House of Commons Debates

FIRST SESSION—TWELFTH PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, February 29, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

REPORT PRESENTED.

First Part of the Report of the Fifth Census of Canada.—Hon. Mr. Burrell.

BIOLOGICAL BOARD OF CANADA.

Hon. J. D. HAZEN (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 118) to create 'The Biological Board of Canada.'

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. HAZEN. This Bill has reference to the work carried on in connection with the biological service. The members of the Biological Board serve without pay and they have been hampered in their work to a considerable extent owing to the system under which the work is now carried on. All supplies and everything of that kind in connection with the different stations have to be ordered by the Department of Marine and Fisheries in the first instance, and these gentleman who are now serving feel that their work is considerably delayed, the season during which the work is carried on being very short. They have not been able to give as good results as they think they could if the system proposed in this Bill were adopted. I took the matter up with the Auditor General and this Bill is the result of a consultation with him. The Bill creates a board to be called 'The Biological Board of Canada' which shall be under the control of the minister. The board shall consist of two members appointed by the minister, one appointed by each of the universities of Dalhousie, Laval, McGill, New Brunswick, Queen's and Toronto, and one to be appointed by each of such other universities (to be named by the minister) as may engage in the work of biological research.

The board shall have charge of all biological stations in Canada, and shall have the conduct and control of investigations of practical and economic problems connected with marine and fresh water fisheries, flora and fauna, and such other work as may be assigned to it by the minister. The board shall meet annually at the city of Ottawa and at such meetings shall elect one member to be chairman and another to be secretary treasurer, who shall hold office until the next annual meeting.

Other meetings of the board shall be held at such places and at such times as are necessary for the work of the board. The board may make by-laws for the conduct of its business, but no by-law shall be in force until it has been approved of by the minister. No member of the board shall receive any payment or emolument for his services, but he shall be repaid all actual, reasonable travelling or other expenses in connection with the work of the board. From the moneys appropriated by parliament for the work of the board which in the present year will amount to $15,000 or which the board may receive through bequest, donation or the sale of specimens of natural history, the secretary treasurer under direction of the board shall expend such sums as are necessary for the work of the board. A detailed statement of the expenses of the board up to the close of the preceding fiscal year shall be prepared annually by the secretary treasurer, and such statement shall be submitted to and be examined by the Auditor General. A report upon the work done by the board shall be made to the minister as soon as possible after the close of each fiscal year.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

MR. F. P. GUTELIUS.

Mr. CARVELL:

1. Has Mr. Frederick Passmore Gutelius been recently appointed to the National Transcontinental Commission?
2. Is Mr. Gutelius a British subject?

Mr. COCHRANE:

1. No.
2. Mr. F. P. Gutelius is a British subject.

DISMISSALS, &c.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. Have any complaints been made against the postmaster of St. Angele de Laval, county of Nicolet?
If so, has an inquiry been ordered in his case?

Mr. PELLETIER:

1. No.
2. Answered by No. 1.

Mr. BOYER:

Is it true that the dismissal of Isidore Chevrier, postmaster at Mount Oscar, M. Daoust, postmaster at Isle Perrot, Sud, and Ophir Legault, postmaster at Isle Perrot, Nord, have been determined on?
2. If so, for what reasons, and by whose request?
3. Will the postmaster have the benefit of an inquiry?

Mr. PELLETIER:

1. No.
2. Answered by No. 1.
3. Answered by No. 1.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. Has Albert Dunn been dismissed from the Public Works Department?
2. Was his case investigated by commissioner Chauvin?
3. What is the report of the commissioner concerning this case?

Mr. MONK:

1. Yes.
2. Yes.
3. The commissioner reports that proof adduced establishes that Albert Dunn was selected as a delegate to the Liberal convention of Ottawa in 1910, for a by-election, and that he participated, as such delegate in the choice of Mr. Auguste Lemieux as a Liberal candidate; that Albert Dunn was again selected as a delegate to the Liberal convention of Ottawa in 1911, but refused to act as such.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax):

1. Was Mr. F. S. Hefferman, of the Customs Service, Springhill, N.S., dismissed from office?
2 If so, for what reason was said dismissal made, and upon whose recommendation?

Mr. REID (Grenville):

1. Yes.
2. Mr. F. S. Hefferman, sub-collector of customs at Spring Hill, was dismissed on account of political partisanship, upon the recommendation of the Minister of Customs, based on the statement of the member for the constituency.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax):

1. Has the preventive officer at Ship Harbour, Halifax county, been removed from office?

Mr. COCHRANE.

2. If so, upon what grounds, and by whose request?

Mr. REID (Grenville):

1 and 2. Mr. G. A. Mosher, acting preventive officer of customs at Ship Harbour, Nova Scotia, has not been dismissed.

Mr. CARVELL:

Has any member of the House of Commons applied for the position of superintendent of the Intercolonial railway, vice Mr. Dubé, dismissed? If so, what is his name?

Mr. COCHRANE:

The department has no information.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. Have any dismissals been made lately at the Montreal Customs House?
2. If so, what are the names of officials so dismissed, and the causes of their dismissal?

Mr. REID (Grenville):

1 and 2. Several officials at the Montreal Customs House have lately been granted leave of absence, with pay, until July 1, next, when their services are to be dispensed with, on account of their age and inability to perform the work required of them. Their names are:—Edmond Beauvais, Ferdinand Carbonneau, Flavien N. Cauchon, A. Constant, Louis H. Lafleur, S. Z. Leboeuf, H. Lusignan, H. Renaud, Michael M. Scleater, John Stinson, F. A. St. Laurent, Louis St. Martin, Ludger Ste. Marie, T. H. Turton, Joseph H. Therrien.

MILITIA TOURING CARS.

* Mr. MURPHY:

1. Has the Department of Militia and Defence given an order for twelve touring cars to the Ford Motor Company?
2. If so, what will be the total cost of the twelve cars?
3. Were tenders invited for the said cars? If so, who were the tenderers, and what was the total amount of each tender?
4. For what purpose are the said touring cars to be used, and by whom?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria):

1. Yes.
2. $11,419.20.
3. No. The department bought the cheapest and most suitable car on the market.
4. By officers commanding and staff of divisions and districts, for inspection duties of local armouries, regiments, and cadet corps organization, thus reducing the cost of these inspections by half and increasing the efficiency doubly.

MONTREAL MILITARY SCHOOL.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. Does the government intend to build a military school on the island of Montreal?
2. If so, on what part of the island of Montreal will it be built?

3. Is the site purchased, and at what price?
4. Who was the owner of it?
5. Who was the agent who would be employed to purchase the site?
6. Were the military authorities of Montreal consulted?
7. What commission has been or will be paid to the agent?
8. Has the agent who sold the site acted in the name of the owner or of a person who lent his name for the purpose??

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria):

This matter is under consideration.

CONTRACT FOR TIES.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. Has the Minister of Railways and Canals given any contract for ties at Sayabec, county of Rimouski? If so, what is the name of the contractor?
2. What is the amount of said contract, if any?
3. Have tenders been called for?

Mr. COCHRANE:

1. Yes. Edouard Smith and Hedwidge Boulay.
2. Edouard Smith, 10,000 cedar ties at 35 cents each. Hedwidge Boulay, 10,000 cedar ties at 35 cents each.
3. Yes. Tenders were called on August 5, 1911, by newspaper and poster advertisement.

COMMERCIAL AGENT IN FRANCE.

Mr. LEMIEUX

Is it the intention of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to appoint a commercial agent in France to succeed to Mr. Anatole Poindron?

Mr. FOSTER (Toronto North). To the question of the hon. member the answer of the Minister of Trade and Commerce is: no.

MAGDALEN ISLANDS NEWS SERVICE.

Mr. HAZEN. The day before yesterday my hon. friend from Rouville (Mr. Lemieux) asked a question with regard to a wireless news service for the Magdalen Islands, and I promised to obtain some information regarding it. I have now the information, and, if in order, I may say that the Department of Naval Service last year erected a wireless station on the Magdalen Islands, so as to establish communication with Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia, and also to put these Islands in communication with passing ships and with the various stations in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. This station is being operated for the department by the Marconi Wireless Telegraph Company of Canada under the same agreement which regulates the operation of other wireless stations in that district. The hon. Postmaster General lately made arrangements to have a weekly news letter officially prepared for transmission to the Magdalen Islands, and this letter, which will be composed of about 1,000 words, will be forwarded each week via wireless station at Pictou and at the Magdalen Islands, so as to be available for communication at the Islands on each Sunday. The first message sent last week, consisting of 1,738 words, was received at Pictou at 3 p.m. on Friday, February 23, and had been transmitted to the Magdalen Islands station at 6.30 p.m. of the same day. The hon. the Postmaster General could, no doubt, furnish further details of this service.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Perhaps my hon. friend the Postmaster General will state who prepares the letter, and what is the nature of it.

Mr. PELLETIER. The letter is not going to be a political letter, if that is what my hon. friend fears. A newspaper man in Quebec will prepare it. It will consist of a summary of the most important events which have taken place during the week, political and otherwise, but will contain nothing from a party point of view. It will be a simple news service for the public at large. The Islands have been for years, as my hon. friend knows, without any means of communication with the outside world for five or six months of the year, and this service is considered to be a boon to them. The news letter will be read to them from the pulpits of the Catholic churches every Sunday.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. PELLETIER moved that the House go into Committee of the Whole to-morrow to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to amend the Civil Service Act by providing that assistant postmasters in post offices in which the postage collections exceed $1,000,000 may be paid a minimum salary of $2,800, with annual increases of $100 up to a maximum salary of $3,500, and that, if the Governor in Council so determines, such provision may be made applicable to assistant postmasters appointed prior to the first day of April, 1912?

Motion agreed to.

THE GRAIN ACT.

House in committee on Bill (No. 32) respecting grain.—Mr. Foster (North Toronto).

On sec. 123.—Terminal, Public and Hospital elevators.

Mr. FOSTER. (North Toronto) We had some discussion in the committee with reference to clause 123, and several amendments and suggestions were made. As a consequence I have redrafted the clause, and I will read it to the House as I propose to substitute it for the one in the Bill. The first subsection reads as follows in the old clause:

No person owning, managing, operating or otherwise interested in any terminal elevator shall buy or sell grain at any point in the eastern or western inspection division.

2. Subsection 1 hereof shall not apply to any person who owns, manages, operates or is otherwise interested in any terminal elevator.

That is the same as it is in the old section.

(a) Which, with the approval of the Governor in Council, has been leased to the board for operation, or has been leased to any person for operation with the approval of the board, or is managed and operated by persons approved of by the board;—or

That is in substance the same as the subsection in the old clause.

(b) Which is used or operated in connection with any flour mill situate at the same terminal point as such elevator, provided, however, that such elevator shall be subject to such restrictions and regulations as are imposed by the board with the approval of the Governor in Council.

That is the same as in the old clause.

3. Subsection 1 of this section shall not apply to any person by reason only of the fact that he is an owner or holder of stock or shares in a railway company which owns or operates a terminal elevator which does not as a business buy or sell grain.

4. If the person mentioned in subsection 2 hereof owns, manages, operates, or is otherwise interested, in any terminal elevator other than a terminal elevator or elevators coming under the provisions of subsection 2 hereof, he shall not be exempt from the provisions of subsection 1 hereof.

That I think meets the suggestion which was made, and some of the objections which were made, and seems to be a reasonable arrangement as far as I can see.

Mr. McCRANEY. Does the section, as it is now framed, meet the objections which were raised by the member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) and which impressed some of us on this side of the House?

Mr. FOSTER. (North Toronto) I do not just remember at the present time what the objection raised by the member for Portage la Prairie was, but I have had the good offices of that hon. gentleman, in conjunction with the member for Brandon, (Mr. Aikins) in framing this clause. I think I may say that it does meet his views.

Mr. OLIVER. I think we may take it for granted that subsection 4 as suggested, covers the point that was intended to be covered by a part of the amendment that was offered by this side of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. (North Toronto) Yes, that is the intention.

Mr. OLIVER. We may also assume that subsection 3 covers the point that was intended to be covered by a suggestion from this side of the House?

Mr. FOSTER. (North Toronto) That is correct.

Mr. OLIVER. There still remains the fact that there is a part of subsection 1 that is the last provision in the subsection 2, that was not included in the amendment offered from this side of the House, and is considered objectionable by some hon. gentlemen around me.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). What is that?

Mr. OLIVER. The words, 'or which is managed and operated by persons approved by the board.' That is considered to be leaving a measure of responsibility on the board that is not in accordance with the intent of the section. I am quite aware that these words were introduced in the Senate last session, and are embodied in Bill 'Q' but they were added to an amendment that was placed before the Senate, and in my judgment, and in the judgment of some of our friends here, they nullify the effect of the previous part of subsection 1. We would therefore, object to the insertion of those words, and we would desire the insertion of the word 'public' in the first part of the section, so that the prohibition would apply to public as well as to terminal elevators, and the exception would not apply to persons owning and operating elevators, who might be approved by the board. I would be willing to accept my hon. friends view that the operators of public elevators in the eastern inspection division need not be included, but I would very strongly urge that public elevators in the western inspection division, should be under the same restrictions as terminal elevators.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). My hon. friend discussed both those points in the committee before.

Mr. OLIVER. The one in regard to public elevators, but not the other provision.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I think we debated the question pro, and con, and I do not see that it is possible to embody the views of my hon. friend in this clause. I think that this section, taken as a whole, makes as drastic legislation as is necessary for the attainment of the object in view, and as is advisable for this parliament to enact.

Mr. KNOWLES. There are certain amendments we would like to move, but it is impossible to frame the necessary amendments at such short notice. Therefore, I would ask that the Bill again be allowed to stand.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I do not want hon. gentlemen opposite to ask that the Bill again stand. We can pass the measure now, and these amendments can be moved formally just as well, and I think better on the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. KNOWLES. I would be quite willing to concur in the minister's suggestion if I could, but there are certain facilities granted to us in committee which we would not enjoy when the third reading of the Bill was moved, and we propose to take advantage of them. I submit that at this moment, we cannot be reasonably asked in so short a time, to study matters out now and frame the amendments which we think are necessary. If the amendments proposed by the minister had been placed in the hands of the member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) a few hours ahead, it would have been different.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Although the hon. gentleman says this is new matter, it does not seem to me so. Three-quarters of it is exactly the same as was in section 123, and what remains of it is chiefly suggestions made by my hon. friend himself. I went carefully over the verbiage, and it seems all that is necessary to carry out the idea. The clause as a whole does not carry out the idea of hon. gentlemen opposite, I quite agree. But it seems to me that, when we have been nearly three weeks on this Bill, and as we are anxious to get it before the Senate as soon as possible—it will probably take some time there—the views of hon. gentlemen might well be submitted on the third reading, supported by their speeches, if they wish.

Mr. OLIVER. I think it fair to say, following what was said by my hon. friend from Moosejaw (Mr. Knowles), that, even if this were merely a question of re-adjustment of such an important clause as this, an intricate and difficult clause, had the hon. minister intended to push the discussion through to-day, it would seem only fair that hon. members on this side should have had previous notice, so that we could have framed our amendments. However, we are willing to waive that if a little delay is granted. Some other clause might be taken up, and in the meantime we will frame amendments, so that our views may be placed before the committee.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Then, we will let that section stand. That is reasonable.

Mr. McCRANEY. I see my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen), in his place, I understand from the Minister of Trade and Commerce that his new amendment has been submitted to my hon. friend. I was impressed with his (Mr. Meighen's), argument the other night, that neither the section in the Bill, nor the amendment proposed at that time by my hon. friend from Moosejaw would be sufficient to prevent individuals as holders of stock in companies, from being interested in the terminal elevators, and also in the country elevators. As he has been through this Bill, I would like to ask him if he is satisfied that the amendment of the minister gets over the objection that he then raised?

Mr. MEIGHEN. The minister has not discussed that phase with me at all. Answering the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. McCraney), frankly I think this amendment does not get over the difficulty but that the objection still remains. This much can be said, that the section as is is now proposed, places obstacles in the way of evading the intention of the section. But these obstacles can be overcome.

Mr. McCRANEY. I think the hon. gentleman is correct in his view. It is clear then, that there is only one way of getting over the difficulty which section 123 is intended to meet, and that is by carrying out the announced policy of the government to take over the terminal elevators. If the government did this terminal elevator business, there would be no danger of the same parties being interested in terminal elevators and in country elevators.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. This clause stands.

On section 133—delivery of grain on return of receipt,

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). This is a section that we discussed and decided to divide into two subsections. Subsection 1 has been passed already. It refers to the loading out at the terminals into vessels. Subsection 2 refers to loading out from the terminals into cars. Hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House, I suppose, are fairly familiar with the situation at Fort William and Port Arthur and with the questions that arise there regarding the speedy and reasonable transport to the east after the season of navigation closes. The intention of the subsection will best be explained by reading it:

Subsection 1 shall apply to the delivery of grain to cars upon the return of any terminal warehouse receipt, provided, however, that the owner of such receipt of the terminal elevator warehouseman shall make demand in writing upon the company to place the necessary number of cars upon the elevator track. Should such demand not be complied with within the said twenty four hours, the owner or warehouseman may apply to the board——

That is the Board of Grain Commissioners —who shall thereupon investigate the case. If upon investigation it is found that the railway company is not using due diligence in providing such number of cars as can be reasonably transported, the board shall thereupon so notify the company. Should the company fail to comply forthwith, the board may make application to the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada who shall investigate the complaint and may order the company to forthwith provide the cars deemed reasonable by the board. In case the number of cars ordered by the board of Railway Commissioners is not so furnished, the company shall be responsible for the charges for such extra storage as are fixed by the Railway Board and shall upon demand pay such charges to the board which shall thereupon pay them to the owners of the terminal elevator receipt. The board shall make such regulations for application for and delivery of cars as seem necessary.

The modus operandi intended to be laid down in that subsection is this: If at Fort William demands are made for the transport of grain and the receipts surrendered, the railway company is to comply with these demands, or say whether it will not. If it does not comply with these demands within twenty-four hours, the owners of the receipt can apply to the Board of Grain Commissioners, who will investigate the complaint and decide whether in their opinion there is reasonable ground for complaint or not, then they shall notify the railway authorities. If the railway authorities will not comply with the notification of the board, then the board is to submit the matter to the Board of Railway Commissioners.

The Board of Railway Commissioners then takes up the question and investigates it, and if it considers that the railway company has not done its duty, it makes an order as to what the railway company is to do and notifies the railway company of that order. Then if the railway company does not carry out the order, it is responsible for the storage on all grain in the warehouses which could have been moved if the reasonable number of cars for transport had been provided. Provision is made by which these charges shall be collected and paid over to the parties who own the receipts. Then the Board of Grain Commissioners is to make regulations as to the orderly and proportional application for cars and their just distribution. I think this is as plain as I can make it.

Now that does not go so far as a section of those interested in the grain trade would like to have it go. The situation is peculiar in this respect, that some elevators are owned by the Canadian Pacific railway itself, and others are connected with the Canadian Pacific railway directly and are run in connection with it. Others are in part belonging to other railway companies, and to elevator companies, or to parties who have no railways and no connection with railways. The situation is complicated by these different conditions. It is therefore, a rather difficult position to handle to the satisfaction of all. If you made the law such that whenever a warehouse certificate was surrendered, and demands were made on the railway for cars, or for haulage power to take them out, then it is easily seen that, with millions of bushels in store, demands could be made on the one railway which was to do the hauling out, which would be absolutely impossible to fulfil; and if the storage were then to cease, that would be a definite and easy method of escaping storage charges on the part of the owners of the grain. As the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has its own great system of railway, from Fort William east, owns the trackage, has millions of bushels of grain in its elevators and on its transit lines, naturally enough it wishes to carry its own peculiar traffic first. It is not, we will say, able even to carry that; it is, therefore, considered to be, and I think reasonably, an injustice to make the Canadian Pacific railway chargeable with the storage of all grain in the elevators, the receipts of which in the terminals have been surrendered, and for which transit has been demanded. Naturally enough they would like to carry their own first. The demand that this shall apply equally to all the elevators, and that the storage charges shall be placed upon the one railway if they are not all carried out after a certain time, would result I think in an injustice under the conditions as they at present exist. If each railway had its independent line of trackage towards the east, then each could take care of the grain freights which particularly belong to its line or to the elevators in connection with its lines. Trouble arises because there are three railways which come down to that point, and then only one which leads out from that point towards the east. So these things have to be taken into consideration.

On the other hand, we have a Railway Act and a Board of Railway Commissioners acting in consonance with that Act and under its provisions, and there is provision made in that for the acceptance of traffic and for the acceptance of interchangeable traffic from one road to another which is being administered by the Railway Board. This section, if made into law, will facilitate the action of the Railway Board, while not assuming to this Act and to the Board under this Act, any of the authority which belongs to the Railway Commissioners under the Railway Act. They are the commissioners whose business it is to regulate, and in order to regulate fairly, they must have the best knowledge of all the conditions. They are the ones to whom the matter is in this section ultimately referred. But it becomes a quick and easy way, in the first place, of avoiding disputes, and in the second place, if there be disputes, of carrying them to a quick fulfillment. If the Grain Board intervenes and has to make an examination, then it will convey its views to the railway company, and if its views are not met, it will carry it at once to the Railway Commission and ask the Railway Commission to act. That is the most reasonable way of settling the difficulty partially, for it will never be settled wholly until we have more lines of exit out. It is at least a reasonable method, and without over drastic or too arbitrary legislation.

Mr. OLIVER. Do I understand the minister's statement is an explanation of the amendment as he moved it the other day, without change, or is he moving an amendment to that amendment which he moved the other day?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I am moving an amendment to subsection 2 of section 133.

Mr. OLIVER. As it appears in 'Hansard'?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I think there are some slight changes.

Mr. OLIVER. I would like to have a note of those changes before we leave consideration of the amendment.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The first part of it is even with the first part of subsection 2. The first amendment is to change the expression in the old clause:

If upon investigation it is found that the railway company is not using due diligence in providing a reasonable number of cars.

If upon investigation it is found that the railway company is not using due diligence in providing such number of cars as can be reasonably transported.

The first amendment seemed faulty in that it dealt only with the providing of cars. The purpose of the ordering of cars is not simply to have them loaded and lie there as storehouses, but to have them loaded and transported, and so I include the transporting of the cars as well as the providing. Then it proceeds:

Should the company fail to comply forthwith the board may make application to the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada——

That is the same as in the old. Then directly after that:

—who shall investigate the complaint and may order the company to forthwith provide the cars deemed reasonable by the board.

That is by the Board of Railway Commissioners. In the last sentence no change is made, except that in the former amendment the extra storage charge was to be fixed by the Board of Grain Commissioners. In this one, it is to be fixed by the Railway Board, that is the Railway Board has the whole investigation and the final authorizing of the instructions. It was thought to be better to leave this matter of the storage compensation or refund, with that same board.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I think I have grasped the prinicple by which the minister hopes to regulate the question of storage at terminals. With what study I have been able to give it, I am disposed to disagree with the method adopted. It appears to me, that it will lay the burden of proof on those who are least able to carry it, that is those who will have to prove that there has not been a due provision of cars will not be in a position to prove their cases, for the reason that to secure evidence they would have to go into the camp of the enemy, which they cannot do. I know the difficulty is complicated by the two sets of operators concerned, that is to say, the Canadian Pacific railway company, which alone has an outlet from Fort William and Port Arthur, and the other companies which have no connection with the east. The terminal elevator companies who are simply storing grain, and who have no control in any way over the railways, are in a somewhat different position from the railway companies, who, themselves, operate elevators. If the amendment is carried then, as I understand, if a shipper of grain desires that the whole, or any part of his lot of grain shall be sent east, he immediately surrenders his warehouse receipts and hands the bill of lading to the owner of the terminal elevator. Under the proposed amendments, the storage charge will not then cease, but it will cease only when the cars necessary to carry out the order of the shipper, are actually provided which may be a week or may be a longer time, after the bill of lading is placed in the hands of the terminal elevator owner. If the owner of the grain considers that his demand for cars has not been reasonably complied with he has an appeal to the Board of Elevator Commissioners, who make an order if they deem the evidence produced is satisfactory. That order practically passes into the hands of the Railway Commission for enforcement, unless it is immediately obeyed by the railway company. The position will then be, that an owner of grain wishing to ship it out of a terminal elevator who deems himself unjustly dealt with, (and these cases will be and have been very numerous), is compelled to go into the offices of the railway company to get his evidence in order to prove to the Board of Railway Commissioners that the railway company has not reasonably complied with his demand. It appears to me it would be better to commence the other way, and to shift the burden of proof to the other foot, to say to the railway company owning an elevator: Until you show to the Board of Railway Commissioners that you have reasonably satisfied the demand for cars under the circumstances, you shall be entitled to no storage, beyond the time of actual instructions, that is beyond the 24 hours after the bill of lading is placed in your hands. No doubt, as the minister has said, the parties interested will raise the objection that this puts into the hands of the shipper an opportunity to be unreasonable, and always throws the burden of proof on the company, that shipper who desires to avoid paying storage for a large amount of grain can make an unreasonable and sudden demand on the railway company and insist that cars be provided for shipment. But in proportion as such a demand might be unreasonable and sudden, so would it be easy for the railway company to prove its case, before the Board of Railway Commissioners, and in the meantime they would lose nothing; it is not as if they were losing a lien and the probable cost of recovery, because the consignees and owners of these large storages of grain are responsible parties in every case.

The grain will not be far, and the shippers will be at hand and can be recovered from long after they can have made their appeal to the board, and prove their case. My point briefly is: That I think it would be better to put the burden on the company, because the company is in a better position from the nature of the case to discharge that burden and they can more quickly and more easily discharge it if the right is on their side. And if the burden is there, what is going to be the result as far as the public is concerned? It is going to make the railway company, by reason of the fact that the obstacles were in their way, and they had to prove the case, it is going to make them pay more attention to the quick despatch of the grain. I know that the argument I have advanced has not quite as much application to the case of companies who have no control whatever over railway transport, but it appears to me, that with an alteration it can be made to apply there, and still place the burden on the railway company in case these companies place the instructions in the bill of lading, to prove, before they can charge storage on the twenty-four hours after the instructions, that they have not been negligent, that they have under all the circumstances complied reasonably with the demand. It appears to me we are fast reaching a point when the application of the principle I argue for shall be further applied than even to the case of railway terminals. Out in western Canada, as we have heard almost ad nauseam in this House, the congestion is such, and the railways are so far failing to meet the demand for shipment, that it appears to me we are going to get better results if a heavier burden is put on the companies than at present exists, and that they will be compelled under reasonable conditions, to show—after the farmer proved that he was in a position to load a car and was in a position to live up to his end of the transaction—that they did all that could reasonably be asked of them to meet his demand, and that until they discharge that burden they shall be compelled to pay him a demurrage after a reasonable time has elapsed. I do not make any pretence of stating how that principle should be applied or to what extent, but I merely say that in addition to its application at the terminals, where I think it should be applied now, we are approaching the time when something of the same kind of method must be adopted in the actual loading and shipment of cars from western Canada. To come back again to the case of the terminal elevators, it must be remembered that the terminal elevator charges to-day are on a very remunerative basis, so far as an outsider can judge, relatively to the charges at transfer and public elevators. They charge three-quarters of a cent, no matter how long the grain is in the elevator, and if we take it by the month their average charges are about four times the charges in the eastern elevators. I understand, although I am not in a position to state it authoritatively, that at the eastern elevators the principle I have been arguing for to be applied here, does obtain, and that storage does cease twenty-four hours after the bill of lading is in the hands of the company. However, whether it does or not, I maintain it should, and that in the long run we will get better results and will add greatly to the facility with which grain is handled, and to the quickness of its despatch by the companies, if we put the burden of proof where it should be and where it can, if right is on their side, be most equitably discharged.

