If ever I saw an example of the refusal to get information of a factural nature that would tend to support the passage of legislation introduced in this House by my colleague, the hon. member for Peace River, this is it. This is not the first time I have raised the matter in the House. The peculiar part of the whole process is that there was no prior announcement of the intention of the government to locate near Saskatoon. This information came to light by accident, by virtue of the discovery by a Conservative member of the Saskatchewan legislative assembly, Mr. Ralph Katzman, who represents Rosthern, of the fact that, in conjunction with Eldorado, the Saskatchewan Economic Development Corporation was acquiring for unnamed principals an option on land near Warman, Saskatchewan. After considerable digging he was able to determine the land was being acquired for Eldorado.

This matter has been going on for some time between the province and the government through Eldorado or the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. We find out now when it has become public and the accusations are rather hard on the people there. I think the parliamentary secretary should inform his minister what his counterpart in Saskatchewan thinks about Eldorado and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Saskatchewan minister of the environment, Mr. Neil Byers, has been very critical of Eldorado Nuclear. He says they are poor communicators and has expressed concern that they have started to assess the Warman site without providing information to the provinces on the advantages and disadvantages of it compared with other locations in the province. Yet a department of the federal government says they do not have all the information from Eldorado. Mr. Speaker, I do not spend much of my time supporting the provincial New Democratic Party government. But if they cannot get the information in the province in which the facility is to be situated, I wonder what chance the average citizen or a member of parliament has.

An editorial in the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix of February 26 points out that Mr. Byers should not stop there but perhaps should look at his own operation and point his finger at the Saskatchewan Economic Development Corporation for the way they have carried on. I must say I agree with that. The editorial reads:

> A lot of Saskatchewan residents would agree that Eldorado had been less than eager to communicate on plans, whatever they may be, for a uranium refinery in this province. But most would also suggest that the provincial government should have been a lot closer to the action than the average person because of SEDCO's involvement.

The editorial continues:

> —Saskatchewan has set up the structure for a public inquiry over Eldorado's plans, as well as other facets of uranium mining in the province and nuclear energy in general.

This government's abdication of its responsibility relating to nuclear power and the uranium industry has been the subject of a lot of inquiry on our part. Over a period of time the leader of my party has persistently requested that the government take up its responsibilities and set an inquiry in motion—preferably a parliamentary inquiry—with respect to the future of Canada's nuclear energy policy and the mining and exportation of uranium. He wrote to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources outlining his concern that the government had failed in the responsibilities given to it by statute and constitutional jurisdiction. He pointed out that the government had responsibility to assess and report to the people of Canada in a public forum, preferably in the parliamentary context through a special committee of the House. It has a responsibility to receive the representations and views of the widest possible range of citizens.

The abdication of responsibility is so bad that not only in the province of Ontario has the provincial authority been required, through the Porter commission, to look into this matter on its own, but in the province of Saskatchewan public pressure has been brought to bear. A commission was recently appointed under Mr. Justice E. D. Bayda to look into uranium development in the province. One of the things that interested me about that study is that the provincial government is looking into matters which I perceive to be exclusively federal in responsibility and jurisdiction.

What kind of government is it that refuses to give any information upon which people can base an assessment of what should be done in one facet of our nuclear energy program, the uranium side, and does not take any initiative to allow public participation in the development of policy across the country but relies on provincial jurisdiction?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his allotted time has expired.

An hon. Member: Go on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The hon. member may continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I appreciate that very much, Mr. Speaker, as this is a matter about which I feel very strongly. The people of my area feel equally strongly about it.

● (1720)

I was surprised at the answers I received today to some questions I had placed on the order paper relating to the establishment of a uranium refinery in Saskatchewan. Incidentally, I note the presence in the chamber of the parliamentary secretary to the president of the privy council (Mr. Goodale). Having examined the returns, I can say that the information the government provided could not be called an answer even in the most general sense. True, there is information here, but nothing of significance or consequence which one could not obtain by examining some of Eldorado's press releases. One could not describe these returns as answers.

It appears that Eldorado Nuclear Limited has publicly announced that it has acquired options to purchase 1,200 acres near Warman, Saskatchewan; that detailed environmental studies are to be conducted; that arrangements for these studies are now being completed and will be announced in early 1977; and that 11 areas in Saskatchewan have been assessed environmentally with respect to 14 possible refinery locations. I ask, in passing, why are the people of the area concerned—indeed, all our people—about not being given information about such environmental studies? The minister indicated that environmental studies have continued for the past year, and are continuing. I suggest that this information ought to be in the hands of the people concerned. Otherwise, how are they reasonably and rationally to assess all the implications of the establishment of this refinery in Saskatchewan? They can only do it, I submit, if they possess the factual information commissioned by the government of Canada through Eldorado Nuclear Limited and paid for by the public.

The returns indicate that we shall see some form of public hearing. But that hearing will not be conducted until other, more detailed, environmental assessments have been made. I understand that the authorities are embarked upon a continuing process of assessing the environmental implications relating to the establishment of this refinery. They are concerned not only about air and water supply but about other factors which must be considered. Unfortunately, we have not been provided with the details of the matter. We have not seen any documents and there is no information available which could let the people of Saskatchewan determine if such a refinery should be established near Saskatoon. Further, we do not know which other areas have been considered. The returns omit to say how extensive an assessment has been made or how much has been done in this regard. Surely the provision of such information could not hurt any commercial enterprise of the government of Canada. How much was spent on these studies?

Was it $10, or $100,000? We should know, because such studies may be nothing but window-dressing.

I am not against the development of nuclear energy per se. But I am concerned because although I represent the constituency in which it is proposed to place this refinery, I would have been given more information and seen more evidence of co-operation if I were a citizen of Tanzania or Outer Mongolia. Is this the way a representative government should run its affairs? Surely this shows how badly we need a freedom of information act.

I am in the opposition, true, but I do not think the provision of this information would hurt the government. Surely, this issue shows the need for the immediate passage of a freedom of information bill as suggested by my colleague for Peace River. If such legislation were adopted, the information would be available. I wish that an independent arbitrator, judge, or someone responsible within the government would urge the making public of this kind of information so that the people of the area concerned would know where the uranium refinery is to be established.

We have often criticized our neighbours to the south, but at least they took the initiative with respect to freedom of information—an initiative we should imitate. Freedom of information legislation is long overdue. Therefore, I am pleased to note the presence of my colleague for Peace River and I hope he will participate in this debate.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make one or two comments about the motion presently before the House. I am interested in uranium production, refining and use in Canada and in the world. The refinery which is to be established in Saskatchewan of which the hon. member spoke will be the result of the policy adopted by the federal government in September, 1974. That policy proposed that the further upgrading of uranium and the "value added" process with respect to uranium produced in Canada should take place in this country, for in that way we could develop our uranium refining capacity in Canada and ensure that more jobs would stay in this country. At the time of the adoption of this policy, between 4,000 and 5,000 tons of uranium yellow cake were produced in this country.

The new uranium mine which came on-stream in Saskatchewan during the past year will lead to increased production, and the traditional producing areas of Beaver Lodge northern Saskatchewan, and Elliot Lake, Ontario, will also contribute to this increased production in Canada. I believe that by 1985 production in this country will amount to some 15,000 tons per year of yellow cake. The increased production of this mineral; will be tremendously valuable to Canada. Indeed, its value is escalating rapidly. Five or six years ago, uranium yellow cake sold at between $5 and $6 per pound. Today's spot prices are as high are as high as $40 a pound. Therefore, the further upgrading of our uranium to uranium hexafluoride or uranium oxide is important for our country.

I want to carry that argument a little bit further. I suggest that wherever possible uranium refineries should be located close by the areas where uranium is produced. For example, in Ontario our present refining capacity is located in southern Ontario. As we move to have additional uranium refineries constructed in the province, these should be located in northern Ontario where the principal mines are located. The secondary manufacturing processing jobs would then be located in the north.

Since 1969 we adopted a policy of regional development in Canada. It is designed to create more equality between the various areas of our country by having secondary manufacturing and processing plants locate in the slow growth areas of our country. We have provided incentives through the R.D.I.A. Act. If we have a policy where we take taxpayers' dollars to provide incentives to locate plants in designated areas of our country, we should carry it a step further and see that Crown corporations such as Eldorado locate their plants in the slow growth areas of Canada.

If we look at the plan being proposed for Ontario, we see that there exists an opportunity for this to be located on the north shore of Lake Huron. It would provide 150 or 200 new jobs processing the resources of that part of Canada.

If we look at the unemployment levels in certain areas of the north shore of Lake Huron, we see that over $12 million has been paid as an average over the past four or five years in unemployment insurance benefits. We see large expenditures for the LIP and Canada Works programs. The LIP program has provided seasonal jobs during the winter months. Now with the Canada Works program it will cover other times of the year as well. There is a great advantage in seeing plants of this nature locate in northern Ontario where they would provide the jobs.

There is another aspect to the matter which bears consideration. If we locate uranium refineries close to areas where the productive capacity of the mines exist, we have an opportunity to dispose of the nuclear waste from the uranium refineries in the uranium disposal waste facilities that are there for uranium mines. That would seem to be a wise move rather than establishing new nuclear waste disposal sites at various locations throughout the country. Indeed, many people who have studied this problem believe that our nuclear waste should be put back into worked out uranium mines which is the ultimate place to dispose of nuclear waste.

Another aspect of locating uranium refineries in the general area of the producing mines is the public acceptance of this type of facility. In the north shore area, for example, practically every municipality has passed a resolution supporting the second uranium refinery for Ontario being located in the north shore area. Chambers of commerce in most communities in the area have supported the location of a refinery in that area, as well as many individuals and community groups. There is that public acceptance, understanding, and knowledge of the further processing of uranium in an area where there already is uranium production.

We should look at the sense of justice to the uranium producing areas which went through very severe economic crises during the sixties. Hon. members will recall that in the fifties there was great pressure to produce uranium for military purposes for the United States. During the sixties, the agreements which had been reached during the fifties for further options of production of uranium were cancelled.

Communities like Elliot Lake practically collapsed. They went from 20,000 or 25,000 people down to 5,000 or 6,000. The build-up from that to the present day situation, where there is a tremendous boom and expansion taking place, was long delayed because of the very uncertain future of uranium production during the sixties and early seventies. These communities have seen very difficult periods of time.

The situation now is very different. The ore bodies in areas like Algoma are worth dozens of billions of dollars with today's value of uranium. There is a strong feeling that areas like this should not only have the mining and plant jobs that occur with a uranium mining operation, but the secondary processing jobs should be located in those communities as well.

If we look at the uranium stock piling program of the sixties, we see that the uranium, most of which comes from Elliot Lake and is now stored by the government, has produced a profit of several hundreds of millions of dollars for the government.

If we look at the kinds of production of uranium ore that will take place during the next quarter century and the amount of tax dollars and royalties which will be realized by the federal and provincial governments, we see revenues flowing into federal and provincial coffers from this source ranking in the billions of dollars.

There is a very strong feeling that when uranium refineries are located in Ontario they should be located in the north. Thus not only would the mining jobs be realized, but also the jobs in secondary processing plants.

We realize that studies which have been carried out in Ontario, like those carried out in Saskatchewan, into the environment and economic feasibility play a factor. Indeed there would probably be an additional cost to locate a plant like this in northern Ontario. In addition to looking at the economic factors, I believe we should look at public acceptance and the possibility of the disposal of waste in the worked out uranium mines. These are compensating factors that should be recognized by the government and by Crown corporations such as Eldorado.

I hope these considerations will be taken into account by the government and by the Crown corporation when they locate plants like this, whether it be in northern Ontario where we have such a tremendous productive capacity for this mineral, or in Saskatchewan with its new discoveries in certain areas where it looks as though there will be significant production of uranium in the next quarter century.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn) on seizing the initiative to bring before the House and ultimately, I hope, before the people of Canada, this important issue touching upon the right of the people to be informed regarding this project, and, incidentally, their right to be informed generally.

The hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) made a very reasoned speech in favour of the development of nuclear power, but that is not the issue. We are not dealing with that aspect today. I think he made a good speech. I admire the hon. member, though I disagree with him from time to time, as I admire the parliamentary secretary who, no doubt, will be speaking later and who, as an agent for the government, will be compelled to state an argument for which I imagine he has no real heart. After I have finished speaking, I hope he will acknowledge this to me.

The reasons assigned by the parliamentary secretary to this House for refusing to make the documents available were that since they related to the establishment of a refinery they were commercial documents and the information was proprietary. First of all, I should say that this is not among the exemptions cited in the list which was brought down by the then president of the privy council on March 17, 1973. It does not fall squarely within any of the exemptions stated there, and consequently I would ask the parliamentary secretary to identify which of the 16 grounds for exemption he considers to be operative in this case.

Mr. Dupras: I am addressing myself now to that very task.

Mr. Baldwin: The parliamentary secretary might need a month to define the ground on which he can base his defence.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Even so, it is a list unilaterally compiled!

Mr. Baldwin: To whom does this information belong? Who pays for it? This information, Mr. Speaker, is the property of the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: We are dealing in this case with nuclear energy, a very dangerous field. I can understand why so many people are security minded about it. Thirty or 40 years ago, after the second world war, as developments in the atomic energy field were passing into civilian hands, there was a great deal of secrecy attached to it. The United States passed legislation imposing stringent secrecy with regard to the dissemination of certain information, and this attitude spilled over into Canada. But that was 35 or 40 years ago. We are now in a different era.

We have had experience, particularly in Ontario, of the serious consequences of the development of atomic energy. There is grave apprehension on the part of a great many people in Ontario and elsewhere because of developments in Port Hope, Elliot Lake, and other places. I am sure that all kinds of assurances were given by the government and by the corporation at that time to the people living in the areas involved, just as I have no doubt that assurances will be given to the people of Saskatchewan. But in the light of what has happened, in the light of the serious concern felt by knowledgeable people in Canada and in other parts of the world, it is not good enough for us to accept bland assurances by government people, even by people as eminent as the parliamentary secretary, that everything is perfectly all right and that there is no need for us to be given the information for which we are asking.

I recall examining one government witness in connection with this question of the provision of information. He reacted with astonishment and alarm. He asked, "Why should you know what our experts know?"

My contention is that this information we are seeking today should be the property of the people. It relates, in particular, to those living in the area which is to be developed as a nuclear project. After all, it is their health, their lives, their property and their future which are at stake. Surely in these circumstances they should be privy to all decisions which are made, and the information should be available to them as long as it does not come within the category of being contrary to national security.

The parliamentary secretary says it is a commercial enterprise. There are indeed circumstances in which information which might give advantages to competitors of a corporation ought to be withheld. But this is not being cited as one of the grounds for withholding information in this case. I suggest as strongly as I can, because of what we know, that if there is any proprietary right at all here, that right is the property of the people of Canada. And the only way this right can be asserted is through the disclosure of the information.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar referred to the principles guiding the government when dealing with motions for the production of papers. There is a paragraph in the guidelines about protecting the security of the state. All too often, it seems to me, what we are really looking after is the security of the Liberal party and I, for one, believe there is a great distinction between the security of the state and the security of the Liberal party. Indeed, I would go so far as to say that the security of the state is threatened by the continued security of the Liberal party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: I heard a very interesting statement over the radio the other day. At the time of the Viet Nam war, when the Nixon administration found itself caught up in some of the lies and deception it had practised with regard to the translation of the war into Cambodia and elsewhere, an assistant secretary of the U.S. defence department, confronted with this situation at a press conference, said, boldly, "Every government has a right to lie to save itself." That is the kind of statement which, we fear, would be approved by all governments. The government opposite is particularly adept at it; from its experience in the last 20 or 30 years it has become expert at lying to defend itself.

Mr. Dupras: That should be beneath your dignity.

Mr. Baldwin: That brings me to the right of the government to refuse the information which the hon. member is requesting. I suggest that even the parliamentary secretary will find it difficult to bring this within one of the 16 grounds set out in the guidelines, however much ingenuity he exercises.

Only today we were given an example of the way in which the government conceals information. Only today, with this very debate in mind, I asked the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) when he intends to do something about freedom of information. We have had to look outside the country at what was said by the vice-president of a corporation in Korea, and at some information which the American Security Commission was able to elicit due to the more advanced laws that exist in that country. I am compelled to sit here and wait for information to be given through sources of that kind. We are not allowed to obtain it ourselves.

The President of the Privy Council made a very smart alecky reply which is not worthy of him. He is a very good debater, a very good parliamentarian, but I think he slipped when he said that the opposition in the Public Accounts Committee were not doing their job. It is a matter of common knowledge, a matter of fact—everybody knows this—that the deception, the autocracy and contempt shown by those supporting the government, and by some of the witnesses appearing before that committee, have frustrated, and inhibited, and made it impossible for the opposition members of that committee to get the information they should have. There was just no way they could do it under the laws we have in Canada today.

As my hon. friend has said, information of a contractual nature is surely the sort of information that should be open. A contract has been signed, and we must know what the safeguards are, the financial implications, what is involved in it for the people of the district, and what is going to be put in that area.

Apparently some decisions have been made, some contracts entered into. Because of the dangerous nature of the project, it seems to me it would be most difficult for any member of the public or any member of the government to say, "We are going to refuse you this information." Surely that is proof complete of the requirement in this country for information which would be available to people when requested.

We all agree there have to be exemptions, but this is not a case for exemption. The refusal of the government to give these facts and information constitutes a contempt of this parliament, of the people of Canada. I hope when this matter comes to a vote, as it will in due course, that hon. members on the other side, who will have to meet their electors at the polls one of these days, will remember well what they do. I suggest, through you, Mr. Speaker, to them that it will be held against them if they vote against this motion.

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, my two distinguished colleagues, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn), and his seatmate, the very distinguished member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), have taken so much time that I will not attempt to answer all their arguments. Nevertheless, I should like to respond to a few of their remarks in regard to some of the questions that they raised.

First of all I should like to deal with the grounds I was invited to mention regarding the production of papers, as well as the exemptions to the criteria to be applied in determining whether government papers or documents should be precluded from production. I would invite my two colleagues to consider exemption No. 4, which is as follows:

Papers, the release of which might be detrimental to the future conduct of federal-provincial relations or the relations of provinces inter se; (the release of papers received from provinces to be subject to the consent of the originating province).

Sedco is the company that Eldorado requested to make these studies. Exemption No. 5 reads:

Papers containing information, the release of which could allow or result in direct personal financial gain or loss by a person or a group of persons.

It is obvious that this is a strong enough ground on which to deny some of the information. As I begin to list all the instances in which an attempt has been made to give more information to the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar I think it will be apparent that we began to supply information as early as July 6, 1976. This was followed by instances on July 26, 1976; October 22, November 8, November 18, December 21; January 17, 1977, again on January 18, February 11, March 1, and today. The questions have been put on the order paper by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar, Nos. 820, 821, 853 and 856. I wonder if the hon. member is aware that information has been made available in these cases.

For the benefit of the hon. member I should also read exemption No. 10:

Papers relating to negotiations leading up to a contract until the contract has been executed or the negotiations have been concluded.

Finally, exemption No. 16:

Papers requested, submitted or received in confidence by the government from sources outside the government.

It is obvious that such a situation exists here. Before I forget, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar mentioned that we do not know what the Saskatchewan government thinks of the project. I already know what Jack Messer, the industry and commerce minister, thinks about the project, and I can see from the nod of the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar that he too knows.

Let me quote some of the information that was given in a speech by the premier of Saskatchewan on November 8 last. Among other things the premier said:

Our party and our government have been committed to the peaceful use of atomic energy in the world for over 20 years. Uranium has been mined, yellow cake has been produced and exported from this province continuously for more than 20 years and this is still taking place.

This is nothing new in Saskatchewan. Further he said:

The government of Saskatchewan has a policy that no major industrial enterprise should be proceeded with without the proposed developer giving a detailed outline of the project proposed, following which there is to be an environmental impact study (to be made public)—

This is exactly what is going to take place, as I have told the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar many times in this House.

—following which there are to be public hearings.

I could speak until seven o'clock, Mr. Speaker, about all the information that we have supplied.

The hon. member for Peace River mentioned the financial implications of this project.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION ACT

MEASURE TO REDEFINE OBJECTIVE OF TRANSPORTATION POLICY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Basford (for the Minister of Transport) that Bill C-33, to amend the National Transportation Act and the Department of Transport Act for the purpose of defining the objective of the transportation policy of Canada and authorizing the consequential rearrangement of powers and duties relating to transport and to amend the Transport Act and the Railway Act in respect of freight rates and other matters, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, as I recall, this afternoon at five o'clock when I concluded my preliminary remarks we were actually looking at the bill itself, which is somewhat unique in this Chamber. From time to time I think it is useful for members to read what they are passing.

I want now to refer to proposed section 3(2) (d), which I will quote. It is the prime principle of this legislation which is now enshrined in the law that in the field of transportation —competition within and between modes of transport should be encouraged where economic and technical factors permit;

That is the second major reason why this party cannot support the bill. What is outlined here is the enshrinement of the failure of the transportation policy of this and previous governments. It enshrines the kind of failure that we had right here in Ottawa when we put STOL aircraft to fly between this city and Montreal. That is the kind of competitiveness that is enshrined in the bill. If we continue to use that kind of philosophy in providing transportation in Canada, we will dig ourselves deeper and deeper into the mire. We will get into a hole which is even larger than the one we have now. When you go for the principle of competition between private carriers, what you will find is that the private carriers will take all the profitable parts of transportation, and the rest, us suckers, will carry the bill. That is what will happen to an even worse degree now. When you enshrine that principle, you eliminate the possibility of a cross-subsidy. Cross-subsidization means that with viable, efficient and profitable transport you eliminate the possibility of using the revenues to subsidize areas in the country which will never pay for themselves. They will never pay for themselves because that is not the kind of country in which we live. We do not have a situation like the situation in western Europe. Our country is almost unique in terms of transportation. The Soviet Union is one of the other countries in the world which faces the same kind of problems we have.

● (2010)

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, but they give service.

Mr. Leggatt: I am glad to see that the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) is continuing his support of the Soviet Union. I appreciate his views. It is good to see that the Soviet Union has friends in the House.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He is one of those Red Tories.

Mr. Friesen: One of those red-in-the-face Tories.

Mr. Leggatt: I do not think we should compare our transportation system with that of the Soviet Union. I suspect theirs is better, although I have not had the advantage of examining it. I suspect that our transportation system also has some advantages, but if I could just reiterate my point about eliminating the possibility of cross subsidy, when you allow private carriers to cream off the best part of the transportation system, the rest of the country has to carry the load for those parts which will always find themselves in a losing position.

Mr. Woolliams: Like Air Canada.

Mr. Leggatt: We talked this afternoon about who really pays for transport in this country. There is not a single system of transport which is not subsidized. Every time we walk on a sidewalk we should remember that the municipality subsidizes that sidewalk. The roads we drive on are subsidized. What really is amazing is that every time we take an aircraft our ticket pays only 31 per cent of the cost of that service. We are not paying for the air traffic controllers, for the runways, or for the Mirabels across this country.

From this minister we have seen an elitist transportation policy. It is nice for us as members of parliament to fly back and forth across the country, but it is not much good for those who do not fly and, believe it or not, the vast majority of people of this country rarely, if ever, use an aircraft. If we could keep that in mind we could reverse these priorities a little bit, and we could see to it that ordinary people would have a proper and efficient means of transport. However, we will not have that as long as we enshrine these two principles into the law. One is the principle of competition between existing modes of transport, and the second is commercial viability.

Most people in this House have not had a chance, but we on the west coast have had a chance to examine the new policy the minister is introducing, the user pay concept. We have seen that in operation. We are the pilot project which the minister is using to demonstrate his user pay philosophy. The minister has accomplished some great things so far. I want to list some of the benefits the user pay concept has brought to British Columbia.

The minister has dismembered a viable company with ships which were specially constructed for the purpose of supplying isolated ports in British Columbia. That company could have operated with a profit had the minister simply followed the report of his own advisers. I refer to the Acres report, which suggested those ships could have been upgraded with further capital investment, and we would not have needed to subsidize that particular service. Instead, because of a rash and, I would say, ideological decision, or a decision which was without any flexibility at all, the minister destroyed a viable company.

This concept left 300 people working in that company without work. Some, however, did find work. Six jobs for these seamen were found in Halifax. That is the extent to which they have been able to re-employ the workers who lost their jobs as a result of the minister's destruction of Northland Navigation. I am glad to see the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Lee) in the House because most of the people who live in his riding are very interested in finding out what is going to happen.

Another thing the user pay concept has brought about is the loss of all the spin-offs as a result of the drying up of that water transportation business. I received a letter today from longshoremen in Prince Rupert who are now crying because they do not have enough cargo to keep them working. The port is being dried up to some extent. There has been a reduction in the amount of cargo which is being carried to that port, and not least of all is the disruption of normal communication to over 100 communities in the isolated parts of British Columbia.

What the minister has really done in a back-handed way has been to dump the entire passenger load and the entire traffic burden on the province of British Columbia. However, I am not going to get too excited about this because I think the minister has a rabbit in his hat, or something in his pocket. He has been out in British Columbia. I know he has been working very hard. I would say he has been working in desperation more than anything else, but he has been working very hard.

I certainly give the minister credit for trying to pull his own chestnuts out of the fire. He is always running around trying to solve problems he has created. It is a wonderful way to seem busy all the time. The minister creates a disaster and goes back, grabs a bucket of water, and tries to put out the fire. That is what he has been doing in British Columbia, and I hope for the sake of British Columbians that he has something for us. I hope he is able to produce something in the way of rational transportation, something different from sending the Prince Rupert into Bella Bella, letting the lifeboat over the side to try to load the passengers from Bella Bella. That was an excellent challenge to the people of Bella Bella. I thought they were not as amused as they should have been, and we were lucky we did not lose anyone over the side, but it worked. That is another one of those little pilot projects upon which the minister is working. He just drops those lifeboats over the side and gets everybody to row out.

I would like to tell the minister that just because he is running the Lumba Lumba out of Prince Rupert does not mean we are in Tahiti. We actually need boats to move people out to those vessels. This really would be a laughable subject if it were not so serious to the people of British Columbia. This is a serious situation for isolated ports in British Columbia. Somebody should write a novel about what has happened to water transport in British Columbia.

We do know one thing, though, and that is that there are Liberal members of parliament from British Columbia who have been working very hard at this problem. Three of those members, the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) (Mrs. Campagnolo), the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Anderson), and the hon. member for Coast Chilcotin (Mr. Pearsall) were very proud to say that they were involved in the planning of this decision. There was a super press release, but the hon. member for Coast Chilcotin found out that it was not such a good plan, so he jumped out right away. He got off the boat.

The hon. member for Coast Chilcotin did not even use a lifeboat; he dived in right away. He did not fool around, and I must give him credit for getting off that sinking ship. Then there was the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport), who did not quite dive off the boat; she just stood on the burning deck and said, "My resignation is coming in six weeks if this ship burns". That is what she said. That is one of the promises we thought might be kept, but that was last fall and we have been waiting to see the resignation come. She is hanging in there and I think she has learned how to skate. Maybe it is the practice she had on the canal, but she has been skating very fast. She is making Guy Lafleur look foolish.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Leggatt: I wish she were here, Mr. Speaker, for she is a charming lady and I always like to hear what she has to say.

We are faced with this strange situation where all these Liberal backbenchers got together to develop this plan for British Columbia. They went up in the aircraft, but when they found out that it did not fly they said, "Somebody else made it, we are getting out."

Where do we go from here? I expect the minister is going to make an announcement, so let us try to guess what it might be. I expect that the routes from Prince Rupert to the Queen Charlottes, Vancouver to Nanaimo, and Tawassan to Victoria are to be part of the trans-Canada highway. If it is anything less than that, then it seems to me that British Columbia is still getting a bad deal. There is a special reason why that is a bad deal. We usually talk about national unity in connection with the problems of Quebec, but when this country was formed Sir John A. Macdonald promised British Columbia a rail line to Victoria.

An hon. Member: He was a Tory.

Mr. Leggatt: It has never been delivered. There is a breach of contract somewhere. Perhaps British Columbia will have to take the federal government to court for breach of contract because it did not provide the service promised under which, by contract, we came into this wonderful country. The pending announcement should be to the effect that these three routes will form part of the trans-Canada highway. They are part of a federal obligation made in 1871 to the province of British Columbia.

Mr. Lee: I did not know Sir John promised this highway.

Mr. Woolliams: We cannot help illiteracy!

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, I want to refer now to an editorial in a newspaper that has been a traditional friend of the Liberal party of Canada, the Vancouver Sun. It is remarkably loyal to the Liberal party, but it looked in the mirror and said, "We just cannot keep supporting these people." The editorial of November 4—

Mr. Woolliams: Don't read the one of November 5; that is against me.

Mr. Leggatt: No, they like you. They want to keep you Neanderthals alive. Mr. Speaker, the editorial reads in part as follows:

> And although there is to be some kind of substitute for the service, what happened leaves a distinctly bad taste in the mouth.
> Mr. Lang's conduct throughout this affair smacks of callous indifference to the needs of the company, its employees and the people of the coastal villages it has been serving. In essence, he held them to ransom in an attempt to force the provincial government to assume full responsibility for coastal shipping, then cast them aside when half the ransom was paid.

Some hon. Members: Hear, Hear!

Mr. Leggatt: It seems strange that in this country we have an adequate description of the geography but not an adequate description of the kind of people who live here. I believe the people want to keep this country together, and I believe that is true of every part of the country. There is no more important way to keep the country together than have people exchange visits. We are running empty passenger trains back and forth, and they are losing money. The senior citizens in my riding would like a chance to travel in those empty cars. They would travel on standby and a nominal fare could be charged. Then they could see the province of Quebec and perhaps understand its problems, and Quebecers could understand the problems of British Columbia, if we had the courage to use our public transportation system to keep this country together.

The theme of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, is that we have a public transportation company and should not confuse it with the free enterprise ethic and competitiveness in the system. That does not work. We can make it help hold the country together if the government will have the courage to use the system and have people travel everywhere in Canada so that they can understand what a great country we have.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have an opportunity to participate in the debate today respecting Bill C-33. First of all I want to say that I support the bill. I have noticed the serious tone of the debate, and it is easy to understand why it would be serious when we consider that the total budget for the department for 1977-78 is well over $1 billion.

I wish to put forward some facts concerning these figures. For example, the number of Transport Canada employees, including the Canadian Transport Commission, is 21,629; Air Canada 20,600; Canadian National Railways, 82,256; and the approximate total for Crown corporations including the National Harbours Board, 108,000.

When we look at the tax dollars that form the total budget of Transport Canada, we can quickly come to the position of support for a bill which would give the minister more power to carry out his responsibilities.

In recent years there have been suggestions about a Canadian merchant navy that would put us in a better position to control the shipment of our natural resources, and there has been talk of action in regard to the Canadian railway debt similar to that recently announced for the St. Lawrence Seaway debt.

The figures will not only show but prove the importance of transportation policies and of planning together with general operations across the country. However, one cannot but wonder about the top-heavy bureaucracy found within the Department of Transport, with its many technocrats and bureaucrats. What chance of survival do these programs and policies have after they have gone through so many hands, and what one could term the watering down process?

I suggest that anyone familiar with Canadian transportation history will say that this is an excellent time to review possible changes and to consider changing the structure and hierarchy of the Department of Transport. Therefore, logically, we ought to establish a superministry of transport, under which would come two junior ministries with responsibility for implementing our transport policy. Certainly the present job is too onerous for one man. I suggest that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) cannot at the same time oversee the day-to-day operations of the ministry of transport, the CNR and Air Canada while carrying out his additional responsibilities for the Canadian Wheat Board.

Mr. Johnston: Who wrote that—Otto Lang?

Mr. Harquail: I now wish to mention something I have thought for some time. We need to alter the present top-heavy, all-too-powerful bureaucratic structure. If we are to resolve our current problems, I suggest we should take the responsibility away from deputy ministers who are not elected and give it to elected representatives.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Harquail: I have thought of some new titles. For instance, deputy ministers could be known as chief administrators, or chiefs of Staff, and parliamentary secretaries as deputy ministers reporting directly to the House. For too long we have heard references about various departments of the federal government working at cross-purposes. This has been counter-productive and created, indeed compounded, some of our present problems.

While considering amendments to the act I suggest that we should look closely at how efficiently the large numbers of employees presently employed by MOT do their work. I sometimes feel that if they are not compelled to work efficiently and productively they could well fall into the category of the invisible unemployed.

I now mention transport subsidies, specifically in the Atlantic region, and wish to put some facts and figures on record. Three major transport subsidy payments, covering five areas, transferred approximately $280 million to the Atlantic region in 1976. These payments can be broken down as follows: for rail passenger subsidy, $35 million; ferry and coastal services, $100 million; west bound freight subsidies, to rail $8 million, and to truck $3.5 million; west bound selective freight, to rail $2 million, and to truck $1.5 million; intra-provincial freight subsidy, to rail $10 million, and to truck $20 million. Where will all this money go when the proposed changes regarding these subsidies are implemented? Keep in mind that in excess of $1 billion has already been allotted to the Department of Transport budget. Therefore it should be obvious that only a small percentage of the department's total expenditures have application to the Atlantic provinces.

Considering recent decisions concerning subsidies, and previous speakers spoke about subsidies to east and west coast ferries, it is clear that we must let the public understand the philosophy which will lead to a change in subsidy policy in Canada. We have already seen evidence of the workings of this philosophy on both the east and west coasts. One cannot cut subsidies without negotiating and consulting with those who entered into original agreements in good faith. Agreements have been reached with certain provinces. I say that we must be cautious in our attempts to reduce subsidies in various provinces. Surely one will not argue that the matter of reducing assistance with respect to the Crowsnest Pass ought to have been addressed some 20 years ago. Why not commence negotiations to bring that particular agreement into line with modern day needs? If an agency which requires 30 per cent assistance receives a subsidy of 70 per cent, I am sure the Canadian people would want that particular subsidy to be discussed, negotiated, and adjusted.

We must be cautious not to forget our direct responsibilities. I say this because subsidy payments in the estimates submitted this morning by the Minister of Transport accounted for more than half the 1977-78 budget of the department, or more than $500 million.

When the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications visited the west coast last year it saw the harbour facilities at Vancouver, and visited Seattle, U.S.A. We quickly saw that equipment at Vancouver needed modernization. I am speaking both of dry dock facilities and over-the-side equipment for loading goods and grain. Obviously, we shall need to do something to remain competitive. We must upgrade our facilities to maintain our excellent reputation and induce ships to use our ports on the west coast, as well as those on the east coast. We shall need to spend money on additional equipment, and on upgrading existing facilities at Halifax and Saint John, New Brunswick, as well.

I now turn to the matter of debt. The CN debt has already been mentioned, and we know Air Canada incurred a $25 million deficit last year. This morning, when the committee was considering the 1977-78 estimates, I addressed a question to the Minister of Transport. I know that steps will be taken, under spending policies to be implemented, to curb, if not eliminate, that deficit.

Talking of Air Canada brings me to the problems confronting Eastern Provincial Airways serving Atlantic Canada, and the airline's application before the Canadian Transport Commission last year. I cannot participate in this debate without, in all justice, stating the case of the citizens of Atlantic Canada. The chairman of the air branch of the commission brought down a most unsatisfactory decision. He is a westerner and visited the Maritimes more than once to conduct hearings.

Consider the effort that goes into the presentations that are made to the air branch of the Canadian Transport Commission. Many long hours and a lot of money go into their preparation. What is the result? Last December the decision was handed down by the chairman of the committee. He did not give a positive consideration to the applications placed before the CTC. The applicants were willing, ready and able to implement the program of transportation for which they were seeking the class two licence. In its wisdom, the CTC air branch decided to give it to a firm which had encountered financial difficulties three months prior to the decision being handed down.

Decisions of this type encourage me to speak in favour of the amendments contained in Bill C-33. The bill recommends that some of the decision making process be taken out of the hands of the CTC and more of this power given to the Minister of Transport.

I witnessed the disppointment and frustration as the result of the negative approach taken by the air branch of the CTC with regard to giving positive consideration to the plight of the citizens of Atlantic Canada. It almost brings one to look for the resignation of, if not the whole board, at least the chairman.

Consider the expenditure involved in conducting these hearings. Think of the time, effort and investment, both financial and sweat equity, that are contributed to these hearings. With a negative response like that, we wonder whether it is worth wasting our time following that type of procedure.

In central Canada there is talk of improving the Windsor corridor. We hear about better transportation for Ottawa, Toronto, Montreal, Quebec and Vancouver. However, in 1977 there is no modern air passenger service linking the four Atlantic provinces.

I live in northern New Brunswick. In order to travel to Halifax, I have to get on a train at six o'clock in the morning. Twelve hours later I arrive in Halifax. No modern air facilities are available. In order to get to the capital of the province of New Brunswick I have to spend six hours on roads that are exactly not up to trans-Canada specifications.

Mr. Béchard: Speak to the provincial government.

Mr. Harquail: If I understand the news correctly, they have problems other than highways at the moment. However, that is not what I wanted to speak about.

There has been positive input by DREE and the Department of Transport to try to eradicate that kind of situation. There was a recent announcement of $42 million to match the $10 million or $11 million being put in by the province to continue improving the highway network between Moncton and Campbellton, New Brunswick, Route 11. Another $5.5 million will be spent on Route 17. There is no question as to the urgency, considering how many years the trans-Canada has been completed from Newfoundland to British Columbia.

It is about time the provincial government accepted its responsibility to complete that important link which brings us to la Belle Province and the Gaspé area, not only for economic reasons and the whole question of regional development but the very matter of tourism.

To come back to the negative decision by the Canadian Transport Commission, the applicant that had the technical wherewithal to implement that service did not receive a favourable hearing. E.P.A. Ltd. could not get approval for a class two licence. E.P.A. Ltd. recently cancelled its order with the de Havilland Corporation at Downsview for a Dash-7. This 50 passenger aircraft would have been used to link the four Atlantic provinces. It is the obvious answer to a most serious problem.

From conversation with the Council of Maritime Premiers and other elected representatives, I know they have not given up on this. In fact they are now working in earnest. If that is the attitude of those who sit on the board and conduct the hearings, we will have to set our sails and cut the cloth accordingly.

I am convinced there will be complete co-operation and support from all elected representatives from that area for a new approach. In the very near future a new application will be made to the Ministry of Transport for a more favourable consideration with regard to the approval of funds in order that we in the maritimes might have modern air facilities. We would like to enjoy the same facilities as the rest of Canadians.

I support the view that was expressed previously with regard to the top heaviness of various departments. A good example is in the Department of Transport and the Crown corporations such CN and Air Canada.

There should be a better system for input by members of this House. Much debate could go on as to what the format should be. I stated previously that we should look seriously at stripping some of the powers away from the too powerful bureaucrats such as deputy ministers who sometimes get carried away with their ivory tower building. They forget the human side, the needs and aspirations of Canadians on many different fronts.

One solution with regard to the day to day operations of corporations such as CN and Air Canada might be to have more input by politicians at some level, whether they sit directly on the board or act as advisers. I am not looking for more structure. We have enough of that now. However, it is time to bring some of the decision making process to where it should be, with the elected representatives.

There is no question but that our transportation system, rail and air, is one of the best operated compared with other countries. Notwithstanding the problems of wrestling with the media, the present minister is very dedicated and hard working. He has to tolerate jabs and babblings in our day-to-day deliberations and debate in this House. I am sure all serious Canadians will agree with me when I say this minister has dedicated his energy 100 per cent in an effort to come to grips with the problems which face us. The importance of the transportation sector and the proportion of Canadian tax dollars which it consumes make it evident that the time has come not only to support the amendments in Bill C-33 but to support the minister in a more positive way so that in the implementation of these policies he can bring about even better solutions.

We have heard presentations by members in all quarters of the House, both in this Chamber and in committees, in favour of the establishment of a Canadian merchant marine. While no provision is made for this in the estimates, this is a possibility we ought seriously to consider especially in the light of such developments as the export of increasing quantities of coal to Japan. There is no reason why we should not place ourselves in the position of exercising better control over the distribution of our national resources.

I conclude, as I began, by saying I will support the amendments contained in Bill C-33.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on this bill I must say at the outset that I was more than a little surprised that the minister himself did not choose to present the first major revision of the National Transportation Act since its passage almost ten years ago. Though he has not addressed the House on this bill, I trust he has read the speech which was delivered by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) on his behalf, and that at least he approved it. It would be fair, I suggest, to hold him in some way accountable for what was said by the Minister of Justice when he introduced this measure.

In a way, the absence of the minister was ironic. The minister chose not to be present, but on the other hand he is asking for great power to be restored to the Department of Transport with respect to the day-to-day workings of the transportation system. Under the new legislation, policies could be changed at will and transportation programs could be made to operate to the great benefit of certain regions or, conversely to their detriment. As I say, I find it passing strange that the minister should have chosen not to be present on this occasion, and I see that my feelings are shared by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner).

Nevertheless, we are grateful that the hon. gentleman, among all the ministers who have presided over the National Transportation Act, has been the most frank. He alone has been prepared to say what none of his predecessors dared say, that is, that the legislation enacted by Mr. Pickersgill was an attempt to put the transportation system on a footing completely different from that of a policy based on consideration for the social and economic well-being of the country as a whole. It is clear in retrospect—and later I should like to quote a passage from the remarks of the Minister of Justice, one which no doubt reflects the minister's own views—that the fundamental shift which took place as a result of the MacPherson Royal Commission and later the Transportation Act, was to enunciate that a first priority would be to make a transportation system in this country commercially viable and that in a sense every other aspect of transportation policy would have to be subservient to that basic goal and commitment.

I suppose that anyone who looks at this concept superficially would say it makes a great deal of sense—surely a transportation system should be commercially viable and efficient to the extent possible. The only difficulty is that when we make this the main raison d'être of a transportation policy we begin to fly in the face of the economic, social, and political history of this country. A number of speakers in the debate have referred to this aspect and to the damage which the act and its administration have done to the several regions. Indeed, it was the minister's own surrogate, the Minister of Justice, who said, on Tuesday, I think it was—and I quote from page 3526 of Hansard—referring to the probable national implications of various direct and indirect freight subsidies:

> Most of these were implemented when the economic and transportation needs of the West, Ontario, Quebec and the Atlantic provinces were significantly different from what they will be in the coming decades. Some of these programs, however well-intentioned and effective years ago, now actually inhibit the development of certain regions and parts of the transportation system. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport has proposed changes in a number of these assistance programs.

Those of us who come from the more distant regions of the country should be grateful for two things. First, for recognition that the actual impact of the transportation policy has for the last decade been one of "user pay". That has been the reality of the present transport policy. The second is because the minister has recognized that the policies which have been in place affecting a great many of these regions have been inappropriate and must be changed.

I suppose the minister was bound to get the message eventually. Certainly it was delivered to him from a number of different quarters. Almost a year ago the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard) tabled a report in which he analyzed various sectors within his jurisdiction. With respect to transportation in Prince Edward Island he said in a document tabled before the standing committee last spring:

> The report stated that the problems involved in transporting commodities using existing facilities are expected to be extreme by 1977.

That opinion was fortified by further comments made by provincial ministers in the legislature of Prince Edward Island during the spring session of a year ago.

When I asked the minister on March 26 of last year what steps were being taken to head off this impending crisis, he replied, in the way he so often does:

> We always try to analyze traffic trends and look ahead to the steps to be taken to accomodate them, and that is what we are doing.

That kind of bland assurance does not convince us that the minister recognized the seriousness of the situation. It did not take too long for the provincial governments of Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, and New Brunswick to come back with a much sharper review and to remind the minister, if there is any danger of his forgetting, that there were serious problems respecting transportation policy in the region and that there seemed to be no awareness of this on his part, or on the part of the federal government generally.

At the twenty-second meeting of the Council of Maritime Premiers, which took place shortly after that in Charlottetown, the maritime premiers went on record as saying, first of all, that they would request an early meeting with the federal Minister of Transport. The premiers reaffirmed their position that transportation systems should be used by governments as positive tools for the attainment of national and regional objectives. But they stated that, despite the federal government's agreement with their position, there was an alarming lack of hard evidence that transportation is in fact being used as a positive development tool. Indeed, they said there were examples of just the opposite. They went on to say:

> The premiers expressed concern that the federal government is increasing cost recovery within some transportation systems without considering the effects of this on the over-all economy.

Finally the Minister of Transport in his generosity agreed to meet last summer with the maritime premiers to consider their particular plight. I would like very much to have the tapes of that particular meeting because I understand that it was a very stormy and long affair. However, at that point at least, it did not provide any evidence of change on the part of the Minister of Transport with respect to his various policies.

It took considerably more time before the minister finally responded. The response, as hon. members know, came just a few days ago at the meeting which took place in Charlottetown, where he met with the three provincial premiers and the minister of transport for Newfoundland. I am going to say something about the results of that meeting in a few minutes, Mr. Speaker, but I merely rehearse these facts to indicate what a dreadfully long time it took, and what a difficult task it was, to convince this government that it indeed had some responsibility with respect to the regional impact of national transportation policies.

The danger I see in general terms in the position that the minister has had advanced on his behalf by the Minister of Justice, and indeed by the nature of agreements that seem to have been arrived at, is that in some way the minister is prepared to rationalize the Canadian transportation system as some kind of cost accounting method of bringing down certain expenditures within the Department of Transport, and in very real terms will lock in the status quo.

The tip of the hat that the minister has now given in the context of his meeting with the Atlantic premiers recognizes that the factor of regional, economic and social need will play a part. But beyond that general statement, which is stated quite often in the speech that was made on Tuesday, there is no real definition regarding what major change of policy will take place. Indeed we were told as a result of that meeting that there will be specific amendments made to the transportation act, which in itself is an amendment before the House; but so far the minister has not seen fit to present these amendments. He was not here to introduce his bill, and he has not yet said what form these amendments will take. We are merely told that some consultations are going on with Atlantic governments and that at some point after second reading, presumably in committee, the minister will bring forth some amendments to this bill.

I think that that kind of general but non-commital indication is insufficient to guarantee to the regions of this country that the government has satisfactorily learned of the disadvantage and disparity that it has created through the operation of this transportation policy over the last decade. Surely until we get some firm indication of the exact details of these transportation amendments, it would be a foolish thing for any member, from the government or from the opposition, to give his blank cheque for the speedy passage of this legislation.

Much of our attention in the context of this debate focuses quite naturally on the railroad. It was, after all, the building of the railroad itself which, in a sense, drew together the fragments of this country into one nation. As the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) mentioned a little earlier, even portions of that have not yet been completed. We are seeing the sorry spectacle in some instances of railroads not being completed and rail lines being abandoned.

Those of us from Atlantic Canada, particularly from the provinces of Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island, are less than enthusiastic about the way in which the Canadian National Railways have defaulted in their responsibility to contribute to the economic well-being of these two provinces. Surely the basis for British Columbia and the maritime provinces joining Confederation was that of establishing some firm rail connections to link the country together. Indeed the very history of Prince Edward Island's entrance into Confederation was the sorry spectacle of a railroad that wandered everywhere but in the right direction. Having exhausted the financial capacity of the territory, as it was then, it was forced through bankruptcy to enter Confederation.

The railroad, like fiscal arrangements, is mentioned in the British North America Act, a sign of its importance in the eyes of maritime governments. With respect to the particular history concerning freight rates, which has been a continuing burden for the Atlantic provinces, it is important for members to have recalled to them briefly how we have arrived at the situation where today rail transportation has put an enormous burden on the backs of those people in Atlantic Canada.

The Maritime Freight Rates Act, which was passed by parliament in the early months of 1927, was a direct result of the Royal Commission on Maritime Claims, very often referred to as the Duncan commission. This commission was appointed in 1926. It attempted to study what had happened with respect to freight costs, particularly between the time 1912 to 1925. It discovered in fact that, using statistics supplied by the railways, between 1912 and 1925 there was a 92 per cent increase in rates, while elsewhere in Canada they had increased in the same period by only 55 per cent. It would seem that this royal commission was able to uncover the very great burden that was disproportionately placed during that period on the people of Atlantic Canada. I quote two brief sections that appear on page 21 of the report of that royal commission:

> The lower level of rates that prevailed on the Intercolonial Railway system prior to 1912 is, in our view, rightly to be interpreted as the fulfilment by successive governments of the policy and pledges that surrounded the railway from its inception.

There was a policy, particularly when the railroad was very largely controlled in the region, to use transportation as a development tool, so that during that period local industry and other opportunities could be developed to their full.

Then the Duncan commission went on to state:

> On the broader question, however, of the incidence of the existing rates as a whole upon industry and employment in the Maritimes, we have come very definitely to the conclusion that the rate structure as it has been altered since 1912 has placed upon the trade and commerce of the Maritime Provinces (a) a burden which, as we have read the pronouncements and obligations undertaken at Confederation, it was never intended it should bear, and (b) a burden which is, in fact, responsible in very considerable measure for depressing abnormally in the Maritimes today business and enterprise which had originated and developed before 1912 on the basis and faith of the rate structure as it then stood.

I think that, therefore, this kind of disproportionate increase is to recognize one of the sad facts that has been all too frequent since Confederation. Transportation, rather than being used as a tool of development, even though that was its basic concept at the time of Confederation, has been used to the disadvantage of the region, but perhaps nowhere more deliberately or more frequently has this occurred than since the enunciation of the National Transportation Act about a decade ago.

I should like to quote from a question of my colleague, the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), on July 12, 1975, as reported at page 7813 of Hansard. He was comparing here the situation in terms of rate increases on the St. Lawrence Seaway as against rail rates in Atlantic Canada. He asked:

> How many times has the government raised rates on the St. Lawrence Seaway system since 1959?

The answer was:

> The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority advised as follows: 1. There have been no increases in the Montreal-Lake Ontario section of the seaway. Tolls on the Welland canal were suspended in 1962. A lockage fee, phased in over five years, was introduced on this canal in 1967.

The second question was:

> How many times were rail rates from Atlantic Canada inland raised since 1959?

The answer was:

> The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows: 2. During the period January 1, 1959 to June 11, 1975 inclusive, rail rates from Atlantic Canada inland were raised as follows; under categories indicated: (a) normal class and commodity rates, eight times. (b) Truck and water competitive rates eleven times. (c) Agreed charges, six times.

Since that question was tabled a little over a year and a half ago there have been at least four more freight increases. The sad fact is that there has been an acceleration in increases, particularly since the late 1960's. Under the Maritime Freight Rate Act, which was in existence prior to that time, there was a ceiling with respect to these increases, but the exorbitant and unwarranted increases that have occurred since the late 1960's have increasingly placed Atlantic Canada at a competitive disadvantage. It is for that reason, if for no other, that there is adequate need for us to have a revision, not only of the National Transportation Act, which is certainly long overdue, but of the policies and programs that will go with it.

I think it is obvious that the outcry of the Maritime premiers last year, and the comments of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard), give an indication of the general anxiety and the general awareness that there is need of concrete action on the part of the minister, the department and the government.

What I am concerned about is that the minister act on the verbal commitments that were given to the maritime premiers and to the Newfoundland minister of transport. There are some specifics. Certainly the situation in Prince Edward Island with respect to commodity transport is becoming extremely serious. Not only I but my colleagues on the other side of the House have tried to bring this to the attention of both the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) with respect to the transportation of our basic commodity, that is, potatoes. But there seems to be a very indolent or half-hearted attitude concerning the carriers that will be used to move these potatoes to market.

There has been little or no recognition of the fact that we have seen a very rapid decline both in number and in quality of the reefers that have been used to move potatoes to market. Less than a decade ago we had well in excess of 4,000 of these cars; four or five years ago we were down to 2,500. It was originally expected that we might be down to about 1,500 this year, but the figure is much closer to 1,000.

As the minister would know if he contacted authorities in the potato industry in P.E.I. and New Brunswick, there are reports of increasing shortages this season. There are difficulties in organizing shipments of potatoes either to port or to export markets or to central Canadian markets, and yet the minister tells us that studies are going on, that there has not yet been a decision as to whether or not the new intermodal use, the use of trailers that will be driven to central points and loaded by piggyback on the train and taken to central Canadian markets, will replace the present use of rail cars. Yet I have not met one single individual, either in the potato industry or working with CNR, who believes to any degree that for many years to come we will not need a substantial number of rail cars to move well over two-thirds or three-quarters of our crop to market.

For a whole variety of reasons, both in terms of terminal points and in terms of having sufficient carriers available at reasonable cost, and in terms of organizing shipments that can get to market in this fashion, it will not be possible for five, ten, or 15 years to move more than a small percentage, perhaps no more than 15 per cent or 20 per cent at maximum by the intermodal system. In the foreseeable future we will depend on the railroad to move potatoes to the market. Yet the minister is reluctant even to place an order for 500, 700, or 800 reefer cars to tide us over this serious situtation. He said that more study must go on, more consultation. This week his colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, told us that he is not sure the producers will actually use these cars. He is certainly not basing that on any direct conversation he has had with anyone in the potato industry. Quite likely he is basing it on some reports from the CNR and on some cars that stood idle early in the season when everything was moving directly by ship to European markets.

It is about time the minister got together with some of his colleagues. It is about time he took action, or the kind of extreme situation that was forecast by his colleague, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, a year ago will come to fruition. It will not make me or any other member of the House happy to be able to say, "We told you so". That will not help the poor potato grower who will be stuck with a product which he will in no way be able to get to market. It is obvious that a decision will have to be taken with respect to this commodity.

The only question is how soon the minister will move, and whether he will move soon enough to head off a crisis which could well arise. The minister has been willing in the past to order some thousands of grain cars to service a market which he knows exists and requires this service primarily in western Canada. It is unexplainable to the people in my area why that same kind of response cannot occur with respect to the situation in P.E.I. and New Brunswick. I understand it could well be important because of a different delivery system for some of the horticultural producers in western Canada.

There are other questions. I do not want to spend all my time on this issue even though it is of basic concern to me as a representative from the potato growing area. I hope that the minister and his officials will take this additional plea very seriously.

I do want to deal, however, with the more general issue with respect to the minister's commitment about taking regional needs, objectives, and ends much more seriously. It seems to me there are a number of unanswered questions, questions which I think must be looked at very squarely. When the minister or his colleague, the Minister of Justice, said that basic consideration will be given or, to be more accurate, when he said that the policy basically implies that whenever national or regional, economic or social ends do not justify a transportation subsidy then the user of the facility or service should pay, what did he mean by national or regional, economic or social ends? There have been no indications since the meeting which the minister had with the Atlantic premiers back in the early part of February that he has a definite concept in mind of what kind of agreements he wanted to reach. What criteria will exist, so that everyone will know that this policy will be administered according to those particular ends and objectives?

Perhaps more important than the criteria—though certainly the criteria are a fundamental consideration—the second question is, who will make the determination? We are told that there is going to be much more consultation and co-operation. I am sure there are many people with a direct interest in the transportation industry who will be delighted to hear that the minister has discovered that transportation is something about which there has to be very close consultation and co-operation. But with whom will there be this consultation and co-operation? I suppose it will be with the provincial governments, with agencies, Crown corporations and others involved in the transportation field, but does it also mean other federal departments? Will it also be with respect to the development of employment opportunities under the Department of Manpower and Immigration, or with respect to commitments to develop new industry under DREE, or a change in tariff policy under the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, or with respect to the improvement or expansion of agriculture so that these will be factors bearing on the situation concerning regional, economic or social ends? We are not told. We have not heard. The minister has remained silent, both inside and outside this House.

We have a press release which the minister kindly circulated, but that gives little information or clarity to the responsibilities the minister or his department will exercise in this regard. Perhaps more important even than the question of criteria or who makes the determination is the basic dollar and cents question as to what funds we are talking about. Indeed it is in the area of funding that I am beginning to wonder whether the minister has really made any commitment at all because at one point in his release, which is also carried in the press communiqué from the twenty-fifth session of the Council of Maritime Premiers, the minister says, and I quote:

> Mr. Lang indicated his acceptance of the general principle that the federal government would re-allocate funds, resulting from a reduction in subsidy payments, to other essential priority transportation projects and programs in the region.

What a beautiful phrase, but how little it tells us of what funds, and to what extent these funds will be used to make transportation a positive tool for development in the regions of economic and social disparity in this country. Without some clear commitment as to the amount of funds we are talking about, more than vague terms such as re-allocation and re-orientation, we have very little to make us believe that there will be any substantial improvement or closing of the gap with respect to disastrous transportation policies and costs which have been in effect over the past decade.

Then, I suppose, most of all we have to be clear as to how this transportation policy with respect to regional objectives and ends is going to be administered and how it is going to be implemented. There are a whole series of questions which I would love to have the time to put on the record arising out of one report which was produced a little less than a year ago by the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission. They made a number of pungent observations, and raised a number of questions which surely need to be answered in the context of the agreement the minister appears to have arrived at with the four Atlantic governments.

I am going to quote two or three questions. The report notes on page 9 that rail freight traffic originating in the Atlantic provinces is in decline. What are the longer term implications for the region of this decline? Are there any viable methods by which the existing rail network could be more vigorously used to assist the region, or is it not worth the effort and the expense?

With respect to the over-all freight rate increase for rail of 85 per cent to 90 per cent last year, how serious is this for an Atlantic producer competing in the Ontario market? Were the various rate increases spread out fairly evenly across the country, or did they favour certain regions and industries more than others? What would be the effect of giving the provinces more jurisdiction over rates within their borders?

As I say, those connected with transportation within the region have a number of basic questions which need to be answered, but it seems to me that perhaps the most fundamental question of all is the question which has not yet been answered by the minister either in his press communiqué or, I doubt, in his meeting with the Atlantic premiers, or in any other place of which I am aware, and that question is, how does he view the long-term development of this country?

Does the minister believe that in administering the proposed transportation legislation he has some duty and some responsibility to play an activist role with respect to the chronic economic and social disparity which has existed in certain regions of the country for too long? Does he believe, when he looks at the income situation in certain communities in areas in parts of Newfoundland, Cape Breton, Prince Edward Island, or in eastern Quebec, which reflect an income of half the level of the national average of this country, that transportation is involved in that question? When he looks at the recent figures indicating that half the people who are unemployed come from east of the St. Lawrence River—roughly half a million people—does he believe that transportation is critically involved in solving that unacceptable human tragedy? What are the over-all goals of a new transportation act? That is perhaps where we should end this little talk this evening in looking at the National Transportation Act itself.

When one looks at the goals and the objectives set out in this bill, it is no wonder that the four governments of the Atlantic provinces unanimously agreed that, right at the outset, both in terms of the preamble and the objectives of this bill, there is not a clear recognition that transportation should be used as a tool for the economic and social health of the regions of this country. It is true that in one clause we read:

> It is hereby declared that the objective of the transportation policy for Canada is to achieve a transportation system that
> (a) is efficient,
> (b) is an effective instrument of support for the achievement of national and regional social and economic objectives . . .

I understand that by changing that and a couple of other clauses, there may be some further recognition of responsibility, but from my point of view, and perhaps from the point of view of very many people, unless the minister can clearly state at the outset that this bill is seen in the context of transportation as serving the reduction of regional disparities and the elimination of long-standing transportation inequities which exist in this country, we will not feel we have benefited from the amendments the minister placed before us this week. Quite frankly, for a Minister of Transport not to realize that, is surely to miss the essential point of this country. Surely there are two things which stand out for someone who looks at this just for a moment. I think we are the second largest country in the world and yet we have a population which is so small, relatively speaking. But it is so strung out that our great problem on a day-to-day basis is remaining viable as a country.

There has been a tremendous amount of attention paid to the situation vis-à-vis the future of Quebec and its relationship to the rest of the country, but surely germane to that situation and to all the provinces and regions of the country is the fact that unless something as basic as transportation works day by day in a whole series of ways to relieve the difficulties and the disadvantages which exist for a person who is a consumer in Charlottetown or a potato grower in part of my riding, it is not serving the nation well as a whole. Frankly, I have been disturbed that the Minister of Transport has taken so long even to begin to recognize that situation. Even in response to the questions that I and others have raised with him about the concept of user-pay, he having recognized it was no longer valid, and whether he would state clearly and unequivocally that from this time forth transportation policies would be used as a positive tool for development and, if you like, national equalization, as a positive tool to open up communities that have existed far too long at the end of transportation links that have done them a disservice—and whether this will be overcome with avengeance—that is not what I hear from the Minister of Transport. I hear that if it is appropriate, and if the objective is warranted, there will be relocation and reorientation.

At another point we are told that the minister and the maritime premiers agreed that, where economic development objectives required it, these objectives would take precedence over the commercial viabilities of the services concerned, and that later on they agreed on the merits of applying the subsidy only to selected commodities and only to shippers of regionally produced commodities. Even there, there is no recognition of the inbound situation. There was some grudging admission that perhaps we should do something for producers in places like the Atlantic region with respect to central Canadian markets. That is only half the equation; there is still the importing of raw materials and equipment in order to begin to be productive and competitive with the rest of the country.

To date we have heard no explanations, no assurances, no call to establish a transportation policy that is really going to reduce and redress regional imbalances and inequities. Without that assurance we do not have a real transportation policy, but a hollow mockery of one.

Mr. Alan Martin (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, in engaging in this debate on major transportation policy I should like to discuss a number of issues of particular interest to me, and I would gather them under five separate headings.

The first is one which I know other members from urban areas have already spoken about. It relates to the pressing need for federal aid to urban transit.

The second issue I should like to speak about, perhaps a little more philosophically, and to put forward ideas on that I think are important, relates to inter-urban transport.

The third matter I should like to touch upon is what I consider a very important subject relating to the safety factor at open level crossings. I refer more specifically to major urban areas where this is a continuing and serious problem.

The fourth matter I should like to address myself to is the construction of grade separations, which has some direct reference to the earlier topic, but still is a topic on its own because of the vast sums of money that will ultimately be needed.

The last topic is the role of the Canadian Transport Commission in some of the areas of its responsibility, particularly its role as I see it as a responsible public forum in the service of the people of Canada.

On the matter of aid to urban transit, I think this is indeed a most important area in which governments should and must become involved, including the federal government. In coming to this general conclusion I think one only needs to pose the question of what kinds of areas should government be involved in, in the first place, and specifically the federal government. It seems to me that the answer is government at the federal level should be involved where there is a need felt by a large number of citizens, where there are social injustices, of one kind or another, and the demand, for whatever reason, is there.

In cities like Montreal and Toronto we have some 20 per cent of the Canadian population. I do not have exact figures but I would guess that probably 40 per cent of the population in those two cities is moving about every day from home to job and back—not in inter-urban transportation, not flying from city to city or travelling by train from city to city, but getting up in the morning and going to work, not travelling for pleasure or enjoyment but simply to earn a living and in effect help keep the economy ticking. That seems to me to suggest a need for government at the federal level to be extremely interested.

There are other goals that can be accomplished in the area of urban transit such as energy conservation, a goal that I think is very much before Canadians at this time.

Then there is the extreme cost of expressways. In other words, if we do not have adequate urban transit it means indirectly that we must continue to promote the use of the automobile from home to work and back. We have come to the realization that the means of providing channels for these automobiles to move on, expressways and major roads, is a major expenditure in terms of dollars, of environmental pollution, and of parking. A failure to recognize the need for urban transit is an admission that we accept the other option, which is to continue to promote the use of the automobile for this purpose.

If there is any doubt about the relationship of federal aid to urban transit for the ordinary urban taxpayer, I suggest it is not entirely different to the kind of expenditures that the federal government still makes for medicare, family allowances, and old age pensions, where the benefit can be felt in the pocketbook of the individual taxpayer who lives in the urban community. His mode of urban transit is basic to his daily life. All levels of government must be involved, just as they are in medicare. Municipal governments must be involved in ensuring there are adequate hospitals in the area, while provincial and federal governments provide funding. I suggest no level of government can stand aside in this day and age from the needs of urban transit.

I should like to feel that it was in direct recognition of this need—in fact, specifically in recognition of this need—that this government, or that in office during the twenty-ninth parliament, decided in its wisdom during the last election campaign to recognize the need to make a commitment to the Canadian people that there would be substantial capital assistance to municipalities to assist them to acquire the much-needed new equipment to improve urban transit. I believe the commitment was somewhere in the area of $300 million. It is important to recognize that approximately one-third of this, $100 million, has already been put into this project and will start working its way into the system this spring. But that is not enough, Mr. Speaker. There must be recognition of the remainder of the commitment. I am pleased to note that on more than one occasion in the House during this past week in the question period the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) indicated that a decision on this has not been finalized. The cabinet is still considering the matter. I plead with it to look at this area of need, affecting ordinary citizens in the streets of our towns and cities, as it looks at other social services such as medicare, old age assistance, family allowances, etc., services which are basic to people's everyday lives.

It is important to discourage the use of vehicles which transport only one or two people to work, and to encourage the use of vehicles which will transport many people efficiently, save energy, and pollute the environment less. People will use rapid transit increasingly if it meets their needs, is clean, and efficient. They will not use it if it is inconvenient, for example if they must stand in the cold a long time waiting for a bus. Then they will say no, they will use their automobiles. The government can discourage the use of the automobile by providing services which will persuade people to switch to public transport.

Before leaving this topic I should like to refer to the reaction of certain municipal authorities to the announcement that the government's commitment in this area will possibly be curtailed this year. I note particularly the reaction of authorities in metropolitan Toronto. It disturbs me immensely to note that certain officials of metropolitan Toronto have indicated in the last ten days or two weeks that they are about to renege on their commitment to provide light, rapid transit for the borough of Scarborough. They do not help me in the case I am trying to make, that the federal government should contribute substantially to urban transit. It is unfortunate that municipal governments themselves cannot fix their policies, stay with them and stop equivocating. All the same I implore our federal authorities to remember their commitment. At the same time I plead with elected municipal officials to carry out their plans for providing the urban transit system our people demand.

It has been said that we cannot afford new urban transit systems, that they are a luxury at this time. I say that the $200 million-odd which was committed to this area was not to be spent on a luxury. It was to fill a real need. In view of the large budgets of various departments and large loans made to various Crown corporations, and in view of the amounts provided in estimates for various government services, I suggest that we could meet needs in transportation by bringing about a small shift in the ordering of priorities. Surely in a budget of over $40 billion it should not be difficult to rearrange some of our priorities and keep a basic commitment made during the 1974 election campaign, for that would give the ordinary taxpayer the feeling that the federal governement is concerned about those things which affect most of us day in, day out.

I come now to inter-urban transit. It is time we developed an over-all strategy in this country for inter-urban transit. At present we have three basic modes of transportation, air, rail, and road. One way or another, we subsidize those three modes. We subsidize extensively the air and rail services, and subsidize indirectly bus services. We do not subsidize bus services directly, but subsidize the roads on which they run. I suggest that we need some sort of transport strategy in this area, and I put forward once more recommendations I made in other forums. I suggest that we should provide buses which would give clean, efficient, and fast service for trips up to 200 miles. We should set up appropriate bus depots to meet needs, so that people would be encouraged to use the bus for trips of up to 200 miles. In southwestern and eastern Ontario such bus trips would cover trips to many of our major centres. Unfortunately in Scarborough, an area with a population of 400,000, we do not even have a bus terminal. There is something irrational about that. We spend millions on new airports, but there is not even one bus terminal to serve a community of 400,000.

For trips between 200 and 500 miles we should use rail service. We should provide fast, efficient, and economical rail service for trips of up to 500 miles. We should encourage Canadians to use aircraft only for trips greater than 500 miles. We need a strategy which will take into account air, rail, and bus services and encourage the maximum possible use of each mode instead of encouraging competition between them in any given transport corridor.

I shall now deal with the safety factor at level crossings. This subject is of concern to many members representing urban areas where the exposure factor is high. By the exposure factor I mean the factor arrived at by multiplying the number of trains with the number of automobiles and other vehicles crossing any given point. Personally I am not satisfied that the Canadian Transport Commission has been tough enough in this area, and not satisfied that it has acted sufficiently in the public interest. There has not been enough insistence on meeting safety requirements at level crossings where there is a high exposure factor. I have had some personal experience in this matter, for in Scarborough, a municipality of 400,000, there are 35 level crossings. It has taken me a whole year to convince the commission that a new examination of each of those level crossings is needed to determine if the current safety factors are adequate.

I am concerned, because there seems to be an inclination on the part of the regulatory body when considering these crossings to be very conscious of the needs of the railways. If a train is normally permitted to travel at 90 miles an hour through an urban area, there seems to be an extreme reluctance to suggest that the speed limit be reduced to 50 or 60 miles an hour where there are a number of dangerous level crossings. There does not seem to be the same degree of concern over the expressed concern of individual citizens. What I am attempting to say is that the safety factor for level crossings is too frequently looked upon by the regulatory body as something that is there to ensure satisfaction on the part of the railway.

I have one interesting and recent example. Signal lights were installed at an intersection in my borough. I discovered that the signal lights had not been installed primarily because of a demand by the people. They were installed because of a demand by the railway so that its trains could move through that intersection without them being obligated to post a flagman and conduct the train through.

It is this whole area where I feel the concerns of the public need to receive more attention on the part of the regulatory body than now is the case. I think the regulatory body must lay down its regulations once it has examined each and every situation, and insist that the railways as well as the public carry out those regulations and follow them.

Grade separations are becoming an increasingly difficult subject because of the increasing expense of each grade separation. It has been estimated in my own community that to separate 16 of the most urgent crossings at the present time would cost $69 million, of which the federal government would make by far the largest contribution.

All I ask at this time is that the minister, in bringing this bill forward, do nothing to damage in any way or otherwise affect the relocation fund that is currently available and from which money can be drawn when approved applications come forward from the municipalities and are approved by the Canadian Transport Commission as warranting a grade separation. I feel this particular fund is working. I am most concerned that nothing be done in the course of implementing this bill to affect in any way the provision of those kinds of finances.

I realize that all grade separations cannot be done at once. It is a slow and methodical process. However, with increasing attention to the safety factor at level crossings, and an increasing push to move all of these grade seperations as they come forward and finance them at the federal-provincial level, we can eventually accomplish them all.

My real concern is if this fund were to disappear or in any way be transferred to another level of government to operate, we would be in serious trouble. I plead with the minister to ensure that, in this legislation at least, nothing will be done to give rise to any change in that particular type of funding.

Lastly, I want to speak of the role of the Canadian Transport Commission in those areas with which I am familiar. They are very limited, but they come from my own personal involvement. I have mentioned one, the matter of adequacy of safety standards.

There is another one to which I have addressed a private member's bill. It has received considerable support in this House and I trust it will continue to receive the support of the government as it goes through committee. I refer to the matter of requiring the railways to come before the CTC to have their plans for extension of marshalling yards or other facilities approved by the CTC before proceeding. This is an area where there is inadequate consideration of the concerns of the public. I mentioned the need for the ordinary property owners in most urban areas across this country to go to their municipality when they wish to put up the lightest type of building in their own back yard. However, because they possess a right of way, the railways are not required to go to anybody when they wish to construct on that right of way, no matter what type of facility they want to construct. There is a requirement that they do this for new branch lines.

I have suggested in my private member's bill and I urge the government to take an increasing interest in policy as a result of this bill, that when the railways have construction plans they should insist that they bring them before a public body, giving the neighbours in that particular community an opportunity to present themselves and speak in support of or against a particular proposal.

I urge the minister, in redirecting some of the responsibilities of the Canadian Transport Commission, to insist that it indeed become a body to serve the public and to be seen by the public as an instrument acting in their individual interest.

These are several remarks that I wish to address in connection with this particular bill. In some ways they are unrelated, but, in my view, all important. They all express the concern I have about the need of government to be active itself in transportation problems associated with people rather than with goods. I realize the problems in the area of goods, but this time I am addressing myself specifically to problems involving people.

I ask once again for further consideration of this commitment to aid for urban transit, bearing in mind that it is an area that is felt individually by each worker every day of his life as he goes back and forth to work. It is as important to him as having proper hospitalization, proper provision for his old age, proper assistance for other things over which he has no control.

I intend to support this bill. However, again I ask the minister to use his persuasive powers with his government colleagues on those matters to which I addressed myself tonight, as did my other colleagues, particularly those from the urban areas of Toronto and Montreal.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen).

Mr. Friesen: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It is ten o'clock, and I have recognized the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—SOVIET UNION—INQUIRY WHETHER REPRESENTATIONS MADE BY MINISTER FOR RELEASE OF GEORGI VINS

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I want to bring to the attention of the House tonight a topic that has received much publicity of recent date. That is the matter of the internment of prisoners of conscience in the USSR. Specifically I want to raise the case of one Georgi Vins.

In August, 1975, when the Helsinki accord was signed, and especially when the third basket was signed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), along with the other leaders, I am sure most of us were filled with the hope that peace, stability, and specifically the recognition of human rights, would be upheld by the nations represented at the signing of the Helsinki accord. Moreover, human rights are guaranteed under article 18 of the United Nations Declaration on Human Rights.

But despite the signing of the Helsinki accord, prisoners of conscience in the USSR have spent time in Soviet prisons, they have spent time in labour camps, generally in Siberia, and further, as one of the most invidious forms of punishment ever devised, they have spent time in psychiatric institutions, hidden from the eyes of the world and hidden from international justice. The prisoner I want to mention today, Mr. Georgi Vins, is serving time for a crime no more serious than that of practising his religious faith. That is a crime in the USSR.

On November 14, 1976, I moved a motion under Standing Order 43 as follows:

> That members of this House urge the Prime Minister to make representations to the government of the USSR that Georgi Vins be released from imprisonment and that the government of the Soviet Union allow him and all other religious believers within its borders to worship God freely according to their own consciences, as the Soviet Union is committed to do by the provisions of its constitution and by the provisions of the United Nations covenant on civil and political rights which the Soviet Union has ratified.

That motion was denied unanimous consent. On the same day I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson) whether he would make specific representations to the USSR on behalf of Mr. Vins, a Baptist pastor in the USSR who was arrested in March, 1974, for professing his faith and sentenced on June 28, 1975, to five years' imprisonment, plus an additional five years in exile, plus confiscation of property, a penalty which directly affects his family and, specifically, his five children. His offence? Teaching the Bible to those under the age of 18 and leading what was termed an unorganized religious group. He was tried under section 209 of the criminal code of the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic.

The World Council of Churches has written to the USSR, saying in part:

> We have reason to believe, on the basis of information received, that the charges against Mr. Vins are made primarily because of his religious convictions and activities.

The Nobel prizewinner, Andrei Sakharov, wrote:

> The arrests, breaking-up of prayer meetings, fines, discrimination in school and at work, and, as the height of inhumanity, the taking away of children from their parents—all this is the lot of the Baptist and to one degree or another of many other religious groups who are inconvenient to the authorities.

What is to happen? World opinion today cannot allow itself to lessen its moral support for these prisoners of conscience. Western news media must focus attention on the struggle for human rights in the USSR, and we, as parliamentarians, must stand up and say that what is happening in the Soviet Union is wrong. When the Prime Minister went to see President Carter I was tremendously pleased with the direct approach the President had taken. Yet it was evident from the reply of the Secretary of State for External Affairs that direct representations on behalf of Georgi Vins have not been made.

The Prime Minister said this week that we intend to follow the diplomatic route rather than the direct route. I have not had time to explain the case in detail, but I want to say that what we as Canadians have done is not enough. What the Prime Minister has done is not enough. What we as parliamentarians have done is not enough.

The Helsinki accord is a farce in the USSR. It has been a total and absolute abdication of what the USSR authorities signed. The families of these men and women, and in many , many cases their blood, cry out for justice. I urge, I plead, that the Prime Minister, his officials, and for that matter all parliamentarians, stand up and voice the concern of a concerned world that human rights are being severely violated in the USSR, and that international world opinion demands a radical change of attitude and justice for these many people who are victims of a very, very cruel regime.

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand E. Leblanc (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on November 4, 1976, the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) raised, and this with good reason, the problem of human rights in Russia. He is convinced, as everybody in the House is, that that problem is very important, and we are all very much concerned about it.

It is unfortunate that the hon. member for Provencher could not attend this afternoon's sitting of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, when the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson) expressed his opinion and discussed the policy of the government on that most important subject. Following many questions, both from opposition and from government members, the minister made important statements on the subject. I suggest that the hon. member read carefully the minutes which will be issued after that sitting, where he will certainly find detailed answers to the question he asked on November 4 and which is raised again tonight.

As I only have three minutes to speak, I shall simply say, to sum up the discussions we had this afternoon, that the Canadian government has a deep and constant commitment to find solutions to this problem of human rights. As a matter of fact, this subject has been discussed on a general basis during the minister's visit in Moscow last October, but no particular case has been mentioned except for certain cases concerning the reuniting of families. Towards the end of this year, during the Belgrade conference, the 35 countries which signed the Helsinki agreement will make a survey; they will re-examine all the aspects of this important problem and evaluate the performance of each country as far as this Helsinki agreement is concerned. At that time Canada will be able to avail itself of the opportunity to pursue its numerous representations to these countries, particularly those which would have failed to honour their commitments.

[English]

MANPOWER—GRANTS TO CONSTITUENCIES IN RESPECT OF MANPOWER MOBILITY

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I apologize for detaining the House at such a late hour. However, I am exercising an ancient and important right on behalf of a citizen who, I am sure the House will agree, has fallen into difficulty through no fault of his own.

I wish to compliment the minister and his department for taking action. After I gave his office notice of the question, the minister was good enough to have one of his officials give my constituent, Mr. Carlton Champion, landed immigrant status after almost six years in this country, four X-ray examinations, all of which were sent by registered mail to the department, and two other applications.

Unhappily, the department lost my constituent's file. The department alleges that my constituent moved too often. In fact he moved from the United States to Toronto, and from Toronto to Goose Bay, Labrador, where he was employed by one of the agencies of the government of Canada. His neighbour on one side was an immigration officer and so was his neighbour across the street, friends and acquaintances of his. He was registered with Manpower at Goose Bay and was registered with the immigration service at Goose Bay, so there was no question of any hiding. My constituent also underwent a security check with the government of Canada which included fingerprinting, so any question that he was avoiding publicizing where he was, is totally inaccurate. He was an employee of this government and of the Public Service of Canada.

In any event, the files were lost. My constituent came to this country in August of 1971, but only last week was a ministerial permit issued authorizing him to be in Canada, despite the fact that I have in front of me a letter from the Department of Manpower and Immigration dated August 12, 1971, Toronto, which reads:

> We have received an application for permanent admission to Canada from Mr. Carlton Champion. There is no objection on our part to the above named accepting employment, pending compliance with immigration requirements.
> Yours very truly,

It was signed for the district administrator of Canada Immigration Centre. The problem is that because his status was only settled last week, my constituent was ineligible for a manpower mobility payment. His wife and four children are in severely destitute circumstances. Here I want to pay another compliment to the department, the immigration people in Saint-John, New-Brunswick, who were so upset at the way this case has been handled that they have seen to it that my constituent has work. He has now returned to work for one of the government agencies. Unhappily, it is only for six weeks. But my constituent, who was at Goose Bay, Labrador, when the Goose Bay facility was phased out, had to move to Saint John, New Brunswick. He was told that he would be eligible for manpower mobility funding, and when it was discovered that his status, through no fault of his, had not been cleared up and he was still a stateless person until last week, he was denied manpower mobility funding.

I am exercising on his part his privilege, one I am glad to undertake, because I am sure that a sensitive and sympathetic department would wish, as I do, to go the second mile in unravelling this complicated and quite heartrending case. The department has solved the status issue about five years too late because my constituent will now have to wait three years, as I understand it, before claiming his right to citizenship, instead of being a citizen now, as he would have been if the department has not lost his file. He also, unhappily, has his furniture in storage. It is about to be re-possessed. I have gone to the trouble of sending a telegram asking the movers to hold up on selling the furniture until a sensitive, compassionate department can do what it should do on behalf of Carlton Champion and see to it that the manpower mobility payment is paid.

Mr. Arthur Portelance (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Carl Champion was refused a manpower mobility grant because at the time he submitted his application, the Saint John, N.B., CMC considered that he was not a landed immigrant and, therefore, did not meet the requirements of the manpower mobility program regulations. On the other hand, the department officials who reviewed his case felt that the CMC had misinterpreted the manpower mobility program regulations in connection with Mr. Champion's immigration status. Therefore, Mr. Champion's application for a grant will be reassessed to determine if he meets the other requirements for a mobility grant and, if so, a mobility grant will be authorized so that he may obtain all the benefits he is eligible for.

Though Mr. Champion arrived in Canada in July 1971, a request for his entry, sponsored by his wife, was made on August 22, 1971. Before any of the formalities related to his request could be gone through, Mr. Champion moved several times without leaving any trace of his whereabouts or advising immigration authorities of his change of address. Only in January 1976 did he again get in touch with the immigration authorities with regard to his landed immigrant status. He was then advised that, to meet the requirements of the department, he and his dependents would have to get a medical. He took his medical on April 5, 1976, but his dependents did not until September 21, 1976.

The civil servants advised me that Mr. Carlton Champion and his dependents were granted landed immigrant status on February 25, 1977. If Mr. Champion wants a settlement grant, he must go to his local immigration centre and his request will be studied in the light of current rules. In view of the circumstances I have just described, in all sincerity I feel the department acted in good faith with Mr. Champion.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS—LOG HOUSING PROGRAM FOR NORTHERN CANADA

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have this opportunity to raise once again a matter which is of great importance. I have mentioned this matter in this House many times. I have raised it in public and in committee.

Generally speaking, I have found agreement with this idea. It is not a new one. It is one I have been pursuing for sometime, and I have been trying to get some response from the government. I have been trying to get the government to take the initiative whereby a good housing program can be put into place in the Northwest Territories, especially in the Mackenzie district. I have been advocating a good log housing program under which people can build their own homes in the Mackenzie district using a local renewable resource, namely, logs, which are in abundance, especially along the Mackenzie and in the Liard area. I think this idea makes sense for the simple reason that a good log housing program would make use of a local, renewable, natural resource. It would provide badly needed jobs, and it would also provide housing for people in the Mackenzie district.

I have described the area at other times in this place as a disaster area, and that it is. I know this because I have travelled in the Mackenzie district. I have travelled in many parts of the Northwest Territories for many years. As hon. members know, I canvassed door to door in my campaign to become elected to the House of Commons.

I am raising this question again because I have not been able to get a positive response from the department. As most people know, bad housing creates social problems. Children do not do well in school, young people in the family may not be able to hold jobs, there are health problems, and there are mental health problems, especially, in a very, very, cold climate. For some time I have been advocating that the territorial administration, through the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, initiate a good log housing program in the Mackenzie district of the Northwest Territories. People there who already have good log houses know that they will last for 100 years or more. As a rule maintenance is minimal and, as the houses are generally well insulated, heating does not cost a lot. Not much training is needed for construction, and I think we already have enough people with the knowledge to establish a good program. The need is there, the material is there, and the labour is there.

If the program were launched it could start by filling an immediate need of the legislature of the Northwest Territories. They have a table, they have chairs for the members to sit on, a mace, and recently a Speaker's chair was presented by the Parliament of Canada to the legislature of the Northwest Territories. But, Mr. Speaker, they do not have a building. I suggest a project could be launched through Canada Works, perhaps the Department of Regional Economic Expansion or some leftover funds from LIP programs, and a log building constructed to house the Speaker's chair, the table, chairs, and mace that the legislature already has. Maybe 50 or 100 years from now the people of the territories would want a different kind of building, but this would be a starting point for a log housing program.

I may be stepping out of line, Mr. Speaker, in suggesting that some of the municipalities in the territories change their regulations that forbid a certain style of log construction. The decision is up to them, but I would hope, once it was shown that a good log house worked and fitted in with the environment, that the regulations would be changed.

I should like to ask the department what the government is doing about such a program. I am sure this is not the first time they have heard about it and I will see to it that they hear more about it in the future. Is the government doing anything about such an idea?

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, following the 1972 recommendations of the Northwest Territories Council task force on housing, all of the provincial type housing responsibilities were transferred by the department to the territorial government. In 1974 the N.W.T. Housing Corporation assumed these responsibilities.

The housing corporation has made the greatest possible use of the various housing programs provided by the National Housing Act. Due to the particular needs of the many low income residents of the territories, the public housing program, under sections 40 and 43 of the National Housing Act, have provided most of the family accommodation built to date.

Following Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation's agreement to provide NHA loans for the capital costs and to share in the operating losses of any approved log houses included in the public housing program, the N.W.T. Housing Corporation established a log milling operation in Fort Resolution. Local labour and materials were utilized to produce uniform sized logs which would meet CMHC standards. To date 37 log houses have been completed and ten more are under construction in various communities in the Mackenzie River area. The per unit costs have ranged from $50,000 to $77,000.

Unfortunately a major problem has been encountered. Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation standards for the public housing program require logs of a minimum diameter of ten inches. The supply of trees of a size which will produce milled logs of this size is so limited that the inclusion of log houses in the public housing programs will end when the ones presently under construction are completed.

Although it is not limited to log housing, the N.W.T. Housing Corporation's "Small Settlement Home Assistance Program" encourages residents of smaller communities to utilize local materials, normally logs, for the construction of their homes. Any sized logs can be used in this program. The program has been providing grants of up to $5,000 to cover the cost of manufactured components, such as doors, windows, roofing, etc., required to complete a basic structure built of local materials. The housing corporation intends to increase the grants to a maximum of $10,000, including $7,500 for materials and $2,500 for transportation. The number of grants provided by the program is expected to increase from 20 in 1976-77 to 30 in each of the following years.

Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation's rural and remote housing program will be available for the first time in the Northwest Territories in 1977-78. The program's allowance for labour contributed by an applicant should encourage the use of logs for the basic house structure. Groups of residents in Fort Smith and in Fort Simpson have already applied for loans to construct log houses in those communities.

If only wood is used as fuel, any sized log can be used to build houses under this program.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow morning at 11 o'clock a.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.29 p.m.

SUGGESTED DISCONTINUANCE OF PROGRAMS CONCERNING THE LATE MACKENZIE KING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to raise a matter of urgent and pressing necessity arising out of an attempt by the CBC to conjure up the spirit of the departed Right Honourable William Lyon Mackenzie King, not knowing whether that exercise was attempted at the request of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), or whether it was an attempt by that Crown corporation to bring itself once again into the good graces of the Liberal party. In either event I move, seconded by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp):

That this House urge the CBC to cease and desist from further such attempts, believing that this country is in sufficient danger from the ghastly mismanagement of the present administration without compounding the problem by obtaining the ghostly advice of the Prime Minister's unlamented predecessor.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The presentation of such a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 can only be made with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CRIMINAL CODE

PROPOSED CHANGE IN PROVISIONS CONCERNING ABORTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to Standing Order 43. In view of the recent tabling of the Badgley Commission report criticizing the operation of the abortion law in Canada and the lack of family planning facilities, in view of the statistics in that report that necessary abortion is unavailable to a wide cross-section of women, particularly those of low income, less educated and residing in rural areas, and in view of Badgley's further report that one out of five Canadian women still find it necessary to leave this country to obtain a necessary therapeutic abortion, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That:

(1) this government forthwith bring in legislation following the recommendations of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that the Criminal Code be amended to permit abortion in the first 12 weeks of pregnancy or less to be performed by any qualified physician in consultation with his patient and,

(2) that the freeze in family planning spending be ended and substantial additional funds be provided in family planning area.

Mr. Speaker: Under the provisions of Standing Order 43 the motion can be put only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

HEALTH

ESTABLISHMENT OF CENTRE TO DEAL WITH ENVIRONMENTAL HEALTH HAZARDS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. J. R. Holmes (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I, too, rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the growing problem of mercury pollution, which is national in scope, and in view of the growing number of individuals with confirmed elevated blood levels of mercury and the health hazard thereby created, and in view of the absence of long term planning on the part of the government, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot (Mr. Jarvis):

That the recommendation of Dr. T. W. Clarkson, Professor and Director of the Medical School of the University of Rochester as outlined in his interim report mentioned in this House on May 7, 1976 entitled "Exposure to methyl mercury in Grassy Narrows and White Dog Reserves" calling for the establishment of a national centre in environmental health to deal with environmental health hazards from methyl mercury and other pollutants now be accepted.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 can be made only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

ALLEGATIONS OF PAY-OFFS BY BOEING—REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF NAMES OF PERSONS OR COMPANIES WITH WHOM GOVERNMENT HAD DEALINGS

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. Has the Acting Prime Minister received information from any U.S. government organization through any channel divulging the names of Canadian companies or persons or foreigners with whom the Canadian government has dealt internationally and, if so, will the hon. gentleman reveal those names to the House?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Acting Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, we have not received any such names. If the hon. member is referring to the investigation which is being conducted in the United States by the Securities Exchange Commission into Boeing, we have asked for information through diplomatic channels but we have not yet received any information.

POSSIBLE USE OF AGENTS IN PURCHASE OF AIRCRAFT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Would the Acting Prime Minister assure the House that in any deals or negotiations between the United States aircraft companies on the one hand and the Canadian government, or the Department of Supply and Services, or the Department of National Defence, or the Ministry of Transport, or Air Canada on the other, no use was made of commission agents either Canadian or foreign by the Canadian government or by any of its departments or Crown corporations?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Acting Prime Minister): On that point, I have no knowledge with respect to the use of any commission agents in connection with these transactions. It is a question which is important but not directly related to the Securities Exchange investigation about which we are attempting to secure information. Of course, there would be no difficulty in attempting to secure information on the point that the hon. member raises, but I have no way of adding strength to the suggestion, nor would I wish to add any strength to the suggestion, that agents have been used.

USE OF COMMISSION AGENTS IN PURCHASES OR SALES ABROAD OF EQUIPMENT

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, which I will direct to the Minister of National Defence. Has the minister knowledge of the names of commission agents or consultants in other countries who have been involved when Canada has made large defence purchases or sales abroad?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker, I have had no indication of the names. Purchases are made through the normal channels as contracted by the Department of Supply and Services. In this particular situation tenders have been recalled from both Douglas and Boeing in the normal manner, directly with the aircraft manufacturers.

ALLEGED PAY-OFFS BY BOEING—REQUEST THAT NAMES OF THOSE CONNECTED WITH ALLEGATION BE PUBLISHED

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Acting Prime Minister. Once the names of the alleged 18 individuals or corporations—these are the 18 names that the SEC is attempting to obtain and release publicly in the United States—are known to the government, would the government release those names here in Canada, if they are not released elsewhere, so that we and the Canadian public can be assured that no Canadian department or agency has had business dealings with those organizations or people?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I gather the hon. member is referring to the 18 names which the court has already undertaken to make public. The information, therefore, is of course public and will be made available to hon. members.

ALLEGED PAY-OFFS BY BOEING—POSSIBILITY OF CONTRIBUTIONS TO LIBERAL PARTY—NATURE OF INVESTIGATION

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. With regard to the undertaking given by the Prime Minister of Canada yesterday at a press conference that he is looking into the possibility that Boeing may have made a financial contribution, or financial contributions, to the Liberal Party of Canada at the time contracts between Boeing, DND and Air Canada were being considered or negotiated, I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether this investigation is being made directly with Boeing, or is it being made through the Liberal Party of Canada offices?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have read what the Prime Minister said at the press conference, that he might look into this subject, but I have nothing to add to what he has said.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

BIRTHDAY CONGRATULATIONS TO MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, at the outset, and without wanting to prejudice your rulings subsequently today, this being the forty-fourth birthday of Your Honour I should like on behalf of all members of the House to extend our congratulations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear! Speech.

Mr. Speaker: Needless to say I am grateful for the kind expression of sentiment, but the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby still only gets three questions!

Mr. Broadbent: Again without further prejudicing Your Honour's decision, I might add that not only is the early forties an appropriate age for Speakers, but being neither too young nor too old to be exquisitely appropriate for Prime Ministers as well!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA LIMITED

DENIAL THAT AGENT USED IN SALE OF REACTOR TO SOUTH KOREA—EFFORTS TO OBTAIN VIEWS OF VICE-PRESIDENT OF KOREA ELECTRIC

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I should like to ask a question of the Acting Prime Minister. Following questions in the House yesterday, has the government checked with AECL officials regarding their explanation of the contention by the vice-president of the Korea Electric Corporation that no agent was involved in the purchase of a reactor from AECL by Korea; and related to that, has the government decided to suspend any further payments to Mr. Shaul Eisenberg?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, AECL has reported very great difficulty in comprehending the comments which have been made by the vice-president of the Korea Electric Company. While the present vice-president does business with AECL, he was not in place at the time these particular transactions were in play, and it is obvious that there is considerable difference of opinion between AECL and the reported statements made by the vice-president of the Korea Electric Company on a number of points, including the question of an agent, because I am informed by AECL that during the negotiation period from 1973 to 1975, both in Canada and in Korea, AECL and the Korea Electric Company met in the presence of the agent, so that obviously his existence was known and obviously felt by the Korea Electric Company.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, since the relevant question presumably is not whether Mr. Eisenberg may or may not have been present at a particular meeting, but rather what precise functions he performed, was there just use made of certain offices for the making of telephone calls on an essentially flimsy basis? Is that the kind of involvement, or was he acting in a significant way which would in any sense justify the millions of dollars which were paid out to him? That seems to me to be the kind of inquiry which has to be made.

Related to that I would like to ask the acting Prime Minister another question. Following the statement attributed to the vice-president of that corporation, which was reported in the Toronto Star yesterday, has the government instructed the Canadian ambassador in Korea to get in touch with the gentleman involved and to get directly from him his views as to the precise nature of the role of Mr. Eisenberg in this transaction?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, on the first part of the question, as the hon. member knows, officials of AECL have appeared before the Public Accounts Committee on the negotiations with respect to the Korean sale.

Miss MacDonald: That was a joke.

Mr. MacEachen: They placed before the committee statements and documents showing in detail, as I understand it, the part played by the agent, and that is evidence which was put before the committee by AECL. Members of the committee will have to assess the weight of that evidence when they make their report to the House of Commons, but the evidence was there indicating that the agent was active in this situation for a number of years. That is the situation.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I asked the Acting Prime Minister about the accuracy of the claims made by AECL. That is precisely what is being called into question by the statement of the vice-president of the Korea Electric Company, so the evidence the committee has had to consider has been presented in this instance by only one of the parties involved.

This is an important matter, and to understate it considerably it has the smell of scandal which has surrounded the role of agents, not only in this transaction but in others. Does the Acting Prime Minister not think it appropriate that the Canadian ambassador get in touch with this senior representative of the company in Korea and get directly from him his view of what took place? That question is in part related to the answer given by the Solicitor General yesterday regarding the limited role the RCMP can play in such investigations.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, quite apart from whether it is a good idea for the Canadian ambassador to speak to the vice-president of the Korea Electric Company and to ask him whether what he is reported to have said is still his view, there are quite a number of elements of inaccuracy which can be detected in the reported statement made by the vice-president of the Korea Electric Company, one of which is that his company had never done any business with Eisenberg. It is well known that Eisenberg has had business dealings with Korea Electric on a number of major non-nuclear projects. I am saying that the hon. member ought to assess the credibility of the vice-president in light of other known facts relating to his statement.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

ALLEGATIONS OF KICKBACKS—REQUEST FOR JUDICIAL INQUIRY

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Acting Prime Minister in the light of his answer, in the light of the many facts brought out with respect to the involvement of Crown corporations in kickbacks, the conflicts of evidence, and the difficulties encountered by the public accounts committee, one of the best functioning committees of the House of Commons, if it is not now time to undertake an independent judicial inquiry so that witnesses may be examined under oath, documents examined and the whole mess which we have been discussing looked into? There has been stonewalling. I do not say that the minister, personally, has been stonewalling, but we are not receiving answers. A judicial inquiry would allow names to be cleared, and the good name of Canada to be cleared as well. Innuendoes against people in Canada have been raised. Their names could be cleared. If they are not innocent, the proper process of law could be undertaken.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when this issue first developed, the request of the opposition was that we should ask the public accounts committee to deal with the question. We provided a reference, which in our view was capable of permitting the public accounts committee to examine the question. The public accounts committee has not reported yet. I agree with the hon. member that it is a well-functioning committee. I believe it would be a mistake at this point to sidestep parliament—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Horner: Otto sidesteps parliament every day.

Mr. MacEachen: It would be a mistake to sidestep parliament.

Mr. Lawrence: Good grief!

Mr. MacEachen: Sidestepping the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham is something I would not care to recommend.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure if anybody can give a stonewalling, cover-up answer better than the Acting Prime Minister.

Mr. Paproski: He is the king of stonewallers.

Mr. Woolliams: I am sure others agree with me when I suggest that the minister is very capable in that regard. Let me preface my supplementary question with a comment that I think the committee is doing an excellent job, but the rules governing committees do not allow it to sort out the facts. The Acting Prime Minister this morning suggested that there are weaknesses, that one person said this and another said that. If we are to institute a judicial inquiry, witnesses could be examined under oath. The inquiry could be like the crime commission in Quebec, which was able to get at the facts.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is making a representation. Naturally, questions which relate to any matter which is before a standing committee always give the Chair difficulty. However, my general stance has been that particular information on detail is more in the hands of the parties than in the hands of the Chair. Therefore, if it is to be suggested that the matter ought not to be dealt with because it conflicts with the proceedings of the committee, that suggestion ought to come from the floor rather than from the Chair. However, on occasion there are representations with respect to questions which really ought to relate to the report of the committee, so that the House can be seized of the matter and take action. I think we may be entering that area now.

ALLEGED PAY-OFFS BY BOEING—KNOWLEDGE OF DETAILS OF REQUEST OF COMPANY BY UNITED STATES SECURITY EXCHANGE COMMISSION

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport? Yesterday, in the House, as reported on page 3603 of Hansard, the minister spoke about "upon hearing the allegations", and also said:

> ... if there appeared to be any connection between the allegations and ... Air Canada.

Does this mean that the government knows the details of the allegations contained in the Security Exchange Commission request for information from Boeing?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker. The particular allegation was in relation to the various phrases used in the press about the possibility of wrongdoing.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

ALLEGATIONS BY MINISTERS OF SEPARATIST BIAS IN RADIO-CANADA—INQUIRY WHETHER NAMES MENTIONED

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. The Minister of Communications, the Prime Minister and other ministers have been critical of Canadian Broadcasting Corporation employees in Quebec, alleging that they have committed offences detrimental to the unity of Canada. Have any of these ministers given the names to the minister responsible for CBC of those against whom allegations have been made in general?

● (1130)

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I must reply that I have no knowledge of such being the case.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I must accept the minister's word because of the regard I have always had for him. But does he not read the press? I ask him, therefore, have none of these ministers given him a list of the names of those against whom the allegations are made by those who, in the finest spirit of McCarthyism, cast a slur to those CBC employees in Quebec who are innocent.

Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, I share an equally strong respect for the right hon. gentleman as he has expressed for me, so I will not comment on the second part of the question. In relation to the first part, my answer is that no such list has been given to me.

ALLEGATIONS OF SEPARATIST BIAS IN RADIO-CANADA—PROPOSED MONITORING OF PROGRAMS BY RADIO-TELEVISION COMMISSION

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Communications. Since the Prime Minister mentioned at his press conference yesterday that he had discussions with the minister, has the minister made a decision to discuss this matter with the chairman of CRTC to see if CRTC under its authority would undertake a monitoring policy to substantiate, if possible, the allegations made against the CBC?

[Translation]

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, my first reply will be to correct what the right hon. member for Prince Albert said a while ago when he asked his question, namely that the Minister of Communications had publicly criticized the CBC. I must point out that I did not publicly criticize the CBC but as a minister I discussed those matters with the authorities concerned. As for the doubts and concerns now voiced in the press and elsewhere as to the way the CBC is fulfilling its role which is to remain objective and promote national unity, I think that even the CBC will reach the conclusion that it is probably necessary to obtain some outside judgment on those very serious doubts.

[English]

Mr. Nowlan: Since the minister answered my question in two parts I should like to ask whether I am correct in understanding that she has instructed the chairman of CRTC to undertake an independent audit of the alleged bias with which CBC has been charged?

[Translation]

Mrs. Sauvé: Mr. Speaker, I think we will soon be taking a decision on the procedure we should be following to deal with those doubts and concerns now voiced among the public. The CBC cannot carry out its role in a climate of doubts and suspicions.

ALLEGED REFUSAL OF CONNAUGHT LABORATORY TO SUPPLY GAMMA GLOBULIN TO MALTA

Hon. MERCURY LEVELS IN NORTHERN RESIDENTS—REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF STUDIES

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I would like to pursue questions to the Minister of the Environment asked last December by my colleague, the hon. member for the Northwest Territories. In view of the discovery of dangerously high mercury levels in some residents at Tuktoyaktuk and the suspicion that mercury contamination is widespread across the Arctic, will the minister make public all studies done by his department of the source of the pollution so that northerners and other interested parties may determine if the mercury pollution is from natural or industrial sources?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of the Environment): Certainly I would make public any report we have on this issue. In fact, a briefing note I have from my department does say that the Arctic Bay is a highly mineralized area with mercury occurring naturally. It is considered to be geochemical in nature. But certainly I will make available the information we have to any hon. member interested. The indication now is that it is from natural sources.

SUGGESTED TESTING OF RESIDENTS IN ARCTIC FOR MERCURY—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Will the minister have his department carry out extensive testing of all residents in Arctic communities to determine how widespread the mercury contamination is, and also will he tell the House what remedial action is contemplated by the federal government for those already affected? I am thinking of selenium fortified diets for northern residents?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, those investigations have been under way for six months already and as soon as we receive reports we make them public, as I did yesterday. We expect to have to continue those investigations on Indian reservations both in the Arctic and outside, and all the information gathered will be made public and given to the people concerned. Among the actions which are to be taken, additional inquiries will be made to determine the source of contamination. Furthermore, the diet of people affected will have to be examined to establish whether it is necessary to encourage them to change their eating habits and to decide what other measures are necessary.

I must point out that current investigations are made among the groups we believe are more subject to contamination than others, because they work as fishermen or hunters rather than labourers in other concerns or fields.

MERCURY LEVELS IN RESIDENTS OF RUPERT HOUSE AND GREAT WHALE AREAS—REQUEST FOR DETAILS

Mr. J. R. Holmes (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the previous question addressed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. As indicated by the previous questioner, recent reports have revealed the presence of elevated mercury levels in the Northwest Territories. However, I should like to ask the minister if he is aware of recent reports from the areas of Rupert House and Great Whale that allegedly reveal the highest level of mercury contamination in Canada? If so, will he reveal the details to the House?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, all reports available to my department concerning mercury contamination will be made public as soon as we get them and referred to those concerned. I will look into those specific cases to which the hon. member refers to see whether studies are now finished. But instructions are that all these studies are to be made public as soon as they are available.

PROPOSAL TO ESTABLISH CENTRE TO DEAL WITH ENVIRONMENTAL HEALTH HAZARDS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. J. R. Holmes (Lambton-Kent): I have one brief supplementary question. In light of the minister's last answer, which again indicates that there is lack of co-ordination in dealing with the whole matter of mercury pollution, can the minister now say if he is prepared to implement the recommendation of Dr. Clarkson calling for the establishment of a national centre in environmental health to deal with environmental health hazards from methyl mercury and other pollutants?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the whole problem of industrial health is a matter which we have discussed with my colleague, the Minister of Labour. The Minister of Labour has already made some announcements concerning the whole matter of industrial health, which goes far beyond the mere question of mercury contamination. We have given notice of our intention of taking a number of steps in this field. I refer the hon. member to the announcement made by my colleague, the Minister of Labour, some months ago.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY ATOMIC ENERGY CONTROL BOARD TRANSFERRED TO DEPARTMENT OF ENVIRONMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): In the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources may I direct a question to the Minister of the Environment. It relates to the obvious and rather serious conflict within the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources with respect to its dual responsibilities, the regulatory responsibility on the one hand through the Atomic Energy Control Board, and the responsibility for operating groups, such as AECL and the other. Can the minister confirm that serious consideration is being given to transferring responsibility for the Atomic Energy Control Board from the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources to another department of government?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): I can confirm that there are some interdepartmental discussions going on as to the best way to revise or to re-examine this situation. That is as far as I can go now.

Mr. Jarvis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the minister's difficulty, but I wonder if he would go so far as to confirm that it is his view that the responsibility for the regulatory agency, that is the Atomic Energy Control Board, would be more appropriate within the Department of the Environment than its present position within the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources?

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows I have no territorial ambitions, only the 200 mile fishing zone. The subject is obviously one which is coming up for discussion. I think the whole area of environmental health and other aspects have to be considered, not as one isolated area of responsibility but in fact in close co-operation with my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, obviously the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Department of the Environment.

Mr. Jarvis: A final supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister give us the target completion date for discussions regarding the transfer of authority for AECB?

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have not confirmed there is a decision to transfer authority. I said that discussions are going on, the problem is recognized and is being worked out.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

PRISONER EXCHANGE WITH UNITED STATES—COMPENSATION TO PROVINCES FOR EXTRA COST

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. It concerns the agreement signed earlier this week with the United States for an exchange of nationals under sentence of incarceration or under probation order in the respective countries. With respect to conversations with the provinces—and I understand from the minister's press release that discussions will continue with the provinces concerning a variety of matters including responsibility for custody, for the transfer of juveniles and the status of persons on probation—there is no indication that perhaps the most pressing issue of all, that of the additional expenditures that will be imposed upon the various provinces, particularly those that have already indicated publicly as the premier of Prince Edward Island did recently, following a meeting with attorneys general in Toronto, when he denounced federal assistance for being woefully short, that this matter is going to be raised? I think as increased social programs or prisoner transfers take place, this weighs exceptionally heavily on provinces that can ill afford to deal with these expenditures.

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the whole question of additional expenditures, if there are indeed any additional expenditures, for the provinces would be raised at the continuing meetings that we plan to have with the provinces on this question. I should point out, however, that there is a strong possibility that some United States nationals might be transferred out of provincial prisons to the United States under the terms of the agreement. In those cases, the provinces could very well receive financial advantage which we would in turn be inclined to ask them to offset by accepting in certain cases the transfer of Canadian nationals presently in American penitentiaries back to their home province.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister has mentioned the situation of those who might be transferred from prisons in Canada to the United States. He did not indicate, however, in what respect the department might respond in terms of those on probation or parole inasmuch as the services in these areas vary greatly across the country. Certainly, the idea of reunifying or bringing back nationals to their own country is an admirable one in terms of rehabilitation but such services might not be adequate or the provinces could not afford to fund such services outside of the actual imprisonment. Is the minister carrying out discussions at that level and has he indicated the federal government would be prepared to equalize in the manner it does in other social programs?

Mr. Fox: Mr. Speaker, we would definitely be willing to consider the matter. If there is any unduly high financial hardship imposed on any particular province as a result of the exchange we would be willing to look at it on a case by case basis.

AIR TRANSPORT

USE OF FRENCH IN AIR-TO-GROUND COMMUNICATIONS—EFFECT OF COMMISSION STUDY ON GOVERNMENT DECISION

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport? In both Montreal and Toronto, the Prime Minister has publicly stated that he supports the right to use French in the air over the province of Quebec in air-to-ground communications. In view of the fact that the government has appointed a three-man commission of inquiry to look into this whole question and set up a costly simulation test, are we to gather from the Prime Minister's statements that the inquiry is not necessarily going to be proceeded with, is not a viable operation, and that in fact the question of safety will not be examined but that French will be used whether or not it is safe?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it has always been our very clear intention to find the procedures which allow full safety and allow the use of both French and English in air traffic control in the province of Quebec. We have always been confident that those procedures could be found and therefore it has been our stated intention. The role of the commission is therefore to be very fully understood in terms of itself, judging that our discovery of those safe procedures is indeed a discovery of safe procedures and nothing more than that.

Mr. Horner: One quick supplementary, Mr. Speaker. In other words, it is not a question of if, it is a question of how.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, in terms of our confidence that safe procedures can be found the answer is yes.

PROPOSED STUDY OF PHYSICAL AND MENTAL EFFECTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the numerous references in the Badgley report to the lack of comprehensive and complete information about the unknown, long-term physical and mental effects of abortion and in order to protect the health of Canadian women, would the minister have his department conduct an appropriate study of this serious situation?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I will look into this matter, Mr. Speaker.

EFFECT OF WITHDRAWAL OF FUNDS FOR URBAN TRANSIT ON DEVELOPMENT OF EDMONTON SUBWAY SYSTEM

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Yesterday the minister promised to look into the answer to a question I asked last Friday. He is not here today so I wonder if his colleague, the Minister of Transport, can reply to the question of whether the government's announced cutback on the support program for urban transit would revoke the understandings with the authorities in the city of Edmonton with regard to Edmonton's underground system?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the commuter program which was announced over a year ago did not relate to orders which had been placed prior to a particular date. That raised certain questions in relation to some of the developments in Edmonton, although, of course, future orders and developments under the terms of that announcement would be eligible. We have had some broad discussions with the provinces about some possible rearrangement of our urban transportation assistance under that program that could have some effect upon Edmonton. No decisions have been taken in that regard, however.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): A supplementary question. In view of the fact that the province of Alberta is already committed to over $50 million in the initial stages of this program and recognizing that Phase I of the Edmonton program could not be included in the government announcement, the question is, because of long-lead items and the necessity of placing orders now, can the government give any assurance that subsequent phases of this program will have the assistance of the federal government as originally promised?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, Edmonton will know of the announcement of a year ago and its terms and the fact that regulations soon to be promulgated in relation to that program will spell out in technical detail the eligibility for them. The only question is that between now and the date of the promulgation of regulations, a final decision will be taken about the whole method of handling the urban assistance funds that could affect the situation. In general, I would say that those who would have been eligible under the announcement of a year or so ago in relation to the $100 million program will remain eligible, although perhaps with a different form of decision-making on the part of the provinces in relation to receipt of the funds.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

EFFECT OF MCGREGOR RIVER DIVERSION ON FISH—REQUEST FOR RELEASE OF STUDY ON POSSIBLE DAMAGE

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment which concerns the proposal for the diversion of the McGregor River into Williston Lake in British Columbia. Figures given by some of the groups opposing this indicate an annual loss of revenue as a result of fish kill, of as much as $4,300,000. Given the fact that the federal government participated in the December study which recommended the McGregor diversion, can the minister advise the House whether it is the government's position that, in view of its participation, it is in support of the diversion of the McGregor River in British Columbia?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for letting me know he would be asking this question. When the report was released in Victoria by the minister of the environment for British Columbia and myself, we made it very clear that this was a report put together by a group of federal and provincial officials dealing with the problem of flood control and diversion of water which moves down the Fraser. I made it very clear that the water section of my department saw this as a solution or part solution to the problem of flooding. I have serious misgivings, as I indicated to the hon. member, about the damage which could be done to the fishery by lowering the water flow and also by the potential introduction of non-Fraser system biological species, which could also have a detrimental effect. Obviously, unless those objections can be overcome, we are very much opposed.

● (1150)

Mr. Leggatt: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the answer the minister earlier gave the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie, that he was willing to release reports about problems in the north, and since I understand that the Department of the Environment completed the study on the potential damage on the McGregor diversion project in 1974 but that study remains classified, would the minister now undertake to the House to release any studies he may have concerning the damage, so that the committee may be aware of the effects of this project?

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, if the report is classified, I will see if I can unclassify it. That is my policy. I prefer a full discussion based on facts.

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

POSSIBILITY OF EXCESSIVE PAYMENT FOR LAND IN MANITOBA—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, of which I gave him notice a couple of weeks ago. This is my first opportunity to raise it. My question has to do with an article which appeard in the Winnipeg Free Press, and the question I asked about three months ago regarding allegations made in an article written by Mike Ward of the Free Press suggesting that perhaps CMHC, in its dealings with the Manitoba Housing Renewal Corporation, could have paid excessive prices for land. I wonder if the minister has a report for the House.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I did have the answer for the hon. member quite some time ago but this is the first opportunity he has to ask me this question. I can tell him that my officials have discussed this matter with the Manitoba Housing Corporation and they came to the conclusion that the difficulty is strictly administrative and lies in the way the Manitoba Housing Corporation registers the prices of land in its books. So there is no serious disagreement and no irregularity.

DISPARITY BETWEEN SUBSIDIES FOR FERRIES ON EAST AND WEST COASTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Recently the minister spent some time in Victoria. Has he discussed with officials in Victoria ways to eliminate the disparities between subsidies provided to eastern ferries and western ferries, and is the government now prepared to assume 50 per cent of the responsibility for the ferry system on the west coast? If so, when can we expect such an announcement?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, different issues arise in different regions of the country and, because of constitutional arrangements, matters on the east coast cannot be treated in the same way as other policy issues. I can only say at this time that questions relating to ferry service on the west coast are the subject of discussion between governments, but I have nothing to add about any final decision.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR BRITISH COLUMBIA COASTAL SHIPPING—POSSIBILITY OF PERMANENT ARRANGEMENT

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the new, improved shipping arrangement for the west coast is now four months old and it is a makeshift proposition, are we to assume that this will now be a permanent arrangement, or will there be an announcement concerning a new arrangement? Also, the Minister of State responsible for fitness and amateur sports said three or four months ago that she would resign in six weeks if something better were not in place. Is the Prime Minister combing the backbenches on the government side with a fine tooth comb, looking for a replacement for that position?

An hon. Member: She's still skating on the canal.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, at the time of the withdrawal of the expensive subsidy to the Northland service it was decided and agreed upon by almost all in authority involved, including those in provincial government circles, that it was preferable to move goods and passengers by separate modes, rather than by a combined service, and this could be done in total at far less cost. At that time there was an indication that the broad plan would be to find better passenger vessels for the connecting trips along the coast, in order to bring people either to the main ferry stops or, indeed, to air services. The acquisition of these vessels would, I imagine, be contemplated by whoever has over-all responsibility for operating the service in future. That responsibility, and that arrangement, is one of the matters under discussion.

TAKE-OVER OF WESTERN WHEEL BY HAYES-DANA—OPPOSITION BY CANADIAN COMPANIES AND REFUSAL OF APPLICATION BY AGENCY

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, of which he had notice. With reference to the take-over of Western Wheel by Hayes-Dana, is it true that representations opposing this takeover were received by FIRA from Canadian companies in Ontario, Manitoba, Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia, and that subsequent to this the announcement was made in November, 1976, that the application had been refused?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, according to the information I have, a first application was turned down. A second application increasing the benefits accruing to the Canadian economy was made and accepted a few weeks ago.

[English]

TAKE-OVER OF WESTERN WHEEL BY HAYES-DANA—ACCEPTANCE OF SECOND APPLICATION WITHOUT NOTIFYING OBJECTORS

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it now the policy of FIRA and the government to accept a second application in such a case, to reconsider the matter and finally give cabinet approval and public announcement without even informing the original objectors that a repeat application had been made, thereby denying our Canadian companies an opportunity to state their case?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In any case, Mr. Speaker, whenever an application is turned down anyone can submit a repeat application and offer better guarantees to the Canadian government. That is exactly what happened. The Foreign Investment Review Agency is not a court; it examines each application and decides on its merit.

TRADE

QUOTA ON CLOTHING IMPORTS—DATE OF DECISION ON NUMBER OF UNITS ALLOWED

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. As there seems to have been a real foul-up in the government's program to protect clothing manufacturers by restricting imports, in that the quota of 2.3 million units announced in September, 1976, was based on incorrect government estimates, will the minister indicate when a decision will be forthcoming on the numbers of units of imported clothing which will be allowed to enter this country, especially in the case of companies which have already paid through letters of credit for goods which they are not allowed to land?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am reviewing this situation just now. I do not know whether there have been foul-ups. I know that the government has committed itself to the protection of the clothing industry in Canada, and if there have been foul-ups, we shall make amends; otherwise, the government will stand on its position.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

PAYMENTS TO PRE-RETIRED COAL MINERS—BASIS ON WHICH PAYMENTS MADE

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, and has to do with the announcement made a few days ago by the President of the Privy Council to the effect that supplementary estimates will be placed before parliament to permit DEVCO to make an ex gratia payment of $500 to pre-retired coal miners or their widows. I am sure hon. members are aware of this longstanding grievance, and if they are not they ought to be. May I ask the minister if, when the $500 payment is made, the recipients will be subject to a means test regarding the guaranteed income supplement or any other governmental benefit they may receive? In other words, will it be a no strings attached arrangement?

[Mr. Halliday.]

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is obviously very happy, as I am, that a solution should have been found in this regard, but when he asks me whether, once that amount has been paid, it will be considered as income affecting other sources of income those people may have, it is difficult for me to know exactly what the consequences will be. Still, I brought up the matter with my colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, who is also looking into the matter of knowing whether that income will be taxable. I trust that within the next few weeks we will be in a position to give a more specific answer to the concerns expressed to me about the way that amount will be treated.

[English]

Mr. Muir: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I thank the minister for his reply; unfortunately, I did not hear all of it. Is he saying, really, that although this payment will be made, and God knows it is small enough, the government will give $500 on the one hand but will take it back on the other through the Department of National Revenue and deductions for guaranteed income supplement. In other words, the miners will be no further ahead. Was the minister saying that?

[Translation]

Mr. Lessard: No, Mr. Speaker, that is certainly not what I said, and I am rather disappointed that the hon. member, who made many representations to me on behalf of those people, should claim today that the proposal I made to my colleagues, and which he and other members of the NDP supported, provides for only a very small amount to remedy the situation.

CUSTOMS

POSSIBLE PROHIBITION OF IMPORTATION OF FERTILIZER FROM UNITED STATES

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of National Revenue. I have given her notice of the question. At the present time chemicals and herbicides are imported from the United States by farmers, including fertilizer manufactured in Canada, finding its way to the United States and being bought at a reduction of $25 a ton. There are now rumours that the border will be closed by the Department of National Revenue and that these purchases will no longer be allowed. Can the minister tell me whether in fact tariff item No. 9381101 is no longer going to be valid and whether the minister is contemplating closing the border, thus adding further hardship to farmers caught in the cost-price squeeze?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member told me after prayers that he would ask me this question. I replied to him that we had no intention of closing the border. However, I do not know the particulars of the case he brought to my attention earlier this morning. I will inquire.

LEARSTAR JET PROGRAM—FINANCING OF PURCHASES BY FEDERAL EXPRESS THROUGH CANADIAN EXPORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and I would appreciate being permitted one brief supplementary. With regard to the LearStar jet program, can the minister advise the House if the Canadian Export Development Corporation is assisting in the financing of the purchase order by Federal Express, an American company? If so, how much is the financial commitment by the EDC and what is the security of the loan?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the sale to Federal Express was commercial and financed by the Export Development Corporation. It involved 25 aircraft whose unit cost averages, I believe, $4,700,000. I shall figure it out and give the results. It was an export sale and, as in the case of many other industries, it requires the services of a Crown company.

LEARSTAR JET PROGRAM—POSSIBLE QUID PRO QUO FOR PURCHASES BY FEDERAL EXPRESS AND FEASIBILITY STUDY OF PROGRAM BY MR. GOLDEN

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Has Federal Express made application to operate their package delivery business in Canada and is government blessing of their application part of the quid pro quo of their purchase of Lear jets? Will Mr. David Golden, president of Telesat Canada, who is conducting an investigation into the Canadair and de Havilland operations be studying the feasibility of continuing with the LearStar jet program?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the first part of the question, Federal Express has never made any application to operate in Canada. Incidentally, in a discussion with this company's president, Mr. Smith, he has confirmed to me that he was absolutely not interested in establishing this service in Canada, so there has been no quid pro quo, he has made no application and he is not even interested.

As for Mr. Golden, he is going to examine all the operations of de Havilland and Canadair, including of course the aircraft they manufacture. He will then be able to comment on the LearStar jet program. I take this opportunity to point out that two weeks ago we had sold 65 aircraft and that today this number has gone up to 71.

CONSTRUCTION AND REDEVELOPMENT OF CANADIAN EMBASSY COMPOUND, TOKYO

Question No. 1,307—Mr. Clarke (Vancouver Quadra):

1. What (a) was the purchase date (b) is the total area (c) was the purchase price of the land on which the Canadian Embassy in Tokyo, Japan is located?

2. On what date were the buildings constructed on the land and, in each case, what was the construction cost?

3. Have any appraisals been made of the property within the past two years and, if so, what was the estimated value of the land and buildings?

4. What is the estimated current market value of the land (a) with buildings (b) without buildings?

5. How many (a) Ottawa-based (b) other than Ottawa-based persons are employed at the Embassy in Tokyo?

6. Is it the intention of the government to construct or alter any buildings on the site of the Tokyo Embassy and, if so, what is the estimated expenditure of such construction and/or alterations?

Mr. Fernand E. Leblanc (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. (a) Three acres were purchased in 1935 and an adjoining parcel of slightly over one acre was purchased in 1952; (b) Total area 4.12 acres; (c) Purchase price $285,500.

2. (i) Original Chancery, residence, and ancillary buildings were acquired in 1935 with land purchase; (ii) A Chancery extension was built in 1955 at a cost of $331,702; (iii) A temporary office building was erected in 1968 at cost of $170,838.

3. No.

4. Estimated current market value is therefore not available.

5. Ottawa based employees, 54; locally engaged staff, 82.

6. (i) Yes, new construction and alterations are intended for the existing site of the Canadian Embassy in Tokyo. The redevelopment of the site will include the construction of a new office building and display centre, renovations to the existing Chancery building, demolition of a temporary office building, renovations to the existing residence. The new office space will provide accommodation for all present operations of the Embassy (including those activities which are now located off the site) and for future expansion; (ii) The estimated construction costs amount to $15.2 million.

COST OF PUBLICATION "THIRTY-SIX WAYS TO PUT BILINGUALISM TO WORK FOR YOU"

Question No. 1,482—Mr. McKenzie:

1. How many copies of the booklet Thirty-six ways to put bilingualism to work for you were published by the Department of the Secretary of State?

2. What was the total cost of the booklet?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): 1. First print: 28,615 copies. Second print: estimated 20,000 copies (in process).

2. Costs: First print: $58,297.22; Second print: $36,872 (estimated).

PEI—HOME INSULATION GRANT PROGRAMME

Question No. 1,499—Mr. Herbert:

Will payments under the Prince Edward Island programme of assistance toward improved home insulation reflect the varying insulation values of the materials used?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I am advised by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows: Payments under the Home Insulation Grant Programme in Prince Edward Island will be based on invoices covering the costs of materials and/or labour, to a maximum of $350 for materials only, or $500 for materials and labour. The cost of materials will reflect varying insulation values to the extent that these determine the prices of insulating materials.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—LANGUAGE CLASSIFICATION OF PERSONNEL AT CFB LONGUE POINTE

Question No. 1,522—Mr. Lachance:

1. Is the Canadian Armed Forces Base at Longue Pointe classified bilingual and, if so, is it true that this base will be reclassified French unilingual in six months?

2. How many servicemen assigned to the Base are classifed by mother tongue as (a) English (i) unilingual (ii) bilingual (b) French (i) unilingual (ii) bilingual?

3. How many civil employees assigned to the Base are classified by mother tongue as (a) English (i) unilingual (ii) bilingual (b) French (i) unilingual (ii) bilingual?

4. How many servicemen whose mother tongue is English and who are unilingual or bilingual were assigned to the Base in (a) 1975 (b) 1976?

5. How many bilingual servicemen whose mother tongue is English were transferred from the Base in (a) 1975 (b) 1976?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): 1. All units in the Montreal area are administered by Canadian Forces Base Montreal including those located at Longue Pointe and St. Hubert (See Question No. 1,523). It is not possible to isolate the figures for Longue Pointe and St. Hubert units and the data given below therefore covers all the Military Forces in the Montreal area. CFB Montreal is classified bilingual and plans are now formulated for the designation of the base and some of its units as French Language units.

2. (a) and (b)

	Anglophones	Francophones
Unilingual	266	271

2. What is the estimated value of property, including Armed Forces bases, equipment and other operations located in the Province?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): 1. As of December 31, 1976: Military, 10,697; Civilians in continuing positions, 4,894; Civilians in non-continuing positions 828; Total, 16,419. Military, $130,302,000; Civilian, $74,439,000; Total, $204,741,000.

2. $1,150 million.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Question No. 1,651—Mr. Beatty:

1. How many questions on the Order Paper marked with an asterisk were answered in 1976?

2. On the average, how many days elapsed between the placing on the Order Paper of such questions and their being answered by the government and how does the figure compare with the average amount of time taken to answer other questions on the Order Paper during the same period?

3. Does the government give any priority to such questions that is not given to other questions?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. See Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, Fourth Edition, Citation 171 (ff).

2. The Government takes responsibility for the answers it provides to questions and for the process involved in replying to such questions.

3. The Government complies with Mr. Speaker's ruling. (Debates, February 27, 1975, page 3625).

NATIONAL DEFENCE—CHANGES TO COMMUNICATION SYSTEMS AT CFB GAGETOWN

Question No. 1,708—Mr. Howie:

Has there been any installation, modification or improvement of communications systems at CFB Gagetown since January 1, 1976 and, if so (a) in what manner (b) by whom (c) at what cost?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): (a) The changes and improvements made to the communications systems at CFB Gagetown since January 1, 1976 are listed below. Some of these improvements are still in progress: Improvement to the Base Cabling System; Crytographic Equipment; Fixed/mobile and portable radio capability; and Message processing equipment. (b) Installation was conducted by Burroughs Business Machine Ltd. under contract, and by DND personnel. Equipment was purchased from: Canadian Motorola Ltd., Teletype Corporation, Computer Sciences of Canada. (c) Costs for 1976/77 are estimated to be approximately $115,000.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—CONTRACTS FOR RENOVATIONS OR IMPROVEMENTS OF PMQs AT CFB GAGETOWN SINCE APRIL 1, 1976

Question No. 1,721—Mr. Howie:

Since April 1, 1976, have any contracts been let for the renovation or improvement of PMQ units owned by the Department of National Defence at CFB Gagetown and (a) if so (i) to whom (ii) in what amounts (b) if not, are any such improvements contemplated?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Yes. One contract was awarded. (a) (i) Malach Roofing and Flooring Ltd.; (ii) $59,100. (b) Not applicable.

[Mr. Danson.]

NATIONAL DEFENCE—POSSIBLE ALTERATIONS OR ADDITIONS TO UNITS CURRENTLY AT CFB GAGETOWN

Question No. 1,722—Mr. Howie:

Does the Department of National Defence contemplate any alterations or additions to the units currently posted at CFB Gagetown and, if so, in what manner?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): The Department of National Defence plans to add one armoured squadron which will be a training squadron to coincide with the delivery of new Leopard tanks to the units currently posted at CFB Gagetown.

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO MONTREAL SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA IN PAST 10 YEARS

Question No. 1,732—Mr. Herbert:

What government financial assistance was provided to the Montreal Symphony Orchestra in the past ten years and is any such assistance contemplated in the immediate future?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canada Council as follows: Since the 1967-68 season, the Council has made grants to aid in the Montreal Symphony Orchestra's operations totalling $4,420,000. One might reasonably expect that the MSO will continue to solicit the Council's assistance on an annual basis, at a level not less than this year's grant of $660,000.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—AID TO MUNICIPALITIES FOR IMPROVEMENT OF URBAN TRANSPORT SYSTEMS

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk) moved:

That in view of the desirability of encouraging an integrated approach to urban planning and development, and of promoting energy conservation, industrial development and employment, this House condemns the Liberal government's deliberate and cynical repudiation of its 1974 election pledge to give comprehensive and extensive aid to municipalities for the improvement of urban transport systems.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the universe is not unfolding as it should.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whiteway: While the cities of our nation are on the threshhold of a crisis convergence, the front bench of the Trudeau government seem more anxious to fight their own backbenchers rather than fight the problems.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whiteway: Because of the action and, for the most part, the inaction of this government, members on this side have little choice but on this opposition day to move the motion that has been read. The strength of it warrants that it be read again:

That in view of the desirability of encouraging an integrated approach to urban planning and development, and of promoting energy conservation, industrial development and employment, this House condemns the Liberal government's deliberate and cynical repudiation of its 1974 election pledge to give comprehensive and extensive aid to municipalities for the improvement of urban transport systems.

I have in my hand a list of the election promises. However, on June 17, 1974, they were not referred to as promises. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) referred to them in the city of Toronto as Liberal pledges. In Toronto he referred to them as pledges. Right across the country they were referred to as pledges. The pledges read like this, Mr. Speaker: the Liberal government will pay 100 per cent of the cost of new commuter vehicles. The Liberal government will pay 25 per cent of the capital cost of all vehicles purchased. Financial support will be made available to encourage Canadian design and engineering. The Liberal government will offer assistance. Canadian industry will be encouraged to develop "off the shelf" standardized systems and equipment. The Liberal government will encourage urban transit systems. The Liberal government is committed to removing the 12 per cent sales tax. The Liberal government will offer the best use of existing railway rights of way. The Liberal government will rapidly implement the railway relocation act.

These were pledges, using the pledge word "will". I would identify and characterize these pledges as jarbble, garble. I want Hansard to get the correct spelling: it is jarbble, garble. I know how to spell the words, but I must confess I do not know what they mean because they are meaningless. Therefore, they accurately describe the Liberal policy. The parliamentary language for Liberals reneging on their election pledges would be that the Prime Minister inadvertantly misled the Canadian people. In Selkirk they would say these pledges were nothing less than black, foul lies. The policy being followed is one of off again, on again.

I want to quote what the Prime Minister said as reported at page 3568 of Hansard in answer to a question raised by the leader of the New Democratic Party. He stated in his reply that the government was not reconsidering these pledges or these promises, but that is was considering them. Mr. Speaker, this is confusing. The Prime Minister suggests the government is now considering the pledges which were made three years ago, that it is considering such statements that I have read before which show it to be "will" committed. It is obvious that "yes" in the course of a campaign is really "no" to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) in Toronto and "maybe" to the Prime Minister in the House of Commons. The attitude on the part of the government is to say, in one year, "Deal me in", and in another, "Count me out". Let me say that the Canadian people will not only count them out but vote them out if they ever dare to issue a writ.

I want to say this to the government front benchers, "You can't get away. We have you surrounded. Not only do you face the fury of truth from this side of the House, but you face a Grit uprising on your own side". The Liberal party is a party which suggests there is always solidarity in the cabinet and unity in the ranks. That is not the case. The hon. member for Halton (Mr. Philbrook) is in his place at the moment. The personal qualities of the hon. member for Halton are to be admired by every member of the House. He could not find it within himself to go along with this on again, off again ploy on the part of his leaders. I appreciate an attitude of that kind as shown by the hon. member and by other members, particularly from the Toronto area. His actions were not unlike those of an aspiring knight who rides his shining stallion to do battle against the dragon which would lay waste the cities. That knight from Halton obviously expected to be dubbed, but later found he had been duped. I want to quote the words of the hon. member for Halton as reported at page 3588 of Hansard:

> Besides transport there is this other issue—the business of honouring commitment, the business of keeping election promises, the business of the integrity and the credibility of government.

To the hon. member for Halton I say, "Well said!" I hope those words are still ringing in the ears of the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister. In my opening remarks I spoke of a crisis convergence in the urban centres of this country. I am not suggesting that urban transportation is a cure-all, a magic wand which will solve all ills by one mighty swoop. The last magic wand I heard of was lost somewhere by the former late prime minister of the Liberal party. But urban transportation is the key to the solution of many of the problems facing large urban centres today. I want to quote from a document called "Metroplan Concept and Objectives".

[Mr. Whiteway.]

Members will recognize it immediately as being a plan for metropolitan Toronto. On page four we find these words:

> The fundamental concept of this plan expressed in physical terms is to create a multicentred urban structure. This can be achieved by the development of a system of employment centres linked together by an effective transit system.

On page ten the study makes an even clearer statement:

> Inherent in the plan is a shift of emphasis from roads to transit.

The key to urban planning today is the provision of modern, efficient rapid transit systems. Mr. Speaker, by profession I am a teacher. By trade I am a cobbler. If I had a blackboard here I could illustrate what I say graphically for the benefit of the House. But imagine a circle with urban transportation at the centre and, on the periphery, the basic problems of our cities—oil and energy resources, the balance of payments, industrial development, technological development, employment, housing. Finally there is the idea which is the common thread linking all these issues together—the quality of life which the 75 per cent of Canadians who live in urban centres are seeking. In each of the areas I have mentioned there is a crisis. No one can deny there is a crisis of unemployment; no one can deny there is a crisis in housing; a crisis relating to our competitiveness in world markets; a crisis in the balance of payments situation.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): A crisis of leadership over there, too.

Mr. Whiteway: My House leader mentions the crisis of leadership. That is so obvious I did not think it worth mentioning. Unless the government recognizes the need to take bold and specific action, the effect of the convergence of these crises will be intolerable for the cities and intolerable for the nation. To embark upon such major adjustments, to reorganize our resources and our social priorities, would require nothing less than a declaration and implementation of a national urban policy. Such a policy is essential to co-ordinating new efforts toward a common goal, a common understanding of why we shape our cities in the way we do. There is an urban federal role, a pressing federal responsibility, to address the problems of the cities. While not totally federal, the approach must include a new federal role showing more regard for development criteria. These are old problems.

In passing I might say the real issue here is that the government is old. The irony is that only yesterday we debated bill C-33. Oh, what noble words! Let me restate some of these catch-all, great plans which are outlined in Bill C-33. In the proposed section 3(1)(a) it is provided that the objective of the transportation policy for Canada is a transportation system that is efficient. That sounds great. Section 3(1)(b) provides that it is to be an effective instrument of support for the achievement of national and regional social and economic objectives. How they use paper, Mr. Speaker, to state the obvious. Section 3(2)(b) provides that the federal government should have the co-operation of all levels of government.

We are now two months into the year 1977 and the federal government has finally realized and put on paper what we on this side have been telling them for years, namely, that you cannot impose your priorities on the provinces and on the municipalities—that there must be co-operation. At this very moment the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) is wining and dining a trilevel conference. When the minister eats, I hope the conference will take the opportunity to speak. However, I wonder whether he really hears. He says that he listens, but he does not hear.

If I may return to this noble document, Bill C-33, proposed section 3(2) outlines the government's responsibility in implementing transportation policy. It goes on to provide in paragraph (a) that the government of Canada should establish national policies respecting the various constituent parts of the transportation system. I cannot argue with that, Mr. Speaker; that is sound thinking, reasonable thinking, and a reflection of what we have been saying for years. But the interpretation that I put on the recent actions of the government suggests that they have cancelled an urban transportation commitment. The government is saying these great and wondrous things when just two weeks ago the Minister of Finance, at a special cabinet meeting in Toronto called to try to improve their image in the Gallup polls, made the announcement that the commitments which I earlier referred to in my speech, these pledges to the Canadian people, were no longer valid. He said, "I am sorry, boys. In the name of restraint, it's off". There are at least four cities in this country which were shocked, to say the least, by that kind of announcement.

Mr. Roberts: Which ones?

Mr. Whiteway: Now a minister has come to life. If he does not know which cities these are, let me tell him that he will find out. They will be hounding him in time to come.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): His own city, for one.

Mr. Whiteway: He has never heard of Toronto. I hope that he is aware of the words of his colleague on the back benches and that those words are still ringing in the ears of the front benchers. Obviously the minister has not heard the words. I hope the hon. member for Hampton—I mean Halton—

Mr. Goodale: You were not even close.

Mr. Whiteway: —will take the minister out to lunch. As a matter of fact, if he will listen, if the hon. member takes him to lunch and reads him his speech, I will pay the bill. The four cities are Toronto, Winnipeg, Edmonton and Vancouver. The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) will be speaking in this debate about Edmonton. The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) will be speaking on Toronto. The hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke) will speak about Vancouver; and I shall be speaking about a city that is in the heart of the nation, the great city of Winnipeg.

I want the minister, who has just been aroused from his slumber, to realize that on the initiative of the federal government the city of Winnipeg was asked to undertake a study known as the southwest transit study. Perhaps the minister has not heard about that, but somebody over there has, anyway. This seemed a reasonable thing to do at the time. There was an abandoned CN line from downtown Winnipeg out to the University of Manitoba. The study was to be in two phases. It was to explore the viability of a rapid transit system from the downtown core area out to the university. Phase one has been completed. Phase two has just got under way, and now the Minister of Finance pulls the plug. Let me tell him that to thwart the objectives of western Canadians will take more than the "out again" attitudes of this government. The city of Winnipeg intends to complete this study. Perhaps the city will not be able to finance the $17 million which it will take to build the transit system, but we will at least complete the study, and perhaps by that time we will have a government which will place more weight on commitments than does the present government.

I have already said that the key to proper urban development is a transportation infrastructure. We in this country cannot have one policy for housing, one for energy, another for urban transit, another for conservation, an entirely different policy for employment, and yet another for industrial development. The nation cannot afford this kind of piecemeal approach. The funding is not there. The municipalities cannot afford the capital expenditure required to build a rapid transit system in our cities. Their only revenue base is the property tax. How many times and in how many different ways do we have to tell the government that the municipalities cannot afford this kind of expenditure?

The key to the problem is transportation. The government's own studies have told them that. Then at the critical moment the government withdraws its support. Not only is this a politically immoral thing to do; it is an economically wrong thing to do. The rationale for this action is economic restraint—and economic restraint and the AIB is another inconsistency within this government. I should like nothing better than to take a few minutes of my time to point out once more to the Canadian people how this government has done a flip-flop on that subject. Members on this side do support, as we supported before the election, restraint on government spending.

Mr. Gilbert: Restraint if necessary, but not necessarily restraint.

Mr. Whiteway: Seldom do words of wisdom come from New Democrats, but would the hon. member say that again so that it is on the record?

Mr. Gilbert: I said, restraint if necessary, but not necessarily restraint.

Mr. Whiteway: In the name of economic restraint the government pulls the plug. It is a "motherhood" argument to slow down the economy; everyone agrees with that. But I am concerned about the long-term consequences of proposed provincial cutbacks on the essential capital expansion requirements of our cities, of which transit is but one. Transit investment is not extravagance; it is essential in the face of natural and urban resource scarcity.

Government spending policies are the highest level expression of management rationale in our society to regain the economic ability to meet our needs. We must stimulate our national investment effort as we moderate direct consumption. As we necessarily reduce total expenditures we must make wise choices about the things we need and the things we do not need. All public expenditures are not bad; we on this side are the first to say that. How we de-escalate spending will determine how efficiently we will be able to recover. Unless we show farsighted concern for the financial consequences of public spending cuts we make today we will continue to build-in fundamentally unsolvable urban financial problems. It is time to reinforce our commitment to more efficient investment in energy, housing and urban transportation because the aggregate demand for all basic capital goods like housing, sewage, electrical energy, transportation and jobs continues to grow while agricultural land, urban space, public wealth and the availability of time in which to change continues to diminish.

Cutting back now on public capital investment which is essential to economic urban housing, transport and industrial development, would be an economically fatal mistake in the anti-inflation program. However, right thinking and good intentions are not enough. Our major problem in the next decade will be to distinguish our needs from our wants. The question of the nature of our demands is the basic social and moral question of our time. Most of us have been thinking about it. Now we must do something about it.

We cannot have less congested cities, more affordable housing, people-oriented neighbourhoods or stabilized property taxes without committing a higher proportion of our national income to investment in better forms of urban growth, and I repeat that urban transportation is the key. The Prime Minister tells us that we must reduce our expectations. I remember that famous speech, and I remember the ripples it caused within his own party. He said that we simply must make do with less. He is wrong; we must learn to do more with less.

Over the Christmas break I spoke in several high schools in the Winnipeg area. I remember well 300 students in an assembly area, most of them sitting on the floor in a very informal bear-pit session and talking about the future of Canada. We were talking about confederation, the Canadian vision and the Canadian dream. One student stood up in the quiet of 300 students, if hon. members can believe it, with tears streaming down her face. She said, "Mr. Whiteway, will you and Mr. Clark give us something to believe in?" The strength of this nation and the strength of our character were built on dreams, hopes, aspirations, and the vision of the Canada we want to see. We do not want the Prime Minister telling us that we cannot achieve it. We want the Prime Minister to be the kind of leader who challenges every Canadian to reach up and grasp the star which is theirs. That is the kind of leadership which is being demanded by people from one end of the country to the other.

Mr. Speaker, I spoke earlier of a crisis convergence. There are serious crises and I have already enumerated the five crisis areas of energy, industrial, employment, technology and urban transportation. I can deal with only two of these today because of the time element. Probably the most critical crisis facing Canada is the energy crisis. My deskmate from the great province of Newfoundland made a great speech a week or two ago. Those who were not in this chamber and did not hear his speech about our energy problems should read it. My comments are but a shadow in the light of the hon. member's enlightening remarks.

He suggested, as I do, that increased oil exploration is one of the two alternatives which face Canada. We can increase our oil exploration, which is the route the government is taking, and we can see that within the next 20 years it will cost $90 billion for the kind of exploration the government has in mind. That, invariably, will mean higher prices at the pumps and higher prices for fuel oil. The other choice the government has is to develop an integrated, rational policy to reduce consumption. I do not want to be a prophet of gloom and doom, but by 1990, 38 per cent of Canada's oil will be offshore oil. By 1985 foreign oil will cost Canada $5 billion. This is lost money. This money will do nothing and will produce nothing.

Another interesting point of which the government should be aware is that by 1985—in eight years' time—half the oil consumption in Canada will be for intracity transportation. Transit systems could reduce that by half, which would mean that the total consumption of oil in Canada could be reduced by 25 per cent. If we could do that, our dependency on offshore oil would be substantially less.

I find it absolutely absurd that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) runs around this country telling Canadians to keep hot water in their bathtubs to heat their houses. There are signs all over Parliament Hill telling us to turn the lights off and take the stairs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his allotted time has expired. Nevertheless, he may continue if he has unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: Oh, come on, Scrooge.

An hon. Member: He has been finished for the last 15 minutes.

Mr. Whiteway: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am reluctant to come with cap in hand, as it were, asking for unanimous consent to complete my very important remarks on this opposition day.

Mr. Paproski: It is our motion.

Mr. Kaplan: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is there unanimous consent to allow the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway) to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Paproski: I will take back what I said.

Mr. Whiteway: One hon. member said that I have been finished for the last 15 minutes. Well, this government has been finished for the last two years, but hon. members opposite do not know it. I appreciate the unanimous consent of hon. members and I will quickly finish my remarks. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources tinkers with the issue of energy conservation. That is not unlike planting a section of mustard by hand. We are asking the government to get out the big machinery to deal with the problem of urban transportation. That could realistically reduce energy consumption in our cities by 25 per cent of the Canadian total. If that section of mustard is planted by the government, Canadians will plant on the fringes. Canadians will turn out in their lights and keep hot water in their bathtubs. But the minister should not tinker. He should get to the heart of the problem. He should face the problem of energy conservation squarely and tackle it where it really counts.

Our balance of payments situation has reached crisis proportions. Energy costs will be astronomical and the cost of buying offshore oil will be very high, as I mentioned. We are already facing deficits in manufacturing of over $1 billion and deficits in the tourist industry. I could go on. The key to energy conservation is a modern, rapid and efficient transit system. As well, we are facing an industrial crisis. The fundamental question is: Where does the future of technical and industrial development lie in this country, and how will we fare in the international marketplace? We do not have to look far. Canada, as the host of the United Nations Habitat Conference, has brought home the world's need to build cities more efficiently, economically and equitably. We have a self-interest here; we are not being altruistic. It is our problem, too, because we have urgent demographic pressures.

There have been setbacks and disappointments, but it is too early in the Canadian urban experiment to say that it will not work. Just look at the lessons that have been learned in the first few years of this new urban orientation. Public investment in new facilities generates greater use of transit facilities. Within a generation in Canada we could re-establish transit as an acceptable alternative in all new urban developments. We could eliminate the need for most new households to own a second car if we gave transit a high social investment priority.

Under the new economics of scarcity, particularly energy scarcity, these changes are obviously desirable. The fact is that municipal and provincial governments subsidize transit operations which are not profitable. They are forced to either provide new or expanded services which will be financially intolerable to local government. I want to quote briefly from a speech made by Kirk Foley, president of the Urban Transportation Development Corporation. He said:

> As an urban policy strategy this deserves national priority, and if the federal government continues to be reluctant to recognize this inevitability and remains inactive, then the provinces as a matter of economic survival will have to shoulder the burden.
> Seventy-five percent of us live in cities, large and small.

I might add that in another 10 to 15 years 90 per cent of us will live in cities. It goes on:

> Cities are home for most Canadians. We are an urban nation. Therefore, the fundamental driving force for recovery of our economic development in the future must be leadership in the formulation of national urban policy.
> We can no longer neglect our cities, and we can no longer ignore the inefficiency of their design and technologies, can no longer ignore the opportunity for economic growth through urban technology development.
> It is now abundantly clear that a strategy of long-range planning for urban development offering high quality technology alternatives suffers from a lack of conviction at the federal level. It appears the provinces must go it alone.

Since most new technology comes from the private sector, our public policies should mobilize the private sector to develop new technology. The private sector, with government financial assistance, can do it better with government co-ordination to establish a reliable future marketplace at home and abroad, and with a rationalization of equipment requirements we can develop world-leading technology.

Transit systems are public goods and they need public financing. We have a domestic demand and a domestic market in Canada which would justify this kind of development of technology for the rapid transit system in our country. We will have needs over the next ten years in this country approaching $5 billion for the establishment and maintenance of rapid transit systems. We could pay for it by doing nothing more than simply buying for Canada's needs. The bonus would be the saving on energy. The gravy would be if we could sell it to growing cities around the world. We could export that technology. Canadians, for the first time perhaps, have the opportunity to express their skills in creativity in the way that cities are built. The government must be willing to encourage private sector initiatives.

In conclusion, I should like to say that even if the government at this very moment were to come to full repentance and change from its evil ways, it may be too late. It may be too late now to avoid the convergence of the crisis of which I have spoken. I want to emphasise that the opposition does not categorically oppose government spending and government investment. What we do categorically oppose is this hit and miss, piecemeal attacking of the problem.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whiteway: I say to the government: get your priorities straight, if you have any. Get your act together, follow through on your promises, be consistent, and we will support you from this side, as will the Canadian people.

Mr. Paproski: Otherwise resign.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Do so, anyway.

Mr. Whiteway: It leaves the opposition little choice but to reiterate our motion, that in view of the desirability of encouraging an integrated approach to urban planning and development, and of promoting energy conservation, industrial development and employment, this House, including the hon. member for Halton, condemns the Liberal government's deliberate and cynical repudiation of its 1974 election pledge to give comprehensive and extensive aid to municipalities for the improvement of urban transport systems. This leadership in pragmatism is not leadership at all. If this government cannot and will not give the kind of leadership that is needed now, then let them step aside—because we can.

Mr. Bob Kaplan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I cannot pretend to begin to equal the eloquence of the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway) when he made his remarks this afternoon. I will do my best, but I do not think I can equal it. On the other hand, I am quite confident that when the case is put as I intend to put it, to illustrate the problems that arise in connection with the resolution before us today, I know I will have the support of the House and I hope I will have given the public listening to and watching this debate much to think about.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Where are the Toronto ministers to defend their position?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We are not on television yet.

Mr. Kaplan: I want, first, to acknowledge as a fact what is stated in the resolution, that a promise was made in the last election campaign regarding urban transit.

An hon. Member: A pledge.

Mr. Kaplan: The hon. member opposite who spoke about that promise made it sound as if the promise had been that the government would pay for this urban transit program. What I think must be noted is that these commitments, promises and undertakings are promises that are honoured out of tax money. These programs are paid for not by the government, not by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and not by the front bench. These programs are paid for by all the people of Canada, by the taxpayers.

● (1250)

I think it is always important to reassess promises like the promises made during the last election campaign and constantly ask if this is the right expenditure of federal tax money at this time, or if it is something that ought to be put off and looked at again. I want to suggest that two very important circumstances have arisen since that election campaign which have changed the picture so much that this urban transit program as originally put forward has to be reconsidered. In fact, it would be irresponsible, and I will go so far as to say it would be cynical, given the changed circumstances, to push ahead with the tax money of federal taxpayers into directions that were being considered in 1974.

What are the two events that have taken place? The first, and most important, is the rapid inflation which took place in late 1974 and 1975 that led to reconsideration of a lot of government programs and to reconsideration of the general direction of growth.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is here at the end of my remarks, I would much prefer having the question then. Government restraint and restraint of inflation has become such a high priority that I am surprised the hon. member for Selkirk can stand up without acknowledging that times have changed since 1974 and that the government could not continue seeing the public sector growing at 14, 15, 17 or 23 per cent per year. If we wanted to bring inflation under control some drastic medicine had to be administered to the public sector as to the whole economy.

Mr. Johnston: You knew that in 1974.

Mr. Kaplan: That was not apparent in 1974. No one expected it. The inflation that took place in late 1974 and early 1975 was not anticipated. It was not something that could be expected. It was as a result of a kind of inflationary psychology in reaction to what had been felt earlier. No one anticipated double-digit inflation. Government restraint has become the most important single theme of activities of the government in recent months. It has to continue to be. The responsibility to do something for urban transport, to deliver on a promise made during the election campaign, has to be reconsidered in times of restraint.

The second change which has taken place that calls for reconsideration of the federal government role in urban transport is the development in the shape of Canadian federalism. I was present last December at the first ministers' conference. All hon. members are aware that at that conference it was fundamentally recognized that provincial governments had a job to do and that the federal government had, until this conference and until the fiscal arrangements bill before us goes through, the fiscal resources coming to it to do many of the jobs that were within the jurisdiction of the provinces. Their's is the federal interest, the national interest in all aspects of life in Canada, but the constitution allocates certain responsibility to the provinces.

During the years leading up to the last election, and more recently, there had been a tendency for the federal government to finance activities in areas of provincial jurisdiction. I think it was generally recognized that it was not appropriate for the federal government to be funding provincial programs. That is one of the problems that has troubled federalism in Canada. The solution agreed to at the federal-provincial conference, and what I submit we will see more and more in the years ahead, was a bowing to the provinces and a recognition that in the areas in which they have jurisdiction they ought to have the financial resources to meet that responsibility, and that they ought to undertake the responsibility to raise the revenues to do jobs assigned to them under the constitution.

If there ever was a job clearly within the constitutional jurisdiction of the provinces, it is urban transit. The hon. member for Selkirk did not deny that. What he kept saying was that the federal government ought to come up with the money because the provinces and the municipalities did not have it. Let me say that the federal government does not have extra money.

Mr. Johnston: They are short on talent, too.

Mr. Kaplan: As a result of the first ministers' conference and the fiscal transfer taking place under Bill C-37, the Fiscal Arrangements Act, the provinces are about to receive a transfer of over 13 tax points from the federal government. They will become that much stronger in their ability to raise revenue to do the jobs that the constitution assigns to them, and Ottawa will become that much weaker. I do not think that at this time we should be continuing the old style of federalism and cloudy arrangements—

An hon. Member: Then why did you promise it?

Mr. Kaplan: —when it was never clear which government was responsible for what, and which of the taxpayers' pockets the money was coming from.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it one o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, before lunch I was outlining why it was important for the government to reconsider the commitment it made during the last general election. I pointed out that promises to spend other people's money, the taxpayers' money, should always be examined in the light of changing conditions. I pointed out two most prominent changes which had taken place since that election: the first being the tremendous importance of restraint in government spending in our struggle against inflation, and the second the important sharpening up of constitutional responsibilities, as supported by the recent federal-provincial conference and the provisions of the Fiscal Arrangements Act which will take from the federal government the tax base previously used to support many provincial programs. The government is withdrawing from that tax base and giving it back to the provinces which have constitutional responsibility in this area.

Mr. Stevens: For railways?

Mr. Kaplan: For urban transit. The hon. member asks if I am thinking about railways. Responsibility for railways remains under federal jurisdiction. I shall return to that question in a moment.

What about transportation problems which are the responsibility of the federal government? These problems are extensive, including inter-city transit by rail and air, and STOL. We must examine STOL patterns across the country in order to decide how STOL is to be developed. We face enormous problems involving freight, harbours, railways and how to move people from one side of this country to the other. The federal government, with its more limited tax base, faces transportation problems which come right under its own jurisdiction. It is hard pressed to find money and to convince taxpayers to bear the burden for transportation clearly under federal jurisdiction. Has the federal government the right to offer provincial and municipal governments, which have their own tax bases, federal dollars for solving provincial matters? Darcy McKeough, provincial treasurer of Ontario, has said more than once that a national problem is not necessarily and automatically a federal problem.

I agree with the hon. member for Selkirk: urban transit is of national importance. The starvation of the cities for tax revenue is a national problem—a crisis, if one wants to put it that way. But it is not a problem in the constitutional jurisdiction of the federal government to solve, not a problem within the tax base limits of the federal government to solve.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Nonsense.

Mr. Kaplan: These are not problems which only money will solve.

An hon. Member: What about your election promises?

Mr. Kaplan: Money alone will not solve all Canadian urban transportation problems. The building of urban transit systems will not by itself reduce the amount of automobile traffic. All kinds of statistics compiled in the United States and various metropolitan areas show that urban transit is a legislative, not merely a financial matter. No one is asserting, certainly not hon. members opposite, that the federal government ought to have any jurisdiction to legislate in the area of urban transit. Why is the argument made that we ought to take, and use, federal tax dollars?

• (1410)

Mr. Whiteway: Why did you promise them?

Mr. Kaplan: I do not want to make the first half of my speech again, Mr. Speaker. I have tried to show to hon.

members that there have been changes since those promises were made.

Mr. Whiteway: Not changes in jurisdiction.

Mr. Kaplan: There has been a heightened understanding and focusing of the need for levels of government to confine themselves in their own areas. Members on this side, in particular members from the metro Toronto area, are reminding the government that more and more people are moving to the cities. They are arguing that by the year 2000 a very large percentage of our people will be living there, and therefore the federal government should move into this area. I believe the federal government should move into this area: however, it should not do that by writing cheques. It should move into this area by beginning a constitutional review, by finding the kind of jurisdiction it is agreed that municipalities should have, and by asserting that kind of jurisdiction.

I want to note in passing the references that are often made to programs of the federal government in the United States. Whenever there is something new out of Washington to help the cities, the cry is made in Canada that we ought to do exactly the same. I would point out that the constitutional differences between our two countries are enormous. The most prominent among these differences is that the provinces of Canada have a sound constitutional vitality. They have a fiscal base that has no counterpart south of the border.

The federal government in Canada should not be looked at as a source of goodies. I want to deal with goodies in my closing remarks. It is a wrong view of the Canadian constitution to look at the federal government as a source of great revenue and the provincial governments as a source of great need. In fact, the provinces have virtually the same access to the taxpayer as the federal government.

There is a final reason I want to put forward against a special federal program for urban transit. Looking at it from the point of view of the citizen and taxpayer in metropolitan Toronto, a federal urban transit program would cost metro Toronto taxpayers a lot more than a program generated at our own level and paid for either by the municipal government or the provincial government.

I received a telegram from the chairman of the metropolitan Toronto council. He is calling me to a meeting.

Mr. Stevens: Will you turn up?

Mr. Kaplan: I hope I will be able to turn up. The Chairman says that at the meeting he will want to discuss with us the effect that the broken promise will have "on all of us in metro". I know what the effect of that broken promise will be. The effect will be that an urban transit program in metro will cost less than it would have cost metro taxpayers if the promise of the 1974 election were kept. Why do I say that? I say it because 65 per cent of all public transit trips that are taken in Canada are in Ontario. Thirty per cent, fully half of the Ontario total, of the national total urban transit trips are within metropolitan Toronto. Does any member honestly believe that the federal government and this parliament could come up with a national program of urban transit that could give 30 per cent of its funding to metropolitan Toronto? Can anyone here imagine the federal government and parliament spending 65 per cent of the resources of a program in the province of Ontario?

Mr. Stevens: Why not?

Mr. Kaplan: The hon. member asks, "Why not?" We have heard the representatives of the city of Edmonton. They stood up this morning and talked about their transit system. We have heard from Winnipeg and the needs of that area. The representative from Owen Sound the hon. member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Douglas) is arguing that part of this fund has to be spent in Owen Sound. Maybe he is right. If a federal program is established, it has to be a program that has a face in every part of this country.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): But not two-faced.

Mr. Kaplan: Chairman Godfrey is asking what the effect of the broken promise will be on "us". The metro Toronto area generates most—I should not say "most", but I believe 30 per cent of the tax revenue of the federal government. It comes right out of our metropolitan area. That means roughly 30 per cent of every program is financed by metropolitan Toronto taxpayers.

If we launch a national urban transit program, which it is within the jurisdiction of the provincial government to do, it will not be a program that will be able to allocate that much of its resources to metro Toronto. That is why I argue it is no "goodie" for metropolitan Toronto to be the so-called beneficiary of an urban transit program. The right way for us to solve our urban transit problems is at our own level, in metropolitan Toronto, in the province of Ontario where we have the jurisdiction and the same access to the taxpayer as the federal government.

The hon. member for Selkirk reminded me that the municipalities are starved. That is true; they are. Municipalities are also the source of generation of most of the wealth of this country. Some people might argue with me about that, but I am prepared to defend it. It is the cities that produce the wealth of our country. Is there not something ironic and wrong in the structure of urban government if it is starved? Who can alter the structure of urban government? It is not this parliament. It is the legislatures of the provinces which have the responsibility for organizing the tax base of their municipalities. They are the ones that should do it.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I wish to remind hon. members that there are a great many things the federal government is doing and proposes to do in the area of urban transportation. There is not only research. There is more. A program was referred to this morning. An answer by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) referred to the commuter service program which has a budget of $100 million. There is the grade separation program, and the railway relocation program. These three programs, or a combination of them which will be worked out in negotiation with the provinces and other interested groups which over the next five years, will be funded by the federal government to the tune of about $300 million. They are on the table now and they are being discussed. That is $300 million of federal funding from the federal taxpayer that is directed toward problems of transportation in the cities. There has also taken place, since 1974, the removal of the 12 per cent sales tax on municipal buses and transit equipment, and the exemption of transit systems from the ten cents per gallon excise tax on gasoline. All these measures are supportive of the problems of urban transportation.

Let us not kid ourselves into believing that under the present constitutional arrangements the federal government could, or should, get a bigger handle on urban transit. These are problems that our constitution asks us to solve at other levels of government. There is always tremendous temptation in a federal system, for each level of government to perceive the need or to see a gap and go leaping into it. Too many of the pills which affect federalism today have arisen because different levels of government have focused upon gaps and jumped in without satisfying themselves as to the extent of their constitutional jurisdiction. I hope the debate today will lead hon. members to recognize that the urban transit problem can be addressed only to a limited extent by the federal government, and that within this area an amount in excess of $300 million has been committed for programs over the next five years while the value of the tax relief to which I referred is $100 million, again over a five-year period.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, we in the New Democratic Party welcome the motion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gilbert: All members of the House, regardless of party, can agree with the first part of the motion with respect to the desirability of encouraging an integrated approach to urban planning and development, the promotion of energy conservation, industrial development and employment opportunities. We in the New Democratic Party would add the need for an integrated approach to the promotion of land use to develop the best use of land for housing needs and to halt the ever increasing encroachment on prime agricultural land. We would also join the Tory opposition in condemnation of the government's deliberate and cynical repudiation of the 1974 Liberal pledge to give comprehensive and extensive aid to municipalities for the improvement of urban transit systems.

Mr. Speaker, we not only condemn the government for these broken election promises but for advocating the principles set forth in Bill C-33, the bill to amend the National Transportation Act. In this area our criticism is not confined to the Liberals; it includes the Tories as well. Both the Liberals and the Tories approve the principle of Bill C-33, which is that the basis for a national transportation policy should be commercial viability and competition, something which amounts only to an affirmation and extension of the national transportation policy set out in 1967, a policy which has only increased the mess in which transportation finds itself today. Moreover, it is a line of approach which completely ignores the advice given by the former minister of transport, Mr. Marchand, when he recommended that competition should not be the basis of national transport policy.

An hon. Member: He went to the Senate.

Mr. Gilbert: One of the Conservative members said he went to the Senate. The present minister is ignoring the issue of urban transport. His approach is cold and intellectual and marked by a certain obduracy. We have just heard the parliamentary secretary speak in defence of the indefensible, and I now find myself more than ever convinced that the government must take a hold on transportation otherwise it will continue to be in a mess. The Tories have ignored it. Their transportation critic, the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) never challenged the principle of Bill C-33. He dealt only with details, with some of the weaknesses and shortcomings of the system. It is one thing to criticize, and another to offer solutions. No solutions have been forthcoming from either the Tories or the Liberals.

It was the NDP transportation critic, the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) who struck at the heart of the problem when he stated that the basic concept behind a national transportation policy must be that of a public utility coupled with equality and efficiency, rather than the concept of commercial viability, user-pay, profitability and competition. Only when transport is developed on the basis of a public utility with equality of treatment and accessibility to various modes of transport, no matter where in the country people may live, will we be able to develop an integrated approach to transportation. The Liberals and the Tories are saying, in effect, "Let us pursue private enterprise. Let the profit motive be worshipped, and the public be damned." We in the NDP say, "People first, with equality and efficiency being the goals".

The Liberal backbench revolt in the last few days—I refer to the speeches made by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Philbrook), the hon. member for York East (Mr. Collenette), the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Stollery), and now the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan), indicate the weakness of their position and, at the same time, their reluctance or inability to force the government to make the necessary changes. The speech of the parliamentary secretary made me realize that this revolt amounts to nothing more than throwing cream puffs at the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang). I have never heard a weaker defence of the indefensible.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gilbert: More than 75 per cent of Canadians live in urban areas. Canadian cities, both large and small, are growing fast. I would point out that transportation is not a self-sustaining industry. In the four most important modes of travel, revenue as a percentage of total cost is as follows: air, 31 per cent; road, 64 per cent; rail, 74 per cent; marine, 19 per cent.

If those figures mean anything, it is that the government should take a firm position with regard to transport and ensure that attention is paid first and foremost to the needs of Canadians, the development of the cities, the development of industry and the increasing of employment opportunities.

Hon. members can see from those percentages that all those four modes of travel are sustained only by a massive input of public money. Air travel revenue constitutes only 31 per cent of the total cost, which means that 69 per cent is contributed by the federal government. With regard to road transport, 36 per cent of the total cost comes from the government, and 26 per cent of the cost of railway operations comes from government by way of subsidies. The marine transportation system is the most dramatic of all. Only 19 per cent of the cost is contributed directly by the public; the remaining 81 per cent given by the federal government.

