A FABLE.

The Story of the Farmer and the Thief.

A thief had robbed a farmer's horse two or three times. At length the farmer became grumble, but was quieted with the explanation: "Don't you see I use the money to build factories for myself?"

The thief had stolen the law from the farmer to begin with. His heart swelled with pride when he thought of it.

At last, after much thinking, the farmer saw that while the thief was getting richer and richer he was getting poorer.

One evening when Washington Irving, Everett and Bancroft were chatting over diplomatic reminiscences, Everett told how he and the Neapolitan Ambassador had been presented to Her Majesty, Queen Victoria, Lord Melbourne Intimated that they would be expected to play a game of whist with the Duchess of Kent.

"I play but a very poor game myself," said Melbourne, "in fact, I scarcely understand it."

"And I," said the Neapolitan to Everett, "am a very bad player, and should I chance to be your partner I invoke your forbearance in advance," to which the American envoy replied that he knew very little of the game himself.

"Here," said Everett, in relating it, were three dignified persons, clad in gorgeous attire, solemnly going to play a game they imperfectly understood, and for which none of them cared a straw."

"Upon reaching the Duchesses' apartments the ambassadors were formerly presented, and then, at her invitation sat down to play."

As soon as the cards were dealt, a lady-in-waiting placed herself at the back of the Duchess, and the latter said: "Your excellencies will excuse me if I rely on the advice of my friends here, for I must confess that I am really a very poor player."

This was almost too much for Everett's gravity, and it was only with the greatest effort that he could refrain from laughing aloud at the ludicrous formality of the situation.

WHAT DOES THIS SIGNIFY?
In the Ottawa correspondence of the Toronto Globe of the 10th inst., occurs the following peculiar paragraph: "It may now be cruel to chronicle it, but when the news of Hon. Geo. F. Foster's defeat came in Thursday night the members of the conservative club were so pleased that one would have thought they had defeated Sir Richard Cartwright. They did, it is true, express some regret at the loss of the seat, but this was overbalanced by their outspoken joy at what they imagined would enable the party to shake off the incubus. It would have interested Mr. Foster to have witnessed the hilarity of those club conservatives over the reported defeat of their finance minister."

No one will be much surprised at the gratification voiced by the members of the club, for it is well known that personally Mr. Foster is not popular with his party and that he is not regarded as anything approaching a success as finance minister. In this connection it is worth remarking that Mr. Foster's name has not been mentioned in connection with any reciprocity negotiations. It may be that just before the session he is needed at headquarters; but it is not a little singular that a gentleman occupying what has always been regarded as the second place in the cabinet, the premier alone taking precedence, should be left out of every body's reckoning in connection with negotiations directly affecting the department of affairs over which he presides.