Mr. OLIVER. The amendment as first proposed by the minister was somewhat complicated but still I think it is possible to follow it through. The amendments presented to-day, while I do not suppose they make very serious changes in the purport, make it still more difficult for the ordinary member to follow the sections. I have been very much impressed by the argument of my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen). If the section, as amended has the effect that he understands it to have, I would be strongly inclined to support his proposal to amend it on the lines he suggests. But I think it would be in order for my hon. friend himself to prepare some form of words that would convey the idea that he has expressed in such manner as we may have it before us and see just how far it reaches.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I did not know that this section was coming up and I think it makes quite a reversal of the amendment as proposed. I would be very glad to do what my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) asks, especially if it should meet the approval of the minister, but in any case, if I had time, I would do so in order that the two subsections could be placed at issue clearly.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not wish to commit myself either for or against the suggestions my hon. friend has made, but there seems to be such importance in them that I think it would be fair if they were put before us so that we could realize what their effect would be. I was under the impression that the amendment, as printed in 'Hansard', while it arrived at it by a circuitous method, really had the ultimate effect that the storage ceased either at the time or at twenty-four hours after the grain was ordered out.

Mr. FOSTER. (North Toronto) That is not correct.

Mr. OLIVER. In the amendment as first introduced was there not a fixed time at which storage would cease after the order was given ?

Mr. FOSTER. (North Toronto) Both amendments are alike in that the matter was ultimately referred, unless the views of the Grain Commission prevailed. The Grain Commission looked into the whole matter, and if they had judged that the railway company was in default of a reasonable provision, the Board of Grain Commissioners could fix the reasonable rate of storage at their own discretion, after taking all the circumstances into consideration. There was no fixed limit. In this, the only change made is to put that duty upon the Board of Railway Commissioners or rather than upon the Board of Grain Commissioners. With reference to what my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie has said, I want to state that this question is a very difficult question from more points than one, and it is especially made difficult because of the peculiar conditions which to-day and for some time to come must prevail at Fort William. I think that the question of storage is involved in what will become the final settlement of the whole question and for some reasons I would rather approach it from that side than from the other or from both sides combined.

But that is a matter which I cannot undertake at the present session, and which depends upon other things before we can fairly undertake it. The question of storage rates is one which would be within the discretion of the Grain Commission in conjunction with the Governor in Council. I do not possess the information, neither does the government nor I suppose any other person, which is necessary to an opinion on that question. After the most careful thought that I can give to the matter, and having regard to all the circumstances of the situation, this measure, while not a complete solution, seems to be the only step towards a solution which it is possible for me to take at the present time. It does not fulfil all the wishes of great interests in the grain trade. It may be that it does not fulfil the desires of the transport companies or of the warehousemen, but it is a step in the solution of the question which will, if there is a grievance, give relief, and which, if there is no grievance, will of course leave things as they are. With regard to the question of transport, in the conditions prevailing at Fort William, the Canadian Pacific railway is doing all that is physically possible. I think all reasonable men would say that it has done its share towards a solution of the question under present conditions. Things physically impossible cannot be done by the Canadian Pacific railway any more than by individuals or other corporations, and it is never considered reasonable to ask an individual or a corporation to do what it is physically impossible for it to do. The circumstances of the situation have to be taken into account. With reference to the storage conditions and the storage charges, these concern a question by itself, but at terminal points this question is clearly connected with the question of transportation and may be an important factor in arriving at the final solution.

Mr. OLIVER. Unless we can have the advantage of the assistance of my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) in drafting an amendment which would convey the ideas he has expressed for the consideration of the committee, I would not feel like delaying the clause on my own account, as I do not feel competent to frame such an amendment. I judge from the remarks of the minister that he is impressed with this question of the grain trade as a matter of transportation and storage; but I would like to impress upon his mind that it is not a question of transportation and storage except as leading up to sale and consumption, and that, in order that the sale may take place as negotiated, it is necessary that the goods shall be forwarded in accordance with the arrangement made. So that it is in the last degree important for the carrying on of the trade that when a dealer makes a sale for delivery within a certain time—and the buyer must always buy expecting delivery within a certain time—that delivery shall be made within that time; in other words, when a car is ordered out it is essential to the carrying on of business, assuming the car to have been ordered in good faith, as the result of a sale having been made by the owner and shipper of the grain, that the car shall be furnished, so that the grain may go forward and the transaction be closed out. Admitting difficulties on the part of the railway companies, and the impossibility, under certain conditions, of their supplying cars, the suggestion of my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie seemed to me to be absolutely fair. He said: From the fact that we wish the cars to go forward, it does not follow that the railway company will necessarily have to lose the storage; but it does follow that it will be for the railway company to show cause why the cars do not go forward. It seems to me that is a contention which it is very difficult to overcome, for the reason he gives, that the shipper is not in a position to bring evidence on his side of the case before the Railway Commission. I would like my hon. friend to frame an amendment that would convey the idea that he has in mind, so that at any rate, we would have it for full consideration and discussion. The principle is important, but the actual practice is also important. The amendment is difficult to follow, and it is made more difficult by the amendments of to-day. A new line of thought has been brought to bear on the question, and it is difficult for the ordinary member to appreciate the situation, unless he sees this new line of thought in black and white.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). My hon. friend said that there was something anterior to and in importance over and above storage charges and transport; that was, the sale in the first place, and the delivery in the second place. That is very true, and the seller, if he undertakes in a definite way to deliver at a definite time and under certain conditions to the purchaser, is in duty bound to do it, but between the seller at the other end and the other man, the consignee of the grain, there are uncertainties and contingencies. I do not know what kind of contract the seller makes with the purchaser, or the purchaser with the seller, when he buys the wheat and it is shipped out in his car en route to the ultimate market, we will say to Great Britain. Does he guarantee to the purchaser that it shall be delivered at a certain time?

Mr. MEIGHEN. On or before a certain time.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). On or before a certain time. Then he practically has to protect himself by taking into account all difficulties and contingencies on the road between the point of shipment and the ultimate point, and one of those contingencies, which is a contingency which is well known, is the situation of storage and transport at Fort William.

Mr. OLIVER. My point is not the interest of the shipper, it is the condition of the ultimate buyer who buys that grain expecting to receive it at a certain time. If he does not receive it as he expects to receive it, and if that condition becomes frequent, he goes to another market for his grain, and the consequence is injurious to our production all along the line.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). That is all very well as an argument for having the means of communication as direct, and as little liable to incident and contingency as possible; but under our conditions, as between the seller yonder and the ultimate purchaser, there can be no hard and fast contract, because a man in his senses would not make it. He thinks he will get it there at a certain time. He might contract to get it there at a certain time, and be under penalty if he does not get it there; but I do not think any purchaser makes a transaction in which he does not himself admit the contingencies which lie between him and the ultimate delivery of the grain. With reference to what my hon. friend (Mr. Meighen), said, I think his position is somewhat mitigated by this consideration: Looking at it just in the light of a legal transaction, we will say that it puts a great burden upon the possessor of the warehouse receipt at Fort William to gather up the evidence to present to the commission, and so to prove his case. It would, if the case were carried into a court of law, and exact evidence was demanded over a long period and with reference to a large number of considerations. But we must remember that the Grain Commission is right there. The Grain Commission has the whole situation under its purview, so to speak, and it is not a difficult thing it seems to me—I do not know how the board would work it out, but it does not seem to me to be a difficult thing—for the would-be shipper to make a case before the Grain Commission, nor a very difficult or tedious thing for them to come to a conclusion in the premises. That, I think, mitigates somewhat the objection that the burden of proof should be placed upon the company rather than upon the would-be shipper. The Grain Commission has this whole matter in charge and under purview, which I thought would make it comparatively easy to have a final judgment in reference to each case as it comes up. I do not imagine that very many cases will come up—they might or they might not—in which the final judgment would have to be made by the Board of Railway Commissioners. If you grant that the company wants to afford all that it possibly can, and that the Railway Board is there to see that a reasonable distribution is made, you have a condition of things which will work for the minimum of disputes, and for the maximum of fair carriage.

Mr. OLIVER. How would the fact that some of the elevators are not owned by the railroads and some of them are, work out in practice? Would there be a possibility of the railway company favouring their own elevators in the delivery of cars, assuming that the railway company is a human institution and subject to the frailties of human nature? How would the condition be affected, as between the outside warehouse and the railway company elevator, assuming the conditions of human frailty which, with all deference, I have suggested? Does not that make for strength in the suggestion of my hon. friend that the burden of proof should be on the railway? Does it not add strength to his suggestion as to the difficulty of producing that evidence before the railway company by the warehouseman?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). We have provided a piece of machinery for that, as my hon. friend will see if he looks at the last clause of the amendment:

> The board shall make such regulations for application for and furnishing of cars as may seem necessary.

The board being on the spot makes regulations which govern that matter.

Mr. OLIVER. But this is when the regulations are not being actually lived up to, or where the warehouseman believes they are not being lived up to, and it becomes a question of evidence before the Railway Commission. Then the railway company, as my hon. friend has suggested, has all the evidence, and the warehouse that is disconnected from the railway has none.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I think that in this case the Board of Grain Commissioners would have all the evidence as to the application for, and the distribution of, cars, because they make the regulations which shall govern the application.

Mr. OLIVER. But not as to the possibility of the railway company furnishing the cars, which, after all, is the final argument.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). It is, but I imagine to men who understand railway conditions, when they get at about what is the condition of a road and what are the reasonable requirements that may be made, they get at it as all people get at evidence from long knowledge of, and great familiarity with, the situation. It is difficult with us. We have a thousand and one different things to do, and we put our minds on one thing for an hour and then we go to something else, therefore it becomes very difficult for us to deal in such a way. But constant familiarity with such things produces a capacity for forming judgment and getting at conclusions which, as my hon. friend knows, are sometimes really wonderful. We must not judge the difficulties in the way of the Railway Commission from our own more limited experience and acquaintanceship with these matters.

Mr. OLIVER. Might I interject one word here which is hardly connected with this clause. I want to point out that at the last discussion on this Bill, when we were considering the question of car distribution, the question arose, I think, about the power of the Grain Commissioners to order the railway companies to furnish cars. I then took the point that the Board of Grain Commissioners had not that power. I judge now from the terms of this amendment that, as a matter of fact, the Board of Grain Commissioners has not that power, but that it is vested in the Railway Commission.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I do not think we can mix up our executive power under the Grain Act with the executive power which is delegated to the Board of Railway Commissioners as a body of experts with advantage to both, and in the matter of the general distribution of cars it has to be governed, I think, by the Railway Board rather than by the Board of Grain Commissioners.

Section agreed to.

Mr. OLIVER. We are now ready to take up section 123, if the minister desires to do so.

On section 123, buying and selling of grain by owners, etc., of terminal elevators.

Mr. KNOWLES. I move to add the words 'public or' after the word 'any' This will make it read:

> No person owning, managing, operating or otherwise interested in any public or terminal elevator shall buy or sell grain at any point in the western division.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I do not know that my hon. friends wish me to undertake an argument against this. We had some talk about it, and in my imperfect way I placed before the committee the views of the government. While I would like to meet the wish of hon. gentlemen opposite, I am obliged to differ with them in this case. If hon. members have any new light or new arguments, I am still open to be convinced.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know that we should delay the committee on this question. We explained the matter to the hon. minister the other day, and if the truth did not convince him then, we can hardly expect that it will now.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. KNOWLES. I suppose it would be entered in the proceedings as 'Lost' on division and so save taking a vote.

Mr. FOSTER. (North Toronto). Yes, so far as you can take a vote in committee.

Mr. KNOWLES. I think we have a majority, anyway.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). But majorities should never be oppressive.

Mr. KNOWLES. We had some discussion, in which my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) took part, as to whether it was possible to amend this Bill in such a way as to prevent subsidiary companies or other means of evasion being employed. I would like to move to amend this section so as to read:

No person owning, managing, operating or in any way interested in a terminal elevator shall buy or sell or be in any way interested in the buying or selling of grain at any point in the western inspection division.

I think that in this way we cover, or at least come a great deal nearer to completely covering and providing against, all the means that the ordinary mind might invent of evading this clause. When we provide in the first line 'no person owning, managing, operating or in any way interested in a terminal elevator,' that would cover any person who was a shareholder in any company that owned, managed or operated such an elevator. Now, what we need is to make it equally tight and fast at the other end, and so I propose to add 'or in any way interested in the buying or selling of grain.' I think that would cover the holding of stock in any subsidiary company engaged in this business.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I regret that the energy of my hon. friend from Moosejaw (Mr. Knowles) has been employed to so little effect. I cannot see that his amendment will go any further towards meeting the objection than does the section as it stands. And, as I stated when the subject was under discussion before, I do not think that difficulty can be overcome without creating a confusion that would be worse than the present state of affairs. The hon. member's amendment means that no person who deals in any way in grain, or is directly or indirectly interested in dealing in grain, shall be interested directly or indirectly in the handling of grain at a terminal elevator. That, to my mind, is already done by section 123 as it stands. But that does not stop the means of evasion. Take the same illustration that I used before. Five men, A, B, C, D and E, desire to deal in grain and also to act as operators of an elevator. They form two companies, a storage company and a grain company. Now, even under my hon. friend's amendment, these five men can through one company deal in grain and through the other deal in storage. None of these men could do both these things, but they can hold stock in two companies, one of which does one thing and the other of which does the other. Why? Because the grain company is not interested in the storage company, nor is the storage company interested in the grain company.

Mr. KNOWLES. But A, B, C, D and E would be interested, as shareholders in both companies, in carrying on both these things.

Mr. MEIGHEN. But A, B and C are stopped, and must sit quietly at home, while the grain company is not stopped.

Mr. KNOWLES. But you can penalize them for being interested in that company.

Mr. MEIGHEN. You cannot penalize them when there is no guilt. The grain company is not interested directly or indirectly in the storage company. Because the grain company has shareholders, who are also shareholders in the storage company, you can not say that the grain company is interested in the storage company. The storage company might go into liquidation, and the grain company would not be affected. They are utterly distinct corporations in the eyes of the law.

Mr. KNOWLES. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that if the law says a man shall not be interested in the two companies, that that law is not intra vires?

Mr. MEIGHEN. My hon. friend does not say that.

Mr. KNOWLES. That is exactly what I say.

Mr. MEIGHEN. If he is, he cannot deal in grain.

Mr. KNOWLES. He cannot be interested in buying or selling it.

Mr. MEIGHEN. He canot deal in grain, that is quite true. But would my hon. friend say that a man could not be interested in two such companies?

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Then he is going much further than his amendment goes. I for one, would not be a party to such legislation, if I could help it. Look at the confusion it would land us in. But let me point out that the hon. gentleman's amendment does not go that far. His amendment says that no person who is interested in any sense whatever in the one shall be interested in any sense whatever in the other; that is to say, that no person if he is so interested, can deal in grain. But the company can do it. The company is a distinct entity in the eyes of the law, and unless one company holds shares in the other company, the two companies can go on doing business. Of course, if one company holds shares in the other, then they could not, under the clause as it stands, or under the amendment. Now the hon. member for Moosejaw (Mr. Knowles) says: Go on and make it a penalty for a man to own a share in a storage company who also owns a share in an elevator company. He cannot seriously ask us to pass that legislation. He will search the records of any civilized country in vain for any law of that sort. A man can own stock in any company he wants to buy in. Take the case of an innocent party who holds some shares in an elevator company. He finds himself hard up, and desires to sell. He cannot go to John Smith and ask him to buy it, because he would have to look up John Smith's assets to make sure that he does not own shares in the storage company. Also, suppose I own stock in a storage company, and my son holds some stock in an elevator company. I die, and my son becomes the heir, and he at once becomes a criminal in the eyes of the law. It would be utterly absurd. I cannot now bring to my imagination a picture of all the embarrassing situations that would be created, and the confusion that would arise would be much greater than the calamity we are seeking to avert. It seems to me utterly absurd to say that a man could not have so much as one share in a million dollar elevator company, and at the same time have one share in a million dollar grain company. It might be reasonable, if you could do it without too much confusion, to say that no one person shall hold a majority of the shares in both. But that again would be impossible of enforcement. In the first place, the amendment proposed by the hon. member, does not, in any sense, eliminate the objections raised; and secondly, if he went further, as seems to be his intention, it would give rise to a state of affairs more intolerable than that which now exists.

Mr. KNOWLES. It is true that the legislation I suggest would be unusual, but I do not think it would have that absurd effect he thinks it would when he says that the heir of a shareholder in both companies would be automatically criminal. If men have shares in a storage company and also in a company dealing in grain, let them get out of the one or the other. That is the tenor of 123, and it is no more unreasonable than the legislation of the minister. The minister says that no man can be interested in an elevator and buy one bushel of grain without being criminal. The principle is the same and the philosophy is the same. The member for Portage la Prairie, I suppose, thinks that the minister's legislation would at least be harmless. But the minister's legislation is the same kind as my amendment, and with the same motive, only it does not go so far in making provision against clever evasions, which I am endeavouring to prevent. My amendment says that no person who is in any way interested in an elevator shall be in any way interested in buying or selling grain, and that means as a shareholder in either. I think this parliament has power to make it an offence to be interested in buying or selling grain under those circumstances.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Would my hon. friend tell the committee what would result supposing A was interested in both?

Mr. KNOWLES. I think he would be liable to the penalty under the law. If he becomes a shareholder in a company, it is his business to know what the business of that company is. The amendment says that no person who is in any way interested in an elevator should be in any way interested in the buying or selling of grain; it would, as a matter of law, of course, be that he would have to be aware of the fact that he was wrongfully so holding stock in two companies, as no man can unconsciously commit a crime.

Mr. MEIGHEN. There is no penalty provided in this clause.

Mr. KNOWLES. There is a penalty provided in the Bill for the infraction of any of the provisions of this Grain Act.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Will my hon. friend name the clause?

Mr. KNOWLES. 242 says:

> Every person is guilty of an offence and liable to a penalty... who, while owning, managing, operating or being otherwise interested in any terminal elevator, buys or sells grain at any point in the western inspection division contrary to the provisions of section 123 of this Act.

243 also says that every person guilty of an infraction of this Act is liable to a penalty. I think these two clauses fairly cover my hon. friend's question. My point is that the minister's suggested legislation is of the very kind and the very principle on which my amendment is based, except that my amendment goes to a logical conclusion, and makes it effective.

Mr. MACLEAN. (South York) Would not state ownership of the terminal elevator make evasion impossible ?

Mr. THOMSON. Qu'Appelle. Sure.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). Then if the farmers are suffering under these disabilities, should not that be the underlying principle of this Bill ?

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). We are quite satisfied to do that.

Mr. MEIGHEN. The hon. member is surely hardly serious in asking the House to enact legislation that would have that effect. It would throw on the officers enforcing this law a burden greater than the whole burden of the Criminal Code in Canada to-day. How could they go over the 7,000,000 people in Canada, and find out if any one of them has a share in each of two companies? If John Brown wished to have stock in two companies he could have his stock in one in his own name, and in the other in his wife's name, and if he had not enough wives, he could have it in the name of any other citizen of Canada.

Mr. KNOWLES. Would that argument not apply as well to the legislation proposed by the minister?

Mr. MEIGHEN. The legislation of the minister, if it could be carried into effect, would be reasonably useful. I do not believe that it can be carried into effect.

Mr. KNOWLES. The wife business would work just as well in what the minister suggests as in my amendment.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Certainly, but the burden of enforcing it would not be so great. The amendment is absurd on its face, because there would be nothing in the way of an intent to violate the provisions of this law in a man having a share in each of two companies. To attempt to enforce such a regulation as the hon. gentleman has proposed would be too absurd for consideration.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). The argument of the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen), is against both of these proposals. He has not confidence in either. The only way to effectually stop this evil is by complete government control of the terminal elevators.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). One step at a time.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). I agree with what the last speaker has said in regard to public ownership, provided it is applied to all terminal elevators. Then we would not need this section. The only reason we need it now is that we are not sure we are to have public ownership or operation of all terminal elevators. I do not think the hon. member for Portage la Prairie has answered the objection to his argument raised by the hon. member for Moosejaw (Mr. Knowles). There would be no more difficulty in enforcing the hon. member's amendment than the section as proposed by the minister. If the principle laid down in the section is correct, then the amendment of my hon. friend is only bringing that principle to its legitimate conclusion, and unless you adopt some such amendment you might as well abandon the section. I cannot understand the hon. member (Mr. Meighen) being prepared to vote against the amendment suggested, and in favour of the section as proposed by the minister.

As to the point just raised that the suggested amendment would not be effective, I have tried to follow my hon. friend, but I must say I cannot see its force. I can hardly fancy him raising such an argument in court. Take the illustration he gives. A, B, and C are interested in a terminal elevator, and also in the purchasing business. Suppose that A, B and C are interested in the Saskatchewan Grain Company, buying in the interior, and in the Fort William Terminal Elevator Company. It is quite true that you would not be able to prosecute the Saskatchewan Grain Company under this, but why can you not prosecute A, B, and C who may be interested in both companies. They could be prosecuted, they come within the section as it is proposed to be amended.

As to the legislation being unusual, I think the legislation proposed by the minister is unusual, but I do not think that should condemn it. Why condemn legislation because it is unusual? Are we to be continually trailing behind other people? Have we not as much right to originate legislation as any one? In regard to the grain trade, I think we are best qualified and in the best position on earth to introduce new legislation. If my hon. friend is worrying about legacies I would have no objection to a clause excepting the recipient of a legacy of stock until he has had time to dispose of it. That is not a serious matter. I would like to see the whole section dropped as utterly useless or else to follow it to its legitimate and reasonable conclusion, and make it effective.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Half a loaf is better than no bread.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). But when the half loaf crumbles to nothing in your hands, it is useless. You would not get the half loaf after all.

Mr. McCRANEY. Judging by what the minister said the other evening when we were considering this section, I was not at all sure that he considered there was a grievance. The operation of the terminal elevators appears to him to have been so satisfactory within the last year or two, at any rate he expressed his satisfaction with it, that I am not sure whether in his own mind he thought any legislation on this point necessary. However, it is in the Bill, and we must take it as it stands. I think my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) is right, that this section will be wholly ineffective to carry out the purpose for which it was intended. if the machinery of two companies may be put into operation, as the hon. member says it may be. I have no doubt that if evasion is intended, it will be accomplished by that method. We ought to decide as to whether we want an effective section or not. If we do we should pass some legislation such as my hon. friend from Moosejaw (Mr. Knowles) suggests. If we are not going to pass effective legislation, then we should drop the clause altogether, and perhaps the minister will consider again taking up that policy which was laid down by his leader before the elections, to have the terminal elevators owned by the government, which will afford an effective remedy.

Mr. TURRIFF. If we are going to do anything to remedy the evil that has existed, and certainly in the minds of the growers of the wheat a very serious evil does exist, the one way to remedy it is to prevent the men who own the terminal elevators from buying and selling any wheat in the interior elevators. Apparently that has been brought home to the minister, because he presents a clause in this Bill ostensibly for the purpose of preventing that, but when we come to look into it we find that in the judgment of a great many members of the House who have given most attention to the matter, this clause will not accomplish what the farmers of the west want and what the minister started out to give them, namely, to prevent the owners of the terminal elevators owning and operating and dealing in wheat in the interior elevators. If that is really the intention of the minister, what possible objection can there be to making that clause mean what apparently it was intended to mean at first. Either make the clause accomplish what it is intended to accomplish, or don't try to deceive the farmers of the west by putting in a clause that apparently meets their case when it actually does not. If the government is determined not to give that protection to the wheat growers of the west; if the government is determined not to prevent the man who owns a terminal elevator from dealing in wheat in the interior, then drop the clause altogether because as it is now presented by the minister it will not prevent any single terminal elevator owner from being interested in the elevators in the interior and dealing in grain to whatever extent he likes. This is one of the difficulties the minister finds himself in on account of not carrying out the policy his leader advocated. Throughout the west during Mr. Borden's tour last summer, the right hon. gentleman promised definitely and without any reservation that if he came to power the government would own and operate the terminal elevators as a public utility. If he would carry out that policy now you would get over all the difficulties that arise in these clauses. And, while I must admit that I am not much in favour of government ownership of public utilities yet if there is one thing on the face of this earth that a government should be able to do well, it is to run terminal elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur. It can be done without any loss whatever to the government. The fees charged at the present time for putting the grain through these elevators and storing it will pay the cost of operation, and will also pay interest on the investment, if they are bought or leased on any reasonable terms, as they can be. Here is an opportunity to do what the farmers of the west want and what the leader of the government said he would give them. But, instead of doing that the Minister of Trade and Commerce brings forward a clause that ostensibly is to prevent the owners of terminal elevators from dealing in wheat in the interior, but which does not accomplish that end at all. Either make the clause mean what it purports to mean or wipe it out altogether and not try to hoodwink the farmers of the west.

Mr. MEIGHEN. The purpose of the clause, as it stands, is to, if possible, obviate the possibility of collusion between the grain man and storage man to the detriment of the public. In seeking to achieve that object, the clause goes to the extent of placing obstacles in the way of such collusion. The amendment moved by the hon. member for Moosejaw (Mr. Knowles) in an endeavour to meet the same end, creates a condition of affairs that is worse than if we never attempted to remove the difficulty at all, because it places on the statutes, laws that bring about an absurdity. I must say that for my own part I very largely agree with the hon. member for South York (Mr. Maclean), and with other hon. gentlemen who have stated that if we are to obtain this object in its entirety the only way is by public ownership of the elevators. I am not so recent a convert to that principle as are hon. gentlemen opposite. I can remember when I urged this principle in this House and met with the determined antagonism of the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff), and the hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Neely), and of many others of those gentlemen opposite, antagonism not only by their speeches but by their solid party vote. No one welcomes more than I do the step taken by the government in the matter; they have adopted the principle of government ownership; they have conceived it their duty to the people of Canada to move not hurriedly, but slowly in the matter, and as they go step by step in the principle of government ownership of elevators they learn as they go, and the advantage will accrue to the people of Canada. I believe that a great part of the object to be served by this clause can also be served by forcing the railway companies so far as possible to operate their own elevators, and I earnestly hope that the government will see its way to adopt that principle, and to push to the utmost extent it can, the necessity of these railway companies operating their own elevators instead of leasing them for operation.

But that means the adoption of the principle of government ownership, which they have done, and I am glad to see that they have done it, and, by forcing the railway companies to operate their own elevators, they will meet to a large extent, the object in view, under clause 123; and Sir, I will welcome, as everybody on this side of the House will welcome, the newly-found allegiance of hon. gentlemen opposite, now that they know what the sentiment of western Canada is, in this regard. I will welcome their assistance, and I only regret that we had not the eloquent voice of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Thomson) in the last parliament, because I can see, from the manly stand that he has taken here, that he would not have yielded to the party whip in this House, session after session, but would have been one of the bolters, and would have gone the whole road that was so often threatened to be gone, by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff).