I would now direct your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the pledges made by the Liberal party in 1974 and since broken. In 1974 the Prime Minister pledged there would be financial aid for transportation systems available to municipalities right across Canada; specifically, that the federal government would pay 100 per cent of the cost of new commuter vehicles manufactured in this country, 25 per cent of the cost of all public transit vehicles manufactured in Canada for use within cities, and 50 per cent of the cost of new stations and platforms as part of commuter systems. The government further pledged the removal of the 12 per cent sales tax on municipal vehicles, and it was estimated by government spokesmen that this would assist the municipalities financially to the extent of $300 million over a five-year period. Hearing the parliamentary secretary speak this afternoon, one would have thought these problems did not exist in 1974. But they exist today as much as they did in 1974.

The cynical approach of the government in making this announcement immediately prior to the election in 1974 indicates the lack of faith that Canadians are developing in the promises made by the federal government. In fairness to the government, the 12 per cent sales tax on municipal transit vehicles was removed. On July 30, 1975, there was the announcement of a $20 million capital aid program over five years, beginning in 1977, for commuter systems. However, this aid specifically excludes assistance for local bus, light rapid transit or subway systems. All of these are very necessary in our urban centres.

Expenditures by the government in the 1977-78 estimates set forth contributions for planning studies, capital assistance programs and urban commuter services and amount to $7,250,000, compared to $250,000 in the 1976-77 estimates. Contributions for research and demonstration projects amount to $886,000, compared to zero in the 1976-77 estimates. This makes a total of $8,136,000 in the 1977-78 estimates compared to $250,000 in the 1976-77 estimates.

May I remind the House that the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities estimates that close to $4 billion in urban transit investment will be required over the next five years. A 25 per cent segment of this five-year requirement would amount to $1 billion. The estimates for 1977-78 amount, as I say, to $8,136,000. This illustrates the dramatic difference between the aid requested by the mayors and municipalities compared to the amounts in the estimates set forth by the government. This level of investment, it is estimated by the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities, is required just to maintain the current auto-transit ridership ratio. In 1974 Statistics Canada estimated that only 16 per cent of trips to and from work had been made by transit. Just think of that for a moment, Mr. Speaker, only 16 per cent of our industrial workers use urban transit across this country. Is it any wonder that our major highways are clogged every morning from Monday to Friday with workers driving their cars to work? Is it any wonder that we need a fast, efficient and comfortable service to transport workers to and from work?

I should like to dwell for a couple of minutes on the impact motor vehicles have on the environment of our major cities. In the transportation sector the automobile is the major producer of noxious materials. The total pollutants per seat mile by mode are as follows: for an automobile the carbon monoxide rating is 120; for air travel it is 105; for bus travel it is three; and for rail it is only one. This indicates how necessary it is to develop a rail program to cut down on the amount of pollutants in the air. But there has been no incentive on the part of the government to develop rail passenger services across the country; in fact, we have had the contrary situation. The government has discouraged this and has abandoned rail lines in many parts of the country. Is it any wonder that the people of Canada are getting sick and tired of the broken promises of this government? Is it any wonder that the municipal authorities in Toronto became annoyed when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) made a speech in Toronto two weeks ago in which he said the government was cutting back the $300 million grant to municipalities to develop urban transportation?

With regard to restraint, I suggest we should consider the proposal that has been put forward by all members of the House, and which last night was put forward by the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Martin), that there be restraint priorities. When I think of some of the priorities of this government in the form of the privileges they have been giving corporations by way of tax advantages, and then the government has the audacity to cut back on rail passenger and other modes of transportation, I realize that the government's priorities are not very sound. In fact, the hon. member for Skeena (Mrs. Campagnolo) became very disturbed when she saw what was happening regarding transit on the west coast.

Mrs. Campagnolo: I still am.

Mr. Gilbert: She says she still is. The hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Lee) agreed with the remarks of my colleague the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) last night regarding the horrendous travel problems

Vancouver is facing. Yet the priorities of this government are to give tax advantages to corporations and to consider the transit priorities of industrial workers in our cities of low rating. Let me outline some of the results of the low priority that the government has placed on transportation. Ever since I became a member of the House in 1965 members from Newfoundland have been raising the question of the "Bullet". There is need for a massive infusion of money so that Newfoundland can develop modes of transport to promote growth of industrial strategies and to cut down on the massive amount of unemployment in the maritimes. It is a national disgrace to have unemployment in the maritimes which ranges anywhere from 15 per cent to 20 per cent.

The maritime premiers have been taken in by the arguments of the Minister of Transport who has sold out the people of the maritimes. The cut in rail transportation will affect the major cities of Sydney, Halifax and Saint John, and this is a national disgrace in view of the high energy costs the maritimes are facing. Gasoline within the next few months will probably retail in the maritimes at $1.25 a gallon, yet the federal government is putting stress on the provision of bus services and other modes rather than rail service. The Minister of Transport has given a treat to Quebec by handing over the major rail line between Quebec and Montreal to the CPR while totally ignoring the CNR.

There has been a multiplicity of urban transit problems in the main urban centres of Ontario, especially in the city of Toronto. The CNR has built the CN tower at a cost of $60 million—$50 million of that amount, I understand, being financed by one of the banks at 11 per cent. That is Senator Marchand's monument in Toronto to national unity. The CN had no right to become involved in the CN tower business. The money should have been applied to improving commuter services within the city.

Then there was Pickering airport, which many members of the Tory party supported. STOL aircraft are being promoted by the Ontario government for the Toronto airport. We need good and efficient services in the west, not rail abandonment. In British Columbia we need a solution to the mess in Vancouver and a solution to the boat service problem of the people in coastal areas.

I note that my time is nearly up. There is need for an infrastructure in Canada to develop an urban strategy with regard to transportation, industrial strategy, employment and energy. I see nothing in the federal government's program which will tackle these problems. Every step taken is retrogressive, and I see very little or no support coming from the Progressive Conservative party. What hurts me more than anything, before I finish—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but his allotted time has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I must congratulate the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway) who introduced the motion today. This week the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) was quite busy. Indeed his bill was introduced and I spoke on it March 1, so I did not expect we would be dealing with transport today. Fortunately the minister keeps his cool, Mr. Speaker, because he was away on March 1 and he still is not here today. In any event he must surely read Hansard and he will realize that it was quite an important week for him.

The motion moved by the hon. member for Selkirk reads as follows:

That in view of the desirability of encouraging an integrated approach to urban planning and development, and of promoting energy conservation, industrial development and employment, this House condemns the Liberal government's deliberate and cynical repudiation of its 1974 election pledge to give comprehensive and extensive aid to municipalities for the improvement of urban transport systems.

At the outset, while hearing the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway), I sincerely believed he was simply going into a partisan criticism of Liberal policies. Of course in 1974 the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and all cabinet ministers who travelled across the province made promises and I feel sure they would not know themselves how many such promises they made. Of course those promises misled the people, as we now realize. The parliamentary secretary to the minister just said that the 1974 commitments have to be reviewed. So those promises were made in 1974 and they just now start reviewing them to determine whether they were sound or not.

Well, Mr. Speaker, not satisfied with stating those promises had to be reviewed, he said the delay in keeping them was due to inflation. They have been fortunate these last few years that the term "inflation" is in the dictionary, because everytime something goes wrong the government use it as an excuse. We have no money because we have inflation, there is unemployment because we have inflation, and the government does nothing because we have inflation.

Speaking of misrepresentation, it was said that the right hon. Prime Minister misled the people. Well, people in Roberval, my constituency, can testify to that. During the last campaign eight or ten ministers, if I remember right, came one after the other making promises, very often as far fetched as unpractical. But some were quite practical. There was among others, and that had been promised for quite some time, the upgrading of Roberval airport. The then minister of finance, Mr. Turner I believe, and Mr. Marchand put their heads at stake, pledging before the people of the area they would retire from politics if that project was not implemented. We now realize that they paid with their heads, because both of them left politics. The former to go into the private sector, the latter to get some rest in the Senate. But, Mr. Speaker, we are still waiting for the airport. It has been left as it was, to deteriorate day after day.

This tends to prove what candidates will do during an election campaign. How can the people still trust that government? No wonder it is less and less popular, because the people are not as apolitical as we believe. They are now very politics conscious, and rightly so, and they need to be.

● (1450)

The emphasis in today's motion is on urban transport, but I see that the $290 million promised in 1974 were to meet the needs of municipalities, not only urban needs. Before I received the motion I had just read an article in Le Devoir of yesterday entitled:

Urban transport: forgotten promises?

Two Ontario Liberal backbenchers denounced the federal government yesterday for reneging on 1974 election promises to assist municipalities to pay for urban transit.

Frank Philbrook and David Collenette threatened to withdraw support from major transportation legislation before the Commons if the government does not at least partly fulfil the 1974 promises which in total involved expenditure of $290 million.

Several other Liberal backbenchers applauded the Philbrook warning, underlining the mood of resentment within the Liberal caucus over second thoughts that the government is having transit aid.

Earlier, during the daily question period, Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau said cabinet is still considering the commitment, made a few days before the July, 1974, election in which the Liberals regained their majority in the Commons.

It was Mr. Trudeau's only response to New Democrat Leader Edward Broadbent who tried to find out whether or not the Liberals were backing down on the promise.

Last week Finance Minister Donald Macdonald said the $290 million was left out of government spending plans because some projects had to be sacrificed in the name of restraint.

The statement drew objections from urban-area MPs in all three major parties.

Mr. Speaker, while I was listening to the hon. member for Selkirk, I got the impression that he wanted the federal government to be directly involved in urban transit. Everybody knows I have always been opposed to the federal government taking over the jurisdiction of the provinces in this area. That is what I was afraid of when I was listening to the hon. member's speech earlier on. But fortunately the secretary of the minister came and dotted the i's, reminding the House that this was a problem of provincial jurisdiction. This complicates the issue, of course, since the federal government is being asked to help finance urban transit, that is, to intervene in a provincial jurisdiction.

I think this is the main drawback of today's balance-sheet federalism. In order to help the province and because it has taxation powers, the federal government often violates the essential principles of our constitution against the will of the provinces which are opposed to it, and rightly so. To correct this lack of co-ordination the present government, not being able to intervene in provincial jurisdiction by the main door, has entered by the back door. This is how the famous winter work programs were created—unforgettable these were—and I think that hon. members still remember those winter works when people were made to work to do nothing.

Let us talk about the local initiatives projects, the somewhat improved Opportunities for Youth Program, and now, Canada Works and Young Canada Works. These aim at creating employment at the municipal level. The intent is good, but the action taken to achieve it is not so good. If we wanted to be more logical and more consistent with confederate standards, we would develop a formula which, while creating manpower, while helping municipalities within federal-provincial agreements, would still respect the rights of everyone concerned.

The parliamentary secretary of the minister now tells us that the government cannot fulfill its campaign promises to help the municipalities since it has had to restrict its budget because of inflation. In other words, the government does not have that much money any more, but the provinces have still less. What surprises me is that the government, through the Department of Manpower and Immigration, will spend $200, $300 or $400 million for programs like Canada Works, for projects who often are not productive for the municipalities. I therefore wonder why the government did not simply give to the provinces the $290 million promised three years ago.

All municipalities have problems concerning urban transportation, infrastructures, environment, sewage treatment, municipal roads and so on. The provinces would need those millions to meet the needs of their municipalities. Why does this government not give back to the provinces the money that they collected themselves? It is the workers of each province who have paid the promised millions. Why does the government not give them back to them? In this way, for once, the federal government would act in accordance with the rules of the constitution, and peace would come back in federal-provincial relations. To state now that we do not have any money to give to the provinces is simply to laugh at the population because we are spending indirectly millions which should have been given directly to the provinces. And after this, we say that the provinces do not want to come to any agreement. How can it be possible to have any discussion? We hold a lot of federal-provincial meetings, and always to no purpose. Why? The people know why.

I say that the provinces, and the province of Quebec especially, can no longer wait for the unilateral decisions of the government, and no longer want to. Let us talk about infrastructures for developing cities like the ones in my area. Cities now spend 40 per cent of their budget simply to pay the interest on the accumulated debt. How can they provide services for an ever-increasing population?

For many years we have had the problem of sewage which is largely responsible for the pollution of our rivers. At each election, the federal government which still has the biggest taxation powers promises to help the provinces by giving them back a larger part of the taxes it raises in those same provinces. The same goes for municipal roads as good roads are a prerequisite for urban transit.

The minister's secretary just told us that Ottawa cannot be said to have the largest source of income while provinces have great needs. Mr. Speaker, it takes a lot of nerve to say that because everybody is aware that Ottawa has so much taxation powers that again this year it will collect more than $45 billion in taxes from the people of Canada. And, when it must give some back to the provinces, according to the agreements, it wants to administer those funds instead of giving free rein to the provincial governments.

And this government pretends it want to preserve provincial autonomy! The only help it gives to municipalities is to reduce or withdraw unfair taxes as the 12 per cent levy on the purchase of buses or the redemption of the discount on gas and the government calls that helping municipalities. What a joke! It does them less harm than in the past years, but nothing in this year's budget will lighten the financial burden of our municipalities. I see that my allotted time is expired so I shall conclude my remarks.

[English]

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in joining in the debate on the motion before us today I should first like to compliment the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway) on an excellent motion and an excellent speech introducing the motion. That hon. member may temporarily be seated in the back row of our benches, but judging from today's performance he is equal to at least any member on the front bench on the government side.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Don't underrate him. He is better.

Mr. Lang: And twice as good as one-third of the members over there.

An hon. Member: That is all that row over there.

Mr. Lang: Maybe two exceptions.

Mr. Stevens: I am pleased that at last the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) has walked into the Chamber. After I finish I hope he will try to explain his department's role in reneging on urban transit, which is under discussion today. Perhaps it is not only the Minister of Transport we should hear from but also the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) rather than his parliamentary secretary. I think the attendance in this House today by government members and the fact that to this moment not one cabinet minister has had enough interest to speak on the motion, spells out the degree of concern and interest the government has in urban transit problems across the nation. One of the members, and perhaps he has a good point, has stated the reason cabinet ministers are not speaking today is that they are scared of the revolt in the Liberal backbenches. I thank him for the cue and I do not doubt that is part of the front bench anxiety at the present time.

The only member to give us the Liberal version of why there has been reneging on the $290 million that was committed for urban transit during the June and July, 1974, election campaign is the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Kaplan). Although all of us would agree that parliament becomes a bit of an Alice in Wonderland at times, I have not encountered anything that should be included in an Alice in Wonderland story to the degree that the discourse of the parliamentary secretary should today.

In effect he said to the people of the Toronto area, "Be thankful we did not honour that promise for the $290 million that we put forth in order to get re-elected because we are really saving you money. Toronto pays 30 per cent of the total tax revenue that goes to Ottawa. There is no way you would get that 30 per cent of $290 million, so indirectly we are saving you money because if we paid something less than 30 per cent it would mean you were subsidizing the rest of the country."

Let us gather our wits, Mr. Speaker. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance is telling us that is the reason for justifying a breach of promise in the 1974 campaign. That is bad enough. When we check, however, we find his figures are totally wrong. Toronto does not pay 30 per cent of the tax revenue that is "pouring into Ottawa", to use his phrase. With all due respect he must know that. The information is available in the publication "Taxation Statistics—1976 Edition" issued by Revenue Canada. That shows clearly that the amount Toronto taxpayers pay in personal income tax is 15.8 per cent, not 30 per cent. Toronto people pay 15.8 per cent of the total income tax that pours into Ottawa, and their gross income is 13½ per cent of the national total. Those are the facts.

To use the parliamentary secretary's line of reasoning, if Toronto got 15.8 per cent of the $290 million they would have received $45,800,000 had the government followed through on its promise. If you look at the whole Toronto area, you find that by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) breaking his promise he is not only cheating Toronto out of that amount but Mississauga out of $4,408,000, Oakville, $1,508,000, Barrie, $609,000, Brampton, $1,015,000, Oshawa, $1,856,000, and Whitby, $493,000. If you want to follow the parliamentary secretary's line of reasoning, those are the amounts the municipalities were entitled to out of the $290 million that was waved in front of the people to help the government get re-elected and mismanage the country. That totals $55,689,000 that the Liberals have short changed the Toronto area with respect to the commitments they offered in the last election campaign.

The parliamentary secretary says times have changed. What times have changed? Is the parliamentary secretary referring to the fact that times have changed in de Havilland aircraft, which happens to be in his riding and which the government bought in May, 1974, barely six weeks before the election, paying $35 million for it, and since has poured $115 million into it—is that the time he says has changed? Is it the fact that his is an "I am all right Jack" attitude with de Havilland to the tune of $150 million in his riding, even though he says there is no money to help with urban transportation in the Toronto area, and I have indicated the area is entitled to at least $55,600,000?

In short, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that this government has no proper answer to their reneging.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: The parliamentary secretary makes the odd argument that somehow or other the federal government should not be interfering with municipal and provincial governments, but why did it not think that in 1974?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): There was an election in 1974.

Mr. Stevens: Why did they come to the conclusion this was none of their business? If they feel they are not involved, why are we being required in the current estimates to put up $15 million to $17 million to support the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) and his department? What is he supposed to be doing if the federal government has no role to play in urban transportation in areas such as Toronto, Edmonton, Montreal, and others that need this type of development?

● (1510)

Actually we know what happened during the last campaign. On instructions from Keith Davey, the campaign director of the Liberal party, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was instructed to promise anything which would help to get him re-elected.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): That is right.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, you will recall that famous statement when Mr. Davey was quoted as saying that he told the Prime Minister in Vancouver that if it would help to get votes, "You had better get down and shine boots, if that will help. In short, do whatever you can and promise whatever you like in order to get re-elected."

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): An example of power corrupting.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance made reference to the government being active in certain fields. For example he referred to STOL. Naturally the parliamentary secretary would feel kindly toward STOL. The Dash-7 is being manufactured by de Havilland, the plant that happens to be in his riding. Naturally he is warmly disposed to the $115 million of subsidy which has been poured into that near Crown corporation. But I ask you, is that the priority this government should be following?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): No.

Mr. Kaplan: Would you like to see de Havilland closed down, treated as the Avro-Arrow? That is how the Tories approach aviation.

Mr. Fairweather: We did what you didn't have the guts to do.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, we are saying that when moneys are to be expended at the federal level, the government of the day must choose its priorities. What we are saying is that there is an urgent priority in the Toronto area, and in many other urban areas, for better transit. The government promised to assist with the development of that urban transit, and what we are now suggesting is that they have reneged on their promise, to the disadvantage of the commuters.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Reprehensible!

Mr. Stevens: Having said that, I do not feel that the government is acknowledging the request of the chairman of the Metropolitan Toronto area, Mr. Godfrey. He asked many of us to attend in Toronto at 8 a.m., Monday, March 14, and see for themselves the present state of transit activity at Union Station and the general surrounding area.

I do not think it is enough for the parliamentary secretary to stand up, read that telegram inviting him there, and simply come back with the odd argument that by reneging on the promise to which Mr. Godfrey refers, he is somehow saving that area money.

I would suggest that the government is playing a political shell game with the transportation strategy of our cities. Two weeks ago the Minister of Finance delivered what he believed to be a death blow to the $290 million in aid to urban transit. No less than four members of the cabinet, including the Prime Minister, have repeatedly assured us that the money would be made available. On Wednesday the government floundered again, and the Prime Minister stated that the on again off again promise is not unequivocally dead, it is merely before the cabinet for study. We have heard that song and dance before; hence it is no surprise that urban planners from St. John's to Victoria remain skeptical as to the fate of several urban transit projects which are hanging in the balance until the government decides it will honour its commitments.

I remind hon. members that the former minister of transport, Senator Marchand, told us 18 months ago that this very issue then, and I stress "then", was before cabinet. On June 16, 1975, as reported in Hansard at page 6795 he said, in reply to a question put by my colleague, the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta):

> We have not changed our opinion on that, Mr. Speaker. A paper was prepared for cabinet and is before cabinet now. Let us see how much money they give us—because there is money involved. As far as policy is concerned, I will not backtrack.

Nothing substantial has ever come of that paper, just as nothing substantial has come of the Prime Minister's promise to finance 100 per cent of the cost of Canadian-made commuter vehicles. The whole thing is clearly an election bon-bon which the government trots out when the heat is on, and then forgets when it thinks it can get away with it. But we on this side of the House have not forgotten.

When the present Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Chrétien), the then president of the treasury board, nearly three and a half years ago said that the government, and I quote, "would live up to its obligations even if it took up to four years," we remembered. In response to a question I put to that same minister in October of 1974, as reported on page 668 of Hansard, the minister stated, and I quote:

> The political party of which I am a member has made other promises and the government will implement them in due course. We have stated that we will do this and that, and take four years to live up to our mandate. We have said: 'Don't worry about it, we will live up to our obligations.'

We remember these countless other promises, and on behalf of 75 per cent of our population which lives in our larger cities we now urge the government to make good these promises, because urban transit is not just an election "goody". To the millions who travel in our urban areas in rush hour it is a vital necessity. This promise should not be allowed to go the way of the Prime Minister's promise not to impose wage and price controls, or his assurance that separatism is dead in Quebec. This promise must be made to stick. In Toronto alone, nearly $200 million in transit modernization awaits the government's decision to keep its side of this commitment.

The proposed terminal improvements program, which is intended to be the hub of an efficient metro-wide transit system, the Streetsville-Milton GO line, the Lakeshore extension, the Scarborough transit, and the cross-town line, are all in jeopardy following the government's broken promises.

The finance minister, who apparently sometimes speaks for the government, and sometimes does not, says the government cannot honour its commitments because of restraint; but this is a callous excuse. To date the government has spent $110.4 million for land acquisition and property management on the Pickering airport site which the people of Ontario do not even want. This sum is 11 times the federal government's total contribution to date to public transit in Ontario. If restraint is the number one priority before the government, then let it, as has been suggested in committee from time to time, sell the Pickering site and turn over the revenue and remaining funds to urban transit.

Mr. Kaplan: Ontario chose that site.

Mr. Gilbert: It was only the provincial election. The Tories approved it.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the parliamentary secretary was not listening to me. I am not commenting on who chose, or who didn't. I am simply saying, you have a lot of land down there. Liquidate it if you are short of funds, and use the proceeds for developing urban transit for the Toronto area.

That would be better than creating another white elephant like Mirabel. Mr. Speaker, Mirabel lost $130 million in two years, yet the administration is determined to spend hundreds of millions of dollars developing airports which are very likely not needed. For example, air traffic at Toronto's Malton airport may even be decreasing at the present time. I would stress that the money could best be used to serve the larger segment of our population which needs commuter service to get to and from work, and not the relatively wealthy people who use air services in this country. But even these figures do not illustrate the ill-advised economics of this latest cop-out. I would stress that the motion of the hon. member for Selkirk refers to energy conservation. In this connection I would point out that Kirk Foley, the president of the Urban Transportation Corporation, has said there have been broken promises. It follows that this would impede future prospects in terms of transportation strategies. I used the figures in the Porter study on energy, and Mr. Foley estimates that 25 per cent of all petroleum consumed in Canada is used to fuel urban automobiles. By 1985 our petroleum needs will approach $5 billion annually, based on current prices and use trends. The present Minister of Finance knows this only too well because he used to be the minister of energy. He knows the importing cost is going to mount with regard to the fuel that will be needed to power the urban automobiles that are needed in commuter transit.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired. He may, however, continue with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. C. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, this motion is a timely one. It puts before the House of Commons a very important question. Up to this point, however, we have only heard one side of the story, that presented by the urban members. Many of us are not urban members and there are a lot of people we represent who are not from the urban areas.

This is a good motion. It deserves serious consideration and serious answers. Some answers have been given. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has said that the matter will again be taken under consideration. I hope it is because any promise must be considered as serious.

Many members of this House represent areas that do not have the amenities of the urban areas. These members will have to take a very serious look at what would happen if the promise made in this instance came into effect. How would it affect those of us who represent areas that do not have any type of transportation? I refer to areas such as those represented by the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau), and the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday).

The type of transportation that urban members would like to see added to or expanded is a wonderful thing. However, what about those from the maritimes to British Columbia who do not have any type of transportation? How do they get from their municipalities where they live and work to the large urban centres?

The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway) made the point that 75 per cent of our population today lives in the cities. It appears as though that will increase to 90 per cent by the 1980's and 1990's. This House of Commons should look for ways to get that growth away from the cities to the suburban areas and to the country where there is a work force and opportunities for industry to move out of the large metropolitan areas and expand.

We should get some of these people back into areas that are waiting for them. Our young people are more and more moving away from the land, the areas of opportunity in the rural communities, into the large cities for their education and livelihood. However, they are not returning. We have to reverse that trend and get our young men and women back to the areas they have left.

I agree with some of those who represent the urban communities. I do not blame them for standing up in this House in an attempt to get the best urban transport, commuter systems, and everything else. However, as a representative of an area that does not have those types of commuter systems, and everything and access to the theatre, arts and business, I am going to make our wishes known. If the government is thinking of putting $290 million into urban transportation and commuter systems, we in the rural areas want some of that money to go into our areas as well in order that we can get to the large urban centres.

The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) made a strong statement about the $150 million that has gone into the de Havilland corporation. A good percentage of that will come back out of that corporation in business and taxes from the workers. That corporation is not in my constituency, but perhaps I can come to their defence. The de Havilland corporation might just provide the outlying areas of this country with the type of transportation they need to get into the urban centres. These people may want to get into the urban areas, but they sure as heck want to get back out and back home. However, there is now no way of doing that.

Perhaps the hon. member for York-Simcoe was simply talking about a business firm that was not in his constituency. I do not know. However, if we can get Canadian companies which deal in this type of higher technology to improve and expand, and bring into production new methods of transportation that we can use not only in this country but around the world—

Mr. Stevens: Have you not got railways up your way?

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): Certainly, but we have not had any passenger trains running there for about seven years.

Mr. Stevens: Tell the government.

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): I do tell the government. The hon. member for York-Simcoe talked about this being an Alice in Wonderland situation. It might be. However, I would say that the hon. member for York-Simcoe is the best indication of a Mad Hatter that I have ever seen. He runs around this Alice in Wonderland place taking a stand on both sides of the picket fence. He should realize how dangerous that can be.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Tweedledum and Tweedledee.

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): No one can stand up and say cut back; and then the next day say, spend more, spend more.

Mr. Stevens: We have told you where you can do both.

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): de Havilland and other companies have developed some expertise in the area of transportation. I want to encourage the development and use of that expertise here in Canada. The hon. member for York-Simcoe does not seem to believe in the expertise that was developed in the STOL system.

Mr. Whiteway: How many planes have you sold?

[Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey).]

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): We certainly will not get any more orders if members opposite continue to stand up in this place and degrade it.

Mr. Stevens: You have sold one plane so far.

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): It is apparent that you will not help us sell any more. The opposition want to know this, that, and the other thing about why we are not paying out money for urban transit. If the money that had been promised had been put into urban transit, members from every rural municipality in Canada would be ready to stand up—

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): What did the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) say about rural members in 1974?

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): I know the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) will stand up and make a speech. He is usually pretty good at that, and at other times as well when people are not too interested in what he has to say.

The situation which faces us is certainly one of priority. It is an issue we should be looking at right now. I am not saying we should not put some money into urban transportation. Urban transportation deserves some money; nevertheless, there are other places where money is needed as well. It is needed to improve transportation facilities from coast to coast and for the provision of better services between the urban centres and outlying regions.

The hon. member who spoke for the New Democratic Party had some reasonable points to make, but he made at least one statement with which I could not agree. The socialists seem to think nothing is worth doing unless it can be done by the state. They believe it should be state operated and state financed, and that if there is any profit it should go to the state. I can tell him now that I am in favour of private enterprise. I always have been and I always will be. The ideas put forward by the New Democratic Party sound wonderful until you go around the country and see that nothing which is state operated ever makes a profit, and that whatever is produced usually costs, in the end, three times as much as it is worth.

I should like to set out the position of those of us who come from rural areas and who want better transportation in those areas, as well as improved amenities for those who must commute to and from work. Recently, a decision of the Canadian Transport Commission was handed down with regard to a proposal put forward by Eastern Provincial Airlines in the maritimes. I am not happy with that decision, Mr. Speaker, because it means that a proposal which could have provided better service for the outlying areas of all the maritime provinces, using Canadian-built airplanes and Canadian-built technology, is not being proceeded with. Since the turning down of this proposal by the Commission, I understand that Eastern Provincial has withdrawn its order for at least two of the aircraft which were to have been used. I was pleased to hear the hon. member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail) say the other night that the premiers themselves are seeking to encourage a change of mind on the part of the CTC with a view to having the proposal accepted.

The hon. member for York-Simcoe made certain statements about the money which the government has promised to make available. In the circumstances, exactly how would a federal urban transit program result in a transfer of funds to the government of Ontario? The most obvious example consists of aid to commuter rail. Our election platform proposed, among other things, a 100 per cent federal subsidy for commuter rail equipment. Since the government of Ontario is presently responsible for GO Transit equipment costs, implementing this part of the election platform literally would result in a simple transfer of funds to the province of Ontario.

Ontario has also taken a position which would maximize the revenue transfer to the provincial treasury from implementation of other possible measures of federal aid to urban transit. Thus, both the present and previous Ontario ministers of transportation and communications have indicated that they would not pass on to transit systems more than a part, perhaps a small part, of the 25 per cent subsidy for the purchase of urban transit equipment (other than commuter rail) mentioned in our election platform.

I cannot say that I blame Ontario for this stand. James Rhodes—when he was the Ontario minister of transportation and communications—pointed out that adding a 25 per cent federal subsidy for urban transit equipment to Ontario's 75 per cent subsidy would lead transit authorities to act as if they were in possession of "throwaway buses". At the same time you can see that the present provincial urban transit program is extremely generous. I wonder if it is our job to take the government of Ontario off the hook for the commitments they have made to urban transit.

Essentially the same problem of a fiscal transfer arises wherever there is extensive provincial aid to urban transit. I am distributing a table, prepared last year which indicates that extensive provincial support for urban transit is not confined to Ontario, but is evident in all provinces having substantial urban populations. The result is that we have no assurance whatsoever that federal expenditures will add significantly to what would otherwise have been spent on urban transit. We have no commitment from any of the provinces that when the money is there it will all go where we want it to go.

Moreover, the expenditure is not "capped". Does it mean the taxpayers of Canada are to continue year after year to provide buses, streetcars, and new subway trains for the urban centres?

I want to know, first of all, where the money will go. I want an assurance from the provincial governments that they will not divert that money to anything else, and I want an assurance from the federal government that there will be a "cap" placed on this spending so that money which comes in from taxpayers right across the country will be spent equitably. We are admitting, of course, that most of the revenue derived from taxes does come from urban dwellers, but we want a fair proportion of this money to be used to provide adequate transportation for the rural areas of Canada.

We want services of the type EPA suggested in the maritimes, the type of transportation many people in northern Ontario enjoy now with the NORONTAR system. I want to see services of this kind extended into southern and southwestern Ontario. Sure, we have buses—one a day. If you want to go to Toronto from my constituency, you have to go one day and return the next. Some people might like to go in the morning and come back the same day. I should like to see people in the riding represented by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) have access to fast commuter travel, the type of system they have in northern Ontario. We should press forward with schemes such as this, as well as with rapid transit systems.

Finally, we have to realize that there is only so much money to go around. We can make promises. All political parties make promises. Some of them are good, others are not so good. The Ontario political machine made promises about a thing called the Spadina ditch. Later on they found it was not such a good idea after all, so right now they have the ditch and they are likely to continue to have it for a long time.

We talk about Pickering Airport. That airport was agreed to fully by the Ontario government.

Mr. Stevens: No way!

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): Your friends in the Ontario government were in favour of it, too.

Mr. Stevens: Don't mislead the House.

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): They selected the area and were in full agreement.

Mr. Stevens: They never said an airport was needed.

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): All of a sudden they changed their minds.

● (1540)

Mr. Stevens: Do not mislead the House.

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): If I have learned anything from the hon. member for York-Simcoe it is probably how to mislead the House and get away with it. I think basically this is a good motion because it will enable us to find some of the answers to a promise that was made.

Mr. Clarke: And broken.

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): I agree that the promise was made and, as the Prime Minister has said, I think it should be looked at.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I think the mover of the motion, my colleague from Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway), has outlined the situation so far as the government's performance is concerned—promising things that either it did not know about or which it was unwilling to deliver on later. I do not want to dwell on those promises because the people of Vancouver are used to this kind of treatment from this government. They remember only too well that just two years ago, while the government was spending $5 million in an eastern city building a parking garage at the airport to cut the walking distance for passengers in half, the government was closing down the garage at Vancouver International Airport and extending the parking lot, thus doubling the walking distance to the terminal, resulting in so much inconvenience to air passengers, that the government was forced to install a shuttle-bus service which is in operation to this day, and probably will be forever.

The hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) was trying to justify the government's action on the basis that changes had been made. Everybody knows that changes have been made. In the urban areas there are more people now, there are more cars now, there are more problems now, and there are more broken promises now. The only thing there is less of is government concern for the people who live in the urban areas of the country.

Changes have also been made to the rail service. Ton miles is one example. The ton miles originating by rail in western Canada have increased by 62 per cent in the period between 1968 and 1972, including an increase of 106 per cent in British Columbia, while the all-Canada average increased by 35 per cent in that same period, lest anyone think that parallels do not exist.

To show the concern in British Columbia for this topical issue today, I want to read the House a telegram that was sent by the mayor of Vancouver to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) just about ten days ago on February 23. The mayor of Vancouver said this:

> Strongly urge your serious attention to problem of urban transit and long overdue need for federal support. Light rapid transit system for greater Vancouver is among critical current priorities but without federal financial backing impossible.

That is signed by Mayor Jack Volrich of Vancouver.

Vancouver is not the only body to show its concern. Two years ago the Progressive Conservative Party sent a force out to Vancouver and other cities to study the urban transportation situation. I went with that group to the city of Vancouver and to other western cities, and we met with officials of the greater Vancouver regional district as well as officials of the province and of the city itself. The Greater Vancouver Regional District, for the information of hon. members, is composed of elected representatives from 17 lower mainland communities of British Columbia which make up what people generally regard as greater Vancouver. It was obvious that lack of consultation was the problem. The municipalities were consulting with each other through the GVRD, and that group was consulting with the province, and I will say something about that in a moment. What was missing was federal government input.

When we were in Vancouver in 1975 we heard of plans afoot for satellite cities. For example, the British Columbia Telephone Company has already built its new head office building in Burnaby to try to take the pressure off downtown Vancouver. Industry is being moved out so that commuting is reduced, and it is my understanding that even the new taxation data centre of Revenue Canada will be located in Surrey.

The Greater Vancouver Regional District, as long ago as 1971, agreed that public transportation should be a regional function, and consequently it applied to the province for letters patent to assume the responsibility. This has not been granted, for a variety of reasons. Aside from financing issues, one of the most basic problems still requiring resolution is a definition of the respective roles of the province and GVRD in setting transportation policies and priorities and carrying out programs.

The transportation committee of the GVRD board had recommended in a 1971 report, "Regional Transportation as a GVRD Function", that the GVRD should seek responsibility for operating the public transit system. It is now focusing its attention on the region's future role in transportation planning rather than operation, and may recommend that the region seek letters patent for only this aspect of the transportation function. Meanwhile the GVRD is working with the bureau of transit services on establishing new bus routes.

The bureau of transit services was created in February, 1973, as a branch of the provincial department of municipal affairs. It is headed by the director of transit services who has the rank of an associate deputy minister. The bureau has nine employees studying this question, and their mandate is to determine public transportation requirements within and between the various regions of the province; to advise the government on policy matters related to the provision of public transportation in the province; and to implement public transport programs in the province. Accordingly, in conjunction with involved municipalities and the GVRD, as well as B.C. Hydro, the bureau is seeking to improve and extend existing bus services and other transportation facilities in the area. I cite that at such length only to indicate that people are working together on the local scene, and that what is missing is federal government input.

The Greater Vancouver Regional District publishes a bulletin every month, and in its most recent issue of January, 1977, it says that it has now called for the establishment of a ten year road and transit improvement program co-ordinated by a provincial-regional transportation organization. This proposal is now being submitted to the general public, local councils, and to the provincial government for their reaction. Again I say that the obvious missing link here is the federal government. Everyone at the local level is working together; the federal government has made and broken its promise to be involved, and everyone else has decided they just cannot wait any longer.

The Greater Vancouver Regional District also realized that if nothing was done to solve the worsening transportation problem, the liveability of the region would suffer, pollution would get worse, and energy conservation would not take place. Their final but significant conclusion was this:

Perhaps the most significant effect is that the average travel speed in the region during rush hours will drop to 17 miles an hour within three years and the average for buses to eight miles an hour. This drop, caused by congestion, will cost commuting drivers about $120 a year more in gasoline, which is more than it would cost to carry out needed improvements to the transportation system.

We have heard a few times from the government about the energy saving and cost saving measures it wants the people to take—although the government does not want to take them—but it will not carry out promises it has made to the people, which could be more than offset by the cost of the waste if nothing is done.

Local groups are also considering expanding their cross-harbour ferry, which is due to start again early this year. They are going to start commuter trains from Port Coquitlam to downtown Vancouver with stops along the way, and the track for this route already exists. It is quite interesting that 20 to 25 years ago there was a cross-harbour ferry system. In fact at one time there were two of them. Now the in-thing is cross-harbour ferry service, and that will start again in about a month.

Until 1954 one could take a fast electric tram along the grade from New Westminster to Vancouver. Fortunately the grade is still there, and that is what the GVRD is planning to put back to work.

It is not as if there is no evidence that the federal government wanted to get involved in this. I refer hon. members to a book I found in the library. It appears that it has been languishing there for about three and one-half years without ever having been taken out. It is a book of background papers prepared for the Conference on Western Economic Opportunities in Calgary, 1973. To show what concern the federal government once thought it had I would like to read the following paragraphs:

The very nature of a constantly evolving economic and social structure in the West calls for continuous and dynamic means of coping with an ever-changing set of problems and circumstances. Equally, this approach calls for the use of all available tools and policy instruments, both federal and provincial, in a co-ordinated way, together with complementary action by carriers, shippers and consumers.

The federal government supports and encourages the creation of appropriate mechanisms designed to deal with the transportation problems of Western Canada in this way.

A strong statement on federal policy such as that cannot have been brought about accidentally, and since it has never been acted upon one can only come to the conclusion which several hon. members on this side have, and that is that the government is not acting in good faith.

I would like to go over a few other local activities which will further indicate that there has been great activity on the local scene in co-operation with the provincial government. It decided that there had been enough debate about rapid transit and that something should be done. The provincial government noted that cities like Edmonton had gone ahead with nuts-and-bolts planning, and it lamented that it might be left behind by other cities if it did not get going. So the New Democratic government decided it would have meetings and get things moving. Of course, the NDP did not remain in power long enough to get things completed. However, things are still moving, and the city has sponsored a computer car pool. I do not mean a commuter car pool; I mean a car pool for commuters which is run by a computer.

I note also that Calgary is considering smaller taxis in an effort to encourage faster movement around the city.

Hon. members opposite are always asking what we on this side would do. We have heard much about the promises they made in 1974, and I would like to read a few of the items which were part of the Conservative Party's policy in 1974. Of course they have not been implemented. Here are a few of them:

The federal government must assume a definite leadership role in providing assistance to the provinces and municipalities if viable alternatives are to be encouraged and, in fact, realized.

A Progressive Conservative government will make available experts in the field of rapid transit to work with provincial and municipal authorities . . .

A Progressive Conservative government will encourage a standardization of rolling stock so that cost savings can be made through volume purchasing . . .

A Progressive Conservative government will initiate a study of existing rail lines with a view to making these lines available . . . improved commuter transit.

. . . a Progressive Conservative government would immediately initiate meetings between the federal government, the provincial governments and the municipalities to determine equitable financing methods . . .

A Progressive Conservative government will . . . take a firm position in financing a portion of the rapid transit facilities.

All those items indicate, and this party realized, that there must be a large measure of co-operation and consultation with other governments. I think it is clear that the present government has ignored those responsibilities and acted on its own. It has made what might be termed frivolous campaign promises which were not necessarily wanted in certain cases. In any event, they have been withdrawn.

To contrast the remarks I have made about the policy material of my party in the last election I would like to remind the House that three weeks before the election in 1974, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), standing in the plaza of the Toronto-Dominion Centre in Toronto, announced a new day for urban transit in Canada. He said his government understood the importance of moving people in and around cities by mass transit rather than in energy-hungry cars. He promised to provide massive funds for mass transit to help provinces and municipalities upgrade and add to existing bus, streetcar, and subway networks.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): And not just in the big cities, either.

Mr. Clarke: The Prime Minister also promised that Canadian industry would be encouraged and financed to develop experimental equipment. Just last month Vancouver took delivery of its first foreign made articulated streetcar. What is happening is that Ottawa is reworking existing programs without adding any more money, cancelling other programs, and bringing about a combination which is certain to increase the impatience and bitterness of transit officials who in 1974 thought that financial help was on the way.

According to recommendations which have been made to the cabinet, the new federal policy will be based on two existing programs and one new program to start this year, and not all of them are wanted. The railway grade crossing fund, which is the relocation fund for moving railway tracks out of downtown areas, and a program to aid commuter rail services, were announced in 1975, but now they are designed to start this year.

I support my hon. friend's motion. Nobody is asking the federal government to step in and do these things. We are asking the federal government to consult with the junior governments and help them because the federal government has the advantage of knowing what is going on across this great nation. Urban transit is the next vehicle—no pun intended—to bring the cities to the state where they can be useful to this country.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to say a few words on the topic this afternoon related to urban planning, transportation, transportation development, and energy conservation.

I must say that I am surprised that the opposition would put forward a motion critical of the government related to energy conservation because as I listened to their various speeches a week or so ago on an opposition day, they did not seem able to outline a very concrete program of energy alternatives to the policy which has been developed by the government during the past year or so, and which is embodied in the "Energy Strategy for Canada" document published last April by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie).

That policy lays out specific objectives for the government for the next ten years. It sets out targets that the government would like to reach related to energy conservation, to exploration in the frontier areas, and to increased resource information being made public by the resource companies. It talks about the need for energy fuel substitution as we gradually use up the oil and gas reserves, how we will move toward the solid fuels of uranium and coal, and the substitution for oil of hydro electric power where that is possible. It talks about the new delivery systems of research, the pipelines which are being developed across the country, and the pipelines which are being contemplated in the Arctic. It talks as well about the emergency preparedness agreement which we have with 18 or 19 other nations around the world which have developed a plan for emergency preparedness.

Today the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is in Washington where one of the emergency preparedness features which has been discussed by our two governments is the development of emergency supply storage system in the Wabana iron mine industry in Newfoundland, and negotiations are continuing between the two countries on the feasibility of that storage system.

The two most important aspects of the energy preparedness feature of the national energy strategy relate to the scheme of sharing, should there be embargos in the future. The other aspect is co-operation in the field of research, and of course research is an integral part of the national energy strategy, research into the various aspects of energy supply, whether it be in the field of enhanced recovery of oil and gas or in the field of nuclear research. But perhaps the most important aspect is conservation research and research into renewable resources.

I was pleased with the announcement a few weeks ago by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources outlining his plans for an increased research and development budget for energy from renewable resources. It has been increased by some $10 million, and the largest portion of this will be spent on renewable resources, such as solar energy, tidal power, wind, biomass and so on.

The second most important aspect is conservation research. I think the government is clearly moving in the right direction on those aspects. The ninth item in the National Energy Strategy is greater Canadian content. Examples of this relate to our uranium policy among others.

I think it is interesting that the Official Opposition would raise the question of energy conservation when they have been seen to have such a vague policy relating to energy matters in general. The basic target for the conservation policy of the government is, during the next nine or ten years, to move our increased use of energy from 5.5 per cent a year, which is the historical average, down to 3.5 per cent, and indeed some estimates go even lower than that. If we look at the historical increase of our population by about 2 per cent, we get down to an annual increase per capita of slightly over 1 per cent.

A year ago I had the opportunity to attend a conference here in Ottawa related to energy conservation in industry. I think that this was one of the very impressive conferences because the office of energy conservation worked with Canadian industry, divided it into sectors, such as the chemical industry, the electrical industry, the heavy equipment industry, and so on, and each one of these sectors has developed a plan for energy conservation. Of course they do this out of good citizenship and, even more important, they do it because it will save them money.

It was interesting that the conference suggested that the chemical industry could save significant amounts of petrochemicals simply by reducing the use of crude oil in their operations by installing new equipment and changing the attitude of their employees toward the use of energy. In fact I believe it was stated that around 11 million barrels of crude oil a year could be saved through the adoption of these conservation methods over the target period which, I believe, was three or four years. Most sectors of the economy in Canadian heavy industry indicated that they could save from 5 per cent to 15 per cent of their energy use through the adoption of policies which they were developing.

One of the largest users of crude oil and gasoline is the automobile. The energy strategy document sets out guidelines for a reduction in the use of gasoline by automobiles. If cars now have an average mileage of about 17 miles to a gallon of gasoline, during the next five years this could be increased to about 24 miles to the gallon, and in the next ten years, according to the industry strategy document, to 33 miles to the gallon. At the end of a ten year span we would see the Canadian automobile population grow from eight million cars in 1976 to some 11 million, and still with this massive increase in the number, consumption of gasoline would be reduced by about 20 per cent. This represents a very significant saving in energy.

If we look at the plans outlined by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources recently, as they relate to Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia, the insulation of buildings, and conservation of energy in industry, these will be a model for the entire country. If we are to conserve energy in the future we have to adopt a policy similar to the model for Prince Edward Island to meet their very high electrical energy costs, and we must see it carried to the rest of the country.

Some 1 per cent of all energy in Canada is used by the federal government, and the government's policies have resulted in a saving of 10 per cent through programs being carried on in departments by lowering the thermostat settings, and by an investigation into the use of energy in buildings of the Department of Public Works where they have a system of monitoring the use of energy and the ventilation and heating systems. I understand this program will be available to private sources.

Perhaps the Department of National Defence has had the greatest success in saving energy. During this year I believe it has reduced consumption by 10 per cent through limiting the speed of vehicles and various other forms of energy used in the military.

These are some of the active ways in which we are going to save energy in this country, whether it be by an industry, in the community, or in transportation. Surely we should be moving toward a system of more electrified commuter type facilities. We know that in the long haul we will have less and less oil and gas available, and we know that the price will continue to rise.

When the Syncrude project was before the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works it was forecast that the price of crude oil would rise ultimately to $35 barrel from the $7 or $8 per barrel it was then. It is now $9.75 per barrel.

The move toward more electrification of our trains and commuter systems is not only desirable but, in the long run, will be a necessity. I feel the government has launched the proper strategy for conservation of energy in the short term by increasing exploration and development of new sources of oil and gas and ultimately moving toward interfield substitution from dependence on oil, particularly imported oil, to coal, and ultimately nuclear and renewable resources. At the same time our expanded program of research and development into renewable resources should be carried out to ensure we meet our long term needs for energy.

Urban Transport

The basic premise on which any solid responsible energy strategy rests must be a good conservation program which sets realistic targets for reduction of consumption, especially of non-renewable resources such as crude oil.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, several features of the motion put down by my colleague, the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway), in essence describe the problems that exist within the region of metropolitan Edmonton. If hon. members will permit me to be a little more parochial on this occasion, I should like to take them through the progress, the planning, and implementation of its plans for a modern light rapid transit system that has been in the works and in actual implementation since 1973. It was many years in the planning before that. I can only commend the civic authorities for their foresight in going out and utilizing the facilities that exist, such as the rights of way, and the foresight in planning where the transit system would go, the suburbs it would serve, and the foresight in getting it started when costs were low compared to what they are today.

It may take ten years before it could be called a good nucleus of an urban transit system, and it will cost a pretty penny. But a good portion of it will be at much lower cost so that, if we take the average, Edmonton will be further ahead than other communities.

The government decision which we are discussing during this debate affects the metropolitan Toronto region particularly, and extends into the Niagara peninsula. There is some effect in Vancouver in the lower mainland, to a lesser degree than in Edmonton, but in essence outside of Toronto and Montreal, Edmonton is the only city that has engaged in the construction of a subterranean transit system at least in part.

The promises the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made just three weeks prior to the election in 1974 have not been kept. This is the type of repudiation of a promise that has its roots in "Thou shalt not have wage and price controls." The only distinction between that repudiation and this one is that it took 18 months to come into effect, while this one was some 30 months in gestation. Presumably the Liberal body politic found it too indigestible and has completely regurgitated it. I am going to ask all members from metro Toronto area to stand up and be counted on this particular point.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Their election was due to such a promise. It was due as a result of that type of promise. It was due also to the promise not to impose wage and price controls. In metropolitan Toronto that was a great issue. So the whole of the government's election campaign was nothing but deception.

● (1620)

Now let us look at what is proposed in Edmonton. I have in my possession a letter which the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) sent me. I have also seen letters he sent to the late William Hawrelak, then mayor of Edmonton. I suppose the mayor was more intimately involved than anyone in the implementation of plans conceived previously. The business was under his direction, and I pay tribute where it is called for. He confronted city council, which was dragging its feet, shook it by the collective scruff of its neck, and got a decision to go ahead. He was instrumental in having some by-laws passed which would give authorization for the borrowing of funds. In other words, he showed good civic corporate leadership, and I do not intend to detract in any way from the leadership shown in planning and execution. That was a good, sound decision.

Mr. Paproski: Made in conjunction with and the assistance of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche), and the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski).

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): In Edmonton, in essence, we are using the old main line of the Canadian National Railways. The line runs through the centre of Edmonton. I remember it in the steam days, and remember how the freight trains and passenger trains were made up. We have an old style station with sloping eaves, and all of this sort of thing. There is a terrific amount of land available. The right-of-way runs through the northeast part of the city, to the centre; then it goes in a westerly direction and makes its way out in a northwest and west direction. It uses a great deal of valuable land. Now you see some local shunting operations carried on for downtown warehouses, and possibly three or four passenger trains running each way. All the maintenance facilities having been removed, it is no longer a main line. It merely serves a downtown passenger station, and it is convenient for the exchange of freight cars, the Canadian Pacific Railway coming in from the south.

The Canadian National has a great investment in land in the city of Edmonton. From our standpoint this land must be put to good use. The existing right of way, or part of it, is made to order for a rapid transit system which could serve the main suburbs. Existing facilities somewhere in the outer regions of the system could also be used as garages for cars. The system could funnel people into the city, to facilities underground, say, from where they could disperse to their offices, stores or what have you, in other parts of the centre of the city.

In addition, good planning has led to the placing of the new colosseum for the Commonwealth Games, a colosseum which will seat 50,000, alongside the rapid transit system. The system would also serve the new hockey colosseum, and there is no better one in the country.

Mr. Paproski: Right.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It will seat some 17,000 people, and it is right alongside the system.

Mr. McKinnon: Perhaps next year they will get a team.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It is right next to the right of way of this transit system.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

In September, 1974, the mayor of Edmonton wrote to the Minister of Transport reminding him of the Prime Minister's promise in the election campaign to assist municipalities with the construction and expansion of urban transit systems. Well, the euphoria generated by the election was so great that it took that unorganized minister eight months to reply, despite some inquiries as to why no information was forthcoming. Ultimately, in July, 1975, we heard a statement of policy saying that so many millions of dollars were to be dedicated to assist with the purchase of equipment ordered after April 1, 1977.

Mr. Paproski: We were sucked in again.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The mayor of Edmonton pointed out in his letter of September that in order to obtain firm prices, firm commitments for the delivery of rolling stock, the orders had to be given by May, 1974. We then got the most extraordinary semantic performance from the Minister of Transport who, in a letter he wrote to me on October 10, 1975, said in part:

> Unfortunately, perhaps, programs must have effect from some point in time. The Edmonton rapid transit system was committed before the June 1974 statement on urban transportation . . .

In other words, since the city of Edmonton had said that it was going ahead with the development of its rapid transit system, its decision had predated the election promise. The letter went on to say:

> . . . equipment orders were placed before the announcement of the capital assistance program in July 1975. The intent of the program is not merely to provide supplementary funding for decisions that have been reached in the past, but rather to provide selective assistance aimed at solving specific urban problems.

That's poppycock, sheer semantics. What would have been the position of the Minister of Transport if Edmonton had been located in central Canada or in the province of Quebec?

[Translation]

. . . in Quebec there would not have been such selective dates. We had them because it was Edmonton. We chose the dates to remove and set it aside especially for the first stage of the program.

[English]

I continue quoting:

> The federal government would expect to participate in the examination of such problems and development of solutions.

That is a lot of poppycock, too. I continue:

> The Edmonton system, therefore, has reached a stage of maturity which places it in a time frame inconsistent with the objectives of this program.

In October, 1975, they had barely started to turn the earth in the very first phase. There are five or six phases to be considered. This is a mature system. Therefore the minister's words are nothing but semantics.

Mr. Paproski: He is playing games.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I continue quoting:

> Nevertheless, following my meeting with Mayor Hawrelak on October 1, I have asked departmental officials to re-evaluate the proposal made by Edmonton.

It should be remembered that in July, 1975, the capital assistance program was limited to a commuter system which was in a community. Was it thought that because metropolitan Toronto has within it a number of communities the area would be able to qualify? Are those the kinds of semantics which must be used to determine qualification, or does Edmonton not qualify because, being made up of one large municipality, there is no inter-community communication?

● (1630)

The latest statistic I have is an indication as to why the earlier decisions had to be taken. I quote from a letter of May, 1975, from Mayor Hawrelak to the Hon. J. Marchand, then minister of transport:

On May 14, 1975, we came to a critical date. Of those received, our evaluation showed that the bid of Siemens Canada Ltd. in conjunction with the DUWAG firm of Dusseldorf, West Germany, was the most acceptable.

Incidentally, the first car is now on board ship coming to Canada.

The bid included a firm price but was due to expire at midnight Edmonton time on May 14. In addition, our slot in the production schedule—

Of course a production schedule means nothing to government officials. They could not care less.

—would be delayed at least six months thereby severely jeopardizing the full operation of the line in time for the 1978 Commonwealth Games.

The Duwag-Siemens proposal was accepted because it offered a fixed price—

That is something any government should be glad to have.

—(not subject to an escalation clause), a thoroughly proven car and components, and adaptability for future suburban or street-running operations. In addition there is the involvement of Siemens Canada Ltd. regional office in Edmonton, the inclusion of local manufacturing/industrial content and the prospects for future development of this industry in Edmonton appear promising.

At present Siemens Canada Ltd. indicates that 35 per cent to 40 per cent of the electrical content for the cars would be Canadian with probably 80 per cent of this done in Alberta (the "electrical content" is approximately 45 per cent of the whole car). In addition approximately 25 per cent of the body and mechanical work can be done in Edmonton, resulting in a total Canadian content of 25 per cent.

That is something. We have never manufactured this type of car in the past.

I have received from the office of intergovernmental affairs in the city of Edmonton a present rundown on this project. The line is to run from Jasper Avenue in the centre of Edmonton to 129th Avenue in the northeast, with stations equipped with elevators for the handicapped. The estimated cost was $65 million. Recently city council approved an extension to the Clareview area, extending the line approximately one and a half miles at a further cost of $6,760,000, giving a total estimated cost of construction of $71,817,000. The line is scheduled to open in early 1978 in time for the Commonwealth Games.

Here is something the Minister of Transport, who is now in the Chamber, would like to hear. Of this total cost of $71 million, the province is contributing $45 million over a period of six years. The city expects to charge back to the developers in the Clareview area $1.6 million of the cost of the extension, leaving the city to float debentures for $25,200,000.

The city was required to pass a debenture borrowing bylaw before it could float the debentures. The bylaw states that the actual amount borrowed will be reduced by the amount of any assistance that may be provided by the federal government. It was also necessary to pass the bylaw before construction could take place.

If the question is that if it has to be urban or inter-commuter, the next phase, which is the northwest phase, can be extended to St. Albert. Only two miles separate the two cities, but it is an inter-urban commuter.

In terminating my remarks I would like to say that the city was led to believe there was still hope as a second part of this plan was coming, but in fact it is left holding the bag for $25 million.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker the opposition today has talked about their desire to see very extensive federal government spending. This should really be noted because they have a tendency to criticise the level of government spending. However, constantly, program by program, they ask for more of it.

That inconsistency is never brought home to them because they do not have the sense of responsibility that comes when they have to make decisions on one side or the other, instead of coming down on both sides as they do so happily. I think of how happily they come down on both sides when they have a group which says that the tolls on the St. Lawrence Seaway must be higher in order to be beneficial to their part of the country. We hear that from the Atlantic Conservatives; but western Conservatives say that the tolls should not be increased at all in order to benefit their part of the country. Unfortunately, both of those Conservatives go back to their part of the country and preach about negativism against democracy, saying the country is being unfair to them for not doing the particular thing they are prescribing even though they are prescribing both things at once.

In this particular issue we again have the Conservatives on both sides. They frequently talk about federal and provincial jurisdictions and the desire and flexibility on their part to see more jurisdiction go to the provinces. That is their most frequently held position, but they come down on both sides as well, depending on what part of the country they are in and their audience. They state that provincial jurisdiction should be theirs to operate. Indeed, they ask for more decentralization.

Here we have an area where there is clear provincial jurisdiction. It is admitted on all sides. It is an obvious responsibility of the municipality and the province to deal with a lot of the traffic inside the province, highway traffic, roads and traffic inside cities. However, the Conservative Party is insisting on additional federal spending in this area.

Why does federal spending occur from time to time in provincial areas? The main reason is because there is a lack of adequate attention, in the view of federal politicians gathered together, in the provinces to a particular priority problem. That was the reason for assistance for medicare, hospitalization and higher education assistance. It is an attempt to make sure that adequate attention is given to a particular problem. That is precisely the reason why the federal government has got into this area in the way of offering some financial assistance.

It was because of the tendency on the part of the provinces over and over again to prefer roads, highways and automobiles as against urban and public transit. It was because of the years of over-attention on the part of provincial governments within their provincial areas of spending, that it seemed right to us to offer some additional financing for public transit. It was not because it was our primary responsibility, but because of this need for additional spending in that area. That additional spending could clearly have been accomplished by the provinces by their own taxation for their own spending purposes, but this was designed to be a particular encouragement of it.

In the 1974 election campaign we did propose we would enter into this field in order to try and right the balance. We have entered it. We have put forward a $100 million program in relation to commuter assistance. We are in the field in other ways which deal with transportation within cities with large sums of money constantly being spent on rail grade separations, studies for rail relocation and ensuing rail relocation. We are in the field in terms of the research which is being done under the auspices of the transportation research agency to ensure the development of better ways of providing urban transportation.

The fundamentals then were that we had here a provincial responsibility, a view on our part that more should be done, and therefore an offer of additional assistance which we have carried out in a concrete way in terms of the commuter program, but which we then re-examined in the light of the need for fiscal restraint. When we announced the commuter program in 1975 we said it was all we thought we could do at that point in time, bearing in mind our financial responsibility. We said we would review the matter further. We have been re-examining it. We have not reached a final decision that this is all we will do, although we will be very conscious of the fiscal restraint program and the prime responsibility of the provinces as we re-examine this question.

We have said to the provinces, as well—and this I would say particularly to the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert)—that we would be quite prepared to try to move toward a more flexible program which takes in a variety of forms of assistance which we give in the public and urban transportation fields, and make it easier for provincial priorities in relation to the spending of that money to be met without highly technical qualifications about where the program applies and where it does not. Indeed, the hon. member for Edmonton West was dealing with some technicalities which will not even exist in the commuter program in connection with whether or not a line runs between municipalities. That is not an essential and necessary part of it. It never was. It was thought by some to be, but it never was part of the program. Nonetheless, that is really not the point.

[Mr. Lang.]

We do not believe that that kind of technicality is present, but even if that technicality is not present let me assure the hon. member for Edmonton West that if we produce regulations for a $100 million commuter program there will be some highly technical distinctions drawn as to what qualifies and what does not. My aim and purpose really are to try to make that arrangement more flexible so that the assistance is available for priorities within an area, within a province, rather than on the basis of a highly technical definition of terms.

The point is, we have been active. We have made money available, and it is only a question of fiscal restraint that leads us to examine much more carefully what should be done next. Above all, it should be noted clearly that there is a basic provincial responsibility in this field, and when the opposition put down a motion that talks about taking into consideration urban development, taking into consideration energy conservation, and points at wrong decisions in the area of public transportation and transportation by road, by automobile and otherwise, they are pointing their fingers principally, by any book they like, at the provinces and only aiming at the federal government for one reason.

It is in order to try to help the development of the right kind of balance between the automobile and other transportation we have decided we should make some assistance available. Remember, it is the provinces which build the roads to attract more automobiles and which constantly go on subsidizing the automobile thereby encouraging more people to go by car. Many will go by car even at full cost, and that is a choice which I think we will always want to leave to people as long as the costs are fully reflected to them. But it is when provincial action and taxation are such that they lead to a benefit in favour of those who go the most energy-consuming way, who choose to go the way which takes out so much more of our agricultural land, that action is needed. I am told that some 40 per cent of the land in many cities in this country is devoted to transportation. There are facts which have been put before the House before. If you go by public transit you are talking about 12 to 20 acres per 100,000 urban passengers compared to 700 acres of land for the same number of travellers by automobile.

This having been said, it is clear there is this marked balance in favour of urban transportation and the removal of some of the bias which has been built into the system. There are enough reasons for which people will choose the automobile without having a significant system of subsidy for them.

Hon. members, particularly in the opposition, should realize that there is a distinction between federal and provincial responsibilities and that these are matters basically within provincial jurisdiction. It was only because of our wish to put right priorities which were going wrong that we offered assistance in 1974. It then became clear, on the basis of the need for fiscal restraint which we faced, and the fact that taxation by us, or deficits by the federal government, have a much more serious impact on inflation than do taxation or deficits at the provincial level, that our program had to be re-examined. As I say, we are re-examining it without having said the final word in the chapter. I am not predicting exactly what that word will be.

We made an offer to the provinces and had discussions with them for many months about introducing new flexibility, in other words, the possibility of there being a greater provincial input, recognizing that in any formula we would be talking about a finite sum of money available to the provinces and more choice within the province as to the use of it. At the present time we are asking ourselves how many dollars we can ask from the treasury, to what extent we can impose upon the treasury and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) in terms either of an increased deficit or increased taxation, either of which might have serious consequences upon the economy.

It should be clear that our promise in 1974 was evidence of our firm belief that more public transportation, urban transportation, is desirable. It was because of the lack of proper attention to the balance between public and private transportation on the part of the provinces that federal intervention was justified. That is still our opinion. But because of the serious fiscal and financial argument, we have refrained from carrying out what we thought we might be able to do in the course of 1974. We know we shall not be able to spend the amount of money originally contemplated.

Again today we have been hearing an opposition which normally argues against federal spending, urging that there be federal spending. The opposition argues that though this is within provincial jurisdiction, a federal priority should be put in place. Though they oppose federal spending at other times, they urge federal spending in an area of provincial jurisdiction. It is clear that while agreeing with us on the major thrust of the policy of promoting urban transit they are ready to throw away every other ground upon which they stand in order to make a political point.

● (1650)

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway) and others who have taken part in this debate on this extremely important motion. I think the success of this day and the sensitivity of the government is measured by the fact that, at the tail end of the debate, we drew in the big fish, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), to defend the indefensible. Then as soon as his speech is made he walks out of the House.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He came in to speak, then he left.

Mr. Dick: He fled the Chamber.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Yes, he fled the Chamber, either because he cannot stand the heat or because he had to take his jet plane out west to a party function.

In any event, his intervention in this debate, the look on the face of the parliamentary secretary, the discomfort felt by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Philbrook), the evident discomfort of the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Watson) and of other members who spoke in the debate yesterday, and the discomfiture of the government today—all of this is an indication of how hon. members opposite feel. The position taken by the government is indefensible. Whichever way you put it, Mr. Speaker, in the blush of an election in 1974 they made a promise which, in the light of 1976, they decided not to keep. That is the nub of this debate.

I have always been told, Mr. Speaker, to speak kindly of the dead, so I shall do my best to temper my remarks about this government. But what I have said is the fact and hon. members opposite know it.

Hon. members have told us what this $290 million would mean to Edmonton had it been spent. We have been told what it would have meant to Vancouver, to Winnipeg, and Toronto. Today I spoke to transportation officials of the regional municipality of Ottawa-Carleton, and the commissioner told me, to use his words, that this breach of faith is an unmitigated disaster for this area. It is a fact that transportation is just as essential now in this urban area, and in some urban areas not as large as the one I have named, as sewers, water, and a whole host of other services essential to the quality of life in our cities.

I sympathize with the hon. member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Douglas). Attention should, of course, be paid to rural problems, but this has been denied by the government too. If that had not been the case there would have been some action taken regarding import quotas on beef. We would not have had the nonsense about milk quotas and the difficulties we have had with the dairy farmers in the province of Quebec. We would have had reasonable action taken in regard to cheese imports into Canada.

Urban transportation is not as important to rural areas as the matters upon which there has been no action taken, but the things I have mentioned, which have also been neglected by the government, are important to people in rural areas. In fact the hallmark of this government, whether in terms of transportation, the quality of life, agriculture, the working man or the public servant, has been to promise everything and to deliver damn little. That is why the government has lost credibility and it is why it had to bring in the big fish from Saskatchewan, the Minister of Transport, to answer the hon. member for Selkirk.

The transportation commissioner told me something else. He said there is not very much in this program for Ottawa-Carleton but that there was an opportunity to develop new technology; that if the promise made in 1974 was implemented in other cities it held the prospect for development of new technology, technology that these areas could not afford but from which people living in the cities would benefit.

Some people call this misfortune in life. The problems of people living in our cities could have been remedied by this new technology. Those problems are now condemned to remain unsolved.

The gist of this motion is that the government pledged a solution to our urban transit problems. This promise did not come out of the mouth of a backbencher but out of the mouth of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). The cities of Canada relied upon it. The people of Canada relied upon it. Then at the last moment the government pulled the rug out from under the reasonable expectations of these people.

Hon. members opposite can heckle, they can yell, they can blush, they can do what they want. They can try to defend the indefensible. But that, Mr. Speaker, is what has happened. I wonder what else is going to happen in terms of the mandate of the government. What about the other promises that were made? Are they as empty as this one? They seem to be. Your Honour will recall that during the last election campaign the government promised to wrestle inflation to the ground. You remember the "crown prince" of the Liberal party, that pretender to the throne, standing up here in his Brooks Brothers suit, glinting his blue eyes, and saying "We are going to wrestle inflation to the ground". Then faced with the problem, what did he do? He left this Chamber, went down to Bay Street, and sniped at his colleagues from the Primrose Club in Toronto. That is loyalty!

We in Canada were promised that we would never have wage and price controls. I see I still have one minute, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Five o'clock.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I remember the Prime Minister standing with a Canadian flag in the background and asking, "Do you want your wages frozen?" The Canadian people said no—and they got their wages frozen. So we have a wasted mandate. To show this is so is the purpose of the motion today.

Mr. Watson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I should like to register a complaint with Your Honour for your consideration. It concerns the choice of speakers from the government side today. I represent the largest metropolitan area of Canada. We have heard from the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Kaplan), who is the chief stumbling block to more funds for urban transit.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Watson: We have heard from two rural Ontario members.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. Watson: We have not heard from a member from the Montreal region. I happen to support the thrust of the motion that the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway) has advanced.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The Chair recognized the members who rose to seek the floor. I do not recall seeing the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Watson) seek the floor during the debate.

PROPOSAL TO SEND AID TO RUMANIA FOLLOWING EARTHQUAKE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald), on the basis of urgent and pressing necessity, under the provisions of Standing Order 43:

That the House of Commons supports an initiative of the government to provide aid to Rumania in its hour of need and in particular to airlift foodstuffs including milk powder to that stricken country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The presentation of such a motion for debate pursuant to Standing Order 43 can only be done with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

PROPOSAL TO SEND AID TO VICTIMS OF EARTHQUAKE IN RUMANIA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a similar motion to the last. Perhaps it will get a better reception. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme):

That this House express its deepest sympathy for the people of Rumania who have suffered from a catastrophic earthquake and request the Canadian government to join with other countries in extending relief to the victims.

I propose that it not be debated at this time.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 can be made only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

SMALL BUSINESSES

SUGGESTED INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION WHICH WOULD PROVIDE INCENTIVES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I rise to propose a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, part of which stems from my just completed visit to Tokyo where I had the opportunity to attend an extensive series of meetings with government officials, including members from both Houses of the Japanese Diet, and in particular the general director of the Japanese Small and Medium Enterprises Agency.

● (1410)

In view of the fact that the Japanese small business community is the leader among industrialized nations, primarily because of the aggressiveness of its government and its policies, while Canada's small firms sector continues to encounter a multitude of difficulties resulting in a record number of bankruptcies, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski):

That the Minister of State responsible for small business be instructed to introduce a small business act which would include the reduction of the existing bureaucratic activity and substitute further incentives to small business.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 can be done only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No!

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

SUGGESTED COMPILATION OF FEDERAL FUNDS COLLECTED AND SPENT IN QUEBEC—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the effervescence resulting from the new political situation created on November 15 last, and the necessity to make known all the possible consequences which might stem from setting up an independent state in Quebec, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That the federal government draw up a clear list of all the revenues it levies now within the borders of the province of Quebec, as well as all the expenses it incurs within the same borders.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The presentation of this motion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

PROPOSED COMMITTEE STUDY OF DISPUTE BETWEEN CAST SHIPPING AND MARITIME EMPLOYERS ASSOCIATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Whereas the apparent conflict between the Cast shipping group, the largest volume ocean carrier at the port of Montreal, and that port's Maritime Employers Association, is having profound repercussions upon the port of Montreal and other east coast ports, especially Halifax, to which Cast has indicated it may move, and in order to clear up the confusion, and uncertainty, and lessen the disruptive impact which this conflict is having upon the shipping community, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave):

That the subject of the Cast-MEA dispute at the Port of Montreal be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications and that officials of Cast and the MEAs be called as witnesses by the committee in order to alleviate the crisis at the port of Montreal and reduce the uncertainty which exists in other Atlantic Canada ports.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion can be made only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF YOUTH DELEGATION FROM THE UKRAINE

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before beginning the oral question period I know all hon. members would wish to join with me in recognizing the presence in our gallery of an important and distinguished delegation from, primarily, the Ukraine. It is a youth delegation led by a number of members of the soviet of the city of Kiev and, particularly, by one member of the Supreme Soviet of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Mr. Mikhail Kutsbeer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

VIEW OF LABOUR CONGRESS OF PROPOSED MULTIPARTITE FORUM TO DISCUSS ECONOMIC QUESTIONS

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Labour might I put a question to the Prime Minister? Can the Prime Minister advise us whether the Canadian Labour Congress has in fact agreed to return its representatives to the Canada Labour Relations Council and the Economic Council, and whether the CLC has agreed to the labour minister's so-called multipartite national forum?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): On the first point, I am not aware of anything which has been said by the CLC. On the second point, I would remind the hon. members that the CLC itself asked for a tripartite set-up. They asked for this some time last summer in several meetings with myself and members of the cabinet. We have agreed to proceed along these lines if we can put a project together. So there is an arrangement in theory between us to have a tripartite, and perhaps eventually multipartite, group meet, but at this stage I think it is premature to say that the details have been fixed.

POSSIBILITY OF PROVINCES AGREEING TO MULTIPARTITE FORUM TO DISCUSS ECONOMIC QUESTIONS

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the right hon. Prime Minister tell the House whether, at the recent meeting between the government and the provincial labour ministers, the government was able to obtain provincial agreement to the concept put forward by the Minister of Labour of a multipartite national forum; and has the government obtained any commitments from the provinces to meet jointly with the federal government and the CLC?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did not actually speak of a tripartite national forum. I indicated that there was an effort under way to have a meeting between representatives of the business community, representatives of the unions and of the federal government. This has been discusssed with both labour and management. The details have not been arrived at, and for that reason I think it is a bit premature to talk about any precise multilateral forum yet.

POSSIBLE ABANDONMENT OF MULTIPARTITE FORUM IN FAVOUR OF TRIPARTITE FORUM TO DISCUSS ECONOMIC QUESTIONS

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the right hon. gentleman whether, in view of the fact that the Minister of Labour definitely stated in October that the policy of the government was the establishment of a multipartite national forum, the government has now abandoned that position and is prepared to settle for what the CLC has always insisted upon, and that is a tripartite forum, or consultative or discussion group, based on representatives from government, industry and labour?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the short answer is no, we have not abandoned that, but we are now considering the necessity perhaps of having, as a preliminary step, meetings together with business and labour. It is my understanding that business and labour have been meeting, and perhaps will meet again, together. We have now suggested that at one such meeting the federal government be present to discuss, among other things, the larger multipartite forum.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

PLANS FOR ENDING WAGE AND PRICE CONTROL—ATTITUDE OF EMPLOYERS TO TRIPARTITE FORUM FOR DISCUSSION

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): In the absence of the Minister of Labour may I address my question to the Prime Minister. As the Minister of Labour has been rebuffed in his first overture to Mr. Morris because he was unable to meet their idea for decontrol, is the government now ready with proposals for the CLC with a definite date for ending wage and price controls, especially the knotty problem of wage decontrol within the public and private sector?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure to what particular rebuff the hon. member's question relates.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: There are so many of them.

Mr. Trudeau: Exactly. I do know that the last meeting we had with the CLC, which was toward the end of January, it was stated publicly by Mr. Morris at the end of the meeting that it was agreed we had made progress in discussing plans for decontrol and the post-control period.

Mr. Ritchie: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the Prime Minister has a recent meeting with business leaders, did he broach the idea of a tripartite discussion with them, and were those leaders receptive to the idea when he met with them?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am not empowered to speak for them, of course, but so far as I can assess their attitude and the government is prepared to act, it was that they were receptive both to tripartite and eventually to the possibility of a multipartite meeting.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

ALLEGED USE OF QUOTA SYSTEM TO DISENTITLE SOME CLAIMANTS TO BENEFITS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Considering that we now have the highest number of unemployed in Canadian history, would the minister inform the House why he has permitted officials within his department to operate a quota system, the purpose of which is to disentitle claimants to unemployment insurance benefits to which they ought to be entitled? The target being described by one of his senior officials in the province of Ontario is "in the ballpark neighbourhood of 40 per cent."

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would say there is no quota system as such. What has happened—

Mr. Broadbent: As such?

Mr. Cullen: Do you wish me to finish or would you like to do your "sup" first?

Mr. Speaker, what we have under the benefit control system is cross-indexing so that when a study or testing is done there is some indication in the cards that there is some discrepancy or problem so the percentages appear higher than they should. I am sorry about that because the large majority of people drawing unemployment insurance are not cheaters. The interviewers know this and those who do not know it are instructed that is the case. The higher percentages come about as a result of the cross-indexing system and in that category they are higher than they would be for the over-all average of all claimants.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I take it from the minister's answer that he does not deny the existence of some kind of quota system, whether or not he adds the words "as such". I should like him to clarify what he has just said to the House. Is there an informal or formal system at this point, with unemployment at least at the 900,000 level according to official figures? Do his officials have instructions to get out and disentitle up to 40 per cent of claimants for benefits under unemployment insurance legislation?

Mr. Cullen: No, Mr. Speaker. My people in the department are instructed to get out and disentitle those who are not entitled to benefits under the program. The hon. member asked what I meant by "quota as such". It turned out that those figures roughly paralleled that percentage but there was not a quota. That is what I meant.

Oral Questions

POSSIBLE AUTOMATIC DISENTITLEMENT OF ENGLISH OR FRENCH-SPEAKING CLAIMANT NOT ACCOMPANIED BY INTERPRETER

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, a final supplementary. This seems to be flatly denied by one of the minister's officials who implied it was an informal quota system. Be that as it may, I should like to ask the minister to confirm the report that a memo has been circulated in the Montreal area within his department which instructs officials when interviewing an English-speaking person who applies in the Montreal area which is predominantly French-speaking, say, in the regional office, to disentitle that person automatically if he does not have an interpreter or visa-versa, in areas of the country that are predominantly English-speaking are his officials instructed to disentitle automatically a person who is French-speaking unless that person has an interpreter?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I read the allegations contained in the Olivia Ward story. I noticed that she did not bother to make known the fact that my officials in Belleville were courteous enough to spend three weeks helping her research her story. I think when the regional office reports she has misquoted them throughout the article I would want to check some of the details before commenting further.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF FEDERAL FUNDS COLLECTED AND SPENT IN QUEBEC

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

In view of the difficulties we have in getting the exact figures concerning the amounts collected and spent by the federal government in Quebec, and as all kinds of fanciful figures may be issued in this regard, would the Prime Minister tell the House whether he soon intends to give the public exact information in this regard?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, surely the hon. member knows that this would be extremely difficult to establish, even theoretically, and still more difficult in practice, but I take note of the hon. member's proposition and will consider it.

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question.

Does the Prime Minister mean by his answer that he considers the defence of federalism as something purely theoretical?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Cullen.]

SALE OF CANDU REACTOR TO ARGENTINA—ALLEGED LACK OF CO-OPERATION IN INVESTIGATION OF AGENTS' FEES

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. On Friday evening a CBC radio report stated that Argentine authorities claim they have received no co-operation from Canada in their investigation of agents' fees in the sale of a CANDU reactor, and in particular they have received no reply to two letters sent to the Canadian government, one in December and one in January, seeking assistance. Will the Prime Minister explain this lack of co-operation on the part of his government to these requests from Argentine officials and will he say when the letters were received and when they will be answered?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I was not aware of these requests, but I see the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources here who is willing to volunteer some answers. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, you could recognize the minister.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): If I may, I should like to say to the hon. lady that I am not aware of any problem so far as the Argentinians are concerned. Indeed, I think the Argentinians have been well pleased with the degree of co-operation between Canada and Argentina. As the hon. lady may know, the Argentinians, the Canadians and Italimpianti signed the renegotiated agreement a matter of two weeks ago.

Miss MacDonald: Since the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources did not seem to hear my specific question I would like to ask him what the government has done with regard to the letters, one in December and one in January, which have been directed to the Canadian government seeking assistance and to which, they say, they have received no reply. Would the minister say why there has been no reply and, at the same time, why during the renegotiation of the contract in Argentina this matter of agents' fees was not discussed by the chairman of AECL with the Argentine officials?

Mr. Gillespie: I will be very pleased to check with officials of AECL to determine whether or not they received any letters and what actions they have taken with respect to those letters. In answer to the last part of the question, whether there had been any discussion between the chairman of AECL and officials with respect to agents' fees, yes, there was. Indeed, the chairman on my instructions asked the Argentinians if they could assist him in finding out who the agent was.

Miss MacDonald: In view of the fact that some three months have elapsed since the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said in the House on December 2 that he was as anxious as anyone to get to the bottom of this whole business, will the minister now explain why he is unaware of the fact that two letters have been sent by the Argentine officials to the government of Canada to which there has been no reply?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): It's a big bottom.

SALE BY ARGENTINA TO PERU OF NUCLEAR FACILITIES—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE NO CANADIAN TECHNOLOGY INVOLVED

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources as well because, as he knows, those letters would have to go through the government of Canada and not AECL. According to press reports on the weekend emanating from Buenos Aires and in the New York Times, Argentina apparently is negotiating, or has actually concluded, a sale of nuclear facilities and technology to Peru. Can the minister tell us whether or not he has been assured that either no Canadian technology is included in this sale or, if it is, that there will be no abuse of that technology by any prospective purchaser of it from Argentina?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I have been assured that there is no Canadian technology in the sale so far as is known to officials of AECL with whom I have discussed this question an hour or so ago. I can also assure the hon. member that if there were any Canadian technology in what is a research reactor designed, so far as I know, entirely by the Argentinians from their own expertise, the export of that reactor would then be subject to Canadian safeguards.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, bearing in mind that this is a sale from the Argentinian government and not from AECL and, indeed, may not have anything to do with AECL, I wonder if the minister has caused any inquiries to be made through the Argentinian government as to the facts of the case, bearing in mind that the Indian bomb was developed from a Canadian research reactor.

Mr. Gillespie: I thought I made it very clear a few moments ago that I had talked to senior officials of AECL to try to find out what it was the Argentinians wanted to export to the Peruvians, and I expect to get a detailed answer in a matter of days. Unfortunately, the officials did not have all the facts before them, but to their knowledge there was no Canadian technology involved in the transaction.

PESTICIDES—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON IMPORTATION—SUGGESTED STRICT ADHERENCE TO LABELLING REGULATIONS

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the ruling of the Minister of Agriculture and the cabinet against the Canadian farmer and in favour of multinational pesticide companies with regard to the importation of pesticides, is the Minister of Agriculture going to have Mrs. Plumptre head up the toothless watchdog committee which is supposed to monitor the price of pesticides in Canada?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not agree at all with the hon. member's preamble. He knows full well, as practically everyone in the nation knows, that this Minister of Agriculture's concern is for our total society.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: To make sure I have a healthy agricultural industry, I have to have a healthy pesticide industry to go along with it. Canada is the only country in the world which allows its farmers to do what they are doing. The monitoring system we will be setting up is something we have never had for that industry. I do not think pesticides can be compared with anything our farmers buy in Canada. We are developing a very fair system, and the hon. member knows that. Out of some 300,000 farmers in Canada approximately 2,000 use this system, which has been made available to them through the goodness of the Minister of Agriculture.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whittaker: Mr. Speaker, in view of the absence of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs I would like to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture. Now that the cabinet has capitulated to big business—the multinationals—and used gimmickry to give them embargo protection for imports of pesticides in the guise of safety, a ruling against Canadian farmers, will the minister urge the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and the cabinet to enforce strictly the Labelling Act to see that all produce brought into Canada has bilingual labels no matter what form of package it is in?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, this government has done much to assist our farmers, and our farmers have more programs available to them than farmers across the border in the United States, with whom they have to compete. If the hon. member thinks I have capitulated to the pesticide industry, he should talk to people in that industry to see what they think about it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRANSPORT

ALLEGATIONS AGAINST SHIP INSPECTORS ON EAST COAST—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport, to whom I have given notice.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Anderson: In a newspaper article of January 14, 1976, a Dr. R. Somerville stated in the Comox District Free Press that 66 per cent of the marine accidents on the east coast are caused by mechanical failure. He further stated that in many cases government inspectors—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a question, would he please put it forthwith.

Mr. Anderson: He stated that they are wined and dined, and I wonder if the minister would answer these very serious allegations about practices which take place on the east coast of Canada? Has the minister conducted an investigation, and can he inform the House of the results of that investigation?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there have been some general accusations concerning the conduct of inspection officers, but we have not been able to trace actual reports filed in this connection. I think it is very important that people who have any information let us have it so that we can proceed in an orderly manner. I think it is very unfortunate that accusations are made in this general way and in such a way as to bring discredit upon people who work in the inspection service without giving them a chance to clear themselves or to defend themselves.

THE BUDGET

ANNOUNCEMENT OF DATE OF PRESENTATION

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, in the light of the forecast made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance last week about the date of the budget, I wonder if the minister could now tell me whether a date such as April 18 might be a fair guess as to the date of the budget.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to confirm to the hon. gentleman my intention to make a budgetary statement on the evening of Thursday, March 31.

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON REGULATIONS PRIOR TO SECOND READING OF BILL

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. I understand that the immigration bill is expected to come forward for second reading shortly. In view of the fact that the bill would enable regulations to be made in respect of a large number of important matters, including the imposition upon any person or class of persons—including, I assume, Canadian citizens—of the requirement of obtaining from an immigration official a report or of giving a report before leaving Canada, a provision for which, incidentally, we have criticized the U.S.S.R., and in view of other important matters covered by the regulations, will the minister give to this House a statement as to what is to be contained in the regulations before second reading?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker. I think I answered a question asked by the hon. member for Provencher and said that the thrust and content of the regulations would be introduced at the committee stage and that I would be as forthcoming as I could at that time.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, does the minister not recognize that it is a little irresponsible to ask parliament to approve in principle such sensitive legislation as the immigration legislation when a large part of the real provisions are left in blank, to be filled in by regulations? Do we not have the right to know what is in the legislation before we are asked to approve it in principle?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I think any careful reading of the bill will indicate that it is an excellent bill. It is a good bill both for Canada and for immigrants, and the contents of the regulations in so far as I know them at the time—not the regulations themselves—will be made available at the committee stage.

ALLEGED CHANGE IN BENEFIT CONTROL PROCEDURES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, and it relates to previous questions asked by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby with respect to the change of procedure or regulations set out to benefit control officers. Can the minister indicate when these regulations were substantially changed and what kind of advice or publication was made available with respect to those who were in receipt of, or beneficiaries of, unemployment insurance?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think we have said on more than one occasion in the House that when the major amendments to this bill were passed in 1971, our prime concern was to get the benefits to the people who were thereby entitled. Subsequent to that, having achieved a measure of success in that area, we then moved to the benefit control phase, and I think nothing is different from what we have in fact been doing since the major changes in the act in 1971.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the minister would not want to mislead the House in suggesting there have not been significant changes with respect to benefit control procedures over the last year, inasmuch as reports have now been made with respect to the reduction in the total amount of unemployment insurance paid last year, even though the number of unemployed was actually greater. I wonder if the minister can indicate when these changes were made and what steps were taken to notify people of the change in enforcement procedures with respect to benefit control, which has led to a great deal of personal difficulty and hardship for people, particularly for people in high unemployment areas.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, the only people who are suffering hardship are those who are actually cheating, and benefit control officers are going after individuals who have jobs and who are at the same time drawing unemployment insurance and for other reasons, so on that point if someone is suffering hardship, that cannot be avoided. Frankly, it is a self-inflicted wound.

With respect to tightening the control measures, I have indicated that we follow the first procedure, send cheques to those entitled; we then set about improving the efficiency of our benefit control operation, and I think that has been successful.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister seems unwilling to indicate the exact date when these changes were made. Equally important is the issue of notification to individuals directly involved. Since some unemployment insurance officers have indicated difficulty in understanding the complexities and nuances of the Unemployment Insurance Act and regulations, and since many recipients, particularly in high unemployment areas, as unskilled and partially literate, can the minister say what steps are taken to let people know how they should operate to avoid the possibility of disqualifying themselves even though they are legitimately unemployed, as the minister well knows may be the case?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, we have improved our interview system and if, after the interview, the individual concerned is not satisfied with the information, or if information is not forthcoming, the case is transferred to a benefit control officer. Surely, it is simple to understand that you should not be working while drawing unemployment insurance.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY OF SENDING UNLEAVENED BREAD TO SOVIET CITIZENS OF THE JEWISH FAITH

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Will the minister use his good offices to facilitate the sending of unleavened bread to the Soviet Union so that Soviet citizens who are of the Jewish faith may celebrate the Passover?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the intent of that question is most important. I have not heard of this matter before but will certainly look into it and if there is anything my department can do to accommodate the Jewish citizens of the Soviet Union, I assure the hon. member that I will do my best to see if it cannot be worked out.

TRANSPORT

GOVERNMENT SHIP CHARTERS TO OFFSHORE COMPANIES—POSSIBILITY OF POLICY CHANGE

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. It is further to inquiries I made several days ago about the extent of revenues offshore shipping companies receive from Canadian government charters, such as CN charters. Is the minister now in a position to indicate the volume or extent of such charter business which is directed to offshore companies, to the detriment of Canadian taxation revenues? If so, will he indicate whether he is concerned enough about the situation to consider a policy change in this regard?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the full details of revenues going to offshore companies would be better supplied in an answer to an order paper question. It has been done before. I could supply the detailed information to the hon. member. His earlier remarks had to do with an allegation; it sounded as if the hon. member were referring to some impropriety. I have not been able to find any trace of that at this point. I have not received from the hon. member the information he said he had, information which he thought might be useful.

Mr. MacKay: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I thank the minister for his answer. I remind the minister that I sent him some documentation. I have also sent some to the tax avoidance section of the Department of National Revenue. I should like the minister, in his capacity as Minister of Transport, to give some indication that he thinks it is in the national interest to give preference to domestic Canadian companies in the awarding of shipping charters, and say if he intends to take steps in this regard.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, certainly, within reason, it is desirable to give preference to Canadian vessels. With respect to the vessel to which the hon. member referred earlier, the MV Marine Cruiser, I am told that a search for appropriate vessels was made and this one was found to be available for the purpose.

EARTHQUAKE IN RUMANIA—REQUEST FOR AID TO VICTIMS

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Could the Prime Minister tell the House what form of support the federal government decided to extend to the government and the people of Rumania, following the tragedy which occurred in this country?

[English]

While I am on my feet may I ask the Prime Minister if he has received the latest report from Dr. Gallup, on which all his colleagues wish to congratulate him?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: That was a planted comment.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I only know that the Canadian government offered $100,000 to the Canadian Red Cross in a first effort to help the Rumanians who experienced this terrible tragedy. AGRICULTURE

PESTICIDES—CHANGE IN POLICY ON IMPORTATION—MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture, a question connected with pesticides? In view of the minister's statement that pesticides are essential for maintaining the high level and quality of Canadian food production and since many prairie farmers are already committed to the importation of expensive pesticides, as has been their good farming practice for many years, and this in the face of the declining price of grain, what advice has the minister to offer those prairie farmers as they face this additional financial burden brought about by the government's change in policy?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I want to say this: We have said that the pesticide industry is most important for the health of Canadian agriculture, and 99.6 per cent of the prairie farmers buy a Canadian-produced and distributed product. Only a small proportion, less than one per cent, bring it into western Canada. Actually, most of that material entering Canada is brought into the province of Ontario, but there is a group in southern Manitoba also bringing it in. They are mostly corn growers. I admire them and admire the price they receive for their corn, because it is about 70 cents a bushel above the price they were getting in the interest of Canada under a special agreement; so they are not as badly off as the hon. member makes out. We have received a request in connection with this question, because farmers go south of the border to buy pesticides. Approximately 100 band together, go to the United States and put a down payment on a bulk order. This question is being considered because they neglected to apply for a permit to bring it in before we ceased that operation.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, I do not think the minister quite replied to my question. My question was, what advice has he to offer to farmers already heavily committed to purchasing pesticides from south of the border, as has been their custom according to good agricultural practice in the past, a practice encouraged by government policy?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I want to make sure I understand what the hon. member means when he talks about the government having encouraged farmers in the past. We encouraged them to use pesticides, but to use them properly, according to Canadian environmental rules. If the hon. member is talking about that, yes, we encouraged them to do that. We encouraged them to buy Canadian products as much as possible, and support Canadian industry as much as possible. I just ask farmers to be a little consistent in their demands. Do they want me to close the border for one thing, but not another? The beef producer is demanding it, but when it comes to pesticides they say that we are in danger of destroying the agricultural industry in Canada.

TERMS OF INQUIRY INTO RADIO-CANADA—POSSIBILITY OF LEGISLATION CREATING PRESSURE ON INQUIRY

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. I ask if the letter tabled in the right hon. gentleman's name by the Secretary of State on Friday, directing the CRTC to look into the CBC, sets out all the directions and/or conditions of that inquiry?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is no direction before the CRTC other than that particular letter. So, to the extent that that is what the hon. member wants to know, that is my answer.

Mr. Nowlan: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the Minister of Communications said in this House several times that the second phase of the telecommunications legislation will come before the House, something she last repeated, I think, during the ministers' conference in Alberta, can the Prime Minister say if that stage of legislation is ready to come before the House, in order that no pressure, direct or implied which may be contained in that legislation, will affect the deliberations of the CRTC in its inquiry?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I fail to see how that legislation could constitute pressure. But if it worries the hon. member, I will look into the matter, and if it should constitute pressure, perhaps we will delay the introduction of the legislation.

TRANSPORT

DISPUTE BETWEEN CAST AND MARITIME EMPLOYERS ASSOCIATION—RELATIONSHIP TO GUARANTEED LOANS TO ASSOCIATION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question for the Minister of Transport arises from difficulties being experienced in the port of Montreal. Can the minister advise the House if he or any officials of MOT have had discussions with representatives of Cast Canadian National, the MEA, or the harbours board with respect to this dispute, particularly as it relates to recent press allegations that it may be a pressure move to force the government to act with respect to part of its guarantee concerning loans to MEA which are now close to $17 million?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any such discussions. Certainly, none of them has reached my ears or eyes at this point, but I can check into the matter.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question consists partly of a representation and partly of a question. Since the minister no doubt recognizes that you do not benefit one part of the country by hurting another and knows of the difficulties which will arise if Cast were to pull completely out of Montreal—although we would love to have them in Halifax—can the minister assure us that the government does not intend at this time to consider writing off the $17 million debt incurred largely for the retirement of ILA members in the river ports?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the matter has not come to the consideration of the government, so I can hardly give a reply to the question as to what that consideration will be.

PURCHASE OF ADDITIONAL HOPPER CARS FOR GRAIN—INQUIRY WHETHER CARS WILL BE USED ALL YEAR

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. In view of the minister's news release dated February 18 with regard to the purchase of an additional 2,000 hopper cars made up of 824 aluminum cars and 1176 steel, CP Rail taking all the steel cars, in view of his statement contained in the release that CP Rail has agreed to use the steel cars on secondary lines and bearing in mind that CP Rail during the last year withdrew its service of hopper cars on secondary lines during the summer, will the minister advise whether the undertaking is to make use of hopper cars on a year-round basis or only in the winter months?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the intention is that the hopper cars will be used on a regular basis. Obviously, there may be some lines where there will be differences in service between winter and summer, but the general rule is that they will be used all the time. The basic position will be that the cars will be loaded to the weight which will avoid any danger of damage to the lines. The problem CPR ran into was over loading of cars. They have now introduced some new techniques which tend to insure against that happening. It was only on that understanding that we were willing to go ahead and order additional cars of that weight for CP.

REASON CANADIAN PACIFIC CHOSE STEEL HOPPER CARS

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the aluminium cars are lighter than the steel cars and more suitable for branch or secondary lines, can the minister advise if the only basis that CP Rail chose the steel cars was that they prefer one standardized car and was the calling of tenders based on that premise?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I was informed that the operational desirability of one type of car was the reason behind CP's wish to go with the 100 ton car. As the hon. member says, the 70 ton car is obviously lighter. However, the heavier car can be loaded in such a way as to produce a weight equivalence.

FISHERIES

SIDETRAWLERS—POSSIBILITY OF PROGRAM TO MAKE OPERATION MORE EFFICIENT

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Fisheries. On January 31 he invited the minister of fisheries of Newfoundland to make suggestions as to what might be done to overcome the plight confronting sidetrawler operators under the present fisheries management scheme announced by the minister in December. I believe that on February 10 the Newfoundland minister of fisheries telexed the minister suggesting three changes to the fisheries management scheme to give some flexibility for the use of sidetrawlers, allowing them to operate more efficiently under winter weather conditions and to catch more fish so they could continue to operate. Can the minister now state whether he is going to make the changes to the fisheries management plan suggested by the minister of fisheries of Newfoundland and whether or not he is going to announce a further program of special financial assistance for the operators of sidetrawlers?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, the report I have is that for the year 1976 sidetrawlers did fairly well. There was a difficulty at the beginning of this year. Some adjustments were made. According to the information I received last week, those plants which had difficulty at the beginning of the year have reopened.

Mr. Crosbie: Did the minister receive three suggested changes to the fisheries management scheme from the Newfoundland fisheries minister? If so, is he accepting any of those suggested changes?

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have received suggestions from many quarters including, I am sure, that one. These have all been taken into account with regard to possible changes. The fact is we knew from the very beginning that because of the low quotas of redfish, the sidetrawlers would undergo considerable difficulty. We offered incentives which would allow them to fish in other areas where there are other species.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

POSSIBILITY OF COMPLAINTS BECAUSE OF LACK OF CONSULTATION PRIOR TO ANNOUNCEMENT OF INITIAL PRICES ON GRAIN

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. Have there been any complaints from any member of the Canadian Wheat Board or any member of the advisory committee to the Canadian Wheat Board about the minister's announcement of initial prices without informing either the Canadian Wheat Board or the advisory committee to the Canadian Wheat Board?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker, not to my knowledge, although I could check whether anything has appeared in my office. The information on initial prices, of course, is announced effectively as soon as the order in council for that purpose has been approved or as immediately thereafter as possible.

HEALTH

POSSIBILITY DEPARTMENT DECENTRALIZED WITH REGIONAL OFFICE IN SYDNEY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It is with reference to the government's stated program of decentralization of government services. Is the minister, or any other minister of the government, going to announce that his department will be divided into five regions and that the regional offices for the Atlantic provinces will be located at Sydney, thereby providing a better service for the region and much needed employment on Cape Breton Island?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the matter of regional decentralization is under the responsibility of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. There have been discussions with my department as to what can be done to try to alleviate unemployment in some areas by trying to decentralize some of our offices which can be decentralized while still providing efficient service to our citizens. I am not in a position to make a specific announcement with regard to a particular situation, but I might tell the hon. member that discussions have taken place between myself and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Muir: I thank the minister. May I direct one short supplementary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Is the minister in a position to cast any further light on this and state that if there is a decentralization, Sydney will be included? If so, will an announcement be made shortly or will it be made shortly before the next election?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make an announcement very quickly. I am pleased to see that the hon. member supports this program. I hope he will talk to the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton who over the weekend criticized this policy very severely.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

KITIMAT PIPELINE TERMINAL—SUGGESTION HEARING NOT BE HELD UNTIL NEW CHARTS OF CHANNEL PREPARED

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. On February 21 last the minister indicated that public hearings would be held into the Kitimat pipeline and that they probably would be commencing in April. In view of the fact that ship charts for that narrow channel are some 30 years old and the fishermen continue to find new shoals in that channel, and the fact that it was designed for 30 foot draft, can the minister give the House some assurance that the hearings will not commence until new charting is done with regard to that very narrow and dangerous channel in Kitimat?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I can certainly give the hon. member the undertaking that this gap in the information will have to be filled before authorization for this type of project goes ahead.

KITIMAT PIPELINE—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF PUBLIC HEARINGS ON ROUTE

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, when the minister announced that hearings would take place about April, they were for the seaward side. They concerned a terminal. In view of the fact it is proposed the pipeline will run east from Kitimat, what kind of public hearing is the government proposing with regard to that area because there are three native land claims affecting that proposed pipeline? We have had no indication that there will be public hearings. Can the minister now advise whether he proposes public hearings both on the seaward side and landward side other than, of course, the NEB hearings?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I made it clear that the public hearings would be dealing with the seaward side of the project. As for the land part of the pipeline, that is obviously going to come up when the Energy Board studies this proposal. I assume a public hearing will take place then.

THE BUDGET

RELATIONSHIP OF ANNOUNCEMENT OF DATE TO POSSIBILITY OF GENERAL ELECTION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Until today it was generally felt that the budget would be introduced in April, after the Easter holidays. Now it has been decided to call it on March 31. Does that indicate the government is now considering its option of having a general election under the present system rather than under the new legislation which comes into effect on June 11 and which will add another 20 seats to the House, mainly in western Canada where the Liberal party is virtually non-existent?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): I didn't know I was that smart, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

PRIVILEGE

MR. BAKER (GRENVILLE-CARLETON)—DECENTRALIZATION OF GOVERNMENT INSTALLATIONS

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton on a question of privilege.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Chrétien) has left the House to pick up his copy of the Globe and Mail. I gather it will be read by him with the same degree of accuracy as the speech of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) in Toronto earlier on the weekend. I hope it will be more accurate. A very serious question was asked in the House by my hon. friend concerning the decentralization of government installations in Canada. On several occasions in the past when questions have been asked on this subject by the Leader of the Opposition, by myself and by members on both sides of the chamber, there have occurred exchanges in which my name has been used in a context implying that I am opposed to the principle of decentralization either directly—as was the case today—or by implications in terms of my seat being beside that of the Leader of the Opposition, or as being House leader of this party.

If the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce would read the whole of the report in the Globe and Mail—

Mr. Chrétien: What page?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): The same page as that on which the ridiculous speech of the Minister of National Health and Welfare in Toronto is reported. The minister succeeded in making an ass of himself then, and he is making another ass of himself today. In that press report in the Globe and Mail the following statement appears:

> The Progressive Conservative party has long advocated decentralization and still does on a rational, planned, open basis. Canadians everywhere are entitled to expect decentralization with clear goals, realistic criteria and a definite time-frame. We should not have to poke and prod at an amphorous mass to obtain small bits of information. There should be a white paper which can stand on its merits and be revised in the light of intelligent criticism. Plans which affect the lives of thousands of people and the economic health of communities from coast to coast should not be swathed in secrecy.

I put the position plainly. It is the position which the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce indicated prior to Christmas he would take—that he would shortly make a statement setting out the position with regard to decentralization. Mr. Speaker, the government suffers from a congenital problem. It finds it impossible to do anything in an open and plain manner. I know of no government in modern times which can take a principle, a reasonable principle like decentralization, and so twist it and warp it as to make it unrecognizable.

I asked the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Allmand) a question with regard to a specific department. The hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. Muir) also directed a specific question on this subject. What I tried to say in the press release, and what the Globe and Mail correctly reported me as saying, was that we have had enough of the government trying to capitalize on movements. These decisions affect the receiving municipalities. They affect public servants, for example, husbands and wives who may be employed in different departments of government—one of them is suddenly uprooted and moved away. These are important considerations. What the leader of my party, what the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys and others have asked for is disclosure by the government, in the House of Commons, of what it has in mind—I have suggested a white paper—so that we could discuss the matter and put forward suggestions. In this way the public service unions will know what is happening, people entering the public service will know what is happening, and public servants generally will know what is likely to take place.

The reason for issuing my statement was, really, justified anger at answers given to questions 1,138 and 1,139 on the order paper. These answers, given the most charitable interpretation, must be read as meaning all these decisions are internal and that no consultation will take place, that there will be no white paper and no discussion of this important issue of decentralization. I believe I have made my position clear and I hope the minister will retract his statement, one which is unworthy of him, even in good fun.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few remarks on this question of privilege. First, I am very pleased to hear that the hon. member supports the policy. The problem I have is this: it is difficult for me to understand how a man can support a policy and at the same time say on every occasion that the policy is no good.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I never said that.

Mr. Chrétien: However, I am glad to know the hon. member supports the policy. I accept his word for that. But I want to tell him this: if we apply a policy of decentralizing government bureaucrats, moving them out of Ottawa, I cannot make it effective without moving any people. The hon. member has asked for a white paper. I have agreed to his request. He keeps repeating there is no over-all policy. I want to listen to the opposition. I want to listen to the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. Muir). But I want to give them a total package. There are decisions which will help some areas of Canada, perhaps the part which the hon. member represents; but I cannot bring everything up to date because I want to present a total package. I hope the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) will continue to support the policy. I hope he will get it into his mind, though, that I cannot decentralize 4,000 or 5,000 employees and move them away from Ottawa without displacing anybody. I hope to be able to come here with a definite statement within a few weeks but I trust that whenever we give some information to the official opposition, their House leader will not complain because somebody is being transferred.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) rose on a question of privilege which under previous rules would have been heard during the question period. Under the new rules, which I believe all members would agree have been very successful, the question of privilege was deferred until three o'clock. It is not, of course, a true question of privilege. However, it was based on a reference by the minister to some remarks over the weekend by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton.

I would not want to get into a discussion of the general principles of the program of decentralization or the other peripheral views which relate to it. The question of privilege has a very narrow scope even in theory; that is, that the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton was aggrieved by the reference made by the minister. That matter has been contributed to by the member offended and by the minister. There is no question of privilege, and I think that the matter ought to stop there.

[Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton).]

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

AMENDMENT TO RE-NAME CONSTITUENCY OF LETHBRIDGE AS "LETHBRIDGE-FOOTHILLS"

Mr. Ken Hurlburt (Lethbridge) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-405, an act respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Lethbridge-Foothills).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Hurlburt: Mr. Speaker, my reason for asking for the change from "Lethbridge" to "Lethbridge-Foothills" is that there is one city in my riding which lies at the eastern end of the riding and the new boundary extending to the foothills and the Rocky Mountains. I therefore request this change, Mr. Speaker.

BANK ACT

EXTENSION OF BUSINESS PERIOD OF BANKS UNDER JURISDICTION OF QUEBEC SAVINGS BANKS ACT AND BANK ACT

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-39, an act to amend the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would ask that all questions be allowed to stand today. The usual information sheet for the assistance of members of the House was circulated earlier in the day and it contained an error. I apologize for perhaps confusing some members with respect to that matter, but all questions are to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION ACT

The House resumed, from Thursday, March 3, consideration of the motion of Mr. Basford (for the Minister of Transport) that Bill C-33, to amend the National Transportation Act and the Department of Transport Act for the purpose of defining the objective of the transportation policy of Canada and authorizing the consequential rearrangement of powers and duties relating to transport, and to amend the Transport Act and the Railway Act in respect of freight rates and other matters, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to participate in this debate on Bill C-33 to amend the National Transportation Act. Coming from Atlantic Canada, I suppose I can say I could get complete unanimity on two questions. First, lack of transportation is the popular reason in Atlantic Canada why economic development has not kept pace with development in other parts of Canada. Second, as a corollary to the many transportation problems we are facing, I suppose I could also get agreement from people on all sides of the political fence with the immortal words of a former minister of transport, namely that our transportation policy in this country is in a mess. So on the subject of transportation I think there is consensus.

Solutions to our transportation problems vary, obviously, depending on where you sit, who you are, and sometimes what political stripe you wear. But quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, transportation is almost above and beyond politics. Those in Atlantic Canada have been frustrated in their continued attempts to try to come to grips with this question. Transportation should provide the base for a proper and balanced development of Atlantic Canada. Yet in the words of a former minister of transport, one of the reasons this has not taken place is that our whole transportation policy, as I have said, is in a mess.

From that viewpoint, Mr. Speaker, let me turn to Bill C-33. Frankly, I do so with trepidation. I wonder whether it is going to resolve the admitted mess into which this government and its predecessors of the same political stripe have placed transportation. What scares me is the fundamental flip-flop of the government in regard to the National Transportation Act passed by this House in 1967. Bill C-231, as it was known, was debated several years ago when I was a member of the House, and I heard Mr. Pickersgill, the then minister of transport, continuously expounding all the worthy, positive principles contained in the legislation, including the fact that there was to be created a Canadian Transportation Commission, of which, ironically or prophetically, he became chairman. Never did a minister of this House have such pride of authorship. For not only did he father, sire, wean and feed Bill C-231 which created the CTC, but he found he had to go to his Valhalla and become its first chairman.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Sounds like legislative incest.

Mr. Nowlan: As my hon. friend for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) says, never has there been such legislative incest, with a minister fathering a bill to which he then becomes the nursemaid when he leaves this green chamber. I do not know what the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) has in mind if he survives another election, but one thing I do know is that he does not intend to be successor to the present chairman of the CTC, because Bill C-33 effectively castrates the power, authority and stability of the CTC which is charged with the responsibility of solving our present complex transportation problems and the mess which the former minister of transport admitted.

A quick perusal of Bill C-33 indicates that some of its clauses directly remove power from the CTC and transfer it to the governor in council. According to my count, there are 11 clauses in the bill providing that the governor in council shall make policy, not the CTC. The CTC will be the implementer, as I understand it, of ministerial discretion emanating from the minister's office. As a sequel, Mr. Speaker, there is another interesting provision in the amendments in Bill C-33 which provide that the minister shall, or may, do such and such and so and so. This appears in five separate places. For all practical purposes, the CTC will have no basic power in policy-making.

This will create confusion in the sea of confusion and will pile mess upon mess. Parliament is supposed to be supreme: We are always hearing those words related to interpretations of the Broadcasting Act or to the decisions of the CTC—that the minister cannot do something or other because it is not the will of parliament and he would not want to touch the vague, esoteric, undefinable will of parliament. The minister can claim that he is no longer going to hide behind the will of parliament and that all problems of transportation will come to his desk. In the House and in committee he will be exposed to legitimate questions, and it will be incumbent upon him to reply to those questions because he can no longer use the CTC as a decoy. That is the reply to the supposed argument of the minister.

The recent history of transportation in this country bothers me in regard to the minister and his predecessor. If he had been allowed to exercise ministerial discretion, many parts of the country, not just Atlantic Canada, would have been adversely affected. I will explain that point in the next few minutes.

This is an extreme bill, in a vital area that is fundamental to the economic development of the country. It is too important to have the power delegated, in effect, from this chamber to the minister's office and, in effect, to de facto neutralize the CTC. No one in this chamber would complain that when the chips are down there has to be political control. The minister appoints the chairman and the commissioners of the CTC. A lot of them are very good friends of his and some have been good members of this House. That is a different thing from the political science theory, however, that there has to be political control of the decision- and policy-making right in the minister's office without the benefit of public ventilation of those policies which the CTC now provides.

To have the CTC emasculated in the way this bill intends, with the minister responding to the political whims, for political survival, that happen from time to time, will not give us what we need in this country either in transportation or in the economic fabric of the land—and that is continuity and stability in policy-making. Regardless of political stripe, I think a minister of transport can handle the day to day problems, the complex, conflicting and competing claims of transportation and bring continuity and stability at least to the CTC. But there should be a review procedure so that if the CTC takes the wrong road or comes up with the wrong decision, the minister can step in. To completely eliminate that initial public ventilation by the CTC would be a retrograde step and would not enhance the development of a transportation policy.

The turnover of ministers is significant, Mr. Speaker. We can take 1968, when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was incarnated, as the demarcation point; when he said things which I am sure he will wish he had never said. There have been five ministers of transport since then, starting with Mr. Hellyer to April, 1969, Mr. Richardson as acting minister until May, 1969, Mr. Jamieson—and I will have a few words to say about him—from May, 1969, to November, 1972, Mr. Marchand from 1972 to 1975, and the present minister who took office in September, 1975. At the moment, in theory and sometimes in practice, he is the fifth minister since 1968.

Let us look at the other side of the coin. There have been two chairmen of the Canadian Transport Commission since 1968, Mr. Pickersgill and the present incumbent, Mr. Benson. So there have been five ministers of transport and two chairmen of the CTC since 1968. This shows that by its very make-up the CTC will, in an apolitical, non-pejorative way bring a little more stability and continuity to policy-making than the ever-changing, revolving musical chairs necessitated by cabinet appointments.

The powers the minister will have through order in council—and there are 11—make him not only the transportation czar of Canada, but he could become the economic czar as well through his interpretation of the rates to be charged for competing commodities and his analysis and definition of a review of what "variable costs" mean. While the CTC might review the formula, the bill provides that the minister could dictate where industries and firms should locate and what should be grown. There is no provision for review by parliament or any real review by the Canadian Transport Commission.

I suggest that a brief history of what the minister wanted to do in the last year or so does not lend any great confidence to giving the minister this blank cheque to make transportation policy without any reference whatsoever to parliament. I became a member of this House in 1965, and since then I have seen many bills delegate power to ministers, in some cases with power of review by parliament or an outside board; but I do not think there has ever been a bill that gives so much power to one minister as Bill C-33. I hope this is not a forerunner of the new telecommunications legislation that is supposed to come before the House.

There have been hints that the Minister of Communications (Mrs. Sauvé) wants undiluted, unqualified power directed to her so that she can direct the CTC. We will have a situation in this country in which the Minister of Transport, with unfettered powers in transport, economic planning and economic development, will control the economic side of this country, and the Minister of Communications, if there are similar provisions for delegating power by order in council replacing the power of parliament and changing the position of the CRTC, becoming the czar of culture in this land in all the manifest and various forms affecting broadcasting, films, video and cable. Then we will really be moving a long way down the road to an Orwellian society with Big Brother. Quite frankly, the Minister of Transport has many attributes, but one which would not make me too happy is to have him any more like Big Brother, which is one reason I look at Bill C-33 with a great deal of skepticism and reserve. I do not see, at this stage, why he should be allowed this delegated power.

One only has to look at the recent past involving Atlantic Canada, in particular, when the minister, in the general government restraint program, wanted to change a fundamental and basic provision in our legislation to do with "at and east" rates which help the export of flour to offshore markets. If the minister had his way—as, in effect, the amendment under Bill C-33 would let him have his way—the preferred rates for moving flour to offshore export markets would have been eliminated a long time ago.

The Minister of Transport lacks credibility. Assurances were given to the maritime premiers at the time when a change was made in the restraint bill and the section having to do with "at and east" rates was deleted. At that time the maritime premiers thought it was deleted for good and that the "at and east" rates would stay. We are talking about a relatively few million dollars—about $4 million to $5 million. An assurance was given, direct or implied, that if that section was removed from the restraint bill so as to help the passage of the bill, the "at and east" rates would not be tampered with and the problem would not come up again.

Yet we hear now, since the restraint bill became law, that the minister intends to bring back the legislation to eliminate "at and east" rates in another way. Quite frankly, under Bill C-33, using some of the powers which we would give him under that bill, if he could get it in place in time, he would not have to bring in another bill but under ministerial discretion, and using powers given to him in Bill C-33, he could eliminate "at and east" rates. Thus, he could get rid of what he considers to be a meddlesome and contradictory situation where we in the east receive preferred treatment in the export flour trade and do not fall completely victim to his theoretical user-pay concept in the transport of goods and people.

What faith can anyone in Atlantic Canada have in the user-pay concept when we hear the minister making a press statement about eliminating, with the stroke of a pen, about $1 billion worth of debt on the St. Lawrence Seaway, and at the same time saying he will charge proper tolls? By "proper tolls" he means to charge double the present rate. Already we have had a howl not only from eastern Canada and western Canada but from central Canada as well about what this will do to the economic development of the whole of Canada. Eliminating, with the stroke of a pen, a debt of almost $1 billion, which has accumulated on the St. Lawrence Seaway, is not in accordance with the user-pay concept. How the minister can build credibility by suggesting that this debt can be eliminated overnight or with a stroke of his pen or, in effect, through discretionary provisions under Bill C-33 without, on the other hand, guaranteeing a proper toll structure on the St. Lawrence Seaway with input from all those adversely affected, so that we do not start a new debt, is something I find difficult to accept. The two have to go hand in hand.

We in Atlantic Canada reluctantly went along with the financing of the St. Lawrence Seaway because we believed at the time, and we still believe, that it was good for the national development of the country, even though we knew it would have an adverse effect on Atlantic ports. But to have the debt structure of Atlantic ports on the books and not forgiven with a stroke of the pen, as the minister did with the St. Lawrence Seaway debt, is inequitable and in our eyes is not the proper exercise of ministerial discretion. It makes us very reluctant to grant to the minister the power which he seeks under Bill C-33 in its unamended form.

If he can do with the St. Lawrence Seaway what he intends to do now with the powers given to him under Bill C-33, we in the east will be completely shut out unless we are able to get to his left ear and make sure his right ear is blocked so that he hears no one else speaking in his right ear. Whoever gets to the minister's ear gets his attention. We know his nanny has his one ear—and who else can get his attention when his nanny has it? We do not have confidence in the Minister of Transport because of the way he has abused his own principle of user-pay, and we do not have faith in him.

We wonder what he is going to do with regard to fundamental questions affecting not only all of Canada but especially Atlantic Canada. We do not have to talk only about "at and east" rates which are still legislatively suspended above the House and are still on the minister's desk to do what he wants with them. We can consider the recent debate on former Bill C-61, the maritime code, which was supposed to implement the Darling report which was supposed to do many things for many people and, in effect, would make Canadian ships manned by Canadian seamen serve Canadian ports.

We all know the pluses and minuses of this basic argument. But my point is not to debate the plus and minus of Bill C-61 but to use it as an illustration. If Bill C-33 is put in place, there would not be the opportunity, however rare it might be in the House—and in the words of the Prime Minister we are all nobodies anyway—through the work of such diligent members as the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) and other hon. members with a long-standing interest in the maritime code, to spotlight and bring attention to the provisions of Bill C-61.

While statements were made in the House about the assurances given to the maritime premiers, it turned out, as often happens, that they were not worth anything. When we were younger there used to be something called the Boy Scouts, although this is a pejorative term now. Now they are debating whether there should be "girl scouts" or "person scouts". In my young days we used to play the Kipling game. You would look at ten objects on the table and say what they were and this would be repeated ten times over. By the tenth time there would be ten other things on the table because, due to the vagaries of human nature and the fallibility of tongue, eye and ear, if you repeat a story several times it becomes garbled. In this case you ended up with different items on the table from the ones the first person saw.

I have been in the House and heard the Minister of Transport state that assurances were given and that they were acceptable to the Atlantic premiers with regard to the maritime code, that there would be safeguards so that the Atlantic ports would not be adversely affected. Less than a year ago verbal assurances were given in this House, but there must have been some slip between lip and ear. Some of the statements were perhaps not reassuring to the Atlantic premiers. Over a year ago the then chairman of the council of maritime premiers, Mr. Hatfield, sent a telex to the Minister of Transport with regard to the maritime code saying, among other things:

The governments of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island are most concerned that the maritime code bill, which includes changes to the coasting trade law, is now before the parliament of Canada, while the assurances given by your predecessor, Honourable Jean Marchand to the council of maritime premiers and to the Premier of Newfoundland in September, 1973, have not been fulfilled.

These assurances, which were made public, included—

Then it lists four assurances which were given, but because of changes in ministers, in this case from Mr. Marchand to the present minister, verbal assurances are sometimes confused, even though they are given in good faith. Changes in ministers can lead to confusion. The maritime code was before this parliament and was vigorously debated. It fundamentally affects any coastal member or community and the economic development of those communities. I suggest that if Bill C-33 had been in place we would not have had to worry about debate. We would not have had to worry about the committee, and we might very well have had the minister move in his own arbitrary and unilateral fashion to develop the changes without proper public scrutiny. Assurances could have been given or written into the legislation.

Something very close to my heart is the movement of feed grains from the west into Nova Scotia, particularly the Annapolis Valley. I am all for developing local feed grains, but with the soil conditions and the need we have, and while we have programs to stimulate development of local feed grains, there is still a fundamental need for the movement of feed grains from the west to the east. This has always been considered basic to Atlantic Canada. However, over the last few years its place on the totem pole of security has not been high enough. Farmers have not been able to make plans; they have not been assured of assistance for moving feed grains east. That assurance slowly slipped away. That item is as sacrosanct as perhaps the Crowsnest pass rates, although it was not embodied in legislation; it is just an item in the estimates. Each year the Canadian Livestock Feed Board and the eastern farmers have to wait to see the estimates in order to know the amount of assistance there is to be for the movement of feed grains.

There is quite a debate going on in agricultural circles and before the agricultural research economic council as to the pluses and minuses with respect to the movement of feed grains. In fact, in an agricultural way I do not think there is any question which has as many cross-currents—geographical, political, let alone economic—as the question of feed grains. Some ministers of transport and ministers of agriculture have said that the subsidy should be eliminated and that the local areas which need feed grains should produce them. I am not today arguing the merits of that position. I am trying to point out that by giving a minister arbitrary power, without public ventilation on this question, we might inadvertently effect a program, which has been pretty basic to much of eastern agriculture, eliminated by the stroke of a pen.

There is Parkinson's law and another law stating that it is more difficult to reverse a wrong decision than to influence the decision before it is made. Once there is a ministerial or bureaucratic decision, the proverbial pride of authorship is involved. Natural ego is involved, and it is difficult to change. Obviously, some factors go into decisions and people do not want to be shown to have made wrong decisions. There is a danger in giving arbitrary power to a minister when there has not been prior public ventilation. Giving a minister arbitrary power allows him to make decisions which inadvertently could be wrong decisions, but they are very difficult to reverse.

In terms of "at and east rates" respecting the maritime code, Bill C-61—which was debated over the last couple of years—in terms of the movement of eastern feed grains, in terms of the inequity of the St. Lawrence Seaway debt structure, about which nothing has been done, and there has been no intention either expressed or implied to do anything about the debt structure of the ports of Halifax and Saint John, no Atlantic Canadian member can look with equanimity at a bill giving a minister so much power and allowing him to exercise so much ministerial discretion. Another reason we in Atlantic Canada look with a great deal of skepticism at Bill C-33 is the shift in ministers.

Mr. Paproski: Shifty ministers.

Mr. Nowlan: Inadvertently, some of them perhaps have been shifty. The hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski) has a basic point there. I want to play back for the record something which has irritated me for several years. The last time Atlantic transportation problems were really debated in this House was when the present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson) was minister of transport. That was in the 1969 period. At that time the legislation under debate was the Atlantic Region Freight Assistance Act which involved itself with something we thought up to that time was pretty fundamental to Atlantic Canada, the Maritime Freight Rates Act. We in the east thought that was very basic to us. We asked for some protection and as members of confederation we thought we deserved it. The recommendations of a royal commission of the 1920s were incorporated into a form of subsidy assistance to help us get our goods from Atlantic Canada into central Canadian markets.

The Atlantic Region Freight Assistance Act varied and qualified, in effect, certain parts of the Maritime Freight Rates Act. The Secretary of State for External Affairs was then the minister of transport, and one of the reasons that bill became law without perhaps more violent objection from Atlantic members was the assurance given by the minister. We are not babes in the woods. We know that assurances given in the House have no real legislative effect—but they are indications of intent. At that time, on June 17, 1969, at page 10226 of Hansard the minister said that the Atlantic Region Freight Assistance Act was just the beginning of a comprehensive Atlantic transportation policy. He said it was just one bill, that there would be many other bills and that we should not get too worried because the government would move in a comprehensive way on Atlantic transportation problems. I said earlier that that received the approval of all the people of Atlantic Canada, although there were diverse opinions as to what the full solution should be. Among other things, the then minister said as reported at page 10226 of Hansard:

—I may say in a general way that this is only part of the comprehensive transportation policy which is being evolved for the Atlantic region, and these are measures that it was felt, and I believe hon. members will agree, ought to be put into effect as quickly as possible. There will be, of course, considerable additional legislation . . . we will be proposing at a subsequent date amendments to existing legislation or perhaps entirely new legislation.

That was said on June 17, 1969. Later in the debate as it was concluding in that memorable June of 1969, on June 19, as reported at page 10383 of Hansard, the minister said:

When I made reference to this bill as being an interim measure, I want to assure the House that I meant that it is only interim in the sense that it represents a portion of a much broader concept that we hope to develop with the help of the very excellent report of the transport committee in the coming months and on which I will be working during the summer recess.

I was a member of the committee. We toured Atlantic Canada for weeks, brought in a unanimous report and made unanimous recommendations. Concurrently, the Atlantic premiers also made unanimous, comprehensive recommendations concerning Atlantic transportation policy. The minister had both reports in his mind when he said that this bill represents a portion of a much broader concept. He went on to say:

There is no suggestion, and I want to make this perfectly clear to the House, that there will be any significant change in any of the measures which either now prevail or which, I hope, will prevail following the passage of this legislation until and unless this more comprehensive program is brought forward and until there has been full-scale consultation with the premiers and the representatives of the Atlantic provinces.

He said all this on June 19. There was a previous statement made on June 17, 1969. To be fair, there have been changes in official committees working on Atlantic transportation. They have made recommendations concerning transportation. But as for the substance of the matter, as for more comprehensive changes under the National Transportation Act, there has been no change. There has been no platform put forward, no plank of a platform or even a nail of a plank, to do with any concrete program for Atlantic transportation.

I gather that my allotted time is almost up, Mr. Speaker. The minister has read the report the transport committee made in 1969 and the recommendations of the premiers. Nevertheless, remembering the assurances made in the past and given in this House, we on my side of the House are not happy with Bill C-33.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I must inform the hon. member that his time has expired.

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-33, a bill to amend the National Transportation Act, is another instalment of legislation concerning our national transport system, a system once envisaged as a national dream. It has become a national nightmare. The NDP does not support it because we fear its long-term implications for a rational and efficient transport system.

What should a national transport policy include? I shall consider that question, consider what has happened in the last few years, consider what the bill proposes to do, why we think it will fail and propose alternative policies. What should be the goals of any national transportation policy? Surely it must encourage, and not obstruct, the free flow of people and goods in Canada. It must not discriminate against regions either on grounds of geographic location or economic health. We should consider our rail, road, air and marine networks as a means for promoting national unity. All our people must be treated equally. No matter in which region of Canada they live or which goods they process and manufacture, they must have access to various modes of transportation. Surely that ought to be the goal if we are at all serious about designing an adequate national transportation system. Second, we must create an instrument which will give us the framework for undertaking economic and regional development in Canada. If these are legitimate goals, as I think they are—and I hope hon. members accept them as reasonable and obtainable—the question arises, how can we best achieve them?

It seems to me that we must follow a certain course if we are to succeed. First, we must devise a national transportation policy which is an instrument of public or government policy and not an instrument solely of private profit. In other words, our national transportation system must be operated as a public utility. Second, we can only reach the goals I have outlined by replacing the present policy of competition between various modes of transportation with a policy of co-ordination and integration. Third, we must abandon the false premises which the Liberal and Conservative parties accept; that is, abandon the idea of commercial viability and users bearing transport costs, for such ideas are inherent in previous legislation and in the present legislation.

What is the situation in Canada? What is the condition of our country's transportation? Looking at our national transportation system, we see it is in a sad state. It is unco-ordinated. Road, rail and air services are not integrated. Interconnections between different modes are often non-existent. Sometimes you must stay overnight in a town before you can switch to another mode of transport. Timing, schedules and services are bad. Also, the movement of goods is not co-ordinated. A characteristic of our system is that it discriminates, a discrimination evident in freight rates and the matter of regional development.

When I say this I think of the dilemma facing less developed, poorer regions of the country, such as the Atlantic provinces, northern Quebec and particularly my region, northern Ontario. Our freight rates are discriminatory. Although the government gives grants to encourage development and job creation in the regions, the planning and hard work of our people is frustrated by a national transportation system which charges discriminatory freight rates and works against the development of regional industry and manufacturing in favour of maintaining the status quo in manufacturing in central Canada. The same can be said about raw materials which we obtain basically from the west and the north of Canada.

When we look at our national transportation system, in addition to the two problems I have mentioned we notice a deterioration of service. One has only to look at the standard of efficiency of rail passenger service, or the phase-out by this government of some of the coastal ferry system, to see how the general public is being discouraged from using these facilities and suffering because of lack of service. When we look at the situation we cannot help but agree with the former minister of transport when he stated in this House that the transportation system in Canada is in a mess. It is there for everyone to see. The more fundamental point is to examine why we are in this transportation mess today. How did we get into this situation? One does not have to look far for the reason.

In 1967, this House of Commons was debating the National Transportation Act which organized transportation policy on the basis of competition and commercial viability. In other words, the two railway systems in Canada were to compete with one another and railways were to compete with trucking firms and air transport, and vice versa. In 1967 we were told that was the great salvation to ending the transportation problem in Canada: "Let us have competition, and this will create efficiency. The transportation system will thrive and all the regions and people of Canada will benefit".

Surely any person with a knowledge of Canadian history and geography knows that a policy based on those premises is bound to fail. Canada is a country of vast distances and a sparsely scattered population. Because of the great distances between communities and small population in the various towns and cities outside the large metropolitan areas, if you rely solely on the premise of competition and commercial viability those small communities and regions will not get the service. No profit-making corporation in its right mind will build a railway line, put a truck transportation system or airline into areas in which they cannot make a profit. Therefore, you are faced with a dilemma. Either you ignore the bulk of our population which is in scattered areas of Canada or you go around the system of commercial viability and implement subsidies so that service may be maintained for Canadians in these regions. That is what the government has been forced to do.

The logic of geography, history and economics has meant that we must subsidize our transportation systems so that the poorer, less developed and sparsely populated regions can get rail, air and road services in terms of providing people with a chance to move and to bring in and ship out goods. This is what has happened with regard to the maritimes, northern Ontario and the far north. Without the subsidy system we would not have the service. In the debate in 1966 and 1967 the New Democratic Party pointed out that basic fact. They argued that we could not expect the poor and sparsely populated areas of Canada to pay the total cost. User-pay is not feasible in a country such as Canada. Competition does not make economic sense in Canada when so many areas, because of their size, are dependent on a single mode of service.

To base a transportation policy on the premise of user-pay and commercial viability undoes the whole idea of confederation and what this nation is about. We came together as a nation to pool our resources and our wealth and to share our benefits among the regions. The idea was that through the national government all taxpayers shared the cost of common services, whether they be medicare, old age pensions or access to transportation. If we do not work on the premise that all Canadians should be treated fairly and equally in terms of what they, as Canadians, can expect from the services of this country, we end up making second-class citizens out of people who live in the poorer and less developed regions of this country. What is true in terms of creating equality of condition in social services is also true in terms of transportation services. Transportation has to be looked at in terms of service and not only cost. It has to be looked at in terms of a public service that should be available to all Canadians at a reasonable cost. What I am saying is not some new philosophy. It is not a philosophy peculiar to the New Democratic Party. It has been accepted because of common sense and history. It has been accepted by every municipality in this country.

When we look at the kinds of services that are provided to people we see that fire departments are no longer run on the competitive system. In ancient Rome there were two fire departments. If a house were on fire, each brigade would rush over and the bidding would begin to see which one would put out the fire. We accept the principle that all taxpayers, through their municipal governments, should pay taxes in order to receive common service from one fire department. It is a public utility. The same is true of city sidewalks. We do not have a toll gate on every sidewalk based on the principle that the user pays for walking on that sidewalk. If that were the case there would not be enough money to build sidewalks in a neighbourhood. Therefore, we pool our resources through the common tax system and provide sidewalks to be used for all in the city.

The same is true with the bus services in municipal transportation. If that were done with the user-pay concept, those who depend on bus services would never have that kind of service because the cost would be prohibitive. For that reason, municipal governments must subsidize buses to the extent that revenue falls below costs. The bus service is run as a public utility.

What makes me so angry is that the federal government still fails to recognize the obvious about transportation in Canada—that a competitive system distorts transportation goals and discriminates against users in various regions. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) is, unfortunately, still wedded to the indefensible concept of commercial viability as the principal component of a national transportation policy. It is this idea which has produced the mess in which we find ourselves in the field of transport today. The thinking behind this legislation still shows that the government is wedded to the concept of commercial viability and user-pay. It is a principle which can never work effectively in this country.

What does the bill say? Competition is still the norm. There are exceptions in the legislation, a few changes, but they do not alter the basic principle. The bill tells us in effect, "Where a transportation system is mature, the user must pay the full cost of the service". We find that the costing date supplied by the railway companies will be used as the basis for establishing freight rates. As one who comes from northern Ontario, I am concerned that this should be the case, because I know it will perpetuate the kind of discrimination in freight rates which has for so long inhibited industrial development in my area.

Further, the legislation gives the Minister of Transport a blank cheque in terms of the orders he may issue to the CTC on policy matters. I am worried about the danger of putting power of this kind into the hands of a minister who is basically unsympathetic to the idea of public service being the norm when considering transportation policy. When I hear the minister talk about selling off certain parts of the CNR which were paid for by the taxpayers of Canada and which, after many years, have now become profitable, my fears become even greater. In my opinion, this would be one of the most backward steps imaginable. The proposal is indicative of the private enterprise philosophy held by the minister in relation to public transportation.

I have stated that the government's transportation policy discriminates against various regions of Canada. In northern Ontario, for example, we possess great wealth in the form of raw materials—minerals and forest products. Over the years we have been hewers of wood and drawers of water. We take the minerals from the ground, cut the trees, load them on to boxcars and ore cars and ship them to southern Ontario or the United States where they are processed for manufacture into goods some of which are subsequently sold to us. Of course, as we export our raw materials we export our jobs. Unemployment in northern Ontario is persistently high. Our people must move out of the region, against their will, to look for jobs in the south where the processing of our raw materials takes place. This persistent lack of job opportunities arises to a large extent from a freight rate system which encourages the export of raw materials as opposed to manufactured goods.

If some businessmen or government agency wanted to set up a plan for processing more of our nickel—for example, in the Sudbury region—or associated metals such as copper, they would find that the level of freight rates would make the venture prohibitive: it would cost more to ship processed goods to southern Ontario than it would to ship nickel. For example, in my constituency of Sault Ste. Marie there is a large steel industry. If we wanted to diversify and carry the processing of the steel further, to embark upon its fabrication for the automobile or the appliance industries, freight rates would work against such diversification. As long as we leave the freight rate system as it is, basically at the discretion of the railway companies to manipulate to their own advantage in accordance with the profit motive, we shall not get the industrial development in northern Ontario that we should be getting.

I turn now to another area of national transportation, the St. Lawrence Seaway. I should like to call attention particularly to what is happening in my area of Sault Ste. Marie. We have one Canadian lock at this important juncture of the Great Lakes. It is a small lock. It has not been upgraded and it is only able to handle about 35 per cent of the ships using the system. There are no tolls on either the Canadian or the United States locks at Sault Ste. Marie, but the Canadian lock provides us with our only option in terms of a Canadian entrance to the upper lakes. Yet the government is hearing representations from the Dominion Marine Association to close the lock as a cost-saving measure.

Mr. Speaker, it costs only $1.1 million a year to run the lock. Closing it would end the Canadian option at that important point on the Seaway system; we would be obliged to rely entirely on the United States facilities. In my opinion, this would indeed be a backward step and I do not think the government would agree to taking it. We should be building a second Canadian lock or, at least, upgrading the one we have in order that we could effectively move goods along the system to the advantage of those who live in my area. In this case the government is in a position where it might reduce subsidies and cut back on costs only to the detriment of citizens in our area who regard the Sault lock as an integral part of the St. Lawrence Seaway system. My plea is that these locks not be downgraded but that they maintain 24-hour operation and be expanded so they are able to fulfil their proper function.

I want to discuss another aspect of our national transportation system. I refer to railway passenger services. Here we can see how the bias of the government is against railway passenger services and in favour of air and bus services. The minister is embarking upon a policy of phasing out one of our transcontinental railway services. Most likely the plan will be to maintain the CPR passenger service from Montreal to Winnipeg and then to split the line into the CN and CPR routes to Vancouver. This will mean leaving communities along the CN line in northern Ontario in the lurch. It will mean unemployment for many railway workers along the transcontinental railway system and, indeed, may mean the death of certain railway towns.

The minister argues that subsidized railways are becoming too costly; therefore he should start phasing out some railway passenger services. The point is that subsidies are necessary to provide service to the people and to keep the cost of goods transported by rail to the regions down to a reasonable level. What the minister fails to tell Canadians, when he talks about the high cost of railway passenger service, is that the government is also subsidizing, but to a much higher degree, other modes of transportation.

In 1973, the last year for which I have figures, all other modes of transportation were subsidized, but indirectly so that we do not see headlines like, "Government spends 'X' millions of dollars on railway subsidies". For example, revenues from air transport paid for only 31 per cent of the costs of that system. Revenues from marine transport paid for only 19 per cent of the cost of operating our marine services. As for road transport, revenues paid 64 per cent of total operating costs. However, revenues gained by the railways paid 74 per cent of the cost of operating the railway system. So that the argument of the minister that he is paying too much in the form of subsidies to the railways just does not hold water, in light of the evidence.

The federal government is building airports and paying personnel to operate those airports. This is a form of indirect subsidy. We know that federal and provincial governments build roads and a new highway today costs about $1 million per mile. That is a form of subsidy to the truckers and private automobile users. The railways, of course, build their own roadbed. I maintain that all modes of transport in Canada today are subsidized for the benefit of the user: no mode of transportation pays its own way.

The government has deliberately allowed rail passenger service to be downgraded. The Minister of Transport admitted this in the House on January 29, 1976, when he said, as reported at page 10437 of Hansard:

> We have operated extensive rail passenger services in Canada. However, they have been allowed to deteriorate so that Canadians no longer have a fair incentive to use them. This was in no way due to any fault on the part of those who operate the trains, but to a combination of management and government policies which could only produce losses and worsening service.

In the same breath, Mr. Speaker, the minister says that Canadians are not using railway passenger service as much as before, and therefore subsidy payments made by the taxpayers are too high, or they are not necessary, and railway passenger service must be reduced. I submit the policy should be the opposite: we should be upgrading our services to encourage use. Railways are more economic in regard to shipping goods and passengers.

In this regard I should like to refer the House to the total amount of subsidies that are paid. The net subsidy for passenger transportation in all modes in 1974 amounted to $909 million. Roads received 62.7 per cent of that total subsidy; air received 22.5 per cent; the railways received 14.8 per cent. In other words, proportionately less subsidy was paid for rail passenger service than for other modes. In terms of energy consumption, railway passenger service is much more economical that any other mode of transportation. Passenger miles per gallon by a DC-9 aircraft averaged out to 34; a B-727 averaged out at 37 passenger miles per gallon; an automobile averaged 63 passenger miles per gallon; a bus 280; whereas a turbo-train averaged 256; and the LRC averaged 303 passenger miles per gallon. So if this government is serious about energy conservation, it should be promoting more passenger rail services. Needless to say, trains cause less pollution than jets, buses or cars. They are also safer, and cheaper for the passenger in terms of energy costs, which are driving up air fares and the cost of operating an automobile.

The government seems to be allowing the CPR gradually to phase out its passenger services, especially in regions like northern Ontario. For example, the CPR wants to end its passenger service between Sault Ste. Marie and Sudbury, yet in light of the evidence that I have put forward it seems to me that logic dictates that the service should be upgraded. We would then be able to co-ordinate schedules and introduce a fast, efficient regional train service in the Sault Ste. Marie-Sudbury-Toronto corridor and the Sault Ste. Marie-Sudbury-Montreal corridor. Upgrading can take place in other areas too. As the Canadian Railway Labour Association said in its brief to the cabinet:

> For example, CN has estimated that 3½-hour train service (competitive with the comparable air trip time) from Toronto to Montreal can be accomplished for $150 million in right-of-way upgrading. By comparison, a new cutoff in Montreal connecting route 20 with the northern autoroute to Mirabel will cost approximately $130 million.

So there is much that can be done in terms of relative costs to make the railway service the kind of service it should be and which Canadians expect it to be. The Liberal government has reneged on its past election promises to create viable passenger service between the regions and to grant money to promote a mass transit system in the larger cities. In past policies, in the policy that is implied in this bill and in other announcements, the Minister of Transport is persisting in the commercial viability, competition and user-pay concept. This is a concept which, sad to say, will discriminate against regions and those who must depend upon rail and other services to promote, co-ordinate and integrate an efficient and economic transportation system. It seems to me that this government is going to repeat the mistakes of the past and will not solve the problems of regional development, of fair cost and access to the services that Canadians expect, if it continues with this legislation and the kinds of precepts the minister has announced.

We know we have an enthusiastic and capable work force in the transportation system whether it be rail, air or marine service. They are the backbone of the system and anxious to serve the public, but they want to be treated fairly. This government's actions in terms of lack of safety and job security, as well as in wages and salaries—the Anti-Inflation Board has rolled back the legitimate wage demands of the workers—are undermining the transportation system. Mr. Justice Hall of the Supreme Court, after looking at all the evidence, came to the conclusion that in 1975 railway workers should have received a 13 per cent wage increase. The Anti-Inflation Board arbitrarily rolled that back to 9.3 per cent, undermining the morale of these very competent workers.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I submit that unless we design a system of national transportation to provide reasonable service at reasonable cost and equity for the regions of Canada, we will be doing a disservice to the Canadian people. It is my opinion that this government, and specifically this legislation, is doing that disservice.

Mr. Art Lee (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to enter this debate. The legislation we are dealing with today is of utmost importance to Canadians. My province of British Columbia entered confederation because of a national transportation policy that resulted in the building of a national railway. Chinese workers were recruited in large numbers to work on the railway that was to bind this nation together. My grandfather was one of those nation-builders. It is because I have an awareness of that history that I applaud the government in its initiative to redefine the framework that would provide us with a transportation policy to meet Canada's future needs.

I welcome the stated policy of the government. Commercial viability, wherever possible, ensures the earnest attempt to minimize government intervention in the marketplace. Equally gratifying is the policy's recognition that some regional areas or some parts of the transportation system where services are required in the national or regional interest but cannot be viably operated on a commercial basis demand the federal government's active support of direct or indirect financial help.

The movement toward re-establishing the policy authority within the government will unquestionably enable the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) to take a much more positive role in developing transportation policies. The initiative to strengthen the minimum and maximum provision of the railway freight rates act is welcome news to westerners. I urge the government to proceed as quickly as possible in this area so that westerners will not continue having to pay a disproportionate amount of freight for manufactured goods from eastern Canada. Westerners will also welcome the stated provisions to regulate the practice of long-haul and short-haul rates by railway companies.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) who delivered the speech for the Minister of Transport, spent a considerable length of time outlining the government's current transportation program. Indeed, it is a bold and imaginative one; but, like any other major policy designed to bind this nation together, it has to be flexible to meet the needs of the diverse areas and regions of our great nation. With that in mind, it is my intention to discuss how this program is affecting the people of British Columbia.

The matters I wish to discuss are as follows: first, Pacific Western Airlines; second, shipping subsidies for west coast shipping; third, urban transportation assistance. Recently, the Supreme Court of Canada held that Her Majesty the Queen, in right of the province of Alberta, was not a person within the meaning of that term in the National Transportation Act and the air carrier regulations. The result of this decision was that the air transport committee of the Canadian Transport Commission was without jurisdiction to require Her Majesty the Queen, in right of the province of Alberta, to obtain the consent of the commission to the acquisition and control of Pacific Western Airlines Limited or to inquire into the question of whether acquisition of the shares was in the public interest.

I submit that this decision of the Supreme Court of Canada did not, however, declare that the air transport committee has no authority to govern Pacific Western Airlines as an air carrier. Federal aviation law is still applicable. The committee in the past held that it had jurisdiction to question whether the movement of key officials and facilities was a breach of the airline's licence to provide adequate equipment, facilities and services in British Columbia. Furthermore, the committee has rightly maintained its supervisory power over tariffs and safety matters. But in the interlocutory hearings before the committee in July, 1976, there was no hearing into the important issue of whether the transfer of Pacific Western Airlines from British Columbia to Alberta would not be in the public interest. With that in mind, I strongly urge the Minister of Transport to grant the petition of the British Columbia government.

The petition requests the Minister of Transport to direct that the air transport committee conduct an inquiry to determine whether the transfer is in the public interest. If there is any doubt on the part of the federal government whether it has the necessary legislative authority, I urge it immediately to enact legislation giving it the power to ensure that the Queen, in right of the province of Alberta and any other province that may in the future become engaged in aviation, is subject to federal law.

Mr. Speaker, I take this position because, first, I strongly feel that the government of Alberta, through its ownership of the airline, will not adequately account for the availability and supply of air transportation services for the people and goods to, from and within British Columbia.

Second, I feel that the government of Alberta, through its ownership of Pacific Western Airlines, will not act in the best interests of British Columbia because the removal of any of the administrative headquarters and/or maintenance activities will adversely affect all areas of the province by eliminating the indirect and direct employment and income derived from the airline.

Third, I feel the government of Alberta, through its ownership of Pacific Western Airlines and its declared intention to focus all future northern expansion through Edmonton, will not adequately allow for a proper development of potential air routes between the interior of British Columbia and the Yukon.

Mr. Paproski: That is not true.

Mr. Lee: Indeed, the minister of transportation for the province of Alberta, the Hon. Hugh M. Horner, is on record in his legislature as stating:

● (1640)

Mr. Speaker, those are the reasons we acquired, in a very bold move, Pacific Western Airlines; so that we could look after the people of Alberta in a very real sense, look after the transportation of goods and strengthen our position in northern development, which is one of the exciting things that will happen in this country in the future. It was acquired, Mr. Speaker, not just as an investment, but as a policy mechanism for the government of Alberta to have some input into how the province developed in the direction that development would take. Let there be no misunderstanding by anybody, relative to the reasons and, indeed, the subsequent acquisition.

Fourth, regional airline policy accounts for the regional make-up and diversity of our nation. But, more important, such policy is a part of national aviation policy. This, in turn, is a part of national transportation policy which helps unify this country as a nation. I feel that if the government of Alberta were allowed to retain ownership, a serious precedent would be established which could lead to other provincial take-overs of regional carriers that would result in the balkanization of national aviation and, in turn, national transportation policy.

Fifth, I feel that there is no social economic justification for the ownership of PWA by the government of Alberta. It should be the principle of any free enterprise government not to enter into public ownership of any business or industry unless it can be clearly established that there is a social need for government ownership and that such business or industry cannot compete effectively in a free market economy without assistance of public ownership. Pacific Western Airlines has a proven track record that shows it does not need direct government intervention of public ownership. It is probably the only air carrier in Canada recently to have made a profit.

Mr. Speaker, the second matter I wish to discuss is that of shipping subsidies for west coast shipping. Clearly, the events of late should be sufficient proof that active federal support and financial assistance is required. If we are to develop the mid and north coast areas of British Columbia pursuant to the federal government's stated policy of regional and northern economic development, transportation in these areas will have to be aided by direct government intervention. The history and track record of private shippers operating in these areas should be proof enough that the principle of commercial viability is inapplicable. My colleagues, the hon. member for Coast Chilcotin (Mr. Pearsall), the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Anderson), and the hon. member for Skeena (Mrs. Campagnolo) have during the past year and a half forcefully made this point.

It is, then, gratifying to hear the Minister of Justice, on behalf of the Minister of Transport, stating that if such a case is made, federal financial assistance and support should follow. He said:

> Our view is that the role of the government should vary according to the nature of the services and region concerned. Those services which are well developed and mature should be operated on a commercially viable basis within a general policy and regulatory framework provided by the government. Hence, in those cases where there is effective competition, rates and services should be determined largely through the forces of the marketplace. Yet in other regions or in other parts of the transportation system where services are required in the national or regional interest, but cannot achieve commercial viability or the required degree of technological development, the federal government is prepared to provide active support and financial assistance.

Related to this issue of shipping subsidies is the matter of the maintenance of a work force at the port of Prince Rupert. Since the cessation of Northland operations, the work available to the longshoremen at the port of Prince Rupert has not been sufficient. Recently, the British Columbia Maritime Employers Association and the ILWU presented a joint brief about this matter to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that the federal government has committed itself finally to establishing the port of Prince Rupert as another major gateway to the Pacific by building the Fairview dock and indicating that the grain facilities will be expanded, I submit that the federal government should protect its interests in ensuring that there is an adequate work force when the port of Prince Rupert finally comes on stream in the near future.

If there is no adequate work force, this new major gateway to the Pacific would soon have the reputation for chronic labour shortages, and certainly this is not what it needs or deserves. Like the port of Vancouver, the port of Prince Rupert must be considered a major, integral part of the government's initiative of developing and facilitating western access to the Pacific rim countries.

Mr. Speaker, the third and final issue I wish to comment on is the urban transportation assistance program. When the federal government announced its initiative in this area, it clearly made a commitment to help alleviate the problems of urban transit. The announcement was made jointly by the Minister of Transport and the former minister of state for urban affairs, the present Minister of National Defence (Mr. Danson). I quote from their joint press release dated August 27, 1976, as follows:

> The federal government recognizes the importance of establishing an urban transportation policy which will conserve energy and improve the urban environment through a shift in urban transportation use from private automobiles to public transit facilities. At the same time the government has a commitment to restrain expenditure increases which would arise from substantial new federal programs.

Unquestionably, the federal government should be concerned with restraint; and as of late it has been doing an excellent job. Of equal importance, the government should be actively supporting concrete means that will enable it to achieve its goal of energy conservation. I submit that the urban transportation assistance program is one of these means. In view of the high costs of gasoline and road building, I submit this government should be actively supporting and financially aiding public transportation systems in large metropolitan areas.

Approximately half the population in British Columbia live in the lower mainland. The bulk of them are commuters. The lower mainland, in comparison to other metropolitan areas of comparable size, is faced with a dearth of transportation alternatives. Montreal and Toronto can look to subway and freeway systems which do not exist in the Vancouver area. This need for a lower mainland transportation policy was recognized and became an integral part of the Liveable Regional Plan. This is a blueprint of proposals to manage the growth of greater Vancouver. It was funded by the federal Department of Urban Affairs and carried out by the Greater Vancouver Regional District which is our form of regional government for the municipalities in the lower mainland.

The Liveable Regional Plan proposes a five-part strategy for managing growth in the region. Briefly, they are: first, achieve residential growth targets in each part of the region; second, promote a balance of jobs to population in each part of the region; third, create regional town centres; fourth, protect and develop regional open space; fifth, provide a transit-orientated transportation system linking residential areas, regional town centres and major work areas. It is proposal No. 5 that I wish to discuss in greater detail. Fully cognizant of the complexity of the transportation issue and the cost, the GVRD has proposed a three-part strategy to move people and goods efficiently and as cheaply as possible. Firstly, it proposes growth management. Essentially, what this means is to put more housing where the jobs are in order to limit traffic growth and ensure proper planning that will enable de-emphasis on the automobile in favour of public transportation.

Second, the GVRD has recommended a number of ideas to make better use of existing programs. For example "Turn Down Traffic" talks about car pooling and staggered work hours. I should add that this program was funded by the Department of Urban Affairs and is now being fully implemented. Third, there is a need for new facilities. I am gratified to see that the GVRD rejects costly stop-gap auto bridges and freeways. It estimates that today under 10 per cent of the daily trips in the region are made on public transit. With the expressed desire to increase this to 25 per cent to 30 per cent over 10 years, active and financial support from not just the provincial but also the federal government is mandatory.

The GVRD has proposed: first, light rapid transit; second, North Shore passenger ferries; third, suburban rail from Vancouver on the CPR mainline along Burrard Inlet to Port Moody and Coquitlam; fourth, fast bus; fifth, articulated routes for streetcars or trolley buses; and sixth, improved local bus routes. I submit that the proposal of the GVRD emphasizes getting the best transportation bargain. It emphasizes minimizing the need for travel by co-ordinating transportation with growth management. As many hon. members of this House have said, this is even more important because the days of abundant and cheap fuel are gone. The federal Department of Energy, Mines and Resources has accurately painted the future of doubling fuel prices and Canada as an energy-importing nation. These are compelling reasons for the federal government to be the leader in causing a turnabout in stressing efficiency and public transit. Lately the government of British Columbia appears to be in a position to respond to the GVRD and the people. Certainly the federal government should be in a position to respond as well.

Related to this matter of urban transportation assistance is a problem which adversely affects the people of my riding and that of my neighbour, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt). The city of Vancouver has designated a number of city streets in our ridings as truck routes. To name a few, they are Powell Street, East Hastings, McGill and Kingsway. Heavy trucks use these streets, and the result has been an environmental problem of noise pollution and constant danger to life, especially to small children. Since the opening of the National Harbours Board container facility, Vanterm, there has been an ever-steady increase in the amount of truck traffic on these designated truck routes. Unquestionably, I submit, Vanterm has compounded the problem. With respect to a solution, I have suggested the use of the Grandview cut as the major east-west truck route. Support for this has come from the city of Vancouver. The reason I raise this matter is that the urban transportation assistance program could be used as a source of funds for this proposal.

In conclusion, I again want to congratulate the government and the Minister of Transport for the initiative in this legislation. The re-establishment of policy authority in the Minister of Transport is unquestionably the right move.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, it is a matter of considerable gratification to me that this bill should be brought forward at this time because it gives me an opportunity to enlarge on some matters upon which I have been trying to have dealings with the minister but I have not been very successful. I will not continue the theme of the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Lee) who was congratulating the minister. I merely congratulate the minister on his timing.

Fundamental to a complete understanding of the attitude of the members of my party toward this legislation is an understanding of our attitude toward the minister who introduced Bill C-33 and the degree of credibility he can command in the House on this issue. We all remember the famous statement which came from the benches opposite, not very far from where the minister sits, to the effect that the Department of Transport was in a mess. That goes without saying. This bill is an attempt, presumably, to put the department in some order.

When we consider the manner in which this minister has treated the House within the last week, I think we have some idea of the degree to which he can command our support of the matters he raises. We need only cast our minds back to last week when in the course of some 48 hours the minister made two fundamental statements outside the House touching on the transportation systems of this country.

One announcement dealt with passenger services. He announced a complete revamping of passenger services. The second announcement dealt with the St. Lawrence Seaway in two respects. The first dealt with the financing of the Seaway and the second with tolls. Both these announcements were made outside the House and the minister deprived members of this House of an opportunity to question him on these initiatives. Hearing comments from the official opposition and other parties in this House on these initiatives is from my point of view fundamental to the proper working of the House. The minister has shown disdain and scorn for this House. It is, therefore, very difficult for us to take seriously the matters he brings forward.

Mr. Speaker, I would be grateful if I could call it five o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters)—Consumer Affairs—Position of CMHC on use of aluminum wiring in dwellings; the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser)—Labour Conditions—Statement of minister on government's accommodation of labour—Government position.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions and public bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Notice of motion No. 4, in the name of the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Some hon. Members: Stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The motion stands at the request of the government.

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe it is agreed that we proceed with notice of motion No. 7 standing in the name of the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) and that all other motions before that be allowed to stand.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, just so that the practice of this House shall not be derogated from, it must be clearly understood that notwithstanding this proposal which may come from the parliamentary secretary and which is accepted by someone on behalf of the opposition, all those items affected stand at the request of the government, because that is traditional and it is a practice of this House that any deferment is at the request of the government.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REVIEW OF ALL ASPECTS OF PROGRAMS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should give serious consideration to a reference to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs to examine and review all aspects of veterans affairs in relation to (a) the services program (b) war veterans allowances (c) the Civilian War Allowances Act (d) supplementary financial assistance on the basis of need (e) hospitalization and medicare assistance, with particular attention to the results of the progress in the transfer of veterans hospitals to other levels of government or agencies (f) educational assistance for veterans and the pensioned children of the deceased veterans (g) specialized services for blind, deaf, paraplegic veterans (h) counselling service (i) reviewing the need for increasing grants and contributions to the army benevolent fund, the Royal Canadian Legion, Canadian Veterans Association of the U.K., Commonwealth Graves Commission, United Nations Memorial Cemetery in Korea (j) the consideration of grants to other veterans' organizations in Canada (k) examining the need for improvements under the Pensions Act, with particular reference to the recommendation of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs to provide pensions for widows whose deceased husbands were receiving 48 per cent or less (l) the Pension Commission (m) the Pensions Review Board (n) the Bureau of Pensions Advocate (o) assessing the progress under the special housing program for veterans (p) considering the need for increases in funding towards the Last Post fund and assistance for funerals, burials and headstones (q) reviewing the P.W. Compensation Act and considering amendments to include First World War veterans, escapees and evaders (r) other matters, pertinent to Canada's obligation to its veterans.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner).]

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is fortunate that our rules provide an opportunity during private members' hour to focus attention on matters which, unfortunately, do not seem to achieve national attention even though the veterans community consists of approximately two million of our population, comprising some 885,000 veterans plus their dependants. They deserve a hearing. Some hon. members are concerned about the veterans of this country. But there are some hard facts to be known, and I think it is time to put them in their proper perspective.

Even though we who hold a particular interest for veterans keep repeating to ourselves that we have the best veterans' legislation in the world, I suggest , that we do not have it. If we did have it we would not be in the embarrassing position, in 1977, some 58 years after World War I, 31 years after World War II and 20 years after the Korean conflict, of not having provided for a veterans' charter which serves the veteran and his dependants, and we should not face the many glaring inequities still existing in our veterans' legislation.

I want to put some further glaring examples on record. Hon. members will not be surprised when I point out, again, the discrimination existing under the Pension Act whereby widows of veterans who died with a disability pension of less than 48 per cent are discarded by the department and thrown into the hands of provincial welfare systems unless the death was attributable to the pensionable condition. Of the 85,724 married pensioners, 68,526 are between the 5 per cent and 45 per cent category, and while many of them may have other income which might preclude the need, there must be a sizeable proportion of widows who are forsaken by the government and must rely on the welfare program. This is an embarrassment to us all.

The inclusion of these widows for pension was a recommendation of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs arising out of the Hermann report on the need to compensate prisoners of war. Naturally, this government turned it down with the excuse that they could not afford to pay the $40 million or $50 million it would cost. I will try to point out the weaknesses still existing in the legislation and explain the discrepancies existing in that the department cannot seem to recognize the lack of equality as between two pieces of legislation.

Under the Pension Act a married veteran receiving a 48 per cent disability pension, with no children, receives $347.88. On his death, his wife receives $417.47, or some $70 more, which is fair and equitable. But the widow of a veteran who was receiving 47 per cent, or just $34.78 less, receives nothing unless—and I repeat—the death was attributable to his pensionable condition.

On the other hand, let us look at the war veteran's allowance recipient. If married, he receives $392.49 minimum, or $462.49 on a needs basis. If he or his wife can work, he is entitled to casual earnings of $188 per month, for a total of $580.49. On his death, the widow of the war veteran's allowance recipient is entitled to draw the married rate for one year. She then reverts to the single rate of either $270.16, or $355.16, if she can earn under the casual earnings provision.

I think, too, that we ought to look into the discrepancies which arise form relating disability pensions to war veterans' allowances. These confirm the need for a comprehensive review of the entire question. Let us consider the benefits to be derived under both sides of the veterans' charter. I hope hon. members are paying attention and will recognize the existence of obvious discrepancies. I ask hon. members to consider the following examples and compare benefits, taking into account that one of the benefits is for disability while the allowances are designed for a pre-aging condition.

A single recipient under WVA receives an entitlement of $230.16 which is indexed quarterly. On the basis of need he may be eligible for a further $40 per month, for a total of $270.16. The single disability pensioner, on the same basis, must have a disability of 60 per cent to be eligible for that amount. I think hon. members agree that a 60 per cent disability is pretty serious. Further, if the WVA recipient can work, he can earn $125 per month, to give him a maximum of $355.16. In order to reach that pension level the disability pensioner must have a 60 per cent disability.

I come now to the case of a married war veteran's allowance recipient with no children. His basic allowance is $392.49, and in the case of need he can be eligible for a further $70, for a total of $462.49. The disability pensioner must have a disability of at least 70 per cent to qualify for that amount. If the married WVA recipient can earn a partial living, he is eligible for casual earnings of $188 per month, giving him the maximum earnings of $580.49. This compares with the allowance of a pensioner with an 85 per cent disability.

To take the matter one step further, a married veteran with two children under WVA can reach a maximum earnings figure of $701.27, made up of the basic $392.49 plus $120.78 for two children up to the age of 25 if they are in university or other institution of learning, and $188 in casual earnings. To be entitled to the same amount a disability pensioner must have a disability of 85 per cent.

In addition, there is another variation with regard to drug care. The war veteran's allowance recipient has access to all the drugs he requires, yet the disability pensioner can only qualify for the drugs relating to his pensionable condition. It should be obvious that these discrepancies justify the presentation of my motion, and I ask for unanimous consent to refer the whole veterans' charter to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs.

On the other hand, any veteran who qualifies for a disability pension of 5 per cent, which would give him the meagre pension of $27.82, single, or $34.78 married, is eligible to apply for war veteran's allowance. It should be obvious that disability pensioners who earn no other income could qualify for a war veteran's allowance far above their present pension. Some of our veterans are not aware of this situation; consequently, they are losing many dollars of income for which they could qualify, and they could perhaps protect their wives after their death since widows of recipients of war veteran's allowance are eligible for allowances.

Statistics show that some 68,524 veterans between the 5 per cent and 45 per cent categories may be losing many dollars of income, to say nothing of the loss of protection for their wives who cared for them through their suffering, or for the widows of veterans. But these inequities are not recognized by the "secret societies" of the government, the experts on veterans affairs. I am referring, for example, to the group known as the management by objectives committee, the organizational effectiveness group and the management advisory services group. It is the job of such organizations to redefine, to keep a watch on legislation affecting veterans and make sure that it is to the benefit of our veterans.

While we are talking about discrimination against widows, I am wondering about the concerns of the status of women council. What are they doing? Clearly, they are not aware of this discrepancy, which only emphasizes the fact of, diminishing concern for the veterans of our country and their widows. I am thinking of veterans or widows with meagre pensions, with pensions based on 48 per cent of disability.

Another matter that indicates that changing conditions require constant attention is the basic rate of pension. In 1972 the rate was finally established relative to the average wage of five public service groups. It has now become obvious, because of an increase in the wages of the people in the public service, that the veteran has fallen considerably behind and that amending legislation is necessary to correct this variance. This question was brought to the attention of the minister forcibly when the Hong Kong veterans wrote pointing out the salary levels of the five categories of public servants on which the 1972 rates were based. They gave the list of the composite group of public service employees. The average earnings were $8,501. Applying the 1976 income tax exemption for a single person, the taxable income was $6,161.

Federal and Ontario income tax on this amount, based on 1976 rates, will be $1,285, leaving a net income of $7,216. They point out, further, that the 1977 annual basic pension rate for a 100 per cent single pensioner is $6,679. Therefore, the pensioner is now behind his counterpart by $536.56 or $44.72 a month.

Another matter which indicates that changing conditions require attention is the basic rate of pension. That change is with regard to indexing of WVA benefits for those over 65 years of age. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and I have brought this utter confusion to the attention of the House. When the veteran is over 65 years of age and his pension is indexed and at the same time his WVA is indexed, he loses the war veterans' allowance indexing in favour of the old age security.

Disability pensioners are also losing out on income as a result of the 5 per cent graduation in classes of pension. For example, under one classification pensioners assessed at 18 per cent to 22 per cent are all paid at the 20 per cent rate. Therefore, pensioners at 18 per cent get the same amount as their comrades at 22 per cent. The same situation exists in the other classes. This indicates an inequality which should be reviewed.

While legislation has been introduced to allow shortening of time of qualification of emigrants from five to three years, as pointed out by my colleague from Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), under the new old age security rules, a former resident who had 20 years prior legal service after age 18 would be entitled to receive a full pension abroad without returning to Canada. Even though it does not apply in some cases, is there any reason why a war veteran who has to come back to Canada for 365 days to qualify should not be given the same preference? Changes should be made to assist the World War I veteran.

There is another item of discrimination. Male veterans must be 60 years of age in order to qualify for war veterans allowance while female veterans can qualify at age 55. This, too, should be reviewed and taken into consideration by the committee in order to bring our veterans' charter in line with changing conditions and to recognize the service.

