deal of discussion arose as to whether it was wise or prudent, and this Bill is to extend their power to invest in securities.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—They were restricted under their original charter ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, they were restricted within very narrow limits, and they asked to have them enlarged. They were enlarged, and they now ask for further enlargement.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

THE PARIS EXPOSITION.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON moved :

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before the Senate: 1. Copies of all letters and telegrams between the government of Canada, or any member or official thereof, and the Premier of Prince Edward Island or any other person, relative to the selection, preparation and forwarding of the products of the said island for the Paris Exhibition; and also relating to the appointment of any person to take charge of the said products at Paris.

2. A detailed statement of the said products.

3. A statement in detail of all moneys expended in the selection, preparation and forwarding of said products, and to whom paid.

He said : It will be in the recollection of hon. gentlemen that I made some inquiries of the government at an earlier period in the session with regard to some of these matters, and it will also be remembered that very precise information was not then obtained. I have it on excellent authority that early action was not taken by the government in regard to the representation at Paris of the products of Prince Edward Island. When I was in Halifax about the first of October last, I met Mr. Bigelowe, of Wolfville, N.S., who had been employed by the governement to get up an exhibition of fruits for Nova Scotia, and he showed me a telegram which he had received that day from the Secretary of the Commission, or the Department of Agriculture, I forget which, at all events from the authority engaged in organizing for the Paris Exposition, asking him to make a preparation of the fruits of Prince Edward Island, just the same as he had made of the products of Nova Scotia, and he told me that he thought it was absolutely impossible to do anything that would be worth doing at that late date, that he had been at work from the month of June in the province of Nova Scotia, and it would be quite impossible to make any adequate representation of the fruits of Prince Edward Island at that late period. The early fruits had all passed away and all that remained were the late apples and some other late fruits, and therefore he thought it would be impossible to make any adequate representation. I fully agreed with that view, and he told me that he sent a telegram to that effect. However, shortly afterwards, a young man, Mr. Clark, received authority to make a selection of fruits and grains of the province, and I saw some of this young man's work. I know that he made a very determined effort and did all that a man could reasonably do at that late period to get up a representation of the grains and fruits of the province, but it was impossible for him to get an adequate representation, because he did not get authority in time. This Mr. Clark is the Liberal organizer for the province, but I must say, from my knowledge of him and his work, that he did it as well as it could be done at that late period. I had, however, yesterday a letter from a friend in Paris who visited the exposition, and after making a very exhaustive inquiry, he failed to find on exhibition any of the products of Prince Edward Island. I cannot explain why that is. He saw some grains in sheaves decorating the walls, but could not see the inscriptions, and he failed to find anything from the province of Prince Edward Island. I think that this accentuates a point I made on the last occasion this subject was discussed, that in the large staff appointed each province should be represented. If each province had been represented, let it be in ever so inferior a position on the staff our representative would take some interest in having the products of the province displayed, but I fear the remote and less important parts of the country have been entirely lost sight of by the officials sent to Paris. It is to be regretted such is the case, and I think that owing to the large number of officials sent to Paris the representation should have been given to the whole country, and in that way secure a proper exhibition of the products of the different provinces. I think I will be able to convince this House that this matter of the Paris Exposition, as far as relates to Prince Edward Island, at all events, has not been promoted by the government of Canada in the interests of the province or in the public interest, but for a low order of political purposes.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Order, order.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I will be able to sustain my statement to the fullest extent.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman has no right to use such language. It is unparliamentary. He is attributing dishonourable motives.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am speaking of the government of this country. I am not speaking of members of this House individually. It will be a long day, and a strange day when members of this House will be prevented from expressing their opinions freely and fully with regard to the doings of the government. I intend to use my position in this House to condemn the conduct of the administration where I think they have done something wrong and seriously wrong.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Always, of course, in accordance with parliamentary practice.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Certainly. In the province of Prince Edward Island it is well known the provincial government has been in difficulties. They have lost many by-elections, and they found themselves in a minority in that legislature about the middle of December last. An election was held in the district of Tignish on the 25th of July, 1899, and the Liberal party having charge of the government of the country put a candidate in the field who was opposed by the candidate of the opposition, and the result was that whereas in the previous election the government candidate had a majority of 244 in the by-election the decision of the people was reversed, and the Conservative candidate was declared elected by 30 or 40 of a majority. The Liberal organ, speaking of the event said :

> The result of the vote yesterday will, we believe, make the Liberals all the keener in future contests, and to see that their organization is complete in every poll.

I have no doubt that resolution was acted upon, and that they improved their organization in every way they could, but the result was two by-elections were held in the month of December, and notwithstanding this earnest determination to improve their organization, they lost these two elections, and the result was that the government were in the minority. The candidate elected on this occasion in the Conservative interest for the Tignish district was Mr. Henry J. Pineau. It appears, after losing all these seats, and finding that improved organization was not all that was needed, they set about with their friends in Ottawa and on the island to seduce from his allegiance to his constituents one of the members that had been elected in the by-election, this Mr. Pineau. Mr. Pineau attended the convention of the opposition in Charlottetown on the 23rd of January of this year, when the following resolution was passed :

Moved by Wm. McNeill Simpson, Esq., seconded by Mr. H. J. Pineau, Esq., M.L.A.:

Resolved, that the electoral districts of New London, Tignish, Belfast and Murray Harbour are entitled to the thanks of this convention on behalf of the taxpeyers of this province for having, at the recent partial elections, so decisively expressed condemnation of the Farquharson government, and the enormous public debt created by them through their extravagant and inefficient management of public affairs.

As hon. gentlemen will see, there was no doubt about where Mr. H. J. Pineau, M.P.P., stood on the 23rd of January last. On the 9th day of February following, which would be about sixteen days after he voluntarily seconded the resolution which I have read to the House, a conversation took place between Mr. Pineau and Wm. Callaghan, a highly respected resident of Tignish district, and I have a declaration by Mr. Callaghan which I will read to the House to show what took place after this meeting on the 23rd January :

I, William Callaghan, of Ebbsfleet, Prince County, province of Prince Edward Island, do solemnly declare that on or about February 9 last, Henry J. Pineau, M.L.A., of Ebbsfleet, called on me and said that he wished to speak to me on an important matter, and wanted my advice. He stated to me that he was approached by Dr. Wickham, of Tignish, and was offered, if he would accept, that he (Mr. Pineau) could get the appointment of commissioner to the Paris Exposition with the pay of $5 per day and all expenses. He further stated that Dr. Wickham told him he would have to go to Charlottetown to see Premier Farquharson, who would direct him to the Deputy Minister of Public Works, Ottawa, for further instructions. I told him he was adopting a dangerous course, and better mind what he was about, and go to Tignish and see his friends, which he promised to do. He said it would be a great thing for him to see his own country—France. I afterwards saw Mr. Pineau. He told me that he had a letter in his pocket, and his appointment was all right to date from April 15 to December 1, 1900.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously, believing it to be true, and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act, 1893.

(Sgd.) WILLIAM CALLAGHAN.

Declared before me at Ebbsfleet, Prince County, province of Prince Edward Island, this 28th day of May, A.D. 1900.

CHARLES DALTON,
J. P. for Prince County.

I have another declaration, which is as follows :—

I, Jerome Perry, of Ebbsfleet, Prince County, Prince Edward Island, fisherman, solemnly declare that on or about February 9 last I went to the house of Henry J. Pineau, M.L.A., on business. When at his place he told me that Dr. Wickham, of Tignish, was to see him on the previous day, and offered him that if he would accept he (Wickham) was authorized to offer him the appointment of commissioner from this island to the Paris Exposition at a salary of $5 per day, and all expenses paid. He asked me what I thought of this offer, as he said he had been to see Mr. William Callaghan for his advice, and would like to have my opinion also. I told him I did not approve of it, as he was elected by us to go to the House of Assembly and oppose the government, and not to sell our rights by taking offers of this kind. He said nothing further, and I went to my house.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously, believing it to be true, and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act, 1893.

Declared before me at Tignish, Prince County, Prince Edward Island, this 23rd day of May, A.D. 1900.

EDWARD HACKETT,
J. P. for Prince County.

As a matter of history, Mr. Pineau left his home at Tignish, on the morning of February 26, proceeded to Charlottetown, remained in Charlottetown the following day, presumably carrying out his own words that he was to go to town and see Premier Farquharson. He went to Charlottetown at any rate, and it is to be assumed that he carried out his intention of going to see Premier Farquharson. He then passed over on the steamer Minto to the mainland and arrived in Ottawa on the morning of March 3. It has been asserted very strongly that Mr. Pineau had not come to Ottawa at all, and in order to set that matter at rest, I will read the declaration of Mr. Huckell to the House:

In the Matter of Henry J. Pineau.

I, John Huckell, of the city of Ottawa, in the county of Carleton, hotel-keeper, do solemnly declare:

1. I am and have been for eleven years last past proprietor of the Brunswick Hotel, in said city of Ottawa.

2. On the 3rd day of March last Henry J. Pineau, of Tignish, P.E.I., registered at said hotel, and signed the hotel register, the entry made by him in said register being as follows, that is to say: 'Henry J. Pineau, Tignish, P.E.I.'

3. Said Pineau was a guest at said hotel from the said 3rd day of March to the 13th day of March last, namely, ten days and a quarter.

And I make this solemn declaration, &c.

JOHN HUCKELL.

Declared before me at the city of Ottawa, in the county of Carleton, this 12th day of May, 1900.

A. MACFARLANE.
Commissioner, &c.

We now know that Mr. Pineau came to Ottawa. We know when he left the Brunswick Hotel, which I happen to know was coincident with his departure from Ottawa; another very distinguished gentleman left Ottawa the same day—the same end of the day for, it appears, they both left on the morning of March 13. I quote from La Patrie of March 12, 1900, the following words:

The Hon. Mr. Tarte will leave Ottawa to-morrow for New York; from the latter place he shall embark for France on board the 'Aquitaine.'

On the following day, March 13, La Patrie published the following item of information:

The Hon. J. Israel Tarte, Minister of Public Works of Canada, leaves to-night for Paris. He will be accompanied by Madame J. E. Robillard, Miss Anna Tarte, his two daughters; Madame Joseph Robillard, and his secretary, M. Hains. At New York Thursday Mr. Tarte will board the 'Aquitaine' of the French line.

We have here the evidence that Mr. Pineau came to Ottawa, that he remained until the forenoon of March 13, and that he departed from the Hotel Brunswick the same time as the Hon. Mr. Tarte, departed from Ottawa, to go to Paris. In connection with this subject I am also privileged to read a letter from Mr. Pineau himself, in his own handwriting, written from 'The Hotel Brunswick,' dated March 8, 1900. It is addressed to Mr. James W. Shea, of Waterford, Tignish, P.E.I.

Ottawa, March 8, 1900.

Mr. James W. Shea.

Dear Sir,—I now take the pleasure of writing you a few lines to let you know that I am in Ottawa at present, and I must also tell you that it is a fine place. I have seen a good deal already. HENRY J. PINO.

It is necessary that hon. gentlemen should be aware of this fact in order to explain the expression in this letter. 'I could not help myself,' that Mr. Pineau had been unfortunate in business and was indebted to some very strong politicians in the province, and the first thing that was done was to pounce upon him and seize his effects and sell them under the hammer, and the next step was to approach him through the instrumentality of Dr. Wickham to offer him five dollars a day to go to Paris. This is what the evidence, which cannot be gainsaid in the slightest particular, goes to show.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—Did he go to Paris?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I daresay my hon. friend will see by this time that he fully thought he was going to Paris, and some people fully intended to send him to Paris. They must have been the greatest set of deceivers and. I will say, rascals that ever I became acquainted with if they did not really intend to carry out the promises and inducements that were held out to this man to come to Ottawa. My hon. friend asks did he go to Paris? I believe that up to the present moment he has not gone to Paris, but he was induced to leave Prince Edward Island by a person who was purporting to act, or claiming to act, with the authority of the government at Ottawa and the government of Prince Edward Island. He was induced to leave his home. He had called three or four meetings for the party organization of his constituents before this man Wickham approached him. He had called these meetings for organization, but before the dates for holding the meetings had matured he was spirited away and induced to go to Charlottetown with the full belief and the confident assurance that he was to receive an appointment to go to Paris to represent Prince Edward Island at the Paris Exposition, and his own letter and the declarations I have read all show that this was the case. For some reason best known to those who were conducting this intrigue from beginning to end, Pineau was not sent to Paris. He was taken across the line, into the land where a good many other people with whom political machines have dealings go. He passed over to the United States and remained there until the month of May, when he was brought back to Prince Edward Island, and he entered the provincial legislature and voted in direct opposition to the principles on which he had been elected only a few months previously. The conclusion is inevitable, that he was seduced from his allegiance to his constituents, from his duty to the country, by this promise of being sent to Paris. He was brought to Ottawa and put in a damaging position before his former friends and before the country which was irreparable, as far as he was concerned. He found himself in that position, and having gone so far, he was induced to go still further. At first, all that was intended by those who were conducting this intrigue was that he should be got out of the country, so that his vote should not be recorded during the sitting of the legislature, but out of that evolved a still bolder and stronger proposition, which was the one that was carried out, that he should go back to Prince Edward Island and vote for the party that inveigled him away from the duty he owed to his constituents. I would submit one other declaration on this subject before I resume my seat. It is a declaration by Mr. James W. Shea, of Waterford. He is the gentleman to whom Pineau addressed the letter which I have already read, and Mr. Pineau's letter will show that he, at least, regarded Mr. Shea as a very honourable man, whom he trusted to look after little affairs of business for him in his absence. Pineau said to him: 'You get your men boarded at our place and get what you want, and I know you will do what is right.' We cannot have a much better recommendation of Mr. Shea than Mr. Pineau's own letter that he would do what was right. I do not know Mr. Shea personally, but that is the reputation he bears. He is a man who does a very considerable amount of business, and he bears the reputation of a very honourable man.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Are there many like that in Prince Edward Island?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Many who give up private letters for political purposes?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The letter was not marked private. My hon. friend from Wolseley should not ask that question. It is bad enough for the hon. leader of the government to ask questions of that kind, because he never was in the east and he does not know anything about the province, but I cannot excuse the hon. gentleman from Wolseley, because he knows a good deal about the island. The declaration reads:

I, James W. Shea, of Waterford, lot 1, Prince County, P.E.I., farmer and lobster packer, do hereby solemnly declare that on or about May 13 inst., I was in conversation with Henry J. Pineau, M.P.P., and he stated to me that he expected to get from the Liberal party in Charlottetown, for his support, the sum of $2,000. He also said that he had asked of them that amount before leaving Charlottetown on the previous Friday, and they told him they were to meet Monday and they would let him know on his return back to Charlottetown. I have not heard since from Mr. Pineau, and cannot now say how the matter has been arranged.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously, believing it to be true, and knowing that it is of the same force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of the Canada Evidence Act, 1893.

JAMES W. SHEA.

Declared before me at Waterford, in Prince County, province of Prince Edward Island, this 25th day of May, A.D. 1900.

CHARLES DALTON,
J. P. for Prince County.

My hon. friend who asked me the question did he go to Paris, has, no doubt, in recollection a discussion that took place in this House some weeks ago. I made the statement on that occasion that I knew he had gone to Paris. I made that statement solemnly believing that I had good evidence to sustain it. A day or two before that I met an official of this government in front of this building, and I knew that he had been in contact with Pineau, and I asked him where Pineau was. I asked him: 'Did you see him while he was here.' He said: 'Yes.' I asked: 'Is he here now'? He said: 'No.' I asked: 'Where is he'? He replied: 'He left yesterday with Mr. Tarte.' I asked if it was for Paris and he said 'Yes.' It seems, whatever the intention was, he did not go to Paris, as I stated, but the evidence I have submitted, much of which was known to me when I made my former statement to the House, and the conversation of this gentleman in the official employ of the government of Canada, and who knew Pineau,—that official's statement in conjunction with all this information which was within the scope of my knowledge, fully justified me in saying that Pineau had gone to Paris. If the government changed its mind, and dropped Pineau somewhere near New York or Boston, after he left Ottawa, I could not be held responsible for that. I have submitted the declaration and evidence to this House to show that this man was approached, and approached by some person about whom we have very recently had a discussion in this House, as having been given a monopoly of handling and controlling the fisheries bounty cheques, and it appears this man is recognized by the officers of the department and was made the custodian and dispenser of fishing bounty cheques in the district of Tignish. Taking that in connection with the affidavits which I have read from two highly responsible men, that Pineau told them this man approached him, in February, and offered him this position, telling him he could go to Paris Exposition, and Pineau's own letter in which he said that the government received him well, and that he was waiting to go on, which he expected would be the next day, all shows most conclusively that, as far as poor Pineau was concerned at least, he thought he was going on to Paris up to a very late period in the negotiation, and that he was dropped out later on, for what reason can be best known to those who had control of the negotiations. Anyway Pineau's letter reveals this fact, that he was received and received well by the government at Ottawa. The affidavits reveal the fact that he was approached by a person, who was recognized by the government, we know, in another matter, as a trustworthy person, all of which goes to show that this matter of the employment of the man to represent the province of Prince Edward Island, at the Paris Exposition, was made a matter of political concern for a political purpose, and that this Dr. Wickham was no doubt authorized in the way he said he was authorized, and that his instructions were to send this man to the Premier, at Charlottetown, and the Deputy Minister of Public Works, at Ottawa. Taken in conjunction with Pineau's own letter, that he was well received by the government and was waiting to go on, which he expected would take place that day or the next day—on this evidence I think hon. gentlemen will admit that I have made out a clear and substantial case, and that this is a very grave scandal that has occurred in our country. A member of a provincial legislature, a man whose political faith was so strong, that he became a candidate against his own brother-in-law, accepted the nomination of a political convention and was elected by the efforts of a political party, and after that election was over, the organ of the government admitted a substantial and decided defeat, and not only that, but Pineau showed by his action on the 23rd of January, in seconding the resolution I have read, that he was a most uncompromising opponent of the government of the day. Then we have the evidence which follows afterwards that he was approached by this man Wickham to go to Paris—that he was induced to leave his home and to adandon meetings of his constituents that he had called for the purpose of political organization, and was induced to go one step after another until, finally, he went to the legislature and voted in direct opposition to the way he was elected to vote.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I would say with regard to the only observations which the hon. gentleman made that were pertinent to his motion, in respect to the exhibition of fruits and products of Prince Edward Island, at Paris, that the whole of that matter was left by the Minister of Agriculture in the hands of Dr. Saunders, who has charge of the experimental farm here, and I have no doubt that Dr. Saunders has discharged his duty properly in the matter. I have every confidence that he is competent, and that he is faithful in the discharge of any work entrusted to him. But the hon. gentleman was not content with these observations in respect to the motion, dealt in a series of calumnies attacking the administration—attributing to members of the government unworthy and improper motives, and undertaking to read in proof of the statement which he had made a number of papers which had no relevancy whatever to the hon. gentleman's charges. The hon. gentleman said that Mr. Pineau was elected as a member of the Conservative party, and was returned by that party to the local legislature for the purpose of supporting it and opposing the existing administration in that province. That may be. I do not know anything about Mr. Pineau, or about the purpose for which he was elected. All I can say, if he is so mean a man—so devoid of all principle as the hon. gentleman has represented him to be, those characteristics could not have suddenly developed after he was chosen as a candidate and elected a member of the local legislature. It would go rather to point out the moral character of those who stood behind him, no less than to point out the character which he himself possessed, and which the hon. gentleman has here ascribed to him. Let me say, in the first place, that the discussion of the conduct of Mr. Pineau, and of Dr. Wickham, and of Mr. Farquharson have nothing whatever to do with this House, or with the House of Commons, or with the present administration. We are in no way responsible for what Dr. Wickham, or Mr. Farquharson may have said to either of them. The truth is this: the hon. gentleman has undertaken to show that the party of which he is a member made a very bad choice of a candidate for a constituency in the province of Prince Edward Island—that that candidate has undertaken to betray the party which elected him—that no sooner did he secure his election, knowing the two parties were evenly balanced in the legislature, than he undertook to sell himself to the highest bidder. That is the statement the hon. gentleman has practically made here. But the hon. member has gone further than that. He intimated that some members of the government had brought Pineau here for the purpose of bribing him. Has the hon. gentleman given one scintilla of evidence to support such a proposition as that? Is there a single paper read here, or is there a statement that has been made by anybody—even by so great a liar as Pineau—is there anything said by him which goes to show there is any foundation for a charge of that sort? I say there is not. He says Mr. Tarte left the city the same time Pineau did. Mr. Tarte left by way of New York for the purpose of going to Paris. Is it an extraordinary fact that two men, out of a population of 75,000 or 100,000, besides the transient population coming to the city, should leave on the same day? Is that an evidence of guilt? Does the hon. gentleman suppose there is anybody in this House so imbecile, so devoid of all capacity to reason, as to accept a statement of that sort as evidence that there was a corrupt understanding between Mr. Tarte and Pineau, because, not that they had met or had any conversation with each other, but that the two happened to leave the city at the same period of time. Now, I believe I am correct in saying that Pineau did not meet a single member of the government while he was in this city. I have made inquiry of a number of my colleagues and none of them remembers having seen him. I have never seen him, so far as I know. I have had no conversation with him. I think my hon. friend beside me will testify to the same thing.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I know the Minister of Marine and Fisheries told me he had never met or seen him while he was in the city—that he had had no communication with him directly or indirectly, either personally or through any other person. I charge the hon. gentleman with uttering calumnies against members of the administration in the statements he has made here to-day, without a particle of evidence in support of them. He has not produced any evidence to show that any member of the government tried to sell Pineau's support to Farquharson or anybody else. What interest could this government have in the question of whether Farquharson's government succeeded or failed?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Oh, oh.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman says 'oh, oh.' That has just as much force as any observation that he has addressed to this House. It is just as strong as any argument he has uttered. I say we have no interest whatever in either the success or the failure of the local government. Why the government of Sir John Macdonald existed for years with the local governments against him, and it is no source of strength of this government to have governments of the same party existing in the various provinces. Every hon. gentleman will admit that to be so. I know that was the opinion of Sir John Macdonald himself, and the results went a long way to sustain the view which he expressed. The hon. gentleman has referred to the fact that Pineau was a very needy man. He may have been. The hon. gentleman first represents Pineau as a very great rascal—as having been a traitor to his party—as having been elected by them to office, and then gone about hawking his vote.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—He is not nearly so bad as those who bribed him.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I apprehend from what the hon. gentleman says that he is worse than Pineau, for if any person has bribed Pineau, it has not been a member on this side of the House—it has not been a member of the administration. The hon. gentleman made it a point, in the discussion the other day, to bring a series of charges against the administration which, when examined, were shown not to have a single particle of foundation whatever.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—What were they ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman accused the government of having undertaken to pay the bounty cheques of the fishermen into the hands of Dr. Wickham.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That was proved up to the handle.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That those cheques were handed to Dr. Wickham for his own purpose——

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I never made the statement that Dr. Wickham was using this money for his own purpose.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman insinuated it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—None could read the statement of the hon. gentleman and come to any other conclusion.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Instead of making that statement, I distinctly stated in the House that I had no evidence on that subject. An hon. gentleman in the House said that it was possible that these people owed Dr. Wickham, and that he might be collecting his fees. I said I did not know whether that was the case or not.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—If the hon. gentleman did not mean that Dr. Wickham was using these cheques for the purpose of paying his own obligations, I want to know what point there was in all that he said on the subject ?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Dr. Wickham was holding them for political purposes.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman has made this speech. He has alluded to this matter himself, and I am simply answering the observation which he made——

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Which I did not make.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—In this debate, and if the hon. gentleman is correctly reported—and I have no doubt he will be—he has alluded more than once to Dr. Wickham to-day.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Yes.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman spoke of what he had done as a friend of the government in the matter of bounty cheques to the fishermen.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Yes.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That was in to-day's debate. The hon. gentleman has also intimated here to-day, in what he has said, that he would be able to prove that the government were corruptly associated with Mr. Pineau in this transaction. What evidence has the hon. gentleman adduced in support of that ? He says first that Pineau is a corrupt man—that he is an untruthful man. The hon. gentleman then undertakes to call this rascal, this corrupt man, this untruthful man as a witness against the administration. Now, what does this man say ? He says that the government treated him well when he came to Ottawa. Does he say that he met a single member of the government ? Not a word of the sort, and the probability is, when he speaks of the government, he refers to members of the two Houses that he met, for a great many people from the hon. gentleman's province speak loosely in that kind of way, not being able to distinguish between the government and the representatives of the people or the appointees of the two Houses. That is in all probability what he did. He may have met the hon. gentleman. He may have had a conversation with the hon. gentleman. As a former partner in the province, why should he not have a conversation with the hon. gentleman ? Why has the hon. gentleman shown such a sneaking regard for this man in addressing the House to-day ? Poor fellow, he was driven to the wall by people in Prince Edward Island, to whom he was indebted, and who took from him the little property he had. That was the representation the hon. gentleman made. For what purpose ? To win a certain amount of sympathy for this man, to show, like the apothecary in Roméo and Juliet, it was his need that led to his corruption, and not any natural wickedness of heart. The hon. gentleman has read a series of statutory declarations. He has read a letter from Pineau, not a word of which substantiates anything against the government, or against any member of the government, for Pineau does not say that he met a single member of the administration, and now the hon. gentleman asks this House, on vague statements which have no relevancy to any charge brought against the administration, to accept the statements he has made, as statements that have been proved. The hon. gentleman said that we were mean and that we were corrupt, and he would show how mean and how corrupt we were before he had done his speech, and what evidence has he given ? He has got the testimony of his man Friday, Pineau, but he does not say anything against the administration. He reads an affidavit from Shea, who says nothing against the administration. Shea simply knows what Pineau told him. He knows nothing more, and that had reference to the government in Prince Edward Island, and not to the government in the city of Ottawa. That is the condition of things, and the hon. gentleman may think that by calumniating the government—by bringing false charges against the administration—if they indeed had spoken against the administration—that he is going to blacken the characters of men who are at least as reputable as any hon. gentlemen who sat in the government of Canada heretofore.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—I think it is a pity that the hon. Minister of Justice has not treated this question in a little milder tone, and looked upon it as rather a grave question where the honour and respectability and decency of the lives and conduct of public men are brought so prominently forward. As a lawyer, and as Minister of Justice, the hon. gentleman knows very well that the greater the crime committed by an individual the greater the secrecy shown in the perpetration of that crime. It is very seldom, when a person commits a heinous crime against an individual or a country, that he does it in open day and in the face of everybody. The plans are carefully laid and concealed, and the only way you can bring them to light to the satisfaction of the country or the jury is by circumstantial evidence. In this case we have produced evidence enough to convict Pineau and the local government, and to leave a very grave suspicion upon certain gentlemen occupying high positions in the Dominion of Canada in this city. Now, what do we find ? We find that Pineau was to all intents and purposes a Conservative. He was selected by the Conservative convention to represent that district in opposition to a supporter of the government. He accepted the nomination and ran his election, and the Conservative party from one end of the district to the other supported him and were successful in electing him to the legislature. After that a conference of the whole Conservative party in the province was held in Charlottetown, and Pineau took his place there as a Conservative. He undertook to second one of the strongest resolutions passed at that meeting, showing that up to that date he was a decided Conservative. What took place afterwards ? He was pounced upon by people to whom he was in debt, an unfortunate circumstance to any public man. His little property was disposed of at the hammer, and he was left in that position till he was approached. He was approached by whom ? Parties interested in the maintenance of the local government in Prince Edward Island. What is done with him ? He is sent to Ottawa. What business had he in Ottawa—a poor man who had just been sold out—a man dependent on his earnings ? The declaration read here shows why he came. He was induced to come here in the hope that he would be taken hold of by the members of the government here and sent to Paris. There was such a pressure brought against the Liberal party in opposition to such an outrage, that they had to back down. They could not send him to Paris, but they provided for him in some other way, or promised to do so. He went to Lynn in the United States, and worked there for a time. He came back and had a conversation with Mr. Shea and Mr. Shea makes a solemn declaration that Pineau told him he expected to get $2,000 for his support of the Farquharson government. Up to that time, what inducement was there for Pineau to support the Farquharson government ? Absolutely none. We must come to the conclusion that this man was not only approached, but bought, and the Prince Edward Island government has been kept in office up to the present day by this purchased support. I say it is a circumstance humiliating, disgraceful and degrading to this Dominion of Canada, and to my own little province especially. It would become the Minister of Justice to deprecate and condemn such a course and such conduct in public men rather than to palliate and make excuses for it, and to say that the case is not proven. That is all the hon. gentleman has said on this occasion. I do not wish to say anything further on this question. I think it is a matter to be very much regretted, and public men, whatever their positions may be, whether at Ottawa or in the local legislature, should use their utmost endeavours to deprecate conduct of this kind, so that public men may fear to follow the same course in future, and that we may have pure government and the lives and conduct of our public men may be consistent with the professions they make when they represent the public.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—Is it known who instituted the proceedings which resulted in the sale under the hammer of Pineau's effects ?

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—Does the hon. gentleman mean who were the creditors ?

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—Who instituted the proceedings ?

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—I take it for granted the creditors did. I do not wish to name the parties. They were not politicians, so far as I know—at least not public men occupying public positions, but they were strong political parties.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think this debate has been very edifying to the members of the Senate, or that it contributes to the high standing to which the Senate ought to aspire. A local scandal takes place in Prince Edward Island, and because the principal actor comes to Ottawa, it is conjured up that the government, from corrupt motives, have brought him here for the purpose of helping the Liberal party in Prince Edward Island. The whole thing is absolutely untrue and nothing whatever has been advanced, except bare insinuations to support the charge. The hon. gentleman who has spoken has used this as a medium of attack upon the administration without a tittle of evidence. While the hon. gentleman was speaking I called Mr. Fisher out and asked him: 'Had you any communication with Pineau ?' He said: 'No.' I asked: 'Was any letter of recommendation sent to you ?' and he said: 'No.' I asked: 'Were you ever approached by anybody asking to give Pineau a position ?' He said: 'His name was never mentioned in this department.' Under such circumstances, to absolutely forge a case against the administration and to throw innuendos and insinuations at the government because this man went on the same car a certain distance with Mr. Tarte is, I think, not very edifying, I daresay the administration have made mistakes, but attack them on something they have done, and not on something they have not done.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Does the hon. gentleman know that Mr. Tarte did not approach him ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know. I might have asked Mr. Tarte before he went away but it is a matter that did not weigh on my mind. I asked any of my colleagues I came in contact with about the matter.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—From the drift of the debate, there was no member of the government spoken to except Mr. Tarte, and I should like to hear from him.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He is absent and can be attacked. So far as any member of the government whom I have catechised on the subject is concerned, there is a distinct repudiation of any knowledge of Pineau. They know nothing about him. They look upon this matter as an absolute forgery, and it is a feeble method of attacking the government where you have no facts whatever. If the government had appointed Pineau to some position, it would be a different matter. We have had plenty of occasions to do it, but nothing was done, and Pineau goes off to Prince Edward Island. It appears he makes some statement to Shea that he was offered two thousand dollars, not by any one in Ottawa, but by some one in Prince Edward Island. The whole thing was in Prince Edward Island.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understood the hon. Secretary of State to say that he spoke to Mr. Tarte about it and that Mr. Tarte denied it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I do not recollect that I ever spoke to Mr. Tarte. I have no recollection whatever.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understood the hon. gentleman, in reply to the hon. gentleman from Glengarry, to say that he had.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I may have, but I have no recollection of speaking to Mr. Tarte. I did speak to other members of the government, and they all repudiated any knowledge of Pineau.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does the hon. Secretary of State say that my hon. friend from Marshfield forged the charge?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is no evidence that the charge is true, and I can only regard it as a forgery.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I suppose that is strictly parliamentary.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is a good deal more parliamentary than what has taken place before. We are sitting here and we are being called corrupt.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Although this debate has a serious aspect, it is somewhat amusing to me. When I cast my mind back to the past, when the hon. Minister of Justice used to fulminate his anathemas against the late administration, his virtuous indignation to-day, in comparison with those charges he used to make, certainly is somewhat refreshing. I have heard the hon. gentleman standing on the other side of the House say much harsher things against the administration of Sir John Macdonald than the hon. gentleman from Marshfield, said to-day, and it was accepted by the party with which he is connected with calmness, and evident delight. However, to my mind many a man has been hanged upon much less evidence than the circumstances connected with this transaction.

Hon. Mr. POWER—He must have been an Irishman who was hanged on less evidence that this.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That would depend on whether the jury was composed of such men as the hon. gentleman who interrupted me. If it were, I would pity the poor Irishman particularly if he held opinions different from the opinions entertained by the hon. gentleman. The declamation of the Minister of Justice was, to the older members of parliament, very interesting indeed, and his plea for the government on the ground of desiring the local government to be in opposition to them, is probably the most amusing of the whole speech. He said that during Sir John Macdonald's time most of the local governments were opposed to him, that it was to the advantage of the administration that that should be the case. Yet I have rather an indistinct recollection of the present Premier of the Dominion declaring that the late Minister of Justice in this House, the Hon. Sir Oliver Mowat, was the right arm of his administration. Why? Because he was Premier of the most important province in this country. We know that at the last election all the influence that the provincial Premiers and provincial governments could bring to bear in the way of patronage and everything else was thrown into the scale in order to defeat the Conservative party; and they defeated the Conservative party, and as a reward the Premiers of no less than three or four of these governments were taken into the administration, setting aside just such gentlemen as the hon. gentleman who sits opposite to me now, a man who had been fighting for his party for the last thirty years to my knowledge, because we have been in friendly combat all that time. He was of no use when there was a Sir Oliver Mowat to take his place, and it was just so with all the provinces except Prince Edward Island. The most powerful men were taken from New Brunswick, and from other provinces, and the most faithful of the party, my hon. friend opposite, was set aside and treated with contempt, and these provincial Premiers, whom the Minister of Justice would like to have in opposition to him, constitute a most important part of the present administration. It is true there was some little friction in the party; to use a familiar expression, some began to kick and express dissatisfaction, and in order to satisfy parties who had been ill-treated in the manner I have just suggested, some were taken and given governorships, and other gentlemen were taken into the government. I hope they are satisfied. I do not intend to waste much time in connection with this transaction. I did say the other day—and I say this with a knowledge of what the rule of the House is in reference to former debates, —in reply to a remark made by the hon. Minister of Justice, that I thought this Prince Edward Island transaction was one of the foulest blots upon the political escutcheon of this country, and I think so still. Whoever are the parties who approached this man Pineau and lured him from his allegiance to his party and placed him in a position to do that which he was elected not to do, I say they are much more guilty than the man himself. In a case where a man's loss of property drives him to do that which, under other circumstances, he would not do, the man who approaches him and bribes him is infinitely worse than the man who yields to the temptation because his family is dependent upon him. I hesitate not to give that as my opinion. The hon. Minister of Justice and the hon. Secretary of State declared in the most positive manner that no case, even of a circumstantial character, had been made out in this instance. Is that correct? All we have to deal with is the fact as presented before us. Can any one conceive it possible that Mr. Pineau came to Ottawa without the knowledge of any one connected with the government in Ottawa? Are we to suppose that Mr. Farquharson, through Mr. Wickham, sent that man here with the promise of an appointment to the Paris Exposition at a certain sum per day and expenses, without the knowledge and without the consent, or without the connivance of any one connected with the government?

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is no evidence that he was employed to go to Paris.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not know what the hon. gentleman calls evidence. If he would tell me here that he was employed to go to Montreal, or was to be employed to go to Paris, and was to receive a certain salary, I would accept that as true, I have no reason, under the circumstances, to doubt Pineau's declaration in the matter, and I think there is no man in this House who would resent an insinuation that you could not believe him if he made a solemn declaration, more than the hon. senator from Halifax. He says there is no evidence. We have this documentary evidence, the affidavits of statements made by Pineau to his friends, that he had been offered a certain position for which he was to receive a certain consideration.

Hon. Mr. KERR—Is that any evidence whatever——

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman can do his talking afterwards. That is evidence. A man's confession is evidence. I stand in great awe when I contemplate for a moment that I am to be attacked and replied to by the Demosthenes, from Cobourg. In the other House he took me to task because I had attacked the Speaker for violating the independence of parliament Act and he said it was an outrage that a man should attack the Speaker when he had sat with his legs under the table and drank his wine at dinner. Fortunately for me it did not apply, because I had never had my legs under his table at any time, nor drank of his wines, nor partook of any other of his beverages. But we had that logical and legal argument advanced by the hon. gentleman why I should not make an attack on a member of the House. After he replies I expect to have just as conclusive an argument as on the occasion in the House of Commons to which I have referred. He has undertaken to read me a lecture as to what I should do when addressing the present administration. I accept that with due humility, and will accept it whenever he thinks proper to hurl his bludgeons at me, or even his logic of the character he used in the other House. We have before us, in the way of circumstantial evidence, the fact that this man, Pineau, was elected by a party. The hon. Minister of Justice has called him a great liar.

Hon. Mr. KIRCHHOFFER—I thought he said a Grit liar.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Oh, no, that is too common. I was only using his expression. We have this unfortunate man Pineau in a state of impecuniosity. We have him approached, it may be, and probably was, by members of the local legislature, and the hon. gentleman opposite has said very truly that they are not responsible for what Mr. Farquharson or the members of that administration or any one else in Prince Edward Island might do in bribing this man, but we have Dr. Wickham telling him to go to see Farquharson. We have the documentary evidence to that effect and then we have him sent to Ottawa. He denied having some here, but it was proved that he was here, and that he went away at the same time as the Minister of Public Works. That might be a mere coincidence. Instead of going to Paris he went to the United States and remained there until he was brought back by the party. Then we have his own statement that he came here and was well received by the government. I have not so poor an opinion of the intelligence of the people of Prince Edward Island, as my hon. friend, the Minister of Justice, who said that the people from Prince Edward Island were in the habit of confounding the members of the two Houses of parliament with the government. They constitute a part of the ruling powers, I admit, but I question very much whether a gentleman who had been selected as a member of parliament would confound the members of the Senate and the members of the House of Commons with the government of the day. He was well received by the government of the day, he said. Well, that might be. I do not see anything improper in that. Any man who goes to the government for anything proper and legitimate should be courteously treated. But he came here for a purpose. Whether Mr. Pineau is of the character described by the hon. Minister of Justice or not, I am not prepared to say. I never saw him and never knew anything of him till I heard the matter discussed in this Chamber. I am just as ignorant of the parties he saw here as the Minister of Justice, but that he was here, and that he said he was well received by the government, and was to receive $5 a day and expenses to go to Paris, is beyond a doubt, unless he deliberately sat down and concocted this story for the purpose of throwing the responsibility upon this government. Is that at all likely? Is there any probability that a man of that character would deliberately concoct a story and put it on paper in a letter to a friend, asking what he should do, when there was no foundation for it? I am not credulous enough to believe that anything of the kind occurred. I do not believe that he was so bad or so clever as to concoct a story of that kind. What object could he have in doing it? That is the question I ask the members of the Senate to consider. What object could he have in throwing the responsibility upon the Dominion government of inducing him to change his politics and to go into the House of Assembly of the province of Prince Edward Island and, by his vote alone, maintain the existence of that government? Because if Mr. Pineau's vote had been given as it should have been given, in accordance with the wishes of his constituency, that government must have gone out. There must have been some consideration for it, and the only thing we have to consider in this matter, so far as the Dominion government is concerned, is whether the government, or any member of the government, through any of its officials approached Mr. Pineau on behalf of the government of Prince Edward Island to desert his party and to vote for them, instead of against them, as he was elected to do. Really that is the only point in the whole case, and I think that anybody who will read that evidence calmly and coolly must come to the conclusion that Mr. Farquharson was aided and abetted by some one in Ottawa in order to seduce that man from his political allegiance and send him out of the country. It may be argued by the lawyers that that is not technical, legal evidence, but we know that parliamentary authorities lay down this rule, that in the investigation of any matter affecting the honour of parliament, or the honour and integrity of any of its members, before a committee, that that committee is not bound to adhere strictly to the legal rules or practice in court that govern evidence. I know that was the principle laid down in the investigation that took place in 1874 or 1875 before a committee moved for by the then Mr. Donald Smith, now Lord Strathcona, in the House of Commons to inquire into the causes that led to the North-west Rebellion. The committee then appointed was composed of the late John Hillyard Cameron, Mr. Blake, Mr. Jones, of Halifax, Mr. Masson, one of our colleagues, myself, and Sir Donald A. Smith, then Mr. Smith, Mr. Blake went this far: he asked a question of the servant of Sir George E. Cartier as to what took place between himself and Father Ritchot in his own bedroom, while Sir George E. Cartier was lying in bed ill. I remember distinctly objecting to prying into the private affairs of a gentleman, even of a minister, while he was in his own bedroom, in any conversation that he might have with a clergyman of his own Church, whether it was a question of religion or one which affected the North-west Territories; but the principle was laid down there by no less an authority than Mr. Blake himself, that you could ask any question, and that you were not bound by the rules of a court. The servant repeated the conversation which took place between Father Ritchot and Sir George E. Cartier, I merely refer to that to show that the strict rules of a court are not applied to a case like this, and therefore my hon. friend from Cobourg, when making a point as to what constitutes legal evidence, made no point at all when applying it to parliamentary practice. The doctrine laid down by Mr. Blake on the occasion I have referred to seemed to me so monstrous that I objected, but I was overruled. In this case we have circumstancial evidence that I believe will convince 19-20ths of the people who will read it calmly that Pineau was approached by and through members of the local legislature, and that they had some inducement from somebody, I do not say whom—I should be very sorry to accuse my hon. friend opposite of having anything to do with a transaction of that kind—but they had an inducement from Ottawa to send him here and the bargain was made with somebody that Pineau was to be sent to Paris for no other reason than to get rid of him in order that the government of Prince Edward Island could continue to govern that province, because without him they would have been defeated on the very first vote. These are the circumstances as they struck me, and I believe at the same time it will be the conclusion that 19-20ths of the people will come to. The fact that Pineau did not go to Paris is quite evident. He was here expecting to go to Paris. He was here at the instance of those who sent him, but when the question was broached and became a subject of public denunciation through the press,—when my hon. friend from Marshfield brought the subject before this House, it was not at all likely they were going to send Pineau to Paris with these charges pending. Pineau did not go to Paris, but he did go to the legislature of Prince Edward Island—was introduced to that legislature by the Premier and another political friend of the government, and has given his vote since for them. Whether there was anything in the $2,000 to compensate him for not getting the appointment to Paris is a question that must be left altogether to conjecture. There is no evidence that he got it, but there is this evidence—a gentleman swears Pineau told him he was to get it. Whether that is legal evidence or not I am not going to discuss, but there is the statement. A circumstance of this kind affecting our public men is lamentable and very much to be regretted, and I should hope, for the honour of all public men, and for the honour particularly of those who have been elected to represent constituencies, we shall never have another instance of the kind put on the records of parliament or in the history of Canada. It is lamentable and disgraceful, and whether Pineau was induced to take the position through poverty or anything else, I say those connected with it are disgraced.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (de Lanaudière)—I may be allowed to recall a reminiscence of a lamentable incident in our province, when we were more unfortunate than the Conservative party have been in Prince Edward Island. Instead of one Pineau we had five. I will name them. If Pineau's name is passed down to posterity, it is only right that the names of these others should also be recorded. We all remember when an hon. gentleman, who has just been appointed Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia, was at one time prime minister of the province of Quebec. He had a majority of three in the House of Assembly in our local legislature. I remember one occasion, an occasion I am sure well within the recollection of the leader of the opposition, and also of the hon. senator from Prince Edward Island who has made this motion, and, belonging to the party to which they beolng, they should never have brought up this Pineau matter in the Senate, because I do not remember their friends bringing up this other question here or elsewhere. There were five supporters of the Joly government who went to bed one night good Liberals, and the next morning they were the greatest Tories in the country, and they voted against the government of Sir Henri Joly, the best government we had had since confederation. We had not a Dr. Wickham, but we had a Mr. Senécal, and he commenced by a member of the government, afterwards a judge. He also spirited away Mr. Fortin, then member for Montmagny; also Mr. Racicot, of Mississquoi; also Mr. Paquet, and made him a member of the government, and last, but not least, he spirited away the leader of the present Conservative party in Quebec, Mr. Flynn. These gentlemen were returned to the fold, but they have remained Pineaus to this day.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that these gentlemen received fees or money for changing their opinions?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Senécal was the agent of the Conservative party.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does the hon. gentleman mean to leave the impression upon members of this House that either Mr. Flynn, or any of those gentlemen whose names he has mentioned, received money for changing their votes? I know Mr. Chauveau was appointed to office.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I am glad I have been asked this question. It gives me an opportunity to explain. Mr. Flynn was offered better, and so was Mr. Chauveau. There was no talk about giving $2,000; they were given $4,000 a year. They got their money there and then.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman would not say that of the hon. Secretary of State who went over to the Grit party? I gave him the credit of acting upon his convictions.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—This is the first time I have addressed this House. The hon. leader of the opposition gave me good advice at the beginning of the session—that I was not to speak too often, and I have not. This is the first time I have spoken since I had the honour of proposing the adoption of the address in response to the speech from the Throne. The hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island, in bringing up this question, should have remembered that his party in the province of Quebec has been five times as guilty as the Farquharson government. As far as Pineau's change of allegiance is concerned, he must have read the Scriptures, because, according to the hon. gentleman from Marshfield, when he came here, and failed to get his appointment to go to Paris, he must have been very much disappointed, and yet, notwithstanding that disappointment, he went back to Prince Edward Island and actually voted for the party that had disappointed him. He was returning good for evil, and cannot be such a very bad man.