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). I do not wish to divert the debate from where it is at the present moment; but something of the widest national importance has come out in this debate. We have laws in this country creating corporations, and these laws are constantly resorted to for the purpose of evading the general law for the protection of the public welfare of this country. We are bound to continue the incorporation of companies by general Act or by special Act, but some day soon we must provide a general law that when an incorporation is used for the purpose of evading a law which is intended to protect the public welfare, or for the purpose of getting ahead of the public; the company doing so, will lose its charter. We shall have to deal with that question at an early day, both from a federal and a provincial point of view.

Mr. BURNHAM. How would the hon. member deal with that question?

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). If a number of men, in order to evade the public law, sought incorporation, when that fact was proved the Act of incorporation would be forfeited.

Mr. OLIVER. Section 123, now under discussion, was made a part of Bill (Q) of the Senate last session, for the purpose of separating absolutely the business of the storage of grain in terminal elevators from the business of buying grain at country points. The section was framed for this purpose, and the reason was, that it was admitted in the evidence that had been given, that there was no possibility of a government inspection of terminal elevators while they were in the hands of grain dealers, that would effectively prevent the mixing of grades. In the expectation that some provision would be made that would have this effect, section 123 as it was first introduced was framed. What my hon. friend from South York has said is absolutely true. It was recognized by the government at the time that section was framed that the condition which was said to exist must be remedied. It was expected that it could be remedied by a provision such as is contained in this section; but it was thoroughly understood that section 13 of this Bill, which was sections 16 and 17 of Bill Q, was the evident intent of the then government in that matter. The intent is clearly set out in these two sections, the one being party to the other. So that a certain purpose was intended to be achieved. If it could be achieved under section 123, well and good. There was less disturbance of then existing trade conditions than would occur if advantage were taken of the provisions of section 13. But if on experiment it was found that the provisions of section 123 were not sufficient, then the alternative was already embodied in the Act of government operation of terminal elevators. When the Bill came to the Commons, it was intended that section 123, as it is repeated in the Bill now before the House, should be amended so as to make it conform more nearly to the principle that it was intended to express. My hon. friend from Portage la Prairie and his colleagues from the west will remember very distinctly that they took advantage of the conditions that existed at that time to prevent the Bill from either being amended or being passed in its unamended form.

Mr. LANCASTER. Did the government move the amendments which the hon. gentleman speaks of in the House ?

Mr. OLIVER. I did not say the government did.

Mr. LANCASTER. Did any one ?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. LANCASTER. Then how do we know anything about them ?

Mr. OLIVER. If the hon. member will do me the courtesy of listening to what I say, he will know.

Mr. LANCASTER. The hon. gentleman is telling this House that it was intended to make the amendment. Where was the intention manifested ?

Mr. OLIVER. I am stating a certain intent, and I expect the hon. gentleman to take my word. This section of the Bill comes before this House now in exactly the same form as it came in the previous session, and the House has to face the position now as it faced it then; and it is for those hon. members who at that time declared their opposition to the Bill, because they said that it did not provide for government ownership of elevators, either to secure the amendment of that section so that it will be effective or to declare here and now for government ownership of terminal elevators.

There is a purpose to be served which every member from the west is well aware of, and I am sure other members of the House as well are aware of. It makes no difference whether that purpose can be served under the principles laid down, or proposed to be laid down, in this section or not. If it cannot be served under the principles laid down, or proposed to be laid down, in this section—and my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) says it cannot— then it is for him, if he supports government ownership, to get up in this House and say so and back his statement with his vote.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) has stated what he meant to do, but he knows, and every member of the House who was here on the 19th of May last year knows, it would have been absolutely impossible to have carried out his intentions.

Mr. LANCASTER. He never manifested the intention.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I have not Bill Q. here, but it contained, I think, the same number of clauses that are to be found in the present measure. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) knows very well whether he acted purposely or not—I am not aware as to that—but this Bill was brought down on the 19th of May, the day upon which this House adjourned, and yet he tells us he expected this Bill, the criticism of which on his part at least a week has taken, to pass.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. The ex-Minister of the Interior would lead us to believe that his intention was to have the Bill properly criticised and then placed upon the statute books of the country so that a grain commission, or any other body of men, could work intelligently under it, all in one day. Certainly we objected to putting the Bill through in one day because it was an absolutely impossible thing to do, a fact which he certainly knew himself. The hon. gentleman therefore should not be so sensitive when his intentions, as he expressed them, are not taken at their full value.

Mr. KNOWLES. The debate has had reference to the question as to the stand of members on both sides of the House on the matter of public ownership of terminal elevators. As I take it our stand is not so much that we are committed at this moment to the theory, or the principle, of government control and operation of government elevators, as that we are committed to the theory and principle that when a gentleman advocates a certain measure before the people of Canada for their support, and makes solemn promises as did the Prime Minister, he should carry those promises into effect.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. When did you start to do that?

Mr. BLAIN. What about free trade?

Mr. KNOWLES. When did we start?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Yes.

Mr. KNOWLES. Hon. gentlemen opposite have thrown the taunt across the floor of the House that we did not lower the tariff. The tariff was lowered degree by degree, and a good, substantial reduction in the duties was made. That taunt is used only for political effect by hon. gentlemen opposite, including the Conservative member from the prairie provinces.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Did my hon. friend vote for the reduction of the tariff on agricultural implements?

Mr. KNOWLES. Where ?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. In this House,

Mr. KNOWLES. Was there ever a vote on it ?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Certainly there was a vote on it.

Mr. KNOWLES. I question the truth of the hon. gentleman's statement. There never was a vote on it in this House.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I say most definitely that there was a vote taken in this House to reduce the tariff on agricultural implements from 17½ to 10 per cent, and the hon. gentleman himself spoke against it.

Mr. KNOWLES. It is the old circumstance of our Tory friends.

Mr. FOSTER. (North Toronto) Now when was the start made ?

Mr. KNOWLES. What my hon. friends lack in argument they make up in noise. I still make the statement that there was not a vote taken on that question in the House. The member for Portage la Prairie (Mr.Meighen) who wishes to interrupt cannot question the accuracy of my statement, because he was not here at that time.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I read your speech.

Mr. KNOWLES. Strange though it may be, we got along at that time without the magnificent and wonderful mind of my hon. friend (Mr. Meighen), and I think we can get along equally well to-day. I will not cross swords with that hon. gentleman, because his word will not be accepted as against mine when he was not a member of the House at the time. I say again that a vote was not taken.

Mr. MEIGHEN. If the hon. gentleman will say he did not speak against that motion I will accept his word for the present.

Mr. KNOWLES. I am not dealing with my hon. friend's acceptance of the matter.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. KNOWLES. Hon. gentlemen laugh. The weaker the case is the louder they laugh, and they will laugh a great deal louder before I am through. I make the statement that in this House since the hon. gentleman (Mr. Schaffner) came here —and he was here one year before me— there never has been a vote to reduce the duty on agricultural implements. What my hon. friend is referring to—and he must know it from the records—is this: A more or less politically cowardly move was made in committee—

Mr. SCHAFFNER.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. KNOWLES. I say politically cowardly. I do not accuse the hon. gentleman personally, I say it was cowardly politics to bring up a motion in committee of this House, where hon. members voted on it and did not have any record made as to how they voted. I make the statement still, that there never was in this House on the subject referred to, a vote such as the hon. gentleman speaks of. If he will state that there was a vote in the committee, I will say he is correct.

Mr. LENNOX. That is mere quibbling.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I still say a vote was taken in this House. Where else would the committee be ?

Mr. KNOWLES. My hon. friend means the building, I suppose ?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I mean in this par ticular chamber.

Mr. KNOWLES. Then if my hon. friend will say a vote taken in this chamber—

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Yes, a vote taken in this particular chamber.

Mr. KNOWLES. There is many a thing done in this chamber.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. In this chamber during a session of the House. What more do you want?

Mr. KNOWLES. What more do I want, nothing except to repeat what I just said that there has not been any vote in this House such as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Schaffner) stated. If my hon. friends opposite want to haggle over the point they can do so, but the question can be decided by the record. The record shows that the resolution was never voted on in this House, but in committee. And I say it shows political cowardice on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite that they did not dare to divide this House when the question came before it. Had that course been followed, the present Prime Minister and Minister of Trade and Commerce would have voted with us on that occasion, for in the committee they did on that occasion vote with the Liberal party, and practically all the Conservatives on the committee so voted. It was a political dodge to deceive the farmers in the prairie provinces. They were afraid to divide the House on the question, and since that, there has been no opportunity afforded for taking a vote by which hon. gentlemen could place themselves on record. More than that, I want to say, that if on any occasion hon. gentlemen opposite bring up the same cheap clap-trap in order to deceive the farmers, my stand will be with the party which sides with the farmer and which has devoted its best efforts in the past to the lowering of the tariff.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Did not the hon. gentleman have a resolution on the order paper to the same effect which he purposely refrained from moving, and so blocked discussion for a year?

Mr. KNOWLES. No. I say that is not so.

Mr. LENNOX. That is on the record, too.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Perhaps my hon. friend will now come to the amendment.

Mr. KNOWLES. I have no objection to discussion with the member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen), but I will not be detained by the hon. gentleman from Simcoe (Mr. Lennox). I draw the line at some things. I have a word or two to say in regard to whether this government is consistent in its course with respect to the matter of public control or operation of elevators. I have before me the Winnipeg 'Telegram' and, in its issue of June 20, 1911, at page 12, column 6, I read the following words spoken by the present right hon. Prime Minister:

I have arrived at the conclusion that the result can only be attained by state control and operation of the terminal elevators. We propose to carry out that policy without delay if returned to power.

The committee will especially mark the words:

Without delay if returned to power.

Now, permit me to read one or two more such utterances before I speak of the statement and the promise there made. I turn to the remarks of the right hon. the leader of the government, then leader of the opposition, made at Brandon on the 20th June last, and reported in the Winnipeg 'Telegram' of the 21st June, page 12, column 3:

I stated at Winnipeg, and I state here, that the government control and operation of them is the only effective method of putting an end to these grievances, and we are prepared to stand for that and for the moderate and reasonable statement put forward by my friend who assisted me on that question.

And later on in the same speech:

If it should be the will of the people of Canada to impose upon me the great responsibility of being called upon to form a government in Canada, and after that government has been formed the policy I have outlined will be carried out by the government as I have stated, or one man of the government will go out of public life.

Could you get a promise more exacting, one whereby a man more fully ties himself up to the words he has uttered? He makes the promise that government control and operation will be carried out without delay, declares that it is the only effective method of solving the problem, and says that if he is returned to power and the government he forms does not carry out this promise there will be one man less in public life. If that means anything, it means that government control and operation would be carried out at once or the right hon. gentleman himself would not only resign from the government but would leave public life. If it does not mean that, it does not mean anything.

Now, let me read also the report of the meeting at Estevan, reported in the Winnipeg 'Telegram' of June 22:

Mr. Borden told the grain growers as he did at Brandon, that he was heartily in sympathy with the agitation for speedy government construction and ownership of the Hudson Bay railway, the government ownership and control of the terminal elevators, and the inauguration of the chilled meat industry, and so on.

This was the promise, plainly and absolutely made in June last. The right hon. gentleman has had control of the affairs of this country for several months. We have asked, time after time, what is his policy on this question? The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster) tells us that, apparently by way of experiment, a small experiment, there will be one or two elevators taken over by lease, and run and experimented with. Is that government ownership and control? Will that solve the problem? Will that remove the evils of faulty grading or prevent the manipulation of the product of the farmer's toil? No hon. member of this House will say that the Prime Minister is going to solve the problem in that way. The most that can be said is that he is going to experiment with it. Was it an experiment that he promised in June last? No, he was convinced then and declared that the policy would be carried out. Now he experiments, he plays with the question.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is the hon. gentleman objecting to a beginning being made?

Mr. KNOWLES. I object to the right hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden), coming to my constituency and telling my constituents one thing, and then coming here to Ottawa and doing another.

We have had a number of promises from these gentlemen who are now in power. I wish to refer to some of them to shew the general system of the present government. Many of their supporters elected in Ontario were elected because they promised that if the Conservative party got into power, a law should be passed to legalize the marriages —the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) can tell me the wording of it.

Mr. LENNOX. Who made the promise?

Mr. KNOWLES. The people of Ontario were promised that if they would vote for these hon. gentlemen——

Mr. LENNOX. Where was the promise made?

Mr. KNOWLES—they would insist on there being put through parliament at once an Act legalizing marriages in the province of Quebec. And when it came to voting on the matter, there were five—the famous five, the faltering but faithful five— who voted for it, and the rest voted to hoist the thing over to the old country. A second illustration is the Farmers' Bank; some promised the shareholders of the Farmers' Bank that they would get their money back for them. Vote for us, said the present Minister of Labour (Mr. Crothers), and our government when it comes into power will give you poor farmers back the money that these thieves took from you. Is that promise being carried out? Take another: The double play on the navy question. The members on the other side from the province of Quebec told the people: Vote for us and at the very first session the Navy Bill will be repealed and this whole question settled forever. And we find that, only yesterday, in another place, the leader on the government side there announced that the matter would not be touched this year, and the whole Conservative party in that House, including a minister of the Crown, voted against the repeal of this Navy Act which some gentlemen supporting the government promised would be repealed this session if they came into power, and if not so repealed these gentlemen stated they would resign, but there is no repeal and the hon. members from Quebec remain with us. And we find this party that has come into power on the strength of promises with regard to Ne Temere, the navy, the Farmers' Bank——

Mr. LEMIEUX. The school question.

Mr. KNOWLES—yes, and the school question, and the control and operation of terminal elevators, is not carrying out one of these pladges. They have got the votes, they have fooled the people. What more care they? There is but one exception to their complete failure to carry out their promises. I see the Minister of Finance (Mr. White), is here and in good humour. He has carried out one promise that was made. But the promise was not made to the common people. This was not a promise to the thousands of Protestants in all the Ontario ridings like that other promise, that if they would put out of power the leader of the late government Ontario would have such an ascendancy that the marriage question would be dealt with in a way to please them. It was not a promise made to the poor habitant of Quebec like the one that the Navy Act should be repealed. It was not a promise such as that made to the poor farmer of the northwest, that there should be government ownership and operation of terminal elevators, nor is it their promise to the trusting farmers with worthless bank stock in his hands. No, this was a promise made to their masters, the manufacturers, that if the party now in power should succeed a Tariff Commission would be established. That is the one and only promise that they have kept.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. KNOWLES. I have another amendment which I will explain before I read it. so that hon. members may understand it better. The main section—an amended section—which the Minister of Trade and Commerce has placed in your hands, Mr. Chairman, provides that 'subsection 1 of this section shall not apply to any person who owns, manages, operates or is otherwise interested in any terminal elevator' which has been leased to the board or with the aprpoval of the board. I think that is too wide. I spoke on this subject the other day, and need not repeat my points. I hold that only the person who owns the elevator, but has divested himself from control and operation, should be protected. The section makes it apply as well to one who manages or operates or is otherwise interested in the terminal elevator thus leased. This defeats the principle of the section itself, and is merely anomalous. If a man owns an elevator and operates it, as a man who prefers straight-forward dealing may well be inclined to do, he is forbidden by this section to buy or sell grain. But if he leases that elevator from its owner, then he can buy and sell grain. Surely, that was not the purpose of the section. We do not want to put the lessee on a better basis than the owning proprietor; so I propose to amend that by restricting it to the person who owns the elevator. Therefore, I propose that section 123 be amended by striking out the words:

Manages, purchases or is otherwise interested in any terminal elevator.

And substituting therefor:

Or is in any way interested in the ownership of any terminal elevator.

Amendment negatived on division.

Mr. KNOWLES. I move that section 123 be amended by striking out the words 'or is managed or operated by persons appointed by the board,' wherever they occur at the end of clause (a) in subsection 2, and thereafter.

Amendment negatived on division, and section 123 adopted.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). We had some conversation about section 169. After looking into it carefully, I propose that section 169 be dropped.

Motion agreed to.

On section 185,—time allowed for loading,

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I move to add at the end of subsection 3:

Nothing in this part shall be construed as requiring the owner of a flat warehouse to insure the grain while in his warehouse.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 208,—conditions respecting carloads to eastern points,

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). We passed this section, but since then we have passed a clause by which a sample market may be established in Calgary and Winnipeg. I wish to add the words 'and Fort William.' This is to bring Fort William in line with Calgary and Winnipeg as order points.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have no objection to that amendment, but I would like to draw the attention of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster), to the fact that when the western route is established and it has been practically recognized by the location of a sample market and the inspection division at Calgary, there will be three spouts, so to speak, by which wheat will be carried from the prairies to the Pacific coast. There are two in existence at the present time, the main line of the Canadian Pacific railway, through Calgary and Crowsnest Pass route through southern Alberta. Later on, when the Transcontinental lines are finished, Edmonton will become a point of entrance for wheat going to the Pacific coast. I would suggest to the minister that he locate an inspector in southern Alberta, to inspect grain that might be shipped by way of the Crowsnest Pass railway to the Pacific coast. As most western members are aware at the present time, the Kootenay Central line of the Canadian Pacific railway is under construction, and when it is completed it will be possible for grain from the prairie to be carried along the route of the Crowsnest Pass and the Kootenay Central to Golden on the main line and then by way of the main line to Vancouver, cutting out the heavy grade between Calgary and Field on the main line. A good deal of the grain, I understand from men who are engaged in the transportation business, is certain to be shipped along the Crowsnest Pass route instead of along the main line of the Canadian Pacific railway. I think, therefore, it would be well for the minister to consider the location of an inspector at the city of Lethbridge. Lethbridge is located in the centre of what is known as southern Alberta, it is the centre also of the great wheat district of that province, and it would be a great convenience to the farmers and shippers if they had an inspector at Lethbridge. If the minister would appoint one there he would greatly please the people in that part of the country. Later on, it will no doubt be necessary to appoint an inspector at Edmonton, for the reason that grain will be shipped from the northern part of the province by other routes than by Calgary.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I have heard what my hon. friend has said in support of this proposition. These things may come to be necessary from time to time, and we have met that possibility by taking power in the Act itself for the erection of a subdivision in any part of the western division.

Mr. OLIVER. Before that section passes I think it would be desirable if the minister would give some explanation of the reason for establishing Fort William on the same footing as Calgary and Winnipeg.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Fort William is included as an order point to meet the necessity and convenience of working a sample market at Fort William. Before long large numbers of cars of grain, instead of passing through Winnipeg on the present routes, will go by northern and southern cut offs, and samples will be taken at those points and brought down to Winnipeg. These cars will go straight through to Fort William. It is necessary to have Fort William as an order point in order that in the interval between those cars having been sampled on these north and south cuts and their arrival at Fort William the samples may arrive there and the operations of the sample market may be carried on.

Mr. OLIVER. My information is that the reason why there is not now a sample market in Winnipeg is not any lack in the the law, for provision is made for constituting Winnipeg an order point for the purpose of having a sample market there, but the fact that there has not yet been tributary to Winnipeg a sufficient trade of the class that is necessary for the carrying on of a sample market, and I would think that the attempt to establish a sample market at Fort William will detract from the advantage of a sample market at Winnipeg possibly to such a degree as to render the establishment of such a market there ineffective or impossible as a practical matter. The minister should consider that, before providing for the establishment of a sample market at Fort William. He may do more harm than good to the principle of the sample market by unduly multiplying such markets.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I have not lost sight of that, but I do not look for any bad results from this proposal. As to the possibility of a successful sample market at Fort William, it may be realized at once, or it may be realized later, but we have made provision for it in this section.

I have two other amendments, one to section 247, which provides for the repeal of portions of former Acts included in or superseded by this Act. It is also provided that this Act shall come into force on a day to be fixed by proclamation of the Governor in Council published in the 'Canada Gazette.'

Bill reported.

At six o'clock House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

APPOINTMENT OF A TARIFF COMMISSION.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 88) to provide for the appointment of a Tariff Commission.—Mr. White (Leeds).

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). When the House was last in committee, I promised to give attention to certain amendments which were proposed by some hon. gentlemen. The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) suggested that there should be an amendment providing for the payment of the fees of witnesses summoned before the commission, and that I think desirable. I shall move, following a similar clause of the Railway Act, that in the discretion of the commission or commissioners the like fees or allowances may be paid to witnesses as if they were summoned to attend before the Exchequer Court. Then, my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Maclean) suggested that no person should be compellable to give evidence outside of the province in which he is served with a summons, and I think that suggestion is a good one. I have prepared an amendment following the lines of a similar section in the Railway Act, which I shall ask to have inserted. I may say that my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) is, I think, satisfied with the wording of the amendment which I have drafted. The other amendment, which was more important than either of these, came as a suggestion from the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair). The only objection I have to his suggestion, after having given it consideration, is that it does not go far enough to carry out the intention of the government respecting the giving of information to parliament. My hon. friend from Guysborough, in the course of the discussion, submitted the following amendment:

All evidence and information taken by the commissioners, not held to be confidential under the provisions of subsection 6 of this section, shall be laid on the table of the House within ten days after the opening of parliament.

I have enlarged on the idea of the hon. member (Mr. Sinclair) and I submit the following as an amendment:

Whenever a report has been made under this Act, a copy thereof and a copy of the evidence, if any, taken, and all the information obtained, except such evidence and information as is of a confidential character under subsection 8 of the next preceding section, in connection therewith, shall be laid before parliament by the minister, within fifteen days, after the opening of the session thereafter, or within fifteen days after the making of this report, if parliament is then in session.

I believe the hon. member (Mr. Sinclair) will be quite content with that. My amendment embraces not only the report received during recess between sessions, but the reports received during a session of parliament. Then, subsection 5 of section 4 seems to be limited to the evidence taken, and I think it desirable that information which may be claimed by the commission and which might not be technically considered evidence, if they act on it in any way, should also be submitted with the report. I move to amend the Bill in that direction.

Mr. NESBITT. What does the clause mean by 'summary manner?'

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I explained that the other night. It would mean without the formality of procedure that characterizes proceedings in a court of record.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Without pleadings?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I am thankful to my hon. friend (Mr. Pugsley) for the suggestion; I think that describes the meaning. I think these are all the amendments that I was asked to consider.

Mr. McKENZIE. Is it proposed that the report with the evidence, shall be printed and distributed like other blue-books?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). That would be a matter entirely within the control of the House.

Mr. McKENZIE. If the report is merely laid on the table, it is not available to all the members, unless it is printed like any other blue-book.

Mr. BORDEN. The moment it is laid on the table of the House, the rule can be dispensed with, and printing can be ordered forthwith. I think it would hardly be advisable to lay down any hard and fast rule in the first instance.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think the amendments substantially follow the lines of the suggestions made on this side of the House.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I may say that the intention of the government always has been, that this information should be laid before the House. My hon. friend from Guysborough suggested an amendment providing in specific terms, that the information and evidence should be laid before the House, within ten days after the opening of the session. The objection we had to that amendment was, that it did not go far enough or as far as we intended to go. Consequently, I am inserting a specific provision to the effect that the report and the findings, with the evidence on which they are based, shall be laid before parliament within 15 days after the opening of the session, or, if received during the session, within 15 days after they have been received.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The amendments, I think, are quite an improvement to the Bill. They do not go as far as we would like to see them go, our contention being that all information, and all the evidence on which the government might act, should be deemed to be of a public character and should be laid before parliament. Of course, if my hon. friend proposes to treat certain evidence as confidential, I do not suppose he could go much further in the matter than he has gone.

Mr. BORDEN. The idea is to leave that subject to the discretion of the commission.

Bill reported with amendments and amendments concurred in.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT—AUDITOR GENERAL'S OFFICE.

Bill (No. 113) to amend the Civil Service Act—Mr. White (Leeds)—read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). When introducing this Bill, I explained to the House that it was made necessary by reason of the provisions of the amended Civil Service Act under which temporary clerks could only be employed for a period of six months during any fiscal year. A great deal of work devolves upon the Auditor General in the auditing and paying of accounts in connection with the Dominion elections. He has engaged a staff of about twenty temporary clerks, but, having trained them, will find it necessary under the present law to dispense with their services. The Auditor General informs me that he spoke to the leader of the former government concerning the expediency of bringing in a Bill of this kind, and that the right hon. gentleman consented thereto. I have spoken to the right hon. gentleman on the subject. I think it is obvious that this is an amendment which should be made to the Civil Service Act. The Auditor General informs me that of the twenty extra clerks employed, two had reached the limit of their engagement, and were discharged. He will require fifteen for the next six months, and a comparatively small number after that until the work is completed. I believe the Bill is entirely non-contentious.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

SUPPLY—PUBLIC MEANS OF COMMUNICATION.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds) moved that the House go again into Committee of Supply.

Mr. JOSEPH E. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I wish to deal with a matter which I brought up for the consideration of the House a few weeks ago. On that occasion I offered a resolution of which I had given notice, in favour of the appointment of a commission to gather information for the use of parliament with regard to telegraphs and telephones. I had reached the consideration of the subject of parcels post. I have only one suggestion on this subject to give the Postmaster General, and it is that, in my opinion, it would not be wise in the extension of the parcel post system to go beyond establishing it on rural mail and stage routes, and I believe also that the parcels carried should have their origin at the beginning or on the rural mail or stage routes.

I desire to make a suggestion also with regard to rural free mail delivery. I understand the Postmaster General is about to extend this system to the thickly settled districts. I would urge upon him to take into consideration this fact: That while the late government had under consideration the giving of rural free mail delivery to the people in the thickly settled portion of the country, yet just previous to the last election, they were able, for some reason or other to give to the Liberal candidates in the different ridings perfect freedom in establishing free rural mail routes in any part of their ridings. Many of these routes were established some of them in districts that had formerly been accustomed to tri-weekly mail delivered at the post office and under the change the people of these districts found themselves with a daily mail delivered at their doors.

I hope the Postmaster General will examine into the manner in which these routes were established and will see to it that we have some kind of uniform service in the rural districts. I can well understand that a daily mail service to all the people living in the thickly settled rural portions of our country would saddle the post office with greater expense than it could bear. So I would suggest to the Postmaster General that, for the present at least, in districts where there is only a triweekly mail, if they get that mail delivered at their houses instead of at the post office that would be sufficient in most cases without the expense of a daily mail.

Now, a few words with regard to telegraphs. As I said in my previous remarks the present position of the telegraph companies in Canada is that they are receiving the lion's share of the profits that accrue from handling telegraph messages. I gave facts in regard to the charges they are making in different parts of the country. At an early day we should establish government ownership in telegraph lines and have this service made a part of the postal service. And not only should this be done with the telegraphs but with the telephones as well. It would be quite possible to organize a system under which the municipalities would be able to own, control and operate their telephone systems, while the main lines of telegraph, telephone and cable would be carried on as part of the post office service.

At present, go into the small towns and you will see a telegraph office under a separate organization, in a separate building, a telephone office in another building under a different organization, and the post office in still another. These ought all to be combined under government control. All our wire systems, whether spoken or written, should be under control and operation by the government. There will be enormous savings in this regard in the matter of efficiency which can be brought about by co-operation. We must remember that the telegraph is a by product of the telephone. There is no doubt in my mind that in the near future a great portion of the correspondence from one end of this country to the other will be done by wire instead of by mail. But the greatest improvement we may expect in the near future will be brought about by the extension of our telephone system. To my mind there is no public utility that is proving of greater service in Canada today, not only in the cities but in the rural districts. It is well organized in the cities, and is capable of being wonderfully extended in the rural districts, it is also the duty of this parliament to assist its extension in every possible way. We ought to combine the telephone, telegraph and cable systems, that is, if you want to do the work thoroughly and economically. Take the large trunk lines to the cities and towns, and allow the municipalities to own, control, and operate their own municipal systems and you will then be in a position to give to the people the transmission of their messages at cost. There is no question in my mind that in the near future we will be able to satisfactorily telephone from one side of this continent to the other. I have shown in previous remarks how, on the other side, they are sending telephone messages over a distance of 2,000 miles on the same wire with comparative ease.