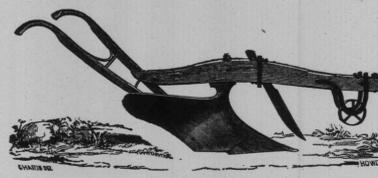

THE LOCAL LEGISLATURE.
The Formal Opening—The Speech from the Throne.
On Thursday last the local legislature of the province met in this city for the transaction of business. There were a great many visitors in town, queen's weather prevailed, and Queen street was alive with people. At parliament buildings a large crowd assembled to witness the formal opening. At three o'clock the Lieutenant Governor and suite arrived at the house of assembly where they were received by a guard of honor from the Infantry school under the command of Capt. Hemming, Lieut. Roach and Carpenter, while the band played the national anthem. His honor then proceeded to the legislative council chamber where the usual formalities of commanding the attention of the members of the assembly were carried out. The following is the speech from the throne:—
"Mr. President and Honorable Members of the Legislative Council, and Gentlemen of the Assembly,
"I beg to extend to you my cordial greetings upon your again assembling for the performance of your important functions, and trust that the delay in convening the Legislature on this occasion, which circumstances have rendered unavoidable, will not be found to occasion you any serious personal inconvenience."
"I am happy to say, that His Excellency, the Governor General, was enabled to make the visit to this maritime province during recess, which I had some reason to think he had in contemplation when I met you at the opening of last session. The reception accorded his Excellency in all parts of the province to which his visit extended, was of the heartiest and most cordial character, and, I am assured, personally most gratifying to his Excellency."
"The session on behalf of the Dominion government of a number of representative and prominent farmers from different sections of the United Kingdom, who should visit Canada and report for the information of the English people upon its agricultural condition, capabilities and resources, led to an extended tour by these gentlemen through a large portion of the Dominion. My government is desirous that the delegates should be allowed to return to the mother country without some of their number having paid a visit to New Brunswick, were able, although somewhat late in the season, to prevail upon several of the party to spend a few days in the province, and I have every reason to believe that those who did so were greatly impressed with the agricultural capabilities of New Brunswick, and will speak most favorably of the province in this regard in their forthcoming report."
"The conditions, which it is believed unhappily exist in agricultural communities in some portions of Great Britain, are leading to a considerable emigration of the farming classes from that country, and my government is in the hope of diverting a portion of this emigration to our own province, has commissioned a competent gentleman, himself a practical English farmer, who has enjoyed the advantage of a few years' residence in New Brunswick, to revisit England and lay before the people the inducements our province offers as a farming country. I am not without strong hopes that the result will be more than commensurate with the moderate outlay which the experiment has necessitated, and shall look to you with confidence to sanction the action of my government in the step thus taken."
"Advantage has been taken of the exhibition held at Kingston, Jamaica, which opened about the first of January last, to make a display of the wood products of the province, and an honorable commissioner representing New Brunswick attended the exhibition, furnished with useful information as to the various descriptions of lumber native to the province, and the cost of the production and shipment of the same, in the hope that an impetus may be given to our trade in this direction with West India Ports. I shall ask you to approve of the expenditure made in connection with this exhibition."
"You will be invited to consider the propriety of constituting a commission to be composed of a limited number of our leading and well informed farmers, to study and report to the commissioner of agriculture upon the present condition and needs of the sheep raising industry in New Brunswick; and I authorize a further and more extensive importation than has hitherto been made by the government, of improved breeds of cattle for sale and general distribution throughout the province."
"The fact that a very considerable number of important and expensive bridges in various parts of the province have simultaneously fallen into decay, and stand in need of immediate renewal or large repairs, has been engaging the serious attention of the department of public works; and to meet the extreme urgency which has thus arisen, a measure which it is believed will be found adequate for the purpose, will be proposed by the chief commissioner of that department for your adoption."
"In belief by my government that the time has now arrived when decisive action may be taken towards amending the constitution of the province, and vesting the legislative functions now existing co-ordinately in the two branches, exclusive of the elective branch. A bill to effectuate such a change, with suitable and necessary accompanying provisions, will be presented to you for consideration and acceptance."
"My government has given much attention during recess to the state of the mining laws of the province as compared with those of other States and provinces; and being of the opinion that a material change is needed to encourage and stimulate mining development in the province, a measure will be placed before you for the purpose of accomplishing this most desirable object."
"A bill is in process of preparation and will be submitted for your consideration, relating to the office of Queen's printer, and to regulate the public printing and publication of the Royal Gazette."
"Mr. Speaker, and Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,
"I have directed the accounts of the income and expenditure of the past year, as well as a statement of the receipts and payments of the current year, up to the opening of the present session, to be laid before you. "Estimates of the probable income and expenditure of the current year will be submitted to you, and I think you will find that the estimates and expenditures have been prepared with a due regard to economy and the requirements of the public services."

"Mr. President, and Honorable Members of the Legislative Council:
"Mr. Speaker, and Gentlemen of the House of Assembly:
"Bills to make general and suitable provisions relating to railways, agricultural companies, and to the constitution of the Senate of the University, as well as measures of importance, will be laid before you; and having full confidence in your zeal for the public good, I feel assured that your deliberations will tend to the enactment of such laws as may best promote the happiness and prosperity of our people."
On the resuming of the house a bill amending the law relating to proceedings and practice of supreme court was introduced by Hon. Mr. Pugsley. The newly elected members having taken their seats, the speaker read a copy of his honor's speech.
J. M. McQueen Moved the Address in Reply.
He craved the indulgence of the house for his maiden speech. (Applause.) The governor general had found our people loyal to the British constitution and connection, and New Brunswick would be of great benefit to the empire on the occasion of the visit of his Excellency the Governor General. (Applause.)
The recent visits of British agriculturists to this province met with the most gratifying New Brunswick was second to none in the Dominion, and the visit of the delegates must result to our advantage in the mother country. In the words of Emerson: "We live in the American continent the best gift of God to mankind," and this province was an important part of that continent.
The visit of the honorable commissioner to England would be of great benefit to the province. The needs of the sheep raising industry could be profitably inquired into by the proposed commissioner. New Brunswick is eminently a sheep raising province.
The question of the abolition of the legislative council would no doubt receive the hearty commendation of the country. Our mining laws, which require improvement, would become a great source of revenue to the province if they were made so as to encourage prospecting and investment.
T. Colter Seconded the Address in Reply.
He said he was thoroughly in accord with the sentiments of the member for Westmorland. The visit of the honorable commissioner had developed a national sentiment among the people of Canada. (Applause.) The farming capabilities of this fertile province, its educational and moral progress, as well as to hold out great inducements to the agricultural communities of the old country. (Hear, hear.) The government in commissioning a practical farmer thoroughly acquainted with the agricultural systems of the old world and the new, was in marked contrast to the old policy of forwarding agricultural orators to the mother country, who had no practical experience in farming. The exhibits at Jamaica from this province would develop an international trade, and the importance of the sheep raising industry is such that any effort on the part of the government to improve the breed of sheep will have the hearty approval of all agriculturists. (Applause.) The speaker then briefly referred to the legislative session and in conclusion hoped that all the deliberations in the house would be carried on in a friendly spirit.
Hon. Daniel Hanington in reply congratulated the two members on a successful address. The sheep industry, the loyalty of the people was unquestionable, not only by the results of the Dominion election, but by the results of the Dominion election.
Mr. Hetherington—Do you insinuate by that that the grists are disloyal?
Mr. Hanington—Some of them are and some are not. The sheep industry in his opinion did not require a commission, and he thought the government were simply dilly-dallying with the proposed abolition of the legislative council.
Many subjects of importance have been omitted from the speech, viz: the lumber commission, the fishing rights and the eastern extension claim. Last year the Northumberland deal saved the government, but—
Mr. Blair—Hear, hear.
Mr. Hanington—The hon. gentleman, the attorney general may cry "hear, hear," but he cannot do so. He is a party to political oblivion? If not where was the propriety of any member of this honorable body implying that those who were not in political sympathy with himself were disloyal and looking forward for annexation.
The hon. gentleman while upon the stand draped himself with the old flag and pretended to be a holler man than his neighbor, but before a deliberate assembly composed of men of equal intelligence as himself it was not becoming in the hon. gentleman to make a remark reflecting upon their loyalty. The question of unrestricted reciprocity has been made a subject of reproach by the hon. member, but he (Blair) had now learned for the first time that the resolution passed at the Quebec conference in favor of unrestricted reciprocity had been approved by a majority of this house.
Mr. Hanington—I did not imply that the hon. member had said so to throw the responsibility of the resolution in favor of reciprocity passed at Quebec conference upon the government. At the time that resolution was passed there were representatives present from all parts of the Dominion, some liberals, and some conservatives. The principle of unrestricted reciprocity was unanimously approved by them. The charge formulated in violent phrase by the hon. gentleman is that the government is not in earnest respecting the abolition of the legislative council and that the government are dealing with the subject as political huns. Did the hon. gentleman wish this remark of his to be officially reported? Perhaps he would deny that he said this?
Mr. Hanington—No, I won't deny that. Mr. Blair—There must be a matter of congratulation to myself that I have for once quoted the hon. gentleman accurately. (Applause.) He states he has confidence in the government, and is opposed to the appointment of a commission. But the hon.