While we who sat on the veterans affairs committee can stick out our chests and boast about the fact that we were able to get compensation for veterans who were prisoners or war, there are many factors that have come to our attention since and which were not included in the act. We either forgot or ignored World War I veterans who were prisoners of war. Even though representation was made, we did not take into consideration the escapee or invader, some of whom suffered more than those who were captured. We failed to recognize the veteran who was incarcerated for only three months. A person must have been incarcerated for at least three months before he can qualify. We failed to recognize that disability pensioners at 90 per cent, who qualified under the prisoners of war compensation act for the largest amount or 20 per cent, loses out by 10 per cent because of the maximum 100 per cent section in the act.

Another main concern of veterans across the country is as a result of the government's decision in 1963 to transfer hospitals to non-departmental agencies. While the principle may have been logical, the results on a good number of occasions leave much to be desired. I can substantiate this statement since I visited, with members of the caucus committee on veterans affairs, some of the hospitals already transferred. Whoever decided on this policy—and I do not quarrel with the decision made in 1963—and promised priority care and that domiciliary care and chronic case beds would be available on a priority basis, as well as active care, was less than capable in projecting the needs of veterans as they grow older and require extended care, more so in 1977 than ever before.

This is borne out by the fact that in the hospitals transferred, waiting time for veterans is up to two years for a bed. A prime example of this lack of attention is the transfer of the Veterans Pavilion in Victoria to the Jubilee Hospital. As a result of the protests by concerned veterans associations in Victoria, several visits were made by the minister and his staff to hear the complaints of those who care. I need do no more than give a comment on a report by the department as to the availability of domiciliary and chronic care beds made just three months ago on November 10, 1976, referring to waiting lists. In Saint John, New Brunswick, there is apparently a great shortage of beds. It is impossible to estimate the waiting time. In Vancouver and Victoria applicants are on a points system, as well as having to wait for a vacancy. The applicant with the lowest points could in some cases wait forever. Is this the way to look after our veterans?

Apart from neglect of Canada's commitment to veterans, the government gave as the reasons for the transfers the fact that they could not keep doctors because active care is not required. This I quarrel with because according to people I have talked to there are enough retired dedicated medical doctors who will care for their comrades. In spite of this, the government is handing over to the provinces not only hundreds of millions of dollars in buildings and equipment but hundreds of acres of valuable land. In addition, they are paying out more millions of dollars to the provinces to provide the care and the beds. Surely, the least a veteran can expect is fulfilment of the commitment made to him by those who asked him many years ago to serve his country. I repeat that these facts emphasize the need for a complete review by the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs before any further transfers of hospital beds are made. In fact, this should be done immediately.

I now wish to deal with the housing legislation. With the approach of the March 31, 1977, deadline for additional loans under the Veterans Land Act, I think it is worth while pointing out that we can now say, "We told them so." I was happy to read in the annual report of the Department of Veterans Affairs that as a result of the opposition forcing the government to extend the act for one year, approval of 1,291 new small holding establishments and 13 new farm establishments was made. Additional loans were made to 1,905 veterans already settled under the act, and a total of 533 veterans were able to build new homes, for a total expenditure of $34 million.

Not only can we say, "We told them so", but we were able to prove the supposed experts wrong, those supposed experts who wrote columns trying to convince the citizenry that they were right, when they did not know what they were talking about. In this connection, I commend Canadian Press for having told our story impartially when we fought and won the battle for some 3,742 veterans, but I am also happy to condemn the few to whom I referred beforehand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret having to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired. He may only continue with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. Marshall: The government was also forced to introduce a new housing program which could be improved by a review by the committee. In this regard I refer to the need to expand the present program to include home repairs, similar to the residential rehabilitation assistance program now in existence, whereby grants of $3,750 can be directed to those on low and fixed incomes of $6,000 or less. In spite of the fact that I keep getting the answer that these grants are applicable to all Canadians, the loans are restricted to areas designated by the provinces, which leaves many veterans out and denies them the opportunity to take advantage of the program, which, again, shows lack of interest in the needs of veterans.

The utter absurdity of the phasing out of the act is borne out by the fact that it was not costing the taxpayer money. It is another example of the failure of Canada's commitment to the veterans, along with the further step by the government to phase out the department. Repayment of principal amounted to $48.5 million dollars, with interest received of some $28 million. I will always hold glory in the fact that our motion, which extended the act, served 3,742 veterans who otherwise would have been left out.

While time does not permit me to cover the remainder of the 17 points in my motion, may I group many of them by pointing out that the government should take a hard look, as a result of inflation, at increasing funding for funerals, burials and headstones under The Last Post fund and other benevolent funds. It is obvious, when one reads the financial statements of the benevolent fund that while the veteran population is decreasing, expenditures are increasing; due, of course, to inflation. When one examines the estimates for this year, it is evident that grants and contributions to the army benevolent fund, the Royal Canadian Legion, the Canadian Veterans Association of the U.K., and the Commonwealth Graves Commission, should be increased. Recognition should also be considered for veterans organizations which are serving the veteran population; I mention in particular War Amputations of Canada which for many years has led efforts to provide improved prosthetic devices for veteran amputees.

I thank hon. members for extending the time available to me. I could go on for many more minutes. I only hope I have made some impression on the members on the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs and others. I understand there are some 50 veterans still sitting in this House, and they should be proud that the legislation is to be reviewed at the earliest opportunity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak on the motion which has been proposed. It is broad enough in its terms to enable us to discuss a number of subjects, and this afternoon I wish to mention two or three which are of particular interest to me. The first concerns administration of the hospitals which remain the responsibility of the Department of Veterans Affairs, in particular, the Ste. Anne de Bellevue Veterans Hospital in my riding. The present situation is causing anxiety among both the veterans who work at this hospital and the veterans who are patients there. Their concern arises at the prospect of impending transfer of responsibility to the provincial government in connection with which discussions have been going on for some time.

I have placed many questions on the order paper on this subject and have received a variety of answers. It seems that another hospital presently in the hands of the department in the province of Quebec, the Queen Mary Veterans Hospital, was being turned over to the provincial authority. In fact, a recent answer says there is an agreement in principle that the Queen Mary Hospital in Montreal will be transferred, though negotiations in connection with the transfer have not yet been completed. Since then there has, of course, been a change in the provincial government and it now seems as if this particular transfer is not to take place, at least in the foreseeable future.

The problem in connection with the Ste. Anne hospital is the continuing uncertainty. Employees are worried about their security. They are concerned about their benefits. Moreover, the situation with regard to the patients themselves is not clear. Not all the patients are the responsibility of the federal government. According to an answer to a question of mine on the order paper, there are 845 patients of whom approximately one-third are considered to be a federal responsibility. The other two-thirds, although they may be veterans, are concerned about what might happen to them if the hospital is transferred.

At Senneville Lodge, which is part of the Ste. Anne de Bellevue Hospital, there are 136 patients at the present time. The lodge is a very old building. It was the intention of the federal government to construct a new building, and some $6 million has been allocated for that purpose. It was assumed that if the Ste. Anne veterans' hospital was transferred to the province, along with it might go a lump sum to cover the construction of the new facilities. Nevertheless, because of the delay and the lack of decision nothing has happened and no construction is planned. In fact, at the present time the situation is completely dormant. I therefore propose, and will continue to suggest, that the Department of Veterans Affairs make up its mind by stating there will be no further discussion on the subject for a period of not less than three years or, better still, five years, during which time normal responsibility would be exercised. This would put an end to the immediate anxiety of patients and employees.

In the department itself, the question of morale among the staff is one which must be considered. The recent announcement that many of the branches of the department would be transferred en bloc to Prince Edward Island met with anything but a favourable reaction among employees. A release issued by employees of the department gives expression to this concern and draws attention to the disruption of family life, the main reason given by the overwhelming majority of departmental employees for rejecting the transfer to Charlottetown.

According to answers given by employees of the department responding to a Public Service Alliance circular, many members of the veterans affairs component last November rejected the idea of a transfer by some 90 per cent; only 5 per cent favoured the move, and the remainder claimed they were undecided at that time because of lack of information as to the government's intentions. This is understandable. Apparently, according to an announcement by the department, relocation will not take place until 1980 or early 1981, and employees will not be required to consider their decision to relocate until at least another three years. Therefore we have a situation where the employees will not be spoken to until the end of the current year, and they are going to be discussing something which will not happen for at least another three years.

Although I fully support the principle of decentralization, I find it strange that the department should proceed in this manner, leaving everyone so uneasy. Surely if we are going to decentralize the department, the first thing to do is to discuss it with the employees in order to find out precisely what the effect is going to be, to familiarize them with the intentions of the department concerning the problems everyone will have, and then, after all these decisions have been made on location, the cost of relocation and so on, make the announcement. This seems to me to be the logical way to proceed. It is difficult for me to understand why there has to be such a complicated procedure as to talk about three years hence, thus leaving everyone so uneasy.

I placed four questions on this subject on the order paper on October 29 last, questions Nos. 859, 862, 863 and 865, and they are still there today. I find it strange that the department is unable to answer the first of these, for example, which inquires how many square feet of office space is presently occupied by these various departments which are intending to move. I then asked whether any of the space is rented and, if so, what were the terms of the lease and the termination date. I would have assumed that a simple question, asking the Department of Veterans Affairs how much space it was using, whether it leased the space and what were the terms of the lease, covers information that could have been obtained within a matter of a few days at most, and the question answered probably within two or three weeks. However, I reiterate that on October 29 the question was put on the order paper and, some five months later, it is still on the order paper. No wonder there is some dismay on the part of the employees.

If I can go back to the release to the employees of the Veterans Affairs Department, it even reiterates that only about half of my questions have been answered, and that most of the responses provided by the Veterans Affairs Department have been uninformative. These questions are put on the order paper for a multitude of reasons, one of which is that information will be made public. In this case the employees themselves would have had a better idea of precisely what is involved in the move. Obviously many of these employees are now well established in Ottawa. Many have purchased houses and have mortgage obligations and so on. Many have wives working in Ottawa. They have children going to school in Ottawa. Many employees in the department are French speaking employees. Their children go to French language schools. They are asking what is going to happen to them when they go to Charlottetown. Are there going to be school facilities in the French language in Charlottetown? These are normal questions that one would think would be answered prior to announcing any move.

Again quoting the press release in the employees' newspaper:

> Mr. MacDonald admitted, however, his department has not analyzed the implications of relocation on DVA staff and no employee assistance policy has been adopted.

I think that is a dreadful admission, and I am sorely disappointed that it has been made by a minister of our own government.

When we are discussing language, some interesting things come from questions. In the whole of the DVA in 1975 there were 122 employees whose mother tongue was English. In 1976 the number had increased to 211, or an additional 89 employees. French bilinguals increased from 732 in 1975 to 786 in 1976, or 54 additional employees. Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, this information was given in answer to two questions of mine, Nos. 856 and 1,460 in this session of parliament.

This information raises some interesting questions concerning the attitude of the department toward blingualism. In the national capital region, 39 whose mother tongue is English were bilingual; in 1976 that number had increased to 87, a plus of 48, while those of French mother tongue diminished from 180 in 1975 to 165 in 1976. Note that unilingual employees, French and English, have dropped by 70; and bilingual employees have increased by 34, leaving a reduction in staff of 36 employees. Yet the total of employees in 1975 compared with 1976 shows a decrease of only six employees. In other words, I am even questioning here the arithmetic of the department.

Worthy of note is the fact that the number of bilingual employees has increased from 39 in 1975 to 87 in 1976. This does not mean that they are bilingual in the true sense of the word but probably that they meet the requirements of the department. There are examples where employees have spent a number of months at language school and since they have been in the department have not spoken a word of French. This, of course, is one of the problems all departments are facing these days. In a question answered only last week I suggested that the government should look at the effect on second generation children in a family when there has been an encouragement to bilingualism, we find the situation where the Francophone bilingual tends to become more Anglophone, and the probability is that his children will tend to be more English than French.

In other words, whereas the teaching of French to an Anglophone—in my opinion, sometimes a rather futile exercise in the public service though certainly a very expensive exercise—will not in any way destroy the capability of that family to speak their mother tongue, English, the chances are that the teaching of English in a Francophone family will encourage its descendants to speak the other language, the language most often used in this capital of Ottawa, namely, English.

What we have to face is the fact that the more often used bilingual in the public service, who frankly is the Francophone, is being torn away from his culture by this encouragement toward bilingualism; and I have suggested that the easiest way to handle this is to hire more Francophones at different levels in the public service.

I have brought out these points, Mr. Speaker, because even the Royal Canadian Legion reacted to this announcement of the DVA move. Their concern was efficiency. They support the principle of decentralization, as we all do, but they felt, as I feel, that there have been too many indications that this department has a kind of knee jerk reaction—there is lack of planning, there is no evidence that the move has been planned in advance, there is no evidence that the effects of the lengthy, drawn out discussions concerning transfer of hospitals in the province of Quebec have been adequately considered. The result is low morale among the employees, a situation which, in my opinion, should be corrected by a full investigation.

The motion proposed by the hon. member is complex and not one which in its entirety I would be willing to support. But the principle of looking into the Department of Veterans Affairs I support 100 per cent.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend most warmly the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St.Barbe (Mr. Marshall) for having put down the motion that we are discussing this afternoon. He indicated it contains some 17 points, so even he was not able to deal with all of them. I certainly will not try to do that either, particularly in view of the fact that this is a private members' hour and time is our enemy.

I wish to speak about three or four subjects mentioned in the motion, on all of which the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe touched. Before I do so may I say that I welcome the intervention of the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert). In particular I am glad that he raised the question of the proposal to move the Department of Veterans Affairs from Ottawa to Prince Edward Island. I think many of us share his view that we favour the principle of decentralization of government departments but we insist that each case should be looked at on its merits.

The Department of Veterans Affairs exists for the purpose of providing service to our veterans. Some of us are not sure that that angle has been completely looked into in planning for this move. In view of the fact that nothing is going to happen for two, three or four years, I hope the considerations raised today by the hon. member for Vaudreuil will be looked at by the department and the government. I join with the hon. member in expressing regret that there was so little consultation—indeed practically none—in advance of the announcement either with the employees of the department or with the various units that make up the Department of Veterans Affairs. I could stay on that subject, but I would rather underline a few other points mentioned in the motion which were discussed by the hon. member who put this motion before us this afternoon.

At the top of the list I mention the need to do something about what we all know as the 48 per cent rule. In my view, for the law to continue to deny to the widows of veterans, where a veteran's pension was less than 48 per cent, a pension as of right, is most unfair. The view that there should be pro rata pensions for those widows has been put forward officially four, five or six times to my knowledge. It was in the report of the Woods Commission a number of years ago, and again in the report of the commission headed by Dr. Hermann on the question of prisoners of war. To my knowledge the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs two, three or four times recommended the implementation of Mr. Justice Mervyn Woods' recommendation or the recommendation made by Dr. Hermann. The idea is not just one that some of us in opposition put forward. It has been around for a long time. I think it is fair to say that the evidence will bear out when we discussed this matter in the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs that the officials were ready to comment on it; so it is obvious they have thought about it as well. I plead that it not be allowed to drag on much longer.

Another issue mentioned by the hon. member who proposed this motion is compensation for prisoners of war. We did well a few years ago when we provided compensation for Hong Kong prisoners of war, and again a year or so ago when we improved that compensation and established pensions for those who were prisoners of war in Europe.

One might raise some question about whether the amounts are adequate, but the main deficiencies are those already mentioned by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe. The first is the failure to include prisoners of war from World War I, and I hope we get around to that before they are all dead. There cannot be many left. To try to explain to them that somehow there was a difference, just does not wash.

Then there is the problem of the escapees and evaders. This was covered in the report the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs made to the House after studying the Hermann report. I regret that when the government brought in the legislation these items were left out. They were not forgotten; it was a case of deliberately leaving them out. Like the sponsor of this motion, I think this matter should be dealt with without further delay.

I underscore very heavily the plea made by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe about the rate of the 100 per cent disability pension. It took 40 or 50 years of activity in parliament to get that rate back to what it was when it was first established in the 1920's, namely, a rate that bore some relationship to income in the Public Service of Canada. In 1972 we established that the rate of the 100 per cent war disability pension was to be the equal of the average income of five selected categories in the public service. They are low categories in terms of wages, but at any rate five were selected and their average, taking income tax into account, was established as the basis of the 100 per cent disability pension in 1972.

That decision was made on the basis of a report from a very important tripartite committee which consisted of representatives of veterans' organizations for one part, the Department of Veterans Affairs for another, and the Canadian Pension Commission for the third. When that tripartite committee recommended that the 100 per cent disability pension be established at the rate I have indicated, the composite average, it also recommended it continue to be tied to that average. We supported that, and recommended that as the wages of those five groups in the public service went up, the 100 per cent disability should go up by the same amount. I was elated when we got that recommendation from the tripartite committee, and I was elated when the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs supported it.

I can think of another instance—although I do not want to tread on any toes in these few minutes—where we have used the composite industrial index instead of the cost of living index, but in this case the government did not accept either the recommendation of the tripartite committee or of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. Instead of saying that the 100 per cent rate would remain whatever the level was for that composite group, it said we would start with an absolute sum for 1972 and after that escalate only by the rise in the cost of living index or the consumer price index. The hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe has already put the figures on the record, but the fact of the matter is that in 1977 the 100 per cent rate, which was the equivalent of the composite rate in 1972, is $536.56 per year, or $44.72 per month behind the composite rate of those five groups in the public service. This is a disgrace, Mr. Speaker. It took nearly 50 years to get back to the original decision of the 1920's. Some of us were afraid that, because of attaching it to the CPI rather than the composite index of those five groups, this would happen. It has happened sooner, however, and gone further than we feared. I suggest that needs to be corrected. But since this is private members' hour, and one of the sins opposition members do not indulge in is to talk till six o'clock. I must wind these remarks to a close.

I want to support the idea that a particular area for overhaul is the War Veterans Allowance Act. I could go into this in some detail, but I think I shall make my point by citing a case that is in my mind at the moment because of a letter I received a few days ago. It will demonstrate how unfair this situation can become. I received this letter last week from a woman in the province of New Brunswick, the wife of a veteran who had served six years in World War II. At the end of the war he was invalided home, and he has been in poor health ever since, indeed for more than 30 years. He has been in and out of hospital and he has had all kinds of treatment, but even so the maximum disability pension he has been able to get is only 15 per cent. That being the case, he was entitled to the war veterans allowance, so he got it. When he was 65, he became entitled to old age security and the guaranteed income supplement. These amounts plus his 15 per cent disability pension have reduced the amount he receives as a war veterans allowance, so that his total is not above the ceiling that is allowed under the War Veterans Allowance Act for a married veteran.

Fine, so far so good. But the wife writes to me and says that she will be 60 in a few weeks and she has been told that she will then have to apply for the spouse's allowance. That is true. The law does not say she must apply, but the law says that if she does not apply for the spouse's allowance she will be treated as if she is getting it and the war veterans allowance will be cut off. She will be treated by the War Veterans Allowance Board as though she had applied for the spouses' allowance. So she applies for the spouse's allowance, the war veterans allowance is cut off. So there is no change; the same number of dollars will be coming into the home of this veteran of World War II and his wife.

But, she says to me, having seen certain things in the paper, what happens if her husband dies—his health is very poor—before she reaches 65? She is told she will lose everything. That is true. If he dies before she reaches 65, his old age security is dropped, his guaranteed income supplement is dropped, his 15 per cent disability pension dies with him because it is less than 48 per cent, and her spouse's allowance will be dropped because she is no longer a spouse but a widow.

The only thing I could say to her by way of hope was that in that circumstances, of course, she would be able to reapply for the allowance for a widow under the War Veterans Allowance Act. Nevertheless, she faces that prospect, and it is one, I suppose, that will probably happen, knowing her age and his health. What he is now getting will all drop because of the means test on the war veterans allowance and because of the marital test or the spouse's allowance.

Surely we can do better for a veteran who saw six years' service in World War II and who has suffered so much in the 30-odd years since then. Surely we can do a lot better for his wife and potential widow.

To do these things, the various pieces of legislation we spoke about need to be reconsidered and, in addition to what we should do about the Pension Act, the 48 per cent rule, the prisoners of war and so on, we now need a thorough overhaul of the War Veterans Allowance Act to make it come much closer to a guaranteed annual income for all our veterans. Mr. Speaker, I support the motion.

Mr. Wm. Andres (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak briefly on the motion of the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall). I listened to him with interest, and I read his motion with interest as a member of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. I am concerned, as are all of us, about the veterans of this country. The hon. member spoke about us who hold a particular interest in veterans. I am not sure whom he includes in that "us", but I can assure you that we on this side of the House are and have been very concerned for those who have given a part of their lives for this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andres: I sometimes see some inconsistencies in what some hon. members say and in some of their reactions. As I read the motion I see that each of the 17 items referred to is something that we are all concerned about, and I commend the hon. member for bringing these points forward. However, to ask that all these items be sent to committee for a review, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) indicated, is not practical. Many of these veterans would be dead before we got through reviewing all those items. I have seen some of the stalling by opposition members in the committee and I can imagine how long it would take before we got through such a review, so I begin to wonder and question their sincerity. Then they talk about the sins that are often committed in the House by members talking out a motion.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Andres: Apparently today the very first sin was committed when the hon. member who put forward the motion went beyond his allotted time, with the permission of the House—

An hon. Member: You can't question that.

Mr. Andres: —and rightly so, because the motion was worded in such a way that I am convinced many members on this side of the House were not exactly sure what was meant by the motion. That is the problem.

Mr. Alexander: You may not know, but we on this side know.

Mr. Andres: I am not sure how far the hon. member over there can see when he talks about members on this side, but I want to assure you, Mr. Speaker, that we on this side of the House have always been very concerned about the veterans. We have taken all these items under consideration and have dealt with them and will be dealing with them in due course and as the need arises.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Dinsdale: Let's have a vote for the veterans.

Mr. Andres: Hon. members are asking for a vote. I am not convinced that is what they want. If I were convinced they wanted a vote, I would allow them that. I am convinced that they themselves wanted to bring this matter to public attention and then wanted to talk the motion out because they do not want to go any further with it.

I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I would like to go on because I have some pertinent points to make on each item, but hon. members opposite have not even given me the courtesy of sufficient time to speak on this. May I call it six o'clock?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): There is half a minute still to go.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Basford (for the Minister of Transport) that Bill C-33, to amend the National Transportation Act and the Department of Transport Act for the purpose of defining the objective of the transportation policy for Canada and authorizing the consequential rearrangement of powers and duties relating to transport and to amend the Transport Act and the Railway Act in respect of freight rates and other matters, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, when I called it five o'clock I was saying that to understand our attitude toward this bill and the minister who presented it, we have to go back to last week and have a closer look at the minister's performance in Vancouver and here in Ottawa at a press conference he held across the street.

Last Wednesday several colleagues of my party and other members of the House rose to complain against the attitude of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) towards the House. We expressed resentment about the characteristic arrogance, scorn and contempt shown by the minister and his cabinet colleagues. We pointed out that the minister had not deemed advisable during the previous 48 hours to disclose the substance of two important measures on transport in Canada, thus preventing the members of the House from commenting on those policy changes and still more important from asking the minister why he had given those new instructions on an essential procedure to the efficient operation of Parliament. This attitude of the minister which, as I said, is characteristic of the whole government dealings, cast a slur on the Parliament of Canada. The more respect and power of parliament are reduced, the less our proceedings are efficient. The power of government is not questioned, but under its mandate it must seek the advice of parliament in all important cases. By avoiding that essential procedure, the government runs the risk of reducing the prestige of such an institution in the eyes of the public and the provincial governments. And it is precisely in that area that this government is enormously responsible for what happened in the province of Quebec during the election of last November 15. Because of the attitude of the present federal government, Quebec voters say, the parliamentary and democratic process no longer operates at the federal level and that is why we no longer trust the Liberal party which, through its actions, has practically demolished the parliamentary institution. Therefore, Quebecers say, we shall support the PQ, which promises efficient, democratic and consultative government.

The government of the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) needs no longer look for scapegoats like the CBC, for instance, or the English-speaking community of Ontario, to explain its declining popularity throughout the country and in the province of Quebec particularly. The responsibility for that belongs to the Liberals, who have weakened the parliament of Canada to such an extent that the Canadian people have lost all confidence in it and gives it little credibility.

[English]

That is the reason, Mr. Speaker. It explains—

Mr. Roy (Laval): Are you quoting from a newspaper?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): We are getting more arrogance all the time.

Mr. Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If the hon. member is quoting from an article, does he know the name of the article? Is he speaking on behalf of his party in support of the Parti Québécois?

● (2010)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure if the hon. member raised a point of order. I suggest he did not. Probably he did not understand my French, for which I am sorry. I have tried to explain my party's attitude to the minister and this bill.

Actually I am glad of the timing of this debate since it enables me to speak about certain things which concern me greatly. One of them is the urgent necessity for radar at Victoria international airport. I was not at all satisfied with the minister's reply to my questions on this subject. I asked two questions, on January 31 and again on February 16. One may read the minister's reply as reported on page 3097 of Hansard for February 16. Before I read the minister's answer perhaps I should explain what happened. On January 21 I took scheduled flight 266 from Victoria to Vancouver. An aircraft, not reported to the pilots of the scheduled airliner, almost collided with our aircraft. But for our pilot's evasive action, an accident would have happened. As I say, thanks to the speedy action of the captain of my particular aircraft, we avoided an accident. In the face of this the minister had the gall to tell me that he had seen the report and I had grossly exaggerated what had happened. Frankly, I am not sure the minister saw the report. The report I hold in my hand mentions the imminence of a collision and says that if the captain had not taken evasive action the aircraft would have collided.

I had to accept the minister's explanation in the House. It was not a good explanation. I made inquiries, wanting to know what sort of report the minister had read, and was told by a variety of people that, since there had been no request for an inquiry, the incident was not considered as important. And that was the tone of the minister. I did not like his attempt to put me down, by suggesting it was not a serious incident. Perhaps he would like another by-election in Esquimalt-Saanich. I am not ready for that yet. At any rate, the minister's party would stand no chance of winning.

One part of the pilot's report refers to a near miss. I do not know if the minister was aware that another aircraft was in the air at the time. I had evidence of that aircraft's presence, as well. Soon after Air Canada flight 266 took off and had reached 2,000 feet, another aircraft was reported. That was cleared and there was no problem. The pilots of the small aircraft and the commercial airliner, each knew exactly where the other was, and that was fine. When the commercial airliner reached 3,500 feet of altitude, the pilot saw another aircraft, the one I spoke about earlier. We nearly collided with it. As I say, but for the rapid and appropriate evasive action taken by the captain of our aircraft, we would have collided.

I contest the minister's right to say that I grossly exaggerated the facts. The minister has his report, and I have mine. I know where the aircraft were, and I know they nearly collided. I wonder if the parliamentary secretary is prepared to table the report he is now waving in his hand.

Mr. Roy (Laval): Why does the hon. member not stick to Bill C-33?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Which deals with transport.

Mr. Roy (Laval): Right.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I am dealing with transport, air transport. I was speaking about aircraft.

An hon. Member: You were, as we are aware.

Mr. Roy (Laval): The hon. member made some kind of statement about the Parti Québécois. We don't know what that has to do with the bill.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I suspect members of the party opposite are trying to eat into my time.

An hon. Member: Which you like.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): No, I do not like it. Talk about the user-pay principle; it should be called, the "user-pray" principle. Anyone who takes off from an airport not equipped with radar should pray. The minister is not spelling his policy properly.

To show you how important Victoria international airport is, let me put some statistics on record. Figures for November, 1976, show that Victoria international airport ranks thirteenth in the scale of total aircraft movements. There were some 13,600 take-offs and landings controlled by the control tower, as compared with some 15,000-odd at Vancouver airport. How many do you imagine there were at Mirabel? I will tell you—just over 3,700. And at Victoria international there is no radar. Would you believe me if I tell you that they use binoculars at Victoria international, to see the aircraft, to determine their height and direction of travel? Mr. Speaker, this is unreal.

Would hon. members like to hear some statistics concerning Gander international airport? In my second question of February 16, I alluded to radar equipement being taken out of Vancouver airport. It is to be taken across the continent to Gander, not across Haro Strait, to where it is badly needed. And how many take-offs and landings do you suppose occurred at Gander last year? The airport ranks fifty-sixth on the list. There were about 1,850 take-offs and landings in Gander, compared with 13,600 at Victoria. Surely even my friends from Newfoundland would grant us the right to have radar in Victoria.

Mr. McGrath: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Let me point out how traffic at Victoria international airport has grown over the years. For example, in 1971 there were about 105,000 take-offs and landings from Victoria. By 1975, according to the latest statistics I haved seen, the total had risen to 185,000. In 1971 there were about 135,000 take-offs and landings at Vancouver airport; by 1975 the figure had reached 203,000. Traffic at Ottawa international airport, on the other hand, declined from 219,000 movements in 1971 to 205,000 in 1975. That represents a drop of about 15 per cent. Movements at Victoria international rose from 105,000 to 185,000 in the same period. These figures are ample grounds for the case I have been trying to make in the past few months. I do not like being put down by an arrogant minister.

I received a letter which the minister did not even have the courtesy to sign. He got one of his flunkies, his executive assistant, to sign it. Presumably he wrote the letter. It reads in part:

> I wish to assure you that flight safety in this area is not adversely affected by the unavailability of radar equipment. Effective pilot and air traffic control procedures are in use which are designed to give maximum assurance that the control tower staff at Victoria are aware of the position of all aircraft about to enter or operate within their area of responsibility.

This has been given the lie by that incident of January 21. I am not yet sure whether the minister knows there were two aircraft as well as the commercial aircraft in the air at that time. My reports make it quite clear that there were. If that is not a hairy incident, I would like to know what is. Therefore I feel it is time that I had a sensible, decorous and non-arrogant reply from the minister.

There are a couple of other tables I would like to record. Table 5 is related to the type of engine that is used when there is a distinction being made with regard to jets, turbo-props, and piston driven aircraft. There are itinerant movements, ones that are just going by. They are not the ones taking off and landing.

In the month of November there were some 6,000, of which 585 were jet take-offs and landings, 726 with turbo-props and 5,000 with piston engines. Anyone who has had anything whatsoever to do with flying knows that piston engines still do not travel as fast as jet aircraft. Their manner of getting out of the way or in the way is hampered by their speed.

In the incident to which I referred, it was the turbo driven aircraft that took the evasive action. It was quick to respond. The piston driven aircraft, which some of us, including myself, saw, seemed to be unaware of our presence.

An hon. Member: Were you scared?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I have had enough flying hours not to be scared. You get some flying hours in and you will understand.

At Gander, by comparison to the 6,480 total that I spoke of, there were only 1,600 of which 880 were jet, 200 turbo prop and 326 piston. This means there is a heavy concentration of piston driven aircraft in that particular area. It suggests to me there is every need for a radar at Victoria international airport. If the minister or his delightful parliamentary secretary, who had the courtesy to address me on one occasion, read this particular issue of Hansard, and want more information, I am quite prepared to give it.

There are two other matters. I am not sure whether time will permit me to deal with both. The first has to do with ferry subsidies. There has been a great deal of talk about the amount of subsidies provided to operate east coast ferries. Admittedly some of these subsidies must be provided constitutionally such as the ferry to Port aux Basques, Newfoundland. That subsidy is one of the terms of confederation with Newfoundland and the rest of Canada. The ferry between Prince Edward Island and the mainland is likewise an interprovincial ferry.

The argument we get from the other side of the House is that subsidies cannot be given in cases that are not interprovincial. If it is from one part of the province to the other part of the province, subsidies cannot be authorized. To that I say poppycock.

The Public Accounts of Canada will bear me out that there have been instances of subsidies granted to ferries, either for construction, operation, or slipways in which they berth at one end or the other of their passages, which operate within a single province. Two grants were made by the ministry to aid ferry vessel construction.

One grant of $3 million was made to the province of Ontario to aid in the construction of vessel and terminals for the Tobermory-South Bay Mouth service. Reference to that service can be found in the Public Accounts of Canada 1973, page 26:12. I am not deploring this. I am glad it is there. I am happy to say that the design of the ferry operating on that service was perfected by naval designers in my constituency. It is something of which they are proud, and I am sure the people in the area are proud of it too.

The province of Quebec was granted $3 million to aid in the construction of an icebreaker type ferry for use on the St. Lawrence River. Reference to that may be found on the same page of the 1973 Public Accounts of Canada, 26 being Transport and 12 being the page within Transport. This was the ministry's share of a $6 million grant. The remaining $3 million was funded by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. Therefore let us have no more of this hogwash from the other side about there being no subsidies available for ferries that are plying within provincial waters.

There is a very strong argument that needs to be put. It has been put by many of my colleagues on this side, and I am happy to say by some members opposite, that there is a need for a subsidy for the service of ferries on the west coast of the island.

There is one other matter that is of equal concern on the west coast. That is the passage of commercial and, particularly, tanker traffic in and out of the Straits of Juan de Fuca. This is a peculiar situation and I think it deserves some attention.

The Straits of Juan de Fuca separate Vancouver Island from the state of Washington, the Olympic Peninsula. It runs pretty well down the middle of the channel. There was one provision in the treaty under which that boundary was set. It makes it quite clear that all the waters south of the forty-ninth parallel—by the time it gets down to the Straits of Juan de Fuca it is south of the forty-ninth parallel—shall be free and open for navigation to the ships of both countries.

For navigational purposes, ships of both Canada and the United States may travel across the international boundary without getting into trouble with the coast guard, the police or whatever. They are not supposed to be doing any fishing. Let us not fool ourselves. It is navigation only.

A strange situation has developed within these waters between Vancouver Island and the Olympic Peninsula as far as the attitudes of the respective governments are concerned. On the Canadian side from the shoreline, the low water line of Vancouver Island, out to our midline which is our boundary, these are considered in Canada as internal waters; and as internal waters, international law, which includes the right of innocent passage, does not automatically apply. It may be granted on request, but not automatically.

On the American side of this boundary and down to the southern edge of it to the Olympic Peninsula, the first three miles off the low water line up toward the boundary are considered by the United States authorities as territorial waters. That is all, just three miles. From three miles to the international border, which in some places would be as much as 12 and in some cases as little as 10, the United States authorities consider these waters as the high seas to which the right of innocent passage applies under international law. These are the waters into which the vessels carrying the crude oil from Prudhoe Bay should be entering, possibly before the end of the year. We have cause for concern.

There are two different regimes covering this body of water. In existence now is a voluntary system of pilotage. Ships coming in are expected to enter on the starboard side through waters which, under the U.S. interpretation, are the high seas and where they have the right to innocent passage. They are supposed to go out on the starboard side too, which puts them in Canadian waters where they do not have the right of innocent passage. This is a stupid situation. The Canadian and United States authorities must resolve it before the tankers come. One could imagine circumstances in which the standards on the Canadian side might be such that, having been allowed in by the American authorites, the vessels could not get out to sea again.

I do not know where the fault lies, but this situation must be sorted out because these are the waters in which the tankers carrying the crude oil will be sailing. Further, these are not calm waters. They are often subject to high winds, strong currents, fog. A voluntary system of traffic management will not do. We need something better. There must be a mandatory system in force from the Pacific Ocean through the Straits of Juan de Fuca to wherever these vessels go. I should like to see them prevented from coming in, because we have found a better place for them to offload their cargoes. But as matters now stand they are planning to come in, and I suggest everything possible be done to prepare for this in advance.

This afternoon the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Lee) was talking about the need to assist communities in coastal British Columbia with special reference to the services available to them by water. It was the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), urged on by some members of his own party, who was looking for some ways to save money—I hesitate to mention names but if pushed I might be able to produce one—who decided to go after the $4 million freight subsidy covering Northland Navigation.

An hon. Member: She got mad at him.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Well, if she got mad at him at that time she might not have had quite as much influence as I thought she had. If she made a mistake, she backed away from it. People who live far from the coast do not understand about the need for a good freight and passenger transport service on that coast. This is a land of some 5,000 pioneers, we might call them, who are making their living in more than a hundred small, isolated communities from Howe Sound up to Rivers Inlet.

The coastline runs for 500 miles, encompassing some 150 inlets and places of call. One has to travel up that coast on one of these freight carriers to appreciate the beauty and also the danger of the voyage, not to mention the need for this service. Those who use it are Indian reserves, logging camps, stores, sawmills, fishing camps, guides, summer resorts and retirement communities ranging from one or two families to 250 people. There is no other way of reaching these places unless by a privately-owned float plane. What do these vessels carry? They carry explosives, food, furniture, compressed gas. And liquor. I have seen them onloading the empties—not on this coast but on the west coast of Vancouver Island—and offloading the full bottles from the provincial liquor board. They carry livestock, lumber, machinery, tires, trucks and wire rope. They also bring cargo to the Vancouver market, shakes and shingles, machinery for repair, frozen shrimps, and sometimes even dirty laundry.

Aircraft have been suggested as a supplementary means of transport in the area. But aircraft are hampered by seasonal conditions, fog most of all. In the long haul sea transport provides the only communication with the outside world for weeks and weeks. This is the area from which the subsidy has been withdrawn, throwing the communities north of Vancouver into a complete tizzy. I trust that other members of the House, both on this side and across the way, will be addressing themselves to this particular matter. These are not ferries about which I have been talking.

Ferries join the mainland to Vancouver Island, both to Nanaimo and to Schwartz Bay in my riding. Fares on these services have had to be doubled in the last year to make them pay. The route from Nanaimo to Horseshoe Bay is part of the trans-Canada highway. That highway was built with subsidies from federal funds. I just cannot understand why there is a gap in the trans-Canada highway because no subsidy has been paid, as it has on other parts, both for maintenance and construction. The slipway also deserves a subsidy, as do the vessels themselves and the vessel operations.

I see Your Honour is getting a little unsettled, so with that I will say thank you very much.

Mr. Ian Watson (Laprairie): Mr. Speaker, I welcome Bill C-33. I feel it is a piece of legislation which is going to put back into law what has, in effect, been the practice regarding the government's relationship with the Canadian Transport Commission. The so-called independence of that commission which was touted when the existing legislation was passed about ten years ago never really materialized, and in many instances—I intend to give an example of one later—it was actually used to camouflage, in effect, the government's own unwillingness to take certain steps. This legislation brings back to the cabinet full responsibility, which in effect was always there anyway but which was at times at least partially camouflaged. The legislation is a needed rationalization. I am looking forward to supporting the bill in committee and perhaps trying to improve certain aspects of it.

The subject matter to which I wish to address myself tonight is urban transit. The House had an opportunity to discuss urban transit last Friday but the debate was a fairly one-sided affair so far as this side of the House was concerned. It was a very good example of just how the political perception of members of this House as to what policies are vital to the well being of this country can be affected by home town or home constituency realities.

With the exception of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Kaplan), who addressed himself to two arguments against the government's living up to the promises it made to the Canadian public during the 1974 election campaign, the fact that no other member from an urban riding had the opportunity to speak, on this side, is an indication that, although we got the rural view, we did not get the point of view of members who every day are under the gun from their electorate in regard to what is going to happen next to relieve the almost unbearable conditions many of them have to put up with going back and forth to work because, for a number of reasons, they live in areas of the country which are not served by public transit facilities.

It is all very well to say that this is a provincial matter. It is all very well to say, as the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance said, that there have been two major fundamental changes in Canada since the 1974 election. Double digit inflation and the need for restraint have become paramount in the government's considerations regarding embarking upon new programs. The parliamentary secretary's other argument was that since November 15 last the prospect is for a major realignement in the federal-provincial division of powers. I do not know that he used that exact term, but in any event he implied that this was a very poor time for the federal government to be launching new spending programs in areas where there is a fairly clear provincial responsibility.

The two arguments that he made, he made well, but I feel that the counter arguments—I will advance at least half a dozen of the major ones—far outweigh whatever merit or validity the two positions that he advanced had.

As for double digit inflation and the restraint program, surely, Mr. Speaker, we are facing in this country a situation where, unless something is done quickly about our energy consumption and unless something is done soon to move away from the tremendous reliance on petroleum product consumption, we will find ourselves in an extremely dangerous financial position vis-à-vis our balance of payments and our trade picture with the rest of the world.

The energy conservation aspect is only one part of the total picture in terms of petroleum product consumption. An urban transit program can be started now but it will be two or three years down the road before any serious demands for money are going to be made. The total cost for the economy over the medium term, say 12 to 15 years, will be tremendous unless a program is commenced now. The potential for gasoline savings by moving quickly to public transit in our urban areas and major cities and suburbs is enormous. Moving over the longer haul to electrical transportation systems using rails has even greater energy conservation potential.

As for the prospect which the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance fears, namely, a realignment of federal-provincial powers, I do not feel like jumping the gun on that subject now. From what I can see the public of Canada is still largely sympathetic to a strong central government acting where there is a need and a reasonable case for federal intervention and where there is some constitutional responsibility.

● (2050)

In the area of urban transit there are several constitutional grounds which I would argue justify federal intervention. There is a clearcut federal responsibility for railways and I would suggest that as the promise in 1974 included action on public transit systems involving the use of rail facilities, passenger train facilities, as well as railroad beds being upgraded for rapid transit use, these are all matters where constitutionally the federal government can and should have an input.

When I refer, as I did earlier, to the whole question of energy conservation and the long-term effect this can have on the balance of payments and the future economic prosperity of this country, then it seems to me we have a constitutional responsibility above and beyond our responsibility with regard to railways. This does and should allow us to provide at least the kind of catalystic funding which could stimulate the public transit programs which this country, and particularly the suburbs which have grown up around the cities, so desperately need.

What is happening now is unfortunately reminiscent of what happened with our entire housing program after the Second World War. In the early 1950's the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation was established. The intention was that it would not only provide good housing for Canadians—which it did eventually by establishing standards which make Canadians today well housed in comparison with any other country and we can be proud of it—but at the beginning it had another hope just as important as housing. It was concerned that the places where houses were to be built should be well planned. The idea was to use the lending power of CMHC to require the municipalities and the provinces where the housing was to be built, to plan properly.

Unfortunately the Liberal government of the day in its wisdom did not want to go out on a limb. It felt that it could not do this constitutionally so in effect all this housing, with a few exceptions, was built at the whim of local developers and local municipal politicians were the arbiters. In my view this was a tragedy. We had the power at that time to develop suburbs that made sense from every point of view.

Recently members of this House who sit on the committee for the National Capital Region attended a seminar arranged by the Parliamentary Centre for Foreign Relations in Washington, D.C. where they had an opportunity to visit Columbia, one of the new cities that lies outside Washington. I also had had an opportunity previously to visit Reston. These are two new cities planned from scratch and they could have been emulated in this country. Back in the 1950's we had the people, the architects, and the visionary planners to do this but they were not allowed to.

[Mr. Watson.]

Let me give an example of what can happen with this kind of planning. Neighbourhoods are arranged around schools, then there are villages made up of several neighbourhoods and sufficient villages in the case of Columbia to make a city of about 100,000 people. The result is that 85 per cent of the children can walk to school. In Columbia alone this year school busing costs show a saving of over $1 million. It is estimated that the saving in school bus and transportation related capital investment is $150 million compared to what it would have been if there had been no planning.

This is only one aspect of the potential saving through this type of planning. We had the potential to do it and failed. We still have not influenced planning concepts in the development of almost all our suburbs.

I suggest that we are in the process of doing the same thing with urban transit funds as we did with housing. The Railway Relocation and Crossing Act passed in 1974 not only provides for upgrading of existing rail lines for rapid transit purposes but more important, it provides as a precondition of federal funding of a rapid transit or public transit plan or regional transportation plan that there be a regional development plan. Section 3(1) of the act reads as follows:

> Where, in respect of an area in a province that includes or comprises an urban area (hereinafter in this Part called a "transportation study area"), the government of the province and all the municipalities within that area have agreed upon an urban development plan and transportation plan (hereinafter in this Part called an "accepted plan") for that transportation study area, the province or a municipality may, subject to subsection (5), apply to the Commission for such orders as the Commission may make under section 6 and as are necessary to carry out the accepted plan.

The railway relocation plan which we passed in April of 1974 is the framework for making full use of our railway lines around cities or for public transit purposes, and it also—and this is the portion which is so important—provides that prior to doing this there must be not only agreement with the provinces but a regional transport plan and a regional development plan. These requirements would mean that in the future at least we will avoid the kind of development lacking public transit facilities which have characterized our surburban growth since World War II. If we do not move quickly toward funding urban transit, we will be making the same mistake for which we are now paying the consequences in excessive automobile use and excessive reliance on the automobile.

I mentioned our constitutional rights regarding railways and I have made reference to energy self-sufficiency obviously being a national objective. Surely the quality of living of our people is a matter of concern. In my own district of Laprairie-Chateauguay there are people who leave their houses at 6.30 in the morning in order to be at work or in class at 9 a.m., and yet they are only 15 miles away from their offices or classes. They have to put in an hour and a half of waiting in line to get across a bridge which is crowded with automobile traffic. Almost all the people trying to cross the bridge in the morning had moved into the area into houses built with CMHC loans or guarantees. It is we who have lent them money in a totally unplanned way.

We encouraged development in these areas through CMHC. Now we are standing back and washing our hands of the responsibility. Not only on the south and north shores of Montreal but across the country until three or four years ago the development that took place was largely funded by CMHC direct loans or CMHC guarantees. We encouraged these people to move into the suburbs, and now we wash our hands of them.

The example which the United States is giving us in the area of conservation will be brought home very effectively to us when President Carter next April 20 makes his announcement. We have been footdraggging on the question of energy conservation and we will have to be prepared to accept large increases in our fuel costs, restrictions on the kinds of automobiles we drive and the kinds of luxuries we enjoy if we are serious about energy conservation.

Last summer Gallup made a poll of the Canadian population on the subject of the desirability of increased conservation efforts in the nation. Of the respondents, 85.8 per cent said that it was desirable to have increased conservation efforts, 9.1 per cent said no, and 5.1 per cent had no opinion. Surely to those members of the government who accord some importance to public opinon polls this poll should be fairly convincing.

While I do not expect us to move to the federal U.S. position which involved the U.S. government paying 80 per cent of urban transit systems across the United States as well as a percentage of the operating costs, it seems to me that the formulas which were outlined during the 1974 campaign, most of which involved a 50 per cent sharing of costs, make a lot of sense. They made sense then, they were good promises, promises which at that time the government obviously felt it could back up. Rather than as the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance has said, that there are two major reasons why we should not fulfill these promises, I would argue that the reverse is true. If anything has happened, the factors which would make such a program more essential now than ever have become increasingly evident. Energy conservation is one, and world costs of petroleum which have gone up considerably even since 1974 are another.

I have mentioned conservation, living standards, and the quality of living to which surely we have to pay some attention. If you have people waiting in line at bridges crossing to the island of Montreal, crossing into Vancouver or coming into one of the Toronto expressways every morning for minutes or sometimes hours on end, this is a waste not only of energy but of human resources which is unacceptable in a society which prides itself on wishing to give us all a better quality of life.

The absolutely startling figures which were revealed last year when the budget estimates were tabled for 1975-76 indicated an overwhelming expenditure of federal funds to even out petroleum prices for all Canadians. We had to spend a total $1.6 billion to even out the price to all Canadians to make up the difference between the world price which we paid for petroleum for our eastern market and which was sold at the much lower domestic price and what we were not able to cover of that world and domestic differential from our sales of petroleum to the United States at world prices. I think it would be a fairly reasonable guess—although I do not pretend it to be accurate—that of that $1.6 billion, $800 million went on gasoline expenditure. We spent that year approximately $800 million out of our budget to subsidize the consumption of gasoline in this country. We then felt it necessary to institute—as we did in 1975—a ten cents a gallon gasoline tax which helped to reduce that tremendous drain on our federal resources.

With this ten cents per gallon gasoline tax I understand our gasoline now sells at very close to the world price, but I argue that if it really does boil down to a question of finding funds and not being able to find them anywhere else, that we should direct our attention to that ten cents per gallon tax and use it, even if it means we have to bring the price of gasoline up to the world price and have the ten cents per gallon added to that world price. It should be used to fund what we have to do in the area of urban transit, and if there is anything left over it should be used for other conservation efforts. That would bring the price of gasoline above the world price, but it would allow us to continue to keep the price of heating oil slightly under the world price. This is the kind of hard decision which I feel the government is going to have to make if it expects to receive the confidence of the Canadian public in the future.

I never cease to be puzzled by the shortsighted arguments which are advanced against urban transit funding by the government. When we desire to create new jobs in high technology fields—and half a dozen ministers are talking about this continually—surely this is a suitable endeavour in the Montreal area, in the Thunder Bay, Winnipeg and Toronto areas.

There are several major companies and literally dozens of subsidiary companies which would be affected by the side effects of a major move into the building of urban transit vehicles of one kind or another in this country. This is the kind of job creating program which really does make sense. It makes far more sense than some of the nonsensical efforts we seem to make from time to time to stimulate job development in various parts of the country.

A measure which was, in effect, ready to be legislated was the proposed transport development corporation. It was all set to go. It was drafted, but it has been held back and never brought before this House by way of legislation. The advantages of standardization across the country in urban transit systems are so obvious that there should not even be an argument. These things have all been left to linger or drag along. They have not been pushed, and it comes back to what I said at the very beginning. It is unfortunate, but the perspective of the people in this House is determined by their own constituency needs. For example, if the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) were sitting for the South Shore instead of for the town of Mount Royal, and if he did not have a train running through a tunnel from the middle of the city to his riding, hon.

members could be sure that he would have a different perspective.

If the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) did not represent a downtown area and instead was representing an area like mine where his constituents were knocking on his door and telephoning him about the problem, he would have a different perspective. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) has a potential transit vehicle company in his constituency. It is an important transit vechicle company, and perhaps he should have another look at that aspect of the urban transit problem.

There is another important need which hon. members should not ignore when they are thinking about influencing the future relationship between the people of Canada and the federal government. Are we at the federal level going to be a completely foreign element as far as the average man in the street is concerned henceforth in this new federal-provincial relationship which the parliamentary secretary thinks is about to evolve, as he mentioned last Friday? Are we simply going to have a very remote relationship with the public? If that is the case, I really do not think the future looks very good for the federal government. When it can do so constitutionally the federal government needs to be in close contact with the public. By satisfying a public need which has been demonstrated in all the major cities of this country and in the suburbs of those cities for the last 15 years surely we bring ourselves closer to the people.

This closeness with the people is surely one of the stronger arguments members of the cabinet should be considering when contemplating whether they should spend the extra funds to which the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) alluded briefly in his remarks last Friday. I can only appeal to the cabinet that the time has come to make a favourable decision with regard to an expanded urban transit program and to the proposed transport development corporation to encourage the new technology which can produce, with Canadian effectiveness, not only adequate vehicles to service our cities in the field of urban transit for the next 15, 20 or 30 years but which can provide jobs and a fantastic amount of export market potential as well.

There are so many good arguments in favour of this that I really cannot fathom why the obviousness of the case has yet to convince the powers that be, and especially the financial powers that be, who somehow feel that the program of restraint has to zero in on a program like this one, which makes sense from every conceivable point of view, including the financial point of view. If only they would stand back from their desk, look out the window, and just think a little bit about the future of Canada—surely this is something we can ask them to do—and if they take a few minutes and apply a little Canadian common sense to this situation, then they will sympathetically review and fulfil the promises which they so generously made in the spring of 1974.

The optimism which engendered those promises surely is no less justified now, and I hope we can hear some encouragement from them in the next few days. The budget is coming out on March 31. It must contain much more than we have been led to anticipate so far by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great attention to the hon. member who has just taken his seat. I want to congratulate the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Watson) on what I consider to be a very well reasoned, well thought out, and well presented speech. Having sat on his side of the House in a position not dissimilar to his, I know from experience how difficult it was for him to make a speech like that. However, surely that is the kind of speech which has to be made from time to time to keep reminding the government of commitments it made and the moral obligation it has to discharge these commitments.

Naturally we were appalled, to say the least, when we heard the statement issued by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) in Toronto a short time ago. He declared that the government would not be able to discharge its commitment to spend $290 million on assisting urban areas meet their transit responsibilities to commuters. The government made that promise in 1974, as part of its election platform. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) emphasized it in a speech in Winnipeg. Two years after making the promise, the government, forced into austerity by the need to restrain federal spending, announced it could not keep that commitment.

Even though large municipalities, including metropolitan Toronto, metropolitan Winnipeg and Montreal had either begun planning how to take advantage of the federal urban transit commitment or had already spent substantial sums on programs in which it was thought the federal government would participate, the government announced it could not fulfil its commitment. I say the government will change its mind, must change it, indeed shall change it, given the economic climate in this country. I suspect that in his budget speech on March 31 the Minister of Finance will announce that the government knows how necessary is the commitment with respect to urban transit it made in 1974 to the cities. The government must also feel a moral obligation to its members representing urban areas for, to a large extent, many of them were elected, or re-elected as the case may be, on the basis of the program the government presented to the people of Canada in that campaign. The hon. member for Laprairie and other urban members documented their concern in the debate last Friday and in the questions they have raised in this house.

Despite the fine print in the Constitution, the federal government has become increasingly involved in matters under provincial jurisdiction. It has become increasingly involved in urban problems, and its responsibility for helping our growing cities is just as great as if it were clearly spelled out in the Constitution. That commitment grew from the federal government's involvement in housing. Many years ago it passed the National Housing Act, which was originally envisaged as a means of funding housing, and established Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation as the executive arm to implement the provisions of the National Housing Act.

Once the federal government became so greatly involved in housing, an area which had been clearly under provincial jurisdiction, it had the concomitant responsibility to assist in planning. That responsibility carried with it the commitment to assist with urban transit, in other words, the responsibility to make sure that our cities were planned in such a way that those who lived on the fringes, in the suburbs, would have adequate transit facilities for travelling to and from their places of work. That commitment is even more important today, considering it is estimated that by the turn of the century more than half our population will live in the three large metropolitan areas, greater Montreal, metropolitan Toronto, and the greater Vancouver area. In addition, we must provide for the growth of our medium-sized cities. This responsibility entails the provision of efficient means of transport to ensure that growth is orderly and that people who are obliged to live in our growing suburban areas will have adequate and equal access to their places of employment and business.

The Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) and municipal and other authorities in Canada have tried to reach a trilevel consensus which would make it possible for the federal jurisdiction to deal directly with the municipalities, in order to assist them in their ongoing and ever growing commitments. That is only as it should be, considering that the British North America Act does not provide our municipalities with adequate tax resources for discharging their commitments, whereas, paradoxically, at the other end of the scale the Government of Canada takes in more money than it needs.

I hope that the federal government will, as the Prime Minister has already suggested, re-assess and re-examine its position. In that regard I look forward to hearing the Minister of Finance make his budget speech on March 31.

The House passed the National Transportation Act almost ten years ago and this is our first opportunity since passage of that law to examine the policies which the National Transportation Act created and to look closely at the Canadian Transport Commission, the main regulatory agency established under the act. Of course we are also examining various transportation agencies in the country, especially the two major railways. If my memory serves me right, we have not been able to examine in committee the annual report of Canadian National Railways for at least four or five years. That makes it all the more important to raise the subject in the present debate on second reading of Bill C-33.

I come from a province which relies heavily on the federal transport commitment. It is crucial to the economy of the Atlantic provinces, and vital to the economy of Newfoundland. For us, an ongoing transportation commitment is essential. It is essential for the Government of Canada to spell out its contractual obligation to the province of Newfoundland, an obligation to assist economic growth by taking a major role in transportation to and from, and within Newfoundland. Until 1969 the major ground transport system in Newfoundland consisted of a train service operated by Canadian National Railways. As the result of a decision of the Canadian Transport Commission in 1968, this service ceased on April 15, 1969.

The Canadian Transport Commission directed that, in place of the train service, a cross-island bus service should operate within the province of Newfoundland. That is contained in the Canadian Transport Commission's order No. R2673 of July, 1968. I quote it for the record:

> The bus service proposed by the Applicants and described in detail in the Judgment of Woodard, C., shall be inaugurated and continued as long as a requirement for passenger service continues, and the passenger facilities, including terminals and the shelters mentioned therein, with proper communication links, shall be provided and installed, all to the satisfaction of the Committee.

That directive by the Canadian Transport Commission was carried out by CN up to July, 1976. As a result of an application which CN made to the Public Utilities Board of the province of Newfoundland for an increase in fares and as a result of a jurisdictional dispute which flowed from that application, CN, notwithstanding the fact that the Supreme Court of Canada had ruled that the Public Utilities Board had jurisdiction by virtue of Part III of the National Transportation Act not having been proclaimed, withdrew its bus service on July 12, 1976. That was a violation of a directive by a quasi-judicial body acting under the statutory authority of the Newfoundland legislature.

What we found incomprehensible was the attitude of the Government of Canada. We appealed to the Government of Canada. The premier of the province sent a wire to the Prime Minister on July 15 last year. We set out the legal obligation of Canadian National vis-à-vis the Public Utilities Board of Newfoundland as determined by the ruling of the Supreme Court of Canada. The premier set out in the wire the constitutional obligation with regard to the Terms of Union and the order of the Canadian Transport Commission which I quoted, that CN continue to provide a bus service within the province.

That appeal was made to the Prime Minister to direct this Crown corporation to obey the laws of the province of Newfoundland. That is all we were asking, that they restore the service on which the people of Newfoundland were wholly dependent.

Instead of the Prime Minister acting in a responsible way and directing, by order in council, that CN restore that service in pursuance of the directive of the Canadian Transport Commission, an order in council was passed the following day, July 16, at the instance of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), placing the CN road cruiser service in the province of Newfoundland under the National Transportation Act.

Nobody questions the right of the Government of Canada to proclaim that section of the act and place that particular service under it. However, surely it would have been logical to assume that before that was done the service would be restored under its existing jurisdiction, and that the laws of the province of Newfoundland as set out by the Public Utilities Board in its ruling would be upheld.

What was at issue was an application by CN for a fare increase of up to 150 per cent. Our Public Utilities Board had the nerve and the gall to say they could only have an increase of up to 30 per cent, that this in fact could not be justified on a user pay basis. They stated that it was a part of the national rail service of this country and that, to all intents and purposes, the CN road cruiser service in the province of Newfoundland, since it had a monopoly on ground transportation in the province, had the same function as CN trains before they ceased to operate in 1969.

The dispute was never resolved, the Supreme Court of Canada notwithstanding and the Constitution notwithstanding. Instead, we had an order in council passed placing the CN road cruiser service under the National Transportation Act.

The next episode in this unsavory story was an application, which we knew would follow very soon, by CN to the Canadian Transport Commission for an increase in rates. That application is now before the commission. It is very interesting because it tells it all. They modified their demands to the point where the application now before the Canadian Transport Commission calls for only an 8 per cent fare increase. However, they state, and this concerns us in the province of Newfoundland, that they are placing the service on a user pay concept. That is completely contrary to the spirit, intent and letter of the policy now before us.

In this regard I wish to quote the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) when introducing this bill on March 1. I quote from page 3525 of Hansard:

There are, and probably will always be, some services which are required in order to meet legitimate economic and social needs such as regional development or access to remote communities but for which the particular users cannot reasonably be expected to pay the full costs.

I tried to establish that that is obviously the case up to this point in time with regard to the CN road cruiser service in Newfoundland. The minister went on to say:

In such cases government support in the form of direct or indirect subsidy is necessary and reasonable. Government support of this kind to ensure the provision of necessary transportation facilities which cannot be commercially viable represents the use of transportation as an instrument for the achievement of economic and social objectives.

In further support of my contention I wish to quote from the June 18, 1974, Prime Minister's announcement, "Liberal party program on transportation, inter-city passenger transportation". I quote:

The Passenger Transport Corporation—

That is a corporation which the government promised to set up in 1974.

—will also ensure, with provincial co-operation, high quality passenger bus services in areas not adequately served by existing carriers.

The Prime Minister went on to refer to a "super-bus" service. We would be satisfied with ordinary bus service if we could be assured that bus service would be a part of the national transportation grid in Canada, that it would be treated the same as the new VIA rail passenger service which the minister announced, and that it would qualify in the same way for whatever federal government subsidies there may be. This would enable the CN to provide a level of service in the province of Newfoundland in accordance with the national transportation policy. This super-bus service was to be introduced between medium-sized centres. Fares on these buses would be reasonable, but vastly superior terminal and on-board comfort and services would be provided.

I only wish the Minister of Transport and some of his officials could go to Newfoundland and take the present CN bus service from St. John's to Port aux Basques. It is the only way our people can travel across the province unless they go by air from Halifax. Let the minister take the road cruiser service, as it is referred to by the CN, from Port aux Basques to St. John's across the trans-Canada Highway, which is 600 miles long and well below ordinary trans-Canada standards; indeed it is beginning to show substantial wear and tear as a result of CN truck traffic, something which in itself is a major cause of concern. The minister and his officials should take that 14 or 15 hour trip across that long and, in many places, desolate stretch of highway. They would then realize what our people have to go through.

There are no adequate terminal facilities. There are no adequate facilities en route. People are unable to buy meals because satisfactory facilities are not available at designated stops within the time allotted for the stop-overs. In many cases there are no shelters at places where people have to stand to wait for these buses. Once aboard, passengers have to sit in fairly cramped quarters. All too often they are able to find standing room only. I really wish the minister and his officials could take that trip.

An hon. Member: The scenery is very picturesque, though.

Mr. McGrath: The hon. member says it is very picturesque. I suggest that regardless of how picturesque the scenery might be he would soon get tired of a most uncomfortable ride under most unsatisfactory conditions.

I have described what it is like to take that journey in the hope that hon. members will realize it is the only means of travel we have in Newfoundland, and I should like some assurance from the minister before this bill passes that the CN bus service in the province of Newfoundland, or in any other province in which the railways intend to operate such a service, will be considered within the terms of the Prime Minister's statement that where they fulfil the same need as railways they will be able to qualify for whatever federal subsidies there are as part of the government's transportation policies.

A short time ago the Minister of Transport met with the three maritime premiers and the minister of transport for the province of Newfoundland. I must say I was encouraged by the new attitude exemplified in the press release from the Department of Transport on the outcome of that conference. I quote from that communique of February 8, 1977.

Mr. Lang, Mr. Morgan and the Maritime Premiers agreed in principle that improved passenger transportation could best be achieved by providing special assistance for upgrading bus and air services in the region.

Hon. members will note that they were not specific. The problem with which we have to contend in Newfoundland is that the CN enjoys a monopoly. There is only one bus service throughout the province, whereas in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, while still having the advantage of rail passenger service, passengers can choose between several other modes of ground transportation which are competing for their dollars.

Anyway, if that communique is an indication of the minister's new policy, I wish he would tell us what his position is before the CTC brings down a decision with regard to the application by CN for what is to be the first of several anticipated increases in the fares to be charged on the road cruiser service in Newfoundland. I intend to press him on this matter when the bill goes to committee, and to do so again in the House should I have an opportunity. I ask the minister to tell us what he has in mind because this is most relevant to whatever decision is reached by the CTC with respect to the application by the CN for further increases in fares.

I should like some assurance that in addition to improvements in the service—and, God knows, there is an obvious need for improvements—there will be an improvement in the support services, for example, the installation of adequate terminal facilities across the province, and scheduling which will ensure that enough space is available to cope with peak periods—I have in mind holiday times, and co-ordination with the semesters of universities and colleges.

The minister has taken an obligation upon himself. We intend to hold him to it. He did so by virtue of the order in council passed last July which placed his imprimatur upon an illegal act committed by the CN. That is what it was. The minister gave an illegal act his imprimatur when he had the order in council passed removing jurisdiction from the Newfoundland Public Utilities Board and placing it under the authority of the CTC by virtue of the National Transportation Act. I hope that now he has the responsibility, notwithstanding how long the CTC may take before making a decision on the present application, a directive will be issued with respect to the obvious need for the improvement of the service in my province.

It always intrigues me that there should be no CN bus service to handle passengers coming ashore from the east coast ferry which operates between North Sydney and Argentia. Passengers using this ferry depend on private transport, which is not always adequate. Indeed it is not always available. It seems logical to me to expect that the CN, which operates this ferry service, would be able to direct one of its road cruisers to meet the ferry when it arrives.

There should also be some rescheduling of the bus service to fit in with airline schedules so that we could co-ordinate the total pattern of travel within and outside the province more effectively.

We have had to depend on CN in our province for a long time. I assume that, notwithstanding the new Via rail service and the new corporation which is to handle rail passenger service, we shall still have to depend on the CN for some time to come to fulfil the major part of our passenger and freight traffic requirements.

Now we are going to have another study, a royal commission, which is about to be established to examine the transportation picture in the province of Newfoundland. The initiative for this study did not come from the Government of Canada or from the government of Newfoundland; the initiative came from Canadian National. Of course it found a willing participant in the federal government in the Minister of Transport, and so the study is going to be a joint study.

I regret very much that the province of Newfoundland has agreed to this study, because it is only two years since we had the last study, known as the trans-Newfoundland corridor transportation study. There are 11 volumes to that study, Mr. Speaker, which was commissioned in 1972 by the Canadian Transport Commission under the direction of the then minister of transport. It released its report in March of 1974. The study cost the people of Canada $370,000, and not one of the conclusions reached or recommendations made by that study has been acted upon to this day.

Surely it is only reasonable to ask, before we embark upon another study, just what exactly is the government's position vis-à-vis the findings, conclusions, and recommendations of this last study. Or could it be that this new royal commission is merely a means, a traditional Canadian means if you like, of shelving the problem so that we do not have to deal with it for a while—so we can put the problem into cold storage for the next two or three years? We have already been postponing major decisions for two or three years since we had the last study. We are now to have another royal commission, which I suppose will cost another $500,000 or more, to bring in some further recommendations in another two years, when another government will be in office. Then another royal commission could put the thing on ice for another two years.

There is a limit to our patience, Mr. Speaker; obviously there has to be. Ours is a vast province with a relatively small population. We must have an efficient transportation system in the province, both passenger and freight, to ensure that there is economic growth within the province. Economic growth in our province in becoming crucial in these days in view of the rate of unemployment in Newfoundland today, which I believe is around 25 per cent.

I suppose there is not much more I can say about the new study; we are going to have it anyway. The Newfoundland government has agreed to it, and so has the Minister of Transport. It is just a matter now of making the announcement, and I expect that will be made any day now. I hope that one of the first things the royal commission does when it receives its commission will be to examine the 11 volumes of the trans-Newfoundland corridor transportation study commissioned by the Canadian Transport Commission and undertaken by the firm of Messrs. Peat, Marwick and Company. Certainly this is more than the Government of Canada has done, because to this day not one of the findings or recommendations made in that report has been acted upon.

Before resuming my seat, may I say to the Minister of Transport, albeit in his absence, that before this debate is concluded we hope he will speak, notwithstanding the fact that his colleague, the Minister of Justice introduced the second reading debate on this bill. We hope he will address himself to the matters that have been raised during the course of this debate. I should like to hear him respond to the very eloquent, well reasoned, and well documented case put by the hon. member for Laprairie who preceded me in this debate. I hope he will have something to say to the people of Newfoundland who are beginning to feel they have been canned by these studies, and who certainly are feeling they have been studied to death by this government.

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank you for your generosity at this time of the evening. Since there is only one minute and a half left and so as not to soften the impact of my remarks on Bill C-33 and its effects on transportation in the Gaspé Peninsula and the Magdalen Islands, I should point out that it is ten o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS—POSITION OF CMHC ON USE OF ALUMINUM WIRING IN DWELLINGS

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, the other day I asked the minister responsible for housing whether he would consider recommending that any building constructed under federal auspices should have the same protection which any federal public works has. As I pointed out privately to the minister at the time, the department has said that when it is constructing any building under the auspices of the federal government—there are a large number built each year—it is a requirement of the tender that no aluminum wiring be used, or at least that only copper wiring be used. Mr. Bowen, the departmental official concerned, indicated that so far to his knowledge no such building has been built since this instruction was sent out under the federal tendering system. It seems to me that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation should do no less.

It is the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Abbott) whose responsibility really this is. I have a bill recommending a ban on the use of aluminum wiring in domestic housing. The minister has said there is nothing wrong with aluminum wiring, and he is correct, Mr. Speaker; there is absolutely nothing wrong with aluminum wiring so long as you do not hook it up to a power source. But normally you hook it up to a power source, which connects it to the circuitry in a house, and this is where the problem lies.

Two things happen with aluminum wiring which do not happen so readily with copper wiring. First of all, with aluminum wiring when you scratch the bright, shiny aluminum the shininess disappears and oxidation takes place almost instantaneously. When it becomes oxidized it, in effect, insulates against the proper conduct of electricity. When aluminum wires are bent over for the purpose of screwing them into switches or receptacles in the wall, the exposed wiring again almost immediately oxidizes.

Secondly, heat affects the expansion of aluminum many times faster than with copper. If you have copper screws in your receptacle and heat develops, as it will due to weakness in aluminum wiring caused by the oxidation, the aluminum wire passing around the screw will expand. This in effect flattens the wire because it then cannot expand beyond the allowance of the screw. When the wire cools, it is no longer directly connected but there is a gap. It also oxidizes where the flattening has taken place.

There are 500,000 homes with aluminum wiring in this country. I could point out the decisions that have been made in the United States and what has been done about it there, but we do not have to talk about that; what we should talk about is what we are going to do to protect people in Canada. Hydro authorities have stated that if the wiring is properly installed it is not dangerous, and that is true. Proper installation would mean adding a piece on the end of the aluminum wire. After it was cleaned a clip would be put over the wire. There would be pentrox grease inside the clip. A hydraulic clamp would then be squeezed firmly in place. The clamp would likely be made of copper so the process would be expensive. But, Mr. Speaker, it will have to happen.

One of the major culprits in this town that has looked for a shortcut at the risk of human life is the Campeau Corporation in the subdivisions it has developed. It is interesting to note that when Mr. Campeau's own house burned down there was some indication that the fire was caused by the electrical wiring system—aluminum wiring apparently. It can be argued whether or not that was so. But he built a new $150,000 house and used aluminum wiring in it. The television cameras were there to watch the installation which was widely publicized. And why was that? Because even at the risk of his own life and his children's lives he had to establish credibility so that he would not lose his money through having to rewire the Campeau subdivisions.

I am positive one little girl was lost in a subdivision fire in Ottawa last year because of electrical wiring, and I am pretty sure there were two more boys burned in the same subdivision shortly afterwards. People expert in the field say that the main problem will not develop for ten years.

I suggest that we outlaw the use of aluminum wiring in future building and tag all houses that now have it so that people will know it is there and that a dangerous situation exists.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the important question raised by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) prompted some inquiries on my part not only within the ministry but in my own files. I was familiar with the question mainly because a member on this side of the House, the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik), had spoken to me several times during the last year about aluminum wiring. I found in my files several documents, not the least of them a memorandum written by the hon. member for Ontario on June 10, 1976, and addressed to several ministers. Knowing the hon. member for Ontario I am sure he will be flattered at the interest being shown in his cause by the hon. member for Timiskaming.

The matter of the installation of aluminum wiring was examined by a task force on aluminum terminations. This task force, set up under the auspices of the Canadian Standards Association, agreed that the new terminal devices which have been introduced are satisfactory but that a standard for aluminum wire should be developed to ensure that an acceptable and consistent product continues to be acceptable.

Provincial authorities, having the responsibility for establishing and enforcing electrical wiring safety standards, have taken steps to overcome initial inadequacies in the connecting devices and workmanship. They appear to be actively reviewing the matter and displaying a readiness to take any further action necessary to ensure that aluminum wiring installation will be adequately controlled and will meet acceptable standards.

Subject to new factors or changes in present conditions, we believe that this matter must be resolved by those agencies which have the expertise in the electrical field and which have been entrusted with responsibility for safety in electrical installations.

LABOUR CONDITIONS—STATEMENT OF MINISTER ON GOVERNMENT'S ACCOMMODATION OF LABOUR—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to remind the House that in a speech made on October 28, 1976, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) said:

> One of the first things we want to do is to create a national forum which would discuss and make recommendations on the big economic issues of the day. Such a forum would bring together representatives of government, labour, business, the farm community, possibly others.

In that speech he also said:

> This is a program I have been developing with my departmental officials over several months. I will not be deterred by inflation. I will not be deterred by the wage and price control program, or by labour's opposition to it, or by opposition in the business community to the restraints.

That was the minister's position setting out government policy on October 28.

On November 27 last, as reported at page 1332 of Hansard, I asked about the other parties he had referred to in his speech. I said:

> Can the minister say whether the Canadian Labour Congress accepts the format the minister sets out?

The minister replied:

> We are not sure at this stage whether the type of forum we are suggesting—an alliance of various interests on an equal footing to discuss national problems—would be suitable to the business community or to labour.

That was the position of the minister on November 24. On November 29, 1976, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) was asked similar questions. He said in respect of a meeting with representatives of the business community:

> . . . but they were positive about participation in a multipartite group which would make it possible to have discussions and perhaps agreement on some of the major economic questions . . .

On December 3 last another question was asked of the Minister of Labour as reported at page 1642 of Hansard. I asked:

> . . . will the minister now please tell the House what other parties the government will be talking to, to whom he referred in his answers a few days ago—

And to whom he referred in his speech—

—and whether he has told labour what other parties he has in mind.

He was unable to set out what other parties he was referring to, and he said:

> We do not know whether there is going to be some real participation by, for instance, labour.

That was on December 3. Later questions were raised again in the House on February 9 this year. These questions were directed by me to the Minister of Finance. He said in reply:

> . . . we have active negotiations under way for a multipartite meeting with business, labour and provincial representatives.

Then he said:

> We are in the process of discussions with the various groups, and we have recommended to them that they should be prepared to meet at such a generalized meeting.

Following that, on February 19 the Minister of Labour made his incredible statement about the Liberal Party and its forging a new accommodating relationship with labour, which was of course immediately denied by Mr. Morris of CLC and Mr. Pilkey of the Ontario Federation of Labour. Mr. Morris said:

> . . . they now know they were sold down the river by the Liberal government . . .

Mr. Pilkey said:

> There is no way labour can find any accommodation in the Liberal party.

More recently, on February 22, the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) repudiated the statements of the Minister of Labour in the House and disavowed any connection with them.

The first question is as follows: has management agreed to the multipartite forum or, if not, to a tripartite forum, or either of them?

The second question is: in the discussions with the provinces, has any agreement been met with respect to the proposal of the Minister of Labour?

The third question is: has CLC agreed to the multipartite national forum and, if not, does the government expect agreement or is it prepared to settle for a tripartite consultative organization representing government, labour, and management?

Finally, has there been any discussions with other groups, as the Minister of Labour said there would be as long ago as November 24, 1976?

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): It seems important to me not to confuse at the outset two classes of issues. There is, on the one part, the need to maintain a healthy and vigorous dialogue between the different economic partners; on the other part, that dialogue can and does take various forms that are not necessarily incompatible with one another. So the remark by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) that we should come to new arrangements with the Canadian Labour Congress meets the first concern by reasserting the openness as well as the attachment of this government to continued discussions among partners who are not without knowledge that it is in the interest of all to cooperate as closely in the solution of our problems.

As to the more particular issue of specific ways of initiating and continuing the dialogue it can be approached in terms of past efforts and an attempt to outline a few perspectives. I can say that to date we have had preliminary discussions with union and business representatives. It is still too early to determine the eventual direction of those discussions and what forms, whether institutionalized or not, they will take in the future. The idea of putting the Canada Labour Relations Board or still the Economic Council of Canada back in motion as a meeting point or a general framework for discussions are all so many available possibilities but on which it would be premature to surmise at this point. As to the Labour Congress we know that its preference goes to a tripartite structure but the government already expressed reservations about that.

All this to indicate in the final analysis that we are still looking for—and in this respect the dialogue with the parties concerned is still going on—an appropriate framework for the discussion of government policies. But whatever the final forum on which the parties will agree this government has no intention whatsoever of abandoning the efforts made so far and which look promising.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTION CANADIAN COMPANIES IN SOUTH AFRICA AND NAMIBIA ESTABLISH EQUALITY IN TREATMENT OF WORKERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. With respect to assertions at the United Nations this week that seven Canadian companies are collaborating with South Africa to exploit the resources of former Southwest Africa, and in view of Canada's continued rejection of South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia, as well as our opposition to the practice of apartheid, and with regard to a recent initiative of 11 major American corporations with operations in South Africa to apply a set of guidelines ending desegregation in eating, toilet and working facilities and establishing equal pay for equal work in South Africa, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather):

(1) That Canada declare its strong opposition to the support of Canadian business enterprises for South African involvement in Namibia,

(2) That an inquiry be made to ensure that no tax advantages are provided to Canadian companies operating in Namibia,

(3) That Canadian firms operating in South Africa be encouraged to pursue initiatives similar to their American counterparts in establishing clear guidelines and working conditions with the South African government which will establish equality in treatment for workers regardless of race.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

PROPOSAL THAT PROGRAM END ON JUNE 30, 1977—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I, too rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on an urgent and pressing matter relating to the termination of the controls program. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House support the recommendation to his caucus by the financial critic of the Official Opposition, the hon. member for York-Simcoe, that the government's controls program be eliminated by June 30, 1977.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for debate only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No!

HEALTH

CARCINOGENIC QUALITIES OF SACCHARIN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on an important matter of urgent necessity. In view of reports that saccharin may have carcinogenic qualities and has been reported to be related to cancer in animals, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Neilsen) as well as the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall):

That the minister state in this House at the earliest opportunity what action he intends to take in this regard.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate under Standing Order 43, even with two seconders, requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No!

HARBOURS

PORT OF MONTREAL NOT USE SURPLUS TO DISCHARGE DEBT CONNECTED WITH EARLY RETIREMENT PROGRAM FOR LONGSHOREMEN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the serious suggestion emanating from Montreal that the surplus funds account of the port of Montreal be used to write off debts incurred by the port in putting into effect an early retirement program for longshoremen some four or five years ago, and because such action would amount to the use of public funds for the purpose of subsidizing labour costs in that port, thereby creating an unfair advantage for one Canadian port over another, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave):

That the government direct the Minister of Transport to instruct the National Harbours Board and any other appropriate authority, including the port of Montreal Authority, that this surplus fund, comprised by and large of paper depreciation on capital holdings and from the transfer of lands to the City of Montreal shall not be used for this purpose.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No!

STATUS OF WOMEN

DENIAL OF PENSIONS TO SPINSTERS AND WIDOWS BETWEEN AGES OF 60 AND 65—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, this being International Women's Day—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): —I should like to present a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43 which deals with a very practical issue. First, I would explain for the benefit of readers of Hansard that the Minister responsible for the Status of Women is the same person as the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

● (1410)

That this House calls upon the Minister responsible for the Status of Women to inform the Minister of National Health and Welfare that the denial of a pension or allowance to a woman between the ages of 60 and 65 because she does not have a husband is a violation of human rights and of the principle of equality, and this House calls upon the Minister of Justice to join with the Minister responsible for the Status of Women in pressing the Minister of National Health and Welfare to correct this injustice forthwith.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 can be presented only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

MISS TEEN CANADA

CONGRATULATIONS TO MISS NANCY JANE NEWBURN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I wish to move a motion congratulating Miss Nancy Jane Newburn who was chosen Miss Teen Canada at a ceremony in Toronto last evening. It should be noted by all members of parliament that Miss Newburn is a native of Sudbury and a representative of northern Ontario in that pageant. Since you, Mr. Speaker, represent that great city in this House, we ask you to personally extend the greetings and good wishes of all members of the House of Commons to Miss Newburn on this happy occasion.

SUGGESTION GOVERNMENT CEASE ATTEMPTS TO PREVENT CIVIL SERVANTS FROM OBEYING SUBPOENAS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a motion under Standing Order 43, the pressing and urgent circumstances of which appear from the motion. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

That this House demands the government cease and desist from instructing legal counsel on its behalf to attempt to prevent civil servants from obeying subpoenas or to provide them with immunity from such subpoenas.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 can be made only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF WAY IN WHICH CORPORATION FULFILLING MANDATE—NATURE OF REPLY

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. On Friday last the Prime Minister wrote to the chairman of the CRTC inviting the CRTC to investigate doubts as to whether the English and French television networks of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation are fulfilling the mandate of the corporation. I wonder if the Prime Minister can advise the House whether he has received a detailed response from the chairman of the CRTC and, if so, what that response is.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not received any response as of yet.

SUGGESTION MINISTERS MAKE SPECIFIC CHARGES AGAINST RADIO-CANADA

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since it has been the consistent practice of the Prime Minister to refuse inquiries on other important matters either by an agency of the House of Commons or by any other government agency unless specific charges have been made by a member of this House, and since there have been general charges made—and perhaps specific charges; we have not yet seen the list of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs against Radio-Canada by ministers of the Crown, is it the intention of the Prime Minister to instruct his ministers who feel they have charges to make, to make those charges to the CRTC specifically, and to make them public so that this House and the people associated with Radio-Canada will know of what they are accused, and by whom?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot indicate how the CRTC will conduct its inquiry. I can say that if the CRTC wants to hear from ministers or from members on this side as well members on the other side regarding opinions or observations that they may want to make, I am quite certain that opinions will be volunteered from this side. Once again I cannot ascertain how the CRTC will want to conduct its hearings or if it will want to hear specific accusations from this side.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I am interested in the double standard the Prime Minister is applying. He refuses to have inquiries into other matters unless specific charges are made in the House, yet proceeds in the case of Radio-Canada to have an inquiry undertaken, without specific charges. My question to him did not relate to what the CRTC is to do; my question to him is whether he is going to instruct ministers who have raised questions about Radio-Canada to make specific charges, and make them public?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, there is, I believe, some confusion in the mind of the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Fraser: He is not confused.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I could insist on my ministers renewing the charges they made a few weeks ago.

Mr. Broadbent: And documenting them.

Mr. Trudeau: And documenting them, Mr. Speaker. But I had thought that by proceeding via the CRTC route we would diffuse the need for those kinds of charges—

An hon. Member: What about smear and innuendo?

Mr. Trudeau: —I and have the investigation made by the CRTC itself. So far as the so-called double standards are concerned, it seems to me that the distinction is rather easy to see and make. I have refused investigations into alleged illegalities, for the simple reason, as I have said in the House, that I feel due process of law is the normal way to investigate crimes or alleged crimes.

Mr. Fraser: What about improprieties?

Mr. Trudeau: I indicated, in so far as the courts were concerned, that if they were frustrated in some way or the police were frustrated in some way from pursuing the verification of the allegation of illegality, I would consider setting up an inquiry. But in this particular case there have been no allegations of crime, or of illegalities. The allegation had to do with content and innuendo. This, I suggest, the Leader of the Opposition would not expect me to ask the police or courts to look into; that is why I asked a quasi-judicial body to look into it.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, it is well known to this House that there have been complaints about alleged separatism in Radio-Canada for many years. These have been raised in debates in this House as far back as in 1967. But this inquiry which was announced on Friday followed precisely and exactly after the flurry of public attacks by members of the Cabinet of Canada, of the Liberal party of Canada, about separatism in the CBC. It followed those attacks directly. Consequently, since accusations by ministers of the Liberal party were the cause of this particular inquiry, will the Prime Minister accept his responsibility and instruct ministers whose general accusations caused the inquiry to be specific and public about their accusations?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if the Leader of the Opposition feels that the inquiry was instituted merely because there were complaints by ministers, I can only comment that he is badly misinformed about public feelings in Quebec, the CBC, Radio-Canada, and about content.

Mr. Fraser: Do you mean public feelings caused the inquiry? Whom are you kidding.

Mr. Trudeau: Accusations have been made over a period of several years about alleged separatist leanings of the CBC. They were made long before ministers voiced them a couple of weeks ago. The Leader of the Opposition should be made aware of this, if he is not aware of it already.

REASON FOR INQUIRY INTO TELEVISION ONLY

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Prime Minister can tell us why the CRTC has been asked to investigate only the television side of broadcasting? Is it perhaps that separatists who can be seen are considered as more dangerous than those on radio? What is the rationale?

An hon. Member: Look in the mirror.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. I must confess that the reason for our singling out television is that I was hoping it could be done within a rather short deadline, by July 1. But I have since learned that it would be almost as easy for CRTC to conduct at the same time an inquiry into the radio side, and I have written Mr. Boyle to ask him if he believed it possible within that time framework to include radio.

● (1420)

POSITION OF EXPERTS ATTACHED TO COMMISSION OF INQUIRY

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Perhaps we will have just a series of tabled letters. Could the Prime Minister tell us about the use by CRTC of outside experts? Are they to be attached to the commission? That part of the Prime Minister's letter, with great respect to him, was rather general. Are these to be ad hoc members of the commission, are they just technical experts, or who and what are they and whence do they come?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): There again, for the same reason when I wrote to the chairman of CRTC. I made the point that since I was asking for a report within a fairly short period of time, I saw no objection to having outsiders join him or CRTC. I did not give him any further instructions and I would not expect him to want any of me. I await his answer, and would expect him to have freedom of choice in that matter.

LACK OF SPECIFIC ACCUSATIONS IN REQUEST FOR INQUIRY

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister as well. Quite apart from how CRTC decides to undertake its inquiry, if it should decide to proceed, I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether he does not realize that in writing to CRTC as the Prime Minister of Canada and requesting such an inquiry, it was of fundamental importance, in order to avoid the impression of creating a Nixon-like pressure on the news media of Canada—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: —that in his letter requesting an investigation he provides very specific instances that he wanted investigated.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think what the Leader of the NDP described as a request was an invitation, and in his question he has hinted that perhaps I would not get a positive response. I do not know what response I will get, but I submit that in the very way he asked the question he indicated his belief that CRTC is free to act or not, and that is also my belief.

Mr. Broadbent: The Prime Minister did not answer the question. I should like to refer back to his own suggestion or at least his reference to the rule of law. Would the Prime Minister not agree that when accusations are raised without specific instances being referred to, what you are doing is casting doubt on all the employees in such an institution and on all their actions, and therefore, quite correctly, such an inquiry, particularly initiated by the head of a government, is seen to lead to a kind of witchhunt in the organization concerned?

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, this seems to revert to the earlier question put by the Leader of the Opposition. I repeat, there is no accusation or suspicion of illegality or wrongdoing here. The suspicion and the allegations are in the area of conveying bias or slanted views of the news or a slanted picture of the unity of Confederation. There is nothing illegal in doing this, but when the taxpayer puts up half a billion dollars a year to have a public broadcasting system, he is justified in ascertaining that that system does not set out to destroy the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: As I said to the Leader of the Opposition, this is not a matter in which we can say, let the law follow its course, or let the police do their work, as I have done when they have asked for commissions in other areas. This is a matter of opinion, innuendo and nuance, and I do not think it is for politicians or partisans to make a judgment on this. I do think that the people—

Mr. Grafftey: You have made your judgment.

Mr. Trudeau: Of course I have made my judgment, and that is that we should refer the question to the CRTC, which is a quasi-judicial body.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, in asking my final supplementary I would like to refer to the letter by the Prime Minister himself dated March 4. He has just said to the House that no one makes suggestions of wrongdoing. I say to him that he was precise in suggesting wrongdoing in his letter when he called upon the CRTC to investigate whether or not the CBC is carrying out its mandate.

An hon. Member: Whether or not.

Mr. Broadbent: If that is not a suggestion of wrongdoing, I do not know what is.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: If the babblers would be quiet I would like to get my question asked. In the past the Prime Minister has expressed in this House his concern about the principles of justice, but we are not talking about the Criminal Code here. I would like to ask him if he believes it is consistent with the principles of justice to call into question the reputation of a major news gathering agency in Canada without citing one specific incident in his letter.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, once again the term "wrongdoing" is used by the Leader of the New Democratic Party in an ambiguous fashion. Yes, it is a wrongdoing to spend taxpayers' money for a purpose which is not that for which the money was provided.

Mr. Clark: Otto Lang.

Mr. Trudeau: But there is no illegality in the particular allegations. It is a question of whether the CBC is or is not pursuing its general objectives. The leaders of the opposition parties do this all the time when in the estimates committee they ask ministers or officials whether they are following their mandate. They do not make accusations. They probe and they try to find out. In this particular case there have been accusations of a very general and ongoing nature.

An hon. Member: By you.

Mr. Trudeau: By us, and I would say also by a very large number of Quebecers. Anyone who has had the advantage of living in the province of Quebec and talking to the people would know that there is a loud, continuing and even agonized cry about the CBC destroying the unity of this country, and hon. members of the opposition should know that, if they do not already know.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

LANGUAGE OF COMMUNICATIONS AT MILITARY AIRPORTS

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence.

Could he tell us clearly what is the air-ground or ground-ground language of communication used at the Canadian military air bases in Quebec?

[English]

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that both official languages are used at St. Hubert, which is an MOT station. Actually, the practice at the present time is that English is a common language for military operations.

Mr. Matte: I should like to put a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

I would like to ask the minister if the policy for air-ground or ground-ground military communications in Quebec is in accordance with the bilingualism policy of the government, that is whether the use of French in those communications is tolerated or encouraged in all Quebec military airports?

[English]

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, the use of both official languages is indeed encouraged. I might say that I am in the process of looking into this entire matter. I am not fully informed on it, but I give a very high priority to encouraging the use of both official languages throughout the armed forces as a matter of course.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY OF AGREEMENT WITH UNITED STATES ON MOVEMENT OF OIL AND GAS FROM ALASKA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. President Carter has indicated that the United States and Canada are near agreement on plans to ship Alaska natural gas, and possibly oil, across Canada to the lower 48 states, as reported by the Associated Press yesterday. The president apparently indicated that Canada will play a major role in moving gas and possibly oil out of Alaska. My question is, what is the agreement that is near between the United States and Canada on shipping Alaska natural gas and possibly oil across Canada to the lower 48 states? Has the Prime Minister agreed with the president on the Mackenzie Valley pipeline project suggested by Arctic Gas or on one of the other proposals or just what agreement is now near? How is Canada to play a major role in moving gas and possibly oil out of Alaska?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as with so many reports, that is probably an incorrect one. I can say to the hon. member that there is no agreement. There cannot be one near either because I made it very clear to the President that the government would not be in a position to make any decision until we had heard from the National Energy Board and from the commission of Mr. Justice Berger, which I believe is not expected before the end of April.

Mr. Crosbie: The president is also quoted as saying that his chief energy adviser, James Schlesinger, and the Canadian Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, met last Friday to probe further agreement with Canada on the shipments. Why would these representatives of the United States and Canada meet to probe further agreement on shipments if there has not already been an agreement? If there is no formal agreement between the United States and Canada in this area, has the Prime Minister reached an understanding with the president to the effect that Alaska natural gas and possibly oil will be permitted to be moved across Canada to the United States or has the Prime Minister given the President the impression that Canada will take an affirmative approach on these issues when Mr. Justice Berger and the National Energy Board have reported? Will the Prime Minister comment on that?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, a whole series of comments would be called for here. I would just say that I agree with the hon. member's logic in the first part of his question, and I would be inclined to say, exactly.

Oral Questions

POLICY ON SEEKING IMMUNITY FROM SUBPOENAS FOR CIVIL SERVANTS—POSSIBILITY OF LEGISLATED CHANGE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. Is it the policy of this government to instruct its Counsel to appear before municipal boards or courts and try to obtain blanket immunity for civil servants so that they do not have to appear in response to subpoenas and give evidence?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Not generally, Mr. Speaker. There may be the particular circumstance where it would be warranted.

Mr. Baldwin: In view of the fact that any such attempt is based on the ancient royal prerogative of Crown privilege which anti-dates the Bill of Rights, a right which is being asserted by the Prime Minister and his friends at the present time, will the Minister of Justice instruct his counsel not to make any such requests and to see about securing some form of legislation by which the right will be specifically spelled out and not left to chance as they are at the present time?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, these instructions were given to counsel in connection with an Ontario Municipal Board hearing. However, I want to point out that counsel assured the Municipal Board that officials of the National Capital Commission would make available to the board all the information that they could, and provide the board with every assistance that they could. As I take it, only from newspaper clippings, the matter in issue was the subpoenaing of other officials from the National Capital Commission who would possibly be called upon to discuss information, the disclosure of which would place them in contravention of their oath of office. I can assure the hon. member that the Justice counsel assured the board they would provide every possible assistance they could.

Mr. Baldwin: Will the Minister of Justice take into consideration that this attempt to provide selective information would deprive counsel of the right to cross examination which is one of the cherished privileges of the courts of today.

Mr. Basford: That was not the effect of the submission, Mr. Speaker.

INDUSTRY

LEARSTAR JET PROGRAM—NUMBER OF PLANES FINANCED BY EXPORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It is with regard to the sale of 25 LearStar jets to the Federal Express Company of the United States. The minister informed me last Friday that the Canadian Export Development Corporation would be financing the purchase of 25 of these aircraft. Will the minister inform me the percentage of the sales of these planes the Export Development Corporation will be financing? With regard to the other 75 orders, will the Export Development Corporation be financing the purchase of those planes?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, of the 71 already sold, 25 will be financed through the Export Development Corporation for a total amount of some $115 million. I think that the sale of 46 aircraft has been made without any intervention by the EDC.

[English]

LEARSTAR JET PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF DESIGN AND STRUCTURAL PROBLEMS BY MR. GOLDEN

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): During the week of January 31 in Reno, Nevada Canadair and Lear Aviation had a meeting with regard to the design and structural problems that Canadair is having with this aircraft. Will the minister have Mr. David Golden investigate these structural problems as he has informed me that contracts may be terminated if Canadair fails to supply these aircraft within 12 months of the scheduled delivery date?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Golden was asked to study the structure of Canadair Limited and de Havilland Aircraft of Canada Limited. He will certainly be called upon to examine the development of aircraft built by those two companies and if he has comments to make, he could make them to me. For my part, I feel that the LearStar program is progressing extremely well under the circumstances.

POSSIBILITY OF CANADA-WIDE INQUIRY

Mrs. Simma Holt (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Since a group of 100 leading British Columbia citizens, the list headed by a former NDP member of parliament, Grace MacInnis, has asked western members of parliament to investigate or act on the failure of the CBC to fulfill its mandate both with regard to unity and journalistic quality, will the Prime Minister advise this House if the CRTC chairman will carry out the investigation on a national east to west scale?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether all members of this House would agree that that is not too vague an accusation by Mrs. Grace MacInnis and others. However, I think that her concern is certainly one which we share. I would merely remind the hon.

member that when I wrote the president of the CRTC I did mention that aspect of the English and French networks.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EFFECT ON INQUIRY OF INTRODUCTION OF TELECOMMUNICATIONS LEGISLATION

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of his assumption that this inquiry into the CBC is based on innuendo, insinuation and implication, will the Prime Minister agree that if the CRTC is going to carry out this very difficult inquiry that any suggested influence or interference with its affairs, either direct or implied, should be removed. In that light, has the Prime Minister had a chance to talk to the Minister of Communications about the second phase of the telecommunications legislation which very directly involves the CRTC and changes in its composition so that element can be brought out into the open also?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): On the first part of the question, Mr. Speaker, I agree that something or somebody should be removed. On the second part of the question, we have had some talks and they are ongoing between the minister and myself.

COMMUNICATIONS

SUGGESTED INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO ALLEVIATE EFFECT ON INQUIRY INTO CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question to the Minister of Communications? In view of the fact that this invitation to have an inquiry into the CBC by the CRTC very directly involves the CRTC, can the minister assure the House that the second phase of the legislation will be introduced so that any questions involving changes in the CRTC would not affect either directly or indirectly the hearing requested by the Prime Minister?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, that inquiry can be made by the CRTC if the latter decides to comply with the invitation of the right hon. Prime Minister. It can also be included in the current mandate of the CRTC.

As for the second phase of the legislation, it will be tabled in the House in due course; the hon. member can then move amendments or come up with suggestions in the House or, in any event, see how the bill defines the relationship between the CRTC and the federal government.

ENERGY

MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE—POSSIBILITY OF AGREEMENT TO SALE OF GAS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources regarding the discussions held last week in Washington with energy officials of the United States government. In a report emanating from a meeting of newspaper editors in the White House, President Carter is quoted as saying that Canada has substantial supplies of natural gas and whether the United States can make use of the surplus along with Alaskan gas is "something I will have to decide." May I inquire of the minister if he has agreed to the sale of Canadian gas in the Mackenzie Delta to the American market and if not, what information has been given to the United States authorities which would lead the president to believe that Canada has substantial surplus supplies of gas which could be made available to the United States from the Mackenzie valley pipeline?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the House that no offer was made. I can only assume that, as sometimes happens, this is a completely erroneous newspaper report.

NORTHERN PIPELINES—DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES ON FINANCIAL GUARANTEES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister is quoted in the press as stating that he would discuss with the United States government the matter of financial guarantees for northern pipelines. In view of the minister's statement to the House that no guarantees had been asked for and, so far, none given, I should like to ask whether any understanding has been reached between the two governments with respect to financial guarantees? In particular, I should like to know whether such guarantees will be given jointly and what proportion of the cost would be borne by the Canadian people?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, no understanding has been reached with respect to completion guarantees or any form of guarantee with respect to a possible pipeline going through Canada. When I was in Washington I did discuss the possibility that a request might be made with respect to either CAGPL or Alcan, two applications that I thought would be of most interest to the United States and that we would be doing some contingency planning ourselves on the basis of that possibility. I suggested to the United States that in view of their interest in a pipeline in the north they might want to do their own contingency planning and set up their own group for that purpose. I believe they will because the other option they have, the El Paso option, would also involve some kind of subsidy or completion guarantee or guarantee of financing of the tankers involved.

Oral Questions

OIL—POSSIBLE EXTENSION OF EXPIRY DATE FOR EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES IN VIEW OF IMPORTS FROM INDONESIA

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question. I should like to ask the minister about his statements at the press conference in Washington in which he said it was a distinct possibility that Canada could import Indonesian oil, I presume through the Kitimat pipeline, and if such were the case it might be possible to extend the expiry date of oil exports to the United States which is 1981. Is it the government's intention to extend the expiry date of oil exports to the United States and does the government accept the proposition that we should take Indonesian oil as a swap and continue to sell Canadian oil to American customers?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has taken two quite separate aspects of that particular press conference and joined them together. Let me deal with the two quite separately. I did discuss with United States officials the question of continuing to supply the northern tier refineries and the importance to Canada of swaps in being able to maintain this particular activity as our own exports would be scaled down in the years to come—swaps of secure oil for secure oil. The hon. member may know that the presidential adviser, Mr. Schlesinger, agreed that this was from his point of view a completely understandable position. I went on to point out that there might be an opportunity to protect Canada and the United States in the event of another oil embargo and that an oil storage facility in Newfoundland, in particular at Wabana, might be used for this purpose.

As to the question of Indonesian oil, I acknowledged when I was asked a question about whether there would be any advantage to Canada in the Kitimat pipeline that there might be and that clearly this decision had not been taken but that one of the possible advantages to Canada would be the opportunity to import oil on our west coast and perhaps Indonesian oil.

OIL—DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES ON POSSIBLE USE OF BELL ISLAND STORAGE FACILITIES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Is the minister able to tell the House if he had any specific discussions with the new administration in Washington with regard to the possibility of crude oil storage in Canada using the Wabana facilities on Bell Island?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in the answer to the last question I did have fairly extensive discussions with the new administration on that point.

Mr. McGrath: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister tell the House what those discussions were?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, there was interest on the part of the United States officers and officials that I spoke to about this possibility. There was agreement that there should be a committee of officials to examine the details of how such an arrangement might be worked out.

[Mr. Gillespie.]

ESTABLISHMENT OF YOUTH CORPS—DISCUSSIONS WITH YOUTH ORGANIZATIONS—PERCENTAGE TAKING MILITARY OPTION

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. In view of the fact that in setting up the youth corps, the chairman of the national co-ordinating group of youth organizations had written to the Prime Minister and received a promise that before the youth corps was set up, the volunteer organizations in Canada would be consulted and so far they have not been consulted, is it the minister's intention to discuss this with this body of volunteer organizations?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned to one hon. member opposite just a few days ago, I hope to be able to make an announcement along these lines in the near future and certainly volunteer organizations will be very involved.

Mr. Dick: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, as it is anticipated that only six per cent of people entering the youth corps will take the military option may I ask the minister if this is a firm figure or is this only the number that the military could absorb?

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, it is an incorrect figure.

HARBOURS

DEBT OF MARITIME EMPLOYERS ASSOCIATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Lafontaine-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport.

Yesterday a group of hon. members from the Montreal area met the Montreal port authorities as well as the leaders of Local 375 of the Longshoremen's Association. It was indicated that the Cast Shipping Company might very soon be leaving for the port of Halifax, which would result in increasing the tax on cargo from $2.94 to $4.90 and would have disastrous effects on the future of the port of Montreal. Does the minister intend to intervene by suggesting that the government take over the $17 million debt incurred by the Maritime Employers Association?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we now have an observer present at meetings which are continuing in relation to the Cast-Maritime Employers Association dispute. It does seem to us that it is in the interests of both parties to arrive at a settlement because from Cast's point of view it is likely the least expensive place for the business to be handled and, or course, the business and its income is important to MEA. Therefore, I am hopeful that a successful conclusion will be arrived at in the course of discussions which are going on.

SUGGESTED PROHIBITION OF USE OF SURPLUS FUNDS OF PORT OF MONTREAL TO DISCHARGE DEBT OF MARITIME EMPLOYERS ASSOCIATION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, as much as the Port of Halifax would like to have this business, the hon. member is absolutely correct about the crippling effect it would have on the port of Montreal. What we on the east coast want is not business at the expense of another part of Canada but an assurance from the government that they will not use the surplus account funds of the port of Montreal to reduce a debt which, after all, is a legal debt contracted between an employer and its employees. To use the money in that manner would constitute, at the very least, an illegal act. What we are asking is that the minister will not even consider such a course but, rather, that he will issue instructions on behalf of the government that this is not to be done.

● (1450)

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): I pointed out in my earlier answer that I saw the question as one which does not even arise because of the mutual interest of the parties in arriving at a settlement. I should like to assure the hon. member with regard to his broad concern that the government will continue to act in an equitable fashion as between different regions and ports of this country.

Mr. Forrestall: Could the minister give us some assurance that conversations are not taking place, and have not taken place, between the MEA and the National Harbours Board or any other group with respect to the use of that surplus account fund? That is a public fund.

Mr. Lang: We have only been there in an observer capacity in relation to the discussion on rates. The only mention of the fund I know of has arisen either in the press or in the questions asked by the hon. member.

HEALTH

GERIATRIC RESEARCH—REQUEST FOR SUPPORT

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that the number of senior citizens relative to the work force is estimated to double in the next few decades leaving a smaller group of workers to meet the economic and social responsibilities, has the minister any plans to finance and fully support geriatric research to keep older people healthy and working longer years to help the economy out and lighten the tax burden on the family man?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I can assure the hon. member that I share his concern about this problem. As the hon. member has stated, it is one which has substantial implications for the future economy of our country. There have been and are presently studies undertaken on the strictly medical side of the question by the Medical Research Council and on the socio-economic side through Health and Welfare development grants. Funds are available for researchers who are interested in pursuing this matter. At the present time, there are discussions going on between the MRC and the Canadian Association of Gerontology as to how MRC programs could best be used to meet the needs of senior citizens.

Mr. Rynard: Would the minister take up with his colleagues the establishment of incentives to encourage the urge felt by older citizens to keep on working when they are physically fit?

Mr. Lalonde: I would certainly be happy to discuss this matter. We are at the present time examining the whole question of private and public pension programs and surely this is one aspect which should be looked into.

THE CONSTITUTION

NUMBER OF REPLIES FROM PREMIERS ON PATRIATION—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF LETTERS

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister inform the House from which of the provincial premiers he has received replies to his letter of January 19, 1977 regarding patriation of the constitution, and will he table those replies as he did his original letter to the premiers?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am afraid I cannot answer that question without first making an inquiry. I believe one or two answers have come in but I am not certain if that is the total number. I know that two have come in because I acknowledged their receipt. I am not sure whether there are more. I would have to inquire. As to tabling them, I prefer to follow the usual custom of getting answers from everyone and tabling the answers together.

DATE OF COMMENCEMENT OF BUDGET DEBATE

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Postmaster General in his capacity as deputy government House leader. Has a decision yet been made as to when the debate on the budget will commence, bearing in mind the fact that there might be some difficulty about completing it before a contemplated Easter break? If a decision has not been made, would the hon. gentleman consult with the government House leader and perhaps advise the House as to the results on Thursday?

Mr. Blais: There has been no decision taken on that matter as yet. Representations are noted, and consultations will take place followed by an announcement in the usual course.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

SPRUCE BUDWORM—GOVERNMENT EFFORTS TO COMBAT

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. In view of the growing concern in the pulp and paper industry in the Atlantic region because of the infestation of the spruce budworm, while it is recognized that there is provincial responsibility, could the minister advise the House whether any consultations have been held with the pulp and paper industry and whether any action is being taken by his department to deal with this serious problem?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, there was a meeting early in February with the representatives of six of the provinces to deal with this very matter. Some provinces, at that time, indicated their intention to go ahead and carry out spraying. Others did not. These are, of course, management decisions which the provinces have to take. The federal government is spending $3 million annually on research into the budworm problem and now there is co-operation with the United States government which recognizes the threat in the State of Maine and intends to spend sums up to $3 million in response. So there are good combined efforts going on.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

DATE OF DECISION ON TURRIN-PENN LEASE NEAR SHANNONVILLE

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development would probably call for too long a preamble. Might I, then, simply ask the minister if he has any idea when we might expect some answer to the problem of the Tyendinaga Mohawks on the Tyendinaga Reserve with regard to the Turrin-Penn lease near Shannonville?

An hon. Member: Would you repeat that in English?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): I received a letter from the hon. member on this subject only yesterday and I will try to give him an answer by mail as soon as possible.

[Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton).]

GUIDELINES CONCERNING USE OF BOXCARS WHICH HAVE CONTAINED DANGEROUS CHEMICALS

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It concerns the dioxin poisoning incident which was reported last week. Would the minister tell the House whether he has asked his colleague, the Minister of Transport, why boxcars which have been reported as containing dangerous chemicals were not properly cleaned out? In particular, can he say why the boxcar which brought contaminated grain to Ottawa on February 8 was not cleaned out prior to the loading of grain? Would the minister tell us whether, following this incident, his department has set up any guidelines governing the use of contaminated boxcars hauling grain?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Details of this particular incident, Mr. Speaker, are still under investigation. When all the facts are known appropriate action will be taken to ensure that such an incident is not repeated.

INDUSTRY

LEARSTAR JET PROGRAM—NUMBER OF ORDERS FINANCED BY CANADIAN EXPORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): My question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. If I understood his answer to the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre correctly, it would appear that the Export Development Corporation is putting up something like 95 per cent of the funds needed for the Federal Express Company to fulfil its order. Could the hon. gentleman tell the House if the other 45 or 46 orders that he claims to have received are based on similar financing by an arm of the federal government?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker, there is only the order of the Federal Express Company which was presented to the Export Development Corporation; the latter studied it according to the usual procedure when dealing with foreign transactions; it came to the conclusion that this was the type of deal it could finance just as it does, every year, finance Canadian exports for hundreds of millions of dollars.

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PREVENT USE OF BOXCARS CONTAMINATED BY CHEMICALS TO HAUL GRAIN

Mr. Frank Maine (Wellington): My question is related to the one asked by the hon. member for Athabasca. I would like to direct it to the Minister of Agriculture. It relates to the unfortunate accident where a container of the toxic insecticide, dioxin, contaminated a CN rail car which was subsequently loaded with feed grain and shipped to a feed dealer in Ottawa on February 8, 1977. Can the minister report what action he has taken to ensure that such accidents do not further jeopardize the health of workers, innocent participants, such as the dealer, the farmer and the food manufacturers and can he tell us whether they will be adequately compensated?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I cannot add very much to what has been said by my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare. We are working very closely together on this. I think it is too early to say what the findings are, but I am assured that action will be taken, indeed has been taken, so as to ensure that this does not happen again. Tests are going on and we should have results later this week which I think will prove to the public that everyone acted in a proper manner.

TRANSPORT

ACTION TO ENSURE BOXCARS USED FOR CHEMICALS NOT USED TO HAUL FOODSTUFF

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is also supplementary but is directed to the Minister of Transport and has to do with the dioxin incident in the city of Ottawa. The minister is no doubt aware that the dioxin got into the milk in Ottawa because a boxcar which was used to carry chemicals was only cleaned out in a very cursory sense and feed grain was then put into the boxcar. I should like to ask the minister whether or not it is now his intention to bring in regulations to ensure that deadly chemicals like dioxin, which is one of the most deadly known to mankind, will never be shipped in the same car as foodstuffs in order to avoid this very unfortunate kind of incident in the future?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is true that the car in question was apparently cleaned in a way not related to the carrying of dangerous materials. The present regulations in relation to dangerous materials, under the supervision of the transport commission, do not include several chemicals of the family in question, and indeed neither do the regulations in the United States. When those regulations do apply, they require very thorough cleaning of cars which ensures against such problems; and of course following this incident, the issue is being reviewed in a desire to see whether these chemicals or others should be added to the list.

POSSIBILITY OF ESTABLISHING ENVIRONMENTAL UNIT TO GUARD AGAINST CHEMICAL CONTAMINATION OF FOOD

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, which goes to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that we had two cases of very severe food contamination last month, first, the PBB's from Michigan and now dioxin, is the minister now giving any consideration to establishing within his department an environmental unit so that the reaction time to these incidents can be a lot shorter? In the case of dioxin it was four weeks before they were able to find the contaminated boxcars.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not completely agree with everything that the hon. member said, but we are well aware that some of these things are very hard to control. We are also well aware of the fact that use of the cars, and so on, should be properly defined, that is, the kind of material which may be put in the cars. Action has been taken, and even if there is suspicion that certain grains may be contaminated they have been destroyed. The department has been running tests on milk and dairy products. Milk has been detained and not allowed on to the market. We do not think at this time that there will be any trace elements show up, from the preliminary tests that we have already made. We are optimistic that no damage has been done, but this is not to say that we should not make sure that this does not happen. It should not happen, and I think somewhere along the line there has been human failure which just should not have occurred, that is all.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. My point of order concerns remarks made earlier this afternoon by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. All members of this House are well aware that the hon. member is known for a scrupulous, scholarly approach to factual matters.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Only in rare instances does a lapse of judgment set in, according to which she systematically misinforms the House and leaves an impression that is 100 per cent opposite to that which prevails in reality.

In speaking to this point of order, I should like to say in a most serious way that she has maligned the former member for Vancouver-Kingsway who devoted almost her whole life to the preservation of civil liberties, and at a time when the present member's Liberal colleagues were systematically persecuting Japanese Canadians on the west coast during the second world war.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has risen on a point of order relating to a mistaken reference to the former member for Vancouver-Kingsway. Perhaps he should confine himself to that.

Mr. Broadbent: This is precisely to that point, Mr. Speaker. The suggestion was made by the present member for Vancouver-Kingsway that a petition or a protest has been generated, on which is to be found the name of Grace McInnis, the former member for Vancouver-Kingsway. The suggestion was made that somehow this petition bore directly or indirectly on the question of separatist tendencies in the CBC on the one hand or, on the other hand, was devoid of specific references to the carrying out of the mandate of the CBC.

I want to suggest that the member has misinformed the House. The petition that she refers to did precisely what ought to be done by someone who is concerned about the CBC's mandate. First of all, the petition was presented to the present head of the CBC. It concerned regional programming in British Columbia and had absolutely nothing to do with carrying out, in a different context, the mandate of the CBC. Second, it presented fact after fact for consideration by the CBC. In short, it did not do at all what the Prime Minister has done in taking to the CRTC vague and undefined allegations.

Mrs. Holt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. First, I asked that there be an investigation both west and east, but if I may I would like to read part of a letter. I point out that I am indeed factual because I have before me a letter dated February 4, which is an appeal to every member of parliament. It is from the B.C. committee for CBC reform and I can table it. It says:

Dear Mrs. Holt:

You, as a representative of the Canadian people, have the power—and we are sure also the inclination—to institute a thorough investigation into the CBC. We welcome the initiative of Mr. Mitchell Sharp—

That is in relation to a previous request for an investigation.

—in finally bringing before the House on February 3, 1977 the question that has been bothering hundreds of thousands of Canadians: what has happened to that once great institution which was the CBC?

Some ten months ago a group of prominent citizens in B.C. got together to voice their protest with regard to the steady deterioration of the CBC which had been going on for several years, i.e. the loss of equity in both radio and television, the lack of concern for what the regions wanted, the lack of funding for any locally produced programs—

And so on. At the top of page 2 appears the name of Grace MacInnis, former MP, Vancouver. Another well known name in the list is Sidney B. Simons, barrister, West Vancouver, another prominent NDP-er.

Some hon. Members: More.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Regrettably, sometimes points of order are more fun than debates. The point of order is whether or not the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway had in any way misled the House in her intervention during the question period. This was contributed to by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby and it seems to me that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway has now amply laid to rest any suggestion of misleading the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: I did not permit the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby to go further afield into other allegations. Neither should I now, I think, permit the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway to refer to other members who may have signed the petition or to other people whose names appear on it. The fact is that the only question which was at stake in the point of order was whether or not the former member for Vancouver-Kingsway had in fact added her signature to a request for some kind of investigation. I have no intention, under the guise of a point of order, to get into a debate on how widespread that investigation should be. I think the point of order solely concerns whether or not the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway was accurate or inaccurate in telling the House that this signature was in fact on that kind of complaint.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I, too, rise on a point of order. I should like again to bring to the attention of the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council the extreme difficulty that I am having in getting answers to a number of questions on the order paper relating to Statistics Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether the hon. member for Central Nova would raise that under Questions on the Order Paper, which I hope will be reached in a minute.

REED PAPER LIMITED

Question No. 1,055—Mr. Symes:

1. Was a detailed outline of expansion plans for forest industry operations in Northwestern Ontario submitted by Reed Paper Ltd. to the Foreign Investment Review Agency at the time of the proposed takeover of Alpa Industry and, if so (a) what was the proposed acreage of cutting rights Reed included in such an outline (b) what was the total amount of new investment proposed (c) what was the proposal for (i) new plant facilities (ii) plant expansion and what was the dollar value in each case (d) how many new jobs (i) were to result from the expansion (ii) have resulted to date?

2. What is the number of employees presently engaged by Reed as opposed to April 1975?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as the Foreign Investment Review Agency is concerned: 1. At the time of review of the proposal by Reed Paper Ltd. to acquire control of Alpa Industries Limited, the agency received an indication from Reed Paper Ltd. of an expansion of their forest industry operations in northwestern Ontario and in this respect negotiations were being carried on with the Ontario Ministry of Natural Resources for additional timber limits. The confidentiality provisions of Section 14(1) of the Foreign Investment Review Act preclude the agency from releasing specific details of the information submitted by the company at the time of review. Reed Paper Ltd. has recently advised the agency that the acreage for timber cutting rights is still being negotiated with the province of Ontario but, in any event, would not likely exceed 19,000 square miles. The agency has also been advised by Reed Paper Ltd. that its investment in the forest industry operations in northwestern Ontario would be in the order of $400 million. Between April, 1975 and October 31, 1976 the company increased its permanent work force in the region by about 100.

2. Reed Paper Ltd. has also recently advised the agency that its total employment in Canada in April, 1975 was around 7,400 and at October 31, 1976 around 8,000.

DREE GRANT TO DRYDEN PAPER CO. LTD.

Question No. 1,056—Mr. Symes:

1. Was a DREE grant of $237,745 approved for Dryden Paper Co. Ltd. operations at Red Lake Road, Ontario and, if so, how much had been paid out by the Department to date?

2. Were ten new jobs to be directly created as a result of the DREE grant and, if so, how many have actually been created to date?

3. What (a) is the total number to date (b) was the total number as of August 1974 of employees at Dryden Paper's Red Lake Road operations?

4. Was a DREE grant of $805,273 approved for Dryden Paper Co. Ltd. at their Dryden, Ontario plant and, if so, how much has been paid out to date?

5. Were 77 new jobs to be directly created as a result of the DREE grant and, if so, how many have actually been created to date?

6. What (a) is the total number to date (b) was the total number as of August 1974 of employees at Dryden Paper's Dryden, Ontario plant?

Mr. Ed. Lumley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. Yes. This offer of assistance was, however, withdrawn after the Dryden Paper Company Limited (now Reed Limited) advised the department that it did not intend to proceed with the project at this time. No payment was made against the offer.

2. Not applicable.

3. Not applicable.

4. Yes. Again, however, the department withdrew its offer when the company indicated that it did not intend to proceed with the project at this time. No payment was made.

5. Not applicable.

6. Not applicable.

KIT ENTITLED "SEX EDUCATION"

Question No. 1,267—Mrs. Appolloni:

1. What is the cost of the Kit entitled "Sex Education" published by authority of the Minister of National Health and Welfare?

2. Who compiled the list of contributors?

3. Who received contracts for the art work and graphics?

4. By whom is Yon Van Berkon employed?

5. Who requested the compilation of the "Sex Education" teachers' guide and by whom and to whom is it distributed?

6. Under which vote in the estimates has payment of this project been authorized?

7. Were the ministries of education of various provinces consulted with respect to production and distribution?

8. Into how many languages has the Kit been translated?

9. Have the private schools and/or their representatives been consulted with respect to production and distribution?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Cost of kit entitled "Sex Education"—A Teacher's Guide: Printing costs to date.—$23,500. (i.e., 6,000 units of 6 booklets in English and 3,000 units of 6 booklets in French.)

2. The staff of the Family Planning Division, Social Service Programs Branch.

3. Adimec Inc.

4. Mr. Yon Van Berkon is self-employed. On this particular project he worked under contract to Adimec Inc.

5. Compilation of "Sex Education"—A Teacher's Guide followed discussion initiated by staff of the Department of National Health and Welfare who consulted professionals in the field of family planning. Kits are distributed by the Family Planning Division to those outlined in part 7 and in response to requests.

6. Operating funds of the Family Planning Division under Vote 45.

7. The Family Planning Division has an established contact route with staff involved in family planning in the provincial health and welfare ministries. The kit, in its draft form, was viewed and appraised by various officials and professionals across Canada. The kits in final form were forwarded to these persons and to provincial authorities with a request that they contact the appropriate staff in their ministries of education. Provincial reaction is favourable.

8. The kit has been distributed in both official languages.

9. Yes.

CFB GAGETOWN—PERSONNEL

Question No. 1,473—Mr. Howie:

1. Have projections been made as to the future need for (a) military (b) civilian personnel at CFB Gagetown and, if so, what are they?

2. Is consideration being given to locating a tank squadron at CFB Gagetown?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): 1. (a) and (b). Yes. It is forecast that the following additional personnel will be required at CFB Gagetown by 1978: Military, 100; Civilian, 5.

2. Yes.

Order Paper Questions

CRTC—VIOLENCE AND IMMORAL CONTENT OF PROGRAMS

Question No. 1,475—Mr. Howie:

Does CRTC follow any procedures for the investigation and suppression of programming unacceptable because of violent or immoral content and, if so, what are they?

Mr. Ross Milne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): The CRTC does not have authority under the Broadcasting Act to suppress programming. When complaints are received regarding the content of a program which has been broadcast, the commission reviews the program to determine whether a breach of the commission's regulations may have occurred.

FAMILY ALLOWANCES BASED ON EARNINGS

Question No. 1,512—Mr. Herbert:

Has the government considered administering a programme of family allowances based on earnings of the previous year similar to the system used for payment of the supplement to the old age security payments and, if so, what is the estimated cost over and above the administrative cost of the existing family allowances programme?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): When consideration was given to the Family Income Security Program (FISP), the government looked at many options, one of which was to grant family allowances on the basis of earnings of the previous year, a system similar to the one used for payment of the Guaranteed Income Supplement in the Old Age Security program. However, when the government introduced the FISP legislation in the House of Commons in 1972, debate on the legislation was terminated with the close of the fourth session of the twenty-eighth parliament. The legislation was not re-introduced during the twenty-ninth parliament after consideration of arguments presented in the course of this prior debate.

AIB—EMPLOYMENT PRACTICES

Question No. 1,549—Mr. McKenzie:

1. Has the Anti-Inflation Board obtained (a) part-time (b) full-time employees from private employment agencies in (i) British Columbia (ii) Alberta (iii) Saskatchewan (iv) Manitoba (v) Ontario (vi) Quebec (vii) New Brunswick (viii) Nova Scotia (ix) Prince Edward Island (x) Newfoundland and, if so, in each case, how many?

2. Are such employees paid from supplementary estimates and, if not, from what estimates are they paid?

3. By province, what was the (a) average hourly rate paid to employment agencies (b) average hourly rate paid to employees (c) total amount paid by the Board in (i) 1975 (ii) 1976?

Mr. Bob Kaplan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): 1. (a) Yes. (b) No. From December 1, 1975 to December 31, 1976.

		Part-time Employees *Man-Months
(i)	British Columbia	2.0
(ii)	Alberta	—
(iii)	Saskatchewan	—

(ix)	Prince Edward Island	—
(x)	Newfoundland	—

* The personnel from private employment agencies were employed by the AIB at times when the particular urgent requirements of the Board needed additional administrative assistance. The term of employment varied from a few days to a few months. To determine the actual number of different individuals involved would require a manual review of the very large number of invoices involved from all the agencies. Manpower and financial resources are not available and therefore, the answer is submitted in man-months.

2. Employees were paid from the 1975-76 Supplementary Estimates and the 1976-77 Main Estimates.

CBC—EMPLOYEES LOCATED IN QUEBEC

Question No. 1,622—Mr. Coates:

1. What is the total number of CBC employees, both French and English operations, radio and television, located in the Province of Quebec and what is the estimated payroll for the fiscal year 1976-77?

2. What is the estimated value of all property and equipment owned by CBC in the Province?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. 4,346 as of January 31, 1977. $72,454,029.

2. $133,904,000 as of March 31, 1976.

STUDENT SUMMER EMPLOYMENT PROGRAMMES

Question No. 1,711—Mr. Howie:

For the year 1976, did the Department of Fisheries and the Environment have any student summer employment programmes in (a) Canada (b) New Brunswick and, if so, in each case (i) what were they (ii) how many persons were given direct summer employment and what were the wages (iii) what was the cost?

Mr. Jim Fleming (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): (a) Yes; (b) Yes. (a)(i) In Canada the programs were: 1. The Career-Oriented Summer Employment Program (COSEP) administered by the Public Service Commission. 2. The Non-Career Oriented Summer Employment Program (NON-COSEP) administered by the Department of Manpower and Immigration. (ii) The following numbers of persons were employed in DFE: COSEP, 277 students; NON-COSEP, 220 students; Total, 497 students. The average wages were: COSEP $2,600.—NON-COSEP $2,056. (iii) The total cost to the department was $1,172,520. (b)(i) Fifty one COSEP students were hired in New Brunswick. (45 in bio-chemistry, 2 in applied sciences, 1 in administration, 3 in forestry.) 30 NON-COSEP were hired. (ii) As above. (iii) Total cost, New Brunswick, $194,280.

STUDENT SUMMER EMPLOYMENT AND ACTIVITIES PROGRAMME

Question No. 1,717—Mr. Howie:

For the year 1976, did the Department of Manpower and Immigration have any student summer employment programmes in (a) Canada (b) New Brunswick and, if so, in each case (i) what were they (ii) how many persons were given direct summer employment and what were the wages (iii) what was the cost?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The Department of Manpower and Immigration has the responsibility for co-ordinating the planning, implementation and evaluation of the Student Summer Employment and Activities Program (SSEAP). Two programs, Canada Manpower Centres for Students and Job Exploration by Students are sponsored specifically by the department. The following table describes the number of students employed, their wages and the cost of the program for the seventeen SSEAP components for the year 1976:

	New Brunswick	Canada
Student CMCs
Employment	42	1127
Wages (000's)	$107.1	$2873.8
Total Cost (000's)	$112.5	$3018.9
Job Exploration by Students
Employment	101	887
Wages (000's)	$43.5	$311.9
Total Cost (000's)	$48.5	$360.4
Total SSEAP Programs including Public Service Commission
Employment	951	23357
Wages (000's)	$1193.6	$25989.0
Total Cost (000's)	$1475.2	$30628.5

Order Paper Questions

NATIONAL DEFENCE—SERVICE PERSONNEL

Question No. 1,729—Mr. Herbert:

How many service personnel are in each province and territory, excluding the National Capital Region?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Newfoundland, 742; Prince Edward Island, 1,004; Nova Scotia, 11,562; New Brunswick, 4,207; Quebec, 10,475; Ontario, 15,865; Manitoba, 3,903; Saskatchewan, 1,618; Alberta, 7,937; British Columbia, 8,211; Yukon, 5; Northwest Territories, 317.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—EXPENDITURES, PRIMROSE LAKE AIR WEAPONS RANGE

Question No. 1,843—Mr. Yewchuk:

Has the Department of National Defence paid compensation to any individual, group or association, or to the Government of Alberta, for the lease of land for the Primrose Lake Air Weapons Range and, if so (a) on what date (b) to whom and by what method (c) in what amount?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Yes. (a) March 31 annually. (b) To the province of Alberta by Government of Canada cheque. (c) 1954-1974 $66,350 annually; 1975-1976 $307,600 annually.

NATIONAL REVENUE—TAX EXEMPTIONS

Question No. 1.859—Mr. Huntington:

1. What is the total amount of exemption claimed against income by taxpayers for dependants (a) other than spouses and children (b) other than spouses and children who are not resident in Canada?

2. In the case of taxpayers claiming support for dependants (other than spouses and children) who are resident off-shore, does the Department of National Revenue check the validity of such claims and, if so, by what means?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Revenue): 1. (a) $128,863,000 for the 1974 taxation year, the latest year for which complete statistics are presently available. (b) This amount is not tabulated.

2. The Department does check claims for non-resident dependants. The claim must be supported by a completed declaration form. Evidence of the amount spent in support of the dependant must be provided. In some cases, claimants may be required to provide further information to substantiate the deduction.

[English]

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I notice that the parliamentary secretary did not enumerate questions which I placed on the order paper between November 1 and December 16 last. Not included on today's list of questions were questions Nos. 886, 975, 1,052, 1,053, 1,164, 1,358 and 1,380. Not one of those was announced. I have risen on this point of order previously. I do not want to delay or inconvenience the House, but I point out that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and I discussed this matter, as can be seen by reading Hansard, on November 1, November 8, November 15 and November 22 last, among other occasions. I ask the minister or the parliamentary secretary to undertake to answer those questions in ample time for them to be discussed before the Statistics Canada estimates are disposed of by the relevant committee.

Mr. Goodale: Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce may well have some information to give the House on the point. The House should be aware that during the present session of parliament 1,999 questions have been placed on the order paper, of which many have been answered, including some relating to the matter to which the hon. member has just referred. I assure the hon. member, as I have previously, that we are endeavouring to provide, as quickly as possible, the rather complicated information he has requested.

Mr. Paproski: Get with it, Ralph.

Mr. Poulin: Mr. Speaker, may I speak on the same point of order. The hon. member for Central Nova asked some questions with great precision and particularity. Statistics Canada has prepared answers, with equal precision and particularity. I have signed, in my capacity as parliamentary secretary, that part of Statistics Canada's answer which relates to the responsibilities of my department; at least, it is in the process of being provided in order to be printed in Hansard.

Other parts, or answers, falling under the responsibility of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, with respect to the National Capital Commission, and under that of the Solicitor General with respect to RCMP investigations, are also to be provided. We are doing all we can to have those answers printed in Hansard by the time Statistics Canada appears before the committee. After the hon. member has examined the answer, and noted the particularity with which it has been supplied, perhaps he will see fit to apologize to Statistics Canada.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I thank both parliamentary secretaries for their information. If, and when, any apology is required I shall certainly not hesitate to make it. In the meantime, I hope the parliamentary secretaries will provide the information requested and proceed with more efficiency and dispatch than has been shown so far.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—ALLEGED FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT TO PROVIDE ECONOMIC LEADERSHIP

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby) moved:

That this House condemns the failure of the government to provide economic leadership and in particular its failure to introduce measures which will ensure economic growth and provide jobs for the more then 1,000,000 Canadians who need them; and calls upon the government, in its March 31st budget, to correct these failures by:

1. establishing new direct job creating programs in needed social fields such as housing;

2. reducing taxes for middle and low income earners; and

3. assisting urban communities financially to ensure an immediate expansion of municipal capital works projects including rapid transit.

He said: Mr. Speaker, as the motion before the House makes clear, the Canadian economy, putting it briefly and accurately, is in terrible shape. Growth is almost non-existent, and as most in this House have finally realized, more than one million Canadians are without work. The situation is deplorable in terms of its effect on people. First and foremost, in Canada as elsewhere, ordinary people want to work, want jobs, want to contribute directly to the well-being of their families and communities. They prefer jobs to hand-outs: that is the human reality.

Second, the present situation is dangerously bad for the economy. Existing unemployment levels mean that we are paying some $2 billion a year in unemployment insurance and welfare; we are losing between $6 billion and $7 billion a year in production, since goods are not being produced; and we are losing at provincial and federal levels hundred of millions of dollars in taxes which would otherwise be paid by Canadians if they had jobs and were earning money with which to pay taxes. The result is that the rest of us, particularly middle and low income Canadians, have had to pay more taxes than would otherwise have been the case.

Bad though our circumstances are, it is important to know that the present malfunctionning of our economy, with its attendant high unemployment, is very bad for national unity. November 15 was the most important date in recent Canadian history. Its events were a sign of serious discontent in the country. But what they symbolized is not new. Economic grievances in Quebec and elsewhere in Canada have been building up for years: they have been ignored by the Liberals for precisely the same number of years.

Anxiety and conflict about the future of Canada are inescapably related to Canadians' sense of economic well-being, to their sense that our federalism is fair to themselves and their families, to their feeling that Ottawa, to put it bluntly, cares about them as people. How is it possible for young Quebeckers who are experiencing directly in their lives the reality represented in the statistic that more than 50 per cent of the new unemployment in Canada, as a whole, occurred in their province alone, to feel an emotional commitment to the central government?

How is it possible for young men and women of Glace Bay, Nova Scotia, that beautiful part of our country, 70 per cent of whom were unemployed according to a survey done last summer, to feel emotions of commitment to their national capital and central government? How is it possible for the more than one million Canadians in the regions in virtually every province, Canadians without prospects of employment, to feel a strong sense of identity with their nation's capital?

In circumstances such as these there is a tendency for Quebeckers to blame English Canada, for Canadians elsewhere to believe that Ottawa does too much for Quebec, and for virtually all other provinces in Canada to resent the province of Ontario. These are the precise consequences that occur in a diverse and large country like Canada when people, wherever they are located, have the accurate perception that they are being unfairly treated by the central government.

The point is that a sense of economic fairness in life's opportunities is inescapably related to feelings of national unity. The point is that the Liberals have persistently ignored this and, in particular, have been responsible for the current disgraceful level of unemployment. We need a real growth rate of at least 5.5 per cent just to maintain current levels of unemployment. Surely that statistic itself should be of concern to all Canadians. Just to stay where we are, with more than one million people out of work, we must have a growth rate of 5.5 per cent and we are not getting it—and the prospects are not better, they are worse. In the last quarter of 1976 we had a negative growth rate of .6 per cent.

With the current policies of the government, real growth for 1977 is estimated to be only about 3.5 per cent. I ask hon. members to keep that in mind and relate it to what I said a minute ago about maintaining existing levels of unemployment, let alone improving the situation. If we have a growth rate of only 3.5 per cent, and we need 5.5 per cent to keep one million or fewer unemployed, the conclusion is inescapable and distasteful: unemployment in Canada will get worse, not better. It means that government policies, if they are going to reflect the concern about the unemployed and concern about national unity, will have to change fundamentally.

The budget that is to be brought down on March 31 should, in the view of the NDP, contain the following set of proposals. I put them forward not in a dogmatic sense, not with the conviction that they are the only approaches that can get us out of our terrible economic mess, but in the sense that the government must adopt measures like these, if not these precise ones, if it is to show the concern that is required about the more than one million unemployed in the country and the concern across the land to bring about some sense of economic justice in order to promote national unity.

We say that the government must move directly in terms of job creation, and I will make some specific suggestions. First, they should immediately reactivate the federal capital works projects set aside during the period of restraint, and simultaneously encourage the provinces and municipalities to follow suit. With more than 145,000 construction workers unemployed across the land—that is the figure for January, 1977, the most recent data—this move would not in itself be inflationary. If people are out there looking for jobs, you will not put more pressure on the job market by providing employment. What you do is to provide the jobs and stimulate the economy.

Second, the government should immediately expand budgets for low income and co-operative housing projects. Third, it should immediately expand to all of Canada the insulation program for houses and apartments now in effect in only Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia. When the government lifted this particular proposal out of our suggestions made last October, we were delighted that they applied to two of our eastern provinces this sensible and practical proposal. What we say now is that the government should go all the way in adopting a good idea and extend it to the remaining eight provinces in Canada. This program would not only provide jobs but also conserve energy.

Fourth, the government should immediately tell our municipalities that its 1974 election promise to provide $290 million in financial assistance for rapid transit will be implemented. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) said one day that it would not happen. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said to the House three days later that it might happen. Then we have the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), presumably going back to the position of the Minister of Finance, saying no, he does not think it will happen. We say that that promise made sense in 1974. It was a promise to do something to assist our municipalities in rapid transit. It made sense in 1974, and it makes sense in 1977. In addition to providing jobs needed in the economy, it will constitute a conservation measure to reduce our consumption of oil, a measure which is long overdue. It is the kind of concrete step in federal assistance in a serious conservation direction which is long overdue. These are four concrete suggestions for direct federal involvement in job creation.

In addition, we believe that other steps are needed, particularly in the fiscal area. We recommend an immediate tax cut for low and middle income earners. We recommend that a $1.5 billion tax cut be brought into force immediately, to be complemented by the abolition of the indexation system, a proposal of the Official Opposition which the government foolishly and erroneously adopted. The step we are recommending is to have a tax cut of $1.5 billion for medium and low income tax payers and to abolish the indexation system, which will save about $1 billion for the treasury.

The net result would be an infusion of $500 million into the economy for those who most need it. We are saying specifically that the tax cut for medium and low income tax payers should be in the form of tax credits, with more money going to lower income people and less to upper income people. We are recommending, for example, that those with a taxable income of $5,000 should get a $400 tax credit, those with a taxable income of $10,000 should get $300 tax credit, those with $15,000 should get $200, those with $20,000 should get $100, and those Canadians earning $25,000 or more a year should get no tax credit because they need nothing at this time in terms of a tax cut. Such a tax reduction would provide a badly needed stimulus to the economy and therefore would provide additonal jobs.

Earlier I indicated that I did not believe expanding by means of direct spending in the construction field would lead to further inflation. I said that this was obvious because there were 145,000 construction workers out of work. Let me add that the tax cuts which I am proposing would not be inflationary. I cannot understand the preoccupation of the Minister of Finance with the small "c" conservative economic advice that he is apparently getting which suggests that at this time there should be a trade-off between inflation and unemployment, and that if he stimulates the economy through tax cuts, there will be inflation.

At this time in the performance of our economy I suggest that that is nonsense, and I will tell the House why. At present, the manufacturing sector of the Canadian economy is operating at only 81 per cent capacity. That is an 11 per cent drop in three years. In 1973, stimulating the economy by means of direct tax cuts of the kind we are advocating could well have put inflationary pressure on the manufacturing sector that was operating at 92 per cent capacity, which was the case at that time.

However, now, when it is operating at 81 per cent capacity, stimulating by tax cut is not only the most immediate, direct way of creating jobs but it also does not provide any additional inflationary pressure on the economy. All that would happen as a result of such a tax cut is that existing plant, equipment and office space which is not being put to work now would become active, and idle men and women who are collecting unemployment insurance or welfare—or both—would have the opportunity to contribute some constructive labour to the community. That is precisely what we think ought to be done.

Having made these positive suggestions, I want to take this opportunity to say something about what ought not to be done. Given the past performance of the Liberal party, I am deeply apprehensive that it will move in the direction I am now going to discuss. Tax concessions to corporations are simply too expensive at this time, and more important and related to the argument, they would not be effective. Because of the high rate of unused capacity, tax concessions to stimulate capital investment would be ineffective unless they were so massive as to be a lot more costly to the government than other means of direct stimulation to create jobs in the demand sector of the economy.

Most economists are now agreed that tax concessions are not the best medicine at this time. That is not a view put forward exclusively by the New Democratic Party of Canada. As the C. D. Howe Research Institute said last December:

> The case for additional tax concessions to boost investment in the short run is being considered mainly in the context of the weakness of this sector's contribution to aggregate demand growth. But with the degree of excess productive capacity and the pervasive pessimism about the future that now exists, such concessions are unlikely to have as prompt, or as powerful, an influence on investment spending as some might think. Therefore, if a reasonably quick boost in demand is required, the chances are probably greater of getting it by stimulating private consumption.

In other words, by direct tax cuts to low and medium income earners who will almost automatically spend it. Let me add another comment from that category of economists who are not normally in wholehearted support of the kind of proposals made by the New Democratic Party. Mr. Bob Simon, director of taxation at Brascan, agrees with the argument I just made. Let me quote a succinct sentence which sums up his own argument. With reference to corporations he said: "People won't build until they need to". Unless there is a general, sufficient demand in the economy and a general, sufficient expectation that if businesses expand, their resources will be used, businesses simply will not act. This makes elementary economic sense. One would have hoped that the Liberal government learned this many years ago, and I say to the ministers who are here, for God's sake do not bring forward that kind of tax concession for corporations in the upcoming budget. If that is done, ordinary taxpayers will have to pay more as a result of corporations paying less, and we will not get additional jobs.

In addition to these short-run considerations, there is a great deal of evidence that tax concessions of the kind we now have permanently in place vis-à-vis corporations distort investment decisions by making the cost of capital artificially low compared with labour, and by favouring large, capital-intensive industries over smaller ones they in fact have an opposite effect to what is intended. Instead of producing more jobs in labour-intensive sectors, from an economic point of view we encourage an irrational overinvestment of capital which leads to a reduction of jobs. That kind of long-range argument used to be made within the cabinet by Eric Kierans. I do not know of a present member of the cabinet who has enough economic and social sense to consider it. I hope someone is in there arguing, but I suspect there is not. On behalf of my colleagues, I repeat that argument today.

Beyond these important short-run steps of direct stimulation to the economy by job-creation programs and indirect stimulation by tax cuts which I have called for, we need a major long-run shift in policy. What we need is a commitment by the national government that a job should be available to every man and woman in Canada who wants to work. This goal is not the goal of the government of Canada, nor is it the goal of the government of the United States. It has never been a national objective of any government in North America. It is, however, the serious commitment of a number of social democratic governments in western Europe, and I suggest it is long overdue on this continent.

As far as we in the New Democratic Party are concerned, if a commitment is to be seriously made and seriously implemented, it would have to contain the following elements: first, we should have a full employment act passed in Canada. That act should recognize the right of Canadian men and women to work. Full employment should be stated as a national and continuing objective. Second, and related to that, on an annual basis and as required by this proposed national full employment act, the government should have to bring before parliament its annual targets for job creation. It should set out in realistic terms the number of jobs it plans to create in a given year and in what sectors it is anticipated they should be created. Then at the end of the year the government should be obligated to review its own record of job creation, and those on the opposition side of the House should be obligated to put the government to the test to see if it has lived up to its mandate.

Finally, as a further element of such a national strategy for full employment, the government should establish long-range targets. These targets should not just be annual; they should be for periods covering four to five years. On behalf of my party last fall I suggested that in realistic terms full employment could be achieved in Canada. I did not suggest it would happen next year or the year after, but perhaps four years down the road. It is as long and as serious a process as that, I am prepared to acknowledge; but we will not achieve it in this country unless the government commits itself to achieving such a goal and begins now to implement short-run strategies to bring it about.

Last fall we suggested that we could bring down the rate of unemployment 1 per cent per year over the next four years, so that in four years we would have an unemployment level not exceeding 3 per cent. That is virtually full employment when we take into account people who are voluntarily out of the labour market at any given time because they are moving, because they want a change, or for whatever rational, human reason. I repeat that what we need is a commitment of long-range proportions from the government of Canada to achieve a full employment policy.

In addition to the specific points that I think are necessary for long-range strategy, I would also assert that to give reality to this objective the government would have to develop the long talked about but totally ignored industrial strategy for Canada. Central to this would be development of a program for regaining Canadian control over Canadian industry. This is particularly important in the resource field where we must ensure that resources existing in Canada now and which are more frequently than not exported to the United States, Germany, Japan or some other industrial country, are kept at home for secondary manufacturing, processing and development. What I am saying is that an employment strategy that has as its objective the possibility of a job for every adult man and woman in Canada ultimately depends upon the restructuring of the economy and upon this government taking seriously the obligation of regaining control over our own economic destiny.

I have made some specific suggestions about what the government should do in the short run and in the long run. I say to the minister who is about to reply that we should have had a budget months ago to deal with our disastrous level of unemployment. I plead with him that when the budget comes down on March 31 it concerns itself with emphasis on job creation, that the proposals brought forward to create jobs will bear equitably on middle and low income people, and that it will be a first step to a long-run national commitment to permanent full employment.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, first I would apologize for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) who is absent today. He already had engagements in Washington and New York. He apologizes to the House for not taking part in this debate.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, inflation and job creation are not separate and self-contained problems. Responsible economic leadership has to take account of both problems at the same time. That is what the anti-inflation program is all about. The major goal of the government is to steer the economy on the path of stable and steady growth, not just for the next six months but for the future. We are a major trading nation; we have to sell abroad; we compete against imports in our own markets. We cannot adequately protect jobs or create new jobs for our growing labour force if our prices and costs are out of line.

The Prime Minister of Great Britain, Mr. Callaghan, who leads a socialist government, recently remarked that governments cannot delude themselves into thinking that they can buy their way out of unemployment. Countries have to get their costs right. That is why that socialist government continues to grapple with an incomes policy and is forced to make massive cuts in public spending because the lesson has been learned too late.

This is increasingly understood by the major industrial countries. What we see in the world today is a careful balancing of the inflation and unemployment problems, a careful management of the recovery from the slowdown of 1974-75. Of course, this will require adjustments to be made to keep the balance. I will refer later to steps we have already taken. The Minister of Finance will decide what further steps are necessary in preparing his March 31 budget.

On the inflation front we have made a lot of important progress. We have had the increasing support of the country. We have also had the support of the provinces, including the New Democratic Party governments who have to live with the facts of life and the responsibilities of government. In fact, it is such a successful program that the last few weeks have shown that many Canadians do not want to see an early end to controls.

The government's view is well known. If we can get agreement about responsible behaviour in terms of wages and prices, then we can do without mandatory controls. That is the issue. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has said, controls are a breathing space where we have to sort out, together, what is reasonable and responsible. We are working very hard at that process with business, with labour and with the provinces, and we are making good progress.

During 1976 the anti-inflation program worked well. By December, the year over year increase in the consumer price index was down to 5.8 per cent. The rate of increase of non-food prices is coming down, declining to 8.4 per cent.

Mr. Blackburn: It had nothing to do with the AIB.

Mr. Chrétien: That point has been made many times, and I am glad the hon. member interjected. I would point out that in the food chain, prices at the farm gate are not controlled but from the farm gate to the market more than half the cost is controlled through the processing industry, the marketing industry, and so on. I have to agree that the AIB is not controlling the food industry entirely but it is doing so through the processing industry, the marketing industry and the transportation industry, and these account for more than 50 per cent of the cost of food. To that extent the AIB program does control food prices.

Mr. Blackburn: What about beef prices? They went down without it.

Mr. Chrétien: Food was not controlled, but food processing, transportation and marketing have been controlled.

Mr. Blackburn: And imports?

Mr. Chrétien: There was also a further moderation in wage settlements. Average increases for the first year of large contracts were 9.8 per cent in the fourth quarter of 1976, down from 12.7 per cent in the third quarter.

We still have some way to go. Our costs are still somewhat out of line, and that affects job creation and investment. We have to recognize that the majority of jobs in this country have to come from the private sector and the climate for investment has to be attractive in terms of costs. Curing inflation and creating jobs go together. Real wages increased around 4 per cent in 1976 due to the success of the anti-inflation program; labour's share of the gross national product increased; the share of corporate profits before tax declined from 11.5 per cent in 1975 to around 10 per cent in 1976. As the Minister of Finance has stated, getting investment in Canada moving is a priority and it is a priority because that is how new, permanent jobs are created.

While we made important progress against inflation in 1976, we have already acted to strengthen the pace of the recovery, and the government will be taking what additional measures are necessary to support growth in the forthcoming budget at the end of this month.

In 1976, real growth in the Canadian economy was 4.6 per cent. Growth in other countries has been somewhat sluggish and this has affected us through exports. But the trade account is improving. There was a $1.4 billion surplus in January, 1977. The decline in value of the Canadian dollar will be an important stimulus to exports, and 1977 promises to be a good year for exports.

I should like to talk about some of the points that the opposition made: for instance, that in the United States they have had a program of stimulation of the economy. My colleague, the Minister of Finance, will bring in a new budget, but I should like to point out that since January 1, through indexing of personal income tax, close to $1 billion has been put into the pockets of Canadians because of exemptions being increased by 8.6 per cent. This is an automatic adjustment which is comparable to the measures proposed by President Carter of the United States. Indexing of the old age security will provide another $300 million to Canadian pensioners, many of them in the low income group. Indexing of the family allowance will put an additional $160 million into the hands of the Canadian consumer this year. On January 1, through previous legislation, we cut the contribution to UIC by $250 million, which puts another—

Mr. Alexander: Where is the bill?

Mr. Chrétien: I do not know if it is in the form of a bill or otherwise. I will not argue the legal aspects of it. In any event, it is another $250 million in the pockets of Canadian consumers. What I have enumerated to this moment is a stimulus to the economy of more than $1.5 billion since January through these automatic programs. On a per capita basis it is as good as President Carter has done to stimulate the American economy.

My colleague, the Minister of Finance, is working on a budget. I have had some private discussions with him. Of course, it is his responsibility to finalize the program. I am hopeful that it will be a good budget.

There is another aspect of the economic policies of the government that will help somewhat. There have been three reductions in the bank rate since January, from 9.5 per cent to 8 per cent. This will help the economy because it will be cheaper for Canadians to borrow money.

The leader of the New Democratic Party made a big pitch about housing. I would refer him to the facts for last year. In February the starts increased by 8.1 per cent to an annual rate of more than 287,000 units. Ten years ago the Economic Council of Canada predicted that there should be at least 200,000 starts a year. For most of the time in the past five years we have had above 250,000 starts a year. It is not perfect, but it is quite a good situation.

The hon. member talked about job-creation programs. I know that the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander), the manpower critic for the official opposition, will be speaking. I wish to advise him that in that field we have put forward some new programs since the beginning of the year. For example, we doubled the LIP program to a maximum of $200 million. I could elaborate on those programs but I do not want to take away from the speeches that my colleagues will be making later.

Mr. Blackburn: How many permanent jobs have you created since then?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, even if I take the place of my colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald), I would like to use these few minutes to comment on the situation of our economy and on the steps which are taken within the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to stimulate the Canadian economy.

Concerning export programs, every day in the House I answer questions showing that Canadian products are making an ever wider breach into export markets. As far as the province of Ontario is concerned, for example, again this week I heard representations from contractors who are going to present very soon to Venezuela an important plan to get the contract for the equipment and the electric controls related to the construction of a subway in Caracas. A few weeks ago Ontarian contractors were awarded two of the three contracts for the construction of the Caracas subway.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I visited Venezuela myself and, in cooperation with a group of Canadians representing industries from Nova Scotia, Quebec, Ontario and Alberta, we made a proposal for the construction of a 700 kilometer railroad from Caracas to a western province in Venezuela, to introduce Canadian technology in that country. We made such considerable progress that we submitted the lowest tender. We expect to be invited soon to negotiate a contract with the government of Venezuela to carry out a part of this project.

I also want to answer the hon. member from Ontario who made representations as to how we stimulate employment in industry. I would like to tell him that only a few weeks ago, in Toronto, I gave supplementary credits to de Havilland Aircraft of Canada Limited to help convert the DASH-7—the STOL aircraft—into a patrol aircraft. I think the future looms great for this aircraft. Why? With the Canadian technology in this area, we are going to hit the market at the right time and this aircraft is going to consume much less fuel over fairly short distances than those jets we are using now. It is a short take-off and landing aircraft which I hope will make it possible to develop downtown to downtown services. We are now working in cooperation with the Department of Transport to implement a DASH-7 service between downtown Montreal and downtown Toronto and perhaps Ottawa. This aircraft is so advanced as regards elimination of noise pollution that it is not more noisy than a bus on a freeway, which means that the level of noise during take-off and landing is not essentially higher than that made by a bus. For instance, if one day we were to use the downtown Toronto airport on the island, the people on shore would not be aware of any take-off or landing. It is not more noisy than a Cessna, maybe even less. This is a Canadian technology which we want to promote and I intend to exhibit the DASH-7 during the Paris air show next summer and to travel in the near future to Iran, Saudi Arabia and Israel. I have asked de Havilland Aircraft of Canada Limited to send the plane over there so that I can use it to show it to the authorities there because I believe Canadian technology can be very useful on markets which are presently developing.

People wonder what I am doing. Someone in the House said earlier: Tell us what you are doing to protect the textile or footwear industry. Everybody knows that we have moved very diligently in this regard. Two months or so after taking over the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, we have imposed quotas on all imports because we felt we had allowed too many imports and that we were or would be losing a substantial number of jobs. Now, no later than today, I talked to the president of a large Canadian textile and clothing firm who said that the policy I have put forward about two months ago in this field had already resulted in increased orders.

I could go on like this, Mr. Speaker, in many other fields. However, I might talk for a few seconds, with your permission, about the famous LearStar jet project. I was asked questions in the House this afternoon on that matter. This is becoming one of the greatest success stories in the history of industrial development in Canada. Within three months, we have already sold 71 aircraft at a cost of some $5 million each. The prototype is not even completed but a combination of factors, the fact that it is a long-range plane with a range of over 5,000 miles and a fuel consumption of approximately two thirds that of competitive aircraft, the fact that the demand is greater for that type of plane since many air services have been discontinued throughout the world and executives feel the need to buy planes for their business trips, and also that we now have the expertise in Canada to build that plane, for all these reasons it is a very exciting program.

Today, less than six months after Canadair first became interested in that project, 60 orders with deposits have been placed and contracts signed. The tunnel testing is giving better results than expected.

I am informed that the sales committee set up by Canadair will probably result in the following situation: by the end of 1977, a total of 131 aircraft will have been sold, the minimum required for that project to be completely profitable. I only want to give you one example. By the end of this year, as I have just said:

• (1600)

We shall probably have 131 planes, the minimum number required to make the project viable. Just to show you, Mr. Speaker how these things work, I can tell you that when de Havilland developed the famous Twin Otter they had made 20 before they sold one; and the Twin Otter program has resulted so far in the sale of 540 planes. Compare that with the LearStar program. The success is unbelievable. At this stage, when we do not even have a prototype flying jet, we have already sold 79, and by the end of the year sales may well have reached the 100 mark.

So here in Canada, with the help of Mr. Lear, the engineering genius from the United States, we have been able to develop a concept which is extremely attractive and which puts Canada in the forefront of this high-technology industry around the world. I might add that of the 79 sales made so far, only two or three are for the domestic market. All the others are for export. So we have a great advantage. This project is creating jobs in Canada and the high-quality finished product is being sold around the world. This is one example of the job of work the government is doing in an effort to maintain our capability in the field of high technology while increasing our exports abroad.

I could speak of many other things. The debate this afternoon is very welcome on the part of those who sit on the government side. My colleague, the Minister of Finance, will be presenting his budget within three weeks and I hope every member who takes part in the debate today will make a concrete proposal. Here is an opportunity for them to express their views. I have been assured by my colleagues that their suggestions will be carefully looked into. Of course, not all the suggestions we make—and here I include my own—are accepted in the decision-making process. But all of them will be considered by my colleague in the preparation of the budget.

In conclusion, may I say that of course we face many problems in Canada. Unemployment exists side by side with inflation. The leader of the New Democratic Party mentioned the situation in West Germany. I would make it clear to him that, like any other country, it is our desire to see full employment and I will never stop working toward that end as long as one man wants a job and is unable to find one. But it is not possible to compare the situation here with the situation in West Germany. In Canada since the war the labour force has increased by 150 per cent, while in West Germany there has been virtually no increase in the labour force. West Germany imports labour from Italy, Spain, Portugal, and so on. When there is a recession, those workers go back to their country of origin. This is not what we do in Canada. When an immigrant comes here he has an opportunity to settle permanently. We have welcomed a lot of immigrants to Canada.

We want to find a proper solution to our difficulties, but I would point out that some of our problems today are due to the success of the economic policies of the government in 1974 and 1975, for example. For 27 months the Americans were in a deep recession. Here in Canada there was not much growth, but there was some growth—.6 per cent in the first year I mentioned and almost 2 per cent in the following year. Last year it was 4.6 per cent. So it is difficult for us to show the same numbers as the Americans because of the catch-up on the American side. We had less to catch-up with than they did.

For the first time in the economic history of this country we find ourselves with less unemployment than the United States, despite the fact that winter conditions south of the border are altogether different from ours—though admittedly the difference has not been so marked in the winter we have just experienced. But in the last three years unemployment in Canada has been less than in the United States. When one realizes how closely the two economies are intertwined, it must be admitted we have done rather well.

Mr. Alexander: Tell that to the one million unemployed.

[Mr. Chrétien.]

Mr. Chrétien: Well, I said a few moments ago that I would not stop working to create employment opportunities while there is one person in Canada who was looking for a job. In Canada we have tried to cope with some of these questions through job-creation programs. We have probably one of the most generous programs to alleviate unemployment that there is. Some critics of the government claim at times that our social and unemployment programs are so generous that a percentage of Canadians refuse to work because they feel happy with the level of support given by the government. I am just telling the House that we have done better than the United States, but we are not satisfied with the situation. We want to keep people working. The budget of the Minister of Finance at the end of the month will be another step in this direction.

• (1610)

May I say in closing that despite all of the problems we have in this country, I would not trade my nation for any other nation in the world.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, may I say I accept the minister's last statement unreservedly. I want to place some comments on record for the edification of my colleagues on the other side. First of all, I charge this government, notwithstanding what the minister has just said, with foot-dragging, procrastination and with callous disregard for the plight of the one million people who are unemployed, as well as for those who may soon join the same line. A budget is long overdue. It is inexcusable that we must wait until March 31. After all the hollering and screaming and concern which has been registered for months now, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) comes kicking and screaming and has now decided to give us a date.

Having said that, I suggest that in framing a budget the following priorities should be considered; a reduction in unemployment, with the emphasis on the private sector; an improvement in terms of return on investment and capital expenditures; a re-emphasis placed on the market system; an improvement in the competitive position of Canadian industry; an improvement in productivity, in business and in labour confidence; and an unwinding of controls—the last of which, in my view, is of extreme importance.

As has been stated by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the Minister of Finance and the chairman of the AIB controls have, in effect, adversely affected investment, productivity, employment, business confidence, initiative and labour problems. In his statement before the federal-provincial conference on February 1 the Minister of Finance gave five reasons why the green light was on for decontrols. I want to put them on the record. He said in his speech:

> First, the economic situation throughout 1977 and into 1978 looks relatively favourable for exit from the controls program . . . Consequently, the economic situation would appear to give us a green light for decontrol.
> The second factor that must be considered is the state of expectations. It gives us a more ambiguous signal . . . The decline in inflationary expectations stems from the better price performance recently experienced, and the commitment of most of our governments to the anti-inflation program . . .

The third factor is business confidence. Corporations are finding the prices and profits regulations administered by the AIB to be burdensome, and there is cause for concern that firms may be holding back on new investment projects . . . But the existence of controls, and in particular, the apprehension that they may remain in effect for a long time, is an added handicap . . .

Fourth, a significant benefit which can be derived from the development of an orderly program for decontrol and the necessary post-control arrangements can be a renewed basis for constructive co-operation with organized labour. One aspect would be renewed participation by labour in the work of important boards and councils.

I suggest that needs no explanation. Then the Minister of Finance said:

Fifth, I should note the problems that will crop up as the expiry date of the legislation nears. As the anti-inflation program moves into its third year and as its expiry date comes closer, the enforcement of controls will become increasingly difficult.

Those statements of the minister need no further elaboration. I need only re-emphasize that we will be moving a motion around March 31 to the effect that controls should end. The date for this remains to be seen.

If I may deal specifically with the budget, I should like to put some points on record. My party would like to see in the budget the following provisions: first, recognition that permanent employment is created not by government programs but, rather, by strong economic expansion in the private sector; second, stimulation of the housing industry in terms of construction of homes which people can afford, and I underscore the words "which people can afford"; third, tax cuts for middle and low income earners, thus encouraging consumer spending. We have long called for such a policy.

Fourth, the introduction of special fiscal contracts with companies wanting to locate or lease new industries in underdeveloped areas; fifth, encouragement in the areas of research and development in order to protect the future; sixth, a definitive statement on decontrol and post-controls, thereby regaining the confidence of both labour and management; seventh, economic forecasts and targets dealing with growth, job creation, inflation, unemployment and government spending both in the short term and in the long term. By long term I mean about two to three years. It is absolutely ridiculous that at no time can we challenge this government's forecasts and targets except on a year to year basis. We want to see what the government is doing and how it is proceeding. Then last, but certainly not least, we want to see the government honour its 1974 election promises regarding urban transit which in effect would have conserved energy and created employment.

On reading the motion I am reminded of my leader's speech of February 10 on a motion that we put forward condemning the government's complacency in the face of economic stagnation. My leader expressed concern about the sense of stagnation that exists, blaming the government, as did others—and rightly so—for the stagnation caused by the government's refusal to give any priority to the need to stimulate economic growth and to generate jobs. He pointed out in no uncertain terms and with great emphasis, as reported at page 2924 of Hansard:

We have been stagnant too long. We have a country to build. We have jobs to encourage. We have great promise to achieve. It will not be done by the timid policies of this government. It will only be done if there is determination to realize the potential of this country.

The Globe and Mail, as far back as November 4, 1976, in its lead editorial painted a very vivid but very sorry picture as a result of the findings of the university of Toronto's Institute for Policy Analysis. I quote from its lead editorial headed "More jobless unless Ottawa acts":

If the federal government doesn't act quickly to stimulate new business activity and new consumer spending, unemployment will get even worse than it is now. There will be 868,000 Canadians out of work the year after next—nearly 200,000 more added to the existing host of unemployed in this country.

That's the alarming prospect held out in a study released this week by the University of Toronto's Institute for Policy Analysis. It says Canada faces continued sluggish growth and even higher unemployment for the next few years "unless the government acts to revive the flagging private domestic sector".

● (1620)

The last paragraph of this lead editorial reads:

Timing is everything. And the time for a budget to provide the necessary nudge—a hearty shove, even—to the Canadian economy is now.

That was written on November 4, 1976, but could well apply to the budget to be brought in on March 31, 1977.

What does the NDP motion mean? It implies we are spending $4 billion on unemployment insurance, and rightly so. I say that in the sense that no one wants to be without income; yet no one wants to be unemployed or on welfare. But the unemployment rate is the result of this government's attitudes, of its bankrupt policies and programs which were a disincentive to work. As the NDP leader said, we are losing billions of dollars in lost productivity and millions of dollars in taxes, and high unemployment is contributing to national disunity.

I do not have time to deal with these points, but they are a fact. Thinking Canadians agree that large-scale unemployment is an indefensible waste of our most important resource—our human resource. Although the motion has merit, and I pat my NDP friends on the back, it lacks one vital ingredient. It does not say that the budget should reflect faith and support for private enterprise which can create jobs. When you mention private enterprise to my friends on my left they reply with a tirade of abuse, refusing to accept the much desired and effective role of private enterprise.

What is the reality? Mr. Speaker, permanent employment is not created by government programs; it is created by strong economic expansion in the private sector. As we look ahead to the balance of 1977 we must spare at least a moment to look at the year behind us. Most of us would say that it is thankfully behind us. If one stretched one's memory back to last spring one could recall prophecies saying the economy was pulling out of the 1975 recession and increased exports would sustain a Canadian economic boom in 1976 and 1977. The Minister of Finance foretold a growth rate of 5 per cent in 1976 and 250,000 new jobs for the unemployed. Things, however, did not work out.

We now know that the budget forecast missed the mark. I hope any forecasts the minister will make in his budget address on March 31 will not be as wide of the mark as the forecasts he made on May 25. Facing the mounting evidence provided by private sector economists, the minister conceded that the economy would not achieve its 5 per cent growth target. As for job creation, it appears that less than 85 per cent of the expected new jobs will materialize. Also, the unemployment rate, instead of holding steady, is slowly rising.

Although 1976 was a bad year, it may appear good by comparison with 1977. Even the Minister of Finance has shed some of his Micawber tendencies and admitted economic growth in 1977 is likely to be lower than in 1976. Economic and fiscal physicians, if I may call them that, warned the minister this would happen; unfortunately, he disregarded their advice. How much lower our economic growth will be is open to question. At least two internationally respected forecasting organizations predict that our economy will grow between 3 per cent and 3.5 per cent.

Forecasters indicate that job creation will proceed at an even lower pace in 1977 and the unemployment rate will continue a steady rise to more than 8 per cent by year end. The apparent presence of large amounts of slack in the economy will not create appreciable benefits in terms of price increases. Inflation rates may increase somewhat during 1977, rising to as much as 8 per cent. Both the OECD and the Conference Board suggest that the government's price target of 6 per cent for the second year of the anti-inflation program may not be achieved. This we understand; even the minister admitted as much.

Declines recorded for 1976 in the real value of business investment are likely to be repeated in 1977, and spending on new housing will contract after the 1976 boom. This anticipated decline in business investment in plant and equipment may be traced to a number of facts, including continued overcapacity, weak profits, uncompetitive exports, unhappiness with the government's mishandling of the economy, and uncertainty about the country's political future. The Conference Board forecasts that real business investment spending will decline by 2.5 per cent, or $670 million, in 1977.