This matter is one of vital importance to the rural districts. At the present time it is practically impossible to get the Bell Telephone Company to extend its system into the rural districts, consequently the farmers are compelled to organize companies themselves. There are to-day in the province of Ontario 460 different telephone companies provincially organized, which are chiefly operating in the rural districts. I made some investigation, and I find that ninety per cent of these companies are operating in rural districts, and eighty-five per cent of them are organized by the farmers and men living in rural Ontario, so that they may have the telephone system at their doors. The local government of the province of Ontario, under their Railway and Municipal Board, have issued statistics to show that without a doubt it is a saving to every farmer who has a telephone in his house of at least $50 a year, and with the 50,000 phones that are in operation, it means $2,500,000. Five years age there were only 5,000 telephones in the farm houses in the province of Ontario, while to-day we have over 50,000. So you will see that it is a live question in the rural districts. Let me tell you that only twenty per cent of the agricultural lands in our fair province are under cultivation, and the population in the rural Ontario, instead of increasing, is actually decreasing. Only last night we heard some hon. gentlemen on this side of the House saying that in county after county the population in the rural districts is rapidly decreasing. According to statistics, there are only 21 counties in the province of Ontario. which have increased in population during the last ten years, while 27 counties have decreased. It is therefore our duty to put forth every effort to keep the people on the farms by offering them every possible advantage and assistance in the development of their respective districts.

I wish to say that the Hydro-Electric Commission which has been doing such splendid work in our province, is a proposition very much along the line of the one I am trying to put before this House to-night. Only a few years ago twelve municipalities offered the Hydro-Electric Commission 23,000 horse power, while to-day there are over 30 municipalities in the province of Ontario which have offered to that commission 44,000 horse power that they may come in and develop. The Hydro-Electric Power Commission bring the wires to the municipalities, and this proposition will bring the telephone system to the municipalties as they bring the trunk wires to the municipalities. The municipalties would then own, control and operate their own telephone systems. I may say that I have received assurances from different cities in the Dominion as well as from different organizations supporting the cause I am now placing before parliament. I might add that the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario distinctly state that it would be an advantage for municipalities of our province to own, control and operate their telephone systems, because in that way they would be able to distribute electric power to the farmers in a manner that they cannot possibly do at present on account of the expense of building pole lines. In the province of Ontario 15 of the 460 companies I have referred to are municipally owned telephone systems, run by the municipalities. The clerk of the municipality becomes the secretary of the telephone company, and all charges are collected with the annual tax. I have under my hand a report from one of these municipalities, the municipality of Rochester, in the county of Essex. It is the lowest assessment of any municipality regarding telephone systems that I know of. It places the actual cost of each phone at only $7 per annum. The system has been in operation four years, and in six years more they expect to have the lines all paid for, and that the actual cost of the system after that date will not exceed $1 per annum. This may seem incredible. But remember that we have a municipal Act which allows any municipality to borrow money at a low rate of interest in order to establish a telephone company. The municipality assesses the subscribers a small amount on capital account each year until in ten years' time they own the whole plant. You can readily see that a large number of cities and towns are taking advantage of that municipal Act.

They can obtain from the municipal government power to issue debentures in order to establish a telephone system in their city, town or rural district, and I am convinced that many cities of Ontario will be only too glad to do this. In the city of Ottawa, I am sure you could find prominent officials ready and willing to undertake the establishment of municipally-owned telephones, if we had public control of the trunk lines of telephones of Canada. Then Ottawa would be able to do away with these unsightly poles on the main streets that are so offensive in this beautiful city. In Australia, power has already been granted to the government to issue debentures and thus raise $10,000,000 for the purchase and extension of the telephone and telegraph systems. Apart from the United States and Honduras we are the only country that does not own, control and operate telegraph systems, and to a great extent the telephone. We had the other night the spectacle of the Minister of Public Works asking this House to vote $23,000 for the payment of rental of telephones used in the government buildings in Ottawa. This amount would go a long way towards defraying the expenses of the central exchange in Ottawa. I was glad to learn that the Minister of Public Works had under consideration the establishment of an exchange by which the different government offices could be connected with one another without resorting to the public telephone system.

May I say a word with reference to cables connecting Canada and the motherland? I was able to show you a few days ago that we had some 17 trans-Atlantic lines between the mother country and Canada and that all these trans-Atlantic lines are owned, controlled and operated by a company whose head offices are in the city of New York, and the bulk of whose stock is owned in that city. It would be a patriotic thing for this government to establish at an early date a Canadian owned line, or even two lines, between Canada and the motherland. I am informed that the expense of building two cable lines would not exceed $5,000,000, and that we would have business for said lines the very day they were opened; it would not be a game of chance, it would be a business proposition from the very start. The company in the city of New York who made the last purchase of cable lines undertook to pay for the four lines that crossed the Atlantic 3½ per cent on $35,000,000 for 99 years, while the actual cost of these four lines could not have exceeded $8,000,000. Thus, it is clear that for many years to come, unless we take some action, we cannot expect to have cheap trans-Atlantic cables. With the present rates, only one per cent of the people on this continent use the cable for any purpose whatever. The small trader or the ordinary citizen of Canada does not make use of the cable, simply because of the expense. If we owned, controlled and operated two cables between Canada and the motherland, the cable tolls would easily be cut in two. Surely it is our duty to secure this great boon. Credit is due to Sir Sandford Fleming for his splendid work in reference to cables between Canada and Australia-New Zealand, and also his advocacy of cables between Canada and the motherland. A cable can carry 600 messages in one hour, or 1,900 messages in four hours. Most of the cable business is done between ten o'clock in the morning in this country and three o'clock in the afternoon in England. For the balance of the day 37½ per cent of the cable plant is idle. Thus it is a wonder to me that the cable companies have not materially reduced the cost of cables during these idle hours. England spends $1,250,000 per annum in cabling to her consuls and ambassadors. Under competition in 1885 and 1886 the present cable rate was reduced to 12 cents a word and cable traffic doubled during those two years which merely goes to show that the cable rates might well be materially reduced.

A word with reference to wireless telegraphy. Wonderful strides have been made in wireless telegraphy, not only on this continent but on others. I am satisfied the day is not far distant when wireless telegraphy will be used to send messages from this parliament to practically every daily newspaper in Canada at a very small cost. I am also satisfied that wireless telegraphy is going to be of great service in the Hudson Bay district. We have heard a great deal about the ice and the winds of that route and we are told that these will interfere with the handling of grain to the motherland but if we have established on either side of the channel wireless telegraph stations we will be able to obtain exact information as to the winds and the drift ice, and so will be able to guide vessels through the channel and navigation will be kept open for months longer than it otherwise would. It is our bounden duty to develop that system not only for the purpose of giving information of this character but for the protection of life and property at sea. We have had striking examples even within the last few weeks of the saving of life at sea through vessels equipped with wireless apparatus being able to send calls for assistance to other vessels.

It is the duty of Canada to undertake the control and operation of our own wireless telegraph stations, and keep from turning over the productive end of all these systems to companies, while we own and operate the lean end. I quote the following from the Montreal 'Star' of Saturday, February 3, last, which is instructive:

> Canadian Marconi shares sold as high as $4.75 (Montreal equivalent) in London to-day. It startles even the insiders who for months past have considered they were not worth more than $2.00 at the outside. The company has a capital of five million dollars largely water, and some time ago when the shares rose over $3.00, several people were said to have sold out and considered themselves lucky to get as much as they did.

Imagine a capitalization of five million dollars, mostly water, and yet we will be asked in the near future to purchase back at an enormous figure from these people a number of the stations they have erected in Canada. It is up to the parliament of Canada to proceed at once to gather information in order that we may have data to go upon in order to purchase or build great lines of communication in our own land which may ultimately become connected with lines in other countries. The total cost of this would not exceed twenty-five million dollars, or just one year's surplus. Then, in five years, when you have completed your trunk system of wire transmission, our post office would be the centre of that great system and incalculable benefits would be conferred upon the Dominion. I sincerely hope the government will grant this commission because I feel confident that if they do so, sufficient statistics will be placed before parliament to convince every member on this side at all events that this great utility should be taken over by the people, and I feel confident that even members on the opposite side of the House would not then dare to oppose such a project.

Mr. NESBITT. Does the hon. gentleman know if it is a fact, as reported, that the price of telephones has been raised materially in Winnipeg, since the provincial government took over the system in that province?

Mr. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton). I have no desire to be driven into a controversy with reference to what the province of Manitoba has done in this respect. I understand that the price of messages has been increased in the city of Winnipeg, but when you take into consideration the fact that they have extended their lines in the rural districts at an enormous expense and granted to the people living in these districts a low-priced telephone service, you cannot wonder that the people in the city who make large use of the telephones should be called upon to contribute.

Mr. NESBITT. I was only asking for information as to whether it was true or not.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton). I understand they have increased the cost of messages in the cities to those who are making use of the telephone over a certain given number of messages per day.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I agree in some respects in the remarks of the hon. gentleman about telephones and telegraphs, but I think the Railway Commission has at present sufficient power to cope with the difficulties we are experiencing as to the cost of these services. A question which, in my judgment, is more urgent, is the question of cheap cable rates. On this matter I wish to quote from one of the world leaders of public opinion on this question, Mr. Henniker Heaton, for twenty-five years a member of the British House of Commons, and recently created a baronet on account of his great services to the postal system of Great Britain and the colonies, and also in connection with cheap telegrams. In a speech delivered twenty years ago, Sir Henniker Heaton said:

> Cheap cabling is the key to all the really momentous problems that confront our statesmen and merchants. It annihilates distance, abolishes delay, bridges the ocean, laughs at the storm, creates trade, nourishes individual and racial sympathies, multiplies our strength, and enables us to mass our collective resources at the threatened point. I shall not be suspected of depreciating postal advantages. The post office is the machinery of thought. But electricity is thought itself displayed in action; the living fire that makes the massive wheels to turn. At this period of the world's history, in face of the refined and perfected strategy employed to appropriate trade, the nation which makes the best use of electric agencies, according to its special needs and circumstances, will be supreme.

At the same time Sir Henniker Heaton draws this sad picture of the condition in which the cable business of the world is still kept. He says:

> Electricity has been appropriated by a long-headed 'trust' just as whisky, beer and other good things have been appropriated. The poor man knows that this subtle force pervades all nature, even to his own body, and that it was intended to be the common heritage of humanity. He hears the long roll of thunder among the hills; he shrinks from the lightning flash; he is exposed to the storm which follows. But if he would avail himself of the marvellous powers of the ubiquitous fluid to send a message of life and death, he is promptly reminded that such luxuries are not for the like of him. He may wish to tell his old father that he is one of the few saved from the wreck—let the old man wait until he can receive the good news by post.

You have in these two extracts, the very kernel of the question before us, and it is a question which has agitated the minds of Canadian and British statesmen for years past. I might remind the Postmaster General who in virtue of his portfolio, is called upon to superintend the cable business in its present limited capacity in Canada, that the Imperial Conference last year and the Press Conference three years ago, urged on the home authorities to use their influence with the cable companies to give the long suffering public a much needed reduction in the cost of cable messages.

The Post Office Department of Canada, for the last five years at least, and I might say during the time it was under the control of my predecessor, Sir William Mulock, on many occasions brought to the attention of the home government the necessity of co-operating with Canada in obtaining reductions in cable rates. At least, during the month of December last, we received a cable from the present Postmaster General of Great Britain, addressed to the Postmaster General of Canada, which read as follows:

> For messages handed in any time up to midnight to-night (Thursday), for delivery Saturday morning, the rate for 20 words, $1.50 and 30 cents for each additional five words or fraction of five words. Week-end letters, messages handed in up to midnight any Saturday for delivery the following Tuesday morning, the rate for 30 words is $1.50, and 25 cents for each additional five words, or fraction of five words.

When my hon. friend brought this message to the House, I sincerely congratulated him on the success which the Post Office Department of Canada had achieved, inasmuch as I before him, and Sir William Mulock before my time, had pressed for such reductions. But, as I stated the other day, this is only the first instalment, and we must expect better treatment from the cable companies, or else there is another remedy which we must apply, that is, a state-owned cable.

My hon. friend from East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong), has given the House some facts in regard to the monopoly of the cable companies. It might perhaps be interesting for the House to know how many lines are operating in Canada. There are at present five companies doing a cable business between Great Britain, Canada, and the United States—the Anglo-American, the Direct United States, La Compagnie Francaise, the Western Union, and the Commercial Cable. The two first are British companies, the third is French, and the last two belong to the United States. The number of cables operated by the five companies is 17. Something very strange happened lately, at the very time my hon. friend received that message from the Postmaster General of Great Britain, stating that reductions would be given; that was, the falling into the American cable pool of the two remaining British companies, the Anglo-American and the Direct United States. After repeated remonstrances had been made by the Postmaster General of Canada—probably by my hon. friend and certainly by myself—that steps should be taken to obtain a reduction of rates from the cable companies the Postmaster General of England did not feel that he would be justified in granting to the two English companies the right to merge with other companies without previously giving reductions to the Canadian public. But, Sir, I repeat that the reductions are not sufficient. They are only a first instalment, and we must have further reductions, or else Canada and Great Britain, or if not Great Britain, Canada must have a state-owned cable between this country and Great Britain.

Mr. Speaker, the history of the cable companies is rather a sad history for the consumer in Canada, and in America generally. The first cable was laid in the Atlantic ocean in 1866. The line was the property of the Anglo-American Cable Company, which had an entire monopoly of the business until 1869, when the French Atlantic Cable Company laid a line from Brest to St. Pierre, and thence to Sydney, Cape Breton. After two months competition, the French company was absorbed by the Anglo-American Company, and thus sole control was obtained by that company. The charges in the early days of the ocean telegraph were simply enormous. They began with a minimum tariff of £20 for 20 words, or £1 for each word, and £1 for each additional word. This rate was reduced to a minimum of £10 for 20 words, and shortly afterwards to £5 for 10 words. It was again brought down to 30s. ($7.50) for ten words of five letters each. In 1867 the practice of making a minimum charge was abolished, and thereafter the tariff was simply so much for each word transmitted. In 1872, the Direct United States Company went into operation. It was a British company. There was a reduction, but the American company at once declared war on the new company, and after two years of unequal struggle, the latter company was obliged to capitulate. The result of the struggle, however, was so far beneficial to the public that the rate was reduced from 4s. to 3s. a word. In 1879, another French company came in. It was the company headed by Mr. Pouyer-Quertier of France. What was the result of the operation of this new concern? The Anglo-American Company and the allied companies made the usual onslaught on the new comer, bringing the rate down to sixpence a word. It started at £1 a word, and competition brought it down to sixpence a word in 1879. This lasted until 1881, when, after a year and a half of rivalry, the Western Union, which controlled the land service in Canada and the United States, resolved to take a hand in trans-Atlantic telegraphing.

Rates were reduced to one shilling a word, and after some months Mr. Gould, who was controlling the Western Union, joined himself to a combine, and immediately up went the rates from one shillng to two shillings a word, In 1884 the Commercial Cable Company appeared on the scene with two cables, and offered a one shilling and eight penny rate for business. The allied companies—that is to say the Anglo-American and other companies— at once dropped their tariff to the same figure which ruled until the 15th of May 1886, when the allied companies after a fruitless effort to come to terms with the Commercial Cable Company suddenly lowered the rate to sixpence a word. This lasted until 1887, but in 1888 the American Cable merger, or the American Cable Pool as it is called to-day, was formed and the rates were all made uniform and put at the fixed figure of one shilling a word. It has remained at that figure until this very day. Now, Sir, we have in this, two facts outstanding: First that when there are companies operating, all this competition will bring necessarily a reduction in the rates, and secondly when the companies merged into one pool, as they did in the present instance, we have the existence of a monopoly. So much so that one of the general managers of the Anglo-American Company discussing in his annual report in 1902 the socalled urgency, as he stated, of reducing the rates defined what he termed a reasonable rate. He said it was a rate which the companies could get out of the public without too much complaint. Now that rate of one shilling has been imposed on the public since 1888 whereas previously the companies had been satisfied to do business with a rate of sixpence a word. Now let us see, from the report of the companies, what the effect was of that sixpenny rate from 1886 until 1888. The Anglo-American Company reported to its shareholders at its annual meeting in January 1888, that as a result of the reduction to sixpence the traffic of the allied companies had increased 162 per cent, notwithstanding the serious inroads made by the Commercial Cable Company. Think what this means, Mr. Speaker. That 162 per cent increase means that if the companies were sending 10,000,000 words a year before the reduction to sixpence, within eighteen months after that period they were sending 26,200,000 words. Therefore this reduction in the rates has been most beneficial not only to the public but equally to the companies interested. Now I claim that the Cable companies with the enlarged business they have enjoyed for several years, now that the public are using more freely the cables across the Atlantic, could to-day at least revert to the old rate of sixpence a word, and I claim that for press messages the companies could very well reduce their rate to threepence a word. It is very important not only for the manufacturer, and the broker but for the merchant, the immigrant and even the man on the street that we should have reasonable rates between Canada and Great Britain. I hold no brief for the press, although I pride myself on having been a member of the newspaper fraternity many years ago, but I say—

Mr. PELLETIER. Under what name did you write ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I was a Liberal pressman and I have been a Liberal ever since.

Mr. PELLETIER. What signature did you append to the articles you wrote ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I had none, I would have been paid too highly for that signature. But coming back to the advantage that would accrue to the Canadian press and to the Canadian public through low cable rates I say this: At present the cable despatches that we read in the Canadian morning and evening newspapers are more or less tainted. The press agencies are in the hands of American concerns, and I repeat that the news which we receive from England, the news which we consume daily, is more or less coloured. So much so that when a general election takes place in England, I take this as a case in point—the most important newspapers in Canada—the Toronto 'Globe,' the Toronto 'Mail,' the Montreal 'Star,' the Montreal 'Herald,' the Ottawa 'Citizen,' the Ottawa 'Journal,' the Ottawa 'Free Press,' and let me not forget to mention in that array of brilliant newspapers, the Toronto 'World'—are obliged to send special correspondents to England in order to get genuine news from the mother country. I say it is most important, not only from the Canadian point of view but from the imperial point of view also, that our newspapers should be supplied directly from the mother country and get the benefit of low cable rates. Some years ago I happened to attend at the Mansion House in London a very important meeting, convened by the advocates of cheap telegraphic communications. It was presided over by a former Governor General, the Duke of Argyle, and there were present some of the highest authorities in the empire. Members of the Imperial Government, Ex-Governors General, men of the standing of Lord Milner and Lord Strathcona. Lord Curzon was not present but he wrote a letter to the Chairman in which he stated:

> Cheap fares, cheap postal rates, and a cheap and well served press have all played their part in the remarkable growth of Imperial feeling in recent years, but in my opinion a cheap telegraphic service will do more than all these combined.

The Imperial Press Conference was held in London three or four years ago with great eclat, and produced a great impression throughout the whole British Empire. Must I remind the Postmaster General of the following resolution which was then unanimously adopted:

> That for the achievement of better and cheaper electrical communication within the empire, it is one of the essentials that there should be state-owned electric communication between the British islands and Canada across the Atlantic ocean, and also state-control of electric communication across Canada between the Atlantic and Pacific cable service.

Mr. Asquith, who was introduced at that conference by some of our journalists showed himself to be in full sympathy with the aims of the Press Conference as regards the cable situation. As a result of the conference and of the efforts made by the journalists to obtain lower rates, the Pacific cable rates were immediately lowered. The Pacific cable is owned, as we all know, jointly by the Mother Country, Canada, Australia and New Zealand, and is under a board that sits in London, the representative of Canada on that board being no less a personage than Lord Strathcona himself. I have not the figures before me, but the reduction on press rates made by the Pacific cable was substantial. It was reduced to nine pence. And, as a result the Eastern Telegraph Company, which is the great rival of the Pacific cable in that portion of the British Empire, immediately reduced its rates, thus bringing about a result which for many years had been sought by the public of Australia.

When I was in England some years ago advocating, not a state-owned cable but a reduction in the cable rates, after some pourparlers with the cable companies, I was given to understand that we could obtain, after a certain period of time, a substantial reduction. I always assumed that for the urgent cables the present rate might remain—one shilling a word. But I expected that for the social messages, the non-urgent messages, a clear reduction of sixpence a word would be obtained. I hold that the reduction obtained through the good offices of the Postmaster General of England in his interviews with the cable compagnies is absolutely insufficient and will be of little advantage to the Canadian consumer. My hon. friend (Mr. Pelletier) should therefore strive to obtain further reductions, and I would advise him after the session to go to Great Britain and interview the postal authorities and assert the rights of the Canadian consumer. It is not practical—I will say more, it is not patriotic—that the Canadian and the British people should be, as regards cables across the Atlantic, in the hands of an American monopoly.

Now, if my hon. friend cannot obtain the reduction which we advocated, and which I expected we would obtain, there is only one solution of the difficulty—we must have a state-owned cable across the Atlantic between Canada and Great Britain, just as we have the Pacific cable from Australia to Vancouver. I may be told that this would mean an extravagant expenditure for Canada. Before the last Imperial Conference I prepared for the use of the Prime Minster (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), who was then leaving Canada, a memorandum on this question. That is, the memorandum was prepared under my direction by one of the ablest officers of the Post Office Department, Mr. Wm. Smith, who has had great experience in such matters and who was even the adviser of the Newfoundland government some years ago on the question of cable and post office. Now, here is the proposition laid before the Prime Minister of that day before he left for the Imperial Conference:

The cost of a first class cable laid between Canada and Great Britain is placed at $2,000,000,—

Not $5,000,000 as stated by my hon. friend from East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong).

, Mr. Baxendale, the general manager of the Pacific cable, thinks the amount might be reduced with safety, but it is better to be overprudent.

Stations fully equipped for work must be provided at each end of line. For the cost of these we look to the Pacific cable accounts. This we may do with confidence that the figures will be high enough, as some of the stations are in remote and lonely places, and have to be fitted up with a degree of comfort and luxury which would be unnecessary in places in which the circumstances are more favourable. There are six stations in connection with the Pacific cable, and the cost of their construction was £114,512. On this basis the cost of these two stations would be £38,171, or rather less than $190,000. The cost of the cable ship for the Pacific cable was $365,355. We shall adopt these figures for a cable ship on the Atlantic. The total capital expenditure would, therefore, be $2,555,355. There will be an annual charge for interest and sinking fund for the repayment of the capital expenditure at the end of fifty years. I had the actuary of the Annuities Branch calculate the amount of this annual charge, which would be $76,661 for interest and $22,654 for the sinking fund, the rate being 3 per cent.

Proceeding on this basis, the annual charges for the Atlantic cable would be as follows:—

Expenditure.
Interest on capital outlay..	$ 76,661
Sinking fund..	22,654
Head office expenses..	30,727
Cable stations (salaries and expenses)..	71,360
Cable ship (salaries and expenses)..	57,571
Reserve and general renewal fund....	3,500
Total..	$292,472

Now Sir this is the expenditure, what about the anticipated revenue?

Mr. LEMIEUX.

The actual business passing between Great Britain and Australia by the Pacific cable last year was 960,000 words. All this business went over one or other of the Atlantic cables last year. The Canadian business with Great Britain is not exactly known, but the British post office, in a confidential memorandum written in 1908, placed the business at 2,500,000 words a year. If the rate were made 12½ cents per word between Great Britain and eastern Canada, 1 cent a word would be required for the land lines in Great Britain and 2½ cents per word for lines in Canada. This would leave 9 cents for the Atlantic cable. At 9 cents a word, the present business would yield a revenue of $311,400. This amount would pay all expenses, which are put on a most liberal scale, and yield a surplus of $18,928. There would at once be a vast increase in the business consequent on the 50 per cent reduction in the charges, and before the first year was over the surplus could not fail to be from $100,000 to $150,000.

Now, I had this very conservative report prepared by one of the experts of Canada, and I may say one of the experts in the cable world, Mr. Smith, of the Post Office Department in Canada. We must not minimize the ability of our public servants. I consider Mr. Smith as a decided authority on the cable question. The figures which I quote this evening have been revised by Sir Sandford Fleming, who is also one of the great authorities in the world on the cable question, and I consider these figures are very conservative. Therefore, if the British Postmaster General and the cable companies cannot come to an agreement whereby a substantial reduction will be given to consumers in Canada, and if the British government declines to be a party to joint state-owned cables, then the clear duty of His Majesty's government in Canada is to establish a state-owned cable across the Atlantic. $2,200,000 is a very small capital indeed for a country so rich, so prosperous, so intensely Imperial as Canada is, with no loss in perspective, with a large and buoyant revenue indeed, and with a surplus, a thing which I am sure will receive favour by my very conservative friend, the Minister of Finance.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think I have shown clearly the advantage of having cheap cable rates. From an Imperial point of view, from a purely Canadian point of view, from a business point of view, we should have cheap telegraphic communication with the mother country. In order to educate properly the Canadian public, in order that the wells of information may not be tainted or poisoned, we should have a cheap press rate between Canada and the mother country. The cable companies are in some degree at the mercy of the British Postmaster General, because, before operating in England, they must have from the British Postmaster General what we call the landing privilege. He holds a big stick in his hands, and it is probably because of that stick that the other day he forced the cable monopoly to reduce, but in a very small degree, the rates between Canada and the mother country. Failing a further reduction, I say that we must have a state-owned cable. Mr. Speaker, I wish to conclude by moving the following motion.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (Lambton). Might I ask the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux) to be good enough to listen to the position which I was placed in. While I referred several times to the motion I intended to move, yet I sat down without moving it. If the hon. gentleman would be good enough—it is the same—

Mr. LEMIEUX. Before my hon. friend proceeds, I wish to say that I listened with pleasure to him the other day for a whole afternoon, and he gave certainly most interesting information to the House, not only on cable rates, but on telegraphic, telephone and postal rates. I think, however, that he neglected the cables in favour of the other subjects he had discussed. I had taken it upon myself to proffer these few remarks, and at the same time, to give notice to the Postmaster General of the motion which I intended to move. Now my hon. friend from Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) knew that this evening; he preceded me, he made his remarks, I listened to his remarks, and I hope now that he will listen to my motion and vote for it. I move:

That in the opinion of this House steps should be taken by the Postmaster General with a view to obtaining a further reduction in cable rates between Canada and Great Britain.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). I have listened to both speeches to-night with a great deal of interest. I sympathise with both speakers, but I go further. I am in favour of immediate action by the Canadian government in the direction of state ownership and state operation of telegraphs, telephones and cables in this country. There is an old Greek proverb that says: 'If you wish to play upon the harp, you must play upon the harp.' If you wish to get a reduction in tolls of this kind, the only way to get them, is to get them, and the way to get them is by state operation and competition with the various companies. They are monopolists, they are in the position of dividing great profits among themselves; and as long as you say, We ask you, as a favour, to come down in your rates, they will never do it. But if you go after them with competition by the state, you will effect your purpose. As I have stated in this House before, the monopoly that control cables has its centre in London. It was the most powerful monopoly that was known in London, it was able to reach by its enormous influence, more members of parliament and more members of the cabinet in England than any other monopoly. To-day it is that powerful in England that it is in a position to check, to control the action even of the Postmaster General of Canada. But something worse than that has happened. The control of the Atlantic cables has passed to the Americans, to the very same Americans who control the telegraph companies in the United States, who control the Bell Telephone company in the United States, and the Bell Telephone in Canada, and who have to-day the Canadian Pacific railway and the Great Northwestern Telegraph companies also in their pool and in alliance with them.