gentleman has more confidence in the ability of the government than he is willing to admit. I will frankly admit that I have not that intuitive good sense with which the hon. member is so eminently distinguished, nor have I made such a success from an agricultural standpoint. The hon. member's attitude in regard to the relations between Germany and France. The Queen strongly espoused the Kaiser's grievance against the French, and announced her intention of abandoning her visit to Grasse unless the Emperor Frederick expressed an apology from the French government for the rudeness shown her in Paris. Lord Salisbury, however, succeeded in inducing Her Majesty to carry out her original program.
Rev. Mignot J. Savage at Boston created a sensation by delivering the most heterodox sermon yet preached from his pulpit. It was on the Sabbath, and the speaker ridiculed the French Republic and the (Sunday) newspapers, and advocated keeping open the places of public amusements.
Following the blizzard a severe frost has set in all over England. The frost is greatly hindering the clearing of railroad lines blocked by snow drifts during the storm. Responsibility of the reaction in favor of England. Many wrecks are reported on that coast. At Lan's End a number of people were frozen to death.
At a ball at Kilgore N. Y., on Tuesday night a free fight was current among the dancers. Revolvers were the weapons used and six of the fighters were fatally wounded. Kilgore is a mining town on the Ohio river, and many of the young miners present had become fighting drunk.

What a Resident of Geary Narrated at a City Hotel.

A resident of Ormocto who had accompanied a friend to town for the purpose of acting as his supporter during a wedding ceremony...

"The Tories," said he, "evidently fancy they are going to rule us at Geary. They have been howling over Wilmot's victory ever since the 11th, and their attacks on peaceful liberals have been disgraceful."

CHICAGO TO FREDERICTON.

A Tramp and His Methods of Travel.

On Tuesday morning the Herald man encountered a strange specimen of the genre known as King street. He was a clean shaven young man of some thirty summers, about 5ft 10 in. in stature...

"One of his oddities is well remembered, it was a laughable habit in the person of John Collins, brother to Charles Collins of this city. The two worthies procured an antelope of old horse and decorated the animal lavishly with shamrocks. Gilbert attended in his own costume, an old pea green cutaway, knee breeches, silk stockings and buckie shoes, and carrying in his hand an enormous shillalah, was accompanied by Collins in an antiquated monster crinoline, red shawl, as a burlesque impersonation of a vivacious colleen. The sight of the scraggy horse being driven in the procession by John Gilbert, and the antics of the two lovers was a well remembered feature of the parade."

Mr. Gilbert left this city a few years ago for Boston, where in addition to his skill as a painter he made himself conspicuous by his delineations of local characters, and the amateur dramatic companies in that city turn him up.

A few weeks ago our New Brunswick friend was appointed by manager Tompkins, of the Sudan company, to take an important part in the play of that name, which has had an astonishing run in Boston. His assumption of the Arab character assigned to him was so satisfactory, that a permanent engagement was at once entered into.

Mr. Gilbert is now on a starting tour through the principal states of the Union and will travel as far west as St. Louis. He will be absent about three months, and we hope to read of his success from time to time. Should he ever visit the home of his boyhood, he may rest assured of a royal welcome from his friends in this city.