Hon. Mr. BOLDUC—I had not intended to take part in this discussion, but I cannot let the remarks of the hon. gentleman from de Lanaudière (Hon. Mr. Casgrain) pass without reply. The hon. gentleman is completely mistaken, when he institutes a parallel between the case of Pineau and that of the five gentlemen in the province of Quebec to whom he has referred. Pineau was elected to oppose the administration in Prince Edward Island. He had been elected only a few days before the opening of the legislature, and without any reason, decided to abandon the party in whose favour he was elected and support his adversary; whilst in the province of Quebec it is true five gentlemen abandoned Mr. Joly's administration, to join the other party, but it was not immediately after the elections were over—if was after they had occasion to study the administration of Mr. Joly—but only when they had become dissatisfied with the way Mr. Joly was conducting public affairs.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—They were all converted in one night.

Hon. Mr. ROLDUC—It took about eighteen months to convert them, and they were well converted.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—In connection with ancient history, I should like very much to ask the hon. gentleman from de Lanaudière why he did not explain to us the purchase of a man named Turcotte, who had been elected a Conservative for Three Rivers, and whose vote it was necessary to secure in order that Mr. Joly, the present Sir Henri, should have a majority in the legislative assembly ? They made Mr. Turcotte Speaker, and afterwards appointed him to an office in Montreal. Why not tell the whole story ?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I shall be delighted to tell the whole story. Mr. Turcotte ran in Three Rivers as an independent. He came to the House and was elected Speaker, by his own casting vote, I am quite willing to admit, but he had been returned as an independent, and was a member of the legislature before that and had voted several times against the former government on the very ground on which they were afterwards defeated.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I feel almost disposed to forego my right to say a few words at the close of this discussion, because, notwithstanding the declamation of the Minister of Justice and the rather piteous appeal of the hon. Secretary of State, I think that no introducer of any resolution in this House could be much more pleased than I am at the position it occupies at the close of this debate. My hon. friend, the Minister of Justice, in closing his remarks, was pleased to refer as he very often does, in terms of disparagement to the province of Prince Edward Island in some way or other—probably not because he hates the province particularly, but because he wants to have a hit at your humble servant. He spoke of the looseness of expression which he alleges prevailed in that province—that the people there do not know the difference between the government and the parliament of the country. That is the assertion he makes, and he tries to weave that suggestion in as an explanation of Pineau's declaration that he was well received by the government when he was in Ottawa. The utter improbability of the excuse that is insinuated there I shall leave with hon. gentlemen to deal with. But I have to deal with an instance of looseness of expression, that my hon. friend the Secretary of State has indulged in. I must come to the conclusion that it is mere looseness of language rather than an intention to impute a criminal charge when he says I had based my case on a forgery. Does the hon. minister mean to say that I have forged, or that any person has forged the names to those affidavits ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I did not say anything of the kind.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am sure the hon. gentleman was only innocently furnishing an instance of the looseness of language in use by members of the government.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I said it was a forged accusation against the government.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I will take my seat for a moment if the hon. gentleman will explain how an accusation can be a forged one in any way unless you forge the name of a party to a document on which you sustain it. Is there any other way in which a charge can be forged except by the act of forging the names to the documents on which you sustain your case ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I said there was not a tittle of evidence to justify the statements made. Not only were they denied by the government but the gentleman did not get anything at Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It does not prove that there was no evidence because the hon. gentleman says so, nor does it sustain his accusation that the charge is a forged one. The statement is so utterly irrelevant, it is impossible to conceive what was passing in the hon gentleman's mind. As for the speech of the hon. Minister of Justice, if I had ever been given to understand that he conducted a case in court and addressed a jury, I would say he was a worthy successor to the famous Sergeant Buzz-Fuzz. The mutton-chops and tomato-sauce argument can only be compared with the argument he used in this case. We have the affidavit of Mr. Callaghan who, I know, is a most reliable and responsible man, that Pineau told him he was approached by Dr. Wickham. We were told yesterday, and we know that Dr. Wickham is a man trusted by this government. We have a letter from Pineau himself in which he says 'I came to Ottawa and was well received by the government.' There is no use for any hon. gentleman to say that he meant members of parliament and not of the cabinet. If so, it must be gentlemen in this House or the other House who support the government were meant. He did not mean that he was going to the Conservative members of parliament in order to get authority to go to Paris.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—He could come to them for the purpose of helping him out of his financial difficulties.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—He said 'I was well received by the government,' and was 'waiting for the orders to go the next day.' That must be taken in connection with the affidavits I have read from highly responsible men, stating that he told them he was going to Ottawa in order to get an appointment to the Paris Exposition. It was a matter of notoriety in the province that he had gone to Ottawa for the purpose of being sent to Paris. The letter was well understood to be in connection with his negotiations with the government about going to Paris. He was first pounced upon and crushed, and then approached, and he came to Ottawa, expecting to be sent to Paris. These facts are also to be found in documents I have submitted to the House. The puerile way in which those documents have been met is calculated to leave the strongest impression on every member in this House that the government themselves feel that it is a very bad case indeed. My hon. friend who rose for the first time since the opening debate of the session, and I was very pleased to hear him, having a lively recollection of the very graceful speech he made on the address comes to the rescue of the administration and of Mr. Pineau in this matter by alleging that some other people about twenty years ago were as bad as Pineau and his bribers are to-day. I had really hoped, after hearing my hon. friend on the occasion of his speech on the address in answer to the speech from the Throne, that when we would hear him next time, the House would be edified and instructed by his observations, but he has been sitting too near the members of the government all this time, and has learned their mode of defence when they are attacked, 'oh, somebody else did wrong.' That is the kind of plea my hon. friend has offered to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

OILS FOR THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON inquired:

For a statement showing what proportion of the payments for oils for the Intercolonial Railway made to the Galena Oil Company and the Imperial Oil Company respectively, for the year ending October 31, 1899, as shown by a return presented to the Senate on the 10th day of May last, were for lubricating purposes?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Payments to the Imperial Oil Company for oils for the Intercolonial Railway for lubricating purposes during the year ended the 31st of October, 1899, amounted to $436.13. Payments to the Galena Oil Company for oils for the Intercolonial Railway for lubricating purposes during the year ended the 31st of October, 1899, amounted to $82,100.01.

Mr. CORNDUFF'S DISMISSAL.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY inquired:

If Mr. Cornduff has been dismissed from the postmastership of the Cornduff post office, in East Assiniboia? If so, on whose recommendation was he dismissed, and was such recommendation accompanied with a petition? Also, was there a petition received by the Postmaster General or government protesting against Mr. Cornduff's dismissal?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—In reply to the first part of the hon. gentleman's question I beg to say that Mr. J. P. Cornduff has been dismissed from the postmastership of Cornduff. To the second part of the question, Mr. Cornduff was not dismissed on any recommendation or petition, but because certain mail matter mailed at Cornduff, which was liable for postage, was, contrary to law, allowed to be transmitted through the mails free of postage. In reply to the latter part of the question, a petition has been received.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I may say Mr. Cornduff was a pioneer in that country sixteen years ago, and has been postmaster ever since. He is a most trustworthy man in every particular, and if he made a mistake without any wrong intention, and after all the people in the district petitioning the government, regardless of politics, to allow him to remain in office, I think under the circumstances there was a very small basis for turning him out of office after he had accommodated the public for years while there was no money in it. Now that there is something in it, he has been turned out on a very slight pretext, and the office has been given to a man who came on the pullman car into the country, while Mr. Cornduff came in when there were no railways or roads.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I do not know anything about the offence except what has been here stated. How serious it is, and what action has been taken on the petition, I cannot say.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (180) 'An Act respecting and restricting Chinese Immigration.'

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is there anything in this Bill other than the increase of the capitation tax? It does not apply to Japanese as well?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think some amendments were made after the Bill was introduced in the House of Commons. No vessel carrying Chinese immigrants to any port in Canada shall carry more than one such immigrant for every fifty tons.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is old.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think there is a clause limiting the number. There is nothing affecting the Japs in the Bill.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—Is there any tax on the Doukhobors and Galicians coming into the country?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is no restriction on bringing in either Doukhobors or Galicians into the country.

The Bill was read the first time.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (184) 'An Act to amend the Customs Tariff, 1897.—(Hon. Mr. Mills.)

THE DISMISSAL OF LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR McINNES.

Hon. Mr. MILLS presented to the House the following statement of the cause assigned for the removal of the Honourable Thomas Robert McInnes from his office of Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of British Columbia :—

Privy Council,
Canada. (1588)

Extract from a Report of the Committee of the Honourable the Privy Council, approved by His Excellency on the 21st June, 1900.

On a memorandum dated 20th June, 1900, from the Right Honourable Sir Wilfrid Laurier, stating that the action of the Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia in dismissing his ministers has not been approved by the people of that province, and further, that in view of recent events in the said province of British Columbia, it is evident that the government of that province cannot be successfully carried on in the manner contemplated by the constitution, under the administration of the present Lieutenant-Governor, His Honour Thomas R. McInnes, whose official conduct has been subversive of the principles of responsible government.

The Right Honourable the Premier submits that therefore Mr. McInnes's usefulness as Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia is gone, and he recommends that Mr. McInnes be removed from the said office, and that the cause to be assigned for such removal under the provisions of section 59 of the British North America Act shall be the matter set forth in this minute.

The committee submit the foregoing for Your Excellency's approval.

JOHN J. McGEE,
Clerk of the Privy Council.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I congratulate the government on the fact that they are imitators in form as well as in substance.

MISCELLANEOUS PRIVATE BILLS COMMITTEE.

RULES SUSPENDED.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved that from now till the end of the session rule 60 be dispensed with, so far as it may relate to Bills received from the House of Commons for the concurrence of this House. He said: If the required notice under rule 60 is observed, it will be impossible to take up these Bills in time to pass them this session. There are very few of them.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—What Bills are there that require the suspension of the rules? I hope we will not have to pass Bills before they are printed and before we know anything about them. I certainly shall object. If there are any Bills of importance brought up they should be printed and placed in our hands before we are called upon to pass them.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I fully concur in the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Rideau. The 60th rule reads as follows:

No committee on any private Bill originating in the Senate, of which notice is required to be given, is to consider the same until after one week's notice of the sitting of such committee has been posted up in the lobby——

That applies to the Senate alone. The rule proceeds:

—nor in the case of any such Bill originating in the House of Commons, until after twenty-four hours' like notice.

If I understand the matter, we are in this position to-day: there are some Bills which have come from the House of Commons and which have been read the second time in this House and referred to the Private Bills Committee, and there is no quorum of that committee and consequently no further legislation which has to be referred to that very important committtee can proceed one step under the circumstances. That is an evidence of laxity on the part of members of the House of Commons who have Bills in their charge and do not present them at a sufficiently early period, or it results from the fact that parties having private Bills under their control and management in the House of Commons cannot proceed with them owing to the manner in which the business is carried on, and it is another of the beneficial effect that would arise if parties who have private Bills in hand would send them to the Senate, where they could be calmly considered while the political discussions are going on in the other House. If parties will not take advantage of the fact of there being a Senate where these Bills could be advanced early in the session, it would serve them right not to have their Bills passed at all. There is only one way of meeting the cases to which I have referred, and that is to suspend the rule which limits the number of each committee to enable the chairman to ask that three or four gentlemen who are here be appointed to the committee, during the present session, in order to facilitate the passage of private Bills which are now before them.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I think the hon. chairman of the committee intends doing that. Both steps are necessary to do anything.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is for the Senate to say whether they will take advantage of their own rules and block the legislation which is coming to them from the other House, from the fact of their having kept it back until the last few hours of the session. We have had Bills of the most important character brought to this House that should receive the calm and cool consideration of the members of the Senate and of the committees and they are rushed through without our really knowing what they are. The sooner the lower House understands the facts the better it will be.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—We have been in session five months, and have had ample time to dispose of all the Bills if we had proper notice of them. I shall oppose any resolution by which they will have an advantage given them to pass these Bills at the eleventh hour. I have seen this occurring for many years and I intend to oppose it. It has been universal with both administrations and they have promised that some change will take place. What is the object of the delay? They want to delay the Bills in order that they may not receive the consideration their importance deserves.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We have had this rehearsal every session for the last forty years. Of course we cannot always foresee what will arise. I do not remember a session where there were so few private Bills left to the end of it. I have been looking up the list. I only find one Bill on our paper, the Bill respecting the Canadian Mining and Metallurgical Company, and in the House of Commons I find only two Bills, the Central Vermont Railway Company Bill and the South Shore Line Railway Company Bill, on the list. There may be some before the committee.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There are some before the committee and they cannot proceed without a quorum.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There are fewer Bills left this session than ever before.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—I should be very sorry to agree to any motion that will enable measures to be rushed through the House without consideration. When the House was thin, the members of the government voted several thousand dollars to three members of the body. That passed with the vote of the Speaker, and how do I know that the same thing is not to be done again? I am opposed to anything being done unless the members of the government will assure us as to the measures they intend to introduce. Last year it was a shameful waste of public money. I do not think we should allow the government to hurry through measures in the dying day of the session.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I quite agree with my colleague from Halifax.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—I am sorry, but it is too late for me to withdraw what I have said.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This notice does not refer to public measures. It simply refers to private Bills and it does not do anything to limit the fullest discussion of private Bills. It provides that it shall not be necessary to have the Bills posted up in the lobby of the House for a certain number of hours, and as long the committee has an opportunity of discussing the Bill, it makes no substantial difference whether the Bills are posted up or not, and I trust the House will let the motion pass.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—The hon. gentleman is not consistent. When a Bill is reported from committee with amendments, he always asks to have the consideration of it postponed till the next day. We want sufficient time to discuss the Bill.

Hon. Mr. POWER—We will have sufficient time.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I know that we will have to rush them through, and I think it is wrong. I want to have the full opportunity of considering the Bills and acting on my own judgment on every measure submitted to us.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There will be every opportunity given. In fact, the notice requiring Bills to be posted up in the lobby is a rule made, not for the benefit of the House, but for the benefit of parties who may be interested in those private measures, to give them an opportunity of making their objections. All parties, no doubt, have been heard with reference to these measures so far, and the parties will have an opportunity to appear before the committee of this House, as they appeared before the other House, if they are disposed to oppose these Bills. I never remember a session since I have been in parliament where there will be so few innocents to sacrifice as there will be this session. Any hon. gentleman who will look at the Orders of the Day and the Votes and Proceedings of the House of Commons, will see that almost every Bill that has been put upon the Order paper of the two Houses has been considered, and that a very large percentage of these—far larger than usual—has gone through both Houses, so that there never was a session when there was less ground for the objection than this.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. BOLDUC—I wish to move that a few names be added to the Private Bills Committee. I agree with the statement that the Bills have been delayed too long. All private legislation should have been passed by this time, but we have now a few Bills to dispose of. This morning the Private Bills Committee met, and we could not proceed because we had not a quorum. I have been informed that several members are away and will not be back for a few days. With the permission of the House, I beg to move

That the Hon. Messrs. Casgrain (Windsor), Young, Bernier and Shehyn be added to the Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—Can we do that? Is there not a standing order that so many shall constitute a committee? Have we the power of increasing that committee in defiance of the law in reference to the appointment in the first instance?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am not sure whether it has been made the rule of the House, but I know it was a report of the committee, affirmed by the House, that the committee should consist of a certain number, and it would be necessary to rescind that temporarily in order to keep our minutes correct. Referring to the rules, I observe that it is provided that the Miscellaneous Private Bills Committee shall consist of twenty-five members. Therefore, paragraph 6, of rule 80, will have to be suspended.

Hon. Mr. BOLDUC moved that paragraph 6, of rule 80, be suspended as far as relates to this motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. BOLDUC moved that Senators Shehyn, Young, Bernier, and Casgrain (Windsor) be appointed to serve on the Committee of Miscellaneous Private Bills.

The motion was agreed to.

INCOMPLETE RETURNS.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It seems to me rather ludicrous, but I want to inform the hon. Secretary of State that the third supplementary return which he brought down of railway petitions from Prince Edward Island is not yet complete. The hon. Secretary of State brought down a return and three supplementary returns and still we have not all the petitions.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—And the hon. gentleman will not get them.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I hope my hon. friend will make further inquiries, and to assist him out, I will say that a petition has been sent to his department praying for the construction of a railway branch from O'Leary Station to Westcape, and that has not been brought down.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I brought down all that was in the Department of the Secretary of State, and all in the Privy Council. The hon. gentleman said he knew of one that was sent to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and I spoke to Sir Louis Davies about it, and he said there was one there and he sent it over and I laid it on the Table.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (141) 'An Act respecting the Grain Trade in the Inspection District of Manitoba.'—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

Bill (110) 'An Act to amend the Weights and Measures Act, as amended.'—(Hon. Mr. Mills.)

SECOND READING.

Bill (172) 'An Act respecting the Canada Mining and Metallurgical Company, Limited.'—(Hon. Mr. McMillan.)

PENITENTIARY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (174) 'An Act to amend the Penitentiary Act.'

(In the Committee.)

On the first clause,

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There are some increases. The schedule to be repealed in the Revised Statutes provides that the warden shall receive a salary not exceeding three thousand dollars.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend is looking at the old Act.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am looking at the schedule of the Penitentiary Act, chap. 182, Revised Statutes mentioned in the Bill before us, which is to be repealed.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There is a mistake in the Bill. It is the Act of 1899, the schedule of which is being amended. I move that the Bill be amended in that regard.

The clause was amended and adopted.

On clause 2,

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This clause applies to the Consolidated Statutes, because in some cases the salaries are not more than three thousand dollars and not less than one thousand.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is not intended to interfere with any officer who is receiving a larger salary than the salary mentioned here?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then the reference in clause No. 2 is quite correct.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (de Lanaudière), from the committee, reported the Bill with an amendment, which was concurred in.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed under a suspension of the rules.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Thursday, June 28, 1900.

The Speaker took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY INDEBTEDNESS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY inquired:

If the Grand Trunk Railway Company owes the government of Canada for any sum of money, borrowed or otherwise, obtained years ago? And if so, what is the amount and when do they expect it to be paid, if ever?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In the early fifties when the Grand Trunk Railway was being constructed the late province of Canada advanced in aid of the work from time to time moneys to the extent of £3,111,500 sterling. In 1858, the legislature passed an Act postponing the interest on the loan to the following charges due by the company: 1. The payment of interest on preference bonds; 2. After payment of interest upon the loan capital of the company; 3. After the payment of a dividend at the rate of 6 per cent per annum on the stock and shares of the company. As the payment of interest on the provincial loan is postponed to so remote a contingency it can scarcely be called a debt at the present day; though in the public accounts interest is regularly added to the amount of the debenture account due by the Grand Trunk Railway, which now totals $25,607,000. It is impossible to say whether the amount will ever be paid. I may add for the information of the hon. gentleman that I entirely approved of this settlement and voted for it in the session of 1858.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Have there not been many Bills passed, since the dates mentioned in that statement, giving power to the Grand Trunk to issue preferential bonds to take precedence of any claim the government might have? If my recollection serves me, there were several cases of that kind.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There was one in particular that I know of, the postal bond. The postal bond was issued in that way, but the account as it stands in the Public Accounts is as I have stated.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Is the account outlawed?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is 42 years old.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—A government account cannot be outlawed.

TIMAGAMI RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

Hon. Mr. BAKER moved concurrence in the amendments made by the Standing Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours to Bill (118) 'An Act respecting the Timagami Railway Company.'

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW moved the third reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I am requested to ask this House to allow this Bill to be sent back to the committee for further consideration. I therefore move:

That the report be not now concurred in, but that it be referred back to the Standing Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours for further consideration.

In moving this resolution, the Senate will perhaps permit me to make a few observations. The Bill was fully and at length considered by the other House, and there was strenuous opposition offered there, but the promoters of the Bill supposed that that opposition had been abandoned, and the measure passed the other House without any amendment, and unanimously. When the same Bill came up before the committee of the Senate, the promoters were taken entirely by surprise. They supposed they had good reason to believe, and did believe that the opposition that had been made in the other Chamber to the passage of the Bill was withdrawn and abandoned, and for that reason they were lulled, as it appears, into false security.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—What was the opposition to the Bill?

Hon. Mr. KERR—I will take that up a little later on. Neither the solicitor, who was acting for the promoters, nor any of the promoters dreamed of opposition in the Railway Committee of the Senate, and therefore they were not present to advocate it. The Bill, I am instructed, is of a practical character, and one that the promoters of it are very desirous to have passed into law, as they have made arrangements to put it into operation, and make use of it almost immediately. I may be allowed, for the information of those who are not so familiar with it as the members of the Committee on Railways, to state that two years ago certain persons associated themselves together and were incorporated by an Act of this parliament, to construct a railway from a place called Verner Station on the Canadian Pacific Railway line west and north of Lindsay to the southern shores of Timagami Lake, a distance of some 32 miles. That was passed without any opposition, and the promoters have been since that endeavouring to get the scheme into operation. I might say that the line does not parallel any existing railway, and so far as I can understand from inquiry from those who know, it would probably be—in fact I think it is admitted by all parties—if it were in operation a useful feeder to the Canadian Pacific Railway. It runs north almost at right angles to their line. That charter provided that the railway should begin at a place called Verner Station, a point on the Canadian Pacific Railway line some eleven miles west of Sturgeon Falls, and go north. It was found, when they began to survey the line with that starting point, that the formation of the land through which it had to go was not only rocky but almost a mountain of rock. The engineering difficulties were so great that they found it would cost so much to build the railway that they had to get a new line surveyed before financial people would be willing to advance money to put the scheme into operation. The result was that a new line was surveyed which would bring the starting point some seven or eight miles further east, but still on the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway and going north. The promoters of this Bill asked for three things: First, to revive their charter, which the committee reported in favour of yesterday, and, second, to extend the time for the beginning and the completion of the road. That also was consented to, and the committee reported in favour of the promoters upon that question. But the third clause, which dealt with the question of location, has been so amended, in the wisdom of the committee, that the promoters of the scheme consider it practically destroys the Bill. In fact, they say the Bill will be of no use to them if that is insisted upon. The amendment, as I understand it, not only fixes the old starting point, but goes, perhaps, a little further west from Sturgeon Falls. But even assuming it starts where they may start, if this amendment is carried, it will be impossible to avoid this rocky formation, and I am instructed, as representing the promoters for the time being, that if the Bill before the House passes into law with that amendment, it will be useless, and they can do nothing with it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—What is the object of the amendment?

Hon. Mr. KERR—The object of the amendment was to keep the starting point where it was, but it has been found that the original route is impracticable and they will not undertake to build the railway if it starts there. They cannot build it there. In other words, as some of them put it, 'We have come to parliament and asked for bread and they have given us a stone—not only a stone, but a rock, and we cannot get through it.' We might just as well give the Bill the six months' hoist, or kill it in some other way, as to attempt to put it through with this amendment. I hope that, in what I am saying, I shall not be considered as lecturing anybody or giving advice to any one, because I am simply stating the case as the promoters have laid it before me. That is the substance of the matter. They say positively and candidly that the Bill is no use to them if it passes in its present shape. It is true the committee have reported in favour of reviving the original charter and extending the time. So far it is all right, but that is rendered useless by the amendment which confines the company to the old starting point and that is the reason they did not build the road long ago. All parties are in favour of it. I understand the hon. senator from Lindsay (Hon. Mr. Dobson) who has made this motion, has a personal knowledge of the locality and knows the requirements of the country and the facilities for development likely to be afforded by this road. He is most anxious that this Bill should pass into law without any amendment, simply in the shape in which it left the Commons. In other words, if it passes the Senate, as it left the Commons, they will have a road, but if it passes as it is, there will not be any road built by these promoters, because they cannot get the money to float the scheme. As I said before, they have had a survey by a competent engineer and he has reported a line which I believe is thirty-two miles in length. In opposition to passing the Bill in the Senate, it was urged that the original line did not contemplate a mileage of more than 24 miles. I suppose that is very true, but these 24 miles, according to my instructions, would cost more to build than the 32 miles and, besides, would not develop anything like the extent of country which would be tapped, so to speak, by the new route, which is only seven or eight miles further east. As I said in the committee, they very wisely devised an ingenious scheme of going through the rock cutting by going around the rock, exercising their common sense, I should say. There was opposition to the Bill yesterday. I do not wish to say anything with regard to that opposition. I suppose it was conscientious. It did transpire, however, as some hon. gentlemen know, that the gentleman who was there in opposition to the Bill had disposed of his own interest in the original charter for a sum of money which, he says, he has received. I would not argue upon that, because I do not think it would be sound argument to say that, because he personally disposes of his interest, that therefore the public, or those whom he represented, should be deprived of the opportunity of being heard in opposition to the measure. I would not take that ground ; still, one could not help thinking it strange that he, having such confidence and faith in the original line, should be willing to dispose of his interest in it for a sum of money when it was supposed that this new line would be surveyed and that is was intended to build the road upon that, although I think it only fair to him to state that he always opposed it—and I think he went further and said that they should not depart from the original starting point. I think that it would be better not only for these promoters, but for those who are opposing this Bill, that they should both be heard in committee. There is time for it. The Bill is short. Two clauses are already passed, so that all that would remain would be simply the reconsideration of this amendment, and I am sure that those who oppose the Bill, as well as those who promote it, desire that the road should go on at once. That is what the people are waiting for, and I am sure that money cannot be got to put the concern upon its feet if the original line, as proposed, is followed, but bearing a little from that a fairly good route, a passable route, can be got,—one that is practicable. For the sake of all concerned, without the slightest imputation upon any hon. member of that committee or any one else, I would ask that the Senate should be unanimous in sending the report back to permit the promoters, who are men very much interested, to be present before that committee, having been taken by surprise on the former occasion. If, after having heard the promoters and those in opposition to the Bill, fully and fairly represented, the committee still remain of the same view, I for one shall be content to say that we must abide by the action of that committee.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Is there any existing charter, or are there any rights interfered with ?

Hon. Mr. KERR—None. I am subject to correction if I am in error, but I did not get the impression that there was any company or number of gentlemen prepared to take up this project except the gentlemen who are promoting this Bill, and the probabilities are that they will be for the next twenty years without this railway if this amendment is carried, and it is a pity for both parties that they should be without the railway. I hope the Senate, in its wisdom, will permit the Bill to go back to committee and allow both sides to be heard. It was necessarily a one-sided affair at the last meeting of the committee, although my hon. friend from Lindsay and Mr. McHugh from Victoria were both present and set forth very ably and clearly their views, having a knowledge of the locus in quo. They could not speak of their financial prospects, or their intentions or capabilities, but simply that the country wanted a railway and that that was the best place for it.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—What is the question before the House ?

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—I understood that the recommendation of the committee had already been concurred in, and that the motion was made for the third reading of the Bill as amended.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yesterday, when the chairman of the committee moved that the amendment be concurred in, I asked that the matter stand over till to-day, because the amendments were important and I understand that was done.

The SPEAKER—It has been moved in amendment to the motion for the third reading by the hon. Mr. Dobson, seconded by the hon. Mr. Kerr, that the said Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours for further consideration.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—The motion distinctly said that the recommendation should not be concurred in. The hon. gentleman from Cobourg did not put the motion that the Bill be not now read the third time. However, while I am on my feet I will make a few remarks in reply to what the hon. gentleman has said. In the first place, I think it is a very unwise and objectionable thing to do, as he has done now for the second time, to appeal from the judgment of the committee to the House. As a matter of fact everything that he has said here, and a great deal more than that, was said by himself and by the advocates of this Bill in the presence of the committee. The committee took a long time hearing both sides of the question, and after hearing everything that could be said, they came to a decision by a very good majority, to make the alteration which has been proposed and submitted in their report to the Senate. What the hon. gentleman has stated can scarcely be said to be in strict harmony with the facts as to the amount of discussion in the committee or information which was brought before them. I contend that they heard everything that could be advanced by the advocates on both sides. Everything was fairly and fully set forth. What does the hon. gentleman himself say ? He talks about this wonderful mountain which he says presents an insuperable obstacle to the construction of the road on the line described in the original charter, but he says 'we can go eight miles further east and get round the mountain.' What do the advocates of the amended Bill say ? We propose to begin the road about a mile and a half further west and get past this mountain. We had before the committee a petition signed, if my recollection is right, by a thousand inhabitants of that part of Canada. It is not a very thickly settled section, and we may call it a unanimous expression of opinion on the part of the residents of that district. They petitioned that we should not allow this variation of site in the original Bill. I think that these men have a great claim to be attended to. They have gone there under the guidance of a priest, who has been very energetic in bringing them there to settle, and they all understood, when they took their locations, that the railway would be on this identical line, and although a deviation is necessary to get round this mountain, it is a very slight one, and the only change made in the Bill, to avoid cutting through this mountain, by allowing a deviation for a mile or two miles west to make the start. We had the matter very fully discussed before us, and the maps whereby we could be more easily guided to form a judgment as to the different routes which cannot be seen here, and the very reason why these Bills are sent to the committee is, that the committee has an advantage which the House cannot enjoy, and when the House has remitted a question to a committee in which it has confidence, there should be strong reasons advanced here before setting aside a report deliberately adopted, because it seems to interfere with the interests of some private individuals. The public interests are entirely the other way, and they are promoted by the decision of the committee.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I do not subscribe to the doctrine laid down by my hon. friend.

This Bill has been before the House of Commons, and was considered there very fully, and the amendments desired by the promoter were made there. What the hon. gentleman supports is a proposition by the Railway Committee of the Senate to undo what was agreed to by the House of Commons and substitute the view of a majority of the committee of this House for the decision of the majority of the House of Commons. These matters go before the committee for the purpose of being considered by the commitee, and the committee judges of the merits and the conflicting interests which may be submitted to it for its consideration; but it seems to me that a committee, either of this House dealing with a Bill from the House of Commons, or a committee of the House of Commons dealing with a Bill from this House, assumes a very grave responsibility when it undertakes to override the wishes of the promoters of the charter and the judgment of the House which has first had an opportunity of considering the matter. My hon. friend has referred to a number of people who, he says, have petitioned that the line of the road should be located as shown in the original charter, and which the committee proposes very nearly to restore, greatly against the wishes of the promoter of the enterprise. I should like to know how many inhabitants of the village of Verner are parties to the petition. Of course all those people who reside in the village would be anxious that the railroad should start at that particular point, and would not desire it to be taken any great distance from that, but what is here to be considered in the first place is, whether such a route is desirable or not. I assume there is no question about that. There is no disputes as between rival lines. What are the wishes of those who are promoting the enterprise ?

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—What are the interests of the country ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Of course it is the interests of the country, and the majority of the House has an opportunity of considering that as a majority of the House of Commons had. The promoters of this enterprise tell you, through my hon. friend, from Cobourg (Hon. Mr. Kerr), who has had an opportunity of coming in contact with them, that it is equivalent to voting against the proposition which they have brought before the attention of the House for a charter to construct a road from some point on the Canadian Pacific Railway, at or near Verner, to a point on Lake Timagami. If the company did not feel that it was to their advantage to locate the road at some other point than that mentioned, they would not ask for permission to locate it elsewhere. It cannot be to their advantage to make the change unless they are going to save a considerable sum in the construction of the road, and unless the road is going to be located in a district where they would receive a larger amount of travel and traffic than they would if it was located elsewhere. Now, upon that point, the judgment of the company is a matter of very great importance. It is a matter of the first importance, because the company's interests are paramount, to locate the road where it will be most profitable to them, both on account of the diminished cost of construction, and on account of the additional amount of travel and traffic they are likely to secure. They have asked for a different location at a certain point. What reason has been given for locating it elsewhere than as the company has wished it ? Who has given any other reason why the committee should arbitrarily, and against the wishes of those seeking the legislation, locate the road elsewhere than where the parties desire it? No reason has been given. The committee by what they have done, have undertaken to substitute their own judgment for the judgment of the House of Commons and for the judgment of the promoters of the enterprise, who say, through my hon. friend here, that if you insist upon these amendments you are defeating the project altogether. If the project has value, and I apprehend it has, to the public, then the interest of the public is to meet the wishes of the promoters—and that has not been done by the course which has been adopted. It seems to me that the Bill ought to have been reported as it came from the House of Commons—that there is no adequate reason given for undertaking to override the conclusion that was come to in the other House and prevent the wishes of those who are promoting the enterprise from being carried into effect.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The doctrine laid down by the hon. gentleman, I do not think any member of this House, whether he be in favour of the Bill as amended, or in its original state, will accept. If the theory which he has laid down be correct, all we have to do is simply to take a Bill as it comes from the House of Commons, after having passed through a committee of that House, and accept it holus bolus. That is the doctrine laid down by the leader of this House.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No it is not.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If that were the case, you had better abolish this Chamber at once, because its functions would be nil. I do not desire to say anything offensively, but I do not think in all my experience I have heard a speech which was more decidedly special pleading in this House in favour of a Bill of which the hon. gentleman evidently knows nothing. I do not think he has given it that study and consideration which a measure of this kind deserves. He may be correct in the theory laid down, that the promoters want to change the terminus of this road. On that point I have no discussion with him, but when he lays down that extraordinary doctrine that this House is a mere nullity and should have no power or authority to interfere with the will of the other branch in dealing with a practical matter of this kind, to that I totally dissent.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I laid down no such doctrine.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman says he laid down no such doctrine. I leave that to the judgment of the House who heard his remarks. The hon. gentleman laid down this doctrine in as plain language as he possibly could put it: that this Bill having been carefully considered in the Railway Committee of the House of Commons and reported to, and adopted by that House, that they ought to know better than we could know, and consequently we should have accepted it as they sent it up to us.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No, I did not say that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—My hon. friend to my left (Hon. Mr. Allan) says if the hon. gentleman did not say that, he does not know what he did say. Those who listened to the speech of the hon. gentleman who seconded this motion will be somewhat surprised—that is, any one who was at the committee meeting. He first told the House that not supposing there would be any opposition to the provisions of this Bill, no one was there to explain or to oppose the amendment. The hon. gentleman who represents South Victoria in the lower House was present and gave a full explanation of the reasons and causes which led the company to change their point of beginning from Verner to a point eleven miles east of that place. Those who opposed the Bill stated distinctly and positively that the road was eight or ten miles longer.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—A great deal more than that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—A great deal longer than the road that would begin at Verner on the south, and go northward to the lake through the settlement. I put the question straight myself—I know I am somewhat out of order in referring to a proceeding in committee, but it is necessary after what has been stated by some members of the committee—I put the question straight to the member from South Victoria if he knew what the character of the route was. He frankly admitted that he did not. We then asked one of the gentlemen present, from Sturgeon Falls, who told the committee that he had been over the whole route and knew exactly what the character of the country was, and that the new route which they had laid down on that map, running northward from its terminus, at Sturgeon Falls, was almost impracticable—that it was all hills and rocks, just of the character which the hon. gentleman from Cobourg called the attention of the House to when speaking of the other route. The question was put by myself as to the character of the country through which the road would run, having its terminus at Verner, and it was said it was a much more practicable route—that the difficulties which were pointed out by the hon. gentleman from Cobourg did not exist, but that there was some little difficulty in getting into Verner proper, and they asked permission to make the terminus not more than two miles to the west. I asked why that was done? The answer was, because it would come down a valley and make a connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway without any difficulty as to rocks or other impediments in the road, and that the road might be built much cheaper and find a terminus at much less cost than at Sturgeon Falls. Those were the facts presented to the committee. The gentleman promoting the Bill was there. One would suppose he would know what he was talking about. He was very frank in answering the questions put to him. What is the history of this Bill. I agree with the hon. Minister of Justice when he says that we should look to the interest of the country itself. Before the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway that whole country was a wilderness. No one lived there. The hon. gentleman says if this road is not built at once the country will be the same twenty years hence as it was twenty years ago. No one was there twenty years ago. It was found out by a missionary that there was land enough there to form a nucleus for a large settlement. He devoted his time—I think I am correct in saying his whole time—in visiting the French settlement in Michigan and Illinois, and induced some thousand people, as he told us in the committee, principally Canadians and their descendants, in Michigan and Illinois, to return to Canada and settle in that country. When I was a member of the government this gentleman visited me repeatedly in the interests of these people. He has established that settlement, and it is increasing. He says there is a good locality in the west up the valley of the Sturgeon River for a great many more settlers, and it may become a populous part of the country, and in following the route laid down in the charter originally granted, the settlers would be some ten or twelve miles nearer the Canadian Pacific Railway, and that the line would pass through a much better country than if the route started from Sturgeon Falls. That was his contention. It was not combated. There was no evidence to show that any of his statements were incorrect. My sympathy was altogether—without any knowledge at all of that country—with the reverend gentleman and those who were acting with him in effecting the settlement to which I have alluded. No doubt, as the hon. gentleman said, every man in Verner would sign a petition to make that place the terminus, but it is merely a station—there are very few people there. The village that is growing rapidly is Sturgeon Falls. We have no petition from there, but we had a gentleman from there who declared to us that he knew the country well, and that the new route was the least practicable, and would cost double the amount to construct it, and at the same time would not give the same facilities for the settlers to bring the products of their farms to the Canadian Pacific Railway. There is the whole story. It is true, the hon. gentleman from Cobourg said that the reverend gentleman who was opposing the change of terminus of this road had sold his interest to another man who was interested in Sturgeon Falls district, but he said further, and he said it with a good deal of solemnity and a good deal of vim, that when he sold that he did so because he thought the man would enter into a scheme to construct the road, but not to change the terminus. That was his contention. Any man might sell his individual right, if he had any, in the charter, and at the same time he might do it with the understanding that the road was to be constructed upon the line originally laid down, and for which they had a charter, but just as soon as this man got control, as he supposed, of it, he then brought to his aid some of those whose names were in the original charter and others to change the route entirely, eleven miles to the east, and to lengthen it about ten or fifteen miles, to the disadvantage of the settlers, in aid of whom the charter was originally secured. If the statement made by the Sturgeon Falls man be correct, the new route passes through a country the greater part of which is not habitable, and the only inference I could draw from that is that that is a pulp wood country. Those who have travelled over the Canadian Pacific Railway know that a very large proportion of that country is rocky and uninhabitable, but it abounds in spruce and pulpwood, and as there is plenty of water power, and I believe mills erected at Sturgeon Falls, the interest of the settler is set aside in order that a speculator may be enabled to bring his pulpwood down to Sturgeon Falls. That is the only inference I can draw from the information received in the committee, and it is for the House to say whether, having considered all these points, they will send this report back to the committee for amendment, and with instructions to report it back as it came from the House of Commons. I do not take the strong view that many do with reference to the report of a committee. A Bill is sent to a committee for the purpose of being considered and reported upon. I do not consider it a reflection upon the committee if the majority of the Senate think differently and say no, you should not have made that amendment and refer it back to you to consider the amendment and report as the majority think they ought to report. That is the function of the House, the privilege and power of the House, and when I heard that argument made, that because a committee reports in a certain way it is a reflection to object to their report. I did not concur. I do think, however, that no more evidence could be procured than was submitted to the committee, or that would justify that committee in changing the report which they have made. It is true, if these amendments are not concurred in, and the Bill is not passed, they have all the powers under the charter now upon the statute-book, which powers will still have effect until the middle of this month, and then they will have no charter at all. Then it will be for the parties interested in that part of the country to apply next session for another charter. But the whole point is in a nutshell. Shall these original settlers be deprived of the easiest, best and cheapest mode of making connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway to take their products to market for the purpose of helping speculators who, have no interest in the country. The man who is the prime mover in this diversion of the route is now in New York on his way to England. The people of Sturgeon Falls, that is those who own the mills, have repudiated him by the letters which were sent to the chairman of the committee, and also read by the reverend gentleman who opposed the change of terminus. If this House adopts the motion instructing the committee to make a different report, I hesitate not to say it will be in the interest of speculators and charter-mongers rather than in the interest of the settlers.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—I am quite aware that there are certain conventional, if not actually written rules, as to allusions in this House to what has taken place in a committee of the House, and I do not wish to transgress them. However, I wish very strongly to protest against the remarks made by the hon. Minister of Justice. I may have quite misunderstood him, but it is for the rest of the House to judge whether the impression made upon me by what he said, is correct—that the committee had arrived at a conclusion without having had proper evidence before them—without, in fact, paying any attention to the promoters of the Bill, but rather on their own mere motion, and without any proper grounds, had taken upon themselves to materially alter the whole character of the Bill. I may also have misunderstood my hon. friend, but I certainly thought he said, as plainly as words could state it, that there was something very improper in a committee of this House throwing out or materially altering a Bill which had been passed in a committee of the House of Commons and by the House of Commons itself. I have had a pretty long experience in the committees of this House, and all I can say is that if Bills passing through committees of the House of Commons and coming up to this House —I am speaking of private Bills—had not been time and again altered, we should have some very strange legislation on our statute-books. I can say most honestly that I came to the consideration of this question on the committee with a very open mind—so much so, that I was willing to defer the consideration of this Bill to another day if further light could be thrown upon it. I was quite willing that that should be done, but as the committee declined to do that, and went fully and thoroughly into the discussion of the Bill and listened to what those who were opposed to it and desired certain amendments to be made had to say, I candidly confess, so far as I could judge, it seemed to me there was fair and reasonable ground for the proposed alterations in the Bill, which have been reported by the committee. But I would strongly protest against the idea that the committee have taken up a Bill of this kind without proper evidence before them, or without taking the trouble to weigh the different objections to the Bill and reported it to the House without giving it due consideration. As far as I can judge, I think the Bill received a most thorough canvass, and the whole thing was most thoroughly investigated.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—I wish to enter my protest against the doctrine propounded by the hon. Minister of Justice in regard to the treatment by this House of Bills which come up from the House of Commons. If the course which he suggests were adopted it is quite clear that, so far as this Chamber is concerned, in regard to these Bills, Othello's occupation would be gone and there might as well be no Senate. Then, again, let us look at the matter in this light: how do the House of Commons regard the action of the Senate in regard to many of these Bills that come before them when they are returned from this House with amendments? Do they not time and again accept without question the amendments made by this House? And is not that opposed to the position taken by the hon. Minister of Justice?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Not at all. I took no such position as the hon. gentleman is attributing to me.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—I think the House understood it so. With regard to the matter of reference back to the committee of Bills which have been passed upon by the committee, all the members of this House know perfectly well that the members of the committee stand upon vantage ground in regard to knowledge as to the merits of the Bills brought before them, because they have both the parties interested in the Bill and the parties opposed to it before them, and they hear both sides, and without hearing both sides I should like to know how it is possible for any hon. gentleman to come to a proper conclusion in the matter? I decidedly endorse the remarks made by the hon. gentleman from Sarnia (Hon. Mr. Vidal) when he says this is a course which should be very reluctantly adopted by this Chamber. I also agree thoroughly with the remark which has fallen from the hon. leader of the opposition that it does not necessarily follow that because there is a reference of that character made there is a reflection upon the committee. Still, I think, under the circumstances, this House should be very chary in referring these Bills back to committee.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I have no right, and no intention, to make a speech, but I desire to correct a misapprehension. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken, the leader of the opposition and my hon. friend from York, have confounded the Senate with the committee. I said nothing with regard to the functions of the Senate. I said that the Senate were not entitled to give full consideration and to exercise their judgment. The hon. gentleman from Lambton (Hon. Mr. Vidal) has spoken throughout as if the report of the committee was the judgment of the House.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—No.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—No.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—And the hon. gentleman who has just spoken has done the same thing.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—No, not unless endorsed by the House.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I protest against a committee of this House undertaking to assume the functions of the House and to act on their behalf. The hon. gentlemen have throughout spoken as if this House had nothing in the world to do but to approve of the conclusions and the reports of the committees.