Almost certainly this will not be a prosperous year for the one million unemployed, for those in disadvantaged regions where tens of thousands of people are condemned to chronic unemployment. It will not be a prosperous year for those leaving university, community college and high school, for their chance of finding a job is lower today than at any time since the 1930s. For them and many other Canadians 1977 will be a year of disillusionment, a year which may well leave lasting scars across our social landscape.

I resent very much the minister's relating our predicament to that of the United States and saying that things here are not too bad. How can you say that when one million of our people are out of work? They expect action. They expected it long before March 31. Canadians know from their direct experience that between 1967 and 1977 the Canadian economy performed poorly. They know that its performance during the period 1974 to 1977 was disastrous. But the government has taken no action. We hope it will do something meaningful on March 31. The Economic Council of Canada, the Conference Board of Canada, the OECD and the University of Toronto Institute for Policy Analysis—all respected fiscal physicians—have noted the weak and depressed state of our economy and urged the need for stimulus.

I read the editorial printed on November 4, 1976, and noted the financial position at that time. Noted authorities told us that we faced disaster, but the Minister of Finance remained silent, ignoring their advice. They told us about slow growth, higher unemployment, decline in business investment and decreasing export business. In the face of this, I submit the government should have brought down a minibudget to avert the danger of economic chaos. But no, that was beyond the comprehension of the Minister of Finance.

We need a new climate in this country, a climate of positive direction, of confidence in government policies, policies which unfortunately this government will not introduce. At present we are leaderless and rudderless. This condition reflects the government's bankruptcy and reflects our economic chaos. What has been the government's answer to date? Canada Works, Young Canada Works, and amendments to the UIC legislation. The government thinks it will save money by increasing the minimum work period from eight weeks to 12 weeks. Incidentally, where is that bill? First the government introduced it, then when Liberal backbenchers became nervous they did not proceed with it. I understand it is to come forward again. That is the government's "on again, off again" approach to this important legislation.

These programs are extremely unsatisfactory in their approach. It is an ad hoc, piecemeal process which makes mockery of a very serious matter. You are building up hopes and aspirations, but in the long run there is nothing lasting or meaningful in the types of jobs to which I have referred. Canadians need jobs. They demand that meaningful and lasting jobs be created. In my view, this can best be accomplished by the private sector through private enterprise. But what does the private sector say? I have here the pre-budget submission of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce. I have no hang-ups about the Chamber of Commerce. I believe they represent a very significant sector of the economy. This is what they said:

> Business capital spending has been declining since the end of 1975, and the outlook is not encouraging. Business confidence is now at the lowest point in recent memory. The threat of aborted recovery, weak markets, a corporation tax structure that compounds the ravages of inflation, controls over wages and profits, and the stultifying effect of excessive government controls and regulations are all contributing to this serious deterioration in businessmen's confidence about the future environment for growth and development in Canada.

I believe that the health of our investment and capital markets is important for job creation and labour productivity.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Alexander: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I do not have much more to say, but let me put one more thing on the record. I hope my colleagues will not mind because it may take two or three minutes to read it, but I will do so as quickly as I can. It regards manufacturing. My friend to my left has indicated, as I do now, that manufacturing is in serious trouble. Canada's balance of trade in end products of the major commodity groups is in a serious deficit position, in the billions of dollars, which is affecting about 250,000 jobs. We know that the chemistry industry is operating at 83 per cent of its productive capacity, the electrical products industry at 81 per cent of its productive capacity, and the durable goods industry at 82 per cent of its productive capacity.

Let me put on the record what the president of Westinghouse wrote to me, and I think to many hon. members. It registers his concern about the future of the electrical manufacturing industry in relation to GATT negotiations. He wrote:

> We are the only industrialized country where provincial policies inhibit the national development of a secondary manufacturing industry that can be internationally competitive. Some provinces actively seek imports, others, in the thrust for industrial development, encourage further fragmentation of industry.
> These circumstances cause two undesirable results. First, our markets are exposed to easy penetration by foreign manufacturers and, second, the relatively small and fragmented Canadian market cannot provide a sufficient base to make Canadian manufacturers internationally cost competitive.
> The Canadian manufacturer pays the highest wages in the world, he pays relatively more for transportation due to the geographic distribution of the population, and despite the abundance of natural resources in this country he now pays world prices for raw materials.
> In my view, the federal government has been most reluctant to address these problems, and, in fact, has aggravated them with its emphasis on broad international freer trade policies over the past decade. Pursuit of these policies has resulted in a worsening trade balance in every group of manufactured products and with all our major trading partners. The net result has been fewer jobs. lower investment and reduced output.
> While this company supports liberal trade policies, it also believes that trade must be conducted fairly, without discrimination and with reciprocity. The realities of world trade in many electrical products are at variance with these principles. In every country where an electrical industry exists, actions have been taken to ensure its continuing viability as the technological backbone of those countries. Canada has taken no such action and, as a result, inroads have been made by foreign imports. Our trade deficit in electrical products has quadrupled over the last decade, taking an estimated 20,000 new jobs out of the country during that period.
> There can be little question that in coming years Canada will have to rely to a 'greater extent on the goods producing sector in order to provide the job opportunities which will be demanded by the well educated new entrants into the labour force. For this to happen, we must recognize the need to preserve appropriate secondary manufacturing capability. It is wishful thinking that this country can accept a tariff cut in the order of 50 per cent on all its manufactured products without destroying much of the job-creating potential of this sector.

I want to thank hon. members for giving me extended time, thus enabling me to register my concern regarding the GATT discussions which will be taking place or are taking place. In conclusion, let me say that I hope, as the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Chrétien) said, that the Minister of Finance will read the speeches made here today because I think—as a matter of fact, I know—that we in this opposition party have given him concrete suggestions. We have presented to him the priorities which he should be studying so as to adopt in his budget, if not all the proposals we have made, at least some of them so the we can provide long lasting and meaningful jobs not only for those who are presently unemployed, who now number some one million, but also for those who will join them unless a meaningful budget is brought down.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to take part in the debate on this opposition motion which was moved by the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent). This gives me the opportunity to follow up the excellent speech made by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Chrétien). He has given us some background information on his strategy, but he has mainly dealt with the effects of the industrial strategy of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I was quite impressed by the success achieved by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce in connection with the building of a subway in Caracas as well as a 700 kilometer railway line. If Canada is the lowest tender, this will no doubt mean more jobs for all Canadians.

● (1640)

Mr. Speaker, I was also very proud to be a Canadian when I realized to what extent Canada was in the vanguard in the field of aeronautics and job creation in manufacturing through the contract awarded Canadair for the production of 71 Lear-Star jets. In my opinion, this announcement by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce shows that the government is well aware of the importance of developing an advance technology industry, namely the aeronautics industry, in order to create an increasing number of jobs by manufacturing more of those products in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal especially with paragraph 3 of the motion regarding urban transit. Today, I would have preferred that we proceeded with consideration of Bill C-33, the purpose of which is to define the objective of the transportation policy and to authorize the consequential rearrangement of powers, and so on. I would have preferred to go on with the second reading of Bill C-33 concerning the new objective of the transportation policy for Canada so that it could be referred to the committee for clause by clause consideration; this would allow us to implement as soon as possible this legislation on transportation which all Canadians have long been waiting for. And as the former transport minister said, if the Department of Transport is really a mess, we should at least have the opportunity to define once again the objective of the transportation policy for Canada. However, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate concerning urban transportation and the role of the federal government within this service.

The growth of urban communities as well as the increasing number and use of cars certainly represent a serious problem for all governments not only in Canada but in the whole world. The mover of this opposition motion condemns the government for its policy concerning urban transportation. In my opinion, he should have been much more specific or else he should have given a clearer definition of the urban transportation problem. He should have tried to better focus the problem, in order to see, define and understand better so complex a problem as that of urban transport.

Public transport is closely related to the layout of cities. In some of them, up to 40 per cent of the land is set aside for transport. The problem therefore cannot be envisaged only in terms of those considerations and cannot be isolated from the other transportation systems: it should instead be integrated into them. To illustrate the extent to which public transit should be increasingly integrated, one need but study the situation that now exists in Montreal on the south shore and the north shore where it is essential to integrate public transportation.

In the light of that information, Mr. Speaker, one can conclude that rapid transit systems are primarily a provincial problem. Indeed, it is the responsibility of the provincial governments but, unfortunately, for too many years, provincial governments and cities have rather overlooked the problem, stressing private transport or the development of intracity expressways and throughways, or again intercity highways. Public transportation has been so neglected that today we have twice as much to do in order to provide Canadians with public transit that can at least compete with the other means of transportation. Provincial governments, and I insist on that, Mr. Speaker, have tended to show more interest in roads, superhighways for cars at the expense of public transit and other means of transportation, and that goes as well for cities as for the provinces.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the intervention of the federal government is justified because the provinces have given preference to public transport at the expense of public transport. We have not changed our minds and we still want to help the Canadians who must use a mode of transport in the evening or in the morning. All hon. members on this side of the House are aware of the importance of urban transit. Hon. members on this side of the House have certainly made the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) aware of this problem of public transport in the cities on many occasions, either at special meetings or at special caucuses.

Mr. Speaker, hon. members on this side also tried to influence the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) in order to obtain more money for public transport. All of us entirely agree that this is a very important matter and that we must make every possible effort, and even superhuman effort to help upgrade public transport in the budgets, considering the monetary situation and this very important service.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, we should not believe that nothing has been done in the area of public transportation. I noted the speech that the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) delivered during the debate of March 3. If we were to consider every request made for money to be put in public transport, we would never see the end of it. The hon. member for York-Simcoe mentioned a budget of $200 million for the Toronto area alone. If we were to give the same or even more consideration to Montreal, the metropolitan region, we could not even set up a public transit system which we could rightfully expect. Therefore it goes without saying that because of the inflationary situation priorities have to be established.

[Mr. Roy (Laval).]

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that we have done a great deal of things in that area. In cooperation with provinces and municipalities the government set up a development program, launched research work and granted a fiscal rebate of 12 per cent on bus purchases. For the province of Quebec alone this amounts to $35 million. For the City of Laval which also acquired buses it comes up to about $3 million. Then either through various methods, research, improved city planning or taxation, the federal government intervened to help the provinces and municipalities.

I should like to point out the implementation in Ontario, and more particularly in Toronto, of the GO-transit system which is now operated by the CN and whose costs are paid by the province of Ontario. The system is now working efficiently and I think that if the Montreal area is to benefit from an early solution to public transit difficulties experienced by CP on the south shore and by CN along the Lac des Deux-Montagnes from Montreal via Laval, the government of Quebec should consider the decision made by the Ontario government and apply an identical system which would be operated by the CN. Then I think that it would be an element of solution to the public transit issue and that could be done in the very near future. As of July 1, following an announcement by the CN the province of Quebec has to decide, after presenting its report on transit planning in the metropolitan area, what will be the future of the CN and CP in the Montreal area on the south shore as well as on the north shore. This is another way of helping municipalities and provinces provide local residents with better services.

At the beginning of my speech, I mentioned the growth of urban population. It is expected that, by the year 2000, 55 towns will have a population of 50,000 and that 23 of them are in Ontario and 13 in the province of Quebec. In other words, of the 55 towns which are expected to have 50,000 people in the year 2000, at least 21, representing a total population of 14 million, can be considered as part of a 700 mile long corridor stretching from Quebec city to Windsor. This will be a residential corridor, which brings me to say a few words about a newly established company, called Via Rail Canada. This CN subsidiary, which will be a management firm for passengers' services, will be responsible for the planning, marketing and provision of better passenger train services, within this Quebec-Windsor corridor, which accounted last year for a potential number of 4 million passengers. An improved system will result in more milage per dollar and better accommodations for passengers, and, revised timetables will ensure a much more effective passenger service.

Mr. Speaker, I think I am not telling any member anything new when I say that CN and CP passenger rail services never were a business or an asset for those companies if one considers that passenger service last year represented only 3 per cent of CP's business figure and only 8 per cent of CN's and both CN and CP were piling up deficits year in and year out. In 1974, a deficit of about $25 million was recorded by those two companies. Last year their combined deficit was about $32 million and following an amendment to the Railway Act in 1967 the federal government has been paying 80 per cent of both CN and CP liabilities from passenger service.

Consider that 80 per cent of liabilities are underwritten by the federal government. That amount last year was near $175 million, and it is estimated that unless changes are brought to the present situation a deficit of about $400 million will be recorded in the 1980's. Mr. Speaker, things should be made clear. The purpose of that CN subsidiary—Via Rail Canada—is not to compete with bus transport but rather provide passengers with a more adequate, much more comfortable service. That does not take anything away at all in terms of legal liability vis-à-vis CN and CP passengers. The formation of Via Rail Canada will bring about changes. We want to assure unions and employees that a program was developed whose main purpose is to provide a permanent job to those affected by the changes made in the railway passenger service system. Now we have assured those railway employees that a structure is now being set up to enable those CN and CP employees to find employment.

I wanted to indicate briefly how much we wish to improve transport conditions in municipalities as well as passenger trains. I want to assure all members in the House and the Canadian people that government members are so much aware of the importance of public transportation that we will have to obtain more funds. We are also aware of the fact that the government must make a choice and this is why we hope that the fight is not yet over, that it will still be possible to obtain additional funds for urban transit.

[English]

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate on the motion of the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) which reads:

—That this House condemns the failure of the government to provide economic leadership and in particular its failure to introduce measures which will ensure economic growth and provide jobs for the more than 1,000,000 Canadians who need them; and calls upon the government, in its March 31st budget, to correct these failures by:

1. establishing new direct job creating programs in needed social fields such as housing;

2. reducing taxes for middle and low income earners; and

3. assisting urban communities financially to ensure an immediate expansion of municipal capital works projects including rapid transit.

I think this is a true statement and that all members of the House view with alarm the staggering number of our citizens who are unemployed. The government figures show somewhere around 900,000; however, the leader of the New Democratic Party is no doubt much closer to the correct figure when he states one million, if we include those no longer registered for employment or eligible to receive benefits. Many people have probably given up all hope of securing a job through the Manpower office.

In my riding of Parry Sound-Muskoka it is taken as a matter of course that a great many men and women find it difficult, indeed almost impossible, to secure year-round employment. A great many used to be engaged in the lumbering business and during those years there was always a two or three-month period in the winter when lumber camps closed before the sawmills opened. This is no longer the main industry but, thank goodness, there are still some sawmills operating in the riding which provide employment in a great many cases for longer periods. There are small and large industries in the riding which provide some employment. The largest employs 200 people. That may not seem very large to giants of industry such as General Motors and Ford. During the winter months especially it is almost impossible for those out of work to get a job. A great many of our citizens are engaged in construction work and tourism, both highly seasonal occupations.

I just talked to the Manpower centre in the riding and was informed that at the end of February, 1977, 2,947 people were registered for employment. This compares to almost the same number in February, 1976, when it was 3,072. The figures cover Muskoka and the east part of the Parry Sound district. The Canada Manpower Centre in North Bay reports that at the end of January, 1977, there were 2,246 male and 1,506 female unemployed, for a total of 3,752. These figures cover North Bay, Sundridge, Nipissing, part of Parry Sound, part of Renfrew North and part of Timiskaming. The Parry Sound Manpower office reports 1,700 registered clients without employment.

The minister recognized the serious unemployment in my area and increased the amount available for LIP grants to $801,000, more than doubling the original amount. A further $192,000 has been approved for Canada Winter Works programs, and $72,000 for the Young Canada Works programs. It was mentioned that a total of $200 million has been allocated for the LIP program. While this is certainly a large figure, it is still providing jobs that are of a temporary nature.The money is certainly acceptable, but it is only a temporary or band-aid approach. When the programs are over, the persons involved are back on the unemployment rolls. I will admit that this usually happens in the spring; those temporarily employed on such programs during the winter months are for the most part able to find other work in the summer season.

To improve the economy of the area and of many other rural ridings across the country the solution is to assist them in attracting industry and to assist small business and industry already located there to expand. This can be done by providing funds for expansion and for working capital at better interest rates and over a longer period of time.

The opposition motion also recommends job-creation programs that include housing. The recent report of the Canadian Council of Social Development stated that one-third of all Canadians cannot afford decent housing because government aid programs are missing their targets. There must be an overhaul of Canada's housing policy at the three levels of government in order to provide more housing for those in the lower income brackets. When 280,000 families in Canada pay more than 50 per cent of their family income for housing, 500,000 families pay more than 35 per cent, 820,000 pay more than 25 per cent, and when two-thirds of those Canadians in need of housing cannot afford to buy or rent a home without government subsidy, we have a problem of tremendous proportions. We must take decisive action now or face terrible and unparallelled problems later.

The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Chrétien) stated that during 1976 there were 287,000 housing starts. The government are to be commended for that. However, the great majority of those housing starts were for people in the middle income bracket. Those in the low income bracket could not qualify. At the present time only public housing is really answering the need of low income earners. This group suggests a better deal for non-profit and co-operative groups through subsidies and tax breaks, and directing government subsidies almost exclusively toward families at the bottom end of the housing scale. The villain of the piece can also be traced to the high cost of land and mortgage rates of interest. In order to further reduce the high cost of home ownership, our party would allow the deductibility from personal income tax of mortage interest payments on the principal residence. I have recommended that the government should permit the write-off of property taxes on the principal residence to a maximum allowable limit of $500 from personal income tax. At the present time this is an unfair tax on tax.

Consideration should be given to a more flexible National Building Code to allow for regional variations. We also feel, and have advocated, that the 5 per cent federal sales tax on building materials should be abolished. This past year the government provided grants for home owners who had insulated their homes. I believe the figure is $300 for those who do the job themselves, and $500 if the job is contracted out. It so happens that those grants apply in only two provinces, Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia. It may just be a coincidence, but those are the only two provinces in Canada which have Liberal governments. I can assure the government that there are a great many areas in Canada where the economy is just as slow, the home owners are just as hard up, and there is as great a need for that type of assistance respecting insulation. I hope the government, in its wisdom, will see fit to extend this program. In my area of Parry Sound-Muskoka, and throughout northern Ontario, the climate is very extreme and insulation is very necessary. With insulation there would be considerable fuel saving.

It has already been pointed out that it costs 25 per cent more to live in Canada than it does in the United States. This applies to the cost of shelter. I think we can add another 25 per cent to the cost of living in certain northern areas of Canada. In the northern part of my province everything costs more. The people must pay extra costs over those paid in southern Ontario and other southern regions of Canada.

[Mr. Darling.]

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) has finally announced his long-awaited budget for March 31. Let us hope that it will provide a reduction in taxes for middle and low income earners as requested in the motion we are debating today. It is absolutely necessary that the minister should come up with solutions and assistance to get people back to work on a continuing basis rather than the present hit and miss methods.

The leader of the New Democratic Party outlined certain credits at various tax levels. That is certainly food for thought and he is to be commended for it. Many urban communities, both large and small, are in dire need of financial assistance in order to proceed with necessary capital works projects. In Ontario alone, over 300 community arenas have been condemned as being unsafe. Federal assistance in this field would mean that many of these projects could be started immediately. The Ontario government has provided substantial and generous grants for these projects. However, many municipalities are finding it impossible to raise the balance through direct municipal taxation and private donations. Many towns and cities have building programs which are held up because of lack of funds.

It was suggested that the capital works program be reinstated. That is an excellent idea. I hope the Minister of Finance gives serious consideration to that suggestion. It was stated that at present there are 145,000 construction workers unemployed and receiving unemployment insurance benefits. I would assume that they are receiving the maximum benefit. If they were taken off the UIC rolls and put to work on these various building projects, it would be an excellent solution.

Our larger cities are very concerned about the lack of public transit. Metropolitan areas are crying out for federal money for rapid transit expansion. The high cost of gasoline and automobiles is making it necessary for the average working man and woman to leave the car at home and use public forms of transit. As hon. members are aware, the government placed an extra ten-cent tax on gasoline, which has been a great hardship to people who must drive to work each day—in many cases a good number of miles. In my own area many people from the small towns and villages commute to large centres such as North Bay, Parry Sound, Huntsville, Bracebridge, and Gravenhurst. Some of them drive as much as 100 miles per day. They are not allowed any deductions from their income tax for this purpose. This is discriminating when we consider that a great many taxpayers can qualify for business expenses. I am thinking of salesmen, doctors and many other people in the business world. These people for the most part have incomes much higher than the ordinary workingman.

I think of the people in northern Ontario, the area with which I am most familiar. Miners in the Sudbury area live considerable distances from the mines, sometimes 20, 30 or 40 miles away. Consideration should certainly be given to them. This applies even more to workers in industries which do not pay the high wages of INCO and Falconbridge. The industries in northern Ontario are resource industries. It would certainly be helpful if the federal government would provide additional grants through DREE, and possibly other programs, to set up additional industries there to provide permanent, good-paying jobs to those who are now seasonally employed and find it difficult to obtain permanent employment.

I have to repeat what I have been saying in a great many speeches on a subject that is very dear to my heart, small business. Small business provides more than half of all the jobs we have in Canada. If we are to make any meaningful effort to tackle the present level of high unemployment we will have to look to helping this segment of our economy. In our system, whether or not the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) likes it, private enterprise can come up with better solutions to the problem of unemployment than the government. We must recognize this fundamental difference between our system and those of socialist or communist countries. In countries where the government owns and controls the means of production, distribution and merchandising, it stands to reason that the government will be the largest employer in the country. It is this basic difference that makes the present government's make-work programs inefficient and unsatisfactory in the long haul.

The millions of dollars spent on LIP and Canada Works will give temporary relief to a few thousand people, but what is really needed are long-term, career-type jobs which will allow workers to plan their lives just as we plan our own lives. Our people have a right to expect this. The hundreds of millions of dollars spent on ad hoc, make-work programs might better be spent encouraging business and industry to expand. We could use some of the money to encourage new businesses to be established. We now have a minister responsible for small business. While I have great respect for the hon. member appointed to that portfolio, I have to wonder if he is being given the latitude and support he will need if he is to make a meaningful contribution to this important segment of the national economy.

I have waited with a great deal of hope and anticipation to see if we are going to have a small business administration such as that in the United States to assist people in starting up in business, with both financial and informational assistance. A small business administration would enable prospective business men and business women to assess market conditions with respect to their product or service. It would not be possible to assemble all of the information one would need to establish a business, including up to date information in depth on the marketability of a product or service, without going to considerable expense. This information should be available from a central government source. Such an agency should be authorized to make long-term, low interest loans to businesses to purchase equipment and stock, to finance expansion and modernization and to facilitate the amalgamation of similar enterprises to form conglomerates or chains. It would also make capital available to people who want to start up a business or purchase or buy into a business.

This agency that I envisage would have responsibility to study the different types of forms, reports and other kinds of paperwork that is presently imposed on small business people. The cost in time and expense to small businesses today just to keep up with the paperwork demanded by the government is causing businesses to fail every day. We simply cannot allow this pig-headedness and stupidity to threaten such an important segment of our economy. Much of the paperwork demanded of small businesses results from lack of co-ordination between agencies in government concerned with financial and commercial matters. It has grown unchecked through the years, and a large part of it is redundant and uneconomic. In many cases it is totally useless.

The whole body of Canadian business law needs to be overhauled, just as we have recognized the necessity to overhaul our criminal and civil law. It is ridiculous to pile still more laws and regulations on the body of law that is already stifling small businesses in Canada, which is in fact choking many of them to death every week. There are already so many forces in the market today mitigating against the interests of Canadian businessmen and exporters that we should be thinking of ways to help, rather than to hinder, small businessmen. We are no longer competitive in world markets, or even the continental market, with respect to a great many Canadian products. If businesses are forced to restrict their production and marketing to the domestic market, one already saturated with cheap imports, then it is small wonder that more and more small businesses are going under and that fewer and fewer are being established.

The complex tax structure small businesses have to cope with requires that even the smallest of them deal more and more with tax lawyers and accountants, neither of which come cheaply. We must seek ways to ease the tax burden on small businesses. If they thrive, we will more than make it up in increased profit taxes and taxes from the firms' employees. We would get increased production and a better level of services. If, on the other hand, we force businesses to go under, we get more and more unemployment and we reduce our tax base. We have a choice and we have the resources, but we have to make a decision.

There are other forces besides big government which work against the interests of small businesses. Small businesses, by their very nature, are unfavorable. They are vulnerable to pressures from big business and from big unions. They can be placed in an unfavorable or non-competitive position by the actions of big corporations. While we do have anti-combines laws which prevent such things as price-fixing, there are many ways, some of them subtle and some not so subtle, in which small concerns can be placed in an unfair position. They must have some avenue of appeal against unfair competition and business practices.

Small businesses and small industries are vulnerable to pressures from big unions, even more so than the larger corporations. For instance, while a man like Joe Davidson seems able to subject the Canadian people and the postal workers themselves to great losses in services and money, into the millions of dollars, on the pretext that the Post Office is not bargaining in good faith, we can survive these losses. Not so the small business or industry. Over and over again we have seen that one prolonged strike is all it takes to destroy a small firm, along with all the jobs that it once provided. Here again, employers must be guaranteed the same rights as the big unions and they must be afforded the same protection as the unions. They must have assurance that they can withstand the pressures, threats and actions that often accompany what would be normal and reasonable negotiations.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired. However, he may continue with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Darling: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank hon. members for allowing me to continue. I shall be as brief as possible. I am making a strong appeal to the government to wake up and look at the options open to us, to make a meaningful attack on unemployment. Let us help the business and industrial communities to solve this problem for us. Short-term, make-work programs are necessary to some extent to ease the plight of those who are chronically unemployed. But we must also recognise that we allowed this situation to develop to its present state. Spending millions, or even billions of dollars of taxpayers' money will not provide a long-term, permanent solution to high unemployment, unless that money is put in the right place. Non-revenue projects cost twice as much as the original grant because once the money is gone, there is no return. We cannot afford to use this approach as the basis of the cure.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of the adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave)—Transport—St. Lawrence Seaway toll increases; the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens)—Airports—Pickering—Government intentions with regard to construction; the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn)—Administration of Justice—Use of writs of assistance.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Broadbent:

That this House condemns the failure of the government to provide economic leadership and in particular its failure to introduce measures which will ensure economic growth and provide jobs for the more than 1,000,000 Canadians who need them; and calls upon the government, in its March 31st budget, to correct these failures by:

1. establishing new direct job creating programs in needed social fields such as housing;

2. reducing taxes for middle and low income earners; and

3. assisting urban communities financially to ensure an immediate expansion of municipal capital works projects including rapid transit.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, it would seem to me this is a most appropriate time to be discussing such a motion as my hon. friend for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) has put forward. I say this in light of the fact that many agencies around the country are of the opinion that something more precise needs to be done with regard to reducing the level of unemployment. I agree with the previous speaker that a figure of one million unemployed is probably much more realistic than the figure currently provided. Like him, I find there are many in my riding who, although unemployed, are not registered with the Manpower office for employment. In fact, I would estimate that one-third of the unemployed are not registered.

● (1720)

The simple reason is that there is no work in the area; secondly, they have been unemployed for a considerable period. Their only solution is to move, and this they cannot do because of marital commitments. So there is a large body of unemployed who are not registered and are not taken into consideration by Manpower when deciding on winter works projects, LIP grants, youth project and other projects.

One of the things we fail to realize is that the government is the only body which is responsible for creating employment. It is easy for the government to put people out of work, and this government has done its very best to co-operate with the United States to leave the North American pattern unchanged without embarking on projects of its own which might solve unemployment in this country. The government decided, really, that the United States economy would be on the upturn in the last part of 1976, and it waited for this. It jointed in programs with our southern neighbour, but we have found ourselves in a worse position than the United States. Unemployment in this country is at a catastrophic level.

The government did embark upon a program which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said in 1974 would not work. He indicated why it would not work and referred to the pitfalls that had befallen others who tried to freeze wages. He now finds he has been proven corrected and that he is an able prophet. The Conservatives are now saying that the Liberals spoke against controls, that they then implemented controls and now look at the mess we are in. So the Prime Minister really has the worst of both worlds. He predicted that this would happen and he has now been proven right. One effect of controls has been to control only wages and some salaries. They have not been applied uniformly. Controls did not affect prices. It is of interest to note that a worker today can pay up to 50 per cent of his income for housing. Housing has not been controlled.

Interest rates today are the responsibility of the government. I was stupid enough, as were others in the House as well, to agree with officials who told us that if we took off the ceiling on interest rates of 6 per cent, where it had been for years, it would create competition among the banks. It was the old, free enterprise idea that if there was competition interest rates would go down. Well, they sure went down, Mr. Speaker! In fact, they doubled, and in some cases considerably more than doubled so far as housing is concerned.

We have done nothing about interest rates. It is true that Canada is now in a very odd position. We have improved nothing and we find the value of our dollar going down. Our ability to borrow in the markets of the world is less than it was even a year ago. It will be difficult for the federal government and for the provinces to borrow money, all because the Prime Minister said he was the only one in this country who could unite the country. He now has us at the stage where there is some doubt that this can be accomplished by anyone; certainly it cannot be accomplished by him. Other countries are reacting to the situation and this is having an effect on our dollar. The cost to us is going to be very heavy.

What has happened to costs in this country? The AIB did nothing about energy costs or about medical costs. Really, it has done nothing about food costs. In fact, it did not do anything about anything, except to control wages and salaries. In the process it made business, management and labour very dissatisfied and cautious about any type of expansion in this country. The only body that can do anything about this situation today appears to be the federal government.

The federal government must do at least two things which are almost impossible to accomplish. Firstly, it has to establish some stability in our nation. This cannot be done by a referendum, by taking on "the enemy", or by somebody saying, "I am the only one who can be the saviour". This will have to be done with a great deal of co-operation, openness and willingness to negotiate. This certainly has not been the long suit of the present government.

Secondly, the government must do something about unemployment. As the previous speaker said, we have developed a number of ad hoc programs, though the government did not participate in the development of some of these programs. We have provided a sum of money for individuals and organizations if they come up with some kind of scheme. Such a scheme will be financed at almost the minimum wage in order to provide work for those who cannot find any other kind of work. But this has not done anything for the country. It is a stopgap measure, the kind of thing that has not done anything for the people involved.

As a rich country five or six years ago with a fairly high standard of living it was all very well to tell our young people to do their thing and we would finance it. But we can no longer enjoy that luxury. If we are merely supplying money today to provide minimum wages for people who in other instances would be on unemployment insurance or welfare, then we are not getting any great advantage and certainly there is no long-term benefit to the country. I can remember back in the fifties and even in the forties we used to talk about a shelf of works, the kind of work programs which the federal government would design and implement. The provinces would also design and implement such programs. From the federal point of view we even said we would be willing to accept projects which were designed and initiated by the municipalities.

We have come a long way from the day when the federal government was capable of designing make-work projects in this country, or when the provinces were able to design employment programs which were of advantage to the country, which created work that eventually led to full-time employment. All we are doing today is providing hand-outs. If you check, Mr. Speaker, you will find that this year these hand-outs had a lead time of about two weeks, or not even two weeks in most areas, from the time applications were made available to when programs were instituted at the municipal level and winter work was provided. It is a lousy program, the kind that will not provide any permanency of employment in this country.

What can we do? Last week an industry in my area closed because of the fight between Levesque and Trudeau, and the implications of that fight were noted on the money markets of New York.

Mr. MacFarlane: Who started that one?

Mr. Peters: It was started—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please! Would the hon. member please speak of the Prime Minister, and not refer to him as "Trudeau".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I apologize and stand corrected. I should have said that the fight was between the Premier of the province of Quebec and the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau).

Mr. Broadbent: Whatever his name happens to be.

Mr. MacFarlane: Isn't that interesting?

Mr. Peters: My hon. friend says that is interesting. That plant had 200 employees, and it closed because its borrowed money was recalled. It operated with long-term loans of approximately $15 million from the Mercantile Bank, which in its turn is owned by Chase-Manhattan. The plant had borrowed about $15 million from the Japanese, and other amounts from ASARCO Corporation.

The company was operating and developing a fairly large asbestos mine. You may remember that the Premier of Quebec told his New York audience that his government was thinking over the asbestos industry in Quebec. Well, this company of which I am speaking owns a property in Thetford Mines and another in my area. I am told that on instructions of Chase-Manhattan, the Mercantile Bank called their loan. They called it, and the plant closed down that day. The hon. member opposite may laugh, but it still means the loss of 200 jobs.

Mr. MacFarlane: I did not laugh; I did not even smile. Do not use words like that, I did not even smile.

Mr. Broadbent: You are smiling now.

Mr. MacFarlane: No, I am not.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Then it's your face.

Mr. Peters: That company was affected by our country's difficulties. Now it is most difficult for that company to continue its operation. If the government wanted to help, it could have instructed Texas Gulf, the company controlled by Canadian Development Corporation, to look into that property to see if it can be operated successfully. The Japanese will buy our asbestos. I am pleased at the development in my area, especially since the company met Ontario's health standards for the industry. I want to see it continue in operation. But it can only stay in business if the federal government asks the Canada Development Corporation to take the company under its wing.

I suggest that CDC should also look into other companies in my area. I am thinking particularly of a large, modern sawmill built not long ago at Kirkland Lake and employing 200 people. The government sank quite a bit of money in this mill in the form of DREE grants. But it was stupid because it did not take an equity position in that company and others like it which had received DREE grants. Some of these companies go bankrupt; and although the government has pumped large sums into them it has no say about their operations because it was not smart enough to take equity positions in them. If it took an equity position, a government representative would sit on the board of directors. In this way the government could provide technical knowledge and access to funds to tide them over serious difficulties.

The previous speaker said that free enterprise can do things more efficiently than can Crown corporations. That is not so. We have helped almost every business which started in this country in the last four or five years; unfortunately we did not take an equity position in them.

Mr. Broadbent: Right on.

Mr. Peters: Even the people involved in these businesses are happy to have the federal government as a partner. Why, Mr. Speaker? They know the government will make available to them management experts, sales experts, and experts at raising money. I am sure the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) agrees that most industries we start in northern Ontario lack capital. Pretty well every one of those businesses is under-capitalized. For example, take the forest products industry.

We have in my area one of the most up-to-date little plants in the country. It produces flakeboard which is plastic covered and made into cases for stereo components for RCA Victor in the United States. It has been able to compete successfully with other companies engaged in the electronics field. I estimate the value of that plant at $9 million; I also estimate the capitalization at less than $2 million, and I am ignoring borrowings. Businessmen know that if you are under-capitalized to that extent, you are operating on bank loans, and banks will not carry loans indefinitely. If there is a drop in the price of the product, or a change in your rate of return, you must put new capital into your business or secure a large increase for your current revolving fund. This is true of businesses in northern Ontario, and equally true of those in northern Quebec. One hears almost constantly of businesses in those areas going bankrupt. What is the reason? They lack capitalization.

As the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka suggests, if we were to take the money we now put into make-work projects and apply it to the establishment of long-term industries in northern Ontario, we could create long-term employment for people now living from day to day, working short intervals, trying hard to work eight weeks in order to qualify for unemployment insurance.

We should enter fields others mentioned. I will not cover them in detail. Housing is a good example. Mr. Speaker, we do not need the kind of housing builders are building today. In Timmins, a mining town, there is a great surplus of housing, expensive housing which people working in the mines cannot afford.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired. He may continue, with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Has the hon. member unanimous consent to carry on?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I will end on this note: we need to examine our housing. I was speaking of Timmins. Not long ago I talked to one of the main contractors in that community and one of the leading real estate agents. He said that there is surplus housing in the community, but it is mostly of one kind. It is expensive. It is expensive because he must raise money to put in the sewers, water, roads, and other ancillary services which go into a subdivision. Mr. Speaker, we should provide municipalities with long-term money for picking up real estate in areas not now under development. We should allow our municipalities to do some of that basic development. The municipalities could buy land with money provided for long periods at low interest. The interest cost on land is reflected in the purchase price of a house. I suggest that high interest on land costs and on the cost of services people must pay are not doing any good to the cause of housing.

Houses built for our underhoused population in this country should be low cost. I am one of those who believes that houses can be built at a reasonable cost and sold to those who want to live in that type of housing, if only the government would give the necessary leadership by enabling the provision of mortgages at a low interest, and giving the kind of assistance that is necessary to allow for a rapid expansion of the housing industry, which would have a spin-off effect on the lumber industry, the plywood industry, and other industries providing furnishings for those houses. In my opinion this will result in a greater rate of employment.

I would like to go on to speak about urban transit which should be improved in the city of Ottawa. I have in my pocket bus tickets that are two years old. They cost me four for $1. Last year they were three for $1, and this year they are five for $2. That is how quickly costs for transit are going up. One waits for a bus for a long time, and then it costs you 50 cents if you have a drop fare. It is just as cheap to drive your own car, but is it cheap for the nation in the energy that is used? Is it cheap for the city which has to build a new lane on the expressway because cars clog it in the morning? Our priorities are not very good. The forthcoming budget will allow the government to redeem some of the mistakes it has made over the last few years, but I hope the government will take full advantage of the budget to increase employment.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to make a lengthy speech at this time. I want to be associated with the last part of the motion relating to rapid transit, and in particular I wish to associate myself with the remarks made in the House in the debate on Bill C-33 by my colleagues, the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Philbrook) who spoke on March 2, the hon. member for York East (Mr. Collenette) who spoke on March 2, and the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Watson) who, in my opinion, made a particularly good speech on this subject.

Mr. Broadbent: What about all the members in the opposition and their speeches?

An hon. Member: He does not want to be associated with them.

Mr. Francis: The whole question of rapid transit is one about which all of us who represent urban areas must be concerned. In my opinion the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Kaplan), in his remarks on March 4 in this place, offered arguments which were very unconvincing. He spoke about the need for conservation, but he did not deal with what is, in my opinion, the very important contribution in the form of energy conservation which is implied in the support of public transit. He spoke about the need for restraint, which I fully support without question.

In the debate in which we are taking part now we are offering some advice to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) in the matters that he might consider in his forthcoming budget. I sincerely hope that in considering the problem of energy, which the Minister of Finance must do, he will look at what must be done by way of encouragement of public transit and discouragement of the use of the private automobile and the unnecessary consumption of gasoline.

I do not know what are the costs in the budget of subsidizing gasoline or, shall we say, of maintaining a generally uniform price structure for gasoline from one coast to the other. My colleague, the hon. member for Laprairie, yesterday suggested in the House that they might be in the order of $800 million a year, but these must be very rough estimates. The sums of money are very large indeed, and what I and my colleagues are seeking, those of us who are speaking in support of urban transit, is a long-term view. We ask the government not to be penny wise and pound foolish, not to undertake policies that are for the day only and that, over a long period, will cost a good deal more in funds which could properly be spent on urban transit now.

I said that I did not intend to make a lengthy speech, but if I may, I should like to talk about what is happening in this city. I noted that the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) referred to the bus fare structure in metropolitan Ottawa. I was an alderman on the city council for a number of years and saw the growth of what was probably a typical Ottawa suburb. I represented on city council an area without a single apartment building. In large sections of the city there were almost only three and four bedroom bungalows inhabited by people bringing up their families in the family formation years. This brought a tremendous burden on the school system and led to an overbuilding of elementary schools in my part of the city. It distorted many of the priorities that a logical planning sequence would have indicated. My colleague, the hon. member for Laprairie, documented this very convincingly and eloquently in his speech in the House.

At this stage we have still the opportunity of putting forward some logical priorities in the field of urban transit, knowing that this is the only way, over a longer period, in which we can have a rational energy conservation policy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Francis: I speak not only of the encouragement of urban transit—and I want to speak about the means which, I hope, will shortly be adopted by the government—but also of the discouragement of the private automobile. It is not an easy thing to be a member representing a constituency such as mine and to support a charge for parking by government employees in the central core of this city. This government instituted a charge for parking in the fall of 1974. I have had only one or two complaints about it. I expected a deluge of complaints, but the people I represent know that there must be a deterrent to the use of private automobiles. They know that the parking spaces they use cost the taxpayers money. They know also that it is infinitely better in every way if we can develop a good transportation system as an alternative.

I ask that the government carry the thinking a little further. The charges for parking should not only be at the central core of the city. I attended a community association meeting in my constituency last week at which the people there asked that charges be imposed at Tunney's Pasture—which is not really a suburb but at one time was considered a suburb—because they know now that the overuse of the existing parking facilities in that area creates a blight, a community nuisance, and is an inefficient use of energy. It pollutes the air, and is wrong in every way. The same can be said about Parliament Hill.

I would hope, Mr. Speaker, that you would convey to others associated with you in that office the need for a policy of charging for the use of parking on Parliament Hill. I am ashamed as a member of parliament to park my car on the Hill free of charge. My constituents pay when they drive their cars to work and park in the central area of the city, and I hope there will be an initiative from Mr. Speaker's office to bring about a re-examination of the policy of free parking on Parliament Hill for a chosen group. The policy is wrong, it cannot be defended in principle, and I will be delighted to pay my share of the charges which, I am sure, would be only right.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Francis: I am glad to hear hon. members on the other side support this.

We have to live with the necessity for conserving energy. We have to live with the fact that we cannot go on with the balance of payments problem which energy will create for us to a much more serious extent every year. We have to set individual examples.

● (1750)

I had the privilege of serving as a member of the transit commission of this city for some time. I learned then what a sad state public transit technology was in. I went with other members to San Francisco where a major program involving hundreds of millions of dollars was being undertaken. Before making their decision they set up their own laboratories to test equipment. They were testing four types of direct current motors, and about three types of alternating current motors. The problem in technology was as basic as that.

The metro in metropolitan Montreal was a tremendous thing. It adopted a technology which is now generally considered to be obsolete. Rubber wheels were put on steel rails, and, so that that could be done, the stations had to be designed to use gravity braking. The city of Montreal is not in a position to convert that system to anything else now because it is locked in with it. However, had appropriate technology been used in this cold part of the continent we know so well, had there been leadership from the federal government and from provincial governments, and had there been research and testing projects, the basic decisions could have been made with greater wisdom and knowledge.

On March 2 in this House my colleague, the hon. member for York East, outlined what is available by way of research and demonstration project assistance in Canada. This has been available since 1972-73. My colleague pointed out that over the first four fiscal years the great total of $1.25 million was paid out by way of federal grants for demonstration and research and for urban transit technology. I suggest that that is hardly something in which we can take a great deal of pride.

There are certain provisions under the National Transportation Act, but we are not debating that act at this point. I welcome what is being done, but it is grossly inadequate. There is an opportunity for us in Canada today to put our money where we have an urgent, crying priority, and to solve in a technological sense the problem of how to move people from city to city —commuter transit—and the problems of urban transit, moving people within cities. Canada can make a contribution with the knowledge, the skills and the technical capacity which are available to us. This could be of great assistance to us not only with regard to our domestic problem but also in developing export markets in other parts of the world.

During the course of the 1974 election campaign the party to which I belong made a very explicit promise in terms of the type of assistance which would be available. I believed in that promise. I believed it made a great deal of sense. It was a matter of very deep regret to me to learn recently that there are people in responsible positions who suggest that that promise cannot be honoured. I, for one, will do everything I can to urge the government and others in this place to support a policy of aid for urban transit as soon as it is possible to have such a policy.

[Translation]

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): First of all, I would like to commend the New Democratic Party because they put forward a motion today which condemns the failure of the government to provide economic leadership and in particular its failure to introduce measures which will ensure economic growth and provide jobs for the more than one million Canadians who need them.

Mr. Speaker, today's motion calls upon the government to correct these failures in its March 31 budget through three specific measures which read as follows:

1. establishing new direct job creating programs in needed social fields such as housing;

2. reducing taxes for middle and how income earners; and

3. assisting urban communities financially to ensure an immediate expansion of municipal capital works projets including rapid transit.

Mr. Speaker, these three specific measures proposed by the NDP are most interesting and we would be hard put to find one member in the House who stands against developing our own resources while providing useful jobs to unemployed citizens who are deprived of any lucrative occupation. It is evident that establishing new direct job creating programs in needed social fields such as housing represent a very valuable objective for us. But the problem is what kind of response this proposal will get from the government? It will surely answer that it has no money, that it has not the financial means to set up such programs with the limited funds presently available.

The same kind of answer will be given to any proposed reduction of taxes for middle and low income earners. Mr. Speaker, everybody agrees on the principle of the matter. In our opinion, our colleagues of the NDP did not invent the suggestion contained in the motion they put forward today.

Mr. Speaker, the Social Credit members have been asking for the same thing since 1962 and always the government, which at the time was led by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) answered that it could not reduce the income tax of people in the lower income bracket. Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, as I said before supper time, the socreds have been demanding since 1962 what is being proposed today by the New Democratic Party. The government at that time which was headed by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) would readily reply that it could not reduce income tax for low income earners for the same reason given by this government today, namely that they did not have any money. The same thing occurred, Mr. Speaker, under the Pearson government and it is still the same now with the Trudeau government which claims it has no money, and is unable to reduce the taxes of low income people.

As for the NDP third proposal, I am pleased to point out that the development of urban communities through federal funding of public works is a matter in which social crediters have been interested for a long time.

When we suggest that public works sponsored by municipalities and provinces be financed through interest-free loans by the Bank of Canada, we bring forward a concrete and efficient way of enabling urban communities to acquire essential services without going into debt for thousands of years. We also know, Mr. Speaker, that the cost of that debt accounts for more than half of the budget of some municipalities. How can a city acquire the necessary services when half or more of its funds go to pay the interest on its public debt? It is obviously impossible. The proposal of our friends of the New Democratic Party to press the federal government into spending considerable sums of money for municipalities is certainly not the ideal solution. As a matter of fact, the only result of that solution would be that the federal government, instead of municipalities, would go into debt.

Mr. Speaker, the Social Crediters propose that municipalities get loans without interest from the Bank of Canada for their development. The Bank of Canada is the financial institution which must be the servant of Canadians. If this bank would lend the necessary sums in the form of new credits guaranteed by all our resources, municipalities could get on with the establishment of the necessary services without having to go into debt and get crushed by the cost of servicing the debt only. For all useful purposes, Mr. Speaker, the three specific measures put forward today by the New Democratic Party will merely be pious wishes as long as the government will not have money enough to realize all those projects. The NDP itself, if it were in power, could not implement the measures it is putting forward today, and we would hear the leader of the NDP complain about the lack of funds.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, there is no shortage of Canadians ready to work. There is no shortage of manpower. There is no shortage of skilled people. As we are all aware, we have the necessary engineers, architects, technicians to carry out all those ambitious projects which could make life easier for us both in our cities and rural areas, nor are we lacking materials, Mr. Speaker. We have steel, concrete, all the metals and raw materials required for the construction of rapid transit systems as advocated by our colleagues of the NDP. How come then, Mr. Speaker, there are so many idle hands in our beautiful and wealthy country? How come it is impossible to realize our main projects in the social sector? We always get the same answer: because there is no money. And our NDP friends do not even talk about this problem which is a basic one, the prime source of our present difficulties.

The measures proposed today tackle the symptoms, the obvious signs of the problem but they do not deal with its deep causes. We all recall the former leader of the Social Credit party of Canada, the late Réal Caouette, who used to say that dealing with the appearances of the problem is like putting a band-aid on a wooden leg. As the former hon. member for Témiscamingue used to say so well, so long as we have not thoroughly revamped the economic and financial system we will continue to hear the governments say: That is a good idea but we don't have any money. What we are asking for, with our Social Credit economic reform, is simply that the monetary system reflect today's realities.

Everyone admits that it is not normal for the government to be paralyzed by a lack of money, while thousands of people would like nothing better than to go to work, creating services and goods of benefits to all Canadian citizens. Nor is it normal, Mr. Speaker, to see that, in spite of the fact that we have within reach the materials required to give the services asked for by municipalities and individuals, we are unable to act simply for lack of money. Yet, subway and railway services, to increase the speed of urban transports, are not built with dollars, but with such materials as steel, concrete, plastics and metals, and of course, with competent people, engineers, architects and technicians. And do we have all that here in Canada? What are we waiting for to put the financial system in line with reality? As long as we live in a monetary system that does not take into account the physical realities of the modern era, we will face that problem, we will discuss motions that are wishing thinking, and we will hear governments claim we are short of money. If the New Democratic Party is not prepared to propose a thorough reform of the financial and monetary system, it could at least propose some measures that might make it not so easy for the government to give us the same answer: We are short of money.

Mr. Speaker, the Social Credit party of Canada, of which I have the honour to be a member, has always included within its programme a clause recommending lowering the age of voluntary retirement to 60. As a result, not only do we support lowering the retirement age, but we press for old age security pensions and benefits under Canada Pension Plan that are high enough to guarantee the aged a decent living. Is Canada economically and financially able to meet the requirements of the motion now before us? The GNP is maintained at a reasonable level in spite of the increasing number of unemployed. They might contribute to increase the gross national product if they could use their energy to increase our national production, which would enable us to achieve the goal set out in this motion.

Mr. Speaker, one may also wonder whether Canada can financially afford such expenditures. As far as I am concerned, I think that budgetary cuts are certainly necessary, particularly in connection with the servicing of the national debt. During the present fiscal year, the Treasury Board has to pay $4 billion in interests on the national debt, and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) refuses to say to whom these interests are being paid. One only has to refer to the answer recorded in Hansard for February 1, 1977, in reply to a question No. 1389 put by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert).

The hon. member for Bellechasse was then seeking information which should be made available to all Canadians with regard to the total of the national debt. Who are our creditors? Is it a long or a short-term debt? It seems that we are always seeking information which apparently is never available. Interest is being paid and we cannot even find out to whom. There is money owing, but to whom?

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, to all such motions which have been moved since 1962, the government had always pleaded the lack of money. How is it possible to lack money when we do not even know to whom we are paying interest and owe money?

One other thing, Mr. Speaker, I feel that the government should develop as many job-creating programs as possible, such as LIP and Canada at work. In this respect, Mr. Speaker, an attempt should be made to keep the administrative costs of these programs as low as possible, so that the largest amounts possible will be appropriated for that purpose.

[Mr. Caouette.]

Obviously many municipalities were able to establish services like recreation centres and arenas through LIP projects and this year's Canada Works. A few weeks ago I had myself the opportunity to participate in the opening of the Barraute arena in my riding, and that was done thanks to the jobs created by local initiative projects. And it is also because of the wonderful work accomplished by the municipal council of that town which achieved something very important for the people of that municipality. So I strongly encourage the minister responsible for those job creation programs to make all possible efforts to increase the funds available so that many more good projects can be implemented.

I wish to underline the fact that municipalities are now in a very difficult situation. Their revenues from land taxes are not enough to cover their financial burden. The interest on their public debts seriously affects their budgets. Again this week, Mr. Speaker, I met members from the Val d'Or municipal council who had to beg the Minister for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) to get credits to lighten the financial burden of their municipality through the financing of some services. Mr. Speaker, that is only one example of the difficult position of our municipalities throughout the country. It is clear that tailoring job creation programs to the priorities of our municipalities is a positive and efficient means to reduce their terrible burden.

Then I encourage this government to make every possible effort within the present monetary structure to give first priority to job creation programs to develop municipal services. Of course, it would be more interesting to see the government undertake a reform of the financial and monetary system but I think we cannot count too much on the present government to show leadership in that field. In view of the constant administrative blunders of this government, we are not too enthusiastic about seeing it launch into major reforms which would be beyond the competence of its members.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret having to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired. Nevertheless, he may continue with unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank my colleagues for giving me these additional few minutes. I will not make ill-use of this time.

In conclusion, I would propose that we study the current situation in the province of Quebec, namely the election of the Parti Québécois. We should be able to ask ourselves now, Mr. Speaker, if the unemployed would really have the possibility of finding work, of being useful to society, if the independence problem really became an issue in our great and beautiful country. I am convinced and so are all my colleagues in this House that if all Quebecers had a chance to benefit from new job creation programs administered by the government, they would not even think about independence and separation.

[English]

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, I too am pleased to participate in this debate brought on by the NDP. I think that at this time it is worth reviewing the motion they have placed on the order paper.

That this House condemns the failure of the government to provide economic leadership and in particular its failure to introduce measures which will ensure economic growth and provide jobs for the more than 1,000,000 Canadians who need them; and calls upon the government, in its March 31st budget, to correct these failures by:

1. establishing new direct job creating programs in needed social fields such as housing;

2. reducing taxes for middle and low income earners; and

3. assisting urban communities financially to ensure an immediate expansion of municipal capital works projects including rapid transit.

One criticism that I should make is that the motion nowhere refers to the private sector. Business capital spending has been declining since the end of 1975 and the outlook is not encouraging. Business confidence is at the lowest point in recent memory. The threat of aborted recovery, weak markets, a tax structure which compounds the ravages of inflation, controls over wages and profits, and the stultifying effect of excessive government regulations are all contributing to this serious deterioration in business confidence about the future environment for growth and development in Canada. Unless capital formation is given every encouragement, workers will lose now through more unemployment and less productivity and they will lose in the future by being paid pensions of lower real value.

We are all aware that the private sector of the economy provides many jobs. Unless this area is stimulated we shall see unemployment levels rise even higher. My hon. friend from Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) outlined the position of our party. As usual, he did a superb job.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Elzinga: In the past little while our party has received a certain amount of criticism for not advocating policy. All one has to do is read the speech by the hon. member for Hamilton West. He has done a superb job of outlining the areas in which we feel the government should act. One thing that puzzles me even more than the criticism we receive for not advocating policies is that the governing party does not receive any criticism for not having any policy itself.

I ask hon. members opposite to tell us their policy with regard to the one million people who are unemployed. All one has to do is look at the immigration bill presently before parliament. What the government wishes parliament to do is pass the legislation so that regulations can be enacted by order in council. It does not wish to tell parliament or the Canadian people what those regulations will be in advance of the passage of the legislation. This can only lead us to believe that the government has but one policy, a policy of doing nothing and of securing its re-election at the expense of the expectation of the Canadian people.

Turning to the motion, I wish to deal first with item number one which speaks of the establishment of new, direct job creation programs in social fields such as housing. Housing is at a critical stage. My first suggestion would be that interest payments on mortgages be tax deductible. I am sure this idea would receive reports from both sides of the House. Members of my own party and members of the opposition parties with whom I have had conversations have told me they would support such a move. The budget which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) intends to bring down on March 31 is the means by which to implement the proposal. Let us hope that in the budget we shall see something along these lines.

The motion speaks about establishing new, direct job creation programs. Let us hope any such programs will be more effective than those we have seen in the past. The minister recently announced the Canada Works program. In my opinion this program is nothing but a pork barrel for the Liberal party.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Shame!

Mr. Elzinga: We see this when we calculate on a Canada-wide basis the amounts received by Liberal constituencies as compared with the amounts received by Progressive Conservative constituencies and others. We find that the Liberal constituencies receive on an average in excess of $50,000 more than Conservative constituencies. If that is not pork barrelling I do not know what is.

An hon. Member: Nonsense!

Mr. Elzinga: All we have to do is look at two constituencies. First, the constituency of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) in Vancouver East. It is to receive $514,000. Now look at the constituency represented by our party whip, the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski). It will receive $100,000. I am sure the unemployment rate differential is not so great as to warrant five times the amount of money going to the constituency of the Minister of Justice. If that is not pork barrelling I do not know what is.

Some time ago I asked the minister responsible for this program if he could explain the procedure used—the funding formula. Do you know what the minister said to me, Mr. Speaker? I asked the minister this question well over a month ago and he has not yet seen fit to reply. He has said absolutely nothing.

● (2030)

To deal with the second part of the motion, reducing taxes for middle and low income earners, I believe that taxes must be reduced for these people. A reduction in taxes will increase consumer spending, which at this point is what Canada needs. Canada's economic opportunities are in grave danger of being sacrificed to the apparent political opportunism of the Liberal administration. The economic situation is critical. Only by an immediate tax cut and an end to controls can unacceptable unemployment be avoided and economic growth restored. By delaying the taking of these needed economic initiatives, the Minister of Finance is depriving Canadians of potential jobs and of more secure prospects for defeating inflation, with the chance of real gain and wealth for all.

In postponing the removal of controls until 1978, when the minister himself admits that they could be removed now, he is adding to uncertainties about the economic future for both labour and business. If economic conditions are favourable to the ending of controls, there is little reason to prolong the dislocations which an extended controls program brings. Is it just a coincidence that the end of controls in 1978 will coincide with the year of a likely federal election?

Most economists agree that our economy urgently needs a tax cut to restore growth and to create jobs. Progressive Conservatives have argued for reduced taxes since May of last year, and the need is now critical. Instead of responding to economic conditions through a display of leadership, the minister was vague about the date of the budget until a few days ago. The fact is that it will take six to nine months before the effect of a tax cut begins to turn the economy around. To avert tragic levels of unemployment this fall, tax cuts should have occured this past fall. But the Minister of Finance did not have the foresight to make those cuts. Even if there is a stimulative budget on March 31, the good effects will not be felt until 1978. Meanwhile, according to the NDP's figures, some one million Canadians remain unemployed and the economy stagnant. Is it a coincidence, Mr. Speaker, that the minister has deliberately delayed the good economic news until an election year?

If I may deal with the third part of the motion, which refers to assisting urban communities financially to ensure an immediate expansion of municipal capital works projects, including rapid transit, during the 1974 election campaign the Liberal administration, when it was on the hustings, promised $290 million to municipalities for rapid transit. It is now reneging on its promise. I think it is imperative that there be this expenditure on rapid transit. Failure to implement this promise is causing disastrous effects on municipal planning in areas like Edmonton. Rapid transit would relieve congestion in large urban areas. It would stimulate jobs for the unemployed, and the long term saving effect in regard to energy consumption would be felt in such areas.

Again I ask, what is the Liberal government doing in this regard? Absolutely nothing. Now is the time to implement measures to ensure the availability of rapid transit. This administration promised aid to rapid transit in 1974 to the tune of some $290 million; to date this promise has not been kept. Had we in the Conservative party promised aid to rapid transit in that amount during the 1974 election campaign I am sure it would have soon been implemented. It appears to me that this administration is inclined to flip flop frequently. All one needs to do is to look at what members opposite said about wage and price controls which we proposed during the 1974 election campaign. They stated that they would not work. We were condemned by our Liberal opponents.

Mr. Alexander: They were less than honest.

[Mr. Elzinga.]

Mr. Broadbent: They were right.

Mr. Elzinga: In 1972 exactly the same thing happened. In that campaign we said we would index personal income taxes. We proposed modest increases for pensioners. Hon. members opposite did not like the idea of a modest increase for pensioners, yet immediately after forming a minority government they implemented what they had been campaigning against. And hon. members opposite wonder why we in the Conservative party are careful about bringing forward our policies. We want to make sure that if our policy is going to be stolen by the present administration it is correctly introduced, so that what the government brings in for the Canadian people is on the right scale.

Another suggestion of mine would be removal of capital gains tax on the farming population. This is one of the few ways in which individuals in rural areas can save for the future. So many of our farming population continue to invest while earning their livelihoods, and when they retire their only source of income is the revenue they receive from the sale of their land.

This capital gains tax also causes difficulties for them in other ways. If a farmer in my area were to sell a piece of property, he would have to pay capital gains tax even in the event that he reinvested in another piece of property. I sincerely hope that the Minister of Finance will take this proposal under serious consideration, as the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Chrétien) said he would when he spoke in this debate on behalf of his colleague.

Another area I wish briefly to cover is the mail carrier service in Canada today. I am extremely pleased that within the constituency of Pembina there is the only area in all of Canada where the freeze on mail carriers was broken. For this I have to thank the then postmaster general, Bryce Mackasey, who gave us an additional five mail carriers for the residents of Mill Woods. There are other areas in Edmonton which deserve to have what Treasury Board term an essential service. All residents of Canada pay the same taxes according to their incomes, yet they do not receive the same services if they do not have available to them mail carrier service. As I said earlier, mail carrier service is termed an essential service by Treasury Board, yet this administration has seen fit to discriminate against a certain segment of our society in this regard. Let us hope that in the coming budget the Minister of Finance and the Postmaster General (Mr. Blais) will make funds available to service all areas equally with mail carriers.

It is also interesting to note my good friend from Edmonton Centre recently sent out a questionnaire to his constituents asking them to share with him their various problems. On practically every second questionnaire returned there was a complaint having to do with the post office. It is interesting to note that the United States runs its post office department in co-operation with the private sector, and their budget has shown a surplus. The NDP, which is so socialistic, should investigate this area, because since the United States has involved the private sector in the operation of its post office, the post office budget of that country has run at a surplus. Previously it had run at a deficit.

● (2040)

I hope the government will give high priority to legislation dealing with budgetary matters. The delay in enacting the May, 1976, budgetary proposals and the 10 per cent surtax announced in December, 1975, caused great uncertainty among taxpayers. Many taxpayers were forced to make decisions before the end of 1976 on the basis of draft legislation which might have been amended before it became law.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That was an example of government bad management.

Mr. Elzinga: I hope the Minister of Finance will abide by the priorities he spoke of when addressing provincial ministers of finance. According to the Globe and Mail of February 2, 1977, the Minister of Finance, speaking to provincial finance ministers during the first day of a two-day federal-provincial meeting, said that the priorities proposed in choosing measures to stimulate the economy are to stimulate investment, to promote further improvement in the balance of payments deficit, to generate downward pressures on prices, and to relieve areas and sectors of high unemployment. I commend the Minister of Finance on those proposals. I only hope that he carries them into effect positively, and will so announce in the budget speech on March 31.

In closing let me again pay tribute to the hon. member for Hamilton West. He began our party's participation in this debate and did an excellent job putting forward our proposals for the forthcoming budget.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is he running for leader?

Mr. Elzinga: I am sure the residents of Hamilton West are proud to have such a capable spokesman representing them.

Mr. Broadbent: You can't make a silk purse from a sow's ear.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You people are just jealous, that's all.

Mr. Elzinga: As a matter of high priority, we shall devise definite policies to bring about an improvement in business confidence, a reduction in unemployment, a reduction in the rate of inflation, an improvement in the return on investment and capital expenditure, and control of public spending, which this government has not seen fit to do.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, to inform him that his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I hope that the hon. member who just resumed his seat did not want more time to speak. I see him shaking his head.

Economic Policy

I enter the debate this evening willingly, to speak on my party's most important motion. It deals with the economic condition of this country and the suffering of our people, suffering brought about because the government has failed to direct the economy adequately. I do not know if I will live long enough to see either a Conservative or Liberal administration in this country plan the economy. Those administrations seem to operate more or less on an ad hoc, day-to-day crisis basis.

When the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Chrétien) spoke this afternoon on my party's motion he went to great lengths pointing out the accomplishments of his government in recent years. The minister is to be congratulated for being able to paint a rosy picture at this time in our economic history when unemployment is higher than it has been at any time since Statistics Canada began compiling unemployment data. If I am not mistaken, more people are unemployed today than were unemployed in the 1930's. All this reminds me of John Steinbeck's "The Grapes of Wrath", only we have no California valleys to which our unemployed can trek in search of work. The government forces them to trek to unemployment insurance offices, to line up, sometimes to complain they are not getting their cheques, although through no fault of their own they are out of work.

The government's record in recent years in providing economic leadership has been totally abysmal. The rate of inflation, as measured by the consumer price index, remains unchanged when the food component over which the AIB has little control is excluded. Today Canadians find themselves basically in the same economic circumstances they were in before the imposition of controls. Really, the only accomplishment of which the government can boast is that, since October, 1975, it has distorted collective bargaining and penalized unfairly some of the organized and most of the unorganized working people of Canada. That is about all it can boast about.

The New Democratic Party suggested as far back as the last budget that the swelling unemployment rate was a major problem to which the government should address itself. The leader of my party stressed in speeches across the country that it is time to quit viewing unemployment as just a statistical problem and to begin dealing with it in human terms. This government simply doesn't understand the misery caused to the one million currently without jobs or under-employed, in the sense that they can only work part-time, perhaps one or two days a week.

The government thinks that by having unemployed workers receive an average of $96 per week from unemployment insurance the problem becomes less serious. The payment is a palliative. If the French monarchy had introduced a program like this in 1789, perhaps it could have averted the revolution. The program is a palliative; it allows people to subsist, and takes away the urge to go to the barricades and tear down our buildings.

The Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) is more interested in spending his time figuring whether 889,000 people are out of jobs, or if the figure really is 1,100,000. But he and his colleagues miss the point, that mentioning various figures will not alleviate the plight of people out of work.

Mr. Broadbent: Right.

Mr. Blackburn: The Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) has now said that he will bring down a budget at the end of this month. Although I do not know what the budget will include, I can say one thing. Certainly no budgetary measures to be introduced on March 31 will have any effect on people now unemployed. As the Minister of Finance well knows, budgetary measures can take between six months and one year to have impact on the economy. That means that we could wait for the spring of 1978 to see a downturn in unemployment rates. Of course what will happen depends on specific measures announced in the March 31 budget, but judging from past experience it is safe to conclude that not much can be expected from this government. It is always a few months late. It starts planning in March to relieve winter unemployment. Really, it just makes no sense. Its actions escape logic. The government has consistently paid lip service to creating jobs for Canadians; as we have seen, its achievements to date have been nil.

I will recall the May budget of last year when the finance minister said that the Canadian economy will generate more than 250,000 new jobs "this year". Previous ministers of finance used that kind of rhetoric. Creating 250,000 new jobs each year sounds noble enough, until you remember that in the past three years the labour force has grown at well over 300,000 people a year.

With respect to employment measures, the Minister of Finance in the last budget did not mention any moves the government would take to reduce the jobless rate. When I spoke in the last budget debate I said, if I may quote myself, that this government is resigned to going through the rest of this year with unemployment at about 7 per cent of the labour force. Obviously, I was mistaken. We now know that the government is resigned to 8 per cent unemployment, and next year the figure could be higher.

The main features of last May's budget were measures to increase the qualifying period for those on unemployment insurance. This is typical of the kind of economic leadership we have been getting from the government. Each time the unemployment rate goes up, the government toughens the Unemployment Insurance Act. The government believes that the number of claimants on unemployment insurance should remain static, regardless of what the actual unemployment rate is. Successive ministers of manpower and immigration have been heavily influenced by those in the country who see the increased costs of unemployment insurance in terms of more people ripping the system off. These people fail to realize that increased jobless figures will naturally inflate the cost of providing benefits to the unemployed. This is something I do not believe I have ever heard the minister say. I do not think he has the courage to say that.

Recent press reports have suggested that certain corporate leaders have asked the Minister of Finance to decrease corporate taxes as a measure to stimulate the economy. I only hope that this approach is rejected by the Minister of Finance. Past budgets should have convinced him once and for all that these types of measures have had a spectacular lack of success.

A former member of the Liberal cabinet, Mr. Eric Kierans, said last September that he doubted any nation in the world has given its corporate one thousand persons or industries a more handsome gift package of subsidies, tax allowances, two-years write-offs, cheap loans and the like than our present government. In view of this, and in view of the fact that past reductions in corporate taxes have done little to increase employment, the Minister of Finance should reject these proposals outright.

As I mentioned, previous actions by the government give little hope that any future actions taken by it will resolve some of our economic difficulties.

The New Democratic Party has laid down certain proposals which would lead to full employment. We know that this would not happen overnight, and we admit that, but at least we know that those proposals would lead to full employment. We know this objective of providing a job for each man and woman who wants one is not an objective of the government. The present economic situation attests to that. At the same time we know that the government does not have as one of its objectives the reduction of the inequality which exists in this country.

Figures on income redistribution released by Statistics Canada and published in the Globe and Mail on February 22 show that the poorest fifth of families received 7.1 per cent of after-tax income compared with 37 per cent for those in the top 20 per cent of income earners. The figures show that there has been little improvement in the inequality of income distribution during the past decade, despite all the programs of the government. The lack of economic leadership in Canada has left the poor in exactly the same position they were in ten years ago.

Mr. Broadbent: Marginally worse.

Mr. Blackburn: And as my leader, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), says, marginally worse. Many people are seriously questioning why, in a country as rich as ours, the unemployment rate is 8 per cent, and why no real efforts have been made to redistribute income. The simplest answer, to my mind, is that the present system confers many benefits upon a small segment of Canadian society.

With respect to unemployment, Robert Lekachman, a professor of economics at the City University of New York, said in a recent article in Harper's magazine that, and I quote:

> . . . full employment is the most efficient agent of equitable income redistribution which is at all politically feasible.

It is for this reason that vested interest groups would prefer to have fairly high unemployment levels. Lekachman further stated:

During periods of high unemployment wages tend to stabilize or remain low and people, scared of losing their jobs, gripe less and even work harder.

Professor Lekachman continued:

During high unemployment periods factory and office workers, alert to potential lay-offs and plant shutdowns, are unlikely to nag unions to make work more interesting and less menacing to health and personal safety.

Professor Lekachman went on to say:

. . . the hunger of communities and regions for jobs and tax revenues has allowed large corporations to extort an endless assortment of valuable concessions either as blackmail to keep existing installations or bribes to lure new ones. Full employment, on the other hand would bring into the labour force men and women who now struggle on welfare and unemployment insurance. Full employment would push wages up for those who are now making less than is required to live on.

What Professor Lekachman was saying was that when there are high rates of unemployment it is beneficial to the employer because he can trade one worker off against another. That is a very important aspect of our economic system today with respect to employment and unemployment.

Professor Lekachman said that a long spell of full employment would substantially narrow existing differentials. The article went on to say that this is unlikely to occur, however, because, and I quote:

. . . These repercussions are severe enough to alarm gentlemen in their clubs and boardrooms.

This particular economist also had something to say about the nation—which this government accepts—that societies must choose between inflation and unemployment. Professor Lekachman destroyed the myth that there has to be a trade-off between employment and the price level. The Phillips curve—familiar to all economists—says that when there is high unemployment it is usually accompanied by low inflation, and conversely, when there is high inflation, unemployment is low. As we have seen in recent years, this is simply not the case any more. Our present rates of inflation and unemployment are both high, yet the Minister of Finance still carries on as though the Phillips curve is theoretically sound.

"Stagflation" is created mainly as a result of the concentration of market power in our society. Here again the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) acknowledged the effects of the concentration of power during his celebrated discussion two years ago, but to date he has done nothing to curb this concentration of power.

Full employment can be achieved without inflation provided effective and selective price controls can be administered. As we have seen, the government is committed to neither. That is why my party introduced this motion, and that is why I am speaking tonight.

I want to make just one or two more remarks before my time runs out. I assume that most hon. members, as I do, call back at night constituents who telephone their constituency offices. Tonight I telephoned a constituent whose wife works in a garment factory in my city of Brantford. Believe it or not, if an electric, automatic or mechanical needle goes through a finger or pierces a bone, the injured person cannot leave the factory for doctor's assistance until the end of his or her particular shift.

I was astounded when the person who telephoned me told me that if these employees want to get a glass of water, they have to pay five cents for a styrofoam cup into which to put the water. I wonder how many hon. members would say nothing if every time they went out to the opposition lobby or the government lobby to get a cup of coffee they had to pay five cents. Even on our earnings I wonder what they would say. Hon. members can imagine what these people think when they want a glass of water. I am not going to mention the plant, and I am certainly not going to mention the employee because she would be very conveniently laid off at the end of the week if I did. However, this astounded me.

Why is it then, we ask ourselves, that some people do not want to work in some jobs when they have to pay a lousy five cents just to buy a styrofoam cup so they can get a glass of water? This is the kind of thing we have to clear up.

I support the motion. The government will probably come up with a few goodies on March 31. I understand there is some movement afoot to put on a full scale TV extravaganza so that the minister, with his few little goodies, can go across the nation into everybody's living room, and people will think it is just great, they are televising the debates in the House.

Let me tell you one thing. Budget debates come, budget debates go, and today we have still—in fact I should not say "still"—we have more than one million Canadians out of work.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I know honourable members will agree with me that housing is a social concern, and that the need of all Canadians for affordable housing suited to their needs is a subject which is most appropriate on an opposition day. I want to thank members of the NDP for bringing this subject up because it gives me occasion to bring forth, as parliamentary secretary, some of the things which the department has been doing.

[Translation]

I think that one of the important roles of the government in the housing sector is the help they can provide to influence the production and the distribution of housing units according to the needs. This was one of the great priorities of the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs last year. I think we were quite successful in shifting the production of housing from high-cost to moderate- or medium-cost units. We tried in particular to stimulate the construction of moderate-cost housing.

We have been trying to convey this message for over a year at the federal level. We forecast that we would have a demand-oriented market and that purchasers would be interested in moderate-cost housing. We had warned the residential construction people concerned that those who would do business would be precisely those who would sharpen their pencils and start producing for the market of moderate-cost housing.

We told anyone interested that federal support was concentrated on good housing at moderate prices, and this is where we operated, Mr. Speaker, namely in the area of the Assisted Home Ownership Program.

[English]

Although our activities in the housing field have been designed primarily to ensure that Canadians remain among the best-housed people in the world, we cannot overlook the stimulus effect of new construction on the economy of the country, and on employment, as I shall outline in a few moments.

Hon. members will recall that in November of 1975 the minister responsible for housing at that time, the present Minister of National Defence (Mr. Danson), introduced a series of measures designed to meet the demand for more affordable housing and to assure an adequate level of new production. These measures were incorporated in a four-year strategy known as the Federal Housing Action Program. We set a target of one million new homes to be produced by the end of 1979, to fill an estimated need based on known demographic and other factors.

The first year of the program proved to be successful even beyond our expectations. We had set a target for 235,000 starts, and the industry, responding in important measure to the stimulus of the Federal Housing Action Program, produced more than 273,000 starts—a volume that was greater than during any other year in the country's history.

One of the most important features of these initiatives is the revised Assisted Home Ownership Program, better known as AHOP. In effect AHOP assists home buyers by reducing the initial effective interest rate to eight per cent, as long as the new dwelling falls within established maximum price ceilings. These maximums naturally vary from region to region to stay in line with local market conditions for modest housing.

AHOP harnesses private capital in that first mortgage loans are made by approved lenders at market rates. Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation then provides an interest-reducing loan, in the form of a second mortgage, which results in an effective initial mortgage rate of 8 per cent. This rate graduates upward to market rates during a five-year period.

It is important to keep in mind that for the first five years of this mortgage-reducing loan, interest does not accrue. Interest starts in the sixth year, and the repayments on the loan begin the seventh year. This unique procedure allows a Canadian to buy a new home on the basis of future income growth, which is of obvious importance at a time when house prices have escalated so rapidly.

There were many aspects of last year's housing production that provide encouraging signs for the future, and the results of AHOP were among them. The home buyer interest in AHOP confirmed our belief that people want good, moderately priced housing, and will buy it when it is made available.

[Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier).]

Starts under AHOP went beyond expectations, with some 37,000 approvals. Most significantly, about 60 per cent of the 64,000 NHA-approved loans for new home ownership were for units below the AHOP price limits and therefore qualified for the interest-reducing loan.

We were most pleased that we were able to announce yesterday that the Ontario Home Ownership Made Easy Plan has been integrated into AHOP to offer increased financial assistance to a wider range of lower income Ontario home buyers.

Now, in Ontario, qualified purchasers who take the maximum AHOP federal assistance—which is the interest-reducing loan plus a subsidy of $750 in the first year of ownership—may now apply for an additional grant of up to $750 from the province. This integrated plan will reduce minimum annual income requirements for qualified Ontario purchasers by as much as $2,500 below existing levels.

Another feature of the federal action program is the Assisted Rental Program, which is also known by its initials—ARP—which was introduced to encourage the production of moderate cost rental accommodation.

As hon. members well know, for some time there has been a serious shortage of affordable rental accommodation in most urban areas of Canada, and rental units produced in recent years have not been sufficient to ease the shortage. At the end of last year, the vacancy rate in Canadian urban areas stood at a very tight 1.3 per cent.

CMHC assistance under ARP is designed to ease the builders' cash flow problems during the early years and provide a reasonable return on equity so they will be encouraged to produce more badly needed apartment accommodation.

The results under the first year of ARP operation was an increase of 15 per cent in rental production over the previous year, to 88,600 apartment units. We expect to see more rental construction this year, now that builders are aware that they can realize a fair return from rental units put up with the assistance of ARP. We anticipate an easing in the rental vacancy rate this year, partly because of an expected increase in apartment construction, and for another reason as well.

Residential building activity was at a high level as we turned into 1977 and, in addition, the volume of approvals for new construction towards the end of the year was at an almost unprecedented level. Inventories of newly completed units will therefore be high during most of 1977, and much of it will be in multiple unit dwellings.

At the end of January, for example, there were about 19,000 newly completed but unoccupied housing units in Canada. More than 11,000 of these were multiple-unit dwellings.

A large number of these multiple-unit dwellings—about 60 per cent—will be for sale as condominiums, and the rest will be for rental, but in either case, the primary market will be people who are now renting accommodation. This is expected to free a significant number of rental units in urban centres, and assist in easing the vacancy rate.

Although we tend to emphasize the need for new housing, which is obviously our first consideration, we cannot overlook the continuing importance of conserving present stock—particularly in the older areas of our towns and cities. A home that is preserved and restored, and given at least an extra 15 years of life, is just as useful as a new home, although it will not show up in the statistics on starts. I can recall a favourite expression of the former minister of urban affairs. When he used to attend our briefings he would come in and say, "A save is a start". I think that is a pretty good cliché.

The Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program—better known as RRAP—provides financial assistance for the restoration and repair of dwellings in designated areas. Last year the popularity of this program went far beyond our expectations. We had budgeted for $60 million for RRAP—four times the budget amount of the previous year—and even then we began to run out of money in September. More funds were channelled into the program to meet immediate requirements. For this year a total of $107 million is available for RRAP, which should go a long way toward meeting requirements.

I am pleased at the enthusiasm shown for this program, because in cities and towns across Canada there are many fine homes that can readily be preserved. By doing so, we not only retain needed housing stock, but help preserve the character and dignity of older areas in our cities and towns.

RRAP in itself creates excellent employment opportunities, as hon. members can realize when they consider that about 15,700 houses were rehabilitated under this program last year, thereby creating a good demand for local trades and encouraging seasonal employment. This year we expect an additional 22,500 housing units will be restored under RRAP, providing even more employment opportunities.

Federal housing activities administered through CMHC cover an extremely wide territory. I will not take the time of hon. members to go into further detail on individual programs, but I think it is important in the context of employment creation to realize that residential construction creates jobs directly, through manpower needed in the building trades, but indirectly as well, through businesses that cater to homeowners, such as appliances and furnishings. We cannot overlook, either, the manpower needs of firms that provide the infrastructure, building the sewers, the drains, and filling other servicing requirements.

I have spoken today on only a few of the recent initiatives of the federal government in the housing field, but I have deliberately not touched on one of the most important mandates of CMHC, which is to provide suitable housing for people who require the most help in obtaining shelter, the poor, the sick, the elderly, and others who cannot sustain themselves without assistance. All hon. members are so familiar with the programs that provide assisted housing—directly and in co-operation with provinces, municipalities and non-profit organizations—that they do not need to be reminded of our extensive activities in this field.

I should like to mention, though, that the thrust of the federal housing action program was to utilize private capital rather than taxpayers' dollars in the production of residential housing, allowing public resources to be used directly on behalf of Canadians in greatest need, those who are socially and economically deprived.

The federal initiatives in housing have had a significant impact on employment, an impact that cannot be measured in its entirety because it reaches into so many fields. We do know, however, that the federal housing action program meant at least 35,000 additional jobs in Canada last year—jobs that would not otherwise have existed in residential construction and in all of the businesses and industries affected by housing. Further, it is estimated that the four-year program will involve more than one million man-years of employment.

I do not think there can be any doubt, Mr. Speaker, that federal initiatives in the housing field are not only meeting the real needs of Canadians for good, affordable housing, but continue to create a large volume of productive jobs while, in general, adding stimulus to the economy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, I rise to participate in this debate tonight and will centre my remarks around the second section of the motion before us which refers to reducing taxes for middle and low income earners. The people who fall in that category as much as any other class of our society are the farmers of Canada. The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) has set out the position of this party very clearly and has mentioned our hopes for what will be contained in the budget of March 31. I wish to elaborate on only one point, the capital gains tax as it relates to the farming community.

Time and again I have put forward proposals to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) that would help alleviate the crippling effect of the capital gains tax on farmers. This has come into sharp focus in the riding I represent and in the regional municipality of Haldimand-Norfolk. The reason is that there has been a large land assembly program undertaken by the provincial government which has purchased sites for a satellite city in the former township of Townsend and in the former township of South Cayuga.

In addition, farm land has been taken over by three important industries which have placed themselves in the centre of a rural farming community. Stelco is moving its plant from Hamilton to the south shore of Lake Erie; adjacent to that Texaco is building its largest oil refinery in North America, and Ontario Hydro already has the largest thermal station in Canada located in this area. As a result there has been a great demand for land, and thousands upon thousands of acres of farm land have been sold. At this point farmers came to the full realization of the crippling effect of the capital gains tax.

Let me show by actual example how this works. The selling price per acre of farm land in the general area I speak of was $2,000. The V-day value set by the auditors or the land appraisers of the Department of National Revenue was $300 per acre. That means a total capital gain of $1,700 per acre, half of which, $850, is taxable. The average size of a farm is 200 acres so that means a capital gain of $170,000. If we take a farmer who makes about $10,000 a year and add that, we are talking about a taxable income of $180,000. The rate of tax will then be determined by the tax bracket which is appropriate. The result is devastating, and dozens and dozens of farmers have come begging for advice on how to survive.

The problem usually arises with the determination of a fair V-day value. It is determined largely by the appraiser sent by the Department of National Revenue, and unfortunately most of them have learned their jobs from textbooks and have no farming experience or background. They do not know the real cost of operating a farm, or what is the value of the land. If the farmer had foresight he had the land valued before December 1, 1971, so he knows what the V-day value is—providing the land appraiser he hired is acceptable to the Department of National Revenue. If he and the department cannot agree, he can approach the tax appeal court—where he is confronted with the same land appraisers hired by the Department of National Revenue. Finally he can go to the law courts, and of course this costs money. In my area some farmers band together and share the legal costs of a test case on the capital gains tax.

What options are open to the farmer faced with this problem? If he is on the edge of retirement or can retire and sell his farm he looks to the proceeds as his retirement pension. It is traditional in farming circles for the proceeds of the sale of the farm to provide the retirement pension or superannuation for the farmer. Over the years he has not had sufficient income to make an annual contribution to a pension fund. Therefore he follows the course I have just mentioned. Every cent earned by the farmer has gone toward improving his farm for the time when he will sell it.

What other option is open to him? He can sell the farm, as I suggested, and set up a pension fund. He has no opportunity to establish a registered retirement savings plan in addition to the one I mentioned. He has to struggle for efficiency in order to survive in this day of rising input costs for farmers. He takes all his profit, loans and mortgages in order to modernize his farm buildings and buy equipment, trying to keep pace with rising farm costs and the need to be more and more efficient in order to survive. Everything he has is tied up in his farm.

The capital gains tax is enforced in the case I mentioned and the figures I quoted. It leaves the farmer with no pension except the paltry benefits under the Canada Pension Plan. This is especially true if he has used the proceeds of the sale to purchase another house in which to live out his retirement. It is a sad situation.

One option open is to retire. If he is young, middle-aged or less, and wants to buy another farm, what happens with the capital gains tax? He may not really want to retire or sell his farm but is forced into it by the threat of expropriation. He would rather stay where he has farmed all of his life. Being forced to sell, he expects to use the proceeds of the sale to pay for a new farm and relocate there. Again his hopes are dashed for the reasons I have mentioned.

Capital gains goes to our revenue offices across the country. The cost of relocation requires a heavy mortgage again. What really happens is that at middle age or later he has to start again to build up a farm. It is grossly unfair.

So much for the problem, what about the solution? One answer, and I proposed this many times to the Minister of Finance, is that there be a once in a lifetime exemption for the sale of a family farm without attracting capital gains tax.

In 1970 and 1971 when the tax reform legislation was being debated in this House of Commons, we in this party argued forcibly and logically that farms be exempt, period. The government was adamant, saying they must be taxable for capital gains. It continues to hold that position to this day. It did make one small concession. The tax department agreed that a sale of a farm from father to son, where the farm would continue to be operated as a viable farm enterprise, would be exempt.

I personally made the proposal that there be a once in a lifetime exemption on the sale of a family farm. I would include in that an incorporated farm enterprise where the holders of the shares of this company are father, son, mother and other members of the family. This would permit retirement with dignity on a pension the farmer has paid for by the sweat of his brow. It would also permit relocation if that were desired.

The Canadian Federation of Agriculture made a submission to the Minister of Finance in February of this year. On page six, item two, they underline the point I have been making. They say, and I quote:

> The objective of improvement of farm productivity, rationalization of land use, and preservation of the family farm structure of enterprise are very ill-served by the present law which, except in the case of involuntary sale as in expropriation, require that a farmer realize and pay tax on capital gains if he wishes to sell assets such as a portion of his farm to buy another better located parcel, or to intensify his enterprise by making investments in buildings for livestock production on the remaining portion of his land.

This is a very important matter. Cases have been brought to our attention where two farmers are practically unable to make an exchange of land even though both would benefit because the exchange would trigger the capital gains tax which neither should have to pay on such a transaction. Sometimes the exchange does not take place and one or both of the farmers leave the business. This results in the encouragement of large land holdings by those better able to purchase the land.

The second problem I want to draw to the attention of the minister is the inflation factor which should be used in calculating capital gains from V-Day value up to the date of the sale. The real value of the property has not increased to the amount that I mentioned in my example, $170,000. The increase is largely due to inflated land costs, particularly in the area I represent, and I believe this holds true all across this country. Some consideration should be given to the inflation factor so that a percentage could be deducted for that reason.

The increase in capital gains is largely illusory. I again refer to the submission which I quoted a few moments ago. I quote from page seven, item three:

> It is of course as clear as crystal that in an inflationary economy some or all of capital gains represent illusory gains in real terms because of the declining real value of money. It continues to be the policy of the federation that the taxation of such illusory gains is confiscatory and should not be permitted. This position we would note is being increasingly supported by the business community, and recently by the Joint Taxation Committee of the Canadian Bar Association and the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants.

That is a very reasonable suggestion. The Minister of Finance would do well to take heed.

The third proposal would be an assignment of land value each year into a registered retirement savings plan. Rather than make a parallel explanation, I will simply quote again the brief by the CFA, pages seven and eight, item four. This would give the farmer an opportunity to build up a registered retirement savings plan which, as I said a few moments ago, is most difficult for him to do under present conditions. I quote:

> In general of course when a taxpayer invests in a retirement savings plan he has to save out of his income sufficient money to make that investment. This is very advantageous from an income tax point of view, and most taxpayers are not too severely restricted in the sort of investment that they may choose to make. A farmer, however, is typically under constant pressure to make additional investment in his farm to maintain its technological efficiency and economic viability. This severely limits the ability of farmers to take advantage of the tax deferral benefits of investment in registered retirement savings plans, and also reduces the amount he may make available from his income for investment, because it must be an after-tax amount.
> We would propose that to correct this situation a special provision be made that would permit the farmer to obtain tax deferral, if he wished to do so, by assigning part of the value of his land each year (up to $5,500) to a registered retirement savings plan account. The existence of the deferred tax obligation involved could be registered as a lien on the land so that it could not be sold or transferred without automatic notice to the tax authorities.

● (2130)

> We would propose that the value of the RRSP account would at any time be simply the aggregate of the amounts of money assigned to that account, up to $5,500 per year, so that for example if $5,500 were assigned for 10 years the value of the farmer's retirement plan would be $55,000 and would be taxable as income if realized unless invested in an annuity or the amount invested in another plan. Under such an arrangement we would see no need for a procedure to determine if the amounts credited to the plan were actually invested in the farm enterprise. It should be provided that the farmer could at any time, if funds became available to him to do so, reduce or dissolve the special RRSP account by investing part of the amounts in that account into another RRSP. In the event of the death of the farmer, the RRSP could be inherited by the spouse, or if by others would become payable.
> It would be our expectation that such a provision would be used sparingly by farmers, in fact, but that it would be exceedingly useful to some—especially young farmers with heavy investment requirements.

This outlines a proposal to give the farmer the benefit of an RRSP which he does not presently enjoy.

One other item I should like to draw to the minister's attention has to do with the capital gains tax especially as it affects farmers who sell their quotas or, in my area, where they grow tobacco, their marketing board rights on tobacco land. In the Income Tax Act this is discussed in what is referred to as the "nothing section". But when the rights are sold they become really "something" in the way they attract capital gains tax.

I am suggesting to the minister that consideration be given to permitting a farmer to use the income received from the sale of these quotas or rights to purchase equipment to serve him in a new enterprise on his farm. For example, instead of growing tobacco or shipping milk, he might grow corn. The proceeds from the sale of the quota could be used, in that case, to buy storage equipment, drying equipment, combines and so on. Thus he would be able to make use of the roll-over provisions of the act. At present he cannot do so, and I suggest to the minister that the hon. gentleman find ways of making this possible.

In conclusion I would point out that the budget coming up on March 31 offers the Minister of Finance an excellent opportunity to give effect to some of the proposals I have made from time to time in the House, and which I am making again tonight.

I might add that what I have said about the family farm applies equally to small businesses operated by a family. The small businessman plows back his earnings into his business in the form of new equipment, the remodelling of his shop or store, and when the time comes for him to retire or sell his business, he too hopes to use the proceeds by way of a retirement pension. The capital gains tax deprives him in the same manner of the support in his retirement he might otherwise have enjoyed. I respectfully suggest that both for the farm community and the small businessman the minister should provide some relief in his upcoming budget.

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure to take part in this debate. I have studied the motion a number of times in the past hour. It is a perfect example of the pious, self-righteous, self-serving motions we have come to expect over the years from the New Democratic Party, a party which is long on ideas, long on ideals, but which closes it eyes to political practibility, the difficulty of implementing good ideas within economic constraints.

Much has been said this evening about the performance of the Canadian government in managing the Canadian economy. I think I can say to those assembled here tonight that the government has done an incredible job in managing the economy over the difficult period we have been through in the last few years. Throughout industrialized nations we have seen in the last few years an absolute stagnation if not a decline in their gross national products. Our own has been nothing to crow about, but when we look at the figure in narrow terms we are bound to consider the growth, or lack of growth, of the Canadian economy in relation to the performance in other countries around the world. I say the government has done a first rate job and it puzzles me why the opposition cannot admit that it has done an incredible job in managing the economy.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Tell us about urban transit.

Mr. Collenette: The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn) wants to hear more about urban transit.

Obviously he did not get enough out of the speeches made by myself, my hon. friend, the member for Halton (Mr. Philbrook), the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Watson), and the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis), who spoke firmly in support of some form of assistance, some way of discharging our obligations undertaken in the 1974 election campaign.

Mr. Leggatt: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Collenette: The other day the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) asked me to permit a question. I said in view of the hour we could discuss the matter privately. We met in the elevator in the Confederation Building and had a nice chat. I am sure this could be the avenue for our discussion after the debate closes tonight.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I know where he stands. I want to know where you stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. The hon. member for York East (Mr. Collenette) has the floor.

Mr. Collenette: Perhaps I should not pay so much attention to the ribald comments from the other side. At any rate, if I have time I will return to the subject of transit aid, though I hardly think it bears repetition in view of the statements made by my hon. friends and myself in the past week.

One of the means the government has employed to cushion the blows of inflation, to restrict the harm done by the recession of the last few years, is that of indexing. The hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga), who is over there by the curtains, takes a somewhat resentful attitude to this on the ground that it was the Conservative party who put forward this idea. That is fine. There is nothing wrong in a good idea being implemented if it finds support among Canadians and contributes to the well-being of the country. Are members on the other side so petty that they would take so selfish a position?

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) is bereft of any kind of policy statement. Now we can see how this attitude on the other side has developed. They are sore because a good idea was implemented. Canadians will ask themselves: is this the kind of party to which we ought to entrust the government of the country? I would say not. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has been around for many years and has been associated with efforts to promote the cause of old age pensioners, medicare, good unemployment insurance legislation, a non-discriminatory immigration bill, and so on. I do not hear him bemoaning the fact that the Liberal government which has instituted so many of these progressive policies got its ideas originally after some prompting from members of his party. They are grateful, I am sure, that they were put into legislative form by the Liberal government for the benefit of all Canadians.

Ideals are fine. Ideas are fine. But they constitute only part of the political process. It is not good enough to have ideals and ideas without a vehicle for their practical application. In this respect I suggest that the Liberal party is a model, not only for this country but a model for parties in other democratic countries, on the basis of its performance over the past year or so. We have ideas and ideals. We have been flexible. We listen to public opinion. We put these into legislative form for the benefit of all Canadians, so there must be something right about that approach because we have been returned many times to give leadership to the nation.

To demonstrate my very impartial and gentle nature, I want to give the hon. member for New Westminster a chance to get on the record tonight. After all, this motion was put forward by his party. But before I sit down I want to talk about the unemployment statistics which have been bandied about in this House.

In the last month the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), the leader of the NDP, has been talking about the scandalously high unemployment which is verging on 10 per cent—the hidden unemployment. I am not debunking the fact that we do have a serious unemployment problem in this country, but we should analyse statistics properly. Statistics can be manipulated for one's own ends. The Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) has been very effective, I think, in criticizing the approach of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby. The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) has left the Chamber now; I guess he did not want to stay for the rest of the debate.

Mr. Paproski: He is behind the curtains.

Mr. Collenette: He is behind the curtains. He has charged that there is hanky-panky with unemployment statistics. The only hanky-panky that I have seen any evidence of is the tactics which have been used by the Official Opposition in this Chamber, day after day, and month after month, since my election here in 1974.

Mr. Alkenbrack: One million unemployed.

Mr. Collenette: Someone says there are one million unemployed. There are different kinds of unemployment. For example, there is selective unemployment. There are people who do not particularly want to move to western Canada, for one reason or another, where there are plenty of jobs.

Mr. Andre: We call them Liberals.

Mr. Collenette: I am glad to see the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) in such fine form this evening. It is nice to have him back and to have the benefit of his articulate comments. As I was saying, there are different kinds of unemployment. Take, for example, someone who leaves school, who lives in Thunder Bay or Sault Ste. Marie, who gets a job 50 miles away in a less popular part of the country, and who does not want to move. He is counted as unemployed.

Then there are many women in our work force who work not simply for economic reasons, though the economic benefit is appreciated, but also for self-fulfilment. The families of these women do not need a second income, but if they are laid off or they choose to leave their job they are designated as looking for work and become part of the unemployment statistics.

I should like to pay particular tribute to a very incisive analysis of this particular problem—the absolute manipulation and distortion of unemployment statistics by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby—by Mr. Jack MacArthur, the business editor of the Toronto Star. Those of us who represent Toronto ridings have not been too kindly dealt with during the past few years by the Toronto Star, and sometimes I shudder when I open the editorial pages. Mr. MacArthur is not a person who is a defender of the government in the absolute sense, but he is a very discriminating and perceptive analyst and journalist who criticizes where necessary and gives credit where necessary. I would advise members on the other side, especially those in the NDP, to read his article which appeared in the Toronto Star for February 10 last in which he talks about high unemployment and low unemployment being the same thing.

Paragraph three of the motion before us asks the federal government to assist urban communities financially to ensure an immediate expansion of municipal capital works projects, including rapid transit. My views on rapid transit are pretty well known. This kind of clause is very similar to one introduced in the House by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), I think before Christmas. It is the old chestnut that keeps coming up, namely, that the federal government should forgo the federal sales tax on municipal purchases, the basic argument being that this is a tax upon a tax. That may well be so, and in participating in debate on the hon. member's motion I gave him credit for bringing this point to our attention.

There are a number of anomalies and problems with municipal financing. In the province of Ontario the provincial government has appointed a commission, under Mr. Willis Blair, a former mayor in part of my constituency, to look into the property tax base. Mr. Blair is suggesting, among other things, that federal and provincial buildings—I am not sure whether he mentioned the churches, but buildings that do not pay taxes—should be taxed to increase municipal revenue. Like the motion of the hon. member for Vegreville, this is again a half-hearted, piecemeal approach.

Any fundamental discussion of federal assistance for municipalities has to be organized within the context of the constitution of this country. We have to redraw provincial and federal responsibilities. We have to rethink our financing. Until we are prepared to do that, and until the provinces are prepared to sit down with the federal government and talk about overlapping jurisdictions and more equitable sharing of revenues, I do not think we should be jumping in with one foot. We should think out the whole problem very seriously.

I did promise that I would sit down and give the hon. member for New Westminster an opportunity to say his piece. I see there are ten minutes left and I should just like to reiterate some of the comments I made on urban transit. It may be argued, and it is argued by my colleague for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan), that the federal government has no constitutional jurisdiction to fund urban transit systems. This is a particular point of view. I do not believe that this is a fiat which is written in tablet form or inscribed in stone for all time. This is a matter that should be discussed within the confines of a federal-provincial conference on the new constitution.

In 1974 we did make certain promises. If the government is going to have any credibility with people in the urban areas, especially in metropolitan Toronto, which includes an area which I happen to represent, we must at least have some attention paid to partially discharging these promises. We should not have a kind of open-ended program which will drag on for years and years, a cost sharing program like medicare where the federal government writes a blank cheque and the provinces go on spending money ad infinitum. But perhaps we should have a three or five year commitment by the federal government to have money available to encourage municipalities to develop public transit systems.

I am not going into all the arguments in favour of public transit and why it should be encouraged. However, I would agree with the motion in that the government must, in its budget, give some financial commitment and must put in practical form some of the promises that were made in 1974. I realize the problem of financial restraint which the government has. As I said last week, the government has done a very effective job in putting a clamp on the growth of government expenditure, and should be applauded for that.

The second paragraph of the motion speaks of reducing taxes for middle and low income earners. I agree this is a very laudable suggestion and I hope that the Minister of Finance includes it in his remarks on March 31.

The first paragraph of the motion was dealt with very effectively by my colleague, the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), and I do not propose to comment further.

As the House can see from my remarks, the three parts of the motion do not seem to be too unrealistic. However, it is the preamble to this whole discussion which upsets me. As I have said, it gives further evidence of the self-righteous or pious approach which is so typical of the NDP, and is the principal reason that I cannot support the motion in this form.

I have much more to say, but with true parliamentary courtesy I will yield the floor to the hon. member whose party proposed the motion originally.

• (2150)

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for York East (Mr. Collenette) for relinquishing the floor, particularly since I may say some things about which he may not be happy.

Piety is not a quality one should criticize. There is nothing the matter with being pious in this world. Why criticize an NDP motion for being pious, when it is right? That's what counts. Perhaps it is pious; perhaps it is self-righteous. But it is right. There is righteousness in the motion, and piety. What is the matter with either quality? Why did the hon. member criticize the motion and trot out those tired clichés about piety and self-righteousness, without considering that ours has been the only constructive motion for dealing with the economy brought forward in this House? And I am not talking about generalities. Our motion deals specifically with the problems facing the nation.

Mr. MacFarlane: You could say it was bombastic, too.

Mr. Leggatt: The hon. member suggests it is bombastic, too.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Stop talking about Stanley in that way.

Mr. Leggatt: I want to deal with one point with which the hon. member for York East dealt, rapid transit. When we were drafting the motion we thought of the hon. member for York East and of that other hon. member whose riding escapes me.

Mr. Paproski: Halton. "The hon. member for Philbrook."

Mr. Leggatt: We were thinking about the backbench revolt of hon. members opposite. We wanted to help those hon. members to revolt. We were anxious to see independence on the backbenches of the Liberal party, and we said we would give them another opportunity to fight for rapid transit.

Mr. Paproski: They can vote against Bill C-33.

Mr. Leggatt: I will relinquish the floor immediately if the hon. member for York East wants to rise in the House now to say that he will vote against Bill C-33 on second reading. I want to hear that commitment in public, because that commitment counts, not all the other rhetoric one hears in debate. I want to know how the hon. member will vote on Bill C-33. Second, I want to know if, when the government refuses to live up to the promise it made in 1974, he will relinquish his seat and run either for the NDP or the Conservative party in his own riding. If he says that, he will make some impact—

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I cannot leave that assertion unchallenged. In no circumstances ever in my lifetime would I consider running for either of those two parties.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: We wouldn't accept you.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Just for a moment you made us nervous.

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, I consider that as a promise, although it sounded pious and self-righteous. Let me return to the substance of the motion, which deals not only with rapid transit but with housing as well.

As a nation we are short of energy. We are spewing energy into the air every day, wasting it. Surely, considering that one million of our people are unemployed, and six million of our housing units not properly insulated, we could put people to work across the country insulating houses. That program would (a) cut down the waste of energy, and (b) put people to work. The government has made a slight move in that direction, for which we give it credit. It has started an insulating program in Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia. That program must be extended across the country. Many members of this House, no matter where they sit, would support that program. Therefore we urge the government to come forward in the forthcoming budget with a meaningful employment program directly related to problems of energy waste.

Let me now touch on municipal works projects. Frankly, all in this House are sick and tired of make work projects not doing the job. Let me give you an example. We have 145,000 unemployed tradesmen in Canada, or one out of seven, according to latest Statistics Canada figures. Yet through LIP, Canada Works, and Young Canada Works we are creating jobs which those unemployed tradesmen could do. For example, they could rebuild the dock in white Rock. All kinds of projects are going on, and skilled tradesmen are anxiously awaiting for their chance to work on them. But instead of working, many of them are drawing unemployment insurance. That is putting our priorities in the wrong order.

The answer is capital works projects at the municipal level, municipally administered. Both labour and capital ought to be administered municipally, in municipal projects right across Canada. We do not need the involvement of the federal bureaucracy. We could do thousands of things in our communities; the free enterprise sector of our economy has not done them, obviously because there is no profit in them. I do not blame free enterprise; I understand the system. But, as a nation, we could undertake some of these projects.

We could undertake a project in my own riding, for instance, to clean up the fishing bars on the Fraser River. We could pull all of the stumps. We could build tremendous parks all along the Fraser River. That make work project could last for five years. But we do not do this because of ideological shortsightedness, because it is not profitable and because, as I say, free enterprise will not tackle it. Surely the government ought to be active in this area. Its involvement would create enough employment to put a significant dent in our unemployment statistics.

My party is often accused of being anti-business. I tell you that our proposal to reduce taxes for the middle and low income earners would be the best break business in this country could ever get. If accepted, it would increase purchasing power. The little guy would get a break and use his purchasing power to buy what he needs. I hope these appeals are not falling on deaf ears. I am delighted to see the minister present; I know he listens carefully. I understand that we are to see a gun bill very shortly; I hope he is not going to give in to the snipers' lobby. We are not sure. We hope there will be some teeth in the bill.

I want to emphasize how beneficial would be a reduction of taxes at the low end of the income scale. We often wonder how to put purchasing power in the hands of low income people.

The answer is obvious. We have allowed people to deduct their political donations from tax payable. That is great for people interested in politics. Why cannot we do the same for low income families, and allow them to take day care expenses off their tax?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. It being ten o'clock p.m., it is my duty to inform the House that, pursuant to Section 11 of Standing Order 58, the proceedings on the motion have expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. May I inquire of the acting government House leader what business it is planned to call tomorrow?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Old age security.

Mr. MacFarlane: Mr. Speaker, I understand that hon. members opposite who have discussed this matter with the House leaders know that tomorrow we shall consider the Old Age Security Act.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

TRANSPORT—ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY TOLL INCREASES—POSSIBILITY OF COMMITMENT FROM UNITED STATES

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, last Wednesday the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) made a significant statement outside the House concerning the debt attached to the St. Lawrence Seaway. This problem has been before us for some time. With his usual political dexterity the minister landed himself in great difficulty in this House because of his decision to make the gist of his statement outside the House. Be that as it may, hon. members learned the details of the statement, and those details have been the cause of considerable discussion. His statement presented to me at least three major questions which I hope can be answered by the parliamentary secretary tonight.

● (2200)

First, the question that brings us here tonight was asked by me on Thursday, March 3. I asked:

How firm a commitment is there from the United States on the proposed St. Lawrence Seaway toll increases, and where did that commitment come from?

I asked that because the minister in his statement outside the House indicated that the St. Lawrence Seaway tolls would be doubled. The Minister of Transport replied:

Mr. Speaker, as the announcement yesterday indicated, the question of arranging these increases by agreement is a matter of negotiation, so it is not a matter at this point of talking about a commitment.

Apparently the matter had not been raised during the visit of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to Washington to call upon the President of the U.S.A.

We are dealing with a substantial sum, the debt of the Seaway, that is, its capital cost, which is generally considered to be around, $642 million. The interest on that debt alone is considered to be at least $200 million, and some members of the House have alluded to the whole problem as being more than a $1 billion problem. But even taking the figures that have been presented on the more conservative side—if I may use that statement of my colleague, the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall)—it would seem to be at least an $800 million problem.

The Minister of Transport in replying to the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East said:

Mr. Speaker, as far as the debt is concerned, there are two parts to the debt, the accrued interest which it is not intended to treat as a current liability and in due course to remove,

I took from that use of language that he meant that this $200 million, or whatever the accrued interest is deemed to be, is wiped out.

The minister went on to say, as reported at page 3571 of Hansard:

and the balance of the debt, the initial construction cost, which it is intended to convert into equity.

He noted later that it was hoped to realize a modest return on this equity, something in the order of one per cent, which would mean that on the $800 million now owing and not retrieved by the tolls that have been imposed on the operations of the Seaway so far, one could hope to get about $6.4 million a year back. It seems to be a very small return on a substantial amount of money, and of course as somebody said it does not begin to represent a proper return on the amount of money that has been invested by the taxpayers of this country and the taxpayers of the U.S.A. Even doubling the tolls, which seems to be a hefty increase, will not bring about anything that will approach fiscal probity in this particular matter.

The questions I would like to direct to the parliamentary secretary and which will be raised when the department's estimates are before the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications are the following: is this going to be a precedent for all transportation in Canada, that the taxpayers put up all the capital and that the return upon that capital turns out to be a laughable figure? Is this the brave new future for transportation in Canada, when we are faced with some rather large transportation problems?

Since the minister told us that it would be a matter of negotiation and not a matter of commitment from the United States, will the Americans agree to this increase? Will they think it is adequate and just? Will they think it should be more? What will their position be? This seems to me to be a very strange way to carry on a partnership. Admittedly this is a very contentious problem, but it is strange that one side should announce what the solution is going to be, apparently without really having discussed the matter with the other side. As I noted earlier, the minister seemed very firm in his statement to me about the fact that there were going to be negotiations and that there had not been a commitment.

The figures presented to us by the minister on that day after his press conference indicated the nature of the increase on the tolls through the Seaway. I represent a port which has had some fights with the minister over the "at and east" rates on flour and grain shipments. It seems to me, with the St. Lawrence Seaway tolls going up to the level the minister proposes, that what the minister has often called his unit train concept of moving grain from western Canada to Halifax and Saint John for shipment abroad will still not be competitive, all other things being equal.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to refer hon. members to the statement made by the minister on March 2 concerning the situation on the St. Lawrence Seaway. Attached to his press release was a memorandum addressed to all members of parliament and senators concerning a lot of documentation. The minister reminded us of the economic impact of toll increases. I would like to refer to that documentation which was distributed to all members of parliament and senators at that time concerning this important sector.

I wish to refer to the statement made by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) and Mr. Paul Normandeau, President of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, concerning the steps which will be taken to restore the Seaway to financial health. They said that parliament is being asked to convert to equity, to be held by the federal government as an investment, the $625 million debt for loans acquired to construct the Montreal-Lake Ontario section and to upgrade the Welland Canal.

I would like to mention that 13 of the 15 locks along the Montreal-Lake Ontario section and Welland Canal are owned and operated by Canada, and any operating deficit picked up by the federal government is equivalent to subsidizing the United States, and I think hon. members agreed that we had to revise this situation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the parliamentary secretary, but his time has expired.

AIRPORTS—PICKERING—GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS WITH REGARD TO CONSTRUCTION—POSSIBILITY OF DIVERTING FUNDS TO AID COMMUTERS

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, the question raised tonight in the adjournment debate by myself follows at least 90 oral questions which have been directed to the government concerning the proposed Pickering airport. We have pressed for an answer many times. I myself have put more than 20 questions on this matter. The government has consistently evaded any attempt to take a clear stand or view with respect to this ill-conceived project. The latest round of questions I had with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) is no exception.

On February 14 I asked the minister whether, in light of the fact that there has been little or no growth in air traffic at Toronto's Malton airport, the government might reconsider its stubborn, but senseless commitment to saddle the country with a white elephant similar to the one it built at Mirabel. Despite the fact that the minister himself admitted that "air traffic had failed to reach projected levels", not just in Toronto but throughout North America, and despite the fact that it had just recently been revealed that Mirabel had lost $47 million in its first year of operation, the minister hedged once again saying only that air traffic had not been reduced significantly.

I asked my question because current statistics show that air traffic in Canada and in many other parts of the world has, so to speak, "plateau-ed out". The government's repeated statements that somehow Malton will become overcrowded do not appear to be backed up by existing statistics; in fact I often suspect that the government, for bizarre reasons known only to itself, based the entire project at Pickering on rather questionable projections in the first place.

The point is this: it is always reprehensible for the government to spend great sums of money on frivolous or dubious projects, but it is especially callous for it to do so when it is openly dickering with the possibility of breaking its election promise to provide $290 million to aid urban transit across Canada.

There is a wide discrepancy among projections for the estimated cost of Pickering. Certainly we know that to date they have spent $110 million; but the lowest estimate, $200 million, is an amount sufficient to finance all the urban transit projects which are currently being jeopardized in Metro Toronto due to the government's reneging on its 1974 promises.

It is inconceivable to me that the government can be oblivious to the fact that there is severe commuter congestion in Toronto while it stubbornly refuses to give up its dream of building a second airport that is not required. It is inconceivable to me that the government can turn its back on 75 per cent of our population who live in our urban centres in order to accommodate the marginal 10 per cent who use airports on a regular basis.

It is time the present administration gave us a candid answer. Will it scrap Pickering and divert the remaining funds to more productive enterprises such as the Toronto terminal improvement project, which is needed to relieve congestion at Union Station? Will it repudiate the remarkable statement made Friday by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Kaplan) that the people of Toronto should be grateful the government broke its promise? The parliamentary secretary in effect said in that statement that the promises made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in 1974 had a double advantage; first of all they got the Prime Minister re-elected and, second, now that the Prime Minister chooses to break those promises, somehow he will end up saving people of the Toronto area some money. That is the Alice in Wonderland reasoning put to this House by the parliamentary secretary only last Friday.

I hope the government will come to its senses and say it has agreed to abandon the Pickering project, that it was an unfortunate concept in the beginning, a civil servant's dream and that it now realizes the airport is not needed.

I hope the government will take this opportunity to commit the money earmarked for Pickering for more worth-while developments in the Toronto area, namely, the urban transit which is needed to facilitate people who wish to go to work and who pay taxes in that greatly congested area of Canada.

The time has come when the government must get its priorities straight. For years we have urged it not to plunge money into the development of airports but to put it into more meaningful development that would aid people in getting to and from work. This is the question that I say we have put to the government 90 times: will it reconsider the Pickering development, come to its senses and divert the funds that were to be put into that needless development to a more worth-while project such as urban transit in the Toronto area?

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is very difficult to follow in his goal, his financial philosophy, and his administrative approach. As I said in my speech this afternoon, the hon. member in a speech on March 3 asked for more funds in the urban transportation budget. According to his own figure, and it was mentioned tonight, he is asking for his own area a sum of $200 million. If we consider the Montreal area, the Vancouver area and other municipalities, it would take not only millions but a billion dollars. How can the member reconcile those demands, be conscious of the inflation situation, and also be opposed to an increase in the expenses of the federal government, while protesting Treasury Board policy?

First, I would like to clarify the hon. member's mistaken impression that there still exists certain moneys, formerly earmarked for Pickering, which can now be made available for such programs as urban transit.

The 1975-76 estimates included $51,109,000 for expenditures at Pickering. During the preparation of the 1976-77 Main Estimates CATA recognized that only $39,964,000 would be required for 1975-76. Therefore the anticipated unused funds were applied against the revolving fund loan authority, thereby reducing the requirement for new loan authority. The decision to set the Pickering proposal aside in the fall of 1975 resulted in still lower levels of expenditures for 1975-76. This was taken into consideration in the 1977-78 estimates and again served to reduce new loan authority requirements. Therefore, there are no funds remaining within the fiscal framework.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE—USE OF WRITS OF ASSISTANCE—POSSIBILITY OF AMENDMENTS TO PROVIDE FOR ISSUANCE AT DISCRETION OF JUDGE

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, my participation tonight arises from questions which I raised in the House of Commons on February 21 of this year in connection with writs of assistance which are available in the enforcement of the Customs Act, Excise Act and others passed by this parliament. I also raised the matter of writs of assistance on previous occasions.

I was pleased to hear the minister indicate on February 16 that he shared my concern about some of the powers provided under the Criminal Code and through investigative agencies. I was pleased to have his assurance that he was giving the matter some consideration and in fact had directed the Law Reform Commission to make a study with regard to this whole general area.

I wanted to pursue this matter in the course of the question period on February 21. I asked the minister whether, having had an opportunity to study the judgment of Mr. Justice Collier, he was in a position to give some tangible evidence of his concern by undertaking to recommend changes in the legislation which would have the effect of allowing some discretion by the judiciary in the issuance of writs of assistance in the future.

At that time the minister indicated that he was looking at the matter. However, from his reply I got the impression he was only looking at internal arrangements of his own department and other departments respecting applications for writs of assistance, and determining by internal arrangements what could be done to avoid any abuses.

I am pleased to see the minister here. His presence in the House indicates that this is a matter of some importance. It is certainly regarded as important by the Canadian Bar Association.

● (2220)

The civil liberties section of the Canadian Bar Association has characterized the availability of writs of assistance under the legislation to which I have referred as repugnant. Eminent jurists have commented adversely on this provision, as have lawyers across the country and people generally who are interested in the proper administration of justice and in the preservation of civil liberties. I believe the fact that the minister has stayed up so late this evening to deal with the matter is a reflection of the importance he attaches to it.

My own point of view, and I want to put it on record, is that writs of assistance are a glaring exception to the general rule of Canadian law that judicial authority must be obtained before warrants are issued. This also covers wire tapping. It seems to me the police should not have the authority to obtain writs of assistance which are unlimited as to time and which are unspecific in nature. Another facet of this subject is that the statute has been so interpreted as to make it unnecessary for the minister or officials in his department when making applications to the courts to give any particular reasons in support of their requests.

Looking over the assessment of Mr. Justice Collier I recall that the material before the judge actually consisted of two paragraphs in an affidavit, one showing that the applicant was the director of the enforcement branch of the Customs and Excise branch, and the second stating that he required writs of assistance for the persons specified on an attached list for the purpose of enforcing the provisions of the Customs Act.

When we put the judiciary in the position of being glorified notaries public, I wonder why we waste the time of the courts by asking them to give approval to that kind of application. It might be simpler in all these circumstances to have the minister himself grant these writs. To carry the process to a logical conclusion, there is really no reason why the courts should be involved. I should like to know whether the minister is giving serious consideration to amending this statute so as at least to give the courts the ability to exercise discretion with respect to these applications—whether he will recommend that applicants for these writs should provide some reasonable explanation as to why they are required, and that, in future, the writs be subject to a limitation in time. This is not unreasonable and would in no way impede the administration of justice.

In conclusion, I simply request the minister not to allow this issue to be put on a back shelf, but to give it immediate attention because I do think that having regard to the principles governing our laws—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to the hon. member for raising this issue tonight and for his questions in the House on this subject of writs of assistance which, as he says, are an extraordinary legal remedy and a procedure it is incumbent upon us to examine from time to time. I am also grateful to the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) who raised this matter with me and with the Minister of National Revenue (Miss Bégin) many months ago in correspondence with us.

The immediate issue comes to light as a result of a decision of Mr. Justice Collier in Federal Court very recently, in which he was asked, on the application of myself or my officials, for a number of writs of assistance. I am pleased with the line of argumentation that the hon. member has made which pointed out that these are extraordinary legal remedies, but which called for some requirements as a minimum. I think we want to be careful in a country such as ours, faced with the law enforcement problems that we have, and faced with law enforcement officers often operating in extremely remote areas, that we do not outlaw writs of assistance without careful examination.

While complaining of the total lack of information provided to him as a judge having to issue the writs, a footnote to the judgment of Mr. Justice Collier states:

> I am not suggesting writs of this kind should never be asked for or granted. There may be moral, political or social grounds. The material in support of this application, for example, is completely devoid of any facts which might indicate there is some political, moral, social, economic, or administrative ground for granting this particular individual the powers sought.

So even the learned judge, while complaining, I think rightly, about the lack of information before him, conceded that there may well be valid reasons for the exercise of the writs.

In examining the matter one finds that the administrative procedures within departments are such as to endeavour administratively to eliminate abuse. In fact, the administrative procedures are such that a writ is not supposed to be used unless there were circumstances where, if a justice of the peace were available to issue a search warrant, one would in fact be granted.

It is not enough solely to rely upon administrative procedures, and that is the reason that I have said, in the light of Mr. Justice Collier's decision, that no further writs of assistance will be applied for until the whole procedure is reviewed. In saying that I meant not only administrative procedures but legal procedures.

The hon. member has asked for three things at least, and I have no hesitation in agreeing—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. I regret to interrupt the minister but his allotted time has expired.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY MINISTER ON DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES IN RELATION TO BUDGET—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. As the Minister of Finance flits from Washington, the capital of the United States of America, to New York, the financial capital of that country, picking up instructions, suggestions and possible options for his forthcoming budget, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence):

That this House request the minister upon his return to make a statement on motions setting out what economic alternatives he has been given with respect to his forthcoming budget so that the House may be fully informed of our background position with particular reference to our relationship to the U.S.A.

Mr. Speaker: Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House for the presentation of such a motion. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

REQUEST THAT ROLE OF COMMITTEE FOR CANADIAN UNITY BE SPECIFIED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to introduce an important motion of pressing necessity.

In view of the existing ambiguity concerning the national unity committee within federal-provincial relations office, since that special section could merely become a political organization to promote the Liberal party and since we have no specific definition of national unity and therefore the role of the organization could be distorted, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) be asked to table in the House the essential papers providing clear and specific information on the role of that section for Canadian unity whose direction has been entrusted with Mr. Paul Tellier.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN

SUGGESTED ARRANGEMENTS FOR OPENING OR CLOSING OF PARLIAMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. Muir):

That this House desires that arrangements be made for Her Gracious Majesty Queen Elizabeth II of Canada either to prorogue the present session or to give the Speech from the Throne for a new session later in 1977 when she will be attending events in celebration of her twenty-fifth anniversary on the Throne.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43 the presentation of such a motion for debate in the Chamber requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It was Liberal members who said no.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

SUGGESTED MEETING WITH QUEBEC OFFICIALS CONCERNED WITH MAGNÉSIUM QUÉBÉCOIS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Considering that everything must be done to lower the unemployment rate in Quebec, that some $80 million in capital expenditures earmarked for the creation of some 400 new jobs in the Trois-Rivières-Shawinigan area are frozen both in Ottawa and Quebec City, that the Magnésium Québécois project would compensate the loss of 400 jobs in the area resulting from the likely closing down in 1977 of the Gulf plant in Shawinigan, and that the people backing this project are still hopeful to get the green light from the Foreign Investment Review Agency, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Balfour):

That the House immediately direct the Minister responsible to call a meeting as soon as possible of all interested parties within both the federal and provincial governments, so that this important project may become a reality in Quebec.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

RESTORATION OF DISABILITY PENSION TO BASIS ESTABLISHED IN 1972—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, because this is an urgent matter I ask leave to present it under Standing Order 43. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall):

That this House calls attention to the fact that the rate of a 100 per cent war disability pension under the Pension Act, which was established in 1972 in relation to the composite rate of five public service groups, all of them very low, has now fallen behind that composite rate by more than $500 a year, and this House therefore calls on the government to close that gap by restoring the rate of a 100 per cent war disability pension to the basis established in 1972, and to take this action without delay, in fairness to Canada's disabled veterans.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion pursuant to the Standing Order can only be done with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

REQUEST FOR ADMISSION OF PESTICIDES FROM UNITED STATES ORDERED PRIOR TO BORDER CLOSING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on an urgent and pressing matter relating to the Minister of Agriculture's announcement that all pesticides sold and used in Canada must now be registered. Since this will close the border to any Canadian farmer buying pesticides in the United States, thereby threatening with economic loss those farmers who ordered U.S. pesticides earlier but have not yet taken delivery, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday):

That the Minister of Agriculture suspend any restrictive or punitive actions against those farmers who have not yet taken delivery on their pesticides ordered before the minister's announcement and that those pesticides, ordered earlier, be allowed to enter Canada subject only to the conditions and regulations which existed before the minister's announcement.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate can only be done with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PROPOSED SURCHARGE ON ICE SHOWS TO PROVIDE FUNDS TO AID DEVELOPMENT OF FIGURE SKATERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that the showing by Canadian figure skaters at last week's world championships was the most disastrous in recent history, and because foreign professional ice shows continue to reap the benefits of Canadian skating talent without contributing to the development of that sport which is partially subsidized by the federal government; I move, seconded by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle):

That the Minister of State responsible for amateur sport be instructed to initiate and put into effect forthwith a reasonable surcharge on foreign professional ice shows signing amateur skaters from this country which proceeds would be directed to the obviously necessary financial aid of our skaters, as well as for the development of that sport at the grass roots level.

Mr. Speaker: Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House for the presentation of such a motion for debate. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

AGRICULTURE

POTENTIAL DROUGHT IN WESTERN CANADA—CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Agriculture. It concerns the potential drought crisis in western Canada. As the minister knows, if there is not a very wet spring there could be a major crop and grass disaster—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: —I trust, Mr. Speaker, that the minister will take this question more seriously than do some of his colleagues.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: That kind of disaster, if it comes, could sharply increase food prices in Canada and perhaps trigger inflation again. Since the five western states of the United States have already started rationing water and nine governors of U.S. states have agreed to attend an emergency summit meeting on the drought question in that country, can the minister tell the House if he is prepared to take the lead and gather together ministers of agriculture from the affected provinces in Canada to assess the situation, to develop preliminary plans, and then to report to the House of Commons?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we are already holding scheduled symposiums with farmers to remind them and show them how to farm under dry conditions. Most of them are aware of it, but some want to be brought up to date on this type of farming. We are having discussions also with meteorologists, and we are even having discussions with people who maintain that they can make rain.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: My colleague here tells me we have in-house experts. We realize this is a very serious condition, but through the legislation provided by this government there is crop insurance and there is a grain stabilization program which was not available during previous dry years. So, they have that kind of protection. We are as concerned as the Leader of the Opposition says we should be, and as he is, about this very serious condition. We will be doing everything humanly and physically possible to make sure that we use the water carefully and do everything possible. I just want to say one more thing. I ask even the good members of the House of Commons to pray for rain—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: That is the limit of this government's policy.

Mr. Clark: I am sure it would be of scant comfort to the farmers of western Canada to know that in the face of the lowest rainfall in that region in nearly a century, the Minister of Agriculture is acknowledging that the policy of the government of Canada is to pray for rain.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: It worked for Moses.

Mr. Clark: I am advised by someone on the other side that it worked for Moses. There are some differences which this government has seldom realized between Moses and themselves.

My question is whether the government, instead of proceeding as though it were simply a problem as usual, recognizing the potential emergency nature of this situation, will call together other ministers of agriculture and other departments of agriculture to try to work out some common approach in which governments of all levels can take advantage of the new technologies that have been developed to ensure as best we can that some extraordinary protection is given to farmers against the very unusual and special crisis that is developing now in western Canada?

Mr. Whelan: I just want to say that we are exploring every avenue that is possible and we will be discussing it in a more formal manner than the manner in which our officials have been discussing proposals concerning what we should be doing together with the provincial authorities. I want to remind, through you, Mr. Speaker, members of the House and the Canadian people that if He is on our side, the one to whom we pray, he can do us a lot of good.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1420)

Mr. Clark: Short of that kind of reliance has the minister's department started any special studies on long-range weather forecasts or soil conditions, and is his department prepared to use the new forms of modern technology, such as land satellites and remote sensing techniques, which can develop an accurate picture of the drought situation and the potential moisture situation in Canada?

Mr. Whelan: Yes, Mr. Speaker. As I said, we are using every bit of scientific knowledge available to us. We have a very good system of making these forecasts. I have discussed this with the colleagues of the Leader of the Opposition who are from western Canada and who live in the dry area. We are trying to get every bit of information we can, and we are going to do everything humanly possible to make sure we use every bit of scientific and technical knowledge which is available to us. We are putting all that data together. I have made a personal survey of the mountains, the hills, etc.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: We are using the advice of the Americans. I am sure the Leader of the Opposition knows as well as I do that snow in the mountains not only affects weather and moisture conditions in western Canada but also in the United States of America. Our conditions are bad, but theirs are worse. They are already rationing water, mainly because they depend a great deal more on irrigation than we do. We have not become as dependent on irrigation as they have. We know the Americans are curtailing their production, and that is going to have an effect on our importation of some foods from that country. I am ready and willing to listen to any advice which anyone has.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The difference between Canada and the United States is not in the conditions; the difference is in the response of governments.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Will the minister, either in this House or outside, tell us specifically what he and his officials are doing, and will he tell us whether he intends to convene a conference of ministers of agriculture from the affected provinces so that there can be public discussion of this serious problem?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I think one of the worst things we could do would be to try to say that we have a system which would guarantee moisture. We do have one of the most efficient systems in the world. We have research people in the field of agriculture who know how to farm under dry land conditions. They have proved that they can produce crops under the kind of conditions which prevailed during the dirty thirties. They can grow practically normal crops in southern Alberta, and the Leader of the Opposition should know about that. I said that we are holding symposiums and advising farmers in order to bring them up to date. Provincial people are well aware of this. They are using our research people. All departments are using every bit of information there is, and we are doing everything humanly possible.

POTENTIAL DROUGHT IN WESTERN CANADA—SUGGESTED DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES ON JOINT ACTION

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I have a follow-up question for the Minister of Agriculture with regard to this very serious western and North American drought situation. In my personal opinion the current situation is at least as serious, and possibly more so, as the two worst years of the thirties, and I refer to 1932 and 1937. Would the minister consider some kind of joint discussion with authorities from the United States, where the situation is even more serious, with a view to assessing more accurately the total continental drought and considering the possibility of some joint contingency planning?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think that first and foremost any discussions we have should be with provincial ministers and provincial governments concerning any program we should develop, what action we should take. For instance, moving livestock from an area which is dry to an area which has ample forage is one thing which is being considered at the present time. We will be meeting with the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States of America in a few days, I hope, and this will be one of the things which we will be discussing.

[Mr. Whelan.]

POTENTIAL DROUGHT IN WESTERN CANADA—EFFECT ON CATTLE INDUSTRY

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that there is less than the normal snowpack to provide water for irrigation and less than half the normal downstream flow along the entire eastern slopes of the mountains and that today, approaching mid-March, there is no snow at all over much of the prairies, is the minister fully aware of the possible consequences of this situation on our total Canadian cattle industry in that significant increases in marketings of cows and yearling feeder cattle could suddenly disrupt present indications of a modest upturn later on in the fall causing a set-back of at least another year in the upturn of the cattle industry?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): I am certainly aware of that, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member was present when I said that very same thing at the annual meeting of the Canadian Cattlemen's Association. He is one of the members with whom I discussed this very serious question. I know he is very familiar with dry land farming in that part of Canada, in southern Alberta. As I said to the Leader of the Opposition, I have viewed the mountains, I have viewed the foothills, I have viewed the prairies; I have seen that there is no snow. I have gone over the reports from our officials. The hon. member from Grenville-Carleton is used to giving people "snow jobs" but this is a different kind of "snow job".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

PROPOSED MEETING BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND PREMIER OF QUEBEC TO DISCUSS UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In yesterday's throne speech in Quebec City Premier Lévesque announced his government's intention to deal immediately with what he described as the brutal unemployment crisis in his province. He specifically indicated his desire to co-operate with the federal government in this area. Will the Prime Minister respond immediately to this suggestion by requesting a joint meeting between himself and the premier in order to come to grips with this very serious human question, keeping in mind that more than half the new unemployment in the country as a whole in the past two years has occurred in Quebec?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not been apprised yet of Premier Lévesque's speech but I can assure the hon. member and the House that if Premier Lévesque is disposed to co-operate with us in this matter or any other matter which is for the welfare of the inhabitants of Quebec we would be very happy to co-operate.

Mr. Broadbent: A supplementary question. Mr. Speaker. I repeat, my reading of the meaning of the throne speech was that there was a very specific suggestion made by the government of the province of Quebec to co-operate with the existing federal government and within the existing federal institutions. I should therefore like to ask the Prime Minister if he does not think it appropriate that with all seriousness he should respond by instructing his ministers responsible for example, for housing, public works and transportation, to name three areas that the province of Quebec said they wanted to act in, to meet with their counterparts either in Ottawa or Quebec City to start to deal with the very serious problem of unemployment in the province of Quebec?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I answered that question.

TRANSPORT

ALLEGED COMMITMENT TO PROVIDE ASSISTANCE FOR RAPID TRANSIT SYSTEMS—REQUEST FOR ACTION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As I understand the Prime Minister, he responded by saying he would be willing to do something. All I am asking him to do is take some initiative in this. I would move to the Minister of Transport and ask him, considering that one of the areas the province of Quebec said they want to act in is transportation, will the minister now indicate to the House that the Liberal party intends to live up to its commitment made in 1974 to provide some $290 million for assistance to municipalities for rapid transit systems which would help the people of Montreal and other cities in that province as well as elsewhere in Canada?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to add today to answers previously given on this subject. We have cited very clearly the financial difficulty which led us to conclude that in this area of prime provincial responsibility we ought not to intrude as far as we had originally intended. We have not made a final decision as to the financial arrangements into which we might enter.

ABORTION

ABORTION AS A METHOD OF FAMILY PLANNING—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

In a statement made by the minister before an assembly of representatives of national women associations, he said that abortion could be a family planning method, which is quite a new interpretation of the law passed by this House in 1969. Would the minister tell the House whether he was talking on behalf of the government and taking advantage of his ministerial privilege to make the law on abortion less stringent, without previously submitting this point to the House of Commons, as he should have done?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would read the statement I made on that occasion, a copy of which has been sent to every hon. member, he would see that it says clearly and explicitly that abortion cannot be considered by the government as an acceptable family planning method, and that it is in accordance with what I have repeatedly said in this House since 1973.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, in announcing this broadening of the abortion policy, did the minister take into account the petition tabled in the House on May 29, 1975, which I have here and which was signed by over a million Canadians who are opposed to any easing of the abortion legislation?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I refer the hon. member to my statement. He will see that it does not broaden either the act or the policy on abortion. That act and that policy were passed by the House a few years ago, and the stipulations of the act are clear. The hon. member will note that in my statement I indicated very clearly that any steps in that direction will have to be taken within the provisions of the law as it now stands.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, on page 1 of the statement of the minister to which I am now referring, one reads, and I quote:

Counselling services on abortion should be given by institutions dispensing family planning services . . .

Mr. Speaker, in other words, when a child is not wanted, as the minister says in closing, and I quote:

In pursuing the fundamental objective that every child should be wanted . . .

—the minister suggests abortion in the case of a child that is not wanted. Is the minister willing to commit himself, and the government, to respecting the will of a million Canadians who are opposed to what the minister said?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, the very question of the hon. member shows the twisted mind with which he approaches the subject.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSION TO SELECT NEW COMMISSIONER—REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question, addressed to the Prime Minister, is based on the announcement of the establishment of a committee consisting of Mr. Gordon Robertson, Mr. D. S. Thorson, Mr. Roger Tasse, and belatedly, Commissioner Nadon of the RCMP, to recommend to the Prime Minister the next Commissioner of the RCMP. Will the Prime Minister reconsider this extremely ill-advised action which will result in the complete subversion of the force to the political control of the Prime Minister, and reassure us that the traditional method of selecting the next commissioner from within the ranks of the force which has existed for some 104 years will continue, thereby assuring the continued integrity of that force?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat surprised that a single question can contain so much misinformation.

An hon. Member: How about the answer?

Mr. Trudeau: The suggestion concerning the late addition of Commissioner Nadon is a sheer fabrication. I discussed this with Commissioner Nadon quite some time ago, and it was always clear that he would be a member of the selection committee. Second, the appointment is not made by the Prime Minister; it is made by order in council, this is the way it has been, Mr. Speaker, and the hon. member really ought to know that. Third, the selection has not always proceeded in the way the hon. member mentioned. At least two other selection committees of which I know have been set up. One was set up in 1969, another in 1931. In 1969 the commissioner was chosen from within the force, and in 1931 the commissioner was chosen from outside the force. I think hon. members of the opposition would agree that we should have the best possible person heading the force.

An hon. Member: But not under political control.

Mr. Trudeau: And the way to get such a person is to ask for advice, in the way being done.

Mr. Paproski: Ask Marc Lalonde.

Mr. Nielsen: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I accept the Prime Minister's explanation with respect to Commissioner Nadon. Perhaps there was an omission on the part of the media in failing to include his name—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: —with Messrs. Robertson, Thorson and Tasse, whose Liberal sympathies are well known. The fact that the two other appointments were in 1866 and 1936 does not justify this action at this time and the danger of the political tainting of the force. I wonder if the Prime Minister will tell the House what part incidents like those involving Senator Giguère and the initiative properly taken by the RCMP in that prosecution played in the setting up of this committee.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

GRAIN

WHEAT—DISCUSSIONS ON PRICE WITH UNITED STATES—EFFECT ON OTHER COUNTRIES IN ATTEMPT TO REACH INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENT

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. It has to do with his trip to the United States, where he discussed pricing arrangements with the United States secretary of agriculture. Apparently other exporting countries were deliberately ignored in those discussions, which may have been a tactical error if an agreement is to be reached. Can the minister say what steps are now being taken to correct that obvious omission, and to correct the impression that this was a price-fixing arrangement between Canada and the United States, and other countries will have to follow suit?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in this preliminary meeting designed to elicit the views of our respective countries we immediately noted the desire on the part of both countries to look toward a new international arrangement. Our total objective will be to work together, to include other countries in the discussions. Indeed, I have personally been in touch with ministers from Australia. Progressively, working parties will be set up to enlarge the scope of the discussions, and I am sure that we may well reach the conclusion that the International Wheat Council continues to be a good forum for further discussion.

WHEAT—EFFORTS OF WHEAT BOARD TO FIND MARKETS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister whether, while these discussions are continuing, the Wheat Board is actively seeking markets for our wheat and seeking to enter into bilateral agreements with other countries, pending a new agreement on the international scene?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, of course, the Canadian Wheat Board is vigorously pursuing markets for Canadian grain in the usual way.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EFFORTS TO PERSUADE SOVIET UNION TO PERMIT PEOPLE IN BALTIC STATES TO VISIT FAMILIES IN CANADA

Hon. Robert Stanbury (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Knowing the anxiety of many Canadians to have members of their families in the Baltic states, whom they have not seen for many years, come to visit them in this country, and in view of the apparent Soviet policy to refuse exit visas for any such visits, will the minister appeal to the Soviet Union in the spirit of Helsinki to make these family visits possible? I ask this question because it is particularly timely on this day of the annual Baltic evening on Parliament Hill and because today, for the first time, the honorary consuls of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania are present together in our diplomatic gallery.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I, too, am delighted in paying particular attention to this special day. I assure the hon. member and the House, as I have said on many previous occasions, that we regret in this country that there has not been as much success as we should like with regard to family reunification. Periodic representations are made to the representatives of the appropriate countries and, of course, it is my intention and that of the government to continue making such representations until these highly desirable family reunifications are achieved.

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

AUTHORITY FOR LOAN TO OWNERS OF QUAI D'ORSAY HOTEL, OTTAWA

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs who is responsible for housing. It is prompted by court action taken against a company known as 210 Somerset Street West, the owners of the Quai d'Orsay Hotel. Since the company received in July, 1973, an assured loan from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation of almost $2 million, may I ask under what authority the money was lent to the owners of the Quai d'Orsay Hotel? I ask this since there is no provision for such loans under the National Housing Act.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I regret that I became aware of the fact that the question was directed to me only after it was asked. Perhaps the hon. member could ask it again, otherwise I shall take it as notice and answer tomorrow.

[English]

Mr. McGrath: I will repeat my question. My question has to do with a court action which was taken recently against a company known as 210 Somerset Street Limited, the owners of the Quai d'Orsay Hotel. It is prompted by the fact that in July, 1973 a CMHC/NHA insured loan amounting to almost $2 million was made to this hotel. Such a loan is not covered under the provisions of the National Housing Act and I ask the minister under what authority this loan guarantee was made.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: I shall take the question as notice, Mr. Speaker, and give the answer tomorrow.

FINANCE

POSSIBILITY MINISTER'S VISIT TO WASHINGTON DISCUSSED WITH PRESIDENT CARTER BY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. As the Minister of Finance has flown to Washington and to New York, apparently to receive last minute instructions before bringing in a Canadian budget—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: —would the Prime Minister tell us whether his trip was arranged, or at least discussed, during the right hon. gentleman's visit with President Carter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): It is interesting to see how the shadow minister of finance would construct his budget if ever he gets to this side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: We will show you!

Mr. Trudeau: That is precisely my point. They will go to Washington and ask how to write a budget!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

POSSIBILITY OF DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND PRESIDENT CARTER ON UNITED STATES METHOD OF ACHIEVING ECONOMIC RECOVERY

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): As the economic recovery of the United States has been dramatically more successful than that in Canada—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: —would the Prime Minister inform us whether during his discussions with President Carter any clue was given by the President as to why the Americans, without controls, are experiencing a rate of inflation which, in the aggregate is now 8 per cent less than in Canada, and a real growth one-fifth better than in this country, yet they have less unemployment? If any suggestions were made, may we assume the Minister of Finance is now being briefed in detail as to how the Americans did it?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we know how the Americans did it. We do not want to follow the same route of having a 6 per cent recession. We know that would be the Tory way of dealing with inflation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ALLEGED AGREEMENT CANADA WOULD BORROW LESS IN UNITED STATES

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): A final question to the Prime Minister dealing with how the Grits are actually doing it. Will the Prime Minister confirm or deny reports that before and during his visit to Washington the Americans made it clear they would like us to stop sopping up so much debt money from their domestic market and that accordingly we have adjusted our Canadian interest rate downward to discourage the aggressive Canadian borrowing which has taken place in the United States over the last 30 months? Have we agreed that the government should take less in debt financing from the U.S. market?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

PROPOSED INQUIRY INTO ALCAN PIPELINE—DATE OF REPORT

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Late last year the minister stated he proposed to set up a series of mini-Berger inquiries late in 1977 with respect to the Alcan pipeline proposal. Has he yet made a decision with regard to setting up these inquiries?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Yes, Mr. Speaker, an inquiry will be set up in the Yukon to examine the social and economic impact of the proposed Alcan pipeline and I am presently reviewing a number of names to determine who shall conduct that inquiry.

Mr. Neil: Can the minister tell us what he expects the time frame to be—when the results of the inquiry will be reported back to the department?

Mr. Allmand: Obviously, this process will not take as long as the Berger inquiry. We hope that the community hearings will be completed in the early summer but no exact timetable has yet been set up.

Mr. Jacques Lavoie (Hochelaga): Mr. Speaker, I want to put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

To follow up on what the hon. member for Lotbinière said about abortion and considering the minister's statement before the representatives of the National Women's Organization, which was publicly condemned by the Front commun pour le respect de la vie during a discussion on a matter of national interest held outside the House, does the minister intend to make a statement in the House or to introduce an amendment to the present legislation on abortion, thus allowing members of the House to discuss that subject?

COMMUNICATIONS

THREAT BY BELL TO STOP INSTALLATIONS IF RATE INCREASE NOT APPROVED—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Communications. In view of the threat by Bell Canada to stop the installation of new telephone service if the CRTC does not allow Bell the full rate increase it wants, will the minister assure the House that after the CRTC has examined the evidence regarding Bell's finances and made its decision, the company will be obliged to conform to that decision without any reduction in services to telephone subscribers?

AIR TRANSPORT

EFFECT OF CHANGE IN AIR SPACE CONTROLLED FROM MONCTON

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Has the air space area covered and controlled by or through the Moncton air traffic control centre been reduced by 350,000 square miles to appease some Quebec air traffic controllers? If this is true, why is it being done and what will the potential job loss be in the Moncton area? Further, what effect will it have on the continuation of the present traffic control centre which is being built or rebuilt in Riverview, New Brunswick?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): The change in the control of air space is not being done to appease anyone but follows long study and planning of the best traffic management patterns from a technical point of view, planning which began in 1973-74. The controllers in the Moncton area have been assured that it will not involve the loss of any jobs.

TRANSPORT

NEW BRUNSWICK—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE HIGHWAYS IN NORTHERN PART OF PROVINCE NOT NEGLECTED

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of news reports published in New Brunswick to the effect that the Ministry of Transport is considering sharing in an important highway development program with that province, would the minister assure the House that any agreement with New Brunswick will ensure that highways 17, 11 and 8 are upgraded to a better standard before any federal funds are used to help to build super four-lane highways elsewhere in the province while the development of the northern part of the province is being stifled by an inadequate highway network?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): No agreement by the Department of Transport has been entered into with the Province of New Brunswick although we have held discussions, as the hon. member knows, concerning the possibility of making use of certain transportation money which might otherwise be applied in other ways. There are discussions as well between the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and the Atlantic provinces concerning highway construction. In regard to the question of specific highway projects, I can only assure the hon. member that I for one, and my officials, will be very conscious of the strong feelings which he expresses about the need for highway development in the northern part of New Brunswick.

DATE OF DECISION ON PROGRAM FOR HIGHWAY CONSTRUCTION IN ATLANTIC REGION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the minister has indicated he is going to divert funds to strengthen the highway program for all of the maritime provinces, and since it is so vital to the Atlantic region to construct a proper highway and that it is necessary to start very soon, can the minister say how close he is to a decision?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we are closer to the day when that decision will be made.

AGRICULTURE

PESTICIDES—REQUEST FOR ADMISSION OF SUPPLIES ORDERED PRIOR TO BORDER CLOSING AND RESTRICTION OF FRUIT AND VEGETABLE IMPORTS

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture and relates to his recent announcement last Friday to close the border to pesticides. In view of the fact that many producers have not only ordered but paid for chemicals and are simply awaiting delivery of U.S. pesticides, would the minister suspend any restrictive actions against these earlier ordered pesticides?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we are considering all requests which have been submitted to us by members of parliament and also by the growers themselves. No decision has been made at this time.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same minister. Since the minister has been so keen to respond quickly to pleas for aid from the pesticides industry, will he also exhibit such quickness in aiding the Canadian fruit and vegetable industry, the industry most affected by the closure of the border; and will he stem the flow the low priced imports which have ruined the incomes of many fruit and vegetable producers?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member should also tell us that many pesticides in Canada are cheaper than those available to United States farmers. American farmers have never had the opportunity to come to Canada to buy pesticides because the American government does not allow them to do so. No other country in the world allows their farmers to do what our farmers in Canada have been doing. The hon. member says that I acted quickly on behalf of the chemical industry. They have been making representations to me about this matter for over six months. In fact, if I check the records, I think I could go back almost as far as a year. We have had discussions with farm organizations, so to say that this was imposed quickly without discussions with the people concerned is just not the fact.

SUGGESTED EMBARGO ON IMPORTATION OF PROCESSED PRODUCTS TO SUPPORT PROCESSING INDUSTRY

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that many segments of farm production need a strong processing industry in Canada, and in view of the minister's statement that he put an embargo on pesticides to create a strong pesticides industry in Canada, is the minister making representations to the cabinet that they place a similar embargo on imports of processed products which are produced in Canada in order to have a strong processing industry in support of the farmers?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I just want to point out before answering the last part of the hon. member's question that the programs this government has put in to help the farmers to whom he has referred are superior to the programs the American government has provided for their farmers. For instance, the apple producers got nothing from their government last year; the average apple producer in Canada received over $17,000 in payments this year. Certainly, I am making that kind of representation because I want to help the total agricultural industry, as the hon. member knows very well.

CUSTOMS

SUGGESTED EMBARGO ON FOOD BROUGHT IN FROM UNITED STATES BY RESIDENTS OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Revenue. In view of the ease with which the Minister of Agriculture and the cabinet have effectively ruled against the farmers of Canada on the importation of pesticides, and in view of the statement by the Minister of Agriculture that only a few farmers along the border benefited, is the Minister of Revenue prepared to find some similar way to put an embargo on food products being brought into Canada from the United States by Canadian consumers along the border of British Columbia?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I understood the meaning of the hon. member's question. Customs and Excise of Revenue Canada administer the customs and excise legislation. Last week, I was put a question by one of his colleagues from Manitoba on the tariff classification or on the embargo on pesticides. I said I would inquire but I did not get any information yet. At the end of his question he referred, I think, to another problem, but I did not understand. If he would repeat that part of the question, I will try to answer.

PUBLIC SERVICE

INQUIRY INTO ACTUARIAL VIABILITY OF PENSION PLAN— REQUEST FOR TERMS OF REFERENCE

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the President of Treasury Board. The minister undertook to make an announcement in this House on the commission that he is setting up to examine the actuarial viability of public service pension plans. Will he, when doing so, announce the criteria or assumptions which the actuaries will be required to use when making their inquiry?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): My commitment, Mr. Speaker, was to make the terms of reference public on the first possible occasion. They have not been finalized, and when completed I will seek the occasion to make them public.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REQUEST THAT OFFSHORE BEEF BE LABELLED

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the hundreds of thousands of pounds of offshore imported beef, not equal to domestic quality yet not identified as to source, now on the market, is the minister going to take steps to require all offshore beef to be labelled as such, thereby giving protection to Canadian consumers which they do not have at the present time?

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would have to consult with the Minister of Agriculture about this; I will take notice of the question.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PROPOSAL THAT TRIBUNAL BE ESTABLISHED TO HEAR THOSE ON BLACKLIST

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and relates to an answer he gave to a question yesterday regarding the difficulties experienced by Radio-Canada with their editorial staff. In light of the Prime Minister's reluctance yesterday to commit himself to naming the people within Radio-Canada who are subversives, in the sense of the question of separatism, for the reason that no criminal acts were alleged, would the Prime Minister now tell the House whether upon reflection he would be prepared to take some action in connection with those people who are named on the extra parliamentary opposition list, since those people were, of course, named as being subversives and were accused of being criminals within our society?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, I am not quite clear what action the hon. member is suggesting I take. Perhaps he could ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Oberle: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he is going to respond to correspondence that he has from individuals on the extra parliamentary list requesting that a tribunal be set up and that they be given an opportunity to clear their names of the charges which were laid against them?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, there were no charges laid against them. As far as I know, they do not have anything to clear. The only way in which names might have been made public is through the good offices of the opposition, and they should do what they can to rectify the harm they have done.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PREVENT SPILLAGE OF OIL BY TANKERS—DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES AND OTHER CONCERNED PARTIES

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment. In view of the fact that on a world-wide basis 19 tankers went aground or blew up in 1976, double the 1975 toll in tonnage and spilling more than a quarter of a million tons of oil into the sea, and in view of the minister's statement at Dalhousie University on February 25 that a good way to stop this is to make cargo owners liable not only for the clean-up but also the damage they cause if their oil is spilled, I would ask the minister what plans he is going to take to protect our environment from this type of sea-borne demolition?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious, as I said before, that the way to solve this problem is to set international standards for all tankers, those that do enter our waters and those that do not, because once spilled the oil tends to move in the direction the waves push it. Obviously, if there is no international agreement, coastal states will have to protect themselves. The suggestion that I made at Dalhousie was that it might be an idea to have the companies owning the cargo also made responsible for any damage that that cargo causes if it is sent in leaky ships.

Mr. Crouse: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I am not certain whether I should direct it to the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment or to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Perhaps the Secretary of State for External Affairs could tell us whether he discussed this proposition with the Americans when he was in Washington? Is he giving any thought to establishing a satellite monitoring system that would keep track of tankers and other ships when they enter our 200-mile limit? Also, will he or his officials consult with the London based intergovernmental maritime consultative organization in the hope of establishing tighter international conventions governing oil spills and the design and operation of tankers when they are in our waters?

● (1500)

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there are various parts to that question. I could probably answer yes to each one, that action is being taken on all of those fronts. On the specific question of whether the matter of Canada-U.S. co-operation has been discussed, very definitely so. One of the reference points for the conclusion of a permanent settlement on the boundary question is that pollution control will be one of the elements in that solution. In other words, that is one of the matters the negotiators will be discussing this year. As the hon. member knows from the experience of last December, the American spill of yesterday could be a Canadian spill as of tomorrow. Therefore, that is the kind of arrangement we are trying to work out which will deal with that kind of situation. All of the other elements at one time or another in recent months have been discussed.

In so far as the surveillance of the 200 miles is concerned on an electronic basis, the hon. member will know it is a very expensive system, particularly if it is going to be all embracing. Of course, certain new parts of it have been put into place in terms of coastal authorities both on the west coast and east coast and very likely more will be done as time goes by.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Bellechasse on a point of order.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that, during the question period, there was no reference or nearly none to the ideas expressed the day before yesterday during the inauguration speech of the second session of the 31st legislature in Quebec City, that there was some mention of the question of the recognition of the French language in the province of Quebec, and that this morning the information media reported certain statements allegedly made by the Solicitor General of Canada. I would have like to ask him a question about this during the question period.

Mr. Speaker, he is reported to have said that if the rights of the English-speaking minority in Quebec were not respected following passage of legislation that will be submitted to the Quebec National Assembly, the federal government would intervene to protect the rights of English-speaking minorities in Quebec, while avoiding any use of force.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that this question is of national interest and this is why I would have liked the Chair to recognize me so that I may ask the minister about this to allow him to clarify the statement he made on this issue and to make all of Canada aware of the intentions of the federal government concerning the rights of minorities in a given province.

Canada Shipping Act

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) wanted to put a question to the Solicitor General (Mr. Fox) during the question period this afternoon, but unfortunately this was impossible because of the pressures which are typical on a Wednesday, especially because several members seek the floor each Wednesday to ask their questions. This afternoon it was possible to give the floor to only one Social Crediter, to two New Democrats, and then 12 or 13 Progressive Conservatives. I am convinced of the importance and of the quality of the question prepared by the hon. member for Bellechasse, but unfortunately it was impossible to recognize him this afternoon. He may perhaps ask his question tomorrow. This subject can be the matter of a question, but not of a question of privilege or a point of order.

HOSPITALITY EXPENSES

Question No. 1,012—Mr. Howie:

1. What amount was paid for entertainment by the Canadian foreign service including trade commissions, embassies, consulates, delegations and all offices in and outside of Canada in the fiscal year ending March 31 (a) 1976, (b) 1975, (c) 1974?

2. Is a separate account available for alcoholic beverages and (a) if so, in what amount, (b) if not, what is available and in what manner is it ascertained?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1.

Department of External Affairs	$1,672,017.00	$1,701,316.00	$1,478,085.00
Canadian International Development Agency	$ 108,148.27	$ 125,553.04	$ 117,788.14
Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce	$1,204,340.00	$1,189,661.00	$1,476,287.00
Department of Manpower and Immigration	$ 164,000.00	$ 157,000.00	$ 118,000.00

2. No. (a) Not applicable. (b) No separate account is maintained and it would be impossible to calculate these expenditures with any meaningful accuracy. Other departments involved have submitted a nil reply or cannot separate the entertainment costs of foreign officials and delegations from the general hospitality account.

[Mr. Kaplan.]

CBC—PLAYING OF ROYAL ANTHEM

Question No. 1,082—Mr. Schumacher:

1. Has the playing of the Royal Anthem "God Save the Queen" been dropped by CBC TV when they sign off each evening and, if so, by whose authority?

2. (a) For what reason was the decision taken, (b) on what date was the Royal Anthem dropped?

3. Has the Royal Anthem been dropped by all CBC TV stations and, if not, which CBC TV stations are no longer playing the Royal Anthem at sign off and what is the reason in each case?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. The CBC television network as such does not sign off at night. Sign-off is carried out by individual stations. The CBC has placed the responsibility on these stations to decide whether "God Save the Queen" will be played.

2. Not applicable.

3. No. CBC stations which do not carry "God Save the Queen" are as follows: CBGAT Matane, CBVT Quebec City, CBOT and CBOFT Ottawa, CBLFT Toronto, CBET Windsor, CBWT and CBWFT Winnipeg, CBXFT Edmonton, CBRT Calgary, CBUFT Vancouver, (11 out of a total of 27 stations). The reasons given by these stations is that "O Canada" has general public acceptance as the national anthem and is therefore considered to be the appropriate anthem to be played at sign-off.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION PLAN

Question No. 1,306—Mr. Neil:

As of November 30, 1976, how many (a) producers have opted out of the Western Grain Stabilization Plan, (b) employees are on staff under the Western Grain Stabilization Plan?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): In so far as Canadian Wheat Board is concerned: As of December 31, 1976. (a) 39,663; (b) Nine full-time; six casuals.

EXTENSION OF LETTER CARRIER DELIVERY SERVICE

Question No. 1,471—Mr. Howie:

1. Is mail delivery being extended to new urban concentrations of population which lie outside existing door-to-door letter carrier routes and, if so, by what methods?

2. Are steps being taken to bring this service into line with the door-to-door service available in other areas and, if so, what are they?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Postmaster General): 1. Delivery beyond existing letter carrier route boundaries is made through group boxes located in or near new areas.

2. No. Extensions of letter carrier service have been deferred until further notice. This policy became effective November 18, 1975, and is part of the federal policy on restraint in spending.

CPP DISABILITY BENEFITS

Question No. 1,518—Mr. Malone:

1. (a) In each of the past three years, how many persons received CPP disability allowances, (b) how many were eligible for a disability tax exemption, (c) what was the (i) average, (ii) median income of the recipients?

2. (a) In each of the past three years, how many persons qualified for a disabled persons tax exemption, (b) what was the (i) average, (ii) median income of the recipients, (c) how many were recipients of CPP disability benefits?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): In so far as Health and Welfare Canada is concerned: 1. (a) The number of persons in receipt of CPP disability pensions at the end of the past three years was: December, 1974 38,444; December, 1975 48,901; December, 1976 61,305. (b) and (c).

2.(a), (b) and (c) The Department of National Health and Welfare has no information relating to personal incomes or tax exemptions.

In so far as the Department of National Revenue is concerned: 1. (b) and (c) This information is not available.

2. (a) and (b) The information requested is not readily available from existing statistical tabulations. (c) This information is not available.

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING PENSION PAYABLE TO PERSONS SIXTY-FIVE YEARS OF AGE AND OVER CONTINGENT UPON RESIDENCE IN CANADA

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that Bill C-35, to amend the Old Age Security Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Lalonde moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in speaking to Bill C-35, I am pleased at the outset to thank all hon. members who participated in the debate on second reading and in the discussions of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. As was noted on these occasions, the provisions of the bill are important for all residents of Canada, especially for those who have earned social security credits in other countries but who are deprived of foreign benefits in the absence of international agreements. Now that a general consensus has been reached concerning these provisions, I trust that hon. members will want to give the bill speedy passage.

The constructive suggestions made by hon. members on all sides of the House in considering this bill are a matter of public record. I would therefore like to describe briefly certain of the measures which my department has taken in responding to them.

[Mr. MacKay.]

In addition to the public information campaign, to which I referred in committee, for conveying the provisions of the bill accurately to the general public, I intend to continue our efforts to inform fully all members of program developments. As a result of the arrangements for closer liaison between constituency offices and OAS regional offices which my department inaugurated last December, our regional directors report that the level of service to pensioners has improved and that GIS renewals are being handled more effectively. This is due in large part to the more prominent role being played by hon. members and their constituency offices in handling inquiries from pensioners. For its part, the department has improved its field services through the establishment of 76 itinerant offices. In combination, these measures have led to a more efficient resolution of pensioner problems and, in most cases, to same day replies.

My department intends to reinforce this link by providing program information to constituency offices, as we have done during the initial phases of this bill. I will, of course, continue to welcome the comments of hon. members on our progress in this area.

When the standing committee was examining the bill the other evening, one hon. member raised an objection to the fact that we require the pensioner to sign jointly with his spouse the application for spouse's allowance benefits. I undertook at that time to investigate whether a pensioner had ever refused to sign an application for spouse's benefits. Upon investigation we could find only one instance of a pensioner refusing to sign the spouse's application out of over 75,000 benefits being paid, and even this particular instance could well be justified since in some instances the fact that a spouse's allowance would be granted could result in lower GIS benefits for the pensioner. The dual signing requirement would therefore not appear to be a significant problem. At the same time there are good reasons for having this procedure.

The dual signatures give some assurance, first of all, that the couple are indeed married or have a common law relationship and are living together. The dual signatures also mean that we have the spouse's acceptance of the fact that his or her GIS may be varied downward in accordance with the rates payable under the spouse's allowance program. Therefore it would seem to be the best course to leave the matter the way it is.

[Translation]

It is also the government's intention to broaden the options feature under the GIS and spouse's allowance programs to provide compensation for reductions in Canada Pension Plan benefits and for cessation or reduction of alimony payments or of private carrier disability insurance payments.

GIS and spouse's allowance benefits are payable on a fiscal year basis and are based on income received in the previous calendar year. However, when a person suffers a loss of income due to termination or reduction of private pension benefits, GIS and spouse's allowance benefits may be recalculated on the basis of the estimated reduced income for the current calendar year, thus allowing for an increase in these income-tested benefits.

Currently, the old age security regulations governing this issue do not include CPP/QPP survivors' and disability benefits, alimony or private disability insurance payments. My officials have recently reviewed this issue and have concluded that the option provisions currently covering annuity payments, unemployment insurance benefits plus superannuation and other private pension payments should also cover supplementary CPP/QPP benefits, alimony and private disability insurance payments.

I wish to thank the hon. member for Gatineau (Mr. Clermont) in particular for having brought the matter to the attention of the committee.

The government therefore intends to amend the old age security regulations so that the new option provisions become effective with the proclamation date of this bill. In the meantime, my officials will continue to study this matter with a view to clarifying whether other income items should be added to the list used to determine entitlement to income-tested benefits under the old age security program.

[English]

Time does not permit me to review all the helpful suggestions made and the efforts being deployed in following them up. The primary objectives of Bill C-35 are to permit international agreements, and to provide greater equity in the treatment of beneficiaries and consistency among the three tiers of the Canadian retirement income system. Therefore, in once again thanking all concerned for their contribution toward achieving these objectives—and assuring them of the continuing co-operation of my officials and myself—I would urge upon all hon. members the bill's speedy passage.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, as has been stated, we do not intend to hold up this bill unduly because the vast majority of us who have had anything to do with it through second reading stage, committee stage, and now third reading, find there are matters in it that have been outstanding for a considerable time which need a little tidying up.

I was pleased to note that the minister had reviewed the position which was brought to his attention by one of the lady members with regard to joint applications. It is interesting to note that out of 75,000 joint applications there was only one which was a problem, which really indicates that there is no problem whatsoever.

I am also appreciative of the fact that the minister indicated to us that certain exceptions will be made in the GIS. He mentioned that in a few cases it would be counted as income. I would respectfully point out to the minister that in committee he indicated some 18 different examples of income which would reduce GIS. As I understand it, he is looking into this matter very thoroughly. It seems to me that if anyone needs assistance in this country, it is certainly our senior citizens, to whom we owe a considerable debt, and I hope the minister will be active in this regard and that in the near future he will come up with further exemptions which would allow long-run financial assistance to our senior citizens.

I would like to take a little bit of time to review this legislation. Changes in the residency requirement respecting old age security so that the pension is earned by residents at the rate of one-fortieth of the eventual full pension for each one year of residence in Canada after age 18 mean that in order to receive the full pension one must be legally resident in Canada for 40 years. Any length of residence less than 40 years would qualify a person for an OAS pension which is a portion of the full pension calculated at the rate of one-fortieth for each year. The present residency rules create a situation whereby one either qualifies for pension or does not receive one at all. This is certainly a hardship. We have now done away with the all or nothing at all provision with respect to OAS. I must say that that is a commendable step, and it will certainly assist many people.

I think this bill is very important, and it will seem even more important when I indicate what can happen to some people who are being shortchanged. On the international level, to protect the acquired social security credits of our residents who migrate across international borders during their active years, as a result of this bill we can negotiate reciprocal agreements with other countries similar to those already in existence. This would facilitate the receipt of pension credits accumulated by immigrants in their country of origin though they now reside in Canada. Reciprocal agreements make social security portable between contracting countries and allow for the co-ordination of their social security programs.

As I understand it, we do not need this bill to start negotiating with countries such as Italy, France, the United Kingdom, Bermuda, Jamaica, etc., but it is the expressed intention of the minister to start, if not continue, discussions with the various countries so that we can be in a position to execute the documents as soon as this bill is proclaimed. As I understand it, the bill will be proclaimed as soon as possible, but the earliest date the minister can see right now is July 1.

I hope that on further reflection the minister will be able to settle on an earlier date because I do not know why, if this bill is passed tonight or perhaps tomorrow, it cannot be implemented a little earlier. In any event, we at least know he has a target date of July 1.

I would like to put on the record what this new residency requirement actually does. There has been a lot of misunderstanding. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) asked me—and I was very honoured—to second his motion regarding the press, on February 10. Not having read the bill to know what it is all about, the press, unwittingly perhaps, projected a feeling by way of reports which left people confused with respect to what is really required. I would like to put the following on the record:

Q. To whom would the new residence rules apply?

A. After a transition period of 40 years, to everybody. During the transition period, however, only to residents of Canada under the age of 25 when the new rules come into force, and to anyone, irrespective of age, who is not now residing in Canada or who has not had prior legal residence here after the age of 18.

That is an important statement. It indicates that the new rules apply during the transition period only to residents of Canada under the age of 25, and those coming into Canada. That is one point.