THE MARVELLUS RINK.—Owing to the rain storm the attendance at the rink on Friday night was much below the average. There were several skating contests carried out however, and those who did attend saw the bill of fare provided was highly enjoyable.

TO TRAIN HORSES.—It is generally understood that the services of D. J. Stockford has been engaged to take charge of the speedy horses and prepare them for the racing season in this city. Mr. Stockford will return from Boston in a few days time.

ICE CUTTING.—The ice cutting operations conducted by Ass Vanart have been much interrupted by bad weather of late, but a fair amount of stock for home consumption has already been stored. The ice is of good quality this year.

THE LOCAL FLYERS.—On Thursday Queen street was quite alive with the numerous teams engaged in the hauling of which are used for exercise, and they looked very showy as they contested in many a well-fought heat.

A NEW BRUNSWICKER ABROAD.

A Short Sketch of a Fredericton Man's Success on the Stage.

Most of our readers will remember the name of John W. Gilbert, the adopted son of Mr. Quinn, George street, and who for many years worked as a painter in this city. He was quite a character in his way, had a genius for imitation, and was noted for many funny impersonations rendered by him here at local amateur performances.

One of his oddities is well remembered, it was a laughable habit in the person of John Collins, brother to Charles Collins of this city. The two worthies procured an antelope of old horse and decorated the animal lavishly with shamrocks. Gilbert attended in his own costume, an old pea green cutaway, knee breeches, silk stockings and buckie shoes, and carrying in his hand an enormous shillalah, was accompanied by Collins in an antiquated monster crinoline, red shawl, as a burlesque impersonation of a vivacious colleen. POETRY.

ODE TO A SMALL PIG.

Oh, thou little embryo bacon,
Rooting in the mud!
Dost thou think that so much dirt is
Healthy for thy blood?
Art thou happy with thy nozzle
In the earth to dig?
Dost thy heart leap high with pleasure,
Oh, thou infant pig?
Dost thou play around the smoke house,
With thy little grunt,
Where thy hands will soon be curing?
Dost thou think they won't?
Dost thou know that Philip Armour
Sails the rolling sea
In a yacht of gold and silver
Fashioned out of thee?
Dost thou know that mighty Bismarck
Is thy rampant foe?
That where German flags are waving
Thou canst never go?
Many of thy fathers tried it,
But it wouldn't work.
Dost thy spirit yearn to travel,
Thou small Yankee pork?
Oh, thou guileless, infant sausage,
Rooting deep and hard,
Men will smooth their path to riches
With thy slippery lar!
Pink and white thy little nose is,
Twisted is thy tail;
Thou hast got a mighty mission
In life's darksome vale!

SELECT STORY.

A DROLL WOOING.

BY MISS L. A. BARRETT.
"Oh, dear," sighed mamma, "this is dreadful! What shall we do?"
"We three girls looked disconsolate."
"Yes," she continued, "it is positively shocking! Your papa has refused—refused outright—to let us go to a fashionable watering-place this summer. He says he cannot afford it."
"Is that all, mamma?" I said, in a tone of relief. "By your dreadful manner I concluded papa had failed, and that we girls should be obliged to go for days' work. As it is, I don't care much. I actually found Saratoga a bore last summer, and would rather stay at home than not."
"Julia Maria!" said mamma, looking me straight in the eye and addressing me by that awful name, which she only uses when particularly enraged, "Julia Maria Mason, do you know what you are talking about? Do you remember that you have passed your twenty-fifth birthday, and no husband yet?"
"Really, mamma," I replied meekly, "I don't see how I am to blame for my age; and as for a husband, I can't very well ask any man to have me."
"But you might try having Julia," said my disturbed parent, "if you had exerted yourself last summer you could easily have caught Orlando Fields."
"But I wouldn't marry him, mamma. Orlando Fields, indeed! A horrid, crusty old bachelor who talks of the moon and wouldn't marry him if he were the last man on earth and I the last woman."
"You'll be a crusty old maid before you know it," remarked mamma, sententiously.
"I don't care if I am," I replied, petulantly, "I shall not marry a man whom I neither like nor respect to please any one—old maid or no old maid."
"Oh, well," said mamma, returning to her first grievance, "it is useless to discuss the matter; only tell me what we shall do this summer, Julia; you know we must leave town at any rate."
"I have an idea, mamma," I exclaimed, suddenly. "You shall take the girls to that cheap place at the sea-side, and I'll go and spend the summer with Aunt Hollis."
"With Aunt Hollis?" shrieked mamma, in little semi-quavers.
"With Aunt Hollis?" exclaimed the other girls, in a breath.
"Yes. Why not?"
"In that dreadful, out-of-the-way place, with that horrid old thing?"
"I don't know that she is a horrid old thing, by any means," I replied; "I never saw her. And as for the place—I have often heard that the scenery near her home is very beautiful—right in the heart of the New Hampshire hills. Of course, the society may be a trifle primitive, but one can get to almost anything, and so long as I am to be deprived of Saratoga and Newport, I mean to go to the other extreme, and visit Aunt Hollis."
"But, Julia, you'll never get a husband out of her."
"Oh, dear!" I exclaimed, in disgust. "There you go again, mamma! Isn't there anything in this world to think about from the instant a girl gets out of her cradle, but that one tiresome theme, a husband? I tell you I quite hate men. I won't have a husband, and I will go to Aunt Hollis."
Mamma sighed dimly, and subsequently gave her consent.
One week later I started on my journey. It was a beautiful day, and my heart felt unusually light, as we left the dusty city far behind us and sped away through the green fields and still greener woods. I leaned, delighted, from the car window, to get a sniff of the wholesome, scented air.
Along towards evening we came to the little station where I was to go off to alighted, feeling somewhat forlorn. Not a human being could I discern, aside from the station-master.
"Where is it you're wantin' to go, miss?" he asked, coming forward and bowing politely.
"To Dexter."
"Wal, you'll be obliged to wait till Ben Briggs comes after the mail. He allows takes all the passengers."
After a long and tedious delay, Ben Briggs's conveyance (which proved to be a huge emigrant wagon, drawn by a pair of short-necked oxen) drew up before the door of the station.
"Mercy!" I exclaimed, involuntarily, "I can't ride in that thing!"
"Oh, yes you can," said the station-master; "then oxen air as fat as hoeses. You'll find them amazin' at gitten over the road. See here, Ben, ye've got two passengers to Dexter. Hiloo that! the stage's come!"
Presently, in answer to this call, a tall, dark-haired gentleman emerged from the woods near by, closely followed by a great Newfoundland dog.
"Down Turner!" he commanded. "How d'ye do, Ben?" addressing the fat, good-natured-looking stage-driver. "You see I'm back once more."
"How d'ye do yourself, cap'n?" said Ben. "Glad to see ye in these 'ere parts again. Jest let me list the trunks in an' we're off. I s'pose you won't mind takin' a seat 'long side the lady? most o' gentlemen don't," (with a sly wink). "Come, Turner, old fellow, hop up here with me."
The huge dog obeyed with alacrity, and we were off.
"Are you en route for Dexter also?" asked my companion, politely.
"Yes," I replied. "I am going to visit an aunt of mine who resides there."
"It hain't Miss General Cad'y?" put in Ben. "You look somewhat like them flinked gals who were that last year."
"No," I replied.
"Wal, then I know it's the minister's wife. I heard she was goin' to have a nice come."