The cable, telegraph and telephone business in Canada and the United States is all under this American control which is in alliance with financial interests in London, it is a great interest with connections in every country and so has been able to influence even the Postmaster General and have him hold his hand. So there is no hope of the reductions we would like to see unless we resort to state competition. As the late Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) has said, it would cost only $2,200,000 to equip a first class cable between Canada and Great Britain. A sinking fund would provide that amount, we would secure immediate reduction in tolls and public control in British hands. It is absurd and shows a lack of national and imperial policy to allow capitalists in another country to control the cable and telegraph system of the British Empire. The Germans would not stand such a thing for a day. The time has come in Canada and in the motherland and in other sister states of the empire, for government control, ownership and operation, of all cables, telegraphs and telephones. If we inaugurated a state-owned cable we would have to control the land lines in the interest of that cable. In England they control the cable companies in a way, they have the whip hand there over the cable companies, but it is not effective. If we had a state-owned cable to England and a state-owned telegraph system in connection with a telephone service, every country in the empire and the motherland itself would be able to give these services for one-third the present rates. This would give the press of the empire a first-class news service. I agree with the quotation that has been read from the Duke of Argyle that the greatest boon would be free telegraph and cable service in the interests of the empire. The only way to create a world-wide public opinion is to have the freest interchange by the press of the expressions of public opinion in the different countries. That to-day is impossible. The cable despatches to-day are condensed. they should be much longer and fuller and the only possible means of securing an improved news service is a state-owned cable.

I have pointed out that this principle of state competition with private owned monopoly is the key to the situation in every one of the great public franchises. In Ontario we have found how effective it is in connection with the distribution of electrical energy, in fact it has been found effective wherever it has been tried. I would like to see it tried, I do not want any commission to gather information for me, all I want is to see the thing put in operation. If a state-owned cable were put in operation between Canada and Great Britain to-day I venture to say that all the companies would reduce their prices and be prepared to sell out to the state at a reasonable rate. Let us have immediately a state-owned Canadian and British cable. If we say we want it the mother country cannot refuse to assume one-half the cost, so important would it be in the interests of the empire, of commerce and journalism. As yet we have not come to that view of the situation and that aggressive enterprise which says: In the interest of our country and of the empire we want a state-owned cable between here and the motherland. The Pacific cable which is a state-owned proposition is proving a great success, it is binding Australia to Canada and to the mother country and has proved that a state-owned cable for a long distance and in a zone where there is less business than on the Atlantic can be made to pay its way. The Atlantic zone has such an immense business and is so profitable that if we had one cable to-morrow, we would have to install another before three months.

Mr. PUGSLEY. How do the rates on the Pacific compare with those on the Atlantic?

Mr MACLEAN (South York). Comparatively, they are cheaper.

Mr. LEMIEUX. They are actually higher, but in proportion to the distance they are lower.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). For the distance and they are taxed the big end of the earnings for the Atlantic section.

Mr. LEMIEUX. It is a question of average. They are cheaper when you compare the distance.

Mr. PUGSLEY. You could not take the proportion of distance because when a cable is once laid under the ocean, the only charge is the interest on the capital expenditure.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). The business is not to be compared with the Atlantic zone. There is so much business there, that if we started one cable we would have to have half-a-dozen in a short time and the result would be, that the undertaking would be an immense success. There is no state that does not control its own cables, except Canada, the United States, and one or two others. All the progressive countries of Europe, and they are away ahead of us in progressiveness, own their telephone and telegraph services and some of them have their cable services under the ocean, and they would not depart from that principle, it would be treason to propose in Germany that the land lines or cables should pass out of state control. So with other countries in Europe the efficacy of state ownership has been proved. They talk about cheap telephones in Ontario, but look at the services in Denmark, in Germany, even in Russia. In all European countries there is a good service which is allied with the post office, the centre of communications of all kinds. In that way, the public are saved, they control the whole thing, and the secrecy of the telegraph is maintained. That is an important feature. It is risky for the Empire of Great Britain to be subject to the United States in cabling, to have their messages come under the control of Americans.

If they are told: if you do not do it, Canada will do it, then we will have a state-owned cable and we will get control of our own lines. Two Canadian telegraph lines are in alliance against the Canadian people with this great American monopoly, and the telegraph rates in this country to-day are enormous, and unnecessary, and will be continued as long as we submit to them. The Canadian Pacific railway telegraph charges are twice what they should be, and they are twice in the west what they are in the east and yet the wires are loaded with business. The Railway Commission may bring about some reform, but the only way to bring about a radical cure is to go into competition with them. Let me tell hon. gentlemen what the force of good example does. Immediately after the discussion we had in this House on the parcel post system, the 'New York Tribune' and other papers said: Here, you legislators at Washington, what are you doing; you are making no headway with the parcel post, Canada has declared in her parliament in favour of a parcel post system connected with the postal department and you had better wake up. Well, since that motion was carried in this parliament, they have become active in the United States; fright has seized the express companies and they are offering to reduce their rates or to sell out. The United States despatches to-day say that a measure has been introduced into Congress to buy out all the express companies in the United States for their actual valuation of thirty-nine million dollars. And, in addition to these physical assets of thirty-nine million dollars, the American express companies to-day have in their coffers one hundred and fifty million dollars worth of securities that they have saved after paying enormous dividends to their shareholders.

Mr. LEMIEUX. What is the capitalization of the American companies?

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). Oh, it is very small actually. It has been enlarged several times in the way of water, but the companies are controlled by the railway companies over which they operate. I may tell the Postmaster General that if he does not hurry up and get his parcel post system going—and I know he is going to give his energy to it—we will see a splendid parcel post system in the United States before we have it in Canada. In the United States the Interstate Commerce Commission has turned its attention to express rates, and the express companies have been discovered to be guilty of the worst kind of petty larceny from their patrons. It has been found that they have collected double rates time after time. After the rate has been prepaid along comes the driver representing these express monopolies in the United States and he collects a second rate in many cases. The Americans see that to-day they are carrying the parcel post of foreign countries through their own country for one-third the price they have to pay on parcels shipped by the express monopolies and the people of the United States will not long stand that kind of thing. I do not disagree with the suggestion of the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) that this should be made the subject of inquiry by commission, nor do I disagree with the late Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) that further conferences should take place, but I do say that nothing of that kind will be effective; the only way to get at these companies is for us to get into the business ourselves. The new principle of this twentieth century in connection with these great monopolies owned and controlled by private companies is that, if you cannot buy them out at a fair price you should go into competition with them. They got their franchises giving them the right to operate in the country and that imposed upon them the duty of dealing out fair treatment to the public and of giving the public a reasonable toll. These companies have failed in their obligation to the people and, having failed, the state is justified in going into competition with them. If we cannot have state ownership, let us have state competition. The cost of stringing telegraph wires across this country is comparatively small, the right of way is easily obtained; we have better poles than are to be found in any other country in the world; we can make the copper wire here if necessary out of our own copper, and indeed telegraph construction in Canada is so cheap that the companies are ashamed to show what it actually costs in comparison with their capitalization. I declare for state competition, and I declare we should start it now. Start it and watch the coon come down and see how quick he will come down when you announce that you are going into the business. As long as they can put us off with promises of concessions, they will do nothing serious. Recently, the public did get a concession, and, strange to say, that concession came one week after the discussion I raised in this House. The coon came down to that extent. It did not happen accidentally; I do not claim the credit for it myself, but I claim that the discussion in this House is entitled to that credit. You will get nothing from those monopolies if you merely say you will negotiate with them. Go into the telephone business and give our farmers cheap phones. I heard reference to-night to the case of Manitoba, and no doubt there have been increases there, and that should be so, but I do believe that the people of Manitoba and Saskatchewan and Alberta would not part with their public owned telegraph system on any account.

Mr. LALOR. What are the telephone charges in Manitoba?

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). I can not give the exact figures, but I know that reductions were made when the province took them over, and we would have reductions in Ontario if we had state-owned telephones.

Mr. MACDONALD. Has not the price been raised in Manitoba?

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). Suppose it has?

Mr. MACDONALD. That is not an answer.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). There has been some change in the rate, and the Manitoba government was taunted for not having quite realized what it promised to do.

Mr. OLIVER. That is a very mild statement of it.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). Well, I will go so far as to admit, if you like, that public ownership in Manitoba has failed, but I will point the hon. gentleman fifty other instances where it has been a great success in other countries.

Mr. NESBITT. Name one.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). Denmark is one; seven dollars a year for a telephone to every farmer in Denmark.

Mr. NESBITT. Why did you not go further for an example?

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). Because that is the best example of public ownership. There is a gentleman who is ashamed of public ownership; he is ashamed of the people of Canada, and he thinks they are not competent to go into the business and be trusted with public affairs of that kind. I am prepared to trust the Canadian people in connection with public ownership; I am ready to say to the people of Canada, take over the terminal elevators. I am prepared to see the people of Canada handle their railways, and this government has its one opportunity to make good in regard to public ownership in connection with the Intercolonial railway. There is a great national asset we have. It is based on public ownership. It has not done as well as it could do, but it can be made to do well if it is administered in the public interest.

Mr. MACDONALD. What do you think they should do about the Intercolonial railway?

Mr. MACLEAN. (South York) I would propose to run it as an absolute public proposition, and to extend it to where the traffic is. Bring it into the province of Ontario, and we make it the greatest railway in Canada. Bring it to Toronto and on to the Detroit river. Put it into Winnipeg. I stood in this House 15 years ago, when the late Mr. Blair was Minister of Railways, and when the proposal was made to build the Rainy River railway in connection with the Canadian Northern, and said that the way to increase the railway accommodation of the west was to make that line a portion of the Intercolonial, to bring the Intercolonial immediately from Montreal to the Georgian bay, there connect it with boats, build a line around the lakes, carry it to Winnipeg, and from there spread it all over the northwest. If that had been done at that time, the Canadian west would have had a state-owned railway that would have solved all problems. The lines would have been laid out in a scientific way, so as to secure the greatest efficiency all over the country. There is not efficiency in any railway system of the west to-day, because too many of the lines parallel one another.

Mr. MACDONALD. Is not the Intercolonial all right as it is now?

Mr. MACLEAN. (South York) It could be much better. What is the one way out of the difficulty in connection with the coal strike in England to-day? There is very little hope of a settlement unless the state takes over the coal business. I do not know that I am such a state socialist as to advocate that, but the people of England are coming pretty close to it. At the beginning of this year all the telephone lines in England went into the British post office, and they are now being administered in connection with it. The people's experience of state-owned telegraphs was so good that they took over the telephones, and they must now go into the cable business. They cannot stop at telegraphs and telephones when the cables remain undealt with. To my mind there is nothing for us to do but to get into the business without delay, and to say that we are going to have a state-owned cable. We ought to pass a resolution to that effect this session, and then you would see how the rates would come down. There would be a three-penny rate for all messages between Canada and England.

Mr. CROTHERS. Is not free trade a remedy for all these things?

Mr. MACLEAN. (South York) Perhaps the hon. gentleman can tell us that. There should be a national policy in regard to other things as well as tariffs; but I will not go into that to-night. The more I study this matter in the light of the experience of other countries, the more convinced I am that if you cannot have state ownership, state competition is the one remedy that will bring down tolls. The solution of the northwest railway problem is to put an absolutely state-owned railway in the Canadian west.

Mr. SPEAKER. Might I remind the hon. member that the question is in regard to cables.

Mr. MACLEAN. (South York) The hon. gentleman questioned me in regard to state ownership.

Mr. LEMIEUX. May I be allowed to say that I quite agree with my hon. friend in his suggestion that we should advocate a state-owned cable, and I might have mentioned it in my amendment; but, as it would involve an expenditure of money, I had to avoid it.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). I apologize, Mr. Speaker, for trespassing on your good nature, and I will conclude by saying that the way to bring about the reform is to get into the business of state ownership.

Mr. F. R. LALOR (Haldimand). Mr. Speaker, I have heard the question of the nationalization of telephones, telegraphs and cable lines discussed in this House from time to time. This may be of advantage, and probably is, to the great newspapers of this country which want to gather news cheaply from Great Britain and other countries of Europe, and also to our great manufacturing and commercial centres. But I want to say on behalf of the farmers of this country that there are other things of much greater importance to them than any of these fads. How many people in this country use a cable line? I venture to say not 5 per cent of the people of Canada.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Why?

Mr. LALOR. Because they have no use for it.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Because the rates are too high.

Mr. LALOR. Even if the rates were low, they would not use it. I speak as a business man. Occasionally I send a cablegram, but it is of very little importance to me whether we have a state-owned cable line or not, because I use the cable so seldom; and as far as 95 per cent of the people of this country are concerned, I do not believe they are at all interested in cheap cable messages or in a state-owned cable. They would not use it and it would be of little or no value to them. The same thing applies to the nationalization of the telegraph lines. How many of the people of this country use the telegraph lines? I venture to say that 90 per cent of the people of this country do not send one telegram in 12 months. They are of no importance to the farmers of this country. Are the telegraph rates high? You can send a telegram from the town in which I live to Montreal for 25 cents, and you can send a night letter of I think 50 words for 25 cents.

Is there any general demand for anything cheaper than that? Would it be any great advantage to the people of this country that it should be any cheaper? It may be an advantage to a few people who are interested in telegraph lines to a very great extent, but the great majority of our people are not interested in the question whatever. I believe that private capital and enterprise should develop, not only the cable and telegraph lines, but the telephone lines as well. In the county which I represent, rural telephone companies have covered the entire district with telephones. They give the farmers a telephone for $12 per year, and I doubt very much, if in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta, where the province owns these lines, the telephone service is as cheap, or any cheaper at any rate, than it is throughout the province of Ontario, where local telephone companies have been formed, and are operating efficiently. I say, Mr. Speaker, that this question is of very little importance to the great majority of the people. It may be an advantage to the few, but it is not an advantage to the many. Gentlemen who come from the cities, from the commercial centres, may be interested and they do advocate these schemes in the House from time to time, but let me tell the Postmaster General that the farmers of Canada are interested in something of very much more importance to them than projects of this kind, which have been brought before the House. They are interested to-day in a rural mail delivery.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. LALOR. If this government wants to do something in the interest of the farmers, that is a matter which they might properly undertake. The farmers are not even interested so much in the parcel post system concerning which we have heard a great deal. Is there any reason why parcels should be carried from Toronto to Vancouver for the same price as they would be carried for, from the town in which I live to Toronto? I do not believe the government should go into that business, and compete with the express companies at the same rate throughout the whole of Canada. The former Postmaster General gave the farmers a little taste of what rural mail delivery is like. He adopted a system of rural mail delivery upon the main mail routes, and I want to tell him that the farmers who received their newspapers and letters daily upon these routes are so interested in it, that in other parts of the province—and I can speak more particularly of Ontario than of any other province, because I am more familiar with it—are strongly asking for the benefits or rural mail delivery and they will never be satisfied until they get it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. LALOR. I hope that the Postmaster General and the government will not delay any time in giving to the Ontario farmers a proper system of rural mail delivery. Why should they not have it? The farmers contribute to the revenues of Canada to a very great extent, as we all know. They produce the wealth of this country, and it is upon the farmers that we mainly depend in Canada.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would like to remind the hon. gentleman that he is wandering from the question, which is that of cable rates.

Mr. LALOR. Perhaps I am a little out of order in discussing the questions of rural mail delivery and telephone nationalization, but if I have trespassed it is because others have trespassed before me. I want to say in conclusion that the farmers want from this government rural mail delivery in preference to any of these fads that we have heard discussed in this House from time to time this session.

Mr. NESBITT. I would not have said anything on the subject had not the hon. member for South York (Mr. Maclean), made the statement that I was opposed to public ownership, because I asked him a question. I did not say that I was opposed to public ownership, but I do say now that I am opposed to any hon. member taking up the time of the House in talking about some fad, talking in generalities and making a lot of statements in support of which he is not prepared to produce one tittle of evidence. I asked the hon. gentleman a question about Denmark, but I doubt whether he knows anything more about that country than he knows about Manitoba, and that is nothing. Even if they do have rural telephones and telegraphs in Denmark for seven dollars, it does not take very much of a telegraph line to cover the whole burg. Besides that, I doubt, as I said before, whether he knows anything about what they do in Denmark.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). Thank you.

Mr. NESBITT. I am opposed to general statements being made without producing facts before a lot of business men such as we are supposed to be in this House.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). Hear, hear.

Mr. NESBITT. The hon. gentleman talked about cable rates, but he wandered over many subjects, and it is surprising that he did not touch upon aviation before he concluded. He certainly talked a lot about building railways, and that has no connection with cables.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). Hear, hear.

Mr. NESBITT. I would not have spoken if the hon. gentleman had not stated that I was opposed to public ownership. I am opposed to public ownership if it is not carried on in a business way. Talk about carrying a thing for nothing, the state cannot do business for nothing any more than can a private corporation. As a matter of fact in regard to telephones the Manitoba authorities had to arrange their rates.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York). I did not say they had not done so. I said I admitted it.

Mr. NESBITT. You said you did not know anything about it, which I can quite believe. I would like to emphatically endorse what my hon. friend from Haldimand (Mr. Lalor) said, as to what the farmers are interested in. The farmers of Ontario, in common with those of the other provinces, help to pay the taxes and they are making no grumble over it. They are paying their fair proportion and they would like to share in some of the benefits resulting from the progress of the country. I hope the Postmaster General will follow up the policy which was inaugurated by his predecessor and make a point of seeing that the farmers get rural mail delivery in a systematic way.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton). I would like to say a few words with reference to the motion now before the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member has exhausted his right to speak a second time.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton). Surely, Mr. Speaker, I have not exhausted my right to speak with reference to the amendment which the member for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux) has presented to the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. The original motion is for the Speaker to leave the Chair in order that the House may go into Committee of Supply, to which the hon. gentleman has already spoken. An amendment has been moved now, and I think the hon. member having expressed himself on the original motion, it would not be in order for him to speak again.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton). But this is supposed to be an amendment is it not? Do I understand, Mr. Speaker, that I have not the privilege of speaking to the amendment offered by the member for Rouville?

Mr. PELLETIER. Perhaps I may be allowed to make a suggestion. The motion to go into Committee of Supply was made by the Minister of Finance, and my hon. friend from East Lambton, (Mr. Armstrong) spoke to that without proposing any resolution. Then the member for Rouville presented an amendment to the main motion, and I would submit, Mr. Speaker, that by the rules of the House, a new question is before the House on the amendment. I should therefore, think that the hon. member for East Lambton would have the right to speak.

Mr. SPEAKER. Following the usual practice, the hon. member would have the right to speak, but, unless my memory is very much in fault, it has been ruled in this House that when a motion is made to go into Committee of Supply, and an hon. gentleman has once spoken, on it, he has not the right to speak again upon an amendment to that motion. Personally, I am not opposed to any hon. member speaking, but I would like as far as possible, to facilitate the work of the House, and keep members within the customary usages. Of course, if it is the pleasure of the House to allow the hon. gentleman to proceed, I have no objection whatever.

Mr. HENDERSON. With regard to what has been the practice, according to my recollection, in a case of this kind, the member for East Lambton would have a perfect right to speak, but I think he would be obliged to confine himself to the amendment. That is the view I take on the point, and I think it has been so ruled by former Speakers.

Mr. SPEAKER. No matter who speaks after the amendment is moved, the rule is, that he should confine himself to the amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is quite correct, Mr. Speaker, in my opinion.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton). That is what I wish to do—to confine myself to the amendment now before the House, a copy of which I have before me. The ex-Postmaster General, the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux), has presented an amendment asking for a reduction in the cable rates between Canada and Great Britain. He is well aware that the Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier) has taken steps in that direction. I am surprised that the hon. gentleman should take this means of preventing me from placing before the House the motion which he well knew, from the remarks I made this evening, that I intended to move. Taking advantage of the fact that I happened to sit down without making the motion and did not wish to interfere with his speech, he proceeded to bring in a motion to take away a portion of that which he knew full well I desired to place before the House. It was a very clever piece of business, no doubt. But he knows that the motion he has made is a mere academic motion and has no meaning worth speaking of. It is strange that the ex-Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) becomes so anxious to deal with this question. He was for a number of years the Postmaster General of this Dominion and was in a position to deal with these matters effectively. But instead of doing so, he waits until he is placed in opposition, and then tries to run away with a portion of a resolution which he knew was on the order paper. But we saw the hon. gentleman, when Postmaster General, forced to effect reforms in the public interest. We remember how year after year he condemned rural free mail delivery. Again and again in this House he has spoken of it as a luxury, and said it could not be thought of for Canada until we had twenty millions of people. He condemned it in every way, shape and form. But a few days previous to an election he stands on a platform in Niagara and tells the people of Canada what a wonderful boon he is going to give to them in rural free mail delivery. I believe that the time has come when we should take steps in this House to provide means by which we could protect at least the resolutions we place on the order paper so that they could not be made use of as we have seen them made use of here within the last few weeks. The hon. member himself (Mr. Lemieux), on the occasion a few weeks ago when I was talking on this important subject, rose during my remarks and made this statement, as will be found at page 2330 of the unrevised 'Hansard':

Mr. LEMIEUX. I understand many members of the House would like to speak on this question and, as I am afraid if the hon. gentleman speaks until six o'clock, the question will be automatically out of the order paper, therefore I would ask the hon. member to move the adjournment.

The hon. gentleman knows full well that that matter was left over and that the following day a portion of it was taken up by another member of this House and dealt with to a certain extent. A little later I withdrew it from the order paper for the purpose of bringing it up on going into supply and dealing with it definitely, according to the motion I had prepared.

Mr. LEMIEUX. On the occasion to which he refers the hon. gentleman himself spoke for three hours on the subject.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton). Mr. Speaker, it was not two hours. And if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lemieux) could place on 'Hansard' more definite and useful material for the benefit of those discussing this question, than I did, I should be glad to give way to him. If, instead of bringing in an academic motion which on the face of it means nothing, the hon. gentleman had fallen in behind the motion which he knew I expected to place before the House, he would have been supporting something worthy of him. That motion would have declared:

That, in the opinion of this House, a commission should be appointed to investigate the systems of National telegraphs and telephones, wireless telegraphs and cables; also postal conditions, laws and regulations, parcel post, means of collecting and distributing mails, with a view to submitting such data and information to the Post Office Department as would help to improve existing conditions in all the above; and to further inquire into postal facilities in rural districts in other countries in order that a better system of rual free mail delivery may be inaugurated.

The labours of this commission would result in gathering such facts and figures that even the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) would be satisfied that the House could deal intelligently with these 'fads,' as the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Lalor) chooses to call them. It is not so many years ago since many of these hon. gentlemen looked upon free rural mail delivery as a fad. The day is not far distant when we, as a parliament, will be compelled to take up these matters and deal with them definitely. Some hon. members seem to think that national organization of the telegraph and telephone is not in the interest of the people of the rural districts. In the figures I gave the House I showed that there were 460 independent telephone companies in the province of Ontario at the mercy of a public corporation that was all-powerful. And instead of our being able to control the trunk lines and connect up these independent companies, giving them long distance rates at cost, these hon. gentlemen are glad to have this concern make the amount of money out of this service that it is making at the present time.

However, I do not wish to take up more time. I have only to say that I am surprised at the ex-Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) not being generous enough to allow me to read the motion which I expected, and which he fully knew I expected and intended, to place before the House this evening.

Hon. Mr. PUGSLEY. I believe I express the opinion of the majority if not of all the members here present when I say that my hon. friend from East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) has no reason whatever to find fault with the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Armstrong) concluded his remarks and took his seat without presenting his motion to the House. My hon. friend from Rouville had every reason to believe that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Armstrong) did not intend to make a motion. So that it was quite in order for my hon. friend from Rouville to make his remarks and to submit his resolution to the House.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton). May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? Did not I refer several times to the motion I intended to move? And in starting out did not I distinctly state that I was bringing forward the notice of motion to which I had referred some weeks ago in the form of a motion to be placed before the House?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I was here during a portion of the time my hon. friend was speaking, and certainly I was not impressed with the idea, when he got through with his speech, that he had forgotten anything. I thought he had entirely concluded his speech and done all he intended to do in presenting his views to the House. Then it was quite in order for my hon. friend from Rouville (Mr. Lemieux) to present his motion, after the conclusion of his speech; and it would have been entirely out of order for him to allow his motion to stand and a motion made by the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) to take its place. The hon. member for East Lambton no doubt unfortunately forgot to make his motion; but that is an accident which may happen to any of us. He may have been a little excited at the moment, his memory may have been overwhelmed by the importance of the subject he was dealing with, and consequently he forgot the important thing—in his own estimation—of submitting his motion to the House. He complains of the amendment of my hon. friend from Rouville as being academic. Well, it is not academic beyond what every private member of this House may say on a subject when he has no power of making a proposition which would involve the expenditure of public money. All my hon. friend could do was to move that in the opinion of this House it was desirable that the cable rates should be still further lowered, and urging the Postmaster General to take steps to that end. That is substantially the motion which I have great pleasure in seconding.

Now during the discussion, remarks have been made in favour of the government proceeding at once to establish a state-owned cable. I do not wish to be understood, in seconding this motion, as committing myself to the principle of a state-owned cable at the present time. The time may come, and may come sooner perhaps than most of us expect, when it may be in the public interest to establish a state-owned cable, but I do not think that time has yet arrived. The cable companies have responded I think very well to the public demand for a reduction, and they have made a considerable reduction. But if the reduction is not sufficient in the opinion of this government, they have the remedy in their own hands. There are two at least of the cable lines which have their Atlantic termini in Canada, I think more than two. As to those companies at all events having their Atlantic termini in Canada this parliament can legislate, this parliament has power to place their tolls and rates under the control of the Board of Railway Commissioners who can determine what should be fair and proper rates to allow, just the same as they are now able to control railway rates. It does seem to me that before this country plunges into a very large expense for the establishment of a new cable line, an effort ought to be made to bring these cable companies which have their Atlantic termini in Canada, under the control of the board of Railway Commissioners In 1910 an Act was passed which made provision that the Board of Railway Commissioners should have control of the rates of cable companies connected with land lines in Canada, and by section 6 of that Act it was provided that the Act should come into force upon similar provision being made by the proper authority in the United Kingdom and upon proclamation by the Governor in Council. Now it would appear that the government of Great Britain has taken no action towards providing similar legislation. It seems to me that my hon. friend the Postmaster General should communicate with the Imperial authorities upon the subject, and if they decide that they will not take action along the lines taken by this parliament, then this parliament ought to strike out section 6 of the statute and act upon its own account, act on behalf of the people of Canada, and make provision that in respect of these cable companies their rates must be such as the Board of Railway Commissioners may think reasonable. I think in that way the people of Canada could be assured of reasonable and fair tolls. But before that experiment is tried, without trying the experiment of having these tolls submitted to the Board of Railway Commissioners, I for one would not be prepared to give any encouragement to the proposition to go to the very large expenditure which would be involved in the establishment and operation of a cable system to be owned by the state.