Hon. Mr. McCALLUM—No, no.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is the position taken by hon. gentlemen.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—I have not said so.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—I did not say so.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think the hon. Minister of Justice has a right to accept the word of these hon. gentlemen. They say that they have not said so.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am repeating my understanding, just as the hon. gentleman sitting opposite me repeated his understanding, and insisted that I have spoken against this House exercising any independent judgment on these matters. I did nothing of the sort. I spoke against the committee's conclusions and report being taken as the judgment of the Senate, and as depriving this House of any right to express an opinion upon the question. And, further, I say that the committee ought to carefully consider the conclusion to which the House of Commons came and the conclusion of the committee of the House of Commons when the measure was there before them in the first instance.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The point at issue seems to be whether parliament is disposed to allow the promoters of the Bill to build their railway where they desire, or whether parliament shall divert the road from the line which the promoters consider as the only line on which they would be justified in spending any money ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Just the contrary exactly.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Not if I am correctly informed. The hon. gentleman from Cobourg stated that the promoters were unanimous in asking for the Bill in the shape in which it came from the House of Commons.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The only object of the Bill is to change the southern terminus from Verner to Sturgeon Falls. That is the whole thing.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Both Houses make very serious amendments in Bills, but I think it is a new feature to say to the promoters of a measure 'we will not grant you a charter where you want to locate your line, but if you will take our line we will give you a charter.' That is really a new proposition, and if hon. gentlemen will look at the past history of legislation they will find the occasions rare on which a committee of the House has disturbed the location as sought by the promoters of the Bill. It may be that the other location is more in the interest of a large settlement of country, but if the promoters say 'we are not prepared to build a railway there. There are reasons why we do not think it is to our advantage. It may be very proper for other parties to build a line from Domremy' which was mentioned in the amendment proposed by the committee, but the promoters say 'we do not want a road from there. After we have made our survey and examined the country we think it would be a good investment to build a road from a certain point and we ask to be allowed to do that.' It is an unusual thing for parliament to refuse the promoters and say 'we will not give you a line where you desire, but if you will locate in another point we will give you a charter.'

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Not to change the line as it was originally laid down.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In the original charter it is broadly laid down. It says 'from a point at or near Verner's Station, on the Canadian Pacific Railway, to a point on the southern boundary of the lake.' They had a pretty wide margin. They could go east or west.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Is not that the expression generally used ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, but we do not bind them to an exact point. We allow them latitude. They say 'We have made a survey there and we find it is not in our interest to build a line west of Verner and we ask to be allowed to build east of Verner,' and the House says 'You must move the line further west.' I understand Domremy is two miles further west. They say 'we do not want that permission.'

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is the new men who say that, but the older men say they do want it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Of course parliament can do as it likes, but I think it is rather unusual for parliament to say to parties who have put money into an enterprise, and who are prepared to put a larger amount of money in it, 'No, we will not give you the line where you desire it. We will give you it somewhere else.' I do not know the facts sufficiently to say whether parliament is justified in doing that, but parliament is all powerful. It can refuse the Bill in the shape the promoters have asked for it. It is a matter which should be threshed out in the committee if it has not been fully threshed out already.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The committee spent two or three hours at it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If it appears that all the promoters were in favour of a line to Verner, would it not be unusual for parliament to say 'It is quite true you could locate your line a little east of Verner under your original charter, but now you must build you line at a point two miles west of Verner.' In my experience it is an unusual action for parliament to take, to locate a line for a company in a section of country which they are not prepared to accept.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There was not a single particle of evidence that the parties who desired this diversion had a dollar to go on with it.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I think there is some information that might be given this House which has not been communicated to us, and I have no hesitation in saying that from information I received from the gentlemen promoting the Bill, the report should be referred back and these people should have their line in the location asked for. I will give the House some of the reasons. I understand that from Verner to the lake is some twenty-four miles by the proposed line, which I understand up to the present time has not been surveyed. The line from Sturgeon's Falls to the same terminal on the lake is thirty-two miles, which has been surveyed and is a practical route. In the case of Verner, they have to go east to what is known as Cache Bay Valley, the only way of reaching the lake from Sturgeon's Falls. They have to go west. Verner is a small village of not over sixty or seventy inhabitants and that is the point at which the original charter fixed the terminus of the road. I am informed that Sturgeon Falls is an incorporated town of 2,000 inhabitants, and no doubt what has been stated by the hon. leader of the opposition is perfectly correct, that the object of getting the road into Sturgeon's Falls is to carry pulp-wood there. I understand there is a large pulp-mill and a paper-mill is being erected and Mr. Edward Lloyds, of the London Chronicle, purchased the pulp-mills from the original owners for some several hundred thousand dollars and is spending about half a million dollars in erecting a paper-mill there. That point must grow, and it seems to me the most natural thing in the world that the people who are farming that section of the country should prefer to have the railway go to a town of two thousand inhabitants rather than to a little village of sixty or seventy. A reference was made to the original promoters of the Bill. I understand that eight out of nine of the original promoters are asking for a change at the present time. Eight out of the nine are in favour of the change to Sturgeon's Falls. Only one of them is opposed to the change and in favour of Verner. It appears to me that everything is in favour of allowing these people to have the change. It is all very well for us to say that petitions have been signed. We know how easily petitions can be obtained for almost any purpose. I think that is the experience of nearly every hon. gentleman in this House. Sturgeon Falls is a town of two thousand inhabitants, and a large amount of money has been invested in a pulp-mill there, and of course these people want to start the road at that point rather than to take the trade away from it, because, I understand, from either Verner or Sturgeon's Falls the road has to almost parallel the Canadian Pacific Railway to get into Cache Bay Valley, and it is simply a question of six miles longer, but it brings the products in.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Which lake is that?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Lake Timagami.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is twenty-four miles from the Canadian Pacific Railway. How could it parallel it?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—No. From Verner they have to run, not parallel, but easterly along the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway for a distance to get into the valley. They have to go up the same valley to get into the lake. It is a little longer from Sturgeon Falls than from Verner.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—They asked to be enabled to go east of Verner instead of west.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I am taking Verner as one starting point. I suppose from Verner they would have to go further west and would not go to that valley at all. Both Houses have a duty to perform, and it does seem to me that, outside the criticism with reference to the duties of the Senate and the House of Commons, there should be the strongest evidence possible to warrant us in changing a measure coming to us with the approval of the House of Commons, and the same way with Bills that go from the Senate to the House of Commons, because the House in which these Bills originate must naturally get the best information, and we must know that, because we find complaints by the hon. gentlemen that members of the House of Commons do not pay sufficient attention to these matters after the Bills have passed there and been sent to the upper House. I suppose it is about the same in the Senate. Each body supposes that the matter is looked into by the House in which the Bills originate. My idea is that if the House insists that this road shall not be built from Sturgeon Falls, it will not be built at all, because I understand that the people who control the charter have investments at Sturgeon Falls. They have property there, and want the road to terminate there, no doubt for the purpose of facilitating the bringing in of pulp-wood. The people through the country are best served by having the products of their farms taken to a town of two thousand inhabitants rather than to a station of sixty or seventy people.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Will the hon. gentleman kindly tell me why Sturgeon Falls was not represented at the committee —why they did not protest against this ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Represented on what committee ?

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—The only party present at the committee was a gentleman from Sturgeon Falls, and he was in favour of the railway starting from Verner. I asked why were the people of Sturgeon Falls so negligent that they did not send some representative to the committee to ask that the road should be started from there ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I do not know anything about that particular individual, but I would suppose the people of Sturgeon Falls would come to the conclusion that if the promoters of the company want to start from Sturgeon Falls, the Railway Committee of the House of Commons or the Railway Committee of the Senate would not refuse their request. It seems a reasonable proposition that the people of Sturgeon Falls would not for a moment think their request would be refused.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—There is a further reason which has not been mentioned here, and which should not be forgotton. In sending this Bill back to the Committee on Railways, you are very likely not to get as many gentlemen present as there were at the last meeting, perhaps not a quorum. It is getting very late in the session, and I know a great many members are leaving for home. That fact, and the knowledge that we have spent two hours in hearing arguments for and against this Bill, ought to be a sufficient guarantee to the Senate that everything was done by the committee that could possibly have been done, and that is likely be done in future. There is another little secret in connection with this matter, that struck me in the committee, and which has not been mentioned. It appears to me that this Bill is promoted for the purpose of ousting the gentleman who secured this charter two years ago. It is true that he made an effort to sell, but he retained 30 per cent of the stock belonging to the railway as an interest. He sold his interest for a hundred dollars, but retained 30 per cent. If this charter is given to the parties asking for it to-day, they will deprive him of all his interest, and of all chance of being recouped for the trouble he has taken with this scheme, and of having the line built the way he wanted it. All these things are clear to me, and for that reason I supported the amendment. It would be unjust and unfair to those who hold the charter, if their interests should be by any means of that kind jeopardized. Furthermore, for the reason that we are not likely to get a sufficiently strong meeting of the committee this session I shall support the report of the committee.

The Senate divided on the amendment, which was rejected by the following vote :

SAVINGS BANKS IN THE PROVINCE OF QUEBEC BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved the second reading of Bill (177) 'An Act to amend the Acts respecting certain savings banks in the province of Quebec.' He said: This Bill does not differ very widely from the measure now on the statute-book. There are certain additional powers given in respect to investments, and the name of one of the chartered companies, instead of being the City and District Savings Bank of Montreal, is to be called the Montreal City and District Savings Bank. The bank shall always hold at least 20 per cent of the money deposited with it, securities which can be readily converted into cash. They are allowed to hold a certain class of securities which they could not hold formerly. If hon. gentlemen look at the 18th, 19th and 20th clauses of this Bill, they will see that there are certain securities in which moneys may be invested under the Bill as it now stands. In clause 20 there is the power of purchasing certain securities at their market value, which was not possessed before. They formerly could only be purchased as investments at par value. Then there is a provision that certain loans can be made without collateral security. The liabilities are precisely the same as under the law as it now stands. The power as to assets is enlarged.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—I suppose one reason for extending this class of investments is the great difficulty of getting money invested at all.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—To a certain extent subsection d, of clause 20 is going pretty far for a savings bank.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The securities required under the Act are high class securities, and necessarily the interest on these is small, and it was found desirable to widen the basis of investment so as to permit these banks, as far as possible, without in any way imparing their security, to make their investments.

Hon. Mr. POWER—When the Bill goes into committee, I think the attention of the minister might be specially directed to paragraph d of the new section 20:

(d) Upon a resolution of their respective boards of directors, to incorporated companies, or incorporated institutions, within the limits of their borrowng powers, and not exceeding in any case their paid-up capital, provided such company or institution has a paid-up capital of not less than five hundred thousand dollars, and has paid continuously for the previous five years a dividend at the rate of at least five per cent per annum.

Now, I think it will be prudent to put some limitation on that very wide power. It is perfectly true, as the hon. Minister of Justice says, and the hon. gentleman from York has intimated, that it is rather hard now to get good securities which will bring in a reasonable rate of interest, but after all, in dealing with a savings bank, the great object is security, and the particular paragraph which I have read does not, to my mind, give full security and it should be amended in committee.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved that the Bill be referred to a Committee of the Whole House to-morrow.

Hon Sir WM. HINGSTON—Some business corporations in the country cannot borrow from the two banks. Gas companies and street railways, for instance, cannot, and it is contended that a resolution of the directors is equivalent to any bond that you can get. A resolution and a deed signed by the secretary-treasurer and president is to all intents and purposes a bond, and should be considered as such. It is in order to enable these institutions to lend to such companies, especially that the amendment is made. There are so few companies in Canada with a paid-up capital of $500,000, which have paid a 5 per cent dividend for five years, that there will not be many opportunities of making such investments. This Bill, it may be added, has met the approval of the Bankers' Association, and they have pronounced in favour of it. I see no reason why the hon. minister should not proceed with the Bill as it is.

Hon. Mr. POWER—What the hon. gentleman says may be perfectly correct, but I simply suggest that there should be some change in the wording of the paragraph, which I read. The language of that paragraph is not confined to any of the corporations which have already been mentioned in the earlier part of the Bill, and three or four words which would confine it to the corporations already mentioned, would meet the difficulty which occurs to me. I do not wish the hon. gentleman to understand that I am opposing the provisions of paragraph d, but I want to have it worded so that it will not be made wider than the promoters of the Bill probably intended.

Hon. Sir WM. HINGSTON—When the securities are mentioned in clause 19, it has reference to investments. Now, this 20th clause has reference to loans. That is the difference.

Hon. Mr. POWER—After all a loan is an investment in a way.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Unless there is some good reason for delay, as we are now near the end of the session, this Bill should be referred to the committee without delay. If it is necessary to add the words the hon. gentleman suggests, we can do it now.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The object of having the Bill before the House is that it may be considered. If it is not desirable to consider it, why let it go, but I thought we were here to consider the Bill, and I did not expect we would go into committee on it immediately after it was read the second time.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should not like the impression to be made on the mind of any hon. gentleman that because I suggested going in to committee on a Bill now, that I wished to pass the measure without consideration. If it is a matter that requires consideration the hon. gentleman is quite right to ask for a delay. It occurred to me that as the difference between the two sections that is, the difference between investment and loans—had been explained that might be considered now.

The motion was agreed to.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION RESTRICTION BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (180) 'An Act respecting and restricting Chinese immigration.' He said: For the last fifteen or twenty years this Chamber has had to consider the question or restricting Chinese immigration. The first Act was placed on our statute-book restricting Chinese immigration into Canada, in 1885. Under the provision of that Act, a fee of fifty dollars was exacted from every Chinaman coming into the Dominion. There were other provisions, many of which are contained in the Bill before the House, which tended in the direction of limiting immigration from China. Hon. gentlemen are very well aware that a strong feeling on this subject exists in British Columbia, and for many years they have been agitating for a very high tax. The high figure has been objected to by the people of the eastern provinces. They have usually considered that as British merchants are penetrating into China and we are exacting certain provisions for British residents in China, it did not seem in accordance with Christian civilization that we should impose those penalties on the Chinese. However, in deference to the opinion expressed in British Columbia, and perhaps in some other parts of the Dominion, the fee has been raised to $100. Probably hon. gentlemen are aware that the tax that public opinion in the western province demands is prohibitory, practically—$500. For many years past the British Columbia legislature has been passing laws excluding Chinese from the privilege of working for companies chartered by that legislature, and in the last three or four years they have included Japs. Of course the public opinion of this country would not tolerate the Japs being excluded in the same way, and to the same extent as the Chinese are, and consequently very many Bills passed by the legislature of British Columbia have been disallowed on that account. Japan is a warm ally of Great Britain and there are Imperial interests which would prevent the Dominion of Canada from taking any legislative action that would bar the Japs from coming to Canada. Japan herself has solved that problem very recently. She has adopted an ordinance prohibiting Japs emigrating to Canada and the United States, except in limited numbers. Ten per month are allowed to come to Canada; five per month are allowed to go to the United States, evidently showing that Canada stands in a very much better position in the estimation of the Japs than our neighbours to the south of us. It struck me as peculiar how they arrived at that decision, allowing ten Japs to come to Canada for each month of the twelve, and only five to go to the United States. However, this Bill does not touch the Japanese question. It is limited entirely to the Chinese. There are not many new clauses in it. Some are remodelled probably in better form than they were.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—What are the new clauses ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is a new clause that paupers who are likely to become a public charge, or those suffering from certain diseases are not allowed to come in. Probably the latter would be included in our health laws.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Of course, we will discuss the merits of the changes in committee, but I should like to ask the Secretary of State whether this Bill is in compliance with the telegram sent during the elections of 1896 to Mr. McLagan, the editor and proprietor and publisher of the Vancouver World, when he asked what the policy of the party was on this question? The reply made by the then Mr. Laurier, was, that the Chinese question was not one which was agitating the people in the east, but whatever were the wishes and desires of the western people, they should be carried out. What I want to know is whether this Bill is in compliance with the wishes of the western people, and which the present Premier, when in opposition, pledged himself to carry out ; and, secondly, whether this is in accord with the declaration of Sir Henri Joly, when acting as the chaperon of Li Hung Chang, who, when parting with him in the west, Sir Henri affectionately shook hands with the Chinese ambassador, and was asked by Li Hung Chang not to desert his friends ; Sir Henri's reply was 'Depend upon me, I will not desert your friends.' Is it in accordance with that declaration, or are we to understand that as we are approaching very rapidly, the time when we are to ask the electors for support, that this Bill has been introduced though in abeyance for nearly five years, to secure votes? I notice by the newspapers that the provisions of another law which has been placed on the statute-book, that is the Alien Labour law, for the first time have been put in force in the west in connection with some Italians brought from the United States to work in this country. I remember when that Act was under discussion, I pointed out to the then Minister of Justice, Sir Oliver Mowat, who occupied the position my hon. friend does now, that I believed the wording of the Bill which he was about making law was of such a character that it would never be enforced, and that prediction was verified until the other day. Applications had been made repeatedly to put it in force, but had never been acted on by the government. Those who have paid attention to its provisions know that no prosecution could be commenced under the law without first having received the sanction of the Minister of Justice, and in no case has it been put in force until the other day. It comes late, perhaps the government thinks not too late in the day to catch votes, just as we are approaching the elections. When hon. gentlemen want to ask the workingmen for their support, they can put the law in force. The pledge made by the present Premier to the anti-Chinese people in Victoria has remained a dead-letter for five years, and now, if I understand it, they have only acquiesced in the request made by the British Columbia people to the extent of increasing the tax by $50, and have not carired out the demands of that province, as I draw from the remarks made by the Secretary of State, which have been made on the government to make the law still more restrictive. These are two questions which perhaps the hon. gentleman may think irrelevant at the present time, but they are interesting to those who follow these matters, and who have some little regard for pledges which may be made by public men.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am glad my hon. friend appreciates that remark. I know no one who should take it to heart more seriously than himself, particularly when we consider that before the last election the hon. gentleman told the electors at London and Bothwell, as did the Premier, that if they got into power, they would reduce the expenditure of this country from 3 to 4 millions of dollars a year. It has only gone up eight or ten millions. This increase may be thought by a Liberal government to be only a small item in a growing country like this, hence I can understand how he appreciates the remark I made with reference to pledges. However, that is not the point we have to discuss now. What I would like to call the attention of the hon. minister to is this: I have gone through the Bill somewhat carefully. There are some changes which I think are in the right direction. The old Act provided that any one of Chinese origin could only come into the country by paying a capitation tax. I find in this Bill, I call attention to it now, in order that the Minister of Justice and the Secretary of State can think of it before we go into committee—the sixth section reads.

Every person of Chinese origin, irrespective of allegiance, shall pay ino the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada, on entering Canada, at the port or place of entry, a tax of one hundred dollars, except the following persons who shall be exempt from such payment.

They have added the words 'irrespective of allegiance.' The difficulty that arose in enforcing the law as it stood upon the statute-book before, happened in this way: An Englishman who had been for a great number of years in China, married a Chinese woman. He came to Canada and settled in Victoria, and brought five children with him. Under the law as it stood, we were obliged to impose a capitation tax upon the wife and also upon the five children, which amounted in all to two hundred and fifty or three hundred dollars. That was looked upon as a very great hardship, and I may say that by the powers vested in the Treasury Board, they remitted the capitation tax which had been imposed upon the Englishman's wife and his five children. This amendment makes the restriction still stronger. It reads:

Every person of Chinese origin, irrespective of allegiance.

So that if a British subject, a Canadian for instance, goes to China and marries a Chinese woman and has a family, they would be subject, under that clause, 'except as hereinafter provided,' to the capitation tax.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Look at paragraph 4.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I was just going to refer to paragraph 4. Paragraph 4 says:

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL.

Any woman of Chinese origin who is the wife of a person who is not of Chinese origin, shall, for the purposes of this Act, be deemed to be of the same nationality as her husband.

That removes the wife from the capitation tax, but what about the children? What about the family? They may be highly educated, as they were in the case I have referred to. A Presbyterian clergyman came from China with a Chinese wife, and brought a family with him. Under this clause, while the wife would be exempt, would the children not be subject to the tax? That is a point for the Minister of Justice to look into. I think the provision allowing the wife to be considered of the same nationality as the husband is quite correct, and that is the theory I have heard my hon. friend expound before in this House. Should we not extend it also to the family and insert something like this:

And the children of such wife when born in wedlock.

Or would it not be better to change the 6th clause and say:

Every person of Chinese origin not being a British subject.

I am not arguing in opposition to the principle of the Bill, although I have my individual opinions about it. Take Hong Kong, as an illustration. It is a British possession. The inhabitants are principally Chinese, and it does seem hard, however objectionable the Mongolian race may be to our race, that we should pass a law prohibiting a British subject, with all the rights and privileges we have, from coming into the country. That is another point to which I wish to call the attention of the government. I should like to see inserted in this clause the words: 'Not being a British subject.' There are one or two other matters in connection with this measure which we may discuss when going into committee, and I mention these points so that hon. gentlemen may consider them.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Every convert made in China is supposed to cost $445, and should he not be landed in Canada without this embargo?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That would be a good idea if the conversion was sure. I know a case in British Columbia connected with my own family, so that it is a pretty straight story, where the employer said to his Chinese servant, 'Sam, I thought you had become a Christian'? What would hon. gentlemen suppose his answer was? 'Me learn to read and write: me no want Jesus Christ any more.'

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I may say that I think it is contrary to British toleration and British freedom to put an embargo on any class of people.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—And I, for one, will vote against this Bill.

Hon. Mr. POWER—With respect to the point made by the hon. leader of the opposition, in addition to what he says I should like to direct the attention of the hon. Secretary of State to paragraph d, of clause 4, which reads as follows:

> The expression 'Chinese immigrant' means any person of Chinese origin, including any person either of whose parents was of Chinese origin, entering Canada.

I think that the language of that paragraph is inconsistent with the language of subclause 4 of clause 6, which reads:

> Any woman of Chinese origin who is the wife of a person who is not of Chinese origin shall, for the purpose of this Act, be deemed to be of the same nationality as her husband.

So that if an Englishman marries a Chinese woman she is, for the purposes of the Act, to be deemed English. Consequently, paragraph d is incorrect in saying that the Chinese immigrant shall include any person either of whose parents was of Chinese origin. It will only include the immigrant whose father was of Chinese origin I think that these two descriptions should be reconciled.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I never could see the justice of imposing this embargo upon Chinese coming into this country. I have had the opportunity, lately, of reading the views of a Presbyterian clergyman respecting the conduct of Chinese in British Columbia, and I have come to the conclusion that they make good settlers and that they are a benefit to the country rather than otherwise, and, therefore, I cannot understand upon what principle this government insists upon putting a poll tax of even fifty dollars per head upon the Chinese who came to this country for the purpose of assisting to carry out our public works, and in a variety of ways benefiting the general prosperity of the country. I do not believe it is consistent with our principles as British subjects to impose any such tax, or to put any such restriction upon people desiring to settle among us. If the government wish to exclude them, then exclude them altogether. It appears to me that with all their imperfections, as long as they pay fifty or a hundred dollars a head, you condone all their evil deeds, past and future, and are willing to give them all the rights and privileges of British subjects. We profess to have our country open to men of all classes, of all nationalities, colours and creeds, and I never could understand on what ground this tax was imposed. Could the Canadian Pacific Railway have been constructed in the short time it took to build it without the assistance afforded by foreign labourers? These people have been here a great many years. I do not know much about them myself. We have had a few in this city. I have found them highly honourable and industrious, conducting themselves in a becoming manner in every way, and I believe they have become Christianized. I believe they are now members of the Presbyterian Church of this city, and I am told they conduct themselves in every way in a becoming manner. I have heard nothing against them except the general supposition that they interfere with the labouring men of this country. In British Columbia the number of Chinese is very large, variously estimated at from ten to fifteen thousand. I have conversed with a good many men from British Columbia, and have always understood from them that they were perfectly satisfied with the course pursued by this class of people in that part of Canada, and as far as they were concerned they could see no reason for disturbing them or preventing them coming in free of charge. If the government think it is for the benefit of the country and its revenue to impose a poll tax, that alters the question altogether, and upon that ground they may be justified in exacting this amount of money. But the evidence is altogether against the idea that they are not people deserving of every protection we can give them for the purpose of carrying on their business vocation. It is said they amass a little money and then go away. Do not others do the same thing? Men come from the British Isles, remain a short while and return to their native land after they make a little money. Men come from the United States and do the same thing. I do not know why there should be a discrimination against the Chinese. It is said they are not Christians. We ought to try to Christianize them for the purpose of making them Christians in fact as well as name. Under all these circumstances, I cannot understand why this measure should be introduced for our consideration. The government might have allowed the law to remain as it was, but I presume they expect by this Act to increase the revenue of the country.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—They expect to gain at the polls.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—The action of the government on this question is certainly a move in the right direction. I do not think the Chinese should be admitted into this country in large numbers. A few of them may be all right and may be very useful, but we know that at the present time there is an upheaval in China the end of which it is impossible to foresee, and we know, too, of late years an excellent steamship service has been established between that country and British Columbia, and the probability is that unless some restriction is imposed upon the immigration of that class of people, the country will be over run with them, and they will become a perfect nuisance.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—A few of them may be very useful and profitable to have, and if they are not encouraged to settle down in colonies by themselves they may become better citizens than they were in their own country, but if the Chinese are admitted by the thousand, as seems likely to occur, it would be a great injury and a menace to the peace and prosperity of the country generally. The government is taking a right step in imposing a tax of one hundred dollars, and if that is not sufficient to prevent a large influx of Mongolians into our country, they would be justified in going still further, so that a very limited immigration of that class would take place. I think the government is taking the proper course in introducing a Bill of this kind at the present time.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—It will be remembered by many hon. gentlemen that when this subject was first introduced in the Senate to impose a tax on the Chinese, I resisted it for the same reason that I oppose the measure to-day. All the observations which I have been enabled to make on the effect of the Bill have not changed my opinion with reference to it. I think it is entirely inconsistent with everything that is truly British.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—Such a law should not be on our statute-book, and it is a matter of surprise to me that the Imperial government did not veto the first Act. It seems to me to be utterly inconsistent with every thing which we, as a Christian nation, profess to carry out with reference to other people. I do not know on what ground any objection should be taken to the Chinese. There are many who are diametrically opposed to their coming into the country, and consider them an evil to be resisted. I do not hold that view. I have sufficient faith in the Anglo-Saxon stability and strength to believe that they can maintain their ascendency anywhere, and I am not afraid of a million Chinamen coming and trying to take our country from us. The few who have come here, as far as my knowledge goes, have behaved themselves with as much propriety as any of the other races of men. Hon. gentlemen will find a larger proportion of objectionable people among those who are British subjects than will be found among Chinese immigrants and surely some of the actions which they perform would justify them in receiving consideration at our hands. In fact, I think that we should blush—if parliament could blush—when we think of the treatment we are according them. What did we find the Chinamen doing when the great calamity happened to Ottawa and Hull? We find the Chinese of Victoria contributing $500 to the relief fund. Surely people who are able to perform an act of that kind are entitled to more consideration at our hands than they are generally receiving. I am not venturing to suppose that I could defeat the passage of this Bill, but I cannot allow it to pass the second reading without at all events recording my disapproval of it; if I thought it were possible I should certainly move for the rejection of the measure. But the Bill before us contains many clauses with reference to matters which I think are right and proper to be dealt with, and therefore while there is a good deal which is objectionable to me, there are many things which it is desirable to pass in to law for the regulation of matters connected with the Chinese. But I do not think that the Chinese should be dealt with differently from immigrants who come from any other nation in the world. Here we are spending thousands of dollars to bring in the Doukhobors and Galicians. Are they any better than the Chinese ?

Hon. Mr. DEVER—Oh, yes.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—The Chinese that have come in among us have behaved themselves with the greatest propriety. There are a great many in the city of Ottawa, and we do not find them violating the law. They are a well behaved, useful people, and my belief is that the opposition to them does not arise from anything particularly objectionable in themselves. It has been boldly advanced that it is because they come in and work for a low rate of wages and deprive our own working people of proper payment for their services that they are looked upon as an evil. They come in and displace our own workmen. That is really the essential principle at the bottom of this legislation against them, and what an absurd thing it is. If we carry out that principle we might just as well say there should be a heavy tax imposed upon every sewing machine, because the sewing machine enables one girl to do the work which would otherwise keep ten or twelve girls employed, and therefore any machinery by which manual labour is saved would be subject to the objection. If because they come in and do work more cheaply they should be kept out, then the same principle would apply to the making of machinery by which workmen would be deprived of their ordinary work. I think it is an incorrect principle and so far from raising any objection to their coming in, I think they should be well treated. There may be among them, as there are in any race of men, hypocrites and pretenders, although a great many of them have become true and devoted Christians, and they have shown themselves to be such by leading lives in keeping with the commands given in the word of God, and we have every reason to treat them as we treat any other race, as fellow children of the one great and glorious Father. I do not believe that we are acting in harmony with His will when we would thus, as it were, shut the door of our country against the incoming Chinese people. What do we find England doing now ? She is making a great parade, going to keep an open door in China, and while they are opening the door there, we are shutting the door against the Chinese here. What would we say if China saw fit, in its wisdom, to impose a tax on every Canadian that went in there ? What would happen ? There would be almost a war to compel them to revoke such a law. How is it that no tax is imposed on the Japanese? I am told they are just as objectionable as the Chinese.

Several hon. MEMBERS—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—Why is Japan not to be treated the same as China ? Japan is treated as a friend of England because she may be useful if trouble comes in a certain quarter. Is that the kind of principle which should guide a nation like Great Britain ? I think it is entirely beneath our dignity and inconsistent with our professions, and as long as I live, I hope to stand up for the rights of the poor ill-used and persecuted citizens of China.

Hon. Mr. GILLMOR—When this legislation was introduced in the House of Commons I was very much opposed to the restriction. I have given the matter a good deal of consideration since and I regret exceedingly that the government have thought it necessary to double the poll tax on the Chinese. I have read very carefully the report of the commission on Chinese immigration, and I fail to see any argument or any evidence, taking it upon the whole, that they were not a useful set of immigrants in this country. I am not familiar with their customs, for there are none to speak of in the province from which I come, but in Montreal and in Ottawa I have observed them, and I cannot see any objection to having them come to this country. I do not suppose they are the most desirable immigrants that we could have. Of course, there is the difference in colour. I do not suppose they will ever amalgamate with the white race ; at the same time, Canada is a broad country and has vast resources to become developed, and they are not a bad class of immigrants to develop our resources. I do feel that this legislation is a blot on our Christian civilization. While the nations are fighting for an open door in China, we close the door against the Chinese in Canada. I would not be afraid of their overrunning Canada. Their regard for their fatherland and for their ancestors will prevent their coming here in very large numbers, and if they are so populous there that they are overcrowded, we must not forget the brotherhood of man—we must not forget that the earth is made for all God's creatures. I know there are difficulties surrounding this question, yet I have very strong feelings in reference to this matter, and I think this legislation is behind the Christian civilization of the age. It is the result of pressure from the labouring classes. I think that white men are superior to Chinamen. I do not believe that they want to be protected because we are an inferior race, I believe that the white race is destined to rule the world and lead in civilization and everything that is great and good; therefore, I do not believe they require to be protected against Chinamen any more than against Japanese. I am inclined to think it is because the Japanese can fight that they are allowed to come in. They have a navy and know how to use it. The Chinese civilization has been a civilization of peace, and therefore, they are not a formidable nation in war. Christian nations may convert them into fighting people, and make their influence felt throughout the world yet. I do not want to see that. You may read the report of the commission on Chinese immigration, and while some evidence may be found against their morals, and as to the leprosy they may bring in, on the whole they are unobjectionable. A clergyman in British Columbia gave evidence that he never saw but one Chinese leper, and the only other leper he knew of was an Indian who had it before the Chinese came to British Columbia, and therefore, that objection is without grounds. I must admit that races who will not amalgamate are not so desirable as those who will, but Canada is a broad country and the Chinese are industrious and sober. They use opium, it is true, but so do white people. When they earn and save enough money they go back to China, but they leave the results of their labour in this country, and there is no objection to their going home. They go there because they want to lay their bones in the dust with their ancestors. It is part of their religion to worship their ancestors. With regard to their living cheaply, is it any crime to live on three cents a day. Is it any crime to sleep a dozen in a room? Is it any crime to lie on a board? They are admitted to be men who are faithful to their obligations. There is no trouble collecting their debts, but they come in competition with white men? I know that the labouring classes of this or any other country are the most important class. At the same time, there are others who have rights, and if the white man is superior, he can utilize the labour and the energies of these yellow men. They are willing to do menial labour that white men will not do. And with regard to the public works of British Columbia, I daresay they could have been accomplished by the labour of white men alone, but it would have taken years and years longer to construct those public works were it not for the employment of the Chinese. I have not changed my views. I have not made it a subject of close study, but I have looked through this long report. The commissioners not only investigated the question in British Columbia, but they felt they had to go down to Chinatown in California to get an account of all the evils connected with the Chinese there, where they were maltreated and abused, where their houses were burnt over their heads; where there was no regard for the rights of Chinamen at all. The commissioners went there for evidence, and some witnesses gave one kind of testimony, and other witnesses gave testimony of another kind, but on the whole the commissioners were satisfied that the Chinese were a desirable class of people to come to Canada to develop the resources of the country, and that Canada was benefited by them. Apart from that, and above that I believe in the brotherhood of man. I believe in the fatherhood of God, and I think it is our duty to let men who can benefit us, come into the country without regard to their race or religion. The hon. gentleman from Glengarry says it costs over four hundred dollars to make one convert. Would it not be better to let them come in here and get the benefit of our Christian civilization, and be Christianized while doing our work, and we would then have the four hundred dollars to spend in the country for their conversion, rather than send the money to convert them in China? I do not propose to argue the question, but I have strong feelings upon it. The longer the Chinese are here, the more inclined they are to adopt our dress, to get rid of their queues, and to be an advantage rather than an injury to Canada. While some localities might feel the inconvenience of their presence, we have a broad land, and instead of five or six millions of a population that we now have, we have room for a hundred millions, for a great nation. In the meantime, I think Chinese labour would be of great advantage to Canada. They do not labour any cheaper than the market will pay. If they did I do not suppose any individual here would be sorry to have them work cheap. That is no crime. With regard to their mode of living, they spend as much and pay as much to the revenue as workingmen who get the same wages.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. GILLMOR—The commissioners so report. They say a Chinaman who gets three hundred dollars a year for his labour lays by about forty or fifty dollars out of that. If he eats rice, it costs about five cents a pound, while flour sells at two or three cents. Therefore, he eats dearer food than the man who lives on flour. They like to live as well as other people, and when they are able to live that way they do so.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—I should be sorry indeed that this discussion should end without raising my voice against this Bill. I think it is a disgrace, at the beginning of the twentieth century. Perhaps two hundred years ago it would not have excited the same indignation that it will to-day. Civilization is advancing. Everybody knows that this Bill is brought forward because an election is coming on, and in British Columbia the province is cursed with universal suffrage. The Chinese interfere with some classes there. That feeling is entirely confined to the labouring classes. When I was in Victoria a gentleman called to see me and said: 'Dr. Almon, I do not know anything about you, but I have called to thank you for your vote against the tax on Chinese.' I said: 'How does it happen, if those are your sentiments, that all the members from British Columbia, except Senator Macdonald, were in favour of the tax?' He said: 'They vote that way, but if you go to their houses, you will find that they employ Chinese.' The reasons given for this Bill are, that the Chinese come to this country and work hard. They are generally honest; they are certainly sober. There appears to be no immorality among them which would bring them into the divorce court. What is the argument against them? They come here to work and save money, and when they have enough saved they go back to their own country. Why do they do that? Is it not our own fault? Suppose a man were allowed to bring his wife and family with him? We may say that his wife would be a bad woman. I do not know that she would be any worse than the wife of an immigrant from Europe, and for whom we pay a large sum to get them to emigrate to Canada. If the Chinese had their wives with them they could keep their own houses, and then when a man made money enough, his affection would be divided between his dead ancestors and his living children, and I am not certain, as human nature is the same whether our skins are white or yellow, but the love of the children would overcome the love of ancestors. Certainly, the children would not have the same affection for the land of their origin as their fathers had. When the Chinese go to China, they cannot take the results of their labour away with them. It was said that the Canadian Pacific Railway could not have been completed in the time it was, if the contractors had not been able to employ Chinese labour. Those men who work on that railway are gone. Is not the result of their labour with us still, in the shape of the Canadian Pacific Railway, of which we are so proud, and which has raised Canada from the position of an unknown country to one that a man feels proud to call himself a citizen of? The hon. gentleman from Sarnia (Hon. Mr. Vidal) certainly takes rather a pessimistic view when he says he believes this Bill will pass. I should be sorry to think it would pass. We have not made as many converts in China as we ought to have made.

Why? A Chinaman hears a missionary speak, perhaps of the Sermon on the Mount. He asks: 'Is that the religion of Christians?' The missionary says: 'Yes,' it is. 'Did not God make the Mongolian as well as the Caucasian? Have you any right to shut out the Mongolian?' The Bill is anti-British and unchristian, and I should be ashamed to sit in this House if I did not raise my voice in protest against it.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I regret that I was not able to hear fully the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Halifax, for I quite concur in his views on the subject. I must say that I think this species of legislation, imposing a tax of a hundred dollars on immigrants coming into the country from China is not very desirable legislation. It appears to me it is retrograde legislation. Previous to confederation, there was a tax imposed on immigrants coming into the different provinces. I remember myself when immigrants coming into Prince Edward Island, who, landed in Nova Scotia, had to pay some four dollars per head there. If they had to pass through New Brunswick they had to pay a second head tax, and when they came to our province they had to pay a third. That is done away with, and we now afford facilities to bring people in free of any charge of that kind. While we are bringing in certain foreign immigrants at a high cost to the country, we are imposing a tax on other foreigners. We are discriminating between different races. From any little knowledge I have of the Chinese who come into the lower provinces, my belief is that they are a desirable class to admit into the country. We know that it is very difficult indeed for people in the lower provinces to obtain servants to do their housework, and these Chinese, when they come there in sufficient numbers and find that washing and such work as they usually embark in, is overdone, they will engage as house servants, and they have proved themselves to be a very good class of servants indeed—a class that householders are very anxious to get hold of when they cannot obtain natives of the country to do housework. In this way it is an advantage to the people of the lower provinces to have the Chinese come in. It may be different in British Columbia, where there is a very large number of Chinese coming in, and it is possible that there are objections to them there. Perhaps these people work for less wages than white people do. Perhaps they do not accomplish as much in the same time as a white person would, but they are ready to go at any work. They are industrious, saving and economical. They are law-abiding people. You do not find that the Chinese coming in here transgress the law. You do not find them brought up in the police court for drunkenness, or thieving, or any petty crimes for which white people are summoned to court. They observe the law and in that respect they are not at all objectionable, and I am rather sorry that legislation of this kind, imposing such a heavy tax upon an industrious people, is considered necessary. It is restricting immigration of a certain class, whereas we are endeavouring to encourage immigration into the country. It is discriminating against one particular race, and in that way I do not think it is desirable legislation.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—I did not have the good fortune to hear the opening speeches, or the remarks of the hon. minister who moved the second reading of this Bill, or of the hon. gentleman who followed him, having been called out of the Chamber for an hour or so, and I was unfortunate, owing I have no doubt to the bad acoustic properties of this room, in not hearing the remarks which fell from my hon. friend the junior member for Halifax (Hon. Mr. Almon), but I did hear very well the extraordinary speech made by my hon. friend from New Brunswick (Hon. Mr. Gilmor). Now, as a representative—the only one I am sorry to say at present in this Chamber—from British Columbia, it will be expected that I will say a word or two on the Chinese question, and in opposition to the speeches that have thus far been heard. I may premise by saying that I am not an extreme anti-Chinese man. In going to British Columbia I brought with me those broad humanitarian views which I heard my hon. friend from New Brunswick speak so eloquently about, but very quickly come to think that the cause of the agitation which has existed in British Columbia for so many years to reduce the number of Chinese and the laws which have been passed to restrict the operations of the Chinese in British Columbia, are right and proper and consistent with our ideas, and with broad and humanitarian ideas also. I am afraid neither the hon. gentleman from New Brunswick Charlotte (Hon. Mr. Gillmor) say that he had from Prince Edward Island (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) has been in British Columbia. I doubt if they have read up the question. I was astonished to hear the hon. gentleman from Charlotte (Hon. Mr. Gilmor) say that he had read that voluminous report the Chinese commission made in 1885. I was astonished to hear that the finding of that commission was in favour of Chinese immigration, as he led this House to believe. My opinion was that, as the result of the evidence taken before that commission in British Columbia, the present law imposing a fifty dollars poll tax was passed by this parliament. Whatever may be the views of our eastern friends, there is no question at all about the unanimity of public sentiment in the west with respect to the Chinese. There is no doubt whatever of the unity of the people in favour of restrictive measures so that the Chinese may not flock to our shores in large numbers. We have a population of possibly ten or fifteen thousand Chinese, and I have seen it estimated at twenty thousand to twenty-five thousand, but I am within the mark if I claim that there are ten or fifteen thousand Chinese in that province out of a total population of possibly one hundred and fifty thousand, of which a considerable percentage are Indians. It must be apparent that that is a very large number of Chinese in proportion to the whole. We have in the city of Victoria, with a population of 25,000 estimated, certainly 3,000 Chinese, and while I am prepared to admit, as claimed by the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island a moment ago, that an isolated Chinaman here and there, one, two or three in a small town like Charlottetown, P.E.I., may be deemed a convenience—may be considered useful in the laundry because I think that probably is all they do down in that country. —still I must say that he is not in a position to judge of the effect of the presence of a large number. The few Chinamen in the city of Ottawa may be useful. They do not compete with the white labour of the country to an extent worth mentioning. I might as well admit now as at any time the fundamental objection to the Chinese is the great labour trouble. They are undermining and driving white labour out of British Columbia. In many lines of trade they are driving the white people out of British Columbia, and, in view of these facts, it is only right and proper that Canada should legislate in the interests of her own citizens.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—If that is the case, is it not the fault of the better class of inhabitants in British Columbia for employing this cheap labour when they could get the expensive labour from the Anglo-Saxons? One law is passed to make you do your duty.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—I am not quite sure that I apprehend the question. The hon. gentleman asks me if it is not the fault of the employers of labour?