There is another point. This does get a little fuzzy unless one is extremely careful, and I want to follow it up. Regarding to whom the new residence rules apply, persons 25 or over residing in Canada or having had prior legal residence here after the age of 18 will have the opportunity, as they have now, to qualify for a full pension under the existing residence requirements. That means the present law. If they cannot qualify for a full pension under the existing rules, they could receive a partial pension related to their years of residence in Canada, under the new rules. That means that these people will have a choice, and this is where we have to be extremely careful. This is why I pointed out to the minister that we must advertise in order to bring about full awareness of the implications of the matter I just spoke of because, if one is not careful, one can be shortchanged. If people do not know what this bill is all about, they may take an early pension and get less than the amount to which they would really be entitled had they known the implications of applying for an earlier pension.

I know the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre likes to have credit given to him when it is due. He brought home very forcibly a problem which can arise. I would like to read from the committee report of February 22 wherein the hon. member was concerned about a person who would be entitled to twenty-nine fortieths of a pension because that person had that amount of time, but if he waited a further month he could have been entitled to thirty fortieths, if I can put it that way. This means that that has to be properly advertised.

By asking for an early pension a person can shortchange himself for the sake of one month. At page 19:15 the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is reported to have said the following:

> Let me give you this example. I have picked figures that build up my case, but it is a case that could take place. Somebody is in Canada now who is over 25, which puts him in the category of having the choice. He stays here until he is 43—that is 18 years—and then he goes away. He comes back at age 62. So, at age 65 he has had 18 years that he was here earlier and three more, which makes 21. So, under the new rule he qualifies for 21/40ths of the pension.
> MR. KNOWLES (WINNIPEG NORTH CENTRE): But let us take that same person who had 18 years here before. Under the old rule, on the three for one basis, that is worth six years. He has now been here from age 62 to 65, three years, that is nine years. If he waited one more year, instead of getting 21/40ths of the pension he would get 100 per cent under the old rule. I do not think it is good enough just to spell out the rules. I think the person who comes along with that record should be told, 'Look, brother, one more year and you will get 100 per cent instead of 21/40ths.'

That is what I mean by a shortchange provision. We are very happy to have had the wisdom and expertise of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, who zeroed in on this, but what do we intend to do? Well, the minister says he realizes that if people are not careful they will be shortchanged, and once they are shortchanged there will be no turning back. We cannot turn back the clock, although the minister said that perhaps there would be some consideration given. However, the way the act is drafted, once a person applies and his application is approved, he has had it. In that way people can be shortchanged.

I am pleased that the minister mentioned the new liaison he has with the regional offices which are dealing with local constituencies in order to help senior citizens understand not only OAS but everything else which has to be done in terms of completing forms. We are concerned about whether there will be proper counselling. They should be told, "Under the regulations, if you take this pension now you are going to be shortchanged, so wait a month or two years, depending upon the circumstances, and you will be able to take full advantage of the act."

What I asked for, what I think the minister will do, and what should be done, is the provision of counselling services immediately the act is proclaimed so that no one will be shortchanged. In other words, I do not want the onus to be on the applicant; I want the onus to be on the government to protect our senior citizens. The minister says he understands that, and will move in that direction, not only on the domestic level but internationally as well. It is extremely important that people involved in this type of program not be shortchanged. I know the minister has been said to be a hard nut at times, but in connection with our senior citizens he seems to have some sympathy—except in one area, the spouse's allowance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Terrible!

Mr. Alexander: Let me bring up another matter which was mentioned in committee. I am not going to be partisan because it is not a partisan matter. The government talks about restraint but it has spent $1 million trying to defend the indefensible—wage and price controls. I asked the minister, and he agreed, to find money to introduce an advertising program to publicize the changes. I know he has shafted all the municipalities with respect to urban transit, but this particular matter I speak of is extremely important.

I must give the minister credit for a paper which he had prepared setting forth all the hypothetical questions and answers. I asked him and he agreed—he is nodding his head affirmatively so he thinks this is a good point—to find the money for an advertising campaign to let senior citizens know the effect of this bill, particularly those who will be taking advantage of the choices offered.

In amending the Old Age Security Act the minister had to refer to the spouse's allowance, much to his disappointment and chagrin. This is one of the most draconian and callous measures the government could possibly conceive. It is a very simple procedure, but the minister opened up a hornets' nest and has no sympathy for the people involved.

First of all, there are people living together—they do not even have to be married. They can be living in sin, but I do not want to get involved in that because we raised hell about it before. If the minister's morality leans that way, that is his business. If one spouse is 65 and the other spouse between 60 and 64—under 65—the younger is entitled to a spouse's allowance. The spouse's allowance was set up because it was recognized that two people could not live on one pension, so it was a good principle. But the minister goes along with the fact that when the person receiving the old age pension dies, the one receiving the spouse's allowance no longer gets it. If they are receiving a combined pension of $420 and the one on old age security dies, then the survivor gets nothing.

I do not know why the minister is so hard in this respect. His position is indefensible. There are 200 elderly people who get a message of condolence every month when the spouse dies but then we tell them they are not going to get any money and that they can go on welfare or social assistance. That is not the same thing, Mr. Speaker. Once a person receives an income as a right, which he or she will as a result of this legislation, then I cannot understand why the minister is insistent on cutting the survivor spouse's allowance off. That does not make sense; it is draconian; it is callous. I hope the minister will have second thoughts about this. He will probably give a lot of excuses, but we cannot accept them.

I should also point out that the spouse's allowance is discriminatory. The minister would be better advised to wait until he brings in social security legislation. If he thinks he can win the approval of the provinces to a guaranteed annual income, he would be better to wait until such time as the country can afford it, otherwise he will only alienate the senior citizens. Those between age 60 and 64 who are living with someone, married or not, are recognized, but widows, widowers, spinsters, bachelors and separated people in the same age group are left out. That is blatant discrimination and has no place in government policy. The principle is wrong and we on this side resent it. We shall continue to hammer home the fact that the death of one spouse should not disentitle the other. The minister is going to have to see to it that these people are recognized.

I think I have covered the important points, Mr. Speaker, and I know my colleagues will have something to say on the bill. It moves in the right direction. The old age security pension will now be based on periods of residence, and that is a good thing. When the bill is passed, the "all or nothing" law will be removed, and if a person desires he or she can acquire a portion of the pension. Some 500,000 people in the country will be affected by the new reciprocal agreements. There are countless hundreds concerned about pensions from Great Britain who have not been able to acquire either the escalation in the principal payment of the pension or the escalation itself. Once these agreements are entered into Canadians living abroad will be able to take advantage of the pension there and those who come here from abroad can take advantage of pensions they cannot draw now.

We endorse this bill, Mr. Speaker, we hope the minister will introduce the counselling service which is extremely important because of the choice, and that he can spend some money on advertising. If the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) can spend money flying the old Learjet surely we can get money to advertise the new rules that will affect so many people.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated when I spoke on behalf of the New Democratic Party on second reading, we support the principle of this bill, which has the effect of establishing a new basis with respect to the residency requirements for old age security. That is still our position. Not only do we support it, we welcome it because we believe that what is being proposed will solve a number of problems and put things on a basis of fairness. However, I shall have something more to say about that in a few minutes.

Of course during the course of my remarks I shall say something about the things not in the bill and which ought to be in it. Likewise, I shall speak with strong feeling about one feature of the Old Age Security Act which is being continued by this legislation without any attempt to correct a flagrant injustice involved therein.

Having said that we support the change this bill will establish in the residency requirements, I think I should put on record again the motion this House passed under Standing Order 43 on Thursday, February 10, as reported on page 2905 of Hansard. I had the privilege of moving the motion. It was seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander), and reads in these words:

> That this House urges the media to make it clear to the people of Canada that anyone now in Canada who is 25 years of age or over will not be affected by the new rules regarding old age security but will, on reaching age 65, be able to qualify under the residence rules now in effect for the full amount of the basic pension.

Not only did the House pass the motion unanimously, but the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) read it into the record when the standing committee met to deal with the bill. He gave that plea his approval. Emphasizing this aspect of the matter at the beginning of one's speech may seem to be a bit of a departure from the broad principles of the legislation, but my experience and correspondence tell me that it must be emphasized.

Let me make it clear that I think many of the provisions in the new rules are good. I shall say why I think so in a moment. In the meantime many Canadians now in this country, when they hear about the new rules, are confused and concerned lest they will get less pension than they thought they would receive.

I think all in this House agree that we want it to be understood that anybody who is in Canada on the day this new law is proclaimed, which I understand is to be July 1, 1977, who is 25 years of age or older, still has the right to qualify under the old rules, because the law will provide precisely that any such person can choose as between the old rule and the new rule, whichever is to the benefit of that person. But even after we have settled these things and the press has reported them, we will still get letters and inquiries. People are concerned about these things. The minister says that he will give the matter publicity. I hope that that publicity, together with what we are saying, will relieve the anxiety of those now in the country who fear that something will happen to the amount of pension they will get.

The present full pension is available to anyone who has resided the last ten years before age 65 in Canada or who meets the various rules which can be substituted for that requirement. Such people will still be able to get the full pension.

Since I have said so much about the applicability of the old rules to those who are now in this country, why am I speaking favourably about the new rules; why do we bother with them? There are two main reasons for the new rules. First, they will make it possible for persons who have left Canada, or persons who leave Canada before age 65 and who at present, unless they go through a pretty awkward routine, get nothing, to get a proportional amount of the pension. The new rule says that you get one fortieth of the full pension for each full year of residency in Canada after age 18. That means that persons now abroad who are not able to draw the old age security pension will, under the new rules, if they spent 15, 20 or 30 years in Canada after age 18, be able to apply for a prorated portion of the old age security pension. It is unfortunate that many of these people have been denied pensions. I think the rule which made it possible for some individuals to get the pension by coming back and spending a year in Canada at age 64 or 65 was fair, but impossible for many people to meet. Sir, I think it is good that we are making this provision.

The other side of the coin is not so easy to defend initially; certainly it is not so easy to praise, because it suggests that certain persons may get a lesser pension. Those who might get less down the road sometime are persons who come to Canada after this bill becomes law and are here after age 18 for less than 40 years. They will get only that number of fortieths represented by the number of years they have been here after age 18. Since we do not pay the pension to those who have left, why should we not be fair and treat both those who have come and those who have gone away in the same way?

What is the rest of the picture? Under this law reciprocal arrangements will be possible with other countries, and as we gain experience with this new law we shall see that there will be a great many persons in Canada who will be drawing pensions made up of a portion earned while they were in Canada, and a portion earned while they were in some other country, or perhaps two or three other countries. I am satisfied that when this whole process is in full working order, in many of those cases the situation will be much better than now and that many individuals will have a better total pension than they can now receive. As I say, this matter must be based on fairness.

The thing that strikes me as unfair at the moment is this: A person can be born in this country and live here until he is 55 years of age and then go away; but unless he comes back for that other year about which we all know, he gets nothing. On the other hand a person can come to this country at age 55 and ten years later get the full pension. Clearly, the all or nothing arrangement contains elements of unfairness. This legislation seeks to correct that unfairness, and in that respect we think it is a good idea.

I shall return to that in a moment. Before I do so may I say that in addition to the need to clear up the confusion existing in the minds of many who are now in this country, it will also be necessary to clear up the confusion which may arise once the new régime is in operation. I thank the hon. member for Hamilton West, a good friend, for making it unnecessary for me to include all that I might have put into my speech, by quoting what I said in the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. I appreciate his compliment, that I made the case with the examples I gave. Actually, I gave two examples.

When the new rule comes into effect, some persons will get less than they would otherwise be entitled to if they apply at the wrong time. The scheme will be worked on the basis of full years. If a person applies when he has 29 years and 11 months of residency, he will get less than if he had waited another month, and had 30 years of residency. In other words, he would get twenty-nine fortieths instead of thirty fortieths. He should be advised to wait one more month.

Then there will be cases of those who, by waiting a year or two, might qualify under the old rule and get 100 per cent pension, whereas under the new rule they would get less. I am happy to say that the response we got in the standing committee to the two examples I raised was an assurance, especially from public service officials representing the department, that a counselling service for dealing with such cases will be established.

I testify to what the minister has said, that the regional old age security offices have been developing contacts with our constituency offices and that counselling services are more available than they used to be. I am glad to know that when the new system gets going there will be a still more active counselling service. It can be very important to a person whether he applies, say, this month or next. When you add the escalation factor, in the years down the road, the point at which a person applies can make a tremendous difference. It is no use applying and then realizing one should have waited a month. It is too late, then. The basic amount given is the basic amount for life. So I am glad this counselling is to be put in place.

The legislation, generally, is the kind we can support. The two elements of confusion we have been talking about, the confusion which exists right away on the part of those who are here, and the confusion which can come down the road a bit, need to be dealt with and I am glad the department intends to do so.

Despite the approval I have given to the change of residence rules, there is one element which disturbs me. I am not going to make a big fuss about it today because I think the fuss will have to be made in ten or 11 years' time, so hon. members can count on me 10 or 11 years from now to raise the point I have in mind—provided some of them are still here!

We are saying that a year's residence in Canada after age 18 gives you a fortieth of the pension, whether you are born here or came as an immigrant, whatever the age was. That is complete mathematical fairness. But I also look at it this way: a person who lives in Canada until he is 35, 40, 50, pick any age you want, and who then goes away, has maybe taken a slightly different attitude than the person who comes here even as late as age 55. The ones who have gone away from Canada and left—in some cases it would be for health reasons; that is one of the main reasons why I am delighted about this bill—and in other cases it might be for economic reasons because they can pick up a pension or a higher income in some other way—have left the country, have shaken the dust of Canada off their shoes, but those who have come here have come by choice; they have decided they want to live here for the rest of their days. It may be just a bit tough to tell such persons that because they were here only ten or 15 years prior to age 55 they will get only ten or fifteen fortieths of the pension. The reason I am not unduly concerned about this is because I have been here long enough to know that when injustices of that kind develop something is usually done about them. This will not show up in the next 10 or 11 years.

During the next eight or nine years, the old rules will apply and the persons who come here late in life will not qualify under either set of rules. In about 10 or 11 years from now, you watch, there will be members getting up in this House and saying, "I have got correspondence, I have got cases of persons who have come here late in life, who have made this country their home, who have made a contribution, and some of them will get only ten or fifteen fortieths of the pension." And the minister over there will say ten or 15 years from now, "Oh, but that person can get the full GIS." And we will say from this side—or maybe we shall be over there—"Ten fortieths or fifteen fortieths of the basic pension and the full GIS don't add up to the amount he would get if he got the full pension, and the full GIS." And the minister of that day, if he is anything like the present minister, will say, "Oh, but such persons can apply for social assistance." Social assistance, relief, welfare, whatever you call it, still has a stigma attached to it no matter how much you say it is a right under the law. I believe that if the day comes when we realize that Canada is not being fair to some of our new Canadians, we shall correct it.

I say that, Mr. Speaker, because I remember the days when no pensions could be taken out of Canada at all. And then we got it so you could take it if you had been here for 25 years. Later we changed that to 20 years. I remember the days when missionaries who had spent their lives abroad could not get the pension in Canada. But, as these things came to light parliament had the decency to correct them. Therefore I believe that ten or 11 years from now, if it does become apparent that we are not being fair to the immigrants who have come to this country and have been here only ten or 15 years, we will at that time do something about it. I would like to have it on the record now, and it comes from one who supports the bill, that this is a situation we may have to deal with a decade hence.

An hon. Member: I don't think I shall be around.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I hear a number of remarks from over there. Some of my hon. friends do not seem to want to stay around here. This is a good place to stay.

An hon. Member: He can listen as well as speak.

Mr. Lalonde: He can do both.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am glad to see that the Minister of National Health and Welfare has decided to come down to this end of the Chamber so he can hear me better.

Mr. Lalonde: I want to hear the words of wisdom.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I hope he will like what I am going to say now, as well. I think that on a day like this, when we are amending the Old Age Security Act, it should be said, and who better to say it than a member of the opposition, that I think our Old Age Security Act and Canada Pension Plan legislation together make up one of the best provisions for retirement security you can find anywhere.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In principle, old age security and the Canada Pension Plan are good. You know I believe we should increase the amount and lower the age, but in principle not only are they good—

An hon. Member: They are the best in the world.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That sounds like the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). Everything he speaks of is the best in the world.

An hon. Member: Like the government. It is the best in the world.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Listen! If you want me to make a speech about how the Liberals were forced to bring these things in, I shall do so. I have been here. I know the history. But I want to say to my hon. friends opposite who are now in a receptive mood and agreeing with me, that I see the day coming when retirement security, pensions for people generally will be based even more than they are today on the Old Age Security Act, and the Canada Pension Plan.

There is a great pension debate going on in the country right now. Do you know why that debate is going on? It is because private plans cannot fill the bill. Private plans cannot provide escalation, and all this campaign against escalation of public service pensions by private interests is just because they cannot do it.

Dr. Noel Hall in his report on railway pensions a while ago said that unless private pension plans can come through with escalation to keep pension plans up to the cost of living, they will fail. And I think they will. So I believe that what we need is to extend the Canada Pension Plan so that it provides not just 25 per cent of the income adjusted and so on of one's best working years, but 50 or 75 per cent.

Now I am back to what I was saying a moment ago when I was agreeing with my friends across the way that the concept of a basic flat pension, such as old age security, which is paid to everyone who reaches retirement age without any means test at all, plus an earnings-related pension on top of that, such as the Canada Pension Plan provides, is good. Not only is it good but it is the kind of thing that will provide the answer to failing private pension plans.

I completely support the position that is being taken by the Public Service Alliance of Canada in the advertising it has been spreading across the country these last few days to the effect that it is the private plans generally which are unfair to Canadians. Those who receive pensions from private pension plans represent only 40 per cent of the population of Canada. But who pays for them? The entire population.

We have a pension situation in Canada today in which everybody pays, but only some get good pensions. It would be far better to have everybody pay on an ability to pay basis, and everybody get adequate old age security under the Old Age Security Act and the Canada Pension Plan. I plead very strongly that we move in that direction and that we move fairly soon. These things can move faster than one believes.

I suppose I have said this before, but I can remember when I was a new, young member sitting in the back row advocating the removal of the means tests, advocating pensions of $30 a month when it was $20, and advocating a lowering of the age. Some of my Conservative friends who sat nearby would say to me, "You have a good and bright idea, Stanley, but it will never come about; you are too futuristic". We have gone beyond even my dreams when I first came here, Mr. Speaker. However, I am not dreaming now but I am being very realistic when I say that the kind of economy we have today, the whole business of pension funds and indexing, is such that the real challenge is for government to improve old age security, to extend the Canada Pension Plan, and to let these two be the main basis for retirement security for all our peoples.

I had better not forget to look at the clock now and again, Mr. Speaker, because there is something I do want to do before my time runs out. Again I want to thank the minister for one improvement which was put into the legislation, and that has to do with grandparents who are drawing OAS and GIS and also getting family allowance because they are bringing up their grandchildren. That has been taken care of in the legislation, but I still do not know why the minister could not have made this provision retroactive to cover the situation as of today. Here's hoping that somehow this will be done.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

I welcome too his announcement today that the regulations respecting the right to have one's GIS based on the current year's income instead of the last year's will be revised so that most forms of income which cease will not have the effect of delaying an increase or causing a decrease in the guaranteed income supplement. I am glad that these steps have been taken.

This brings me to the last point, and by some strange coincidence it is the same subject the hon. member for Hamilton West spoke of at the end of his remarks this afternoon, namely, the spouse's allowance. I am glad to see the hon. member for York South (Mrs. Appolloni) in her seat this afternoon because I felt very encouraged by the stand she took on the spouse's allowance in a number of respects when we were dealing with this matter in the committee the other day. I noticed that the Minister of National Health and Welfare referred to one Liberal by name. He accepted his idea, but he referred to another Liberal member without giving her name because he had obviously not accepted her idea. When I say "his" and "her" that straightens it out, does it not?

The minister did answer one of the points made by the hon. member from York South, but I thought he brushed it aside with his usual capacity for not getting the point. My hon. friend from York South does not like the fact, because she is a woman and thinks that women should have equal rights, that a woman has to have her husband sign the application for spouse's allowance. I know it works both ways and the husband might have to ask the wife, but in most cases the wife is the younger spouse, and in practical terms this is the way it works out.

The minister says today that he has had his officials look at the matter and out of 75,000 applications there was only one case, says he, where spouse's allowance was not granted because the elder spouse would not sign the application. But the minister missed the point completely. It is not whether the couple gets the spouse's allowance; it is the indignity that the woman has to go through to get her husband, ornery though he may be, to sign the application.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I tried to make this point yesterday in a motion under Standing Order 43, to which the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) (Mrs. Campagnolo) said "Hear, hear" but to which others over there said "No", when I complained that it is contrary to the principles of equal rights and human justice, and all the rest of it, to say to a woman between the age of 60 and 65 that she cannot get a pension unless she produces a husband. In other words, neither a spinster nor a widow qualifies.

This whole set-up is totally wrong. I am delighted that the hon. member for Hamilton West concentrated on it as he did in the latter part of his speech, and I was pleased with the stand which the hon. member for York South took on the matter in committee the other day. But no matter how you slice it, Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that the government is saying to persons between 60 and 65 that, in addition to a means test, they have to undergo a marital test. If you have a husband or a wife and you meet the other two conditions, you get the allowance; if you do not have a husband, or if you are a man and you do not have a wife, you do not get it.

The minister says that his aim was to solve the problem of two people trying to live on one pension. When we come back and tell him that if that is impossible, how can he expect one person to live on no pension, his reply is that social assistance is also a right. I hope that we made our point in committee. This is the line that can be taken in the comfort of the House of Commons, or in the comfort of the committee room or the minister's office, but out there in Canada people who have to apply for social assistance, relief, or welfare, feel it is a stigma, that there is shame attached to it. What they want is a pension as of right.

The minister also says that I am trying to use the back door to get pensions at 60. I do not care whether it is the back door, the side door, the front door, or coming down the chimney, the fact is that I do want pensions available at 60. I am satisfied to have them available between the age of 60 and 65 for those out of the labour market. I think that is a reasonable test. But to have a marital test and to say to a woman that she does not qualify for a pension unless she has a husband is completely contrary to the Bill of Rights.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has the floor.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, but I am enjoying the help. I am not so concerned about pensions that are paid in common law situations because in many cases there are explanations. But if the allowance is paid to both spouses, under common law, surely it can be paid to spinsters and widows.

As I say, Mr. Speaker, I am glad the hon. member for York South got into this question the other day. My hon. friend from Hamilton West raised the question, where was she in 1975? Most Canadians did not realize this in 1975. We did. The hon. member for Hamilton West, the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), and some of the rest of us fought hard several years ago to try to get something done. As months went on and people became aware of it, they were horrified. Even newspapers now carry editorials expressing horror at this sort of thing. I think the whole question ought to be reviewed, and before I sit down I shall give the House a chance to vote on a motion that would call for the whole question of the spouse's allowance to be reviewed.

It is wrong to deny the spouse's allowance to a spinster or widow. I would give it to everyone in that bracket who is out of the labour market. That is my position, and everyone knows it. But it seems to me that it is the ultimate in cruelty and meanness to say to a wife who is 62 or 63 and is on the spouse's allowance that, when her 67 or 68 year old husband dies, her spouse's allowance will be cut off. According to statistics, that is happening to about 200 Canadians a month. There is no defence for it at all. That phase of the matter should be reviewed, and reviewed seriously right away.

The minister is quite right when he says I want to go further. I want pensions available to all at age 60 who are out of the labour market. As a lifetime opponent of means tests, it will be hard for me to say that I will accept some kind of income test for anyone between 60 and 65. However, the test I cannot accept is a marital test. It is just not fitting and I feel that this House should say so.

After all the kind things I have said about my friend from York South, and I appreciate what she did in committee the other day, I hope that she will get into this and give her support at this stage.

An hon. Member: And that she won't get axed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): As the hon. member says, she should not get axed. As I said, I thought it very interesting that the minister named the Liberal whose suggestion he accepted but did not name the Liberal whose suggestion he rejected.

I have made it quite clear, as I hope I have a good many times, that what we have done in the social security field in the years I have been here is tremendous, comparing what it is today—

Mr. Caccia: All Liberal legislation.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The Tories did a little, but most of it has been Liberal legislation. However, every last bit of it was because the Liberals were prodded from this side of the House right from the beginning. The reason we on this side are still prodding is because we believe it will work. We believe we will yet get pensions at 60, certainly between 60 and 65 for all those out of the labour market. If that cannot be done in this session, we will have to go a step at a time. If, for example, when we bring down the pension age we have to do it from 65 to 64, to 63, to 62, to 61, to 60, that is fine. However, there is one thing we can surely bring an end to right away, that is, cutting off the pension and the allowance of the spouse who becomes a widow before she reaches 65.

When we were debating veterans affairs the other day, I told the story of the wife of a veteran in New Brunswick. The veteran is on a 15 per cent disability pension, old age security, the guaranteed income supplement, and war veterans allowance. As she is about to turn 60, she has been told she must apply for the spouse's allowance. That is the way the law reads. She will get the spouse's allowance, the veteran's allowance will be cut off and they will be right where they were in terms of dollars.

This woman has asked what will happen if her husband dies before she is 65. She will be out of everything. His disability pension drops because it is less than 48 per cent, the old age security drops, the guaranteed income supplement drops, and the spouse's allowance drops. She can apply for war veteran's allowance under a means test. She can apply for welfare. The Minister of National Health and Welfare says that is a right because it is in the law. I say it has stigma and shame attached to it so it is not good enough.

That is a potential case. That woman's husband is at an age and his health is such that this is likely to happen to her. It is now happening to 200 people a month, most of whom are women. The least this House can do is put an end to that. This is why I want the matter to be reviewed.

Bill C-35 has two clauses which deal with the spouse's allowance, Clauses 8 and 9. They have to be there because the spouse's allowance is being recast to fit the new rules. That is what Clause 8 does. Clause 9 makes it doubly sure that when a spouse becomes a widow, her spouse's allowance stops.

Clauses 8 and 9 of this bill should be reviewed by the committee. There is no hurry. The minister said that the intended proclamation date is July 1. It would not delay getting this legislation into effect. It would not detract from our readiness to support the legislation as a whole to support the review I am asking. I insist that what we are doing to women between 60 and 65 ought to be reconsidered and changed. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters):

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that", and by substituting therefor the following words:

"Bill C-35 be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs for the purpose of reconsidering Clauses 8 and 9 thereof."

As I have already said, Clauses 8 and 9 deal with the spouse's allowance. If the committee is worth its salt, it will recommend that a change be made in the provision of spouse's allowances. If we will do that, then Bill C-35 would be one that, as amended, we could pass with great pride.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is the House ready for the question?

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would not like to deprive my colleague of the opportunity to make some comments, so if you would allow me I could speak after him.

[English]

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I thought because of the motion that was introduced we would have an opportunity to make some reply with regard to the substantive part of that motion. I will not be long.

I am surprised. I have said that my colleague from Winnipeg North Centre was my friend. He is still my friend. However, in light of the fact we have been working so well together, I thought he could have given me a little notice. I say this with a great deal of respect. It is a good thing we happen to be on the same side of the fence this time.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

I hope that in the future the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who certainly knows his stuff, will not be so devious, and I say this with great respect, and at least give this side some indication. In the conversation we had around the corner and back of the curtain he gave me no idea that he was going to move this motion.

Having said that, having registered our concern, and having indicated that we object most adamantly, strenuously, and vigorously to the position the minister takes with regard to the death of a pensioner wiping out the income of the surviving spouse, and we cannot forgive the minister for this, we intend to support the motion of which we should have received some little notice. I just thought I would let you know what we think of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I would just like to say that the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) rose first and that is the reason I recognized him.

● (1620)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) may I say to him that I am glad to know, but I am not surprised, that he will support my amendment. May I just say to him that there is no requirement for giving notice of amendments which occur like this and, quite frankly, I thought that my friend might move the same amendment. To be brutally frank, I felt that if I told any members of the Conservative party what I was going to do, it would put the idea into their heads; so I just decided it was my right and that I would do it myself. But I am glad the hon. member will support my amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member he is getting into a debate, and I will recognize the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert).

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, now that the matter is settled between the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander), I would like to add a few words about that amendment to the Old Age Security Act. I am convinced that hon. members will not show any partisanship. I would not want for any reason whatever to make a political football out of our senior citizens. It does not matter whether the legislation is amended under a Liberal, Progressive Conservative, New Democractic or Social Credit government. What matters is for parliament to assume its responsibilities and give senior citizens this right to security. Moreover, if we consider mankind, we will realize that any human being seeks security from birth till death. Consider a baby in his crib, he is concerned for his security. He cries when he is apprehensive.

Most of the time, since it is the mother who looks after the children, the child will turn to her and call out: Mother! This means that something is bothering him and that he feels insecure.

Let us also observe, a little later, the student. When children start attending school, whether it be kindergarten, primary or secondary school, college or university, at all levels, they worry about security. They want some security. They want to be assured that their life will be trouble free and that their needs will be met.

Let us look a little later at teenagers, when they begin to feel a responsible part of society. Then they want absolute security. They work to secure it for themselves. And when they become adults and enter the labour market, let us consider all the labour demands and everything the unions will do to obtain security for their membership. This is further evidence that everybody is concerned with security.

All through his life, Mr. Speaker, a person works to ensure his security and to make sure that in his old age, when he is no longer able to work and earn a living, he will have the money and the income required to support himself. It is in this respect, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) so rightly said a while ago, that Canada has a social security scheme which is quite advanced and provides eligible senior citizens with the security they need. One only has to look to the south at the United States, and extremely powerful nation, to realize that our old age security pension scheme is superior to theirs. Which does not mean that we must rest on our laurels and show complacency instead of trying to improve this scheme within the possibilities available in Canada.

Again last weekend, I received representations from senior citizens, from people who are not yet 60 but who are having a hard time finding a job so as to be self-sufficient. I was told by the way that the most difficult time in life is between 50 and 65, because there is no quaranteed security. One cannot be sure of having a job or a guaranteed monthly or yearly income. So this is a period of insecurity, the most difficult period in life.

Mr. Speaker, even though I support the principle of the bill, even though I am pleased with the amendments designed to make the act more equitable for a larger number of people, whether they be immigrants or people who had to leave the country and return after a number of years, I feel such improvements are desirable and deserve to be supported, promoted and implemented. But the fact remains that under the act as it is now, Mr. Speaker, the pension is granted to people of 60 who are living with another person of 65 or more.

When this legislation was passed, I recall very well making comments in the House and urging the Minister of National Health and Welfare to amend the bill so as to respect the sacredness of marriage. Under this legislation, ever since its enactment there is no need to be married to be eligible for old age security. You only need to be 60 years of age, to live with a person of 65 without necessarily being married—to shack up—but to have been seen with an older person aged 65 or more. As I said then, I think this flies in the face of the divine institution that is family.

In fact, a family is composed of a husband, a wife and finally, when the circumstances are favourable, of children. But at 65, being husband and wife is just the same as on the day of marriage at age 20. The unfortunate thing in all this are representations, for example, like those made to me again last weekend, namely that when someone is aged 60, 62 or 63 and his spouse in wedlock or otherwise is 65, 66 or 68 and the later dies, the surviving spouse is left without a pension. That person loses everything and has to rely on welfare, a worse situation than before. Mr. Speaker, I submit to the minister that we should amend the act once more to authorize payment of the spouse's allowance to persons under 65 even where the qualifying pensioner has died, so as to prevent difficult situations.

This often has serious consequences not only for the person involved but also for his or her family. Because when someone has been counting on a guaranteed income and that income suddenly disappears, this creates very serious difficulties. That person must go on welfare and God knows, Mr. Speaker, it is not an easy matter these days to need welfare because regulations get tougher and tougher, they are implemented in a much tighter way than they used to be. It seems that the tougher the situation, the more stringently regulations are applied. A very great number of people are now in almost destitute circumstances, and it is an anomaly that in Canada we should be imposing in 1977 impossible circumstances on people in that age group.

It must be recognized that in general people 60 and over have been doing hard work all their lives, they have tried to earn a living, they contributed to Canada's development, building parishes, towns, cities and industries, day after day, through their work with their fellow citizens, in the hope that when they became disabled or older, society would recognize their contribution to Canada as a whole and that well-earned security would be generously forthcoming. Work is the reason for our being on earth, it is a gift of Providence. Working is fine, working is rewarding: that is what makes us achieve something, provided we get something out of it not only for today but also for tomorrow when there will be fewer paydays and as physical strength will start going down.

Mr. Speaker, I think the government is moving gradually in the right direction, but they should proceed much more quickly because the more they wait, the worse it gets. When changes are made, it is very often too late; the damage is done, the conditions have changed and our solutions are obsolete, because we live in a sick society.

My hon. friend opposite is smiling at me, as if I were telling him a cock-eyed story. However, I know that in a constituency like mine, just as in all the other ridings in Canada, there are hardship cases which give the shivers to those responsible for running a large and beautiful country like Canada, a country able to provide those of 60 and over with some security without their having to go through all kinds of procedures they know practically nothing about.

A few days ago, I met people who were looking for that kind of information, and yet I must commend the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) or his officials—

Mr. Fox: The minister of health!

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Yes, the minister of health or his officials; they work hand in hand, I believe. Information is enclosed in the envelopes with the pension cheques. I would ask him to see to it that this information is more explicit, more specific and detailed, so that these people may know where and to whom they should write to have a situation corrected.

I have already said it and I repeat it today. In the province of Quebec, in the district office for the Quebec area, at least those responsible for the old age security pensions and family allowances are competent. They get busy whenever you show them that a situation needs to be corrected.

Mr. Speaker, I wish I could pay the same compliment to all departments, all civil servants. Unfortunately, that is impossible. In some departments, the minister's instructions are completely ignored, civil servants could not care less about the authorities and the recommendations of hon. members who are delegated and elected by their fellow citizens; all these things are overlooked, ignored, those people could not care less.

That is why in Canada, at the present time, there exists in some groups a dissatisfaction which makes us shudder, which annoys and worries us; we should all together take a serious look into what is going on and work together, so that our fellow citizens, Canadians, both Francophones and Anglophones, can say that in Canada the administration is responsible and does everything in its power to give equal opportunities to all Canadians from all parts of the country.

Mr. Speaker, if we give ourselves the trouble of doing this all together, we will have made much progress and will make even more in coming months: time is of the essence. Mr. Speaker, it makes me boil to see ministers, civil servants and senators go on television on the French network of the CBC and say they are concerned about national unity, about the fate of Canada. But they are the ones who got us into this mess, by their laissez-faire, free and easy attitude. And now, throwing their arms up in the air, they cry out: Something must be done, the ship is going to sink.

Mr. Speaker, the time to act is not after the ship has been abandoned but while we are still aboard so we can row and get the ship in to port. Mr. Speaker, no wonder the ship of Canadian unity is drifting and many serious people are showing great concern about this. It is because we did not take our responsibilities when it was time to do so. Two or three weeks ago I raised a point during the adjournment motion at ten o'clock.

I submitted the idea that we should consider the possibility of granting pensions at 60, of lowering the age of early retirement for all those who want to leave the labour market and would then receive the OAS pension. The minister answered—which was quite expectable—by saying that there are thousands of unemployed people, housewives and forcibly retired people who are without work but who would still want to have this pension.

Mr. Speaker, to that I say they should sit down and seriously consider the appropriate statistics so as to figure out just how many people of 60 are on a payroll—men or women—and how many of those people pay into a retirement fund of any kind. Let them find out how many people would be willing to retire voluntarily to be able to do something else. And I do know that at 65 they are not all finished, I know there are still people able to work, to be efficient and useful in their environment, in their country, and that is why I want them to have that freedom to continue to work or retire. I am not thinking of something autocratic, dictatorial, but a voluntary thing.

Mr. Speaker, I think that after considering all those figures I am convinced you will find that Canada would be in a much better position to give them that security and allow young people who want to work to do so. There are still young people who want to work—my office is flooded every week with young people who come to my office to ask their member of parliament to help them find a job because they want to work—and I would much rather help them find a job than help them get unemployment insurance or social welfare benefits. Before 25, 30, 40, it is not time to live on pensions, it is time to build. But at 60 it is time to reap, to benefit from one's effort.

The government, the state, all together we should make an effort considering the rate of unemployment and the great number of unemployed who do not produce anything but to whom we must pay unemployment insurance or social welfare benefits to allow them to live. I think it would be right to tell older people: at 60, you have earned it, you have worked hard, the government is amending its legislation and is going to allow you to retire voluntarily at 60. And each of those people could be given a well deserved old age security. Mr. Speaker, in three or four months you would notice the change in this country because I know from my experience there are in my underdeveloped area of the south shore many people who find it rough, who barely make it, who do not have all the necessary income to allow them to face their daily needs and who would like very much to be able to enjoy the advantages of their country.

However, there are many young men and young women who have nothing to do and who would like to make some contribution. Mr. Speaker, it is not difficult to speak to young people, they are people like everyone else. I raised twelve of them and I never hesitated to speak to them and reprimand them when need be. They did not hate me for all that, and all the members who have children know it. We must make young people understand that in society they have both rights and obligations and that they must accept them if they really want their rights to be respected. They must start by doing their duty, and then demand that their rights be respected.

When we tell this to young people, they understand us and they end up by recognizing that we are right and by understanding that there must be a time in life to build, a time to develop, a time to sow and a time to reap, and that the time to reap is not when you are 20. It comes many years later. This is why I say that the time to reap has come for the people aged 60, and I am glad to hear serious people like the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander), the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and all hon. members, whatever their party, who have the same ideas and who want to work towards the same end so that we may pass a legislation which will respect the sacred character of the family and of marriage and which will still grant the right to security to any single person. It is not necessary to be married; people should receive old age security at 60 instead of having to live hypocritically with someone else to qualify immediately for old age security. The present legislation is terrible if we think about this and if we want to go to the bottom of things.

Mr. Speaker, I make this plea once again with all the strength that I have and with all the heart that God has given me. I urge the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) and all members of parliament to allow this legislation to be amended to make it as good as it can possibly be. Moreover, I believe that the amendment suggested by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is intelligent and logical. It is not a matter of thinking about things which do not exist and I would not like to see tomorrow's newspapers reporting to Canadians that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has moved an amendment to kill the bill. This is not the case and it is not in this spirit that the amendment has been moved. What is the substance of the amendment? That the bill be referred to the committee to be studied again and amended so that it truly meets the needs of this category of persons, whether they be married, widowed, bachelors or whatever; the only important requirement is to be 60 years of age.

Mr. Speaker, nobody can give us a guarantee that in two, three or five years, the legislation will not be amended again so that the age of eligibility for old age pension will again be reduced by a few years. That is evolution, evolution in the right direction, evolution toward ever better social, economic and financial benefits based on work and on a common will to work toward progress from one year to another.

Now, Mr. Speaker, while I accept the underlying principle of this bill, there are some improvements which I think should be made. By the way, if you would allow me to make my point I think that by tomorrow most members would share my view on the matter. It often happens here that motions are moved under Standing Order 43 which requires the unanimous consent of the House to have them put and although 264 members, that is 262 excluding the Chair may agree, if one shakes his head in dissent, the Speaker sees him and forgets all the others. Such are our standing orders! It is that much out-of-date.

It is not necessary to hear someone say no, he only has to shake his head in dissent and the motion cannot be put. However, under Standing Order 28, it is provided that any member who wants to speak in the House must rise and ask the permission of the Chair. To say no to a motion is saying something. So why not observe the rules? Why not rise and say: I object to this so that one's name will be recorded in the official report?

Mr. Speaker, I think that those few remarks that I made in good faith, in all honesty, in the interest of my country, will be favourably received and that the committee responsible for changing the procedures will take them into account, as it is an obsolete rule, and one should have the courage of one's convictions. If you do not want to give your unanimous consent, you should rise and say no. I think that all members would be pleased if we abided by the decision of the hon. member who said no.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I ask again the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), whom I consider as a gentleman, as a man aware of his responsibilities, to reflect further on the modest remarks I made on behalf of those people who truly deserve well of their country, who are in need, who are worried in the most difficult period of their life because they lose their strength, they still have the same needs but they get no income. Those people are worried and have difficult years when we could offer them a much happier life.

I think it should be the contribution of young people to those persons who built roads, schools, industries which allow them to have a better standard of living. It is for young people that we have devoted our life and it is the same process from one generation to the next. If the following generation succeeds better than we did we shall be very happy. I shall be the first to say: You achieved more than we did. But as we did everything we could, give us at least the chance in our old age to do more without worrying about our vital needs.

● (1650)

[English]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will be brief. Obviously all members of the House would like to improve social benefits in all areas. That is understandable, easy to propose and to push for when you are in opposition and do not have responsibility for spending public funds.

Mr. Epp: Oh, boy!

Mr. Lalonde: The House has heard the proposal for lowering the eligibility age to 60. This would mean an additional expenditure in 1977 alone for OAS, GIS and the CPP retirement program of some $2,035 million. That sum would be made up as follows: roughly $1.5 billion would be spent on OAS, $450 million on GIS, and $86 million on the Canada Pension Plan. That is the kind of money we are discussing.

We made certain proposals to the provinces in the course of the social security review. The House has been asked to consider the difficulties of those between the age of 60 and 65 only. I suggest that the problem of poverty in this country is far broader than that. At present, those in need in this country can be looked after by provincial assistance programs, to which the government contributes 50 per cent of the cost under the Canada Assistance Plan.

In the course of the social security review, we have proposed to the provinces a form of guaranteed income which would cover income support for those unable to work, whatever their age. It would cover those unable to work, whatever their age. It would cover those who are 59, 58, and 57 years old, as well as those between the ages of 60 and 65. We have proposed a program of income supplementation, a program to supplement the incomes of those still able to work and earn a living even though forced to downgrade their activities and earn a lower income than when they were active and in the prime of life. The provinces support this broad concept. We are looking at methods of implementing such a program. I hope that by the end of this year we shall have concluded reviews of techniques for administering such an approach. The provinces endorse this concept in principle. However, several provinces have indicated that they may not have the resources in the next few years with which to provide such a program to their citizens.

We are considering if in any way we can speed up the implementation of this program, either by the provinces or through the federally administered income tax system. I suggest that this proposal would be the best solution to poverty in this country. It has the advantage of being flexible, in the sense that those who want to continue working and are able to work will see their incomes improved. At the same time it is a characteristic of the program that it will be able to answer the needs of people, whatever their age.

I suggest that the patchwork proposal put forward this afternoon by the opposition is merely another band-aid; it will not deal broadly enough with the general poverty problem in this country. We, on my side of the House, are just as concerned as any hon. members opposite about poverty in this country.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Show us.

Mr. Lalonde: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said that he recognized that most of the social legislation of this country has been brought in at the initiative of Liberal governments. That has been the case in the past, and I am convinced it will remain so in years to come. We have no lesson to learn from anybody. I think our record in this respect bears examination by the citizens of this country, and that is exactly what the citizens of this country have been examining regularly, at election times.

If the amendment comes to a vote, I shall vote against it. I think that it is not a progressive suggestion. The proposal is just another piece of patchwork. I think the answer clearly lies in the area of a general program of income support and supplementation.

The whole question of retirement has become much more complex than some hon. members this afternoon have indicated. People in this country are living longer and longer, and more and more people would like to keep on working. At present there is pressure in many areas from people over 65 who have been forced to retire. They complain that they are forced to retire at 65, but would like to continue working and earning a living. They do not want to be forced to retire as they are forced to do at present, thanks to the provisions of private and public pension plans which make pensions available at 65. Many academics and specialists in old people's problems argue that we should consider introducing greater flexibility to our private and public pension systems.

The fact is that if we lower pensions to age 60, we shall see a repetition of what happened when we lowered the pension age to 65. Hon. members may remember that the universal pension was paid at age 70. When we began paying pensions on a selective basis to those aged 65, there was so much pressure from the public and private sectors to retire people at 65 that we ended up paying the universal pension at age 65. Employers and organizers of private pension schemes then made sure people retired at age 65, and they were forced out of the labour market. There is no reason to think that people will not be forced out of the labour market at age 60 in years to come, if we pay the old age pension at age 60 strictly on a universal basis. These factors must be considered independently of the additional $2 billion and increasing annual additional expenditure which would be necessary if the proposal were implemented. It is our responsibility to tell the Canadian public how and where we shall raise the money. Frankly, the opposition has not justified the argument on either ground.

I think the wave of the future will be a form of guaranteed income for the citizens of this country. It will be a two-tier system of income support for those unable to work, and a system of income supplementation for those who can work but do not earn enough to meet their needs. The government has proposed this, is working on it, and will bring it before the House in due course.

I suggest that the proposal of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is a reactionary approach to this particular issue, and not worthy of support.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Lalonde: Yes, certainly.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The minister mentioned how much it would cost to pay universal pensions at age 60. We have not been asking for that. Would he tell us how much it would cost to pay pensions to those between the ages of 60 and 65 who are out of the labour market? Would he also give what it would cost to extend to spouses who become widowed their pensions until age 65?

● (1700)

Mr. Lalonde: I do not have the figure for the latter part and it would be difficult to give because those 200 people the hon. member has mentioned, who would be losing the spouse's allowance every month are growing older. We must realize that some of these people will reach 65, and get the regular pension. I do not have those figures. As far as people out of the work force are concerned, the hon. member realizes, I hope that he is talking about spouses at home and many more. I do not have exact figures, but I can tell him that only for the GIS on top of OAS it would require $450 million, and that is the GIS part. The hon. member would have to add for these cases the OAS part to bring them up to the level of the maximum. So he is probably talking about a billion dollars.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): So you don't have the answer.

Mr. Lalonde: I will provide the figures.

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, being the member of parliament from Victoria where I have 19,600 old age pensioners in my constituency gives me more than a passing interest in this subject.

I listened with interest to the minister's remarks and I noticed the same omission as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) when the minister wished to point out how expensive old age pensions were. He included CPP, OAS, GIS and everybody over 60, and said how much it would cost. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre rightly pointed out that these were not the people we were talking about in this amendment. What we are talking about are the spouses, or the so-called spouses mentioned in the act, particularly in Clauses 8 and 9. A quick estimation is that if there are 200 who come on at the median age of 62½, each month they lose about $200 a month, which comes to about $40,000, and if you multiply that by 2½ years you get a fairly reasonable figure, nothing like $2 billion, not even a tenth of $2 billion. It is rather misleading to pretend when speaking to this amendment that we are talking about a $2 billion load on the taxpayer. The minister had the gall, I suppose that would be the word, to say the opposition was taking a band-aid approach and that these were patchwork amendments. This is not so at all. I suspect the minister speaks with a great deal of knowledge when he talks about band-aid approaches.

It is interesting to follow the history of Bill C-35. It has come from an announcement made almost a year ago by the minister that he intended to bring in a bill to make reciprocity of pensions possible in Canada. He made that statement last April. It takes a while to get used to the habit the government has of making announcements, and I suppose every time government ministers think they are going to bring in a good bill you can usually count on four or five special announcements about it. First, they announce they are going to bring it in, and then a month or so later they announce they are going to bring it in fairly quickly. And a couple of months later you get another announcement, with more and more fanfare with each announcement, and the third one will probably say they are going to bring it in almost immediately and it is already printed and waiting for the proper time. Then they start announcing they are trying to get it on their own order paper. Eventually, after ten months of prodding by the opposition to produce this bill, the minister finally produced it.

The bill is divided roughly into two main parts, the part dealing with partial pensions, and the part dealing with reciprocal pensions.

The part dealing with partial pensions is so complicated that I can hardly see how any ordinary person could forecast some of the questions that the bill will provoke. He will certainly not be able to tell the answers to some of the questions the bill will raise by way of partial pensions.

My hon. friend from Hamilton West and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre have drawn attention to the difficulties which will arise in making a sound financial judgment when a prospective pensioner reaches the age of 65 and qualifies under one or more of these schemes to draw a pension or a partial pension. It may well be there will be cases, as has been pointed out in committee, when a would-be recipient reaches the age of 65 and qualifies for a partial pension, that if he waits another year or two years he could qualify for a full pension. This is probably a simple matter for a person of private means, a retired member of parliament or cabinet minister, or anyone who is able to manage his own affairs successfully in the cut and thrust world we live in. He could soon work out how much he would be likely to draw if he waited for the full pension. He could then determine whether it was a good move to wait for the pension or to draw the partial pension.

It is interesting to think about what will happen to a person drawing a partial pension. You reach age 65 and are qualified for the minimum partial pension; you get a pension in 1977 dollars of $35 a month. It is as simple as that. It is a quarter of what you would get if you had a full pension, which at the present time is $140 a month. The granting of a partial pension is going to cause severe problems. It is going to lock in a new class of poverty-stricken pensioners. The minister knows full well that giving them a partial pension and the full guaranteed income supplement will not be a complete answer. We will have a couple drawing full pension and full GIS, getting $424 a month, but if another couple are drawing a quarter pension they get much less than that. If they draw a quarter of a pension, how are they to survive, because the figure of $424 is arrived at for a couple to enable them to sustain life and be sheltered? It is not there to permit any luxuries at all. It represents a basic pension.

The Ministry of National Health and Welfare has worked it out that it takes $424.74 to sustain the life of a couple. Now we are to have a new class who come in and instead of getting $141 a month each they are to get a much lower figure. They will get a quarter of the basic pension, $70, plus $160, which is $230 a month, on which to live. These people will go through our social assistance programs and welfare programs and be checked out very thoroughly. Remember, the government has already decided the basic necessity level of couples at $424. Yet this couple are expected to live on considerably less. This will create an additional problem.

The second part of the bill covers reciprocal pensions. This is a move in the right direction. For several years we have been asking for reciprocal pensions with other nations. Many of our friends and nations around the world have entered into agreements with each other providing for reciprocal pensions. Up until recently the only answer we could get from the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) was that Canada was quite willing but we could not find any other countries which would agree, and this was holding us up. If that was truly the case there would be no need for this bill at all. The minister now says that we need this bill to make this possible and I am glad to oblige him, if he can manage to get the bill through the House.

There are a couple of points I want to make concerning reciprocal pensions. Those in desperate need of reciprocal pensions are people who live in countries whose currency has recently been devalued in terms of purchasing power. I think particularly of people from the United Kingdom. Consider the fate of a couple who came here, say, five years ago with a pension income of 100 pounds sterling a month each, which in those days would have been a respectable amount on which to retire. Every month their pound becomes worth less, it seems, and every month the cost of Canadian food increases. The result of these two factors is that their standard of living declines at twice the rate. We have to think of these people, and we welcome the move toward reciprocal pensions as provided in this bill.

We hope that reciprocal pensions will come into effect as quickly as possible. The minister assured us in committee that some other countries are quite interested. France, Britain and Italy have already inquired about setting up a reciprocal agreement. One would hope that the minister will pursue these agreements without waiting until the date of July 1, and perhaps have the agreements made effective the day the bill is proclaimed.

Another matter respecting reciprocal pensions about which I worry considerably is the narrow group to which they apply. I am speaking, of course, of old age security pensions. The bill does not make provision for veterans pensions to be made reciprocal, nor for war disability pensions immigrants receive from their home country. I hope that the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) will take note of this and to his best to bring in a bill similar to this making it possible for veterans of forces in other countries who come to Canada to bring their pensions with them.

Another aspect concerning this bill which has not been discussed relates to the number of countries from whom we have received immigrants over the years, particularly in the last two years, which have no pension system at all. These people will not, of course, benefit from this bill. This means we will have a class of people who qualify for reciprocal pensions, mainly people coming from western Europe and the United States, and those who cannot bring any pension with them. Here I think particularly of people from the sub-continent and from Asia where pensions appear to be unknown.

Finally, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has moved an amendment to this bill. I suggest our party would have presented the same amendment, except we were a little more worried than the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre about delaying the bill. We understand that the bill will be back here tomorrow if it is not passed today, and under those circumstances it removes the last reason, really the only reason, that we might have had to vote against the amendment.

Certainly we take second place to no one in our dislike of Clauses 8 and 10. These amendments would authorize the payment of partial spouse's allowances, based on the number of years that a spouse has resided in Canada after age 18, and would replace the present "all or nothing" system over a 40 year transitional period. The new sub-section will render ineligible for a spouse's allowance a person who is in Canada illegally.

For the benefit of those interested in women's rights and women's liberation, I notice on page 8 of the bill reference to the spouse as a "he". Proposed Section 17.1 requires the spouse of a pensioner to reside in Canada, and "if he does not reside in Canada", is not separated from the pensioner. Perhaps we will have to use impersonal pronouns rather than personal pronouns because it does make the situation a little confusing in regard to whether a pensioner or a spouse is not required to be separated from the pensioner.

This is a peculiar provision which is causing the government a great deal of trouble. The trouble is self-inflicted. When the original bill was brought in permitting spouse's allowances, the government did what my colleague from Hamilton West described as a dastardly act in providing that while a husband and a wife, one of whom was over 65, needed $282.68 plus $160.06, for a total of $442.74, to live on, as soon as one died the survivor would need no money at all. This is a peculiar kind of arithmetic, the sort I suppose you get into in cabinet when you are dealing with nothing less than $1 million for a while. I am sure it is difficult for them to understand that while it is easy to get the computer to work it all out, it is impossible for a survivor to survive on nothing.

I realize that there are a lot of regulations which will result from the passage of this bill, and members of parliament and the general public are not able to wade through them all. But the bill itself has some very peculiar omissions. For example, since a person must not be separated from the pensioner, I am curious as to what happens if a pensioner sets up a ménage à trois and then kicks his wife out of the home, or vice versa, and cohabits with the survivor of the three. Then after a period of time the interloper in this household starts drawing spouse's allowance while the duly married wife is out in the cold, unable to make an application because she is separated from the pensioner. It seems to me that this is the way the bill presently reads. It is no wonder that the minister gets a little upset when we try to discuss this particular provision.

This is another reason why we want to discuss the bill and the clauses dealing with spouses. We want to discuss the outrageous attitude taken toward a widow or widower who not only has to go through the traumatic experience of losing husband or wife, but who then has the minister's bill telling him or her immediately after the funeral that the survivor needs no money and will get none from the federal government. This will be a shock, and is an affront to all of us. For sheer meanness, Mr. Speaker, it can only be classed with the action of the Minister of Veterans Affairs, who managed to bring in a bill to pay an annual gratuity to ex-prisoners of war in World War II but who denies the same thing to veterans of World War I. I guess they are getting pretty old now; there are not too many of them left so the government does not worry about their votes.

When we were discussing this bill in committee, two things stood out. I asked the minister if poor people who needed money through a partial pension, and who really would be much better off waiting a further period of time until they qualified for a full pension, would have sufficient counselling to the effect that they would be advised to wait. Such people may need the money desperately. If they succumb to the temptation of a partial pension, what happens two years later when they come back and say that they made a terrible mistake and desperately need the full pension? The minister in his rather authoritarian manner said absolutely not, no retroactive choice will be permitted. This will cause nothing but trouble. It may not happen to somebody in the economic bracket in which the minister finds himself, but it will happen. People at age 65 are not going to be able to resist getting further income if they have a need.

When I asked the minister about this, he said they could go on welfare. There have been euphemisms for welfare for centuries. It was first called charity, then the dole and relief during the thirties and forties. It then became welfare, and is now called social assistance. It does not fool anyone. As far as the recipient is concerned, it is still welfare. The recipient knows that if you can get a pension, you can hold up your head. If you go on welfare, it is rather more difficult to do that.

This reminds me of the story of the school teacher who teaches singing. By the end of the day the children are separated into three groups, canaries, robins, and magpies. The kids know what is wrong with the magpies, they cannot sing well. The minister who speaks kindly of social assistance knows that it is a heck of a lot different than getting a pension to which everyone knows they are entitled.

I do not want to take much time. I am pleased that the bill has finally made it here. I hope we will soon see it put through. I ask the minister to bear in mind that we have taken this unusual action at this stage of the proceedings, supporting a motion to send the bill back to committee, because clauses 8 and 9 are so abhorrent. We are willing to wait an extra bit of time to see that they are removed or replaced with something that does not pick at the widow or widower, which this bill seems to do.

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the debate this afternoon has revealed two things. The first is the lack of trust between two of the opposition parties. The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) got up on a point of order to complain that he had not been informed by the spokesman for the NDP of their intention to move an amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) on a question of privilege.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege to say one thing. I am very pleased that the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) did get to his feet. However, I can say this. The only people in this House whom I do not trust are those who sit on the government side.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I submit that rather than a question of privilege that is a point of debate. It does not take away from the observation made by my colleagues and myself, and perhaps even some of those across the way. It appeared as though there was a lack of trust between two parties in this debate. One party complained that it had not been given the confidence of the other with regard to the intention of the NDP to move a motion. That is a legitimate observation, and it will be seen on the record tomorrow.

There is a second observation or conclusion one has to make when sitting on this side of the House. It is with regard to the contradictory policies of the opposition parties, particularly Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. Today the spokesman for the official opposition asked for more and better pensions. But almost every second day their financial critic asks the government to reduce taxes. How can that kind of an approach be reconciled? I suggest that the hon. member for Hamilton West get together with the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) and decide on an approach.

It does not take a financial genius to realize that if you want to improve pensions, social security programs, and do more for Canadians, you cannot ask Canadians to pay less taxes. Even a child in grade five would understand that elementary principle of arithmetic.

Today we have another typical example of the Official Opposition speaking from both sides of their mouths. During the question period the hon. member for York-Simcoe asked for a reduction in taxes. During the debate on Bill C-35, another hon. member asked for more and better pensions. How can you possibly reconcile this forked-tongued approach on the part of the Official Opposition?

I will not develop this theme any further because we all respect the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and the fine contribution he has made over the decades he has been here. He was here one hundred years before me, and he will be here one hundred years after me!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Caccia: When it comes to pensions, we all know that the hon. member has his heart in the right place, even though in some cases his arithmetic may not be the strongest. In any event, we love him and think that he has fine qualities.

This bill has several elements. It introduces an element whereby a resident of Canada can gradually earn his pension through a period of residence in this country. This is welcomed and supported by Canadians in general. It has another element which is a positive feature. It gives the minister power to enter into negotiations with other nations from whom we receive immigrants, and nations to which Canadians sometime emigrate. This is good.

I suppose that Canadians in other nations will benefit as well as immigrants to Canada from countries such as Italy, Portugal, Greece, the West Indies, South America, Asia, Africa, and other parts of the world. As a result of this bill the minister and the government will be empowered to enter into negotiations with those countries. We will have an element that already exists in western European countries, namely, the totalization of pensions.

A worker may have contributed for a few years as an immigrant in Brazil, a few years as an immigrant in France, a few years in Great Britain, Scandinavia, the United States, and finally comes to Canada. He will at last have an opportunity to see the contributions that he made in those countries throughout his working life recognized in the form of a pension that will be paid to him as a result of his contributions. This is something that does not exist today in North America. It does exist at least within the European Common Market countries as a result of reciprocal arrangements. This is a good, positive, fine Liberal measure.

Therefore, in connection with this bill, I am concerned with only one aspect, and some hon. members who have spoken before me have addressed themselves to this question—and that is the case of those people who have not earned credits in other countries before coming to Canada and who may well come here when the new law will be in full effect, when, years from now, some of us will no longer be around, people who, on coming to Canada, may seek employment for the first time when they are in their forties or their fifties and may not therefore have contributed to the Canada Pension Plan until late in life. At the age of retirement, whatever it may be at that time, they will not qualify except for the amount corresponding to the number of years that they will have resided in Canada.

Let us say an immigrant who will come here at the age of 50 will, at the age of 65, have been 15 years in the labour market and have contributed for that number of years out of the total 40 years required to receive a full pension. If that immigrant has no other income, he will qualify for a guaranteed income supplement. What I would like to make sure, through this intervention, Mr. Speaker, is whether he will qualify, in the case, for instance, of the program called Gains in Ontario which is under the Canada Assistance Plan, for the additional income that may be provided under that program.

What I would like to make sure is that ten, 15, or 20 years from now the totality of old age security, plus the guaranteed income supplement, plus the provincial supplement—which may vary from province to province such as Ontario, Quebec, Alberta and British Columbia, just to name the provinces with the largest number of immigrants—will be equal to, not lower than, the amount that will be received by other pensioners in Canada who qualify for the full old age security pension or for the pension plus the guaranteed income supplement.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hear, hear!

Mr. Caccia: If that was the thrust of the intervention of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre I am in full accord with him that now is the time to express this concern looking into the future and to make sure that the provinces of Ontario, Quebec, Alberta, and British Columbia will complement this legislation and provide those amounts that will be needed to protect those pensioners who immigrate to this country at an older age and have no other income. This has suddenly caught my imagination and it is an issue to which we should address ourselves at this stage in the debate.

I have listened with great interest to the interventions of other hon. members on the question of bringing the pensionable age down to 60. I must say that a number of people have spoken to me over the years of the desirability, now that we have made the first important step of reducing the pensionable age from 70 to 65, of bringing it gradually down to 60. It is mainly a concern expressed by people who work in occupations that are physically demanding. This is the case of groups such as miners, construction workers, and people who have heavy jobs in factories. They feel that by the time they are in their late fifties, they are physically worn out and they cannot continue working in jobs which they have held all their lives. Also, at that time in their lives it is extremely difficult for them to switch to another job, a so-called light job, for which there is immense demand on the labour market and a very limited supply, in order to continue to work until the magic age of 65. I do not know whether the answer lies in providing a universal pension at the age of 65 or in providing, as the minister has indicated, a guaranteed income and a form of income supplement at whatever the pensionable age may be.

If we reduce the pensionable age to 60, we will still have to address ourselves to those who are 59, 58, and so forth. I would prefer it if we were to think in terms of coming to grips with the problem of people with limited or very low incomes, regardless of their age, through the implementation of a program that we on this side of the House have spoken about for some years, namely, the guaranteed income program plus an income supplement, because by doing so we would not limit ourselves to the pensionable age.

The minister was correct when in his previous intervention he indicated that there are people who are still vigorous and want to continue working after they reach the age of 65, and this is desirable, I suppose. Therefore we should address ourselves to meeting the needs of those who wish to retire at an earlier age because of physical conditions at work, health reasons, or the fact that after 30, 35 or even 40 years of work, if you have started working on a heavy job at the age of 15 or 16, your body cannot carry you until the age of 65 in a heavy kind of job, and it is extremely difficult, particularly if you live in rural areas, to find a light kind of job which would perhaps permit you to carry on working until you reach the pensionable age.

It seems to me that the route indicated by the minister, which is aimed at implementing a guaranteed income and an income supplement program in the near future, is one we should all be striving to follow. I believe that members in the NDP at least have addressed themselves to this question in recent years.

Keeping in mind this principle, it was made very clear this afternoon—and I see the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) smiling—that you cannot have it both ways. You cannot ask for increased social security, increased pensions, and at the same time have someone in your party shoot you in the back by asking for a reduction in taxes. That is not what a fair and responsible government can do, and we will not have it on this side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Caccia: I believe it was the hon. member for Hamilton West who spoke about the desirability of the government providing all possible information in the next few months and years about the availability of two options, namely, the one under the present act, and the one which will be available under the new act, and that the onus should be on the government to provide this information through its offices and through civil servants.

● (1740)

I thought the intervention of the hon. member for Hamilton West was useful. I am sorry he is not here when I praise him and that he is here when I do not praise him. I suppose that is his tough luck. In the committee proceedings of Tuesday, February 22, at page 19:15 there is a passage which seems to meet the requirement of the hon. member. A Mr. Parker, who is an official of the Department of National Health and Welfare—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): And a very good one, too.

Mr. Caccia: —indicated at the committee stage the following:

> These people will be particularly trained to deal with the case in point, particularly the question of option. It is our intent to discuss each case with the individual where he has an option and to confirm the decision in writing with the individual that it is in fact his decision, and he may yet then come back to us and say: that is not my agreement, in which case we would go back to him to get final confirmation.
> In terms of dealing with cases outside of Canada, it becomes somewhat more difficult because of the fact that the individual cannot be contacted personally. What we are doing is giving thought at the present time to establishing a special unit which will handle all outside Canada cases, and this unit will be skilled not only in documentation aspects but in terms of making the choice absolutely clear, if there is one, to the pensioner residing outside of Canada.

So from the proceedings it seems that this aspect is well under control and well in hand as far as the department is concerned, and we hope that what is here on record will also be implemented and become a reality.

I would like to thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to intervene in this debate. I have outlined very briefly the positive features of this bill. It seems to take a very positive approach. It introduces an element of fairness. It allows the government of Canada to enter into negotiations with countries to which Canadians migrate or from which we receive immigrants. The only concern I have is the one I expressed earlier, namely, the provision which may affect immigrants years from now if they come to Canada in their later years, if they do not join the labour force here, and particularly if they have not contributed to pension schemes in prior countries of residence.

This is something which will perhaps become clearer as the law is implemented. I certainly agree with those who spoke before me that we should make sure, either through provincial participation, under the Canada Assistance Plan or through other means, that we in Canada will not have two different standards for pensions.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to follow the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) because I want to make some comments regarding some of his arguments. He said that we in the Conservative party cannot have it both ways, that we should not be asking for tax cuts and at the same time talk about giving more to senior citizens. I could not agree with the hon. member more. That is a very reasonable thing to say, but we are not asking for it both ways, and I will demonstrate that to him at this time.

It is not a case of suggesting to the people of this country that giving money to people and taking it away from them after the death of a spouse is in some way changing the financial situation in this country. The minister told us that that cost would be $2 billion, but he failed to recognize that in his own committee he said that it may be $2 billion if we paid everybody down to the age of 60, but that it would be $700,000 if we continue to pay those on spouse's allowances. The hon. member for Davenport says we cannot have it both ways, and I agree with him.

We do not like to see things such as the Lockheed situation, the cost of the Mirabel airport, the $2 million in fees for some kinds of sales which the government cannot find, the $40 million for Argentinian nuclear plants or the $15 million lost to Eisenberg which the government cannot find, and they tell us we cannot have it both ways.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Malone: We do want to see retirement with dignity for senior citizens. That is the only way we want it. We go along with the Auditor General of this country; we want to see the government managed better. We want to see a government which knows where the money is and which does not have an auditor general saying that it has lost control of the public purse. It was no surprise when our former leader said that the government spills more money than it is able to find.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Malone: With regard to spouses between the ages of 60 and 65 who are married to spouses receiving the old age pension, the government says that when the older spouse dies, the money should be taken away. To say that that is equitable when the minister in committee says it is only going to cost $700,000 is a sham. That is one of the things this country should be ashamed of, and the government should be taking a stronger position on it.

We have to treat our senior citizens as human resources who have contributed and who will continue to contribute to this country. It is important that we view them as people who ought to have retirement with dignity. Canada's OAS program is interesting. We on this side feel that there is much in this bill to be commended. The old situation, which was an all or nothing situation, has been withdrawn. The new bill enables an equitable correlation between a person's contributions and his reward. There is, however, one mechanical piece of administrative detail which ought to be reviewed in terms of how this legilsation is implemented. I agree in principle that we should pay one fortieth of the total eligible pension to a person who is here one year up to a maximum of full pension to those who have been in Canada and working for 40 years. However, I do not think it is logical to suggest that a person who has been here one year should receive a cheque each month. I say this because if we take one fortieth of the present maximum pension, which is $3.55, it seems to me that it would not be economical to send out a $3.55 cheque every month.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You don't get it unless you have had ten years.

Mr. Malone: When I was working with the Alberta government seven or eight years ago, that government would not issue a cheque for less than five dollars because it cost more than five dollars to write cheques. What the government ought to be doing is paying these pensions on an annual basis. For example, if a person has only one year's residence in Canada, instead of paying $3.55 every month, the government should simply pay a lump sum annually of $42.60. That ought to be worked out so that it does not cost extra money. I return to what the Auditor General said: let us tighten up the purse strings and manage the country a little bit better.

This bill has provisions allowing Canada to make reciprocal agreements with other countries and to share in OAS payments. I believe that is a fairly sound principle. It is particularly good in that people from other countries who come to Canada will have the advantage of a reciprocal pension agreement for those over age 65. I think, however, that those who draw up the regulations should be cautioned against writing in incentives for Canadians to work a certain period of time in this country and then move—presumably to a warmer country—where there is a reciprocal agreement and where they could draw the two pensions which would be equal to what they would receive in Canada. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) pointed out that some people will do this for health reasons, and there is justification for that. I just say that an incentive should not be built into the regulations that will encourage people to move to warmer climates for their retirement years. Our senior citizens are a human resource and can continue to make a contribution to this country, so they should be enticed to remain.

While we recognize that a lot of this bill is good, Mr. Speaker, a lot has been left out. At the present time we have the concept of forced retirement in Canada, and the minister referred to this in his remarks. Labour unions, big business, and governments are all saying in effect that people are capable of working at age 64 but at age 65 they are not wanted. With modern medical technology people are living longer, as we know. I have had the honour and pleasure of travelling across this country with the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander), and we found that great numbers of senior citizens were saying that they did not want various agencies telling them that they no longer have anything to contribute, and should retire. I do not think there is any agency in this country that should determine when a person has to retire. I know the argument that older people have to be retired to make room for younger people in the work force. There is some truth in that in the area of unskilled labour and perhaps some trades, but in many areas of business the opposite is true. People with experience and knowledge in their professions or line of business are often able to generate new employment for young people, yet sometimes when they are able to give the most they are asked to retire.

The government has congratulated itself for indexing the pensions of senior citizens and for extending assistance to those who are now in the "all or nothing" situation. The fact is that at the present time the indexing relates to the consumer price index which is not necessarily consistent with the needs of senior citizens. The aged spend their money on energy, food and housing, and the indexing system in use is not correlated to these major needs. If the government had any heart at all it should look at this system. I think it is an insult to our senior citizens to receive a computerized sheet with their pension cheque telling them it is going to be increased according to the cost of living, and then find that the next month's cheque is only increased by, say, 90 cents. That does not relate or correlate to their specific needs.

The hon. member for Hamilton West mentioned the need for advertising this new bill so that senior citizens may know what it will do for them. He pointed out that the onus ought to rest with the government and not with senior citizens to find out the options open to them. I hope the minister will follow this advice. The information ought to be readily available and clear without having to—

An hon. Member: Six o'clock!

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I see that some hon. members are more hungry than interested in aged people. They call it six o'clock and I am about to do that fairly soon, but first I want to say that while they leave for their supper they might think about the government's position on the point that—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Epp: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I do not know who the House leader is now but I should like to ask what the order of business will be tomorrow and if the gods smile kindly, and Bill C-35 is passed, what would follow?

Business of the House

Mr. MacFarlane: Mr. Speaker, I would presume that we all heard the same report by the government House leader this afternoon who said we would continue with this bill tomorrow and it would be followed by the Immigration Act.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6.01 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

FINANCE

SUGGESTED CHANGES IN NAMES OF HEADQUARTERS OFFICES AND BANK OF CANADA BUILDING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. With federal spending up by 127 per cent in the past six years which has led to a 100 per cent growth in our money supply in the same period and to 55 per cent inflation while real growth was only 31.6 per cent, and with tourist activity especially in the nation's capital needing a stimulant, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke):

That the offices of the Department of Finance and the Treasury Board in Ottawa be designated an international tourist site and be renamed Home of Canadian Inflation and that the new Bank of Canada building on Wellington Street be designated Inflation Factory No. 1 Printing Department, in the earnest hope that these two sites will become tourist attractions and perhaps shrines to the inflationary effect of reckless money creation, with morning tours to be conducted by the Prime Minister as a penance for his leading role in causing today's inflation.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

HEALTH

PROPOSAL TO CURTAIL CIGARETTE SMOKING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement made yesterday by the Minister of National Health and Welfare to the effect that the smoking of cigarettes is more dangerous than the normal consumption of saccharin, especially in terms of causing cancer, and in view of the action taken by the Minister with respect to saccharin, I wish to present a motion under Standing Order 43. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

That this House calls on the Government to present to parliament a comprehensive program designed to curtail cigarette smoking in Canada, and that such a program include a ban on all cigarette advertising, adequate and visible health warnings on all cigarette packages, higher taxes on cigarettes containing high levels of tar or nicotine, and special measures to achieve a cleaner environment for all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate can be made only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO OCTOBER 1970 CRISIS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the terms of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to present an important and urgent motion.

As it has now been proved that there never was any apprehended insurrection in October 1970; as parliament itself was misled by the authorities in power into accepting the War Measures Act; as proper answers were never given to my own questions in this House; as serious doubts still exist about the truth of the official versions concerning the death of Pierre Laporte; as the recent publication of Pierre Vallières, entitled "L'exécution de Pierre Laporte" and subtitled "Les dessous de l'opération essai" clearly indicate that the whole "October crisis", and especially the murder of Pierre Laporte, would seem to be, behind the scenes, the diabolic work of the Prime Minister and the federal government; as it is important that light be shed on this subject—

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member has a motion to present, he must do so immediately.

Mr. Matte: I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That this House request that an in-depth and impartial inquiry into the whole matter of the October crisis be set up, with a view, if necessary, to lifting the cloud of suspicions under which the Prime Minister and his government now stand because of the seriousness of the accusations contained in Vallières' book, or to unmasking the real instigators of that infamous crisis.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Under Standing Order 43, the motion presented by the hon. member requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: As there is not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON STATUS OF TRANSFER OF WESTMINSTER HOSPITAL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I, also, would move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. I am sure it will commend itself to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonad). The mounting concern over the transfer of Westminster Hospital is exacerbated by confusing statements emanating from federal and provincial spokesmen relative to the status of transfer agreements, the allocation of beds, and the disposal of some 246 acres of valuable land. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. Holmes):

● (1410)

That this House orders that the Minister of Veterans Affairs make a statement on motions within 48 hours outlining the present status of the transfer and outlining all relevant factors.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43, the presentation of such a motion can be made only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PROPOSED INVESTIGATION OF PRACTICES RELATING TO PRICING OF FERTILIZER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that Canadian manufactured fertilizers are being sold in the United States at a minimum saving of $25 a ton, and in view of the fact that Canadian fertilizer manufacturers charge a minimum of $25 a ton more when fertilizer is purchased in Canada, thus adding to the cost-price squeeze now faced by the Canadian farmers, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Whittaker):

That the Minister for Consumer and Corporate Affairs initiate an investigation into the practices relating to the pricing of fertilizer in Canada and more specifically to investigate if fertilizer companies in Canada are engaged in price-fixing practices.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented to the House, pursuant to Standing Order 43, only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADA DAY

SUGGESTED REINSTATEMENT OF CELEBRATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I rise, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a motion which I think will receive the unanimous consent of the House. Canadians in all walks of life are engaged in discussions on national unity and are anxious to see more visible expressions of our sense of unity, and yet last year the former secretary of state cancelled Canada Day celebrations in our nation's capital. In view of the need for this expression of our national pride, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp):

That this House urges the Secretary of State to reinstate Canada Day celebrations for July, 1, 1977, in Ottawa and that he urge the CBC to carry live coverage of such an event in partial fulfilment of its mandate to encourage national unity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion can only be made with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EFFECT ON VALUE OF DOLLAR OF SPEECHES BY MINISTERS IN THE UNITED STATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a motion of pressing and urgent necessity. In view of the fact that the visit of Premier Levesque to the United States caused a drop of one cent in the value of the Canadian dollar, the visit of the Prime Minister caused a drop of three cents, and now the speech of the Minister of Finance resulted in a further drop of two cents—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House urge all public figures in Canada to refrain from making speeches in the U.S. while the Canadian dollar still has some value in the international money market.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HEALTH

REASON FOR FAILURE TO BAN CERTAIN CHEMICALS AND FOR DELAYING ANNOUNCEMENT OF BAN ON SACCHARIN

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that evidence obtained from animal research that saccharin has cancer causing properties has led to the banning of the product from use by humans in Canada, and the United States evidence also indicates that a number of other chemicals, namely, Red Dye No. 2 and No. 4, Carbon Black and yellow Tartrazine have also caused difficulties and have been banned in the U. S., can the minister say why, in order to be consistent, he does not ban these other potentially harmful substances in Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, there are various products banned in the United States but not so in Canada, and some which are banned in Canada but not so in the United States. It depends on studies and the judgment of our experts about the relative dangers of those various products.

In the case of the products mentioned by the hon. member, continuous studies are made on the matter and I will advise hon. members on the basis of the information gathered by my officials and the suggestions they will give me in that connection.

[English]

Mr. Yewchuk: In view of the important and wide-ranging effects of the ban of saccharin, can the minister tell the House why he did not make his announcement on this ban in the House of Commons but instead chose to make it to the press? Second, in view of the fact that this House was still sitting when he made his announcement last night, in view of the fact that rumours about this ban began to circulate on Friday, and in view of the possible effects on the stock market, can the minister also indicate why he waited until Wednesday to make this announcement rather than making it at five o'clock on Friday?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, as indicated by the hon. member, we wanted to wait until Canada's stock exchanges were closed before making such an announcement. As for leaks which may have occurred a few days earlier, I inquired and it has been clearly indicated that such information was from an American and not a Canadian source. Finally, we had to advise the industry involved yesterday before the final decision which I took yesterday afternoon.

[English]

REACTION OF ORGANIZATIONS CONSULTED ON BANNING OF SACCHARIN

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that it appears that the minister's consultation with the various associations to which he referred about the phasing out of saccharin amounted to nothing more than an invitation to them to sit in at the meeting at which the topic was discussed, would the minister tell the House exactly what was the response to his consultations with the Canadian Medical Association, the Canadian Dental Association, the Canadian Diabetic Association and the Registrars of Pharmacy?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would not want the statement made by the hon. member at the outset of his question to pass unnoticed. In fact, yesterday there have been consultations with the representatives of the industry. Some minor changes have been made to the proposals I had approved temporarily, but following that there were nevertheless consultations and changes.

As regards the occupational groups mentioned by the hon. member, we have consulted the associations concerned with respect to the nature of the studies we had made and, generally speaking, to our intentions. None of these associations has objected to the proposals we were considering and to our approach.

[English]

SUGGESTION PRODUCTS CONTAINING SACCHARIN MIGHT CARRY HEALTH WARNING

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question I would like to put to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has the minister discussed with manufacturers of products containing saccharin the possibility of changing the style of advertising of these products and perhaps accompanying advertisements with a health warning, as is the case with cigarettes?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, my departmental officials have considered this possibility and I have discussed it with them. However I do not think that it was discussed as such with the manufacturers, because we had rejected it as not being valid under the circumstances. Any such indication similar to the warning mentioned by the hon. member would have, for all practical purposes, no other result than to ban the products containing this substance from the market. The hon. member will certainly recognize that contrary to cigarettes, saccharin is found in a great many products available on the market.

[English]

Mr. Elzinga: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that scientific evidence suggests that saccharin was related to cancer in rats in 1973, I am puzzled as to why the minister did not choose to make this known in the way I suggested in my earlier question.

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: For the simple reason that the studies were carried out over a three year period. They started in 1973. The information the hon. member referred to was the basis for the scientific studies which my department carried out with utmost intensity over the past three years. As soon as these studies were concluded and the findings confirmed by international authorities, we took the steps which were necessary under the circumstances.

ASSURANCE SACCHARIN AVAILABLE TO DIABETICS— SATISFYING DESIRE OF CHILDREN FOR SWEETS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. As one who supports the ban on saccharin since it seems to have been established that it leads to cancer, may I ask the minister if he will take steps to make sure that diabetics who need it will be able to get it? Will he also tell the House whether studies are being made into some way of solving the problem of the desire of children for sweets?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, certain drugs contain saccharin because this substance facilitates ingestion. This is particularly true for some drugs administered to children. We shall discuss with the industry and medical authorities having all these drugs analyzed and decide whether saccharin should be maintained in some of these drugs so that they do not taste like the castor oil we ingested in our childhood.

Of course diabetics will be able the find the beverages and food products they need as a result of their condition. We proposed the establishment of a committee, in cooperation with the industry and medical experts, to make a complete review of the role of saccharin in the diet of diabetics. Here again it will be possible to maintain some exemptions to the general prohibition announced yesterday. Finally I should mention that saccharin will still be available in drugstores to all those people who want to buy some.

SUGGESTED PROGRAM TO CURTAIL CIGARETTE SMOKING— STUDY OF PROGRAM IN SWEDEN

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I call attention to the statement the minister made yesterday to the effect that the smoking of cigarettes is more dangerous than the normal consumption of saccharin, especially in relation to causing cancer. In view of this statement, may I ask if the government is considering mounting a comprehensive program, the details of which I suggested in a motion earlier today, to curtail or limit the amount of cigarette smoking in Canada, having in mind such things as a ban on advertising, higher taxes where there are high levels of tar or nicotine, and other such actions?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, such proposals were considered and discussed within the last few years. They are still reviewed regularly within my department and with the co-operation of other departments, but I think that the most important thing is still the education of the public as a whole. I am glad to find out that the percentage of people who stopped smoking is now rising every year and I hope there will be an increase of that percentage in the years to come.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as a final supplementary may I ask the minister if he and his department are aware of the program in Sweden where an attempt is being made over a period of 25 years to raise a generation of children who have not smoked, and is study being given to that program?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

REASON MINISTER DOES NOT FORBID USE OF TOBACCO

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I too would like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare about his decision to ban saccharin.

Since saccharin has been used for many years either by diabetics or cardiacs and that in the minister's opinion no cancer case has been detected so far and since it has been stated on many occasions that the cigarette was a carcinogenic agent, could the minister tell the House on what grounds he decided to forbid the sale and use of saccharin and why he does not take any action against smoking since it has harmful effects on health?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, to answer the first part of the question, this decision has been made following a scientific study which lasted more than three years in my department and whose results were confirmed by a great number of international authorities invited to examine its findings.

On the second part of the question, I will say that there is a notable difference between cigarettes and saccharin since the latter is an additive in a great number of foods and drinks and plays no essential role while cigarettes are a substance consumed rather uniquely, so to speak, and it is not linked to consuming of other products. In addition it must be recognized that unfortunately cigarettes are part of our environment and condition of living and that it is not realistic to think that we could forbid their use as easily as saccharin.

FINANCE

REASON FOR DECLINING CONFIDENCE OF UNITED STATES IN CANADIAN DOLLAR—POSSIBLE PEGGING OF VALUE OF CANADIAN DOLLAR

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. As the Canadian dollar continues its ragged retreat in relation to the United States dollar, it having fallen a further point since the Minister of Finance chose to visit the United States until at noon today it reached 94.33, a seven-year low, could the minister, as a result of his recent junket to the United States, tell the House the principal reasons for declining American confidence in our dollar and indicate what steps he was advised to take to shore up investor confidence in Canada?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could refer the hon. member to my previous answer to this question.

Mr. Stevens: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since our dollar has now fallen nine points, would the minister indicate the probable inflationary effect in Canada of this fall, and is he considering pegging the dollar, as he hinted in committee, to save it from falling to a totally unreasonable level.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I have already provided the hon. member with the answer to that question in committee.

REASON NEW ENGLAND STATES HAVE LOWER UNEMPLOYMENT RATES THAN EASTERN CANADA

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Finance a final supplementary question? As we live with low real growth prospects and particularly high unemployment in Quebec and the Atlantic provinces, would the minister tell the House if in his talks with Americans he discovered why the New England states have substantially lower unemployment rates than their Canadian counterparts, our five eastern provinces?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that was not discussed.

POSSIBILITY OF INTRODUCING FOREIGN EXCHANGE CONTROL

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Is the government contemplating the introduction of foreign exchange controls? I ask this in view of the minister's answer in committee, to the effect that there is some thought, perhaps, of stabilizing the dollar. Can the minister tell us of any way of stabilizing the dollar without introducing foreign exchange controls?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the second part of the question is, yes. There are ways of stabilizing the dollar without foreign exchange controls. I would say absolutely and categorically that we are not proposing to introduce foreign exchange controls.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Not today.

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, can the minister tell the House how he proposes to stabilize the dollar without the introduction of foreign exchange controls?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated many times in the House, I am not proposing to intervene.

Mr. Stevens: I thought you said in committee that we were.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I did not.

TOURISM

EFFECT OF UNITED STATES LAW LIMITING DEDUCTIBILITY OF CONVENTION EXPENSES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Since the Canadian government estimates that more than $12 million of convention business has been cancelled since the new United States law severely limiting the deductibility of convention expenses incurred abroad took effect, can the minister assure the House and the Canadian tourist industry that a revised tax treaty will be in effect before the domestic tourist industry is irreversibly damaged?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, this question was brought up by our Prime Minister in Washington during his talks with President Carter. It has also been discussed yesterday by my colleague, the Minister of Finance, and his counterpart in Washington, and I also hope to have the opportunity of discussing this problem with the American authorities during my forthcoming visit to Washington at the end of this month. However this is a legislation—

[English]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The dollar will fall to 40 cents.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: I wonder why my colleagues are so nervous. Anyway, Mr. Speaker, this is a legislation which was passed by the American Congress and I do not think it could be revised during the next weeks. However we continue our representations so that Canada may be exempted from this tax which is highly detrimental to our hotel industry.

[English]

Mr. Darling: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the uproar in the House means that our dollar will fall another cent in view of his forthcoming visit? Considering the fact that the tourist trade deficit with the United States alone was $470 million during the first three quarters of 1976, will the minister attempt to persuade the U.S. administration that their tax laws relating to tourism can be adjusted in Canada's favour since there is such a tourist trade surplus in favour of the United States.

● (1430)

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can respond to that. I specifically discussed with the Secretary of the Treasury the possibility of working out reciprocal arrangements with regard to convention trade in the tax laws of the two countries and the Secretary will be taking that under consideration in the drafting of their position on the tax treaty.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REQUEST THAT NEW COMMISSIONER BE CHOSEN FROM WITHIN THE FORCE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. It has to do with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Ever since the days it was the Northwest Mounted Police, I have been very devoted to that organization. Following the question that was asked yesterday by the hon. member for Yukon, can the Force be assured that whoever is chosen as Commissioner, if not at the moment a member of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, must have had that experience, otherwise he will not be appointed.

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to learn of the great support the right hon. member gives to the work of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. I wish to inform the right hon. member that his question was answered in great detail yesterday by the Prime Minister. Of course, the best available person to fill the highly complex and difficult task of Commissioner of the RCMP will be chosen to fill the position. In the selection process, present members of the Force will of course be considered.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It may be that there are some members of the government today who are not proud of the Mounted Police.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

POSSIBLE REMOVAL OF NATIONAL POLICE SERVICES PROVIDED BY FORCE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): A number of them may now be identifying themselves. I would ask one further question. Is consideration now being given to the removal of the national police service that has provided effectively over the years at the expense of Canada as a whole for police officers across the country? Is this matter now being considered? If so, is this another step in the emasculation of this great Force?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I do not understand the right hon. member's question properly, the implications or the specific case he has in mind. As far as I am concerned, national police services which are afforded by the RCMP to all police forces in the country are on the increase. Witness the new National Police College which has recently been opened in Ottawa which trains forces in order to help improve police services throughout the country.

Mr. Diefenbaker: With great respect to the minister, and I have had considerable respect since he took over his portfolio, I would ask him whether a movement is now on foot to end the national police service which has been furnished throughout the years, removing it from the aegis of the RCMP. That is all I ask.

Mr. Fox: No, Mr. Speaker.

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO PREVENT TRANSFER OF CAST SHIPPING FROM MONTREAL TO HALIFAX

Mr. Raymond Dupont (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport.

In view of the substantial negative impact resulting from the transfer of the Cast North America company from the Montreal harbour to the Halifax harbour, does the Minister of Transport intend to take the necessary measures to prevent such a transfer?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the discussions between the two groups have, of course, been watched closely by us. They are still, I think, in a bargaining position. Therefore, it would not be appropriate for me to comment at this stage.

AIR TRANSPORT

EFFECT OF CHANGE IN AIR SPACE CONTROLLED FROM MONCTON

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. I asked the minister a question yesterday and really did not get an adequate or sufficient answer. Therefore, I would like the privilege of asking some of these questions again. Keeping in mind that the Ministry of Transport has already commenced a multimillion dollar construction program and ordered substantial equipment for a new air traffic control centre at Riverview, New Brunswick, just outside Moncton, keeping in mind that the Ministry of Transport is conducting a study regarding air traffic control and the language of air-to-ground communication, and so on, and keeping in mind the minister's undertaking not to proceed any further until the completion of the study, why has the ministry decided to reduce the air space in the Moncton air traffic control centre by 350,000 square miles? Does the minister realize what effect this will have on the potential job loss in the Moncton area, which I understand is between 80 and 100 jobs? Will the new structure and facilities at Riverview be completed and operated in accordance with the original plans by the Ministry of Transport?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I answered those questions quite specifically yesterday. Assurances have been given to the Moncton controllers that no jobs will be lost. New facilities are being built as part of the total plan of air space control. That plan, developed through 1973 to 1975, does lead to the transfer of some 350,000 square miles of air space, if one can measure air space in that fashion, from the Moncton centre. As I say, that is being done with assurances with regard to jobs.

Mr. Jones: Has the minister received a telegram from the Moncton city council and is the minister prepared to give the Moncton city council the assurances requested by them and the community, in particular with regard to potential job loss?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I have not seen a telegram of that type, but I will certainly check into it. I have repeated here in the House the assurance which my officials previously gave to the controllers. Obviously, I will be glad to repeat that in reply to the telegram.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

REASON FOR SHORT-TIME PERIOD ALLOTTED TO STUDY OF ALCAN PIPELINE—RELATIONSHIP TO DECISION BY UNITED STATES

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Yesterday in the House in answer to a question from the hon. member for Moose Jaw, the minister announced that there would be an inquiry to examine the social and economic impact of the Alcan route. Can the minister advise why he expects that particular study to be completed by early summer in view of the fact that the Berger inquiry took nearly two years to complete its study? Why is it the Alcan route is able to be studied in such a quick and cursory way when it took so long to study the other route?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Because, Mr. Speaker, the environmental questions will be considered by an environmental impact study under the Environmental Act. It will not be covered by that particular inquiry. Furthermore, there are much fewer communities.

Mr. Leggatt: In view of the fact the Berger inquiry was given jurisdiction to inquire into the environmental aspects, and the minister at that time thought that was necessary for the Mackenzie route, why does this minister now say it is not necessary with regard to the Alcan route?

Mr. Allmand: Because at that time we did not have the environmental laws we now have which require that any federal project go through an environmental impact study by a separate inquiry under the Department of the Environment. The environmental study will be made, but by a separate inquiry.

Mr. Leggatt: Is the fact that the Alcan inquiry will end at the end of the summer directly related to the commitment of the President of the United States to a deadline of September 30 to make a decision? Is the shortness of the Alcan inquiry related to the American shortness of time to make a decision with regard to bringing Alaskan energy to the United States?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the timetable has not been set, but it may have something to do with it.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INVESTIGATION OF AGENTS' FEES FOR SALE OF NUCLEAR REACTORS—DATES WHEN FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS ASKED TO CO-OPERATE

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I have already given him notice of it. In view of the fact that almost four months have elapsed since the government undertook to investigate activities and fees of agents involved in the sale of nuclear reactors, and because the government appears to have been dragging its collective feet in this matter in seeking the co-operation of other governments, will the minister give the dates on which he first officially contacted the governments of Argentina, South Korea, Switzerland and Italy to ask for their cooperation in this matter? Will he table all documents that have passed between his department and foreign governments?

• (1440)

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. lady for giving me notice of the question. I should emphasize that my response is in relation to what was done by the Department of External Affairs in reaction to the request which came to us from the public accounts committee. There may have been other correspondence by other departments of which I am not personally aware, but in terms of my own department the information was requested from Argentina by diplomatic notes on February 8 and 14 and we have received some transcripts from Argentina which were forwarded to the Public Accounts Committee. Information was requested orally from Switzerland on February 15 and March 3, and by formal note on March 7; and information was requested from Italy by diplomatic note on March 7. We have had no request from the committee, at least not until today, for any direct inquiry by the department to the Republic of Korea.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

STATUS OF PLAN FOR NEW HOSPITAL SYSTEM IN NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Could the hon. gentleman advise whether the much touted plan for a new hospital system for veterans in Nova Scotia, to be located on the Camp Hill property in Halifax, is (1) alive, well and ongoing, or (2) pigeonholed, or (3) in some intermediate process?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions going on between our department and the health department of Nova Scotia.

WESTMINSTER HOSPITAL—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF PLAN TO TRANSFER

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the confusing information which has been emanating from federal and provincial officials regarding the transfer of Westminster hospital in London, Ontario, would the minister indicate to the House when he is going to clarify this situation, which is causing mounting concern to veterans' organizations who are concerned with veterans' care, and particularly with the vast amounts of land, amounting to 256 acres, which would likely be turned over and should be kept for the care of the veterans?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, with reference to the parkland, that is not under consideration at all. With reference to veterans' organizations being confused and misinformed, there has been no information revealed so there is no need to be misinformed. The provincial government of Ontario has accepted our proposal and negotiations will be carried on in the near future. When an agreement has been arrived at to our satisfaction and to their satisfaction, notification will be given and released in the normal way.

CUSTOMS

POSSIBILITY OF PROHIBITING IMPORTATION OF FERTILIZER

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of National Revenue. On Friday last, March 4, I asked the minister whether her department had any intention of closing the border to the importation of herbicides, pesticides and fertilizer. The minister replied to me, if I may quote as reported at page 3666 of Hansard: —we had no intention of closing the border.

[Mr. Jamieson.]

Yet that very same afternoon her colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, did in fact close the border under the Pest Control Products Act. I want to ask the minister whether she can give me more information as to whether fertilizer as well will now be banned from importation into Canada, as the Minister of Agriculture, the so-called "farmers' friend", has already done with herbicides and pesticides?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the question could have been biased or ironical. The hon. member asked me whether I had any intention of closing the borders. I answered no, of course.

As to the matter of pesticides he was referring to in particular, I told him that I would inquire about the situation. Now, I have the answer today, which he already knows since I had him informed over the telephone. My department's only role is to check if Canadian importers have the authorization by the Department of Agriculture. This minister has since announced that he would no longer give the authorization to import certain pesticides because of the risks they represent. All questions, today, relating to fertilizers should also, if the hon. member is interested in the very substance of the decision, be directed to my colleague responsible for agriculture.

DIFFERENTIAL BETWEEN PRICE OF FERTILIZER IN UNITED STATES AND CANADA—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the fact that Canadian manufactured fertilizer finds its way into the United States and that Canadian buyers can buy Canadian manufactured fertilizer in the United States a minimum $25 per ton less than that same fertilizer costs in Canada, would the minister now undertake an investigation to determine why the price differential, and specifically whether Canadian fertilizer companies are involved in price-fixing practices?

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I noted the hon. member's motion under Standing Order 43 and I have his question. I will bring both to the attention of the director of combines investigations.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

FEASIBILITY OF MAGNESIUM QUÉBÉCOIS PROJECT—PROGRESS OF NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Considering the possibility of an $80 million investment in the Trois-Rivières-Shawinigan area concerning the project Magnesium Québécois, it seems to me that the Foreign Investment Review Agency takes a long time to reach a decision. Could the minister indicate today how are they proceeding with the negotiations on the possibility of establishing this industry in the area mentioned, which is of interest to all Quebecers?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the department has been considering this matter ever since last spring. We are still waiting for some information and, unfortunately, I noticed a considerable decline in the interest of the group involved in setting up the plant. Their capital is no longer what it was before November 15.

ENERGY

POSITION OF UNITED STATES ON NUCLEAR SAFEGUARDS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Can the minister say if in his discussions in Washington last week with Carter administration officials he covered the question of nuclear safeguards and if the United States has indicated to him that they are preparing to move to a level of nuclear safeguards covering technology, hardware and fuel equivalent to those which Canada has adopted over the past two years, including selling these items only to signatories of the non-proliferation treaty?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I did raise this question with Dr. Schlesinger, the presidential adviser on energy matters. In addition, it is fair to say that the United States is very much interested in the safeguards which Canada has adopted and recognizes that Canada is out in the lead so far as the international community is concerned. I was not able to obtain from him an undertaking, perhaps quite naturally, on that visit that the United States would be prepared to adopt the Canadian position at this time; but they did undertake to study very carefully the Canadian position and to consult with us on it, with a view to toughening nuclear safeguards around the world.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF PRODUCTS DANGEROUS TO HEALTH

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Since in the announcement today saccharin and related products are stated to have been withdrawn from the market, and in that we have known for some 10 years that there was a strong possibility that these products were doing damage to Canadian consumers, will the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs now revise, with the Minister of National Health and Welfare, a list of those products, be they drugs or food, where there is a strong suspicion that they are now doing damage; and would he put the burden of proof on the manufacturer, not the consumer, and have them withdrawn now, not later when the damage is done? Because, as the minister knows, there is a strong possibility that those people who have been consuming saccharin and allied products have already been damaged. Will the minister insist—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I understand from the minister of health's announcement that there is a phasing out of certain products in which the use of saccharin is employed. My understanding is that his department is taking careful note of the probable health hazards and has recognized the equity of spinning out the withdrawal. I think they have taken a very prudent course and one which is in the best interests of both consumers and manufacturers.

• (1450)

Mr. Grafftey: There is a misunderstanding here. I am not referring just to saccharin. I am referring to the whole area of foods and drugs where there is strong suspicion that damage is being done. Will the minister examine the complete list of food and drugs where there is strong suspicion that they are doing damage now, and make the burden of proof lie on the manufacturer not on the consumer before they are withdrawn from the market?

Mr. Abbott: The hon. member has known for ten years, apparently, about the saccharin problem and I would be happy to consult with him and get his list of all the other products he deems hazardous and take the matter up with the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Grafftey: This is a serious matter, Mr. Speaker, and the minister makes light of it. I should like my question to be taken seriously.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The matter may be serious but the hon. member has had two chances and there does not seem any point in relaxing the rules to give him a third try. But I will hear the hon. member at three o'clock if he has a point of order.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO TREATMENT GIVEN MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

This afternoon, at two o'clock, I experienced a personal incident with CBC radio. Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has received complaints from his cabinet colleagues regarding the lack of objectivity of some CBC reporters. I have to complain about some directors of CBC. An announcer invited me for a one-hour program on the air this afternoon at two o'clock. So I left my office to be at the Chateau Laurier at two o'clock on the dot but I was told the program had been cancelled following a decision of the directors. I think it is an off-hand way to treat hon. members and party leaders. Would the Prime Minister consider extending the terms of reference he himself gave to the CRTC so that the inquiry on the partiality of some newsmen, as alleged by some government members, deals also with questionable decisions made by some CBC directors who should at least have the decency of personally offering excuses—and not through their employees—to party leaders when they change their minds so that the announcers not be placed in that difficult position?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the hon. member that the staff of the Crown corporation at every level should have very high respect for the elected members of this House who directly represent the people. As concerns these allegations, obviously I am not aware of the details since this incident has just occurred but I shall ask the Secretary of State responsible for CBC to report the case to the corporation and see if some action should be taken.

COMMONWEALTH GAMES

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO AVOID AFRICAN BOYCOTT

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It concerns the Commonwealth Games to be held in Edmonton in 1978. Last week, in a comment relating to African participation in the games, Colonel Jack Davies, President of the Commonwealth Games Association of Canada, said the situation "doesn't look so good". What specific steps is the government taking to ensure there will not be an African boycott—steps which go beyond ensuring that New Zealand does not have official sporting links with South Africa?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I hope the hon. member will understand that I do not want to be too specific in the terms of my answer. We are making a number of efforts in a number of different places to ensure maximum support from all members of the Commonwealth. I can tell him that the matter is being pursued. For instance, it is not unlikely it will be discussed this coming weekend during the visit of Prime Minister Callaghan. We are making a number of overtures and our objective is to secure participation by all members of the Commonwealth.

Mr. Roche: The issue has begun to revolve around the definition of New Zealand's sporting links, whether official or unofficial. Since the basis for a possible African boycott appears to be widening beyond the question of New Zealand's official participation in sports with South Africa, is the government making efforts to determine the precise meaning of the statement issued by the Organization for African Unity last week calling upon its members to refrain from taking part in sporting events in which New Zealand participates?

Mr. Jamieson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, contacts have been made in a number of countries with regard to precisely that question—the definition about which the hon. member has asked.

BEEF—SUGGESTED REDUCTION OF IMPORTS FROM OCEANIC COUNTRIES IN VIEW OF POSSIBLE DROUGHT

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the probability of a severe drought on the prairies this year as a result of which an unusually large influx of cattle is likely to come on the market, would the minister tell us whether he has any contingency plan to reduce the volume of imports from oceanic countries so that we do not get into another cycle of depressed markets?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am optimistic. Most farmers are optimistic, so their minister has to be optimistic, that we will have good weather. We do have oceanic beef on set quotas for the total year this year. If something like the hon. member is suggesting should take place we would have to let our trading partners know what the problem was and how we were trying to meet it at that time.

Mr. Malone: Does the minister have in mind any bottom level price for cattle before he would implement a full quota or does he propose simply to wait until a crisis has arrived before opening negotiations with the oceanic nations?

Mr. Whelan: As I said yesterday, and as I think was pointed out by a number of other members, the United States is in a much worse position that we are. We shall be meeting in the not too distant future with the U.S. Secretary of Agriculture. A lot depends upon what they do. It is still a free market, it is still based on the North American market for beef, which is what the beef producers of Canada wanted, so if they do not change their system and nobody triggers a meat import law in their country, and try and run supply management like we did last year, we will not have to react any differently. But we have to work very closely with the U.S. on this problem at the present time.

GRAIN

WHEAT—PROPOSED REVIEW OF EXPORT PRICING POLICY

Mr. Frank Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): My question is for the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. In view of the declining value of the Canadian dollar, the threatened drought in western grain growing areas and the fact that Pacific export orders have been filled until Christmas, would the minister consider calling a special meeting of the Wheat Board advisory committee to review Canada's export grain pricing policy?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the advisory committee meets regularly and the time has about come for me to meet with them as well. They meet ordinarily, of course with the Canadian Wheat Board. I am fully confident that the Wheat Board is well aware of all facts which bear on the proper pricing and selling of grain and I have full confidence in their judgment.

SPORTS

PROPOSED SURCHARGE ON ICE SHOWS TO PROVIDE FUNDS TO AID DEVELOPMENT OF FIGURE SKATERS

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, further to my motion yesterday I have a question for the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) of which I have given her notice. In view of the fact that foreign professional ice shows continue to drain Canadian skating talent without contributing financially to the development of the sport, I should like to ask the minister whether the government would be prepared to impose a reasonable surcharge on ice shows signing Canadian amateur skaters to long-term contracts in order that further necessary financial aid can be made available to our own skaters, as well as for the development of the sport generally, without imposing an additional burden on the taxpayer? I am suggesting something in line with the arrangement for professional hockey leagues vis-à-vis amateur drafts?

● (1500)

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, my information is that CFSA has already entered into such discussions, and I have asked that a report be prepared on the progress of those discussions so that I may acquaint the hon. member with the present status of them. There is already some discussion on the sharing of facilities on a professional basis, and I believe there is a considerable amount of documentation now to be brought forward. I will forward it when it comes.

PENITENTIARIES

POSSIBLE ACQUISITION OF BURWASH SITE FOR NEW FACILITIES—PERSONS WITH WHOM NEGOTIATIONS HELD

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): My question is for the Solicitor General, Mr. Speaker. In view of the availability of a correctional site at Burwash presently owned by the provincial government of Ontario and in view of the minister's desire to locate some correctional institutions in Ontario, can the minister tell the House what steps are being taken to acquire a part of the Burwash site for a federal prison?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): As the hon. member has pointed out, there is indeed a correctional facility available to us in the area of Burwash. I have asked my officials to investigate the possibility of acquiring that site from the government of Ontario. Negotiations are presently going on between the Department of Public Works and the department of corrections of the province of Ontario.

Mr. Rodriguez: In view of the fact that the provincial member for Sudbury East recently learned from the provincial department of government services that no negotiations were taking place between the federal government and this department for the acquisition of any part of the Burwash site, will the minister tell the House with whom his department is discussing the Burwash site, and when did these discussions take place?

Mr. Fox: There have been detailed negotiations going on. We have looked at the possible acquisition of a number of acres and we have discussed the various conditions pertaining to the acquisition prices.

Mr. Rodriguez: With whom?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of State for Urban Affairs on a point of order.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I undertook yesterday to answer a question from the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). With your permission, I could give a quick answer to his question.

It has to do with a loan guarantee granted under National Housing Act section 6(1).

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I really must ask in the circumstances if the House would give consent to the minister to give an answer at this time. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it being Thursday I should like to ask the government House leader for the business of the House for the balance of today, tomorrow and into next week; and in the course of answering that question would it be possible for him to designate next March 17 as an allotted day? Bearing in mind the date on which the next budget will be brought down, would the government House leader indicate to the House his intention with regard to the days on which the budget will be debated? Looking ahead to holy week, perhaps he might let us know what his intentions are with respect to the Easter recess?

An hon. Member: Perhaps he should check with Whelan.

Mr. MacEachen: Today we will continue the debate on the amendments to the Old Age Security Act, followed by second reading of the immigration bill. Next week the two items to follow will probably be the unemployment insurance amendments and immigration amendments, and then the amendments to the National Transportation Act. I am not quite sure which of those two would be called first, but they will be brought forward. As the hon. member knows, the intention is to have the budget delivered on Thursday, March 31.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The day before April fools' day.

Mr. MacEachen: The debate will begin on the subsequent Monday, which is April 4, and it will continue until the Easter recess which I hope will commence at the end of the day on Wednesday of that week. I will designate next Thursday, March 17, as an allotted day. I think it is St. Patrick's Day. It is the colour of green, which should coincide with the colour of the opposition since the Gallup poll.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: Are you colourblind?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): My colleague is right in asking the government House leader whether he is colourblind. In the event that he is not, I would like to assure him that the memory of St. Patrick will shortly be honoured, in a much better way. I want to say one thing to the minister. We have had some discussion and if the minister would be prepared to call Bill C-11 on Friday, the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe has indicated to me that we would be prepared to have that bill go to the committee on veterans affairs after a short debate to be concluded by one o'clock on Friday. Perhaps that might be of assistance to the government House leader.

Mr. McGrath: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, which has to do with what would appear to be an anomaly in our rules. It raises the larger question of the reference which the government House leader has on the order paper for the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization. What I consider to be an anomaly in our present rules governing the question period concerns oral questions taken as notice. I know Your Honour has to stay within the rules, but I state this for the record: yesterday I asked the Minister of State for Urban Affairs a question and in reply the minister said he would take the question as notice and give an answer "tomorrow".

The only way in which the minister could get the floor today was on a point of order, and the only way under our rules in which he could respond to my question was by unanimous consent, which the minister did not receive. Consequently, I did not receive a reply to my question. It would seem to me that some provision would have to be made in the rules with regard to oral questions that are taken as notice so that ministers will have a set time in which to reply to them.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for St. John's East raises a point that has given the Chair and the House difficulties on previous occasions. There can be no doubt that ministers who, in good faith, seek further information before delivering an answer should be able to give the answer. I have always taken the attitude that a member should not be entitled to put supplementary questions but should withhold them until the answer is forthcoming from the minister. Then I would make an effort to recognize the right of hon. members to ask supplementary questions at that time.

However, the difficulty continues in that a minister who rejoins the House with the information is dependent, to a certain extent, on the ability of the hon. member to rise—which fair rotation on that day may not allow—or else attempt to do what the minister did today, that is, rise during the question period to answer an unasked question. None of these solutions is satisfactory, and it would be helpful if the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization could find a solution to that problem.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, my point is more a question of privilege than a point of order. If you find that I have a question of privilege, I propose to move that the matter raised in today's questions to the Minister of Finance by me and my colleague, the hon. member for Don Valley, regarding our falling dollar be referred to the appropriate committee in the form of a reference on our foreign exchange position and the relationship of our dollar to other currencies, so that the Minister of Finance may make a full presentation on this matter and reply to questions.

My first question today was in reference to the visit to the United States by the Minister of Finance. I asked whether he had learned while he was in the U.S. why there is a deteriorating sense of confidence in the Canadian dollar among Americans and foreigners generally and, if so, whether he could indicate whether any advice was given to him on how to restore confidence in the Canadian dollar. The minister's reply was that he had already covered that subject in committee or in the House. The fact is that he could not have covered it. The last committee meeting that the minister attended was March 1. There was an exchange with respect to the level of the Canadian dollar in relation to the American dollar, but there was absolutely no discussion at the committee meeting concerning the question I put to the minister today.

Second, I asked whether, in view of the falling dollar, it is the intention of the government to stabilize it at some level in view of the fact that the minister hinted at the committee meeting that there may be a level at which he might wish to peg the dollar. I refer particularly to an exchange at the nineteenth meeting of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for York-Simcoe seeks the floor on a question of privilege. Up until now it appears that he is complaining about answers given by the Minister of Finance during the question period today. The hon. member will realize that even if the minister had made no answer whatever, there would perhaps be cause for criticism in terms other than those which relate to the procedures of the House but not for any redress in terms of the procedures of the House. Certainly there is no semblance of a question of privilege. If there is some other aspect the hon. member wishes to introduce, I would be glad to consider it, but it must relate more to complaints about the answers given today by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I thank you for your observations. I was simply trying to give background as to the basis of my question of privilege. I quite agree that the minister could have declined to answer my questions, but he did not do that. I suggest he mislead the House by indicating that he had already answered the two questions to which I have referred, one dealing with the question of confidence in the dollar and how it can be restored, and the other dealing with the possibility of pegging the dollar. The first question was not dealt with in the committee proceedings to which the minister referred. He has contradicted himself. Today he said that he never indicated he would stabilize the Canadian dollar. I was simply pointing out that at the committee proceedings of March 1 he definitely stated that there was a possibility he would intervene. The hon. member for Gatineau asked the following question at that committee meeting:

> In other words, Mr. Minister, you foresee the possibility of the federal government having to take action in this area.

The hon. member was referring to stabilization. The minister replied: "It is still a possibility". Earlier the minister said:

> The government may possibly adopt certain measures to stabilize the value of the Canadian dollar—

My question of privilege is that I believe the minister unintentionally mislead the House today by indicating that he had not made that statement in committee and by stating that he had already covered this question of confidence as far as our economy is concerned at a previous committee meeting, which of course he could not have done because the last meeting of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs on this subject was held on March 1 and the minister returned from his United States visit just today.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, what I pointed out to the hon. member at the committee is what I have pointed out many times. I do not really think I or anyone else can speculate on the reasons several thousand foreign exchange traders could have on any particular day for taking positions with regard to the Canadian dollar. It is good sense either on March 1, now or throughout the entire period that Canadian currency is floated, that I not speculate on the reasons for trading decisions. That is the point I put to the hon. gentleman, and I remind him again today. To try to speculate as to what motivates currency traders at any particular point anywhere in the world is something which I could not do, as Minister of Finance, and no one else could do it. Indeed, no one in New York could do it, either.

Mr. Gillies: That is absolute nonsense.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I also indicated to the committee on half a dozen occasions at that particular meeting that the government has no intention of intervening, that the floating dollar is Canadian policy, that there was a possibility at a certain point that policy measures might have to be taken because of the value of the dollar, but that there was no such intention at this point. The floating policy was then, and remains now, the policy of this government. I suggest that the attempts of the hon. member and the hon. member for Don Valley to portray it otherwise are something less than just with regard to the position I took.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In my view, the disagreement remains as it began, a disagreement between hon. members about the quality of the answer or the interpretation to be placed upon the answer of the minister to a question put during the question period. If there were grounds to suggest or argue that action had been taken by the minister at any time which was a deliberate misleading of the House, that might—and I stress "might"—lead to consideration of a question of privilege. That argument has not been put forward, and in case it has any way indirectly, the motion which is attached to the argument is not related to any action of that sort but is related to the question of the dollar. Therefore, I find that no question of privilege ought to be put to the House at this time.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, for some time I have been interested in the special tax deduction for people who are bedridden, blind or confined to wheelchairs. Having been unable to get answers in the House I placed a number of questions on the order paper. I will not go into those questions, but I am rather disturbed when the answers suggest that the information requested is not readily available. The answers to the questions I asked are obviously available. Granted, they may not be readily available—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder if I might ask the hon. member to defer this matter until questions on the order paper are called in a moment.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

BATTLE OF VIMY RIDGE—RECOGNITION OF SIXTIETH ANNIVERSARY

Mr. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, four weeks from Saturday will be the sixtieth anniversary of one of the most significant events in the history of our great country. I am referring to the battle of Vimy Ridge which took place on April 9, 1917, and which historians have declared to be the day on which Canada became a nation. I am proud to say that this memorable occasion will be officially marked by a service at the Vimy Memorial and that 24 survivors of the Canadian Corps who took part in that glorious victory will be there to pay tribute to their fallen comrades.

These survivors come from all across Canada and were chosen to represent the warriors of Vimy by the Royal Canadian Legion and the National Council of Veterans Associations. I am honoured to be heading a party including so many of Canada's heroes who will be revisiting the site of their great triumph. With a couple of exceptions they are all over 80, but I know their love for Canada still burns as fiercely as it did 60 years ago when they stormed up Vimy Ridge a hundred thousand strong and turned the tide of defeat into the flood of victory.

This ceremony will commemorate a day when Canadians were united in a common cause: one Canada, glorious and free. Let us keep the faith with them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to thank the minister for sending us a copy of his statement with regard to his visit along with 24 survivors most of whom are over 80 years of age. On April 9 they will be commemorating the battle of Vimy Ridge. Hon. members on this side of the House say to them, "Go with God's blessing."

The minister should be aware that it was around the same time in 1917 that the then prime minister of Canada thanked Canadian troops for the sacrifice they were making in the First World War. He assured them that the Canadian nation would always remember the sacrifice they had made and would always be committed to caring for veterans and their dependants. With all sincerity, I suggest that the minister consider some of the inequities which still remain in the veterans' charter with regard to World War I veterans. World War I veterans who were incarcerated in prisoner of war camps are still not included in our prisoner of war compensation legislation. Here we are, 60 years later, and some veterans who served during the First World War cannot as yet qualify for war veterans' allowances unless they served for 365 days.

There is another glaring inequity of which the minister is aware, and that is that many veterans at age 80 who have widows live in fear. Those who fall within the category of having disability pensions of less than 48 per cent fear that their widows will be left without a widow's pension. The minister mentioned that they show a love for Canada, and I fully agree with him. I think the minister should remind the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) of that fact. With the threat of destruction of our national unity, their conduct in the First World War, the Second World War and the Korean conflict is an example of the comradeship that was shown regardless of race, creed or colour; it reminds us of the sacrifices they made to make Canada what it is today and the efforts we must make to preserve our national unity.

As a Newfoundlander, I hope the minister realizes that on July 1 in Newfoundland we celebrate the battle of Beaumont-Hamel. Perhaps the minister can find the time to join in the ceremony in memory of those who suffered and died and lie in the graves of Europe.

I can only repeat, Mr. Speaker, that the minister goes with God's blessing and I hope he will reflect, upon his return, and show that we appreciate the sacrifices made by those veterans.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I should first of all like to wish the distinguished and gallant minister well on his trip to Vimy Ridge. I hope he will carry with him not only the good wishes of his own party but certainly the good wishes and admiration of all of us in the New Democratic Party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Saltsman: It is one of those occasions when we take pride in our veterans and express our appreciation for their efforts in keeping this country free.

The minister concluded his remarks today on a bit of a gushy note, yet I think it was a very appropriate bit of gush and perhaps we should be doing more of that. If the minister would excuse me, I would not mind doing a little gushing myself. As bad as war is, as horrible as war is, most of us who have been in war know that there is another side. Those of us who served in the armed forces, particularly in time of war, developed a comradeship, a sense of identity, a sense of loyalty and participation one with another. For instance, I was thinking it rather odd that the two people responding to the minister today are both Jews. One of the things that impressed me during the war was that questions of religion, race and colour broke down in the shared experience of preserving our freedom. It is that kind of spirit that is required in Canada today. It is for that reason that I welcome this occasion.

I am glad to see that the minister will be accompanied by survivors of Vimy Ridge. This is not only honour to the survivors but to all those thousands of Canadians who gave their lives for freedom. I hope their example will serve us well in Canada at this time when we face the difficult problem of keeping our country together.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) for his statement recalling the great battle of Vimy and its 24 Canadian survivors. History does not say whether they were English or French-speaking Canadians, for that did not matter at the time. They were there in our country's defence and, at a certain point, they achieved unity in spite of the difficulties it presented at the time—I was only 3 or 4 years old—namely, the fact that French-speaking Canadians did not accept the draft too readily.

Nevertheless, French-speaking Canadians accepted courageously, open-heartedly to go overseas to defend our liberties, the rights that we now cherish. The minister's statement really touches me because I have a brother who is now 79 years old and even though he did not fight in the battle of Vimy, he was overseas, a soldier of the 22nd Regiment for 32 months as a volunteer. He wanted to serve Canada voluntarily and I am certain that he will be very happy when I get in touch with him tomorrow to let him know all the nice things the Minister of Veterans Affairs said today. He will be comforted and at the same time strengthened in a way by this patriotism he, like all the others, showed for our country.

Mr. Speaker, the minister's initiative in celebrating this event with fanfare by inviting the surviving Canadian soldiers of this battle deserves applause. There are enough disagreeable things that must be hushed up tactfully. When something nice happens, something that warms our heart like the minister's initiative today, we must commend him highly, and thank him on behalf of the soldiers who did their best to preserve the rights we still hold today.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I will simply point out that the minister talked about national unity. I concur with him and think that it warrants further discussion. National unity was strengthened during the war, cemented in a way by the spirit of patriotism which moved both English- and French-speaking Canadians.

Today, in 1977, the situation has changed, but we should work together with the same eagerness and heart and love for our native land so as to strengthen even more the national unity which will not be at the expense of English-speaking or French-speaking Canadians, but a national unity which will prove profitable to all Canadians. There are many other comments, which I could make, Mr. Speaker, but I must heartily tell the minister how grateful I am and thank him for this initiative. He may rest assured that I will remember it forever.

Question No. 1,265—Mr. Neil:

1. Have 1977 metric calendars been printed and, if so (a) how many, (b) what was the cost of (i) printing, (ii) designing?

2. Were tenders called for the printing and design of the calendar and, if so, what are the names and addresses of the companies who submitted tenders in each instance and the amount of such tenders?

3. Has Miln-Bingham Limited/Metric Promotions Division, Toronto designed other brochures or material for Agriculture Canada under its metric programme and, if so, what are the details?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by Agriculture Canada and Supply and Services Canada as follows: 1. Yes. (a) 354,000; (b)(i) $82,622.60; (ii) $24,224.00.

2. Yes. Separate tenders were invited for the design and the printing of the calendars, and bids were received as follows: Design: Easlaw, McCarney & Mann, 780 Metcalfe Street, Ottawa, Ont., $370/page; Criterion Art Co. (Ont.) Ltd., 202 Rochester St., Ottawa, Ont., $610/page; Talbot Communications, 75 Ann St., London, Ont., $780/page; Miln Bingham Limited, 1165 Leslie St., Don Mills, Ont., $725/page. Proposals were evaluated on basis of companies' expertise, design submissions as well as price. Printing: Twenty firms submitted tenders as follows: Ashton-Potter Limited, Toronto, $66,417.00; Commercial Print Craft Ltd., Woodstock, $67,067.70; McLaren Morris & Todd Ltd., Mississauga, $70,018.00; York Litho Ltd., Toronto, $70,226.86; Ronalds Federated Ltd., Richmond Hill, $72,224.02; Southam Murray, Weston, Ontario, $72,818.02; Lawson Graphics, Toronto, $73,134.60; Folph Clark Stone Ltd., Bramalea, $74,552.70; Les Éditions Graphiques, Drummondville, $75,273.00; Gazette Canadian Printing Ltd., Montreal, $76,499.40; Pierre des Marais Inc., St. Laurent, $76,504.44; The Carswell Printing Co., Toronto, $76,390.88; Montreal Lithographing Ltd., Chomedy-Laval, $78,176.90; Graphic Centre Ont. Ltd., Toronto, $78,750.00; Miln Bingham Ltd., Don Mills, $79,505.60; Stovel Lawson Graphics, Winnipeg, $79,424.00; Evergreen Press Ltd., Vancouver, $79,856.00; Ronalds Federated, Montreal, $82,061.00; C.F. Haughton Ltd., Agincourt, $84,505.24; Ross Ellis Ltd., Montreal, $102,205.18.

UIC—INCOME TAX DEDUCTION

Question No. 1,459—Mr. Herbert:

1. For the 1975 taxation year, what was the total amount of income tax deducted from unemployment insurance benefits and what amount was (a) federal tax (b) remitted to the provinces?

2. What method is used for the calculation of such tax?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. $209.3 million. (a) and (b) In accordance with the Income Tax Act, the Commission remits all Federal and all Provincial, except Quebec income taxes, which amounted to $162.9 million, to National Revenue, Taxation, and Quebec Provincial income tax, which amounted to 46.4 million to the Quebec Provincial government.

[Mr. Lalonde.]

2. The 1975 Income Tax deductions were calculated in accordance with the 1975 Income Tax Deduction Tables issued by Revenue Canada/Taxation.

TRANSPORT—DEVELOPMENT PLANS FOR AIRPORTS

Question No. 1,470—Mr. Howie:

Are there development plans for airports in the (a) Maritimes (b) rest of Canada which currently have priority over those for the DOT airport at Fredericton, New Brunswick and, if so (i) for which airports (ii) for what development (iii) in what order of priority?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): As reported in reply to question No. 960 of November 8, 1976, Transport Canada plans in 1979/80 to enlarge the air terminal building, acquire the furnishings, modify the car parking area, as well as construct a parallel taxiway and extend the aircraft parking apron at Fredericton airport, N.B., subject to the availability of funds and national priorities. Beyond the next fiscal year any program can only be considered tentative,and very much subject to the availability of funds and national priorities. It is therefore impossible to identify projects for which specific commitments in 1978/79 or subsequent years can be firmly established.

NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE—DEPARTMENTAL EMPLOYEES LOCATED IN QUEBEC

Question No. 1,635—Mr. Coates:

How many public servants in the Department of National Health and Welfare are located in the Province of Quebec and what is the estimated payroll for the fiscal year 1976-77?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): As of December 31, 1976, the department employed 861 public servants on a continuing or term more than six months basis in the province of Quebec. Information on the estimated number of term employees, less than six months, is not available. The estimated payroll for the 1976-77 fiscal year in this province is $12,658,942.

(NOTE: Per the Public Accounts, payroll is interpreted as salaries and wages, including overtime. It does not include such compensatory benefits as commuting allowances, employers' contributions to unemployment insurance, Quebec Pension Plan, etc.)

FEDERAL PAYMENTS TO QUEBEC RESIDENTS

Question No. 1,636—Mr. Coates:

What is the estimated total payment to residents in the Province of Quebec for the fiscal year 1976-77 (a) in old age security pensions (b) under the guaranteed income supplement (c) in family allowances (d) under the Canada Assistance Programme?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): (a) $806,815,000; (b) $295,693,000; (c) $524,421,000; (d) During the fiscal year 1976-1977, the federal government will reimburse the Quebec Ministry of Social Affairs an estimated amount of $608,478,000 under the Interim Arrangements (Established Program) Act. This amount represents the amount otherwise payable under the Canada Assistance Plan. In addition, an estimated amount of $2,500,000 will be paid for work activity projects authorized pursuant to Part III of the Canada Assistance Plan. These amounts represent the federal share of provincial expenditures for social assistance and welfare services as authorized under the Canada Assistance Plan. Under the Canada Assistance Plan, the federal government makes no payments directly to the residents of any province.

FREDERICTON, N.B., MANPOWER TRAINING

Question No. 1,691—Mr. Howie:

Have any community college courses been funded in Fredericton, New Brunswick, by the Department of Manpower and Immigration since January 1, 1976 and, if so, what were the courses and what was the extent of their funding?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Yes, as of February 9, 1977 the following courses have been purchased by the Department of Manpower and Immigration in Fredericton since January 1, 1976: Reorientation for Inactive Nurses—Maple Syrup Marketing—Clerk Typist—Steno Upgrading—Bartender—Homemaker—Forest Ranger—Small Equipment Repair—Lineman (Pre-Employment)—Basic Carpentry—Carpet Laying—Utility Lineman—Construction Lineman—Stationary Engineer—Basic Training for Skill Development—Basic Job Readiness Training—Vocational Teacher Training (Special Arrangement)—Apple Production—Maple Syrup Production—All Round Logger. The cost to the Department of Manpower and Immigration for the purchase of these courses is $1,088,511.

NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE—INDIAN INFANT MORTALITY AND MEDICAL TRAINING

Question No. 1,703—Mr. Smith:

1. Does the 1975-76 Annual Report of the Department of National Health and Welfare state that the Indian infant mortality rate is 2.64 times greater than that for the general population and, if so, what was the Indian infant mortality rate in (a) 1970-71 (b) 1965-66 (c) 1960-61 (d) 1950-51?

2. (a) On what date was the Community Health Representative Programme initiated (b) how many representatives are located in Manitoba and in which locations (c) on what date did each begin?

3. What programmes is the Medical Services Branch initiating or supporting to ensure that more Indian people have an opportunity to train in such medical fields as nurses, dentists, dental assistants, etc?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Yes. The following is a list of Indian infant mortality rates per 1,000 live births for specified years: 1975, 38.6; (a) 1971, 45.2; (b) 1966, 52.2; (c) 1961, 76.3; (d) 1950, not applicable.

2. (a) 1961. (b) and (c)

3. The Medical Services Branch sponsors the training of dental therapists in Fort Smith, N.W.T. Moreover, Medical Services' staff endeavour to encourage Indian people to take training in the field in existing educational institutions.

TRANSPORT—EXCESSIVE NOISE LEVELS—MILITARY AIRPORTS

Question No. 1,834—Mr. Benjamin:

Have any provincial governments complained to the Department of Transport about excessive noise levels from military airports near major urban centres and, if so (a) what is the nature, extent and location of such violations (b) for how long have Departmental officials known of the situation (c) what action, if any, has been taken to date?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Transport Canada has no record of any provincial government complaint concerning excessive noise levels from military airports near major urban centres.

[English]

Mr. Goodale: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Shall the other questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Malone: I rise on point of order, Mr. Speaker. I will not go through the whole preamble again except to say that I believe there are three other categories of people who are disabled. Other people are disabled, too—people not falling into the three distinct categories which now obtain tax relief, and these other disabled people are not entitled to receive the $1,420 tax relief.

[Mr. Lalonde.]

Bearing that in mind, I placed my questions on the order paper, only to receive the response that information on the subject is not readily available. I grant that it may not be readily available, and therein lies our difficulty. I could not secure that information during the question period; I was told that the matter was too complicated. On the one hand, those who are blind, in wheelchairs or bedridden are entitled to this special tax deduction. On the other, hand, disabled persons in other categories are not. Many of the blind and many in wheelchairs especially have full-time jobs and earn money, but there are others totally disabled who are not given any tax benefits.

Bearing this in mind, I suggest that a response to my order paper question saying that that information is not readily available is not satisfactory. Surely there is information available to supply an answer to question 1,518. I submit that it is not a matter of whether it is easy or difficult to answer these questions. We must have the information because there is an inequity in the system which I should like to see corrected. I raise this matter as a point of order and hope that those with responsibility in this field will, instead of arguing about the difficulties of supplying the information, do their best to answer our questions and give us the information we seek.

Mr. Goodale: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the hon. gentleman's sincerity and draw to the attention of the House that with respect to statistical inquiries of various departments some material is handy and easy to obtain in response to written inquiries, and some is more difficult to obtain. Some is virtually impossible to obtain unless one spends much time and money trying to obtain it. I am referring to the kinds of detailed calculations the hon. member requires. I am not personally familiar with the specific requirement raised by the hon. member in his point of order, but I will undertake to inquire more precisely into the matter so that I can explain to the hon. member the rationale behind the explanation in the answer.

Mr. Jones: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. On February 18 I placed question No. 1,880 on the order paper. I realize that the government may not consider a three-week delay in answering as unduly long, but surely to goodness if the Department of Transport knows what it is doing the government could answer a simple question like mine.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

OLD AGE SECURITY

AMENDMENT RESPECTING PENSION PAYABLE TO PERSONS SIXTY-FIVE YEARS OF AGE AND OVER CONTINGENT UPON RESIDENCE IN CANADA

The House resumed, from Wednesday, March 9, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-35, to amend the Old Age Security Act, be read the third time and do pass, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) (p. 3820).

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I will not take long. I want to emphasize and put forward further information which will show that some of the answers of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) were at best inaccurate and at worst an attempt to mislead this House in terms of the situation concerning spouses' allowances. At present the government of Canada will pay one spouse between the age of 60 and 65 a pension if the other spouse is already receiving the old age pension; but when the older spouse dies, the government cuts off that pension. Yesterday the Minister of National Health and Welfare suggested that our proposals with regard to spouses' allowances would cost in excess of $2 billion. I suggest that his response was totally unacceptable since in committee he suggested that the spouses' allowance program would cost a maximum of around $700,000.

The minister and government supporters tried to say that we cannot ask the government to increase its spending on the one hand but reduce expenditures on the other. You must remember that this is an inequitable situation, for the government has paid money to these people and they have become accustomed to a certain standard of living. Then, when there is a death in the family, the surviving spouse does not receive the allowance. I submit that the spouse needs the money to continue living in dignity.

How can the government's position be justified, in view of the most inefficient ways it uses money? Last year the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) wasted $740,000 in jet jaunts across the country. Information Canada was costing up to $10 million a year. In the Post Office the numerical strength of its membership has increased in the last eight years from about 39,000 to over 60,000, or about 50 per cent. What can one say about the armed forces? The most significant observation about our armed forces is their relative numerical weakness in the lower ranks and their top-heavy nature. Their personnel includes only 19,300 privates, or merely 25 per cent of total military personnel, some 43,000 non-commissioned officers, and more than 14,000 officers. There are nearly twice as many captains as lieutenants, and nearly 50 per cent more corporals than privates.

I bring these facts forward to counter the government's argument that when the older spouse dies it must, because of the cost factor, take away the allowance from the surviving spouse if that spouse has not reached age 65. That is inequitable and I resent the government's suggestion that we on my side of the House are urging the government to spend more money. That is a fallacious argument. The fact is that almost any department of government one cares to examine wastes more money than it would cost to provide this program which has as its basis a humanitarian concern. Surely the government cannot say that it cannot afford the program, for it would cost only $700,000. To repeat what my former leader said, this government wastes more money than it would need to provide the spouses' program. The money would be only a little dribble. It should provide these funds to spouses who are without them. That is all I can say.

I underscore this: the arguments made by members on the government side yesterday were invalid and perhaps even designed to mislead the House. It was suggested that the program would cost an additional $2 billion. By the minister's own admission in committee, the cost would not be nearly as great. That point needs to be made.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to participate in this debate until I heard some hon. members speaking yesterday. I was inspired to enter the debate by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), and also prompted by a personal experience on Tuesday night of this week. I shall deal with the second reason immediately. I was attending a meeting of the ward 8 ratepayers' association in my riding to discuss the question of railway crossings when the president announced the death of one of the members of the association. Another member was collecting money to assist the widow. The question arose, why were people collecting money for the widow? The answer was that the husband who had passed on was over 65 years old and his wife, under 65, had been getting the spouse's allowance. Now, because the husband had passed on, the widow was to get nothing.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Gilbert: Yes, people at the meeting were collecting money to assist the widow.

When we debated the spouses' allowance a couple of years ago we were told that the amendment before the House was based on the theory that two pensioners could not live on one pension. Hence the reason for the spouses' allowance. I remember that all opposition members who spoke tried to persuade the government not to include in the amendment the exceptions affecting widows, widowers, spinsters and bachelors. All people in the age range of 60 to 65 should be given an allowance, especially if the pensioner has passed on. I heard the response yesterday by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) about persons on spouses' allowance who, as a result of the death of a person receiving the pension, will get nothing. It made me realize that I had to get up and say something, especially when I had the personal experience I mentioned on Tuesday night.

● (1540)

What did the Minister of National Health and Welfare say? He said that to pay a pension to people between 60 and 65 years of age would cost $2 billion and that we in the opposition ought to exercise some financial responsibility. The hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) said it is very easy for the opposition to talk about changes in programs, but these improvements have to be made by increased taxes. He said it is not realistic to make these changes at the moment. The hon. member decried the members of the Conservative party who he claims have stated they want it both ways. He said they want government restraint on one side, and at the same time they want improvements in programs. I thought the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Malone) ably set forth the argument with regard to the amount of money the government is spending on other programs and the necessity of having priorities with regard to its expenditures. When one thinks of the $25 million loss on the sale of the CANDU reactor to Argentina, one realizes that the government has not set its priorities in order. When one considers the corporate advantages with regard to depreciation allowances, and the huge savings to corporations as a result of those tax advantages, one realizes that the government does not have its priorities in order.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare said it would cost $2 billion to pay pensions to persons aged 60 to 65. He does not realize the real thrust of the argument of members of the Conservative party, the New Democratic Party and, I am sure, the Social Credit party with regard to spouses' allowances. In reality, the cost of the program to permit spouses' allowances to continue until they attain 65 years of age, on the minister's own admission in committee, amounts to $700,000. Now, $700,000 is a far different figure from the $2 billion that the minister gave. It was a deliberate attempt to mislead the House with regard to this matter.

I am rather happy that the hon. member for York South (Mrs. Appolloni) is in the chamber. I hope she participates in the debate. The real thrust of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in bringing forth the motion to refer back to committee clauses 8 and 9 of Bill C-35 was to persuade the government that this should be done and that they should accept the pleadings and arguments made in committee by the hon. member for York South—and made many times from this side of the House—that the spouses' allowance should stand regardless of age until the person attains 65 years of age. This gives the hon. member for York South, the hon. member for Davenport and hon. members on the opposite side an opportunity to tell the Minister of National Health and Welfare in no uncertain terms that there is a deliberate injustice to these people by cutting them off the spouses' allowance because one member of the relationship passes on. I hope the hon. member for York South participates in the debate and in the vote to give us support to have this matter referred back to committee.

Why is it that the Liberal party always casts shadows on good programs and principles? I remind hon. members of the label they earned, and deserved, back in 1957 when they attempted to give pensioners a $6 increase. They were known as the "six-buck boys". The result of that action was that they lost the next election to the Conservative party. I recall two or three years ago when at Christmas the government, in an endeavour to adjust the old age pension, gave old age pensioners a 42-cent increase. Why is it that two years ago they made those cruel and inhumane amendments with regard to the spouses' allowance affecting widows, widowers, bachelors and spinsters?

I ask the hon. member for York South and the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Cullen), why it is that the Liberal party casts a shadow on programs that are essentially good? Why is it they get so mean, miserable and niggardly with regard to certain people within the community? This is why we in the New Democratic Party think the motion presented by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre gives all of us an opportunity to tell the government in no uncertain terms that this is not the way most Canadians want to treat widows, widowers, bachelors and spinsters with regard to pensions.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare has a very high-profile portfolio. However, he was disappointing when he attempted to justify his action by the statements he made yesterday. I spoke about the widow in my constituency who will be cut off her spouses' allowance because her husband passed on. She gets nothing. The minister had the audacity to say that she can apply for social assistance or welfare. There is a difference between a pension and welfare assistance. A pension is earned. Welfare assistance appears to be a grant or gift, something that may not be earned. Surely the wives and husbands of pensioners who are under 65 years of age should be treated in a more humane way.

When I heard the response of the minister that we have to tackle the problem of poverty, I could not agree with him more. However, I say to him that it is about time he started tackling the problem of poverty. It was not enough for the Minister of National Health and Welfare to go to Toronto last Friday and attempt to lecture the people of Toronto and Ontario by saying they must put their actions where their words are with regard to national unity. It was not enough for him to say they have to take the initiative with regard to programs in language, attitudes, and so forth. He has to tackle the problem in a more concrete and specific manner.

The minister would have been far better to go to Toronto and say to the people of Ontario that if we want national unity we have to tackle the problems of poverty, unemployment, housing and many of the social problems that prevail. If he had done that, instead of trying to lecture them on the bilingual issue, I am sure that he would have obtained the support of the people of Ontario, indeed of people throughout Canada. It is not worthy of a minister in a high-profile portfolio to say that sort of thing.

I would remind the minister that one thing we have to get straight is basic security for all Canadians. I give the government credit for the Canada Pension Plan, but we have to be reminded at all times that at best the Canada pension provides only 25 per cent of the six best years of a workingman's life, which I suggest is not sufficient to meet today's costs. In view of the high rate of inflation today, is it any wonder that people who receive the Canada pension have to continue working to meet the expenses of the day?

At this stage, Mr. Speaker, it is only right and proper that all of us should give full credit to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre who has spoken on pensions ever since he came into the House and yesterday put the position on pensions clearly and concisely. Many members, including the hon. member for Davenport, picked up points which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre made, as did the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander), not only with regard to spouses' allowance but also with regard to the double signature required on some pension application forms. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre also outlined the problem faced 10 or 12 years down the road by people who come to Canada today and who, as a result of the changes contained in Bill C-35, may not have sufficient money to meet requirements of that day.

I was rather amused at the performance of the hon. member for Hamilton West yesterday, who jumped up after the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre had moved his motion to refer back clauses 8 and 9 of the bill to test the strength of the opposition regarding spouses' allowance and said that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre had not told him what he was attempting to do. Mr. Speaker, there has always been a rather pleasant relationship between members of the New Democratic Party and members of the Conservative party concerning opposition we have to government programs, but this is the first time I have known a member to jump up and criticize our critic because he had not told him what he was going to do. I just could not get over the fact that he would whine and try to say that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was devious. I think he should have thanked the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and said that he appreciated the opportunity given to him procedurally to express his concern about pensioners.

Mr. Alexander: How about getting back to the bill?

Mr. Gilbert: I think he should have said that the motion gives members an opportunity to support the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, The hon. member should get back to the terms of the bill.

Mr. Skoreyko: He is just killing time, that is all.

Mr. Gilbert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, but I just wanted to tell my good friend what I thought of his performance yesterday and that I was not really impressed.

All members of the House support the main principle of Bill C-35 and its new approach to calculating a pension. I think all of us acknowledge that some of the social programs we have in Canada are of the best. But we are not satisfied that the application of some of those principles gives the best to certain groups, particularly so far as spouse's allowance is concerned. This is why we are having a debate at this time, and it is why I ask the hon. member for York South and the hon. member for Davenport, two members whom I know quite well, to give us the support that is necessary to make the Minister of National Health and Welfare realize that most of us in the House do not want to see widows penalized because of the death of their partner. I ask that all of us support this bill.

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to speak at this point because I said a tremendous amount in committee the other evening, as hon. members are aware. However, since I have been quoted it strikes me as passing strange that members of the opposition should laud a member on the government side. I thank them for that. I just want to make a few points, and perhaps this will be my last plea to the minister to please review his decision on this bill. If it will help him to review his decision, I will be tremendously honest and open. The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander), both yesterday and in committee, asked where I was in 1975. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) excused my failure to speak up on my ignorance. I have to tell the truth.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No, I said because you were new.

Mrs. Appolloni: Because I was new and because I did not have the courage.

Mr. Alexander: Well, certainly we forgive you for that.

Mrs. Appolloni: I hope my conscience will forgive me. I feel extremely strongly on these two points, Mr. Speaker. I think what we are doing here is overlooking the human factor.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Appolloni: I think at this stage in our so-called civilization the one thing we cannot afford to do is to overlook the human factor. I happen to believe that as legislators, as human beings, it is our duty to uphold each one's dignity and to save each one's pride. There is a sentiment, especially among our elderly, that hand-outs in the form of welfare, or whatever euphemism you care to use, are beneath their dignity. We might quarrel with, dispute and question the rationale behind that sentiment, but we cannot dispute the fact that the sentiment exists and that somehow we have to uphold the dignity of these people to whom this situation is very real. For some reason it is much more important to them to accept a cheque from the federal government than it is to accept one from the welfare office of a province or municipality. That cannot be disputed and must be accepted.

Now let me take the case of widows and widowers aged 60 and over. They suddenly lose their spouse. They are by age and by every other concept in our language at the most vulnerable point of their lives. What are we doing to them? We are taking a few pennies away. Let us face it, we are not giving them through OAS a tremendous amount of money, but we are taking away the few pennies that their dignity demands, and doing this at the very time they have lost their loved ones. Is that humanity?

I have dealt with widows and widowers. What are we doing with the unwed? We have allowed common law marriage, but this is not the question here. What, in effect, this bill is doing is penalizing or victimizing those people who for one reason or another chose not to marry.

● (1600)

Let me quote just one case in point. We have a man aged 65 or over who for one reason—mainly cultural, I might add—is given the usual comforts of life. He is cooked for, he is cared for in many ways by his sister who is over 60. Obviously, they cannot marry. They do not want to be spouses unless they want an incestuous relationship. Perhaps I had better keep away from that. But just because they are not married, this sister who has given him all the comforts he needs in his old age is denied anything. The rationale behind this, we are told, is that two people cannot live on one pension. What happens to the sister who does not marry? She is excluded. In other words, we are penalizing the woman. It is usually the woman. I am sorry if I sound feminist—no, I am not sorry; I do not apologize: it is usually the women who are penalized.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You are right.

Mrs. Appolloni: We are penalizing the woman who could not get her man. As I say, I have very little hope of making any change, but I want to go on record that I feel that by passing a law such as this we are perpetuating a very grave error, one to which I myself was a party in 1975. I regret my error in 1975 and want to rectify it now. I want the government to show its humanity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I want first of all to commend the hon. member for York South (Mrs. Appolloni) for the comments she has made with such courage and conviction.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Too bad the minister was not present to hear them.

Miss MacDonald: It is, indeed, a pity that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) was not present to hear those comments. I sincerely hope they will be passed on to him quickly, before the vote, and that they will have an influence on the way in which he reacts to the amendment. I should like to comment on the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, my party has expressed its intention to support Bill C-35. But what we are debating at the moment is an amendment which I feel would improve the bill and at the same time remove a particularly cruel form of injustice which presently exists.

The origin of that injustice goes back to Bill C-62 of last session, a bill debated in the spring of 1975. I state again, as I did at that time, that certain provisions of Bill C-62 were conceived in a spirit of meanness and callousness. That piece of legislation enabled the younger spouse of an old age pensioner to receive old age security, on the basis of need, between 60 and 65 years of age. A number of us who served on the committee of that time, all members of opposition parties, felt the benefits of such a proposal should not be denied to those who had the misfortune to lose the elder partner in a marriage, or to single persons in the same age category.

We were particularly incensed that a younger spouse who became the recipient of the payment on a regular basis should suddenly have that payment terminated on the death of the elder partner. This seemed to us to be cruel, unjust and unfair. We protested strongly at the time. The amendment before us, introduced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, seeks to redress that callous action on the part of the government.

Statistics show that in 90 per cent of all marital union, the younger spouse is female and, as in so many other areas of discrimination, the inequity falls far more heavily on women than on men. It is ironic that this particular inequity should have been initiated by the minister responsible for the status of women.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Shame.

Miss MacDonald: I recall that back in June, 1975, the minister was asked whether any projection had been made as to the number of people who would become disentitled to pensions on the death of the elder spouse. The minister asked his officials for the projection, and the figures indicated that some 375 persons per month would be disentitled; that is, approximately 4,500 Canadians per year. So the figure is 4,500 people out of a total population of some 23 million. Not a great number, but obviously too few to warrant the concern of the government.

What does it mean in dollar terms? If you take the figure of 4,500 a year and calculate on the basis of the maximum benefit rate of $150 a month—and many people would not be receiving as much as that—the total amount would come to about $672,000 a year which, as some members have already pointed out, is less than the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) spends annually on his private jet flights. If you were to take another figure, that is, the $40 million which the government lost and pilfered away on the sale of the CANDU reactor to Argentina, and transfer it to those 4,500 people who are disentitled annually, you would be able to continue paying pensions to people in this category for the next 50 years.

I want the minister to tell us if he knows what a person feels like when suddenly cut off from benefits. Has he ever been in contact with such individuals? Has he ever listened to them? Has he ever talked to them? If so, what does he tell them about this? Yesterday, when he was addressing himself to the amendment, he proudly trumpeted these words: "We have no lesson to learn from anybody." As was said of the Bourbons, so it could be said of the Minister of National Health and Welfare: he has learned nothing and he has forgotten nothing. I suggest the minister learn to listen to a few of these people to whom he is causing such unnecessary hardship. It may be trite to say the government is practicing restraint upon the backs of the poor and the aged, but that is certainly what is being done in this case.

In his usual devious manner, the minister sought to distort the amendment by claiming that its intent would cost some $2 billion. Obviously, his figure is inaccurate if you look at that amendment and, I would say, deliberately inaccurate. But if there is one thing that we have learned to expect from this government, it is that it is pretty poor at doing its arithmetic on anything. Some 4,500 Canadians are affected annually by this discriminatory piece of legislation—4,500 Canadians who have already had to prove their need in order to receive this payment. I suggest that if there was need in the first place for them to receive payment, surely that need exists to a greater, not a lesser, degree after the death of the older spouse. I want to see these benefits retained by the 4,500 Canadians who are presently receiving them. The minister wants to snatch them back, and again I have no doubt that he will vote against the amendment: he said he would do so.

He also said something else back in 1975 when he was before the committee. He told the members at that time that he would provide us with a copy of the letter of notification which he sends bereaved pensioners notifying them that they are no longer eligible for benefits. Perhaps now is the time for him to do so; now is the time for him to make that letter public when he takes this uncharitable action today in voting against this amendment, because his uncharitable letter of disentitlement would certainly be a suitable accompanying gesture to that action.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The question is on the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles): All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Knowles, Winnipeg North Centre) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost. The question is upon the main motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz)—Health—Alleged refusal of Connaught Laboratory to supply gamma globulin to Malta; the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski)—National Defence—Alleged necessity of sending parachutes of airborne regiment from Ottawa to Edmonton for repacking; the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski)—Farm Credit Corporation—Alleged denial of loans to farmers getting less than 50 per cent of income from farming.

PRIVATE BILLS

[English]

BELL CANADA

The House resumed, from Thursday, January 27, consideration of the motion of Mr. O'Connell that Bill S-2, respecting Bell Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

● (1700)

Mr. Gilbert: Don't speak for six hours.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I would certainly love to speak for six hours. I would love nothing more than to speak on Bell Canada, and I can speak for four times six hours on Bell Canada. I am sure that by the time we are finished with this bill and my remarks have been tabulated we will find that the time will have come to somewhere around four times six hours.

It is very appropriate that we are dealing with this private member's bill which is being sponsored through the House by the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. O'Connell). I was prepared to be very sensitive and understanding of Bell's problems, but I am upset about Bell today.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner).]

Mr. Darling: Don't be so harsh on them.

Mr. Rodriguez: The hon. member for Parry-Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) says that I am kind of harsh on Bell. I am not. I was prepared to let the goodness of my heart overflow in dealing with this bill, but when I saw the text yesterday in the Globe and Mail of the president of Bell, Mr. James Thackray, that was it—my goodness blew away. I want to quote from the testimony of Mr. Thackray before the CRTC yesterday regarding Bell's latest application for a rate increase. According to the Globe and Mail:

> Bell Canada may stop installing new telephones service if the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission does not give it the full rate increase it wants, according to Bell president James Thackray.

There is a threat which one of Canada's multinationals and largest companies has thrown out to the regulatory body set up to regulate Bell Canada's rate increases. When I read that I became very interested and wanted to participate in this debate to the full. In digging around for material I discovered some rather interesting things about this particular bill. When it was brought to this House several weeks ago and my colleague for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) spoke on this bill, he clearly indicated that the thrust of the bill is to increase the capitalization of Bell Canada without reference to the regulatory body, the CRTC.

So here we have a corporation which is regulated because at the time of the setting up of the body to govern this corporation it was seen that the corporation ought to act in the best interests of Canada and Canadians. One would assume that a lot of corporations try to maximize profits, but the thrust of this bill appears to be to minimize regulations so there is no reference back to the House whatsoever, and this concerns us.

The first thing that threw me off about this bill, Mr. Speaker, is that it originated in the other place. If there is one thing in this House which makes me very skeptical and run immediately to the record, it is to see what those minions of the corporate sector in that last bastion of capitalist free enterprise in this country have to say about a bill. No one looking at the list of senators in the other place would doubt that they are indeed experts in the way the economy works and in the way financial institutions work. So I said to myself, "Now, fellow, you had better get the debates of the Senate committee and the debates of the Senate and read what they have to say, because I am sure there will be words of wisdom for any member". So that is what I did, Mr. Speaker. I had a little bit of difficulty because it took this bill one day, exactly, to go through committee stage and third reading debate, occupying one page of Senate Hansard. But I want to tell the House that those gems of wisdom that I was looking for were missing. There was not one exposé of why Bell Canada wanted this legislation.

Before the Senate committee meeting, which I presume all took place in the space of an hour or so, was Mr. A. J. de Grandpré, chairman and chief executive officer of Bell

Canada. It appears he was the only one who spoke throughout the brief committee meeting on December 14, 1976. Some senators may have said, "Phew, it is warm in here; can we open a window?", but there was no questioning of Mr. de Grandpré. Interestingly enough, he gave a very abbreviated history of Bell Canada and he had this gem of a statement, to be found at page 1:7 of the Senate Standing Committee on Transport and Communications report:

> Bell Canada is a typical example of a company which was, at one time, under American control and influence and which has been gradually brought back into Canadian hands, not by decree or legislation, but by long-term planning and performance.

Well, Mr. Speaker, since we have had Mr. de Grandpré's abbreviated history of the development of Bell, I think it only fair to this House that I put on record a more complete and detailed history of the development of Bell Canada. I think it is important to take a look at the development of Bell because, in effect, we will see certain practices of and developments in Bell which we should look at in light of today's threats which were made before the CRTC by Mr. Thackray, in light of the manner in which Bell wants to develop, in light of some of their responses to the need for rural service, in light of the propaganda they put out, and in light of their political influence in the other place and even in this House. This is why I want to put the real history of Bell Canada on the record. It will then be there for generations of Canadians to read and to get the other side of the picture.

Alexander Graham Bell obtained the basic patent on the telephone for the United States on March 7, 1876, and a second patent on January 30, 1877. These two patents formed the basis of the Bell system monopoly in the United States until their expiration in 1893 and 1894. Recognizing the competitive potential of the telephone upon telegraph service, however, the Western Union Telegraph Company attempted to enter the telephone business on the basis of competing patents held by Elisha Gray, Thomas Edison, and others, in 1878.

The Western Union Telegraph Company and the American Speaking Telephone Company in 1879 signed an agreement with Bell Telephone Company, a predecessor of I.T. & T., which admitted to the validity of the Bell patents. It agreed to withdraw from the telephone field, and in exchange Western Union was to receive 20 per cent of all rentals or royalties received by the Bell Company from telephone instruments for a period of 17 years and Bell was not to enter the telegraph field.

● (1710)

Canadian patents for the telephone were given by Alexander Graham Bell to his father Alexander Melville Bell for $1 and to Charles Williams of Boston for 1,000 telephone instruments. Melville Bell hired agents to solicit subscribers for private lines in Canada, and in 1879 the Dominion Telegraph Company became the general agent for the Bell interests in Canada. It secured a licence to operate Bell patents for five years. However, the Dominion Telegraph Company found it impossible to raise the $100,000 demanded by Melville Bell for the purchase of the patents and later that year the Canadian patent rights were sold to associates of the National Bell Telephone Company of Boston. This group brought Charles Fleetford Sise to Canada to organize the Bell Telephone Company of Canada.

Rival telephone service was offered by the Montreal Telegraph Company, an affiliate of Western Union, utilizing the Edison patents. For a time, both telegraph companies offered telephone services in Montreal. In other communities, telephone service was offered by local groups under the arrangements with Melville Bell prior to the agreement between Bell and the Dominion Telegraph Company. For example, in Hamilton telephone service was offered by the Hamilton District Telegraph Company in 1878, later the Hamilton Telephone Company which opened the first telephone exchange in Canada.

In 1880, two subsidiaries of the National Bell Telephone Company in the United States were incorporated under federal charter. The Bell Telephone Company of Canada was incorporated in 1880 and given certain powers. Those powers were outlined in the course of the proceedings of the select committee on telephones. They were as follows:

> —to manufacture telephones and other apparatus connected therewith used in connection with the business of a telegraph or a telephone company, and to purchase, sell or lease the same and rights relating thereto, and to build, establish, construct, purchase, acquire or lease, and maintain and operate, or sell or let any line or lines for the transmission of messages by telephone in Canada or elsewhere.

The company was empowered to construct and maintain its telephone lines along the sides of and across or under any public highways, streets, bridges, water courses and other such places. Attempts were made by legislators to submit the new company to regulation of tolls through the provisions of the 1875 telegraph act, but they were defeated. We should note, at this point, a voice from history coming to us over time. A solemn warning was sounded at that time. A member of the other place, Senator Haythorne, called attention to the danger which might arise and he did so at the time the Telegraph Act was implemented. This is what he said, and I quote from the debates of the Senate:

> There is nothing which this House ought to look after with greater jealousy than the establishment of large monopolies . . . I consider it one of my most important duties as a legislator to guard against the evils of monopolies.

That was a warning which has obviously not been heeded over the years. It is one we should keep in mind as we debate Bill S-2. Under various agreements in 1880, Bell Canada obtained exclusive patent rights to offer telephone service in this country. The Canadian telephone company was set up as a subsidiary of Bell (United States) to hold the patent rights and to own all telephone instruments in Canada. The Bell Telephone Company of Canada was incorporated to lease the patent rights and to lease telephone instruments from that company. In 1884 and 1885 the Canadian patent rights held by Bell Canada were voided by the minister of agriculture on the grounds of non-manufacture and refusal to sell. This opened the way for the establishment of independent telephone companies, provided they could secure easements and rights-of-way.

Due to high rates, refusal to extend service and poor technical standards on the part of Bell, a large number of telephone companies arose, many of them in direct competition with Bell. In reaction to this Bell lowered the price for telephone service, sometimes to zero, when faced by direct competition. In his testimony before the select committee on telephones, here is what Mr. Sise had to say, and I quote his evidence:

There was a time in Peterborough when we charged nothing for our service and your argument (on discrimination) would be that we would have to give a free service all over Canada.

One of the committee members then commented:

In Peterborough, you gave it to them for nothing. That is very cheap.

To which the witness replied:

I do not know that anybody in Peterborough ever objected.

Well, they were loss-leadering telephones in those days. It was one of their ways of destroying competition. When I see the advertisement, "Let's free enterprise", when I hear corporate leaders telling government that it should not interfere in the operations of legitimate business, I confess I am irritated because when we look at history we find that the principle upon which business has operated has been one of eliminating competition, not of encouraging it. Here we find Bell Telephone engaged in loss-leadering to eliminate competition. Then this gentleman, Mr. Sise, stood up and said, "Yes, we did it", and nobody complained.

As I say, Bell's policy involved, first of all, predatory pricing. Second, it involved refusal to interconnect services. Bell refused to interconnect competing companies with its telephone exchange, thereby barring such companies from access to its long distance facilities. The third aspect of this policy was that of collusion with the railway companies. Bell succeeded in preventing independent companies from gaining access to railway stations by offering the railways free telephone service in exchange for this exclusive privilege. Finally, there was the aspect of propaganda. Bell paid newspapers to publish false and misleading allegations regarding its competitors.

The one example which stands out in my mind is the situation involving the muncipalities of Port Arthur and Fort William in northern Ontario. These two towns had established a municipal telephone system. Incidentally, it is still in existence today. In 1902 both towns agreed, due to the discontent over the service provided by Bell during the preceding five years, to set up a joint system with provision for the exchange of conversations. To indicate the degree of discontent with the Bell service, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that only 15 persons among all those to whom a plebiscite was sent voted against the construction of a municipally-owned system. The municipal systems commenced operations in November, 1902, and in March, 1903, one of the exchanges was sabotaged and burned mysteriously. As a matter of fact, the evidence given by the mayor of Fort William, Joshua Dyke, to the select committee on telephone which was investigating the situation reads as follows:

● (1720)

One still, drizzly night . . . about two in the morning someone connected the 2,000 volt electric wires to the 30 volt telephone wires, thereby destroying the exchange. During the time in which the municipal system—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired. Is there unanimous consent to allow him to continue?

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I am rather disappointed in some of the Liberal members not allowing the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) to continue relating a very interesting and exciting incident concerning the Bell Telephone Company. I will continue the story if I have time at the end of my remarks, but first I have some important things to say with regard to Bill S-2.

I should like to start by saying that I have been here 11 years, and in that time I have seen the erosion of the public accountability of many corporations operating in Canada. There are two types of corporation, the private corporation and the public corporation. When I came here, most private corporations were under the control and regulations of the Canada Corporations Act. There are certain corporations which have to be regulated, controlled and incorporated by the federal government, such as banks, insurance companies and some trust companies. Before they could get letters patent of incorporation, their capitalization, their objects and purposes and many other factors were scrutinized by parliament.

In my 11 years here I have seen a gradual erosion in some of these institutions. Banks can now operate under the Canada Corporations Act and are no longer under the scrutiny of parliament. Insurance companies are treated in the same way. In fact, very few public corporations which now operate right across the country are scrutinized by parliament to determine whether they should be given letters patent to operate and whether they should be allowed amendments to their letters patent. Bill S-2 is a typical example of that. It is an attempt by a corporation which is privately owned and which issues public shares to free itself of the control of parliament. Therefore, it is a very important bill because it affects social and public accountability.

I was rather impressed by the historical and factual background of Bell Canada which the hon. member for Nickel Belt gave. We see that the company originated in the United States and developed in Canada. He traced very convincingly and with great clarity the manner in which that company has operated since its inception in Canada. It has had a tremendous effect on Canadians. In fact, most Canadians feel rather sentimental and affectionate with regard to the Bell Telephone Company which they sometimes call Ma Bell. Ma Bell needs to be checked and scrutinized, and we in the NDP feel it is incumbent upon us, when the company brings forth amendments to their letters patent, not to permit them to do things which will free them from the control of parliament over their conduct and operations.

I heard the hon. member for Nickel Belt say that the president of Bell Telephone appeared before the CRTC and said that if the company did not receive rate increases it would stop installing telephones across the country. Let me point out that this is not new for Bell Telephone. They had threatened it in certain parts of Ontario, especially in the Bramalea area where there was a new housing development in which people needed telephones. It was only as a result of public pressure that the Bell Telephone Company yielded and installed telephones. In the last six years there have been no less than five or six applications by Bell Telephone Company to increase their rates. This brings into perspective the need to study the purposes and objectives of the Bell Telephone Company because we feel a telephone company operating in telecommunications should be a public utility servicing Canadians at the lowest cost possible.

That is what we in the NDP believe, namely, that the Bell Telephone Company should be a public utility operated for the benefit of all Canadians at the lowest possible cost. Recently I saw some Bell Telephone advertisements on television which I found to be clever, expensive and, in many cases, immoral as one of my colleagues has said because a public utility should provide a service as its first objective and should seek to be profitable as its second objective. Therefore, the costs should be minimal. This is what we in the NDP are saying.

Having set forth that main proposition, I notice that the mover of the motion, the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. O'Connell), who is an economist by profession, is listening attentively to what I am saying because he knows that under the present system we operate on a profit basis. However, we say that the profit objective of a public utility should be secondary, not primary. We know that there are two types of costs, capital costs and current costs. Capital costs are absolutely necessary for further expansion, yet we all know that sophisticated equipment is necessary to give better service to subscribers. Not one member of the NDP would challenge the expenditure of capital costs provided they were reasonable, because we realize that by providing capital costs we may obtain, through sophisticated equipment, the best possible service. There are also costs which take into account wages and other ordinary operating expenses. Again we feel that the working-man should be given a reasonable wage for the service he performs. We have no objection to a reasonable wage for Bell Telephone workers. In fact we have stood on the front line to assist workers across the country to receive a decent and fair wage.

There should be a reasonable profit concept. Any profit should be reasonable. It should be up to the representatives in parliament to study in detail what Bell Telephone means by a reasonable profit concept. We in parliament have said that we would like to set up a regulatory body to study in detail the movements and approaches of the Bell Telephone Company with regard to its profits. I said in my earlier remarks that the Bell Telephone Company has made an application for a rate increase every year for the last five or six years. Therefore it behooves all of us to determine whether Bell is making a reasonable profit.

It is absolutely necessary to have a regulatory body such as CRTC to determine Bell's rates and for parliament to set out the telecommunications philosophy. That philosophy may be that there should be public ownership, that there should be private ownership, or that there should be part public ownership and part private ownership, but from my casual study of the profits of Bell I think I am being very gentle when I say that it is a carnivorous corporate giant. It makes unregulated profits which are not reviewed by the CRTC. It has been said many times that the widows of Canada purchase shares in the Bell Telephone Company so that they can make a profit, be paid dividends, and enhance their security. Many of us feel compassion toward widows when it comes to the matter of security, but we do not think that Bell Telephone is the vehicle by which they should get their security. The basic thrust of the Bell Telephone Company should be service to a certain segment, and people should come before profits.

Over the last month I have had the opportunity to read a book about International Telephone and Telegraph, which is a large corporate organization operating in the United States. It also operates in Europe and in Chile, and when we look at International Telephone and Telegraph's multinational operations we find that it has no less than 400 corporations under its wing. I have the very uneasy feeling that Bell Canada may want to operate in the same way as International Telephone and Telegraph. When I know of the political intrusion in Chile of Harold Geneen, who is the president of ITT, and when I know of his financial support of the overthrow of a democratically-elected government, I feel it is my responsibility to check and double check any utility in Canada which wants to take itself out from under the regulatory powers of CRTC and beyond the scrutiny of parliament.

Those are general remarks, and I would now like to make some specific remarks about Bill S-2 because we are studying the philosophy and principle of the bill and some of its provisions. As the hon. member for Nickel Belt said, it is odd that this type of bill should be initiated in the other place. It shocks me to be advised that it took less than a day to pass it in the other place. It shocks me that a bill of such magnitude and of such importance should be considered in less than a day and that only one witness should appear before the committee. That witness was the chairman of the board, who attempted to give a very brief history of the company. That very same person threatened Canadians that if there is a separation of Quebec, Bell may move its head office from Quebec. If we are talking about national unity, it behooves the chairman, Mr. de Grandpré, not to make that kind of statement with regard to the operations of Bell in Quebec.