Reference has been made to a state-owned cable on the Pacific ocean. Now I asked the hon. member for Toronto, how the cable rates upon the Pacific compared with the rates established by the cable companies on the Atlantic, and he stated, I think correctly, that the cable rates from land to land are higher, but the distances are greater, and that it would not be fair to compare the rates arbitrarily without taking into account the distances. But it must be borne in mind that the ocean distance ought not to be a governing factor, because when a cable is once laid there are no stations to be maintained on the ocean, there are no expenses to be borne at all except the ordinary expenses of making repairs from time to time. Therefore, one could not expect that the cable rates upon the Pacific would be, in proportion to the distance, so much greater than the rates upon the Atlantic. Whether a cable is owned by a company or whether it is owned by the state, certain tolls must be charged. It cannot be expected that the government would operate a cable at a great loss to the people at large; because, as has been remarked by the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Lalor), it is only a small proportion of the public who use these cables. Reference has been made by the hon. member for Toronto to what he calls excessive telegraph rates. I agree with the hon. gentlemen who have spoken on the subject, that the public has reason, I think, not to be too severe upon the telegraph companies so far as their operations on the land are concerned. I think the reductions which they have made recently in rates have been reasonable and fair reductions. As he has stated, telegrams can be sent for long distances in Canada at 25 to 30 cents, and lately provision has been made for night lettergrams, which are very cheap indeed, and are found to be a great convenience. I do not wish to take up any more time of the House. I only desired to call attention to the statute we have on the subject, and to suggest to the Postmaster General, if he would allow me to do so, that it might not be inopportune to communicate with the Imperial authorities with a view of suggesting legislation along the same lines as this parliament legislated in 1910; and if the British government decline to take any action, then he should consider the repeal of section 6, and allow the Board of Railway Commissioners to deal with the regulation of the rates and tolls of the cable companies which have land lines in Canada.

Hon. L. P. PELLETIER (Postmaster General). I regret that my hon. friend from East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong), has not been able to put his motion in your hands.

My hon. friend has given to this matter such careful attention, he has gone into his subject so fully that I think the country is indebted to him for the numerous facts he has disclosed. I am of opinion that there is a great deal in what he has said which would turn out to be in the public interest. The hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux) has told him he spoke too long. I do not think he has spoken one minute too long. In the whole course of his remarks he has not repeated one thing, he has placed hard facts before us and every hon. member who has heard him has learned something. The rules of the House prevent me from going at any length into the different matters in his original motion except perhaps by way of comparison. I may say to my hon. friend that after hearing his speech of the other day I read it in 'Hansard' and that the 'Hansard' of that day has been put on file in the department as a most valuable piece of information. I might suggest that after his instructive speech the commission he wanted to have appointed becomes almost unnecessary because I do not think any commission could give us more information than he has given us in the speech he has made.

As the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) has said the motion of the hon. member for Rouville is an academic one. I shall not go so far as to say that the hon. member for Rouville has put this motion before the House just for the sake of having the glory of starting this debate; I think his motives are higher than that.

But there is not much in the motion. The steps which the hon. member speaks of in the motion have been taken and I would like the country to believe that my hon. friend has advanced nothing very new to-night. He has gone on the lines on which the Post Office Department has been working for months so I think everybody should keep what belongs to him. What we have we will hold.

I am glad this matter has been brought before the House because it has given the hon. members on both sides an opportunity of discussing this very important question. The matter of cable rates has engaged the attention of preceding governments. It has been the subject of discussion in Imperial Conferences and I am of opinion that it is most important for this country that we secure reasonable cable rates. I have already said and in that I concur with the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Lalor) that there are other things which are more pressing in this country than cheap cable rates. I have said that I was in hopes before long that we would be able to place before the House a system of rural mail delivery which to my mind was much more important than the other subjects mentioned to-night. I am happy to say that since I then spoke I have had occasion and opportunity of putting before my colleagues in the government this question of rural delivery with the intention of placing it on a more businesslike basis, with less duplication, in short of having something which will appeal to the people and will serve them better than the existing loose system. I will have occasion before many days to ask the concurrence of this House in the creation of a special branch in the department to attend to this rural mail delivery for which the people are asking. It will cost some little money but the government have come to the conclusion that it will be money well spent. I am bound to say that we shall not go by leaps and bounds in this new policy. We shall have the counties mapped out in a regular way, so as to spend as little money as possible and to have at the same time as complete a service as possible. We shall have to take this matter up carefully and our friends in this House will have to understand that we will not be able to go into all the counties, that we must proceed by degrees and look ahead of us, not look at a particular township or parish, but at what is going to be the route to be followed from the point where we cease work this year and will begin next year, so as to have the whole thing arranged on a businesslike plan.

We have been told that the rural free mail delivery is in great demand. I believe in it, the government believes in it, and we will do our best to give the people of this country this rural mail delivery. It will help the people to read more, to know more, to educate themselves, to communicate with one another more frequently, and I think on the whole it will be considered that this government has conferred a boon on the people of this country. This, in my humble opinion, was the first question we had to take up. We are going to do so this session. As to the other points, we will be unable to look into them sufficiently to be able to propose any policy during the course of the present session. During the recess I shall take all the time at my disposal to go very carefully into this question to give every one of these questions mature consideration, and whilst I agree with the hon. member for Haldimand that rural mail delivery is of far more importance than these other matters, because it will give benefits to more people, I do not entirely agree with him as to the cheapness of cable and telegraph rates.

I do not attribute the fault to any particular company, but I am sorry as a Canadian, that our friends in Winnipeg have to get their European news through St. Paul and Minneapolis, and that the citizens of Vancouver have to get their European news through Seattle. If there is any way by which the Canadian people can get news from the old country over telegraph lines on Canadian territory, and through British sources, we will endeavour to bring that condition about. If we succeed in that. I think we will have accomplished something to promote the best interests of all Canada. I believe the telegraph rates are too high; I go so far as to say, they are excessive. We have been told that the farmers do not use the cable and that is true, but the trade of the country uses the cable, and the trade of the country exists for the benefit of the farmers just as well as for any other class, and as the policy of this government is to trade with England, we should have a cheap means of quick communication with the mother country with which we desire to trade. A cheap cable system is one of the missing links in our trade relations with Britain, and we must, in my opinion, do our utmost to make some progress towards attaining it. On the 4th of March there will be a sitting of the Board of Railway Commissioners in Winnipeg to inquire into some of these important questions and I have appointed counsel to represent my department and to ascertain for us if the telegraph rates are actually excessive. It may be that there is a combine to keep up these rates, and although we are sometimes taunted with being a government of combines, we have in this case, appointed counsel to attend this investigation in the interests of the public, and to place a report before the House. To the extent that if it is found that the telegraph rates are excessive, I can assure the House that we will come to the relief of the people. I very much regret to say that I have no very great encouragement to give the country to-night as to the reduction in cable rates. I do not wish to say anything in criticism of the Postmaster General of England, but I am bound to give the facts to this House. I am in almost constant correspondence with the right hon. Mr. Samuel, and I regret to say that he feels that we should not go any further at present in the direction indicated in the correspondence. I repeat my expression of regret at the attitude taken by Mr. Samuel. I have here an official letter, which I received from the right hon. gentleman lately, and the contents of which I shall communicate to the House. It is as follows:

General Post Office, London,
7th February, 1912.

Dear Mr. Pelletier,—In reply to your letter of the 8th ultimo, I need hardly say that I share your view as to the benefits of cheap cable rates.

While, however, I recognize in this connection the advantages which might be expected from a state-owned Atlantic cable, they are, in my opinion, outweighed by the fact that, under present conditions, such a cable would hardly be self-supporting, so that if one were laid any considerable reduction of rates could only be effected at the expense of the general taxpayers. As you are perhaps aware I spoke in some detail on this aspect of the matter during the discussion at the Imperial Conference in the last year.

Since the conference the position has changed in two ways—the projected combination of three of the Trans-Atlantic Cable Companies has become a fact and the reductions in cable rates I foreshadowed have been brought into operation. I do not think that we need regard these reductions as final. No doubt in due course further concessions may be expected without incurring the heavy expense of laying a government cable. This point was touched on in an answer by me in the House of Commons on the 12th of December last of which, as it deals also with the strategic argument for the cable, I inclose a copy.

Yours faithfully,
(Sgd.) HERBERT SAMUEL.

Hon. L. P. Pelletier, M.P.

The following are the remarks made by Mr. Samuel in the Imperial House of Commons and which are referred to in his letter:

There are thirteen cables from the United Kingdom to North America and all of them land on Canadian or Newfoundland territory This fact should be borne in mind in connection with the strategic considerations raised by the hon. member's question.

The land lines both in Canada and the United States are in the hands, not of the governments, but of private companies, and there is no guarantee under existing conditions that a state-owned cable, if laid, would be able to establish connections with the land lines in those countries. On this side, the British Post Office would not be able to supply the cable with such traffic, as the Anglo-American Cable Company is entitled, under an old agreement, to receive all trans-Atlantic cablegrams which are not ordered by the senders to be transmitted by a specified route. The business of the Pacific Cable Board is at present far from sufficient to justify laying an additional cable across the Atlantic in order to carry its traffic alone.

The hon. member's question is inaccurate in that it suggests that all the trans-Atlantic cable system is now under the control of one corporation. The Commercial Cable Company with five cables is not a party to the combination recently formed.

I have established, as a condition of the renewal or transfer of landing licenses, government control of the rates charged by some of the cable companies, and shall extend this control as the licenses of others fail to be renewed. Where the control applies rates cannot be raised without the consent of the government, and may be reduced on the demand of the government. The companies have a right of appeal to the Railway and Canal Commissioners if the equity of any proposed reduction is disputed.

In view of all these circumstances and of the substantial reductions now being made in many of the trans-Atlantic rates, His Majesty's government has no present intention of embarking on the large capital expenditure and annual commitments which would be involved in laying a state-owned cable.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that if the right hon. Mr. Samuel has the right, as he undoubtedly has, to practically control the rates, the self-governing colonies of the empire have the right to ask him that those rates shall be so controlled that Canada and the other self-governing colonies will not be forced to pay excessive charges. As Postmaster General of Canada I have answered Mr. Samuel, asking him to use his authority to promise easy and cheap communication between the mother country and Canada. I do not think it will be necessary to have a state-owned cable. There are many heavy demands on the public treasury of Canada and in this young country we have to expend a great deal of money to keep pace with the progress of the times, so that if we can dispense with the expenditure on a state-built cable, the money thus saved could very well be applied elsewhere. I trust that the Postmaster General of England will before long be able to see eye to eye with us on this matter. We desire, as I have said, to trade with the mother country and in order to carry on that trade with facility we must have cable communication at the cheapest cost possible.

We do not object to have communication with other countries, but this country prefers to have communication in all forms with England. Of course, the day may come, and the day will come, when the mother country will have some kind of reciprocal relations with the colonies. It is not the business of my department to go into the question of reciprocal trade relations; but we want the government of England and its Postmaster General to help the trade of this country. The British preference has been put on the Statute-book in order that we may have more trade with England, and if we trade with England we have to communicate with England. Business men will not send pressing orders for what they want to buy in England, by means of letters. They have to use the cable, and it seems to me that it would be very much to the interest of both countries that this should be done. If it is not done, this government will have to look into the question. I am not going any further than that; I am not authorized to go any further; but I will go as far as to say that the government will look into the question seriously. There is one fact more to which I will briefly refer before resuming my seat. Most of these cable companies land in Canada or in Newfoundland. They are controlled by foreign capital. I see no reason why there should not be one cable, owned by a company of British subjects. I do not object to our neighbours to the south investing their money in this country; on the contrary, I am prepared to invite that; but I think that Canada and England will both desire to have a cable company, and a cable that would not be controlled by foreign capital. I am not prepared to-night to go into this matter at any great length; but the House will, I think, be of opinion that these questions may well engage the attention of hon. members. I would ask my hon. friend not to press his motion, which I think is too academic, and not practical enough.

Mr. LEMIEUX. In what sense?

Mr. PELLETIER. It is going to be published in the newspapers, and the people who read it will say: This gentleman does not seem to attach much importance to this matter, as he makes a motion of fine words, but no action.

Mr. LEMIEUX. On the contrary, I ask for action.

Mr. PELLETIER. The hon. gentleman says he hopes that steps will be taken, as if steps were not taken now.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Go further.

Mr. PELLETIER. Steps were taken before the hon. gentleman made his motion, so that I do not see that there is any occasion for it. I do not wish to divide the House on the motion; I would prefer to have the hon. gentleman withdraw it. Under the circumstances, it would have no good effect. The Post Office Department is giving its full attention to this matter, and I do not think there is any necessity of saying that we should take steps. We have done so and will do so, without being invited in any academic way to blow our trumpet.

House divided on amendment of Mr. Lemieux.

Amendment negatived and House went into Committee of Supply.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have a general pair with the hon. member for Kings and Albert (Mr. Fowler). He is in the city, but not in the House to-night, and therefore I think my name ought to be erased from the division list.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am afraid the hon. member for Prince Edward County (Mr. Hepburn) has not been counted.

SUPERIOR COURT JUDGE IN OTTAWA COUNTY.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Justice if the statement made by Mr. Justice McDougall yesterday at Hull while presiding over the court was true, that he had interviewed the Minister of Justice and that a new judge was to be appointed at Hull.

Mr. DOHERTY. I have not seen the statement of Mr. Justice McDougall, but the Quebec Legislature has provided for a new judicial district to be called Montcalm, and that until there is a proper court house at the Chef-lieu of Montcalm district, the judge to be appointed shall reside at Hull. It is the intention when we introduce the Bill to provide for the additional judges which are asked for by the different provinces to make provision for the salary of the judge which the legisture has determined is required for the district of Montcalm, and who is to preside at Hull, and that was so stated to the Hon. Mr. Justice McDougall.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Mr. MACDONALD. What supply is to be taken up?

Mr. BORDEN. Railways and canals.

Mr. MACDONALD. The Premier knows it has always been the custom previous to going into Committee of Supply on the estimates of the Department of Railways and Canals for the minister to give to the House a statement with reference to the transportation problems of the country generally, and particularly with reference to the Intercolonial railway, and that course has facilitated the passage of Supply. In my recollection in parliament, this is the first time in which it has been proposed to take up Supply on railways and canals without having a statement of that kind. I am quite sure the minister will agree with me in that.

Mr. BORDEN. I do not agree that the practice has been invariable.

Mr. MACDONALD. Well, if not invariable, it has been the custom during the last eight years, ever since I have been in the House. The questions involved in regard to railway matters, of necessity, require that there should be some statement as to the position of the Intercolonial railway to begin with. It enables hon. members in considering Supply to have beforehand information in succinct form which otherwise could not be elicited except by prolonged questioning.

Mr SINCLAIR. I agree with my right hon. friend from Pictou that it will no doubt facilitate the business of the House if a general statement could be made by the minister, prior to taking up the railway estimates. For example, the financial condition of the Intercolonial railway is watched with a great deal of interest by the members of this House as well as by the people of the country. During the time that I have had the honour of a seat in this House it has been the invariable practice for the Minister of Railways to open the consideration of the railway estimates by making such a statement, which has been regarded as only second in importance to the budget speech of the Finance Minister. I think it would be a mistake to do away with that very laudable practice. Not only do we want to know what has happened in regard to the Intercolonial railway and what the prospects are for the future business year, but we would like to be favoured with some information in regard to the deepening of the Welland canal, the deepening of the Georgian Bay canal, the construction of the Hudson Bay railway, and other matters. All these questions are looming up and it certainly would be important for the House to be in possession of a general statement setting forth the policy of the government in regard to these great transportation problems.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think also, Mr. Chairman,—I do not know whether it was justifiable or not—that there was a general opinion upon this side of the House that if we went into Supply to-night the estimates of the Minister of the Interior would be taken up. I trust the Prime Minister will, particularly as the hour is quite late, yield to the view that there should be a statement made by the Minister of Railways. Where such a practice has been resorted to year after year for a great many years, we come to look upon it almost as the law of parliament. I think that for some ten or twelve years past there never has been an occasion when the House has gone into consideration of the railway estimates without a statement having first been made by the Minister of Railways. But perhaps my hon. friend would even now give us that statement. If not, I am sure that we on this side would cheerfully allow him one day for further preparation in order to make that statement to-morrow. But, speaking seriously, I really do not think my right hon. friend (Mr. Borden) would be wise in making so radical a departure from what has been the custom during the last ten, twelve, perhaps fifteen, years.

Mr. BORDEN. I can only say that since the House went into committee and up to the present time, my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Cochrane) has not had much opportunity of making a statement. Further than that, hon. members on the other side seem to be so much impressed with the value of speech that they insist that we shall talk whether we want to or not. I suppose the Minister of Railways and Canals must be permitted to explain his estimates in the way that seems best to himself. It is true that it has been the practice, particularly under the late Minister of Railways and Canals to make a statement explaining the general condition of the Intercolonial railway. It may be that that course has its advantages in some respects, but I do not know that there is any absolutely inflexible rule that it shall be done on all occasions. As to the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Rogers) he was here in the early part of the evening but has been obliged to leave. If the House had gone into Supply a little earlier his estimates would have been taken up. But we wish to make a little progress. I would suggest that we might go on and hon. gentlemen can get the information that is available in the way that my hon. friend the Minister of Railways (Mr. Cochrane) who is in charge of the department prefers to give it.

Mr. MACDONALD. Hon members who are interested in the Intercolonial railway did not know that we were going into the Intercolonial railway estimates to-night, and a good many hon. members are not here who would like to be present when these estimates are taken up. Under the circumstances it seems hardly fair to ask us to go on.

Mr. BORDEN. What department would hon members like to take up?

Mr. MACDONALD. The House understood that we were going on with the estimates of the Interior Department until they were finished.

Mr. BORDEN. Perhaps we could take up canals.

Mr. MACDONALD. I do not know. Our friends from Ontario who are interested in canals are not here.

Mr. OLIVER. I was certainly under the impression that we were to go on with the Department of the Interior.

Mr. BORDEN. That would have been taken up but for the circumstance to which I have alluded.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If my hon. friend is determined to go into railway estimates to-night, I think this would be a very proper time to get some information with regard to one of the branch lines of the Intercolonial railway.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Barker). Better let me read the resolution first:

Railways and Canals—chargeable to capital Intercolonial railway air brakes to improved triple valves of $7,150.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I regret that the hon. member for Kings and Albert (Mr. Fowler) is not present——

Mr. MACDONALD. If my hon. friend (Mr. Pugsley) will pardon me for a moment —the vote of which this is one item amounts to $4,158,350. Surely, the Prime Minister and Minister of Railways and Canals can hardly expect to get that vote through to-night. The discussion will necessarily be long.

Mr. BORDEN. Is there any other item hon. gentlemen opposite would like to take up?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I may explain to my hon. friend the Minister of Railways that, as he is no doubt aware from the papers on file in the department, an agreement was made by the ex-Minister of Railways with the Salisbury and Harvey Railway Company some time during the past summer—the exact date will appear from the letter which the ex-Minister of Railways wrote to the president of that railway company. In that letter the ex-minister referred to certain negotiations which had taken place with regard to supplying a quantity of rails, bridge girders and other material for a portion of that railway with a view to its being re-opened and put in satisfactory operation. In that letter Mr. Graham, the ex-minister, referred to an offer which the company had made to either sell its railway for a sum of money which the company had stated and which is referred to in the letter, or else to lease the road upon terms which had been presented to the government by a committee of the different branch railways in the maritime provinces. In the letter the ex-minister states that if these terms are acceded to by the company, legislation will be introduced at the then coming session of parliament—that is, the present session—for the purpose of carrying out the arrangement. Now, as I have said, I regret that my hon. friend from Kings and Albert is not present. But he will read my remarks in 'Hansard' and will have an opportunity at a later date of making any comment on them that he may desire to make. That hon. gentleman is reported to have made a public statement not long ago in the province of New Brunswick with regard to the railway which certainly is of a very serious character, and reflects so severely not only upon the ex-Minister of Railways, but upon myself and every other member of the government who had anything to do with the arrangements as to require that the facts should be placed on 'Hansard,' so that they may go to the country and particularly to that part of New Brunswick the people of which are so intensely interested in this railway and who were for some months before the arrangements were completed, exceedingly anxious that steps should be taken for the opening up of the portion of the railway which had been closed. I find that the hon. member for Kings and Albert is reported in the St. John 'Standard' as having made a speech at a banquet given to him in the county of Albert. The date is the 14th of November, 1911. This is the report of his remarks:

'The people of Albert county were fooled about the railway. Promises were made by our opponents that were not intended to be fulfilled. Some car-loads of rails were sent to Salisbury a day or so before the elections and these were to be taken back again in case the government were defeated. There had been no authority for these rails to be loaded or removed from Moncton, and as soon as the elections were over and the government was defeated, arrangements were made to withdraw these rails. I found it necessary to go to Ottawa. I found out that there had been no contract signed or executed in regard to rails for the Salisbury and Albert railway. I made arrangements for those rails and got them forwarded. Then there was trouble about the bridges. I again went to Ottawa and got the bridges, and I have the authority for saying to you that one of these bridges is now on the line and on the 1st December the road will again be in operation its entire length.

Now, my hon. friend will, I am sure, do me the justice to look up the record, and he will find that a bona fide arrangement was made for the delivery of these rails to that railway company. I think you will agree with me, Mr. Chairman, that the charge which the hon. member for Kings and Albert (Mr. Fowler), has made, that it was never intended bona fide to deliver these rails, and that after the government was defeated an order was given to take the rails back, as carrying out the intention which the government had to deceive the people—that is a charge of a very serious character, and before a member of the House should make a charge so serious, he ought to have all the facts fully in his possession, and to have the strongest possible justification to make such a charge. Now, I find on looking at the file which the Minister of Railways brought down in answer to my motion, that after that letter of the late Minister of Railways to the company agreeing to their terms, either for the purchase, at a price which was agreed upon, or for the leasing, and engaging to submit legislation at the present session, the matter was followed up by order in council, and an agreement was drawn up by the Department of Justice and submitted in due course to the railway company for signature. I happen to know personally, because I had some conferences with Mr. Raymond, who I think, was then the legal partner of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, upon the subject of this agreement. The company had by their telegram, or letters from the manager, agreed to execute a contract. There was, however, some delay, and Mr. Raymond went to the city of New York where he saw the president of the railway company; and as the matter was somewhat urgent by reason of people being deprived of railway facilities, it was understood that Mr. Raymond would wire to me, as the minister representing New Brunswick in the government, and who had taken an active part in endeavouring to get this line of railway opened—it was understood he would wire to me when the contract was signed. After he had gone to New York I received a telegram from him that the contract had been signed by the company, and it was understood that when it was signed he would send it forward to the Deputy Minister of Railways at Ottawa. I took it for granted that that would be done, and I immediately wired either to the Minister of Railways or to the Deputy Minister of Railways, stating that the contract had been signed and forwarded to Ottawa, and asking him to give directions for the delivery of the rails. The department was acting in good faith upon my assurance which I received from Mr. Raymond that the contract had been executed by the company. The contract was dated some time in September, I think. Later on, and after a quantity of rails had been placed upon the cars at Moncton and sent forward for delivery to the railway company, it appeared that Mr. Raymond had neglected to have the contract sent to Ottawa. I remember being in Ottawa after the election, and my attention was called to the matter. I may say that the Minister of Railways made no change in the arrangement by reason of the result of the election, and everything was going forward just as it had been before the election took place, so far as the delivery of the rails was concerned. On the 5th of October I was informed by Mr. Pottinger, the general manager of the Intercolonial, that the contract had not been received. I find that on the file there is a letter from Mr. Pottinger to Mr. Burpee which I will read:

Moncton, October 5, 1911.

T. C. Burpee, Esq.,

Please stop at once the delivery of rails and other materials to the Salisbury and Albert railway, as the signed agreement has not yet been received at Ottawa. Please let me know quickly what materials and quantity of each have been delivered.

Yours truly,

D. POTTINGER.

Then upon the same day, when I had been informed by Mr. Pottinger that the agreement had not been received, I wired to Mr. Raymond calling his attention to his assurance that the contract would be at once forwarded to Ottawa, and I received this telegram, a very extraordinary telegram.

St. John, N.B., October 5, 1911.

Hon. Wm. Pugsley,
Minister of Public Works,
Ottawa, Ont.

Expect to make another arrangement with new government.

E. P. RAYMOND.

To which I replied as follows:

Ottawa, October 5, 1911.

E. P. Raymond,
St. John, N. B.

You must see it is not a question of making another arrangement with new government, but of carrying out in good faith arrangement made and under which some rails have been delivered. You distinctly agreed to send signed agreement to Ottawa, and wired me that it was signed by company. This was clearly for purpose of letting me know that the matter was complete so far as company was concerned.

(Sgd.) WM. PUGSLEY.

Then later, on the 10th of October, I wrote to the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals as follows:

Ottawa, October 10, 1911.

A. W. Campbell Esq.,
Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals,
Ottawa.

Some days ago, when I was informed by Mr. Pottinger and yourself that Mr. Raymond had not sent the agreement re Salisbury Harvey Railway, I wired him to do so, and received the reply hereto annexed. My answer is also annexed hereto. I am greatly surprised at the fact of Mr. Raymond not having sent you the agreement, but if the company accepted any of the rails, they could be compelled to carry out the agreement the same as if they had sent it to you.

I am, yours truly,

(Sgd.) WM. PUGSLEY.

Now, when my hon. friend, the present Minister of Railways, came into office he would see these letters on file, and would see that the delay in countermanding the order for delivery of rails was due entirely to the fact that the agreement had not been signed, and not, as the hon. member for Kings and Albert told the electors, that it was in pursuance of a design to make the people believe before the election that the rails would be delivered, and then to have them sent back to Moncton after the election. I am satisfied the Minister of Marine and Fisheries could not have known the condition of the agreement, could not have known what Mr. Raymond had promised; because I find that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries sent a telegram on the 12th of October to the Minister of Railways and Canals as follows:

St. John, N.B., October 2, 1911

Hon. Frank Cochrane,
Minister of Railways,
Chateau Frontenac, Que.

Agreement made with late government to supply rails and girders to Salisbury and Albert railway to repair their railway pending the agreement to take over railways by government. Since government resigned management refuses to give any further rails. Kindly instruct Pottinger at Moncton to continue supplying sufficient rails and girders so work can be completed. Will see you in Ottawa Tuesday.

(Sgd.) J. D. HAZEN.

I make no complaint of the telegram sent by the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. It was a very proper request for him to make as the delivery had been stopped, but I take it for granted that my hon. friend did not know the circumstances under which delivery had been stopped.

On October 14, the Minister of Railways replied to the Minister of Marine as follows:

Ottawa, Oct. 14, 1911.

Hon. J. D. Hazen,
St. John, N.B.

Message received re Salisbury and Albert railway. I find upon inquiry that the company has not executed the agreement they promised to, and which it was said they had done. This is reason, I am informed, for non-delivery more rails and girders.

(Sgd.) F. COCHRANE.