Hon. Mr. ALMON—Yes.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—I am not prepared to exculpate the employers of labour, although I think it is human nature, if we want a thousand men to do work we will take the cheapest labour, and while there are many men in British Columbia who are small employers of labour, who consistently during all these years, have refused to employ Chinese and have employed white men at a higher rate of wages, still I think that possibly in some of the larger trades, in some of the larger industries, it is true that the responsibility for the employment of the Chinese rests upon the manufacturer. But, I no not know that, because employers of labour obtain the cheapest men they can get, and take Chinamen, that that is any reason why we should not legislate in the interests of white labour if we can do so. Some hon. gentlemen who have spoken have stated that the Chinese are a useful class of people, and not a bad class of people to import into Canada for the purpose of developing the country. Perhaps it is quite unnecessary for me to enter into a lengthy argument to prove that the Chinese are not a desirable class of people. I do not know that any amount of speaking would convince the members of this House who think otherwise. On the contrary, I have found that there is nothing like practical experience in these matters to convince men that the Chinese are not a desirable class of people. I am not prepared to say that the Chinese population has increased in British Columbia very rapidly. I think it has increased some, but not as fast as some speakers in the west claim. The Japanese population, on the other hand, has been increasing very rapidly during the last year.

It being six o'clock, I move that the debate be adjourned.

THE J. W. ANDERSON RELIEF BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. BOLDUC, from the Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills, reported Bill (108) 'An Act to confer on the Commissioner of Patents certain powers for the relief of J. W. Anderson,' with an amendment, and moved that this amendment be taken into consideration on Monday next.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Of course we can consider this matter on Monday, but I wish to call the attention of the House to the effect of the amendment. This Bill is for the renewal of a patent which has lapsed. It is rather a doubtful kind of legislation at all times, where a party has letters patent for an invention, and when the time expires for which the patent has been granted, that we should renew it again. I say it is a doubtful proceeding. However, it is frequently done, and I am not calling into question the propriety of the Bill if the House thinks it proper, but in all these cases the practice is to take care to preserve the rights of those who have made arrangements for the use of the patent after the period for which it had been granted had expired. As I understand, in this case a number of persons are engaged in the production of this patent, and the striking out of the words 'user, manufacture or otherwise' would render every one of these parties who may have invested money and may have undertaken to produce this patent article liable for the violation of that patent. The rights of these parties in every Bill of this kind that has ever gone through parliament have been protected by words of this sort. I am simply calling the attention of the House to the matter that they will see what will be before them when the Bill comes up for consideration.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—It appears to me doubtful whether it is wise to pass the amendment recommended by the committee. I was a member of that committee and heard the case pretty well explained, and I may say that it was on the suggestion of the sollicitor for the applicant that that amendment was carried. The facts of the case are that Anderson obtained his patent some years ago for a pump. After having obtained his patent he entered into a written agreement with certain manufacturers to manufacture this pump and he was to get a dollar and a half as a royalty for every pump they manufactured. This went on until the first ten years for which he had the privilege of this patent expired, and Anderson neglected to pay for the renewal of the patent for the balance of the term, the last five years. The manufacturers of the pump took advantage of Mr. Anderson's neglect and forgetfulness, and notified him that they were not liable to him for any more royalties, that they had the privilege now of manufacturing the pump on their own account, his patent having expired. I may say that in the meantime the manufacturers of this pump had obtained other patents for the pump, some thirteen in number, so it was stated by the promoters of the Bill, and the royalty was reduced to Anderson from, I think, a dollar and a half a pump down to seventy five cents. This went on till, through this neglect, the patent lapsed. Then Anderson innocently applied to the parliament of Canada to have his patent renewed. This suited the manufacturers first rate, it was just what they wanted, and the effect of the renewal of that patent was that it was depriving Anderson of all privileges in connection with his patent and granting to the manufacturers of the pump all the privileges that Anderson should have. That is very unfair. The striking out of the words 'user, manufacture and otherwise does not meet the case exactly. It goes a little further than the committee intended to go. The object was to preserve to Anderson his rights in the patent, and allow them to carry out the agreement which they had come to till the end of the term, the next five years, but if any other parties outside of these men had acquired any right, of course the Bill was not to apply to them. Therefore, I think the amendment which the committee adopted does not really attain the object the committee had in view, and I move in amendment :

That the report of the committee be referred back to the Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills for further consideration.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—I am also a member of this committee. The whole question was fully considered before that committee, and I think the great majority of the committee understood the question in the same way. There was an agreement existing between Mr. Anderson and this company who adopted his patent at one time, under which they promised to give him a royalty on each pump produced in their factory. The hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island has stated pretty distinctly the whole history of the thing, with one or two exceptions. He said that Anderson had got out this patent for fifteen years, but that it was only necessary to pay the first five years in cash, and each succeeding five years to pay a certain amount. thereby renewing the patent for the whole term of fifteen years. He paid the amounts that entitled him to a patent for ten years, and through thoughtlessness or neglect he permitted the patent to lapse at the expiration of ten years, and the consequence was that this company, who had a certain interest in the patent, instead of notifying Mr. Anderson that his patent was about to lapse, and that he should have his right renewed, they behind his back made application, and had the patent renewed in their own name, thereby excluding Anderson from any rights which he possessed in the invention. It is true, legally speaking, when he neglected to renew his patent at the expiration of the ten years for the balance of the period, he lost his legal right, but he certainly did not lose his equitable right. Justice entitled him to consideration for the fact that he gave to these men in the first place the idea of manufacturing the pump that he invented, and for which they got the benefit and profits for ten years. Not only that, but they got the whole price of the pump, for it was arranged between Anderson and them that he was to receive a royalty of $1.50 for each pump, but instead of giving Anderson the $1.50 on the original price of the pump, Anderson was compelled to add $1.50 to the price of the pump and thereby get his royalty over and above and outside of the regular price. The consequence was that this firm got the whole profit on the manufacturing of the pump, according even to their contract, without giving Anderson a single dollar. The royalty that he got, according to the evidence we heard to-day, was obtained outside of the price charged by the manufacturers. We wanted, in the committee, to place this thing back precisely where it had been before the patent lapsed, and in that way to give Anderson his former right. It also gives the manufacturers a right, because they also had made improvements in the pump that they got patented. In fact, neither Anderson nor the manufacturers could, in my opinion, manufacture the pump fairly without the co-operation of both parties in this case. The pump has the benefit of Anderson's patent, and it also has at present the benefit of the manufacturers' improvements. The committee did not contemplate doing any injustice to either side by placing the two parties in the same position they had been in previous to the lapse of the patent. It has been held in this House on former occasions that to refer back a report to a committee is treating the committee with a certain amount of injustice. In this case the parties to the patent on both sides and the solicitors have gone away, after submitting the case, and it would be a very difficult matter, in my opinion, to place it before the committee again in the same manner that it was submitted to-day. On these grounds, I hope hon. gentlemen will not interfere with the judgment of the committee to-day, because I think it is a just one. It places this poor man in a position to get the benefit of his patent for five years longer. After inventing this pump, which he points out was a most beneficial thing for the manufacturers, an invention by which a large amount of money was made by the manufacturers, and a very small amount came to the original inventor of the patent, it would be unjust to deprive him of his rights.

The amendment was agreed to.

BRANCH RAILWAYS IN MANITOBA AND NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY moved :

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before the Senate a statement, including the names, of the several branch lines of railway in Manitoba and the North-west Territories, and the number of miles of each branch line built and in operation. Also, a statement showing the amount of subsidy, if any, given each of said railways; and if in a land grant, has said land grant, in part or in full, been granted such railway companies, and what was the computed value per acre of said land.

APPOINTMENT OF WAREHOUSE COMMISSIONERS IN MANITOBA.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY inquired :

If any one of the three farmers who served on the Royal Commission inquiring into the grain trade as carried on through the elevator and flat warehouse system of the inspection district of Manitoba, has himself, or by any one else on his behalf, made application for the position of warehouse commissioner, as provided in the Grain Trade Bill, and recommended by said Royal Commission?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I have made inquiry of the Department of Inland Revenue, where there would be a communication of this sort, if anywhere, and no such application has been received by the department.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (172) 'An Act respecting the Canada Mining and Metallurgical Company, limited.' —(Hon. Mr. McMillan.)

Bill (102) 'An Act to confer on the Commissioner of Patents certain powers for the relief of James Milne.'—(Hon. Mr. Watson.)

SAVINGS BANKS IN THE PROVINCE OF QUEBEC BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (177) 'An Act to amend the Acts respecting certain Savings Banks in the Province of Quebec.'

(In the Committee.)

On clause 2,

Hon. Mr. MILLS—This clause provides for the extension of opportunities to invest 20 per cent of the moneys the banks hold for any temporary emergency.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is just one paragraph in that new section 18 about which there might be some little question. It reads:

In any other security approved by the Treasury Board.

Hon. gentlemen will see that under the existing law the bank was obliged to hold 20 per cent of the funds deposited in it in public securities of the Dominion of Canada, or of any province thereof, or in some chartered bank in Canada. These are perfectly safe investments. And this clause extends it to Canadian municipal bonds or securities. There does not seem to be any objection to that. Paragraph d reads :

School bonds or debentures issued in the province of Quebec, provided they are secured by the school municipality in which the school is situated.

That is safe enough. Then subclause e reads :

In any other security approved by the Treasury Board.

It appears to me there is a little risk about that—that if a very strong supporter of the government of the day wishes to have certain securities approved by the Treasury Board, it is barely possible the character of that security would not be scrutinized as carefully as it might be. I simply make the suggestion, but do not make any motion in the matter.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am a little surprised at the suggestion of the hon. gentleman. If the late government were in power at the present time, I would not be surprised. I can say, on behalf of the Treasury Board, of which I was a member for some time, that the greatest care is taken to protect the investors, or any one having any connection, with the institution, and while I have not much confidence in the present government, I think, in a matter of this kind, where it affects a vast number of people, that they will take care not to allow them to invest in doubtful securities.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Of course this only applies to 20 per cent of the securities of the banks that are intended to be readily converted into money, and my hon. friends will see that the powers possessed are broad enough. It says :

In public securities of the Dominion of Canada or of any of the provinces thereof or of the United Kingdom, or of any British colony possession, or of the United States or any states thereof ;
(b) in deposits in chartered banks in Canada;
(c) in Canadian municipal bonds or securities;
(d) in school bonds or debentures issued in the province of Quebec, provided they are secured by the school municipality in which the schools are situate;
(e) in any other security approved by the Treasury Board.

There may be other securities than those enumerated which will become desirable securities, and that being so, with the consent of the Treasury Board, the banks will have an opportunity of investing their money.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 19,

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think it only right that the committee should know what they are doing. Clause 19 gives the securities in which the banks may, subject to the provisions in the next preceding section, invest any moneys deposited with them, and there have been added to the list of securities in which the banks can invest, the bonds or debentures of any water power company, navigation company, or heat and light company. I do not profess to know very much about water power companies. I think the bonds and debentures of navigation companies may be good securities, or they may not, but I have grave doubts about the heat and light companies. I know a little about heat and light companies and I know that in a great many instances the bonds or debentures of these companies would not be regarded as being very safe securities, and I have grave doubts as to the wisdom of inserting the heat and light companies.

Hon. Sir WILLIAM HINGSTON—I may say that this is permissive. In addition there is the security afforded by ten somewhat responsible men in Montreal, who have displayed a considerable amount of caution in the past. I think for some thirty years they did not lose a shilling. In Quebec there has been an equally satisfactory condition of things.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Their powers of investing were limited before.

Hon. Sir WILLIAM HINGSTON—It has been found impossible to get municipal debentures to-day to yield more than three and a half, and sometimes only three per cent, while the depositors must get three and there must be a margin of 1 per cent for administration. We must have a wider field to invest in. It has become a necessity, just as in the preceding clause a larger margin is required within which to loan. At one time banks of discount were glad to get money on deposit, and to give 1 per cent more than the savings banks allowed their depositors. To-day the banks as a general rule do not want deposits, and it has been found advisable to seek power to make investments or loans on call in England and the United States.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 19*a*,

Hon. Mr. WOOD—Subclause a of clause 19 says that the bank may invest any moneys, in addition to the 20 per cent mentioned in clause 18, in any of the securities mentioned in the next preceding section. I infer that that means securities mentioned in a, b, c, and d of the preceding section.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, and e.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—That is, in any securities at all, provided they are approved by the Treasury Board.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I think so.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—Is it intended to impose on the Treasury Board the duty of deciding and approving of securities of that kind ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I think so. This is a matter which frequently must come before the Treasury Board.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I am not objecting to it.

Hon. Sir WILLIAM HINGSTON—The Treasury Board is absolutely master of the whole thing. The savings bank cannot raise or lower the rate of interest a fraction of 1 per cent without the consent of the Treasury Board. The Treasury Board is jealous of any encroachment upon its prerogative, and over these two institutions exercises a very close surveillance.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—As a matter of fact, are all those investments submitted to the Treasury Board before the investment is made ?

Hon. Sir WILLIAM HINGSTON—When any change is made in the rate of interest to depositors, or in varying the poor fund, but not for an ordinary investment, and not for an ordinary loan.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—My hon. friend drew attention to water power companies and navigation companies, which seemed to him to be a little out of the usual class of investments in which a savings bank would invest its money. Of course, I do not put my opinion against the opinion of the hon. gentleman from Montreal, who has given special attention to the Bill, and is familiar with everything connected with the subject ; but having regard to the fact that, as a general rule, in the savings bank very much as in life insurance companies, special attention is paid to the securities, it did strike me that the three or four mentioned there were of an unusual character for the funds of a savings bank to be invested in.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 20,

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am not in any sense at all opposing this measure. I am simply pointing out the instances in which this Bill not only goes further than the existing law, but I think goes a little further than it is prudent to go. It is true that the hon. gentleman who has charge of the Bill says that we should count upon the fact that the directors of those institutions are prudent men. I assume that they have been prudent men all along, but we have no guarantee that they will always be prudent men. There are institutions in the province of Quebec which some years ago, I suppose, would have been held to be perfectly safe, and the directors of which would have spoken of as prudent men, which have come to grief very seriously. If we are to trust implicitly to the directors of these institutions, there is no object in limiting the securities in which they may invest at all. We might leave the whole matter to their discretion ; but when we do undertake to limit them, it shows that the feeling is there should be something more than even the prudence of the directors. I have called attention to some investments the wisdom of which I doubt, heating and lighting companies for instance. In the first subclause of this clause 20, I find that the securities are to be taken at the market value. Formerly, I believe, it was the par value. I suppose that is a reasonable change, but in the second subsection, in the last paragraph, there is a very sweeping provision which I honestly think deserves serious consideration of the committee :

2. The bank may lend any of such moneys without collateral security—

(a) to the government of Canada or to the government of any province of Canada;

(b) to the corporation of any municipality in Canada with a population of at least 2,000 inhabitants;

(c) to any 'fabrique de paroisse' or to 'syndics pour l'érection d'églises,' specially authorized by Act of the legislature of Quebec to issue bonds binding on the taxable property of the parish.

I assume there is no danger there, because they are conservative bodies. They are there all the time and are not likely to go up in smoke. Paragraph d is the one to which I specially direct the attention of the committee :

(d) Upon a resolution of their respective boards of directors, to incorporated companies, or incorporated institutions, within the limits of their borrowing powers, and not exceeding in any case their paid-up capital, provided such company or institution has a paid-up capital of not less than $500,000, and has paid continuously for the previous five years a dividend at the rate of not less than 5 per cent per annum.

I understand that, in the minds of the gentlemen who are promoting this Bill, this paragraph d, was intended to cover just two institutions in the province of Quebec. As to these two institutions, I assume that there is no question, and I am not objecting to it at all, but the language of the paragraph is so wide that it might cover institutions in the United States, or elsewhere than in the province of Quebec, where there would be a certain amount of risk, and there is no limitation at all. Under this provision the money may be loaned without collateral security to any incorporated company which has a paid-up capital of $500,000 and has paid 5 per cent for the previous five years. My impression is that it would be better to limit these incorporated companies and institutions to such as are enumerated in the preceding sections, and that it should not be left in that general form. My impression is that this paragraph ought to be amended so as to read in this way :

Upon a resolution of their respective boards of directors to such incorporated companies or incorporated institutions as are mentioned in the two next preceding sections.

That will give them power to lend to street railway companies and the other companies mentioned in the preceding sections, but will not allow them to lend to any institutions possibly outside of the country altogether.

Hon. Sir WILLIAM HINGSTON—I have no objection to the amendment.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I move, then, that paragraph d be amended by inserting before the word 'incorporated' in line 32, the word 'such,' and adding after 'institutions' at the end of the same line, 'as are mentioned in the two next preceding sections.'

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The provisions of this Bill enlarge the powers of the company to invest moneys and also to make loans. This clause 20 refers, of course, to the making of loans altogether. The powers are widened, but that is due to the fact that it is every year becoming more difficult to find safe institutions in which money may be invested at a reasonable rate of interest compared to what was formerly paid. So that, in order that these institutions may secure the most profitable investments consistent with security to those who are interested in them, it is necessary that larger powers should be given to them than they formerly possessed, for both the purposes of investment and of loan. It is on the character of the men largely that the institutions must depend for their permanent prosperity, and the security of the moneys invested in them. Our whole banking system shows that. We have had banking institutions that failed, while other banking institutions were eminently prosperous, and the difference between those that prospered and those that failed was due to the difference in the character and capacity of those engaged in their management. So that, with regard to this particular section which my hon. friend has proposed to amend, and in which amendment the hon. gentleman opposite concurs, in the interest of the institution, and to which, therefore, I make no objection, will after all depend, not on the amendment made, but on the ability and character of those to whom the care of these institutions is entrusted.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Will not these companies have power to lend on these different securities mentioned in the preceding paragraphs, and is not the additional paragraph d intended to give them powers to loan to other than those contained in the preceding paragraph ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Certainly.

Hon. Mr. POWER—No.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This is by resolution.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then, if that be the case, what is the necessity for paragraph d if it is to be amended in the manner suggested by the hon. gentleman from Halifax ? Because it then restricts all the powers to those which are contained in the preceding paragraphs. The amendment says you can do certain things, but it must be only in accordance with the provision which already exists, giving them the additional powers. I frankly confess I have not given it that close study I should have given to it, but it strikes me that it has that effect. If the amendments are to be adopted, the paragraph as I understand it is useless, because you have the powers already.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Not exactly. The previous section relates to investments. This section relates to loans.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understand that, but the amendment is, 'upon a resolution of their respective boards of directors to such incorporated companies or incorporated institutions, as are hereinbefore mentioned.' However, the promoter says he has no objection to this amendment.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That should be the next two preceding sections.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I should like to point out the effect which this change, to my mind, has upon the Bill. Clause 19 gives the banks power to invest any of their money in certain securities, and in subsection b a number of classes of companies are mentioned, in which they may invest their moneys. Those investments are of a somewhat permanent character. Clause 20, as has been already pointed out, refers to loans of a more temporary nature, to individuals or to corporate bodies and describes the character of the collateral securities which, in making such loans, the bank must take. The first clause of section 20 deals with that. Then the second clause of section 20 goes on to say that the bank may make the same character of temporary loans without collateral security, and goes on to say to which different classes of bodies they may make such loans. I understand the meaning of subsection d to be that they can loan, not only to the companies mentioned in section 19, but to any incorporated companies, with this provision, that they must have a paid-up capital of $500,000—a pretty strong company—and that they must have paid continuously a dividend on that capital, of 5 per cent, which would make it undoubtedly a strong company. A company of that character, whether included in the class of companies provided for in section 19 or not, the institutions would be justified in loaning to.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Certainly.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—If we alter the clause as proposed, it not only limits their power to loan to the class of companies mentioned in section 19, but it limits them to such companies as have a capital of $500,000, and have paid a continual dividend of 5 per cent.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It reduces very much the opportunities of the bank.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—It cuts them down very materially, and to my mind, it limits the power to make temporary loans to strong companies much more than it limits the power to make permanent investments. That does not appear to me to be consistent with the object of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—This Bill, and every provision of it, was most carefully considered in the Finance Department, and every subject dealt with by this Bill was thoroughly thrashed out there. I think the hon. gentleman will do best to allow the clause to stand as it is. You would be obliged to send it back to the House of Commons and have it reconsidered there, and it would be better that the clause should stand as it is in the Bill.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The Bill comes to us for the purpose of being considered, and if we think it desirable, amended. The Bill is a very good one, apparently. The hon. gentleman from Sackville appreciates the position exactly. Under section 19, the bank is authorized to invest money deposited with it in certain securities. Under the first subsection of clause 20, the bank is allowed to lend money upon certain other securities, provided that collateral security of the nature mentioned in the two sections next preceding is taken. This paragraph which we are dealing with, subsection 2, says that the bank may lend without collateral security. Now, I say that amendment would allow the bank to lend without collateral security to corporations of this kind, with the restriction that they shall have a paid-up capital of $500,000, and shall have paid dividends at the rate of 5 per cent. Clearly that would provide that the bank should lend without collateral security upon those securities which have been mentioned as being suitable only for collateral securities, and I think that it is the part of prudence to hinder the directors of these banks from lending money generally to companies upon resolutions of their respective boards of directors.

Hon. Sir WILLIAM HINGSTON—In practice, the bank, in fact, never lends without a margin of at least 10 per cent, and I presume at the present moment the margin now held by the bank is upwards of 25 per cent. If the wealthiest man in this community were to want a thousand pounds from the institution he would have to deposit security to the extent of at least eleven hundred pounds. The margin is never less that 10 per cent, and with a weak man, 25 per cent. The result is, for several years, there has been no loss whatever.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—With the present directors and promoters of this Bill I am supposed to be most friendly. I have perfect confidence in the present directors. I have also a very substantial knowledge of the institution as it is conducted at present, but there is no telling what may occur in the future. While this may be satisfactory to the present directors, it does not follow that these gentlemen will at all times be directors of that bank, and I feel that it is our duty, as legislators here, to point out to the hon. gentleman who is promoting this Bill that, whilst we have implicit confidence in him, and in the present directors of that institution, our object is simply to provide for the management of that bank under future directors, and in my humble opinion it is not a good and sound reason to offer that, because it is difficult at present to make money in that institution, we should give them liberty to invest in what might be considered very doubtful collaterals. It would be better, I think, to point out that, in case the bank cannot make safe investments and transactions, a lesser amount of business should be transacted, until perhaps a better period arrives for the purpose of enabling banks and monetary institutions to realize those profits so anxiously looked after by banking institutions. As I said before, I have perfect confidence in the present directors, and officials of this institution. I believe that it is one of the most solvent institutions we have in Canada, but at the same time I trust that the directors and the promoters of the Bill will forgive us if we say that we are most anxious that it shall continue to be so and that no unfortunate turn of affairs will take place in the future in the management of this institution, so that we will never hold a different opinion than that which we hold to-day. I should like to see this Bill framed so that it would be impossible for any directors in the future to bring misfortune to the bank.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is no hon. gentleman in the Senate who is not imbued with the ideas expressed by my hon. friend who has just spoken, that we should have absolute security in these banks. This particular clause was fully considered, and to use a familiarism, threshed out for a long time by the department and the Deputy Minister of Finance, in whom I have great confidence in matters of this kind, having had a great many dealings with him in matters affecting banks, and loan societies; and when I am told that he, after mature deliberation, has come to the conclusion that this is a safe clause, and safe power to give to this institution, I should be inclined to accept it. I know he is exceedingly conservative in all matters affecting loan societies and banking institutions, and I think that the promoters had better accept the Bill as it is, and not jeopardize it by any amendments or delay.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Inasmuch as the hon. leader of the government and the hon. leader of the opposition are both against me, I think I had better withdraw my amendment.

The amendment was withdrawn and the clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

THE SENATE DEBATES.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER moved the adoption of the report of the Committee on Debates and Reporting. He said: I may perhaps give some explanation with reference to this report. I will take the last part of the report first—the portion relating to the engagement of Mr. Holmden. The arrangement with Mr. Holmden is exactly the same as last year, and there is no change. I do not think there is any necessity for giving any more explanation about that. With reference to the gratuity to the reporters, the report states what it is, and I may say that the committee, after going fully into that matter, have thought proper to give the reporters a gratuity of $600, on account of the length of the session.

The motion was agreed to.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION RESTRICTION BILL.

SECOND READING.

The Order of the Day being called:

Resuming the adjourned debate on the second reading (Bill 180) 'An Act respecting and restricting Chinese immigration.'—(Hon. Mr. Templeman.)

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—I have only a few words to add to what I have already said on the question now under consideration, the Bill further to restrict the immigration of Chinese. When the House adjourned yesterday, I was about to say—and I think I voice almost the unanimous sentiment of the people of British Columbia—that the Oriental races are a most objectionable class of people to encourage to come to this country. There is but one opinion in the west as to the undesirability of encouraging, and as to the desirability of placing restrictions upon, the immigration into this country of Asiatics. The reason for this is that the Asiatics are not, and will never become settlers, as we understand the term, in this country. No Chinese or Japanese come to British Columbia with a view of making their permanent residence in this country, of taking up land, and becoming ultimately citizens of Canada. They have but one object in view, and that is to reside here for a short term of years, and to acquire five hundred or a thousand dollars, which in China is a small fortune, and then to emigrate to China. That is the one and sole object the Chinamen have in coming to the Pacific coast. Hence it is impossible for them to become citizens. They do not attempt to become citizens. They bring with them their language and retain it almost until they depart from our country. There is nothing more noticeable to the easterner visiting Victoria or Vancouver for the first time than the utter inability of Chinamen who have been in British Columbia for many years, twenty years or more perhaps, to speak the English language. A Chinaman will learn sufficient of the English language to talk to the white man who employs him, and no more. I am speaking of the Chinese generally. There are, it is true, quite a number who speak fairly good English, but the average coolie Chinamen, the labourers, to which I will entirely refers, do not learn to speak the English language intelligibly. They stick tenaciously to their own language and to all their own customs. The Chinamen on the Pacific coast dress to-day as they do in China. They bring with them some of their good habits and all their bad habits, and perpetuate them, particularly the latter, in this country. They get together, and live in a small settlement in the city, which makes it more easy for them to perpetuate their customs and habits as they exist in China. The Chinese bring to this country, as I have said, all their vices. I am not going to enlarge upon that question. It is not at all necessary, but one conspicuous vice of the Chinese in British Columbia is gambling. There are few Chinamen who are not natural born gamblers. I have taken visitors through places in Chinatown where they have seen at least twenty gambling establishments in one night. I had the distinguished honour of taking the present Lieutenant-Governor of that province through some of the by-ways of Chinatown, in order that he might receive some education and some knowledge of the true life of Chinamen, and I think that I succeeded in about an hour's walk in convincing him that he would not stick to the Chinese, however much he might care to stick to Li Hung Chang. There is no doubt at all that the Chinaman is an undesirable citizen, for the reason that he will not become a permanent resident of the country.

The Chinaman will not assimilate with the white population. I ask any hon. gentleman present if he honestly and conscientiously thinks it advisable that he should do so. Is it advisable that the yellow people of Asia should intermarry with the people of this country? The fact is that they will not do so, that it is not desirable that they should, that they remain in a colony by themselves, that they retain all the customs and charactristctics they have brought to this country, that they retain their language and all their habits, and that they depart from the country after twenty or thirty years as the case may be. They will never become settlers, and are not farmers, but simply market gardeners, helpers of farmers here and there. They do not take up land and settle on it, and cultivate it. They are market gardeners, but they do not belong to that class of people whom we would bring to this country to settle in the west, like Doukhobors and Galicians, who come here with the sole object of making it their home for the balance of their lives, and who it is hoped will ultimately become full citizens of Canada, and assimilate with our own people. I think that nothing worse can happen to this country than that our parliament should encourage the importation of any foreign race of people that will not assimilate with the people of this country, and that is the first and greatest reason why it is wise and proper for this parliament to restrict the immigration into this country of any races of Asia. I am sorry that the exigencies of the situation did not permit the government to include in this legislation the Japanese. In British Columbia this question has been revived recently solely in consequence of the very large influx of Japanese into that province. We have had landed there in one month I think between two and three thousand Japanese—very much more than the country could absorb. I do not know where they have gone to. Possibly they have travelled southward. But while the Japanese are an infinitely better class of people and while our objections cannot be as strong to them because of their aptitude in learning our ways, dressing as we do, living, when they can afford it, as we do—a smart energetic people—nevertheless the Japanese in large numbers would be, while more desirable than the Chinese, very great competitors with the white labour of the coast. There is no use in mincing matters : the objections are, first, they do not become permanent citizens. We do not want them. They are taking the place of white people who would become permanent citizens, and, secondly, they keep out of the country white men and women, and demoralize labour and make it impossible for white men to work in that country at the prevailing rate of wages. These are the facts. The wish of the people of British Columbia that restriction should be placed upon them has been announced in scores of ways. The legislature of British Columbia has passed resolutions in favour of an increased tax. They have asked for the imposition of a tax of $500, and have asked also that the Japanese be subject to the same restriction. Almost every board of trade and labour organization has passed resolutions of that kind. Every politician in British Columbia is in favour of an increased tax. It is proposed to increase the present tax to one hundred dollars, and although it is much less than has been asked for and very many people in the west think it will have no effect at all, I am disposed to think that the one hundred dollars tax will have some effect in decreasing the number of Chinese immigrants. It is scarcely possible for a Chinese labourer coming to this country to pay one hundred dollars. I hope that the result of the investigation to be made by the commission which is to be appointed —and I trust it will be appointed, and get to work immediately—will be that the government next session will be prepared to consider the question of Japanese immigration into British Columbia. I think that none of us are prepared to say that the government should have gone so far, in face of the friendly feeling existing between the Japanese nation and our own country, and the declaration of opinion from Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, as to classify the Japanese with the Chinese and deal with them in the same manner. Possibly it might have led to very serious international complications, and the people of British Columbia are patriotic enough to admit that, and to accept this Bill as an instalment. We have been told that it is not a finality, and that after the commission reports, we may look forward to a still further restriction upon the immigration of Orientals into this country. I would have preferred, as I said before, that we could have included Japanese. We will take this as an instalment, and will rest satisfied for one year. As I said before, if the evidence of those called before that commission shows that it is desirable that the immigration of Japanese and Chinese should be still further restricted, I am prepared to come before this House next session and support a measure for that purpose, and I trust the government will be prepared to abide by the findings of that commission.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman has referred to a commission that is to be appointed, and from the remarks which he has made he seems to understand what their duties are. What is to be obtained by the appointment of a new commission to inquire into the subject of Chinise immigration, that we do not already know ? I should like to have some information on that point, a very important one. I could understand it if it were desired to ascertain the number of Chinese in British Columbia, but the census to be taken next year will give that information. What are to be the duties of this commission to be appointed ?

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—I am not in a position to answer the hon. gentleman's question. I take my information from the newspapers, and from what I have heard in the House of Commons, but I would assume that the scope of the commission is to collect information, not only as to the extent of the influx of Japanese and Chinese into the country, but as to the work in which they are engaged, as to the competition of these people with white labour, and the effect of it on the country. I would assume that that was the object. I presume the hon. gentleman thinks that the commission of 1885 has covered the ground.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have no doubt about it.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—That commission was composed almost entirely of gentlemen whose sympathies were with the Chinese. When they visited British Columbia, I do not think there was one Japanese in the country. To-day there are probably two thousand Japanese working as fishermen on the Fraser River. They have supplanted two thousand white men. The Chinamen are not fishermen in the sense of going on the river and working boats, but the Japanese are. The commission, I suppose, will investigate such matters.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—The subject of this Bill is one which I am quite sure a great many of my colleagues, as well as myself, have found extreme difficulty in coming to any satisfactory conclusion as to what course we should take with regard to it, either with regard to this Bill before the House, or similar Bills which have been before the Senate on previous occasions. Theoretically, it would seem to most of us, that the principle of this Bill is strongly opposed both to British practice, and the feeling that we desire to see our country free to all who choose to come here, and is altogether retrograde legislation. On the other hand, one cannot help feeling, in the face of the very strong representations which have been made from that part of the Dominion which is more particularly interested in this question, that it would be scarcely right to say that no such legislation should be passed, if we find any good ground can be urged for it. But the difficulty has been for any one like myself, not knowing very much about that part of the country, having been there only as a visitor, to know how far the representations which have been made from time to time are borne out by the facts. For my own part, I can speak more strongly, because I, at one time, in 1886, had the duty imposed on me, owing to the illness of the leader of the Senate, of taking charge of one or two government Bills, Chinese Immigration Bill amongst the rest. When the draft of the Bill was shown to me, it contained so many provisions that I strongly objected to, that I declined to take charge of it unless certain changes were made. These changes were assented to, and during the time the Bill was before this House other amendments were made in it, which I thought rendered it a less objectionable measure than it originally was; but I cannot say that I felt altogether satisfied with the Bill itself, or with the principle involved in it. Upon that occasion I remember that two senators from British Columbia, both of whom made very long speeches (and I give this as an illustration of the difficulty one has to make up his mind on this point) differed widely on the question. One of these, the senator from Victoria, who usually occupies the seat on my left, could not speak too strongly of the character of the Chinese for honesty, cleanliness, and fitness to discharge any duty they undertook. In every way he seemed to think it was an advantage to have, to some extent, an immigration of that kind into the country. The other senator from British Columbia could not find words strong enough to express his unfavourable opinions with regard to the Chinese. They were everything that was bad and objectionable in his view of the case. I was a little surprised some years after, when that gentleman (since dead) became the Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia, and I was on a visit to Victoria, on going to pay my respects to him, found that his household was composed entirely of Chinese servants. Still, as I have said, there is no doubt that a very large immigration of this foreign element might be injurious to the country in some ways; but it seems to me that, so far as I have been able to form any judgment on the matter, it is not so much from the objectionable character of these people as from the fact that they interfere, or were supposed to interfere with white labour that this legislation against them is sought to be obtained. My hon. friend from British Columbia (Hon. Mr. Templeman) used the expression of pushing white men out, and not only the men, but the women, from various employments. Now, I have always understood that it would have been almost impossible to have completed the Canadian Pacific Railway within the time in which it was completed, if it had not been for the Chinese labour which they were able to obtain on the west coast, and that from the actual want of sufficient white labourers. Then, again, as to pushing white labour out of the way, we have an increasing difficulty in our part of Ontario—and it is not confined to Ontario, for it extends in the same way, I understand, to other places in Canada—in securing domestic servants, and a member of the administration only last evening mentioned to me that in several cases in Montreal they have been extremely glad to secure Chinamen as domestic servants in their houses. If the state of things goes on that obtains at the present time in many parts of Canada, I think we shall be driven, in time, to have Chinese servants there too, so it seems they are not pushing others out of employment, but those whom we desire to get cannot be had, and it is fortunate to be able to fill up the gaps with some of these people. Not being a resident of British Columbia, and therefore not having the same means of obtaining as much information as one could desire on this subject, I desire to speak with caution, but it, nevertheless, seems to me tolerably apparent that it is the supposed interference of the Chinese with the interests of white labour, that is the real grievance, much more than the character of the Chinese themselves, and that it is on this ground that this legislation is now so strongly urged by so many in British Columbia. However, the government have brought in this Bill and I am not going to take the responsibility of voting against it, though certainly, if I have an opportunity, I shall vote against an increase in the poll tax, but I think we should have some explanation for the very decided change of opinion from those who took an opposite view of the question not many years ago, and amongst the rest my hon. friend the Secretary of State who has now introduced this Bill. In 1886, I find the Secretary of State expressed himself as most strongly opposed to legislation of this character. I do not want to quote anything but his exact words, so I shall read a few lines of what he said. I must confess at the time the words of the Secretary of State made a great impression on me, because he went as strongly as he could against the Bill, and the consequence was, in spite of all my efforts, the Bill was given the six months' hoist. Here is what the hon. gentleman said on that occasion :

> In common with others who have spoken on this subject, I feel that it is a very great reproach to the people of Canada that there should be on our statute-book an Act restricting Chinese immigration when we consider the history of China, in the last century, at all events, and the difficulties that were thrown in the way of the British people effecting an entrance into China and trading with the Chinese. When it became evident that China offered a rich harvest to British merchants, great attempts were made, year after year, to get the Chinese to open their country and trade with the western world. We all know the repugnance which they felt to dealing with other countries, but their objections were overcome by what may be called the Christianizing influences of shot and shell.

Then the hon. gentleman goes on to say :

> It is not creditable to this parliament that the 5,000,000 of the people of Canada are content to have this disgraceful Act placed upon the statute-books of the Dominion at the instance of 15,000 people, because I am told that the people of British Columbia are not unanimous in support of it. But suppose every white man in British Columbia were favourable to it. They do not number as many people as there are in Wellington Ward in this city, and we are, at the instance of as many people as could be put in one ward of this city, to impose such legislation on 5,000,000 people ? If a poll could be taken of the people of this country, I do not believe you could find, outside of British Columbia, one person in every thousand in favour of this legislation.

That is the language in which my hon. friend characterized the Bill restricting the admission of Chinese into this country in 1886 and he held the same views in 1887 when a second Chinese immigration Bill was introduced. I presume since then he has had reason to change his mind. I cannot say that I have. I still think that while it may be desirable to impose some restriction on this immigration, so that the country shall not be flooded at any one time by a large influx of these people, I should be sorry to see it carried to such an extent as is desired by the opponents of the Chinese—that is the total prohibition of Chinese immigration into this country. Therefore, I should vote against the increase of the poll-tax.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the Bill be referred to a Committee of the Whole House on Tuesday next.

Hon. Mr. ALMON—I had intended to move the six months' hoist to this Bill. I believe two-thirds of this body share my views on the subject, but the labour vote of British Columbia is too strong, and both Liberals and Conservatives are afraid to offend it. I leave it to them to settle the question with their own consciences.

The motion was agreed to.

CUSTOMS TARIFF, 1897, AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved the second reading of Bill (184) 'An Act to amend the Customs Tariff, 1897.' He said: I explained, when the Bill was read the first time, that the object of it is to carry out the preferential cut in favour of the British people to the extent of 33 per cent.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (156) 'An Act to amend the Civil Service Act.' He said: In 1895 an amendment was introduced to the Civil Service Act, which did away with third-class clerkships in the civil service. The effect of that was, in making new appointments you could not appoint any one to the civil service at a higher salary than $400 to begin with, and that was as a writer, unless you made the appointment of the applicant to a second-class clerkship, which involved a salary of $1,100, so this gap between $400 and $1,100 has been found to work very disadvantageously. For an accountant, or even an amanuensis, it would be scarcely sufficient salary to pay $400 a year, while $1,100 would be perhaps more than he ought to receive. It would seem that a sum between the two would be a fairer remuneration for an ordinary clerk on entering the public service, and the object of this Bill is, therefore, to make a new grade, junior second class, which is practically equivalent to the old third class, authorizing the commencing of the service at a salary of $600 a year. Provision, however, is made that in the case of graduates from the Military College, a salary of $800 may be allowed. Another clause, which is new, allows the messenger class to go up to $600, the maximum at present being $500, the increase to be by $30 a year. Any other details I shall be glad to explain and discuss when the Bill goes to committee. These, however, are its main features.

The motion was agreed to.

CHINESE AND JAPANESE IMMIGRATION.

PETITION FOR RESTRICTIVE LEGISLATION.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL presented the petition of Mayor Gardner and 801 other residents of British Columbia praying that the Senate will not reject the Bill now before it restricting Chinese immigration. He said: As this petition probably will not come under the notice of hon. gentlemen in any way I will read it. It is as follows:

The petition of the undersigned, being residents of the province of British Columbia, humbly showeth:

That various enactments of the province of British Columbia for the purpose of limiting or preventing the immigration of the Mongolian races into this province and the employment of them upon public and other works therein have been disallowed;

And that, whilst your petitioners in no way question the power of disallowance, they venture to believe that a fuller knowledge of the present condition of Mongolian immigration into this province and its effect upon our labouring class will seriously modify your views;

Whereas, be it known that between the 1st day of January, 1900, and the 30th day of April, 1900, inclusive, 4,669 Japanese landed in Victoria and Vancouver, and that during the same period 1,325 Chinese landed in Victoria, making a total of nearly 6,000 within the short space of four months, the result of which is that this province is flooded with an undesirable class of people, non-assimilative, and most detrimental to the wage-earning classes of our people, and also a menace to health;

That your petitioners are not unmindful of Imperial interests, and express feelings of the greatest loyalty to all Imperial interests, whilst respectfully calling attention to this serious inroad upon the welfare of the people of this province;

Wherefore, your petitioners humbly pray that Your Excellency may be pleased to sanction the passing of an Act inhibiting the immigration of the above mentioned class of people to Canada and your petitioners will ever pray.

I also present a petition from the city of Victoria to the same effect with 1,366 signatures.

THE DISMISSAL OF LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR McINNES.

MOTION.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL moved :

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid on the Table of the Senate copies of all correspondence which has taken place between the Premier, Secretary of State or any other member of the government and the Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia, having reference to the dismissal of Premiers Turner and Semlin by the said Lieutenant-Governor, and the calling upon Mr. Robert Beaven, Mr. Joseph Martin or any other person to form a cabinet; together with all reports, orders in council or other documents referring to the said dismissals and formation of such cabinets.

He said : I have been induced to place this notice of motion upon the Order paper, not for the purpose of championing the Lieutenant-Governor or siding with either party in the province of British Columbia upon the disputes which have taken place between the Lieutenant-Governor and his former ministers in the formation of the present government of British Columbia, or his dismissal from the position of Lieutenant-Governor by the Dominion government. I have placed the notice on the paper in order to obtain, if possible, the correspondence which has taken place between the Dominion government and the Lieutenant-Governor upon the question of his dismissals of ministers, and the formation of another ministry under Mr. Joseph Martin. I do so for the reason that the Lieutenant-Governor, in the manifesto which he has published to the world, has made some very serious charges against the Dominion government, the truth of which they alone must be the judges ; but in the interest of provincial governments, and of good government throughout the whole Dominion, and in order to ascertain how far a government which has laid down as a policy in the past, non-interference in provincial matters, have transgressed their own policy, and violated the declarations they made in the past upon this question. I find in the first manifesto, which was published, emanating from the pen of the Lieutenant-Governor, that, after referring to his official representations to the government at Ottawa, he says :

Sir Wilfrid Laurier did not see fit to lay those reports or any of them, before parliament, although asked by the British Columbia members to do so, and yet, although not a word that I had to say in my own defence was allowed to go before you, it was given out that you were the judges. Is this British justice? Is this British fair-play? A week after the elections a majority of the newly-elected members of the legislature passed a resolution in secret session at a party convention asking Sir Wilfrid Laurier to dismiss me, and Sir Wilfrid, although he had a few days before declared that the matter should be left to the legislature to decide, promptly obeyed that resolution, passed in secret session and at a party convention. I defy any member of the Dominion government or any one else to point to a single act of mine in connection with the dismissal of the Semlin and Turner governments and the formation of the Martin government, or up to the very day of my dismissal, that cannot be upheld and justified by precedents established by the Liberals themselves from the time of Pitt, the great Commoner, to the present time. Upon the defeat of the Semlin government, I was convinced that Mr. Martin was the man best fitted to assume control under the circumstances as they then existed. At the same time, I had been made fully aware that Mr. Martin was distasteful to Sir Wilfrid's government, and that if I considered my own interests and my own position merely, I should under no circumstances call upon him, and immediately upon the defeat of the Semlin government I was made fully aware also that the great corporations, whose metallic influence is apparently all-powerful at Ottawa, would do their utmost to have me politically assassinated if I should dare to call upon Mr. Martin. I refused to resign, although I had previously offered to do so on several occasions, for had I resigned under such circumstances it would have been construed as an admission that I was wrong, and Sir Wilfrid would have been relieved entirely from having to devise a justification for my dismissal. I may say also that I received instructions from the Secretary of State last August respecting the attitude which I should adopt in certain matters towards my ministers, but the Secretary of State saw fit to convey those instructions, which I obeyed implicitly, in the form of a letter marked 'confidential,' consequently I am not free to publish it, and yet, when I continued to follow these instructions in my attitude towards the Martin administration, the Secretary of State complained of my having done so, but again under cover of a letter marked 'strictly confidential.'