"I am not acquainted with the minister's wife."
"Then it's Belinda Baxter; she that was lawyer Baxter's wife afore he died?"
"No."
"No, now, would you mind a tellin' who your aunt is?"
"Not in the least," I replied, intensely amused. "Her name is Miss Matilda Hollis."
"Jupiter!"
"This expression came from Ben, who turned squarely around and faced my companion.
"I'll bet, by hokay! she's your wife, cap'n," he exclaimed. "It's pretty mean to deceive a fellow like that."
"Hush, Ben!" said the gentleman, in a low tone. "I tell you I never saw the lady before. I think," turning to me with a winning smile, "we must be relatives, as Miss Matilda Hollis is my aunt also, and I am on my way to pay her my annual visit."
"Indeed!" I exclaimed in surprise. "My name is Julia Mason; Aunt Hollis is great-aunt to my father. Now, pray, who are you?"
"My name is Carl Willston. My mother was Miss Hollis' half-sister; so you see, we are cousins."
"I have often heard of you, although this is our first meeting, cousin mine," I replied, gayly. "Let us be friends."
We shook hands cordially.
"I was nearly dark when the fleet (?) once arrived at Dexter, which proved a little drowsy, antiquated place. Ben threw the mail out at the shoemaker's shop, which, I afterward learned, served as a post-office also, and we drove toward the residence of Aunt Hollis.
"That was the place," suddenly exclaimed Ben, pointing with his whip.
An exclamation of surprise and delight broke from me.
"Just before me, on the very bank of a beautiful lake stood a low, rambling house, half hid in the tall trees that surrounded it.
"Elmwood," said my newly found cousin.
"Whoa, that!" shouted Ben, as we drew up before the door. "I've brought ye company, Miss Hollis."
The door opened, and a silver-haired old lady came forward.
"Is it Julia?" she asked, in a sweet voice. "I received your letter, my dear; need I say, I am glad to see you?"
So this was Aunt Hollis—that "horrid old thing" that I was so much surprised and pleased that I threw my arms about her neck and kissed her several times, impulsively. "I feel delighted," said an injured voice behind me. "Not a word for your boy, Aunt Hollis?"
"Can that be Carl, too? Why, my dear boy, I hardly expected you before another week; but you are welcome indeed. This is your cousin, Julia Mason."
"I know it, Aunt Hollis; the ride from the station here explained things; but I am so tired I don't care to go into details."
"Very well; your supper is waiting. Come, my children, it will seem good to see bright young faces about the old house once more."
I thought I had never tasted such a supper as we sat down to that night. Such delicious strawberries, half smothered in sugar, real cream! Such snowy biscuits and layers of delicate cake! I enjoyed myself heartily, doing ample justice to all that was placed before me. We spent a cheerful evening, and when I retired, before falling asleep in the most comfortable of all comfortable beds, I mentally decided that I had done a wise thing in coming to pay Aunt Hollis a visit.
"I was awakened next morning by a clear tenor voice, singing underneath my window:
"Kathleen Mavourneen, the gray dawn is breaking,
The horn of hunter is heard on the hill,
The lark from her light wing the bright two notes is shaking,
Kathleen Mavourneen, what! slumbering still!"
I dressed myself, quickly, in a white cambric morning robe, and ran lightly down stairs—out into the garden.
There walked a maid all dressed in white," quoted Mr. Willston, emerging from behind a tree. "Good-morning, cousin."
"Good-morning," I replied.
"What do you think of Elmwood?"
"I'm not sure," I exclaimed, rapturously, "that I'm never before in such a pleasant place, and that I should enjoy a row on yonder lake above all other things."
"Then you shall have your wish. I am very certain that that there several villages in the back-house—at least there used to be last summer."
Just then Aunt Hollis appeared, to call us to breakfast.
"You look like your father, my dear," she said, kissing me.
"I'll confess the breakfast was an improvement on last night's tea. I ate heartily and with a feeling that the lassitude I usually experienced in the city had left me forever.
"Now away with you," said my aunt, giving me an affectionate pat on the shoulder; "out on the lake or up the mountain. Carl will take care of you. You need the country air, my dear; those cheeks are too pale. For my part, I cannot see how people manage to exist in those hot stifling cities."
I followed her advice to the letter, until a row on the lake and a ramble up the mountain made up a part of every day. I was always accompanied by Cousin Carl, as I had grown to call him, and who, I concluded after mature deliberation, was a decided improvement on Mr. Orlando Fields.
So the summer wore away, and I was already looking forward with regret to my return home.
"Cousin Julia," said Carl, sauntering up the garden path one day, and pausing before the open window where I sat, busily employed embroidering an antimacassar for Aunt Hollis, "what is your idea of picking?"
"I think," I replied, without looking up, "that, as a general thing, they are dreadful trials. I had several at Newport last summer; and once I was compelled to go in a boat with horrid, squinting Sun Fisher, who upset us and spoiled my beautiful new muslin dress, that, as papa declared, cost a fortune."
"Well, I promise you, you shall not be upset this time. And to provide against such a catastrophe, as the spilling of a new arrival, all you have to do is to leave that garment hanging on its respective nail in your wardrobe, and don a good serviceable colico gown. You will then be dressed as well as your neighbors. Calico is quite the mode here in Dexter."
"Where are we going, may I inquire?"
"To Sylvan Glen—a place about five miles down the lake—and this very afternoon; so to be sure you are ready. Sarah Jane Baxter and Simon Ellis are going. Simon invited your humble servant. Be prepared to meet the elite," he concluded, laughingly.
The calico was entirely out of the question, I donned a plain white swiss, and, at the appointed time, provided with a goodly basket of eatables, we set out.
The picnic proved a famous country gathering, and was about as uncomfortable as picnics in general. I fell a victim to the violent fancy of a red-headed young man, who talked through his nose and seemed able to discuss but one subject, the weather.