It was only about October 26 that the present Minister of Railways was informed that the contract which I had been informed by Mr. Raymond, had been executed in New York in September, had been delivered to the department and thereupon orders were immediately given by the department to resume the delivery of rails in accordance with the original understanding. I think when my hon. friend the member for Kings and Albert (Mr. Fowler) reads these different telegrams, which are all on file in the department, he will come to the conclusion that he did the late Minister of Railways and Canals and myself a great wrong when he charged that the order for delivering these rails had been countermanded after the election simply because the election had gone as it did and that there was never any bona fide intention of delivering these rails. The circumstances are simply as the correspondence discloses. There was the bona fide agreement to deliver the rails. There was the telegram from the solicitor of the company to me that the contract had been signed and the understanding was that it was to be forwarded immediately to Ottawa. I was advised that the contract was signed, I so informed the department and acting upon that in good faith they gave instructions for the delivery of the material to the railway company. Afterwards, on October 5, they learned that the contract had not been delivered at Ottawa as they had been led to believe it was in course of delivery and for that reason the order for the delivery of the rails and girders was countermanded. Later on, on October 26, when the contract was signed as it had been agreed it should be, the present Minister of Railways gave the order for the continuation of the delivery of rails. The hon. member for Kings and Albert not only charges me with bad faith in the matter but he takes to himself all the credit for having obtained the order for the resuming of the delivery of these rails, whereas, as a matter of fact, the order was given when the agreement originally made with the company and which was understood would be executed and forwarded to Ottawa, was actually forwarded in order to protect the department and compel the company to carry out its arrangement.

My hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals will see that by the agreement, legislation is to be obtained during the present session. Unless the legislation is so obtained or unless there is a waiver of that upon the part of the company, I would ask my hon. friend whether it is not worthy of consideration if the company might not say: Oh, the government has not carried out its part of the agreement, it has not obtained the legislation authorizing it either to acquire or to lease the road, and might not the company take a position with regard to payment for the rails which might be detrimental to the public interest? I think myself, that unless there is some waiver on the part of the company the obligation would be on the government to ask parliament to enact the legislation this session which is provided for in the agreement.

Mr. COCHRANE. In reply I would say that these rails were shipped before the elections, they were shipped before the contract was signed, but after the department found out that the rails had been shipped, and the contract not signed, they gave orders that the rails should not be unloaded, but should be kept there, and they were not returned to Moncton, they were held there until the contract was signed. I do not know anything about the speech made by the hon. member for Kings and Albert, but I think the hon. member from St. John, (Mr. Pugsley) is wrong in his interpretation of the agreement. As I remember it, they are to pay for these rails, if we do not take over the road, and if we do take over the road, it is to be deducted from the arrangement. So it is unnecessary for us to pass any legislation in reference to it this session.

It has been announced in this House that the promises about the branch lines will be gone into during the vacation, and all those that are in the interest of the Intercolonial railway and of the county will be taken over on a fair and equitable basis.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend does not mean to have the committee believe that the order stopping delivery of the rails was made after he came into office, it was made before he came into office.

Mr. COCHRANE. No, I did not say that.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman's remarks might be open to that interpretation. The order was made some five days before the late government resigned, and because the arrangement which Mr. Raymond wired me, had been executed had not been delivered to the department.

Mr. MACDONALD. Would the minister state the surplus of the Intercolonial railway on the 31st January last?

Mr. COCHRANE. About $700,000. That is within $5,000 of the exact amount.

Mr. MACDONALD. What will be the surplus at the end of the financial year?

Mr. COCHRANE. That is a matter that would be purely guesswork. It depends largely on the cost of running trains or how many snowstorms we have, etc. The hon. member knows the weather conditions have a lot to do with the net profits, but we will not be far out when we say about $600,000 or $700,000.

Mr. MACDONALD. My hon. friend should have known before asking the committee to pass the estimates, exactly what the surplus was on January 31, and now at the beginning of the last month of the financial year, he could give us the probable financial results on the 31st of March. I would like the minister before we discuss this matter again, to give us the fullest explanation of what the financial position of the road is, and what it is expected it will be.

Mr. COCHRANE. The Auditor has just told me that the exact amount up to the 31st of January is $677,000.

Mr. MACDONALD. The minister can, without much trouble, tell us what the estimated surplus on the 31st of March will be. There are certain expenditures which can be estimated pretty accurately, the only uncertain element being as to the extent of snowstorms and the cost of removal of snow. Such information as that should be given us in order to discuss the future policy with regard to the Intercolonial railway. Without anticipating what I will say at a future date, I have no hesitation in saying in this House now, as I have said before, that the Intercolonial has no business to have a surplus.

Mr. COCHRANE. Do you think it has?

Mr. MACDONALD. Well, we would like a statement from the minister in regard to that. I have said the same thing to other ministers who were friendly to me politically. I say that every dollar that is reported as a surplus on the Intercolonial railway means so much money taken out of the pockets of the people of the Maritime provinces, and for no good. When you come to deal with the Intercolonial, you are not dealing with a corporate entity such as a private railway company, which at the end of its financial year has so much money, and as to which the directors can consider whether it will be spent in betterments or whether it will be paid in dividends, because, at the end of the financial year if the Intercolonial has a surplus of eight or nine hundred thousand dollars, that money passes into the treasury of the Dominion, away from the Intercolonial, and not a dollar of it is available for running expenses of the railway for the new year. And then, when the people interested in the line press on the minister for increased accommodation or for improved freight rates, the answer is that the surplus of the previous year has passed away from him and has gone into the general treasury, and there is no money left for these betterments. Before we discuss these estimates again I wish the minister would give us the result of the operations of the Intercolonial in the way of surpluses for the last three years, and a statement down to date, so far as he has it, and an estimate up to the 31st of March, in so far as it is possible to anticipate. In certain portions of Canada the feeling is that if a Minister of Railways is able to report a surplus on the Intercolonial he has achieved some distinguished feat, for which he is entitled to credit. I do not hesitate to say to the Minister of Railways at the inception of his career as minister, as I have said to my own political friends when they occupied the office, that if a Minister of Railways has a surplus on the Intercolonial, it is not to his credit but to his discredit, for the reason that he has discriminated against the people of the maritime provinces in making them pay more than they had necessity to pay.

Mr. COCHRANE. There will be no objection to bringing down the statement which the hon. gentleman asks for in reference to the surplus on the Intercolonial for the last three years, and also an estimate of the operations of the road up to the 31st of March. In some aspects of the remarks of the hon. member for Pictou I thoroughly agree. Of course, it is a question in my own mind whether this is really a surplus or not. It is a question in my mind whether the betterments on the rolling stock have been kept up from year to year in the manner I think they should have been before there is any surplus claimed. I am having a stocktaking made of the Intercolonial railway, especially with reference to the rolling stock, so as to get at some basis on which we can start anew. I also think that the Intercolonial can be so managed that it will not only pay its way but that it will pay for betterments as well, and that without raising the present rates. I think I can say, without fear of contradiction, that the rates on the Intercolonial are lower than on any other railroad of the same mileage.

Mr. MACDONALD. I do not know about that. Other Ministers of Railways have said that but it did not work out.

Mr. COCHRANE. I have made a few comparisons, but, as the hon. gentleman knows what I don't know about the Intercolonial railway would make a much bigger book than what I do know about it. I should think that if I undertook to tell this committee very much about the Intercolonial railway they would consider that I was rather bumptious. I have only been on the road once and then only on a part of the system, and the reason that I did not purpose making a general statement was that I would have to make it largely on what I have been told, not having had an opportunity, from personal experience, of studying the matter myself.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I represent one of the maritime provinces which is deeply interested in the operations of the Intercolonial railway and I fear I cannot agree either with the Minister of Railways or with the hon. member for Pictou.

Mr. COCHRANE. I would not expect you to.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think myself that if the Intercolonial railway in charging fair and reasonable rates to the people, which the people of the maritime provinces are quite willing to pay, earns a surplus, it is to the credit of the management of that railway. I think it is better for the lower provinces that such surplus should be shown, because when there is no surplus on the Intercolonial railway it has been the practice of persons coming from other parts of Canada to speak of the railway rather as a dead weight upon the people of Canada and to declare that it ought to be got rid of as soon as possible and handed over to some private company.

Mr. MACDONALD. That would not hurt very much.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Well I think it would. I am very strongly in favour of the Intercolonial railway being kept, owned, and operated as a government railway.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. PUGSLEY. While there may be some objection to the principle, yet personally I would be very strongly in favour of the view put forward by the business men of Montreal and other parts of eastern Canada that the Intercolonial railway should be brought under the control of the Railway Commission, but I think it is well to keep it as a government owned and operated railway.

I think the gentlemen who have been managing the Intercolonial railway in the past few years deserve great credit for giving such a splendid service. I do not believe there is a better operated railway on the continent of America. The passenger trains are very comfortable, the dining car service is good, the trains make good time, and in all respects the road is managed as a first-class railway ought to be managed. I hope my hon. friend will not seek to put too large a share of the profits into what other companies would describe as capital account in order to do away with the surplus. There is a great deal in what my hon. friend from Pictou says, that it is wrong to take the surplus from the control of the management of the Intercolonial railway and put it into the general treasury. I do not see why it should not accumulate as a fund to pay for betterments.

Mr. COCHRANE. Do you not think it ought to go into rolling stock?

Mr. PUGSLEY. If you put all the surplus into betterments without treating it as a surplus, you do not give the government railway a fair show, and you add to the argument of those who say that it is run at a loss to the people of Canada and that the sooner we get rid of it the better. We ought to make up our minds firmly to hold on to the Intercolonial railway forever, to be operated in the interest of the people of Canada.

Mr. CARVELL. How much has been charged up to capital in the operation of the Intercolonial railway during the present fiscal year?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The hon. minister might at the same time answer another question. In the absence of the hon. member for Drummond and Arthabaska (Mr. Brouillard), I would like to call his attention to the fact that there are business men along the railway between Quebec and Ste. Rosalie who complain very bitterly about the lack of car accommodation. They say they have requested the management to provide them with cars, especially during the last month, and they have not been supplied. I have here a letter from J. A. Savoie, the son of the ex-member for Megantic, who is a large lumber merchant in the county of Nicolet. Under date of February 26 he writes to Mr. Brouillard a letter, in which he says:

We have been able to obtain no cars since the 6th of February. During the winter generally we have been in the habit of obtaining some cars, but never a sufficient number. Please ask the minister if he cannot give orders so that we may obtain justice in this matter.

On the 28th of February he writes another letter, in which he says:

I wrote on the 26th of February stating that we had no cars since the 6th of February We are at the 28th, and we have yet received no answer. We would be very much obliged if you would see the minister and ask him for what reason this section of the Intercolonial railway is so neglected.

The hon. minister is, I am sure, anxious to meet requests of this kind.

Mr. COCHRANE. We have not heard from him.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Will the hon. minister kindly communicate with Mr. Savoie, who is one of the largest manufacturers along the line?

Mr. COCHRANE. There has been a good deal of difficulty in getting the cars back from the United States, where the congestion is worse than it is in Canada. In November we had a number of complaints of the shortage of cars for the shipment of lumber and pulpwood, and Mr. Tiffin told me that an enormous number of our cars were in the United States, and that he was trying to get them back.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Is there not a fine imposed for retaining these cars?

Mr. COCHRANE. There is a fine of 35 cents a day, which the railway companies would rather pay and keep the cars. In regard to the expenditure on capital account, the auditor tells me that during the past year to the 1st of September it amounted to $1,156,207.

Mr. MACDONALD. My hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Pugsley) looks at this matter from an entirely different standpoint from those of us who come from the province of Nova Scotia. The province of New Brunswick is fortunate enough to have two transcontinental systems, the Canadian Pacific railway running into the city of St. John and the Grand Trunk Pacific, which is completed to the city of Moncton, as well as the Intercolonial. That province is therefore very fortunate in having plenty of railway accommodation which I do not begrudge it in the slightest degree. But in the province of Nova Scotia we have but one railway, giving us communication with the outside world, that is, the Intercolonial, and we have none of the transcontinental systems; and when we want additional railway accommodation we are compelled to come to the Minister of Railways and ask him to build a branch line. My hon. friend now tells us: You must show us that this is going to make money for the country or we will not talk about a branch line.

Mr. COCHRANE. I did not say make money, I said pay its way.

Mr. MACDONALD. The minister's expression is practically one which means what I said. I only want to point out—and I do not want to continue the discussion to-night, because it is now pretty late—that the member from St. John (Mr. Pugsley), certainly views this question from an entirely different standpoint to that from which I am compelled to view it. I would suggest to the minister that there is no desire on the part of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House to do other than discuss these estimates fairly, and, in view of the absence of a number of our friends who wish to speak upon these items, he ought not, perhaps, to proceed further to-night

Mr. COCHRANE. I am perfectly willing and it will be certainly a pleasure to furnish all the information as we go along, but I think we ought to pass a few items before the committee rises.

Air-brakes—To improve triple values of $7,-150.

Mr. MACDONALD. Perhaps the minister would tell us what this vote for air-brakes is for?

Mr. COCHRANE. The object of these air-brakes is to improve the feature known as quick service. The K triple valve has additional features, known as quick service uniform rails, and uniform recharge to meet modern conditions of freight service, using less air and being far superior for controlling trains on heavy grades, and is being adopted by a large number of railways. I might say that there was spent last year for the same purpose $3,314.16. The work is done by the staff. These cost about $5.50 each, and the estimate this year was to put these brakes on 1,300 frieght cars. It is only following out the policy which has been adopted in the past.

Mr. SINCLAIR. There have been reports in the newspapers that the minister contemplated some radical changes in the board of management of the Intercolonial, I would like to know if he has any information to give the House as to his policy in that regard?

Mr. COCHRANE. I have not seen any of the newspapers which gave currency to such reports, and I have no information to give.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Will the minister say whether any changes are contemplated?

Mr. COCHRANE. I have no information in reference to the matter.

Mr. SINCLAIR. That is a very unsatisfactory answer to my question, for the minister to state that he has no information to give.

Mr. COCHRANE. I can only repeat that answer.

Mr. SINCLAIR. This railway board was constituted after a great deal of deliberation, and its maintenance became the settled policy of the late government. The board has done very good work, and has been of great service to the country. The minister surely knows whether he intends to continue that board or not, and I should think ought to be in a position to give us some information.

Mr. COCHRANE. When the government has made up its mind to change the board it will be very glad to take the House into its confidence.

Mr. CARVELL. Does that mean that the government has not made up its mind at the present time to make any change?

Mr. COCHRANE. Hon. gentlemen draw their own conclusions anyway, no matter what I say and they are at liberty to do the same in this instance.

Bridges—to strengthen, $100,000.

Mr. MACDONALD. Where are these bridges to be strengthened?

Mr. COCHRANE. It is hoped by means of this vote to complete the strengthening of the bridges on the main line of the Intercolonial, and afterwards to proceed with the strengthening of the bridges on the Cape Breton branch.

Mr. McKENZIE (North Cape Breton). In the system of bookkeeping are the two items of betterments and maintenance kept separately, or are they under the heading of maintenance simply?

Mr. COCHRANE. I understand it is a capital and revenue account.

Mr. McKENZIE. Would the Minister be able to give the average expenditure on maintenance during say the last four years? I mean a comparison of the amounts expended on the road for maintenance per mile per year during that period?

Chatham—diversion of line and branch to wharf, $160,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It seemed to me when I was Minister of Public Works that in order to make the branch railways into the town of Chatham of real service to the business people of that place, it was necessary to build a wharf and I had an item of $100,000 placed in the estimates for the purpose of doing that. When the estimates for the Public Works Department were under consideration I called the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the fact that the item of $100,000 had been left out, and if I remember rightly he was not able to tell me what was the intention in regard to it. Has the Minister of Railways considered the matter, and does he intend to use any part of this amount of $160,000 for the terminals, including the wharf, or is it wholly apart from that, and if not what is my hon. friend's intention in regard to the construction of a railway wharf there?

Mr. COCHRANE. I may say there is not in the amount of $160,000 anything for the wharf. There has been a good deal of contention as between the towns that consider they should have the wharf. I received a deputation from both Newcastle and Chatham this last week, and the matter I considered should stand until the proper place was selected where the bridge would be most useful for the country and the railway as well.

Mr. LOGGIE. The minister refers to the question as to whether the wharf should be located at Chatham or Newcastle. For my own part I cannot see what in the world that would have to do with the vote in the estimates of last year. They are diverting the railway and taking it along the water front. The northwest wind blows very heavily on that side of the river and of course the boom must be filled in. The plans were to put riprap stone so as to protect the filling. My contention was that if riprap stone were used, it would be impossible to use that portion of the railway for shipping facilities. The location is between two wharfs. We have limited wharf accommodation at Chatham for ocean going shipments. It is expected that large steamers carrying a million or more of deals would load timber coming over the road at that wharf if it were constructed as I suggest.

Mr. HAZEN. I desire to ask a question for information. Where do the ocean steamers that now load deals at Chatham load?

Mr. LOGGIE. A large number of ocean steamers load at the wharfs of the timber merchants, but large quantities of deals arriving over the road at present are loaded at the wharf known as the Canada dock.

Mr. HAZEN. Is that a government wharf? Does it belong to the railway?

Mr. LOGGIE. Yes. At that dock there is room for only one steamer to load at a time, and often there are steamers with coal for the railway to be unloaded at the same wharf. So, it was considered very important that, when they were constructing this road across this boom, instead of making the front of it of riprap stone, it should be made of timber. At the time, I did not think it would cost much more to make it of timber than of stone. It is possible a wharf more cheaply constructed might serve the purpose as well as a wharf built according to the plans prepared. The very object of diverting the railway to the front of the town was to have shipping facilities, and hon. gentlemen know that success in shipping timber depends largely upon the ease with which it is handled. I would like it very much if the minister would favourably consider my suggestion, and take up the matter with the Public Works Department, and, if reasonable at all, have a wharf of the dimensions proposed; or, if the cost is considered to be too much, then make plans for a cheaper wharf. What the ex-Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley), said is true, that this expenditure was to be made by the Public Works Department for the use of the railway, but to be the property of the Public Works Department. In fact, I think it is the policy of the Railway Department in regard to other wharfs, viz., to hand them over to Public Works Department.

Mr. McKENZIE. Does the hon. gentleman mean that the side of the railway next the stream was to be constructed so that it could be used as a loading wharf?

Mr. LOGGIE. Yes, but if stone were used that could not be done.

Mr. COCHRANE. I desire to tell the hon. member for North Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie) that I will have the statement he asks for made to-morrow, so far as we can make it.

Mr. MACDONALD. It was understood that after this item was passed we would adjourn.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. BORDEN moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. BORDEN. We will take up Bills and resolutions as far as possible.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I understood the Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier) would bring up his Post Office Bill.

Mr. BORDEN. So I understood. Then we will take up other Bills as far as it may be convenient to hon. members on the other side, and then resume in Supply, with the estimates of the Minister of Railways and Canals.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 12.55 a. m. Friday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, March 1, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 117) to change the name of Ezra Butler Eddy Bessey.—Mr. Fripp.

Mr. LOGGIE.

CANADIAN NORTHERN ALBERTA RAILWAY.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds) moved that the House go into committee to-morrow to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to provide that the aid and assistance which, under the Canadian Northern Alberta Act, 1910, the Governor in Council was authorized to give to the Canadian Northern Alberta Railway Company in respect of the construction of the one hundred and fifty miles of railway therein described may, notwithstanding anything in the said Act, be applied to the first one hundred and fifty miles of the said company's railway at present constructed or located from St. Albert, in the province of Alberta, in a generally westerly direction toward the Yellowhead Pass.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I suppose my hon. friend will bring down the correspondence on the subject?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I will do so.

Motion agreed to.

OFFICIAL INQUIRY IN HULL.

Mr. DEVLIN. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Monk) if any of the men whose cases have been examined into by the commissioner in Hull have been acquitted of taking any part in politics. If the hon. minister would like me in courtesy to give him notice of the question, I will not press for an immediate answer.

Mr. MONK. I have had the report of the investigator for a few days, but I have not had time to go fully into it or to take any action respecting those against whom there was no evidence; but I propose doing so as soon as possible.

IMPROVEMENT OF HIGHWAYS.

Mr. COCHRANE moved the third reading of Bill (No. 77) to encourage and assist the improvement of highways.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Certain hon. gentlemen want to leave this afternoon and therefore I will move this amendment without any discussion. I beg to move:

That the said Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole House, with instructions to amend it by inserting the following words as subsection 2 of section 3:—

The sum of money voted in any year to be expended under this Act, shall be apportioned among the different provinces of the Dominion according to the population of said provinces as established by the last census for for the time being.

House divided on the amendment (Sir Wilfrid Laurier).

Motion agreed to, Bill read a third time, and passed.

APPOINTMENT OF A TARIFF COMMISSION.

Hon. W. T. WHITE (Minister of Finance) moved the third reading of Bill (No. 88) to provide for the appointment of a Tariff Commission.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There is a special feature of this Bill to which I think I should draw once more the attention of the House in connection with the motion for the third reading. I do not intend to review the discussion, which has been pretty thorough. The feature to which I wish to call attention is not to be found within the four corners of the Bill, but is rather to be found in the interpretation which has been given to it by one hon. member supporting the government, and whose utterances have not been contradicted by any member sitting on the treasury benches. No mention is made in the Bill of what shall be the qualifications of the members who are to compose this commission. But the hon. member for St. Antoine division, Montreal (Mr. Ames), speaking on the subject, stated in so many words that the members appointed on the commission should be partisans, and in sympathy with the government of the day. His words to this effect will be found in 'Hansard,' page 2702. He is reported as follows:

> If I may be permitted to offer advice to the ministers, I would say that they should not necessarily confine their choice to men who have fought and bled for the Conservative party. I think that if there is any man in Canada who is eminently fitted for this position, he should not be rejected by reason of his previous political record. We want the biggest men we can get, but we want men who are not out of sympathy with the policy that the party on this side of the House avowedly stands for. We want men who are not out of sympathy with the idea that protection, reasonably applied, is what Canada needs for her development.

Mark these words, Mr. Speaker, and, I repeat, nothing has been said in the course of a rather lengthy debate to show that the government did not accept the view expressed by that hon. member; on the contrary, everything went to show that the hon. gentleman spoke by authority, and that it is the intention that the men appointed on this commission shall be in sympathy with the policy of the present administration. It is true the hon. gentlemen began by saying:

If I may be permitted to offer advice to the ministers, I would say that they should not necessarily confine their choice to men who have fought and bled for the Conservative party.

So far so good. That means, if it means anything, that if there is a man not in the Conservative party, a Grit, provided he is tainted with the heresy dear to the heart of my hon. friend from St. Antoine, may be well qualified for this office. But to be qualified, he must be in sympathy with the present administration. Later on my hon. friend (Mr. Ames) emphasized these views, interrupting the remarks of my hon. friend from Carleton, New Brunswick (Mr. Carvell):

Mr. AMES. I beg your pardon; the words 'high protectionists' were not used by me. I said that they must be in sympathy with the well known sentiment of the present government.

This is a declaration that one qualification which will be required for the men who are to be appointed to these offices is that they shall be in sympathy with the present administration. Now, I claim, and submit to the judgment of the House, that such a doctrine as that is at variance with the well known constitutional practice of this country and still more with that of Great Britain. We appoint men to office not on account of their sympathies with any party but on account of their fitness for the position to which they are appointed. I remember that during the debate on this Bill my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) recalled an observation that I made at one time to the effect that we were all partisans and that if we were to appoint only people who were not partisans we could not make any appointments at all. I grant this. Nor do I make any exception to it. I proclaim myself, like others, a partisan. And if I were a protectionist as well, I suppose, I should be qualified to be a member of this commission. But I would remind my hon. friend from Halton that we appoint men to office not because they are partisans, but altogether aside from any consideration of whether they are partisans or not. And when we appoint men who are partisans to any office under the Crown, whether temporary or permanent, we expect them, when they take office, to cease being partisans. We appoint a man to the Bench, who up to the time of his appointment may have been a partisan. But though he may have been a partisan we expect that when he goes upon the Bench he will cease to be a partisan and will perform his duties irrespective of his opinions. At the opening of parliament we chose as Speaker a gentleman from the floor of this House, and, of course, the administration supports one of its own followers, one who has been a partisan but the moment he walks upon those steps to that chair he ceases to be a partisan. He himself states that he ceases to be a partisan and will administer justice between the two sides of the House irrespective of the opinions which, up to that time he may have held. Such, however, is not the character expected of the gentlemen who are to fill these commissionerships. It is expected that they shall be partisans, that they shall be selected because they are partisans and are in sympathy with the present administration. I submit, with all due respect for the opinion of my hon. friend from St. Antoine Division, that such doctrine as that is unheard of in any British parliament. It is of the very nature of our system of government that there shall be an alternation of parties. A new administration comes into office—for governments do not live forever—and finds men in office quite at variance with the policy which the members of that administration uphold.

This will certainly not be fair to the new administration, and I appeal to the fairness of both sides of the House to maintain the principle that men should be appointed to this office quite irrespective of their political opinions, or whether they are in sympathy or out of sympathy with the adminstration, but simply for fitness for the office. For these reasons, which I hope will commend themselves to the fairness of hon. members on both sides of the House, I beg to move in amendment:

That the said Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole House, with instructions to amend the same by adding the following words to subsection 1 of section 3:—

'Who will be selected without any regard to the views of any political party upon tariff or other political questions, but solely by reason of their fitness by character, training and experience, to effectively and impartially discharge the duties assigned to them under this Act.

If this amendment were to pass, section 3 of the Bill would read as follows:

There shall be a commission to be called the Tariff Commission of three members appointed by the Governor in Council, who shall be selected without any regard to the views of any political party upon the tariff or other political questions, but solely by reason of their fitness, by character, training and experience, effectively and impartially to discharge the duties assigned to them under this Act.

Right Hon. R. L. BORDEN (Prime Minister). The right hon. gentleman has in the course of his remarks this afternoon laid down principles to which he never paid the slightest attention during the whole fifteen years of his administration. His position is rather amusing, considering the appointments that his government have made from July, 1896, down to the present time. He discovers just now that his whole course of conduct from 1896 up to the 10th day of October, 1911, was absolutely subversive of the constitution; and he desires us to insert a clause in this Bill to the effect that in making selection of members of this commission rigid disregard must be observed of any political considerations. My right hon. friend supports his contention by arguments that destroy his entire position. He says we should not appoint a partisan—for that is what his argument amounts to; he desires to guard against the appointment of any partisan to this Tariff Board. Then, in order to show that the appointment of a partisan is undesirable, he proceeds to point out that every year in this country partisans are appointed to the Bench, they leave their partisanship behind them, and discharge their duties justly and honourably. Also, in order to show that a partisan should not be appointed to this board, he calls attention to the fact that in the Commons of Canada, at the commencement of every new parliament, a partisan is appointed to preside over the deliberations of this House, and that these partisans have always discharged their duties impartially towards both sides of the House. And so he comes to the remarkably illogical conclusion that for these reasons no man who is a partisan should be appointed to the board of this Tariff Commission. Well, I for one am absolutely incapable of appreciating an argument of that kind. It would be just as sensible for my right hon. friend to propose an amendment to the rules of this House, or an amendment to the statute which provides for the creation of judges, carrying into effect the principles which he professes here. What is the purpose of this Tariff Commission? It is not a commission to make a tariff; that has been explained over and over again with such iteration that I would suppose my hon. friend had grasped the idea before he made his motion this afternoon; but apparently I am wrong, and he has not yet comprehended that idea. These gentlemen will be appointed for the purpose of carrying on certain work of investigation and inquiry; and in the course of that work it will be necessary for them to discharge duties of a quasi judicial nature, and to make a report as to the result of their inquiry. Now, if we appoint partisans every day in the year to discharge the highest duties of citizenship, to sit upon the judicial Bench, as well as to preside over the deliberations of this House, and of the Senate, and if we find that these men, once they are appointed, once they are seized of their responsibility, discharge their duties justly and honourably, fairly and impartially, what is it that leads my right hon. friend to imagine that men of the same type appointed to this Tariff Board will not likewise discharge their duties justly, fairly, honourably, and impartially? What need is there of a clause such as this in the Act constituting a Tariff Commission, more than in the Act constituting the Railway Commission of Canada, or in the Act providing for inquiries into public affairs, known as the Inquiries Act, or in the statute providing for the appointment of judges under the constitution of our courts? There is no more reason for it in the one case than in the other. Therefore, it seems to me that this House should not accept the amendment of my right hon. friend. He has referred to this expression and that expression used in the debate. I want to remind him that the government of this country will be responsible for the appointments to that Tariff Commission, that they realize their responsibility, and that they will endeavour to select men who will be above suspicion in regard to their impartiality and their ability to carry out the purposes of that commission. It is impossible to suppose for a moment that any government, in the discharge of the duty devolving upon it under this statute, will be desirous of doing anything else than to select the very best men in the country for the purpose of carrying out this Act. That is the course which the present administration purposes to pursue in regard to these appointments; and I venture to say that when they have been made, my right hon. friend and the other gentlemen opposite who have been raising bogies over these appointments from the first day the Bill was introduced, will find them such as to justify themselves, not only to the members of this House, but to the people of this country from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer) Mr. Speaker, I need scarcely say that it is perfectly true that I have no disposition to prolong the debate upon what is usually, but not necessarily, a formal part of the discussion of any measure. I only rise to say a few words because I think my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition. (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has raised a point which is absolutely vital to the consideration of this whole matter. We are no longer surprised when the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Borden) rises, to find him take immediate refuge behind the tu quoque argument, but it is really getting a little tiresome and I want to tell him that it is no defensive logic and I do not believe it would be considered any defence in the country. My right hon. friend is in power. He is surely not going to shape the whole of his policy on the position of his predecessor in the past.