There the report as it appeared in the Toronto Globe, from which I have made this extract, ceases ; but when I refer to another journal, the Toronto World, I find that another sentence follows the word 'confidential.' Whether the Globe omitted that sentence designedly or by accident I am not prepared to say, but it materially affects the charge laid against the Secretary of State of having first given advice as to what he, the Lieutenant-Governor, should do, and when the Lieutenant-Governor did it, to be complained of by the same Secretary of State. The sentence which was omitted in the Globe after the word 'confidential,' is as follows :

I have not destroyed these letters, although I was told by the Secretary of State to do so. At some future time I may deal with the personal relations existing between the Ottawa government and myself.

There is also another omission in the Globe's report of the Lieutenant-Governor's manifesto. After informing the people of British Columbia of the services which he, the Lieutenant-Governor, had performed, he adds the following :

Since 1876, there has not been a day during that period that either threats of corporations or the chink of their coin moved me from what I considered to be my line of duty; and what I believed was in the interests of the people of British Columbia, rather than the interests of Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the Crow's Nest Pass coal magnates.

After giving reasons for refusing to resign he adds, 'Now the political assassination threatened, has taken place ;' and that at 'some future time he will deal with the personal relations existing between the members of the Ottawa government and himself.' What does this correspondence reveal ? For the sake of brevity I have epitomized the Lieutenant-Governor's statements and charges made against the Dominion government. They are :

1. That Sir Wilfrid Laurier declined to lay the Lieutenant-Governor's reports and despatches before parliament, though asked to do so by the British Columbia member of the House of Commons.

2. That the people of British Columbia were asked to be judges of his (the Lieutenant-Governor's) conduct without knowing the facts, the Premier of the Dominion having kept them from the people.

3. That after the elections in British Columbia, the newly-elected members met in convention, and demanded his (the Lieutenant-Governor's) dismissal.

4. That Sir Wilfrid Laurier promptly acted upon that request, though he (the Premier) had a few days before declared the matter should be left to the legislature.

5. That Martin was distasteful to Sir Wilfrid's government, and that if he (the Lieutenant-Governor) would consider his own interests, he would not call upon Martin to form a government.

6. That the Secretary of State for the Dominion wrote confidential letters to him (the Lieutenant-Governor) instructing him what to do with his ministers.

7. That he (the Lieutenant-Governor) carried out these instructions, and that the said Secretary of State censured him for doing so.

8. That the Secretary of State marked his letters confidential, and requested the Lieutenant-Governor to destroy them.

9. That he (the Lieutenant-Governor) was asked to resign, but refused, though he had previously offered to do so.

I observe that the hon. minister shakes his head. I am not vouching for the correctness of the statements. I am merely repeating what the Lieutenant-Governor says. It is a question of veracity between the Lieutenant-Governor and the government of which the hon. Minister of Justice and the hon. Secretary of State form a part, and no unimportant part either. Then the next reason, the tenth charge is as follows :

10. That the great corporations, whose metallic influence is apparently all-powerful at Ottawa, would do their utmost to have him (the Lieutenant-Governor) politically assassinated if he did not obey their behests.

11. That he resisted the metallic influences and threats of corporations and the chink of their coin, and acted in the interests of the people of British Columbia, 'rather than in the interests of Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the Crow's Nest Pass coal magnates.'

12. That in consequence of his refusal, the political assassination threatened took place.

These in brief are the charges which the decapitated Lieutenant-Governor lays at the door of the Premier and Secretary of State in his first manifesto. Since this publication by the Lieutenant-Governor he has written another letter, in reply to a requisition asking him to contest one of the electoral divisions of the city of Victoria in which he says:

For about ten months past the province has been in a condition of political unrest, and business interests, particularly in regard to mining industries, have been seriously affected in consequence. Over nine months ago I urged upon my then ministers the advisability of an immediate session, or an immediate general election, in order to end the political uncertainty then existing. The Ottawa government, however, by the wholly unwarranted exercise of its power, against which I protested, forbade me to interfere at the time at which my ministers saw fit to summon the legislature. At whose instigation, and in whose interests they saw fit to do this, I do not say, but it certainly was not in the interest of the people of this province. And when one whom they have chosen to treat as a political enemy was called upon, they expected me to adopt an altogether different attitude towards him. Had my hands not been tied by Ottawa instructions, the political turmoil of the last nine months would, in all probability, have been ended long ago.

These are the charges which the Lieutenant-Governor has made. Being a responsible officer in that province and having been chosen by the government of the day to fill a very important position, it is not unreasonable that the country should look for some information in reference to the statements which have been made and the action of the government towards him. We have been led to believe in the past that provincial autonomy was to be respected in every particular.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And that no interference on the part of the Dominion government should take place unless there was some gross violation of the constitution which imposed a responsibility upon the ministers at Ottawa to induce them to interfere. The question is whether this has been the case with Lieutenant-Governor McInnes or not. In the charges which he has made, and which are very clearly put, there are one or two points only to which I desire to call attention. The first point is in reference to the interference of the government of the Dominion with the Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia. Whether they were justified or not we will be better able to judge when the papers are laid before us. Another point is that it seems to be the practice of the present administration to produce just such documents as they think will answer their own purpose. In the correspondence which has been laid before parliament in the past in reference to the Hughes-Hutton difficulties, and also the dismissal of Lieutenant-Colonel White, we had letters and documents withheld on the ground of their being confidential; though the papers which were laid before parliament contained a number of private and confidential letters written by Col. Hughes, so that the public could see what complaints were contained in the private and confidential letters of Col. Hughes, while the defence of Major General Hutton was shrouded in mystery under the term 'confidential,' and the world has not yet been able to judge of the correctness of the position taken by the Minister of Militia and sustained by the government. I remember distinctly that when at the opening of this session I asked for the correspondence between the government of the Dominion and the government of Manitoba, after the last elections, in order that we might be able to judge what the terms were of what they declared to be a settlement of a very vexed question which had agitated this Dominion from one end to the other, we were informed by the hon. Secretary of State that there was no correspondence.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—So that we had a settlement, as they say, of a question which had agitated all classes of the community throughout the whole Dominion negotiated, brought to a termination, and, as they say, settled, without the slightest correspondence between them. I could understand, if the government desired to hide what they have done, why there was no correspondence, or that that correspondence was put out of the way so that we could not get it; but it is after the fashion of the Ontario government in their mode of disposing of ballots when they were burned, in order—I do not say in order—accidentally burned, of course, unintentionally no doubt—but there is one thing certain, an investigation was going on before judges and these ballots were necessary which would have formed a very important part of the case which was then being investigated, but they were unfortunately burned, and they could not be obtained, hence the evidence could not be procured. Now, in the present case, it appears from this statement, published in the World, that the hon. Secretary of State wrote letters giving directions to the Lieutenant-Governor as to what he should do and what he should not do with his ministers, but they were marked 'confidential.' I am not justifying the Lieutenant-Governor in referring to letters which were confidential, but he has referred to them, and from what he says I have no doubt, he will follow the example of the ministers themselves ere many weeks go round, and publish these private and confidential letters in order that we may know what has taken place. Then it appears, after he had written those letters, and the Lieutenant-Governor had acted strictly in accordance with the instructions and advice given to him by the Secretary of State, he writes the Lieutenant-Governor complaining bitterly of what he had done. In other words, he complains of the Lieutenant-Governor having carried out the instructions which he, as Secretary of State, had written,—we are to presume had written to him after consulting his colleagues. Another confidential letter of the same character was written, and that letter wound up with 'destroy those letters.' That is doing exactly what the clerks of the Ontario government did with the ballots in the case I have mentioned, to get rid of them. The hon. Secretary of State, should thank me for bringing this matter before the House. He may not concur in the deductions I have drawn from the statements made, but in justice to himself, occupying the very prominent position he does, it should be brought before parliament, in order that he can acknowledge or deny the statement of the Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia, and place himself right before the people of the country. Were I occupying his position, I should be very glad to have charges of this kind brought to my notice, and I should be prepared then either to defend them or, shall I say, apologize for what I have done—I do not think I would do that, because under the circumstances I should not do anything that required an apology; but the hon. gentleman is in a position now, having the facts brought before him as succinctly and clearly as I could well do it, to let the world know whether Lieutenant-Governor McInnes has told falsehoods or whether the hon. Secretary of State is guilty of having done that with which the Lieutenant-Governor charges him. I am not prepared to expect that these confidential letters will be brought down by the government. If I am to judge on their past conduct with reference to confidential letters which they refused to bring down——

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am stating facts. I am stating what has taken place in this House. I am only reading what has taken place in the other House, and dealing with the facts as they are to-day upon record, giving no opinion of my own with reference to the truth of any of the statements; but having brought them before the hon. Secretary of State, I hope he will bring down his confidential letters in order that we can judge of the character of the instructions which he gave to the Lieutenant-Governor. They will be, perhaps, a caution to future Secretaries of State, or they may be of great benefit to those who may occupy, in the future, the position he fills to-day, as lessons to them how to act towards lieutenant-governors. Having made this motion, I shall look forward with some degree of interest to the return to be brought down. We may not be able to deal with it this year, but when we get it, if we ever do get it, we can deal with it in the manner it deserves.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There will be no objection to bringing down the return for which the leader of the opposition asks. I do not think it is very good taste in him, in moving for this return, to give publicity to statements which, at best, he must have known where very questionable, and to have given the substance and character of his own position to statements made by the ex-Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia. Mr. McInnes was a personal friend of my own when he was in this Chamber, and I took some interest in him after he became Lieutenant-Governor, and I did write him private and confidential letters—not as Secretary of State, or after conference with my colleagues, or as representing the government at all, but simply private letters in which I expressed my own views of the policy that he was adopting towards his advisers. Now, that the Lieutenant-Governor has referred to and quoted paragraphs from some of my letters, it is idle to say that they should be any longer confidential. I am perfectly prepared that all my private correspondence with the Lieutenant-Governor should go forth to the world, now that he has taken the step that he has, which I think was extremely improper, because my letters in no way instructed him—I was not authorized to convey instructions that way. When instructions were given, they were given officially. When I wrote private letters to him, anxious as I was to save him from making the exhibition he has made of himself, it was only natural I should mark my letters 'private and confidential,' because I was not acting as mouthpiece of the government. He has, however, referred to them publicly, and I shall therefore ask him to remove the veil of secrecy from them and allow them to be published. They are not very important; they are not very numerous either. They are simply hints from time to time that I thought he was taking a foolish course in reference to the mode of dealing with his advisers. I might say that my advice to him was, on general lines, to leave himself more largely to the legislature and to the views and opinions of the people of British Columbia as expressed through the legislature. The hon. gentleman has referred, in the first instance, in his charges made against the government, to a refusal to lay papers on the Table, I have not heard that any such demand was made of the Premier.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What papers ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The charge to which the hon. gentleman drew the attention of the Senate was one in which he alleged that British Columbia members had asked that certain papers should be laid on the Table.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I made no charge. I repeated charges made by the Lieutenant-Governor; I did not make charges.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I understood the hon. gentleman to say the letters were called for at the instance of members from British Columbia and the Prime Minister refused.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The British Columbia Governor said Sir Wilfrid Laurier had refused to lay the despatches on the Table, although they had been asked for in the House of Commons, and it is true that Mr. Prior moved for the papers in the House of Commons. I am not prepared to say whether they were refused or not.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Does the hon. gentleman refer to a motion for papers this session ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It did not come to my hands.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman has not watched the proceedings as closely as I have.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—An order would come to me certainly.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—My recollection is the Premier refused to bring them down on the ground that negotiations were going on.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It was probably before any action had been taken—before it was known what would happen, and it has always been recognized as highly improper to bring down papers during the progress of correspondence. Invariably the practice is to wait until the correspondence has terminated.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Then it ought not to have been made a charge.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is for you to deal with.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman made a charge against the government that they had kept back the correspondence.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If you put it that way, I have no objection to assume the responsibility.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The motion could not have been properly made and the hon. gentleman must have withdrawn it, seeing it was highly improper to move it while the correspondence was going on. The hon. gentleman has gone out of his way to show that, during the settlement of the Manitoba school question, the correspondence was not brought down. The hon. gentleman knows there was no correspondence. When the hon. gentleman's government, which preceded this government, sent commissioners to Winnipeg to negotiate a settlement, they had no correspondence to submit ; they went there personally.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Everything was laid before parliament.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—When the papers were complete they were laid before parliament. In the same way, when a committee of this government and the committee of the government of Manitoba met together, and went over the papers, they were laid before parliament as soon as the result was reached.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There were no papers at all, we were told, in the last case.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There was a settlement arrived at. There was a settlement made.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—There was no settlement.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman may question that, but he knows very well that the conclusions of that committee were laid on the Table and published all over the country. I do not feel at liberty to go into the matter in the detailed manner in which my hon. friend opposite has gone into it, because I feel that I must first have the seal of secrecy removed from this correspondence. I shall wire Mr. McInnes and remind him that he himself has made public parts of the correspondence, and, therefore, it is only proper and right that the public should know all our private correspondence, and they will be able to judge whether I gave any instructions in the form of private letters, or whether my suggestions were only those of a friend writing to a friend, and they will be also able to judge whether, if Mr. McInnes had taken my advice, he would be still Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have no complaint to make of the answer given by the Secretary of State further than this: He ventured the opinion that it was bad taste and very improper for me to bring this matter before parliament and give publicity to those charges. Upon that point I must beg to differ from him. I considered it of sufficient importance to bring before parliament in order that the facts might be laid before the country for future reference and for our future guidance. If the charges made by the Lieutenant-Governor be true, then the conduct of those with whom he was negotiating was not what it should be, without using any stronger language. The hon. gentleman rather mis-stated the reference which I made to the Manitoba school question correspondence. What I asked for at the beginning of the session was that that correspondence should be laid before parliament. The answer I received, was there was no correspondence.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—So I could not have complained of the correpondence not being laid before parliament. What the hon. gentleman refers to as having been laid before parliament is that which is contained in the statutes of Manitoba—suggestions as to what changes were to be made in the school law in order to meet, as they contended, the demands of those who thought they had been wronged. That is all that has been laid before parliament. Anybody can read that. It is in the statutes.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am not going into a discussion on the motion of the hon. gentleman. It is not usual, on motions for papers, to have a discussion upon the motion. It is usual to have that discussion after the papers are brought down.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend has discussed a correspondence which is private and confidential, and that correspondence ought to be before parliament if it is to be discussed, so that every hon. member of the House will have an opportunity of seeing it. Then my hon. friend has, in support of his motion, pointed out that ballots were burned, not by this government or by the local government, but by certain officers in Toronto, whose duty it is to destroy those ballots periodically, and I suppose the time had arrived for the destruction of those ballots.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, it had not. Better not discuss that.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—At all events, the commission who were appointed consisting of judges, some of whom were not friends of the provincial government, exonerated the officers for what had transpired.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, they did not.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I say the contrary.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Well, leave it there.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Let me say this, further: I am unable to see, since the hon. gentleman thinks it his duty to deliver a caudle lecture to the House on the administration, what the destruction of ballots by an officer in the legislature of Ontario, or in the employ of the legislature of Ontario, has to do with the question which he has raised in reference to the dismissal of the Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia. The hon. gentleman referred to the Hutton correspondence, and complained that certain letters which were brought down ought not to have been brought down, and certain other letters were withheld, on the ground that they were confidential, that ought, under the circumstances, to have been laid before the House. I do not know what that has to do with the motion now before us. It seems to me that the hon. gentleman is very much more anxious to say something that he thinks is detrimental and unfair to the administration than he is to get additional light upon this question. I can well understand the hon. gentleman expressing his disapproval of what the government have done with reference to Mr. McInnes, but, seeing what Governor Robitaille did with his adminstration that he found in office when he was appointed, I can understand how the hon. gentleman would be disposed to sympathize with Mr. McInnes, but when the correspondence is brought down, to which the hon. gentleman referred, and the conduct of Lieutenant-Governor McInnes is discussed from the standpoint of English parliamentary government, it will be found it will not bear investigation. I am not going into a discussion on it at this moment. A more fitting opportunity will arise when the papers for which the hon. gentleman has moved are before the House. Then the hon. gentleman attacked the administration because, on a motion made by Mr. Prior, before the government had taken action in respect to Governor McInnes, certain correspondence that Mr. Prior, in the other House, had asked for was not brought down.

It is not usual, it is not parliamentary, and it would be contrary to the rules and practice of parliament, where correspondence was incomplete dealing with a subject that has not been finally disposed of, to lay that correspondence before parliament. That is a well recognized rule, uniformly acted upon in the Imperial parliament in both Houses, and it is a proper rule to follow here. The governor has been dismissed. He refused to resign. My hon. friend also has referred to the fact that Governor McInnes had over and over again offered to resign, but he was not willing to resign when he was asked to do so. I do not know a single instance in which Governor McInnes offered to resign his position. I know instances in which he offered to abandon the position which he then held if given another position which he thought, perhaps, more important. But to retire from office, to resign his present position unconditionally, I know of no such instance, nor do I think that any member of the government knows an instance of Governor McInnes having offered to resign. I need not say any more on the subject at the present time. If my hon. friend succeeds in having brought down the private letters which were written to the governor in the interests of Lieutenant-Governor McInnes, advising him to adhere to constitutional rules and not to undertake to adopt a course which he contemplated, it will be seen that my hon. friend gave him good advice, and it would have been fortunate for him if he had acted upon that advice which the Secretary of State gave him, not as Secretary of State but as a personal friend. When that correspondence is before the House, my hon. friend will have an opportunity of making a motion which will furnish a fitting opportunity for a discussion of the whole question.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have the same complaint to make in regard to the reply of my hon. friend as I have made to his former replies. He puts language in the mouths of those to whom he is replying which they never uttered, and attributes to them statements which they never made. For instance, the hon. gentleman insinuates that I sympathize with Mr. McInnes. There is nothing in my remarks to show that. There is nothing to show that I wish to apologize for Mr. McInnes. The Senate knows that I complimented the government on dismissing him some days ago. The hon. gentleman says that I made charges. I made no charges. I simply called attention to the charges which the Lieutenant-Governor had made and asked if they were true. I did not father them. I said I was not in sympathy with the Lieutenant-Governor, nor was I there to apologize for his conduct, but I simply wanted to call the attention of the Senate and the country to what had taken place and what he had stated, and to ask whether the statements were true. The hon. gentleman went on to give us a history of the burning of the ballots. I am not going to argue that question. I instanced that to show the manner in which the party to which the hon. gentleman belongs gets rid of evidence. The Secretary of State was determined that no evidence should exist as to the course which he pursued, because he asked the Lieutenant-Governor to destroy them. That was the only reference which I made to them. The judges did not exonerate any of them. They simply stated the facts in their reports—that the witnesses had sworn that the ballots were destroyed by error, and the judges so reported. That was the position they took. If my recollection serves me right, they did not exonerate any one. They simply stated the fact. They were bound to take the affidavits of these people. That is the only point on which I have to complain of the language of my hon. friend, and more than that, the hon. gentleman knows, from his long parliamentary experience, that it is rulable in the House of Commons and in this House that when you make a motion you can give your reasons for making the motion. It is always done. If we could only discuss these questions when the papers came down they never would be discussed, because for two or three years we have asked for papers and they have never been laid before parliament. I do not anticipate that this return will be furnished this session, and by next session other matters may develop which may justify what the hon. Secretary of State did. But that is a matter between their old friend, the late Lieutenant-Governor, and themselves which I leave them to settle.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—A remark fell from the hon. Minister of Justice in regard to this matter which seems to me somewhat inconsistent with the claims he and the hon. Secretary of State have made in regard to the correspondence being strictly private and confidential or, rather, personal as between one friend and another, the Secretary of State on the one hand and the late Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia on the other. The statement which he made was that when the letters were brought down it would be found that they were of such and such a complexion. Does not that argue a knowledge, on the part of the Minister of Justice, of the contents of these letters? And perhaps after all they were not so much the production of a private individual as of the government.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I saw them to-day for the first time. I went to my hon. friend's office to inquire about them, after seeing the Lieutenant-Governor's letter.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—It struck me, under the circumstances, as being rather peculiar that the Minister of Justice should have made that remark.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is quite evident the Secretary of State kept copies of what he wrote, while he wanted the Lieutenant-Governor to destroy the originals, so that he alone would have the criminating evidence in his own possession.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL.

YARMOUTH STEAMSHIP'S CO.'S BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (185) 'An Act to authorize the sale of the Yarmouth Steamship Company's property to the Dominion Atlantic Railway Company.'

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. LOVITT—This Bill is sought for by these two companies. They have been competing with each other for some time, and for the last few months both companys' steamers would leave on the same day and sometimes the same hour, and things were not in a very satisfactory shape. They have now come together and made an agreement whereby the Yarmouth Steamship Company have sold their property to the Dominion Atlantic Railway Company. It is a matter of some urgency, and the House of Commons suspended all rules in order to pass the Bill. I therefore move that all the rules and orders be suspended in relation to this Bill.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not propose to object to the motion, but I think it is couched in too general terms. I understand that important interests are at stake and it is necessary that no time should be lost, but the language is too general. The motion should ask for the suspension of the rules which hinder the immediate consideration of the Bill. Under the language of this resolution we might suspend the rule that a majority govern, and that is not the intention.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—The only rule that it is necessary to suspend is the rule which compels the company to give notice. There has been no notice or petition.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—Why cannot the hon. gentleman specify the rules he desires suspended?

Hon. Mr. McKAY—There will be no delay if those rules regarding notice are suspended.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The motion should state that those rules which delay its progress through the House should be suspended.

Hon. Mr. LOVITT—I move that the Bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Standing Orders in accordance with the fifty-ninth rule of this House.

The motion was agreed to.

A SUPPLY BILL.

FIRST, SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (188) 'An Act granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the public service for the financial year ending the 30th June, 1900.'

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved the suspension of the rules so far as they related to this Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Will the hon. gentleman inform the House what this balance is? I think this is the fourth Supply Bill we have had for expenditures incurred, not provided for in the estimates for the year ending 30th of June last.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—This is the expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Will the hon. gentleman inform us what the total expenditure has been on the Intercolonial Railway and different extensions?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I cannot tell the hon. gentleman at this moment, but the sum asked for in this Bill is $900,000. The expenditure has been considerable. A great deal of the track has been relaid. A large number of locomotives and cars have been built, or purchased, and the equipment of the road has been very largely increased. This has been found necessary in the public interest, in order that the railway might discharge the work that practically comes to it. The statement made by the hon. Minister of Railways is, that notwithstanding the very large expenditure upon the road, the income has been in excess of the expenditure—in fact very much larger than it has ever been before, and if I remember rightly, during the year that has just closed something over $100,000, in excess of the total expenditure upon the road.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is the revenue. If you accept the accounts as they are kept by the Railway Department at the present day, they show a surplus, and as the hon. gentleman has referred to the statement made by the Minister of Railways and Canals, it may not be out of place to refer to the answer which was given to him. This matter may come up hereafter when the general estimates are before us, but the charge made and proved by the reports for years and years past was, that that surplus which they claim is arrived at by charging large sums to capital that were formerly charged to income, and if he had continued that policy, he might just as well have shown half a million of dollars or a million of a surplus as the sum he mentions. I think, however, when the whole question is investigated it will be shown that the extension has been a very unprofitable thing for the country.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—I am glad to observe, from the remarks of the Minister of Justice, that there is to be a pretty large additional appropriation for rolling stock, and embraced in the rolling stock, I presume, will be freight cars. If that is so, one of the great difficulties, in my estimation, in the way of the detention of cars at the different railway stations, mentioned on previous occasions, will be obviated.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second and third times and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (93) 'An Act to confer on the Commissioner of Patents certain powers for the relief of the Surface Railroad Tieplate Company of Canada (Limited)'.—(Hon. Mr. McKay.)

Bill (176) 'An Act to incorporate the South Shore Line Railway Company of Canada (Limited)'.—(Hon Mr. McKay.)

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (124) 'An Act to incorporate the Lake Superior and Hudson's Bay Railway Company.'—(Hon. Mr. Watson.)

Bill (94) 'An Act respecting the Schomberg and Aurora Railway Company.'—(Hon. Mr. Perley.)

THE CHINESE IMMIGRATION RESTRICTION BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resumed in Committee of the Whole in consideration of Bill (180) 'An Act respecting and restricting Chinese immigration.'

(In the Committee.)

On the third clause,

Hon. Mr. POWER—Paragraph a is as follows :—

4. In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires,—

(a.) The expression 'Chief Comptroller' means the chief officer who is charged, under the direction of the minister to whom is assigned the administration of this Act, with the duty of carrying the provisions of this Act into effect and who shall have authority over officers of customs and others appointed for the purpose or charged with the duty of assisting in carrying out the provisions of this Act.

That is a new provision, and I assume it is intended to give some officer in the Customs Department charge of this business, but the chief comptroller is a new officer.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know that it is proposed to make any change. Mr. Parmalee, the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce, has been in charge of this, and I am not aware that it is intended to change his position. I have heard nothing about a change.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is not a change in practice ; it is a change in the law. When the law was passed, a discussion took place in the government as to which department the carrying out of the law should be given to, and it was placed under the management and control of the Minister of Customs, instead of appointing a special officer as comptroller, as provided for in the old Act, and continued in this Bill. The Deputy Minister of Customs was appointed to be comptroller with a slight increase to his salary for the management of this business, thereby doing away with the necessity of appointing a special officer for that purpose. The Act was enforced through the collectors of customs at Vancouver, Victoria and other points where it was found necessary to do so under the management of any one. It was placed in the hands of the collectors of customs, without any increase of salary, so that the carrying out of the provisions of this Act was under the Customs Department for a great number of years without any extra expense to the government other than the $400, which was given to the comptroller in Ottawa. Two or three years before I left office, the comptroller recommended that the collectors at Victoria and Vancouver, who had the whole business to transact and collect from $75,000 to $150,000 a year, should receive remuneration for what they were doing, and that is the only expense attending it. It is only making the law what has been heretofore the practice.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce has control of it now.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—When the commissioner of customs, Mr. Parmalee, was moved to the position of Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce under myself, he carried with him, by order in council, the duty of carrying out the provisions of this Act. I have noticed, and I regret to see it, in the debates in the other House, on the part of some Manitoba members a demand upon the government to remove Mr. Parmalee from his position. I hope that they will never accede to a request of that kind. Mr. Parmalee was appointed to a position in the customs by Mr. Huntington, and I hesitate not to say that, for fourteen or fifteen years while I was associated with that gentleman, I do not believe there was a man in the whole public service who performed his duty with greater ability or was more conscientious in the discharge of his duties. He is not politically in accord with me. He has strong views politically, but in all my experience with him he has laid down the principle that the law on the statute-book was his guide and he carried it out most faithfully. I take this opportunity of saying that much, from my long experience of Mr. Parmalee. I should not have deemed it necessary to do so had it not been for the attacks made upon him, because he is not so anti-Chinese as some hon. gentlemen are. I take the liberty of making this explanation because I have had a good deal to do with the carrying out of this law.

The subclause was adopted.

On subclause d,

(a.) The expression 'Chinese immigrant' means any person of Chinese origin (including any person either of whose parents was of Chinese origin) entering Canada and not entitled to the privilege of exemption provided for by section 6 of this Act ;

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I hope the hon. gentleman who has the Bill in charge will deem it his duty to strike out these words 'including any person either of whose parents was of Chinese origin.'

If you refer to subsection 4 of clause 6, you will find it is as follows :—

4. Any woman of Chinese origin who is the wife of a person who is not of Chinese origin shall for the purpose of this Act be deemed to be of the same nationality as her husband.

Here you declare by law that the wife of a person who is not of Chinese origin shall be of the same nationality as her husband, and thereby exempt from taxation, but, strange to say, while you make the mother of the children of the same nationality as the husband, you make the children foreigners and compel them to pay the tax. We had a great deal of experience and trouble in connection with this very point. A missionary, a Scotch Presbyterian, married a Chinese woman, and came to this country with his wife and five children. We had to impose the tax of fifty dollars upon the wife and each of the five children. Under this Bill, if it becomes law, you nationalize the wife, but leave the children aliens. Surely that is not intended. Either the wife should remain Mongolian and pay the tax with the children, or the children should be of the nationality of the father.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I called attention to this matter when the Bill was at its second reading ; and I hope the government will take action as indicated by the hon. leader of the opposition. The simplest way to do so would be to amend the paragraph now before the committee, making it read this way : 'including any person whose father was of Chinese origin.'

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You would have this difficulty arising : Supposing illegitimate children were brought in—it is just as well to discuss this question, because such difficulties arise with the collectors—my experience has taught me that you cannot, in imposing a tax, be too plain, explicit and simple in your wording. Otherwise, you will have all kinds of interpretations.

Hon. Mr. PRIMROSE—It seems to me it would be clearer to nationalize the children under clause 4.

The clause was allowed to stand.

On subsection e,

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think there is an omission in this clause. The clause undertakes to state what the Governor in Council may do. One of the most important functions of the Governor in Council under this Bill is to make regulations generally for the effectual carrying out of the Act, and the Governor General is not given any power to do that, and there is no reference to the regulations which are to be made. In a subsequent part of the Bill there is some reference to regulations, but it does not say by whom they may be made. They may be made by the Minister of Customs, and they may be made by the Governor in Council, and I think, considering the important character of this legislation, that it should be stated in this clause that the Governor in Council shall have power to make regulations for the purpose of effectually carrying out this Act.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think the suggestion is a good one. In the past the regulations have been made by the minister under whose charge it was, but it was generally submitted to the Governor in Council for approval before putting it in force.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It may not be absolutely necessary, but I think it is desirable.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—In that case it simply means that the Minister of Trade and Commerce would make a report to council suggesting what the regulations would be and they would be adopted instead of having the power to do it himself.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I may direct the attention of the committee to the third subclause of clause 12 :

3. The Governor in Council may make such regulations as are necessary to prohibit the entry into Canada of any greater number of persons from any foreign country than the laws of such country permit to emigrate to Canada.

So that the Governor in Council does make some regulations, and it would be better that he should be empowered to make more.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is a new feature altogether, but I think the Governor in Council always had power to make regulations under the statute. It is a detail ; it is not necessary to state it in the Act. They have general powers. Unless it is some specific power it is not necessary to mention it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think it is well to remove the doubt.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not think that the Governor in Council has general powers not given in the Acts. Look at the Fisheries Act and the Customs Act and any other Act which requires special arrangements for carrying out the law. The power is specially given to the Governor in Council to make the provisions, and then they become law. It is not well to follow the principle laid down by the Secretary of State some time ago that they would break the law when it suited their purpose when they assumed it to be in the interests of the people. I question whether they have the power to do that. The hon. gentleman will remember my reference is to the coasting laws.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is perfectly defensible, and I can point out where my hon. friend broke the law and it was defensible.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not know that the tu quoque argument is any answer.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Practical men will always find a way of getting over a difficulty when they meet it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I say the doctrine laid down by the hon. Secretary of State is not defensible, and there was no reason for breaking the law on that occasion, because in breaking the law they simply gave advantage to one or two Yankee steamers, and injured the trade of all the Canadian shippers.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman from Halifax might be added as subclause f, as follows :—

The Governor in Council may make regulations for the carrying out of this Act.

I suppose there is no objection to that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No.

The clause was adopted with the amendment.

On clause 6,

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This clause provides for the tax of one hundred dollars on Chinese immigrants.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The clause says :

Every person of Chinese origin irrespective of allegiance.

That is something new. Supposing a Chinese family, man and wife, moved to England and lived there for ten years and raised children, those children could not come to Canada without paying the capitation tax.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is the present law. In the Chinese Immigration Act the language is unrestricted ; 'Every person of Chinese origin' I do not think these words 'irrespective of allegiance' alter the meaning of the clause.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What is the intention ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is to make it clear that it applies to Chinese who are British subjects as well as to others.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—This clause proposes to raise the tax from fifty to one hundred dollars. I am opposed to that increased tax, as I consider the tax of fifty dollars is quite sufficient, and I move that it be left at fifty dollars.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I hope the committee will not make this change. It is a matter of policy, and if the policy is a mistaken one and does not meet with the approval of the people, the government of the day are responsible, and the government of the day who are responsible for financial measures and the House which has to deal with finances altogether, have inserted this larger tax and I do not think it would be good policy on the part of the Senate to interfere with it ; and the present time is not well chosen for undertaking anything to facilitate the entrance of Chinese into this country. A time when the empire is at war with China, and when the government—if there can be said to be a government—in China are showing the utmost disregard for the rules which govern civilized nations, is not a time when we should do anything to facilitate the entry of these people into Canada.

Hon. Mr. COCHRANE—Quite right.

Hon. Mr. BOLDUC—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. GOWAN—I am sorry to differ from my hon. friend who has moved this amendment. There is no argument in favour of it, except the general argument, to the effect that any tax at all was oppressive in its character, and violated the principles of British liberty, and was contrary to British institutions. It must be admitted that a community may well exercise the right of self protection. It is exercised in other countries. My hon. friends who are opposed to this measure altogether will see that this right is exercised in very many cases. For example, the quarantine regulations are enforced very strictly. The rules with regard to domestic laws, and the rules with regard to the temperance question, certainly violate the rights of individuals to a certain extent. I think that the danger is in large immigration of the Chinese race in Canada. There is danger from the moral aspect, and also from a sanitary aspect. Some hon. gentlemen who have had experience with the Chinese speak very favourably of them, and I do not know that any serious objection has ever been urged against a few coming into a community, but when they immigrate in large numbers, a danger arises. They herd together, and live in a most unsanitary condition, and wherever they are in large numbers I believe it is a hot bed of danger to health and a hot bed of crime. We have certainly the evidence of the hon. gentleman from British Columbia (Hon. Mr. Templeman) who spoke when the Bill was up before us, of the habits of the Chinese, and we have the evidence of the whole province of British Columbia that they feel it a great danger that the immigration of the Chinese should be encouraged. I have it from a reliable source that the Chinese have been immigrating to Victoria for some twenty-five or thirty years, and there are three or four thousand Chinese now in the city of Victoria. I have heard also from a reliable source that out of that large number of Chinese there is not one in a hundred that has a home or gives any indication of becoming a settler of the country. We know that the home and family are of the essence of decent society, and we ought to discourage the immigration of a class of people who will not make a home amongst us, and are a danger to the community. It has been found in private families to be a necessity to employ Chinese servants, but the heads of the family are most particular to keep the younger members of the family away from the servants because they fear—and experience has shown them there is good reason to fear—that they will pollute the young mind with bad ideas. A community has a right to protect itself, and I must say that I think much is due to the united expression of the people of British Columbia. It is not one section of the country, but the whole country, en masse, are against it, and it is the only place in Canada where we have reliable information in regard to them. Those people give valuable testimony because they possess knowledge of the Chinese who immigrated to British Columbia. They give us an idea of what would be the danger of having a number of them in the country. We in this part of the country speak from our experience of the Chinese in places where there are only three or four of them, but it is a different state of things in British Columbia and I do think we owe much to the people there, and ought to meet their wishes so strongly and so very fully expressed.

I cannot say that, from the mere labour standpoint, my sympathy is with this legislation. There is a good deal to be said on both sides with regard to that, but on the sanitary question and the question of morals, I am thoroughly in accord with what I believe to be the public sentiment of British Columbia, and I should be prepared to support even a larger tax than $100. It must be recollected that a great deal of expense is incurred in policing those people and seeing, when they get together, that they live in a clean state, and are not an ever-present danger to the health of the community, and to see that the practices that they are so fond of—their gambling, their opium smoking, and so on—are not made schools to pollute our young people. I believe a tax of $200 would not be too much, but the government, after consideration come down—and with them is the responsibility—and say we think that $100 will be sufficient to prevent a heavy immigration into the country, and may be sufficient to meet the necessary expense to watch them and to protect the community. I should be prepared to vote for $200 if it was inserted in the Bill, and I shall certainly vote for the Bill as it stands, imposing a tax of $100.

Hon. Mr. GILLMOR—I am opposed to the principle of a poll-tax on Chinamen coming into Canada, and I should just as soon have it $100 as $50 if there is to be any tax at all. I am opposed to the whole Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman from Barrie ought to have gone a little further: if the will of the people of British Columbia is to be carried out the tax ought to be $500. The government is not carrying out the pledge of the Premier in not making it much higher than it is. However, if it suits the only representative here to-day from British Columbia, we have no reason to find fault.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—What is your own opinion?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I was responsible, as Minister of Customs, for placing the first anti-Chinese Bill on the statute-book. That ought to be a sufficient answer to the question.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—What is your opinion as to the increase?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am not governing the country just now. If I were and made a pledge, I should try to carry it out. I find that the Premier, in reply to Mr. McLagan—I believe he was a rival of the hon. gentleman opposite——

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—No.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It has no relevancy to the matter before the House.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—During the election of 1896, Mr. McLagan wired the present Premier of this country, then the leader of the opposition, to know what his views were on this question of immigration of Chinese, and this is the answer to the inquiry:

Chinese immigration restriction not a question in the east.
View of the Liberals in the west will prevai with me.

What are the views of the Liberals in the west? If they are represented by my hon. friend here, the tax should be $500, and consequently the leader of the government is not carrying out the views of the Liberals in British Columbia. Following the argument of my hon. friend from Barrie, the tax should be $500 instead of $100, that is if it is to carry out the promise made by the Premier, in 1896.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—We expect to get more next session.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am afraid my hon. friend will find that 'hope tells a flattering tale'—however, I am not going to discuss that question now. I hold somewhat the same views that the hon. gentleman from Barrie does, and I shall feel constrained, under the circumstances to vote against the amendment.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend assumes—I do not think his assumption is warranted by the facts—that a tax of $500 was promised by the Prime Minister. Now, I do not think that follows at all. There are some people in British Columbia who would object to a tax of $500. I have met people on the coast, and I daresay my hon. friend has met them also, who are opposed to the tax altogether.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Quite true.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—So it cannot be said that when the Prime Minister promised to meet the wishes of the Liberals in British Columbia that he has not done so by doubling the tax on the Chinese.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That depends on what are the views of the Liberals in British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I hesitate not to say that the views of the vast majority of the Liberals in British Columbia, and in fact of both parties, are that there should be complete exclusion of the Chinese, and not only the Chinese, but the Japanese also.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There is a difference of opinion.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not think my hon. friend from British Columbia will deny my statement.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I believe the resources of British Columbia, and of the Dominion generally, would not have been so well developed as they are at the present moment if it had not been for the Chinese in the Dominion. They assisted greatly in the construction of the Pacific Railway and many other public works in Canada, and it is treating them rather cavalierly to impose a tax on them which we do not impose on others. In British Columbia, it is not the Chinese alone that the labouring classes object to. I see in the papers published in that province that they are equally opposed to the immigration of Italians and Japanese. If we go on in this way imposing a heavy tax on persons coming from foreign countries, merely because there is a feeling against them on the part of any particular section of the Dominion, in time we shall come to exclude all who are not British subjects. I do not agree, to the full extent, with the objections which have been made respecting the Chinese. Many of those people are respectable citizens as you can find anywhere, and even the labouring classes, as far as we know them, observe the laws and respect the institutions of the country fully as well as our own people do, and better in many cases. For that reason I press the motion.

The amendment was declared lost, and the clause was adopted.

On clause 7,

7. No vessel carrying Chinese immigrants to any port in Canada shall carry more than one such immigrant for every fifty tons of its tonnage; and the owner of any such vessel who carries any number in excess of the number allowed by this section shall incur a penalty of two hundred dollars for each Chinese immigrant so carried in excess of such number.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does 'immigrant' mean one who has never been in the country before? I do not think it would include those who had been in Canada before and were returning under a certificate. I know vessels arriving in Vancouver would have three times, sometimes seven or eight times, the proper number for every fifty tons, but the answer to the officers, when their attention was called to it, would be that the one would be an immigrant coming to the country and the other seven would hold certificates, returning home. I do not know that any more difficulty will occur under this clause, than has been experienced in the past. Is the man who has been in the country and gone back to China and returns again to Canada an immigrant? I suppose not, but we know that there are establishments in Hong Kong who manufacture forged certificates to be used by Chinese coming to this country.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have not heard of any difficulty in carrying out the law.

The clause was adopted.

On subclause 3 of clause 12.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I wish to direct the attention of the Minister of Justice to the fact that subclause 3 should not appear here. It has no connection with the rest of the clause and should be an independent clause. Subclause 3 reads:

The Governor in Council may make such regulations as are necssary to prohibit the entry into Canada of any greater number of persons from any foreign country than the laws of such country permit to emigrate to Canada.

That has nothing to do with the general substance of clause 12. It is an independent matter altogether and ought to be an independent clause.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Clause 12 prohibits paupers, persons suffering from loathsome diseases, &c., entering Canada, and subclause 3 provides that the Governor in Council may make such regulations as are necessary in that behalf. It relates to the subject, but it might be an independent clause.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This clearly was put in the law to meet the case of the Japanese. The Japanese have passed a law prohibiting emigration from that country to a certain extent.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. leader of the opposition has given the best reason why this should not appear here. The whole Bill refers to Chinese immigration, and this particular clause deals with Chinese immigration, but this subclause 3 is a general provision, and there is a peculiar necessity why it should stand by itself.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It would disturb the numbering to make it a separate clause.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The objection of my hon. friend points to this being in the Bill at all. If it is to be in the Bill at all it may as well be here as anywhere else. It has not been well drafted, I admit. I think probably it was introduced after the Bill was drawn and it is scarcely in keeping with the Bill generally as it relates to any immigration. But it is just as well here as anywhere else.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 15.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What guarantee is there for collecting this money from the owner of the vessel ? Supposing a master violates the law, is there any power to seize the vessel ? I know there is such a power in the customs law.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The wording at line 20 is not fortunate.

The clause reads :

15. Every master of any vessel bringing Chinese immigrants to any port or place in Canada shall be prsonally liable to Her Majesty for the payment of the tax imposed by this Act in respect of any such immigrant carried by such vessel.

There may not be any Chinese member of the crew at all. It is a vessel which brings immigrants. Then the clause reads :

And shall deliver, together with the total amount of such tax, to the comptroller, immediately on his arrival in port and before any of his Chinese crew or passengers disembark.

The meaning is clear enough, but the language is not happily chosen, because his crew may be all English, and the meaning is that any Chinese who happen to be a member of the crew or a passenger.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is what it says.

Hon. Mr. POWER—They are not his passengers, and his crew may not be Chinese at all.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD—If he has any Chinese in his crew he is bound to deliver a list of them to the officer.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 18,

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is a word inserted here which does not appear in the law as it stands. The clause reads :

Every person of Chinese origin who wishes to leave Canada with the declared intention of returning thereto.

The word 'declared' is inserted. A Chinaman might neglect to declare his intention. He gives a written notice and that is sufficient.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The law was found by experience to be defective or the word would not be inserted.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There are many who may not make a declaration, but who may say that they did. I think to carry out the intention of the law the word 'declared' should be there.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—I think it will lead to fraud. The officers will not be able to tell the Chinese apart, and if there is a place at Hong Kong where they can forge certificates they will do it, and will never be detected.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is such a similarity between the Chinese that, in order to identify them, they make them put their thumb upon the seals, and when they come back they can identify them in that way.