"It's a fine day, Miss Mason," he remarked.
"Yes," I replied, "it is."
"We had a fine day yesterday."
"I believe so."
"It was fine all last week, Miss Mason." I told him, "If I remember correctly, it was."
"And all the week before."
Carl had deserted me, but now came rambling by, humming an old tune:
"Maid of Athens, ere we part,
Give, oh, give me back my heart."
I gave him a look of entreaty, but he only laughed and passed on. It was evident he enjoyed my discomfiture to the fullest extent.
"Finally, when I had answered the same question at least a dozen times, I broke away from my adorer, and wandered down through the leafy vista toward the lake.
The view was particularly enchanting, and I strolled on, scarcely heeding that I had long since left the beaten path behind.
At last the ground began to grow wet and soggy, and I was about to retrace my steps, when suddenly I was startled by a noise by a noise behind me. I looked around, and behold—oh, horrors!—making straight toward me, a dreadful cow!
Now, in all my sojourn at Aunt Hollis', I could never recollect myself to a cow; and this one had such great, long horns—just fit for looking it down on me. She was in full pursuit, making straight toward me. In my terror, I plunged headlong forward, never stopping to look back.
All at once my treacherous foot slipped, and I fell myself sinking. The black mud oozed over the top of my French kid boots, and the lower tulle to my muslin gown was fast disappearing. I shrieked with terror, and was answered by a melancholy "Moo."
"Turning my eyes, I beheld my enemy at a short distance behind me, but in the same predicament; there stood that cow, up to her body in mud, stuck fast.
In vain she tried to extricate herself; it was equally useless on my part so I began to indulge in tears.
"Oh, wouldn't some one come and get me out of that awful place! What if I should sink out of sight entirely!"
I grew nearly frantic at the thought and shrieked louder than ever. But, alas! my voice was completely drowned by the terrific "moo" of my enemy, who instantly embraced the opportunity of uniting with me in calling for aid.
Our voices were not in the least harmonious, and the vocal duet that we executed caused me, even to my own surprise, to indulge in a sickly smile.
At last I heard a faint "hiloo!" Thank Heaven, some one was coming to the rescue.
Nearer and nearer sounded footsteps, until, presently, the leather carted, and the tall form of my Cousin Carl emerged from them.
In an instant he had taken in the situation, and, making strenuous efforts to suppress his inclination to laugh, he asked, in a grave tone:
"Which shall I help first?"
This was too much. I burst into a violent fit of weeping.
"I think it downright mean," I sobbed, "to twist me like this. I had to run. That awful cow came right after me, with all her horns spread. I was forced to run; I was indeed. Oh, mercy! I'm sinking!"
"Who ever saw a cow with her horns crossed?" roared Carl. "They are always spread," as you call it. What made the animal run was because there was a dog after you. You see she kept coming around the picnic ground until I set Turner on her."
Then he added in a graver tone: "Don't cry any more, little cousin, I'll help you out under one condition."
"What is that?" I gasped.
"That you will promise me, on the very spot, to be my wife."
"Was there ever before such an unheard-of idea! I had received sundry proposals in my life-time. I had even had one in fatigued youth sink gracefully on his knees before me, but a proposal to a young lady, ankle-deep in a bog-hole, was a thing out of all common.
"I mean it," he repeated. "If you do not say yes, I shall repeat the cow and depart."
"Yes, yes," I sobbed. "Oh, mercy, yes! anything but get that awful cow out. Oh, dear!"
"There is still another condition," continued my tantalizing cousin, "I shall demand a kiss."
"Indeed you'll not!" I exclaimed.
"To be sure; engaged people always seal the contract thus. Quick! or I rescue the cow."
"Yes! yes!"
With the aid of a stout board and his helping hand, I was soon free.
How was I to get home without being seen? was the next question. Carl righted matters by leading me to a secluded spot on the bank of the lake, and there returned for the boat. I was rowed back to Aunt Hollis' in a dreadful plight, and made my ingress at the back door, from whence I escaped to my room unobserved.
Two hours later, when I appeared in the little parlor, clad in my apple green, and muslin, with its cherry ribbons, I looked and felt none the worse for my adventure, but my cheeks must have taken on a carnation hue when Aunt Hollis came to kiss me, and whispered in my ear that "she knew all."
That evening, as Carl and I were pacing up and down the garden-walk, he remarked:
"Julia, you wouldn't do to belong to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals; you haven't once inquired after the fate of that unfortunate cow. For all you know, she may be there still."
"I devoutly hope she is," I snapped.
"I don't know how she is," he said, "but she's a very good girl. She deserves it, for getting me into such a scrape."
"I am sorry you haven't your wish, dear, but I saw her safely out hours ago. I felt too grateful for her not to look after her welfare."
When I started for home, that fall, Ben Briggs, with the oxen and emigrant wagon, helped me by appearance, and I was again in, followed by Carl, who was to accompany me.
As we jogged along, Ben appeared to look very knowing, and, after sundry winks and blinks in my direction, reached down and drew a suspicious-looking black bottle from under the seat.
"Wal, cap'n," he said, by way of prelude, "I sorter made a mistake when I was a drivin' you out here. I got a leetle ahead o' time; but if you hain't any objections now, I'll wish you both much joy, and long life to you!" and Ben took a long draught from the black bottle.
We were married at Christmas time, much to poor mamma's satisfaction.
Carl proves a model; and my sisters declare they would be willing to spend all their summers at Aunt Hollis', providing they managed to catch as handsome a husband as I did.