We must remember that only 7 per cent of all Bell's revenue comes from competitive operations and that 93 per cent of its profits comes from telephone services. There should be public accountability, and telephone and telecommunications operations in Canada should be treated as a public utility rather than as a corporation operating for the purpose of earning profits for shareholders.

Bill S-2 proposes two distinct amendments to Bell's act of incorporation. It proposes the revision of the act of incorporation relating to the company's ability and methodology of capitalization, including the removal of the scrutiny of the appropriate government regulatory body, namely, the CRTC.

The bill grants Bell the power to borrow, issue stock, bonds, debentures or other securities as the company deems necessary. In addition, the bill would give Bell the right to fix whatever price on such sales as it wishes. It is a necessity to have a telephone company operate for the people at a reasonable cost. Bell enjoys a monopoly. It wants to bypass parliament and the CRTC. It wants power to borrow, issue stocks, bonds, debentures and other securities, and to fix whatever price on sales it wishes.

Subsequent clauses would provide Bell with the authority to establish such voting rights, by-laws, procedures and alterations to share issues as Bell may deem necessary. The present authorized capital of the company is $1.75 billion. Bell proposes to increase its capitalization capacity to $5 billion. That would be an increase of three times its present authorized capital.

I note that the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz) is listening attentively. He realizes the importance of the increase in capitalization, the changes in the capital structure and the voting structure, the changes in the borrowing powers and so forth.

The second amendment proposes broadening the company's incidental and ancillary powers, and proposes that the company be given the authority for the alteration by letters patent of the company's objectives and powers. That is very important because once we start dealing with the company's objectives and powers, we are talking about the company's total operations. At the moment it has a monopoly of telephone service and telecommunications services in some instances. Once the objects of the company are changed, however, it would mean it could not only increase its vertical operations but also its horizontal operations. It could get into the money business in the same way that ITT in the United States has done.

ITT has more than 400 companies under its wing—it is almost a nation in itself—and it dictates the rates, makes the highest possible profits, and sometimes resorts to unwarranted political interference. This would be achieved by revoking the relevant clauses in Bell's act of incorporation and replacing them with the authority granted under the Canada Corporations Act and authority for using letters patent as outlined in the Telesat Canada Act. Proposed section 5.2 and 5.3 of clause 2 in Bill S-2 are the essential elements of this objective.

We all enjoyed the six hour—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired. He may continue with the consent of the House. Does the hon. member have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, the last time a bill relating to Bell Canada came before the House of Commons was just a few years ago. As far as I am concerned it would be here still if it had been possible to arrange that. I was very concerned then, as I am now, with the question of whether Bell Canada is serving the public or is bilking the public for the benefit of the shareholders or someone else in the corporation. At that time it was simply asking to add five members to the board of directors. I was able to propose an amendment suggesting that one of those directors be appointed by the government without the requirements normally stipulated, that he hold a certain amount of stock, and other considerations and that such a person have the function of protecting the public. Of course, Bell made a great fuss. I did not suggest who the government should name to the board; the important thing was that the appointee be there to protect the general subscriber.

Bell Canada is not like any other company, but its lines run down the road, run down the street, run down the lane in exactly the same way as hydro lines. There can only be one telephone company in a town. Even people who believe that free enterprise must triumph at the expense of the public would agree that there cannot be four or five telephone companies in the same town. Bell got rid of other companies in the country, but even Bell would not suggest there could be competition in a community. So the company has a monopoly. It is operated to supply a service to the people, but the free enterprisers allowed it to do something else, to be established as a private company and at the same time gain a considerable return on its money. It was set up to provide the service and make money for its shareholders.

Over the years the company has made application to parliament when it wanted to change its relationship with the shareholders or wanted to change its rate structure. We have not been hard on this company, Mr. Speaker. It is a big company and enjoys quite a reputation in the country. This is a very lenient country and has allowed this public utility to expand beyond the boundaries of Canada. It is interesting to note how much money it has made in the process. It has not made money any way except by subterfuge in the market or by selling something, whether it be expertise or service.

I am not interested particularly in its subterfuge in the business world, but I am interested in what happens to the subscriber. Because I consider this to be a public utility I would be happy to join with members of this House, who should be working on behalf of the people, to see that a proper service is provided to subscribers at the lowest possible cost.

If necessary, I would support a move to nationalize this public utility. I would not care too much about whether we sold all the subsidiaries, although it seems to me we are treating them as we are the CPR, that is, giving away a very large grant.

The list of subsidiaries in which Bell owns more than 50 per cent of outstanding shares is interesting. Here is a breakdown: Northern Telcom Ltd., 69.2 per cent; Bell Northern Research, Ltd., 51 per cent; the New Brunswick Telephone Company, 50.4 per cent; Newfoundland Telephone Company, Ltd., 78.2 per cent; Northern Telephone, Ltd., 99.7 per cent; Télébec Ltée, 95.1 per cent; Livière Valley Telephone Company, 100 per cent; Capital Telephone Company, Ltd., 100 per cent; TelOntario Incorporated, 100 per cent; the North American Telegraph Company, 100 per cent; and Maritime Telegraph and Telephone Company, Ltd., 51.7 per cent. I should like to refer particularly to a couple of these subsidiaries. Every cent of the money that bought them came from the shareholders or the subscribers. Bell has been set up as a corporation that has shareholders, and it should be pointed out how it has taken advantage of them. If we agree to this application then we agree to watering down the stock.

Bell Canada owns the Capital Telephone Company, Ltd., just a litte company not far from the city of Ottawa that was formely owned by the subscribers. There was an exchange at Carp, one at Constance Bay, and one at Maberly serving 2,031 telephones. This was bought with the subscribers' money; we are not really going to believe that the shareholders put up the money. They really did not know what was happening, and in some cases it was not happening for the shareholder but to the shareholder. This was certainly true in some of the subsidiary companies.

Bell wanted to do a number of things. It wanted to produce telephone books. Consequently, Tele-Direct was set up. Mr. Speaker, Tele-Direct is an example of Bell's ability to spin-off profitable sectors of operations to subsidiaries, to escape regulation. At the same time that sort of move enhances Bell's rate case when applying for rate increases. Therefore, Bell takes money out of the operation, which provides a good excuse for asking for another increase.

● (1750)

Until 1971 Bell produced its own directories. That was and still is a most lucrative proposition, because those directories carry advertising. If anything, the operation has become even more lucrative. Now the printing in the directories is so small that you have to pay somebody 25 cents to find a telephone number.

Mr. Rodriguez: Yes, but the ads are bigger.

Mr. Peters: In 1969, revenue was $35 million, and net revenue before tax $15.5 million.

To escape regulation, Bell sold this sector of its operation, Tele-Direct, to Capital Telephone Company, a wholly-owned subsidiary of Bell. Mr. Speaker, since Capital has always operated in the province of Ontario and has no exchanges outside the province, it is regulated by the province of Ontario.

We never worry about these companies until they ask for a rate increase. Once they ask for a rate increase, you start making inquiries. What did Bell do with regard to Capital's exchanges? It took over two of the exchanges, but left alone one little exchange at Maberly which serves 121 telephones. If you live in Maberly your telephone rate will never go up. No matter if Bell rates to other subscribers rise to $50 a month, rates to Maberly subscribers will stay at the level of the take-over in 1969. Why will they stay at that level? Bell is not giving away something for nothing.

Bell is able to do some remarkable things with this little company—and this information is availabie from CRTC experts. Bell owned Tele-Direct, which it sold to Capital, and Tele-Direct controls Place Bell Canada, that showcase of Bell Canada. No one will say that 121 subscribers support a company big enough to put out telephone directories, own printing plants, and all the rest of it. But the small company can rent Place Bell Canada back to the large telephone company. It then becomes an expense to the telephone company.

It may interest those from the Maritimes to know that Capital Telephone owns a fleet of fishing trawlers.

Mr. Rodriguez: Are you speaking about a telephone company?

Mr. Peters: A telephone company, yes. Also, I am told it owns Bell executive jets, and rents them back to the company, always at great cost to Bell.

Nobody is ever going to look at Capital Telephone, Mr. Speaker. There will never be an occasion when Capital Telephone will approach the Ontario government and say, "We want our subscribers to pay increased rates." Talk about a rate increase! They are having one hell of a time getting rid of the money they earn.

According to my latest figures, the book cost of Capital Telephone was $1.2 million in 1969; by 1974 the book cost had risen to $4.2 million. And how much income do you suppose 121 subscribers generated? Why, the company's total income in 1974 was $3 million. Bell's share of that net income amounted to $3 million. The little company's earnings sure did not help its subscribers. They were not compensated for having telephones in their houses. If they all took their telephones out, there would be no justification for Capital's existence. It is interesting to note that Bell's return on the book cost of Capital Telephone was, in 1974, $64.3 million. Did they raise that from 121 subscribers? Let's not kid ourselves. Telephone companies don't make that much money, unless they are not telephone companies but something else.

In our consideration of this bill, we are not talking about allowing Bell to increase its capitalization from $1.7 billion to $5 billion. We are not talking about the raising of capital for the development of a telephone company.

An hon. Member: Then what are we talking about?

Bell Canada

Mr. Peters: If the hon. member thinks we are, I ask what does he think Bell will do with all the extra capital—build telephones from igloo to igloo?

I mentioned some of Bell's subsidiary companies. Bell already owns a 27 per cent share of Telesat, that satellite in the sky. What will the company do with all the money it wants? It surely is not going to provide telephones, instal direct dialling in rural areas, or embark on anything useful. No. It will get bigger and bigger, not in the sense of a company providing telephone service, but in a corporate sense. It will not provide better telephone service to people on your street, Mr. Speaker, or anyone else's. No, it will become a bigger corporation, by raising the price of its stock to almost any figure it wants, by watering the stock, and by hosing the shareholders. After all, shareholders do not count in a multi-national corporation; they are only a cipher, a number. What counts is the corporation's existence. The corporation has a heart and a soul, and exists by itself. You can do away with ordinary shareholders, and it will still run itself.

What are the 121 subscribers? The original shareholders in Capital have long gone. There are no shareholders, except the multi-national corporation, and the smaller company is part of the corporate soul of the larger.

Mr. Rodriguez: I'm going to move to Maberly.

Mr. Peters: If you move to Maberly, I can assure you that you will never have to pay more for your telephone. But you will not get a Princess phone, a coloured telephone—

Mr. Rodriguez: Shucks!

Mr. Peters: —or any other sophisticated telephone equipment, because the company gives nothing away for nothing. It could afford to give you a video-phone, which lets you see your caller, but you will not get it. Bell wants to use the little company to build up its corporate heart.

If that is what our free enterprisers want, for God's sake why don't they stand up and say so? Why do they not separate these other operations from those of the public utility which I call the Bell Telephone Company? Why not separate all these functions, and talk about Bell Telephone providing telephone service? If they want a multi-national corporation to be involved in telephones, let them be honest about it. I say, don't screw the subscribers. Be honest.

I have much more to say, Mr. Speaker. Therefore, may I call it six o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

AMENDMENTS TO IMPLEMENT CHANGES IN IMMIGRATION POLICY

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration) moved that Bill C-24, respecting immigration to Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I sometimes wonder how the minister felt some 25 years ago when he stood on second reading of the 1952 bill. I am sure that he thought it historic. I want to say for future generations I feel this is in fact an historic moment because it is in the final analysis the coming together of a tremendous amount of work by many thousands of Canadians. I hope we have been able to incorporate into this bill that which will be to the betterment of Canada and be of benefit to future generations.

I am sure that all members know that the genesis of this bill dates from an announcement made by my predecessor, now the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras), just over three years ago. On September 17, 1973, he informed the House that the government was launching a fundamental review of immigration policy in the widest possible context as a first step toward the preparation of modern legislation on which to base the future conduct of Canada's immigration program.

The process that undertaking set in motion has involved an unprecedented nation-wide debate. Literally thousands of organizations and individuals across the country responded to the government's invitation to submit briefs. Conferences and seminars were organized, many with the financial support of my department. Throughout the entire period, provincial governments have been closely consulted.

The contribution of the special all party joint committee of parliament created to examine the green paper which was issued early last year deserves particular mention. The report that committee submitted in November, 1975, after an extensive program of hearings, provided invaluable guidance in the framing of the present bill, both as regards its general philosophy and on innumerable points of detail. I would be remiss if I did not stress how much this bill owes to the tireless efforts of the members of the special joint committee in sifting the views they received from Canadians from so many walks of life and from so many organizations. The results of their work are in a very real sense manifest today, since very nearly all the recommendations in their report find themselves reflected in one way or another in the bill now before us.

There is a need for a new Immigration Act. Before discussing in any detail the major provisions of the bill, I can think of no better way of providing an overview of its basic intent than to list some of the essential features of the bill, contrasting these with the situation existing under the present act of 1952.

The bill in clause 3 lays down in clear terms the basic objectives which the government considers should govern Canadian immigration policy now and in the future. This statement of objectives is not a pious preamble but an integral part of the proposed act. The substantive provisions of the bill flow directly from one or more of the objectives established in this clause. What the bill does here, then, is to establish a charter for the entire legislation edifice. Clause 3 is the foundation, not only for the bill itself, but for the regulations which will be made under the statute.

This, I think, is a most important innovation. The present act contains no such statement of positive purpose. It is anomalous that the law on which such an important social and economical program rests should be silent about the positive purposes immigration must promote. The current law merely tabulates methods for controlling the entry of people to this country. This bill, however, sets out the essential reasons why Canada is a country of immigration, states the underlying principles that must inspire this major program, and specifies the national goals which all our activities in the field of immigration must be designed to support.

I will have occasion to refer again to this key provision of the bill. I wish for the moment simply to draw attention to the fact that for the first time immigration law will enshrine such fundamental principles an non-discrimination, respect for the family, humanitarian concern for refugees, and the promotion of national economic, demographic, social and cultural goals.

Secondly, the bill abolishes a host of provisions which are totally archaic and unjust. Although there are many points at which the current act is outdated, this is particularly true in its approach to the prohibited classes. The present act, which has remained virtually unamended since it was passed in 1952, contains prohibitions that are universally acknowledged to be harsh and incompatible with contemporary Canadian values. The bill removes these offensive prohibitions, notably the bar against epileptics, the mentally retarded, and those who have been inmates in mental institutions. It also replaces the obsolete criterion of "moral turpitude" with objective criteria based on the provisions of Canada's Criminal Code.

Thirdly, in contrast to the present statute, which makes the crucial question of the volume of the immigration movement entirely a matter for administrative decision, the bill establishes a system under which the level of immigration to this country will become a matter for open decision making by the government in consultation with the provinces.

Fourth, the present act confers very wide regulation-making authority on the government and the minister, and is deficient in the guidance it provides for the exercise of discretion by immigration officers. The new act rectifies this unsatisfactory situation. It establishes through the statement of objectives an explicit policy framework to which everything done under the authority of the legislation must conform; and it spells out precisely and circumscribes specifically the ground to be covered by regulations.

In the present act, the 1952 act, there is almost a basket clause which gives the minister almost unlimited authority to pass regulations to do almost anything he wishes to do so far as controlling immigration to Canada is concerned. That, I suggest, is wrong, and it is why we have changed it and been so careful in the bill to spell out the authority over the regulations which will flow from the bill.

Fifth, given the important place which refugee policy occupies in Canada's immigration practice and our outstanding record in assisting refugees, it is a curious fact that the present act makes no mention of this subject. The bill incorporates for the first time in Canadian law a regime for protecting refugees in conformity with our obligations under the United Nations convention, and establishes a refugee class.

Sixth, the bill includes measures to protect Canada against dangers, unfortunately a feature of the contemporary world, with which the provisions of the current law are inadequate to cope. In particular, it contains essential safeguards against terrorists and subversives to replace the provisions of the temporary security bill which expired at the end of this year.

Finally, the bill is sensitive to the need to safeguard the civil rights of those who are subject to immigration proceedings. Notably it introduces an important restructuring of the inquiry process as well as a more supple and humane approach to the methods for excluding or removing those persons who are found ineligible to enter or remain in this country.

Having touched on the highlights, Mr. Speaker, I should like now to discuss more fully a number of areas where the bill breaks new ground.

Dealing first with immigration levels, clause 7 requires the minister, after consultation with the provinces "and such other persons, organizations and institutions as he deems appropriate", to quote the bill, to announce annually the number of immigrants which the government considers Canada should admit over a specified time period. This important provision responds to two distinct but closely related considerations. It implements the system I mentioned earlier of open management by the government of immigration volume, which will replace the practice of essentially administrative control, which has thus far governed the total number of immigrants Canada admits. And it will permit the government to give effect to one of the important objectives stipulated in clause 3, namely, that immigration should be related to long-term planning with respect to the growth of Canada's population.

Let me deal first with the question of management. In a central recommendation, the report of the special joint committee concluded that, and I quote:

> There should be a shift from the present immigration system which permits the admission of everyone meeting certain criteria without regard to total numbers, to a more managed system capable of regulating the total flow.

From the public debate the special joint committee drew the conclusion, rightly I think, that most Canadians believe that there should be a legislative means to predetermine the rate and volume of immigration to this country. The public debate revealed no clear consensus as to what that volume should be. But there is wide agreement that our immigration system should not be open-ended as to numbers, and that it would be desirable that, within a system which makes full provision for consultation, family reunification and the non-discriminatory application of selection procedures, the government's intentions with respect to the total volume of immigration should be the subject of an open policy determination. Within the framework of the act, clause 7 fully respects these considerations.

Over the post-war period the volume of immigration to Canada has fluctuated widely, ranging from a high of 280,000 in 1957 to a low of just over 70,000 in the early sixties. Wide year-to-year fluctuations in immigration volume are undesirable on several grounds. They complicate rational labour market planning, impose unpredictable strains on community services such as housing, schooling and the like, and render difficult sound decisions with respect to the deployment of immigrant processing resources abroad. It will be one of the government's objectives in implementing the new system of setting immigration levels in advance to avoid the high peaks and low valleys which have characterized immigration patterns in the past.

A highly significant aspect of this new arrangement will be its contribution to the creation of a new era of collaboration between the federal government and provincial governments in the immigration field. Immigration is a national program which must be responsive to the needs of all regions of Canada. Constitutionally it is a field which, while it has primacy of jurisdiction, the central government shares with the provinces. Annually announced immigration levels will be the visible end product of a regular and mandatory process of federal-provincial consultation which I am convinced will make the future administration of the program more sensitive than heretofore to the aspirations and requirements of all parts of the country.

Besides improving our capacity to manage the immigration movement in conformity with shorter-run requirements, economic and other, the advance determination of immigration levels will establish an indispensable framework for planning long-term demographic growth nationally. Whereas the minister, in accordance with clause 7, will be required each year to announce a forward figure for immigration, I envisage that the specified period covered by the announcement might well be longer than a single 12-month period. Thus, for example, in making his annual announcement the minister may find it appropriate, in the light of the consultation he has held, to announce a planning level covering a five-year period. This figure in turn would be subject to revision in the annual announcements he would be making in subsequent years.

Accordingly the arrangement will allow a very considerable measure of flexibility in determining both the actual level of immigration in any given year, as well as an opportunity to revise the longer-term level in the light of changing circumstances. It would obviously be a serious error to lock ourselves into any set figure with respect to the contribution immigration should make to Canada's population growth. Our system must respect the fact that the factors that go to make up population policy are dynamic, variable, and unpredictable. Equally, we should be in a position to plan ahead in the light of the best data available at any given moment, and after full consultation with all those institutions of our society with a vital interest and responsibilities in the immigration process.

Since introducing the immigration bill on November 24, Mr. Speaker, I have been frequently asked what figure the government intends to set with respect to the future level of immigration to Canada. From what I have just said, I hope members appreciate that this question may betray a certain misunderstanding as to the basic purpose of this legislation. It is not its purpose to enable this or any other government to fix for all time some preconceived "ideal" number for immigration to Canada. If there is a "right" figure it will emerge only after consultation, and will be set only in the light of a judgment as to the national interest given the circumstances then prevailing.

But I acknowledge that members may properly expect me to indicate the results of the demographic studies we have pursued over the past few years, and the preliminary conclusions we have reached after discussing this subject with provincial authorities. As my predecessor in this portfolio has more than once suggested publicly, our general conclusion is that, of all the options open to Canada at the present time, the case for a moderate rate of population growth is the best. Canada's position internationally as a major food producing country, our estimate of future energy demands, the need to upgrade both the quantity and quality of housing—these are only a few of the most significant factors that have entered the government's calculation in reaching this conclusion.

It is through immigration that federal policy operates most immediately on population growth. Immigration has been an increasingly important component of annual population growth over recent years. If fertility rates remain at or close to current low levels, an annual figure for immigration from now until the census year 2001 equal to the post-war immigration average to date would mean that the Canadian population would grow from its present level of around 23 million to between 28 and 30 million by the end of the century. Expressed as an average yearly growth rate, this would represent approximately 1 per cent annually, which compares to the 1974 rate of 1.6 per cent.

This rate of population increase would, in the government's view, fairly meet the criterion of moderate growth, as contrasted to either a slow or accelerated rate. Translated into immigration figures, it would indicate an average—and I stress the word average—range of something of the order of 140,000 to 150,000 immigrants annually. Last year we received 149,429 immigrants.

Clearly I would envisage considerable year-to-year variations from such an average, either upwards or downwards, according to national requirements, including unforeseen refugee developments, and so on, although as I have said, we would aim to avoid violent fluctuations. But the main point, I hope, is evident: the government's present view of the role immigration should play in Canada's future population growth does not entail any departure from the position Canada has occupied since the end of the last war as a significant immigrant-receiving country.

One of the demographic characteristics which will affect the future well-being of Canadian society, the distribution of our population geographically is likely to prove just as significant as its total size, if not more so. In common with the situation in most countries, Canada is becoming increasingly a country of city-dwellers. Should present trends continue, between 80 and 90 per cent of our people will be concentrated in urban centres by the year 2000, as compared to 75 per cent at the time of the last census in 1971.

All the available evidence points to the heavy costs associated with the over-concentration of population on the one hand, and its inevitable concomitant, de-population, on the other. The achievement of more satisfactory distribution patterns for Canada's population poses formidable problems, but it is a challenge which I believe all levels of government must take up. There are very recent indications that metropolitan growth rates may be tapering off somewhat. If indeed such a trend is in the making, it must be encouraged and strengthened.

Although the federal government can provide leadership in this field, most of the levers that directly affect settlement patterns are in the hands of the provinces. For example, resource development and land use policies in general fall within provincial jurisdiction. Accordingly, to develop and implement a long-term strategy to promote the most beneficial distribution of Canada's population, active collaboration between all levels of government is imperative. Eventually, I can envisage federal-provincial agreements as providing a framework through which we could jointly work to achieve national demographic goals.

Meanwhile the government believes that immigration law should be framed in such a way that the immigration program can support whatever policies are developed in collaboration with the provinces to promote the most rational distribution of Canada's population over the years to come. I reject the notion that immigration is either the cause of population imbalances, or that immigration can be the solution. At the same time it is evident that a wider dispersal over the long term of the immigrant movement would be advantageous as we seek to restrain the forces behind metropolitan expansion, and favour the development of smaller communities.

Here the cardinal principle to which I subscribe is that people, whether native-born Canadians or immigrants, follow opportunities. The best and most effective way to encourage immigrants to make their new homes away from the major centres is to provide incentives for them to do so—employment prospects, schools, a welcoming community. In addition, I concur with the special joint committee's conclusion that our selection standards should accord some weight in favour of those who are willing and qualified to take jobs in communities which have been designated, after federal-provincial consultation, for expansion in population. It should be self-evident that the process of designating communities for this purpose will require very careful study. It would be both wrong and futile to steer newcomers to Canada toward places which did not afford the prospect of a full and satisfactory life in every sense.

The new immigration legislation will do three specific things to assist a wider settlement pattern for immigrants. First, it provides for immigrants to receive their status as permanent residents—landing, as we call it—when they arrive at the destination in Canada which they chose when they were selected abroad. This would be a change from the present practice of granting landing at the port of entry, which more often than not is an airport in one of our major cities. This change may, we believe, operate as a modest factor in encouraging immigrants to stick to the destination they gave during the selection process, rather than changing plans and settling immediately elsewhere.

Secondly, it is the government's intention that the revised selection standards—the points system—which will be the subject of regulations under the new act, will include selection points which may be awarded an immigrant who is destined to a designated community. The application of the selection criteria in this respect, and the priorities which will be applied to facilitate the movement of certain categories of immigrants, are matters which I assume will be discussed in detail when the legislation is in committee.

Thirdly, clause 14 will allow an immigration officer to attach such conditions as may be prescribed in detail under the act to the grant of landing. In so far as the question of settlement is concerned, for example, this would allow a residence requirement of up to six months in the case of an immigrant who has been selected as a result of the additional points received for the designated community factor, and who benefits from priority processing as a result.

It may also be found advantageous to prescribe conditions in certain other areas. For instance, an immigrant selected because he or she agreed to take up a specific prearranged job could be granted landing on the condition that this specified employment undertaking was fulfilled. The bill provides that any such conditions in the case of immigrants would expire automatically after six months, and affords ample opportunity, if reasonable grounds exist, for the immigrant to seek relief from or changes to the conditions imposed.

● (2030)

Immigration law must regulate the admission, not only of the immigrant but also of the millions of people who visit Canada each year for some short-term purpose. Clause 3 of the bill acknowledges that one of the purposes of immigration policy is to facilitate the entry of visitors into Canada for the purpose of fostering trade and commerce, tourism, cultural and scientific activities, and international understanding. At the same time it is important to ensure that the welcome Canada extends visitors is not abused.

The special joint committee was impressed by the need to prevent our immigration system being circumvented by people coming to Canada as visitors with the intention of residing and working here illegally. The bill, I believe, meets the concerns expressed by the committee on this score. It makes it a specific offence for an employer knowingly to hire a person who is not authorized to work here. This provision ties in with the new social insurance number system, which identifies persons who are not Canadian citizens or permanent residents, and thus alerts the employer that he must verify that the person concerned is in possession of a valid employment visa.

Again following a recommendation of the special joint committee, the bill requires every visitor who wishes either to work or to study in Canada to obtain the requisite authorization from a visa officer overseas before seeking admission. With few exceptions, which will be specified in regulations, visitors already within Canada will not be eligible to apply to take temporary employment or to enrol in educational institutions. Any visitor who, without the necessary authorization, takes employment or enrols in a course of study becomes liable to deportation.

There are other provisions in the bill which complement this scheme and reinforce the basic principle that visitors enter and remain in Canada as a matter of privilege.

To balance the measures designed to combat illegal immigration, the bill introduces new bonding and security deposit provisions designed to facilitate the admission of those visitors who may find it difficult to satisfy the examining officer at the port of entry as to the purpose of their visit. Under the present law an officer is empowered to take a cash bond from the person concerned in such cases as a guarantee that he or she will leave Canada when the authorized period of the visit expires. This bill extends the type and source of security which may be deposited to cover security, other than cash, which may be deposited either by the person seeking admission or by a third party, such as a friend or relative in Canada. In brief, the bill provides for greater control over potential illegal migrants, without adding to the requirements which must be met by the genuine visitor.

As I indicated at the beginning of my remarks, the bill introduces a number of significant procedures designed to guarantee the fair treatment of those persons who may become subject to exclusion or removal from Canada. In the first place, it eliminates the present distinction between persons coming from overseas, who enjoy inquiry and have the right to counsel, and those coming from the United States or St. Pierre and Miquelon who are subject to a truncated procedure, known in the present law as a "further examination", with no right to counsel. The bill makes the full inquiry a universal procedure, regardless of the country from which the person seeks admission to Canada.

A very important change concerns the restructuring of the inquiry process itself. The special inquiry officer will be replaced by an adjudicator who will be entirely removed from the process of developing the case against an individual subject to inquiry. The adjudicator's role will be to weigh the evidence adduced by the departmental presenting officer on the one hand and the person subject to inquiry or his or her counsel on the other. The duty of the adjudicator will be to act solely as an objective and impartial judge, to hear all the evidence, and to reach a decision according to the law.

I should also mention that the bill introduces new provisions with regard to detention which will afford individuals who are detained under the Immigration Act safeguards similar to those found in the Bail Reform Act.

Finally, I should draw attention to the alternatives to deportation which the bill provides. At a port of entry where the grounds for exclusion are relatively minor, the adjudicator will be able to issue an exclusion rather than a deportation order. The effect of the exclusion order will be to bar the return of the person to Canada for 12 months only; a deportation order, which will be used in more serious cases, will continue to constitute a permanent bar to admission unless the minister gives consent.

Similarly, if a visitor already in Canada is found at inquiry to be removable, the adjudicator may issue a departure notice rather than a deportation order when only minor infractions of the immigration law are involved. Once the person has left Canada in accordance with the terms of the departure notice, it has no further effect and the person needs no consent to apply for admission at a later date.

Included in the statement of objectives in clause 3 is the recognition that immigration policy must protect the safety of Canadian society, and should deny the use of Canadian territory to those who may engage in criminal activity. This objective is implemented in revisions to the inadmissible classes which will enable us to deal more surely with the risks presented by the contemporary phenomenon of international terrorism, highjacking, kidnapping and the like. These revisions will also enable us to deal effectively with persons seeking to enter Canada who are known to be involved with organized crime but who may have eluded conviction.

It is a characteristic of cases in the categories I have just mentioned that problems arise because evidence at the government's disposal cannot be divulged at a normal inquiry for security reasons. It will be recalled that parliament, through the passage of the Temporary Immigration Security Act, acknowledged that there were loopholes in the law in this area which needed to be closed. This bill rationalizes the manner in which these difficult cases will be handled in the future, and provides as many procedural safeguards for the individual concerned as are consistent with the overriding need to protect the safety of Canada and Canadians.

Where it is a security case involving a permanent resident, the bill establishes very special procedures. The current law provides for the deportation of a landed immigrant through the inquiry process, but does not adequately cover those very serious security cases which preclude resort to that procedure. Accordingly, the bill makes provisions for a special advisory board which will consider evidence submitted by the Minister of Manpower and Immigation and the Solicitor General (Mr. Fox). The individual concerned will be given an opportunity to be heard in accordance with regulations which will resemble those set out in the Public Service Security Inquiry Regulations. If the board is satisfied that grounds for removal exist, it will report to the governor in council which may make the necessary deportation order.

There are several important aspects of this legislation which deserve more attention but which it is impossible for me to cover adequately at this time. Because of the complexity of some of these issues, I believe that their detailed examination had best be reserved for the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration, to which I hope it will be possible to refer the bill after appropriate debate, and where it would be my intention to discuss the substance of the more important regulations. One complicated area which I know the committee will wish to discuss in detail is the regime the bill provides to protect refugees.

Another less complex area, but about which some concern and misunderstanding have become evident, is the provision in the bill which can require persons other than Canadian citizens to be fingerprinted under certain circumstances. Many immigrant-receiving countries routinely require applicants for visas to be fingerprinted. We certainly do not intend to go that far. Fingerprinting will be the exception rather than the rule, used only where there is doubt about a person's identity or his possible involvement in criminal activity. For persons in Canada we will fingerprint as a matter of routine only those who have been ordered removed from Canada. The two other situations in which we will require fingerprints are when a person is arrested under the Immigration Act, or when a visitor requests a change in or extension to his status, and, in either case, the person is unable to satisfy the immigration officer of his identity. It will therefore be a rarity for a permanent resident to be fingerprinted. In all cases, when the fingerprints have served their immigration purpose, they will be disposed of under the normal file retirement program.

Another complicated area which the committee will wish to study in detail is the revision of the selection standards which, of course, will be a matter for regulations. On this subject I will only say now that the recommendations of the special joint committee appear to provide a very solid basis for a new points system.

I cannot neglect to mention at this time the strident criticism of the bill put about by a few small groups in Toronto and Montreal, claiming that the bill is racist, discriminatory, repressive, and reduces the civil rights of visitors, immigrants and citizens alike. I have examined those accusations in some detail, being alarmed by their shrillness. I am satisfied that the groups concerned have not only misinterpreted the bill's provisions, but I have also been forced to the sad conclusion that their reports constitute a deliberate and shocking attempt to discredit the bill. I propose, if the committee has any interest in pursuing the matter, to demonstrate to the members the exaggerated and frequently completely invalid nature of those criticisms.

In these remarks I have not addressed the question of family immigration, since the government's present intentions with respect to the expansion of the family class and the admission of more distant relatives were the subject of a communication addressed to all members at the time I introduced the bill. In brief, the new family class will include those relatives who are now sponsorable, plus parents of any age when sponsored by Canadian citizens. Additionally, the government proposes that those relatives eligible for nomination will continue to receive under the new regulations the same level of preference they now enjoy.

It only remains for me to say that I am convinced that this legislation will provide a strong and imaginative foundation on which to conduct Canada's immigration program in the future. I wish again to express my appreciation to those members on both sides of the House who have already made a significant contribution to this bill through their participation in the special joint committee. I trust that the standing committee can complete its examination of the bill during the first months of the new year to enable the House and the Senate to pass the legislation by the middle of 1977.

I would also be remiss if I did not comment on the splendid work and service performed on behalf of that committee by one of its co-chairman, the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. O'Connell).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to represent my party today in opening debate on Bill C-24. I intend to direct some of my remarks to the speech of the minister, but primarily I will leave some of the areas he touched for debate at committee stage.

Public affairs tend to concentrate on immediate problems and very often address themselves only to short-term solutions. The attention of the public and the attention of the public media generally focus on the immediate. As a result governments and public officials frequently are seen to lurch from crisis to crisis. The accusation that we do not spend sufficient time and thought on issues which require long-term solutions is frequently made. The issue before us today addresses itself to Canada's future, and I believe the minister was correct in stating that it will have long-term implications for many generations to come.

As the official representative of my party I intend to outline our position on Canada's demographic policy. In order to do that I believe it is essential that we review the process by which we have arrived at this point. It is only in the historical context that we are able to evaluate Canada's development. It is the lessons of history which enable us to project possible future developments.

Canada is a land of immigrants. This phenomenon dates back to our colonial history. Not only were France and England concerned about development of Canada's economic resources and population base, but even more so in more modern times administrations of both Conservative and Liberal political affiliation saw the need for the development of Canada's population. They were also concerned about the enrichment of that population. As we make plans for Canada's future and established population goals, we as Canadians should view this task with enthusiasm rather than fear. It is a task filled with great potential. It is a task which will affect the lives of our children and grandchildren. To put it in simple terms, the policies we establish today will affect the future of our children.

What kind of Canada do we want to see developed? Before one can answer that question, Canadians and the government must have a clear sense of national priority. Just as Canada's history is marked by periods when national priorities gripped the attention and captured the enthusiasms of Canadians, so the time has come for us once again to establish a national goal. This national goal must be to develop a demographic policy which will ensure a future for all Canadians in which not only economic opportunities will exist but, more important, where principles of freedom, racial equality, and justice will prevail for everyone.

While these goals are high sounding and by their very nature nebulous, this is a task to which we must address ourselves. It is of utmost importance that the process of consultation between the federal government, the provincial governments, and Canadians generally takes place. Not only must this consultative process be on a regular and ongoing basis, but it must be meaningful, and the consultation must take place in the open. If we fail in this task, we fail in the greatest challenge facing us today.

At the time the green paper on immigration was tabled in the House indications were given by the government that Canada's immigration policy would be examined as an integral part of the larger demographic policy. At that time our party called for a select committee to be established, the responsibility of which would be to do the following: first, to examine immigration policy up to the present time; second, to examine the main principles of Canadian demographic policy of the future; and third, to conduct hearings across Canada, thus ensuring the input of Canadians in this all-important question. As I look around the House tonight it is with interest that I see many members of parliament who sat on that committee as it travelled across Canada.

I believe all of us admired people who had come to this country, and we were filled with admiration when we saw the loyalty and the love they held for this country. We were particularly impressed with their determination to make Canada a better place in which to live.

At the time the green paper was tabled our party criticized the government because we felt that insufficient attention had been paid to Canada's demographic policy. Further, we stressed that Canada's immigration policy could not be examined without first establishing our demographic goals. That accusation was valid in 1973, and I suggest that it is still valid today in 1977. Again the government has failed to follow that advice. Instead, we are faced with an immigration bill, and while reference is made to demographic policy, and while the minister addressed himself to that question superficially tonight, it is our view that demographic principles are again taking secondary importance to that of amending present immigration legislation.

The government has attempted to create the impression that it is dedicated to a demographic policy. It has taken great pains to stress that demographic considerations are extremely important. The bill states demographic studies as one of its objects in clause 3, and stresses provincial consultation regarding demographics in clause 7. Yet when the minister is asked to table the report on demographic studies so that members of parliament can make an educated assessment of the bill, the minister's response is that he will consider it. I was under the impression that at second reading the minister would table demographic projections. He had an opportunity to do that today, but he failed to do so.

I suggest to the minister, as forcefully as I can, that we want the regulations before us during second reading debate, and also the principles upon which his demographic projections were based. If in fact demographic and population policy is to be one of the major factors affecting the determination of immigration levels, and perhaps even the points system, then all these factors must be evaluated as an integral part of the new immigration legislation. I must reiterate that the entire selection system by which immigrants will come to Canada is not part of the bill. This means that it is not open for debate. It is our intention to place the selection system, the points system, in the bill through an amendment in order that all future Canadians may clearly understand the manner in which they would have to qualify to come to Canada.

At the present time world population stands at approximately four billion, with an annual growth rate of approximately 2 per cent. World population, if this trend continues, will be doubled in approximately 35 years. Even if the fertility rate were to decrease to replacement levels by as early as 1980, the world would still have an increase in population to 6.3 billion in 75 years time. In order to appreciate the enormity of the problem, if the replacement level were reached by the turn of the century, a goal which is more possible than the 1980 supposition, the world's population would number approximately eight billion by the year 2050.

The average net increase on a world basis today is 200,000 people per day. Further, adding to the world pressure is the fact that over 90 per cent of any future growth will take place in the underdeveloped countries. This increased pressure on the world population adds to the task of finding sufficient resources. Despite the tremendous increase in world population, world energy conversion is increasing three times faster than the world's population. We all speak of energy conservation, but still the fact remains that in spite of rapidly developing world population, the conversion of world energy supplies is increasing three times more rapidly than the world's population.

Mr. Caccia: What is your immigration policy?

Mr. Epp: The hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) is again in fine form. He has chosen to make a speech sitting flatly on his seat. If he wants to speak I suggest he rise like the rest of us. When the rabble is through, we will continue. I think we have given more than sufficient time to the hon. member for Davenport already.

When speaking of energy conservation one has to look at land resources and the use of non-renewable natural resources. It seems to me that the Canadian public, or western society in general, is not yet ready to put its house in order and critically examine its use of energy and land resources and how they can be conserved for future generations.

Mr. Caccia: What would you do?

Mr. Epp: Again I am asked what we would do. I can tell the hon. member that what we would do would be a sight better than they have ever done.

The 1960's saw marked increases in the development of the world's food supply. The so-called green revolution spelled hope for millions of persons in underdeveloped countries that they might at least look forward to the day where they would receive daily nourishment. Unfortunately the race to increase food production more rapidly than the world's population increase is now also being lost. Today we are faced with the fact that despite tremendous gains in agricultural production, the world's population is again growing faster than the increase in food production.

As a partial response to an ever-increasing world population and the need to provide basic food and shelter, the world plan of action which was adopted at the Bucharest conference urged national governments to develop population policies, keeping in mind the need to develop policies which would result in some hope for the world's teaming millions. In the developed countries, opposite trends have been taking place.

Hon. members opposite ask what we would do. This is another case where they have not looked at the facts but rather rushed in with the hope that the public would buy arguments not based on present trends. Assuming that Canada's fertility rate will remain at 1.8 as is presently the case, we already are below our replacement level which is placed at 2.3, which is the average number of children a woman will bear during her child-bearing lifetime. While fertility rates are presently below replacement levels, the birth rate of 15 per 1,000 population is still double our mortality rate. With this rate plus the fact that an imbalance exists in our age structure, namely, that the postwar baby boom has resulted in a higher percentage of women of child-bearing age, it is projected that even without any immigration at all Canada's population by the year 2000 will rise to some 26 million. Having said that, one fact becomes startlingly evident, namely, that immigration will become an ever-increasingly important component in any future demographic policy.

At the present time immigration accounts for roughly half our population increase. We have to go back to the 1920's to find another trend in which immigration resulted in 50 per cent of Canada's population increase.

The joint committee travelled throughout Canada, and representations varied all the way from a closed-door policy to one which would allow large numbers of immigrants to enter Canada yearly. Our party has opted for neither extreme. Rather, based on the principle that immigration is a privilege, we opted for moderate growth. The joint committee on immigration put that figure at approximately 125,000; tonight the minister put it at from 140,000 to 150,000. What are the results if we look at these figures, Mr. Speaker?

If the figure of 100,000 immigrants per year was to be used in the next five years, and assuming that the fertility rate remains at 1.8, we have already indicated that our population would rise to 26 million without any immigration by the year 2000. With immigration in the area of 100,000 per year, combined with net emigration of some 50,000 per year—and I want to say to the minister that we have no adequate emigration figures in Canada at the present time—the result would be that by the year 2001 our population would be 29 million or 30 million.

Demographers project that if these trends were to continue, in the first half of the twenty-first century our population will rise to approximately 33 million before stabilizing around that figure. If one were to accept immigration figures of 200,000 per year, as is generally done by those who argue for a more open immigration policy, the higher immigration flow would result in Canada's population rising to approximately 33 million by the year 2001. The rationale for adopting a figure such as I have indicated is based on the observations I gave earlier.

A number of Canadians have also expressed the view that Canada should virtually stop all immigration. Let me point out at this time that our party applauds the contribution immigrants have made to the development of Canada. As Canadians we have prided ourselves that we have created a pluralistic society. While we favour the belief that all immigrants should have the opportunity to enter the main stream of Canadian life we have been the beneficiaries of their enthusiams, their vision, their culture, and possibly most important, Mr. Speaker, their love for their adopted country.

• (2100)

Those of us born in Canada often take the freedoms we enjoy in this country for granted. Those who count themselves among the members of Canada's ethnic communities cherish their Canadian home, cherish it in a way which is a lesson to all of us. Therefore we say Canada is the better for the immigrants we welcomed to our shores. We say that we need a continued flow of immigrants. Our country is going through a period of economic difficulty, going through a period of inflation and unemployment. We say that these conditions always make it more difficult for immigrants to integrate into Canadian society, but it is important that Canada should retain an immigration flow. Demographic projections indicate that if Canada's fertility rate remains low, below replacement levels, Canada will need additional people to enter the labour market by the early 1980's. By the 1980's we shall experience a sharp decline in the annual growth of the labour force, a decline between 2 per cent and 3 per cent.

The former chairman of the Economic Council of Canada, appearing before the joint committee on immigration, said this:

This decline to a lower and more normal rate of entrance into the labour force could mean that, without immigration, future economic development might actually be held back by labour shortages.

In its 1975 study entitled "Looking Outward" the Economic Council of Canada said:

Council projections suggest therefore that the labour force including net immigration will grow by about 2.7 per cent per annum between 1975 and 1980 compared with about 3.4 per cent from 1969 to 1974, and barely 2 per cent per annum from 1980 to 1985. This slowdown is likely to continue into the 1990's. The priorities of Canadian economic policy are in consequence also likely to shift steadily to emphasize less the number of jobs available in the economy than the quality of employment provided.

As we look ahead to the 1980's and 1990's, it becomes evident that we are justified in opposing a closed door policy. Rather, we ought to encourage immigration in moderate quantities.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: The second factor which emphasizes this relates to Canada's welfare system. Since World War II, Canada has developed a comprehensive program of social welfare benefits. These benefits have long-term implications for Canada's economic growth. They are based on the assumption that not only will economic activity be able to maintain the increased costs of social welfare benefits in place, but that the growth in the labour force will be large enough to support those receiving social benefits. Consideration of this factor, more than any other, has led us to the conclusion that moderate growth is necessary. If we were not growing, or if our population growth were approaching zero, future generations in Canada would be hard-pressed to pay the cost of continuing social benefits.

Owing to the post-war baby boom, a large percentage of women now living in Canada are of child-bearing age. If the population does not increase, as the dependency factor on the population grows, that is to say, as the population grows older, a smaller percentage of people working will be asked to pay for social benefits. Surely it becomes self-evident that one of two options remains: either social benefit programs must be reduced, or continued growth of the population must take place.

Having said that, I make this point: demographers generally agree that even though additional points are provided for immigrants entering the labour force, only a natural increase will make a significant difference to Canada's age structure. One might ask why does Canada not opt for more immigrants, possibly in excess of 200,000 or 250,000 per year? The first reason relates back to a matter to which I have already addressed myself, namely, the increase in world population.

At present world population is increasing by 200,000 per day. It is evident that at no time can Canada develop an immigration policy which could significantly reduce the world's over-population problem. Rather, it is incumbent on us, as Canadians, to help in the development of agricultural techniques and resources in the developing world, in order that those countries may develop the capacity to increase their own food production.

Further, an ever-decreasing number of countries are willing to take in significant numbers of immigrants. In the past Europe, Australia, New Zealand and North and South America were designated as receiving areas. In the latter part of the 1970's not only has the number of receiving areas been reduced, but those countries willing to receive immigrants are reducing the numbers they will allow to enter. This fact, along with the desire of much of the world's population to emigrate to countries such as Canada in the hope of economic betterment, will put additional pressure on Canada in the last quarter of the century to accept more immigrants. This trend is already evident in that Canada is receiving over 750,000 immigrant applications per year from persons expressing a desire to emigrate to Canada. It remains unclear how many more would be received if potential immigrants were not told that their chance of emigrating to Canada is virtually non-existent.

An additional argument militating against larger population increase is the question of economies of scale. Generally, it has been argued that large populations result in a larger domestic market and it therefore follows that increased economic growth is the result. The joint committee on immigration studied at length the question of economies of scale. Recent studies indicate that if significant shifts in economies of scale are to be achieved, Canada's population growth must be significant, since in developing societies every individual places additional pressures on non-renewable resources, transportation, housing, education, etc.

Traditional arguments concerning economies of scale have become less valid in today's society. One could say that Canada is the beneficiary of economies of scale—economies of scale not relating to our domestic population. I say this simply because we are a major exporting nation. Unfortunately an examination of 1976 figures reveals our trade deficit, reveals part of the reason for our economic slump. That slump has led to a loss of jobs and economic hardship in Canada. And there is hardship when a trading nation is in a deficit position.

A Canadian ecomonist, Spencer Star, wrote one of the most significant papers I have seen on this subject. After studying economies of scale he concluded that population growth is an insignificant factor in the annual growth of income per person. He also wrote that it is safe to say that population and immigration policy discussions may proceed without being concerned that a policy directed toward a relatively low population growth rate will have any measurable net loss to Canada in terms of foregone economies of scale. Similarly, there is no reason to expect a relatively high population growth rate to confer any measurable net benefits through realized economies of scale.

A further reason which militates against excessive population growth is the trend toward urbanization. Our pattern of distribution in this country can best be described as a failure. We have increased the size of our three major urban areas, Toronto, Montreal and Vancouver. Historically, immigrants have tended to settle in large metropolitan areas. For example, Ontario receives in the neighbourhood of 55 per cent of all new immigrants to Canada, but this is only half the story. The other side of that coin is internal migration.

• (2110)

Internal migration has also resulted in rapid increases in the growth of Canada's urban areas. This trend again shows that the government's policies, such as those of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, have had little or no effect on significantly changing the rural to urban movement.

It is incumbent upon the government to establish policies whereby Canada's rural areas are able to attract secondary industry in order to develop a more mature economy. This would not only reduce pressure on Canada's urban areas, but would allow Canadian citizens in rural areas to develop the potential that is now only available in Canada's urban areas.

It is essential if our regions of Canada are to remain in Confederation that a more equitable distribution on a regional basis be undertaken immediately. It is self-evident why persons are attracted to Canada's urban areas. Surely it goes without saying that the main reason is employment and with it the opportunity to advance one's economic well-being. The Progressive Conservative party would develop a consultative process with the provinces and municipalities to develop policies which would allow for the same economic opportunities to be existent in Canada's less urbanized areas that presently exist in our larger urban areas.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: For some time today in my speech I have dwelt on our general projections on population growth. I believe that this really is the central question that should be discussed by members on both sides of the House, but as I stated before, it is a question that many members shy away from because of the obvious pitfalls one can get into as one discusses demographic policy.

As one reads Bill C-24, one must agree with the general objectives as stated in clause 3. Let me draw specific attention to some with which we completely agree. We are pleased that they are incorporated into a bill and will now have the power of law rather than be simply good intentions.

This is a day of which we should all be proud, a day in which we are getting a bill which clearly states that Canada's immigration goal is, and I quote:

(c) to facilitate the reunion in Canada of Canadian citizens and permanent residents with their close relatives from abroad;

(d) to encourage and facilitate the adaptation of persons who have been granted admission as permanent residents to Canadian society—

Also, we finally have a refugee policy that is included in the legislation. The joint committee clearly stated that these objectives should be in legislation. I commend the minister, and possibly even more so his predecessor, on those objectives being included in the bill.

It is our view that much more openness must exist between the federal and provincial governments in discussion of immigration policies. This is possibly where we have our greatest objection to the minister and Bill C-24. While the minister gives lip service to openness, there is not much more openness in Bill C-24 than in the 1952 act. Why do I say this?

The minister says there will be a consultative process with the provinces. The minister has indicated that immigration is a shared responsibility with the provinces but the prime responsibility rests with the federal government. The minister has not placed before us any projections, or agreements that have been made between the federal government and the provinces. The minister might say that that is impossible at this time. While that might be the case and we can possibly accept that, the mechanisms and the consultative process are not before us once again. It goes without saying that if the provinces have to bear the cost of additional housing, transportation and education, it is incumbent that the provinces have input in this consultative process. We are not interested in balkanizing the various regions of Canada, but we are interested in recognizing the special needs that immigrants have and the special problems immigration resettlement programs bring to the provinces.

Further, Mr. Speaker, I want to indicate that as a party we do not feel it is sufficient that the minister should simply announce the annual level. Rather, we are proposing an amendment whereby the minister not only will have to announce the annual level, but will table a report in the House of Commons, and further that this report will be referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration for debate and review, thus enabling the committee not only to question the appropriate minister as to the reasons the level was established in quantitative terms, but also on the projections the minister has for the future of the demographic policy.

When my colleague from Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) spoke of immigration, he had a favourite phrase to describe Canada's immigration policy. He called it legislation by regulation. Bill C-24 follows in that tradition. To a great extent it is legislation by regulation. Having said that, there is not much disagreement with what the bill says in its philosophy. But Bill C-24 is even more important in what it does not say. For one, the regulations are not written into the bill. While I recognize that all regulations cannot be written into the bill, I believe that selection criteria, annual targets, demographic targets, mechanisms and how they are to be modified, should be included in the bill. This is of particular significance in terms of the points system.

In other words the minister has structured the bill in such a way that there will be no opportunity for meaningful debate on the mechanics of immigration. Therefore it is the view of my party that the government has been dishonest in its public portrayal that the bill is open. The bill is grossly lacking in that it gives no indication as to the selection system. In fact if any meaningful debate is to take place, I want to stress again that the regulations must be made available during second reading debate and in committee.

The very nature of the immigration department indicates that it is regulatory in nature. It is essential that those regulations be placed before us. As one reads the act, one can only conclude that in some ways it is more arbitrary than the previous one in that it places even more power in the hands of the minister and the bureaucrats.

If one wants to look at the bureaucratic jungle created by Bill C-24, one comes to the conclusion that immigration policies will become more confusing and therefore more discriminatory and more unfair. I simply cannot accept that persons in the department who are generally manpower oriented have the same perception for immigration needs as persons who would be responsible to a department of immigration and citizenship, as opposed to the monstrosity the minister is now proposing.

I base that on the white paper on immigration which the government tabled in 1966. That report was tabled after two years of study to review all aspects of immigration. As one reads that paper of some years ago, one notices that the government's observation of Canada's economic future was expansionary in nature. The philosophy was one of a great future. It stressed the traditional reasons to encourage immigration. While it concerned itself with a selection system as it pertains to immigration, its message was clear: Canada's economic future was bright, and immigrants not only would contribute to that economic future but would share in it.

That was in 1966, and 10 years later, with the same government, what has happened? The government's economic policies are in a shambles and the government has to retreat. I say to the bureaucrats in the manpower area that again their projections in 1966 have not been found to be factual in 1977.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what about the selection criteria? This is one of the objections that we have to Bill C-24. At the present time three categories exist for immigrant classification, namely, the sponsored, nominated, and family class. Clause 115, while designating the classes, indicates the manner in which persons will now be selected based on future regulation. Therefore one has to look at the minister's press release that accompanied the tabling of Bill C-24 in order to discover the new selection system. The special joint committee, after reviewing the selection system at length—and I repeat, Mr. Speaker—at length—generally agreed that the sponsored class should remain, or rather that it now be called the family class.

In fact the committee said, to quote from the committee report:

> To ensure this all committee members except one recommend that the present class of the nominated immigrant be dropped and that the ties between members of a non-dependent extended family be recognized a different way.

After lengthy debate in the committee, the committee recommended, based on the principle of family reunification, that the family class should remain and that parents of any age could be placed in the sponsored class, as presently they must be at least 60 years of age before they can be sponsored. It was on that basis that the committee recommended expansion of the sponsored class and also recommended the removal of the nominated class.

It is our recommendation that the present sponsored class be expanded to include parents at any age; but when one reads the press release of the minister, not only is it parents of any age but grandparents as well. I do not know if the minister or his officials have in fact studied the ripple effect of that change, but I suggest to him that if he sets annual targets at between 100,000 and 140,000 per year, the ripple effect could be such that hardly any independent immigrants, or what he prefers to term "others", will have an opportunity to come to Canada.

Mr. Cullen: You are referring to nominated?

Mr. Epp: The minister asks if I am referring to nominated. The present bill has a family class which has now been expanded, or which the minister says, if we are to take his word, will be expanded to include parents of any age and grandparents. The committee also recommended that the nominated class be removed. Now, Mr. Speaker, the minister has done that, but he has not. He has retained the points for the nominated class. The committee, after lengthy discussion of this question, indicated that new seed immigration would be severely hampered if annual targets were established, and that most immigrants who came to Canada would qualify to come to Canada through prior family connection.

It is new seed immigration, Mr. Speaker, which longitudinal studies indicate will more readily move to areas outside our metropolitan cities. While the minister has reduced the nominated class or eliminated it, he has retained the points which are presently in the nominated class, and I believe that that is something that must seriously be looked at by the committee.

As to the second class, Mr. Speaker, we favour the inclusion of a refugee class. It is the first time, I believe, in Canada's immigration policy that, by legislation, Canada confirms its obligations which we have undertaken as a signatory of the United Nations Convention and Protocol on Refugees. As a party we favour this inclusion in the bill. As refugee situations frequently demand immediate and direct attention, one has to ask whether Canada should establish a policy whereby we are a country of first asylum. A number of representations were made that Canada accept the principle of being a country of first asylum. This would mean that persons who claim refugee status could enter Canada and remain here on a minister's permit until such time as we could determine whether in fact they were refugees under the terms of the UN charter.

Proponents of this concept generally refer to the Swedish experience, but the point must be made that Sweden only accepts 1,000 refugees per year, and Canada's record is much more exemplary than that of Sweden. Therefore, we see no reason why Canada should accept the proposal that it be designated as a country of first asylum. It is our view that in a world where increased tensions will take place, especially within countries, pressures to accept increased refugee flows will remain with us for some time.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, regarding selection, the category of other immigrants, as the minister's press release describes them, would be comprised of all applicants who do not qualify under the family class or as refugees. Again, Mr. Speaker, these people ought to be judged on the points system, which again is not included in the bill. Therefore it becomes difficult to assess the manner in which the so-called independent immigrant will be selected. It would be my view—and I hope the minister will see the wisdom of this suggestion—that these persons should not be designated as other applicants but rather as independent applicants.

I have therefore served notice on the minister and the government that we intend to move a significant number of amendments to improve Bill C-24. It is our thinking that it is the only way that changes to the points system, and therefore to the selection criteria for immigrants, can in future be debated in parliament. We have seen in the last two or three years that significant changes to regulations have taken place without any debate in the House of Commons, and therefore without any input by Canadians or their representatives.

Regarding the so-called inadmissible classes, I am pleased to note that exclusion of potential immigrants will be based solely on danger to public health or safety, or excessive demands on health or social services, to quote the bill. In the past, as the House knows, the 1952 act barred epileptics and those suffering from mental disease. Many of the provisions in section 5 of the 1952 act were, as the minister has already said, archaic. There is agreement that members of families should not be separated because one member of a family suffers from mental retardation. Therefore the special joint committee recommended that sponsored dependents who are mentally retarded should be admissible. Further, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to note that those suffering from epilepsy will not be placed in the prohibited class any longer.

A matter a deep concern to our party, though, is the question of illegal aliens. I have already stated that additional pressures will be placed on Canada in that persons view Canada as a land of opportunity. Generally, there are two types of illegal aliens seeking to enter Canada. The first category we have seen, for example, arrive at our major airports having left their home under the impression that they can enter Canada as visitors and also find work, in many cases. Having arrived in Canada many of them find themselves bitterly disappointed. When these persons arrive at Canada's international airports, frequently they have little or no financial resources with which to maintain themselves for the period of time they intend to stay in this country. The result is that they are detained and placed in detention centres until a special inquiry takes place the next day or so, and they are then sent back to their country of origin. Many of these people are unfortunate victims of misinformation or, even worse, of travel agencies who indicate to them that if they have a return ticket in their pocket they will automatically be allowed to remain in Canada.

Those of us who have seen these detention centres know that a better method must be developed in order to reduce the heartbreak of these persons and their relatives and friends in Canada. The excessive amounts of money that are needed for them to travel to Canada add additional hardships on these persons. Therefore a visitor visa system must be developed whereby a person must attain an entry visa before being allowed into Canada. These visas would be made available at Canadian embassies abroad. As a starting point, I suggest this be done on a reciprocal basis with countries which themselves presently require an entry or exit card system. The same system might be adopted with respect to visitors from those countries to Canada.

The second group of illegal entrants are those who have been able to escape the secondary line of inspection and enter the mainstream of Canadian life. Estimates as to their number vary, but range as high as half a million. I do not know how many there are, and the minister keeps saying there are no projections. If a visa system were devised we would at least have some idea as to the number of visitors present in Canada at any time.

It is the view of my party that the government has lost control of the illegal alien question. Examining the situation, especially in Canada's urban areas, immigration officers indicate they do not possess the resources to enable them to cope with the illegal alien who is able to escape immigration controls. Studies in Toronto indicate that many illegal aliens who are eventually detained have already worked in Canada for an average of one year. Officials indicate that they lack the proper training or equipment to do the job they are required to do. Also, a number of these illegal immigrants are engaged in criminal activity.

It goes without saying that the illegal immigrant has often been a victim of extortion. I was pleased to hear the minister state that Canadians who knowingly employ illegal immigrants will also be subject to prosecution. There is a feeling abroad in Canada that another amnesty program will be undertaken, possibly at the time the new bill is proclaimed. In 1972 when the amnesty program was announced, that program received support from my party. I want to say very clearly this evening that an amnesty program to make legal that which is illegal will not receive support at this time from the Official Opposition. I also wish to stress that additional steps must be taken to screen out persons engaged in organized crime. Immigration officials have expressed fears to me that this is an ever-increasing problem.

I do not have time to go into the substance of the bill at this point. Other members of this party will do so, but in conclusion, let me say this: as Canadians we have always prided ourselves on the development of a pluralistic society. The Immigration Act clearly states that our immigration policy is not to be discriminatory. The Bill of Rights confirms it as well. These are the principles upon which this party wants to see any future immigration policy based.

Having said this, our party must stress the need for the federal government to show leadership and devise policies which will promote inter-racial harmony, in consultation with the provinces, and explore how best we can develop racial understanding in our communities. This could go a long way to ensure the fair and just treatment of racial minorities. It is our view that education and the development of understanding are essential if racial harmony is to exist. Such a development of understanding is essential if racial unrest is not to become part of the Canadian urban scene.

Finally, we hope the minister will be forthcoming in the presentation of regulations during the committee stage. The hon. gentleman nods his head, and I take it that is an affirmative answer.

Mr. MacFarlane: No. He is just falling asleep.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): At least he is not reading his paper like you.

Mr. Epp: We look forward to studying the basic regulations at that time.

Immigration will remain a major factor in the determination of Canada's population and economic wealth. We welcome immigrants who are challenged by the opportunities this country affords and, especially, those who cherish the freedom we too often take for granted. Many of them came as refugees. They did not have a choice in a real sense; they went to whatever country was willing to accept them. A large number who came here under the most dire conditions have become leading citizens. Approximately three million immigrants have come to Canada since 1945. They look upon this country as a new home and, once established here, they ask that they be judged not by their background, not by the accent with which they speak one of Canada's two official languages, but rather by the fact that they are simply being "good Canadians". This, Mr. Speaker, is their legacy and our heritage. We hope Bill C-24 will go a long way toward perpetuating that tradition.

Mr. Caccia: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Some hon. Members: No!

Mr. Paproski: Ask it during the question period.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is the hon. member seeking the floor on a point of order or a question of privilege?

Mr. Caccia: I am asking the hon. member if he would permit a question—if he is not afraid to answer a question.

An hon. Member: There is another speaker to come.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I hope the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) will in due course ask me a question. By "in due course" I mean late in my speech, not immediately.

An hon. Member: Tomorrow!

Mr. Brewin: This is a highly important bill. It deals with matters which concern the economy of Canada as a whole; it also deals with the lives and rights of human beings.

I want to make it clear from the beginning that we have two major objections to this bill. First, we see in some of its clauses a threat to civil liberties. We hope this threat can be removed during the passage of the bill through the House. The second thing we deplore is an almost total reliance on the system of regulation, which, as the House well knows, is a means of evading full discussion in parliament. I shall deal more fully with these aspects later but I suppose I ought at this point to say that these two matters do concern us.

The minister is right in saying that the bill has been the subject of much study. As long ago as 1966 the government of the day produced a white paper suggesting certain changes. They were not, in fact, made. Indeed it is interesting to see some of them brought forward again, ten years later, with some kind of fanfare. It is true that new regulations were passed at that time, so the effect of the white paper of 1966 was not totally negative.

Later we saw a green paper produced by the department. It contained much information and the results of many studies related to the subject. Then on November 6, 1975, as has been mentioned, a joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons, after travelling across Canada and hearing a good many witnesses, produced a report on immigration policy.

Then, on top of that, voluntary organizations representing, as I happen to know, churches and civil liberty groups, have presented their views on the act to some of us and, I presume, to the minister. I wish that I could say that out of all this the bill, which is now being presented, should get the unreserved and wholehearted support of parliament, but I regret that this is not the case. The bill, as I have said, is marred by serious threats to civil liberties. However, it does—and I say so because I wish to be fair—contain some worth-while provisions with which I will deal in greater detail later.

One of the basic complaints we have about this bill is that most of the important provisions of our immigration policy are not contained in the bill but will be dealt with by orders in council or by regulations. I am well aware, as all members of the House are, that this method is a convenient way of legislating, and indeed it is partly excusable when the subject matter is such that flexibility is required, and when changes have to be made from time to time without going through the full process of bringing legislation into parliament. However that may be, the present bill goes far beyond what is either necessary or desirable in leaving matters to be disposed of by the governor in council.

Let me go through some of the provisions. Clause 115 of the bill contains subclauses (a) to (x) giving wide and sweeping powers to legislate by regulations providing for the application and establishment of selection standards based on such factors as family relationships, education, language, occupational experience and other personal attributes, together with demographic considerations—I promised the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) that I would only use the word "demographic" once, and I used it this time, but I will not use it any more.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I heard it 20 times tonight.

Mr. Brewin: But, Mr. Speaker, all these things are to be the basis for selection standards, including labour market conditions. One would have thought that parliament would be asked to lay down in a broad way the selection criteria, but that is not the case. It is to be done by regulations. Furthermore, the regulations are to set out rules whereby the immigrant will be allowed to come to Canada if he shows he can be successfully established in this country.

When we come to the sponsored classes, precisely the same is true. As hon. members know, those who are sponsored are close members of a family. But the rules on who can be sponsored, under what conditions, and so on, are again left to the regulations. For example, the minister has made clear, or I think he did, that parents under 60 years of age of Canadian citizens may be sponsored, and we welcome this provision.

Mr. Lee: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brewin: I do not think the spokesman for the Conservative party did, but we do. We think that the right to bring in one's parents is a reasonable provision in a bill which says that one of its principles is to reunite families, but the minister is asking us to discuss this legislation without seeing the regulations.

I have mentioned only a few of the subjects which are to be dealt with by the regulations. The whole points system, setting out the qualifications and attributes for independent or nominated applicants, appears nowhere in the act. I do not know whether there will be nominated applicants. I thought I heard the minister say at an earlier date that there would be, but if so, we do not know. We do not know whether or not that will be true. We have had, and I presume we will continue to have, a points system without qualifications and attributes, but we do not know what changes have been made in that.

The joint committee, as I remember, included amongst its recommendations the suggestion that more points be given for working experience and fewer points for academic successes. I perceive these to be good provisions, but we do not know whether they will be in the regulations or not, and yet we are asked to give approval to the bill.

The minister has pointed out—and I want to say something about it later in approval—that clause 3 of the bill in fact sets out immigration objectives, but these are put in a general way. They would not take effect over the specific rules contained in the regulations. They are useful, perhaps good for assisting in the interpretation of the act and of the regulations, but in no way enforceable by law. They are just a series of well sounding and very justifiable objectives, and I am glad to see them there, but let us not fool ourselves that they take the place of actual, concrete legislation dealing with these matters.

The regulations may exempt any groups from the requirements of the regulations. Persons to be admitted on compassionate grounds are to be designated by regulations, not by parliament, and when we come down to the question of refugees we find that there again the standards that they are required to achieve are to be spelled out in the regulations and are not clearly enunciated in the bill. I want to say something about the refugee system later.

We provide for students coming here, but the regulations decide what educational institutions can receive students. Parliament is not asked to deal with this and to say what students from abroad should come and what type of education we think we can afford and should afford to give to people coming from outside this country.

All questions related to required documentation in respect of any visitor can be dealt with by regulations. The regulations prescribe the factors to be considered as to whether any person is likely to be a danger to public safety or whether he would be expected to cause excessive demand on health and social services. As I read clause 19(1) of the bill, a medical officer is given the ultimate right to determine whether an excessive demand on the health and social service exists.

In clause 115(1)(n) I find entirely different meaning in the words and the language. I do not know how some people manage to read into perfectly clear words limitations that are in no way stated. Clause 115(1)(n) requires any person or class of persons to report to an immigration officer before leaving Canada and the appropriate regulations will prescribe the information to be provided and the manner in which such reports shall be made to the immigration officer by any such person. It is true that there is a note in the yellow document at the side which says that this will only be done when it is necessary for proper identification and control of the illegal immigrant. I think the minister has something to say on this. I want to impress upon him and upon members of the House that it is the act and the regulations that will count, not side notes and observations by the minister, and we should not be fobbed off with these vague, general statements.

This is a radical, new proposal—I use the word "radical" in an uncomplimentary sense—which somehow or other will require what might well be Canadians of long standing to go to an immigration officer to provide information. It is not made clear in the legislation whether the immigration officer is bound to or can refuse to give a person leave to depart from Canada. In any event, this may well be a restriction on the rights of Canadian citizens to freedom to travel, and runs counter to the declarations signed by Canada as to the right to such freedom of travel. It is a backward step, moving in the direction of a police state, to have to report to immigration officers whenever people want to leave the country, and if parliament passes this bill in this form it is not parliament which will control this matter but the regulation-making authority.

Clause 115(1)(o) is equally, if not more, objectionable. It enables the regulations to set out the circumstances under which a person other than a Canadian citizen seeking admission to Canada may be required to be fingerprinted and photographed. For myself, I would not feel it necessarily a serious invasion of rights if all Canadians were required to be fingerprinted for the purpose of keeping records, but I think it is wrong to select a particular group.

Hitherto we have gone on the assumption that once a person is admitted to Canada for permanent residence, he has the same basic rights as other Canadians. This clause will cause extremely hard feelings amongst ethnic groups affected and will alarm all those who believe in civil liberties.

Clause 14 provides that if an immigration officer is satisfied that it would not be contrary to the legislation or the regulations to grant admission, he may grant admission and impose terms and conditions. What kinds of terms and conditions? Are they spelled out in the legislation? No, they are not. They are terms and conditions of a prescribed nature, which is another way of saying prescribed by regulations and not by parliament. Once again the government has the power to impose these terms and conditions through an order in council and without interference by parliament.

It might be said that to object to provisions because the bill contains regulations rather than incorporating the law in the main legislation is a question of formality and without substance, but the truth is different. The effect of transferring powers of legislation to the governor in council means that the basic rules as to immigrants can be dealt with through the normal bureacratic process in an almost secretive way, and very often without adequate public notice.

On a matter as sensitive and as important as immigration, the basic rules should be made and set out by parliament itself. I want to illustrate the sweeping nature of these regulations. There has been a very substantial decline in the number of people admitted to Canada as immigrants. That is not due to any will of parliament, and it was not discussed in parliament. It is due to a regulation passed on October 22, 1974, which said that independent applicants, in some cases nominated applicants, must not only arrange definitive employment, which is defined, but what was even more important, they must arrange to obtain from the national employment service—in other words, the manpower branch—a certificate saying that no Canadian citizen is willing, able or qualified for the employment in which the applicant is willing to engage in Canada.

The Standing Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments, of which I happen to be a member, in its recently filed report referred to the secretive nature of many immigration directives. I am not making this up out of my head because of some degree of hostility toward the Department of Manpower and Immigration. Far from it; I am quoting what a committee of this House representing all parties says is the fact.

[Mr. Brewin.]

When we do these things in this way the directives to which I referred are not available to the public or to the would-be immigrant. The picutre is one of great secrecy. In many cases neither the applicant nor his advisers can discover what the rules are by which their admission is being considered, and if refused, why they were refused. Under the old act and under the decisions given by the courts, an applicant was entitled to a hearing, and at the hearing the reasons for refusal of admission had to be stated. The trend has now fully developed toward the department answering all such questions with generalities such as "you do not meet the requirements" or "you are not able to establish yourself successfully in Canada." This tells the applicant absolutely nothing of the basic reasons why his application is refused.

I suggest that the whole bill be withdrawn and that there be inserted in the bill all the minor basic provisions which are necessary. As it stands, there is an ample indication by parliament that it will accept its legislative responsibilities. True, many detailed procedures can indeed be left to regulations.

An hon. Member: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Brewin: The law which affects Canadian residents and citizens seeking to bring in their relatives must be open and above board. Parliament should re-assert its authority.

I hear a plaintive voice saying ten o'clock, so I will call it ten o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A Motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

HEALTH—ALLEGED REFUSAL OF CONNAUGHT LABORATORIES TO SUPPLY GAMMA GLOBULIN TO MALTA

Hon. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, during the question period on Friday, March 4, of this year I appealed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) to use his office to make available 60 vials of human gamma globulin on an emergency basis to our fellow Commonwealth country, Malta. On Wednesday, March 2, at 6 p.m. I received from the office of the Malta Trade Commission in Toronto an urgent request to help find some gamma globulin which was urgently needed in Malta. This followed a negative response from the Connaught Laboratories in Toronto.

Immediately following this urgent call I telephoned the office of the Minister of National Health and Welfare conveying this request. Forty-two hours later, after no positive response, I was compelled to raise this matter in the House by way of a question to the minister. With great disappointment I have to state this evening that my telegram of March 4 to Mr.

Hampson, Chairman of the Canadian Development Corporation, which acquired the Connaught Laboratories, has not yet been answered as of this moment.

However, I am grateful that the blood transfusion service of the Canadian Red Cross answered my telegram within a few hours informing me that a gift of human gamma globulin was in the hands of the representative of the Malta Trade Commission in Toronto by 3 p.m. on Friday, March 4. On this occasion I want to thank the Canadian Red Cross for responding so quickly and so generously to this request.

However, I want to obtain some kind of explanation from the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. McRae) as to why Connaught Laboratories have shown such a negative attitude toward an urgent request for a biological product which was so urgently needed by our fellow Commonwealth country, Malta.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the question raised by the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz) is certainly an important one. I am pleased that he has taken the action he has and that he has received a response from the Canadian Red Cross.

I would like to give him the following brief explanation. After the hon. member's intervention in the House on March 4, the minister told his officials to investigate the matter immediately. According to Connaught Laboratories, the agent of Connaught in Malta was approached by Maltese officials in December to request the price of immune serum globulin. On February 3 an order was mailed by Maltese officials to Connaught Laboratories without explaining any urgency of the delivery of the order. Since it is common practice to submit a letter of credit with an order, Connaught Laboratories waited for the letter of credit. Although there was no urgency indicated in the order, I am informed that Connaught Laboratories decided to ship the 60 vials on March 8 regardless of the letter of credit because of the apparent urgency indicated by the hon. member. It was the hon. member's intervention which produced these results and also ensured the support of the Red Cross.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—ALLEGED NECESSITY OF SENDING PARACHUTES OF AIRBORNE REGIMENT FROM OTTAWA TO EDMONTON FOR REPACKING

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, as far as can be ascertained, no component of Air Command was consulted to examine the implications of the move of the Canadian Airborne Regiment from Edmonton, and the effect this would have on air operations in Edmonton, and the effect on air operations in Trenton. Associated with the air transport support implications will be a brand new series of costs associated with the transfer of the bulk of the Airborne Regiment from an all-weather air base to Canadian Forces Base Petawawa.

In the light of what appears to be the latest decision not to move the airborne training facility and the parachute packing facility from Edmonton, it is clear that significant additional costs must be faced in terms of transporting personnel and cargo parachutes from Edmonton to eastern Canada and to increase the number of such parachutes to take the place of those that will be tied up in transportation east for use, and west for packing.

In addition, the joint training use of the C-130 Hercules aircraft of 435 Squadron when they are performing their own tactical air training will be impossible when the units are separated. In other words, the degree of close co-operative air training now possible when all units share a common air base will be impossible except at prohibitive expense with the split of the Airborne Regiment and its separation from the air base.

As a direct result of the move of the Canadian Airborne Regiment into Petawawa and Ottawa, there will be a requirement for significant new construction programs at both bases to provide adequate accommodation and training facilities. In addition, there will be a ripple effect on units in Ottawa and Petawawa that will be crowded into existing accommodation, or in the case of Petawawa some units may be forced to move to Gagetown, adding appreciably to the expenses connected with the replenishing of the Airborne Regiment.

In addition to the costs of the move, new and refurbished accommodation, new training areas, additional parachutes, additional and unknown transport support costs, there are the not inconsiderable costs associated with finding new and suitable drop zones, as the minister mentioned to the news media in North Bay. He is quoted as saying that North Bay is being considered as a jumping off point for their exercises and that North Bay, Trenton and Uplands are all being considered as transportation sites for the regiment. He said that the regiment would be trucked to one of these sites so they would board large aircraft to take them to deployment areas. Also to be considered are the additional costs in air transport hours to get exercises launched into the Canadian sub-Arctic and Arctic.

The most puzzling aspect of the entire redeployment plan for the Canadian Airborne Regiment lies in the fact that at no time has there been a clear and logical explanation of the military appreciation that led to such a questionable military decision. There is ample evidence to indicate that little or no consultation took place with the Air Command side, which in any airborne operation is probably the most important component in the airborne capability. In addition, there is considerable evidence to show that the current configuration of the Airborne Regiment has, for the first time in the history of the Canadian armed forces, led to the development of a truly effective land/air team which is capable of carrying out its operational missions effectively.

The puzzle to any objective military thinker or any informed layman is that on the surface there seems to be no military justification whatsoever for the move and separation of the Canadian Airborne Regiment.

Adjournment Debate

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I point out to the hon. member that the jump training school will remain at Edmonton for the foreseeable future. All parachutes are used daily when the school is conducting courses. The regiment jumps, on average, two or three times per month. It is also essential to point out that each person in the Airborne Regiment does not have a parachute with his name on it. It is not as if an individual's parachute were the only parachute in the armed forces. Further, it is not unusual to have a parachute-packing unit remote from the para-airborne units or regiments which use parachutes.

Prior to the formation of the Airborne Regiment the parachute-packing unit was located at Shilo, Manitoba, while the jump school was at Rivers. Parachute companies of the mobile strike force were located at Valcartier, Calgary and at London, Ontario. The parachutes were shipped to Shilo, at that time, for repacking, and the same process will be followed now.

I was somewhat surprised to hear the hon. member raise certain issues this evening, since they had been raised this morning.

Mr. Paproski: No, they were not.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): I suggest they were raised this morning in the standing committee, and answered by the Chief of Defence Staff.

Mr. Paproski: We sure cannot air the issue in seven minutes.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): I was amazed to hear the hon. member suggest that there was no consultation with Air Command, or that there is no military justification for this move. The decision was recommended by the Chief of Defence Staff, and only this morning I heard the hon. member heap elaborate praise on the Chief of Defence Staff for his competence, dedication, and brilliance.

Mr. Paproski: I still feel that the minister does not know why this is happening.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): The minister took the advice of the Chief of Defence Staff. He made his decision on the basis of that advice. Therefore the hon. member's logic is as faulty as his facts are faulty.

Mr. Paproski: You are sucking and blowing at the same time.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION—ALLEGED DENIAL OF LOANS TO FARMERS GETTING LESS THAN FIFTY PER CENT OF INCOME FROM FARMING

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I first raised the matter I raise this evening on November 29 last. The question relates to a young farmer who wishes to obtain a loan from the Farm Credit Corporation. I asked the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) the following question, as reported at page 1454 of Hansard for November 29:

> Is it government policy that the Farm Credit Corporation should deny young farmers, who are temporarily employed and not necessarily getting 50 per cent of their income from farming, loans as a result of their extracurricular work in an effort to try to make ends meet?
> At the same time, would he also indicate whether a father who is retiring would be denied a grant from the Small Loans Assistance Program . . .

Mr. Speaker ruled the question as not acceptable. I rose on a point of order, in which I tried to elaborate on the matter, but Mr. Speaker again denied me the right to pursue it. I then took it upon myself to write to the Farm Credit Corporation about the matter I raised. The Corporation wrote back to me.

Before dealing with that, let me tell the House some of the circumstances of the case. A young man wanted to apply for a loan from the Farm Credit Corporation. He had been farming the land in question for two years. His father had retired and was receiving the old age pension. This young farmer had been renting the land and the father offered to sell it to him on good terms. When the father went to the Farm Credit Corporation asking for a grant, he was told that he could not get it, but that if he sold the land to the provincial land bank, he could qualify. That was the gist of the response I received. I was not satisfied with it and took the matter up in the Standing Committee on Agriculture. Would you believe me, Mr. Speaker, when I tell you that the chairman allowed me only five minutes to put my case? How many questions can you ask in five minutes? How can you ferret out government policies in five minutes?

What is more, five minutes ago I saw the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) behind the curtain. But the Minister of Agriculture is not in the Chamber opposite me, to answer my inquiry this evening. He will delegate that obligation to someone else. Mr. Speaker, this involves a matter of policy. I do not want to hear a lot of words or phrases. I want to hear some clarification of the policy. It is not good enough to hand me a lot of junk, as he did the other day. When discussing matters pertaining to the secretary of agriculture in the United States, he handed me a bunch of junk to do with storage.

I asked if that boy could get a loan, and why that father could not get a grant, if it was available and if he sold the land directly to his son. I also asked the minister in the Standing Committee on Agriculture whether he was in favour of state owned land. He said, no; yet he is not here to answer my question.

● (2210)

I have a letter from a branch manager of the Farm Credit Corporation which reads in part, and I quote:

> That is why a vendor is not eligible for a grant unless he sells to someone who adds it to other land or sells it to the Saskatchewan Land Bank—

The minister cannot tell me he is not in favour of state owned land when the Farm Credit Corporation writes a letter like that to me.

I cannot get any information. I tried to get it this morning in the Agriculture Committee by continuing the questioning. Would you believe the chairman said he would allow me one question? Can you imagine that situation?

The minister ran out of the House. I do not want a second-hand answer from anyone who has been delegated. I have a right on behalf of that young man to know the government's policy. If I cannot get that information in the House or in the Committee discussing the estimates, I do not want someone else giving me a bunch of junk such as statistics about how many loans were made, in what areas, for what purpose, and so on.

I want to know the policy. I cannot get it from somebody who has been delegated. It has to be from the minister. Only a minister can enunciate policy as far as the government is concerned. It is a futile effort to try to get information from this government.

The minister was here five minutes ago. It is a shame that he could not stay. I warned him in committee about the question I would raise tonight. For him to tell me that he is not in favour of state owned land is a lot of baloney. He pulls manure wagons all over the country and he wants me to believe that he is in favour of small farms.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I cannot reply for the minister in terms of his favouring state owned land. He has not shown any indication of this.

I am told that in the case of the young gentleman applying for the loan that he was not working as a farmer at that time. As a matter of fact, he is still not working as a farmer. There is money available if the farm units are going to be viable farm units. This seems to be the problem, that the units may not be viable. If they are traditional farm land, certainly money can be made available. That is the understanding I have.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow morning at 11 o'clock a.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.16 p.m.

PROPOSAL THAT FOOD POLICY BE IMPLEMENTED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, in view of the sharp increase in the price of food in today's consumer price index, showing a steady increase in food prices for the year, and given the fact that this situation will be seriously exacerbated by a continual drought, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

That the government implement a co-ordinated food policy as recommended by the Special Committee on Trends in Food Prices (1973), the chairman of the Food Prices Review Board, and the special interdepartmental committee known as the DM-10.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate pursuant to Standing Order 43 can be done only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

MANPOWER

SUGGESTED REASSESSMENT OF COMMUNITY EMPLOYMENT STRATEGY PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the failure of the community employment strategy program to date to accomplish its objectives and the continuing need for measures to alleviate unemployment and in view of the high priority placed on the program by the former minister of manpower and immigration who said, on April 9, 1976 in Halifax, Nova Scotia, "anything goes for CES", I move, seconded by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather):

That the Minister of Manpower and Immigration reassess the community employment strategy program and expedite its imposition in view of the failure of this program to achieve its goals and to alleviate, in a meaningful way, the need for the creation of new jobs in distressed areas of the country.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 can be done only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HEALTH

PROPOSAL TO DENY GRANTS TO PLANNED PARENTHOOD ORGANIZATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of extreme urgency and great importance. In light of the findings of the Badgley report that the organization known as Planned Parenthood is the leading abortion referral agency in Canada as stated at page 151 of the report, and that Planned Parenthood has had virtually no success in promoting responsible birth control, page 368, and that the majority of Canadians do not support the pro-abortion policies of Planned Parenthood, page 257, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

● (1110)

That this House direct the Minister of National Health and Welfare to refrain from extending Canadian tax money to the organization known as Planned Parenthood.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to the Standing Order the presentation of such a motion can be made only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT TO ALLEVIATE CONCERN OVER BANNING OF SACCHARIN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the lack of direct evidence of any carcinogenic effects of saccharin on humans, in view of the general consternation among diabetics and others which the banning of saccharin will produce, and particularly in view of the statement on television this morning by a cardiologist in a New York coronary care unit that this ban will lead to alarming weight gains and increases in heart attacks among Americans and presumably among Canadians, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That this House call upon the Minister of National Health and Welfare to announce at the earliest possible time his plans to relieve the anxiety which many tens of thousands of Canadians will have as a result of his recent announcement.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate can be made pursuant to Standing Order 43 only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

LEVEL OF INFLATION BY END OF YEAR—RESTRAINT ON SPENDING BY ALL LEVELS OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. With this morning's disappointing inflation figures showing a three-month CPI rise of 8.4 per cent, a rate considerably in excess of the second year target of the anti-inflation program and even above the first year target, would the minister indicate if he is still confident that we will achieve a 6 per cent inflation level based on the implicit price index and the C.P. index by the end of this year?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I previously indicated to the House, we were anticipating the event which occurred both this month and last month; that is to say, an increase in food prices in the country. It seems to me that more than ever this is the reason we should seek greater success in the non-food price element of the consumer price index, while even further restraint in that area is necessary. If we can maintain additional restraint and achieve a further reduction on the non-food price side, then indeed the target can be attained.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I note that the most recent three-month rate of increase in the consumer price index exceeds the second year target of the anti-inflation program, but more importantly, the implicit price index was actually 9.4 per cent in 1976. That is a much more comprehensive measure of inflation in this country. Statistics Canada makes it clear that the single most inflated ingredient of that index was government-incurred expenditures, which were up 13.4 per cent in 1976. Would the minister indicate if any further restraint at the federal level is planned in the expenditure field to ensure that a further inflationary impact will not be felt? Second, does he intend to take up with the provinces the matter of trying to get them to restrain their spending?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The federal government will continue to exercise restraint on the rate of increase of expenditures, although I must say I find it rather odd that that plea should come from the hon. gentleman who just a week ago was asking for a big increase in federal government expenditure on urban transit.

[Mr. Halliday.]

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I suggested to the minister where he could get funds to help with urban transit. It is a question of priorities.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It is still an expenditure.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON DATE OF TERMINATION

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): As the minister himself has noted, the only truly effective method of controlling inflation is monetary and fiscal restraint. Bearing in mind that the minister has stated that the controls are hardly a tonic for capital investment, which the minister knows is seriously lagging in Canada and is contributing to our relatively high unemployment rate, and while the anti-inflation program does not appear to be achieving the price targets which were set, would the minister indicate if prior to March 31 he will make a statement as to the government's current position on terminating the anti-inflation controls?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make several comments on the hon. gentleman's brief speech. Whatever the source of funds for urban transit, the fact of the matter is that that would be an increase in expenditures which, if I understood the hon. gentleman, is something he is against. Second, with regard to the hon. member's urging us to tighter fiscal and monetary policy, we have, of course, been maintaining a strict monetary control through the Bank of Canada on the increase in the money supply. His advocacy for a tighter fiscal policy falls on my ears in an interesting way as well. I guess he is suggesting a more restrictive rather than stimulative budget. With regard to the statements about the timing of the anti-inflation program, I expect to be able to make some statements in that regard in the budget context.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

MEASURES TO GIVE CONSUMERS RELIEF FROM HIGH FOOD PRICES—POSSIBLE IMPLEMENTATION OF A FOOD POLICY

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Given the fact that today's consumer price index shows a two percentage point increase in the cost of food, the highest over-all monthly increase since July, 1975, and given the declining value of the Canadian dollar and the prospect of drought conditions in the west, we can expect that this condition will get considerably worse thereby throwing out the entire controls program or make it almost inoperable. May I ask the minister what steps he is prepared to take to provide some relief to Canadian consumers who are controlled on the one hand and so have to experience the continuing phenomena of rising prices?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would just remind the hon. gentleman that there has been a dramatic drop in the cost of food over the past two year period. In that sense, while there has been some recovery in the food component, the rate of increase in the consumer price index in comparative terms remains very much lower than the over-all cost of living in Canada two years ago. With regard to the impact of climatic changes such as drought—

Mr. Stanfield: We are back to the weather.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): —I acknowledge that this may indeed cause difficulties from a consumer and price point of view. Even the hon. member for Halifax should be capable of understanding that from time to time weather may have an impact on agriculture.

Mr. Stevens: Always the weather; never the Grits!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the weather does have an impact on crops.

An hon. Member: That is what Turner used to say.

Mr. McGrath: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Given the serious competitive situation that exists in the cabinet between the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs which is thwarting any effort to have a co-ordinated food policy which would bring some element of relief to the Canadian consumer, may I ask the Minister of Finance if he is prepared to take a hard look at the recommendations of the interdepartmental committee known as DM-10? Is he prepared to undertake the co-ordination of policies within the government which would serve the best interests of both producers and consumers?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the allegations of the hon. gentleman about conflict in this regard are simply without foundation. I would have to point out to him that the question of whether there will be a drought in this particular year or frost in the food supply areas of southern United States are obviously not something that can be resolved within the context of a Canadian food policy.

HOUSING

MEASURES TO REDUCE COST AND INCREASE SUPPLY OF LOW-COST AND LOW-RENTAL UNITS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs in charge of housing. Considering that the cost of home ownership has increased by more than 12 per cent in each of the past three months over the cost of home ownership in the previous year, and considering the fact that with more than 30 items on the order paper there is not one new proposal from the minister, would the minister spend less time politicking in Quebec and give some thought to new proposals that would bring down the cost of housing for Canadians?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member surprises me by his remarks. There was a debate in the House in recent days and the figures stated show quite well the extremely dynamic action taken by the government in housing construction.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: A supplementary question. In view of the fact that some statistics show that the average price of a home sold in metro Toronto last year was $61,000, thus ruling out 80 per cent of income earners from any thought of buying a home in that city, and that both Montreal and Toronto have said they are only meeting 50 per cent of the need for low income rental units, I ask the minister to be specific and tell the House what the government plans in order to increase the supply of (a) low-cost housing and (b) low-income rental units?

● (1120)

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, the Assisted Home Ownership Program has been developed to help middle or low income earners to own a house. This is one of the most popular programs in Canada and I remind the hon. member that an unprecedented number of new houses were built in Canada last year.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: May I ask a supplementary question? Mr. Speaker, the minister has just confirmed that he does not really know what his department is doing. Considering that the Canadian Council of Social Development, for example, has pointed out that almost all the money has gone into such government programs as AHOP, which helps out middle-income people, and has stressed that there has actually been a decline in the amount of money for low-income Canadians, I ask the minister precisely what he plans to do about that important sector of the population not now having their needs met with low-rental units or low-cost housing which they can afford to buy?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I do not need to wait for the hon. member's question before acting. Two weeks ago we announced, with the cooperation of the province of Nova Scotia, a cooperative housing construction program designed exclusively for very low income earners. We just signed an agreement with the government of Ontario for home ownership at a reasonable cost by reducing the income standards applied to individuals who want to buy those houses. We are holding discussions with other provinces on the establishment of joint programs which would help very low income earners to own a house.

RRAP—POSSIBILITY OF EXTENDING REGULATIONS TO GREATER NUMBER OF MUNICIPALITIES—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

As part of the federal residential rehabilitation program in rural areas, could the minister tell the House whether regulations will be amended or extended to enable more rural municipalities to make use of that program, which is quite interesting as a matter of fact?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we hope that the provinces, which are responsible for selecting municipalities this year, will increase the number of such selections. We substantially increased that budget to meet the many applications throughout Canada, especially in the province of Quebec, so that people can make use of that program.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, on a supplementary.

In view of the minister's reply, perhaps he could tell us whether he has had consultations with the new Quebec minister so that the department in charge of designating municipalities can give a favourable answer to the requests the municipalities have made; in addition, would he agree to having the municipalities advise his department of the requests they have made and will make to Quebec?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, the suggestion of the hon. member is very helpful. I would like to say two things: first, meetings have been held at the civil servant but not the ministerial level.

Second, to facilitate the implementation of that program, this year, in the case of already designated municipalities, we will let them know ahead of time how much money they can bank on spending in their area.

With regard to the other municipalities, I encourage the hon. member, if he has some in mind, to suggest to their authorities that they advise their provincial government and so facilitate the designation of the new ones.

[English]

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF PROGRAM TO PROVIDE GRANTS FOR INSULATION OF UNITS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs? My question relates to RRAP, which provides for grants for insulation. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources did not see fit to extend grants for insulation and for conserving energy to other provinces. We have been hearing for four years that the funds are going to be extended to those provinces where the need is greatest, where low income earners who own their own homes cannot afford to maintain or insulate them. Will the minister take the initiative to get that program on a broader base?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): We know that RRAP is very popular, particularly in Newfoundland. Specifically to meet the demand more adequately, for the coming fiscal year the amount allotted for expenditures in that province will almost be doubled.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

PROGRAM SUBMITTED BY NEWFOUNDLAND TO HELP VETERANS INSULATE THEIR HOMES—REASON FOR DELAY IN IMPLEMENTATION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. The province of Newfoundland submitted a very adequate program to help veterans on low incomes insulate their homes and repair them under the emergency repair program. There has been a delay of two or three years since they were promised by the minister, the former Minister of Veterans Affairs and the former minister in charge of housing that they would implement that program which has been presented. Why has there been this delay?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as far as the program is concerned, a lot of responsibility lies with the province. I am not prepared to say at this time the reasons for the program not being implemented. I know it is a two way plan, federal and provincial.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

ALLEGED LACK OF FUNDS TO BROADCAST LIGHTING OF BONFIRES FOR QUEEN'S JUBILEE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. It arises out of a report this morning emanating from "Canada A.M.", which I did not hear but which has been reported to me. It has to do with the Queen's Jubilee on June 6. On that date in the United Kingdom and in the self-governing dominions that acknowledge her as Queen, there will be satellite broadcasting of bonfires that will be lighted. Is it a fact, as stated this morning, that when a request by the CBC was made to the hon. gentleman's protocol office, the reply was that it could not be done because of a shortage of funds?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the broadcast either. I remember that we did have some discussion on the feasibility of lighting bonfires. However, I will have to check to see exactly what decision was taken and the reasons for it. I will report to the right hon. member.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I know that the question of cost and the reducing of expenditures is something that worries this government tremendously. However, to have a bonfire on Parliament Hill on that date would be the first time in history that Parliament Hill has been so lighted up. Surely, the government is not going to follow so niggardly policy like this and place Canada in the invidious position of being the only country acknowledging the Queen as Queen which in order to save a few dollars, will not put on a celebration on that date.

Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, when the right hon. member talked about bonfires, I had a hard time envisaging him as a latter day Guy Fawkes, particularly when he talked about bonfires on Parliament Hill. I will have to consider not only the cost of starting the fires, but the cost of putting them out. I will look into the question and report back.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES

METRIC SYSTEM—LETTER FROM SASKATCHEWAN WHEAT POOL DATED FEBRUARY, 1977, STATING NO OPPOSITION

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of State in charge of small business. I have already provided him with the document and I think he has the answer to this question. Did the minister receive a letter from the secretary of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool dated February 25, signed by J. O. Wright, secretary, stating that, and I quote:

—no resolutions were received from the 800 active Wheat Pool local committees or from annual meetings held, or from other membership meetings held throughout the province to discuss issues dealing with the operations or farm policies—

That is referring to Bill C-23, the metric bill.

Hon. Len Marchand (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, I did receive this letter from the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool. However, there is perhaps some discrepancy in the interpretation. If you read the particular paragraph which the hon. member quoted, it starts:

During all this period, no resolutions were received—

If you go to the top paragraph on page two of the same letter, you will find that "during this period" referred to the period, meetings held and so on during 1974, 1975 and 1976. This particular letter was dated February 25, 1977.

● (1130)

METRIC SYSTEM—POSSIBILITY MEMBERS OF WHEAT POOL SENT RESOLUTIONS OPPOSING SYSTEM

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): In view of the fact that this letter is dated February 25, and since the minister now has in his possession official copies of the resolution sent in by members of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool to their Board of Directors, would the minister consider, in his reply inquiring whether the locals themselves have sent any letters opposing the metric system?

Hon. Len Marchand (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): I would hope to do that. I know there has been a good deal of concern among farm groups about this program but I also believe there has been a lot of misinformation, too. I hope that when giving information to farm groups hon. members will point out that Bill C-23 has nothing to do with land measurement. Land measurement is in the hands of the provinces. Anything having to do with changes in land measurement is in the hands of the provinces.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I shall raise this further as a question of privilege at the time set for that purpose.

METRIC SYSTEM—SUGGESTED DELAY OF LEGISLATION OR ACCEPTANCE OF AMENDMENTS

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): In view of widespread and growing protest among rank and file producers in Western Canada regarding metric conversion and the failure of producer organizations to consult with the actual producers, would the minister be prepared to reconsider his intention to proceed with this bill and has he given any thought to accepting the amendments which have been advanced by members on this side of the House to preserve the acre and bushel?

Hon. Len Marchand (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): We have heard the representations which were made in committee and the representations made by the organizations which appeared before us. The advice I have received is that if we are to go metric we must do so in its pure form. If we mix it, we would be creating unnecessary confusion. Either we go metric, or we don't, and the advice I am getting is that we should go forward with the system in its pure form.

Mr. Mazankowski: Might I preface my supplementary question by stating there is not a pure metric system in the world of which I am aware.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST THAT VIEWS OF PRODUCERS BE CONSIDERED IN CONVERSION TO METRIC SYSTEM

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): My supplementary is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that he speaks for the producers of Canada—

Mr. Stanfield: Oh, no he doesn't!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: Well, he may not, but he is supposed to—will the Minister of Agriculture undertake to ensure that the views and opinions of the producers, the grass roots producers in this country, will be taken into consideration since there is a strong desire by the producers of this country to maintain the bushel and the acre? Will he urge his colleague in charge of this bill to see that those views are taken into consideration? Would he impress upon him the importance of accepting the amendment advanced from this side of the House?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am in favour of the metric system which the government is proposing and in answering every letter I am getting from anyone I am explaining the advantages of the system. I will even have a meeting with the hon. member and try to explain the advantages to him so that he can explain them to the producers in his area.

FINANCE

POSSIBILITY OF MERGER OF PROVINCIAL BANK OF CANADA AND UNITY BANK

Hon. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he is in a position this morning to give some information about any merger or take-over involving the Unity Bank?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): I cannot make a comment in this regard. As the hon. gentleman may have read, there have been discussions between the Provincial Bank of Canada and the Unity Bank about a possible merger. At this stage, proposals are being put to the respective shareholders of the two companies. I cannot give any indication this morning whether or not they have been accepted. I have indicated in a preliminary way that, subject to further examination and the approval of the shareholders, that kind of merger would be approved by myself as Minister of Finance.

SCHOOL MILK PROGRAM—CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES ON POSSIBILITY OF FEDERAL AID IN FINANCING

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Agriculture. On several occasions we have asked the hon. gentleman about a school milk program. I should like him to note that the government of Quebec in the inaugural speech announced the other day the introduction of a school milk program in that province. Would the minister meet with his provincial counterparts and set up a program under which the federal government would jointly finance school milk programs?

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): The hon. member has stated what is being done. I hope he realizes it is the governments that are doing this, it is not the farmers or the ministers of agriculture who are doing it. It is the governments under the leadership of the Liberal leader of Nova Scotia which was one of the first provinces to initiate such a program; it has been very successful in the province of Nova Scotia. The Province of Quebec announced a similar program in the speech from the throne. It is a social program which the province intends to instal. As I said the other day, the farmers of Canada have proven their ability to produce if somebody wants to pay for the product.

Mr. Nystrom: As usual, the minister has missed the point of my question. I asked whether he will make a commitment that the government of Canada will co-finance or jointly sponsor such a program. I ask this in view of the fact that the consumption of milk has dropped in Canada while the consumption of soft drinks is rising.

Mr. Whelan: We are sharing with the industrial milk producers of Canada the cost of a program of advertising as a result of which the consumption of cheese rose by 15 per cent last year while the consumption of fluid milk in Ontario, Quebec and Nova Scotia has been maintained at a steady level, indeed, consumption has actually increased. These programs are in place. Yes, I do support a school milk program. I think it is a wonderful idea.

ENERGY

SUGGESTED DEBATE ON PIPELINE TO TRANSPORT ARCTIC GAS

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): A question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the question of a pipeline to transport natural gas from the Arctic is of such importance to the people of Canada, would the minister take into consideration the possibility of arranging a full-scale debate on the subject in this House before a final decision is taken?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I have indicated that there will be plenty of opportunity in committee for debate. I hope there will also be an opportunity in the House, but that is a matter which the House leader would have to arrange. I stated in another answer earlier that I would refer this matter to him.

STUDY OF COST OF DEVELOPING LNG TANKER TO TRANSPORT NATURAL GAS FROM ARCTIC—DATE OF COMPLETION AND POSSIBLE TABLING

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): My supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister confirm that his department has commissioned a study of the costs involved in developing the LNG tanker system to transport natural gas from the Arctic and, if so, when does he expect such a study to be completed? Is he prepared to table the results of the study in this House?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Work is being done on the feasibility of this form of transportation. I am not sure at this point whether this is the kind of study the results of which could be tabled, but I will look into that aspect.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NEW UNIFORMS FOR CADETS—NAMES OF CONTRACTORS AND VALUE OF CONTRACTS

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence? I should like to ask him whether the department has awarded a contract for new uniforms to replace the uniforms traditionally worn by cadets of the three armed service elements.

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I understand that a number of contracts have been let to several sub-contractors.

Mr. Scott: Can the minister tell us to whom the contracts were awarded? Can he give us the dollar value involved?

Mr. Danson: I will be pleased to answer those questions if they are placed on the order paper, or by way of a letter to the hon. member.

SUGGESTION "BRAS D'OR" BE DONATED TO MUSEUM

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. It has to do with the experimental hydrofoil Bras d'Or, built at a cost of some $52 million, which has been mothballed for more than five years at an annual cost of about $500,000 and which, due to the cracks in its foils, cannot be used either for defence purposes or for fishery surveillance. I should like to ask the minister whether he would give consideration to offering this ship as a museum piece either to some local museum or to the Alexander Graham Bell Museum at Baddeck, where the concept of the hydrofoil originated?

● (1140)

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member's figures regarding the annual storage costs are considerably higher than those I am aware of, but we will continue to do some checking work on the Bras d'Or until decisions are made on the new ship program. Certainly, his suggestion is one I would consider very seriously.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

ALLEGED UNDERTAKING OF NOVA SCOTIA UNION TO MAN CRUISE SHIP "MERCATOR ONE"—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question that I will direct to the minister responsible for regional economic expansion. It arises out of a meeting yesterday of the Maritime Advisory Committee of the Canadian Labour Congress at which the national presidents of the Canadian Merchant Service Guild, the CB of RT and the Seafarers' International Union undertook in response to Mercator Enterprises' charges that there are not enough Canadian seamen to man the cruise ship Mercator One, and at which they said "we can assure the company, the Nova Scotia government and MAGI that these crew members will be residents of Nova Scotia". Has the minister received that communication and, if so, what response can he make to it?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I do not have here the communication the hon. member is referring to, but yesterday I received a telegram from him telling me about the steps taken by this group of fishermen of the Atlantic coast. Therefore I took immediate action to see what could be done so that some preference be given at least to the fishermen who are prepared to take the available positions.

MANPOWER

CANADA WORKS PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR DELAY OF DECISION ON APPLICATIONS AFFECTING METIS AND STATUS INDIANS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Following on the exchange in the House on March 1 initiated by the hon. member for Lambton-Kent pertaining to the allocation of funds for status Indians, particularly as it applies to communities with a high Métis population and with an equally high or higher unemployment rate, will the decision on the Canada Works application in those areas be deferred until this dilemma is resolved?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker. Typical of the Métis population, when they saw the situation they put together what I thought was an excellent brief. They made an appointment with me, came down and discussed the situation as it existed on the site. We have made a pitch to them about a compromise for the next phase of the funding which I think they will find acceptable.

Mr. Korchinski: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When will a decision on the second phase be made?

Mr. Cullen: Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to prejudge the situation. Frankly, I am awaiting for a response from the Métis to find out if my compromise suggestion is acceptable to them. When I have that I will probably be able to make a comment.

FINANCE

REASON FOR FAILURE TO GIVE TARIFF PROTECTION TO SCISSORS INDUSTRY

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, may I address my question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that in the last number of months representations have been made to him regarding the scissors industry in this country and the government has not responded to the fact that Brazil has a 150 per cent tariff on imports of scissors whereas Canada lets Brazil's scissors in for nothing, is there any chance that the minister could explain why the Canadian government would not protect the fledgling scissors industry in this country?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, along with other members of the developed world Canada has entered into an undertaking to accord a general preferential tariff to the developing countries so that by building up their trade they may replace the kind of development assistance they are now receiving from us with economic advantage. It is for this reason that Brazil has been accorded general preferential tariff treatment on imports of this kind, and it is for this reason that the government has concluded that it should not reverse the GPT with regard to scissors from Brazil and will continue to offer this assistance to the developing world.

Mr. Dick: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that other leading countries in the western world which are also trying to adapt to the GATT resolutions, particularly the United States, still have a 20 per cent tariff on hot-forged scissors, which is exactly what was requested in the case of Canada which lets in cold-stamped scissors free of duty, is there any change the minister can foresee in the near future?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): No, Mr. Speaker.

POLYSAR

SUGGESTION DIRECTORS BE TOLD WITNESSES SHOULD BE FORTHCOMING IN THEIR ANSWERS TO PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Finance but in his capacity as minister representing the shareholders of the Canada Development Corporation, the shares held by the government of Canada. Has the minister instructed or at least passed on to the chairman of the board of Canada Development Corporation for communication to subsidiaries, particularly Polysar, that it is the position of the government of Canada, as repeated by the Prime Minister many times in this House, that witnesses before the Standing Committee on Public Accounts should be forthcoming in their answers in order that that committee is able to draw conclusions respecting the charges which have been made by the Auditor General? Has the minister requested that that position be put forth?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not in any doubt that witnesses, either from Polysar or from any other company in which the government has an investment, would do their very best to assist the committee. I have not really felt it necessary to tell the directors or to ask the directors nominated by the government in CDC or other corporations to co-operate. I believe the assumption is that they will so co-operate.

The particular question has arisen as to whether or not, by his appearance before the public accounts committee, a particular employee could be put in legal jeopardy in his place of employment or in his own country. That, obviously, is a very special problem. It seems to me that it is a difficult situation in which to put an employee, where he could be compelled to answer questions in this country which might then result in severe legal implications for him in Switzerland. That is a problem which I have asked the government directors of the Canada Development Corporation—that is to say, the public service directors, to take up with the executive committee of the CDC to see whether some satisfactory resolution can be achieved.

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. I certainly understand the answer the minister has given and I can understand the concern, but my question arises from the fact that a witness before the committee refused point blank to supply information to the committee which would make it possible, and only possible, for the committee to discover whether or not Polysar was engaging in activities which allowed it to avoid, or at least to minimize, taxes it should have paid in Canada. I should like to know whether or not the minister would in fact direct, or if he cannot direct at least pass on to, the CDC and through the CDC to Polysar that in issues which are very pertinent to considerations going forth, and which do not put in jeopardy the legal status of any employee of the corporation but which are essential if the investigation is to make progress, he should indeed be instructed to answer questions?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, with the general principle I would have no argument; but I am sure that the hon. member understands that I could not ask the directors of the CDC to require an employee to break the law.

INDUSTRY

POSSIBILITY OF GRANTING FURTHER AID TO SHIPBUILDING—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Florian Côté (Richelieu): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Can the minister tell the House whether the government is going to improve the shipbuilding assistance legislation to make our Canadian shipyards more competitive and more able to maintain the employment level in this industry?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I had a number of representations on this matter from both sides of the House, particularly from the hon. member, and I am glad to announce that the government has decided to increase by 12 to 20 per cent the subsidy granted to shipbuilding in Canada so as to help this industry which is going through a difficult period because of the low level of foreign orders and also perhaps the very strong competition of some countries.

CANADA DAY

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PLANS FOR CELEBRATION

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State and it arises out of a motion that I presented last June under Standing Order 43 and a motion put yesterday by my colleague, the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock. It has to do with celebrations on Parliament Hill which the government cancelled last year and which are symbolic of national unity and pride which we all feel on Canada Day. Would the minister inform the House what specific plans he has to restore those celebrations to a level that would be symbolic of the kind of nationalism we all feel to give every Canadian a change to show his patriotism?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have been working on such plans for several months, including not only celebrations in Ottawa but in other parts of Canada as well. I am not in a position to make any specific announcement, but I hope to be able to do so very shortly.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REASON FOR FAILURE TO IMPLEMENT POLICY ON BOYCOTT OF TRADE WITH ISRAEL—POSSIBLE INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): My question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Would he indicate in the House why the Canadian government has not yet implemented the policy announced in the House regarding Canadian government action on the Arab boycott related to Canadian firms doing business with Israel?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have started to implement the policy. It took considerable time to draw up the guidelines and to distribute them to our embassies and other organizations abroad, but I am satisfied with the arrangements that are now in place, and I believe the guidelines have been made public. If not, my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, will be glad to do so. I repeat that the program will be effective.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that the hon. member for Windsor West indicated the other night that because there is no legislation backing up the guidelines they will not really be effective, is it the minister's intention to introduce legislation in the House, similar to that now being contemplated in the U.S. Congress, which would clearly spell out that our Canadian firms and banks are prohibited from going along with the Arab boycott as they have been until now?

Mr. Jamieson: It is not our intention at the moment to introduce legislation. I repeat what I have said earlier, that I believe our present provisions will be effective, and I think the hon. member knows there is considerable difficulty being experienced in the U.S. with precisely this question of the form of legislation to be used. We will monitor the policy that was introduced last fall to see how effective it is, and after a reasonable period has elapsed, we will see what steps, if any, are necessary.

HER MAJESTY'S JUBILEE

PARTICIPATION OF ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE MUSICAL RIDE

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): While I am on my feet, may I just add to an answer which was given to the right hon. member for Prince Albert to tell him that in terms of Her Majesty's Jubilee I am delighted to inform him—and I know he will be pleased and the House will be pleased to know—that we have made arrangements for the RCMP musical ride team to accompany Her Majesty in the procession for the Jubilee celebrations in London.

Oral Questions

MANPOWER

COMMUNITY EMPLOYMENT STRATEGY PROGRAM—MEASURES TO IMPROVE PERFORMANCE

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): My question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. It is about a program in his department which I know concerns him as it concerns most areas of the country, namely the CES program which, because of bureaucratic impediments appears not to achieve the high hopes that were once held by his predecessor for its success. Can the minister tell us whether he has particular measures under way to cut through some of the red tape and present a better picture in terms of performance for this program?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his support for this program that was an initiative this government embarked upon in 1975. It still remains a very high priority with the government. In the hon. member's region or area there is a technical problem which we are working on and with which we will press ahead. This is a commitment to the area concerned and it remains a high priority. Within the limits of fiscal responsibility we intend to press ahead.

Mr. MacKay: I am sure the minister is aware of the fact that a large proportion of the budget of CES in Nova Scotia—the approximate budget is slightly over $1 million—appears to be devoted to administrative costs and to topping up other programs. About $750,000 out of approximately $1 million appears not to be going for the primary purpose of producing jobs. Does the minister intend to look into the situation and to try to make the program more efficient in this respect?

Mr. Cullen: When we have an excellent program and we can make it better, we most assuredly will look into it.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

BUILDING OF ACCESS ROADS TO MINES IN NORTHERN QUEBEC

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Since he has had recent talks with his Quebec counterpart, could he tell us now whether he has received a request for financial aid from the Quebec government for the construction of a road leading to mines north of LaSarre, mainly to the SELCO and AMOCO mines in that area?

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): No, Mr. Speaker, I do not remember having discussed the matter in such terms as mentioned by the hon. member. It is possible that the proposal was made to Quebec officials, more particularly to OPDQ officials, but for the time being at least I do not think that specific requests were made to my department or myself.

GENERAL DEVELOPMENT AGREEMENT WITH BRITISH COLUMBIA—LACK OF FUNDS FOR KOOTENAY DISTRICT—REQUEST FOR ACTION

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the fact that the General Development Agreement between British Columbia and DREE specifically spells out the northwest, the northeast and the Kootenays in British Columbia, and in view of the fact that there has not been any notification of any funding for the Kootenays, has the minister had recent discussions with the provincial government on funds specifically earmarked for the Kootenays in British Columbia under the GDA as spelled out?

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, no, I have not had any specific discussions about the Kootenays. Our discussions were about the whole province in light of the kind of assistance we might be able to put together to provide support for industrial activities in the remote parts of British Columbia. But this is still under discussion and I hope within a few months, if not weeks, we will be able to conclude our discussions and propose something to help that region in particular.

Mr. Brisco: In view of the fact that the federal government has already spent more on MAGI and the cruiseship than has been spent on the entire province of British Columbia, and in view of the fact that the minister now says it will be several months before a decision can be made, is he not prepared to take departmental initiatives under the agreement and spend some money and make some progress under the DREE agreement in British Columbia?

[Translation]

Mr. Lessard: Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the premises of the hon. member's question concerning MAGI, but as for the other part of his serious question, I am now considering the possibility of some intervention by my department, for lack of an agreement which I still hope to conclude with the British Columbia government. However should such an agreement fail to materialize, we will have to consider other means of giving a new impetus to the economic conditions in British Columbia.

HEALTH

SACCHARIN—REASON FOR BANNING RATHER THAN ISSUING HEALTH WARNING—GOVERNMENT PLANS TO OVERCOME DETRIMENTAL EFFECT OF BAN

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, in view of the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, perhaps I could direct my question to his parliamentary secretary who, I think, will be knowledgeable about a matter which his department has had under review for some three or four years. Can he tell us why the minister and his department chose to be inconsistent with respect to the policy of banning saccharin as compared to its policy on tobacco under which he chose to have an appropriate warning placed on the consumer package?

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): I am not so sure I see the connection between saccharin and tobacco on this point. The banning of saccharin, except for diabetics under certain conditions, is the result of one of the best studies that has been done by any group in this country. It has been accepted in the United States. I would like to say that some time during the next week we hope to have a briefing by department officials for all members of the House who would like to go into this in more depth and to understand its implications.

● (1200)

Mr. Halliday: Mr. Speaker, acknowledging what the parliamentary secretary has said, acknowledging the concern and apprehension which people in general have about cancer and acknowledging also the concern expressed today by a New York cardiologist which, if translated into Canadian terms suggests that as a result of the ban on saccharin Canadians will gain an extra 60 million pounds of weight and as a result have an extra 2,500 heart attacks per year, could the parliamentary secretary tell the House what plans the minister has to combat both the psychological hazard and the cardiovascular hazard in addition to the unknown cancer hazard which Canadians will now face?

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, the decision to ban saccharin was not arrived at lightly. There will be constant consultation with medical officials and people representing medical associations. Perhaps other sweeteners will come along, but we have to accept the fact that there has been consultation, and these concerns have been discussed. We will always be trying to develop alternatives.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION CLARIFYING STATUS AND AUDIT REQUIREMENTS

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of Treasury Board. The Standing Committee on Public Accounts has heard evidence that the Auditor General was dropped as auditor of Polysar because Polysar ceased to be a Crown corporation, in spite of the fact that the Auditor General presently audits some non-Crown corporations. Polysar still appears in the schedule of Crown corporations in the Financial Administration Act, in spite of the fact that the Minister of Justice stated that the government's position in 1973 was that Polysar was no longer a Crown corporation. I would like to ask whether the Minister of Justice can make such action official without the approval of parliament, and will the minister indicate when legislation will be introduced to clarify what are and what are not Crown corporations, how many there are and what the audit requirements of Crown corporations are.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I will have to read the seven or eight questions which were just asked in Hansard. However, I can give the hon. member the assurance that clarification of what a Crown corporation is, the number of Crown corporations and those which are to be brought under the Financial Administration Act will be made to the House in the very near future by way of some proposed amendments to the FAA and probably to the Crown Corporations Act.

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

AUTHORITY FOR LOAN TO OWNERS OF QUAI D'ORSAY HOTEL

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, yesterday at the end of the question period the Minister of State for Urban Affairs offered to be forthcoming with respect to a question put to him earlier by the hon. member for St. John's East. Unfortunately that occurred after the question period. The minister and the hon. member for St. John's East are here, so I wonder if the minister is in a position to answer that question today.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I shall answer the hon. member for St. John's East by saying that a loan guarantee has been granted under paragraph 6(1) of the National Housing Act. This paragraph gives the corporation authority to issue an insurance policy concerning a loan granted by a lender to promote the construction of a rental housing project.

PRIVILEGE

HON. ALVIN HAMILTON—ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS REGARDING METRIC CONVERSION

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The Minister of State for Small Businesses (Mr. Marchand)—whether deliberate or not, I do not know—was guilty of misinforming the House in answering questions I asked him this morning. I thought the questions were well put. Yesterday I showed the minister a letter from the secretary of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool. I showed him Saskatchewan Wheat Pool documents which proved that he was being misinformed. When I asked the minister a second question about whether he would inform the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool that he and parliament did not take lightly the fact that they were being misinformed, instead of answering my question either by saying "yes" or "no" he went on to say that the matter of land measurement—in other words, hectares—was a provincial and not a federal responsibility.

I maintain that this was either a deliberate or unwitting misleading of the House. I would like to quote from the third paragraph of a letter dated February 25 to the minister from the secretary of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, as follows:

> Canadian policy, unanimously adopted by the government of Canada in a white paper, 1970, calls for a planned conversion to the international system of standards known as the metric system.

That statement was made in the letter by the secretary of that organization placing upon the federal parliament the responsibility for passing a law which provides that conversion to the metric system is the law of the land. Mr. Speaker, you know, as well as I do, that no government white paper means anything until it is passed in this House by a vote of the parliamentarians present. It is a legislative proposal. In fact, before the metric system can become effective across Canada, 90 statutes of this parliament will have to be amended, and as yet not one has been amended.

The secretary of an organization wrote a letter to the minister and sent copies to members of parliament saying that this is an unanimously adopted federal law. The secretary of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool went on in his letter to say:

> At the annual meetings of the elected delegates who represent the shareholders of Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, held in 1974, 1975 and 1976, reports on metric conversion and displays to assist elected leaders to understand the metric conversion process in agriculture, and particularly in the grain industry, were presented.

The secretary states the following in another paragraph:

> During all this period, no resolutions were received from the 800 active Wheat Pool local committees or from annual meetings held, or from other membership meetings held throughout the province to discuss issues dealing with the operations or farm policies of this organization.

That paragraph was meant to tell the minister that the farmers were not objecting to the metric system. Yesterday, I sent six Saskatchewan Wheat Pool documents to the minister pointing out that local rank and file members at the district level and subdistrict level had submitted resolutions opposing the metric system. When I asked the minister this morning if he would defend parliament by writing to this secretary and telling him that there was misleading information in his letter and asking for an explanation, his answer to me was that the system of measurement of land in the prairies and all across Canada is a matter of provincial jurisdiction, which begs the question and in effect the minister is supporting that misrepresentation in this House.

Parliament has not passed any laws dealing with the metric system, yet officials of the minister went out to the provincial governments, to these grain companies to private businesses and to consumers' associations and said that this was the law and that they should get ready to put the law into effect by February 1, 1977. I simply point out that federal officials are misinforming the public through grain companies and private companies. The minister has the gall to tell me in this House that the federal government has nothing to do with land measurement in the provinces. I wonder who persuaded the governments of the provinces that this is the law of the land, if it was not the minister's officials. What I am trying to say is that not only are the minister's officials misinforming and imposing upon my privileges as a member of parliament and on the privileges of every other hon. member. The minister is not informing us truthfully because the federal government got this whole thing going without passing a law to make it legal.

I would like to conclude my question of privilege by asking the minister to reconsider his answers and defend this parliament. I would like him to point out to the secretary of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool that as parliamentarians we expect to be told the whole truth, and nothing but the truth—and not to be faced with this type of answer.

[Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain).]

● (1210)

Hon. Len Marchand (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, it will, of course, be up to Your Honour to determine whether there is a question of privilege, but I could answer the hon. member's question very quickly. I think he will find in the record that I said I would write to the secretary of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool and determine whether there had been some misrepresentation. It is my view, however, that there was not any deliberate misrepresentation by the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool or any kind of misrepresentation at all. It is important to note that in the answer I gave, I stated very clearly that if one read the letter in its context there was no misrepresentation in my view. There is no way I would want to see this parliament misrepresented by anyone. I am sure that Mr. Wright, secretary of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, was not trying to misrepresent their position to this parliament or anyone else.

I should like to put on the record again the third paragraph of the letter, on page 2, which begins as follows:

> During all this period, no resolutions were received from the 800 active Wheat Pool local committees—

The significant part of the letter refers back to the first paragraph on page 2, which reads:

> At the annual meetings of the elected delegates who represent the shareholders of Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, held in 1974, 1975 and 1976, reports on metric conversion and displays to assist elected leaders to understand the metric conversion process in agriculture, and particularly in the grain industry, were presented.

That is the reference back. But to satisfy hon. members and myself on the point I will write to the secretary of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool for further clarification and pass the information along to the members concerned. On the second part of the question, I must say I do not think anyone is trying to misrepresent anything in this House. Bill C-23 does not refer to land measurement. Land measurement does not lie in the hands of the federal government; it is clearly a provincial responsibility. Any bills to change that would have to be drawn by provincial governments. I repeat, Bill C-23 does not deal with land measurements.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) does not have attached to it a motion which would ask direction of the Chair other than the request put through the Chair to the minister who appears to me adequately to have responded to that request at least for the moment.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

MEASURE TO CHANGE NAME OF CONSTITUENCY

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-406, to amend the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Kootenay East-Revelstoke).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, when the redistribution of 1952 divided the Okanagan to form two new constituencies, it was thought the city of Revelstoke was sufficiently removed from the Okanagan to be designated in the name of the new riding—Okanagan-Revelstoke. The most recent redistribution in 1976 added Revelstoke to the Kootenay East part of Okanagan-Kootenay, but omitted adding the name of the city to the constituency name, even though Revelstoke is more removed from Kootenay East than it was from the Okanagan. This bill corrects that oversight.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

AMENDMENTS TO RDIA—TRANSPORTATION

Question No. 1,342—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

1. Is (a) DREE (b) the Department of Transport aware that Austria, Finland, France, Germany, Italy, Norway, Sweden and Switzerland offer some form of transport concessions or subsidies to industry in designated development areas?

2. Are the Departments aware that the Atlantic Provinces Chamber of Commerce in its Statement of Policy for 1975-76, repeated in 1976-77, calls for changes to RDIA to better reflect the transport charges paid by Atlantic firms and, if so, what action does the government propose to take in this regard?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Regional Economic Expansion and Transport as follows: 1. (a) DREE, through liaison arrangements with the Organization for Economic Co-Operation and Development and other contacts with individual nations, obtains information about programs in effect elsewhere which may have relevance for its activities, including measures such as those mentioned here. Any consideration of such measures for application in Canada would require an assessment of both their effectiveness in their own domestic environment and their potential applicability to the Canadian scene. (b) Yes.

2. Yes. In fact, the basic intent of these recommendations is implemented by DREE in current RDIA practice. The present value of additional transportation costs over the estimated life of the project is taken into consideration in determining an equitable level of incentive for larger projects. In the case of smaller projects, where the level of incentive is normally determined by a guideline formula, the formula level was preset at a higher rate in the Atlantic Region, in part to offset the effect of higher transportation costs. While the RDIA is administered by DREE, the more general subject of freight transportation assistance programs is being reviewed by Transport Canada in full co-operation with the four provinces concerned.

COMPENSATION TO FIRMS EMPLOYING INEXPERIENCED WORKERS

Question No. 1,343—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

1. Is (a) DREE (b) the Department of Manpower and Immigration aware of measures in effect in Finland to compensate firms employing inexperienced workers in designated development areas?

2. Are any such measures now in effect at the federal level in Canada and, if so, what are they?

3. What success have such programmes had in Canada in terms of (a) the average length of time which workers remain at their assisted jobs once the assistance is terminated (b) the number of workers involved (c) the average cost per worker?

4. Are any strengthenings or modifications to such programmes being considered and, if so, what are they?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Manpower and Immigration and Regional Economic Expansion as follows: 1. (a) DREE is aware of many of the measures in effect in Finland to assist firms in designated development areas, including measures such as those mentioned. (b) Yes.

2. No such measures are in effect under DREE programs. Yes, in so far as the Department of Manpower and Immigration is concerned. Under the recently announced Job Experience and Training Program (JET) it is the intent of the winter component to compensate firms when they employ inexperienced young workers. This compensation will be in the form of a partial wage subsidy to offset their low productivity. Three pilot projects are now in process in the Montreal, Oakville, and Vancouver areas. In addition, although the Department's Industrial Training Program does not have this specific objective, it does include this type of program within its framework.

3. As far as the JET program is concerned it is too early to assess the success of the program as it has been operating for only a few weeks. (a) Not available, (b) 150, (c) not available. With regard to the Canada Manpower Industrial Training Program: (a) The program is in its second year of operation and the first evaluation has not yet been completed. (b) Number of workers trained in the DREE designated development area; i.e., the designated development area is all of Canada including the Yukon and Northwest Territories but excluding British Columbia and Alberta since these two provinces are not in DREE's designated area: 50,272. Number of workers trained in all of Canada: 61,389. (c) $841.

4. Yes. If the pilot phase of JET proves successful, it will be expanded to additional locations in October, 1977. Under the Employment Strategy announced on October 21, 1976 the total funding level of the Industrial Training Program will be expanded from $63,692 in 1976-77 to $70,146 in 1977-78.

SHAREHOLDING BY GOVERNMENT IN ENTERPRISES

Question No. 1,344—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

1. Is (a) DREE (b) the Department of Finance (c) the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce aware of measures in effect in Belgium, Finland, France, Ireland, the Netherlands, Sweden and the United Kingdom which permit shareholding or equity participation by government in enterprises in designated development areas?

2. Are the Departments aware that recommendations for such measures in Canada have been made by the Atlantic Development Council in its report Regional Development Incentives Program—Atlantic Region, where it states that "consideration should be given to the establishment within the incentives program of arrangements which would enable the government to take an equity position in new ventures"?

3. Are any such measures (a) now in effect in Canada (b) under study or contemplated for the future as encouragement to more balanced industrial development between Canada's regions and, if so, what are they?

[Mr. MacDonald (Egmont).]

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Regional Economic Expansion, Finance and Industry, Trade and Commerce as follows: 1. (a) DREE, through liaison arrangements with the Organization for Economic Co-Operation and Development and other contacts with individual nations, obtains information about programs in effect elsewhere which may have relevance for its activities, including measures such as those mentioned here. Any consideration of such measures for application in Canada would require an assessment of both their effectiveness in their own domestic environment and their potential applicability to the Canadian scene. (b) Yes. (c) The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is aware of measures in effect in the countries mentioned which permit shareholding or equity participation by government in enterprises in designated development areas.

2. Yes.

3. The Department of Finance does not administer programs directed specifically towards regional development and does not offer, nor is it presently studying, this type of regional development instrument. As embodied in the programs of DREE, Canada has its own particular set of regional instruments, suited to the Canadian context, which are viewed and modified as appropriate in the light of experience. The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce participates in equity financing under the General Adjustment Assistance Program and through the Federal Business Development Bank. (a) Although DREE does not operate programs in which it takes a direct equity position on behalf of the federal government, it does provide financial support to federal-provincial development corporations which have the authority, among other activities, to make such equity investments. An example is the Newfoundland and Labrador Development Corporation which at December 31, 1976, had an equity position in 23 companies doing business in that province. (b) Although DREE has no immediate plans to introduce measures of this kind, it maintains an on-going review of possible program initiatives in an effort to assess their potential effectiveness in the Canadian context and to develop new measures which will contribute to the goal of more balanced industrial development between Canada's regions.

ACCELERATED DEPRECIATION ON CAPITAL INVESTMENT

Question No. 1,345—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

Is (a) DREE (b) the Department of Finance aware of measures permitting accelerated depreciation for tax purposes on capital investment in designated development areas in 15 out of the 24 member nations of the OECD and, if so, are any such measures (i) now in effect in Canada (ii) under study or contemplated for the future as encouragement to more balanced industrial development between Canada's regions and, if so, what are they?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Regional Economic Expansion and Finance as follows: (a) DREE, through liaison arrangements with the Organization for Economic Co-Operation and Development and other contacts with individual nations obtains information about programs in effect elsewhere which may have relevance for its activities, including measures such as those mentioned here. Any consideration of such measures for application in Canada would require an assessment of both their effectiveness in their own domestic environment and their potential applicability to the Canadian scene. (i) No such measures are now in effect under DREE programs. The earlier Area Development Incentives Act did provide for accelerated capital cost allowances, but this provision was replaced by the more generous cash grants available under the Regional Development Incentives Act. (ii) Although DREE has no immediate plans to introduce measures of this kind, it maintains an on-going review of possible program initiatives in an effort to assess their potential effectiveness in the Canadian context and to develop new measures which will contribute to the goal of more balanced industrial development between Canada's regions. (b) Yes, the Department of Finance is aware of the accelerated depreciation measures for tax purposes in member OECD countries. Canada provides a two-year write-off for property included in Class 29. While this does not distinguish between various regions, it does provide incentives for new investment in manufacturing and processing machinery and equipment in all regions of Canada. As a matter of policy, the capital grants program, authorized by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion under the Regional Development Incentives Act, which has totalled $581 million since inception of the Act in 1969 has been considered as a more effective mechanism for stimulating regional capital investment.

INVESTMENT RESERVE FUNDS

Question No. 1,346—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

Is (a) DREE (b) the Department of Finance (c) the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce aware of measures in effect in Sweden which allow corporations to set aside investment reserve funds from their pre-tax profits for investment in designated development areas and, if so, are any such measures (i) now in effect in Canada (ii) under study or contemplated for the future as encouragement to more balanced industrial development between Canada's region and, if so, what are they?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Regional Economic Expansion, Finance and Industry, Trade and Commerce as follows: (a) DREE, through liaison arrangements with the Organization for Economic Co-Operation and Development and other contacts with individual nations, obtains information about programs in effect elsewhere which may have relevance for its activities, including measures such as those mentioned here. Any consideration of such measures for application in Canada would require an assessment of both their effectiveness in their own domestic environment and their potential applicability to the Canadian scene. (i) No such measures are in effect under DREE programs. (ii) Although DREE has no immediate plans to propose measures of this kind, it maintains an on-going review of possible program initiatives in an effort to assess their potential effectiveness in the Canadian context and to develop new measures which will contribute to the goal of more balanced industrial development between Canada's regions. (b) Yes. Swedish companies, economic societies and savings banks may allocate a portion of their pre-tax profits to an investment reserve. However, between 40 per cent and 46 per cent of the allocated amount must be deposited at the Swedish National Bank. These reserves are controlled by the Swedish Government, which directs their use. There are no such measures in effect in Canada, nor are any currently contemplated. As a matter of policy, the capital grants program, authorized by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion under the Regional Development Incentives Act, which has totalled $581 million since inception of the Act in 1969 has been considered as a more effective mechanism for stimulating regional capital investment. (c) Yes, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is aware of measures in effect in Sweden which allow corporations to set aside investment reserve funds from their pre-tax profits for investment in designated development areas. (i) No such measures are in effect under ITC programs. (ii) No such measures are contemplated at the present time.

EXPORTED GOODS, TAX EXEMPTION ON PROFITS

Question No. 1,347—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

Is (a) DREE (b) the Department of Finance aware of measures in effect in Ireland which exempt from taxation the profits on exported goods which are manufactured in designated development areas and, if so, are any such measures (i) now in effect in Canada (ii) under study or contemplated for the future as encouragement to more balanced industrial development between Canada's regions and, if so, what are they?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Regional Economic Expansion and Finance as follows: (a) See question No. 1,346 answered this day. (b) Yes. There is an abatement of the income tax and corporation profits tax otherwise payable by companies who manufacture in and export from the Republic of Ireland. This relief applies only to the profits earned by an increase in export sales over corresponding export sales in a standard period. No such measures currently exist or are contemplated in Canada.

FAVOURED STATUS IN PROCUREMENT POLICIES

Question No. 1,349—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

1. Is (a) DREE (b) the Department of Supply and Services aware of measures in effect in Greece, Switzerland and the United Kingdom which give favoured status in government procurement policies to firms in designated development regions?

2. Is (a) DREE (b) the Department of Supply and Services aware of measures in effect in Italy which require the government, public enterprises and enterprises with state participation to reserve 30 per cent of their supply contracts to enterprises in designated development areas?

3. Are any such measures referred to in Parts 1 and 2 (a) now in effect in Canada (b) under study or contemplated for the future as encouragement to more balanced industrial development between Canada's regions and, if so, what are they?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Regional Economic Expansion and Supply and Services as follows: 1 and 2. (a) DREE, through liaison arrangements with the Organization for Economic Co-Operation and Development and other contacts with individual nations, obtains information about programs in effect elsewhere which may have relevance for its activities, including measures such as those mentioned here.

1. (b) Greece, No. Switzerland, No. United Kingdom, Yes.

2. (b) Yes.

3. No such measures are in effect under DREE programs. The Department does, however, co-operate closely with the Department of Supply and Services in ensuring that slow-growth regions are able to benefit from government procurement activities.

LOANS AT SUBSIDIZED RATES TO INDUSTRIES

Question No. 1,350—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

Is (a) DREE (b) the Department of Finance aware that 14 of the 24 member nations of the OECD have enacted measures allowing loans at subsidized rates to industry in designated development areas and, if so, are any such measures (i) now in effect in Canada (ii) under study or contemplated for the future as encouragement to more balanced industrial development between Canada's regions and, if so, what are they?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Regional Economic Expansion and Finance as follows: (a) See question No. 1,346 answered this day. (b) The Department of Finance is aware of the existence of these measures in certain OECD member countries. The Department of Finance itself does not administer programs directed specifically towards regional development and does not offer, nor is it presently studying, this type of regional development instrument. As embodied in the programs of DREE, Canada has its own particular set of regional development instruments, suited to the Canadian context, which are reviewed and modified as appropriate in the light of experience.

RELIEF FROM STATE-GENERATED EMPLOYMENT COSTS

Question No. 1,351—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

Is (a) DREE (b) the Department of Finance aware that Greece and Italy offer relief to employers in designated development areas from state-generated employment costs such as social security contributions and, if so, are any such measures (i) now in effect in Canada (ii) under study or contemplated for the future as encouragement to more balanced industrial development between Canada's regions and, if so, what are they?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Regional Economic Expansion and Finance as follows: (a) See question No. 1,346 answered this day. (b) The Department of Finance is aware of the existence in Greece and Italy of these measures. The Department of Finance does not administer programs directed specifically towards regional development and does not offer, nor is it presently studying, this type of regional development instrument. As embodied in the programs of DREE, Canada has its own particular set of regional development instruments, suited to the Canadian context, which are reviewed and modified as appropriate in the light of experience.

[Mr. Goodale.]

FISCAL CONCESSIONS ON CERTAIN PROFITS

Question No. 1,352—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

1. Is (a) DREE (b) the Department of Finance aware that Finland, France, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Portugal, Spain, Switzerland and Turkey allow fiscal concessions on certain profits of enterprises in designated development areas?

2. Are the Departments aware that the Minister of Development for Nova Scotia stated at the October 1976 APEC Conference that "it may well be time for the Federal Government to consider new incentives to new companies establishing in the Maritimes—perhaps continuing income tax benefits to improve the cash flow in early years"?

3. Are any such measures (a) now in effect in Canada (b) under study or contemplated for the future as encouragement to more balanced industrial development between Canada's regions and, if so, what are they?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Regional Economic Expansion and Finance as follows: 1. (a) DREE, through liaison arrangements with the Organization for Economic Co-Operation and Development and other contacts with individual nations, obtains information about programs in effect elsewhere which may have relevance for its activities, including measures such as those mentioned here. Any consideration of such measures for application in Canada would require an assessment of both their effectiveness in their own domestic environment and their potential applicability to the Canadian scene. (b) Yes.

2. Yes.

3. In so far as Finance is concerned Canada provides a two-year write-off for property included in Class 29. While this does not distinguish between various regions, it does provide incentives for new investment in manufacturing and processing machinery and equipment in all regions of Canada. (a) No such measures are in effect under DREE programs. (b) Although DREE has no immediate plans to propose measures of this kind, it maintains an on-going review of possible program initiatives in an effort to assess their potential effectiveness in the Canadian context and to develop new measures which will contribute to the goal of more balanced industrial development between Canada's regions.

SHIPPING SUBSIDIES

Question No. 1,454—Mr. Clarke (Vancouver Quadra):

1. Has the Northland Navigation subsidy been discontinued and, if so, what measures does the government intend to take to improve ferry transportation on the west coast of British Columbia?

2. Is the estimated expenditure for subsidized shipping on the west coast $2,450,601 and, if so, what criteria were used by the government to decide allocations of ferry subsidies for 1976-77 amounting to $107,820,698 to the east coast?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): 1. The subsidy previously paid by the Canadian Transport Commission to Northland Navigation for operating certain services on the B.C. coast ceased on 31 October 1976. Officials of the Department of Transport are working closely with provincial transportation authorities to ensure necessary services are provided, with federal contributions, if any, being made in accordance with the Water Transport Assistance Policy.

2. While the figures quoted are not exactly the amounts expected to be provided to subsidized shipping services on each coast, they do indicate the order of expenditure in each area. It should be noted, however, that the payments for east coast services arise primarily from the support by the Federal Government of services rendered under the Terms of Union and Terms of Confederation with Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island respectively. The difference between the amounts paid on each coast reflects the different priority placed on shipping services by British Columbia at the time of signing its Confederation agreement.

DISPUTE—TILDEN RENT-A-CAR

Question No. 1,504—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Was the recent dispute between Tilden Rent-a-Car and the Department of Transport settled and, if so, on what terms and conditions?

2. What is the total amount of money payable to Tilden, with respect to legal fees and other matters, with the settlement of this dispute?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): 1. Yes, the dispute with Tilden has been resolved. It was agreed that the company would be given 4th ranking for counter and car parking space and that all counters at Winnipeg International Airport would be grouped in the same general area. Tilden agreed to withdraw their suit and waive all legal action in this matter.

2. Substantiated legal costs attributable to this matter up to a maximum of $5,000 are to be allowed.

LAND SURROUNDING WESTMINSTER HOSPITAL, LONDON, ONTARIO

Question No. 1,563—Mr. Marshall:

1. Has the land surrounding Westminster Hospital in London, Ontario, been declared surplus by the Department of Veterans Affairs?

2. What responsibility does the Treasury Board Advisory Committee on federal land management have in regard to the land surrounding the Hospital?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Veterans Affairs and Treasury Board as follows: 1. No.

2. In the event that the Westminster Hospital property, in London, Ontario, would be declared surplus, the Treasury Board Advisory Committee on Federal Land Management would ensure that all relevant interests and factors are taken into account in making a recommendation to the Treasury Board on a new use for the property.

Mr. Orlikow: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. On October 12, the day parliament opened, I put a series of 60 questions, beginning with No. 216, on the order paper. These were very specific questions asking for very significant information on the number of classified positions existing in each department in certain categories and the number of occupied positions in the same category for the year 1975. These questions have been on the order paper for five months, and I hope the parliamentary secretary can promise some action.

Mr. Goodale: Mr. Speaker, I would point out to the House and to the hon. member that I am aware of that series of questions. As the hon. member pointed out, he is seeking rather detailed and complicated information about job positions within the public service. We are making progress in collecting the information, and I anticipate it will not be much longer before it is available.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

AMENDMENTS TO IMPLEMENT CHANGES IN IMMIGRATION POLICY

The House resumed, from Thursday, March 10, consideration of the motion of Mr. Cullen that Bill C-24, respecting immigration to Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, last night I explained in some detail why we thought this act was defective. One of the main reasons was that it permitted nearly all the questions to be dealt with by subordinate legislation or by regulation. I want to deal with the principle outlined in section 5 of the act which asserts that no person other than a Canadian citizen or resident has a right to come into or remain in Canada. This is linked with section 14 which provides that if the immigration officer is satisfied that it would not be contrary to the act or regulations to grant admission, he may grant admission after imposing terms. I would call the attention of the House to the permissive word "may" which, taken with section 5, may indeed be the means of depriving the would-be applicant of rights. In the previous act, section 27, which otherwise corresponded exactly with section 14, used the word "shall" and thereby said that an immigration officer, satisfied that all the rules had been complied with, "shall" grant admission. The new bill says that he "may" grant admission.

Couple that with the general statement that no person other than a Canadian citizen or resident has the right to enter Canada and I say it is clearly erroneous to assert that no immigrant has any rights, since he will have rights until this new legislation passes. It is true that Canada as a sovereign nation has the right to exclude or accept whatever immigrants it chooses; but parliament has legislated, and where it has legislated it has conferred statutory rights, rights which indeed may be withdrawn but which are nonetheless real. The Supreme Court of Canada has frequently referred to these statutory rights. Therefore, clause 5 as presently set out in the bill is not only bad in principle but is erroneous in law. Nor is this merely an academic matter. Immigration officials and perhaps the courts may treat immigrants as if they had no rights. I find it strange that Canada, a country built on immigration, a country most of whose inhabitants came here as immigrants under unlimited right of entry, should seek to remove all such rights.

The repeal of provisions with regard to domicile is a backward step. A person living in Canada for five years acquired Canadian domicile and was, generally speaking, not subject to deportation. That is to be changed. It is true that the Citizenship Act has shortened the period of required residence before an application can be made for citizenship, and once one is a Canadian citizen one's status with respect to deportation changes entirely. But I remind the House that there is no absolute right to citizenship and there may be good and sufficient reason why some long-time residents of Canada do not wish to obtain citizenship. The effect of removing the concept of domicile from the act will be this: long-time residents of Canada who have established their homes, businesses and residence in Canada will have no assured protection against deportation on a wide number of grounds set out in the bill.

In the bill there are extremely broad and dangerous provisions with regard to admissibility and inadmissibility. For example, one is deemed to be inadmissible if there are reasonable grounds to suspect that one is likely to engage in criminal activities. How can one tell this? It is true that there is a note to the act which says that this provision will apply to those who, although never convicted, may perhaps be associated with organized crime. But the bill itself does not mention organized crime in this connection; there is no mention of it. It merely talks about people who are likely to engage in criminal activities. That is a matter of opinion. In whose mind will the opinion be? I presume it will be in the mind of immigration officials. Would-be immigrants may be suspected of such activities.

I say that a provision which penalizes a person because that person may be guilty of something, whereas he may be guilty of absolutely nothing, does not fit into our concepts of justice or into the rules of justice as we know them. Indeed, such language suggests guilt by association. If we are going to exclude people from entry, we should at least make sure they have committed some crime or offence which renders them not suitable for admission to Canada.

Clause 19(1)(f) provides that a person cannot enter Canada if there are reasonable grounds to believe that it is likely such person will engage in or instigate the subversion by force of any government while in Canada. The language of the law used to talk about subverting any democratic government. Now it talks about subverting any government: any government now falls within the ban. Subparagraph (g) on page 14 of the bill extends the prohibition to those classes of persons likely to engage in acts of violence which may endanger the lives or safety of persons or who are associated with an organization that is likely to engage in such acts of violence. It is possible that a person might be a member of an organization but not be aware of all its activities; they may not know that in some parts of the world it is involved in acts of violence and therefore would be entirely free from any taint of violence or violent action. If we are introducing the principle of guilt by association and banning such people, or not allowing them to enter Canada, I say that we are introducing a novel and dangerous doctrine.

I come now to clause 39 which provides that a certificate signed by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) and the Solicitor General (Mr. Fox) is in itself proof of the matter stated in the certificate. Thus, the minister and the Solicitor General are given the ability, without trial, to determine if a person is to be in one of the prohibited classes. It is true that there is power to report to a special advisory board, but it is notable that this language seems to be permissive rather than obligatory. This sounds to me very much like the state of siege mentality which in many countries has resulted in the imposition of repression. I suggest that provision deprives people of their basic rights. No one, myself included, would pretend that Canada is on the verge of reaching the state of repression in respect of security matters which has deprived many peoples throughout the world of their fundamental human rights. I say that we should not start down that path by conferring on the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General, however admirable we think they may be, such vast and ill-defined powers.

At this stage I should like to deal with some parts of the new legislation which I think deserve commendation and should be incorporated in the final version of the bill. I believe that the spelling out of objectives in clause 3 is a good idea. That clause refers to facilitating the reunion of Canadian citizens with close relatives from abroad. I think that ought to be one of our fundamental objectives. It is said in the bill that any person who seeks admission to Canada is subject to standards of admission which do not discriminate on grounds of race, ethnic origin, colour, religion or sex. It is true that much remains to be done to give greater meaning to those words. One could give illustrations; unfortunately I do not have time to do so at present. However, it is useful to have the policy of non-discrimination outlined in the bill.

It is also stated that one of the objectives of immigration is to fulfil Canada's obligations with respect to refugees and to uphold its humanitarian tradition with respect to the displaced and persecuted. With those excellent sentiments we heartily concur. Indeed, I want to be sure that the statute law which will give effect to those sentiments will enable people in that position to come to Canada. I wish some way could be found to link some of the new objectives with specific provisions to enable their enforcement. It is all very well to include excellent objectives in the bill, but unless those objectives are supported with specific, clear legislation and machinery for enforcement they will not mean much.

Clause 109 of the new legislation is most important. It provides for consultation and agreement with the provinces on the settlement of immigrants in Canada. It seems to me that the final authority in matters of immigration, if we are to preserve the federal structure, should be the federal parliament. However, there is a very great need for far closer consultation with the provinces so that immigration policies may be in line with the planning and cultural needs of the provinces of Canada.

• (1230)

I believe an improvement to the act is that instead of having special inquiry officers decide on the making of deportation orders, a new class of adjudicator will be appointed. Therefore, we will not have in the future the strange spectacle of an immigration officer preparing and presenting the case against a would-be immigrant and then going around the table and deciding the case, sometimes against the immigrant. There is an old saying that no person should be a judge of his own case. I hope every effort will be made to separate the function of the adjudicators from that of their immigration officials. They should be judicially removed from the departmental administration.

There have been improvements with regard to the definitions. The previous act contained antiquated and unworkable language with regard to health and mental illness as a ground for exclusion. This has been altered. Although, as I mentioned, we question leaving the judgment to a medical officer, this represents a very real, considerable and humane improvement in the law. Another improvement is that we have got rid of the term "commits a crime involving moral turpitude" as a ground for inadmissibility. No two persons I have ever met have agreed on what are crimes involving moral turpitude. One person's moral turpitude is another person's pleasant privilege.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brewin: I am glad that that phrase, which I think we borrowed from the United States, is to be eliminated from the act. I am not at all happy about the provisions in the act as they relate to appeals. At this stage, a right of appeal to the Immigration Appeal Board should be granted in all cases for deportation where removal orders are made or people are refused admission. I am well aware, of course, that there was a time when we had a great backlog of cases, but the classes of those admitted have been restricted. Visitors cannot apply in Canada. There is no danger of a repetition of the bottlenecks and backlogs, and the right of appeal should be clear and simple instead of involving, as it does in the present act, a whole series of semi-intelligible phrases.

We welcome the reference to refugees. We think the provisions in the act leave much to be desired. We believe this process should be simplified and that there should be a refugee claims board to which cases of refugee status should be referred. I have not found the present methods of dealing with the matter by the immigration appeal board and the advisory board satisfactory in cases of refugees. Some members of the board seem to have very little concept of what is going on in other parts of the world. We suggest that the refugee appeal claims board should contain a senior representative of the Immigration Department, a senior representative of the Department of External Affairs and a representative of the ethnic groups and of the churches which have taken great interest not only in the admission of refugees but their cases after they have arrived here.

Let us state with absolute clarity that applicants with refugee status still have an open and full hearing. Refugees should be treated as ordinary immigrants and not be required to make their cases on economic grounds. If they are treated exactly the same as other applicants, they get no special recognition of their status as refugees. That means people fleeing from political persecution, and often very great danger, from the countries in which they live and the countries to which they belong. It may be reasonable to say there should be some plan to look after refugees in Canada, either by relatives or ethnic groups, but the normal points system and the fact they should have to establish themselves successfully in Canada should not be required.

Where there are a large number of refugees such as the Chileans and those in Argentina, Canada should be prepared to send special teams to deal quickly with those cases. This worked well in the case of the Hungarians, the Ugandans and other refugees to Canada and it is working well in other countries to get people from Chile. From the experience of some of us who travelled recently in the Argentine, it is badly needed now. I regret the fact that the minister preferred to accept the advice of certain officials—and I believe they were rather junior officials—handling the present flow of immigrants and ignored the pleas of his colleagues in three of the major parties who carefully studied the matter and reported their views to him.

In conclusion, the question of immigration is closely connected with economic problems in Canada. It is clear that if we are to maintain our present level of population—and this would indeed seem reasonable in a country of Canada's resources—we will have to provide for a regular flow of immigrants. We do not recommend an open door policy, nor do we recommend a closed door policy. We propose a moderate assessment with reasonable numbers to be admitted which would be true to Canada's past as a country built by immigrants.

We are well aware that where there are high levels of unemployment and serious economic stagnation, immigrants are often blamed and demands arise for their exclusion. The answer to that is not a rigid exclusion of immigrants but the building of an expanded economy in Canada. We are a nation in an interdependent world. Our reaction to the problems of immigration will be an important test of our acceptance of this fact.

I have made it clear that we are disappointed with this legislation, particularly because of its threat to the principles of civil liberties. Perhaps, even more so, because of the wholesale acceptance of regulations and subordinate legislation as the primary means of making the laws in this field, a means that I explained yesterday is totally unsatisfactory. We will do our best to get the act amended in committee in the way we think makes sense. We will have to consider, and are considering very carefully, whether it would be consistent for us to vote for a bill which conceals as much as it discloses.

Mr. Art Lee (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, it is with a deep sense of appreciation of the progress that Canada has made in the creation of a just and humanitarian immigration policy that I rise today to take part in this debate. I come from immigrant stock. With the exception of only two members of this House, we are all the sons and daughters of immigrant forefathers, although some of us are aware that our ancestors had a more difficult time than others in gaining entry to Canada. It is because of that awareness of history that I wish to applaud the government for rejecting the recommendation of both the green paper and the special joint committee that the nominated category be eliminated. By that rejection, the principle of family reunification is maintained in this bill.

I noted with interest the remarks of the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) who spoke on behalf of his party. I have read his comments and have come to the unavoidable conclusion that he and his party do not give much importance to the principle of family reunification. He is against grandparents of any age sponsored by a Canadian citizen being included in the family class and the retention of the nominated category. His rationale for rejection of the nominated category is that they congregate in the urban areas but independents do not. I am at a loss to understand this reasoning. Immigrants and Canadians go where the jobs are, and that is why this government is placing much more emphasis on its stated policies of decentralization and regional economic expansion. As a Canadian of Chinese descent who is conscious of the story of Chinese immigration to this country, I know how important the principle of family reunification has been to so many families.

● (1240)

Before I address the specifics of this Bill I would ask your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, in allowing me to rehearse for this House some of the facts of that story which may be of interest particularly to those hon. members who are not fully conversant with the history of the west. Following confederation, Canada's immigration policy was that of the open door. Chinese workers were recruited in large numbers to work on the railroad that was to bind this nation together. My greatgrandfather was one of those nation builders. But by 1885, while a promotional campaign was being carried out in Britain, and to a lesser extent in other European countries, to lure settlers to Canada with subsidized transportation and cheap land, the government brought down an act to restrict and regulate Chinese immigration. The act imposed a head tax of $50 on each Chinese immigrant. Not very many Chinese peasants could afford that. A further restriction was that no vessel was allowed to carry more than one Chinese immigrant for each 50 tons of its tonnage.

In the early years of this century, the immigration boom was on and promotion of immigration to Canada among farmers in Britain, France, and the United States was a major concern of the government. When not enough response was seen to be coming from northwestern Europe, the campaign to woo farmers from their own countries to ours moved into southern and eastern Europe. In 1900, however, a Chinese farmer wanting to emigrate to Canada would have found that the head tax had been doubled to $100: and to be sure of its effectiveness the tax was raised in 1903 to $500, at which level it remained, for the next 20 years. Similar restrictions were contemplated for the Japanese, but were prevented by diplomatic considerations.

It is now only 70 years—the span of one lifetime—since the 1907 anti-Asiatic race riots in Vancouver. Although the head tax on Chinese immigrants had drastically curbed the number of Chinese emigrating to Canada further action was deemed necessary to discourage the influx of other Asians. So an order in council disallowed the admission of any Asian immigrants who did not come to Canada "by direct and continuous journey" from their country of origin. A further regulation required that no Asian immigrant could land on Canadian soil without $200 in his pocket. This provision did not apply to Chinese or Japanese immigrants. The former were deemed to be sufficiently deterred by the $500 head tax, and the latter were to be limited in their numbers entering Canada by their own government. One could sum up the policy of this period and the ensuing 40 years as a closed door to any nationalities which it was felt would not be easily assimilated into the dominant culture.

The restrictions eased slightly in 1923, when regulations on Asian immigrants were changed to allow entry of farmers, domestic servants and the wives and minor children of residents of Canada provided they carried $250 in landing money. It was also provisional on there being no contrary legislation. This meant that Japanese immigration was still regulated by an agreement between the Canadian and Japanese governments. Chinese immigration was controlled by the Chinese immigration act passed that same year. This act, which remained in force until 1946, limited Chinese immigration into Canada to the following categories: diplomats and their families and staff; children born in Canada of Chinese parents who had left the country to receive their education; merchants, defined as those with $2,500 invested in a business in which they had been engaged for three years and who intended to invest the same amount in a Canadian business; and students.

Those who gained entry under these regulations could not change their status. They could be deported if they engaged in manual labour. They could not land at any other port than Vancouver or Victoria. Any transportation company which carried an immigrant subsequently denied entry had to re-transport that person and pay for his maintenance costs at immigration stations. A vessel could bring to Canada only one Chinese immigrant for every 250 tons of its tonnage.

When these new regulations were in place, the $500 head tax was dropped as no longer necessary. One student of the history of Chinese immigration to Canada, Dr. Wallace Chung, has estimated that if the government were to repay the $26,500,000 taken under the head tax law, the debt—having accrued at a modest interest rate of 4 per cent per annum, compounded—would now be in the neighbourhood of $159,-000,000. As a Canadian of Chinese ancestry, I think I can say that the sons and daughters of those who paid the tax would today count it a fair price for the benefits of being members of our society.

The Chinese immigration act was repealed in 1947 and Chinese became eligible for sponsored immigration in the same way as other Asians. The continuous journey regulation in effect since 1908 was also dropped. But through the 1950s, despite an economic boom that resulted in relaxation of many laws, discriminatory regulations against Asians continued to be enforced. In 1951, Canada signed agreements with India, Pakistan and Ceylon to admit only a limited number of their citizens over and above those eligible under the regulations governing Asiatics. In 1957, when the economic boom died, the rules governing occupational criteria were tightened. At the same time, however, there was a loosening of some regulations governing Asian immigrants to permit citizens of Canada to sponsor their spouses, minor children and elderly parents.

It was not until 1962 that unsponsored immigrants from all over the world became admissible under the same criteria, so that finally Asians, Africans, Latin Americans, and Caribbean peoples could gain admittance as unsponsored immigrants. The effect of this opening of the door was not felt for some years since preference went to professionals, skilled and technical workers. But all residents could now sponsor spouses, parents, grandparents, fiancés and unmarried children. Asian and African nationalities thus gained several categories under which their loved ones could be sponsored that had always been denied them before.

In 1967, the principle of non-discrimination on the basis of race or nationality was explicitly affirmed in immigration regulations for all classes of immigrants. That principle is reaffirmed in this bill, and the government's commitment to that principle and to the principle of reuniting separated families is illustrated by the agreement between Canada and the People's Republic of China on family reunification which was obtained by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). For that, the Prime Minister will have the gratitude of many Canadians of Chinese ancestry.

Mr. Speaker, I prefaced my remarks on this bill with a brief history of Chinese and Asian immigration to Canada because I wanted to illustrate how far we have come in Canada in buttressing and developing the rights of all peoples in a nation founded on respect for the diversity of the cultures of mankind. A lot of the credit must go to those Chinese and other Asian immigrants who were pioneers in more than one sense of the word. I know that many of my ancestors met hardships in making their lives in Canada, often because of a misunderstanding of their way of life. By perseverance and patience, and by the strength they could draw from their culture, they won their right to full participation in Canadian society.

The three doctors of Chinese origin practicing in Vancouver in 1940 had become 76 practitioners by 1974. The one lawyer and one dentist had become 29 lawyers and 32 dentists. In 1940 there were no Chinese accountants or architects in the city; but by 1974 there were 18 accountants and nine architects of Chinese origin. Let no one imagine that this growth was an easy process. At the same time as they were growing up with the country, the country was growing up with them. The days of the "yellow peril" are not only gone; they are now unthinkable within the enlightened Canadian context. Canada can now address itself to the consideration of an over-all immigration policy without calling up the spectre of racism or national chauvinism. I think we have all come a long way, and we have come that way together.

I had the honour to serve as a member of the special joint committee which took the debate on the government's green paper out to the country at large. I am pleased that the government has seen fit to accept the majority of the committee's recommendations. I remember at the time that the committee was formed that some cynics—and some of them were fellow members on the committee—decried the travelling hearings as a public relations circus. Our recommendations would count for nothing, these cynics said, because the government had already made up its mind what would be in this bill we are now considering. We were nothing but window dressing, they said. The majority of our recommendations are now proposed as law. That's some window dressing! I see that as a reaffirmation of the worth of the parliamentary committee system and as proof of the government's commitment to its employment as a means of making the processes of government both accessible and responsive to the people. I therefore congratulate the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) and his predecessor, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras), for the hard work and dedication they have demonstrated in responding to the committee's efforts with the formulation of this important piece of legislation.

As I said at the outset, almost all of us are of immigrant ancestry. We are all aware that this country owes its existence to the willingness of immigrants from all over the world to take a chance on Canada. It was the immigrants who opened the west, who pushed back the frontiers and who formed the agricultural basis for Canadian society after confederation. When the country developed into a modern industrial society, immigrant workers made the transition possible.

Today we have to consider the role of the immigrant in our new society. The first fact that we must acknowledge is that Canada is not facing a population problem. Nor are we facing an immigration problem, as some mini-demagogues might suggest. We are facing, instead, a problem of demographics as more and more of our people leave the rural areas for the large cities. This is perhaps one of the most important facts of modern Canadian life, and its future ramifications will be immense. By the end of this century—only 23 years now—nine out of ten Canadians will live in the cities. We do not have a population policy to deal with the stresses and strains that this mass exodus from the farms will have upon society. I hope that this legislation may lay the groundwork for developing such a policy.

The determination of Canada's immigration policy must eventually intermix with the establishment of a comprehensive population policy which will address the country's demographic needs. We are now experiencing zero population growth, so that the role of immigration in our society takes on a new importance. I believe the economic considerations are not paramount in determining our optimum population, since the economy is self-regulating—we are all producers and consumers. With co-operation from all levels of government, particularly the federal government, the economy could be managed so that we could use immigration to offset a static or even a declining population figure. There is little evidence that immigration causes or exacerbates inflation or unemployment, or adversely affects our balance of payments situation or creates regional disparities; and there is no reason to believe that zero population growth is necessary to maintain our accustomed standard of living.

We can, in fact, manage our economy in order to ensure that we do not lose our equilibrium. We must have an appropriate savings rate, relevant capital output ratio, a sufficient rate of capital accumulation, and adequate technological enhancement.

One major area with which the green paper did not deal, and which should be of fundamental concern to a consideration of population policy on the large scale, is the effect of the present zero population growth on my generation when it grows old and grey. The post-war baby boom—of which I and a great many more Canadians are the result—has not produced a baby boom of its own. The base of the population pyramid is therefore no longer widening. That means a downturn in eventual capital investment, and no expanding work force to support me and my contemporaries when we reach pensionable age. A recent estimate predicted that whereas today about one person is on pension for every five in the work force, by 2020 that ratio will have changed to one person on pension for every three in the work force.

Immigration can have a determining effect on that prediction since the majority of newcomers to Canada are highly skilled and young. This was pointed out as one of the shortcomings of the green paper by Dr. André Raynauld, former director of the Economic Council of Canada, when he appeared before the special joint committee. I agree with Dr. Raynauld that the government should certainly take this consideration into account when determining the levels of immigration.

May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

[Mr. Lee.]

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask for the unanimous consent of the House to withdraw Bill C-228, a private member's bill which, as you know, I can no longer put forward.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it agreed that Bill C-228, in the name of the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Guay), shall be withdrawn?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It is so ordered.

Mr. Lee: Mr. Speaker, before our noon adjournment I was discussing the importance of the relevance of immigration in today's context. There are significant non-economic factors to be considered, and the green paper places these issues squarely before us. Our immigration policy must be shaped by our over-all national aspirations, as well as by more narrow economic considerations. In the old days, immigration filled the west because this is where the land was for the taking. Today, immigrants go to the high-growth provinces—Ontario, British Columbia, and Alberta—because that is where the jobs are. Some people say this undermines national unity and they want immigrants to be controlled in their movements within Canada.

The ramifications of that kind of control on freedom of movement fill me with a sense of foreboding. What we need, instead, is decentralization of our industry, which I believe would not only do a great deal to ease friction over immigration but would be of great value to the economic health of confederation and thus to all aspects of our national life.

There is the question of Canadian nationalism. Do we need a larger population to assert our independence from the influence of the United States? There may be some truth to this argument, but I believe that Canada is certainly large enough to pursue its national goals. Our economy has undergone a profound structural change, according to some authorities, so that we are no longer dependent on the American industrial economic core and all the markets, capital, technological and other factors which this implies. Certainly, we have recently demonstrated a sense of renewed national spirit in many cultural and social spheres even without a rapidly expanding population.

This bill would enhance the role of the provinces in national immigration policy and thus ensure that the needs of all parts of the country are properly met. Each year the minister will consult with the provinces over government forecasts of the number of immigrants to be admitted. I am disappointed, however, that the government will not submit its forecasts to the scrutiny of the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration. I strongly urge the government to reconsider putting its forecasts under the committee's review. Too often the special joint committee heard the voicing of mistrust of the Department of Manpower and Immigration because of allegations that officials abused their powers by setting internal levels of immigration based on race. That mistrust could be countered by the government's willingness to open itself to scrutiny by the standing committee so as to demonstrate to Canadians and prospective immigrants that our immigration policy is non-discriminatory, just and equitable.

Of equal concern to me is the overdependence upon regulation in this legislation. Decisions which are not subject to full public debate will always be subject to suspicion and mistrust. Immigration policy inherently demands openness, and that is why I strongly urge the government to lessen its dependence on legislation by regulation.