The clause was adopted.

On subclause 2,

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This gives the Chinaman six months additional to return to the country. I hope that suits my hon. friends from British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—He should be treated as an immigrant if he goes away from the country at all. Otherwise it will lead to fraud.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 22,

Hon. Mr. POWER—I should like to know the reason why the words 'or both' are omitted in this clause. It takes the place of section 20 of the old Act and in the Act the party was made liable to a fine not exceeding $500 or to a term not exceeding twelve months, or to both.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This is more liberal to the Chinese than the former provision.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I think this is adequate punishment—twelve months' imprisonment, or $500 fine.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 24,

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—I wish to call the attention of the government to the latter part of that clause. The clause reads :

All taxes, pecuniary penalties nad revenues from other sources under this Act shall be paid into and form part of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada ; but one-fourth part of the net proceeds of all such taxes paid by Chinese immigrants shall, at the end of every fiscal year, be paid out of such fund to the province wherein they were collected.

Why is this exception made in favour of that province on the importation of Chinese immigrants more than in the case of any other commodity or article imported into Canada ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Because that province has the expense of policing the Chinamen and looking after them.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Would the hon. gentleman look at clause 24 in the old Act ? I want to know whether the word 'net' appears before the word 'proceeds' in the old law ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—This is a new clause.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The law formerly provided that all dues, pecuniary penalties and other sources of revenue under this Act shall be paid into and form a part of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada, but one-fourth part of all entry dues. It is called by different names.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is altogether different. I do not object to this, because I think it is what I advocated some time ago.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—What are the net proceeds ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The proceeds arising from the tax after the expenses are paid.

The clause was adopted.

On subclause d of clause 4.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is no hurry about this clause. We shall not have prorogation until the end of next week, and why we should be in a tremendous hurry to rush the Bill though I cannot understand. It is important to have the wording of the Bill the best that we can possibly supply, and it is clear that if the hon. Minister of Justice and hon. Secretary of State put their heads together, between to-day and to-morrow they will get the wording better than we will get it now ; and I think that that is a reasonable course to adopt.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The meaning was that the children of mixed marriages should come in. I think it is clear. At any rate the officers of the government would interpret it as the language expresses it. However, we will let it stand until to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It seems to me we absolutely meet the wishes of the House in that particular by saying that any woman of Chinese origin, who is the wife of a person who is not of Chinese origin, and the children of such woman, for the purpose of this Act be deemed to be of the same nationality as her husband.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not object to that.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Supposing a woman has been married, first to a Chinese and then to a man who is not a Chinaman, all her children would come in.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Certainly they would. If we add the words 'and their children' that would mean the children of that marriage and no other. My hon. friend from Marshfield says that if my suggestion were adopted it would include children who might be born of other wives and other fathers.

The subclause was allowed to stand.

Hon. Mr. McKAY, from the committee, reported that they had made some progress with the Bill, and asked leave to sit again to-morrow.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT BILL.

RETURNED FROM HOUSE OF COMMONS.

A message was received from the House of Commons returning Bill (K) 'An Act to amend the Criminal Code, 1892,' informing the Senate they had disagreed to the amendments made by them.

Hon. Mr. MILLS moved that the message be considered to-morrow.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We made certain amendments to the Bill and it was returned, the Commons not concurring.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes. in the case of certain amendments.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They made the date of bringing the Act into force the first of January.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—In which the Senate did not concur. Now, they persist in their amendments.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes. They object to the three amendments, the one relating to frauds committed by parties obtaining goods under false pretenses, the second, relating to the trades unions, or the protection of labourers, and the third, as to the date when the Act should come into operation. They give six months more to the gamblers to carry on their operations.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is a very good way to put it.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned.

TIMAGAMI RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

CONSIDERATION OF HOUSE OF COMMONS AMENDMENTS.

The Order of the Day being called:

Consideration of the Message from the House of Commons disagreeing to the amendments made by the Senate to (Bill 118) An Act respecting the Timagami Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Dobson.)

Hon. Mr. DOBSON moved:

That the Senate do not insist upon their amendments made to the Bill (118) entitled An Act respecting the Timagami Railway Company, to which the House of Commons had disagreed, for the following reasons:

1. Because it would render it utterly impossible for the promoters of the Bill to make adequate financial arrangements for carrying out the scheme, owing to the great engineering difficulties to be encountered in the construction of a railway between the points named in the measure and Lake Timagami.

2. Because the country north of Verner is of a rocky, mountainous character. Very little of it will ever be fit for settlement, whilst from Sturgeon Falls the land is mostly good agricultural land.

3. Because the advantage of connection with a thriving town like Sturgeon Falls, instead of being compelled to connect with a place like Verner, where there is no prospect of ever being a town.

4. Because in running a road from Sturgeon Falls or Cache Bay, it would pass through settlements with a population of over 3,000, whilst on the whole line from Verner to Lake Timagam there are not 200 inhabitants.

5. Because the construction and operation of a railway from Sturgeon Falls to Lake Timagami would conduce to the general benefit of the people of Sturgeon Falls and the surrounding country, for the reasons above specified.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I dissent from the proposition contained in the memoranda presented by my hon. friend from Lindsay, because we all know that this matter was fully discussed the other day in the Senate and at that time we came to the conclusion that the amendments proposed and carried in the committee were proper, and that the original route, from Verner, was the only route by which this railway could be built with advantage to the country generally. I hardly think it is necessary to go into a long discussion of the question at the present time, because every hon. gentleman understands it thoroughly. It was fully threshed out in committee and, after a long deliberation, having heard parties representing both sides, the committee came to the almost unanimous conclusion that the amendments proposed on that occasion were correct. The House of Commons thought proper to dissent from the conclusions arrived at by the Senate, and therefore, it becomes necessary now to give reasons why the amendments proposed by the Senate should be maintained. Therefore, I move:

That the Senate doth insist upon their amendments to the Bill (No. 118) intituled 'An Act respecting the Timagami Railway Company,' for the following reasons:

To second amendment:

1. Those so-called 'great engineering difficulties' are pure inventions. A good road already exists through exactly the same track where the railway line is proposed. The country is level and highly fit for colonization, a large proportion of it being already under settlement.

It is the shortest line to reach Lake Timagami from the Canadian Pacific Railway, being only twenty-six miles in length, whilst the shortest road from Sturgeon Falls could not be built in less than fifty-five miles, through a very rough, hilly and swampy country, mostly unfit for colonization and full of engineering difficulties.

Financial arrangements are not only possible, but a man is found who is ready to supply the necessary funds to build the road from Domremy to Bay Jeanne, whilst he declined to do so from Sturgeon Falls.

2. The so-called feasible line between Sturgeon Falls and Timagami has never been surveyed. They speak of a surveyor's report, but they have never shown any, and I challenge them to produce any genuine plans, estimates or reports confirming their statement that they have a good road. On the contrary, I know that they have made a failure in their attempt simply because the country is impracticable.

3. The original form asked by the promoters is from Verner and not from Sturgeon Falls.

Now, Mr. Bremner himself declares in a letter dated London, England, June 6, 1900, that he does not see his way clear to finance that road from Sturgeon Falls.

4. This assertion is a false statement, because, as a matter of fact, on September 16 last, at the regular annual meeting of the board at Sturgeon Falls, an agreement was entered upon between the provisory directors and a capitalist from Denver, Colorado, to the effect that Mr. Primeau would finance the road and commence to build it in May last.

But Mr. E. Bremner succeeded in turning that man away, and put his hand on our charter, so that he could realize a profitable transaction himself. Of course, there is more money in selling a long road than a short one, and that is likely the reason why Mr. Bremner does not wish to build from Verner, but from Sturgeon Falls.

5. If the settlers of that section are of so much importance, why did they not manifest at least the fact of their existence by a petition similar to that one bearing over 700 names of the settlers in the region of Verner, who justly and energetically protest against the change of the road?

It was shown in evidence the other day that, through the energy of a clergyman, Dr. Paradis, over a thousand people had been induced to settle in that part of the country on the express condition and arrangement that the line of railway should commence at Verner. It would be a great disappointment to these people to have to travel some fourteen miles to reach a railway that they expected would be at their own doors. Therefore, the committee were justified in demanding that the original line should be adhered to. It is quite evident that the original route is the one the people of that country desire to have. There was a small deviation allowed two or three miles to the west of Verner to avoid some difficulty on the line of route. I may say the cause of the difficulty was that Mr. Bremner had succeed in making some arrangements whereby he thought he could control this road and, thinking he could make some financial arrangement more satisfactory to himself than to the country at large, he changed the terminus to Sturgeon Falls, because it might be advantageous to some persons connected with a pulp-mill there. The people who settled in that part of the country naturally expect that this line will be open for their accommodation at the earliest possible moment. I have letters here written by Mr. Bremner himself showing it is impossible for him to carry on the road, under the circumstances, from Sturgeon Falls, and therefore I do not see why the House of Commons should have disagreed to the amendment made to the Bill by the Senate. Therefore. I have much pleasure in moving the resolution which I have just read as an amendment to that submitted by the hon. gentleman from Lindsay.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Before the motion is put I would suggest to my hon. friend that that paper, however cogent the reasoning embodied in it may be, is not the sort of communication we should send to the other House. The proper motion is that this House do insist on its amendment. There is no necessity for setting forth the reasons why we should insist.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—They set forth their reasons.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes, but it is not necessary to set forth our reasons. We decline to be convinced by their reasons; and my hon. friend will see that it does not look well to have a document of that sort spread on the records of the two Houses. There are reflections on the personal character of men which, I think, are highly objectionable.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman's remarks would apply to the motion made by the hon. gentleman from Lindsay as well as to the motion of the hon. gentleman from Rideau division.

Hon. Mr. POWER—No. The hon. gentleman had to give reasons why we should not insist on our amendments, but it is not necessary to give reasons why we do insist. We simply decline to pass the resolution moved by the hon. gentleman from Lindsay. I am simply referring to the question of order now, and am not speaking to the motion.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—I notice the peculiar way in which this resolution submitted by the hon. gentleman from Lindsay has been prepared. I have no objection to the motion itself, but it does not appear to be in accordance with common sense to give reasons why we do not insist upon our amendments. The Senate made certain amendments to the Bill, and the House of Commons does not accept those amendments. Then a resolution is moved in this House that we do not insist on the amendments proposed by the Senate, because it is desirable to have the Bill, even without the amendments, and we give way, in defence to the House of Commons, because we consider it is advisable to have the Bill without the amendments, rather than to have no Bill at all, and it is not in accordance with common sense to give reasons why we do not insist upon our amendment. It is really a reflection upon the conduct of the Senate in passing the amendments, and although I would be disposed to assist in carrying the resolutions proposed by the hon. gentleman from Lindsay, I would suggest that all the reasons be struck out, because it is really casting a reflection upon the Senate.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—They are unnecessary. I do not think it is necessary if we acquiesce in the view taken by the House of Commons to state our reasons for acquiescing. It is only necessary to say that the Senate do not insist on their amendment.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—This Bill has two objects in view ; first, to renew the charter which expired on the 30th of June last, and, second, to remove the starting point on the Canadian Pacific Railway, from which this road was to be built to Lake Timagami, from Verner to Sturgeon Falls. The old Act, which I have before me, provides that the railway was to be built from Verner Station, on the Canadian Pacific Railway, to a point on the southerly part of Lake Timagami. The Bill before us now asks to have the road built from Sturgeon Falls. What we did in committee was simply to renew the old charter by extending the time, and making Verner Station, or a point two or three miles west of that the starting point. The first reason that the House of Commons gave for objecting to our amendments, that they do not know the person. That, I see, is dropped by my hon. friend from Lindsay.

Hon. Mr. DOBSON—I did not follow the reasons given by the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—The persons named in the first Bill are all residents of Sturgeon Falls, except two residents of Lindsay. I take that to mean that the person who, is opposing the Bill is unknown to them. I find that his name is in the original Act as one of the promotors. This is the second attempt made by the Senate to refer this Bill back to the committee—although the committee had given much attention to it. I do not see why it should be referred, if the Bill is allowed to pass at all. If the railway is allowed to start from Verner Station, or near it, the charter will live two years more. In the meantime, the conflicting opinions given before the committee and presented to this House will have become obliterated. We will have further information on the matter. I think the better way is to allow the Bill to pass as it is and for the Senate to insist on its amendment.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I did not take any part in the discussion of this measure either in the committee or in the House on the previous occasion. The hon. gentleman from Rideau gave as a reason why we should not pass the resolution moved by the hon. gentleman from Lindsay that this question had been fully discussed in the Senate on a previous occasion. It is true that the case in favour of the Senate amendment was fully discussed, but the other side of the case was not fully discussed, because we were not fully informed, either in the committee or in the House, as to the real position of the matter, and since the discussion in the committee and in this House further information has come to hand. And, further, the hon. gentleman intimated that this Bill had been amended in a very decided way when it was before the committee. As a matter of fact, I understand that the committee, by a majority of two, decided to make the amendment, so that we cannot draw any very large conclusions from the action of the committee. Since the matter was before the committee and this Chamber, we have had information of various kinds. Amongst others, we have a petition from the municipality of Sturgeon Falls. The ground was taken before, that the town of Sturgeon Falls did not want the terminus there, but the resolution of the town council of Sturgeon Falls says that the people do. Although this railway is not a very long one, the question is one of some importance. It involves a principle of very considerable importance, and I propose to trespass on the time of the House for a few minutes in pointing out the history of the case and what is involved. In 1898 an Act was passed, chap. 87 of the Acts of that year, to incorporate the Timagami Railway Company. A certain number of gentlemen were incorporated to build a railway from a point at or near Verner Station, on the Canadian Pacific Railway, to a point on the southern part of Lake Timagami. The company were given two years to begin the work. The two years expired on the 30th of June last, and nothing had been done. Consequently the Bill which comes before us is a Bill to revive as well as to amend the Act of 1898. The original promoters were unable to do anything on the line between Verner and Lake Timagami. The original incorporators sold out, receiving each—I think there were eight of them—one hundred dollars, and they were allowed to retain one-third of the stock which they had previously held. Under this agreement they authorized the persons who purchased from them to vote on the stock. That was the character of the agreement. Then the people who had bought out the original corporators were complete masters, one would suppose, of the position. The route from Verner, that is the western route, to Lake Timagami was examined. It was not surveyed. But a gentleman familiar with contracting and railway building went over it and came to the conclusion that it would be impracticable to build a railway by that route—at least that the expense would be so great that it practically could not be done. It was out of the question. So that, as I said before, the western route was found to be impracticable. The same gentleman went over the eastern route, and found what he thought was a practicable line, and then the people who had bought out the original incorporators spent fifteen hundred dollars in having a survey. The eastern route was the route from Sturgeon Falls.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—Was that the route that was surveyed ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—The evidence was that there had been no survey.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The evidence before the committee was not sworn evidence.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is the information the hon. gentleman is now giving sworn evidence ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then they are on a par, I presume.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This is evidence which has come to hand since the committee met. The western route proposed to go from Verner, a village of 60 or 70 inhabitants. That was found to be impracticable. The eastern line was one from Sturgeon Falls, a town of over 2,000 inhabitants, with large mills, and with manufacturing undertakings which propose to come, in which a very large sum of English capital has been invested. Any ordinary business man would come to the conclusion that there was no question as to which was the preferable line, and the people who bought out the promoters came to the conclusion that the business way was to build from Sturgeon Falls or its neighbourhood. That is the position in which we were at the beginning of this session. The western route was found to be impracticable. It is alleged now by the hon. gentleman from Rideau that capitalists are to be found who will build the western route, but their names have not transpired, and they have not shown up during the two years. The present owners of this undertaking come to parliament and ask to be allowed to locate their line by a practicable route. I think that is a reasonable request and one which parliament should grant, unless some very substantial reason is shown for not granting it.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—The evidence before us went to show that it was most impracticable to build it from Sturgeon Falls and very practicable to build the other way.

Hon. Mr. POWER—We had only one side of the story. The people who have put their money into the undertaking, the owners, may be trusted to build by the practicable route, and not by the route which is not practicable. The owners of the undertaking come to parliament and ask to be allowed to change their route a few miles. During a great part of the distance the two lines would be not more than six miles apart. The Senate say no. I think that is a most unusual thing. It is not as though there were any vested rights being interfered with. This road will not interefere with the line of any existing company or railway. It will bring additional business to the Canadian Pacific Railway and an additional business to Sturgeon Falls, and interfere with nobody's business. But the Senate did not stop there. The Senate undertook to put a man on the board of directors, whom the present owners of the undertaking do not know. I think that is something which is unprecedented in the history of parliament.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Hear, hear.

An hon. GENTLEMAN—Does the hon. member object to it ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do object to it most strenuously. What right have we to take up somebody, whom the promoters have nothing to do with, and insist that he shall be a member of the board of directors ? We may have a right to do it, but it is a right I have never known to be exercised before during all the years I have been in parliament. There was some reference made to population. Reference to the statistics of the last general election and of the municipal returns shows that the population on the eastern route, the Sturgeon Falls route, is at any rate four times as great as the population on the other line. Some reference has been made to a gentleman described as Father Paradis. I am informed by credible people that Father Paradis owns some land at Verner and some land about half way up the line on the western route, and that he owns the water front at the place which the amendment made by this House fixes as the terminus of the line on Lake Timagami. We can understand therefore, why this gentleman should be anxious, if the road is to be built at all, that it should be built by the western route, but it does not seem to me that that is a reason which should weigh very much with the Senate. The hon. gentleman from Glengarry has put it very fairly, that if we adhere to our amendment it will mean that this measure will be defeated, because there is no doubt the Commons will not accept our amendment. I mean that there is to be no railway. Neither the original people, Father Paradis and his friends, nor the new people would have a right to build a railway, because the charter has already expired, and if this Bill does not pass there will be no charter in existence. That is a very serious matter for an important section of the country, and it is going to be a very serious drawback to the English capitalists who have invested already three-quarters of a million dollars in Sturgeon Falls, and who are, I understand, about investing half a million more, and who have been calculating upon the construction of this railway. I do not think that is the way to encourage the introduction of English capital into this country. That is my argument on the point—that the action of the Senate has been a most unprecedented and unusual one. These promoters own the property. They own the charter. We can refuse them a charter altogether ; but still they have a right which, according to our usual practice would not be questioned, to be allowed to select their own route for this line as long as they adhered to the main features of it ; and the defeat of this measure would be a serious drawback to that part of the country. I have seen various letters and petitions. There are two from the town of Sturgeon Falls, but I shall read one of them. It is as follows :

To the honourable the Senate of Canada, in parliament assembled :

Sturgeon Falls, July 2, 1900.—The petition of the corporation of Sturgeon Falls municipality humbly sheweth:

That whereas in the year of Our Lord one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight, a railway charter to build a railway from the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway to Timagami Lake was obtained by a number of parties, principally resident in the town of Sturgeon Falls, the original wording of the Bill being from some point in the townships of Springer, Caldwell or Kirkpatrick——

I call attention to the fact that that is the Bill as originally introduced.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—That is not a fact.

Hon. Mr. POWER—If the hon. gentleman will wait he will see that he is speaking too soon. The petition proceeds :

And whereas, there was amongst the said charterers one C. A. M. Paradis, who was thought by some of the parties to the charter to be useful in obtaining the same, but whose true character was not then so well known to the parties as now, and who fraudulently, as regards the wishes and intents of the majority of the charterers, got changed the wording of the Bill to make the starting point 'at or near the village of Verner.'

Now, my hon. friend is satisfied he spoke too soon. The petition continues :

And whereas, from the reports of the engineers and others engaged by the said charterers, the restriction to a starting point 'at or near Verner,' would make the said charter worthless, and it was impossible to finance the road as thus constituted, the provisional directors, at the present session of the parliament of Canada asked to have the said charter amended so that the road could be commenced at or near Sturgeon Falls, where a practicable route can be got, running through a rich country, already well settled for a considerable distance; and whereas, the said Commons, by its Railway Committee and in the House itself, granted the said petition, but the honourable Senate being, as we believe, misinformed as to the circumstances, again changed the Bill restricting the starting point to a locality called Domremy, where the said Paradis was for several years striving, without success, to form a repatriated French colony, the reason for his non-success being that those who did come to settle in the place were so disgusted with the methods employed by the said Paradis and the worthlessness of the land upon which he sought to settle them, that they almost all left him entirely, and either returned to the United States or sought out for themselves a more favourable locality, and that such change in the Bill makes it entirely worthless to the charterers or any one else, as the route so set by the honourable Senate goes through a tract of rocky, worthless land, not fit for settlement, except just where it crosses the valley of the Sturgeon River, and there are not on or near that route from where it leaves the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway to the proposed terminus at Lake Timagami 100 persons, men, women and children, whereas the route as set by the Railway Committee of the Commons passes through a populous and fertile country, with a population of several thousand people. The town of Sturgeon Falls alone, which is sought to be made the terminus, having a population by the last official census, made by the town assessor, of 1,604 persons, and townships of Springer, Field and Bastedo, through which it is proposed by the provisional directors to run the line, and through which the said line is surveyed, having a population of about 3,000.

And whereas, the petition presented by the said C. A. M. Paradis to the committee of the honourable Senate is fraudulent, the greater portion of the names thereto being obtained in a thickly populated district around Sturgeon Falls.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think it is highly improper to make charges of fraud in the Senate in that way.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is directly contrary to the rules of parliament.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—By what authority can that petition be read ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—We will consider that portion dropped.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—I beg to ask if the hon. gentleman is to be permitted to disregard every rule of the Senate in that way. I ask whether it is to be permitted that a petition to the Senate is to be read to this House in this way ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—I said that I would withdraw the word 'fraudulent.'

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman cannot withdraw it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not think it is out of order in a memorial to this House to say that some person outside of the House is guilty of fraudulent conduct.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, it is.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is no charge of fraud against any member of this House or any member of parliament, and I am not aware that there is any rule of parliament which makes it out of order to say that some man outside of parliament has done a fraudulent act.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—The point is whether the hon. gentleman has any right to read any petition without the permission of the House. If he wishes to present a petition to the Senate, that can only be done under the rules of the House, at the proper time.

Hon. Mr. POWER—As a matter of fact I do not present the petition ; I merely read it as part of my speech.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—That is worse and worse.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman may think it worse, but he has no authority for saying so. Hon. gentlemen read extracts from newspapers and letters as part of their speeches, and I do not see why a different rule should be adopted in regard to myself than that which prevails in regard to others.

Hon. Mr. OLEMOW—It is a direct reflection upon the Senate.

Hon. Mr. POWER—No, it says the Senate is misinformed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It must be borne in mind that the hon. gentleman presented a paper which commenced with petitioning the Senate, and it was a paper which purported to be a petition from the municipality of the village of Sturgeon Falls. It was originally intended to be presented to the Senate. That is the fact. It was not being presented to the Senate. That is the point taken by the hon. gentleman. I have read the petition and know what is in it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—There is nothing irregular in that. My hon. friend has a right to read a petition, just as he reads any other document. If he reads it he must lay it on the Table, and any hon. gentleman can insist upon it being laid on the Table. It is not laid on the Table in that case as a petition but as a document read by an hon. member. It might be presented to-morrow or next day as a petition. It is not submitted as a petition. It is submitted to the House as a part of his speech, as information obtained from parties residing in the locality of Sturgeon Falls, and it is within his right to read that just the same as a letter from some person residing at Sturgeon Falls. It is, in fact, no more than a letter, signed by a number of parties, instead of being signed by a single individual.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—Why is it that we must have the permission of the House before a petition is read ? When a petition is presented it is not read until permission is given to do so.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Certainly.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—If it requires permission to read it, how is it the hon. gentleman can read this one without permission ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—He is not reading a petition. It is part of his speech.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—The hon. gentleman began by saying it was the petition of so-and-so. To read a petition a member must have permission, and in this case no permission has been granted. It is for the Speaker to decide the question.

The SPEAKER—In view of the great latitude that has already been given to members of the Senate to read letters and extracts, I would feel very much embarrassed in refusing to give to the hon. gentleman such latitude. In this case, the hon. gentleman from Halifax is reading a petition. I did not know it was a petition at first. No doubt the petition should first have been presented to the House regularly, but I believe he has a right to read a petition which has not been presented, as information communicated to him, and if the House insists, he will be bound to lay that paper before the Senate, but I believe, from some expressions contained in that petition, it would not be desirable that it should be laid before the House. At all events, this has to be decided by the House. I know of no rule which would prevent the hon. gentleman from reading from a paper which has even been called a petition. I should like if the Senate would hereafter decide upon what is allowed to be read and what should not be read. In this case I am not in a position to say that the hon. gentleman is out of order in reading from the paper in his hand, but I am of opinion if he continues to read that paper it should be laid on the Table of the House.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I have no objection to laying it on the Table.

The SPEAKER—I should like the House to decide whether it must be laid on the Table.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am sorry that I read the word 'fraudulently.' It should not have been read. The petitioners conclude as follows :

> Now, therefore, the prayer of this petition is as follows:
> That the honourable Senate do reconsider the Timagami Railway Bill, and make same as passed by the Railway Committee of the House of Commons, and afterwards confirmed by the Commons in parliament assembled.
> And your petitioners will ever pray.
>
> J. D. COCKBURNE,
> Mayor of Sturgeon Falls.
> H. E. McKEE,
> Clerk of the town of Sturgeon Falls.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I would ask that it being a public document, it be laid on the Table.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I shall be very glad to lay it on the Table. It only shows how the people who are interested think about the matter.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—I do not think anything could help the committee more than the speech of the hon. gentleman from Halifax. What was the action of the committee, and by what rules were they guided when they made the amendment ? I am sure that the members of the committee know that the statements in that petition are the exact opposite to the statements made to the committee by what appeared to be credible witnesses. The gentleman spoken of so disparagingly in the petition was a gentleman whose word I would have taken without his oath—a priest who had devoted his time and energy and means to gathering, from various regions in the United States, his French Canadian fellow-subjects, and bringing them in to settle in the region which is back of Verner. As the result of his efforts there are some thousands of them settled there, on the agricultural lands in that country, and it is from these people, to the number of 700, that a petition presented in the House, in which they asked that the alteration of the beginning of the road from Verner to Sturgeon Falls be not permitted, and furnished very cogent reasons why the change should not be made. Of course, there is a disparaging statement in the document we have heard read, that these people were induced to sign that petition by some false representation. Does it not show that the Senate is not in a position to come to a final decision on the subject? It appears to me very necessary, before coming to a final decision, that we should look into these conflicting statements, but so far as the evidence given to us in the committee is concerned, to my mind, it is satisfactory and clear that the original line of road there spoken of as impracticable was shown to be the best and most practicable line for getting to the lake, with the exception of the starting point—that there was some difficulty at the starting point, and to avoid that and to keep in the line of the valley the starting point was made a mile or two further west. That was the whole reason of the change, and it was stated very clearly and distinctly that it was the best line for the road—that the land was good arable land, that the settlers were mostly to the west of it, whereas, the other line was represented to us as never having been surveyed. Father Paradis himself had gone over it frequently and he stated to the committee, and it was corroborated by other evidence, that it was utterly impracticable to construct a road straight from Sturgeon Falls to the lake—that there were no settlers on that route and no lands to settle on, in consequence of the rocky and wet character of the country. We had before us ample evidence to guide us in the decision which we should adhere to, and if it should result in no railway being built, better postpone it for a year that so we may have some facts established before we decide which line shall be adopted. I hope the Senate will adhere to the amendment it has made. I do not think it is necessary to give a long reply to the House of Commons. There should be simply a statement that the Senate adheres to the amendment which it has made. There is much that might be said in connection with this matter, but I do not think, at a time like this, and after the discussions in the committee and in the House, it is necessary to say anything more. What my hon. friend from Halifax has been saying rather aids us in endorsing the decision of the committee.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I entertain precisely the same view at this moment that I expressed when this question was before the House on a previous occasion. My hon. friend from Sarnia (Hon. Mr. Vidal) speaks as though the committee of the House of Commons and the evidence taken there amount to nothing, but that the opinions expressed in a committee of the Senate by a majority of two should have paramount weight with this House. Now, while the opinions of a committee of this House, or of the House of Commons, are matters to be treated with respect and with due consideration, it does not at all follow that because a committee of this House adopted a particular view on a question that the House is bound by it.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—It was supported afterwards by the House.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend need not get so excited. He has expressed his views and I am expressing mine.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—State the facts.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I am stating the facts.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—I do not think so.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend knows it was carried by a vote of 21 to 18 in this House, and some hon. gentlemen who were in favour of the view entertained in the House of Commons were obliged to leave the House for a short time or the vote would have been a tie. The hon. gentleman refers to the former vote of this House as if it were absolutely binding on us, and it is not to be considered when the rules of parliament imposed on us the duty of reconsidering the question when the House of Commons have differed from the views entertained by a majority here. Now, what is the position of things? My hon. friend from Sarnia speaks of the route from Verner as being altogether to be preferred—that the land is more fertile and that the majority of the settlers are on that line. I do not think so. On the contrary, if that were so, then the parties who are promoting this Bill would have preferred the route along which there is the territory best fitted for settlement, and on which the largest population could be secured. The other line is longer. It is said the one is 24 miles and the other will have 32 miles. Will any hon. gentleman applying to this House for a charter proposing to construct a road, prefer the longer line to a shorter one, unless it was more advantageous to adopt it ?

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—The contractor would.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is not the contractors who are applying for this charter. It is the promoters of the road who are asking for it, and my hon. friend undertakes to say to the promoters of this charter, 'You do not know your own business. You do not know what is in your interest as a corporation, and when you come here we will override your judgment and undertake to decide that where we want you to build the road you must build it.'

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—The petition that we had here is from Sturgeon Falls ; the petition that the committee had was from the inhabitants along the route, and that is from Verner to Lake Timagami. The petition we have here is from the people of Sturgeon Falls, and it is reasonable that they should want the road to start from their place.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The people of Sturgeon Falls are supporting those who are asking for the charter. The others are opposing them. I would not attach any value to the views of the people of Sturgeon Falls that were against the views of those who are asking for the railway charter, because it is only consistent with common sense that those who want a charter of incorporation for the construction of a road between an existing line of railway and a certain point on the lake will choose that which is best in the interests of the railway promoters and they have choosen Sturgeon Falls. My hon. friend from Halifax has mentioned that there is a large amount of capital being invested at that point. There is a district there from which pulpwood can be obtained, and in addition to the small traffic which the settlers will afford, there will be the traffic of those who are engaged in the manufacturing enterprises. They will contribute towards the settlement of the country. It is reasonable to suppose that the land lying alongside of the stream—and the Sturgeon River runs along the line by which it is proposed to build the railway—is better fitted for settlement than land lying elsewhere. In the first place, there is the natural drainage afforded by the river, and, in the next place, there are the alluvial deposits which a river always makes at some point along its banks. Now, in the first place you have the approval of the committee of the House of Commons and those who have considered the matter. You have the petition and request of those who are promoting the enterprise, and you set up against that the opinions of men who, at one time, had an interest in the railway corporations, who sold out their interest, and who want to control the location of the road after they have brought their own interest to an end. I say it is a most unusual proceeding, and I doubt whether my hon. friend can find an instance where either House has intervened and undertaken to change the location of a road without there being some more cogent reasons than any of those that have been afforded to us on this occasion.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I did not intend to have anything more to say on this subject, nor should I have spoken had it not been for the speech of the hon. gentleman from Halifax. The Minister of Justice has exhibited a good deal of warmth on this question that is, in my opinion, altogether unnecessary. It is a very unimportant question, requiring very little consideration for people to arrive at a conclusion. The conflicting statements which have been made upon this question lead me to this conclusion, that before I could give an intelligent vote as to what course I should pursue, I would require the statements which have been made to be verified. The hon. gentleman from Halifax very astutely threw in the remark, was the evidence adduced before the committee, swore to. He forgot he was himself making statements which were not made under oath, consequently they were not of any more value than those given to the committee. The statements which he has made are altogether at variance with the evidence given before the committee, as has been pointed out by the hon. gentleman from Sarnia. We are told that the road running from Verner to the settlement near this lake would be of value and of interest to the settler. The gentleman who promoted that settlement told us that the settlement is on that route and to the west of the lake. It is evident the Minister of Justice has not looked at the map and does not know which way the stream runs. It is true the falls are at Sturgeon Falls, but all along that river, where the present promoters ask to build the road, is through a country which it was shown to the committee, not by sworn testimony, I admit, to be rocky and altogether impracticable—that the other route—making the terminus a mile and a half or two miles west of Verner, was along a valley most of which could be settled; when you reach the southern part of the lake the river runs westward, and it is along the valley of that river where settlement can be made. That is the evidence we have had. Now, we have the statement in this petition that the arable land is along the line running from Sturgeon Falls to the south of Lake Timagami. There is a distinct and positive contradiction of facts. We had a gentleman before the committee and I asked him the question myself, 'Have you been over this route?' He said 'yes.' What is the character of the route? He declared that the route on which they asked to build the road was rocky and impracticable. I asked further 'Has that route been surveyed?' He said 'no.' Then I asked had he been over the other route. He said yes, and it was the best and most practicable route. The evidence before the committee was that the settlement was on the route to the northwest of the route that has its terminus at Verner, and not on the other route. This petition says that there is a settlement of three thousand people along the other route where the evidence before us declared nobody could live. Under the circumstances, is the Senate in a position to give an intelligent opinion? There is a very important statement in that petition which was read by the hon. gentleman from Halifax. It is one which deserves the serious consideration of the Senate, because if that statement be true, the Railway Committee of this House has been grossly deceived. Here is the statement: that the reverend gentleman obtained some seven or eight hundred signatures to a petition asking the local government of Ontario to build a wagon-road from the settlement to the Canadian Pacific Railway in order that they could reach that point with the products of their farms, and that he changed the heading of that petition and made it a petition asking that the terminus of the road should be at Verner.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I hope the House will not think I read that?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I say, that was in the petition.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am coming at what the hon. gentleman did read. The petition declares that the act of obtaining those names was fraudulent. I have made an explanation of the contents of this petition because the Senate should be in possession of the whole of the facts. I went further and asked that the petition should be laid on the Table in order that that reverend gentleman may obtain a copy of it, and if he has not been guilty of the charge of fraudulently changing that petition, that he may take action against the parties who have promulgated such a slander. There are other points in this petition to which I shall not refer, I only mention the points brought forward by the hon. gentleman from Halifax. He read the heading of the petition. He said it was a petition from the municipality of Sturgeon Falls, and he commenced it by reading 'to the Senate of Canada, &c.' It was clearly a petition to be laid before this House, and it was his duty, if he intended to use it, either to use it as a letter sent to him and not as a petition, or to lay it before parliament. Yesterday I presented a petition from 1,300 people residing in Victoria, asking that the Senate pass the Chinese Restriction Bill. I read the petition, but before doing so I said 'I present to the House a petition from these people, and I asked permission to read it for the reason that it is not likely to be read or seen before the Bill is dealt with, and the Senate not making any opposition to that, acquiesced in the request, and I read it. That is the mode in which business is done, and that is the practice that was indicated by the hon. gentleman from Missisquoi. We have examples of legislation in the two Houses which are not altogether consistent with the principle stated here to-day. A short time ago, during this session, we had two Bills presented to the House of Commons, both of them by very respectable people, in connection with the building of a road from Toronto to Collingwood. The promoters of one were the Board of Trade of the city of Toronto, one of the most important bodies in the whole Dominion of Canada. The other was represented by one or two members of parliament, backed by a number of gentlemen living in the United States, who, I doubt not, were capitalists, and capable of carrying on the work. The House of Commons passed the one that was promoted by the members of parliament on behalf of the United States capitalists. Having passed that, they rejected the Bill promoted by the Board of Trade of the city of Toronto, and upon what ground? They rejected it on the grounds that it was an interference with vested rights. Now, there were no vested rights. The other gentlemen had not received any rights except what the House of Commons had given them. The Bill had not been sanctioned by this House, nor had it received the signature of the Governor General, and yet the House of Commons rejected the other Bill on the ground it was interfering with vested rights. When the Bill under discussion came before us, we found there were bona fide vested rights held for years by gentlemen who wanted to build over the same route. Here was a charter which had been in possession of several gentlemen for a number of years. The House overrides the original promoters of that scheme and declare that the road should be built somewhere else, forgetting that the original corporators had some vested rights. The hon. gentleman from Halifax says in the case before the House to-day the original promoters sold out their rights. The only evidence before us on that point was that one gentleman had sold out his right for a certain sum, to raise money, to Mr. Bremner, and that it was with a distinct understanding that he was to build the road from Verner to the south shore of this lake for the accommodation of the settlers.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—On the original line.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—On the original line; but as soon as they got possession of it, and got him and others out of the way, then they changed the route to another place in the interests of Sturgeon Falls. No one can blame the Sturgeon Falls people for trying to get it, because it is their interest to do so, but I am surprised at the marvellous increase within a week, of the population of that place. It was represented to us on that committee to have a population of 1,200 or 1,500. A couple of days afterwards it got up to 1,700, and now the hon. gentleman from Halifax has raised it to 2,000. In another week, we will have a village with a population sufficiently large to incorporate it as a town, and, as it is a growing time, as my hon. friend to my right says, they could then have a city. That is simply the position of this whole matter. I think the objection taken to both resolutions by the hon. gentleman from Halifax is sound. All that is necessary to do is for the hon. gentleman from Lindsay to move a resolution that we do not insist upon our amendments, and the amendment to that would be that we do insist upon them, without the reasons being put on paper, because these reasons are debatable, and we have no evidence which of them is correct, because we have had declarations and assertions made on both sides diametrically opposed to each other.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I voted in favour of the amendments made by the Senate committee before, because these contradictory statements were not before us, but I think the better way to do with the Bill, under the circumstances, and with the contradictory statements we have had before us, is to send it back to the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours, and let us have the evidence under oath by these parties, and ascertain who is telling the truth.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Because here we are really voting, some believing the statements that the hon. gentleman from Halifax has been authorized to make, and others believing the statements which where made before the committee, and upon which their report was based. If I were in order in moving an amendment to the amendment, I would move that the Bill, with the reasons assigned for not agreeing with the amendments made by the committee, be referred to the Railway Committee for further consideration. It is a somewhat new proposition, I admit, but it seems to me that that is the practical way of dealing with it, and it certainly is a way of reaching the actual truth in connection with these statements.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Upon that the House has already voted.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No. The House decided not to refer the Bill back to committee for the purpose of amendment. That is not my motion. My motion will be an amendment to the amendment, if it be in order, that the reasons given by the Commons for not agreeing with the amendments which were made be referred to the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours, for the purpose of hearing further evidence as to the correctness of the statements which have been made, so that it would not be the same motion as the other. The House has the case now before it. Hon. gentlemen are either to believe that what was stated before the commiftee was true, or they are to believe that what the hon. gentleman from Halifax has stated is correct, that this reverend gentleman has committed a fraud, and imposed upon the committee, which led them to make the report they did, or we must take the evidence under oath. I am inclined, for myself, to take the statements which we had before the committee, for the reason that the witnesses who were there were subject to questioning and cross-examination by both sides. It is true the hon. gentleman from Halifax did not remain in the committee. He made a suggestion, but did not have his own way, and he bolted. That is not the way we do unless we get annoyed. If I try to have my own way, and do not get it, I try to get it as well as I can.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I rise to a question of order. There is a rule which forbids referring to anything which took place in committee, and, at any rate, the statement is not correct.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I acknowledge the correctness of the objection taken by the hon. gentleman, but we have been discussing what took place in committee for some time. However, I will withdraw it all, and consider it be like the hon. gentleman's petition—not on record.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I suppose I am like a good many other hon. members in regard to the matter, because I do not know much about it. I was not here when the vote was taken the other day, but I have noticed that the House of Commons has always been pleased to give a fair consideration to any amendments made by the Senate to its Bills. It is a rare thing that a Bill comes back to us with a refusal on the part of the House of Commons to concur in our amendments. I have made a little inquiry in respects to the merits of this matter, and I find that the members representing this district in the House of Commons are in favour of the Bill now before the House.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—In what way ?

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—In favour of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The original Bill.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—This Bill passed the Railway Committee of the House of Commons, and the members of the House of Commons representing the district were present, and it came to us, and our committee undertook to amend the Bill here. I do not suppose they had half the information, at any rate, not all the information which was before the Commons, and I do not suppose the parties interested favoured the change, because I find the members representing that district are not in favour of the amendments.

Hon Mr. FERGUSON—What constituency is it in ?