QUITE A LIVELY GUEST.
"Yes," said the night clerk of the Golden Eagle, "you see some mighty queer people in this business, for a fact."
"Don't say?" we replied with interest, inasmuch as even the reminiscences of a night clerk as a mitigation of boredom of a temporary sojourn in Sacramento was "better than nothing," as the popular old lady said when her pastor informed her that the Methodists would be sent to Hades for 1,000 years anyway.
"When people so off travelling they act different from what they do at home," continued the night clerk thoughtfully. "You don't notice it as much in the day time. You've got to be on the night watch to see guests get off the reservation and have ghost dances."
"Do, eh?"
"That's what. Frinstance, there was a tall, thin, kinder sad-looking chap up here about three weeks ago, who was a high roller from 'way back. The very first night he got out on the Bad Lands and came back shouting. It took two porters and all the bell boys to get him upstairs to bed. The next night he went out to a chicken fight and licked a couple of hackmen on the way home. He was pretty warm, I tell you."
"Rather."
"The next night—it was I. A. M.—he came in loaded, as usual. There was a theatrical troupe in town, and two of the actresses were about retiring as he passed up stairs whooping like a lot of Sioux chasing a sutler's wagon. He rapped on the actress's door, and as they wouldn't open it, of course he blew cigarette smoke through the keyhole and yelled fire!"
"Made a panic, didn't it?"
"That's no word for it. Looked like a sheet and pillow case party in an insane asylum. He read the riot act then, but he put up with us, and he could scarcely breathe and spared it somehow. He was a velvet talker as sure as you're born. The night after that he coaxed me into a dice game and skinned a hundred and sixty outer me when I was a win."
"Made his expenses, eh?"
"Exactly. Well, the next morning he came down with his head swollen and his grip packed. He said he hated to leave us, as he'd had such a quiet, pleasant, good sort of time, but duty called him and he must away. So I made out his bill."
"Made it pretty large, too, didn't you?"
"Bout the usual—but what. I handed him his account, and what do you think he did?"
"Can't imagine."
"Why, he said, 'Great Scott! don't make a reduction to clerghymen.'"