There is also some mistrust over the proposed setting of levels of immigration. To some, that means quotas. I can assure those people that that is not the intention of the government in controlling and managing immigration. In establishing annual or periodic forecasts, the commitment of the legislation to non-discrimination—to "first come, first served"—must be observed. Once established, a level of immigration—which is an order of magnitude or target figure—may be overshot or undershot. It will have no reference to specific countries or races. However, I urge the government to establish a more equal distribution of immigration posts abroad.

Some people seem to feel that by setting levels of immigration the government is lending credence to those who want to pin the blame on immigrants for all our social problems. I am sure that most hon. members of this House have heard the erroneous view that immigrants crowd our cities, cause housing shortages, steal jobs from Canadian citizens and abuse welfare provisions. There is no evidence for this kind of racist error. Immigrants are only a small part of the tremendous influx into the cities which is straining some aspects of our social fabric, a fabric which we know developed out of a Canadian society which no longer exists as the Canada of the 1970s. Of course immigrants are part of the problem, but we are all a part of the problem. As the special joint committee said:

> —immigrants should not be blamed for problems they have done little to cause, although they may have compounded them. Canadians worried about the quality of life in the cities should look elsewhere than to sharply reduced immigration for a solution to the problems of city living.

With regard to the false idea that immigrants have a disproportionate impact on social services such as welfare and health care, the committee heard no evidence to back up this popular fallacy. In fact, the impression was that immigrant use of such services is less than the national average since they come from cultures where these functions are traditionally within the realm of family responsibility. In addition, many immigrants come from cultures which have taught them to be too proud and independent to accept aid which they see as charity. Nor is there any evidence to support the notion that immigrants do not participate as actively as long-time residents in the work force. I am at a loss to square this idea with the equally prevalent and equally false assertion that immigrants take jobs from Canadians.

Some submissions to the committee alleged that immigrants, especially non-whites, contribute disproportionately to the crime rate. This in fact turns out to be true, but not in the way intended. A report prepared for the Department of the Solicitor General in 1974 showed that the crime rate for immigrants was approximately one half that for native-born Canadians. The inference one is tempted to draw from that statistic is that more immigrants could mean less crime, but I leave that to the "pop" sociologists. Moreover, it seems to me that those who argue that by setting levels of immigration the government is lending credence to those who want to pin the blame on immigrants for all our social problems, are playing with numbers. How is it a level of 150,000 immigrants is discriminatory, but a level of 400,000 is not?

The bill provides for three admissible categories: the family class, refugees and other applicants. The family class corresponds to the current sponsored category, but it will be expanded to include parents and grandparents of any age sponsored by a Canadian citizen. Under previous legislation parents and grandparents had to be over 60 or, if under 60, incapable of employment. The refugee class is, for the first time in Canadian law, defined according to the UN convention and specific provision is made for the admission of refugees. The bill also provides authority to establish when necessary, for humanitarian reasons, special admissible classes for people who are not refugees within the convention definition. The third category, "other applicants", is made up of immigrants who are selected on the basis of a points system which takes into account factors such as occupation, education, etc. "Other applicants" shall be independent and nominated applicants.

One category of the 1952 act which is now outmoded is the "inadmissible" category. The definition of those whose entry is prohibited has therefore been revised. Provisions such as the absolute bar against epileptics are removed. Instead of retaining a long list of health conditions governing admission, the new provisions allow for individuals to be judged on their total health profile. We have added provisions to meet the threat posed by terrorists and those associated with organized crime. Changes in the inquiry system to provide adjudicators, coupled with the new concepts of exclusion orders and departure notices, will ensure fair hearings.

In conclusion, as a Canadian whose immigrant ancestors experienced hardship because of an immigration policy based on discrimination, I am pleased that the government has brought before this House a bill which enshrines the principle of non-discrimination as a basic objective of Canadian immigration policy. As a member of the special joint committee which conducted hearings from coast to coast on the issues raised in the government's green paper, I am gratified to see the majority of the committee's recommendations accepted by the government.

I urge the government to give greater consideration to the formulation of an over-all population policy for Canada, and specifically I ask the government to consider a greater involvement of the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration in the setting of forecasts under this legislation.

I urge all hon. members of this House and all englightened Canadians to continue their efforts to dispel the erroneous notions which some Canadians still retain about those who have chosen Canada as the place in which to fulfil their dreams of a better life.

As I said at the beginning, we are all newcomers to this country, but if immigrants can produce a nation like Canada, and if immigrants can become a great people like the Canadian people, we have little to fear for the future.

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to open my remarks by saying that it is difficult for me to believe that what we find in Bill C-24 is the best this government can come up with in the way of immigration policy. Our immigration policies have been under study for a number of years. The joint committee on immigration received scores of briefs on the subject, and it also received tens of thousands of words of testimony on immigration problems and policy from a wide range of interested parties. Many members provided excellent input on what we feel should be the direction of Canada's immigration policy. Therefore, I am disappointed and disheartened to find that we are no closer to a solution to our immigration problems than we were before those lengthy studies and hearings. In fact, if Bill C-24 passes and becomes our new immigration policy, we will be more confused about this issue than ever before. The bill before us does not lend itself to reasonable and rational debate. In fact, there are so many imponderables and unanswered questions that it defies debate. But we must try.

We were led to believe that Bill C-24 would indicate the direction that an immigration policy in Canada should follow. Instead, we are more in the dark than we have ever been. We were promised guidelines so that everyone would be able to understand it and follow it. Instead, we have a mish-mash, a patchwork quilt of confusing and conflicting policies.

The main problem with Bill C-24 is that it contains too many gaps, too many unanswered questions. Like most legislation tabled by this government, we are asked to approve the skeleton of a bill and allow ministers and bureaucrats to fill in the blanks later. For instance, just to name a few examples, we find that clause 115 begins with the words, "The governor in council may make regulations", followed by 24 subclauses for which regulations await the pleasure of the governor in council. Clause 116 begins with the words, "The minister may make regulations", followed by 12 subsections in which, in this case, we assume the minister will make the regulations at his pleasure. Clause 117 follows along the same lines, allowing the minister to establish the pertinent forms for purposes of administering this act.

Mr. Speaker, the regulations alluded to in those clauses are just the things that we should be debating. We in the official opposition have been protesting against these tactics for several years. We have been pointing out to this government that this is not the way parliament is supposed to operate. No government should expect this House to approve the principle of a legislative package and leave the government free to fill in the blanks later. It is not the principle of immigration policy that we are here to debate and approve; it is the specifics of immigration policy itself that we are expected to debate. The specifics are lacking, and I strongly resent being put into this position.

Mr. Speaker, we in the Official Opposition want to know, now, how the points system of assessing immigrants is going to work. We do not want this in general terms; we want to know exactly how it is going to work. It is obvious that we cannot approve or disapprove a policy when neither the government nor the opposition knows how the policy will work. We want to know exactly what powers will be delegated by the minister under the new policy, and we want to know exactly the level of public servants to whom the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) will be allowed to delegate that authority and power. This is a potentially dangerous situation and we do not want that degree of authority vested in public servants below the level of deputy minister.

In a federal system, immigration must be a federal matter. While repudiating the view that each province should have its own immigration policy, it is imperative that the provinces be consulted. Immigration to Canada affects all Canadians and no one province should have special status in respect to admitting immigrants. Once immigrants reach Canada they are free to travel and settle in any area, and thus the province or provinces which receive most immigrants should have more input into policy. At present, Ontario receives the greatest number of immigrants and the large urban centres such as Toronto, Montreal and Vancouver become the eventual points of settlement. Consultation with the large urban areas is also advisable as they have to contend with the problems that result.

Traditionally, the spread of population in Canada has been a natural development. As our frontier has crept westward, jumping over the Canadian shield, it has taken with it the traditions and social customs of our eastern settlements. Thus, the traditional way of life and respect for law and order tempered the Canadian frontier and produced a less volatile civilization than in the American west, for example. This traditional and systematic development has continued. Instilled in all Canadians is an admiration for our traditions and law centred society. Today, however, there is an increasing concern that we are losing, to some extent, the way of life that made our country great in the past.

Perhaps one of many reasons for this change in outlook has been the influence of some immigrants whose lifestyle is often foreign to that which has been traditionally Canadian. Multiculturalism is all right in its place, but individuals who come to settle in our great country must become Canadians. The American experience has often been called a melting pot. We in this country, with our often garbled approach, might properly be termed a tossed salad. The contributions of various ethnic groups have enriched the Canadian heritage.

In the past, the Liberal government seems to have used immigration policy as a political tool. Canada is greater than the sum of its diverse parts, and in our efforts to formulate a coherent immigration policy we must bear this in mind. There is the myth that has to be exploded with regard to Canada's capacity for accepting an unlimited number of immigrants. Canada has an area of 3½ million square miles, and a population of 23 million people. The Northwest Territories alone is an area of 1.3 million square miles and has a population of less than 50,000 people. Some countries assume that we are able to accommodate a few million immigrants comfortably, but there is more to this than appears on the surface. There are aspects to this that are not covered in the guidebooks.

At least two-thirds of the land mass of Canada is taken up with ice and snow, mountains, tundra, rivers and lakes and other natural restrictions on human habitation. It is true that more people can be accommodated in the far north than are at present living there, but there are few people who could survive in the north, and fewer still who would want to try it. In Canada, as in other countries, immigrants tend to settle in the larger urban areas, most of them in the cities that at the same time offer the best climate.

In light of the present energy crisis, not only in Canada but around the world, we must be more aware now than ever before of the problems and expense of living in the colder parts of our country. The plain fact is that the energy crisis has changed our whole outlook as far as concerns moving large numbers of people into our Canadian northland. No longer is this possibility a simple solution for relieving the congestion of our cities. One-third of the people in Canada at present live in the three cities of Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver. In every case those cities are experiencing serious growth problems, but the growth continues. We have problems with unemployment, pollution, crime and all the other problems that come from overcrowding of cities. In addition, we are experiencing the same after-effects of overcrowding which affect urban centres all over the world.

Cities are established generally where they can grow, and that means they should have access to water, jobs, transportation and good agricultural areas. If a city is close to sources of good it will be able to provide easily for its own needs; it will be able to generate jobs in the fields of food distribution, processing and marketing. Unfortunately, as the city grows the agricultural lands around it disappear. People have to go further afield to find their food, and therefore it gets more expensive. In the meantime, the demand for the same food from other areas places demands on available supplies, and we have found that this can result in undesirable situations. Assured of a ready market for their goods, suppliers will put up their prices. We have also found that some suppliers will hold back supplies, create artificial shortages and put their prices up still higher.

Major airports account for more land lost to agricultural production and industrial use. Large airports take up thousands of acres of land, and expansion programs take up still more. I think we can see, Mr. Speaker, that the relatively small percentage of the livable land space in Canada dwindles almost by the minute. This is not really new to us: we have known for many years that available land in the part of Canada considered generally as livable is fast disappearing. These things I have mentioned must be considered when we are formulating immigration policy. Plain common sense tells us that we have an obligation to consider the welfare and happiness of the people already living here.

We must take a close look at our own resources and measure them against the needs of our people. At present we have about one million people in Canada looking for jobs. Many of them have given up any hope of finding meaningful employment. If we cannot do better than that for our own people, we are holding out false hopes to untrained and undertrained people in other countries by representing Canada as the land of golden opportunity. Mainly for that reason, Mr. Speaker, I believe we are doing both ourselves and prospective immigrants a disservice if we lower the standards we expect people who want to live permanently in Canada to meet. If opportunities do not exist in Canada for people who cannot make it in their own countries, we have the responsibility to be frank and honest not only with them but with ourselves.

I do not know of another country which has an open door policy today. I do not know of another country which allows the wholesale immigration of unskilled people. That policy belonged to the past century, when North America was sparsely populated, when we had room for people and needed new skills and pools of unskilled labour. These conditions no longer apply either to Canada or the United States.

We must consider the aspect of foreign aid and our obligation to assist developing nations to look after their own people. In past years, before we tightened our immigration policy with regard to applications for landed immigrant status from within the country, we were training people from developing nations to go back home and assist their own people. Instead of sending them home, we allowed many of them to stay here as landed immigrants. Even today we are accepting people as immigrants who have been trained in their own countries with foreign aid funds, and this works against both the letter and the spirit of our foreign aid program.

We have an obligation to avoid draining the trained and skilled people from developing nations. Part of our foreign aid program should be directed toward enhancing the attractiveness of one's own country, instead of holding up Canada as a more desirable country than one's own native land. We are not doing anyone any favour by continuing that kind of immigration policy. The plain fact is that we do not need those people, and their own countries do need them. In the past we followed a policy of attracting skilled people to immigrate. Because of this policy, many of those left behind in their countries were uneducated, unskilled, often living in abject poverty, whereas those who could and should have helped to improve the lot of their fellow countrymen left, looking for greener pastures.

Canada cannot attempt to solve all the world's population problems by accepting an unlimited number of immigrants. During March, April and May of 1975 the Canadian Association of Independent Businessmen polled their members for their views on immigration policy for Canada. Of those, 62 per cent who cast votes in the poll opposed a policy of high growth for Canada, while only 34 per cent opted for high growth. Those opposed cited congestion in metropolitan centres, housing shortages, lack of job opportunities and the further destruction of arable farm lands.

Surprisingly, there was a lot of support for the policy of telling new immigrants where they would be allowed to settle. Seventy per cent of those polled stated that there should be some degree of control over where immigrants could live, while 27 per cent expressed the view that there should not be any restrictions. The vast majority of those polled expressed the resounding view that Canadian citizenship is a privilege to be earned. It is a strange phenomenon that the federal government alone appears to take Canadian citizenship lightly.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I must say that I am concerned about the way we are being compelled to debate immigration policy for Canada. Unless the government is willing to fill in a lot of gaps in this bill, and unless they are willing to accept amendments, we are going to end up with a real nightmare immigration policy. We are being asked to debate and approve a bill that indicates how the policy might work. We need a bill with specifics, a bill that indicates how it is going to work. No other approach can resolve this important matter.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles-Eugène Dionne (Kamouraska): Mr. Speaker, like most pieces of legislation the bill now before us includes ramifications that gave rise to a number of comments. I submit that when discussing a bill of this kind bringing improvements in the area of immigrant "accommodation", we should never lose sight of a basic fact, which is that economic conditions in this country must dictate the possibility of accepting immigrants. We must first ensure that Canadians themselves are certain of a decent living in each and every of our provinces. I have heard it said that by increasing population through immigration, taxes could be levied on a greater number of citizens and tax revenues could rise. This in my view is a preposterous assumption.

● (1440)

It might be better to improve the standard of living for all Canadians and then we could think of increasing the population through immigration. I think this must be the determining factor for immigration purposes.

Earlier I heard someone speaking of unemployment rates. We now have an unemployment rate ranging in some areas between 25 per cent, 30 per cent and even 40 per cent. We must then study the procedure used to accept immigrants. There are two aspects to take into account: first, those who would not be happy in Canada because they would not be able to earn a decent living; it could be prejudicial to some residents looking for nonexisting jobs, particularly in this critical period of the year. We can say that it has lasted too long already.

I recognize that since the beginning of our history French Canadians and later English Canadians have always been the two major cultures. But we should not forget that citizens from several countries have been settled in Canada for many years. It is quite difficult to say how many Indians were living in the territory forming today's Canada when Jacques Cartier was exploring the south coast. Today there are Indians in every trade and profession and they still have their traditional occupations like hunting, fishing and farming. Many are doctors, dentists, lawyers, teachers, nurses, clergymen, industrial workers or practicing any other profession.

History reports that the first Jews came to Canada around 1759 with the army of General Amherst commanding British troops in North America. We also know that Canada is home to a large number of citizens from all nationalities who, for the most part, made various contributions to the development of our country.

I understand that all those factors must be taken into account when we consider the possibility of amending an immigration policy generally, because many citizens of other countries who are in contact with relatives and friends here, of course, want to come and settle in Canada, and those are quite normal aspirations.

But, as I said earlier, the main point is that it is up to us as leaders and representatives of the Canadian people to orient the policy as a whole so as to make the economic situation for Canadians better, more livable. We may then view immigration in quite a different form from what it is now.

There are also people rightly referred to as refugees. In all countries of the world there are groups who suffer a great deal, and it would be most generous of Canada, with its vast territory, and if its economic situation were sound, I always add, to help those people.

I received late in 1976 a letter from a lay missionary who worked in Viet Nam and Cambodia for several years. I even rose in the House to allow well-intentioned families to adopt young Cambodians who were facing all sorts of hardships in their countries. I remember quite well the kind of representations that had to be made, the time it took before decisions were made. Yet every guarantee was given on both sides. I know three of them. I have here some photographs of young Cambodians who are living right now in the riding of Kamouraska and, to give an idea, I will read an excerpt from the letter I received from this lay missionary of my region who is completely devoted to the cause of disadvantaged people in other countries constantly threatened by all kinds of evils, mainly war. Let me read this paragraph which states:

Thousands of families were scattered in this way, and wandering children and teenagers managed to get to Thailand on their own, starving to death or ill, after walking sometimes several hundred kilometers and facing the worst dangers. All the evidence given by those refugees is consistent. Only 2 per cent of the Cambodian refugees managed to stay alive and reach Thailand, others were shot like dogs by the red Khmer troops who still have a kind of shadow government in Phnom Penh. Those refugees have lost everything, their property, their land, often their family and their country. Those who fled wanted at least to stay alive.

Therefore, it is on behalf of these young people that we brought pressure to bear. A young man of 27 met with immigration officials. I was even contacted afterwards to learn whether he was satisfied with his interview because he had discussed all these problems. What is Canada doing in certain circumstances through its embassies? Let me tell you what is happening in our embassies in various countries. Only recently, we had another striking example with a young French-Canadian woman from Lévis who is facing tremendous problems in India. The attempts of the Canadian government have not been successful so far. It would seem this situation is not taken too seriously by our high commissions abroad, and too often, the money sent by the Canadian government through its embassies is not always directed to the poor who might need it, but it benefits others who could manage by themselves, because they are better off than those who are suffering in concentration camps.

I continue this quotation:

We do not understand why this country does not react in the face of such crimes against humanity. And why has Canadian immigration such selective regulations? Why do we not admit to Canada a simple citizen as easily as we admit a political or military personality? People with influence and those with financial means are always the first to be accepted as it can be proved in several cases. The destitute and the orphans stand practically no chance of being accepted as refugees even though they may have a worthy Canadian sponsor.

This young man knows the situation very well as he has worked several years in various sectors of European countries, in Thailand, Cambodia and elsewhere, as I mentioned earlier. He added the following and I quote:

We know that our country cannot welcome all refugees from Thailand or elsewhere, but why not practice fairer and more humane policies? Why does the government fail to denounce such abuses before the United Nations? Those who say nothing are just as criminal as those who perpetrate the crime. Killing innocent people is an odious crime but our country says nothing to denounce it.

Perhaps you will find that I have drifted away from the subject being dealt with in Bill C-24 but nevertheless these facts are indeed related to our immigration problems since it raises the question of the adoption of totally deprived children. For example, we have the case of a man from Ottawa who has been after the manpower and immigration department for the last six months trying to adopt a young child from Cambodia. Although he can give all possible guarantees, being a well known doctor, everything is blocked at the immigration department.

To come back to the bill, I should like to deal with some of the most repressive aspects of the legislation. Several new aspects of the law have provisions ensuring better controls at all stages over the immigration procedure, so as to protect Canada against terrorism and organized crime.

● (1450)

I am wholeheartedly in favour of that. We must also bar entry into Canada to all sorts of people who could create many problems. That is to say we must fight unlawful or unauthorized immigration. Basically, the Canadian government wishes to take advantage of the passing of this new law to introduce all the measures necessary to make immigration one of the most important socio-economic programs. This infers the possibility of controlling as best as possible the political and economic instruments pertaining to immigration. To do so, the bill introduces a series of repressive measures but we shall only mention the most important or dangerous.

I will therefore deal with the extent of discretionary powers. All the repressive measures are made even more dangerous by the fact that they are enforced by the minister but not necessarily because the minister himself will have complete control since, in practice, a great number of his officials will wield powers with a very wide margin of discretion and authority. Almost everything pertaining to immigration depends on the decisions of the immigration officer. The margin of personal evaluation and, therefore, of possible error is enormous. And, far from correcting the situation, the new law tends in fact to make it worse. For example, the most sensitive clauses, dangerous because of their consequences, clauses pertaining to national security, clause 19(1) subclauses (e), (f), (g) can be enforced when there is only suspicion of intent. These discretionary powers, whether used under the act itself or under the various regulations derived from it, have indeed presented problems and were the subject of specific recommendations by the Joint Standing Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments, set forth in its second report to the House presented February 3, 1977, pages 979, 981 and 987.

Let us now deal with the extent of regulatory powers. A great many clauses come into real focus only when they are completed by the regulations provided for in clauses 115 and 116. However, the present aspect and direction of the bill leads us to fear that the regulations will only add to the restrictive and forbidding character of Bill C-24. This business of regulations always create problems. There are several acts that we often come across when trying to solve problems. We find that such a section means such and such a thing. However, there are regulations, and often, they are longer than the act itself. This has disastrous results, makes the legislation difficult to apply, and is most inconvenient, especially as the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments has just called the attention of parliament to the aims of regulatory powers in many areas, including immigration.

There are indeed many unpublished regulatory instruments, instructions or guidelines which affect the rights and freedoms of individuals without their being aware of their existences or their contents. Moreover, the joint committee itself, even though it was instructed by parliament to examine all regulatory instruments, has been refused access to the guide and guidelines of the department for the use of immigration officials. It should be noted in this regard that section 19(2)(d) maintains the present situation by forcing immigrants and visitors who try to enter Canada to meet the requirements included not only in the act and the regulations, but also in the orders or directions made or set out under the act or the regulations, even though these orders or directions are not made available to the public.

Finally, we must point out that the regulations can be amended or replaced as often as necessary without being submitted for discussion to parliament. Now that is something. Should anything happen which might create difficulties, a group of officials taking the responsibility in such a field will amend the regulations. Quite often the public is unaware of the fact but suddenly a clause of the regulation is amended to prevent, delay or stop something in the relations between immigrants and the Canadian people. This occurs in other legislation as well. I know more about unemployment insurance with its regulations which are lengthier than the legislation itself.

The way things are now the Department of Manpower and Immigration will not even allow the joint standing committee to control and check all the related bills, a task entrusted by parliament. All this, needless to say, leaves a great measure of freedom to the department and the government.

I shall now deal with the admission requirements. Clause 19(1) contains the main reasons for inadmissibility of those arriving in Canada. The categories established in clause 19 are considered the most important and normally cannot be disregarded. They apply to all persons seeking entry into Canada, with the exception of course of Canadians. Let us point out however that the terms of clauses dealing with national security, particularly paragraphs (d), (e), (f) and (g) of clause 19 and clause 27(1)(c), are quite vague and general. So much so that the government will not be able to enforce them on anybody without that person having very good means of defence, especially since the implementation of those provisions will be left to the discretion of a great many officials, immigration officers, senior immigration officers and adjudicators, and will be based most of the time on mere suspicion, the consideration of which will be left to the discretion of the official.

That leaves too much freedom to officials. They are apparently invested with the necessary authority to render decisions which may prove detrimental to whomever may be in trouble, decisions based very often, as I have indicated, on regulations which were amended when it was deemed necessary.

With this in mind, we can understand the concern of all those groups fighting for civil liberties and basic human rights.

I shall deal now with the conditions for removal. Clause 27(1) provides that various categories of people who have been granted admission to Canada may be the object of a report. What is provided for under clause 27 is followed by an inquiry, as indicated in subclauses (3) and (4), clause 29 and the following. Most times this leads to expulsion. I read subclauses (2) and (5) of clause 32. One of the main new features of this bill aims at making the condition of the permanent resident a lot more vulnerable than in the past, for a permanent resident could almost never be removed, once he had acquired landed immigrant status. The new bill creates six main general grounds for removal, including the most dangerous one mentioned in clause 19 and clause 27(1)(a). As for the grounds for inquiries and necessary removals of non Canadians, non residents, refugees, visitors, etc., their number is a lot greater. There are 12 types of more or less serious reasons provided for under clause 27(2)(h), according to the minister's own admission.

The comments on clause 27 on page 19—I am referring to the news release—are to the effect that this will not prevent either removal or local banishment.

The new legislation does away with the concept of domicile. In this respect, the minister himself cannot help but note that the new legislation affords a lot less protection than the current one—I refer to clause 127—which states that the people who have obtained Canadian domicile in Canada under the current legislation have a vested interest in the protection previously granted.

Clause 127 states however that this protection applies only in respect of an activity carried out before the coming into force of the new act. Therefore, Bill C-24 sanctions the loss of the vested interests of all permanent residents now residing here, since they are no longer protected against any action taken after the new legislation comes into effect. It seems that the suppression of the requirements regarding residence is a kind of incentive designed to encourage permanent residents to apply for citizenship as soon as possible, since citizenship would be their only protection against deportation. Now, since the coming into force, on February 15, 1977, of the new citizenship act, one may apply for citizenship after three years of residence in Canada instead of five. That is why the minister states that the domicile concept is now obsolete, as he said in committee as regards clause 127, on page 69. However, we forget to say . . .

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but I must refer him to Beauchesne's citation 381, and I quote:

> The second reading of a Bill is that stage when it is proper to enter into a discussion and propose a motion relative to the principle of the measure. On the motion for the second reading, it is out of order to discuss the clauses of the Bill.

I would therefore ask the hon. member to refrain from discussing the clauses of the bill.

Mr. Dionne (Kamouraska): Mr. Speaker, thank you for having quoted the Beauchesne's citation. Naturally, I have little opportunity to read Beauchesne's citations, and I have noticed there are many of them. Still I can readily speak in general. In any event, that is what I discussed at the start of my remarks, namely the difficulties stemming from the restrictions included in the Immigration Act, and that is what we are trying to amend here. I agree with the restrictions intended to prevent undesirables from entering into Canada or to deport those who after years in Canada have failed to adapt to our living conditions; and here I am not talking about economic conditions, which I mentioned earlier in my speech, but of normal life in our society. What I do want to point out is this: in all regulations on immigration, there must be clauses intended to prevent all sorts of things, to give the advantage to those who do offer sufficient guarantees. I mean the adoption of children in a demoralizing situation, whatever their country of origin, when here in Canada we have Canadian guarantees which, while respecting the rules, can protect those young ones. In such cases the rules should be flexible enough to help those little ones, who are without parents, to have a chance of resuming a normal life in an environment where they would be protected from the problems they knew over there. In a way, that is a good Immigration Act.

Now, to come back to the underlying unemployment problem. I fail to understand why at certain times of the year we must send for a lot of workers from various countries for harvesting in western Canada, in Ontario or elsewhere. As I said before, I am convinced that the Department of Immigration or other labour agencies do not provide adequate information to Canadian workers, young or middle-aged, who would willingly go there. I intervened personally at the manpower and immigration centre to try to obtain accommodation for workers who wanted to do the harvesting in Ontario, but nothing was available. There was even a young man aged 17 who left Kamouraska with $227 he had earned working on a farm at the end of his studies. He got no protection, no direction, no help from the manpower and immigration centre. He found a job, but he had to work very hard and take many risks.

Citizens from Belgium or from the West Indies are hired for harvesting in Canada whereas we have thousands of unemployed here. I am in no way opposed to those Belgians or West Indians who come and work here; they are apparently hard workers. But why not try first to inform all Canadians. I am convinced that a very high percentage would be prepared to travel. They would even appreciate it. Many young people come to me to say that they would like to go and work in the English-speaking provinces to learn English if only they could find some accommodation. This is not a matter of being paid more than foreigners for the job. This is an immigration policy I would qualify as being considerate. First of all, we should organize normal living conditions here so that all Canadians can live decently in a country which is wealthy, tremendously wealthy, as some politicians say. We know that Canada is a very large country, a vast and wealthy country. We just have to organize economic conditions in such a way that everyone can live decently, then if we have immigrants pass legislation to welcome them.

[English]

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by saying that this is a debate which I personnally feel I have an obligation not only to myself but to my constituents to participate in, for the simple reason that, in my opinion, this is the most important legislation to come before this second session of the Thirtieth Parliament. As surely members on both sides of this Chamber must be aware, since October 12 last when the session commenced there have been a number of bills which were somewhat less than of all-important national concern. Let me quickly add that this is not one of those; this is a very important bill to all Canadians, if only because it will likely provide the policy guidelines for immigration for our nation for perhaps the next 25 years. At least that is the impression I get from the various responses that have been made so far.

If it is possible to launch an important debate in an ideal or near perfect atmosphere, then I suggest that this was the situation in this House last night. We had received well in advance ample background material from the Department of Manpower and Immigration, from the many private sources who were interested enough to provide it, and also from the very extensive work of the special joint committees. Opposition parties, especially my own, have been very active in a widespread study of the entire subject and, of course, specifically of this bill.

I want to commend the minister for making perhaps his best and most important speech in his relatively new capacity as Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Cullen).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hargrave: I particularly liked the comment made by the minister, not last night but last month, to the Osgoode Hall law school of York University. I want to quote him briefly. He said:

> The anomaly between the important role that immigrants play in our society, and the archaic, obsolete nature of the present Immigration Act, has worried successive holders of my portfolio. This has been particularly true in the last decade or so.

The minister went on to say in that same speech that the bill—

> —is designed to protect Canadian society against danger, and to protect it against illegality. But it does so with full regard for due process and for the rights of individuals in a way that the present act does not.

I can only add that I sincerely hope and trust that the minister can indeed fulfil this very commendable concept in his new legislation. As he pointed out last night, Canada is indeed a country of immigration. I want to relate this general but very true statement to my own constituency of Medicine Hat. Indeed I want to relate it to a much wider area which would include all of southeastern Alberta and southwestern Saskatchewan. All of the development of this area, which is very similar to me because, after all, it is home, is today the end result of immigration.

I am reminded of those early settlers from northwest Europe, many of whom built and lived in prairie sod houses, and from the United Kingdom, many of them professionals who somehow learned to survive and live with the land under rather extremely trying climatic and physical conditions. I think also of many of my neighbours who came from the United States, particularly the Dakotas. Then there were the Mormons who came from Utah and who brought with them their great skills in irrigation and land use. There is no question that they showed us the way to a very extensive irrigation system in Alberta, almost all of which is in my constituency across southern Alberta.

I recall very specifically one particular immigrant, a tremendous man by the name of Peter Alkberg. This gentleman was driven out of his native Latvia after the 1917 revolution. As a youngster at home I remember his worn out photographs of his family farm which had been ravaged by war.

All of these immigrants in a sense were the product of adversity and necessity. They could turn their hand to anything, they could fix anything, and it was this background and their tenacity in our new country that enabled them to survive not only their tough beginning but the ten years of drought and depression of the thirties.

● (1510)

I spoke in the House not too long ago of the very real possibility of another drought right now in all of western Canada and the northwestern part of the United States. I suggested we would all benefit if we read again the history of that era and the considerable part played by those earlier immigrants. We might also remind ourselves of the words of Harry Truman, in my favourite quotation. I think it is appropriate. He said, "The only thing new is history we haven't read yet". Think about it. We should read and re-read the history of that drought. The climatic conditions that brought on that ten year dry period can be repeated. I hope not, but the possibility is there and the signs are there right now. So much for a little background history which I trust is both relevant and interesting.

I want to turn now to this debate and begin by commending my colleague, the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), for a very thorough and complete analysis, not only of this bill but of the entire broad subject of immigration. It is quite obvious to me that this presentation was indeed a labour of love for my colleague, and all of us in the House are richer for his interest and his speech here last night.

There was one short sentence in my colleague's presentation which I consider to be the key to my personal approach to this issue, and I want to read it. It is as follows:

> Today we are faced with the fact that despite tremendous gains in agricultural production, the world's population is again growing faster than the increase in food production.

That is a very succinct statement, and I think it is the key to what our forward planning should be, not only in immigration but in the broad agricultural sense. I suggest that this very basic situation must be uppermost in the mind of everyone who is concerned with the population growth, and with who will feed the people, and where. After all, as my colleague pointed out, world population is now increasing at the rate of some 200,000 people a day.

It seems to me that in spite of ample publicity and advance warning of this debate, and particularly in spite of the green paper and the work of the joint committee as it travelled across Canada, very little public input is available at this time. In my constituency, I had to search for it. My constituency office conducted a survey in the representative areas in the city of Medicine Hat, which numbers about 33,000 people, and in the various parts of our rather large rural area. Once contacted, my constituents responded readily, and I must say forthrightly. Most of the comments were very specific and almost brutally frank. By some people's standards they might even be considered bigoted. I should like to quote some of these remarks that I obtained in the survey. The comment of a city housewife was:

> Immigrants should not be allowed in, if once they get here, they have to go on welfare.

She followed up by saying that:

> All immigrants should be screened to make sure they believe and support the democratic process.

A city businessman had this to say:

> I do not favour a wide open policy. If we have a labour problem today, it is with menial labour, dishwashers, ditch diggers, etc. Therefore we cannot restrict immigration to skilled labour.

Another comment was:

> If we allow immigrants into the country, we must be able to supply them with jobs.

A professional man said, rather bluntly:

> No coloured people at all.

A lawyer had this to say:

> Our policy must be far stricter, with stronger screening, and no draft evaders or political activists from South America or political refugees in general.

That was the bluntest of the statements that I received.

A highly proficient farmer feels there is a danger in making our policy too restrictive because we would deny ourselves a source of new ideas. He feels that new immigrants have a greater appreciation of our country than those native born. He feels our policy should allow for a small percentage of unskilled labour.

There was the repeated comment that existing regulations are too generous in that many more than close relatives, often complete small villages, have somehow managed to arrive here. Others pointed out that we should look at the problems in the United Kingdom's immigration policy and the situation there at present. A provincial civil servant pointed out the difficulty of a broadly based immigration policy without being quite selective. He feels there should be a carefully controlled policy with emphasis on skills. There was some critical comment from several farmers concerning new immigrants with access to much cheaper capital financing from foreign countries, and examples of this were given. Of course this would be a major advantage in acquiring farm land.

I want to emphasize that this constituency survey did not pose specific questions but asked for any comments that might be offered. No leading questions were put. With the single exception already noted, the general response called for stricter controls with more attention given to current abuses. I must say that I agree in general with the response.

Another unanimous response, especially from the farming sector of my constituency, was that Canada should help starving peoples in their own countries by providing suitable, practical help designed to promote an agricultural self-help policy. Again I fully support this approach.

I should like to speak now about a related manpower issue within the intensive irrigation districts of southern Alberta, and particularly the area which produces sugar beets. There was solid support for the existing provision to bring in temporary workers. In this case they were referring to the Mexican workers who are available in the summer for thinning the sugar beet crop in its early growth stage. This source of temporary help has replaced our own native people who at one time provided most of this type of labour. There is a clear indication that this foreign source of labour is more dependable and more productive. This is a serious statement to make, but it is the truth. It should be pointed out here that this kind of farm labour is superior to our Canadian born labour force which just will not do this kind of work. This temporary work policy should be continued.

There has already been ample comment on the matter of the regulations to be put forward with this new bill. I share the sentiments of my colleague, the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), that we should have the regulations before us now for a proper second reading debate. After all it will be the regulations that will determine the degree of an open door or repressive policy for the immigration guidelines until the year 2000. It is the policy which is now under debate.

There is an interesting comparison here that I cannot fail to point out respecting regulations under another bill. This time I am referring to the bill amending Canada's Animal Contagious Diseases Act. That act was amended for the first time in over 100 years about two or more years ago in this House, and those of us in the Standing Committee on Agriculture had a lot to do with that. However, the regulations which spelled out much of the policy were not released until last January, some two years after the act was amended. Surely this is legislation by regulation at its worst, with the bureaucracy doing the regulating. I know the minister did indicate with a nod of his head last night that these regulations would be available shortly. Since that indication is obviously not part of Hansard, I must mention it again, but let us not try to beat that two-year record.

I also ask the minister that there be more positive provisions for provincial and even municipal input to take care of regional problems relating to the total demographic challenge. The provinces must surely have the final say in the matter of foreign students attending provincial universities and colleges, such as those in Alberta. Foreign students do enrich our universities, but the time has come, certainly in Alberta, when foreign enrollments in certain faculties such as engineering, medicine, and science, must be curtailed to allow reasonable access to our Canadian students.

I want to conclude these remarks with just a few further comments in summary. In an issue like this which is so important to our nation it is regrettable that we cannot all be members of the immigration committee or that we could not all have served on that special joint committee. However, it seems to me that the work of that special committee deserves our praise, and merits much use in the development of our Canadian immigration policy. I am sure my party endorses most of the recommendations of that committee.

It is obvious that at this stage in Canada's history we cannot allow unlimited immigration, and this means our policy must be of a selective type. The minister indicated last night that the right figure for our total annual level will emerge with experience and that this experience could very well be tempered somewhat with available housing. I hope due consideration will also be given to provincial situations and that a balance, if possible, will be determined between immigrants headed for Montreal, Toronto, and Vancouver, and other regions across Canada.

It is worth repeating that immigration is a privilege and not a right, and Canada is much the richer for its immigrants. Is it not possible that our new immigrants, arriving as a result of a new and enlightened policy, might help to show Canadians the way back to a new work ethic and a new level of national productivity, which we need so much today, just as that first wave of immigrants responded during the first third of this century?

I and, I think, most of my constituents can support a renewed emphasis on immigration policy which recognizes standards which are not discriminatory as to race, nationality, colour, religion or sex. The method of selection must ensure that the right mix is obtained to be absorbed properly by our Canadian society.

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, on introducing the government's immigration bill the minister said that the bill explicitly affirms for the first time the fundamental objectives of Canadian immigration law: family reunification, non-discrimination, concern for refugees, and the promotion of Canadian economic, social, demographic and cultural goals.

I totally agree with the sentiments expressed by the minister in his opening remarks and I support them 100 per cent.

I would like also to congratulate the committee, as did the previous speaker, on the very excellent job it did travelling across the country, in listening to briefs from people from all walks of life and for putting forward a report of the highest calibre, which obviously met with the minister's approval since most of the major recommendations were accepted by him. I had the opportunity to travel with that committee only on the west coast, but I can assure the House and those hon. members who were not in attendance that the committee and its chairmen did an excellent job. It listened with a great deal of attention to the people who appeared before it and, as I said, it prepared a very excellent report which will probably shape the course of our immigration policy for many years to come. I congratulate the minister for accepting its recommendations, for putting them into legislative form, and for introducing them at an early date, which indicates to the House that he feels this legislation is important.

I would like to comment briefly on one or two parts of the legislation. One is that part of the legislation regarding the immigration levels which will be set after advice from the provinces as to where immigrants should go, as to what levels we can absorb at any given time, and as to what projects of a capital nature might be going on in Canada which might require specialized skills. In other words, this is a fluid type of policy. It is not engraved in stone; it is one which can be changed on a year by year basis if necessary, to reflect what is occurring in the Canadian economy. If there is one thing of which we are all aware, it is that we have a rapidly moving society in which factors change almost on a daily basis, let alone on a yearly basis. I think it is important that an immigration policy reflect that fluidity in our society so that it can cope with changing circumstances on a regular basis.

The second point is one upon which we all agree, and that is the importance of facilitating family reunions. It has been the policy of the Department of External Affairs to assist in the reunification of families with relatives from places like eastern Europe or perhaps Communist China. I must congratulate the Department of External Affairs, as well as the immigration people who have assisted me personally, in reuniting families which have been split because of political differences. These barriers are not made by God; they are man-made political barriers, and I think Canada has had a very good record for not carrying a big stick, yelling and screaming on issues of reunification. Over a period of time, through diplomacy, Canada has achieved not all the goals we desired, but certainly those which were possible at given times and under given sets of circumstances.

I solidly support the position of facilitating family reunion, and I suppose what focuses my attention on this bill is the fact that for the first time we have legislated the principle that immigration should be based upon non-discrimination.

● (1530)

When I lived in Yorkton, Saskatchewan, I recall that many of the people who ran cafes were, the Chinese who had come to this country when the Canadian Pacific Railway was being built. They were not allowed to bring their wives and sweethearts with them, and I recall that six or seven men used to live together in a boarding house. I thought it was a sad indictment of our society that they could not bring their womenfolk over because at that time our laws forbade such people of oriental origin coming here. It is with some pride that I see we have progresed beyond this. I am sure many hon. members would agree that, although we are not proud of that part of our history, we can be proud that we now have non-discrimination written into the legislation so that people may not be barred on grounds of race, religion, or sex. For my part, I wish it had come sooner.

We have had many discussions in this House about unemployment and the effect on the social fabric of our lines when people do not have work. I have travelled in Germany, Switzerland, and other European countries that have a lower unemployment rate than we do and have noticed that they bring people from Spain and less developed countries to join their work force. But during times of recession or when there is a slowdown in the economy, these people are sent home because they were never allowed to become citizens. While the government may be accused of having contributed in some measure, to a recession, I take pride in the fact that people who wish to live in our country are not sent home in times of recession. I think we have reason to be proud of our humane attitude.

The Swiss set a limit on immigration and it may take an applicant ten or 15 years to come within that limit, so that is a less desirable situation. I know there is a group of people in Canada who have very strong feelings about immigration and feel that we should close the gate and only take care of those people already here.

I would state unequivocally, Mr. Speaker, that this House has an obligation to fight against discrimination by including a non-discrimination clause in the legislation such as that which the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) introduced in his bill.

I was born and raised in Saskatchewan and I recall that in the early forties it was the accepted custom to bait people of Ukranian birth who painted Easter eggs and who spoke a different language on occasion. Many of them were born in the Ukraine and came to this country in the 1920's and the 1930's. Sometimes it was their mode of dress that gave rise to mirth. I would not say the treatment of them was harsh, but we felt there was something to laugh at. We could laugh at their customs, their clothing, their language but, Mr. Speaker, they were white.

I must admit that even today in my province of British Columbia there is subtle and not so subtle discrimination. I think it would be fair to say that the Chinese communities in British Columbia have experienced this, and the East Indian people. Perhaps they have run into the same sort of thing in other provinces as well as British Columbia as existed on the prairies in the 1930's and 1940's with that one difference—the difference in colour.

I think it would also be fair to say that up to November 15 in the province of British Columbia there was subtle and not too subtle discrimination against people of French Canadian origin, and certainly against the province of Quebec.

I see it as part of our job to do all we can whether by legislation, speaking in the House or throughout the country, to let the people of Canada know that we are totally opposed to any form of discrimination against any member of our society. I trust that with social and political maturity these forms of discrimination will become less and less evident as time goes on. I believe it is up to every member of this House to combat a very insidious decay in the country by letting our fellow citizens know that this House does not in any way condone intolerance and will not abide discrimination. Where we have the chance, such as in the legislation before us, we must point out strongly and clearly to the people of Canada that in our immigration policy we are opposed to discrimination, as well as in our day to day lives.

I trust that in British Columbia those very hard-working, law-abiding people who may be of a different colour from the majority of residents, will be recognized as the Canadians they are. The fact that they work hard, that they believe in family unity and the importance of good housing, should not be used against them as though these things were wrong. Sometimes from the comments I hear I think these qualities are viewed as flaws rather than virtues. It would be better if more people followed their example rather than complaining that their industry takes jobs away from other members of the community.

● (1540)

It has been well documented that a reasonable inflow of people has not detracted from the quality of our economic, social or cultural life. The reverse is true. Immigrants have made contributions in the form of music, literature, and other cultural activities, so it is fair to say that these people, be they Hungarians, Ukrainians, Chinese, East Indians or what have you, have enriched our lives. It is a poor society that cannot look beyond its borders to other cultures. We have not reached the apex of our cultural development. We cannot afford to look down our noses at cultures which have been in existence for thousands of years and which antedate by many, many years, Canada's existence.

As I said, the non-discriminatory aspect of the bill is the most important part of the legislation. It is parliament's affirmation that discrimination has no place in this country and that we, as parliamentarians, recognize this.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I do not think any legislation which will come before parliament in the present session will be as important as this bill. Whatever else we may say about our immigration policy we must, as a fundamental principle, refrain from being racist or discriminatory.

In the short time I shall talk on this bill I intend to emphasize that racism and discrimination really ought not to be the issue before Canadians. In other words, one begins by assuming that we are not going to be racist or bigoted with respect to sex, religion, colour or anything else.

Surely in the presentation of this matter to the Canadian people it is important to question some myths about the numbers of people we can bring into Canada. Therefore I intend to put forward two propositions, both of which are based on the assumption that Canada should have a restrictive immigration policy, that is, should restrict the numbers of people allowed to enter Canada. My first proposition is this: there is a myth in this country that we have all kinds of potential for absorbing new people. My second proposition, which I intend to demonstrate with researched data, is that we can best help the Third World by operating from a position of strength. With those two propositions firmly in mind, I wish to set forth my case.

One must underscore how desperate is the world's food shortage. The United Nations Advisory Committee on the Application of Science and Technology has this to say on the subject:

> Today there are over 300 million children who, for lack of sufficient protein and calories, suffer grossly retarded physical growth and development, and for many of these mental development, learning and behaviour may be impaired as well. Protein-calorie deficiencies also directly affect the health and economic productivity of adult populations. Such nutritional deficits, damaging both present and future generations, are built-in handicaps which must be corrected.

Obviously the situation is serious world-wide. We know that four fifths of the world's population suffers from malnutrition and more than 300 million children now suffer from permanent brain damage owing to lack of protein. In addition, the world's population is increasing at the rate of 77 million mouths per year.

In the face of these facts we should not react with a sort of knee-jerk reaction and say that, because the world is starving, Canada must have an open immigration policy. As I say, world population grows by 77 million mouths a year. If we were to accept in Canada every one of those 77 million people born in one year, we should make this into a country no longer able to export its research and technology. Furthermore, after one year the world would be no better off, Canada would be in the same position as the southern hemisphere, and the rest of the world would go on as usual.

The fundamental question must be, how can we best proceed so that by the year 2010 we can feed the human family of eight billion souls?

There are only two sources of food, soil and water. Canada is a big country, of 3.8 million square miles. It is the second largest nation in the world. In our land space we have some 5 billion, 312 million acres. Since we possess all this land, some Canadian people think that, somehow, we have the potential to feed vastly greater numbers of people than are already living here. In truth, only 24 million of those more than five billion acres are arable land in climatically favoured areas. Of those 24 million acres, only two million are class one soil, and only ten million class two soil. Even more significant is the fact that those 24 million acres will be reduced to nine million by the year 2000 if the rate of destruction of arable farm land continues at present levels. Today Canada is a net importer of food. Therefore two questions arise for consideration. First, we must ask how many people we can absorb in this country. Second, and more important, we must consider to what extent the "have" countries of the world, by exporting science and technology, have been able to help the "have-not" countries.

At present, Mr. Speaker, for every 100 Canadians we add to our population we destroy, on average, 1,000 acres of top grade arable farm land. At present Canada has three acres of agricultural land for every person in Canada. The world's average now is one acre of arable land for every person in the world. According to predictions, by the year 2000 Canada will have less than one acre of arable land for each of her citizens if present rates of farm land destruction should continue. Therefore if we have an open immigration policy Canada will be worse off by the year 2000 than the rest of the world is at present. We shall be worse off unless we redirect our immigrants to those areas where there is not high quality agricultural land.

As an aside I might mention that many cities in this country have sprung up on our best land. For example on the prairies, the cities of Winnipeg, Regina, Saskatoon, Lethbridge, Red Deer, Edmonton and Grande Prairie—in fact all major cities except Medicine Hat and Calgary—are built on lake beds where the soil is silted over. That is a natural phenomenom since the pioneers found they could grow the best crops on that land. But it also means that we are using up the best land in Canada and rapidly destroying the base for our own food supplies. In the five years between 1966 and 1971, Canada lost 4.5 million acres of top quality farm land to urban growth. At the present rate of farm land destruction, 100 per cent of Ontario's farm land will be destroyed by AD 2030. Canada can best meet her humanitarian obligations not by importing people, but rather by exporting technology and research, and to that theme I wish to devote the remainder of my speech.

Let us consider how "have" countries in the world have made available research and technology to "have not" countries and enabled people of the Third World to become self-sufficient. I shall quote what Peter Jennings wrote in the September, 1976, edition of the Scientific American. He said:

In the 1940's Mexico had been importing half of the wheat it consumed in order to make up a deficit in production; yields averaged 750 kilograms per hectare. By 1956 the nation was self-sufficient in wheat in spite of a large increase in population. By 1970 yields had reached 3,200 kilograms per hectare.

● (1550)

That was a tremendous increase for that country.

I further quote from the same article by Peter Jennings:

By the mid-1960's the success of this program had been demonstrated, largely because of the broad environmental adaptation of the varieties. Beginning in 1966 seed was exported in quantity, mostly to India, Pakistan and Turkey. Record harvests were achieved almost immediately.

That is important to note. The fundamental question has to be who will help when the whole world becomes overcrowded? If we import people into technologically advanced nations today to such an extent that we all become Third World nations, the real question has to be who will be the saviour of mankind then?

I wish to quote further from the article in Scientific American which states, and I quote:

The first improved dwarf varieties of rice were released by IRRI in 1966; they immediately transformed rice culture in the Philippines and were soon widely adopted in the lowland regions of Asia. One variety in particular, designated IR8, gained widespread celebrity. It has the potential for high yield when properly fertilized and cultivated, it is insensitive to photoperiod and it is adapted to a broad range of growing conditions. Moreover, it matures in 120 days instead of the 160 days required for many unimproved types. Because of the earlier maturity two crops a year can be grown in some regions.

I would further like to quote:

Genes that confer resistance to disease and insects have been bred into some of the better populations. As a result of these changes it has been possible to increase the crop density from 50,000 plants per hectare to more than 100,000.

I might just pause to point out that all of this data I am giving is to demonstrate that the gap in the narrowing of the food needs that exist in the Third World today is largely a gap that has come about because the "have" nations have been able to export their science and technology to those poorer countries.

The point I intend to make today is simply this. As long as we have a policy that somehow will allow a flood of people to come into Canada, we have the two positions. First, we destroy our own position of strength. This in turn means there is no one to export that very much needed science and technology to the developing Third World. Canada has a lot more to contribute to assist in meeting the increasing world food need. I again quote:

Ralph W. Cummings of the Rockefeller Foundation recently published a survey of the state of food-crop technology in the low-income countries. He compared the average annual gain in production for 15 basic commodities during two periods, 1961 through 1965 and 1971 through 1973. His findings give a rough indication of the contribution of research to food production since World War II. Two conclusions emerge from the study. First an evaluation of the status of research on the major food crops indicates that in almost all cases research is "seriously inadequate" or "critically inadequate". Only the specialized areas of irrigated rice and irrigated spring wheat were considered to have received adequate research attention. Second, annual gains in production of seven crops (Cassava, white potato, soybeans, cowpeas, broad beans, maize and wheat) were greater than 2.5 per cent, and thus equaled or exceeded the rate of population growth.

In other words, if Canada is truly to become a humanitarian country, and without trying to think we are going to do something significant by an open immigration policy, we have to recognize our fundamental obligation, and that is to remain in a position of strength, and export science and technology to help the Third World people look after themselves.

The value of research and exported technology is easily demonstrated. This is a very important point. I again quote from the article in Scientific American:

The impact of the new technology is readily measured. Yield has risen from less than three metric tons per hectare to 5.4 metric tons, so that each hectare planted to the new varieties produces 2.5 metric tons of additional grain. Total production increased from 680,000 metric tons in 1966, the year before the program began, to 1,632,000 metric tons in 1975. Almost all the increase was accounted for by improved yield. The value of the additional crops harvested through 1974 was about $450 million. Varieties derived from the Colombian project were also successful in Mexico, Ecuador, Peru, Venezuela and in Central America. Throughout the region the 1974 harvest was increased by 1.5 million metric tons of grain.

What is being pointed out is that the gains we have made in the Third World, in levelling off the rate of starvation through increasing food production, have not happened because of increases in the amount of arable land but because of new research, science, and technology.

I go back to the fundamental question. If we are to have an open immigration policy and if the United States are to have a similar policy, somewhere down the road someone has to ask who is going to stop the starvation when all the countries of the world are in the same position?

There is no argument at all with the question of whether we ought to have a racist or non-racist policy. I hope it will be the assumption of all Canadians that we would not go along the lines of a racist policy. I see it will soon be four o'clock. I would simply say at this time that I think we can demonstrate categorically that Canada's strongest position in helping the Third World will be by the export of research and technology.

I hope to demonstrate that when I come back to this debate at the next opportunity. At this time, Mr. Speaker, I would like to call it four o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being four o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Shall all notices of motions prior to motion No. 27 stand at the request of the government?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

SUGGESTED MEASURE TO RAISE HEALTH AND SAFETY STANDARDS FOR MINERS

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of introducing legislation which would establish a National Mining Act for the purpose of increasing occupational health standards for miners under federal jurisdiction, for establishing a federal presence in this particular area and to give leadership to provincial governments which do have responsibility for mine safety and occupational health.

He said: Mr. Speaker, one thing has struck me consistently since having been elected to this place. It is the consistency with which Canadians are being exposed to the propaganda of the mining corporations in Canada with regard to the major role of those companies in the Canadian economy. I am continuously being told that mining plays a major role in the Canadian economy.

In the year 1975 the total value of minerals extracted from the earth across Canada was $12 billion. This propaganda is delivered through all forms of the media; television, radio, newspapers, and magazines. It is delivered not only by individual mining companies but by their associations and clubs. These companies make one major argument, that if they are to stay healthy and competitive, the government must stay out of their business but give them more tax breaks, allowances, grants and so on. Well, Mr. Speaker, apart from the morality of this kind of advocacy advertising, the cost of which, incidentally, they can write off their taxes, there is the whole question of the workers who toil in the mining industry.

How safe is the mining industry in Canada? Who has responsibility for setting national mining safety standards across the country? Where does the responsibility of the federal government begin and end, and where does the local responsibility begin and end? How strictly enforced are any standards of mining safety in areas for which the federal government has a direct responsibility? What is the cost of health care to the nation in respect of those who have become disabled or lost their lives in mining, and how much of this cost could have been prevented?

I know the technique used by government members on the opposite side of the House in dealing with bills and motions put forward by private members. They get up, engage in much breast-beating, say they agree with the principles therein, and finally talk them out. I want to tell them that this motion does not threaten them in any way. All it says is that the House calls upon the government to consider a mining act of the kind proposed so that improved safety standards might come into effect. It is a motion which would have the effect of nudging the government to move in the direction I have outlined. The miners of this country demand no less from members on the government side than that they should allow the motion to come to a vote.

I ask members opposite, when they speak, to bear in mind that we have only an hour and that in all fairness to the workers they ought to let the matter come to a vote. I do not want to threaten them, but if they talk it out I will bring this debate to the attention of every union in this country, and to workers right across the country so that they will know who it is that bears the onus of standing against progress in this direction.

Mr. Anderson: That will get you nowhere.

Mr. Pearsall: Blackmail!

Mr. Rodriguez: It may not get me anywhere, but I know what you will do.

It is because of the questions I have just raised that I see a need for a national mining act. Apart from the fact that it would allow the central government and the provincial governments to sit down together and, with input from the trade union movement and the mining industry, devise an act which would clearly set out the federal and provincial areas of responsibility with respect to the mining industry, it would also provide a degree of protection for the Canadian miner which is urgently needed.

As I look across the country I see grave differences in working conditions in different areas. The miner in the Yukon has as much right to safety in his working place as does the miner in Ontario. At the present time workers are denied uniform levels of safety because of differing standards imposed by the provinces and even by federal departments. The federal government has responsibility for mines on Indian reservations, on military bases, and in the Yukon and Northwest Territories. Regulation of these different mines is handled in part by Energy, Mines and Resources, in part by Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and in part by the Atomic Energy Control Board.

In the north, in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, safety in mines is governed by mining safety ordinances. These can be set down by the Commissioner of the Territories but must be approved in Ottawa by the governor in council. These ordinances fall under the authority of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In the Yukon and the Northwest Territories the federal government exercises control over mining comparable to the powers exercised by provinces within their own boundaries.

The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources also exercises broad powers, controlling such acts as the Explosives Act, the Atomic Energy Control Act, the Dominion Coal Board Act, and several other measures related to mining.

Mines in provinces are generally controlled by provincial governments, and within the various jurisdictions there are many different acts and regulations. Some provinces have enacted very advanced mining regulations and occupational health regulations, while others lag far behind.

A subject of great concern lately, and justifiably so, is the mining of uranium. Here the Atomic Energy Control Board has authority. The Board controls the production, manufacture, sale and use of radioactive material. But while theoretically controlling all this, the Board in fact does not. Instead, it has chosen to turn the exercise of these powers over to the provinces, thus washing its hands of the problem.

Recently in Ontario a commission was established to inquire into the health and safety of workers in mines—the Hamm Commission. AECB officials told that royal commission they had never asked the Ontario government for reports on levels of radiation in the mines or for the status of health of the miners. Commissioner James Hamm went so far as to charge that the Board was ignoring the miners, whose daily exposure to harmful radiation was, "larger than that received by workers around reactors." The AECB has not even declared uranium miners to be "workers" for the purpose of regulation by the federal government. The Commissioner raised many other questions in this area but I shall content myself with quoting one statement of his: "At times it has not been clear whether initiative was considered to rest with the industry or with the responsible ministry." To that, he might have added "and to precisely which responsible ministry."

The guidelines concerning safety differ in the different provinces and they also differ from the federal rules. For example, federal regulations state there shall be no more than 10 picocuries per litre of drinking water. In Ontario, provincial regulations state that the acceptable level is three. Let us not forget that in the Elliot Lake area leachings from radioactive mine tailings are threatening Indian bands and the town of Elliot Lake itself.

These safety regulations involve more than just plain numbers. Human lives are at stake. The AECB follows the guidelines set by the International Commission on Radiological Protection. This is the group which said 10 picocuries per litre of drinking water was an acceptable figure. People within the Board say the only reason the provincial figure is lower is because the province has not gotten around to raising them to "more realistic levels". I wonder about that, Mr. Speaker. I wonder about it very much as reports continue to come in about lung cancer and silicosis among uranium miners.

Ontario is not the only province which has experienced problems in this regard. Saskatchewan was concerned about safety levels in uranium mines in that province. On January 29, 1975, the department concerned wrote to the Atomic Energy Control Board and asked that three inspectors be appointed by that board to launch a system of safety inspection. Saskatchewan acted in this way out of disgust with the federal government's failure to set standards and inspect mines at Uranium City. The letter had not even been answered by November of 1976. When steel workers asked the Board why the letter had not been answered they were told it was because the Board had not had the time. I wonder how many more people will die before we can find the time to do something about health and safety in these mines.

The leader of my party, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), has moved three private members' bills in this House which would do much to cut down on the problem of occupational health for workers under federal jurisdiction. His bills would provide health and safety committees in all work places with ten or more employees; they would provide for mandatory work inspectors, and would allow workers the right to refuse work they considered dangerous. Those bills would help a great deal in cutting down the carnage in our work places. They might even reduce the number of injured workers in the post office. But in the case of mining I think we must go even further.

Mining is a dangerous and thankless occupation. I recall that we argued for months in this House over the merits of capital punishment and concern as to whether or not guards or policemen would be killed. We heard about the great risks that guards and policemen face as they try to carry out their duties. We should remember that, when it comes to hazardous occupations, a miner still has a greater chance of being killed than either a prison guard or a policeman.

Perhaps it is time, Mr. Speaker, we took some steps to do something about the problem. A national mining act would bring the issue before the public. We could examine in depth the measures needed to protect our miners from Newfoundland to British Columbia. Not only would such an act simplify the acts and regulations of different departments, but it would also provide for more adequate standards and inspections. It would also put pressure on the provinces to accept more adequate measures in areas where their legislation falls below federal standards.

We owe it to our miners, and their families to legislate the highest possible standards for their health and protection. Anything less is a travesty in view of and genuine concern for the Canadian working class.

Mr. Alan Martin (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I am not clear from the earlier words of the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) whether he is really anxious to have members on this side support the substance, at least, of the point he is trying to make. He seemed rather ready to criticize us for what we were about to say before he had even taken the time to listen.

Mr. Rodriguez: You are going to talk it out.

Mr. Martin: It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, he might indeed find that the degree of support in this House might be greater than from his own party at the present time, based on the numbers that are present today.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We are unanimous.

Mr. Martin: The other member of that party present this afternoon indicates they are unanimous. As I interpret the motion of the hon. member, he wishes the government, if I may read part of it, to consider the advisability of introducing legislation for the purpose of increasing occupational health standards for miners under federal jurisdiction, for establishing a federal presence in this particular area, and to give leadership to provincial governments which do have responsibility for mine safety and occupational health.

I purposely omitted in reading those words the actual term "National Mining Act", and I did so for a very good reason. It seems to me that in order to achieve the very creditable aim the hon. member for Nickel Belt has in mind, which is to focus increasing government attention at the federal level on the problems of safety related to people in industry generally, he has focused solely upon one area. My own feeling is that this whole area of occupational health and safety is something that needs to be addressed on a much grander scale than simply dealing with one particular industry. So while I agree with the substance of the hon. member's objective, and indeed have no problem supporting him—I hope he will continue to push his point of view—in my opinion the idea of trying to establish a mining act as such to deal with only one very narrow area of the problem is not the most appropriate way to proceed.

Again in my view, Mr. Speaker, it is great to see something like this being discussed without seeing a headline in the paper the previous day. In other words, my concern is that governments have tended to react in this area of occupational health and safety only after major tragedies, or more recently where we have seen more insidious types of tragedies where one or two miners are known to be afflicted by diseases which seem to have emanated from their terms of service in the mines. For this reason I feel privileged to participate in a debate which is going to tackle this problem in a sensible and, I hope, co-ordinated way.

I should like to review a little bit of background to show what has happened in this whole area of occupational health hazards on this continent. It seems to me that, whether we like it or not, we are very often inclined to look to others who perhaps have been in business longer than we have in terms of some of our national industries and have had more resources at hand, and consequently started to deal with some of these problems earlier than we have. I refer to the United States.

As I understand it, the oldest act in the United States is the Walsh-Healey Act, which was established to create standards of occupational health in those areas where companies were dealing in contracts with the federal government. As I understand it, various types of individual standards existed throughout the various states, and in some states standards were non-existent. I do not know when this act was passed, but it was a good while ago and it was a very important first step.

I put this information on the record, Mr. Speaker, because it seems to me that we in Canada have a long way to go. We are starting from ground zero almost, as it were, so I think it is important that we do review what has happened in this major country to the south of us.

Two additional acts have been passed in the United States, and one of these was the coal mining safety and health act which reacted to public concern over what is known as "black lung" in the Pennsylvania and Kentucky coal mining areas. This particular piece of legislation was designed to provide equitable compensation for people who were afflicted with this condition as a result of their work environment. I understand that through this act a very important body was created known as the national institute for occupational safety and health in the health, education and welfare department of that country. Again I am not sure of the timing of the introduction of this particular act, but it was another very important cornerstone in the over-all effort made in the country to the south of us to attempt to come to grips with occupational health standards and their establishment.

Then we have an act known as the mining environment safety administration act, which was administered by mines people and was passed, I believe, in 1972. Whereas they had focused primarily on the area the hon. member for Nickel Belt is dealing with, one specific narrow area, they were now obliged to go outside the coal mining area and to move into more general mining fields, which I gather included hardrock and mines other than coal generally. Standards were established under this act for silica and explosive gases.

I myself had some very brief but interesting inter-action as a member of a parliamentary committee which went to Washington a year and a half ago in another area related to occupational safety and health, and this was through my discussions with senior officials in the occupational safety and health administration under their department of labour. Again I put this information on the record because it seems to me we are seeing a rather large mix of various areas of responsibility trying to get at the same problem. I am relating how the situation has developed in the United States, and I am not sure that they are entirely happy with it. Nevertheless, this particular focus under the U.S. Department of Labour, which is the most recent of all that have been established, covers up to 60 million workers in that country in five million work places. They employ a staff of 2,000, which gives you some indication of the type of bureaucracy involved. In talking with the senior people involved in this administration we found that in their view this was perhaps the biggest single piece of social legislation that had been introduced in the United States in recent times. It is very controversial, it has some tough regulations, and it is only five years old.

● (1620)

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Which one was that?

Mr. Martin: The occupational and safety health act. Initially it was aimed at safety, but now—when I say "now" I am saying so on the basis of my notes made in the autumn of 1975—they are moving to develop international standards in the area of health in work places in general. They are very actively co-operating with the state authorities. This was the question we put to them, knowing that in this country the jurisdiction is mainly provincial. To some degree the same applies in the United States, and they are having to work closely with individual state authorities. This is an agency within the department of labour.

Moving closer to home and to the heart of the problem pointed out by the hon. member for Nickel Belt, let me draw attention to the throne speech of October 12 in which the following was indicated. This is an extract which reads:

An industrial safety and health centre will be established to assist companies and workers in their efforts to identify any remove hazards.

The government will work closely with its own employees in various departments and Crown corporations to implement innovative, co-operative methods of improving health and safety conditions.

I have attempted to bring myself up to date on what may have developed in that area since that indication of prospective legislation was given to us in the throne speech, and I understand from talking to people in the industrial area that something called the Canada Centre for Occupational Safety and Health is being seriously considered, and already government people are circulating around the country talking to people from industry, labour and provincial governments in an effort to come up with some basic co-ordination in the area of health. The idea is to combine not just the problems related to mining but all the problems relating to safety and health standards, such as problems found in the agricultural sector, the mining sector, atomic energy, and the industrial sector generally. The idea is to establish national leadership in this area, and there is a good deal of sympathy among the provinces for this type of leadership to take place.

I understand that there are four basic problems that should be studied initially. One is the problem of silicosis, or exposure to dust, which is primarily a mining problem but which can be encountered in many other industries as well. The second one is a matter of noise, and the problem associated particularly in the mining field with underground drilling and other types of mining operations. There is also the problem of lung cancer from radioactive elements. We have heard much more about this as some of the problems have surfaced and are being discussed and studied in great depth. Fourth, there is the matter of underground diesels and the fumes created by them. I gather that these are the four areas which are being considered initially by this team travelling across the country, and I have this from people with whom that team has interacted rather than from government sources. There is a general feeling among these people that something is finally going to be done and that some leadership will be shown at the federal level.

There is a tradition in this country similar to what the Americans faced when they tried to move in this area, that safety and health are a responsibility of the provinces. The indication to date is that everyone is anxious to respond to federal leadership in this area.

I have a little more to say on this centre, Mr. Speaker, the idea is to establish a place where a scientific background can be developed for establishing valid standards for the use of hazardous substances and chemicals such as, for instance, asbestos. Nobody really knew anything about the threshold limits in this area. It is an open area. We hope the centre will come to grips with this problem and will establish threshold figures acceptable to all parties concerned. Incidentally the agency will be directed by representatives from labour, management, and the provincial and federal governments. It is to be a kind of clearing house. Universities may be involved in the studies. It will not necessarily employ a large bureaucracy, but might farm out studies to various centres in the country where they could more appropriately be undertaken. It will act as a focal point for encouraging research and for setting standards.

As I understand it, ultimately there will be legislation in this area once the team has been able to pool together its various reports from the current studies it is undertaking and the consultations it is having across the country. It is my hope that this legislation will incorporate the very points the hon. member for Nickel Belt mentioned today. This is why I say that I think in the long run hon. members will be better served by a more encompassing piece of legislation which will cover all aspects of industrial hazards, rather than spending a great deal of time on one narrow area. I hope the hon. member for Nickel Belt will continue his interest in that area and will take an interest in larger and more encompassing legislation when it comes forward.

In conclusion I would like to make some reference to the Hamm report of which many of us are aware. It is a provincial study which was undertaken through the auspices of the Ontario government. It is a critical report. It criticizes both labour and industry for failing to live up to their responsibilities and insure safety in mines at that time. I think federal legislation will surely draw on that report and incorporate the points from that report which should be included in a more encompassing piece of legislation.

I am also conscious of the fact mentioned by the hon. member for Nickel Belt that, as he put it, those of us who rose to speak on this issue should be chastized. I want to point out to him that basically I am in support of the substance of his bill, but I do not support the means by which he is attempting to achieve his objective.

Mr. Rodriguez: It is a motion, not a bill.

Mr. Martin: It is important for us to realize that there are many people in our society today, representatives of labour, United Steel Workers, and people in industry, who are concerned with this whole issue. But the government must become involved, and we have indicated in the throne speech that we will be involved. It is one area in our commitments that we will surely follow through without question. As I said, things are being done now in this direction.

I would like to conclude my comments by once again congratulating the hon. member for bringing forward this problem at a time when we are not reacting to a major tragedy that happened yesterday or today. We realize that after 100 years or more the problem of occupational hazards and of safety measures in industry is extremely important, and has been overlooked for far too long in our social legislation.

● (1630)

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great care to the beginning of the speech of the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Martin), and I heard those magic words we hear in private members' hour from hon. members on the government side to the effect that they basically support certain matters. If that is the case, especially when we are dealing with a motion and not a bill, and if hon. members opposite generally support this resolution, which deals specifically with the occupational health standards and problems of miners working under the jurisdiction of the federal government, a government which is supported and propped up by hon. members opposite, one of whom just spoke, they will allow this motion to pass. If that is the case, I am pleased. I am prepared to support this motion, and I commend the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) for bringing it forward.

Some may ask why a member from the national capital area should support a motion regarding mining. It goes without saying that there are very few mines in the national capital area. I dare say there are very few mines in the borough of Scarborough either.

I have some credentials—albeit somewhat distant—with respect to the operation of mines in Canada. Technology has changed, but my experience is still vivid in my memory. When I was a student at law school I worked for a portion of a year underground in a gold mine in the Schumacher area of Ontario. I worked in Stopes. I was a raise man. I ran a mucking machine. I even drove a train until I wrecked it one day, and I was not allowed to operate the train underground after that. I am glad I caused some of my colleagues to smile this afternoon, but that is the truth. I saw at first hand the working of a mine.

Working in a mine is by its nature dangerous. It differs from other occupations in which there is some aspect of danger, but working in a mine is dangerous in itself. A person can be physically injured if he is tired or if he allows himself to be unaware of what is happening around him for just a moment. The atmosphere in which mine workers carry out their duties is dangerous. There are fumes, dust and other things in mines which are injurious.

If the hon. member for Scarborough West was speaking for the majority in this House when he said he basically supports this measure—and I am sure he must have been—I hope the matter will proceed so that study of this matter can take place in the appropriate committee. I hope today through this motion the House will express support for taking steps to raise occupational health standards for miners.

We tend to think of mining as being under provincial jurisdiction, and it is. There are some very sophisticated standards in the various provinces of Canada. They vary from one province to another, but in Ontario there is some considerable sophistication which has been viewed critically in the Hamm report. Perhaps that is a good thing. Out of that there may be some action taken in terms of mining in Ontario.

However, there is a considerable amount of mining taking place in the Yukon Territory and in the Northwest Territories. That industry is likely to grow as we look more and more to those areas for resources to be used for national purposes. I do not believe it will be possible for any responsible federal government which has jurisdiction over those territories to leave the question of mine safety to ordinances of the territorial councils, as well intentioned as they may be.

I gather that is the thrust of the hon. member's motion. There will be a day when those territories will be provinces, and then we hope they will have the resources to develop criteria with respect to mining and a host of other things, but they do not have those resources now. Therefore they depend on the federal government—their mother and father, so to speak—for that kind of guidance. That being so, there is a case to be made for a national mining act.

With respect to the argument that this kind of thing was dealt with in the throne speech, of course it was dealt with in the throne speech, but these things are a long time coming, for one reason or another. There may be a good administrative reason for this, although it is unknown to me. I do not want this to be a partisan day, but I think we have a responsibility in this House today in a non-partisan way to urge the government, by agreeing to this motion, to speed things up. We are not dealing with statistics, we are dealing with men and women who are involved directly or indirectly in the mining industry, and I hope hon. members on the government side will recognize the important human problem which is involved.

The last argument made by the hon. member opposite, who said at the same time he basically supports this motion, was that the focus of the motion is too narrow. The motion focuses on an immediate problem. In the federal territories there is no particular industrial safety problem compared with the magnitude of the problems there are in the mining industry. If the hon. member needs a reason for the narrow focus of the motion, that is a good reason, and if he wants to look to precedent, he can look to the precedents in all the provinces of Canada where mining is dealt with separately and other industries are dealt with separately because there are unique problems in each. However, that is not a reason to wait, and I hope hon. members opposite will consider this matter.

It really is a tragedy that we tend to wait for some major upheaval before we look at the mining industry or any other industry in which tragedies occur. There is no immediate problem at the moment in the federal territories, but this is a good opportunity for this House to express its concern about possible problems.

We tend to think of mining only in the traditional sense of mining from the surface of the earth upon which man can walk, and machines move down into the ground to extract minerals. According to information given to us yesterday at an interparliamentary union luncheon, we are now in the process of considering technology for mining the seabed in more or less the traditional sense of the word. We are speaking in terms of removing nodules from the seabed. That is a whole new technology, and I think there is an opportunity for us to keep safety legislation parallel with and up to the technology we are developing.

● (1640)

I commend the hon. member for Nickel Belt. I do not often do that, but he has touched a problem with which I have some experience. I commend him for bringing this motion forward and I hope the House will support it.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any question that we are going to talk this motion out because we do have something to say about it. We support the notion but not necessarily the motion. We think there are better ways of dealing with the same problem. It would be almost impossible to get a national mining act through this House because of the constitutional aspect of the question. We believe there are other approaches, and we have taken steps which make rather more sense than this motion, certainly until constitutional changes are brought about.

I have some concern that the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) has virtually threatened members if we talk this motion out. I consider that a kind of blackmail and it disturbs me a great deal. It is an unparliamentary approach to this matter.

The hon. member has more experience in a mining community than I, although I have worked and lived near mining communities. I understand his concern because there is no more depressed community in this country than a depressed mining community. The hon. member lives near one of the wealthiest, but many of the smaller ones are one industry towns and local tax revenues are poor, as are amenities for the miners. There is a good deal of movement back and forth as people take jobs for only a short period of time. It is an industry which is not itself depressed, but an industry where the people are depressed. I accept this and I am concerned about it. One of the reasons for this is that mining and natural resources are provincial concerns, and it may be easier for a large corporation to manipulate the provinces than the federal government. This is something that members of his party have said on many occasions.

The motion deals with health and safety in the main, but it also deals with a federal presence in the area of mining. I am concerned about some of the things that have happened or are happening in northern Ontario, such as the closing of the asbestos mine in Matachewan in the past ten days. A good deal of work was done regarding this particular mine by the hon. member's party. I understand that the Ontario leader of the party now says that mine is in good shape but it has been closed because it has no money. According to an article in the Ottawa Citizen on March 9, the chairman of the company said:

> We had $35 million in hand from U.S. financial institutions to refund our outstanding loans until the lead company—an insurance firm—met the premier the morning before the speech.

He added:

> They pulled out of the arrangement with us right afterwards.

This seems to be one of the problems, although part of the difficulty is that this mine is related to ownership of a mine in Quebec. As a result of the closing, 300 jobs were lost. This is a golden opportunity for the federal government to become involved, because through the Canada Development Corporation and ownership of the Texas Gulf Company we have properties near by. It would seem to be a natural area where the CDC could move in because of these valuable assets. In addition to the 300 people out of work, suppliers and subsuppliers etc. are also suffering.

This is a national problem and it needs a national solution, yet there are constitutional barriers which prevent action. I can suggest one way, through the CDC, in which the federal government can become involved.

In northwestern Ontario there are a number of small mines and many of us think they should be worked if there are valuable resources in them, especially when prices are better than they were when they closed. However, there is a need for things like portable mills and money for the small operator in order that these mines can be reworked. There are capable people available, and yet there does not seem to be support, national or otherwise, for any but major operations.

Transportation is another problem. At one INCO mine, a major line of the CNR passes within a mile or so and yet the ore is being hauled out by truck on a road that was especially built.

I would suggest that the federal government should play a larger role in the mining industry, but I know we have a very difficult problem. Both opposition parties have said that the provinces must be supreme and that we must not take these industries away from the provinces. With the oil industry, which is akin to mining, we are reminded that it is a provincial resource and that the federal government has no business interfering. On the other hand, both oppostion parties now tell us that the federal government ought to get into the mining area.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McRae: There is a section in this act which deals with the whole area of mines—

Mr. Rodriguez: What act?

Mr. McRae: I am sorry, this resolution.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

● (1650)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. Rodriguez: Why are you not better prepared before you speak?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Perhaps the House will show equal courtesy to all hon. members, and allow the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. McRae) to make his remarks.

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, I tried to deal with this industry from a national standpoint, since I think there are national implications to the question. I do not doubt that.

For a few minutes I should like to deal with the area of health. As the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Martin) indicated, we believe there is a serious problem to be considered, but that the proposed mining act does not provide the answer. Action would take too long and we could run into constitutional difficulties. We think our approach is probably best, given the present situation with respect to the constitution and the federal government's present difficulty in dealing with the provinces. Therefore, like the hon. member for Scarborough West, I wish to deal with this matter from the standpoint of occupational safety.

Mr. Rodriguez: We are talking about the territories. Why do you not talk about them?

Mr. McRae: Matters related to the occupational safety and health of miners and workers engaged in associated surface operations are subject to existing legislation and regulations, federal, provincial, and territorial. The content and administration of these statutory requirements are reviewed from time to time by the regulatory authorities concerned, and are revised as required. Federal jurisdiction for these purposes in the mining industry is, by acts of parliament, confined to the mining and processing of uranium, coal mining carried out by the Cape Breton Development Corporation, and the mining of base metals in the Flin Flon mineral area by the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Company.

Part IV of the Canada Labour Code, safety of employees, and the safety and health regulations made pursuant to it, apply to all aspects of occupational safety and health in federal works, undertakings and businesses except where such application is preempted, as for example by the Atomic Energy Control Act. Workers under federal jurisdiction in occupations directly involved in the mining of coal, uranium, and base metals are under the general regulations of Part IV of the Canada Labour Code, regulations made under the Atomic Energy Control Act and, by arrangement, the mining regulations of Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Ontario.

To take a portion of workers and work places under federal jurisdiction, for example, miners and mines, and make them subject to a new act of parliament and regulations resulting therefrom would in effect duplicate the existing provisions of Part IV of the Canada Labour Code and of the Atomic Energy Control Act and might result in delaying the development and implementation of higher standards through revision of existing enactments and mandatory standards.

A federal presence in the field of occupational safety and health of miners already exists through the implementation of the regulations made under Part IV of the Canada Labour Code in coal mines and regulations made under the Atomic Energy Control Act in uranium mining operations.

Assistance to and co-operation with provincial departments and agencies that have a responsibility for mine safety and occupational health is considered to be an important and ongoing function of the federal government, and there are established means for consultation and sharing of information among the several interests and authorities. As the hon. member for Scarborough West indicated, active consideration is being given to the creation of a National Institute of Occupational Safety and Health which, as its name implies, would be a technically competent and authoritative body for the identification and evaluation of hazards to the safety and health of workers, and to develop standards and other means for their control. Such a centre would be governed by a board representing federal and provincial authorities, labour, management, scientific and other professional interests. Through the work and efforts of an institute of this kind it is confidently expected that higher standards of occupational safety and health would be developed and implemented for all places of work—I emphasize all places of work—including mining which has its own special problems in this field.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I suppose they will be developed by the year 2000.

Mr. McRae: Since the purposes or objects of the motion we are considering are capable of being achieved through existing enactments, and in fact are already being dealt with to some extent, supplementary means of accomplishing these desirable ends are being planned. Therefore motion No. 27 is not supportable. Further, because of the limited extent of direct federal concern in this industry the provinces are very likely to view—

Mr. Gillies: This has nothing to do with the provinces.

Mr. McRae: —an initiative of this kind, especially at this time, as an unwelcome intrusion into a field clearly and almost entirely in provincial jurisdiction.

Mr. Rodriguez: What about the provisions of Bills C-16, C-2, and other similar bills?

Mr. McRae: Actually, both opposition parties have many times said that the government has no business being involved in the resource field. For these reasons it would make most sense if we were to develop an institute, and work with the provinces in developing standards. And we could do this under existing legislation.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. McRae: Certainly, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, has the hon. member read the motion?

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, not only have I read the motion on three different occasions; I included part of the motion in my speech.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Did you understand the motion?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Did you understand it?

Mr. McRae: The motion is of broad import, but is not likely to be accepted by the provinces.

Mr. Gillies: It has nothing to do with the provinces.

Mr. McRae: I suggest that we could act in this area quickly and effectively by creating the kind of institute which has been mentioned, and working with the provinces on health matters.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being five o'clock and the hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired, this House stands adjourned until 2 p.m. next Monday, pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

REQUEST FOR STUDY OF EFFECT OF INTRODUCTION OF IMITATION CHEESE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The introduction into Canada of imitation cheese is now a real possibility and is being considered seriously by some companies, and since it could seriously threaten the income of industrial milk producers, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn):

That the government undertake comprehensive studies on the possibility of disastrous economic effects on the already hard hit industrial milk producers and the possible nutritional effects of imitation cheese on Canadians.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43 such a motion cannot be presented for debate without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

SUGGESTION THAT SPOUSE OF DECEASED PENSIONER RECEIVE TWO-THIRDS OF TOTAL PENSION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgency and importance.

In view of the great number of people between 60 and 65 who are facing serious problems of survival, particularly in the case of pensioners' widows, and considering that it has become urgent to apply a new policy in this field, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That this House implement as soon as possible the recommendation of the Fédération de l'âge d'or du Québec, a copy of which has been sent to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), to the effect that a person of 60, who has the misfortune of losing her pensioner spouse, could draw two-thirds of their aggregate pensions, until she is 65, when she can draw her full old age pension.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The presentation of such a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

SUGGESTION THAT MINISTER MAKE STATEMENT ON EFFECTS OF MOVE OF CAST SHIPPING TO HALIFAX—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Raymond Dupont (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion concerning a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the proposed move of the Cast North America Company Ltd. from Montreal to Halifax, of the undesirable implications such a decision might have on the economy of the port of Montreal, and in view also of the fact that this company's departure would lead to an increase in the surtax on tonnage from $2.94 to $4.10, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Dupras):

That the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) make a statement on motions on that subject so that the House be perfectly well informed of the implications of such a departure on the port of Montreal.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, the motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: Since the House gives unanimous consent, I shall put the motion. Seconded by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Dupras), the hon. member for Sainte-Marie (Mr. Dupont) moves:

That the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) make a statement on motions on that subject, so that the House be perfectly well informed of the implications of such a departure on the port of Montreal.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

SUGGESTED INVESTIGATION OF OPERATION OF BENEFIT CONTROL SYSTEM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, namely the operation of the benefit control system within the Unemployment Insurance Commission. In view of the fact that numerous allegations have been made that "non-cheaters" are being systematically cut off from unemployment insurance benefits—a serious charge at any time but even more so at a time when we are facing record high unemployment rates and dangerously low job vacancy rates—I move, seconded by the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth):

[Mr. Dupont.]

That this House instructs the minister to initiate an investigation into the operation of the benefit control system of the Unemployment Insurance Commission and to report back to the House within three weeks the results of this investigation.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 43 presentation of such a motion for debate requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

ENERGY

REQUEST FOR ROYAL COMMISSION INQUIRY INTO DEVELOPMENT AND USE OF ATOMIC ENERGY—POSSIBLE COMMITTEE STUDY

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Leader of the Opposition has suggested a national inquiry into all aspects of the development of nuclear energy in Canada. At first the minister suggested that the Porter Commission in Ontario would be sufficient but he has now indicated in correspondence that such an inquiry might be undertaken by the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works. In light of the fact that this Committee has no real resources to conduct such an inquiry in terms of personnel, finances and subpoena powers, and in light of the experience of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts in a more restricted matter concerning sales of CANDU units abroad, would the minister agree to a royal commission inquiry with full powers of subpoena, adequate staff and finances to undertake this task?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I made it very clear in my reply to the hon. Leader of the Opposition, a copy of which I would be prepared to make public as he made his letter to me public, that I have never been against an inquiry into this area. Indeed, I think it is very important that there be a full and open public discussion about the whole question of nuclear energy, its resources and its benefits. The Porter Commission in Ontario is dealing with many aspects of the question of nuclear energy. I believe that the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works could well spend a good deal of its time examining the nuclear options under the reference it presently has. I told the Leader of the Opposition that my officials and I would be pleased to co-operate.

Mr. Crosbie: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister is suggesting that the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works can undertake this job. Would the minister not agree that it is very likely that committee would be no more effective than the Public Accounts Committee is when it is investigating the more restricted matter of the sale of these units? Would the minister promise active co-operation with all government departments and agencies rather than the mere lip service that the Public Accounts Committee has received in its inquiries?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated my support and the offer of my co-operation and that of my department.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

INVESTIGATION OF PAYMENT OF AGENCY FEES BY ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA LIMITED—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I have a final supplementary question for the Solicitor General. The Royal Canadian Mounted Police were asked by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to ascertain if enough information was available for an RCMP investigation into the payment of agency fees by AECL with respect to the sale of certain nuclear reactors. It is our understanding that the RCMP has completed that investigation and its report is now in the hands of the Solicitor General. Will the Solicitor General advise the House if he has received a report and if the report will be made public, or if there will be further investigations or charges laid as a result of the RCMP investigation into this matter?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I have not been advised by the RCMP that the inquiry is finished. Actually, I have been advised to the contrary, that the investigation is not quite complete, and as yet I have no report in my hand.

ENERGY

POSSIBILITY OF SELLING SECOND CANDU REACTOR TO SOUTH KOREA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister? Since the Chairman of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, Ross Campbell, told the Public Accounts Committee that AECL has entered into an agreement with Shaul Eisenberg covering a possible second reactor sale to South Korea, and since the Korean government has now ordered that future purchases of reactors are to be made under competitive bids, and has stated that no bid has been received from AECL even though the Korean Electric Company is shopping for two more reactors and interest has been expressed by France, Britain, Italy, Switzerland and the United States, I would ask the Acting Prime Minister if the government is serious about its intention to sell another reactor to South Korea?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe there have been any negotiations up to this time with respect to another reactor. If the government of Korea or the Korean Electric Company were interested in purchasing a second CANDU reactor we would, of course, be interested in discussing this with them.

Mr. Clarke: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. According to Canada's representative in these matters, the government has entered into a contract with an agent. My question, if I can repeat it, is this: is it the government's intention to carry on with the sale?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, it certainly is our intention to carry on with the sale, to complete the contract already entered into.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REASON FOR DROP IN TOTAL AMOUNT OF BENEFITS PAID—PROPOSED INVESTIGATION OF BENEFIT CONTROL SYSTEM

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Last Monday, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby asked the minister to explain why unemployment insurance pay-outs for 1976 were down from the 1975 pay-out level even though unemployment increased in 1976. The minister said he was puzzled by this anomaly and would try to find an answer. Has he found the answer?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, when quoting figures last week we referred to the number of claims received, not allowed. Under Bill C-69 an individual 65 years old or over cannot claim UI. That had a depressing effect on the figure. The number of people allowed benefits was down only slightly. The increase in payments went from about $3.1 billion to $3.4 billion. It seems that the average duration of payments was longer, particularly in areas of worsening economic conditions. The average duration in 1976 was about 18.4 weeks, as compared with about 17.9 weeks in 1975.

Mr. Blackburn: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Last week the minister said in the House that, with respect to the benefit control system, "the only people who are suffering hardship are those who are actually cheating." Since the minister has been sent letters from metro Toronto legal aid centres pointing out that large numbers of non-cheaters are being cut off benefits, will the minister investigate the operation of the benefit control system and report his findings to the House in a statement on motions?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I think that those suffering were in fact cheaters, that is, those who were working and drawing unemployment insurance at the same time. But there are other individuals who have failed to indicate that they are looking for work. I would not suggested that they are cheating. When they have indicated that they have made a legitimate job search, they are reinstated automatically.

PUBLICATION OF STANDARDS USED BY BENEFIT CONTROL OFFICERS IN ASSESSING ELIGIBILITY OF CLAIMANTS

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As the Unemployment Insurance Commission, in assessing the eligibility of persons to receive benefits, uses arbitrary standards which vary from province to province and city to city, and as these standards are not made known to those applying for benefits, will the minister make public these standards, by tabling in this House copies of all guides and materials used by benefit control officers in assessing eligibility to receive UIC benefits?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, under one of the services provided by the Unemployment Insurance Commission, our interviewing officers indicate to individuals what job searches they should be conducting. Here, again, common sense is brought to bear. Since only a certain number of jobs may be available in a particular area, whereas in another area there may be far more numerous job opportunities, it is clear that conditions are going to vary. The standards are not set in any arbitrary way; they are established with a view to helping individuals in times of high unemployment obtain the benefit of interviews with manpower officers and available job opportunities. This is done in an attempt to help the unemployed, Mr. Speaker.

ALLEGATION BENEFIT CONTROL OFFICERS PROMOTED ON BASIS OF PRODUCTIVITY

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer the minister once again to the article in the Toronto Star prepared by Olivia Ward. It indicated that there was a quota system and a heavy handed approach by the government with regard to unemployment insurance claimants. Is the minister aware of the fact that Roger Tardiff, who is his acting chief of the Ontario region, has indicated that benefit control staff are promoted and given raises according to their productivity records? Surely the minister knows we are not talking about ingots in a steel company. Will he now without any hesitation and with firm direction pass on to the benefit control officers that this type of program must cease forthwith?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Being a lawyer, as is the hon. member, I would first like to hear the other side of the story, to ascertain if Mr. Tardiff said that, given the other inaccuracies in the Olivia Ward article. Most assuredly that is not the basis on which anybody should be promoted, that is productivity, not policemen giving traffic tickets or individuals giving interviews.

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF ALLEGATIONS IN REPORT OF TORONTO "STAR" OF MARCH 5, 1977

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I hope the minister will contact his subordinate in order to look into the entire matter, particularly all of the issues which were raised in that article. In view of the fact that in-house investigations are questionable, not satisfactory and are usually suspect, will the minister direct the unemployment insurance advisory committee to investigate and publicly report back on all the allegations in the Toronto Star of March 5, 1977? This is extremely important. His predecessor did this in the past and I hope the minister will move in a similar direction. Will he at the same time cause the said committee to investigate the reasons for and the extent of the increase in fraud affecting unemployment insurance? In other words, what is wrong with the act? Can the minister give us some assurance with respect to those steps?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): As I said, Mr. Speaker, the article by Olivia Ward is fraught with errors, mistatements and incorrect information. I do not want to ask the advisory council to examine something that is obviously in error.

Mr. Alexander: I reject the minister's answer in this regard.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: Just take your sweet time, dear friend. I indicated to the minister that in-house investigations are unsatisfactory, suspect and that we must have an independent inquiry with respect to this matter. He has set up a committee made up of labour, and there is the Minister of—what is your title, sir?—Industry, Trade and Commerce, and you are not doing a good job in that regard. Will the minister see to it that this committee is brought into play in order that we can have a fair investigation regarding this very serious charge? That is all I am asking.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cullen: The louder the voice, the louder the applause. We do conduct constant investigations in an endeavour to indicate whether we might improve upon the system. I do not think it appropriate that I should call in this particular advisory group when I am not satisfied with the accuracy of the reporting that was done. If there are legitimate complaints, this group needs no impetus from me to get moving.

AGRICULTURE

POSSIBILITY OF FREE DISTRIBUTION OF MILK IN SCHOOLS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture.

Could the minister advise the House whether his department intends to pay part of the costs of the program which his provincial counterpart has announced for next September, a program which will make it possible to have free milk distribution in schools and will likely develop in youngsters the habit of consuming dairy products?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, my department has no such intention at this time. As I said before, that is a social services program. The provincial governments are providing that in the schools in some instances at the present time.

[Translation]

INDUSTRIAL MILK—COMPARISON OF FEDERAL AND QUEBEC AID PROGRAMS

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Quebec government has certainly demonstrated more generosity towards farmers than the federal government through its recently announced stabilization policy of farm incomes, could the minister assure the House that Quebec will not be penalized because of that, as his provincial counterpart greatly fears? I am referring here to the fact that the Canadian government will reduce by 50 per cent its assistance to producers who join a provincial income stabilization scheme which proves more generous than that of the central government.

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Until now as the industrial milk producers of Quebec have been practically totally supported by the federal government, to suggest that the program announced by the provincial minister of agriculture in Quebec will be more generous than ours is just not factual.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REASON CANADA AGREED AT UNITED NATIONS TO KEEP HUMAN RIGHTS VIOLATIONS IN UGANDA UNDER REVIEW UNTIL 1978

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that the Canadian permanent representative at the UN Commission on Human Rights was authorized to pursue, in concert with other delegations, the establishment of an investigatory body to examine the whole range of violations of human rights alleged to have been committed in Uganda in recent years and that apparently, in a closed meeting of the Commission, it simply decided to keep the situation under review until 1978, can the minister tell us whether Canada agreed to this procedure, whether any votes were taken, whether Canada voted for that proposition and explain why we simply agreed to have the matter kept under review bearing in mind the serious situation which presently exists in Uganda?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I do not know the source of the hon. member's information but I have to tell him he is better informed on this subject than I am at the moment.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Jamieson: I do not mind admitting it when an hon. member knows something I do not know. I have not heard anything about this officially. If the hon. member agrees, I will take his question as notice and get all the information for him.

POSSIBILITY OF DISCUSSING VIOLATIONS OF HUMAN RIGHTS BY UGANDA AT COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): I will be grateful to hear from the minister with respect to this situation because I know he himself felt strongly that this was one avenue worth pursuing by the Human Rights Commission.

In relation to the meetings which took place over the past weekend between the Prime Minister and the Prime Minister of Great Britain, may I ask whether or not further discussions took place on this matter either with respect to initiatives under the umbrella of the United Nations or, more particularly, along lines the minister himself referred to when he appeared before the Committee on External Affairs and National Defence and indicated he would recommend to the Prime Minister the placing of an item upon the agenda at the meeting of Commonwealth heads of government to take place later this year? Was there substantial agreement on this matter with the British Prime Minister and is there now a strong initiative to have this whole matter raised at that Commonwealth meeting?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I think I can answer yes to the question in general without indicating that all those matters were discussed in precisely the form in which the hon. member has raised them. We did talk about Uganda and about the need to discuss these questions. I should say that a fair amount of the responsibility for the agenda rests with the Secretariat of the Commonwealth as opposed to any individual government. Therefore, while I have no doubt this subject will be discussed, I am not sure at the moment just what form the discussion will take or how it will get before the heads of government.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I think it should be recognized that the recommendations of senior governments within the Commonwealth, such as our own and that of the United Kingdom, will very largely determine the shape of the agenda. It is important that Canadians be clear that the firm recommendation of our government and that of the United Kingdom is in favour of an agenda item with respect to this matter. It is not whether the Secretariat will be considering this or not but whether our government has gone on record as saying that from our point of view it is a requirement as an agenda item.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I obviously cannot speak on behalf of the Government of the United Kingdom, but as far as Canada is concerned I do not think there is any question at all but that we anticipate this matter will be discussed and will also, undoubtedly be discussed in the broader context of human rights in general. The subject of human rights will also probably be on the agenda as well as on the agenda of the summit meeting which is to be held shortly before the Commonwealth meeting takes place. I repeat, however, that there is some question as to how exactly the agenda is to be formulated and at the moment we have not heard from the Secretary General as to what, for instance, other African countries may wish to do with regard to the discussion of the Ugandan question.

CANADIAN INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT AGENCY

ALLEGED REFUSAL OF OFFICIAL IN HAITI TO PERMIT VISIT TO PROJECT BY MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. As I wrote to the minister on January 14, which is exactly two months ago today, regarding the refusal of our senior CIDA representative in Haiti to make it possible for a visiting member of parliament to see our $20 million CIDA project in that country, would the minister explain why, during the past two months, I have received no report regarding this inexcusable lack of courtesy and duty?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the first part of the question, namely the refusal to welcome a distinguished member of the House, I do not know for certain that that is the case, although I have every reason to take the hon. member's word for that. I would agree with him, however, that failure to reply in two months is inexcusable and I will make inquiries this afternoon to find out why he has not received that answer.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to assure the minister that the facts are exactly as I outlined them to him in my detailed letter.

Would the minister not agree that permitting our CIDA representatives abroad not to explain such a lack of courtesy and duty indicates to them that this government condones this sort of thing and believes, as they seem to do, that members of parliament do not have the right and duty to see how the taxpayers' money is spent abroad on projects of this kind? If that is not the case, would the minister get on with the job immediately of getting that report into my hands?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, the second question is a little redundant since I already said I would get on with it immediately, and I assure the hon. member he will have an answer very quickly.

[Mr. Jamieson.]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REASON FOR DELAY IN LOCATING DEFENCE RESEARCH CENTRE IN WINNIPEG—ALLEGED DIFFICULTY ACQUIRING LAND

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. On March 8 in a news release the minister stated that he would not be able to continue with the locating of the new Defence Research Centre in Winnipeg due to budgetary constraints, but the former minister of national defence, the hon. member for Winnipeg South, in a public statement on Friday stated:

> It just is not correct to say the money is not available. It was approved by Treasury Board. I know because I got the money approved for that expenditure in the west at the same time as the funds were approved for the language college in Quebec.

I would like to ask the minister why there is delay in locating the centre in Winnipeg when funds have already been allocated by Treasury Board.

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the same questions are being asked by my colleague, the distinguished Minister without Portfolio from Manitoba.

Some hon. Members: Who is he?

Mr. Danson: The fact is that I, too, had those questions, in a period of time after the funds have been approved, as to why it had not gone ahead. There were difficulties in acquiring the land. I had given instructions to proceed with the acquisition of land to meet the options open and to make certain that decentralization was carried out in Winnipeg, and that the research and development efforts and the industrial efforts benefit Winnipeg in the best way for the longest terms, as I pointed out in committee.

Mr. McKenzie: The minister stated a number of times that he is having difficulties acquiring the land, but the former minister stated:

> . . . it was also not correct to say that there were difficulties encountered in acquiring the land for a site in Winnipeg.

As the department has had the land purchase contract in its hands for almost three months now, can the minister tell us what difficulties he is experiencing, because he is getting the land at an absolute steal?

Mr. Danson: I would be delighted to, Mr. Speaker. It is not actual acquisition of the land that is the difficulty, although I gave that impression. This is not precisely correct. It was the closing of rights of way, the need to expropriate some properties or to avoid the expropriation of some properties, but mostly it had to do with civic regulations regarding the accesses and closing of accesses.

LOCATION OF DEFENCE RESEARCH CENTRE IN WINNIPEG AS PART OF DECENTRALIZATION PROGRAM

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): The former minister of national defence stated also in his public statement on Friday:

If the Liberal government does not go ahead with the Manitoba Defence Research establishment it will be clear evidence that it does not believe in its policy of decentralization . . .

I should like to ask the minister whether the moving of the Defence Research Centre to Winnipeg will be part of the over-all decentralization policy of the government?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): As my colleague and I have discussed, decentralization still continues. We want to make certain that it is proper decentralization, the wise use of taxpayers' money, the longest-term benefits, the best benefit for the people of Winnipeg and for Manitoba.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED DEBATE ON INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is a supplementary one to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the questions that were asked a few moments ago by the hon. member for Egmont and also the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings, I would ask the minister whether or not he would return to the experience of the past in connection with international affairs when Mackenzie King, during the days of war, regularly set aside a couple of days for the discussion of international affairs. That course was followed by the St. Laurent government, by the Pearson government and by my government. The result was that the government heard the views of members of parliament.

Does he not think now is the appropriate time for the government to set aside a couple of days so that we can discuss such matters as the effrontery and diabolical cruelty of Amin as well as the question of the invasion of human rights by the U.S.S.R. and the Helsinki agreement to get the views of members of parliament on these questions? I ask him that in all sincerity because so far as the situation today is concerned foreign affairs have become the monopoly of Ivan Head, the Prime Minister and the minister, and the rest of us—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: —do not have any say in these matters and cannot make our views known in this connection.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised to see the hon. member for Egmont applauding those strong words of the right hon. member for Prince Albert. He knows I was before the committee of the House for three hours just last week and before the Senate committee also last week. In so far as discussing these matters in this chamber is concerned, I have no objection to that. I am not sure what the mechanism would be for bringing this subject before the House. Obviously, one is to have an opposition day devoted to external affairs. But if there is another technique, I would willingly discuss it with the House leader to see what can be done about it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: This is an alibi that has been used regularly by the present government. In the past, however, various governments wanted to know what the average member thought and it was the government that would set aside the two days. I am sure that irrespective of the tremendous intelligence of the three persons I named, members of parliament could contribute quite a lot at this time and, in particular, could let the world know what we think of having Amin appear at the Commonwealth conference.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

POSTPONEMENT OF PROGRAM ON SYNCRUDE PROJECT—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE NO COMMUNICATION BETWEEN CABINET AND CORPORATION

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State I should like to direct my question to the acting minister. Will the minister confirm to the House the report in the March 12 issue of the Globe and Mail that the broadcast of the CBC journalistic drama on the Syncrude project has been postponed indefinitely, allegedly because one of its key characters is currently premier of a province and therefore would add extra controversy to the current image of the CBC? If this is the case, will the minister assure the House that there was no communication between the CBC and federal cabinet members on the issue?

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I will seek information about the hon. member's statement and report to him.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE NO COMMUNICATION BETWEEN CABINET AND CORPORATION ON CONTENT OF NEWS PROGRAMS

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. HEALTH

STUDY OF FOODS AND DRUGS CONSIDERED DANGEROUS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Now that tests on saccharin and allied products have been carried out by the food and drug administration, and now that they are to be taken from the market, will the minister inform the House if other foodstuffs and drugs are under similar study? There is great doubt about their safety, and if there is a comparison between these kinds of studies and the study carried out on saccharin, will the burden of proof be put on producers and the benefit of doubt be given to the consumers of this country? Will these products which are possibly under study—and we will find that out from the minister's answers—be withdrawn from the market before the final word is in?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, under the Food and Drugs Act, whenever a new product is to be out on the market in compliance with this legislation, manufacturers must submit to the Health Protection Branch considerable evidence on the quality and value of this product from a health point of view. These regulations now exist and any new request to put a product on the market made by a manufacturer under the Food and Drugs Act shall comply with the extremely strict criteria provided by the law. At the present time, the manufacturer has to file evidence before the department will grant a licence for the distribution of these products.

[English]

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, while everybody in the House applauds the minister's taking saccharin and allied products off the market, does the minister not feel that because of the debate going on it might have been more desirable to have withdrawn saccharin long ago, that a similar situation vis-à-vis studies could have applied to foodstuffs and other drugs now being tested, that the government should act sooner rather than later and that the benefit of the doubt should be given to the consumer?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: No, Mr. Speaker.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PROPOSED REVERSAL OF DECISION TO MOVE AIRBORNE REGIMENT FROM EDMONTON

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. The chief of the defence staff stated in committee that moving the Canadian Airborne Regiment from Edmonton to Petawawa would make the force operationally less effective. Would the minister now reverse his decision on this less effective operation and leave the Canadian Airborne Regiment in Edmonton?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is taking words out of context. This move makes the force more operationally effective. There are to be some compromises made on the day-to-day operation, but in the over-all picture of the armed forces this makes them far more effective.

REMOVAL OF AIRBORNE REGIMENT FROM EDMONTON—REQUEST FOR DELAY TO CONSULT NEW CHIEF OF STAFF

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, if the minister had been in the committee, he would have heard the chief of staff. However, would the minister at least wait and consult with the new chief of the defence staff when General Dextraze, that honourable and distinguished soldier, retires before executing this most expensive and political exercise?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, this move is not expensive, as the hon. member says; it is cost effective, and it is only political in the sense that it is in the best interests of all Canadians.

FINANCE

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON REMOVAL OF SALES TAX FROM EQUIPMENT PURCHASED BY MUNICIPALITIES

Mrs. Jean E. Pigott (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance. As the minister knows, municipalities are facing increasing budgetary difficulties, despite vigorous austerity measures. In view of the fact that another increase in municipal tax rates is probable and that this increase will be reflected in the consumer price index, what consideration has the minister given to the removal of all federal sales taxes applied to purchases by municipal governments for equipment to operate essential public services?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there are already a fair number of exemptions in the Excise Tax Act for acquisitions by municipal institutions; for example, transit authorities of municipalities. I would have to say that a substantial withdrawal of any part of the excise tax would involve the imposition of the same taxation somewhere else on other taxpayers. In that sense I am not anticipating a change in this regard, but I will take the question as a representation to be considered in budget preparation.

Mrs. Pigott: Mr. Speaker, I realize my predecessor in Ottawa-Carleton was able to remove the tax on water, but there having been representation by the Ontario Municipal Electric Association regarding federal sales tax on material and equipment used for electrical distribution systems under the control of municipalities—and this would really do a great deal to help lower housing costs and lower the taxes paid by consumers of municipal services—would the minister address himself especially to the electrical supply area?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to consider that particular representation.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

STRIKE AT GRIFFIN STEEL, TRANSCONA—GOVERNMENT EFFORTS TO SETTLE

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Labour I would like to direct my question to his parliamentary secretary. My question is with respect to the strike which is taking place at Griffin Steel in Transcona, Manitoba, and which has been going on for a number of months. The situation has turned into a very ugly confrontation between Winnipeg police and the strikers. I would like to ask the parliamentary secretary whether his minister's department is aware of the situation and whether it has tried to get the various parties together in the hope of ending the strike, especially in view of the fear of many Manitobans that if the strike continues Griffin could close and the production of rail car wheels would take place in another province.

DATE OF INTRODUCTION OF YOUNG OFFENDERS ACT

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. Has the proposed young offenders act yet cleared Treasury Board, and if it has, when can we expect to see that long awaited bill?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, we have gone through a very elaborate and very complex process of consultation to ensure that all points of view were known before we brought out the federal position. We would like once again to discuss it with the provinces. I would like to make the federal position known by the end of this month.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CONFERENCE ON EDUCATION IN BRUSSELS—FEDERAL REPRESENTATION IN VIEW OF ALLEGED POSITION OF QUEBEC

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister and because of the international implications of my question I would like to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In light of the attitude said to have been adopted by the Quebec government with respect to an international conference on education in Brussels, what steps is the government planning to take to ensure an appropriate single federal presence at that conference?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member, I have seen the comments of the spokesman for the government of the province of Quebec. I can only give the same response I gave during the weekend in answer to a news inquiry, namely, that we are continuing to schedule these conferences and the make-up of the delegations attending them in precisely the same way as we have in the past. No changes are being contemplated. I have not as yet heard official word from the government of the province of Quebec. It may have reached my department, but I understand the matter is still being discussed at that level.

WATER RESOURCES CONFERENCE IN BUENOS AIRES—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL REPRESENTATION

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, in light of the exactly opposite attitude adopted by the government of the province of Quebec with respect to another conference being held—I believe on water resources in Buenos Aires—what steps is the government taking to ensure again that there will be a single Canadian federal voice at that international conference?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I can answer with more precision with regard to the water conference because that issue has been resolved. Each province will have the same representation. It will be a federal delegation. The vice chairman of the delegation, as is frequently the case, will be Mr. Green, a minister from the province of Manitoba. In last minute negotiations we did agree that for those provinces which wish to do so their representation could be increased from one to two persons, but beyond that there has been no change. I gather the hon. member is asking about the province of Quebec. The province of Quebec or any other province wishing to have two representatives rather than one may have two. Beyond that there has been no change from what we have normally done at such international meetings.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON EFFECTIVENESS OF ANTI-SUBMARINE FORCES—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. In an interview program on Thursday evening the minister averred that our anti-submarine forces in the Atlantic are capable of finding and destroying nuclear armed submarines to an extent that would nullify the submarine-launched second-strike capability of an enemy. As these remarks are at variance with every knowledgeable military observer or expert that I know of, can the minister inform the House what grounds he has for making such statements which, if they came from someone other than the Minister of National Defence, would simply be considered uninformed nonsense?

● (1450)

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member added something that was not in that broadcast at all and that was to nullify the strength and strike capability. I was only commenting on the capability of our anti-submarine forces to seek out and destroy nuclear submarines. That is not a fool proof system; it is not 100 per cent and I think I pointed that out in that television broadcast as well.

Mr. McKinnon: Perhaps I could give my reference for the statement I have made in the form of a question. The transcript of The Watson Report contains the following exchange:

WATSON: All right. Now if that is true and we have suddenly made the Russian second-strike capacity not invulnerable, that is, it is vulnerable to our defence . . .

DANSON: Surely it is.

Further, when Mr. Watson asked if we were destroying submarines—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member put forward a very interesting challenge but hardly a question.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR STUDY OF EFFECT ON DAIRY INDUSTRY OF INTRODUCTION OF IMITATION CHEESE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. As he noted in the House on Friday, cheese consumption rose by 15 per cent in the last year and the expanded cheese industry in this country may now be threatened by imitation cheese coming from the United States, for which at least one company is lobbying. Would the minister consider making a study on the economic impact this would have on the dairy industry if indeed imitation cheese were brought into Canada?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am sure if it were allowed into Canada it would have an effect on the sales of good cheese in some instances. We intend to counteract any program such as this by entering into an advertising agreement, which has already been done, with the dairy processors who have agreed to pay for part of the advertising to sell industrial dairy products, mainly cheese products, in Canada.

Mr. Nystrom: A supplementary question. Just so that I am clear, Mr. Speaker, am I to understand that the minister will not undertake an economic impact study on the effect that imitation cheese will have on the income of dairy farmers? Will the minister undertake that type of study on behalf of dairy farmers in this country?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, even without having a study we know that if imitation cheese products take the market away from cheese producers in Canada you are going to have an economic effect on them. You do not have to be an economist to figure that out. All you have to be is a farmer and you would understand that this could be a possibility. I think we have to understand that the cheese products we are producing in Canada are superior to nearly any cheese products in the world. The very fact that we have increased our share of the market by 15 per cent last year shows that any imitation product will have a tough time competing with us.

FINANCE

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON AGRICULTURE AT GATT NEGOTIATIONS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance because I do not think the Minister of Agriculture would be able to give me a proper answer. Since agriculture organizations, provincial governments and commodity groups are literally frightened to death that agriculture could be forgotten in the upcoming GATT negotiations, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance if he could inform the House when the government position on agriculture will be put forward to the various commodity groups and provincial governments across Canada? Will there be meaningful consultation on tariffs and non-tariff measures when the Canadian position is put forward because at the present time the position is really cloudy and nobody understands exactly what the government is prepared to do?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman says, the question of agriculture has not been at the forefront of the Geneva round of discussions, principally because of a stalemate in position between the United States and the European Economic Community. We would anticipate that with a renewed effort at the MTM negotiations that the question of agriculture would be assuming more prominence. From a Canadian standpoint we would expect within a matter of a very few weeks to have an important element of this, namely, the tariff board report on fresh fruits and vegetables, available for consideration by the agricultural community and of the organizations the hon. member has mentioned and to have the opportunity of consultation in this regard. I can assure the hon. gentleman that the Minister of Agriculture has impressed upon me the importance of consultation with associations as well as provincial governments in this regard. We will, as in the industrial sector, make every effort to make certain that the viewpoint affecting Canadians will be taken into account at these negotiations.

CANADA WORKS PROGRAM—POSSIBILITY OF INCREASING FUNDS

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

In the riding of Roberval, the selection committee has just completed a first selection of the Canada Works projects, and hardly 10 per cent of the applications could be considered because of the small funds available. Given the 30 per cent unemployment rate in the area, according to the manpower centre data, can the Minister tell the House whether additional funds will be made available for the unemployed so that all the projects presently submitted could be approved, and can he tell when?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have received the hon. member's representations.

PROPOSED GRASSLAND NATIONAL PARK—DATE OF DECISION WHETHER OR NOT TO PROCEED

Mr. Frank Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. As the agreement between Saskatchewan and Canada regarding the Grassland National Park expires this month, can the minister indicate whether this park will be "go" or "no go"? The land owners involved have been waiting for years and are suffering the hardship of being unable to plan ahead.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I have been carrying on negotiations with the government of Saskatchewan. As a matter of fact I was to meet the Saskatchewan minister last week but the meeting had to be cancelled and we are looking for another date. As far as we are concerned we would like to go ahead as soon as possible.

MANPOWER

MINISTER'S VIEW OF WORK-SHARING SCHEMES USED IN EUROPE

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Last Thursday in a speech delivered to the Retail Council of Canada the minister made a statement about work-sharing schemes to the effect that "the idea has been successfully used in a number of European countries." I wonder if the minister could tell the House to which countries he was referring, which studies and by whom that have led him to the conclusion that these programs were successful?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I indicated in that address that there had been some successes and some failures, and that is why we had received some negative representations from the chamber of commerce, the Canadian Manufacturer's Association and the CLC. I was making a pitch for what I believe to be an innovative and excellent program. It won the approbation of United States authorities and that particular speech has been written into the congressional record by Senator Hubert Humphrey. I think we can discuss the details at committee—yes, I expect we will, hon. member for Hamilton West.

ENERGY

DUMPING OF RADIOACTIVE WASTE—POSITION OF ONTARIO ON SITES IN HASTINGS COUNTY AND MADOC AREA

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. On Friday last the minister's Ontario counterpart visited him. Before that time he made it clear he was not about to have nuclear waste dumped in Hastings County in the Madoc area. Can the minister tell the House whether he agrees with that and if he is prepared to say publicly that no waste will be dumped in that particular area.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think there is a lot of confusion and ignorance about this whole question. For the benefit of the hon. member perhaps I should point out that Ontario Hydro and AECL, many months ago, formed a joint task force with the knowledge of the Ontario government and the federal government which asked the Geological Survey of Canada to look at potential permanent, geologically stable sites for the disposal of waste which is of course being created by the reactors owned and operated by Ontario Hydro. It was against that kind of context of joint operation that the minister and I discussed the whole future of a managed waste disposal facility for Ontario Hydro in the province of Ontario in the years to come, and the position the minister took was that there should not be any drilling. I told him that the decision had already been taken by me that there would not be any drilling this summer.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw to the attention of hon. members the presence in the gallery today of their Excellencies the High Commissioners of Commonwealth countries. They have been your special guests, Mr. Speaker, in your capacity as this year's president of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association at a luncheon to mark Commonwealth Day.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

RECOGNITION OF FACT COMMONWEALTH COUNTRIES SIMULTANEOUSLY OBSERVING COMMONWEALTH DAY

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to rise on behalf of the government on this second Monday in March in recognition of the fact that today is Commonwealth Day. This year, for the first time, the 36 members of the Commonwealth around the world are observing Commonwealth Day simultaneously. This is, therefore, a day on which some 900 million people on five continents, who speak different languages, who have diverse cultures, who belong to different races, will take special note of their Commonwealth ties.

There are no superpowers in the Commonwealth; there is no primus inter pares—and that is one of its assets. Rather, it is an association of equal sovereign states which have voluntarily decided to come together and talk and work with each other in an atmosphere of mutual respect and understanding. In a world where negotiations among nations are too often a dialogue of the deaf, the Commonwealth provides a forum in which each member can express its views and be assured that its views will be heard. The Commonwealth promotes co-operation in place of discord, consultation in place of ignorance, and consensus in place of disharmony. Last year the Commonwealth was pleased to welcome a new member, the Seychelles which, like Canada and Mauritius, is a bilingual country and which, like Canada and Mauritius, is a full-fledged member of both the Commonwealth and "la francophonie".

We believe the Commonwealth provides an important avenue of attack on several world problems. Secretary General Ramphal recently pointed out:

> The Commonwealth has one-fourth of the world's people, but it has nearly one-half of the world's poor.

Of the poorest of the poor, those with incomes of less than $200 per annum, nearly three of every four live within the Commonwealth. This suggest the immensity of the task before us and it suggests that now, more than ever before, we must use the Commonwealth to attack the problems of poverty, inequality and degradation.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is very much looking forward to the Commonwealth heads of government meeting in London, in June, and to a further strengthening of the close contacts with our Commonwealth partners tht we have enjoyed in the past. This year that meeting will follow closely the celebrations of the silver jubilee of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth who occupies the important role of head of the Commonwealth. In London we anticipate a strengthening of resolve to find ways of ensuring that each human being is able to live free from fear and want.

Mr. Speaker, this is Commonwealth Day; it is a day of education and a day on which I wish to underline the great value which Canada attaches to its Commonwealth association.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, in the presence of the auspicious company in our gallery, I join the Acting Prime Minister in this parliamentary observance of Commonwealth Day. It should not be lost on us that this year, for the first time, Commonwealth Day is being observed by 36 nations of the Commonwealth at the same time. That, at the very least, demonstrates how small our world has become, how much the actions of nations can affect other nations, and the truth that we can no longer turn our backs on the world when it suits us.

The statistics are astronomical: 900 million people, five continents; one-half of the world's population; three out of four of the poorest of the poor in the world live in the Commonwealth; the diversity of culture, language and race—all this is testimony to the sweeping potentiality of the Commonwealth as an instrument of understanding and for improving the human condition. For those reasons and others we should all view Canada's membership as membership in a precious association to be fostered and strengthened.

While all nations have their own national problems and priorities, only the blind among us would advocate that we should turn our backs on people for whom destitution, illiteracy and lack of economic opportunity are a way of life. If the Commonwealth were merely to expose those problems, it would do a useful service; but I believe history demonstrates that it has far greater potential.

The Commonwealth, moreover, can provide us with a window to the third world which we and others not of that world would otherwise lack. Mr. Speaker, it serves as an example to all in this country and outside that our differences need not always stand in the way of reasonable dialogue. Perhaps its greatest strength for the resolution of mankind's problems is the fact that despite diversity there is a voluntary agreement to meet and to talk. While the dialogue to some may be ongoing and perhaps endless, I suggest that the solution to all problems in this world begins with dialogue.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): There are differences among member nations with regard to the parliamentary system, the importance of the right of dissent and, indeed, the value of human life. The views of many nations are separated in terms of democratic development, but such differences should not deter us from the effort to lessen their impact. Tragic events of recent days indicate that even within the Commonwealth there can be countries in which little value is placed on human life, on love and respect for humanity. There should be a firm recommendation by Canada to the secretariat of the Commonwealth that the whole Ugandan question and the activities of Idi Amin should be put on the agenda of that meeting in London.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I think in this way Commonwealth countries can become the spokesmen for all nations of the world which value human life and dignity. The Commonwealth has been in existence for some time. It has been evolving. However, it is still an experiment—an experiment of adaptation and change. It is an experiment which we support. Therefore, I commend the minister for his statement and I am proud to speak on my party's behalf on Commonwealth Day.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join the Acting Prime Minister and the spokesman of the Official Opposition in welcoming Commonwealth Day. The Commonwealth is quite an unusual and remarkable institution. It has no parallel in history. Many books have been written about it, and much said about it. You will be pleased to hear, Mr. Speaker, that I do not intend to make my remarks on the subject at all lengthy because we are profoundly aware of the Commonwealth and we in this country believe in it.

There are certain common institutions which unite us in the Commonwealth. There is the rule of law. With, I have to admit, an unfortunate exception, the rule of law does govern the peoples of the Commonwealth. We do in fact, although with differences, enjoy democratic institutions. We have genuine good will to each other based upon our common traditions. We are able to talk to each other despite the very great differences between our countries. However, all is not sweetness and light.

I am glad that the Acting Prime Minister read the message from Secretary-General Ramphal who pointed out that the Commonwealth has one-fourth of the world's people but it has nearly one-half of the world's poor. Of the poorest of the poor, those with incomes of less than $200 per annum, nearly three out of every four live within the Commonwealth. This means that if we wish to take the Commonwealth seriously and if we wish to show our sincerity, we must do something more than we have done as a developed country to help in the attack. I quote from the Acting Prime Minister's statement: "We must use the Commonwealth to attack the problems of poverty, inequality and degradation". If we do that seriously and meaningfully, we will have made the institution of the Commonwealth a boon not only to ourselves but to mankind.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I am a bit surprised by the statement of the minister, but I do realize this is Commonwealth Day. Like my colleagues, I want to the express my best wishes to Canada and all other countries that have for years belonged to the Commonwealth.

What struck me most in the Acting Prime Minister's statement was his wish that all groups feel free within the Commonwealth. I trust those are not words only and hope wholeheartedly that it is a fact for instance, when we speak of the rights of man. Today, we talk of human rights, of the individual's rights, but we often see that those rights are not respected by those who clamor the most about the respect of human rights. I hope the two principles, the freedom of the individual and the rights of man, will become a fact, that we will quit talking about the principles and practice them instead. Those are the wishes I express on the occasion of Commonwealth Day.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand today.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order while the parliamentary secretary to the government House leader is in the chamber. There was some imprecision on what the government business might be for tomorrow. I wonder if the parliamentary secretary is in a position to tell us that now, or will he perhaps do it later in the day?

Mr. Goodale: Mr. Speaker, I will attempt to provide that information later in the day, if that is agreeable to the hon. member.

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

AMENDMENTS TO IMPLEMENT CHANGES IN IMMIGRATION POLICY

The House resumed from Friday, March 11, consideration of the motion of Mr. Cullen that Bill C-24, respecting immigration to Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last when I called it four o'clock I was going through a two-point analysis as to my perception of immigration in this country. The fundamental base I had laid is that this country, and no country, really, has the legitimate cause to have an immigration policy that in any way is based on a racist policy. That, of course, should stand without argument. The two points I was particularly trying to put forward were that there is a myth in this land that Canada somehow has the potential to feed within its borders many more people than is really possible. The other point I had been trying to make and to document with statistics and fact is that Canada will much better serve the third world, not by importing people into this country but, rather by the export of science and technology. It is on that latter theme that I wish to continue. I quote from Scientific American of September, 1976, an article by Jennings:

Since 1967 the annual expenditure on rice research and related activities by CIAT, the Colombian government and the Colombian Rice Federation never exceeded $1 million. In Colombia alone and in one year alone, 1974, the added production resulting from the introduction of the new technology was valued at $230 million. That is a splendid return on any investment.

Our best hope is in teaching the poor nations to help themselves. I wish to quote from "The Development of Agriculture in Developing Countries", by W. David Hooper:

If the people of the poor countries are to be fed, the food will have to come from their soil, their resources and their farm economies. The surplus production of a few exporting countries can serve on occasion to buffer the impact of bad weather or other calamities, natural or man-made, but there should be no illusion that the world's food security can be ensured by abundant harvests from the fields of Kansas and Saskatchewan, Argentina and New South Wales.

[Mr. Speaker.]

The conscientious person should find relief in the fact that poorer nations, given the proper guidance and incentives, have been quick to adapt to more modern methods of agriculture. I again quote from David Hooper:

The significance of the "green revolution" derives not so much from its numerical impact on food output as from its demonstration of what is involved in the modernizing of traditional agricultures. The widespread, rapid adoption of high-yielding varieties of wheat and rice gave proof that peasant farmers were not slow or stubbornly resistant to change.

As further proof I offer the following quotation:

Within four years of the first widespread release of the seed of new high-yielding wheat varieties in South Asia those varieties occupied practically all the land suited to their cultivation. In response to yield differences of 200 to 300 per cent over traditional plant varieties, and with the important incentive of grain prices that made high-yield farming extremely profitable, the Asian peasant proved to be as innovative as any in the world.

● (1520)

Today, the world's agricultural land area is almost all in production. Any further increase in food supplies must come from improved technology. There are few new agricultural frontiers left to be conquered. To demonstrate this proposition I should like to read excerpts from a book by Lester R. Brown entitled "By Bread Alone".

From the beginning of agriculture until about 1950, most of the year to year increases in world food output came from expansion of the area under cultivation. Since 1950, however, the major increases—probably four-fifths of the current gains in output—are attributable to intensification of cultivation on existing land area.

Today, the increase in food output that can be produced with an additional ton of fertilizer or gallon of fuel is far higher in the developing countries than in the industrial countries. Since fertilizers are already used very heavily in the agriculturally advanced nations of Europe, in Japan and the United States, an additional pound of fertilizer applied in these nations may return no more than five additional pounds of grain. But in countries such as India, Indonesia or Brazil, another pound of fertilizer can yield at least ten additional pounds of grain. It is unfortunate and ironic that, when world fertilizer shortages emerged in 1973, the more advanced nations acted to restrict their fertilizer exports to the poor nations where the fertilizer could have produced much more food.

Further, Lester Brown points out:

The first domesticated cow probably yielded no more than 600 pounds of milk per year, barely enough to support a calf to the point at which it could forage for itself. In India, milk production remains at about that level today. By contrast, in 1973 the average milk cow in the United States yielded over 10,000 pounds of milk annually. The world record is held by a cow in the state of Washington, Skagvale Graceful Hattie, which recently produced more than 44,000 pounds of milk in a single year—55 quarts daily—thus outperforming its early ancestors by more than 70 to one.

Likewise, we should note:

The first domesticated hens did not lay more than about 15 eggs, or one clutch, per year. In 1973 the average American hen produced 228 eggs. For some time, U.S. hens held world egg-laying titles but a few years ago an industrious Japanese hen set a new record by laying 365 eggs in 365 days.

If we turn to the Scientific American of September, 1976, we find there an article entitled "The Amplification of Agricultural Production" in which Peter R. Jennings states:

The central element in the endeavour to improve yield is the breeding of new varieties of crop plants. A first imperative is the development of varieties which produce abundantly when grown in dense plantings and supplied with fertilizer, water and pesticides. The plants can also be given other desirable properties such as resistance to diseases and to insects, and tolerance of a wide range of climate, soil and other environmental factors. In principle, every heritable characteristic of the plant is subject to the will of the plant breeder.

Research into plant breeding has greatly increased the world's capacity to produce protein for human consumption, first by selecting and breeding for increased yield and, second, by selecting and breeding for varieties which contain a higher percentage of protein. To quote Mr. Jennings again:

For example, more than 30,000 kinds of rice have been collected. The multitude of existing varieties is of incalculable value today.

To further establish this point I should like to quote from a paper by Dixon Thompson called "The Preservation of Agricultural Land", published on April 20, 1975:

If Canada is one of the four or five major food exporting countries—although we do import a lot of food, including meat, butter, fruit and vegetables—it is because we still have a relatively small population. Even if we are able to increase agricultural productivity, consuming more non-renewable resources in the process, we shall eventually lose the ability to produce a surplus for export, because of population growth.

What Mr. Thompson is pointing out here is simply this: as long as the "have" countries import large populations they are placed at a disadvantage to the extent that they are unable to export the technology which would secure the greatest advances in alleviating the critical food situation existing around the world. There is, then, a need to retain a relatively small but highly educated and motivated Canadian population. I quote from an interim report in connection with a National Research Council study on world food and nutrition published in 1975:

Annual increases of between 3 and 4 per cent in food consumption in developing countries depend upon parallel increases in their own production. Acreages are unlikely to increase more than 1 per cent per year—roughly the recent level—and may well increase less. The cost and other difficulties of bringing new land into production coupled with the geographic separation of most of the unfarmed arable land from the concentrations of population strongly inhibit opening new acreages.

Thus, the key to adequate feeding of future generations in the hunger prone areas of the world is very substantial farm yield increases—about 2.5 per cent per year, on the average, sustained over the coming decades. In some poor areas experiencing rapid population growth with few or no land reserves, yields may need to rise even to between 3 and 5 per cent per year. During the 1960s the over-all yield increase in the developing countries was 1.9 per cent and it was higher at the end of that period, but recent events suggest that this momentum will be hard to sustain. A strong research basis is indispensable to sustaining the required yield increases in developing countries.

Mr. Speaker, that statement simply confirms that those who believe Canada should have an open immigration policy because the world is hungry are people shrouded in myth. This is also the view of the Science Council of Canada. I quote the following from the council's report No. 25 entitled "Population, Technology and Resources", dated July, 1976:

Canada cannot through immigration policies contribute materially to the solution of problems created by exploding populations in other parts of the world. Such problems can be better treated through economic and technical assistance from the developed world than through large-scale migration.

Further weight to this contention is given by a report of the National Academy of Science which concluded, in 1975:

A model for such enterprise was provided by the work of the Rockefeller Foundation . . . and also by the Ford Foundation in the development of high-yielding strains of cereal grains. Another is the research conducted by the population council in the improvement of birth control techniques and their adaptation to conditions in the underdeveloped countries, work initiated at a time when the United States government and public were not prepared to support such undertakings. These are outstanding examples of what we should do on a large scale in many other fields.

An overview of some of the agricultural success stories around the world should convince Canadians that our role is not to import the poor under a policy of open immigration but, rather, to assist the poor to accomplish the task of feeding themselves, and this we should do by exporting the research and technology which are so badly needed. Let me read a quotation from "Lives in Peril" put out by the Food and Agriculture Organization, the World Health Organization and UNICEF:

● (1530)

An important advance has been the introduction of high-yielding varieties of maize, rice and wheat. New varieties now becoming available signal the success of modern plant breeding. As a result of more easy and rapid genetic manipulation the essential characters of plants capable of standing the rigors of the climate have been combined with those of plants which give yields comparable to the ones achieved in advanced agricultural areas. High-yielding varieties have been instrumental in converting Mexico from an importer to an exporter of maize and wheat and they explain the dramatic change in the Philippines which now exports rice after having imported it for decades. In 1967-68 marked increases in cereal production occurred in some developing countries in all regions but they are most noteworthy in Brazil, maize; India, wheat, rice, maize sorghum; Iraq, wheat, rice, barley; Kenya, maize, wheat, sorghum; Pakistan, wheat, rice, sorghum; and Turkey, wheat.

Recent developments in poultry have been nothing short of revolutionary. While hens in most tropical countries still average about 30 to 40 small eggs per year rates of more than 200 medium-sized eggs have been achieved. Food requirements have also reduced to about two kilograms per dozen eggs, if efficient layers are properly cared for, from as much as one kilogram for one egg in primitive conditions. In India, for example, egg production doubled in the period 1961 to 1968 from five to ten eggs per head of population. The government aims to increase this further to 15 eggs per head of population by 1974 when some 84 million birds should be producing about 9,000 million eggs per year.

I concur wholeheartedly in the following sentiments contained in a report presented to the Joint Senate-House of Commons Committee on Immigration. It reads:

It is sometimes stated that because of its vast area Canada should have a number of times the present population. That is both stupid and impossible. Without any further immigration Canada's population is expected to double within 25 to 40 years. If that occurs, this country is not likely to retain food self-sufficiency and the present type and quality of diet without considerable increase in the percentage of disposable income required for food. Immigration will accentuate that trend and will have the effect of increasing the real relative cost of food here.

Those who want open immigration are short-term humanitarians. The more honest hope for a better world must rely on the dispersal of education, scientific knowledge and the desire to motivate others to help themselves. That is the principal reason North America has been an economic success in terms of agriculture and self-sufficiency in food.

Now I should like to quote from a report of a seminar held at the University of Guelph on February 28, 1974, entitled, "The Food Producing Potential of Canada's Land Resources". It reads:

In the United States, by 1955, the social return to the investment in hybrid corn research from 1910 to that date was at least 700 per cent. Since the main benefits from hybrid corn production have been reaped during the recent 20 years, the over-all dividend of the past 65 years investment in that research is clearly amongst the best returns obtained from any publicly supported endeavour.

What we see then is that this country and other countries in the world have a tremendous obligation to export research, technology and education. However, a policy of open immigration is not one that we can adopt in this country and assume that in the long term it will be humanitarian. I should like to quote from the Science Council of Canada's report No. 25 entitled "Population, Technology and Resources", July, 1976:

As for immigration, neither end of the spectrum is credible. Neither a completely closed nor a wide-open door seems reasonable. In no way, of course, could Canada ever solve the world problem of overpopulation. Even if we maximized immigration and allowed our population to soar to 100 million people over the next 25 years we would have absorbed only one years's world population growth at current fertility rates.

Increased immigration will, however, threaten Canada's present ability to feed ourselves and restrict our potential for helping others to become self-sufficient. I should like to quote from a paper entitled "Implications of Continued Immigration on the Future of Canada":

Population in Canada is increasing faster than yields per acre. Therefore:

1. Increasingly inferior land will be farmed.

2. That will increase the relative cost of food.

3. In addition, population increase keeps taking the higher quality land out of agricultural production. That, too, will increase relative food costs.

An increased rate of immigration ultimately means that Canada as a nation will be the loser. Moreover, the world at large will also be the loser because one of the nations that has the potential to assist the Third World will restrict its capabilities to help from a position of strength. I should now like to quote as follows from an anti-immigration submission presented to the Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Immigration:

In the United States the president's commission on population in the American future after exceedingly careful, wide-ranging discussion and research, concluded that for the United States, in terms of quality of life and living, there will be, on balance, more adverse effects than benefits from further increase in the population of that country. Ninety per cent of Canadians live with a population density as high or higher than the average population density of the United States. Without repugnant regulations to prevent it, the greatest increase in Canada's population will take place in the now heavily populated areas of this country, thereby making the American conclusion valid and applicable here.

I return to the fundamental question: Who will save the world when all nations are overpopulated? That is what we as members of parliament should address ourselves to on this very important question. The submission goes on to read:

It is generally acknowledged that the world is now overpopulated. More than half the world's people live in countries whose governments encourage or assist their citizens to limit their family size. It is recognized that overpopulation decreases the quality of life and living, usually entailing restrictive limitations and opportunities for individuals to develop their inherent potentials. It is also axiomatic that increase in population results in reduction of individual freedoms; it is impossible to have more people without more rules and regulations.

I should like to make reference to a paper entitled "Immigration Increases Food Costs" and read part of it as follows:

Canada does not have large areas of undeveloped land of good quality suitable for arable agriculture. Therefore, immigration will increasingly necessitate development of inferior land for arable agriculture. Moreover immigration will inevitably result in urban expansion because Canada's major cities are generally in areas where the quality of agricultural land is superior. Urban growth constantly encroaches on good agricultural land which is permanently removed from production.

[Mr. Malone.]

To continue with this line of argument I should like to refer to the Science Council of Canada's report No. 25 entitled "Population, Technology and Resources" and quote from page 67 of that report of July, 1976:

The reasons that have led the council to recommend slow population growth include the following:

1. Canada as a whole, and especially the industrial heartland of Ontario and Quebec, face quite severe difficulties in meeting their short-term energy requirements, especially oil and gas, and will probably have trouble meeting their energy needs for many years to come.

2. The population around cities, especially around Toronto and Hamilton, is spreading on to the very small amount of good agricultural land and suitable climate that is available in Canada. Reversing this trend will require careful land use planning and rigid control of agricultural land, plus economic incentives for farmers to ensure that land is protected and is actually used for growing food.

3. Metropolitan centres can, and should, absorb further population through in-building without extending their boundaries, in order to minimize the occupation of good agricultural land, transportation and other costs.

4. Even with effective land use control, Canada will have to use food more carefully if it is to maintain its position as a major food exporter.

● (1540)

I would like to quote from the same source as follows:

Three-quarters of Canada's population is urban. But more significantly, 55 per cent of the population are metropolitan dwellers living in continuous built-up areas with populations of 100,000 and more. If the existing trends continue, almost all of our population increase over the next 40 years is expected to occur in these metropolitan areas.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired. He may continue, however, with unanimous consent. Does the hon. member have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Malone: I would like to thank hon. members for allowing me to extend my comments. The report continues:

Most experts believe that by the end of the century, 90 per cent of all Canadians will be living in urban areas and that metropolitan areas will grow rapidly at least until 1985. In the year 2001 over 32 per cent of our population is expected to be living in Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver; these urban regions will have increased their combined population by at least three million.

Second-level cities with populations between 400,000 and one million (Calgary, Edmonton, Hamilton, Ottawa-Hull, Quebec and Winnipeg) are expected to grow proportionately more rapidly with several of them doubling in size within 30 years.

Much of our past immigration policy inflicted injustice and hardship on developing countries. I would like to quote from an anti-immigration submission presented to the joint committee on immigration:

Since any continued immigration will be highly selective, it will necessarily mean that we will be continuing to practice the brain drain with the selfish advantage of this country and at the expense of the countries of origin of the immigrants. Those immigrants accepted by Canada are predominantly among the most talented and valuable people in the countries of their origins; those countries are usually so desperately short of such highly qualified citizens that their loss through emigration hampers development in the countries which reared and educated them.

In conclusion, I would like to point out that this country is operating with a number of myths. One of the myths is that Canada is a large food-producing nation. In part that is true, but the real truth is that Canada is a net importer of food rather than a net exporter, in dollar terms. The second myth is that Canada has a large amount of agricultural land. The more than five billion acres of land in this country contains only 12 million acres of class-one and class-two soil. Much of that is rapidly being taken away because most of our cities are situated right in the middle of Canada's agricultural heartland.

The third myth is that the Third World cannot make significant improvement to the world food supply. This might be true if this country and other developed nations are willing to export research and technology. The way to feed a world of eight billion people by the year 2010 is not through immigration but, rather, by the export of research and technology. If we are to be truly humanitarian, we must work with facts and not myths.

I wanted to make three points in my speech. First, we have no right to take a position which is in any way racist, bigoted or biased. That should not be the prerogative of any nation anywhere in the world. On the other hand, we must recognize that a policy of allowing large numbers of people into our country will decrease our capacity to produce and export food. More importantly, when we do an analysis of "have" nations, "have-not" nations and world production of food, we note that over the last two decades almost all of the world's increase in food production has come about not by an increase in the number of acres but by an increase in the export of science and technology. We must ask a simple and fundamental question: who is going to save the world if all the wealthy nations become overcrowded and no one is left to export the science and technology which is so desperately needed to increase food production in the Third World?

Mr. Goodale: Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of the House I would like to respond to the question which was raised earlier by the Conservative House leader regarding the business of the House for the remainder of today and tomorrow. It is our intention to continue with the present debate on the immigration bill.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, of all the ministerial portfolios, I consider the portfolio of manpower and immigration to be one of the most important. Immigration and manpower policies affect all of us, and therefore I consider it not only a duty but also a privilege to participate in this debate. Last Friday I met the minister just outside the parliamentary restaurant and advised him that I would be speaking today in this debate. He asked me to make sure that I said something nice about him and something good about the bill. I find it very easy to say something nice about the minister, but I find it rather difficult to say something good about the bill. I can say quite easily that the minister is a man of ability, integrity and compassion; there is no doubt about that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gilbert: I would like to review some of the qualities of other ministers who have held this portfolio. There have been five ministers in the last ten years. Senator Marchand was the minister back in 1966 and 1967. He brought forward a policy of non-discrimination in immigration. That was a tremendous advance. He also brought forward the visitor concept. That was another step forward. The visitor concept ran into difficulties, not because of the principle but because of its application which resulted in many illegal immigrants.

I would like to refresh the memories of hon. members about Bryce Mackasey. During the 1972 election there was a serious problem with regard to Ugandan immigrants. To give Mr. Mackasey full credit, through him the government encouraged Ugandan immigrants to come to Canada. That took a great deal of courage and strength. Right after the election the same minister closed the door to visitors because of troubles with illegal visitors. After Mr. Mackasey came the present President of Treasury Board (Mr. Andras). He was saddled with the problem of illegal immigrants and with the problem of Chilean refugees. He met both those problems head on. He did an excellent job of solving some of the problems respecting illegal immigrants and he certainly gave fair treatment to Chilean refugees.

When I look at the present minister I think of the problems he has and his approaches to those problems. We now have a very high unemployment rate. There are well over 800,000 people in Canada who are unemployed and there is lack of government policy to solve this serious problem. The minister's proposed UIC amendments strike at the heart of working people and do very little to help them. That is the government's approach to the unemployment problem.

I cannot fault the minister for his approach to immigration because he comes from a city which probably does not feel the same impact as cities like Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg and Vancouver when it comes to immigration. I find that he has accepted a bill from his officials which I will call the bureaucrats' bill. I do not think it is the bill of the minister.

• (1550)

I thought the two main criticisms of the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) last Friday indicated the main thrust of the criticism of the New Democratic Party. He said, first, that by the absence of regulations—which have not been published—it is difficult, if not impossible, to study this problem and give it proper treatment. The second point made by the hon. member for Greenwood was that some of the provisions had been described by others as restrictive and discriminatory, even though I do not think they fall within those classes, and that they have encroached to a considerable degree upon the civil liberties of most Canadians. If the minister will read the speech of the hon. member for Greenwood he will see detailed criticism with regard to some of the encroachments on the civil liberties of Canadians.

I said the minister is a man of ability, integrity and compassion. But it takes more, Mr. Speaker. It takes courage, foresight and determination, the other qualities on which I want to dwell concerning the minister's bill. One cannot fault clause 3 of the bill which sets forth the objectives of Canada's immigration policy. How can we object to a policy which stresses family reunification, non-discrimination, concern for refugees and the promotion of Canadian economic social and cultural goals? If you read subparagraphs (a) to (j) of clause 3 you would swear you were reading the new Mosaic code brought down by Moses with regard to new immigrants to Canada.

In his speech the minister set forth his approach to the level of numbers and the requirement, in consultation with the provinces. In my respectful view, in determining immigration policy they had to be based on two main items: first, economic and social conditions and, second—and just as important—attitudes. With regard to the level of numbers, it is necessary they be predicated on economic growth, employment policies, housing policies and social services. If they are not, we will have an increase in the tensions and problems which have surfaced recently in the main cities across the country. I refer to attitudes toward other races and nationalities.

I should like to compliment the Parliamentary Secretary to the Solicitor General (Mr. Lee) on his speech of last Friday wherein he set forth a vivid and historical account of the treatment of the Chinese people in Canada. I hope all members of this House read the speech. I hope, too, that we are moving away from the times he related, back in 1885, and that we treat all races and nationalities on common ground at the present time. That is one of the main objectives set forth in the bill. As I listened to the hon. parliamentary secretary on Friday I could not help but think of the speaker who preceded him, the hon. member for Greenwood who is our party's critic on immigration matters. I could not help but think of the defence he put up for Japanese Canadians who were mistreated by the government back in 1944-45. If ever a person should be complimented, it is the hon. member for Greenwood for his contribution toward protecting the rights of those people who were mistreated by other Canadians. I think you would like to know, Mr. Speaker, that in the near future he will receive an honour from the Japanese people in Canada. As far as we are concerned, it is a well deserved honour.

When I speak about the problems of race and nationality, I must relate my experience in my own riding. In 1948, when I moved into the Broadview riding, it was 90 per cent Anglo-Saxon, with a small sprinkling of other nationalities. In 1977, it is only 40 per cent to 45 per cent Anglo-Saxon, with the balance made up of Greek and Macedonian as the second group, Chinese third, Italian fourth, and the balance a host of nationalities from different parts of the world.

It would be wrong to say we have not had our problems and difficulties in Broadview, but we have an attitude toward them and we accept the challenge. Last Saturday night I was an honoured guest at the Riverdale intercultural committee which held a multicultural spring festival at the Earl Grey senior public school. The committee is composed of representatives from different cultural associations in the riding and across the city, and at the festival the different cultures performed. Let me enumerate some of the groups that appeared: the native Indians commenced the program—and was it not proper that they should? Then we had the Koreans, Lithuanians, native Indians, Chinese, Pakistanis, Koreans again, East Indians, Philippinos, West Indians, and finished off with a great group called the Scottish. I could not help but feel that we were taking the right approach to the problems of race and nationality which confront us, and to fellowship and friendship, as a result of this cultural exchange. That is why I think it is so necessary to develop attitudes.

There is another group in our community, sponsored by LIP, called Harmony Canada. This is an Outreach project with the object of sensitizing the Riverdale community to Sikh culture. Dr. T. Singh visits different schools in the area to tell students about the different cultures. I think this is a valuable approach. May I say in passing that the churches in our area have been the springboard to meeting head-on the problem of race relations. I give full credit to reverend John Robson of Queen Street Presbyterian church for getting representatives of different groups together to find solutions to our problems.

I remember the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) making his maiden speech in this House in 1968. He quoted a great slave worker who had said something like this:

> Judge not a man by the colour of his skin, nor the way he loves or fights or sins, nor by the gods he serves nor by the vintage he drinks, but judge a man by the way he thinks.

I think that type of philosophy is one for which we must have regard in race relations. If we are compassionate in our economic and social approaches, we shall have no difficulty in setting immigration levels for Canada.

• (1600)

A few minutes ago I heard the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Malone) speak about the intricate and sensitive problems of food production, about what would happen if too many people came to Canada, and how too many immigrants would create stresses within the economy. Mr. Speaker, the population of Canada, a country vast in extent, is some 23 million. We are rich in resources. The population of the United States is approximately 250 million people, or ten times our size. Yet Americans have been forerunners in technological development. They have met head-on the problems which a diversity of peoples and a large population create. It seems to me that if we take the proper approach, the threat of food shortages and racial disharmony will go away.

If the minister wants the new legislation to work successfully, I plead with him to institute a second amnesty program for illegal immigrants now in Canada. Our first amnesty or adjustment program was successful owing to the efforts of the President of Treasury Board. Why do I advocate a second amnesty program? Mr. Speaker, records indicate that there are in Canada between 400,000 and 500,000 illegal immigrants, and the expense of tracking them down is tremendous. For instance, in Toronto alone the RCMP detachment, under J. R. Nicholson, consists of 16 men. They, as well as many immigration officials, are engaged in tracking down illegal immigrants.

If we consider personnel in Montreal, Winnipeg, Vancouver and other large centres who are engaged in this activity it should become obvious that the finding of illegal immigrants is a tremendously expensive undertaking. But the expense is not the real problem. Our illegal immigrants have to contend with a whole host of emotional, social and economic factors. I am sure the minister is aware of the article which appeared in the Toronto Star last December on the subject of illegal immigrants. I would quote part of the article written by Mr. Sydney Katz, an article which I commend to hon. members of the House and the minister. Mr. Katz wrote in part:

> Every day last week, Victor Perez, 28, eagerly rifled through the newspapers and turned his radio on hourly to listen to the newscasts. He didn't want to miss even the smallest scrap of information about the new immigration bill introduced in the House of Commons by Minister of Immigration and Manpower, Bud Cullen.
> Perez (not his real name) fervently prayed for revised immigration regulations that would mercifully end the hellish life that he and his wife, Isabella, had been leading for the past three years . . .
>
> And how long can the illegals emotionally, socially and economically live with the uncertainty of always being only one knock on the door away from deportation?
> Perez confesses that he's reached the end of his endurance. Because of the constant pressure, he suffers chronic fatigue. Isabella is plagued by "nervousness" and headaches. "To hell with it," he said recently. "I'm going to turn myself in and go home. We can't stand it any more".

We must deal with illegal immigrants on humanitarian and compassionate grounds. Mr. Katz talks of the damage being done to the children of illegal immigrants. His article went on to say this:

> "It's a real tragedy," says Mendel Green, a Toronto lawyer who has handled many immigration cases. "Thousands of children are growing up without an education".
> Instead of being in the classroom they accompany their mothers to their jobs—picking worms, or vegetables or fruit or doing housework. When this is impossible, the child may stay home alone all day.

Some suggest that illegal immigrants participate in criminal activities. I do not doubt that a small fraction do, but I am prepared to wager that 95 per cent of illegal immigrants are honest and hardworking people who left their countries to come to Canada for a better way of life for themselves and their children. Our approach to them must be humanitarian.

What would I do if I were minister of manpower and immigration? If I had any doubt about any second amnesty program I would ask the Standing Committee on Manpower and Immigration to meet with and call witnesses from the RCMP and the various organizations which deal with these people. They could testify quietly; perhaps their names should not be revealed. After all, we want the benefit of their opinions.

Clara Nickel, of the Bloor-Bathurst information centre, says some people become illegals quite unintentionally. She said, as reported in Mr. Katz' article:

> I have seen articles in Portuguese newspapers which describe how easy it is to become a Canadian citizen. People believe it and end up in trouble over here.

The article went on to say:

> Again efforts should be made to curb the activities of travel agents and phony immigration advisers who persuade foreign nationals—for purposes of private profit—

I hope that the minister is persuaded, as I and the hon. member for Hamilton West, the Conservative spokesman, tried to point out, that the number one problem in the field of immigration is the illegal immigrant.

Mr. Epp: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gilbert: I further suggest that the act will operate successfully only if applied with humanity and compassion. A second amnesty program would not only save money; it would save a repetition of old difficulties. The minister himself spoke of the new system of social insurance numbers which identifies persons who are not Canadian citizens of permanent residence and puts the onus on the employer to make sure that the person employed has a valid employment visa. I say that now we must exercise good judgment, common sense and humanity in dealing with the some 400,000 illegal immigrants in Canada. If the minister wants to make a valid contribution to Canada's immigration policy he must institute a second amnesty program. Such an approach would be farsighted and would go a long way to making this a better country in which all could live. Otherwise, this country will be saddled with the problem of illegal immigrants and the bill will be nothing but an exercise in bureaucracy.

I give the minister credit for correcting the inequities in the 1952 act dealing with prohibitions involving the mentally retarded, epileptics, and inmates of certain institutions. I recall a constituent of mine who came from Greece. He was on my doorstep week after week pleading with me to permit his son to come to Canada with his wife. They could not come because they had an epileptic child. After a great deal of effort I persuaded the present House leader that this family should come. I can still see the tears in that man's eyes when we got the news that the family was moving forward with the child. May I say that it operates on the family reunification principle. I thought it was great credit to the minister in permitting this youngster to come with his family. Therefore, this is a step in the right direction. We must, of course, realize that the success depends on the co-operation of the provincial and federal health departments. If the provincial departments find it imposes a very heavy financial burden, the minister of national health and welfare should give, and give generously, to meet the problem.

The hon. member for Greenwood set forth well last Friday our criticism concerning this provision; that is, the dependency on the decision of whether a person should come forward being completely dependent on a health officer. I hope we will be able to look at that question to see if we can expand that decision-making power so that we do not have any criticism as a result of this bill.

May I return to the main criticisms of the bill set forth by the critic of the New Democratic Party, the hon. member for Greenwood. He said in no uncertain terms that this bill lacks the regulations which will make the bill operative. The minister could have scored a real success if he had published them.

We went through the question of regulation just a few months ago with regard to the borrowers and depositors protection act. We had the problem with regard to the criminal interest rates which exist. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Abbott) was given the opportunity to present the regulations with regard to these criminal rates, and he did not. They are having their difficulties in the committee, and they will have their difficulties when they come back. Before the bill is referred to the committee the minister should make available to all members the regulations relating to this bill. Otherwise, it will be impossible to deal with it in committee.

Need I remind you, Mr. Speaker, that the selection criteria are based on regulations under the old act. I agree there has to be a certain flexibility to it. I recall the position that we had in 1972 with regard to visitors. By the use of order in council and regulations, that was stopped. I recall the employment problem we had. Again, by regulation, that was stopped. The least the minister can do is to set forth the criteria.

The main emphasis with regard to selection criteria in the past has been education. The special joint committee on immigration policy went into the problem in depth as it travelled across the country. They saw the unfairness of this approach. The best we have from the minister at this moment is that he appears to be pleased with the approach taken by the special committee on immigration with regard to taking the emphasis off education and putting it on work experience, and also with regard to sending people to designated areas.

The selection criteria are the heart and soul of the immigration policy. Therefore, it is necessary that we study them in detail so that we may have an excellent bill. There are two clauses I want to draw to the attention of the minister. They worried the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brown) and they give me double worry. Those clauses are contained on page 62 of the bill. Clause 115(n) reads:

> —requiring any person or class of persons to report to an immigration officer before leaving Canada and prescribing the information to be provided and the manner in which such report shall be made to the immigration officer by any such person—

The explanatory note at the side reads:

> S. 115(1)(n) may be used at some time in the future to provide for examination of outbound travellers if this step becomes necessary for the proper identification and control of illegal immigrants.

I hoped the minister would have dealt with this problem in his main speech, but he did not. It has raised fears in the minds of many of us with regard to the operation of these clauses. Is the minister talking about regulation with regard to visa permits? If he is, surely we should know the details concerning them. One can appreciate the wide power that would be given to immigration officials requiring any person or class of persons to report to an immigration officer and prescribing the essentials of information that must be given to him with regard to the report. I hope the minister will give us the full details with regard to this clause. Clause 115(o), which deals with the fingerprinting provision, reads:

> The governor in council may make regulations
> [Mr. Gilbert.]
> (o) setting out the circumstances in which persons who seek admission or persons in Canada, other than Canadian citizens, may be required to be fingerprinted or photographed or otherwise identified—

This is so unusual to Canadian practice that it behooves all of us to study it in detail. I read with interest the minister's remarks with regard to this clause on fingerprinting. This is what he said:

> Another less complex area, but about which some concern and misunderstanding have become evident, is the provision in the bill which can require persons other than Canadian citizens to be fingerprinted under certain circumstances. Many immigrant-receiving countries routinely require applicants for visas to be fingerprinted. We certainly do not intend to go that far.

> Fingerprinting will be the exception rather than the rule, used only where there is doubt about a person's identity or his possible involvement in criminal activity. For persons in Canada we will fingerprint as a matter of routine only those who have been ordered removed from Canada. The two other situations in which we will require fingerprints are when a person is arrested under the Immigration Act, or when a visitor requests a change in or extension to his status, and in either case, the person is unable to satisfy the immigration officer of his identity. It will therefore be a rarity for a permanent resident to be fingerprinted. In all cases, when the fingerprints have served their immigration purpose, they will be disposed of under the normal file retirement program.

It is that last sentence with regard to fingerprints and photographs that really concerns me. The minister says they will be disposed of after they have been used by the immigration department. I would like to know from the minister whether these fingerprints and photographs will have been given to the RCMP or other police officials across the country. What happens with regard to those photographs and fingerprints concerning these people? It is all very well for the minister to say that when his department is finished with them, they will be disposed of. Can the minister tell us whether they will be destroyed by the RCMP, police officials or other judicial organizations across the country? This is a very crucial problem. This is why we would like the minister to make known the regulations concerning fingerprinting and photography. As the critic for the Conservative Party has said, this is another instance where the regulations have in the past not been clear. So it has been well said that this is legislation by regulation.

My time is running short, Mr. Speaker. My hon. friend from Greenwood has set forth the main concern of this party. May I, however, touch on a point with regard to prohibited classes and compliment the minister for clearing up difficulties in relation to the issue of moral turpitude as it concerns people with previous court convictions who have come to Canada. This area has always caused a great deal of worry to the people concerned and to counsel representing them.

One thing which does concern me is the clause having to do with terrorism, subversion and hijacking. The minister set forth his views in the speech he made. He referred to the reasons of security which removed such cases from the normal process of a full and fair hearing. I took part in the deliberations upon the temporary immigration security legislation which was passed a couple of years ago and which did not expire until the end of 1976. I appreciated the dilemma facing the department at that time, as I do now. But the greatest test in a situation like this is, surely, the normal test, the test which has to be met day by day.

A few weeks ago a test was put before the minister by the professors at Queen's University. They intended to hold a symposium with regard to the critical situation in the third world, to assess the theories of development and their implications for public policy. They wanted to hear the views of Professor Andre Gunder Frank who holds opinions opposite to those normally held with regard to the treatment of third world countries, feeling they would then be able to see the total picture affecting these issues. I do not know Professor Frank's background, but it seems to me that if I were confronted with such a decision, if professors from a university contacted me asking that a person be allowed to express a diverging view with regard to policies concerning third world countries, I would have to be terribly persuaded that such a person should not be admitted before I would withhold permission.

In any event, the minister did not permit him to enter and he was prohibited from giving reasons for his refusal.

Is it any wonder, in these circumstances, that all of us have received a letter from Queen's University dated March 9, signed by various professors and setting forth their views with regard to the issue? This is what they say:

> The case of Andre Gunder Frank is particularly significant in that it helps us to understand the workings of the new Immigration Act which is now before the Canadian House of Commons. The most striking aspect of the act is that it provides no procedures for review of the cases of persons refused entry to Canada on the grounds that they present a risk to national security. In the absence of provision for due process, the door opens wide to a series of possible abuses:
> 1. There is no check on the accuracy of the information on which the decision is based.
>
> 2. There is no check on bureaucracy's discretionary power. The act gives the bureaucracy and the executive the power to act unjustly.
>
> 3. There is not even the possibility of an independent evaluation of the case by a neutral board judged competent to handle confidential material and acting outside of the political constraints imposed by the government in power.
>
> 4. The applicants who are denied entry are given no reason for their exclusion nor the opportunity to clear their names.
> All these abuses are compounded by the fact that the act permits the exclusion of applicants before they come into the country and thus they have no access to Canadian courts or any other form of due process.

I appreciate the minister's difficulty, but when I look at these facts, a department of sociology composed of professors at Queen's University inviting a person to speak on development policy, I would need to be, as I say, terribly persuaded that such a person was a national security risk before I would interfere with his visit. I am surprised the minister should have jumped so quickly to a conclusion with respect to this case. All this underlines the need to confer responsibility for these decisions to a committee composed of people who would be able to make an objective and impartial judgment.

In conclusion, may I say I find it difficult to support this bill because of the absence of regulations and the possibility of some infringement of civil liberties. As I said earlier, I hope the minister will bring these regulations before us. I hope, too, that he will announce a second amnesty program affecting illegal immigrants. I would then be able to say, without hesitation, that he is not only a man of integrity, ability and compassion, but also a man of courage, determination and conviction.

Mr. F. A. Philbrook (Halton): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege and a pleasure to speak on this new immigration bill, Bill C-24, and to follow that fine gentleman, the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert). I noted with interest one point he made, though I was a little puzzled by it. It was his reference to a second amnesty. It sounded like a good idea, and certainly it is a humanitarian idea—which is typical of the hon. member—but I cannot help wondering whether there would not be some undesirable motivation built into it, whether the word might not go around the world that it is a little too easy to come here illegally or, in other words, an invitation to hide out in Hamilton—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Philbrook: —in Canada.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The truth came out.

• (1630)

Mr. Philbrook: Without prejudice. In other words, for visitors to hide out in Canada and wait for the next amnesty. Perhaps the hon. member for Broadview might want to comment on that point at some time. It demonstrates what is true in this whole area, namely, that immigration in the last few years has become a very difficult subject for a country like Canada, if not for the whole world. Probably it was a relatively easy area for us to take care of until the last few years, Canada being a young country, something of a pioneer backwater for most of the world. We have a very inhospitable climate and our ties were recognized to be essentially with the British and the French. We are a country to which few people decided to come while they were busy going to other areas which have now become less popular or more restrictive.

One of the very important events that changed this was something that happened in late March of last year, and it did not receive all that much attention. It was of momentous importance for the world, and certainly for Canada; that is the fact that the world population for the first time reached four billion people. For the first time there were four billion living human beings on this earth, and they were crowded into certain areas; they were not evenly distributed. Any one of us who has seen the charts of the increase in world population will realize how startling those figures are. Throughout most of the history of mankind the figures followed almost a level course, a plateau, with just a small rise—and only in our time, only in living memory, has that changed. That line has taken off, and at the present time it is skyrocketing straight upwards; a frightening prospect, one that is matched by other things in science—by, for example, the growth of a bacterial colony. When it reaches a certain point in skyrocketing upwards, it suddenly degenerates and dies.

Some say this could be something worthwhile for us to think about; that could be a lesson to those of us who are alive today. Perhaps we are on a final course, although we hope that is not so. We are adding people to this earth at the rate of 70 million a year, which is three times the population of Canada, and by the end of this decade it is predicted that the population will reach from four billion to five billion within the lifetime of one childhood.

Canada, by contrast, as has been said this afternoon, is a big country with a small population of only 23 million people, with many people crowded in one area. It has almost four million square miles of territory—3.8 million to be exact—and a tremendous amount of opportunity. One would think, then—thinking very simplistically about this situation—that we might solve the problem simply by opening the immigration doors of Canada and letting the world flood in. That might make sense in some things like arithmetic. But there is a great deal more to it than that. On the other hand, there will be mounting pressure, which already exists for many reasons, for Canada to increase its immigration. The hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Malone) touched on that this afternoon, and I agree with him. I think he was on the right track. Certainly, Canada must have more immigration. Our immigration should be based on humanitarian reasons, such as letting in refugees, the reunification of families and so on. We must have people to fill the kind of jobs we will have in Canada in the future.

However, in spite of the fact that Canada is a big, open country, albeit with many parts that are unliveable, and there is mounting pressure to have people come here, the answer is not in immigration. The answer, by and large—even though our birth rate, ironically, is down to about zero—lies not in trying to solve the world's problems through immigration. This simply cannot be done, not even in the last country in the world with open spaces, namely, Canada. As the hon. member for Battle River said, the real answer—and I think we are all beginning to realize this for the first time—lies in technology, in applying science and technology to help those countries with the most trouble solve their problems in their own way. I concur with the hon. member heartily on that. Anyone who has travelled this world much, who has seen certain areas of Asia, Latin America and perhaps Africa, must be staggered by the population problems there. We know that if we open our door widely, it would not solve the problem. It would certainly make Canada unmanageable. Anyway, those people would not be able to come here, even with a massive immigration program. They simply could not afford to come here and I do not think we could mount such a program.

My family and I were staggered by what we saw during the seven years we were in India and Pakistan, as well as travelling in other parts of the world. The irony, when we got back and went into the birth control research field, was when we found that this country, with the least problems in the world, knew how to take care of its problems. We are well ahead in birth control and our population is not expanding very much. As a country with the least food problems in the world, we are probably the most able in food production.

The absolute reverse is true for countries most in need in this world, most in trouble. The birth control program, as successful as it has been here, has not been nearly as successful overseas. This is very frustrating. There is no time to go into the reasons—it is a wide subject. The same is true of food production. We can remember clearly the high hopes for the "green revolution" which was supposed to solve everything, but a few years later there was disillusionment. There was world drought, world shortage of fertilizer, and the "green revolution" was not successful. It depended on certain things to increase food production, in addition to the fact that many people in the most hungry parts of the world had the wrong understanding: they planted less instead of planting the same to provide more. These problems exist overseas—they do not exist for us so much—and yet we are going to face mounting pressure. It is a difficult decision for us at present, but I think it is one we can take with enlightenment, or enlightened self-interest as people say.

We are heading for a balanced policy and I think this bill will contribute to that end. We are trying to help the world with its problems and trying to maintain our way of life. We are trying to do the best we can with the immigration pressures which exist. There has been a great deal of change in Canada and in the world in the last few years, and therefore obviously we need new legislation.