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Nipissing. Mr. Klock was promoting this Bill and also Mr. McHugh. I am only giving the reasons why I am going to vote for the Bill as it passed the House of Commons. The fact of our sending the Bill back to them with amendments would make them cautious, and they now say, on the information they had, that they are right. They insist on their Bill as it stands, and I am prepared to give the preference to the House of Commons : and not knowing anything personally about it, taking what I hear from Tom, Dick and Harry, I think we have a right to respect the opinion of the members of the House of Commons, when that opinion is supported by representatives from the district who would not support it if it were not right.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—I think this matter is not in the same position as when the vote was taken in this House to send the Bill back to the committee. Statements have been made here, and some very strong ones, which left my mind, I was going to say, in a state of chaos, as to what was the right course to adopt, and in view of the fact that the House of Commons have taken these objections to our amendments, and also in view of what is equally important—that we should be able to justify what we do, either if we stand by our present opinions, or make any other alterations—I should very much prefer to see the suggestion of the hon. leader of the opposition carried out, and the whole matter sent back to the committee, so that we might have the conflicting statements thoroughly sifted and know intelligently upon what grounds we were called upon to give our decision.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I think I am voicing the sentiment of the Senate when I say that, if time permitted, we could refer the Bill back to committee where all the information could be secured, but it appears to me at this late stage that it would be killing the Bill. It appears to me that with the change of opinion in the minds of some hon. gentlemen in this House, that under the circumstances it would be better to accept this Bill as suggested by the hon. senator from Lindsay, striking out the amendments that were made by the Senate, because nobody can suffer. In the meantime the promoters ask for these changes, and it appears to me if the people want a road from Verner, or a point west of Verner, they will have an opportunity of coming next session and getting the road built from that point.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The hon. gentleman laughs, but probably he is not aware of the distance from Sturgeon Falls to the point where they wish to start. It is thirteen miles.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is about eleven miles.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—From Sturgeon Falls to Cache Bay is three miles, and from Cache Bay to Verner is eight miles, and they ask to start this road from a point two miles west of Verner.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Not necessarily.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. It is so explained by the hon. gentleman from Rideau, because they do ask to start from that point, to overcome engineering difficulties which they could not overcome by going north from Verner. My information is—and I have collected some information since the matter was discussed in the House the other day—that the population is altogether east of Verner, and is north, and the two townships that contain the largest population will be accommodated by the road running from Sturgeon Falls. I am informed, according to the information that is at hand, that the population in the township of Springer is 1,500, the population of Biglow 1,000, the population of Field 500. Those three townships adjoin each other, and the road runs between two of the townships, I am also informed—and the petition read here to-day confirms the information almost accurately—that following the line, as proposed in the Bill as amended by the Senate, running from Domremy—because that is where they propose to run from—following that line as nearly as possible to the lake, that there is not over two hundred of a population to the west side of the lake. The total population of the district is some 3,000, and I am informed that 90 per cent of the population is to the east of the line suggested by the Senate. It appears to me that if it is desired to accommodate the settlers, the right direction would be running from Sturgeon Falls. There is no doubt in my mind—and there should not be any doubt in the mind of any hon. gentleman in this House—that the fact that those who come to this parliament, and ask for the change are the men which control the charter and that eight out of nine ask that the charter should be amended to allow them to run from Sturgeon Falls, should be sufficient evidence that these men are not going to build a road from Verner or any place other than Sturgeon Falls. The interests of the people of Sturgeon Falls, should be considered, and the interests of the settlers, and it appeals to me—and I think must appeal to the judgment of this House—that a place like Sturgeon Falls where as the hon. leader of the opposition has told us, the people is growing rapidly—and I have no doubt it is——

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I did not say that myself. I only repeated what others said.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I have no doubt the people is increasing rapidly. I have been informed that about seventy houses have been constructed this year, because there is a large paper-mill there, and a pulp-mill is to be erected. About a quarter of a million has been invested, and more will be invested during the coming season. It is the most natural thing in the world, that the people who own the pulp and paper works, and who are also the people who own the charter, should want the road built to Sturgeon Falls instead of Verner, no doubt for the purpose of facilitating their trade. There is another reason why they wanted to go to Sturgeon Falls. It is only three miles from Sturgeon Falls to Cache Bay—that is a bay on Lake Nipissing—and there the company I believe calculate on being able to make arrangements with the Canadian Pacific Railway to utilize the Canadian Pacific Railway from Sturgeon Falls to Cache Bay, and then run north, using some three miles of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which will accommodate the people, and give them connection with Lake Nipissing as well as the lake up north. The suggestion is made by the hon. leader of the opposition that he would like, if it were possible, to refer this matter back to the committee, but that cannot be done this session.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Why not ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—There will not be time. It is almost impossible to get a committee. I know that one committee was called this morning, and could not hold a session because there was no quorum, and I know the other day that members of the House who were not members of the committee had to attend at the meeting, to enable the committee to do anything. In the good judgment of this House we ought to approve of the suggestion of the hon. gentleman who represents that district, because I agree with the hon. gentleman from Wolseley that we should accept what the gentlemen who have some knowledge of that locality say. The hon. gentlemen in the House of Commons representing the district interested want this Bill in the form in which it passed the House of Commons. The hon. senator who represents the district in this House moves to accept it as passed by the House of Commons, and that ought to be sufficient reason for the House to concur in the suggestions made by the gentleman from Lindsay and pass this Bill as sent up from the House of Commons, eliminating the changes made by the Senate. Doubts have been thrown on the minds of hon. gentlemen as to the wisdom of the changes that were made by the Senate. It seems to me, as an hon. member of this House, that if we alter the Bill asked for by the promoters in such a way that they will not want it, and will not build the road, we are simply killing the Bill ; in fact the promoters, I believe, would just as soon have no Bill at all as a Bill passed with these two clauses. I think the hon. gentleman from Toronto will agree that we had better give them the Bill that they ask for, hoping that they will go on and build the road, and then nobody will suffer. If they do not get the Bill in that form, they will not build the road west of Verner.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—I have not the slightest intention or desire of suggesting anything that would have the effect of killing the Bill. That is not my idea in expressing the hope that it may be referred back to committee. On the contrary, I think there will be no difficulty in getting the Railway Committee together, and the result may be that with all this additional information, and the statements my hon. friend has made, the committee may come to the conclusion that they will agree to the amendments made by the House of Commons, and that will end the whole matter.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think I would be in order to move an amendment to the amendment. The original motion is to concur and then there is a motion not to concur, and an amendment to that second motion may be in order.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I do not think it would be in order to refer it back to the committee without the universal consent of the House. We have passed that stage and the matter is being dealt with by the two Houses. The question of dispute has arisen, and that is not a matter for a committee to deal with, except a committee of conference.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The committee of conference is only in case of disagreement between the two Houses.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is what has happened in the present instance.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Is it not competent for the House to send any matter to any one of its committees by a vote of the majority.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I do not think it.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—How could we arrive at the fact without it ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The time to arrive at the facts has practically gone by. The question is whether we will give effect to the wishes of those who own the charter.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Subject to the ruling of the Chair, if the motion which I have suggested were to refer it back to the Railway Committee to reconsider it, I think the hon. Minister of Justice would be quite correct in the objection he has taken, but that is not my motion. The Senate was asked to concur in the amendment on the former occasion and the motion was made to refer it back to committee for further consideration. That was voted down. That was a distinct and positive motion. The Bill was sent to the House of Commons. The House of Commons reject our amendments, and send it back to us. A motion is made not to insist upon our amendments. An amendment is moved that we insist upon the amendments. I suggest to make the motion that the reasons given by the House of Commons be referred to the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours for the purpose of taking evidence as to the correctness of the statements which have been made pro and con by both sides. That is the position I take.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That would not be respectful to the House of Commons.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Respectful to the House of Commons ? I like that. It would not be respectful to the House of Commons for us to consider whether the reasons which they have given are correct, or the reasons which were given to the Senate to induce them to take the position they did were correct. We might just as well say that the House of Commons was disrespectful to the Senate. We take action upon statements made to us which we believe to be correct. The Commons say that those statements are not correct ; ergo that is an insult to the Senate. I do not desire to be disrespectful to the House of Commons by any means, but I am in the position of my hon. friend to my left (Hon. Mr. Allan). We have had positive statements made upon what we presume to be good authority, or they would not be made, by the hon. members from Halifax and Marquette. I have drafted an amendment as follows :

That the reasons given by the Commons for rejecting the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (118) be referred to the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours, for the purpose of considering such reasons and taking evidence as to the correctness of the statements made by the promoters and those opposing the Bill.

I am not wedded to the wording of this motion. The wording may be changed. I do not make this motion to defeat the Bill. The chairman of the Railway Committee tells me he will call a meeting for to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I should like to say that it appears to me it does not make any difference what decision the Railway Committee may reach as to this Bill, that if they see fit to stand by the amendments made by them the other day it defeats the Bill, for the reason that the promoters will not build the road from Verner.

Hon. Mr. CLEMOW—How does the hon. gentleman know ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I know from the promoters, and if they will not accept the Bill, and the Bill is of no use, you may just as well reject it now in the House. I do not for a moment suppose that the leader of the opposition has any intention of killing the Bill by referring it to the Railway Committee, but if the committee insist on the amendments they made before remaining in that Bill, it is of no further use to the promoters. You might as well kill the Bill here now.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That does not change the matter one iota. If they can establish the truth of the statements made by the hon. gentleman from Halifax I will change my opinion at once and vote for the Bill, and so I am quite sure other members would.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The witnesses who will speak with knowledge of the subject are not, I presume, all here to-day, and if the hon. chairman of the Railway Committee should summon the Railway Committee for to-morrow, the witnesses cannot be produced here from Sturgeon Falls, and practically it means killing the Bill. This matter has occupied the time and attention of the committee long enough, and the better way is to dispose of it and let us go on with more important business.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If Mr. McHugh, the member who was promoting this Bill, and the hon. senator from Lindsay desire to have it postponed for two or three days, I am sure the committee would do so. What I want to arrive at is who is telling the truth in this matter.

Hon. Mr. BOLDUC—The hon. gentleman from Halifax said the other day in this House that there was no hurry to pass a Bill because we would sit here for some days more, and if the witnesses that he speaks of cannot be here to-morrow, there is no hurry, and they may be called for next week. The House ought not to recede from the amendments without fully understanding whether they are right or not.

The Senate divided on the amendment to the amendment, which was rejected by the following vote :

Hon. Mr. POWER—On the question of order, the motion moved by the hon. gentleman from Lindsay is that the Senate do not insist. This amendment to that motion is a direct negative. The regular way is to take the vote on the motion of the hon. gentleman from Lindsay. I contend the hon. gentleman is out of order.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—There is no question the amendment is correct, only it might be put in this way, to strike out all the words after the original motion.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I should like a ruling on the question of order.

The SPEAKER—I do not know any rule which would make the motion out of order, particularly if made in the way suggested. The question is on the amendment to the main motion.

SECOND READING.

Bill (93) 'An Act to confer on the Commissioner of Patents certain powers for the relief of the Servis Railroad Tie Plate Company of Canada, Limited.—(Hon. Mr. McKay.)

CHINESE IMMIGRATION RESTRICTION BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resumed in Committee of the Whole consideration of Bill (180), 'An Act respecting and restricting Chinese immigration.'

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—What the committee had in view in the proposed amendment was that where a man, not of Chinese origin, who was married to a woman of Chinese origin, the children should take the same position as the wife herself. Sub-clause 'd' of clause 4 reads as follows :

The expression 'Chinese immigrant' means any person of Chinese origin (including any person either of whose parents was of Chinese origin) entering Canada and not entitled to the privilege of exemption provided for by section 6 of this Act.

It was suggested, and I move, that that be altered to read as follows :—

The expression 'Chinese immigrant' means any person of Chinese origin whose father was of Chinese origin, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Then subsection 4 of section 6, I think, would read more intelligibly this way and correspond with the change in subsection d. The addition which I move is :

And the children shall be deemed to be of the same origin as the father.

The amendment was agreed to.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I shall postpone any remarks I have to make to the third reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. McKAY, from the committee, reported the Bill with amendments, which were concurred in.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (11), 'An Act to amend the Pilotage Act.'—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

Bill (182), 'An Act respecting the construction of a branch railway from Charlottetown to Murray Harbour.'—(Hon. Mr. Mills.)

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Thursday, July 5, 1900.

The Speaker took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

REMISSION OF FEES TO PROMOTERS OF BILLS.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. OWENS moved :

That the fees paid upon the following Bills : (H) 'An Act respecting the Great Eastern Railway Company,' (I) 'An Act respecting the Montreal Bridge Company,' (J) 'An Act respecting the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company,' de refunded to the promoter, less the costs of printing and translation, inasmuch as it appears by the Votes and Proceedings of the House of Commons, of date 29th and 30th June last, that the said Bills have not been passed by that House.

The motion was agreed to.

SECOND READING.

Bill (176) 'An Act to incorporate the South Shore Line Railway Company.'—(Hon. Mr. Gillmor.)

CUSTOMS TARIFF BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (184) 'An Act to amend the Customs Tariff, 1897.'

(In the Committee.)

On the first clause,

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I move the adoption of this clause.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend might explain to the House the principal provisions of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I cannot add anything to what the Bill actually contains. My hon. friend knows that in the Customs Tariff which was adopted in 1897, there was a discrimination in favour of the United Kingdom and of certain of the colonies to the extent of 25 per cent. That discrimination, under the provisions of this Bill, amounts to 33⅓ per cent, and in addition to that, there is a provision that machinery of a class not made in Canada, when imported exclusively for use in factories for the manufacture of beet root sugar, be admitted free of duty. Those are all the provisions of the Bill. There is nothing further contained in it. There is the reduction of the discrimination in favour of the United Kingdom, and of certain colonies, to the extent of thirty-three and a third per cent—just one-third less than the tax imposed on importations from foreign countries.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I would have expected my hon. friend would have given us information as to the reasons which have induced the government to propose an extension of the preference given, in 1897—that he would have furnished us with some figures to show that this was a preference that really did prefer—that in consequence of the success that had attended the operation of the tariff in this particular instance, it was proposed to go a little further, and also, it might lead to the discussion of some other questions in connection with it. But at least, I thought we would be supplied with some information bearing on the increase of British trade as resulting from the operation of the preferential tariff.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I think that increase has taken place. This question was fully discussed in the House of Commons, to which House the tariff particularly belongs. It was shown there that the preference has contributed to an increase of trade with the United Kingdom; further than that, it has created in the mother country a feeling of sympathy with and interest in Canada which did not exist before the adoption of this principle, and which is largely due to its adoption. My hon. friend knows that, so far as the mercantile and manufacturing classes of the mother country are concerned, they had taken but little interest in Canada, and had not given us their moral support for a great many years towards immigration and towards Canadian enterprise, largely because it was thought we had taxed the products of the mother country unduly while the products of Canada passed into the British market without being subjected to any special burden. We believe that the adoption of a reduction of 25 per cent in favour of the mother country was of very great advantage, and that the result of that justified the government in taking a further step, and that further step is discriminating in favour of the United Kingdom to the extent of 33⅓ per cent.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am not one of those—indeed I do not know if there are any in this country—who objected to the preference given to Great Britain and her colonies under the tariff of 1897. The objection to the proposal, in the first instance, was because the government of the day seemed to imitate the instinct of a certain beast of the field that butts against a stone wall. They introduced a reciprocal tariff, ignoring altogether the existence of a favoured nation's clause and the German and Belgian treaties. They introduced it in that way first, and the result was they were met with adverse criticism and gentlemen in the opposition told the government then that they were attempting to do what they could not do. It is true the gentlemen in the government were very sanguine that they were not attempting anything that they had not the full and complete power to do. I have been looking over some remarks made on that occasion, especially the observations of gentlemen who took a very prominent part in that discussion when the resolution was introduced and it will be in the recollection of hon. gentlemen that the government of that time claimed that they were not giving a preference to Great Britain—they disclaimed the use of the word 'preference' altogether. It was to be a reciprocal tariff by which they were to give the same advantages to all countries under the sun that would give us the benefit of a tariff equal to what we were enacting. They were told very plainly at that time by the gentlemen in the opposition in the other branch of parliament that they were taking a position that they could not carry out. Here are the words used by Sir Louis Davies in reply :

When this resolution was tabled the hon. gentleman declared it an illegal and unconstitutional resolution. Can he lay his finger upon a single paragraph published in any newspaper of weight in the world endorsing that extravagant statement of his; can he produce the opinion of a prominent lawyer or even of a fledgling lawyer endorsing the absurd and ridiculous statement made by him that the resolution was unconstitutional and illegal.

It turned out that the gentleman who made this strong statement had to eat humble pie on the question before very long, and the government itself had to come down and amend its resolution, because it was impossible that the Governor General could have sanctioned the resolution as introduced first, in view of Lord Ripon's despatch, of 1895. Finding their position was altogether untenable, the government had to amend their resolution in order to meet the objections which Sir Charles Tupper had raised at the outset, and which Sir Louis Davies declared no fledgling lawyer would be got to endorse. It was on the strength of this position, that they were giving no preference to Great Britain, that the Premier of the country, while in England, accepted the Cobden medal—with the distinct understanding, as expressed by Lord Farrar when he conferred the medal upon him, that 'if we thought you intended, and your proposition meant a preference to England over other countries, we would not be here to honour you on this occasion.' He accepted the medal with the distinct understanding that it was not a preference at all, but a reciprocal tariff. Later on, at the next session of parliament, the government changed all that. I do not know that there are any, certainly not in the opposition, that ever found fault with giving a preference to England, but we did find fault with the statement that we wanted nothing in return for it, and we complained that, on the other hand, the Premier had advised England not to give us anything in return for it. It was for that course which the government took, in 1897, with regard to this question that we find ourselves in the position we occupy to-day. We are increasing that preference now. In 1898 we converted what was called a reciprocal tariff in the first instance, to a preference tariff. We gave then the preference to England which the government said we were not doing in 1897, and under which assurance the Premier had accepted the Cobden medal. In support of what I have said, I wish to point out to this committee that before the last election, this government, in dealing with this question, proclaimed before the country that it was not simply to give a preference, but they wanted a preference in return, and they believed they were going to get that preference. I will just refer to what the Premier said in a speech in London, Ont., in 1896, before the last election. It is as follows :

We would have for our goods a preference which would not be given to the goods of another nation. That practical statesman, Mr. Chamberlain, has come to the conclusion that the time has come when it is possible within the bounds of the empire for another step to be taken which will give to the colonies in England a preference for their products over the products of other nations. What would be the possibilities of such a step if it was taken ? We sell our goods in England. We sell our butter, our cheese, all our natural products. But there we have to compete with similar products from the United States, from Russia and other nations. Just see what an advantage it would be to Canada if the wheat and cheese and butter which we send to England be met with a preference over similar products of other nations. Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, the new and progressive Secretary of the Colonies has declared that the time has come when it is possible to discuss this question.

This was the declaration of the Premier in London, and in Montreal a short time afterwards he said :

In regard to this question of preferential trade I desire to say that Sir Charles Tupper is no more in favour of the idea than I am myself. My hope is—nay, my conviction is—that on the 23rd of June the Liberal party will be at the head of the polls, and that it will be the Liberal party, with its policy of a revenue tariff, that will send commissioners to London to arrange for a basis of preferential trade.

At this time, after Sir Charles had addressed a meeting in Montreal on the question of preferential trade, the Globe said :

Why should Sir Charles Tupper waste his time and breath in advocating preferential trade when it is a policy which every one in this country will hold up his hands in support of. The battle has to be fought in England.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—What was understood by preferential trade was a preference given to products of the other parts of the empire, and a reciprocal advantage given for the products of our country over other countries. We do not find fault with the government, and never would have raised any objection if they had squarely proposed a preference, in the first instance, for Great Britain, subject, of course, to the revocation of the Belgian and German treaties, but we held that it should be coupled at least, with an honest effort to obtain compensating advantages for the products of Canada in the markets of Great Britain and in the markets of the other parts of the empire. Instead, however, of taking that step, the Premier of Canada, when he went to England in 1897, took an extraordinary course. After declaring to the people of Canada, that he was as favourable to preferential trade as Sir Charles Tupper was, after pointing out to the electors what they had to hope for on the accession to power of the Liberal party—because they were going to send a commission to England to press this question of preferential trade, and owing to their fair trade policy that they would have a very much greater chance of getting it than the Conservatives—after taking that position, the Premier, when he landed in England, changed his position entirely. I will be excused for reading his English remarks again, because it is important that they should be kept on record. The leader of the government, when he spoke on the first occasion, before the meeting with the provincial Premiers, and before conference with the colonial minister at all, in response to an address of welcome when he met Lord Hartington and others shortly after his arrival, spoke as follows :

I claim for the present government of Canada that they have passed a resolution by which the products of Great Britain are admitted in the rate of our tarif at 12½ per cent and next year at 25 per cent reduction. This we have done not costing any compensation. There is a class of our citizens who ask that all such concessions should be made for a 'quid pro quo.' The Canadian government has ignored all such statements. We have done it because we owe a debt of gratitude to Great Britain. We have done it because it is no intention of ours to disturb in any way the system of free trade which has done so much for England.

We would have thought the hon. gentleman might have left the people of England to take care of their own interests instead of being solicitous for what he imagined was their interests. The extract continues :

What we give you by our tariff, we give you in gratitude for the splendid freedom under which we have prospered. It is a free gift. We ask no compensation.

It was no wonder that this declaration created a considerable amount of surprise in England. Mr. Chamberlain, who had been giving this question a good deal of consideration, and who had on more than one occasion indicated his readiness to depart from the strict principles of free trade in order to build up this grand idea of Imperial unity——

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Never.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend says never, but fortunately I have the proof under my hand, and if my statement is challenged, I will have no difficulty whatever in producing it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. minister says that the hon. gentleman has not got it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It is sufficient for me to read what Mr. Chamberlain said after hearing Sir Wilfrid's declaration. Immediately after hearing this declaration of the Premier of Canada, and after meeting the Premiers and finding that the Premier of Canada had declared that he did not want anything, that he had given this preference purely out of gratitude, and wanted no preference from Great Britain. Mr. Chamberlain said :

It would have been hard enough to carry through the idea——

What idea? The idea he had been outlining and discussing and giving the sanction of his name and the great weight of his influence too.

It would have been hard enough to carry through the idea, had all the colonies been persistent and enthusiastic advocates of it, but Canada does not favour it and New South Wales opposed it. These are the leading colonies and with them in practical opposition it becomes impossible and I would not now touch it with a pair of tongs.

He was disguested, and disappointed with this declaration. He felt that a setback had been given to this work upon which he had been inviting discussion and upon which he had shown he entertained advanced opinions and opinions favourable to the colonies. My hon. friend said that Mr. Chamberlain never took that position.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I do say that he never took the position that my hon. friend takes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend should have got Lord Rosebery set right also, because Lord Rosebery was entirely of my opinion.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—And English statesmen do not speak except by the book. Lord Rosebery said, after hearing Sir Wilfrid's declaration :

> Mr. Chamberlain had a proposal which had some force and gained some strength, but it must now be approached with the reverence due to a corpse for Canada's Premier has said that if the British Empire is to be maintained it can only be on the condition of the most absolute free trade.

Here not only did Mr. Chamberlain himself recognize that a tremendous setback had been given to this proposal at that time, but his opponent, Lord Rosebery, taunted him with having got this slap in the face. He said that Mr. Chamberlain's proposition had some force and had acquired some strength, and got considerable support, but now, it was entitled to the respect only due to a corpse, in consequence of what the Canadian Premier had said. I will now quote from an influential journal of public opinion in Great Britain, the Trade Journal. During the jubilee discussion of 1897 that journal said :

> From the day Sir Wilfrid landed in England until the day he left he seems to be obvious to the fact that in his mission he was the representative of all Canada. He seems rather to have imagined that he was sent there for his own self glorification and in the interests of his party * * * When he arrived in England he found a large and influential section of the politicians and press full of enthusiasm over the preferential policy of Canada, and energetically discussing the corresponding duty of finding some equivalant advantage which Great Britain might confer on Canada, even if by so doing it might be necessary to modify the free trade policy of the past fifty years * * * * * It was an act of supreme folly for him to tell the British government and people that Canada neither hoped nor desired any preference for its products on the markets of the mother country.

This is from an independent organ of commercial opinion in Great Britain on that occasion. The opposition never entertained any objections to giving a preference to Great Britain or the colonies in our markets, even if, at the time, it was not met simultaneously with a corresponding advantage in their markets, but we held this ground—and that was the view that Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his friends held before the people of this country—that the advantage should be mutual in some form or other. It was emphatically proper for the Trades Journal to say that it was extreme folly of the Premier of Canada to tell the people of England : 'We do not want you to disturb your free trade policy ; we give this as a gift and we want nothing in return for it.'

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Where is the Trades Journal published ?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—In London, I think.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I think not. It is a Canadian journal.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It is an English paper. It is not a Canadian journal.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is no paper in Canada of that name.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Wherever the paper is published it is a fair comment. It must be published in England, when I look at it : it bears inherent evidence of the fact. The trend of events at that time—although a tremendous set back was undoubtedly given to it owing to Sir Wilfrid Laurier's declaration in England—was in favour of a preference to the colonies. Our preference to England was calculated, as my hon. friend said, to create a good feeling towards Canada, and give growth to this Imperial sentiment in Canada, as showing a close bond of relationship that we recognize as between ourselves and the mother country. There is no question that it was calculated, even if we did not get it at the time, to bring about a corresponding return. What I complained of at the time, and what I complain of now is, that the Premier of Canada declared we did not want any return. He did not say absolutely that we would not accept it, but he created the impression that Canada would not accept it even if it were offered. I am not finding any fault with the proposition to increase this preference by 8⅓ per cent. It will now, on some articles, become when this last step is taken, in reality a preference, which it is not in many cases up to the present time, for it is within the recollection of hon. gentlemen that this government took very good care to put many articles to which that preference is applied, about 5 per cent up before they allowed the preference.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—In some cases 10 per cent.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am entirely within the mark when I say many articles which had been 25 per cent were put up to 30, others raised from 30 to 35 per cent, and so on, and the reduction was so small and inappreciable that it was absolutely no preference except in the case of a very few articles while it remained 12½ per cent. When it reached 25 per cent, it began to be felt, but felt only slightly, for I think the trade returns show that the increase in our trade with Britain has not been very great. I am free to admit, however, that this further preference which it is proposed to give has every chance to become more effective than the others were. What I find fault with is, that coupled with these preferences, is the emphatic declaration of the Premier of Canada on record that Canada did not wish for anything in return for all this, and the effect of that declaration has been to very seriously retard that movement which was growing up strongly in Great Britain in favour of a preferential tariff within the empire. To show that, notwithstanding all that has been done, this sentiment is growing, I have to point hon. gentlemen to a cablegram which appeared in our press a few days ago. I have the Toronto Globe in my hand containing a cablegram announcing the meeting of the Chambers of Commerce, in London, on the 28th of June, and hon. gentlemen are aware that some of our boards of trade during the last winter passed resolutions looking to the imposition of customs duty by Great Britain and all the colonies on foreign products for the purpose of defence. A resolution of that character was passed by the Montreal Board of Trade, and by the Board of Trade of the city of Ottawa, and I think, with some slight modifications, by the Toronto Board of Trade and other boards of trade in the Dominion. Some representatives of these boards of trade attended the meetings of the conference, and it is a great gratification to find, by the cablegram to which I have referred, that this principle has been adopted by the congress of the boards of trade of the empire, meeting in London, on the 28th of June. The cablegram is as follows:—

The Montreal resolution in favour of a conference on Imperial defence, and suggesting a small uniform ad valorem import duty as the best method for all portions of the empire to contribute, was carried, there being only one dissentient.

The cablegram to the Star of the same day corresponds with that. It says:

At the Chamber of Commerce meeting to-day Mr. Hadrill proposed that the colonies should contribute towards the Imperal army and navy, and urged the Imperial government to convene an Imperial conference to consider the whole question. Mr. Geoffrion opposed the proposal. He said Canada did the best she could for defences out of sympathy, and did not desire Imperial taxation. The resolution was adopted with three or four dissentients.

Evidently the reference is to the same resolution, and that resolution, we are told by the Globe despatch, is the Montreal proposition. I have not been able to get the Montreal resolution, but I have the resolution passed by the Ottawa Board of Trade, which is practically the same—I think even verbally the same, but it is the Ottawa resolution I am reading. It is as follows:

Resolution No. 1.—Whereas the second congress of the Chambers of Commerce of the empire declared, in 1892, 'That arrangements should be divised to secure closer commercial union between the mother country and her colonies and dependencies,' and 'That a commercial union within the British Empire on the basis of freer trade would tend to promote its permanence and prosperity.'

And whereas, it has been generally admitted that the colonies should contribute towards the cost of Imperial defence, and, as a matter of fact, colonial forces have participated with those of the United Kingdom, in defending the integrity of the empire;

Therefore, be it resolved, that, in the opinion of this congress, a certain degree of closer commercial union among the countries of the empire can be most conveniently established, a step towards the introduction of inter-British free trade most readily taken, and the responsibilities of each part of the empire most equitably borne by providing a revenue for its defence, and other common Imperial purposes, from the proceeds of a small uniform duty (over and above those of the local tariffs, where any such are levied) on all importations from foreign countries into every part of the empire.

Resolution No. 2.—That this congress respectfully requests the president to appoint a deputation to wait upon the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, and represent to him the desirability of convening a conferenece of representatives appointed by the governments of the mother country, its colonies and dependencies, to consider the subject and terms of the foregoing resolution.

This resolution, I am told, is practically the same as the Montreal resolution and I may be permitted to read a letter to the secretary of the board of trade here from the secretary of the board of trade of Montreal, which shows that this resolution is substantially the resolution of the Montreal Board of Trade.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—What is the relevancy of this to the Bill.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The relevancy is just this: This congress has recognized the principle of imposing a small customs tariff imposed on the productions of foreign countries for the purposes of defence. It is for defence, but that does not in the slightest degree reduce the importance of the proposition, because it involves a preference for the colonies as against foreign countries. The moment that the empire in all its parts imposes for defence, or for any other purpose, a duty as against foreign trade we have really established the principle of a commercial union within the empire, and I produce this to show that there is a strong growing opinion in Great Britain to take a step in advance on this question. I read this in support of what I have already stated, as to what Mr. Chamberlain said, in 1896, what he said again, in 1897, and the declaration which he has put on record on many occasions from that time forward. I was going on to read the letter of the secretary of the Board of Trade of Montreal, my object being to show that the Ottawa resolution, which I have read, is substantially the same as the Montreal resolution which has been adopted by this congress of the boards of trade of Great Britain.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Did I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the resolution had been adopted?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Yes.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, the resolution was referred to a committee.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The principle was adopted. All that the conference could do was to suggest. I quote that as showing that this question of preferential trade within the empire—not to take all and give nothing, but for mutual defence or any other purpose—to show that this proposition is making substantial progress in the mother country, because this great representative gathering has, according to this resolution, suggested a uniform customs tariff on the products of foreign countries. I will now read the letter of the secretary of the Board of Trade of Montreal to the Board of Trade of the city of Ottawa:

I beg to acknowledge receipt of your circular letter of 22nd inst. communicating the resolution of your board upon the subjects of 'Commercial Relations between the Mother Country and Her Colonies and Dependencies,' and 'Defences of the Empire,' and to express the council's satisfaction that the views of your board agree so well with the resolutions adopted by this board on the same subjects.

I thought it necessary to read this letter, because by it the Board of Trade of Montreal adopts, as it were, the Ottawa resolution and agrees entirely with it, and it throws a meaning on this cable stating that the chamber of commerce have agreed to this proposition suggesting a small uniform ad valorem duty for all parts of the empire against foreign countries for purposes of defence, and they had this proposition before them which I have read to the House. I submit that to the House as further evidence on this point, that it is not by any means beyond hope that we might obtain this preference in the British market. The action of this government in declaring, as the Premier did, that we wanted no preference, and advising them not to give it, was against the interest of this country. We find no fault, as I have said, with giving a preference, because we believe that good will come from it, and because we feel like showing our good-will to all parts of the empire; but we do protest against the action of the Premier in 1897.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman commenced his observations by stating that, while he was in favour of a preference tariff, yet it had really no marked influence on the trade between the two countries. That I deny. I have before me an extract from the Trade and Navigation returns, and I find that from the year 1894 the importations from England were gradually falling off. They were: In 1894, $38,000,000; in 1895, $31,000,000; in 1896, $32,000,000. In 1897, the year in which we introduced the preference tariff, they were down to $29,000,000, the lowest point they had touched in probably thirty years. When the preferential tariff was introduced, although the proportion was only one-eighth, it not only stopped the decrease in importations, but the imports commenced to rise. Our preferential tariff, giving only ⅛ reduction on the ordinary tariff, was passed on April 23, 1897. In that year, the importations had fallen to $29,000,000. In the following year, 1898, the importations had risen to $32,000,000. In 1899, they had risen to $37,000,000, an increase in the first year of $3,000,000; and in the second year of $5,000,000. That is a marked increase, because we know the tendency of trade was to drift towards the United States. There were many causes for that. The United States manufacturers were producing iron goods at a very much lower value than they had for many years previously.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Will the hon. gentleman state what was the corresponding increase in the same period in the trade with the United States ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That has nothing to do with the question. We were buying more largely in the United States, because we were getting articles cheap. We were buying steel rails in the United States as Great Britain was. The United States were sending over locomotives to Great Britain and other countries in Europe. Certain conditions had favoured the development of iron manufacturers in the United States, and they were getting ahead of other nations in those manufactures in which iron is used. Importations of articles into which iron largely enters were increased largely. Moreover, to the benefit of our own people we had placed on the free list very many articles which were the raw material of our manufacturers, and in tnat way we had benefited our own people. We had given them cheaper goods. We cut the iron duties right in two to begin with.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What articles did you put on the free list other than barbed wire and binder twine ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We reduced the duties on iron one-half in some lines and in others more.

Hon Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is not an answer to the question I asked.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is a very wide question and it is only incidentally referred to here. Granted that a corresponding increase took place elsewhere, it does not affect this question. Our people were able to buy more, and the English exporter was seeking Canada for a market. I have shown that in 1897 British imports had fallen to $29,000,000 and I have shown a revival after the adoption of the preference tariff, which ought to clearly carry conviction to the mind of any hon. gentleman who is open to a fair judgment that it had a marked effect at all events. I am glad to say in the last year, when the full reduction of 25 per cent took place, for the three-quarters of the year ending with 1900, the importations from Britain were $34,906,000, and allowing for the other quarter, the proportion being the same, it would be eight million five hundred and six thousand, the importations would have risen to $42,632,000, a point they had not reached for the last eight or ten years. That is pretty conclusive. At all events, it has resulted in improved trade. The British people believe so. They think there has been some advantage. It has been an advantage. Would we have imported as much from Great Britain had we met imports from Great Britain with the same tariff as against all other countries ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, I do not think we would. We would have manufactured them ourselves.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman says we would have manufactured them ourselves. We would not have got them as cheaply if we had.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We are not discussing the question of cheapness.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman endeavoured to confuse the methods by which we adopted the preferential tariff. He has not found fault with our reaching the goal, but he says we reached it by devious ways, that we did not proceed in the way we intended at first to proceed. Well, we proceeded in the way that brought success, and that is the most important point. For the last thirty years Canada had been hampered with this favoured nations clause. It was inserted in the treaties with some countries before confederation, and when Canada's voice was not so strong, perhaps, as it is in the court of St. James to-day. We were hampered. There was no use attempting to create any tariff in favour of Great Britain until we got rid of the favoured nation clause, and as hon. gentlemen know, we went at in our own way. We decided that we would not admit foreign goods on the same plane as British goods. The law officers maintained that our law was bad, that we had no power to do it, that we were legislating against Imperial interests. Well, we said, we recognized what Canadian interests are, and what Imperial interests are, and it is our view that those treaties have to be disallowed. We knew very well, with two such important countries as Germany and Belgium, Germany being a great ally of Great Britain, and Belgium, a warm friend, that it was a delicate thing for Great Britain to say to them : 'Canada demands that we annul the treaties that have been prevailing for thirty or forty years.' Great Britain had many advantages in German and Belgian ports. The treaty was considered of very great importance to Great Britain. Yet we took a firm stand. We said : 'We are going to maintain that we will not allow those goods to come in, notwithstanding there is a treaty.' The law officers stood by the Imperial view. Yet in the end we conquered and had our way, and a proclamation was made in due course and the Belgian treaty was revoked, and the German treaty was revoked. The hon. gentleman says we then decided on the preference to Great Britain. We did that for very many reasons wholly apart from any corresponding advantages which could be had. We knew that there was an equivalent already given. It was not a question of barter in the future. We recognized that Canada was being protected by the British government all over the world, that our citizenship, as part of the empire, was recognized in all countries over the universe, and we had the benefit of the British consuls and British ambassadors at the various courts and that was something of extreme value. We had her fleets on the Atlantic and Pacific coast defending our shores. We had an Imperial garrison stationed at Halifax. All that was more than an equivalent for what we were offering Great Britain. The hon. gentleman says 'Oh, but you could have got something more equivalent.' I deny that most emphatically. It is absolutely impossible. Even if we had withheld the preferential tariff and made it a matter of bargain, we could not have overcome British opinion in the short space of one, two, three, four, five or six years. The hon. gentleman says that Sir Wilfrid Laurier made a speech at London. I daresay he did—probably made the very speech the hon. gentleman has read. I do not doubt it. He was hopeful, like a good many others, that something could be done, but when Sir Wilfrid Laurier got to England and found himself in the atmosphere of the men who governed the destinies of that country, he knew perfectly well that it was idle to propose any such thing. He would have made himself ridiculous if he had announced it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then why did he advocate it in Canada ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He did not advocate it. He said : 'We do not ask an equivalent.' He knew he could not get it. It would have been like the boy crying for the moon. It was an absolute impossibilty. It was not within the range of possibilities that you could convert the opinions of forty millions of people in a short time and make them tax their bread and meat in order that Canadians might gain some slight advantage of a few cents a bushel on their wheat. The Canadian public are too patriotic, and there is too much loyalty.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Why was the Premier talking that way ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We are all talking that way. I would like to get it, but it is absolutely impossible.

Hon. Mr. PROWSE—That is a beautiful way to get it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have under my hand the official proceedings of the chamber of commerce, just before the Premier went to London. At that chamber of commerce all the representatives of the British industries attended, and not only they, but the Australian colonies, South Africa and all the other colonies.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I was there.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My hon. friend will recollect, probably, what Mr. Chamberlain said on that occasion. I will read in order that his memory may be refreshed. Mr. Chamberlain was presiding. The question came up. The colonies were anxious to get some equivalent. Mr. Chamberlain said :

> Well, I pass on to the second proposal which has been laid before a similar congress to this, which found expression at the great congress at Ottawa a year or two ago—that is a proposal which has been favoured by some of our principal colonies and described with great force and eloquence by leading colonists, and it is the very reverse, in spirit at any rate, of the proposal which I have just been considering.

Mr. Chamberlain's view was that if it was possible at all, it could only be by the establishment of a zollverein, as in Germany; that if the colonies were prepared to open their doors and admit British manufactures free of duty, while keeping up a duty against all the world, then it might be considered. How would that suit my hon. friend? How would it suit the protective tariff? All our industries would go by the board. It would not be possible. No man having any regard for the vast sums of money now invested in Canadian industries could think of accepting a proposition of that kind. It would entirely change all the conditions existing in Canada.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—I did not quite understand what the hon. Secretary of State read. Mr. Chamberlain said that if the colonies would abolish their tariff against England—what would England give?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Mr. Chamberlain did not say what he would do, but he said that was one of the things that might be discussed—that that was a possibility, that if all the colonies and Great Britain established a zollverein, as in Germany, free trade between themselves, it was a proposition that might be discussed. He did not say that even that could be carried at the present time, but it was one that was reasonably fair on the face of it, and would form the basis of a fiscal arrangement between the colonies and the mother country.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—That was the year before.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That does not make any difference. Things do not move quite so fast in England. Mr. Chamberlain continues:

> For whereas the first proposal requires that the colonies should abandon their system in favour of ours, this proposal requires that we should abandon our system in favour of theirs.

One system was that we should abandon our protective policy and allow British goods to come in free, and the other was that they should pay a duty on foreign goods and allow Canadian products to come in. The extract continues:

> It is, in effect, that while the colonies should be left absolutely free to impose whatever protective duties they please, both upon foreign countries, and upon British commerce, they should be required to make a small discrimination in favour of British trade, in return for which we are expected to change our whole system, and to impose duties on food and on raw materials. Well, gentlemen, I express again my own opinion when I say there is not the slightest chance that in any reasonable time this country, or the parliament of this country, would adopt so one-sided an agreement.

Those are the views of Mr. Chamberlain.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—What is the hon. Secretary of State reading from?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am reading the official report of the Chamber of Commerce at which Mr. Chamberlain was present in 1896.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—If the hon. Secretary of State will read fully from it he will find it supports the view I expressed.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am reading the language Mr. Chamberlain gave expression to. I am reading where he speaks of the two propositions, and I am going to read it through, as far as the propositions are concerned. It continues:

> The foreign trade of this country is so large, and the foreign trade of the colonies is comparatively so small, that a small preference given to us upon that foreign trade by the colonies would make so slight a difference, would be of so slight a benefit to the total volume of our trade, that I do not believe the working classes of this country would consent to make a revolutionary change, for what they would think to be an infinitesimal gain.

That is Mr. Chamberlain's opinion. Then, again, he goes on to discuss the other question. I need not take up the time of the House in reading it. He was only expressing an individual opinion, but he said if any change could take place it would be on the basis of a zollverein. It happened at that meeting there was a gentleman, a strong protectionist, sent from a city in this country, that probably has more advanced views on protection than any other city in Canada. I refer to Toronto. A gentleman who has a seat in the other House, Mr. Osler, was present at the meeting and prepared a resolution in the direction my hon. friend from Queen's has been suggesting, that some preference should be given to Canada in compensation for our preference tariff. Mr. Osler heard the views of those about him. He heard the opinions of the British representatives of the various boards of trade, and of the various members of parliament who were present at this meeting, because it was a gathering of the leading commercial minds of Great Britain. What does Mr. Osler say? He says:

> I will only repeat that in Canada we believe that certain concessions must be made if we are to get England to join us in a federation, and I think as Canadians we are willing to make these concessions. We believe it will be for our own interest and for the interest of the empire that we should do so. I thoroughly agree with all that Mr. Chamberlain has said that it is impossible for us to have in the meantime Great Britain imposing a duty upon their food products.

Can anything be more positive, can anything be more clear or more direct than that language? A representative sent over from Canada to advocate the adoption of a preference for Canadian products in the British market regards that as hopeless. He uses the word 'impossible.' He finds public opinion strongly against it. I admit there are men in Great Britain who would like to see it brought about. Some fifteen years ago a number of gentlemen there favoured Imperial federation, and they kept it up for twelve or thirteen years. It dragged out. Imperial federation was dead when this government took it up, and revived it simply by the adoption of the preference clause in our tariff. That gave new life and spirit to it, and the feeling is stronger to-day in Great Britain than it was at any time during the fifteen years in which that loyal association known as the Imperial Federation existed. They saw it was hopeless. There are many who will make speeches in favour of it, but take the 700 men who compose the House of Commons in Great Britain do you suppose you would get one-tenth of them to vote for it? No, you would not get one-twentieth to vote in favour of the proposition. When Sir Wilfrid found himself in such an atmosphere as that, would he not make a virtue of necessity, and say: 'Oh, we do not expect it; we do not look for it.'

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—He was not called upon to say anything.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It was a pleasant compliment for him to say what he did—what any one else would say under the circumstances. Will the hon. gentleman tell me, in the face of that language, that it was any use to propose such an offer? It would be quite idle. The hon. gentleman says: 'Oh, but at the congress in Ottawa, Montreal and Toronto, and the boards of trade all over they have asked for it.' I daresay they have. They would like to get it very much, but it is perfectly idle for them to make a proposition. Hon. gentlemen opposite seem to be trying to make the people in the country believe that we are throwing away our chances and giving up the opportunity of our lives to secure some equivalent for this preference, and they would say to the farmer: 'It would be an enormous advantage if you could get three or four cents a bushel for your wheat more than the farmers of the United States are getting.' Of course it would, but it is imposing on the credulity of the people to suggest it. It is assuming the farming element of the country have not common intelligence. Any of them who read the press, and who know the condition of things in Great Britain know that Great Britain could not maintain her supremecy if she attempted to make it more expensive for the working classes of Great Britain than it is to-day? If she is to have a large trade with China and Japan and large parts of Africa, is it not due to the fact that she can manufacture more cheaply than other countries can? And we are to ask her, as an equivalent for what we are offering, to tax the people of Great Britain in order that Canada may be benefited. I think there is more patriotism in Canada than that. I think we are living on a higher plane. We are more independent. Our people do not need it; and if we put it to the intelligent farmer of Canada whether he thinks it would be a fair thing that the 40,000,000 should be taxed in order that the farmer in Canada should get a cent or two more on his wheat, he would say: 'No, I am too independent for that, I can make my living without making the food dearer to the workingman in England.' But the opposition on the platform in the country tell us that Sir Wilfrid Laurier threw the chances away. They quote the Duke of Devonshire, but he disowned afterwards ever having made a statement that it was——

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—No, he did not disown it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—His letter is on record.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I have his letter.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. Secretary of State is putting a strained meaning on the language.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am very glad this question has come up, because public attention will now be directed to it at the present conference sitting in London to-day. When the resolution was first proposed it was hissed at. It did not get a respectable hearing, and they said: 'Surely you will allow it to go to conference and allow it to be discussed.' They said certainly, they recognized that that was a fair proposition, but that did not commit those who opposed it at first to adopt it afterwards. The Manchester school, who were very strong at the chamber, said: 'Oh, Canadians will have a perfect right to place their views before the chamber.' That is proper, at the chamber where the utmost freedom of discussion exists, where every one has a right to speak, but if they assume for a moment they are going to carry the Chamber of Commerce in favour of our getting a preference in the British market, they will be very much disappointed. That is all I can say. I hope the public attention of this country will be drawn to it, in order that the public mind will be educated on the subject. It is exceedingly fortunate, at the present period, that this chamber is meeting, because it would be a very good way of wiping away the cobwebs from this question, the attempt to make it appear that the Liberal party in some way or another sacrificed the rights of this country. The Liberal party have accomplished what the Conservative party never could accomplish. They were quite as anxious as we were to abolish the German and Belgian treaties, but they did not go about it in the right fashion—just as they were anxious to secure the recognition of our debenture stock in the trustee list. They had been pressing it for ten or fifteen years. They did not get there. We did, that is just the difference. We did not allow ordinary obstructions to stand in the way of repealing the Belgian and German treaties. We insisted on it being done, and it was done. Hon. gentlemen may find fault and criticise our methods of doing it. Success is the great criterion. Did we accomplish it? Did we succeed in what we were about? We certainly did, and we are now reaping the benefit of it, and I think that hon. gentlemen all recognize that Canada to-day stands on a very much higher plane than she did in 1896, that Canada has bloomed out into what is called a young matron, and the British people now regard Canada as entitled to a very different stand in regard to Imperial questions than on the former occasion. It has even been suggested by the British press that, in the arrangements to be made in South Africa, Canada ought to have a voice, that Canada's suggestions should be of value, that Canada's experience with the two races, and Canada's success under the government since confederation has been so marked that our voice is entitled to very great weight in the conference which may take place. All this is the best possible proof that we have moved forward, and are still moving forward on the lines I have indicated. I am glad the hon. gentleman from Marshfield approves of the present 33⅓ per cent preference. Without affecting our industries at all, it will have the effect of cheapening in a very great degree some important articles that the great body of the people use.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend the Secretary of State claims that the government are entitled to credit for having secured the abrogation of the German and Belgian treaties. Now, my hon. friend, if he will simply look over the history of that question—it is a matter of history now—will find that the action of the government on that question was precisely what the action of its predecessors had been, what the action of the conference which met in this chamber in 1894 was, in calling for the abrogation of these treaties. There is no question that the present government were exactly in line with their predecessors on that question. But it is equally well known, and certain as a matter of history, that it was not the action of the government of Canada alone, or of any one colony that brought about the abrogation of these treaties. Mr. Chamberlain is on record as saying that when he found all the colonial Premiers were unanimous in demanding the abrogation of these treaties, that the Imperial government were thus led to do it. It was not because the government of Canada had done precisely what its predecessors had done, but because, at the meeting of all the colonial Premiers, there was unanimity. As Mr. Chamberlain said, when they found that point was reached, they saw what their duty was and did it. My hon. friend accuses me and my friends of going before the people of this country and pointing out to them what a great advantage it would be to get a preference on their products in Great Britain, and he charges us with doing this, and that it is idle for us to do it. That is exactly what the Premier of this government did in 1896. He said :

> We would have for our goods a preference which would not be given to the goods of another nation. That practical statesman, Mr. Chamberlain, has come to the conclusion that the time has come when it is possible within the bounds of the empire for another step to be taken which will give to the colonies in England a preference for their products over the products of other nations. What would be the possibilities of such a step if it was taken ? We sell our goods in England. We sell our butter, our cheese, all our natural products. But there we have to compete with similar products from the United States, from Russia and other nations. Just see what an advantage it would be to Canada if the wheat and cheese and butter which we send to England be met with a preference over similar products of other nations. Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, the new and progressive Secretary of the Colonies, has declared that the time has come when it is possible to discuss this question.