DANGERS OF BALLOONING.
H. Hennesquin, of Paris, France, who has had some experience in aerial navigation arrived yesterday from San Francisco on his way home, and during his stay in Chicago called on Mr. Pennington, of fairship fame, at the Grand Pacific Hotel. Mr. Hennesquin was in Fontenay at the time Tinsindier and Gower had their startling adventure in a balloon. The traveler is an intimate friend of Gower, and tells the story of their fall of a mile as the balloonist related it to him.
"They ascended from Tinsindier's house in Paris, and floated off toward Vincennes, and as the wind was somewhat strong from the northwest the two men soon disappeared from the view of Paris, having risen to a height of about 1,500 feet. When they reached Fontenay, however, they were fully 9,000 feet above the earth. They were sailing along smoothly, watching the scenes below, when suddenly they seemed to fall into a hole in the atmosphere and down they went at a terrific rate. Gower glanced at the needle of the vertical scale. It was traveling with lightning speed. A roar filled their ears, and both men thought their time had come. Nothing had happened to the balloon. It was in perfect condition, but there seems to be no air to hold it up. Tinsindier desperately threw out sand-bags. They were falling so rapidly that the bags were left far behind and disappeared above them. The earth seemed to be rushing at them with the speed of a comet. There seemed to be no atmosphere left, and they could scarcely breathe. As a last resort Tinsindier threw over the anchor and the remaining ballast, and the big balloon after a rush of a mile through the air regained its poise, and they were safe. The earth was but fifty feet below. Tinsindier and Gower were rescued by Mr. Hennesquin, "that too much precaution cannot be observed in carrying plenty of ballast. There are in the air occasional rarefactions and when a balloon once gets into one of them it drops like a piece of lead. Gower and Tinsindier sailed into a veritable pit in the air and had they not had lots of ballast aboard they would have been dashed to pieces. If Pennington's heavy airship ever falls into such a pit nothing in creation will prevent it from shooting down to the earth. The result may be imagined."

FAMOUS HARPS.

For years controversy has raged concerning the age of a celebrated harp now in Trinity College, Dublin. The result of an examination by the Hon. Mr. Hennesquin, "that too much precaution cannot be observed in carrying plenty of ballast. A CRITICAL WEEK IN FRANCE.

This has been the most critical week in Paris since the Franco-Prussian war. The real gravity of the situation is becoming better understood now than when the Empress Frederick was actually present. Even Count von Munster, the German Chancellor, is now known to be of the opinion that the Emperor has made a mistake in prolonging her stay. But of course he was powerless to resist. The royal visitor, with the very best intentions in the world, made some blunders which have marked her visit to Versailles as a mistake in prolonging her stay. But of course he was powerless to resist. DECLARATION PROCEEDINGS AT HAMPTON.

Sheriff Freese presided his court at ten o'clock Tuesday morning. There was only a small attendance. R. L. B. Tweedie represented Col. Domville, and Geo. H. Fowler, the minister of finance. The ballot boxes were opened and returns read after an exciting fight. The result was that no one had been made by the deputy. An adjournment was made till two o'clock, while the deputy returning officer, F. L. Fairweather, was communicated with. To a ballot having the largest vote, he objected that gross irregularities and mistakes had been made by officials. He objected to the Rotheys ball because R. O. Stockton's name had been changed from Havelock by the sheriff at Mr. Foster's request. The deputy returned that Mr. Foster already had two representatives—all the law allowed—and that the appointment of Stockton was illegal. To the objections the sheriff paid no attention and said he would declare the man elected having the largest vote. The returns, exclusive of Sussex No. 5, show Foster 1,906, Domville 1,801. Mr. Foster's total majority will be 74. A recount will be demanded before Judge Wedderburn. Some of the ballot boxes were not locked and others, it is said, were not properly sealed.

A HEROIC MOTHER.

A house at Bay Roberts, Newfoundland, occupied by John and George Babcock, was burned a few nights since. The fire originated in the kitchen of the and belonging to John, and the whole down stairs part and the stairs leading to the second floor were in flames before the sleepers had the least warning of danger. Escape by the stairs was cut off, and John, after alarming George, whose end of the house was now on fire, dropped from the second story window to the ground, and his wife passed the children out, going from the window to the sleeping room through the flames until she had all except one when her own night clothing and that of the child she held in her arms took fire, and to save herself she had to jump, still retaining her hold of the babe. She had to leave the remaining child to be burned to death. The heroic mother in leaping from the burning house broke one of her own legs at the knee joint. All the children are more or less injured by the fire, one of them so much that his life is despaired of. Mrs. Babcock passed through the burning house six times, each time bringing a child in her arms.