This act goes back to 1952. A few changes were made in 1967 regarding selection. I think the most significant change that has been made in the time that some of us have been here in the last two or three years has been the one about not being able to apply to stay in Canada from within Canada. It is a very dramatic change. Probably we have all had a lot of experience with that, either with visitors or people with work permits applying to stay here, and we have had to refuse them. At first it can be a difficult thing to do, but I have found that by and large they have accepted it surprisingly well, and it looks as though it will be a workable part of our immigration policy.

There have been some worthwhile changes: for example, in the area of family reunification, which is an increasingly important humanitarian measure in which to try to bring families together. There is the matter of inadmissible classes, which has been touched on recently; the business of keeping out people with medical problems such as epilepsy, mental illness, the mentally retarded, socio-medical problems, moral turpitude, as the hon. member for Broadview said, homosexuality, and so on. In the last few years our ideas on this score have become more updated, more modern and more tolerant than they used to be. The matter of refugee status has been important in recent years as a result of civil wars, and so on. I think Canadians can hold their heads pretty high with regard to these things.

This bill did not just come out of the blue. It has been very well researched. In 1974 a green paper presented the basic ideas behind this bill. Then the joint committee travelled across the country and heard Canadians in all parts, and now we have a fairly reasonable bill. I think the principles behind the bill have been generally accepted. It might reasonably have been expected in a country like Canada, which has many immigrants to start with, that there would be great apprehension and many objections voiced by many new Canadians that the bill closes the door, or that family members from overseas might not be allowed into Canada; but I have not noticed many objections along these lines from Italian, Portuguese or German people in my constituency. These people have been extremely intelligent and co-operative.

What does the bill offer? There are about ten major innovations. Although I will not touch on all of them, I would like to touch on a few. The bill offers explicit objectives which should provide some clear direction, some orientation and some philosophy as to what our immigration policy is all about. Simplifying the wording of the bill makes it easier to interpret. We can read it and understand the basis of all the provisions and details of the bill. We have a much better set of objectives, as limited as objectives can be.

Second, we must have a set of targets and ceilings. This is the kind of thing which in a country like Canada, with an immigration tradition, might bring about mixed feelings and some apprehension. These targets and ceilings begin to suggest the old word "quota" which is not held in very high favour in this country and never has been. Quotas suggest discrimination or favouritism of one kind of another. But of course that is not the idea. There will probably be some limitations as to the amount of immigration there will be during a given year, but the type of immigration will essentially be unchanged, except that it might be somewhat improved.

These limitations will apply to regular immigration movements affecting independent immigrants who come here searching for jobs which need to be filled, and they will apply to refugees. No matter what the world situation becomes, there obviously has to be some limit. But the most important thing is that there will be no limit with regard to bringing members of families into Canada. That is something upon which none of us can imagine Canada compromising.

What is the effect of these limits? As has been said, the bill will benefit both Canada and people coming to Canada as immigrants. The bill will help new people when they come here. It will help them cope with Canadian life. It will help them integrate smoothly without a great deal of effort and agony. It will also help Canada which has only so much economic and social ability to absorb many people in such a short period of time as a year. Third, this bill would bring about a system which would make immigration movement as objective and as fair as possible. It seems to me a very intelligent move to put less emphasis on education, on winning one's way into Canada and on writing an examination based on education. As Canada changes, it needs certain types of workers in certain locations. This bill will help people who are disadvantaged because of lack of education. Many parts of the world are not able to provide education to the extent that Canada is able to provide it. When people come to Canada, if they are not ruled out because of lack of education they will need to get along when they are here. Finding jobs is the most important thing, and if they can find employment in a certain area, so much the better.

The bill helps solve our demographic problems in terms of the distribution of people. The bill will help in developing the economies of certain local and rural areas, especially unpopulated or underpopulated areas, and with some luck there will be some relief of urban congestion. Urban congestion is a terrible trend which is afflicting Canada, like lemmings. Many are leaving rural areas and farms and going to cities where social and economic problems are piling up.

Fourth, this bill brings about a new commitment with regard to refugees. It is not just a commitment in spirit; the bill sets out exactly what we are going to do. I, for one, asked for that and I am pleased that the minister included that in the bill. The bill recognizes Canada's historical commitment to the universal declaration of human rights and the Helsinki accord; and, as the hon. member for Broadview mentioned, the business of ensuring Canada's freedom from the invasion of political terrorists and criminals who come here on mild and trumped-up pretences.

Fifth, federal-provincial relations is a very important matter. We are talking about that in many ways these days. We talk about federal-provincial conferences, decentralization and rationalization of responsibility. Hopefully, this bill will make a great deal of sense in terms of immigration. The bill will give the provinces much more say on the matter of their demography, on the matter of how many people there should be, where these people should come from and where they should be located. The bill is designed to deal adequately with the needs and opportunities of the provinces.

I will mention only one possible concern I have about federal-provincial relations, and that is the matter of provincial rights in immigration. Hopefully, this will be worked out in time; but what the current Quebec situation might do to Canada's reputation for fairness, openness and freedom is something which causes me concern. The current Quebec situation might cause feelings of conflict between the federal government and the provinces. For example, if a Quebec government should decide—and this could apply to any province; I just use Quebec as a current example—it would permit only truly Francophone immigrants, and if the federal government decided to challenge that, oppose it or even enforce its will, partly because of the reaction of other provinces, we might get a more serious situation than we have now. I look at this particular provision with some apprehension.

Finally, I would like to talk about some of the changes in the classes of immigrants. First, I would like to talk about the sponsored category and the reunification of immediate families. This is something which has had to be developed and refined in recent years because we have got into trouble over it. I will deal with that matter in a moment. Obviously, it makes good sense not to restrict the immigration of parents on the basis of age. It used to be that if someone who was a Canadian citizen or a landed immigrant wanted to bring their parents to this country, the parents had to be age 65 or over. We have had experience that this has not always worked. People have come to our riding offices who had younger parents or brothers and sisters overseas who needed support, but they could not bring them here. This has been a terrible human problem which did not make any sense. It concerns parents mainly, but I have heard of people who wanted to bring their grandparents, and I suppose some grandparents would be young enough. Now, parents of any age can come. That is a step forward. It will be a relief to some new Canadians from all parts of the world.

I understand that the nominated category which was halfway between family and the regular type category will be eliminated. I consider that a good move. There will not now be a nominated category, but points will be given to people with close relatives in Canada. That is going to require some definition, too, but at least we are getting away from this business of family. How do you define "immediate family"? It is pretty obvious there can be no agreement whatsoever on the term "family", on terms like "parents", "brothers" or "cousins".

In countries like India and Pakistan, where I was privileged to spend many years, the feeling of universality and the religious feeling that these people have makes all of their countrymen their brothers. The line between the spiritual brother and blood brother or parent becomes very blurred. When they say, "So-and-so is my brother", they really mean it. It is very difficult to sort this out. When they come to Canada and say, "I should be allowed to bring in so-and-so because he is my parent", or, "my brother", that can be difficult, and in the past it has been. Hopefully, we can now define "immediate family", and there is merit in making some allowance for other relatives.

This will prevent the type of situation I was involved in in 1966 when I had to write to a constituent, Mr. James W. K. Cheung of Hornby, Ontario, concerning the immigration of his mother, Chow Mui Kwei. I wrote as follows:

—it was determined that she is unable to comply with the selection criteria applicable to nominated relatives . . .

The immigration regulations provide for the sponsorship by a Canadian citizen or resident of his parents when they reach the age of sixty. Sponsored dependants are not obliged to comply with selection criteria and need only meet medical and background requirements. Your mother will be sixty in 1982 and, unfortunately, the only suggestion I can make is that you reapply for her at that time.

If there ever was a degrading type of letter that a member of parliament had to write, that is it. In effect, I told him to come back in 1982, not to bother us until then, and in the meantime to try to take care of his mother on the other side of the world. It is almost ridiculous.

In that connection, the relationship between this bill and Bill C-35 is an interesting piece of timing. Bill C-35 concerns the reciprocity of old age security benefits between this country and other countries. Most members have had communications from old people from overseas who want us to get the government to arrange this reciprocity so that when they come to Canada in their old age they may bring their benefits with them; but, even more, that those benefits may increase with inflation, with indexing, and so on, so that they do not lose out. It sounds like a very good idea, and once the bill is passed there will be this kind of arrangement for old people from other countries who come here, and for our own old people who go overseas. They will have these arrangements pretty quickly with the United States, Great Britain, Italy and France. Hopefully, we will soon be able to make arrangements with countries such as Germany, Greece, Portugal and others whose old people are already here. There are many advantages to this.

As someone pointed out, when the new immigration bill is passed, parents will be able to come to this country at any age. We will see parents coming here when they are in their fifties. Obviously, they will have trouble getting jobs—so what happens then? It is all right for us to work this out ahead of time and have the children agree to support them. But situations change, Mr. Speaker, and I think we can anticipate some pretty awkward and difficult situations if the older parents are here for a while and cannot get work, and then something happens in the family situation and their children do not feel they can support them any longer. I put this question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) in committee, and he assured me that this possibility would be underlined before people ever came to Canada: they will be doubly and triply warned that they may encounter problems and that they must go through with their original plan to look after each other. I can still anticipate problems, however.

When the minister responsible for multiculturalism was in my riding last year speaking to the Famee Furlane club, an Italian club in Oakville, he told a little story. Many years ago, when this country first started, a British parliamentarian who was visiting said, "You have British people here now; you have Americans here now, and you want to bring Italian people and perhaps some others. What nationality will you be?" The man he was talking to, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, replied, "The nationality of this country will be freedom." I think that was a great, intuitive stroke of genius on the part of Laurier and it certainly reflects what is going on in this country today.

I, for one, fully support the multiculturalism program. It gives us the best of all worlds in an exchange of ideas and helps us develop tolerance and understanding. It is a very enriching experience, and I cannot think of any other country I would want to live in, for that reason. With the hospitality and warmth the ethnic groups bring, the Mardi Gras, Oktoberfest, Scottish dancing, life in Canada lacks very little. It leads in large measure to a more open immigration policy.

There is no question that immigration is decreasing these days, but it is a uniform drop, not a discriminatory one, in line with Canadian feeling. It involves all kinds of people in all areas of the world. To some extent, admittedly, it involves our economic picture and our links with the labour situation. To me, that seems only practical. However, with a little bit of luck and the grace of God, I think we can look forward—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order please.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight are as follows: The hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard)—Health—Proportion of care costs attributable to diseases related to alcohol and tobacco; the hon. member for Humber-St. Georges's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall)—Transport—Date of decision on program for highway construction in Atlantic region; the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie)—Transport—Recommendation of Dr. Hall on trusteeship of pension funds for railway employees.

It being five o'clock p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions and public bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Notice of motion No. 4, in the name of the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Some hon. Members: Stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Stand at the request of the government. Notice of motion No. 15, in the name of the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek).

Some hon. Members: Stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Stand at the request of the government. Notice of motion No. 16, in the name of the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Martin).

Mr. Ellis: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think there has been general agreement, at the request of the government, to move to motion No. 1 in the name of the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It is agreed and so ordered.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SUGGESTED MODIFICATION OF STANDING ORDERS

The House resumed, from Monday, November 1, 1976, consideration of the motion of Mr. McCleave:

That this House do modify its Standing Orders and practices to the end that it bring its affairs more closely into conformity with modern (that is, acceptable mid-20th century expectations), by

1. Cutting by one-half the time limits for speeches where such time-limits are set forth in Standing Orders;

2. Setting up a committee composed of members of all parties, and of members of the parliamentary press gallery—each component to number seven—which shall supervise the rules to govern the recording by instruments capable of radio broadcasting and of telecasting of the proceedings of this House and of any committee or other recognized entity thereof, and the public use thereof;

3. Providing that the rules for the so-called late show, or adjournment debate, be altered to provide for the participation of five instead of three, and that the Speaker have absolute discretion to extend the time for reply by up to three minutes;

4. Providing that no member of this chamber shall have to wait for recognition by the Chair for longer than three oral question periods if that member has risen in each of such three consecutive question periods, such question and recognition by the occupant of the Chair to be recognized upon the request of such member at the conclusion of the third such period;

5. Providing that the government through its House leader may designate up to six measures per session for consideration and disposition by legislation where such proposals reflect these principles;

(a) an amendment to existing legislation which shall incorporate not more than one major change, the final opinion in any dispute to be that of Mr. Speaker;

(b) the government does not propose to amend such legislation in any other manner in that calendar year without unanimous consent;

(c) the speeches by the mover and the designated replier for each party shall not exceed fifteen minutes, and by subsequent spokesmen of not more than five minutes;

6. Setting at five the number of those who may oppose unanimous consent to any motion made in this chamber.

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, last November 1 when we were discussing this matter I was the last speaker. We had been discussing the possibility of having television in the House of Commons. Since that time the decision has been taken that we are to have television in the House of Commons. The House has set up a committee to consider the installation of television facilities and establish regulations and conditions under which pictures of this House are to be broadcast to the community. That part of the motion presented by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) has been dealt with.

● (1700)

Although I am a member of the special committee considering television in the House and the way in which our proceedings are to be televised, I confess that I now harbour some reservations which I did not harbour when the original decision to televise was taken. That reservation, purely and simply, relates to how the image transmitted by the television cameras of this House will appear to the audience outside the House. We have a stage in the House, if I may use that term, which is perfectly appropriate for the sort of debate which takes place in the House of Commons, but the question is whether it is appropriate to the kind of picture which the television cameras will show the audience outside the House. I think we shall need to do some experimenting.

I am thankful that the House leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition took the initiative to propose an amendment to the government's motion, for his amendment would encourage the special committee to propose ideas and to propose experiments so that we may discover the best approach to this question. I proposed, as the result of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), that an initiative be taken to televise one of the more important events this spring on our parliamentary calendar. The event which immediately springs to mind is the budget. I suggest that it would be appropriate to invite the television cameras in to televise the budget proceedings.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reid: Hon. members will recall the mess the House got into last time because the antiquated procedures we followed led to details of the budget being broadcast on television even before members of the House of Commons knew what was in the budget document. I think it would be useful if the Canadian people were to get the news at the same time as the House of Commons. It would be appropriate to invite the television cameras in so that the people in the communities could watch and listen to the speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) and the replies of members of the opposition parties.

It would be appropriate, as well, if the Minister of Finance were to have 30 minutes only to present the hard facts of the budget, and if the leaders of the opposition parties or their financial critics were also to be allowed 30 minutes to present their reasoned criticisms. That would be a much more sensible and logical approach, preferable to the kind of helter-skelter activity taking place in the lobbies and outside the House when the budget speech is actually being delivered.

There would be no difficulty in dealing with the mechanics of the proposal, for at least the first hour of the budget presentation of the Minister of Finance is taken up with summing up the material contained in the budget papers which used to be published at least one week or so before the budget proper was brought down. If that material could be presented to the House one week or so in advance of the budget, the Minister of Finance would not have to spend so much of his time, of course, reviewing something already presented to us. He could spend his half-hour dealing with the realities and content of the budget and could give perhaps a much more detailed explanation of measures he intends to take. Therefore, I think we should take advantage of the initiative of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition and consent to the proposal to televise the forthcoming budget speech of the Minister of Finance.

Having said that, I direct attention to some of the other proposals of the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants. Frustrated, like the rest of us, by the way this place carries on its business, the hon. member wrote down five or six suggestions for improving the procedures of the House. I share his frustration with regard to the way in which we carry on our business. It is absolutely disgraceful that in the year 1977 we are carrying on, basically, as Sir John A. Macdonald carried on in 1867 in the first parliament of Canada. Basically we have made few changes; yet the world outside has changed substantially. What are we doing? We are doing exactly as those earlier parliamentarians would have done.

We have not considered the kind of society in which we live. It is a fast-moving society which takes for granted that something is done when an announcement is made. Because of our cumbersome procedures both in cabinet and in the House of Commons, action is often taken one year after the announcement. It is no wonder that members of the House, the House itself, our political system and our constitution are not taken as seriously as they ought to be. We are unable to deliver what we promise.

Much of the responsibility for the problems of the members of the House of Commons rests, it seems to me, squarely on the cabinet. It strikes me as completely unreasonable that the cabinet should take one year or more to reach a decision and, after presenting it to the House, expect the House to deal with it in a few weeks. That is an unreasonable assumption and an insult to all who sit there. Just because it has taken the cabinet so long to make a decision does not mean, necessarily, that it is the right decision or the only decision. The cabinet is often impatient with the House of Commons when it feels that cabinet decisions are being challenged. But is this not the place where such decisions ought to be challenged?

I suggest that one of the most important parliamentary reforms must be finding some way of changing our rules, changing them in a way which will be fair to cabinet, for it is the government of the country and ourselves, members of parliament, representing the people of the country. It strikes me that we can consider a number of things which make sense. First, we ought to have a calendar which makes sense. We must have a calendar which takes into account the amount of sitting time the government needs and the amount of legislation the government wishes to propose.

All of us have some idea of what is an appropriate legislative load for the House to carry and all of us, surely, have some understanding of the amount of time which we need in normal circumstances to process that legislative load. Nobody has any secrets from anybody else on that score. The matter is quite clear. However, the acceptance of that concept entails the cabinet's placing itself under the Standing Orders in a way which it does not now have to do. It means that all of us, as independent members, will be under the same kind of obligation. It means that we shall all be subjected to greater discipline in the planning and carrying out of that legislative program. It means that we shall need to be given notice of legislation and even necessary background material to legislation it is proposed to debate in the House of Commons. The calendar, it seems to me, is an important item.

Second, once we accept the idea of the parliamentary calendar and the idea of the appropriate legislative load, it seems to me we must find some way to bring debate to an end. If we accept a limitation on the total time available to us and a limitation on the amount of legislation to be introduced, it seems to me that we should also accept some mechanism for assigning time available for the discussion of each of those legislative items. For the House of Commons this would mean giving a different priority to various items. At the moment we give priority to no item. At present an item is debated either until debate collapses or ends. Usually debate collapses. Really, we do not sharpen our knives, so to speak, and do not sharpen our minds. We go on debating ad nauseam.

For proof of my contention I invite hon. members to examine the reports of debates on any subject which has come before the House. You will find that debates which are limited are sharper and more effective than those in which there has been no time limit. As Samuel Johnson said, nothing sharpens a man's mind so much as the prospect of his being hanged tomorrow. I think the same sort of philosophy ought to apply to us. Items of great priority at present do not get the attention they deserve, whereas items of lower priority get more than they deserve. We do not distinguish between what is important and what is not. We are concerned only as to what we want to talk about at any given time.

I have often said that the most important reform we could make in the House of Commons is insisting that members talk to the subject under debate. But I am too much a realist, have been around here too long, to assume that that will ever come about. What we really require is to find some way for the House of Commons to set a time limit for the amount of time available to an item and then find some way to bring that knife-edge to bear.

● (1710)

There are a number of suggestions that have been proposed. One has been put forward by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants. In fact, it is his first suggestion, and I quote:

> Cutting by one-half the time limits for speeches where such time limits are set forth in Standing Orders.

That would have an effect. Another proposal one should look at is one that was discussed in the procedure committee. That is that there be another mechanism to allow debate to go beyond the normal ten o'clock adjournment when there is a requirement for it. In many cases hon. members know that a debate is coming to an end and that all that is needed is another half-hour or hour to bring it to a conclusion. Why do we not do that? The Standing Orders now make it almost impossible to permit that to happen. We should look at that Standing Order with a view to loosening it up so that we can bring these matters to a conclusion when the time is there—and most members know when the time is there.

Changes in Standing Orders

One other suggestion that the subcommittee on procedure of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization has brought forth is a modified version of the British closure rule whereby it would be Mr. Speaker's responsibility to take the test of the House and determine when a question ought to be put. That might be too cumbersome for some. For others it might be too sharp. I say that the present situation is unsatisfactory. Perhaps we should look at it in that way. Surely under such circumstances there would have to be discussions with the House leaders of the other parties. However, I am certain that with proper good will it could be arranged.

Some hon. members have not had the opportunity to sit in on the discussions of the House leaders. Normally there is a discussion as to how much time is really required for a particular piece of legislation. There is discussion as to the number of speeches that have to be made from each party. Normally you come up with an informal discussion as to what is really required. However, I have never known any of those discussions to be fulfilled.

There is not sufficient discipline within the parties. None of us really willingly submits to the whips, House leaders or party leaders on these items. Consequently, the debates tend to take off with a life of their own. It is not the parties, party leaders or House leaders who are in control; it is the individual members. Once these debates get going it becomes impossible to bring them under control. What happens is they either peter out or the government is forced to bring in rule 75C if there has been sufficient agitation. This is hardly a parliamentary way to proceed to deal with the problems we ourselves create. Obviously, there has to be a greater amount of discipline imposed upon us, either by our collective decision through the Chair or through unilateral action by the government. Of the two, I prefer the first. Many members obviously prefer the second or prefer to have debate by exhaustion.

The last point I want to make is that we have not shown any collective will to come to grips with the problems of procedure that we face. We are still unable to decide just what it is we want this place to do. We are still unable to decide what it is the House of Commons should be attempting to accomplish. If you are looking for debate on the facts of the matter, you very seldom get it in the House of Commons. You very often get it in committee of the whole on finance bills and, particularly, in committees. If you want to know what people think about particular pieces of legislation, you get a pretty fair job on that at the second reading stage.

There has to be some attempt to draw these straws together and put them into a coherent whole. While the parties are constituted the way they are, they will be unable to do so; they will be unable to focus their attention on these things. At some point the frustration of members will get sufficiently great that we may make some unwise decision, some unconsidered decision, attempting to bring it into line with what we see as the reality out there. I am one of those who is frustrated. I feel the House of Commons is terribly inefficient. We do not discuss the important things. For example, at some point we ought to have had a debate on the question of the Anti-Inflation

Board—but we did not. We ought to have had a debate on the question of what is going on in Uganda. We have not had such a debate. As long as we proceed in using our time the way we do, talking the way we do without any particular focus, we will not get around to debating things that are important; we will continue to debate things that are in the past.

If you look at our legislation, the program before us, you will see that all of it has basically been announced before. All of it has been debated before in the press. One problem is that we have not been able to explore any kind of mechanism to bring these things before the House at the time announcements are made in a way that we can have a debate that is important. We get these things too late. It is our own fault. As soon as we decide we want to debate what is going on, we will make those changes.

In closing, I want to congratulate the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants for bringing this matter before us. I assure him that I share his frustration. I hope other members will share it also and will be moved to do something about it.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I look upon the remarks of the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) as an expression of difference of opinion that can be expressed. In fact, the way the hon. member has expressed himself and the way I intend to express myself is a clear illustration of what this House is. The hon. member would have a legislative grist mill. That is what he has in mind: someone plans, allocates time and brings the debate to an end, regardless of the wish of the members. However, somebody is getting the priority in the planning. The hon. member's thinking on this would be vastly improved if he sat for five years or so on the opposition. There is quite a difference of approach in the question of rules. The hon. member talked of frustration. Perhaps he should participate in the debates more than he does.

While I differ from my colleague for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) in some of the approaches he has taken, I think it is great to have this motion before us today even in its very shortened terms. I do not know why the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River does not really prod his House leader to bring forward motion No. 12 which is a referral of all the rules. I do not take as dark or despairing an attitude toward the rules and the way this House conducts its business. As I said, it is not a legislative grist mill. It is not an administrative body, but a deliberative body. Each member stands equally before Mr. Speaker with his colleagues.

To say you are automatically going to cut off everything is a denial of the right of people to be represented in parliament, the right that their member shall be their spokesman. I admit you cannot repeat the same ideas and arguments all the time. Surely, there are things that can be done to meet the total operation, make it more convenient and more to the taste of hon. members.

The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River should be the last to say that the operations of this House are something like those in the nineteenth century. After all, he is one of the acolytes of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) who when leader of the House was responsible for imposing the great portion of these rules; that is, the functioning rules of this House and the form of committee system that we have.

We are both members of the committee on procedure. He is the chairman of a subcommittee. I have chaired another, and the chief government whip has chaired a third. All three of us have been terribly frustrated by the fact that the caucuses on both sides seem to operate on the rule of the least common denominator—he who knows least about the rules but is prepared to yell the loudest carries most weight.

The reports of the subcommittees should have been proceeded with before now. Some of the recommendations were agreed to by both sides and there has been agreement from the caucuses to implement them. But there is a strange reluctance on the part of the government House leader to go forward even in this area, though to do so would cover a number of the points my hon. friend has raised; for example, with regard to expanding the adjournment debate and changing the hour from ten o'clock to six o'clock and utilizing the first portion of the dinner hour, putting on five speakers. Perhaps there would be about the same attendance, but there would at least, in my opinion, be better exposure and greater convenience for the Chair. Then we should have the possibility of carrying on our work after ten o'clock. I would say to the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid), "Talk to our counterparts in Britain and they will disabuse you within two minutes." They have a rule allowing for a 90-minute debate after ten o'clock. But there is not one of the members over there who has not complained, privately and publicly, about the hours during which the British parliament sits, sometimes until one o'clock or 1.30 in the morning.

There is no way this can continue. We have to consider our staff. They are human beings, too. They are not supposed to be turning out material like sausage meat out of a machine, or like sawdust out of a saw. They have to be as alert and as available as we are. And if you think you are going to have a member of parliament working until 1.30 in the morning and up on his feet ready to attend a committee meeting at 9.30 the next day, you have a surprise coming. Of course, no particular harm is done to those who do not come in anyway until noon, as some do.

For once the government whip was correct last year in contemplating changes in our committee structure. The committee system as it now stands is supported by some 80 or 90 members. When I say 90 I am being very generous; it is more like 80 members from all sides. You can exclude cabinet ministers and you can exclude some of the parliamentary secretaries. But for the rest the load is unevenly shared.

Mr. Speaker, I shall try to be a little more relevant than was the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River. He spoke about a legislative philosophy which I think was not too relevant to the motion put forward by my hon. friend. Consider television in this House. There are some great things which have to happen first. There is the law of libel which has to be amended before it comes in, even for the budget. There are other measures, too, which need to be taken. There may be one blessing, it is true. It will help to end the practice into which so many have fallen, of reading speeches which they have either prepared, or not prepared, themselves.

There is nothing quite so unforgiving as a camera focusing upon a person who is doing a bad job of reading. For myself, I very rarely read even a quotation. My grammar is not polished and my sentences may often be disjointed. On the other hand, it is debate, and if hon. members would consider this place as being a chamber for debate, not a chamber for reading set speeches, we should all be better off. When a series of set speeches are made there is no meeting of minds on any particular subject. If I had come here this afternoon with a speech, I would have to scrap it entirely because I want to debate with the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River some of the things he had to say. That is what we should be doing. That is how we should be conducting our discussions.

I disagree entirely, though, with the idea that there should be a calendar or legislative timetable. It is all very well for government members to sit over there as if they have been inspired from on high and as if the administration had a corner on brains and a divine right to have all its legislation accepted. Television will not cure this. It is a question of communicating to the people of this country what is being said. I could give example after example when, as a result of determined debate by a number of people who did not share the views of the government with regard to a bill, it finally got out among the people and the people learned of what was happening and said, "The opposition is right, and the government is wrong".

How many times has my hon. friend from Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) stopped the government cold because he and others organized a debate? Take Bill C-83. Was it not on the basis of those speeches that the government finally agreed that the bill must have been wrong? If we accept this timetable, this legislative sausage machine which so many government members advocate, this chamber will become merely redundant. It is a question of a minister making an explanation: nobody on the government side speaks, because to do so would be to delay the bill—a speech or two from the opposition, and then the vote. Legislation would go through on a steamroller. That is not parliament. That is not the democratic form of government. Canada is a big country with regional differences, and if we have some problems now with regional differences I can assure you they will be multiplied many times over if we ever get this legislative steamroller that some people advocate.

I do not dispute that there should be a rule of closure. What we were considering in the Committee last year was an eminently fair type of closure under which Mr. Speaker would have responsibility. I believe—and I myself have occupied that Chair—that there is a place for Mr. Speaker beside that of being a mere timekeeper. He has the sense of the House.

After a certain time, a member—this could be the chief whip or the parliamentary secretary—might wish to propose a motion for closure. He would have to sound out Mr. Speaker to ascertain whether he would accept it. If Mr. Speaker felt there were at least six members who had a real desire to speak, he would simply say, "No; only after the six have spoken will I accept the motion." The motion could then be put, but there would have to be more than just a bare majority; there would have to be, say, 100 members voting for the motion so that there could be full representation. This is a Draconian procedure, but I think the placing of it can be done; however, not at the instance of a minister of the Crown rising in his place, as is done now, and announcing that the debate shall be terminated after eight hours. The present rule 75(c) is totally wrong.

We can move the adjournment debate. We can also change the question period. I have some feelings about the question period. I believe we have totally deformed the idea. But if that is the way it is going to go, fine. Perhaps I am one of the awkward squad when it comes to that. There are many other things we could talk about within the amendment of our rules. We could have a totally new committee structure. I think our report stage on bills is one of our most awkward procedures.

I will conclude my remarks by saying that I welcome this opportunity to speak on this motion, and I make a plea to the government House leader to please bring forward motion No. 12 under the heading "Government Business." I think we can agree to a reasonable debate on it, and then let us get on with the job, instead of everybody complaining that the procedures of this House are archaic. Every member has the right to his own views on the rules. I cannot say that anyone should have preference over any other, but there is one thing that we must have, that is, when the task has been given to a group of people who are interested and knowledgeable, if they have general agreement then let us not have the least common denominator in the House act as a veto on the implementation of the recommendations for rule changes, even on an experimental basis. We could have been doing a lot of good work trying out some of these rules in private members' hour, as the chief government whip has proposed, or in the structure of committees as I have proposed, and in some better use of time as others in the committee have proposed. But we have stood absolutely still. All the good work that has been done has been relegated to the waste basket. However, it can be resurrected. Therefore I will ask the government whip and the government supporters to put some pressure on their House leader to get motion No. 12 before us. We will deal with it and proceed to effect some of the changes which I am sure most hon. members want.

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased indeed to have this opportunity during private members' hour this afternoon to participate in the debate on the motion put forward by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave). First of all I wish to state that I agree entirely with what the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) said when he spoke earlier. He is obviously one who has a great appreciation of the rules and procedures of the House and of their importance in ensuring that business moves smoothly through the House. I, also, am aware of the great importance of this subject, and this is why I am delighted to have the opportunity to participate in this debate.

The hon. member for Halifax-East Hants has made several recommendations in his motion, the first of which is to cut by one half the time limit for speeches as set forth in the standing orders. Obviously this is a very worthwhile recommendation, but one wonders whether members on all sides of the House could reach agreement on this. He recommended also the setting up of a committee composed of members of all parties and of members of the parliamentary press gallery to supervise information on proceedings which take place in the House. I believe that this is an area which should be tightened up. All too often in the past important announcements and statements affecting the House, which should have been made in the House, were unnecessarily delayed and in some instances were in the hands of the press prior to being announced in the House. I believe we should debate this subject and look closely at the procedure we are following so that members can retain their privileged position as representatives of the people who should be the first to hear official statements, and the first to see copies of official documents relating to this House.

I find it difficult, however, to agree with what the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) said this afternoon on this motion. I was rather surprised to hear as experienced a member as the hon. member for Edmonton West who, as I understand it, is a former Speaker of the House and who has had many years of experience here, taking up the time of the House in private members' hour in such a negative way rather than coming forward with positive suggestions and recommendations, which I believe he might well have done, thus giving us the benefit of his experience. I believe that we should take the procedures of this House more seriously and more positively so as to ensure that they will be respected not only by all members of the House but by the community at large. Therefore, I was very disappointed that we did not have the benefit of some positive recommendations from the hon. member for Edmonton West when he spoke a few moments ago and had such an excellent opportunity to make them.

Another matter that should be explored, I believe, is greater discipline in the House. When motion No. 12 is brought before the House, considered, and eventually implemented, I hope that the matter of discipline will be debated, especially in view of what we have seen in recent months. One thing upon which there should be some deliberation and debate is the matter of discipline. Discipline is something which will be needed if the rules and regulations of parliamentary procedure are to work. If there is discipline the public will respect hon. members in their work here in the House. If we, as the representatives of the people, are to be true leaders of our communities and provinces in this House, we should have discipline, and that should show in our every word and deed. If that were the case there would be fewer difficulties and fewer delays, and the respect of the public at large for the work we are trying to do here would grow.

I realize that this could be a topic for considerable discussion. I do not want to get off the topic of the rules of the House by belabouring the point about discipline, but if we could see the recommendations of the committee which to date has worked many hours, we could consider them, approve them, and perhaps adopt them, and we would then be able to enjoy the respect we all want.

On the matter of the so-called late show, the proceedings on the adjournment motion, I agree with the recommendation of the hon. member for Edmonton West that those proceedings should be held at a more reasonable time. Those proceedings are important, and rather than having a late show, perhaps the proceedings could be held from six o'clock to seven o'clock, or from one o'clock to two o'clock just prior to the question period. The committee should seriously consider this so that we might have a more reasonable time in which to give all hon. members an opportunity to express themselves and to participate in that particular order of the day.

The matter of closure was touched upon. No one likes closure. No one likes to see it used, but it is there for a very good reason. In past months it has proved its effectiveness, and I for one am convinced of its usefulness. It is obviously needed. If parties and members do not want to be reasonable and serious about a proposition which is put before them, and if they are hell bent, so to speak, on delaying the proceedings of the House, then it is proper for any government to invoke closure.

I join with the hon. member for Edmonton West, the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, and all other hon. members who are sincerely interested in seeing a modern approach to the proceedings of this House taken as soon as possible, and I urge the earliest possible implementation of such an approach.

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, as the seconder of this motion I want to comment only briefly because we are getting close to the end of private members' hour. I want to commend the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) for bringing the motion forward. I commend also the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) whose contribution to the debate was exceptionally well put, well thought out, and added considerably to the ideas expressed in the motion.

The first suggestion of the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants is that the time for speeches be cut in half. I hope to lend some credence to that by sitting down after using half the time I might normally use before sitting down. Surely in a day of modern communications, of instant replays, and of 30 second ads there is a place for a brief speech by a member of parliament. Surely we can put before our colleagues in this House our thoughts on a particular piece of legislation briefly, even if we only say "I agree with Jones, I agree with Smith, I agree with Brown, and my addition to the debate is thus and so," and sit down. That is probably the most important aspect of this motion. I have long felt that the 40 minute limit on speeches was too much.

Recently we were subjected to a speech lasting a couple of days, and I think that was to the detriment of the House. It was a very interesting ploy, it achieved a certain end, but I think there are other ways of achieving ends. I would like very much to see some rule changes in this regard.

There are three aspects of the hon. member's motion which I particularly want to support, and one has to do with the late show. The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) commented on this, and in keeping with what I suggested I am going to say that I support what he said. Perhaps those proceedings could be held at six o'clock, and perhaps the time could be extended so that at least five hon. members could participate. Certainly there may not be very many hon. members present for the late show, but there are not very many hon. members here at ten o'clock anyway. That would not change. Those who are interested could sit in, and we would not want to take very much time away from the ministers or parliamentary secretaries who respond.

The hon. member recommended setting at five the number of hon. members who may oppose unanimous consent. It seems to me that to have 264 representatives from all of Canada halted in their desire to do something by one single member who may have an attack of dysentery or migraine headache is entirely unreasonable. Five is perhaps not unreasonable. This measure would certainly lend some credence to the word "unanimous". I do not think unanimous has to mean all but one. I think allowing five to oppose would not be entirely unreasonable.

So that we can have a serious look at this motion—and since there is quite a bit of time remaining before the end of private members' hour—I am going to resume my seat and will support the motion.

Mr. Gus MacFarlane (Hamilton Mountain): M. Speaker, I too wish to congratulate the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave). He and I worked very hard on the sub-committee report on private members business. In that effort we had the counsel of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin). We would have been happy to see more action taken as a result of some of the recommendations in that report.

I also want to congratulate the hon. member for Hastings (Mr. Ellis) for his honest recognition of the desire of people like the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) to bring forward some good initiatives with regard to procedure and organization. I think the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) has done this in his report which was brought forward in committee, but I feel it is a slight distortion to imply in any way that the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River was just talking about a sausage machine through which legislation would be processed. I think that it is rather unfair because that hon. member is honestly concerned with parliament, with the right of members to speak, and with the fact that parliament should operate in a way that would allow all of us a fair say in what is occurring, and at the same time make up a schedule which all would adhere to and from which the public could expect performance. I think that is really what he was saying and he was not in any way implying that any government should have the kind of control which would merely order legislation through.

• (1750)

In fact I might say that the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River has quite often chastised people on this side of the House for attempting just to move legislation into a large barrel and push it through, rather than being certain that it is appropriate and that there is time enough to speak to it.

Another matter that concerns me is the reference to Motion No. 12 and that the government House leader should be bringing forward this motion. In his remarks the hon. member for Edmonton West said there should be a reasonable amount of debate. In the past when references were brought to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization it was agreed that we would not debate those motions; that the committee would come to agreement by having discussions and would bring forward a recommendation which had some chance of success, and at that time there would be an opportunity for all to debate the matter. But to debate before the matters come before us would seem to use unnecessary time. It is my understanding that it might be anywhere from three to four to five days.

I think the government House leader, being as responsible as anyone from Cape Breton is, would not want to interfere with normal legislation and stop to debate for three days whether we should send a certain reference to a committee to decide some matter of procedure. I think in all fairness we should remember that.

My concerns are somewhat different from those of other members. This may be because of my background in working with young people, in education, and possibly as a dean of students, and now as whip. I am terribly concerned about individual members. I think all people should have more concern about the members than their own special desire about how procedures should be organized in the House, or of their party and its special desires, or the government and its special desires. We should at this moment pay attention to what ordinary members of parliament—as all of us are regardless of where we sit, whether in the government, as ministers or as whips, basically we are all members of parliament—and we should be concerned about how each of us can best use our time here. We should have the opportunity to speak for our constituents.

It seems to me that if we cannot even come to an agreement, regardless of the initiatives which would help the government or give the opposition a better opportunity to look into estimates and things of that nature, all of which are terribly important—if we cannot even agree that there should be a way in private members' hour by which members can control that hour, that it should not also be subject to the fact that possibly two House leaders might agree, or two whips, that something is going to happen—then it seems very wrong, Mr. Speaker, that government initiatives should have any control over private members' hour. There should be a moment in that private members' hour for private members. Yet we cannot agree on that because people want to tie that in with some agreement on what the government might want, or the opposition might want, or some other party might want.

I think we have to face up to time schedules. It seems to me that the press and the media should be made very aware of the fact that those of us who go home every Friday night do not go home for holidays but go home for work sessions, some of which are in the riding and some of which are in this parliament. Whips should be able to put on a card that members will be here from January 10 to January 24 in work session in parliament, and will be in their ridings from January 24 to February 2 at work sessions. We should be able to do that in a completely open way so that nobody says to a member in his riding, "Oh, you are on holiday from parliament." You certainly are not. You are visiting functions, you are meeting people, you are answering questions, you are acting somewhat as an ombudsman. We hear of countries like Sweden that have five ombudsmen. I maintain we have 264, or 318, or whatever the figure is going to be. Every member of parliament in this country acts as an ombudsman and requires time at home to do that.

One hon. member mentioned changing the hours, and particularly the time of the late show. But what about private members' hour? A lot of members who fly west or east like to try to get out on the first plane. If we sit until five o'clock they may just miss their plane by 20 minutes. If I go to Hamilton I either have to go at 5.15 or else go to Toronto and not get home until nine o'clock at night. If I leave at 5.15 I am in my riding at 6.10 and can attend a function that night, but because the House sits until five o'clock I cannot do that.

Maybe it would be better to have private members' hour from ten o'clock till 11 o'clock in the morning. That adjustment would have to be tied in with what we do in other procedures. That seems to be the hangup, that there is a negotiation. Maybe that is what the hon. member for Edmonton West was referring to when he spoke of the common denominator—if you get this then you have to get this; if you get that then you have to get that. No, I say. I say there is an opportunity for us to do something on procedure and we should be able to bring that motion forward without debate in this House and forward the reference to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization. They should come back with recommendations that are fair for all members and do not have such great reliance on the success of the government or of the opposition. Something should be done for private members at this moment; then I think we would find that members, House leaders, and people in the committee could probably go further into the committee stage and the allocation of time. If we cannot even do something for individual members of parliament to make things more reasonable for them, then I do not see how we can ever tackle the really heavy problems of procedure.

From what I can hear on any side of the House and from the people who have spoken, I think we do want to do something on procedure. This is a moment in parliament when people say it is something we should do. We are a product of the times; let parliament be for our times. May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being six o'clock the hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock tonight.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

AMENDMENTS TO IMPLEMENT CHANGES IN IMMIGRATION POLICY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Cullen that Bill C-24, respecting immigration to Canada, be read the second time referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. J. R. Holmes (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, at the outset let me say that it is a privilege to speak briefly on Bill C-24, this most important bill on immigration. I was particularly pleased to hear the previous speaker, the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Philbrook), terminate his comments by emphasizing the importance of family re-unification. I tell the hon. member, through you, Mr. Speaker, that I share his views.

Before being elected to this House in 1972, and even since that time, I have been aware of many instances showing that the present act does really not address itself to the important humanitarian matter of family re-unification. I suspect that my views about the importance of the family unit are shared by most members of the House, and those fortunate enough to experience the warmth and close ties of family will have no difficulty in appreciating the need for family re-unification measures.

Instead of attempting to consider all aspects of the immigration bill now being debated on second reading in a global context, I have decided that it would be useful to limit my comments to a few specific issues which have been raised, and to some which have not been alluded to yet. One of the major complaints voiced by many speakers in this debate is that the bill does not contain most of the important provisions of the government's immigration policy. It is readily apparent that a good deal of the policy will be established by way of regulation and order in council. As the minister knows, I have objected to this method in the past and repeatedly emphasized the importance of knowing the regulations when we attempt to discuss in detail the merit of any particular piece of legislation. Having said that, I have no difficulty in recognizing that the government and the minister require flexibility in the administration of a piece of legislation. However, I find it inexcusable that the major, operative portion of legislation, which is embodied in regulations, is not available for members of the House of Commons to assess. The regulations should be available to hon. members if they are to understand the implications of the bill and the policies of the government.

I recall, both when I spoke on the Environmental Contaminants Act and on the bill relating to amendments to the Animal Contagious Diseases Act, that it was readily apparent to all hon. members that one could not discuss many aspects of the legislation before the House because of the absence of regulations. It should be noted that in many instances bills have been introduced in this House which contained clauses which did nothing more than enshrine in legislalation previous regulations established without parliamentary debate. I suspect, unless the minister has a change of heart, that that may happen in this instance.

When the minister introduced this bill on March 10, he pointed out that clause 3 lays down in clear terms the basic objectives which the government considers should govern Canadian immigration policy now and in future. I think it is readily apparent that immigration objectives are useful in serving as a guideline for the interpretation of the act, but it must be emphasized that they are not enforceable by law. As the minister knows, future regulations may deviate substantially from the intent of the objectives as outlined in clause 3. I have no doubt that many of those objectives in the bill will be subject to examination during committee stage. I therefore anticipate that the minister will make available to us, and elaborate on, the innumerable regulations which it will be essential for us to know if we are to have a clear understanding of the government's immigration policy and the effect the bill will have on future immigration in Canada.

The hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), in initiating the debate on behalf of our party, emphasized two important points. First, there is the necessity to develop a demographic policy which will ensure a future for all Canadians, a future in which not only economic opportunities exist but, equally, in which there is freedom, racial equality, and justice for everyone. Second, he correctly pointed out that the entire selection system by which immigrants come to Canada is not included in the bill. Earlier this afternoon the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) clearly pointed out the importance of the selection system, the necessity for each of us to understand it in depth and consider it in depth during the committee stage. It is obvious to me that those two factors are interdependent; and if Canadians are to understand clearly the government's immigration policy, if Canadians in future are to understand the manner in which a person may qualify for entry into Canada, I say it is evident that such details must be made available now to members of parliament, and indeed to all Canadians.

I want to limit my comments to three of the immigration objectives we find in the bill, namely, that portion that indicates Canadian immigration policy is to maintain and protect the health, safety and good order of Canadian society. The second deals with the facilitation of visitors into Canada for the purpose of fostering trade and commerce, tourism, cultural and scientific activities, and international understanding. Finally, there is the objective of promoting co-operation between the government of Canada and other levels of government and non-governmental agencies in Canada.

This does not imply that I intend to discuss each of these sections in detail. Obviously, for those who have studied the bill and the implications of each of the objectives, this would be impractical in the time frame allotted to us. Nor do I want to imply that the particular immigration objectives that I have referred to are more important than the other declared objectives within the bill. However, as I indicated somewhat earlier, I felt it would be useful to discuss briefly three important problems which I feel are supportive evidence of the difficulties members of parliament are experiencing in understanding the bill without having adequate information and without knowledge of the regulations.

I was pleased to learn that the bill abolishes a number of provisions which, frankly, are archaic and unjust. As the minister knows, and quite rightly indicated in his speech in the House of Commons, the 1952 act barred epileptics, the mentally retarded, and those who had been inmates of mental institutions.

I can also understand the minister's reasoning to include a portion of the inadmissible classes which includes persons suffering from any disease, disorder, disability or other health impediment as a result of the nature, severity or duration of which, in the opinion of a medical officer, they are or are likely to be a danger to public health or public safety, where their admission would cause or reasonably be expected to cause excessive demands on health or social services. If I interpret this correctly, a medical officer is given the ultimate right to determine whether an excessive demand on the health and social services exists. I suggest to the minister, in all sincerity, that I feel somewhat uneasy that a medical officer would be given unlimited discretionary powers to make such a decision.

Those involved in the delivery of health care are well aware of the stigma that has been attached to many medical problems in the past which has given rise to discriminatory practices. Those of us who have been involved in the delivery of health care recognize that in many instances medical technology and therapeutic advances have enabled many individuals with medical problems to remain active and productive in our society.

For example, epilepsy has been mentioned by various speakers in this debate. I suggest it may well be used as a prototype for the problem I am discussing. It has been recognized that this group of individuals has been discriminated against for many years. We know that certain myths existed in the past regarding individuals with the problem of epilepsy. Fortunately, I am pleased to report, in many instances these myths are disappearing. In this regard I want to congratulate the minister for removing epilepsy from the inadmissible class.

Having said that, I could very quickly give other examples where we have a different perception of a medical problem today as compared to 20, 30 or 40 years ago. For example, our perception of tuberculosis as compared to 30 years ago is entirely different. It is viewed differently by the community at large.

The same could be said of conditions such as pernicious anemia which can now be treated. The patient is no different from the average man on the street who is presumed to be healthy. Other examples are diabetes, cardiovascular problems, many of our handicapped patients, thyroid problems, and many forms of cancer. The point I wish to make is that certain medical problems which may be considered inadmissible today, as epilepsy was in 1952, may appear archaic in the future with the advancement of medical technology.

It is not inconceivable that a medical officer in the future could deny admission to an immigrant on medical grounds and yet another medical officer could permit another individual with the same medical problem to enter Canada. This does not imply that one or the other medical officer is right or wrong. However, it does point out the difficulties of giving unlimited discretionary powers to a medical officer during an era where there are rapid changes in medical technology, and points out the need for an appeal procedure, advisory group, or some mechanism whereby such problems can be judged on the basis of recent medical data. If this occurs, there will be far less occurrence of the possibility of discrimination with respect to health or social problems.

During the debate of the bill dealing principally with Reader's Digest and Time magazines, the minister will recall I took exception to the Canadian content rule. Although I refrained from the use of the word "censorship", the so-called "Cullen Rule" was unquestionably one of editorial interference. During the debate I stressed a number of scientific journals and periodicals would be affected by the legislation, and emphasized the importance of maintaining an environment in which the free flow of scientific information would be permitted in the international community. That fundamental principle is once again expressed in the immigration objective dealing with the facilitation of visitors in Canada for the purpose of fostering trade and commerce, tourism, cultural and scientific activities, and international understanding.

The minister knows my concern for the free flow of information in the scientific community. Again it is readily apparent the regulations will determine the government's policy with respect to this fundamental principle, and I hope the minister will take the opportunity to clarify the government's position during the standing committee hearings when this bill is being examined very carefully.

I wish to make a few brief comments regarding the immigration of medical personnel into Canada. Let me emphasize that the comments I make with respect to the medical profession should not be viewed in isolation but are readily identifiable in other disciplines.

The Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons of Canada in presenting their brief to the Special Joint Committee of Parliament on Immigration failed to address itself to the commonly held myth that the medical profession is a "closed shop" and determines the number of Canadians students admitted to medical schools.

Historically, Canada has benefited from the immigration of exceptionally talented physicians. They have played an important role in serving the public in varying capacities ranging from family physicians to leaders in the academic and research community. Interrelated with this policy of immigration is the simple economic fact that it has been less costly for the government to import undergraduate students than to train them. Today foreign medical graduates comprise about one half of all the specialists certified by the College, and the majority of these remain in Canada to practice their specialty.

There is, however, another side of the scenario as well as the economic implications. First, there is the moral question arising from the acceptance of a significant number of specialist physicians from developing countries where their professional skills are in demand. A case can be made that Canada has developed to the point at which we should be a net exporter of health services rather than importer of health services.

The second point raised by the College is that an open door policy encourages "reverse discrimination" under which it is possible for foreign medical graduates to enter our system while highly qualified Canadian students are denied entrance into Canadian medical schools because of the large number of applicants with superior scholastic records. The brief states:

> Canada should move toward training sufficient undergraduate medical students to meet the needs of the country as a whole. We should look forward to being able to say to Canadian citizens: There are enough Canadian students to satisfy our needs; there are enough graduate programs to satisfy the requirements of these students if they all stay in Canada, and there are enough jobs for them all if they choose to stay here. Some will go to the United States, or to Britain or to other countries in Europe. We shall be able to accommodate some foreign medical graduates of a calibre equal to our own. There will continue to be movement across national borders.

The long term goal for Canada has been adequately outlined in the College's summary. Canada should be self-sufficient in physician manpower, maintaining a balance and ongoing emigration of specialist physicians, and adhering to the historical position that this country welcomes talented new citizens.

As I stated previously, the comments I have made with respect to the medical profession are relevant to other disciplines. Here again the regulations are critical and I do not see any evidence in the bill before us that the government, in formulating its policy, has addressed itself to this important consideration.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I wish to comment on the government's intention, as part of its immigration objectives, to promote co-operation with other levels of government and non-government agencies in determining immigration policy. In this regard I wish to refer to the subject of offshore seasonal help. I can think of no more important issue in terms of co-operation with other governments, and, in particular, with non-government agencies. As the minister knows, it is one which plays a significant role in my part of the country where we have found it essential to utilize offshore help in a number of agricultural operations. As the hon. gentleman knows, I have corresponded with him regarding this matter and I can appreciate the position he takes—that before authorizing the entry of temporary foreign workers the government must be assured that present and future employment opportunities for Canadians are not affected.

It is my impression that the agricultural industry is, and has been, prepared to assist the government in formulating specific plans of action to use the available Canadian labour force. In this regard I believe that Manpower personnel in my area are cognizant of the need to provide permanent, reliable, seasonal workers for the various agricultural sectors. The ones involved principally in my region are farm producers and canneries. What does concern me, however, is that the minister and his officials do not appear to understand fully the practical problems experienced by the agricultural community in attempting to plan ahead for the season in the absence of an offshore seasonal immigration policy.

A major complaint expressed by many farmers concerns the worker turnover. It is not uncommon for individuals to be sent by Canada Manpower, to work for a relatively short period, and then, without notice, move on suddenly to another part of the country at the height of the harvest season. In such circumstances a farmer often has to turn to one of his neighbours for assistance, and it is apparent that any effort to share work crews at such a late date presents problems for the growers involved. I myself am aware of cases where the harvest has not been completed before the first frosts came.

Then again, it has been brought to my attention on numerous occasions that many of the workers sent to farmers have no interest in the crops they are asked to harvest. This is, understandably, reflected in the work they do. Students are an important component of the work force during the summer months but it should be noted that when school starts in September the grower is often left without help. In many instances a large proportion of his crop remains in the fields and he must depend upon inadequate or uncertain help to get it harvested.

Another point which has been emphasized is the advantage of having a complete, homogeneous crew at work in the fields at harvest time. One of the values of the Caribbean work crews is that the experience and expertise they have gained from previous visits is readily apparent on their return to the agricultural sector. In this regard it should be noted that any change in the ownership of the operation can result in the sudden disappearance of a homogeneous work crew. I can assure hon. members that a newly established grower not infrequently finds his difficulties of operation compounded as he is confronted with the prospect of no farm labour.

The brief presented by the Landscape Ontario Committee for the offshore workers program outlines very well the problems faced by the industry. I will quote a few paragraphs:

> In Ontario, our busy season starts roughly April 1st. It is necessary to use seasonal labour from then until approximately November 15th. Seasonal labour is available from several sources, e.g.
> (a) local unemployed, through CMC
> (b) students, directly and through CMC
>
> (c) offshore workers
> Source (a)—Local unemployed are, as a general rule, very unsatisfactory, for several reasons. In the main, unemployed people registered with CMC, are not agriculturally oriented. They have very seldom had any farm work experience. They are not used to working on the land, not used to the working conditions that prevail in early Spring, in particular. For example: the wet cold weather and the muddy fields. We have had with many other nurserymen, much experience trying to hire Canadian workers for the season. We order these people from time to time. If we interview and hire say 20 workers, after two weeks we are lucky if one is still working. This is one of our greatest problems with local or Canadian workers, that they are hired for the season, but do not stay more than a few days or weeks. After the summer they will, if they have managed to stay that long, automatically become a burden to the U.I.C.
>
> The offshore workers we have are no burden to the Canadian economy. They pay in to the U.I.C. and C.P.P., but do not draw from it.
>
> Source (b) Students: Most Ontario nurseries hire large numbers of students each summer. In general, there would be at least four to five times as many students as offshore workers. For example, one of the average size nurseries employs some 55 people on a regular basis, made up of men and women. They employ some 50 students during the summer and another 8-12 people on a part time basis, as the need requires or more accurately as they are available. They have employed some 14 off shore workers the past three years and find that the arrangement works out very well with the number of regular workers, students, and part time help they have.
> Source (c) Offshore Workers: The off shore labour which we have had the past few years is qualified labour. They are fairly well educated, so they learn quickly, they are careful, cheerful, courteous and have high moral standards. They may not be the fastest, but they are steady and dependable, and are at work every day. For these reasons they fit in well to do those jobs which require a certain amount of skill, care and dependability. It has been impossible for us to hire someone in Canada to do these jobs, on a continuing basis (for at least one season). We are certain that agents of the local manpower offices, can attest to this situation.

As I indicated, the key problems as outlined by Landscape Ontario are not dissimilar to the experience of other farm sectors in the community. I want to add one additional caveat to what I have said, a caveat that is frequently overlooked in any discussion of offshore seasonal help. The view is frequently expressed that the program is simply for the benefit of the agricultural community, and what is often overlooked is that the Canadian consumer is directly affected by the activities of the agricultural community. I can assure you that a bumper crop is of little value to Canadians and is of little value to a country in need, a country that is starving, if it cannot be harvested. That is the critical point to be made: the crop must be harvested. In addition, it should not go unnoticed that as Canadians we have demonstrated a genuine concern in assisting developing countries. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that in any discussions that I have had with innumerable offshore workers, principally Caribbean workers in my area, the money they have earned in the Canadian context has assisted them greatly in improving their standard of living on their return to their country.

In conclusion, let me reiterate that I have not attempted to discuss the global picture of the immigration policy for Canada. However, by referring to three of the immigration objectives outlined in clause 3 of the bill I have attempted, by way of illustration, to point out the difficulties that members of parliament are having, and indeed Canadians are having, in assessing the immigration policy when the operative portion of the legislation, namely, the regulations and the orders in council, are not available for debate.

During the committee hearings I hope the minister will take the opportunity to answer some of the questions I have raised and the questions that many other members have raised and, more important, that he will supply sufficient detail with respect to the regulations so that all members of parliament can adequately assess, not only the immigration objectives but, more important, the government's immigration policy.

[Translation]

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, thank you for giving me the opportunity to take part in the debate on Bill C-24 dealing with immigration and refugees. As several members have already given a general picture of the situation I will limit myself to a few observations dealing mainly with refugees.

In 1969, Canada signed the United Nations convention on the status of refugees. At that time it took on certain legal obligations with respect to the status of refugees. The United Nations convention clearly provided that only people able to prove beyond any doubt their status of refugees are entitled to Canada's protection.

Clause 6(1) of the immigration bill provides that the refugee must meet the same requirements as an immigrant. However, this bill does not determine the special circumstances making him a refugee and somehow placing him in a quite different situation from that of an ordinary immigrant. In several cases, if not all, a refugee may well not meet the criteria normally applicable to an immigrant although his request to remain in this country is often more urgent than an immigrant's.

I think the bill should ensure that officials or those who will have to enforce this bill are able to make a clear distinction between the two types of people calling on the hospitality of this country, our democratic life, our sense of human values, as well as our desire to respect basic human rights to the highest extent possible.

Yes, those who urgently ask this country to receive them because human liberties are not or no longer being respected in their country of origin, and dare stand up in their country against those who want to maintain one line of thought from one party or one principle, should always receive a particular welcome from this country.

[Mr. Holmes.]

Through the years Canada has rejected all forms of extremism. It has looked for an original system based on the integrity of the elements making up our population. Whatever their orgin, the contribution of immigrants to the future of our country can be adverse only to the extent of our own weakness as regards our problems. A strong nation does not need legislation restricting immigration if the immigrant knows that he is accepted because he believes in the values of our country and its contribution to the full achievement of our country's expectations. But if he immigrates to teach political concepts threatening social harmony he will be treated as a subversive element. Canadian people have the most different and the most various origins. Our country became what it is presently owing to immigration.

In this context, Mr. Speaker, let us say that the immigrant coming to Canada wishes to start a new way of living. Our country should then recognize that it is an individual who, in his desire to start a new life, will contribute to the building of our country. We must in fact recognize that if all immigrants coming to our country wish to start a new life with more happiness, when they leave their own country it is often regretfully because of a change of political regime or because of the declared partisanship of their leaders.

The refugee immigrants who face those difficulties show human solidarity as they fight for freedom, for ideas as well as for human beings. They are also dynamic people whom we should consider as good elements for our country, all the more so because a man who is forced to emigrate does not come here to realize a long nurtured plan. For a simple reason of ethics we should consider them with more attention and better help them get established in our country after the difficult moments they lived in their country of origin. Canada should not be a restrictive land for some groups of immigrants, particularly those who come here to find freedom because in their country the right to freedom, to freedom of speech, is not recognized.

This is, Mr. Speaker, the few comments I had to make on Bill C-24 at this time.

[English]

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, the bill we are debating this evening has come before the House at the wrong time. When we were debating the citizenship bill at second reading over a year ago, I suggested that that bill should have waited until we settled our immigration policy, and having done that it would then have been in order to have brought forward the citizenship bill and debated it. However, for its own reasons the government has chosen to present these bills in the opposite order, so the citizenship bill is completed, and we now struggle with what is really the more basic and difficult task of establishing an immigration policy.

We have heard several speakers already in this debate, but I feel that in many ways we have not as yet grasped the nettle of immigration policy.

We have heard some interesting speeches. On Friday last the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Lee), who is not with us tonight, told us the sad story of discrimination against Orientals who immigrated, or who wished to immigrate, during the period of time from prior to the turn of the century on into this century, and right up until the end of the Second World War. That is a sad story indeed, but one should remember that the reprehensible steps which were taken to bring about that discrimination were taken by Liberal governments under Liberal legislation.

The hon. member did not even mention the most appalling discrimination, the decision to remove Japanese people from the coast and to attempt to return them to Japan, whether they were born in Japan or in Canada. The surprising thing is that the hon. member for Vancouver East sits on the government side, and after his retracing that long and sad history one would wonder what would have brought him to the point where he would have offered to stand for that particular party. It seems to be one more example of the Canadian people being ready to forgive all that happens on the government side, and not just to forgive all but always to forgive all. There have been recent examples of that tendency. The very people whose policies bring us to the point our economic situation is now at, and who bring our national unity situation to the point it is now at, as well as the immigration situation, are the people who are hailed as the only people to save the country.

The immigration policies put forward have a number of very highly idealistic bases. There is much talk of demography and what our demographic policy should be. I think this is a euphemism for a much simpler question: how many people can we afford to bring into the country at any one time? I will admit that there are sad aspects to the question of population, and I will get around to some of those a bit later.

There is a question about enriching and strengthening the cultural and social fabric of Canada, taking into account the federal and bilingual character of Canada. What a contradiction that is! Part of the problem which arises is the problem of national unity which is confronting us very sharply at this time.

I do not know whether the demand to enter Canada has fallen off at all. I suspect it has not because the situation in the rest of the world gets no better. However, I think people must be pausing now as they consider emigrating to Canada, and asking themselves whether there is some question as to whether the nation itself can exist much longer as one nation. One of the challenges to the country now is that a demand is made on the English-speaking part of the country to develop the same passion for national unity as that which is evidenced in the province of Quebec by those who argue that the country should be broken in two. It is rather difficult, in the face of federal government policy in a variety of areas, for the call of unity to be answered by the variety of peoples who constitute what is in a sense English-speaking Canada. We really must not be sanctimonious about the situation we have in Canada.

If one looks at "The Non-Official Language," the report of a study of Canadian multiculturalism handed down in 1975, there is a page which discusses generational differences in language and knowledge. This discusses mother tongue, and the report tells us that fluency decreases rapidly from generation to generation. This book is full of carefully prepared tables, but one table shows that 70.8 per cent of immigrants are fluent in their ethnic tongue. There are various reasons why not all immigrants of the first generation are fluent. Some come as small children, some come removed from their country of origin, but 70.8 per cent are fluent. When we consider the children of these immigrants, the second generation, 10.8 per cent are fluent. Of the third generation only .6 per cent are fluent. In subsequent generations none at all are considered fluent.

We find that in spite of the brave words about this nation being a mosaic of many peoples, about it being multicultural, that those are brave words only. There is a great illusion there. We cannot really hold ourselves up as being that much superior to the United States in the policies they have had, recognizing only one official language.

We have to be a little cautious about the promises we hold out to immigrants now compared to earlier years because they will be confronted with a choice of developing one of two languages, either English or French. I believe they will continue to face the same dilemma of immigration; that by the time the grandchildren are adults, there will be very little left of the original language and not too much of the culture. This is one of the "givens" of the situation, one of the unavoidable facts of immigration. I think we fool ourselves if we pretend otherwise. We fool ourselves even more if we pretend that by some process of federal spending, by some challenge to the people, we can reverse the situation to allow easily the retention of a geat variety of languages from generation to generation in this country.

We fool ourselves too if we pretend there is no bigotry, no prejudice in this country, and if we blind ourselves to the changes that have come about with bewildering speed in the last few years we make a mistake there as well. It seems to me that the patron saint of this country in recent times has not been Valentine but Archie Bunker, and through a variety of things that have been permissible in recent years we have made bigotry almost respectable. It does not surprise me that when a survey is made in metropolitan Toronto the results show a shocking level of bigotry amongst high school students. It does not surprise me to talk to a person about 20 years of age in British Columbia who says proudly, "I am bigoted," and that one then has to spend a long time with that person suggesting that there is nothing desirable about that, nothing that makes it respectable.

One realizes one is working against forces that have tended to educate and re-educate our young people, quite apart from the things done in our schools that have done it negatively. The jokes about immigrants in programs like "All In The Family" have led if anything to a rise in bigotry and prejudice rather than tolerance and understanding. I suspect that some of the people who initiated that sort of programming believed we had reached the stage of sophistication where it could be borne and the result would be humour and increased tolerance. Everything seems to point in the opposite direction, however.

I suggest we could look at the rise and fall of immigration levels through the theory of the "necessary break". The breaks used to be out of our hands. The first came in World War I when there had been a great wave of immigration; a world war halted that and permitted a breathing space. In clause 3(d) of the bill it is called adaptation. I think assimilation might be a less popular but more accurate word.

The great depression provided another break. During those years there was little hope—and little hope in coming to Canada, so again there was a slackening of immigration. For a period of years World War II made immigration impossible. Since the end of World War II, however, immigration has risen and fallen for some 30 years. This was acceptable in a boom period but it becomes difficult in an economic slowdown. We cannot wish upon ourselves another break that is out of our hands. We cannot bear the thought of World War III doing that. If that happens there will not be any nation left, and if we go into another great depression we will not have a nation either. I suspect we must ask if, as a nation, we should not seriously slow the rate of immigration. I realize that is a question that cannot be asked, and I accept entirely clauses such as 3(f), which reads as follows:

to ensure that any person who seeks admission to Canada on either a permanent or temporary basis is subject to standards of admission that do not discriminate on grounds of race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion or sex;

I must accept that. We cannot return to the time spoken of by the hon. member for Vancouver East when discrimination against certain groups was flagrant and blatant. Those days are gone.

One clause we can approve of is that which suggests the government of Canada should co-operate with other levels of government and with non-governmental agencies in easing the road to adaptation of immigrants. This is one of the great flaws in recent years; the federal government has set a policy for immigration and the municipal level has tended to pick up the load, particularly for schools. The load has fallen on the least powerful level of government, that with no sovereignty and no determination of the policy. It has been stuck with the bill and the efforts to make changes and pay for them in education and a variety of other aspects that a high level of immigration has brought about. This is where tension lies, where bigotries become exposed and feed on the fears that come about, particularly as we move into a period of economic decline.

I suspect there will always be adaptation; that we should almost insist upon. It is a great irony that we just passed the human rights bill a short time ago and yet we know that there are a great many cultures in the world that discriminate against women, for example. The very law that we passed is one that if we insist upon it, will run counter to the suggestion that there need be no cultural change or adaptation in this line. We ought to be careful that we do not become wildly inconsistent in our desire to seem to be tolerant and full of brotherhood.

[Mr. Johnston.]

The question of farm labour has already been raised. I think we should clearly understand the bill. If we believe in provisions such as clause 3 that practice will be a difficult one to continue. The thread which runs through all our debate on immigration is this: we must have these people, to do jobs Canadians will not do.

• (2100)

Is it not strange that a country which 100 years ago rejected aristocracy yet retained the monarchy—the notion of aristocracy running against the grain of the hardy, independent settlers of that time—should now seek to establish another kind of aristocracy? Apparently some Canadians are not to do some jobs; they are not to do the dirty, uncomfortable menial jobs. We are to bring in people from outside who, forced by economic pressures in their countries, will do those jobs for us. Is it not contradictory that we should think some jobs are beneath human dignity?

If some jobs are degrading, change them. Do what is necessary to make them fit for human beings to perform. Or, if the problem lies in our educational system and the people we are raising in this country, people who have no sense of loyalty or duty, we should tackle it from that side. But we are on a dangerous path if we think we can have two categories of citizens, one kind above doing any menial job, and another kind we constantly replenish or bring in from outside to do our dirty work. It is to our credit that, under our immigration policies, such numbers in this country are at a low level.

Contrast our situation with that of some nations of Europe who have brought in migrant labourers but have not provided for their social needs. If those labourers had been granted citizenship, those countries would have found it necessary to provide for their social needs. As it is they allow them to stay for one year, or three years, or whatever the period is, rather than accepting them into the community. We have chosen the more honourable route, but if we are not careful we shall depend more and more on bringing such workers into this country. We have already used this approach in agriculture and certain industries. Clearly, we shall need to consider carefully what is implied in sub-paragraph (f) of clause 3.

It seems to me, all the same, that we must have done something right in this country, for we have achieved over the years some levels of common justice, tolerance and decency; otherwise why would we continue to attract inquiries from the countries mentioned earlier? In 1974, 750,000 people inquired about coming to Canada. That suggests that our levels of freedom are not all that bad. We know that the cause partly is that virtually every other part of the world has closed its borders to immigrants and we remain one of the few open countries. That is part of the reason for the pressure.

The hon. member for Vancouver East suggested that people from Asia had taken a chance on Canada. Mr. Speaker, I can draw on familiar experiences; my grandfather came from Sweden. He did not have much chance in Sweden, and anybody who has seen Troel's film, "The Immigrants", part one, will understand the conditions in which my grandparents lived in Scandinavia. They would know that there was no chance at all for those in Scandinavia.

Sometimes, after my grandfather had been in Canada for a while, he used to grow nostalgic, talk about the old land and say that things were not that bad over there. Whenever he talked this way my grandmother would remind him of exactly what it was like. She had known what it was to labour in the fields without owning the land and without any chance for a shift in social status as the years and generations went by. I suspect that this is still very much the case in many countries, and we, as a country, offer people in all parts of the world hope for a better life, hope for a system of government free and democratic.

May I now refer to a letter I received, in common with other hon. members, when the government brought out its green paper. The document to which I refer is a statement on immigration policy by a group of University of Toronto faculty. It is a distinguished group; there are at least 30 names signed on the back of the letter. There is a dean of theology of St. Michael's College, a professor of religious studies; there are people from the departments of political economy, mathematics, fine arts—the list of names is long. The letter was guaranteed to make a mere member of parliament curl up like a worm on a hot rock. Yes, there was a mass of academic distinction backing that letter. I think all hon. members received a copy of that letter of May, 1975. I was critical of it.

As you will recall, the green paper was a hesitant document. It skirted around every issue and refrained from spelling anything out. It did not grasp any nettles; even so, this group of academics found a lot in it to attack. If I may quote, they said:

> When official Canada speaks of regulating immigration, it seems always to mean preventing too much immigration. Though directly racial conditions on immigration were eliminated from law in 1967, recent practices and pronouncements express the official apprehension—especially toward the non-white or south-European applicant . . .
> We reject the underlying assumption that 'those others out there' are to be dealt with as best profits the entrenched Canadian. The question should not be how many immigrants our existing social system can profitably accommodate, for our social system is changing. The people's concern must rather be to set a social and economic policy, and in that context to set a population policy and an immigration policy. The aim should be to serve human needs—of Canadian (including native Canadians) but also of prospective immigrants.
>
> Freer access to Canada would not solve problems of population or poverty or repression elsewhere; but it would provide one further dimension of freedom; it would offer some hope.
>
> And would the immigrants' gain be at the expense of the present wage-earning group? The government's attitude tends to encourage this notion. It is a notion which gives employers leverage to pit a favoured group of workers against a less favoured. We do not think such a division should be accepted. We doubt that white Canadians have a stake in the maintenance of a pool of lower-paid labour, either within our borders or abroad.
> Immigrants do not threaten our culture, they enrich it. Their labour is an asset to our economy, not a burden. A policy of welcome is possible.

I replied, individually, to each of those academics and learned, from the few who replied to me, that many of them had not read the letter they purported to sign. It seems to me that there was room for a reply, that there was no need to cringe and no need for embarrassment. In my reply I commented first on the general woolliness of thought in the letter of the academics. I said that one can agree with the opening statement about the "wage of intolerance". That is true.

● (2110)

I question whether the Fathers of Confederation had really considered setting up Canada as a multiculture at that time. They did mention two official languages, but no more. I suspect that if they really wrestled with the problem of multiculturalism they might have spelled that out a little more clearly, but they did not. I think it was a measure of tolerance that they did include two official languages, and we know the problems that have arisen from that decision. My letter continues:

> To suggest that concern about immigration policy is a creation of government is simply false. " . . . official Canada speaks . . . the official apprehension." The green paper was long-awaited. It comes finally as a delayed response to public concern, and, as you say, it is tentative. The government was pushed reluctantly into producing a green paper.
> Who is the "entrenched Canadian" who can profit from "those others out there"? Those who speak to me about immigration have seen rights promised them in perpetuity stripped away (the British subject, for example).

We have had the culminating effect of this in the past few years with the declaration of the new Citizenship Act. Dismay is still striking hundreds of former British subjects, long time Canadian residents, when they realize they are not Canadian citizens. They are bewildered and dismayed. For anyone to describe those people now as entrenched is making a grave mistake.

They know that newly arrived immigrants have rights the native born do not have. This adds to the confusion because the immigrant can nominate and sponsor, but the Canadian born cannot. There is no way I can apply to bring a citizen from some other land to this land and have that work. One finds that one has fewer freedoms in the land in which one was born. That is another source of confusion and dismay. I again quote from the letter:

> They see Canadian citizenship going at a bargain rate—

That was written before Bill C-20 was passed, with the reduction from five to three years required to qualify. I takes the native born 18 years before he can vote. The immigrant waits three. I would not want to lower the voting age any more. In fact it probably works well at 18. There is, however, still that question there. I then said, and I quote:

> Who can be or feel "entrenched" when as you correctly observe, "our social system is changing"?
> If in your collective wisdom you know where "The people's concern must rather be"—then proceed to spell out the "social and economic policy", the "population policy", and "an immigration policy" that are imperative. Why that policy should be geared to the "prospective immigrants" I do not see. I know that no country elsewhere in the world is gearing its policies to benefit me should I decide to leave my native land. As the grandson of immigrants from Sweden I stubbornly insist that, should I decide to emigrate anywhere, the onus would properly be on me to make the necessary adjustments.
>
> Your argument for "freer access" is couched in confusing rhetoric. Who can object to "one further dimension of freedom"? But, if the strains of freer immigration fracture this land, who then would benefit?
> Finally, you must think again about your rhetorical question, "And would the immigrants' gain be at the expense of the present wage-earning group?" What makes you think that that is just a "notion" encouraged by the "government's attitude"? How can you explain it to the Vancouver wage-earning taxpayer footing the bill to pay for special classes to teach immigrant children basic English? He sees it in actual dollars and cents on his tax statement. How will you exlain it as a "notion" to the Vernon, B.C., resident whose son is studying medicine in Guadalajara, Mexico—in Spanish!—because he cannot find a place in a Canadian medical school which has a disconcerting percentage of overseas students enrolled?

Confronted by the "wave of intolerance" that you correctly perceive you could do better than to fuel the fire. For the sake of all our immigrants old and new, for the sake of all our minorities, we need an immigration pause to permit the spirit of tolerance to grow again.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate immensely the opportunity to say a few words about the bill before us at the present time, Canada's new immigration bill. It is the first change in our immigration laws since 1952.

My colleagues encouraged me to speak on this matter because I could speak with experience. It is no secret to any of my colleagues that I am a new Canadian, like four million others who live in Canada at the present time.

I speak with reluctance, as well, because as a Canadian who was adopted by the people of this great land as one of their own, having come here as an adult at the age of 19, deep down I still have the feeling that I am in debt to this great land and this society. I have been in Canada for 26 years. I have been a Canadian for 21. I do not think that my debt to this land will ever be paid.

I will tell you in a few words, Mr. Speaker, what my feelings are. I came to Canada at the age of 19 from a country with an overdeveloped culture, and an overdeveloped sense of nationalism. At the time Canada represented a refuge. It represented all those things which caused me to consider leaving my homeland, my friends, mother, father, brother and sister. I felt cheated. It was like when one discovers his father and mother have been lying to him all his life about Santa Claus and the Easter Bunny.

In postwar Germany my whole world had tumbled in. I was old enough to make a commitment at the age of 12 when the war was finished. It was a commitment to something that I thought was great, unique, and worth while fighting for. One grew up a little faster in those days than one does today. My whole world tumbled in after I learned that I had been cheated out of a childhood and a teenage life, which one considers essential.

To me, Canada meant security and comfort. It replaced what I had lost in relation to a family, community and country, because all that was destroyed. I compare myself with people who come to our country today from the Third World. They have learned what it is like to starve. I did that during the last few years of the war. I learned to examine the thin line between humanity and bestiality. I learned that really only a mother has deep human instincts when things get tough. I rediscovered all those great human feelings in Canada.

To a youngster from Central Europe, reading some of the books and news releases, and seeing care parcels arrive, Canada was a land of unlimited possibilities, as was all of North America, because the American people felt such strong ties to Central Europe—their hearts were bleeding because of what had happened to their relatives and friends. They were very charitable. I learned to appreciate those people, and it became an obsession; I never doubted but that this was the land in which I wanted to settle and bring up my family, a land where everybody is equal before the law and where the only credential, when applying for work, is the will to work and the determination to better oneself. Oh yes, I wanted to better myself and I wanted to work.

My Canadian dream was fulfilled beyond all my expectations. I can hardly imagine what I would have said if anyone had told me in 1951, when I arrived in Halifax on an Italian ship, that some day I would be sitting in this House of Commons taking part in a debate about immigration and about demographic strategy. I would have said: That is too much to expect. But I think I have earned the respect of a significant number of Canadians whom I represent here in the House of Commons, who have asked me to speak for them, and who have given me credit for what I have achieved, not only for myself and my family but for the community in which I live and the area in which I settled. And I did settle in one of the frontier areas, and I have no hang-up about the suggestion that more immigrants should do the same. Perhaps I adopted the right attitude. My wife came here two years after I did.

I wanted to be a Canadian as soon as possible. I felt I had nothing to go back to and I applied for citizenship after five years. Looking back, though, I realize I did not really become a Canadian until seven years later—the first time I could afford to go back to my homeland and visit my father and mother and my family. When I got back to Canada and stepped off the plane in Edmonton I knew, then, that I was a Canadian. I had not known until them. I could really assess the potential this great country holds for those who make a commitment to it. My spirit was set free here and I achieved all my goals, including some I had not even set.

Now, as I look at this bill and the changes in the legislation, I begin to question whether the kind of freedom, the kind of achievement I was able to accomplish, would be possible for immigrants who come to our shores in the future. I must admit, of course, that today we must take account of the fact that over the last 25 years we have, in a sense, created a unique cultural identity and that we have, of course, the right and the responsibility to enrich and strengthen this cultural and social fabric. But how was this identity achieved, how did it evolve? We cannot overlook the fact that the identity, such as it is today, and the cultural basis, such as it is, have been established or achieved through the efforts of people who came mainly from Europe, people who enjoyed an ecumenical relationship in a religious sense, people who reflect a common denominator. Historically, the Anglo-Saxons came from Germany. It was two founding nations which laid the basis of the culture with which we identify today.

In each of the post-war periods people came here from war torn countries to find a new beginning, and most of them achieved their goals. Most of them became integrated into our society. I can recall the days when four or five hundred people in Toronto would turn out for a social gathering run by the German club. Today one would have to look all over the city to find 40. They have all become integrated into the society we have established—and so they should have.

Today, things are changing. The fact is we have not managed well in an economic sense. In terms of the standard of living, we are not No. 3 any more in the world but No. 10 or No. 11. Our land is not as attractive to Europeans as it once was. We still find Europeans coming here, but they do so mainly to join members of their families who arrived here years ago.

The main flow of immigrants today is from Third World countries. These are people who possess entirely different social values, fundamentally different religions, fundamentally different behavioural attitudes toward society. Our immigration policies must, of course, be structured in an attempt to find a way to integrate these people into the system we have established. There will be discrimination, as there already has been, against these people. I should like to think I was never discriminated against. I know I was not. My commitment was always firm. Since I came here I have spoken English in the home because I wanted my children to be able to speak freely, without accent, while they attended school. I assimilated into the society as quickly as I could. But the people I am speaking about would find it much more difficult to do so. This bill will make it even more difficult for them because it contains some clauses which will be a serious affront to the freedom we enjoy in this country.

You cannot legislate against discrimination no matter how many immigration or human rights bills you bring before the House of Commons, particularly when you deliberately establish immigrant ghettos in areas of our land such as our cities or in the frontier areas. There will be restrictions against those new immigrants for no other reason than that they must work within the framework of our present social and cultural fabric. They will not have the same freedom that I have in making a contribution to the cultural evolution of this land. We have now set ourselves up as the demagogues who direct the further cultural revolution. We are doing this through the CBC and we are doing it by restricting foreign publications from coming into our country. These people will not be allowed to make the kind of contribution that I did.

I want to give an illustration and to cite an example of what I am saying. I can recall the time when I was working in a mine. There were no delicatessen stores there that we have everywhere today, and we were thirsty for a glass of wine with a meal. We wanted very much to go into a restaurant and enjoy a good meal with a glass of wine. It took a while for us to adjust to the fact that one had to spice one's meat in the restaurant with salt and pepper, because one does not do that where I come from in the Black Forest area. The meals there are spiced, and if you do not like the way the food is prepared in one restaurant, you go to another one. That adjustment was not too hard, but one had acquired a certain taste before coming to this country, and customs are hard to break.

I recall that there was nowhere I could buy, for instance, European sausage because there was a law in existence that any meat made into sausage had to be cooked. That ruled out all the fancy sausages that the Poles, the Germans, and the Ukrainians make which are made from smoked meat. I had some friends who were also from central Europe. They saved some money and set themselves up as businessmen. They set up a delicatessen store. They moved to Vancouver. They were able, they had determination, and they worked hard to change that particular law. Several of them became millionnaires in the delicatessen business when they started to make this fancy European sausage. A few years later one could enjoy a glass of wine with a meal in some of the better restaurants, and lo and behold in the last few years you are able to read on the label of your wine bottle the year the wine was made and whether the wine is from the Rhine, the Moselle or the great wine growing areas in France. So in a remote sense I have made a contribution to the evolution of our culture because it is now an in thing to go to a good restaurant and to eat a well spiced meal with a glass of wine.

What about these new immigrants who are now being asked to conform to what is here? What contribution will they be able to make? What contribution will they be allowed to add to our society? In my opinion the Immigration Act does not need to spell out that we should foster the development of a strong and viable economy and the prosperity of all regions of Canada. Apart from the great freedom we have enjoyed so far in this country, there is only one reason why immigrants come here, that is to be prosperous, to achieve a degree of prosperity for their families and themselves, and in so doing to contribute to the prosperity of our society as a whole. Indeed our economic welfare will depend on a prudent and imaginative immigration policy. If one considers that one out of six Canadians today was not born here, and that all but half a million of us who are not of native ancestry come from immigrant stock, it is not hard to imagine that a further increase in our industrial capacity and in our gross national product will depend on the number and types of immigrants which our country will attract in the future.

What about the freedom which once attracted people from all parts of the globe? This brings me to the great philosophical expression of what the main purpose of this new policy is. It reads:

> It is to support the attainment of such demographic goals as may be established by the government of Canada from time to time in respect of the size, rate of growth, structure and geographic distribution of the Canadian population.

Here is another very serious restriction on the freedom that any future Canadians will enjoy. We will now have to rely on them to develop the frontier areas in the underdeveloped regions of our country. We have to rely on the immigration policy for regional development. I sympathize with the government, of course. Everything else has failed. Our Regional Development Incentives Act has not worked. Canadians want to go where they can achieve for themselves the best standard of living, and that is in our cities. I look at other more advanced industrial nations and, if I may be allowed to make a comparison, if I look at West Germany, for instance, a country with 66 million people, I find that there are two cities in Canada that have a greater population than any city there.

Any attempt the government has made to decentralize our population, any previous attempt in demographic strategy, has failed. So we are now looking to the Immigration Act to develop our frontier areas. What will that mean? It will mean that if, as we have said, we wish to develop the potential of north eastern British Columbia, in which lies vast resources of energy, particularly coal, we will tell the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Cullen), after consultation with the province and the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard), that we need 12,000 coal miners for that area in British Columbia. He will then send his people all across the world to find 12,000 coal miners.

Of course there is no explanation for the fact that the Hindus and the Pakistanis are most likely to work in the saw mills. They will find work in north eastern British Columbia because there is a heavy demand for saw mill workers there in spite of the high unemployment figures. I suppose that the Italians and the Greeks will work in the mines—I do not know who will work in the coal mines. What we will be doing is establishing ethnic immigrant ghettos in these frontier areas in addition to the ghettos we have already established in our cities. That is a very serious affront to civil liberty, freedom of movement, and the cardinal principles of democracy and freedom which I and all Canadians have enjoyed so far.

There will now be conditions attached to immigration. Immigrants will have to conform to our social structure, and they will have to move into certain areas. But how long will they have to stay there? Will there be a date attached to it? Do they have to stay there two years? The region I come from was not developed by people who were forced to live there. Every day industries grow and corporations move into areas to take over from the small businessmen who developed them in the first place.

Corporate executives are transferred into Prince George, I suppose, as a penalty. They would much rather be in some head office in Toronto. Every minute of their time spent there is a nightmare for them. A person cannot wait until he has enough seniority in his company or within the civil service structure to move to Victoria, Vancouver, Ottawa or Toronto. He does not really contribute anything to that area because he does not even like it there, nor will immigrants who are forced to move to places like the Quintette mountains to develop a coal mine. Those immigrants will hate every minute of it, and they will be very anxious to see the day when they will be allowed to become full-fledged Canadians after perhaps three years, and when they can move out of the hell holes to which they have been sent.

This is a very serious matter, and in my judgment this bill will discriminate against people who will be offered refuge in our country and who will be told when they come here that they will have almost equal rights except the right to vote in elections because they will not have equal rights. They will not have the kind of freedom previous immigrants have enjoyed.

I am more concerned about what the bill does not say then what it does. I would like to know more about the people who will make the regulations and the people who will consult with other governments and with other interested groups about the demographic strategy and about the placement of immigrants. I would like to know who will make a value judgment about a person's capability in our social structure, or a value judgment as to where in this country these people can make their contributions. Will we continue to have the kind of silliness and stupidity which were inherent in previous regulations when some peole came to our country to get the feel of it, discovered that they liked it, wanted to apply, and had to leave the country before they could apply? But before they left the country they had to hire a lawyer.

I—and I am sure many of my colleagues—have several cases on file about people who had to see a lawyer with whom they made a deal to work on their behalf while they were gone. I can think of one particular case which I am sure the minister remembers. I am thinking of the case of a Chilean family which was located in Prince George. They should have been allowed to stay here. They assimilated well into the Prince George scene. There were letters from service clubs, from individuals, and from the mayor saying that the man had a job. He was a refugee. He could not be sent back to his country, yet the committee, or whoever it was, ruled that he was not a refugee under the regulations established by the minister.

This family had to leave, but they were told not to worry. They were told that all they had to do was get out of the country, apply, and that they would be brought back in somehow. However, they did not trust the system very much, so they hired a lawyer to look after their interests. Three months later they came back. They had to travel all the way to Spain with all their children and come back, and now they are back in Prince George. The father is working at his old job now, and everything is as it should have been in the first place, except for the fact that for the next 25 years they will be paying a lawyer's bill, and they do not even know how much it is. The lawyer probably asked me and some of my colleagues to do all the dirty work, but he is the one who will be sending a bill. There is a price for those people to come to this country, and at this moment they do not even know what it is, but I intend to find out.

Who makes these silly regulations, and how do they fit into the fundamental principle which should be attached to the immigration policy of a country like Canada which espouses democratic principles and fundamental civil rights and liberties? I am disappointed that this bill does not add anything; it takes something away from the things which I thought made this country great.

Of course there are reasons for the bill, and I can understand them, but we have not been very skillful disguising the true intent. The government did not hear what it wanted to hear in the debate which was carried out across the country. The government was told about discrimination and about the need to close our borders to immigrants, so the government had to come up with something. The information did not come from the green paper. The government had to come up with something, and it really does not fit into our scene at all.

The multicultural dream was just a dream, because one of our founding cultures felt threatened by the fact that other cultures should find fulfilment in this society. I for one am not offended by the fact that I should attune to one of the founding cultures which made this country great. I felt that was a condition and a commitment which I had to make when I came here, but why put on this charade? Why say that our identity is one of many cultures? Why do we not spell it out as it is, and why are we not honest with people? Why does it always have to be the devious way? Why does the government always have to work behind people's backs? This bill spells out for the first time the objectives of Canadian immigration policy in philosophical terms, but it falls short of what most of us expected after the charade which was perpetrated by this government.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, even with my short experience in the House of Commons I have no hesitation in stating that this is one of the most important pieces of legislation this august body will face in some time. Here we are after many years attempting to determine just what kind of immigration policy the country should have, keeping in mind our goals and what we would like to have in terms of a greater Canada.

I hear a lot about the founding races, and I know what that means, but I want to tell the House that in his wisdom my father, during the first world war, came to this country from St. Vincent, British West Indies, and my mother hailed from Jamaica, of the British West Indies at that time. They had a hell of a time when they came here, but what sticks out in my mind is that of all the countries to which they could have gone they picked this country.

● (2150)

As a result of the beautiful union which occurred when they arrived in this country of mine, I was pleased to be a first generation Canadian. When I listen to people throughout this land who indicate to me that because people such as I have just referrred to, my mother and father, had a different social background, that they could not integrate, could not face the problems of this country, could not make a concrete contribution, then I want to reflect back on my childhood and start punching. That is the way I used to bring about racial harmony.

When I hear this nonsense expressed by certain people who ought to know better, I thank God that my seatmate, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), requested that I seek election to this House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: At one time a person of my particular hue, being a member of the visible minority—a black man or a black woman—was not accepted by any of the main line parties. Let us acknowledge history. They did not want you; they did not ask you; they thought you could not make a contribution.

I hear a lot about the Anglophone and the Francophone. Every now and again we have to sit back and look at who has done the hard work in this country in order to bring it to the position it is in now—people who took it upon themselves to say that all they wanted was an opportunity to work, and notwithstanding the horrendous attitudes that prevented them from getting ahead, they were prepared to come here in order to grasp opportunities and in order to help the country. That is the kind of stock I come from; that is the message I would continue to preach.

I wanted to be a member of the special joint committee on immigration. In the local newspapers of Ottawa, Vancouver, and all the big cities I read about attitudes that I knew existed. I wanted to find out their extent; I wanted to determine to what extent the country is multiracial and multicultural. Make no mistake, Mr. Speaker, at one time it was not multiracial or multicultural. It was strictly WASP. When I think of the changes over the years from the White Anglo Saxon Protestant attitude to one of multicultural and multiracial acceptance, I know that is what is making this nation great.

Do not let us downplay this multicultural and multiracial aspect. At one time no one would admit that is what this country is all about. But it is what this country is all about. It is a country of the beautiful mosaic; it is a country where the arms of compassion, of friendship, stretch around the entire world.

During the committee hearings, however, I saw the bigots; I saw the racists, black and white. I saw the WASPS. I saw the Western Guard. I saw them all in action.

I want to say that in my 55 years, knowing what went on in the past, seeing what is going on today, I know that the attitudes of these small groups here and there, whose vocal, poisoned, disruptive and dangerous philosophy of superiority is based on race, can only bring about division, hate, suspicion, fear, and violence. It is unfortunate that so much of that small vocal minority gets so much attention, and yet it should get that attention because I know; you know, Mr. Speaker; we all know that we cannot afford such attitudes, and it is my view that Canadians do not want them.

I appreciate the new attitude at the courts, Mr. Speaker. I will not spell that out, but it is said that racial attacks will be dealt with more harshly. Some people may say "I am English and white; should the same type of treatment not be meted out to the person who attacks me because I am English?" That is a foolish and irresponsible argument. When you are part of the visible minority you cannot hide. If you cannot get along because you are Francophone, all you have to do is become Anglophone and move anywhere in the world and you will be accepted if you so desire. If you are Anglophone and want to become Francophone, you can do it by learning the language and moving anywhere in the world. But, Mr. Speaker, when you are a member of the visible minority you cannot do that. You cannot change your name and you cannot hide. You cannot learn another language and hide. You are a member of the visible minority, and as such you stand out.

That is why I appreciate the courts moving in the direction they are today. It is about time. That is why I can appreciate the Ontario Human Rights Commission and the job it is trying to do, even though it may be questioned at times. It may be an impossible job, but it is attempting to bring about a proper attitude. That is why I can appreciate the honourable Roy McMurtry, Attorney General of Ontario. I am not singling him out because he is Conservative but because he seems to be one of the champions of those who feel the poisonous arrows of injustice. He is speaking out on their behalf.

That is why I can appreciate what the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) had to say on the introduction of the human rights legislation. Even though we have reservations with respect to that bill, at least we are moving in the direction where people who have long suffered and faced obstacles, and on occasion have surmounted those obstacles, can have hope and faith in government.

That is why I can appreciate the introduction of the anti-hate literature bill. Some people might say we are infringing on the right to freedom of speech. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, freedom of speech can only go so far with me. When I find that freedom of speech affects a human being to the extent that the person believes himself or herself to be a second class citizen, and so becomes possessed of a feeling of uselessness, then I step in. That can be the end of freedom of speech. You can equate it to yelling fire in a theatre where there are hundreds of people but no fire. Freedom of speech goes just so far. Mr. Speaker, I am just getting started, but it is now ten o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

HEALTH—PROPORTION OF CARE COSTS ATTRIBUTABLE TO DISEASES RELATED TO ALCOHOL AND TOBACCO

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, as reported on page 1329 of Hansard for November 24 last, I asked the minister a question about rising health care costs. I wanted to know what percentage of those costs could be traced back to cigarette smoking and alcohol. The minister stated that he had actually cut health care expenditures by $42 million.

[Mr. Alexander.]

I am glad to note the presence of the minister this evening. I appreciate some of the things he has done in the health care field, but do not appreciate his cutting health care expenditures by $42 million and all that means. What does it mean, Mr. Speaker? It means that the provinces are to be deprived of millions of dollars. In the long run that surely means that the quality of the health care of the patient, the taxpayer of this country, will be lower. The taxpayer will suffer when we close down hospitals, when we close wings, when we take nurses off floors. Yes, the patient will suffer when we reduce the quality of health care.

The question remains, how real is that expenditure cut of $42 million, because over-all government expenditures are to rise by more than 15 per cent? Here the minister is cutting health care costs; and health care is one of our most important social fields.

I want to know two things, Mr. Speaker. I do not know how much the minister will save; I know that. I want to know what part of those health care costs were attributable to conditions related to cigarette smoking, and what part to the consumption of alcohol? Actually I want to know, in terms of health care costs, just how much cigarette smoking and alcohol consumption cost us.

The minister has been honest with us. Nobody actually knows the figure. A few statistics will show you that cancer of the lung leads in categories of cancer which kill men. The figures for women are slightly lower. This situation has developed over the last 40 years. Forty years ago cancer of the lung in women was rare.

A committee, headed by the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle), was set up to look into this question. We found that cigarette smoking was a common denominator not only in cancer but in emphysema, bronchitis, asthma, and allergies. Findings indicate that cancer deaths in Canada run at between 4,000 and 5,000 people per year, and another 10,000 to 12,000 deaths per year are attributable to emphysema, bronchitis, asthma, and allergies.

The minister stated that fewer people are smoking. He is probably right. I want to know how effective the anti-smoking campaign has been. For instance, do people still smoke in public places in hospitals and health centres? The minister may have taken a small step in the right direction. But he is intelligent and knows he can do better in this field.

I have been able to learn that 6,000 people, up to the age of 65—I am putting it in round figures—die from smoking-related diseases; 30,000 cases are treated by physicians in their offices, or in emergency rooms or hospital beds; and smoking-related diseases account for over 800,000 patient days in hospitals. If my figures are right, that involves an expenditure of about $80 million, a staggering figure. Can the minister not do something to cut this figure down?

There are no statistics available in Canada with regard to the alcohol problem, but United States figures show that between $25 billion and $27 billion a year is spent on treatment of alcohol-related diseases. Reducing this to Canadian figures, which are probably fairly accurate, it would come to about $2 billion. The minister knows that in France people drink alcoholic spirits from the time they are little kids because of their water supply. In that country 40 per cent of the hospital beds are occupied by alcoholics or those with alcohol-related problems. Properly studied and researched, why could this not be cut in two, or even eliminated?

Alcoholism and alcohol-related diseases rate next to cancer and cardiovascular disease as a cause of death and illness. Besides the suffering, financial strain, ruined social life, family life gone, and possibly having killed someone while drinking, the alcoholic may wind up on skid row.

Of those who use alcohol, 10 per cent have a problem. Five per cent are alcoholics and cannot handle the problem successfully.

Alcohol is part and parcel of our society. The cocktail route is part of the program. However, for 5 per cent of the people, it is a bumpy road to hell. Invariably the alcoholic ruins his home life.

I have seen a lot of sociability with alcohol, but I have seen the other side of the tracks as well and it is bad. We have treatment for the alcoholic. Alcoholics Anonymous, and medication help. However, if research could come up with the right antidote for alcoholism, and it were harmless in itself, lives would be saved as well as the miseries and the cost. Remember, with all the taxes the government collects, it is not a quarter of the cost in dollars, to say nothing about the human wreckage caused by alcoholism. What we need is more research, more warnings, and maybe a few more taxes to solve this problem.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, obviously the hon. member will not expect me in three minutes to be able to answer all the questions he raised during his speech. I listened with great interest. As usual, the hon. member made a well researched contribution to our discussions.

With regard to the $42 million so called saving the hon. member referred to, as I mentioned in the House on November 24, this is a reduction in our expected expenditures under the shared cost programs. In fact our cost went up by 12 or 13 per cent. I do not have the exact figures now, but I suspect it would be around 15 per cent. What it meant was that, thanks to measures such as seat belt legislation in particular, and other measures, we have been able somehow to reduce the expected rate of growth in health costs.

As far as the figures he mentioned for smoking and drinking are concerned, obviously we are talking in broad figures. It is very, very difficult to arrive at hard figures. He is right that I referred to the figure of $2 billion, including indirect and related economic costs, for alcoholism in Canada. I mentioned that on November 24.

As far as smoking is concerned, we estimate the total in health and economic costs to be around $500 million in Canada. This is no doubt a very, very high cost. Fortunately we live in a society where we respect freedom of choice of individuals. The health danger can be fought through education and research, as the hon. member mentioned, rather than mere banning which has proven quite useless in the past. The causes are of many natures and kinds. The solutions will have to be multifaceted. What we need is a diverse approach to this very difficult problem.

I thank the hon. member for again bringing this matter to the attention of the House and the country. If we are to make any real progress in this field of smoking and drinking, citizens must be aware of the problem, particularly young citizens. Those growing up at the present time should be made aware of the real situation and the implications of it at a very early age.

TRANSPORT—DATE OF DECISION ON PROGRAM FOR HIGHWAY CONSTRUCTION IN ATLANTIC REGION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, as reported at page 3803 of Hansard on March 9, I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) whether a decision had been reached on the implementation and funding for a highway strengthening program in the Atlantic region. He indicated there was a small ray of hope, that they were getting closer to a decision. I hope that the parliamentary secretary will be able to tell me some definite dates and the amount of funding involved.

Tonight I want to try to impress upon the parliamentary secretary, and through him, the minister, the emergency situation which exists as a result of the almost complete deterioration of the trans-Canada highway in the province of Newfoundland, more particularly in western Newfoundland, which to my mind is the most heavily used and most deteriorated in the province. While I refer to that section of the highway as part of the trans-Canada Highway I do so with tongue in cheek, because to call it that is an insult not only to the engineers who designed it but to the people of Newfoundland who voted for Confederation on the strength of the promise that the highway would be one of the advantages they would receive; but instead they were taken, and taken for too long.

While time will not give me the opportunity to go back in history, I want to refer to a recent statement by the president of the CNR when he referred to the decline of rail passenger service. The trains, he said, have been losing business because of improved air services, and because it took nearly twice as long to cross the island by train as it did by automobile; CN sought to reverse the decline in passenger business by replacing trains with buses and the volume of passenger traffic had increased steadily ever since. He went on to say that the road cruiser service has the potential of being self-supporting since rates are set on the same basis as those of the other two bus operations in the Atlantic provinces. But he also went on to say that Canadian National's rail freight operation is now suffering increased erosion of traffic from highway operators and that its share of freight traffic into Newfoundland has dropped from 87 per cent in 1972 to 61 per cent in 1976.

To my mind, this is hypocritical because what he is camouflaging is that the reason the railway's share of freight traffic has declined is because of the complete and utter failure of the company to compete and to upgrade its rail freight service. Mr. Bandeen is correct, however, in stating that in order to retain at least part of its share of traffic the CN has sought to take advantage of highway facilities which are available to its competitors. He goes on to say that CN Express intends to make greater use of truck operations in order to provide service equivalent to that of its competitors.

Not only has Canadian National failed to compete by allowing its freight and express services to deteriorate, but it is contributing to the deterioration of the highway because of its failure to take advantage of a monopoly service which it has enjoyed for so many years. In order to avoid straying from the purposes of my representation, if inded it has failed to live up to its responsibility, and looking to the problem as it exists, figures show that truck transport has increased in Newfoundland by some 95 per cent, and will continue growing beyond the ability of government to cope with a situation which could reach emergency proportions.

It is worth mentioning, too, that in spite of an excellent report in Volume C of the voluminous Trans-Newfoundland Corridor Studies we have only reached another stage at which a commission will be appointed to inquire into the transportation situation in Newfoundland. Mr. Speaker, there have been enough words expressed and bandied about with regard to the objective of a comprehensive, intermodal system of transportation in Canada. For some reason or other the government does not want to realize that the basis of any economy is a transportation system to provide infrastructure support for the potential resources of all sectors of the nation. This base is vital in the Atlantic region to allow our eastern region to contribute to the Canadian economy.

The part of our transport system to which I refer is a highway system which up to this point has been accorded only a passing interest. The implementation of a highway strengthening program is vital to that infrastructure support. A year ago today the province of Quebec received $90 million for such a program, and I can only hope that the government will see fit to construct through Quebec a highway to link up central and western Canada with Atlantic Canada for the benefit of all of Canada. I look to the parliamentary secretary to give me the good news, which should have been forthcoming long before now, on a highway strengthening program in the Atlantic region which would benefit the whole of Canada.

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to thank the hon. member for the comments he made, but I would like to repeat to him the answer given by the minister on March 10 when he said, "We are closer to the day when the decision will be made". I want to assure the hon. member that now we are coming closer to the day when the decision will be made.

This question has been raised many times. I would like to refer the hon. member to the "late show" on February 22 concerning this situation.

[Mr. Marshall.]

[Translation]

And in order to demonstrate that the minister is interested in the problem of transport in the Atlantic area, I would refer the hon. member to the meeting which was held on last August 31 and which embodied the first discussion between the federal minister and the four premiers of the Atlantic provinces. On February 7 last, another meeting was held in Charlottetown for the premier of the Maritime provinces where Mr. James Morgan, minister of transportation and communications represented Premier Moores of Newfoundland. During that meeting, Mr. Lang reiterated the undertaking of the federal government vis-à-vis regional economic expansion. To this purpose, he has insisted upon the fact that a transport system should be used to achieve social and economic objectives at the national and regional levels and to provide an effective service across Canada.

The Maritime premiers and Mr. Morgan have stated that they are satisfied with the importance with which Mr. Lang claimed he considered the development of a transport system as an effective means of reaching the regional economic objectives. Everybody present at this meeting recognized the advisability of improving passenger services in the Atlantic provinces. According to a joint study carried out by the federal and provincial governments, a cheap way to improve passenger services in the area would consist in maintaining and improving only one transcontitionental service.

This study has further indicated the possibility of compensating the loss of passenger railway service in certain communities by improving both air and bus services. Mr. Lang, Mr. Morgan and the Maritime premiers have accepted the idea that the best way to improve passenger services would be through special financial assistance to improve air and bus services in the area. Changes in existing railway passenger services would occur only later on, for the demand is somewhat weak and the cost of subsidies is very high. It was also agreed that the report and findings should be submitted jointly to the Canadian Transport Commission which will hold hearings concerning the railway passenger services in the area.

[English]

I would like to assure the hon. member that, as I mentioned in my opening remarks, the announcement will be made, and the date for the announcement of this decision is closer.

TRANSPORT—RECOMMENDATION OF DR. HALL ON TRUSTEESHIP OF PENSION FUNDS FOR RAILWAY EMPLOYEES

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I and railroad pensioners all across Canada are hoping that the parliamentary secretary can inform us tonight when the government will be taking a stand on Dr. Noel Hall's report on railway pensions. I hope the parliamentary secretary can at least give us a partial answer tonight, as this problem has been with us for many years, and it is certainly time for some government action.

I asked a question on this matter of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) on Friday, January 28, and it is reported at page 2494 of Hansard. It had to do with the fact that the Hall report on railway pensions had finally been published, and since it virtually threw the question of the improvement of railway pensions back to the companies and to the government, I asked the minister if he could tell us what steps the government was taking to try to improve railway pensions. My specific request was that the trusteeship of both CNR and CPR pension plans be placed in the hands of an independent trust company, as recommended by Dr. Hall, and the minister informed me at that time that the report was still under study.

Just last week I received a letter from the Canadian Railways Employees' Pension Association. The letter was in regard to Bill C-228, concerning CNR employees', pensioners' and beneficiaries' trust funds. Bill C-228 is a private member's bill which was presented by the Minister without Portfolio, the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay). This private member's bill is a cruel hoax which tries to kid pensioners that a private member's bill will increase their pensions. That is a lot of nonsense. The letter states:

> Bill C-228 is a private member's bill which received first reading on October 22, 1976. This bill, if enacted, would exempt Canadian National Railway Company from its legal obligation to pay into the CNR Pension Trust Funds the sums of money required annually in order to comply with the Pension Benefits Standards Act.
> If Bill C-228 were enacted, many millions of dollars now being paid into the Pension Trust Funds by CNR each year could be deferred. That money would continue to be owed by CNR and an interest rate of 7½ per cent per annum would be charged to CNR and credited to the pension funds as it became due each year. When the current interest rate for money is approximately 10 per cent, it is to be expected that CNR, if this bill were passed, would not pay any money into the pension trust funds probably for many years, and certainly not until interest rates came down to less than 7½ per cent per annum.

We want action from the government in dealing with the Noel Hall report. The government has had the report since January 20, and it is time we heard something, and not by way of a private member's bill.

In addition, the letter goes on:

> If CNR had paid their pension obligations from the beginning, as their employees have done, the pension trust funds might now be fully funded. If those funds had been properly invested, inflation and the indexing of pensions would likely not be the insurmountable problem they appear to be today.
>
> Dr. Hall has recommended '. . . That the trusteeship of both CNR and CPR pension plans be removed from the hands of the Boards of Directors of the respective companies . . . '.
>
> On behalf of Canadian Railways Employees' Pension Association, we recommend to you that, if and when Bill C-228 is called for second or third reading, you vote against it.

I will certainly be voting against it.

> If a bill is introduced in the House to exempt CPR it should likewise be defeated.
>
> We wish to remind you that eleven years ago the Pension Benefits Standards Act was passed by Parliament. It requires a reasonable degree of financial responsibility by all Canadian employers in the handling of pension trust funds. The pension contribution record of CNR does not warrant special consideration for that Company.
>
> The time for financial sanity in the handling of these pension trust funds is long overdue.

A recent letter by Harold N. Campbell, who is the chairman of the Canadian Railways Employees' Pension Association stated the following:

> During the last six or seven years The Canadian Railways Employees Pension Association, London Area, have bombarded Federal Members of Parliament, the Management and union leaders with much of the morbid detail with little or no response.

One is certainly long overdue. We need some definite action from the government because hardships are mounting each day for these pensioners.

I should like to point out that only the Progressive Conservative Party had a policy paper on railway pensions in the 1974 election. The paper is being updated but it cannot be finalized until the government makes a decision about the Hall report. As the railway pension critic of this party I shall make a number of recommendations to my caucus. One is the need for a full review of the pension industry in Canada. I understand that the government is going to initiate an actuarial study of indexed pensions. I am also going to suggest the "heritage fund" concept in order to aid existing railway pensioners and survivors, and will recommend a partially indexed pension supported by matching employer-employee contributions. I will recommend placing the trusteeship of the C.N. pension plan in the hands of an independent trust company, and better representation for pensioners in the collective bargaining process.

In our 1974 policy position paper we called for the extension of the 2 per cent formula back to the first day of service. This, of course, would have to be done through the collective bargaining process.

In order to aid existing pensioners and survivors Dr. Hall suggests a "heritage fund" based on a 1 per cent levy of existing pay rolls shared equally by current employees and the companies to provide full adjustment for past increases in the cost of living.

Mr. Jacques Olivier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): As we all know, Mr. Speaker, the matter of railway pensioners is dear to the government and to the majority of hon. members. We all know that this is a very complex issue and within the three minutes alloted to me it would be extremely difficult to give all the details.

The Hall report contains 277 pages and was tabled and published on January 20, 1977 by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro).

The report deals at length with the Canadian railway pension plans. This is a matter both difficult and complex and it is exactly because of its technicalities that it was extremely difficult to have it translated into French, which explains the delay in publishing it. During his thorough inquiry, Dr. Hall considered a number of issues concerning railway pensions. The issue which seemed to him, in the course of this inquiry, as being the most urgent was the problems which face present pension plans in view of the effect of inflation.

Throughout his report, Dr. Hall clearly indicates that he feels he should avoid making recommendations when the parties to collective negotiations can deal with the matters or problems at hand within the scope of negotiating procedures. The matter of improving railway pension plans is one of the fields which Dr. Hall feels should fall to the parties to improve through both consultations and collective negotiations.

To help the parties deal with the very complex matter of knowing how to protect pensions against erosion of inflation, Dr. Hall made a number of evaluations providing various means of indexing the cost of living under railway pension plans. However, the choice of one or the other of those methods was left entirely up to the parties, that is the unions and the employers, who would take into account their general priorities in the field of pensions, and other fields, where possible. In the course of his study, Dr. Hall dealt at length with comparison of the railway pension plans with other plans.

The pension plans of the railway companies do compare favourably with the best, in both the public and private sectors. However, Dr. Hall does make a number of specific recommendations in an effort to have greater similarity between the provisions of the pension plans of the two large railway companies. And the government agrees with the hon. member that that is a desirable objective.

As far as the trust provisions were concerned, it was felt that railway plans were different from others. As a result of those conclusions and the concerns expressed by the unions about present trust provisions, Mr. Hall suggested that from now on the administration of the CN and CP pensions plans be entrusted to an independent trust company rather than to the board of directors of the respective companies. This is evidently a recommendation which will require careful consideration by the parties involved.

The railway companies and unions are considering the recommendations and problems raised by their implementation. Following that study, the parties will meet to review thoroughly the Hall recommendations. Department of Labour officials will be closely following the discussions between the parties in which the Minister of Labour will take part in due time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at two o'clock.

REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO STIMULATE THE ECONOMY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43 I request the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion concerning a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the alarming revelation of Statistics Canada that 932,000 Canadians are unemployed, the highest number of unemployed ever, keeping in mind that the hidden jobless added thereto undoubtedly indicates that unemployment has definitely passed the million mark, an unacceptable and indefensible state of affairs given the productive capacity of this nation, and in view of the fact that it is now an undisputed fact that this country is in the midst of a national crisis of catastrophic and disastrous proportions requiring immediate government action, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That this House condemns the government and in particular the Minister of Finance for not having introduced a budget by now, thus totally ignoring the advice and predictions of the Conference Board of Canada and others, all of whom have predicted for some time this crisis, failing government action; further; that this House demands that the Minister of Finance on motions tomorrow indicate what meaningful, concrete and immediate steps the government will take in order to deal with and reverse this trend of increasing unemployment; and further, because of the time lag of months involved before the proposed budget will have any effect, that this House directs the Minister of Finance to introduce a budget within one week involving tax cuts for middle and lower income Canadians, stimulus for growth and as well a definitive statement of intention regarding the decontrol and postcontrol periods.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to the Standing Order the unanimous consent of the House is required for the presentation of such a motion. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

REQUEST FOR BUDGETARY PROVISIONS TO REDUCE LEVEL OF UNEMPLOYMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In light of today's official unemployment statistics which show that 932,000 Canadians are unemployed, in view of the fact that an additional 557,000 Canadians are the hidden unemployed of this country, making a total of nearly 1.5 million Canadians now unemployed, and in view of the tremendous economic waste and human misery associated with this high level of unemployment I move, seconded by the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth):

That this House urges the government to bring in a budget providing substantial direct job creation measures as well as a personal income tax cut for low and middle income Canadians to provide the stimulus needed in the economy to lower the level of unemployment, and that if the Minister of Finance fails to provide such measures in the budget, he be requested to resign his position.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): No.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The presentation of such a motion repuires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

MANPOWER

SUGGESTION MORE FUNDS BE GIVEN TO CANADA WORKS PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion dealing with an important matter of pressing necessity.

According to the latest statistics published this morning it seems that the unemployment rate has reached a record high since 1958, which is liable to alarm any Canadian concerned with the future of his country and more especially with the future of unemployed young people. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte):

That Parliament urge the Department of Manpower and Immigration to review its policy of Canada Works and Youth Works programs and that higher votes be allotted to those programs to create more jobs at a time when private enterprise is no longer in position to take the available manpower in the country.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

PROPOSED AGREEMENT WITH NEWFOUNDLAND FOR JOINT PROGRAMS TO CREATE JOBS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to seek unanimous consent to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the alarming growth in the unemployment rate in Newfoundland as evidenced by figures released today by Statistics Canada showing a 1.5 per cent increase for the month of February, up sharply from the same time last year, giving the province a 15.1 per cent seasonally adjusted rate, which is twice the national average, or an actual rate of 17.4 per cent, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall):

● (1410)

That the government immediately enter into an agreement with the government of Newfoundland to provide additional federal funding for job creation ventures.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion pursuant to the Standing Order requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

PROPOSALS TO STUDY MEASURES TO REDUCE LEVEL OF UNEMPLOYMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my motion is along similar lines but I hope because of its reasonable nature it will find general acceptance on all sides of the House. It relates to the fact that there are 59,000 more people unemployed this month than last and that out of the projected job creation in last year's budget of 250,000 jobs we have only created less than half, something like 112,000. In light of the announced intention of the government to bring down the budget on March 31, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall):

(1) That there be an immediate consultation with the provinces by a ministerial team composed of the Minister of Finance, Minister of Manpower and Immigration, President of Treasury Board, Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion prior to the final formulation of specific budget proposals.

(2) That the government make an immediate review of spending proposals in the 1977-78 estimates, with a view to redirecting them to areas of continued and growing unemployment, and

(3) That the government appoint immediately a special interdepartmental federal-provincial task force to work with the major sectors of the economy, particularly industry and labour, in order to achieve a sufficient set of measures to substantially reduce Canada's disastrous unemployment situation.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such motion can be done only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

PENSION ACT

PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE THAT PENSION FOR PRISONERS OF WAR APPLY TO ESCAPERS AND EVADERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my motion relates to a different subject but one of equal seriousness and urgency. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall):

That this House urges the Minister of Veterans Affairs to introduce the necessary amendments to the Pension Act so that the compensation for prisoners of war provided therein will apply to escapers and evaders, in accordance with representations made recently to the minister by the Canadian Branch of the Royal Air Forces Escaping Society, and also to the limited number of Canadian veterans still living who were prisoners of war during World War I, as recommended by the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs in its report to the House on June 12, 1975.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion pursuant to the Standing Order requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

ENERGY

SUGGESTED STUDY OF RECYCLING OLD OIL FROM VEHICLES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the alarming reports in regard to the possibility of an energy shortage and taking into consideration that oil is a non-renewable resource but can be a reusable resource, I should like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway):

That this House instruct the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to launch an immediate study in co-operation with the petroleum industry into methods of recovering, recycling and reusing old oil from all types of vehicles and that the results of this study be presented to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of the motion for debate can only be done with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

PROPOSED AUDIT BY AUDITOR GENERAL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. It being the case that there is presently a very high level of discontent and frustration felt by prairie grain producers as a result of the unexplainably low final payment for the crop year just completed, and in view of the fact that the Canadian Wheat Board, which came into being in 1935, has never been ad audited by the Auditor General of Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway):

That this House recommends to the Auditor General that he do a complete and thorough audit of the Canadian Wheat Board in the next fiscal year.

Mr. Goodale: No.

Mr. Speaker: There not being unanimous consent, the motion cannot be presented. Oral Questions.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR BUDGETARY PROVISIONS TO REDUCE LEVEL OF UNEMPLOYMENT AND REVIEW OF JOB CREATION PROGRAMS

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister and the architect of the economic policy which has created unemployment at the highest level in the history of Canada. Those statistics released today, if one includes total unemployment among status and non-status Indians and the 50,000 plus Canadians who have stopped looking for work because under this government they simply believe that there are no jobs for them to find, indicate that there are more than one million Canadians now out of work. I would ask the Minister of Finance, without revealing the details of this budget, whether he will give a firm commitment to those more than one million Canadians who are out of work that a primary target of that budget will be to break this pattern of growing unemployment and to let Canadians get to work?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would confirm that while the rate of employment in Canada increased substantially since December, the participation rate has also increased and it has to be a matter of concern—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: Oh, come on.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): —that so many Canadians are unemployed. As I have indicated, I would hope to present the budget on March 31.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has expressly declined the invitation to give a commitment to this House now that a primary target of the budget which he is bringing in too late on March 31 will be to break the pattern of unemployment which has marked his tenure as Minister of Finance.

Mr. Paproski: Shame! Resign.

Mr. Clark: Since the job creation programs of this government have created less than one-half of the quarter million jobs forecast in the budget of last May, I ask the Acting Prime Minister if he and his colleagues are going to undertake an immediate review of the adequacy of job creation programs now in place, and whether they are seriously considering as an emergency measure the possibility of changing the priority of government projects that are already in the works, to give priority to those regions of Canada which are most directly affected by the shocking figures released today?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, it has been a long-standing practice under our system that the government makes a presentation of its economic policy at the time of the budget. My response to this question of the hon. gentleman, as to the previous one, is that I would intend to make a statement on economic policy on March 31.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Back to the Primrose Club.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, the answer of the Minister of Finance to the more than one million Canadians out of work is, wait a while longer; we will offer you no hope.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, there has probably never been a government in the history of this country that has shown more contempt for the people and parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

EMERGENCY PROGRAMS TO CREATE JOBS FOR YOUNG PEOPLE

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Let me direct a simple question to the Minister of Finance. Since those figures released today indicate that there is a particular crisis for the young who are starting their work careers without jobs to go to, will the government introduce special emergency programs to create jobs for those young Canadians who are now forced to start their work careers without jobs to go to.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, to repeat the answer for the third time to the hon. gentleman, it makes some sense to present the government's economic policy in the context of the budget.

Mr. Hees: That's what you have been saying all along, and look what it has done.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I would intend to do so. I am interested in the various proposals which the Leader of the Opposition has to make.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Look at what the last budget did.

Mr. Paproski: Do something, or resign.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I will be giving substantial attention to the particular groups within the work force who have been suffering from unemployment.

Mr. Hees: That's what you have been saying for years and years.

TIME LAG BETWEEN INTRODUCTION OF BUDGET AND EFFECT OF PROVISIONS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the same architect of economic disaster. I would ask the Minister of Finance this question: Considering the time lag between the announcement of fiscal policy changes, if any, and their effect—and I am thinking of the budget—does the minister concede that the federal government can do little to affect substantially the level of unemployment in 1977? I ask this in view of the certain time lag between the introduction of the budget and when the figures actually come into effect.

● (1420)

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that very much depends upon the nature of the measures that are announced.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON STATE OF THE ECONOMY PRIOR TO PRESENTATION OF BUDGET

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Once again the minister has shown a callous disregard for the over one million out of work. In light of the fact that the people of Canada have been consistently kept in the dark with regard to forecasts and targets for job creation, unemployment and growth for 1977, is it the position of this government that a statement as to the state of the economy will not be made until the introduction of the budget? Why can we not have that statement in very short order in order that we can determine whether in fact the government has moved in a proper direction once the budget has been introduced?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it has always been a fact that it makes some sense to make a presentation both with respect to the prospects for the year in relation to which the budget is given and the measures that are proposed. I intend to follow that very sensible practice.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

UNEMPLOYMENT—ESTIMATE OF MONTH IN WHICH LEVEL REDUCED—CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES ON JOB CREATION PROGRAMS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the total number of unemployed and the rate of unemployment have been steadily increasing for more than a year, has the department estimated in what month, if any, they can see a reduction in either the number or the rate of unemployment? If they made those kinds of estimates, is the minister now prepared to tell the House that or is he prepared to do that when he presents his budget at the end of the month?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the budget presentation will include an estimate as to the prospects for employment during the year.

Mr. Orlikow: Considering the very serious nature of the unemployment problem in all parts of the country, is the government giving consideration to meeting with the provinces to discuss with them what programs, together or separately, the federal and provincial governments can implement to put people back into productive labour now or in the very near future?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, as part of the pre-budget preparation, I did have such a meeting with the provincial finance ministers.

SUGGESTED RELEASE OF FUNDS TO CREATE JOBS FOR YOUNG PEOPLE

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): In view of the fact that statistics released today show that over 16 per cent of our young people are now unemployed and in view of the very small number of people, mainly young people, who will be unemployed as a result of the implementation of the first phase of both the Canada Works and Canada Youth Works programs because only $60 million of the $200 million is being released now, will the minister consider recommending to his cabinet colleagues the release of the $160 million which is to be made available in October at this time so that we can use that money to put young people, who want to work, to work now instead at the end of a long summer?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the response to this is inherent in the response I gave to the hon. member for Hamilton West. Indeed, one of the aspects that would have to be considered is whether, as opposed to changes in the fiscal policy and the taxation policy, it might be appropriate to increase or redirect funds into certain areas such as assistance for this particular group of the unemployed.

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF LAY-OFFS AT RIMOUSKI

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport.

In recent weeks many workers at the CN office in Rimouski and the surrounding region have been laid off. Could the minister tell the House why there is a sudden reduction in manpower in that place where the level of unemployment is already high?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not know about this particular matter, but I will be glad to look into it.

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, could the minister tell the House if he intends to examine the situation of those workers and recommend their reintegration into other services of the CN?

MANPOWER

EMERGENCY MEASURES TO CREATE EMPLOYMENT IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration on behalf of some of the unwilling non-participants in Quebec and the Atlantic provinces. Given the serious unemployment situation in those five provinces which has increased by 20 per cent in the last 12 months and given the forecast by the Conference Board that this region will see another increase during the present year of 17 per cent, can I ask the minister, also bearing in mind the fact that whatever budgetary measures are brought down by the minister in a few days time will have no immediate impact on the region, whether he is prepared to enter into discussions to provide for emergency programs now, programs which would expedite, for example, essential expenditures in the line of public works, transport and so on in a coordinated effort to provide jobs for this region?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Although the unemployment rate for Newfoundland did in fact increase there was also a sharp rise in employment in the province.

An hon. Member: Go on!

Mr. Cullen: An hon. member says "Go on!" but that is the case. Employment in Newfoundland did, in fact, increase; there was a larger increase in the size of the labour force, thereby increasing the size of the unemployment. It is not a question of reacting in panic at the last minute. It was indicated back in October that we foresaw high levels of unemployment in the area this winter and it was for that reason the government saw fit to put $158 million into job creation programs. It is not a question of reacting in panic at the last minute. I might say to the hon. member that his colleagues on this side of the House brought so much pressure to bear that Newfoundland will actually rate fourth in the sums of money which will be paid into the provinces.

Mr. McGrath: It is disheartening to learn that the minister draws any satisfaction from these disastrous figures in my own province showing an increase of 1.5 per cent over this time last year for a real rate of 17.4 per cent, not to mention the numbers who are unemployed—about 25,000—but who do not appear on official records. I ask the minister, notwithstanding any programs already in place, given the serious situation which exists now, at least to take into consideration the suggestion made by the Leader of the Opposition and other members of the House to refunnel government programs in this region, especially in my own province and Quebec, to expedite public works projects to provide jobs now, not down the road when the minister's economic policies are in place.

Mr. Cullen: I take no refuge whatsoever in the figures. I indicated that there was in fact concern. I thought there should be some measure of balance by indicating that employment did in fact increase in that particular province. I do not think it is any answer to react in panic to the situation. We recognized what the situation was going to be and for that reason we put this kind of money into Canada Works and Young Canada Works and a series of other projects and we indicated this would be done last October. We do not wait until the very last minute and then say I think in panic we should react and do something else.

CONSULTATION WITH PRIVATE SECTOR ON JOINT PROGRAMS TO INCREASE EMPLOYMENT

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question, too, is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Is it the intention of the government, in the light of the fact that various job creation programs enacted by the government have not had the desired effect and have in some areas been counter productive, to enter into consultation with the private sector such as the Canadian Manufacturers Association or, in the case of British Columbia, the resource industries, to work out joint programs which would not only stimulate the economy but people to work?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): As my colleague, the Minister of Finance, has indicated it is precisely for that reason that he met with his opposite numbers. I met with my opposite numbers in the provinces to indicate how, at the government level, we could do specific things. There will be other areas which will be announced in the budget, as the minister said, on March 31 and which will have the appropriate impact so far as private enterprise is concerned.

FINANCE

POSSIBILITY OF BUDGETARY ACCOMMODATION OF GOVERNMENT AND INDUSTRY JOINT JOB CREATION PROGRAMS

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Could I ask the Minister of Finance in order to accommodate joint job creation programs, and I am talking about government and industry rather than government and government, whether he is prepared to accommodate such programs in his budget and adjust the fiscal program in the light of tax concessions to industry so that this kind of program could be implemented shortly after budget day?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Acting Prime Minister): I will consider the hon. member's suggestion.

MANPOWER

SUMMER STUDENT EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR INCREASED FUNDS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the same minister. In view of the fact that the intended 1977 summer student employment program budget is much less than last year, would the minister indicate while he has the opportunity whether he would increase that budget in order to provide jobs for students who will be coming out of school very soon; and would he indicate what his intentions are regarding increasing that budget?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his approbation of the program that we have put in place. Recognizing high youth unemployment we have some five or six programs now. We have the SSEAP program, the job experience training program and a series of others. So it is not just Canada Works but Young Canada Works which is in effect right now. I thank him for his support.

YOUNG CANADA WORKS PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR INCREASED FUNDS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that under the Canada Works and Young Canada Works programs the frustrations of the people and organizations involved are shown by the fact that this is the only way they can provide jobs, that the number of applications are reaching tremendous proportions and the amount allocated is going to discourage rather than encourage them from keeping on with the program, I wonder whether the minister would take the suggestions which were made earlier by other members and bring forward the funds from the second phase of Young Canada Works to provide employment now?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I have noted the representation, Mr. Speaker.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

PROGRAM FOR JOB CREATION IN ATLANTIC REGION

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Since the minister has just returned from the Atlantic provinces and I am sure has been made well aware of the very serious situation there respecting unemployment, I wonder whether he indicated to his provincial colleagues what initiatives he was planning to take under his department, particularly in the area of job creation, inasmuch as his estimates this year have substantially reduced by some 10 per cent the major job creation facility under the act, namely the Regional Development Incentives Act?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, indeed I had the pleasure to meet Premier Campbell yesterday. We discussed at length the situation in general and I took the opportunity, for such was the purpose of the visit, to sign the amendment concerning the agreement and provide $89 million, that is the funds required for the next three years of this agreement. In my opinion, this is a substantial contribution to give a new impetus to the economy of Prince Edward Island.

I might add that I also announced the granting of three subventions to industries which will be established in the West Royal Park which we contributed to develop. We are still considering other requests. We hope to be able to help in creating jobs which will meet the island's requirements.

[English]

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I will look forward to reading the minister's press releases, but I should like to address the particular issue as to whether or not, with respect particularly to the five eastern provinces, which have something like 371,000 people unemployed, his department is going to produce any new major initiatives, and whether he is making any particular recommendation to his colleague the President of the Treasury Board with regard to a reordering of federal expenditures in the next fiscal year. At the moment the Department of Regional Economic Expansion would appear to be almost irrelevant to the pressing issue of very serious unemployment in this country.

[Translation]

Mr. Lessard: Mr. Speaker, I do not think one can argue that the action taken by the department is not in line with the objectives or with the situation in the Atlantic provinces. Of course we do not pretend to solve all problems, but I think that an investment of over $200 million for next year to support and develop the economy of the Atlantic provinces is certainly appropriate action. As concerns the recommendations I must make to my cabinet colleagues, the hon. member and the House can be sure that this is exactly what I do, what I did recently, and what I intend to do again at the next meeting of the cabinet and even later this afternoon.

TRANSPORT

FINANCIAL COMMITMENT TO DEVELOPMENT OF URBAN TRANSIT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Alan Martin (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the considerable and continuing interest in the subject on the part of city dwellers across Canada, will the minister indicate the state of the government's deliberations on the issue of its outstanding financial commitment to urban transit?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I can only indicate that at this point there has been no change since a similar question was answered some 10 days ago, namely that while we have a significant program in the $100 million available for commuter assistance, a decision has not been taken as to whether or not that is all that we are able to see our way to do.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

USE OF GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT TO PERMIT MEMBERS AND SENATORS TO ATTEND PARTY AT SAINT JOHN—POSSIBLE BREACH OF GUIDELINES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Can the Minister of Transport tell us whether or not his department has made arrangements for a government aircraft to fly MP's and Senators to Saint John, New Brunswick, to attend a St. Patrick's Day party and to hear the Minister of Agriculture address a banquet? If so, does this fall within government guidelines concerning use of government aircraft?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the details of that trip but I will inquire.

Mr. Nystrom: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since his office confirmed this with my office this morning, and in view of doubts that are being raised by it, will he cancel the plane and let the minister, and MP's and Senators who want to hear him spread his fertilizer in New Brunswick, go commercial?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I will follow something of a practice of not making a decision until I have the facts.

FINANCE

POSSIBILITY OF CHANGE IN METHOD OF GETTING ADVICE ON ECONOMIC POLICY

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Given the fact that obviously we have some very, very serious economic problems in unemployment, inflation, the balance of payments, in fact in everything, is the minister giving any consideration to changing the way in which advice is proffered, and when economic policy is made changing the players in this role, so that these disastrous conditions will not be perpetuated on the Canadian people any longer?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not exactly certain what the hon. member means when he speaks of changing the way in which advice is being proffered. If he has some structural changes to suggest I would be glad to talk to him privately.

ECONOMIC COUNCIL OF CANADA

PROPOSAL TO CONVERT COUNCIL TO SHORT-TERM FORECASTING UNIT

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the Minister of Finance giving any thought to converting the Economic Council of Canada from the program it has followed in the past to a short-term economic forecasting unit that will proffer to the Department of Finance more accurate information about the way in which the economy is operating?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is a study ongoing into possible changes in the structure of the Economic Council of Canada but not specifically so as to divert its attention from the medium and long-term to the short-term.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REASON FOR FAILURE TO PROVIDE MORE EMPLOYMENT FOR YOUNG PEOPLE

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is also to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that Statistics Canada figures released today show unemployment among young people in February increased by 32,000, to the point where every second unemployed Canadian at the present time is between the ages of 15 and 24, and in view of the findings of the report released today by the Canadian Council on Social Development which show that since 1953 the rate of unemployment among young people relative to total unemployment in Canada has been steadily increasing and describes the situation as "economically, politically and socially explosive", can the minister explain whether the government finds this trend acceptable and, if it does not find it acceptable, why has it so far failed to turn the situation around?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the critical element, of course, is that this particular group has been the fastest growing group among the Canadian work force. This is one of the reasons this particular group has been suffering from the highest level of unemployment. I agree that it has to be a matter of concern and indeed it is one of the reasons why over the years we have directed specific policy measures at those in the youth group as well as winter employment measures. Some of those, I noted, have been opposed by the hon. gentleman and his colleagues and I am glad to see an awakened concern in this regard.

MANPOWER

PROPOSED CHANGE IN OCCUPATIONAL FORECASTING PROGRAM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, the minister's proposals have failed dismally. May I direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Has the minister read the report released today by the Canadian Council on Social Development and, if so, can he tell the House whether he accepts the findings in the report, or the recommendations, that occupational forecasts should become depoliticized and demystified, which recommendation states that the current forecasts of the Department of Manpower and Immigration are based on a labour scarcity by the 1980's assumption that may never materialize and recommends that Canadian occupational forecasting programs of the Department of Manpower and Immigration be changed because it is incomprehensible, not just for teachers but also for young people. If he does agree, is he prepared to take some action to implement that recommendation?

● (1440)

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, no, I have not had the opportunity today as yet to read the report on social development. I did, however, have the honour of addressing that particular group and I indicated to them where the problems were in so far as youth unemployment was concerned.

Miss MacDonald: You indicated to them?

Mr. Cullen: I indicated to them the increase in the number of young people who have moved into the labour force, and I suggested to them some of the initiatives the government was taking to do what is necessary in this field, namely, bridge the gap between the school and the work force where there seems to be tremendous difficulty.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ALLEGED INADEQUACY OF ICNAF MANAGEMENT QUOTAS FOR FISH STOCKS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. At present, discussions are under way within the minister's own department to determine the future of ICNAF and the establishment of fishing quotas for next year. In view of the fact that fisheries resources have drastically declined, indicating that ICNAF's management quotas were not adequate to cope with the complexity of stocks and the intensity of effort that has been applied, would the minister indicate what initiative he plans to take to establish proper management of this valuable resource?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the ICNAF meetings to which the hon. member refers are concerned principally with the future of that organization in view of the changes resulting from the declaration of the 200 mile limit by a number of countries. To the best of my knowledge, the specific matters referred to by the hon. member are not being discussed at this meeting, but I know that my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment is now developing a regime or plan for the years beyond 1977. Undoubtedly he will be putting that forward in due course. I think he would be in a better position than I to indicate, in management terms, what is being planned.

POSSIBILITY OF ARBITRATION OF BOUNDARY OF 200-MILE FISHING ZONE BETWEEN CANADA AND UNITED STATES

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): In view of the fact that no permanent solution was found to the problem with regard to the ownership of Georges Bank before the 200 mile limit between Canada and the United States went into effect, will the minister indicate whether it is the government's intention to call in a third country to arbitrate this matter, or just what does he propose to do in this regard?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The situation with regard to negotiations with the U.S. on the boundary question is that, as I explained in part at least to the House some days ago, we entered into an interim agreement to the end of 1977 to give the negotiators time during this year to see if they can achieve a final solution. However, to ensure that the matter would not drag on interminably, we also agreed that if at the end of 1977 no agreement is reached, there would be a third party reference, and this is the basis now on which the negotiations are proceeding. Needless to say, I think both countries would prefer if we were able to reach agreement during the remaining months of 1977.

COMMUNICATIONS

CN-CP TELECOMMUNICATIONS—SUGGESTED DELAY IN CLOSURE OF OFFICES PENDING PUBLIC HEARING

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. I should like to ask if the minister is prepared to respond to the request that there will be no further closures of CN-CP telecommunications offices until public hearings into the policy of eliminating telecommunications services can be held.

[Translation]

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, but I did not understand the question of the hon. member. Would it be asking too much to have him repeat it?

[English]

Mr. Johnston: J'essayerai encore. Is the minister prepared to respond to the request that there be no further closures of CN-CP telecommunications offices until public hearings into the policy of eliminating telecommunications services can be held?

[Translation]

Mrs. Sauvé: Mr. Speaker, I have received many requests concerning the possibility of closing down a number of telegraph offices. Even the representatives of the CN and CP have put their case before me. I was also visited by union representatives who are naturally highly concerned about the fate of the people working in those local telegraph offices.

The Department of Communications has looked into current trends in the use of telegraphic services, and it may be that the CRTC will hold public hearings, as requested by the hon. member, to give the public the opportunity of discussing the problem.

[English]

Mr. Johnston: I wonder if the minister could tell us why CN-CP telecommunications, which is a monopoly, should be able to phase itself out of business without opportunities being provided for private industry or, as a truly desperate last resort, the Post Office to take over the business of telecommunications? I fear that the public hearings, if not held soon, may come too late.

[Translation]

Mrs. Sauvé: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is anticipating the conclusions that may be arrived at as a result of the public hearings. Obviously, if public hearings are held we shall discuss that specific issue, namely whether it would be useful to open telegraph offices in all small cities across the country and whether the use people make of the telegraph service still justifies the maintenance of those offices. Should the CN and CP decide to close their offices, I believe it would be possible for the private sector to take the service over if it were interested in doing so.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SETTLEMENT OF LAND CLAIMS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—POSITION OF FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Both the former NDP government led by Mr. Barrett and the present government under Premier Bennett promised a settlement of long standing land claims including cut-off lands. Can the minister advise the House that in his meeting later this week with his B. C. counterparts every effort will be made by the federal government to resolve these long standing differences, and can the minister advise the House whether it is the provincial or the federal government that is dragging its feet in this matter?

An hon. Member: Author?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, since my appointment I have had three meetings with the Hon. Allan Williams, the British Columbia minister, and there have been many meetings between officials with respect to cut-off claims in British Columbia. I am having another meeting this Friday in Victoria, and I hope that we can proceed further on this matter. I might say that I will meet with the cut-off lands committee on Friday in Victoria as well. It is not for me to say who is dragging his feet. This is complicated issue and it takes a lot of negotiations.

HEALTH

POSSIBILITY OF BANNING CIGARETTE ADVERTISING—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that the minister expressed last week, as he has done on other occasions, his deep concern with respect to the hazard to health involved in cigarette smoking, is the minister considering the introduction of legislation along the lines proposed some years ago by his predecessor, now the Minister of Labour, to ban cigarette advertising?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, Mr. Speaker.

FINANCE

PROPOSAL TO CANCEL TAX DEDUCTIBILITY ACCORDED TO CIGARETTE ADVERTISING—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the answer we have just received from the Minister of National Health and Welfare that he does not propose to bring in legislation to ban cigarette advertising, will the Minister of Finance consider, in the preparation of his budget, the introduction of a measure to cancel the tax deductibility that is granted to cigarette advertising, which means that Canadian taxpayers are paying for their own deaths?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): I will treat that as a representation.

MANPOWER

CANADA AND YOUNG CANADA WORKS PROGRAMS—POSSIBILITY OF SUPPLEMENTARY GRANTS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance.

Following the announcement made by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration concerning Canada Works and Young Canada Works programs—

An hon. Member: It does not work tremendously well!

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Somebody is telling me that it does not work tremendously well, and it is the truth. Many people have submitted projects under these programs. However it seems that the funds allocated to these programs make it impossible to give a favourable answer to all the many serious projects which have been submitted. Therefore, could the Minister of Finance tell the House whether additional money would be allocated to these two programs to meet the demands of project sponsors so that they could go on taking an interest in them and that these programs be implemented within the next few weeks, meeting the expectations of Canadians and creating many jobs?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration has already made that suggestion and I am considering it in the context of the new budget.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, in view of the very clever answer of the Minister of Finance, I would like to know whether what he intends to bring forward in his budget speech is already settled or whether the representations made by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and some hon. members still have some value and would be seriously considered by the minister.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I consider the representations made by my colleague and the hon. member as very important.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

AIRPORTS

CAR RENTAL CONCESSIONS—AMOUNT OF SETTLEMENT TO TILDEN AND AVIS—POSSIBILITY OF FURTHER LEGAL CLAIMS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. My question arises out of a recent cabinet award to Tilden Car Rentals of the sum of $5,000 to help defray certain legal expenses. Has the government approved and has payment been made or is it going to be made to Avis Rent-A-Car in the amount of $143,000? Can the minister indicate to us whether included in that payment was an amount covering legal expenses?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that a settlement of that order was made. I would have to check to see whether the legal expenses were identified as such as a separate item. The settlement was, of course, in total in relation to the claim and costs.

Mr. Forrestall: I wonder if the minister can confirm to us whether the government is facing any more legal settlements of this nature, and if so, can he indicate briefly what firms are involved? Would the minister now care to meet the commitment made last fall or in the early part of the winter that he would table a rationalization of the tendering procedure with respect to this matter?

Mr. Lang: There are some further discussions going on with other companies affected by the disputes which occurred between the government and Tilden in particular. The discussions are a little difficult to identify in a concrete way at this point, but I would be glad to make a report from time to time.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

MEASURES ADDITIONAL TO BUDGET IN ORDER TO COMBAT UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question of the Minister of Finance.

Since the unemployment rate in Quebec has gone up from 7 per cent to 9.7 per cent in February, 1977 and since the number of unemployed Canadians has increased from 19,000 to 268,000 in the same period, I ask the minister what immediate steps, apart from the budget that will be introduced in the House, we can expect from the present government, with the support of 60 members from the province of Quebec, to improve that unbearable situation and to convince our fellow citizens in the province of Quebec that federalism is still profitable?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I just said, I find it more sensible to present the over-all economic policy of the government within the context of the budget.

[English]

YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT—SUGGESTED IMPLEMENTATION OF PROPOSALS OF CANADIAN COUNCIL ON SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Finance. It relates to the alarming rate of unemployment of 16.1 per cent for those between 14 and 24 years of age. A study by the Canadian Council on Social Development entitled "Youth and Employment" advises the development by the federal government of long-term solutions rather than merely increasing short-term efforts, such as Canada Works and Young Canada Works, and advises the publication of more accurate job market forecasts, the establishment of a national youth agency to encourage joint consultation and future planning and increased assistance to vocational programs. Will the minister assure the House that a serious commitment will be made on the part of the federal government to solving the crisis of youth unemployment by following the advice and the proposals of the Canadian Council on Social Development?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as I have already said, the position of this particular group in the work force is a matter of concern to the government, and we are giving it very careful attention.

Mr. Dick: I would like to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand.

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, but he has stepped out, so I will ask it at another time.

REASON FOR FAILURE TO CREATE NUMBER OF JOBS PREDICTED IN LAST BUDGET AND INCREASE IN IMPLICIT PRICE INDEX

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. As the minister feels reluctant to refer to subjects he may touch on in his budget, I wonder, referring to his May 25 budget in which he predicted that there would be 250,000 jobs created in Canada, whether he will indicate why that number of jobs was not created and why less than 50 per cent of that number of jobs were created?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, without accepting the accuracy of the hon. gentleman's assessment I have to acknowledge, as I previously indicated to the House, that the rate of growth anticipated last year did not come about.

Mr. Stevens: If we accept the minister's statement that the rate of growth was not what the minister initially anticipated, would he indicate why in his budget of May 25 he indicated that inflation on the implicit price index scale would be 9 per cent in 1976 when it actually turned out to be 9.4 per cent? Why did the figure go up if growth was slow?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The rate of the consumer price index went down rather than up.

Mr. Stevens: No, the implicit price index.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I point out to the hon. gentleman that the rate of growth in Canada as well as the rate in all the OECD countries did not attain the levels anticipated.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SUGGESTED DENIAL OF BAIL TO RAPISTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. In the last month in the city of Nelson there have been three separate and distinct cases of rape. In each instance the accused was released on bail. Where there is a clear risk that acts like this can be perpetrated again, is the minister prepared to make representations to the British Columbia attorney general or to make changes in his own legislation so that rapists will not be released on bail to do further injury to hapless and helpless victims?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the representations which were made to the court at the time of these bail applications would depend on provincial Crown counsel, and therefore I will be happy to make inquiries of the attorney general of British Columbia to determine the backgrounds of these three cases.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

POSSIBILITY OF REPRESENTATIONS FROM FORCE ON SELECTION COMMITTEE AND APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONER FROM WITHIN RANKS

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a two-part question for the Solicitor General. Has the minister received any representations from the commissioner or any other member or members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police with respect to setting up the selection committee to appoint the next commissioner of the force in September, and if so, what was the nature of those representations?

Second, has the minister received a request from the commissioner or a member or members of the RCMP that the next commissioner be drawn from within the ranks of the force, and if so, what is the minister's response to that request?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the first part of the hon. member's question, I have not received any representations as such on setting up the selection committee. I have, however, received representatives of the divisional staff of the RCMP who have brought forward a number of suggestions. One of those suggestions was that the new commissioner be drawn from the ranks of the RCMP.

AGRICULTURE

BEEF—BASIS OF PAYMENT OF SUBSIDY

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture, and it relates to the subsidy on beef. If a farmer makes a claim for the subsidy and submits both live and dressed weights to the minister's department, which weight will be used for payment?

An hon. Member: The minister's weight.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I heard an hon. member say "the minister's weight". The other day I heard a farmer say that the minister is worth his weight in gold.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1500)

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the stabilization support payment is calculated on the live weight basis. Dressed weight will be converted to live weight and calculated for payment in the following manner: Dressed weight of grade A steers will be considered to be 57 per cent of live weight; dressed weight of grade A heifers will be considered to be 56 per cent of live weight.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the information sought might be obtained in some other way.

PUBLISHING

REQUEST FOR CONTINUED SUPPORT FOR "THE PERFORMING ARTS IN CANADA"

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. Bearing in mind the sad lack of Canadian magazines devoted to the arts, and in response to thousands of Canadians who deplore the fate now facing the publication entitled The Performing Arts in Canada, would the minister use his good offices to prevent the demise, due to financial difficulties, of this magazine?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure my good offices extend that far. I will raise the matter for consideration. As the hon. member knows, the Canada Council has been concerned about this question, and decided that the magazine did not warrant the continuation of its subvention. I will intervene with the Canada Council to this extent, that I shall seek further information on the matter the hon. member has raised.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order on a matter which arises out of the question period. I directed a question to the minister. Although there was some preamble to it, I do not think it was longer than the preamble to five or six other questions asked this day or any other day. Your Honour denied me the opportunity to ask a supplementary question. Immediately afterwards another hon. member asked a question and was allowed to ask a supplementary. It seems to me that there was a discriminatory balance as between one member and another. I do not represent a third party—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dick: I am not talking to the hon. member for St. Boniface. Perhaps he would be quiet, or explain how he earns his salary.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dick: I was trying to raise a matter concerning youth unemployment which is at its highest level since 1953, and I feel it is unfortunate that a supplementary question was not allowed. A list was tendered to Your Honour by the opposition party. It is only a guide, I realize, for use in the question period, but it indicates the thrust or direction of opposition questions on a certain day.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is absolutely right. The discretion of the Chair always has to be used, regrettably, to discriminate every day between one hon. member and another. At the end of the question the hon. member had the floor. I think that if I had wanted to take a hard line I could have asked him to sit down before repeating a question which had been put in almost exactly the same language previously in the question period. However, I did not want to do that. I tried to recognize members from every region. There were many repetitious questions on unemployment, obviously, because today the unemployment figures were released.

I made an effort to get around to as many different regions and hon. members as I possibly could, to see at least if a new aspect or light could be shed on the matter from different regions. It seemed to me that the hon. member was not raising a new aspect but was repeating one which had already been discussed. In any case, I let that go. The questioner who followed him was the hon. member for York-Simcoe who, despite the lateness of the question period, raised at least, so it seemed to me, a sufficiently fresh aspect to warrant one supplementary question, and I recognized him before going to other hon. members who had been rising for some time. But that is a decision the Chair must make every day. Although the Chair may appear to discriminate as between one member and another, its decisions have nothing to do with anything of that nature.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I can understand that Your Honour could not allow me to introduce a motion under Standing Order 43 at 2.15. However, there is a matter of great importance which should be corrected as soon as possible because the question is causing undue alarm across the country, particularly at the seal hunt. Mr. Speaker, my point of order relates to misinformation emanating either intentionally or unintentionally from certain news media. This information indicated that only 40,000 seals were observed at the front, whereas information from the Department of the Environment, who are the experts, indicates that there were over 100,000 seals. I think the government should consider this proposal—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret, as much as the hon. member does, that he was not able to put his motion during the time allotted for motions under Standing Order 43. I attempted to proceed on a regional basis. There had been one such motion from the region of Newfoundland, proposed by the hon. member for St. John's East. I thought, in fairness, it was proper to let hon. members from other regions put their motions as well. On this particular day most of them concentrated on the same subject. However, since that time has now expired, I really cannot recognize the hon. member now or revert to that item of business. I regret that.

CANADA SHIPPING AMENDMENT ACT (NOISE POLLUTION)

MEASURE TO PREVENT NOISE POLLUTION ON INLAND WATERS

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-407, to amend the Canada Shipping Act (Noise Pollution).

DEPARTMENT OF SOLICITOR GENERAL—PERSONNEL

Question No. 651—Mr. Lachance:

Between the date of the presentation of the last budget May 25, 1976 and October 12, 1976, did the Department of the Solicitor General, National Parole Board, Royal Canadian Mounted Police and Canadian Penitentiary Service hire, dismiss or transfer employees to other departments and, if so, how many?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General):

Ministry Secretariat		Canadian Penitentiary Service and the National Parole Service
Hired	45	Hired	769
Dismissed	0	Dismissed	17
Transferred	19	Transferred	52
Royal Canadian Mounted Police		National Parole Board
Hired	572	Hired	26
Dismissed	0	Dismissed	0
Transferred	40	Transferred	4

NOTE: The figures shown do not reflect a true accountability of the number of persons hired as opposed to the number of transfers and dismissals by reason of the fact that the question made no mention of resignations, retirements, discharges, deaths, etc., for example: (a) The figure of 769 persons hired by CPS/NPS is accounted for in part by 327 term employees hired for short term assignments replacing employees on annual leave, sick/maternity leave, language training, etc., 64 hired under student programs, and 265 in-department transfers and promotions (including acting appointments). (b) The figure of 572 shown for persons hired by the R.C.M.P. is partially offset by 97 persons pensioned, 292 resigned and 58 discharged.

LANDING INSTRUCTIONS—QUEBEC CITY AIRPORT

Question No. 785—Mr. Cossitt:

1. During the summer of 1976, did Mr. Henry Garbatz, a private pilot from Montreal, accompanied by his wife and two daughters, approach the airport at Quebec City and ask the control tower for landing instructions and, if so (a) on what date (b) at what time of day (c) what are the names of all controllers on duty in the tower at the time?

2. Did Mr. Garbatz specifically ask in English, if he should approach from the left or the right side and did he receive the following reply from an air controller on duty: "You can use whatever way you want. I don't really give a . . . ." and, if so (a) what was the name of the controller (b) for what reason did he make such a reply insofar as (i) off-coloured language is concerned (ii) not properly instructing Mr. Garbatz (c) what connection, if any, was there between the fact that Mr. Garbatz asked his question in the English language?

3. Was there an investigation made of the incident and, if so (a) by whom (b) on what dates (c) what were the results (d) did tapes of the conversation prove that Mr. Garbatz was correct in his allegations (e) was the matter hushed up and, if so, for what reason (f) was a recommendation made and a decision adopted by the Department of Transport to take no action to deal with the situation on the grounds that it was not propitious to do anything because of the controversy at the time over the use of two languages by air traffic controllers?

[Mr. Goodale.]

4. Did Mr. Garbatz write the Minister of Transport outlining the situation and alleging that he had received no clear instructions and that improper language had been used and, if so (a) on what date (b) on what date was it received by the Minister (c) has the Minister answered the letter and (i) if so, on what date (ii) if not, for what reason?

5. Is it government policy to permit off-coloured language to be used by air traffic controllers for aircraft asking instructions and (a) if so, for what reason (b) if not, for what reason was such a situation permitted, in this case?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): 1. Yes. (a) July 7, 1976. (b) 10:01 a.m. (c) It is not consistent with the tradition of a non-political public service to disclose names of officials who perform tasks in the course of their public duty.

2. Mr. Garbatz did ask in English if it would be permissible to make a left or right hand approach and as there was no other conflicting traffic the controller made an inappropriate remark. (a) Same reply as 1(c) above. (b) (i) There was no reason for such a reply. (ii) Mr. Garbatz was subsequently provided with proper instructions. (c) There was no connection.

3. Yes. (a) By unit management and headquarters officials. (b) July 9, 1976. (c) The investigation revealed that the offensive remark was made. (d) Yes. (e) No. The controller involved was severely reprimanded on July 9, 1976 and warned that a further occurrence would not be tolerated. (f) No.

4. Yes. (a) July 7, 1976. (b) July 12, 1976. (c) Yes (1) August 26, 1976.

5. (a) It is not the policy of the government to permit the use of offensive language in communications between air traffic controllers and pilots. (b) The use of such expletives is not permitted under any circumstances.

"PRINCESS OF TASMANIA" VESSEL

Question No. 822—Mr. Muir:

1. Did Canadian National charter the vessel, Princess of Tasmania for the North Sydney—Newfoundland Ferry service and, if so, for what period?

2. What was the classification of the vessel as to ownership, charter, crew and cost per day?

3. During the period that the Princess of Tasmania was under charter, how many days was the vessel not in service and for what reason?

4. Was the Princess of Tasmania offered for sale to Canadian National and, if so, at what price?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): 1. The M.V. Princess of Tasmania now named the M.V. Marine Cruiser was chartered by the Department of Transport for a period of five years. It is operated by Canadian National Railways under the "Entrustment Order" for the Newfoundland ferry services.

2. The vessel was owned by the Australian Coastal Shipping Commission and purchased by Bahamarine Limited. The charter party is a bareboat charter with Bahamarine Ltd., at a daily rate of $1,379 Canadian and is Canadian crewed.

3. The vessel is used to provide additional capacity to meet summer tourist demand and is held in a laid-up state during the rest of the year unless required in freight service. It was acquired for the Gulf service in order that the M.V. Lucy

Maud Montgomery then operating in the Gulf could be returned to the PEI service where her capacity was required.

	No. of days operated	No. of days not operated
1973	153	212
1974	186	179
1975	131	234
1976 (to Nov. 30)	75	260

On those days the vessel did not operate she was in lay-up status at Point Edwards or on refit at St. John's. The refits have been normal for the age of the vessel.

4. The vessel was offered for sale on a general basis by the owners. The offering price was $2,250,000. The vessel was not purchased by the Department of Transport since it did not conform to the long-run policy of acquiring high capacity, relatively fast vessels to provide an improved standard of service at less daily cost.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS BULLETIN NO. 13

Question No. 1,137—Mr. Horner:

1. Did the Minister of Public Works make an offer as stated in the Department's Bulletin No. 13, dated April 1, 1974, and, if so, did he make it with the consent and advice of the Department of Justice?

2. How many cases were dealt with by the government on the extended period as set out in the Bulletin?

3. Does the government take the position that the offer and the filings made pursuant to the offer should not have been made and, if so, does it propose to take any action to recover monies paid?

4. Has the government the power to act in accordance with the Bulletin re Pickering and elsewhere and will it consider on the merits, requests that the Department of Justice file pursuant to Paragraph 29(1)(b) of the Expropriation Act, claims that through oversight were not filed pursuant to the Minister's Bulletin No. 13 so as to permit persons to have proper compensation determined by the courts?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Public Works): 1. Yes, with the consent and advice of the Department of Justice.

2. Forty

3. No.

4. In reply to the first part of the question, the Minister of Public Works may at any time request the Attorney General to file a notice in the Federal Court pursuant to paragraph (b) of subsection (1) of section 29 of the Expropriation Act, and as a consequence of that request, the Attorney General may file such notice; whether, in any particular case, the court would have jurisdiction to entertain the legal proceedings commenced by the Attorney General would depend on the facts of that case. Regarding the second part of the question, the Department of Justice is prepared to examine any case where it is alleged that through an oversight former owners have not commenced action within the statutory time period or otherwise complied with Bulletin No. 13 in order to determine whether, on the facts, the Federal Court has any jurisdiction to determine the compensation payable to such persons.

VANCOUVER INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Question No. 1,275—Mr. Leggatt:

1. What are the per passenger costs of (a) Air Canada (b) CP Air at Vancouver International Airport?

2. (a) What profit/loss did Vancouver International Airport show in 1974-75 (b) what profit/loss is projected for (i) 1975-76 (ii) 1976-77?

3. How many (a) small private and corporate plane landings (b) commercial airlines' scheduled flights (c) commercial airlines' non-scheduled flights and for charters, were there at Vancouver International Airport in the last year for which figures are available and, in each case, what percentage of total landings does this represent?

4. What are the cost estimates for the proposed third runway at Vancouver International Airport?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): 1. (a) The per passenger handling costs for Air Canada at Vancouver International Airport, based on January to November, 1976, were $3.52. This figure was computed for all boarding and deboarding passengers and covers reservations, ticketing and baggage handling services. (b) The per passenger handling costs for CP Air are not available within Transport Canada.

2. (a) For the fiscal year 1974/75 Vancouver International Airport showed a net loss of $2,503,173. (b)(i) In the fiscal year 1975/76 Vancouver International Airport generated $15,750,287 in revenue and incurred expenses of $13,904,640 for a net profit of $1,845,647. It should be noted that the revenue of $15,750,287 includes $4,362,827 in Air Transportation Ticket Tax. These figures do not include costs for Air Navigational and Air Traffic Services. (b) (ii) Occasioned by the increase in the landing fee tariffs the first six months financial performance suggests a profit of approximately $4,000,000 for the fiscal year 1976/77.

3. Aircraft movement statistics for Vancouver International Airport for the year 1975 were obtained from the 1975 Annual Report, issued by the Aviation Statistics Centre, Statistics Canada. The available statistics are not broken down in the exact grouping as requested, however the following is provided:

Total Aircraft Movements:				203,253
Itinerant	198,416	=	97.62 per cent	of total
Local	4,837	=	2.38 per cent	of total
	203,253		100.00 per cent

Local aircraft movements are not broken down further into the various categories. The following statistics pertain to itinerant movements only.

Itinerant Aircraft Movements by Type of Operation:
Air Carriers—unit toll	66,615	=	33.57 per cent	of total itinerant
Air Carriers—charter	3,534	=	1.79 per cent	of total itinerant
Other commercial	67,558	=	34.05 per cent	of total itinerant
Private	51,891	=	26.15 per cent	of total itinerant
Government (civil and military)	8,818	=	4.44 per cent	of total itinerant
	198,416		100.00 per cent	of total itinerant

Itinerant Aircraft Movements by Gross Take-off Weight:

4,000 pounds and under	80,919	=	40.78 per cent	of total itinerant
4,001 pounds-9,000 pounds	22,687	=	11.43 per cent	of total itinerant
9,001 pounds-19,000 pounds	22,815	=	11.50 per cent	of total itinerant
19,001 pounds-39,000 pounds	2,451	=	1.24 per cent	of total itinerant
39,001 pounds-79,000 pounds	7,080	=	3.57 per cent	of total itinerant
79,001 pounds-159,000 pounds	34,916	=	17.60 per cent	of total itinerant
159,001 pounds-199,000 pounds	9,403	=	4.74 per cent	of total itinerant
199,001 pounds-314,000 pounds	5,518	=	2.78 per cent	of total itinerant
314,001 pounds and over	12,627	=	6.36 per cent	of total itinerant
	198,416		100.00 per cent	of total itinerant

Definition of Terms: "aircraft movement"—an aircraft landing, take-off, or simulated approach; "air carrier movement"—all unit toll movements plus those charter movements by aircraft over 18,000 pounds performed by Canadian and foreign operators with an official ICAO or Transport Canada designator; "itinerant movement"—one in which the aircraft enters or leaves tower control; "local movements"—(a) movements by aircraft which operate within the airport traffic pattern or local practice area; (b) simulated approaches or low passes; "other commercial"—commercial operations not included in 'Air Carrier'; "private movements"—movements by aircraft registered as "Private", owned by individuals or companies and not used for hire or compensation.

4. The latest cost estimate which was prepared in February, 1976 for the proposed parallel runway at Vancouver International Airport is $26,271,800.

INVENTORY LOANS PLAN

Question No. 1,311—Mr. Crouse:

1. What amount was advanced by the government to ground fish operators during 1969 under the Inventory Loans Plan?

2. What firms received the money, and in what amounts?

3. What percentage has been repaid, of the total advanced, and by what firms?

4. In Digby County, Nova Scotia, what repayments have been made?

5. What steps have been authorized for the collection of those funds outstanding?

6. If uneven amounts are collected from various operators, how will the government proceed to ensure equity among the various operators?

Mr. Jim Fleming (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): 1. $3,846,517.89.

SEALANT ON RUNWAY AT MIRABEL

Question No. 1,317—Mr. Beatty:

1. Has there been any deterioration of the sealant between the concrete slabs on the runway at Mirabel Airport and, if so, have repairs been made or are they likely to be made within the next year?

2. (a) How much sealant, if any, will have to be replaced (b) what was or is likely to be the total cost for repairs and how much of that cost will be borne by the taxpayers?

3. (a) What has been the cause of the sealant's deterioration (b) was it anticipated, at the time the airport was built, that the sealant would deteriorate at its present rate?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): 1. There has been deterioration of the sealants between the concrete slabs on the runway at Mirabel Airport. Some repairs have been made and it is anticipated that repairs will continue to be carried out each year along with preventative maintenance.

2. (a) It was estimated that approximately 5 percent of the sealants may come out each year. (b) These will have to be replaced at an estimated annual cost of approximately $100,000. The proportion of this cost that is related to the ongoing maintenance will be budgeted in a normal manner. The allocation of the costs of replacing material due to other than normal causes will be established through legal consultation.

3. (a) The cause of the sealants failure to perform is a lack of adhesion related to a number of factors. The proportion attributed to each factor is not resolved. (b) The present rate of deterioration was not anticipated. Since this condition is not unique there is considerable industry interest in improving the performance of these materials for the Canadian climate.

AIR CANADA FLIGHT ATTENDANTS

Question No. 1,401—Mr. Halliday:

1. For each of the past 12 months for which figures are available, how many Air Canada flight attendants were hired on a full-time or regular basis, and on a part-time basis?

2. How many in each classification were lost through resignation or other form of attrition per month?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): The management of Air Canada advises as follows: the only flight attendants hired by Air Canada in 1976 on a permanent basis were company employees who were already working in other positions but who had submitted applications and asked to be considered for the position of flight attendant. Employees hired on a part time basis fall into two categories. Students registered in Canadian universities are hired for the duration of the summer university vacation period while Temporary Employees are hired for periods of between two and six months. Although initially hired as Temporary Employees, flight attendants in this classification are often later declared permanent when operational requirements demand.

CIVIC SQUARE TOWER OFFICE BUILDING—BARRIE, ONTARIO

Question No. 1,488—Mr. Rynard:

1. Are there any government departments located in the Civic Square Tower Office Building in Barrie, Ontario and, if so, which ones?

2. What is the rent per square foot for office space in the Building?

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): 1. Yes; National Health and Welfare; National Revenue (Excise); Manpower and Immigration.

2. First floor, $8.00 p.s.f.; fourth floor, $7.00 p.s.f.; sixth floor, $7.00 p.s.f. and $7.29 p.s.f.

INSULATION

Question No. 1,498—Mr. Herbert:

Does the government monitor and publish its findings of the insulation values of wool batt and loose wool insulation material used in residential buildings and, if so, is any comparison made between the relative insulation values and the price of (a) different types of material (b) different manufacturers (c) domestically manufactured and imported materials?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The Building Research Division, of the National Research Council of Canada, and the Office of Energy Conservation, Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, have both published tables of data comparing the insulating ability of different insulating materials.