This was in London, and he pointed out in that speech what an enormous advantage it would be to the farmers of Canada to have their products admitted free in Great Britain. We are not alone in pointing out the advantage it would be to our farmers. Sir Wilfrid took exactly the same position up to the last elections, and the Globe said Sir Charles Tupper was wasting his breath talking about it, because we were all of the same opinion. The hon. gentleman now says when we talk that way it is idle talk, and he does not want to have these speeches of his own leader and the policy of his own party brought before the electors ; but, nothwithstanding these declarations of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, not only that he was in favour of it, not only that preferential trade meant an advantage for our products in Great Britain, but his contention was that on the 23rd of June, when the electors returned the Liberal party to power, they would get it. Now, my hon. friend turns round and says that when we advocate and recommend the very same policy as Sir Wilfrid Laurier did, that it is merely idle talk.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend, the Secretary of State, I notice, has, in referring to that chamber of commerce speech of Mr. Chamberlain in 1896, committed the same fault that he did when this question was discussed before the House two years ago. He read, I will not say a garbled extract, but a very limited extract from that speech. He divorces this extract from the context to such an extent as to quote Mr. Chamberlain directly opposite to the views that he expressed in the general tenor of that speech. Now, I will read what he did say. I turn to page 5 of this report. He says :

> It appears to me there are only three lines of progress which have been suggested to accomplish this great object. The first of them is a proposal that the colonies should abandon their own fiscal system and should accept ours; that they should carry out fully the doctrines of free trade; that they should open their markets not only to us but to all the world; and that they should abandon entirely the protective duties, upon which now they rest very largely for the revenues which they collect. That is a proposal which is supported by the Cobden Club by extreme—I suppose I ought to say orthodox—free traders, and there is, no doubt, a great deal to be said for it. I do not deny that possibly it might be, for all concerned, the best solution. (Hear, hear). At the same time, I am bound to point out that that would not bring about commercial union in the sense in which we have generally understood the word, because that would be in the direction of cosmopolitan union, but it would offer no peculiar advantage to the trade of the empire as such. But, to my mind, a much more fatal objection is the fact that, speaking generally, the colonies will not adopt this proposal. We must consider it, therefore, as counsel of perfection and if we are to wait until the colonies generally are converted to our views in regard to the advantage of free trade, let us recognize the fact that in that case we must postpone the hope of a commercial union to the Greek Kalends. (Laughter and hear, hear). Gentlemen, free trade in this country has been developed, no doubt to the great advantage of this country for the period of half a century (hear, hear) but, in spite of that, it has made no converts. We do not find, and again I am speaking generally because I know there are exceptions, we do not find that there is any considerable approach to our system on the part of the colonies and there is no approach at all to it on the part of foreign countries. (Hear, hear.)
> I pass on then to the second proposal which has been laid before a similar congress to this, which found expression at the great congress held in Ottawa a year or two ago. This is a proposal which has been advocated with great force and eloquence by colonists and is the reverse—in spirit at any rate—to the proposal which I have just been considering. For whereas the first requires that the colonies should abandon their system in favour of ours, this proposal requires that we should abandon our system in favour of theirs; and it is in effect that, while the colonies should be left absolutely free to impose what protective duties they please both upon foreign countries and upon British commerce, that they should be required to make a small discrimation in favour of British trade in return for which we are expected to change our whole system and to impose duties on food and on raw material (hear, hear). Well, gentlemen, I express again my own opinion when I say there is not the slightest chance that within any reasonable time this country, or the parliament of this country, would adopt so one-sided an agreement.

Hon. gentlemen will notice that Mr. Chamberlain was discussing the question by first stating the extreme view of the Cobden Club and now he is stating the extreme protection view :

The foreign trade of this country is so large and the foreign trade of the colony is comparatively so small that the small preference given to us upon that foreign trade by the colonies would make so small a difference, would be so small a benefit to the total volume of our trade, that I do not believe the working classes of this country would consent to make a revolutionary change for what they would think to be an infinitesimal gain (hear, hear). Well, then, gentlemen, you will see that so far we have only arrived at a deadlock.

He has now stated the extreme view on one side, and the extreme view on the other. Here is what my hon. friend did not read :

We have a proposal by British free traders which is rejected by the colony and we have a proposal by colonial protectionists which is rejected by Great Britain. We have, therefore, if we are to make any progress at all, to seek a third course, a course in which there shall be give and take on both sides, in which neither side will pedantically adhere to preconceived conclusions, in which the good of the whole shall subordinate the separate interests of the parts.

Why did not the hon. gentleman read that ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I explained that.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend read out a short extract, divorced from its context, in order to create an impression in the House the reverse of what Mr. Chamberlain stated :

I admit, that, if I understand it correctly, I find the germs of such a proposal in a resolution which is to be submitted to you on behalf of the Toronto Board of Trade.

Now, I have that resolution of the Toronto Board of Trade here I will read it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—He gives his own interpretation of the resolution of the Toronto Board of Trade as he would apply it. If my hon. friend will continue reading Mr. Chamberlain——

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I have read showing that Mr. Chamberlain presented the extreme view of English free traders, which he said was thoroughly impracticable. He then showed the extreme view of the colonial protectionists, and was equally explicit in saying that nothing could be accomplished on that line.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is your line ?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—No. There must be give and take, as Mr. Chamberlain says ; every one knows that. Here is the resolution of the Toronto Board of Trade :

Resolved that in the opinion of this conference the advantage to be obtained by a closer union between the various parts of the British Empire are so great as to justify an arrangement as nearly as possible of the nature of a zollverein based upon principles of the freest exchange of commodities within the empire, consistent with the tariff requirements incidental to the maintenance of the local government of each kingdom, dominion, province or colony, now forming part of the British family of nations.

Here is Chamberlain's clear pronouncement that on the line indicated in that resolution of the Toronto Board of Trade, he saw the germ of a practical solution of the question. Now, why did not my hon. friend read this instead of reading what Mr. Chamberlain was putting forward as the view of the extreme protectionists who would adhere to their extreme view in endeavouring to reach a solution of this question.

That resolution I understand to be one for the creation of a British zollverein or customs union which would establish at once practically free trade throughout the British Empire.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend should let me finish the sentence, and the let us hear what he said :

But would leave the contracting parties free to make their own arrangements with regard to duties upon foreign goods.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes, foreign goods.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend persists in applauding before he hears the whole thing out.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I have read it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It goes on :

Except that this is an essential condition of the proposal that Great Britain shall consent to replace moderate duties upon certain articles which are of large production in the colonies. Now, if I have rightly understood it, these articles would comprise corn, meat, wool and sugar, and perhaps other articles of enormous consumption in this country which are at present largely produced in the colonies, and which might be under such an arrangement wholly produced in the colonies and wholly produced by British labour. On the other hand, as I have said, the colonies, while maintaining their duties upon foreign imports would agree to a free interchange of commodities with the rest of the empire, and would cease to place protective duties upon any product of British labour. That is the principle of the German zollverein : that is the principle which underlies the federation of the United States of America, and I do not doubt for a moment that if it were adopted it would be the strongest bond of union between the British race throughout the world.

I have read straight along the whole speech, and hon. gentlemen will see how entirely my hon. friend divorces the short extract he read from the context, and endeavoured to create an impression in the House entirely different from what it was calculated to create. My statement was, when I addressed the committee before, that Mr. Chamberlain had indicated that he was favourable to a commercial zollverein or union of the empire commercially by which there would be duties which would help the trade of the empire as against the trade of foreign countries. Hon. gentlemen who read this document will find that he most clearly indicated that he was in favour of that principle, and notwithstanding that declaration and a similar speech that he made before the Canada Club, in 1896, notwithstanding he had himself before the elections declared that the Liberal party returned as they would be on the 23rd of June would send a commission to England to arrange for a preferential trade which he explained in London, a short time before, would be a preference for our produce. Notwithstanding all this the Premier of this country went to England and there declared they were giving this preference from love and affection and did not wish for anything in return, and he pointed out to the English people that it would not be in their interests to do it, that they had this grand free trade principle to maintain, and it was worth maintaining. That was his point, that England should not disturb this great free trade principle for the sake of giving an advantage to the colonies.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Hon. gentleman are quite familiar with the views which my hon. friend opposite has expressed, because he has expressed them very frequently in this House. He has discussed this question on several occasions ; he has read those extracts on several occasions, and I am sure the House and those who have read the speech of the hon. gentleman will be familiar both with the hon. gentleman's own sentiments and with those expressed in the document from which he has quoted. Now, my hon. friend would lead the country to suppose that the views which he has just now expressed, and which are contained in the third proposition of Mr. Chamberlain are those which he himself and others with whom he is associated have hitherto advocated. I beg to say that there is no foundation whatever for that view. The Conservative party in the House of Commons have over and over again pressed their views as to what ought to be the commercial policy of the empire and while they have said that Canada ought to make concessions in their case it has been said those concessions ought to be made on condition that there ought not to be a one-sided arrangement such as we have made by this preferential resolution that the British government ought to give a quid pro quo for the concessions that Canada makes while imposing a lower tariff on the products of British industry than they impose on the products of foreign countries. The hon. gentleman reads this extract from Mr. Chamberlain. I ask the attention of the House to that third proposal. Mr. Chamberlain, in the first place, points out the English view—the view adopted by both parties there, that has prevailed in their legislation and in their commercial policy for a period of half a century, and that is the principle of free trade—no taxation on commerce. He also refers to the Canadian view, the second proposition. Now, that second proposition is the one which the hon. gentleman has hitherto advocated—the view which the government of which he was a member pressed on the attention of the Imperial authorities, and to which the Imperial authorities refused to give any attention. The third proposition is a proposition for a zollverein—some sort of a commercial union between the mother country and the various dependencies, in which the principle of free trade shall be practically established between the mother country and all the dependencies in the same way as there is free trade between the different states of the American union.

That is what he says: free trade as it exists in Canada between the different provinces. We have no power here to impose a tax as between provinces. Our policy is interprovincial free trade, and Mr. Chamberlain's proposition is that there shall be inter-Imperial free trade between the United Kingdom and all portions of the empire. Does the hon. gentleman favour that? Has he ever advocated that? Is he prepared to say that English goods shall come free into the Canadian market on condition that Canadian goods get free into the English market? When did the Conservative party adopt that view? It is perfectly clear the hon. gentleman opposite is, unintentionally no doubt, but is in fact, misleading the House and would mislead the country by his remarks as he has this day made them. It is perfectly plain, from the statement of Mr. Chamberlain, that his motion is that a compromise would be to establish free trade between all parts of the empire and to leave each section to tax the products of foreign countries as it might see proper. That is Mr. Chamberlain's proposition. Is that a proposition which the hon. gentleman is prepared to support? Is that a proposition which he says Sir Wilfrid Laurier is to blame for not having accepted, and for not having encouraged? Now, that is the hon. gentleman's statement here to-day, but if hon. gentlemen will look at the discussion which took place on this question in the House of Commons they will find sentiments very different from that expressed, and that the Conservative leaders in the House, and their supporters have committed themselves to a very different proposition. It is a proposition in favour of the doctrine of protection. They say we will give you an advantage in our market. We will make the tariff lower in our market if you will consent to impose a tax on the products of foreign countries going into the United Kingdom. That is the proposition which they made, and which is a wholly different proposition to the one which has been submitted by Mr. Chamberlain. The hon. gentleman says that they are as much entitled to credit for the repeal of the most favoured nation clause which existed in the treaties with Germany and with Belgium as the present government. Let us look at the facts. The hon. gentlemen, when they were in office, undertook to secure the repeal of those treaties and failed. When we came into power, we sought their repeal and succeeded. There is this difference between the hon. gentlemen opposite and ourselves, that we succeeded and they failed, yet the hon. gentleman says, with regard to this matter we stand upon a footing of equality. So far as intention is concerned that may be, but the hon. gentlemen opposite attached conditions which the Imperial government were not prepared to accept or to consider. They talked of giving to the British government, or people, certain advantages in our market if we would get certain advantages in theirs. The British government saw nothing any more than the British people did in the policy adopted by the Canadian government in 1879, and which was adhered to down to 1896. They saw nothing favourable or friendly to the mother country. There was nothing favourable to the industries of the mother country, and so the commercial men and the manufacturing classes of England took no interest whatever in Canada or in the government of Canada, because that government legislated, in their opinion, on narrow and selfish lines against the interests of the mother country, and in no way placed the people of Great Britain in a more favourable position than those of foreign countries. The hon. gentleman referred to Mr. Chamberlain's view and gave a vague representation of Mr. Chamberlain being in favour of a commercial arrangement that would give us an advantage in the Imperial markets. We see what Mr. Chamberlain's view is. The utmost he would go in meeting the requirements of the case are stated in his third proposition. Now, that third proposition is that if you will agree to a zollverein, and agree to admit English products into your markets free from duty, we will admit the products of your provinces into the English market in like manner free from duty, and that freedom of the English market we already have. They said, further, we give you liberty to impose such taxes as you please on foreign goods, and you may do as you please in that matter. What was the Imperial government going to do? Just as they pleased in the matter, and that was to continue the system that already exists. They did not say 'We are going to tax foreign products because you are going to tax them, but we leave you free in that matter to do just as you please, and cannot impose conditions differing from what you impose on yourselves.' That is the position Mr. Chamberlain takes, and that position is as wide as possible from the position taken by the hon. gentleman or any one with whom he is in political association. The hon. gentleman has referred to the views of Lord Rosebery. Lord Rosebery has said nothing in favour of the views of the hon. gentleman. He may have been in favour of a commercial zollverein. Lord Rosebery talked at one time of Imperial federation on lines that Sir John Macdonald opposed, and in that matter I think the views of Sir John Macdonald more nearly correspond with those of all parties in this country than did the views that Lord Rosebery expressed some time ago. The hon. gentleman says this preferential trade offers to the English people no advantage, until the preference passed the 12½ per cent. What does he say ? On some goods you increased the duty by 5 per cent and on some by 10 per cent before you made the reduction. Now, our first reduction was 12½ per cent of 30 or 35 per cent, and so the hon. gentleman makes a rather strange statement when he says our reduction of that 12½ per cent did not count for anything, because we had increased the tariff previously by 5 per cent. In that case it would count for 4½ per cent, and in the case where there was an increase of 10 per cent there would be an advantage of 2½ per cent, and when you have a reduction of 25 per cent, which was one-fourth, as you had at the end of the first year, there certainly was a marked difference, and as my hon. friend has shown, there was a marked increase in the trade between Canada and Great Britain. When you have 33⅓ per cent reduction, is it not obvious that British products will have an advantage in the Canadian market that they would not have had if the tariff had remained at the same figure as the tariff upon the products of foreign countries ? Every hon. gentleman will see that is so, and in taking the tax off these products, in admitting British goods at lower rates, is it not clear that the people of Canada are the parties that derive the largest advantage from that arrangement, for they are the parties who purchase the goods, and the very object of increasing the tax would be to increase the price by the amount of the difference in the taxes to those who are the consumers of those goods. The hon. gentleman speaks about Sir Wilfrid Laurier not having pressed this matter. Did the hon. gentleman expect we were going to delay the adoption of the principle of preference until we could convert a majority of the people of England to the view in favour of a commercial zollverein. Is that what he desired ? Does he think that would be wise ? Does not every hon. gentleman in this House know that when we adopted the principle of preference we were obtaining a footing amongst the people of England—amongst the statesmen of England that we never had before, and if we want to take a further step in favour of a commercial union between the mother country and the different colonies, we are in an infinitely stronger position than if the preference had never been given. British statesmen are ready to listen to us. We have adopted a friendly policy towards them. In our relations with the West India Islands we have endeavoured to further their policy in those islands.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—I understand it might have been the policy of the government to diminish the duties against England, but where was the necessity or advantage of telling them we would not accept anything else ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—We are not making it a condition, and I think we were right in not making it a condition.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—That is not what I said. What was the necessity or advantage in saying that we would give them that and that we did not want anything in return ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I can say to my hon. friend that I consider it a very great advantage that the Prime Minister of this country obtained a hearing, and what he said was listened to with attention and favour in a manner that it never would have been if such a statement had not been made.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Most speaking would be listened to well, when the speaker is not wanting anything.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The hon. gentleman showed by wanting too much how very little he got, and how far he was from having success. What did Lord Salisbury say to those gentlemen who were pressing upon him the propriety of this system of taxation in favour of the colonies ? Why, he said, no government could live and agree to such a proposition. He pooh poohed the whole thing, and out of a House of 658 there were only two who advocated it, and those two were all the members, among those whom England returned to the House of Commons, in favour of that particular contention. My hon. friend has spoken of another thing. It is altogether irrelevant to this discussion, but I think it is one, that after having been mentioned—I am not saying how prudent it was to bring it forward—it is my duty to say a word or two in regard to it, and that is a preferential tax, an Imperial tax imposed on all portions of the empire for the purpose of supporting an Imperial army and navy. The hon. gentleman has committed himself to that proposition.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, he did not say so.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—No, that was not the proposition at all.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—He stated that, and he was pressing it upon our attention as an evidence that the Imperial government were prepared, or people in the United Kingdom, to go further and adopt that view.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I did not so understand it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend is entirely wrong. I was reading and enlarging upon the Ottawa and Montreal resolutions which suggest a small uniform duty, those of the local tariffs, where any such are levied, on the importations from foreign countries—that each of the colonies should impose a uniform tariff, not an Imperial tax, but a tariff imposed by themselves.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Is it for a general Imperial purpose ? If the hon. gentleman referred to those resolutions, he referred to them for some purpose. Was it for the purpose of commending or condemning them ? I will wait to hear him say for which purpose he referred to them.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I referred to them to show that there was a growing feeling in favour of imposing duties on all the members of the empire, of a preferential character, for the purpose of defence.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—And so it comes back to my statement after all, and it is clear I did not misunderstand or misrepresent the hon. gentleman. Now, there was a time when there was war between Great Britain and France on this continent, and the fortunes of war went in favour of Great Britain, and there was a strong tie of union, in consequence of common hardships and sufferings, between the mother country and the colonies, and a number of men who lived in the mother country at that time held views very much like those put forward in those two resolutions which seem to be so wise and statesmanlike in the mind of my hon. friend. What was the result ? The Imperial government thought it was a very reasonable and proper thing to do, but the result was the war with thirteen colonies. It lasted for seven years and ended in a disruption of the empire. That was the result. The people of the various portions of this empire have, without hesitation and with a feeling of loyalty and devotion to the empire, contributed to its defence. They have brought their own men and means. The Imperial government did not find anything wanting, so far as the patriotic feeling of this country was concerned, in that matter, nor so far as the other colonies are concerned, and each colony in undertaking to make provision for its own defences, showed that each colony will be ready to spend a very considerable sum in what is required for reasonable defence, that would not be ready to place the same amount at the disposal of some central body to be expended on their own behalf or perhaps elsewhere, and in each section undertaking to make provisions for itself and to provide for its own defence, and in coming voluntarily forward without any force or any coercive measure for the purpose of supporting an empire which commends itself to their judgment, it seems to me they are on the right track and are doing that which is best and are pursuing a course more statesmanlike and more consistent with the growth of the English constitutional system than by undertaking theoretically to devise some scheme to tie the hands of every portion of the empire in order to perform a duty which their patriotism, under all circumstances, would lead them without any such arrangement to perform. The hon. gentleman has spoken with regard to the repeal of those commercial treaties with Belgium and Germany, and spoken tauntingly of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and the views which he expressed in the House of Commons. What is the sound constitutional doctrine in this matter? I am not going into an elaborate discussion of it simply because the hon. gentleman has dragged it into this discussion, but I will say that there are a number of unsettled questions under our constitution and one of them is how far the sanction of parliament is necessary to give validity to the Acts of the Crown in respect of treaties. There are some treaties which it is held are binding without the sanction of parliament, and some treaties require the sanction of parliament.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman is speaking of England now.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes. In the case of the cession of territory it was held in 1890, when England gave up her claims on Zanzibar to Germany, and when she surrendered the island of Heligoland to Germany, that she asked the sanction of parliament and her statesmen were divided. It was an unsettled question but it is settled now, and it is clear, that the Crown cannot finally make a cession of territory without the sanction of parliament. Then it was thought at one time that the Crown could make a treaty for the surrender of fugitives from justice without the sanction of parliament, and that remained undecided until the Creole question came up, and in the discussion of that case every law lord held that the Crown could not, even after making a treaty with a foreign country, surrender fugitives from justice unless that treaty was ratified by parliament. Let me take another case. The Crown makes a treaty with a foreign country in respect to trade and commerce. That treaty is unquestionably, under ordinary circumstances, binding according to the practice that hitherto prevailed, in the United Kingdom at all events, without the sanction of parliament. Why? Because parliament is itself the master of the men who made the treaty, and they are not likely to make a treaty unless they know beforehand that it will not be condemned by their supporters in parliament. That is their position. But take the case of a colony. We are a self-governing colony, and that government that owes its existence to a majority in the Imperial parliament is supported by the legislature and is adopting a policy with regard to treaty regulations in conformity with the wishes of that legislature. Supposing it undertakes to embrace the colonies, as Lord Palmerston did in the treaty with Germany or the treaty with Belgium: and it makes that treaty binding the colonies. Supposing that treaty were one which says that you shall not impose a duty upon certain products of Germany, or that you shall not impose a duty on certain products of Belgium. According to the one view, because the Crown has made that treaty and it is binding upon the United Kingdom, it would also bind the colonies. If we follow out the doctrine of our constitution to its legitimate conclusion, we have this doctrine; that so far as a treaty relates to external matters, the Crown may, by that treaty, bind all the empire, but when you turn inward towards the colony itself, or the United Kingdom itself, and undertake to deal with a matter which limits its legislative authority, restrains the one or other from acting as freely as it would have acted if no treaty existed, I take it the sound constitutional doctrine would necessitate the sanction of that by the parliament of the country that is to be so bound. That, I understand, was the position taken by the Canadian government on that question of the repeal of those two treaties.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—But that view was not sustained by the law lords.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It was not decided in any court of justice. It was considered by the Attorney General and he took a view against it. It was perfectly natural for people residing in the United Kingdom, or for the Attorney General, to say what every other member of parliament had said: 'If we did not approve of the treaty we would have turned out the government.' But hon. gentlemen will see that if we did not approve of the treaty we had no power to turn out the government. We are in a different position from them, and therefore I take it that it was very much like the question raised on the copyright law—it was of the utmost consequence to us that when they reserved the power to limit by treaty the power of a self-governing colony and restraining it from legislating on a question it had power to legislate upon under its constitution, then it was doing, what was, at all events, contrary to the conventions of the constitution if not contrary to the law.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Do I understand the hon. minister to lay down the doctrine that the treaties that were entered into between Great Britain, Germany and Belgium by which they bound the colonies—that they had no right or power to do that without our sanction ?

Hon. Mr. MILLS—By which they claim to bind the colonies.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If I understand the hon. gentleman it was not done, and if done they had no power to do it.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I say that that is one of the unsettled questions of our constitutional law.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It was never decided.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—The Imperial government will decide, of course, in favour of their own contention. They will not restrain their power further than they can help.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That was the argument of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries when he went before the legal authorities in England, and they just sat on him.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, they did.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—They dissented from him. I will say that there are some men who have denied that the three angles of a triangle are equal to two right angles. I do not think that that denial will amount to much, and when you follow up the principles of our constitution you will see that unless you are prepared to say that all your powers exist by suffrance and that the Crown can by treaty wipe out your constitution altogether, then it is neither our interest nor consistent with our constitutional rights to maintain that a treaty of that sort can be made to bind us without our having any opportunity of saying a word upon the subject.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am surprised the hon. minister should have raised that question now.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—It is the hon. gentleman from Marshfield who has raised it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—But the hon. gentleman contending that Canada could legislate in tariff matters in the face of the Belgian and German treaties, notwithstanding the fact that that contention was put forward by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries and, I suppose, by the government of which he was a member, in 1897 ; and the British authorities decided against him and his government were compelled to refund to the traders with Germany and Belgium the difference in the duties paid by them. They were compelled to accede to the view, give up their own opinion altogether and accept the view of the British government on the subject, and actually to refund the duties. That was done in 1897, and in the face of that my hon. friend comes here to inflict on the Senate this fine long-spun argument on the subject, that the Canadian government were right after all, notwithstanding the Crown law officers of England decided against them.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—So they were.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My object in rising was to point out again to the committee that Mr. Chamberlain's proposition in 1897 was not a proposition such as was not acceptable to Canadian protectionists or reasonable people in Canada or in any other part of the empire. My hon. friend and the hon. gentleman sitting alongside him tried to insist that we stood in the position of those who had taken an extreme ground such as the British tax-payer could never possibly meet. The true position of reasonable Conservatives in Canada, at all events, is to be be found in the proposition that Mr. Chamberlain indicated to be his own, wherein he said :

> That resolution I understand to be one for the creation of a British zolleverin which would establish at once practically free trade throughout the British Empire, but would leave the contracting parties free to make their own arrangements with regard to duties upon foreign duties; except that this is an essential condition of the proposal that Great Britain shall consent to replace moderate duties upon certain articles which are of large production in the colonies. Now, if I have rightly understood it, these articles would comprise corn, meat, wool and sugar, and perhaps other articles of enormous consumption in this country.

These were articles that would be a very essential part of the transaction, that the British government would put duties on foreign productions of these kinds, and that the consumer should pay.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Quite so.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—On the other hand, the colonies, while maintaining their duties on foreign products, would agree to have free interchange of commodities with the rest of the empire, and would cease to place protective duties on any product of British labour. That is exactly our position. We are quite satisfied to relax protective duties as against Great Britain. We are quite willing you should give a preference to the empire. We were willing you should give 2½ per cent and afterwards we were willing you should give 25 per cent, and now we are willing you should give 33⅓ per cent.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—But Mr. Chamberlain's contention is that there should be no tax on British goods coming into the colonies.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am reading Mr. Chamberlain's words, and surely Mr. Chamberlain is as good an authority with regard to his own opinions as the hon. Minister of Justice. He says:

On the other hand, as I have said, the colonies, while maintaining their duties upon foreign imports, would agree to a free interchange of commodities with the rest of the empire.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—He spoke before about practical free trade—not absolute free trade.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—My hon. friend will see that Chamberlain says that goods from the empire coming into the colonies are to be free.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Not at all.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I have the words before me, and the hon. minister cannot possibly pervert them. I will go back and read again so that there can be no misconception. He said:

That resolution I understand to be one for the creation of a British zollverein, or customs union, which would establish at once practically free trade.

Not absolute free trade. Then he goes on to say:

On the other hand, as I have said, the colonies, while maintaining their duties upon foreign imports, would agree to a free exchange of commodities with the rest of the empire.

The word 'practically' governs it all and shows what it meant. The extract continues:

And would cease to place protective duties upon any product of British labour.

Nothing of the kind is indicated in this that he meant that we should give British goods absolutely free admission, but that we should cease to impose protective duties upon them.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—That is not it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—And we all agreed to give this preference. We agreed to the 12½ per cent preference and to the 25 per cent and now we come to the 33⅓ per cent and that reduces the old 25 per cent to 16 per cent, which is fairly a revenue tariff and I believe would entirely conform to what Mr. Chamberlain's requirements were. That is our proposition, and there is nothing unreasonable in it, but in the face of that proposition, notwithstanding the Premier declared that his party were going to adopt a revenue tariff, not for England alone, but for the whole world, and then they were going to send a commission and were going to get a preferential tariff on that basis, he went to England and said: 'We do not want you to disturb free trade for the sake of increasing trade with us. We are giving you this out of pure love.'

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have been much interested in the discussion, but I do not intened to prolong it. I desire to set my hon. friend the Secretary of State right in regard to the figures he gave to the Senate. It is an unfortunate thing that when he touches figures he places them before his hearers in such a manner as to leave a wrong impression, but I will not say that he muddles them. The hon. gentleman commenced his speech by pointing out the advantage which had accrued to the Canadian consumer by the adoption of the preferential tariff, and in order to sustain his position he tells us how much the trade with England has increased with Canada. In reply to the hon. gentleman on my right, (Hon. Mr. Ferguson) as to how the preferential tariff had affected the trade of the United States, he replied that has nothing to do with it. What we were discussing, or what the hon. gentleman to my right endeavoured to impress upon the House was, that while there was a preferential clause, that preference and the readjustment of the tariff was such as to give a greater volume of trade to the United States than it did to England, the country that they professed to be so much interested in, and from which they expected to derive so much benefit. What are really the facts in connection with it ? The hon. gentleman was not very logical, because in less than five minutes his statements were as contradictory as they possibly could be. He first said, we put certain articles upon the free list, which accounted for the large importations from the United States. Then in reply to the question : 'What articles have you placed on the free list, he said they reduced the tariff on iron and the products of iron,' but previous to that he told the House that the United States had advanced so in science, and had such facilities for producing iron that they could produce it cheaper than any other country, and that was the reasons why the importations were greater. Of course, that is precisely the contention that we make, that the government so rearranged and so readjusted the tariff, that they favoured the United States at the expense of England. That is precisely the position we took, and that is just what the hon. gentleman admitted, although it was an unintentional admission. What are the facts ? The hon. gentleman has done precisely what I charged him with doing.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Where are the figures I misquoted ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I did not accuse the hon. gentleman of misquoting. I said he gave figures which left a false impression on the mind of his hearers who knew nothing of the subject, and then I said, that in answer to the question put by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield. with reference to the trade with the United States, that the hon. Secretary of State said it had nothing to do with it and at the same time arguing that the preferential trade was a great boon, not only to this country but to the manufacturers in England. What my hon. friend intended to imply, and what he did say, was that the preferential tariff which had been placed upon the statute-book is more favourable to the United States than it is to England owing to the rearrangement of the tariff. Now let us look at it. I am going to read from the hon. gentleman's blue-book published this year under the authority of the government and a report made by the Minister of Customs, Mr. W. Paterson, which the hon. gentleman has in his hand, and if he has any doubt as to the accuracy of my reading he can look at it and verify it himself. In 1896, the aggregate trade with Great Britain was $99,670,030, and with the United States $103,022,434. Last year the aggregate trade with England was $136,151,987, and with the United States $138,140,687. The increase of the aggregate trade with England in these periods was about $37,000,000 and with the United States, $35,000,000. That shows, in the aggregate trade, about $2,000,000 in favour of England, but hon. gentlemen will see in a few moments how that arises. The figures will show that while England has been the great market for the products of Canada, we have imported from the United States a larger amount for home consumption in this country than we have from Great Britain, ergo the tariff has been in favour of the republic against which we pretended to legislate, rather than in favour of England, in favour of which it is contented we did legislate. If hon. gentlemen will turn to the next page they will find the value of exports by countries as follows : I am leaving out the hundreds in the figures I give. In 1896, England furnished a market for the output of Canada of $66,690,000 ; in 1899, the latest figures we have, our exports ran up to $99,091,000, being an increase of about $33,000,000 in these three years to England. Turn to the United States and we find that in 1896, our exports to the United States amounted to forty-four and a half million, and last year, 1899, it was only $45,133,000, an increase in these three years of exports to the United States, or, in other words, the United States furnished us an increased market of $1,300,000 in three years, while England furnished us a market for an increase of about $33,000,000. There is where the increase in the aggregate trade with England over that of the United States is shown. Now, take the next table, No. 5, the value of goods entered for consumption from these two countries, and that is a point that the Secretary of State tried to impress upon the House as showing the great advantage that had accrued to the manufacturers and trade of England by the adoption of a preferential tariff. In 1896, we imported from Great Britain and entered for consumption goods to the value of $32,979,000. We imported from the United States that same year, and entered for home consumption, $58,594,000. Under the preferential tariff of 1899, we imported from Great Britain $37,000,000, being an increase of $6,000,000 over the importations we entered for home consumption previous to the adoption of preferential trade; but we imported from the United States $93,000,000 worth of goods, being an increase of about $33,000,000, so that the increase of trade with the United States for home consumption, that which was to add so much to the good of the consumers of Canada, and which was to be of such great advantage to the manufacturers of England, was about $6,000,000, while the increased importations for home consumption from the United States amounted to about $33,000,000.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—How much of that is railway supplies ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am not going to discuss the particulars. If the hon. gentleman wants me to enter into the minutia of what composes this amount, I should have to analyse this whole book, which I do not propose to do at this moment. Although we have a small audience it is a select one, and I take it for granted that most of them, except the hon. Secretary of State, understand precisely what I am saying. The facts are as I have given them, and the facts are as they appear in the return the government have submitted, that the trade of this country under the preferential tariff has been more advantageous to the United States than it has been to Great Britain. It is folly—I will not use any stronger language—for the Secretary of State and gentlemen occupying his position to make the statements he has made, while his own returns and his own figures show the correctness of what I have stated, that is, that the preferential tariff has been more advantageous to the United States than it has been to Great Britain, and for the reasons the hon. gentleman himself pointed out. He gave the answer himself. He said they put certain articles on the free list. Those articles come from the United States, otherwise the volume of trade would not be so large. He says they reduced the duties on iron, and in doing that made it cheaper for the consumer. Immediately afterwards he said the United States had advanced in the production of iron to such an extent that they could compete with the rest of the world, hence the larger duty which was imposed on the iron itself was not sufficient to keep it out of the country in competition with the product of England. The thing is so plain that any one who will take the trouble to look at it will see, not only the fallacy, but—I was going to say dishonesty, only that would not be parliamentary—the unfairness of the manner in which the hon. gentleman places these figures before the House. All that has been said and argued about Mr. Chamberlain's utterances and Sir Wilfrid Laurier's utterances, to my mind, is in a nutshell. What we complained of, and what we complain of now is, that the advanced opinion of British statesmen and the advancing opinions of British statesmen, and the feeling that exists of cultivating the unity of the whole empire, is growing so rapidly that the time would come—I do not pretend to say it is at this particular moment—when we would be able to obtain that which we on this side of the House contend we should have in our trade with England. All we have to do is to look back a few years. I remember the time when Britain refused to allow Canada to enter into reciprocal relations with the United States, or to give a preference to any country, even to themselves, and there was a time when they refused to allow Canada to enter into any treaty arrangements of any kind by which there would be a differential duty against themselves. I have under my hand an extract to that effect uttered in 1891, by Lord Salisbury. But they are advancing. There was a time, also, when England used to make treaties to which the hon. gentleman referred, without reference to the colonies at all, and the treaties with Germany and Belgium, by which they bound the colonies to give concessions to those two countries under the favoured nations clause, that we would give to England. But England to-day, and for some years past in fact, advancing as they are towards giving the fullest liberty to the colonies, never thought for years past to ask the colonies to become parties to any treaty without first having obtained their consent. That system was brought into full force and operation while I was a member of Sir John Macdonald's government. Whenever Britain made a treaty, even with the smallest countries, no matter in what part of the world, they would send it first to Canada, and Canada was asked whether she was willing to become a party to that treaty, and twelve months was given to Canada to say yes or no. If we did not pass an order in council declining to become a party to that treaty, then by our silence we became a party to it. That has been carried out, as my hon. friend knows for a number of years, and so the principle and powers of self-government have been growing and growing year after year, and there is no question in my mind that during the jubilee, when the whole feeling of England was centred upon uniting the empire in one confederacy, that had not the Premier of this country, backed by the Premier of New South Wales, who is an out and out free trader, a regular Cobdenite, and who has carried out his principles in New South Wales, joined together, and unsolicited (that is what we complain of) and unnecessarily made the declaration to which we have referred, something might have been accomplished. The moment Sir Wilfrid Laurier landed in England, after the speeches he had made in Canada declaring preferential trade was what we ought to have—that he was equally in favour of it with Sir Charles Tupper, and that when his party came into power they would take steps to ask for and obtain it if possible—the very moment he landed in Liverpool, at a reception which was given to the Premiers of the provinces, he made the unsolicited declaration of which my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island has spoken, that Canada did not want anything in return for the preference we had given. The preferential tariff was then in force, but my hon. friend must know that that tariff, when placed on the statute-book, was not a preference in favour of England exclusively. He knows that the terms of the tariff were that any country which would reduce its tariff and place it on an equality with the Canadian tariff, should have the same advantages as Britain. We pointed out to him that under the German and Belgian treaties, whatever their policy might be they could not carry it out in practice, and we were laughed at, though they had in their possession Lord Ripon's despatch, a document covering eighteen pages, printed by the Imperial authorities, declaring that under no consideration could Canada give a preference to England herself without giving it to Germany and Belgium, and every other country with which Britain had a treaty containing the favoured nations clause. I heard the debate in the House of Commons and paid particular attention to it. I heard it here also, and I will say this for the Minister of Justice at that time, Sir Oliver Mowat, that when we discussed the question here, you may search the records of the Debates from one end to the other and you will not find Sir Oliver Mowat committed himself to the principle, or acknowledged the correctness of the arguments which had been advanced in the lower House by the Premier and the then Mr. Davies, Minister of Marine and Fisheries. What he said, in reply to me, when I quoted from this document and pointed out to him the absurdity of the pretensions they were making, was, 'our government contends the other way.' That was the most you could get out of Sir Oliver Mowat. He is known to be a wily politician, and he did not commit himself, and I do not think my hon. friend would have committed himself, had he been here, under the circumstances.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—I was here.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman reminds me he was here. That is quite true. It brings back to my mind the fact that he never dissented from the doctrine we laid down, that under the treaties, and with the despatch before us, Great Britain would not allow us to carry out that policy until those treaties were abrogated. The evidence of that is contained in the facts mentioned by the hon. gentleman who has just spoken—that is, when the question was submitted to the Attorney General or the law lords,—my impression is it was to the law lords of the Privy Council.

Hon. Mr. MILLS—No, the question was argued before the Attorney General, Mr. Webster.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I dare say the hon. gentleman is right. It was argued before him, and when Mr. Davies, Minister of Marine and Fisheries, wanted to address the court he was told very plainly and distinctly it was not necessary to do so. However, through courtesy, he was permitted, and the result was they heard him talk, but paid no more attention to his argument than they would to the whistling of somebody outside, as every one reading these despatches would see.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He succeded, at all events.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It must be amusing to any one who knows anything of the affairs of the country to hear the hon. gentleman say: 'We succeeded at all events.' It resulted in the abrogation of those treaties at a period in our history during which the British mind was turned almost entirely to the colonies, and there was an almost unanimous feeling throughout the empire that there should be greater unity. Year after year we made the protest against the treaties, and if I would not be accused of egotism, I have no hesitation in saying that my visit to Australia—I am saying this on the authority of the Premier of South Australia, when he passed through here at the time of the Queen's Jubilee,—that the result of the visit which was made by a Canadian commissioner to Australia, the meeting of the Colonial Conference in Ottawa in which this whole question was discussed, and in which resolutions were passed asking for the abrogation of these treaties arose, the calling together of the Premiers of the whole empire in London, all led to the denunciation of these treaties. Now, that feeling has grown from time to time. There was a time where a Britsh statesman would not think for a moment of advocating the abrogation of those treaties. Lord Ripon, as I have already pointed out, wrote that long despatch, and I would advise any hon. gentleman who has not read it, to study it carefully, in order to prove that the abrogation of those treaties would be detrimental to the trade of Great Britain and be of so little benefit to the colonies that they would never concede the point, and yet years rolled around, circumstances and events transpired which led the British mind in another direction, until it culminated in the Queen's Jubilee, and resulted in the abrogation of these treaties. I argue from that, that while England has been a free trade country for a number of years—while she has scouted the idea of returning to protection—while she has treated with a great deal of levity any suggestions of that kind of trade which we in Canada would like, the feeling was growing in favour of uniting the colonies with the empire, making them one, by cultivating preferential trade between ourselves—a consummation which would have been arrived at, at a much earlier period had not Sir Wilfrid Laurier taken the step he did when he landed in England. The idea is growing rapidly and becoming more firmly seated in the mind of every true Briton that the empire should be made as nearly as possible, one; and the best means of arriving at that is to make the connection pecuniarily as well as sentimentally advantageous to the whole. I firmly believe that, from circumstances which have taken place, and without arguing that question further. Another opportunity may present itself to show how utterly regardless some statesmen are of their pledges and statements. We have the declaration of the Premier that he would never stop until he had free trade in this country as it is in England. We have his declaration that he would look after the interests of Canada, and would let Lord Salisbury look after the interests of England. That was when he was advocating commercial union and reciprocal trade with the United States. Love and affection for the mother country did not ooze out then as it does to-day. The government were forced to do things which led to what took place to the advantage of Canada, just as they were forced into consenting to raise the contingent to send to South Africa which has done so much to bind the mother country to this Dominion, and for which the hon. gentleman claimed credit a few minutes ago. There are many other points which, if time permitted, I should try in my feeble way to combat with the hon. gentleman, but enough has been said on this subject to show that our contention that Sir Wilfrid Laurier, as Premier of this country, joining with Mr. Reid, the Premier of New South Wales, stepped out of their way to refuse that which they had never been asked to accept. It was time enough to refuse to accept a thing when the British government had offered it to them, and it was time enough to say 'we will give you concessions without any return' when the British government said 'we will not give you anything.' It was a foolish declaration on his part, uncalled for and unnecessary, and was certainly the result of being surrounded by the glamour of royalty and the greatness of the people in England with whom he came in contact. If he did not at that time lose his head, he lost his reason.

The clause was adopted.