The Prime Minister has a record as well as the leader of the opposition and, in that connection, I would like to call attention to something which appears to me to bind my right hon. friend to vote for the amendment which is before the House. My hon. friend still sits for the city of Halifax. There was a Halifax platform. The second plank in the Halifax platform embodies the principle of this amendment in this very definite language of which the meaning is unmistakeable. The second plank in that famous document reads:

> The appointment of public officials upon considerations of capacity and personal character and not of party service.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). My hon. friends applaud the sentiment. The sentiment is embodied in the amendment, and yet they propose to vote down that amendment.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Come again.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). There is no difficulty about that. This principle seems to require a few words from myself because the opposite position, which has been so well established through the mouth of the hon. member for Montreal, St. Antoine (Mr. Ames), was perhaps given more definite expression to by the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) in the speech which he made and in which he referred to some remarks of my own. But, I should like to point out before referring specifically to that speech what is the origin of this whole commission, and what is the bearing of the amendment upon the efficiency of the commission. The country ought to appreciate the fact that the proposition for this commission originated some years ago with the Manufacturers' Association of Canada. They carried a resolution at one of their meetings in favour of this very thing, and they used in regard to it—and this is very significant language—that we ought to take the tariff out of politics. That means, as I have proved at previous stages of the debates upon this Bill, taking the taxing power out of the hands of the people if it means anything at all. It reminds me of the story of a deacon in a darky church within the poultry belt who went to the pastor of the church after he had preached a sermon, and said to him: We wish you to understand that what we want you to do is to preach religion pure and undefiled and keep out of the chicken coop business. Our friends opposite are voting on politics pure and undefiled, and they do not want us to give any attention to a commission which is outside of the ordinary parliamentary procedure altogether. The hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. White) said in the later stages of the debate upon this measure that he believed that this measure would be very favourable to the farmers and consumers. I am sure he will not contradict me if I quote his language to that effect. I want the House to connect that language of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance with the language of my hon. friend the member for Brantford. I was mentioned playfully, of course, as a possible candidate for membership on the Tariff Commission. I need not say that I was not an applicant nor do I consider myself in line for any appointment under this government. What my hon. friend objects to is the very thought that any free trader should be upon the Tariff Commission, because, forsooth, he said that he was a gun which would not go off. My hon. friend, who has had an intimate connection with the Manufacturers' Association, wants to shoot somebody. While I may have been a gun of some kind, was my hon. friend not afraid that if I did by any chance go off I would possibly shoot into the ranks of the manufacturers? He was not concerned about the gun going off or not going off if I were a member of the commission, but he was afraid that I would possibly like to shoot into the manufacturers ranks. Was not that the legitimate inference from that language, was not that the meaning behind the words of my hon. friend? Was it not that this commission is by no means expected to touch the sacrosanct manufacturers, but if it does not touch them my hon. friend might shoot some one. Is he going to shoot the farmers and consumers of this country on behalf of the Manufacturers' Association? I invite the Minister of Finance to reconcile his language about this being a benefit to the farmers and consumers with the evident intention of one of his followers that this proposition should not benefit them but that it may possibly have the effect of shooting into the ranks of a large body of the people of this country. I apologize for detaining the House at this stage of the business, but I think that these words used by the hon. gentleman are of sufficient importance to justify me in rising even if I have delayed the debate for a few moments.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clark, Red Deer) what he means by saying that I was very closely associated with the Manufacturers' Association.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). If there was any offence in those words I gladly withdraw them. I understand my hon. friend has been a manufacturer, and the probability is that he had a close connection with that association.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. The statement of the hon. gentleman is that I was very closely associated with the Manufacturers' Association. The imputation is that I was an officer or member of the association. Does he say that now?

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). Oh, no, I gladly withdraw it if it is an offence.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. There is nothing to withdraw if the hon. gentleman did not make the statement.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). I withdraw it if it is in the least degree offensive to my hon. friend.

Mr. COCKSHUTT. It is not offensive, but it is not true. I have never been a member of the Manufacturers' Association. Never since it was formed have I had any close connection with that organization. I say that I was perfectly consistent when I said that in my judgment those who undertake to handle tariffs should be believers in tariffs. I said nothing about partisanship. There are gentlemen sitting on his own side of the House who are in sympathy with tariffs, but the hon. member for Red Deer is not. What are his words? He says that the only way to handle a tariff is with a bludgeon. What is a bludgeon for?—for foul murder. The hon. gentleman says that he would handle the tariff in such a way that there would be no tariff at all. I never said anything about partisans one way or the other. I never used the word 'partisan' during the whole of my speech. I know that there are on the Liberal side, from Nova Scotia, from New Brunswick, from Prince Edward Island, protectionists pretty nearly as strong as I am myself and those gentlemen as far as their protectionist views are concerned would be acceptable. But what I said was that I objected to the hon. member for Red Deer being on the commission because he is a recognized enemy of all tariffs.

House divided on amendment (Sir Wilfrid Laurier).

Amendment negatived.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time, and passed.

THE GRAIN ACT.

On the order being called for the third reading of Bill (No. 32) respecting grain, Mr. Foster (North Toronto).

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I hope my hon. friend will not take up that Bill to-day. Several amendments have been made and I think the Bill should be reprinted before the third reading.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I do not want to press the Bill if my right hon. friend thinks it should be left over. I had a conversation with my hon. friend from Edmonton (Mr. Oliver), last night, and we arranged that these amendments should be taken to-day. I am anxious to get it up to the Senate as soon as possible.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I simply put it to my hon. friend that this is a very important Bill, some important amendments have been made, and it would be well to have it reprinted before taking up the third reading.

Mr. OLIVER. There was no arrangement between the minister and myself. I asked him if he intended to have the third reading to-day, and he said he did. That was the only discussion.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I understood my hon. friend to say he would have his amendments ready. If he has not his amendments ready of course we will postpone it.

Mr. BORDEN. As I understand the right hon. gentleman presses to have it stand over.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think it would be only fair that such an important Bill with so many amendments, should be reprinted before being read a third time.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). If my hon. friend wishes it to be reprinted before the third reading, which will take some time, I move that instead of reading the Bill the third time we go into committee on it again for the purpose of filling in the blanks in clause 3.

Motion agreed to, and House went again into committee on the Bill.

On clause 3, subsection 6—salaries of commissioners,

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I move that the first blank be filled with the figure 6,500 and the second with the figure 6,000. That fixes the salary of the chief commissioner at $6,500, and those of the other commissioners at $6,000 each.

Mr. OLIVER. Would the minister state the reasons that have led him to fix the salaries at these amounts. They are good salaries, $1,000, and $1,500 higher than the salaries of deputy ministers at Ottawa.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The reasons may be twofold although there is only one essentially good reason, and that it that the importance of the commission, the responsibility which will rest on it, and the work which the members are called upon to do are all such as call for a minimum salary of $6,000. The Chairman of a commission generally has added responsibility in a way over and above that of other members of the commission. In this commission all the commissioners will have nearly equal work although the one who is chairman has certain directive powers that entitle him probably to a consideration beyond what is given to the others. The salaries paid to members of other commissions appointed during the last ten or fifteen years are all greater than the salaries paid to the deputy heads of the different departments. If there is any objection to the salary being more than that of another officer of the government that does not seem to have stood as a good reason when the other commissions were appointed and when the commissioners' salaries were fixed. Under all the circumstances I think I have been moderate in the salaries I have named rather than otherwise, and if I made any change I would be disposed to make the salary larger instead of smaller.

Mr. OLIVER. What are the salaries paid to the Railway Commission, and to be paid to the Tariff Commission?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The Railway Commission, I think, get $7,000, $8,000, and $10,000. The Waterways Commission lately appointed receive $7,000, and $7,500. The Tariff Commissioners will receive $7,500 and $7,000.

Mr. OLIVER. In view of the salaries paid to the Tariff Commission the salaries proposed are moderate.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I am glad my hon. friend thinks I have not been extravagant.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. NEELY. Is it the minister's intention to have the Bill reprinted before it comes up for its final reading ?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Yes.

Mr. McCRANEY. My attention has been called to the first subclause of section 107 under the heading of 'Spring Wheat,' which says:

No. 1 Manitoba Hard wheat shall be sound and well cleaned, weighing not less than 60 pounds to the bushel, and shall be composed of at least 75 per cent of hard Red Fife wheat.

I have before me a resolution, a copy of which was sent to the hon. minister, in which it was pointed out that the words 'well cleaned' are a hardship, because dockage is now put upon those who sell grain which is not well cleaned, so that a person who is selling hard wheat which might otherwise grade as No. 1, if it is not cleaned as required by the Act, suffers a double loss—a loss both in grade and in dockage. This resolution points out that justice would be done if the same wording were used as is used with regard to No. 2 Manitoba Northern wheat, and if we used the words "reasonably cleaned' instead of the words 'well cleaned.' It is pointed out that farmers have not facilities for cleaning well, and that all that they can be expected to do is to clean reasonably. I hope the minister will consider that point.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The matter was considered when we were passing over these grades. Not only was it considered in conjunction with the deputation from the northwest who were here, but it has been considered later in conjunction with the inspector himself. There are objections urged against the suggested change in the quality of this grade. The words 'reasonably cleaned' involve a doubt. A man who is inspecting knows when a grade is well cleaned; that is easily apparent. To say that he must see that it is reasonably well cleaned leaves it open to the interpretation of various inspectors in a different way from what it would be if the actual definition were made. That is with reference to the best quality of our wheat, and if any grade of wheat should be raised and kept to a high standard, it is that grade. The same words are used with reference to No. 1 Hard Fife and No. 1 Manitoba Northern, and it is not until you come to the lower grade of wheat that the words 'reasonably cleaned' are used instead of the words 'well cleaned.' I can see the point that my hon. friend makes; but this grade should be high, and when it passes out from inspection. it should be well cleaned. If there are variations in the wheat itself, as to what is mixed with it, the dockage will always be in proportion to the amount of material for which dockage is allowed. If the wheat is reasonably clean, more dockage will be taken than if it is well cleaned. I do not see where the seller stands to lose in that respect. He does not want to get a price for the grain unless it is up to a certain standard and unless it is well cleaned. There will be a heavier dockage for wheat which is partially cleaned and a lighter dockage for that which is better cleaned.

Mr. McCRANEY. The other matter which I wish to discuss is the requirement that the better grades shall be composed chiefly of hard Red Fife wheat. Experiments have been going on for several years to obtain a grade of hard wheat that will ripen in a shorter time than the grades generally used throughout the west. The experimental farm in Ottawa has been doing good work along that line. Dr. Saunders, who has been the superintendent, and his son, Dr. C. E. Saunders, have succeeded in obtaining a new variety of hard wheat as a result of crossing Calcutta Red and Red Fife, which to-day throughout the west is receiving the attention of very many people. There was a land show held in New York city in the month of November last, at which the first prize was awarded for wheat to Mr. Seager Wheeler, of Rosthern, Saskatchewan, and the wheat with which he won the prize was a new variety known as Marquis wheat.

The statement is now made that at that land show the Red Fife wheat took the third prize. An effort is being made to popularize Marquis wheat. It is pointed out that Marquis wheat ripens 15 days earlier than does Red Fife wheat, and one can understand, especially in such a season as we have had during the past year, that 15 days may mean a great deal to the western country in the way of getting grain threshed and harvested. This matter was up for consideration in the legislature of the province of Sasktchewan, and the Minister of Agriculture for that province made the statement that had Marquis wheat been grown by the farmers of the west during the past year, it would have involved a saving, as he estimated of some $15,000,000 to them through its better ripening quality. As I have already said an effort is being made to popularize this wheat. It is said to-day that there are some half million bushels in existence available for seed purposes. It is also said that not only will there be a great addition in the areas which are now under cultivation for wheat, but that the result will probably be the extention to the northward of the wheat belt by some 100 or 150 miles as the result of using a wheat with better ripening qualities than we now have. I may say that at the city of Saskatoon during the month of February so anxious were the farmers of our part of the country to procure wheat of the Marquis variety for seed purposes, that they were paying as high as $12.80 a bushel for it. It is said that in probably three years' time Marquis wheat will be the popular wheat of the west, and will supercede Red Fife. In view of the success which Marquis wheat has had, and of its having become as well established as it has, it does seem to me that the time has come when we may very well, and without danger to the reputation of our hard wheat, change the requirements so as to admit of Marquis wheat being sold as a No. 1 wheat if in other respects it comes up to the required standard. I have no doubt that the Minister of Agriculture will be asked for samples of Marquis wheat. I know that at the Agricultural College at Saskatoon the experiment with Marquis wheat has produced remarkably better results than the experiments with Red Fife wheat. The legislation as we have it today, which was passed when Red Fife wheat was the only wheat which seemed to be suited to the western country, distinctly discourages experiments which may produce varieties of the earlier ripening qualities; and I would urge upon the minister to amend this Bill so that these better qualities of wheat shall not be restricted to hard Red Fife wheat, but that any hard varieties of wheat may be included. I will put the resolution before the committee for its consideration, and I therefore move:

That clause 107 be amended as follows:

In subsection 1 by striking out the words 'well cleaned' where they occur and inserting in lieu thereof the words 'reasonably cleaned,' and furthur by striking out the words 'hard Red Fife wheat' where they occur and inserting in lieu thereof 'wheat of any hard variety.'

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I have already said a word or two in reference to the first part of my hon. friend's amendment. With reference to the second, when the matter came up first, looking at it just from a layman's point of view, it seemed to me that it might have been well to have elminated the words 'Red Fife' and to have let the clause read 'hard wheat', or to have it this way: 'Hard Red Fife wheat, or hard wheat of equal quality'. However the consensus of opinion when we were discussing this question was that it would be better to let the name remain for the present, although Marquis wheat and some two other varieties that were mentioned (Stanley and Preston wheat) have been experimented with and have proved to be very fine qualities of wheat. It was thought that it would be better that the experiments should be longer continued and that there should be more certainty about it and a little wider acquaintance of people with Marquis wheat before the change was made in this section. Under those circumstances I do not think it would be wise for me to accept my hon. friends suggestion although the time may come when there may be found superior qualities of wheat to the Red Fife; and when these experiments have gone to the stage of becoming actual proof, and there are quantities of such wheat, then it may be reasonable to change the nomenclature of the grain.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). I do not like to press this matter on the minister under the circumstances, but I think really it is important to have some change made at the present stage. In the province of Saskatchewan, at least in that part where I reside, we have experimented for some time with wheat. I myself have been growing Preston for a number of years, and as a matter of fact the Act as it stands now is a dead letter so far as shutting out that wheat is concerned. I sell it year by year and it passes just the same as Red Fife.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). A twin sister to it.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). I think that so far as quality is concerned we suffer no injury.

Mr. McCRANEY. Do you sell on sample?

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). Not on sample, we sell on grade, and I have had it repeatedly graded as No. 1 and 2 Northern, that is pure Preston with not a bit of Red Fife in it as far as I could tell, and bearded wheat too. That is done in actual practice without much damage resulting, but it does not look quite right to my mind that there should be a provision in our Act which the inspectors either wink at, or are unable to carry out. Preston and Marquis are the varieties of grain which I am more accustomed to. I fancy that an expert can tell at almost any time the difference between Preston and Red Fife more by the shape of the grain than anything else. But still they pass it continually as No. 1 and No. 2 Northern, and it is quite just that they should do so I think. I do not know that the tests have shown the Preston to be quite as good a wheat as the Red Fife, but it is so very near it that there is not a material difference. The Marquis also can be distinguished from the Red Fife, while the Preston is a longer and thinner grain than the Red Fife I think the Marquis on the other hand is a little thicker, and possibly a little shorter and of a deeper red. But the tests so far as they have been applied show the Marquis to be as good a grain as the Red Fife, or a little better from a flour-making standpoint. I do not wish to press this matter too far but I thought it necessary to tell the minister what I have seen myself; and while, as I say, there may be no very great injury to the farmer, I am not sure that to have a law which is virtually ignored is a very good thing. We either ought not to permit our officials to wink at and ignore the Act, or we ought to change the law.

I have grown the Stanley and have found no difficulty in selling it, though I think I only grew it one year. But I know that the Stanley is continually being passed as Red Fife. I presume the same applies to the Marquis.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar). Can the grain buyers tell the difference?

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). I think if I were a grain buyer I could tell the difference between the Preston and Red Fife.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar). Could the average grain buyers in the West detect the difference?

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). I think so. The Preston is longer and a somewhat thinner grain than the Red Fife. But I think it is practically as hard. There is a marked difference between the Marquis and the Red Fife, at least a difference that can be seen.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar). How many years have they been experimenting with the Marquis ?

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). It cannot have been for very long, seeing that it is being sold at $12 a bushel. That may not be true with regard to the Marquis just now, but, even though frozen it is sold at $2, $3, and $4 a bushel. So, there is no danger, at present because none of it will be sold in the ordinary way.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). It will practically all be sold for seed ?

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle). Yes. No one who has Marquis will sell it except for seed, unless it is altogether too dirty.

Bill, as amended, reported and amendments concurred in.

SUPPLY—NEWS SERVICE TO MAGDALEN ISLANDS.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Hon RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Rouville). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the House to the Marconigraph service that has been established between the mainland and the Magdalen Islands. I have on two occasions asked the Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier) if it was true that news was being supplied by the government to the Magdalen Islands during the season when navigation is closed. And I was answered yesterday that the Postmaster General had established a news service and that this service had begun last week.

Some years ago, I obtained from the Minister of Public Works a condensed cable news service for the fishermen and merchants of the Magdalen Islands, giving them the state of the fish-markets and of staples generally at Halifax and Pictou. That news was cabled from Meat Cove to the islands. But I never asked for the supply of political news to the islands. The service of the cable was also given to the islanders at a cheap rate in order to give them the necessary facilities for communicating with their relatives on the mainland. This year when the estimates of the Public Works Department came before the House, on the item of telegraph lines in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, I called the attention of the Minister of Public Works to that service established through my instrumentality a few years ago. To my astonishment I learned the other day that a more extended service of news had been granted by the government to the islands. I immediately suspected something, and my suspicions were right. I asked the Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier), and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Hazen), what was the nature of this service, and was answered yesterday by the Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier), that that service was non-political. Well, Sir, I hold in my hand the first instalment of news which was sent by the political editor in Quebec to the Magdalen Islands. And I must protest against it. No political leader has the right to use the moneys of the people to supply partisan news to one section of the country at the expense of the whole country. This first instalment is to be followed by weekly letters to the Magdalen Islands. I shall not worry the House by reading these despatches, but I see one paragraph here which deals with the G.T.P. contract which was interpreted by the Privy Council the other day. And the whole statement is biased, and is given from the Conservative point of view only. I need hardly mention other paragraphs in which eulogies and encomiums are heaped upon the head of the Postmaster General and the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Monk), in connection with Quebec public expenditures. I call the attention of the acting leader of the House (Mr. Foster), to this state of affairs. The question will be brought up again in the House, but, meantime, he should warn his colleagues that they must not expect the country to pay for partisan news wired to the Magdalen Islands under the excuse of giving to the islanders something of the news of the outside world.

Mr. HAGGART. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lemieux), give us a specimen of this partisanship?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Just before my hon. friend reads, would he kindly state from what he is reading?

Mr. LEMIEUX. From the Toronto Daily 'Star,' which publishes the first instalment of news sent to the Magdalen Islands. It has been published in other newspapers, but I happen to have the Toronto 'Star' in my hands, and from this I read.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). My hon. friend is certain that that is the pure, undiluted news that was sent to the Magdalen Islands?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am morally convinced that these are the items of news sent to the islands.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). It is very important to know that it is really so.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Very well. I will take the hint of my hon. friend (Mr. Foster). I will put a question in the order paper or move a motion asking the Postmaster General to give the House an exact copy of the news which was sent from Quebec to the Magdalen Islands. And I shall defer my remarks to another day. But I again state that if the facts are as mentioned in the Toronto 'Star,' it is simply an abuse of the confidence of parliament, and it is a gross abuse of the privileges enjoyed by a minister of the Crown. He has no right to use the money of the people to supply partisan news to one section of the country.

Mr. BENNETT (Simcoe). I would suggest to my hon. friend that he look up the report of the Kingston penitentiary a few years ago, where he will find that the greater part of several pages was taken up in an argument on binder twine to contradict speeches of members in this House.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

SUPPLY.

Campbellton—to increase accommodation at, $160,000.

Mr. COCHRANE. The committee will remember that a very disastrous fire occurred there last year, and this vote is necessary to replace the buildings then burnt down.

Mr. CARVELL. Does that refer to the stations and buildings alone?

Mr. COCHRANE. It covers station, platforms, engine house, rest-room, roundhouse, turntable, conduits for pipes, heating, gas and electric plant, wiring and installation, machinery, grading and ballasting, freight sheds, ice house, temporary buildings, engineering expenses, land and legal expenses. The work was started last year.

Mr. MACDONALD. The minister was to give us some information with regard to financial results.

Mr. COCHRANE. I have had prepared the following memo in answer to my hon. friend:

Year.	Average miles in operation.	Working expenses.	Earnings.	Profit.	Loss.
		$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.
1907-8	1447	9,157,435 53	9,173,558 80	16,123 27
1908-9	1447	9,328,021 55	8,527,069 46		800,952 09
1909-10	1447	8,645,070 33	9,268,234 99	623,164 66
1910-11	1455	9,591,070 41	9,739,120 59	148,050 18
1911-12	1455	9,994,527 44	10,558,781 03	564,254 00	Estimated.

In answer to the hon. member for North Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie), all expenditures on the Intercolonial railway out of revenue have been for maintenance, with the exception of an amount of $200,000 which was taken out of the surplus for the year ending March 31, 1911, and paid out towards betterment of the rolling stock. I may say also that the action of the former minister in reserving that $200,000 was one that I approve. It enabled him to bring the rolling stock up to a better state than it was in previously. As to the surplus at the end of the present year, I have not yet decided what to do with it, or how much of it to apply in the same way.

Mr. MACDONALD. There are complaints throughout the lower provinces that the rolling stock is not up to the standard, either in quantity or quality. It is said that in order to get a surplus these considerations are being neglected. Has the minister looked into that question?

Mr. COCHRANE. As I said last night, we are taking stock to arrive at a conclusion. Later on we will find in the estimates an item for cars and rolling stock.

Mr. CARVELL. I would like to ask the minister if he will take into consideration the advisability of retaining this surplus in some way for a special fund, and using it towards renewing rolling stock, bridges and whatever else is necessary. I know I am opening up a big question. I am not finding any fault, because my own party friends have erred to the same extent that his friends did when they were in power, and I am afraid that my hon. friend may err in the future. There is a wide difference between the Intercolonial railway and any ordinary railway company. I realize that railway companies are in the habit of charging many items to capital, and justly. If this method of bookkeeping has been adopted on the Intercolonial in the past, to some extent we are following the principles of railway companies. But there is a vast difference between the two. The Intercolonial is an asset of Canada, and it is a necessity to the maritime provinces. It is a great advantage, not only to the maritime provinces but to Quebec and Ontario as well; because while it is true that we have a reasonable freight rate and passenger rate, yet the great part of that advantage inures to the benefit I think of the manufacturers and producers of Ontario and Quebec, certainly to a much greater extent than to the consumers of the maritime provinces. Now the trouble comes in that when we have a surplus of $600,000 or $700,000, as we are to have this year, that goes into the ordinary fund of Canada, and the people of the maritime provinces, or the Intercolonial railway, get no credit for it whatever. It simply swells the revenue of Canada, and it is taken to be used in other portions of Canada—I am not saying it is not properly used, but the difficulty comes in that if unfortunately there comes a year when there is a deficit, then there is a great cry goes up from the rest of Canada that the Intercolonial is a burden, it is something that ought not to be allowed. Several times since I have been in parliament I have heard this cry go up: The Intercolonial is not paying its way; therefore it is going to be sold, or given away to some company, or something of that kind.

If this money were placed in a special fund, out of which betterments could be paid for, we would at least have the satisfaction of knowing whether the Intercolonial railway is paying its way or not. I submit that there has been hardly a year since the Intercolonial railway has been in existence when the people of Canada have been able to tell by reading the report of the minister, or the blue-books, whether the Intercolonial railway has paid its way or not. Possibly I am breaking in on new ground; I know that I am voicing something which has been opposed to the policy of my friends, but I think I am talking common sense, and I am appealing to the minister, not to give me his decision now, but to take this matter into his consideration. Take the figures which the minister gave me last evening; he says that we have a surplus this year of something like $600,000 or $700,000, but that we spent last year a million and a half on capital account. If that be true we have no actual revenue returned to the people. I would like to see the Intercolonial railway put upon a business basis. I am a maritime province man, but I have no connection with the Intercolonial railway. It does not affect my constituency, but I hope that it will in the future, because I believe that the minister is going to effect some arrangement by which a branch of the Intercolonial railway will come through my part of the country. I am anxious to see the freight and passenger rates brought down to the minimum so long as they pay expenses, but I do not like to see a railway run except on business principles, and I would like to see the bookkeeping carried on in such a way that we would know exactly what the road is costing us each year and whether we have a deficit or a surplus. The hon. minister made a statement last night with regard to the board of management, but I do not think that he gave us as much information as we desired. I am not going to ask him here to declare his policy, because evidently the minister does not want to do that now. From the figures given this afternoon, I see that since the inauguration of this board of management there has been a great improvement in the balance sheet at the end of the year. We have had a continuation of surpluses since this board of management was inaugurated, whereas very frequently prior to that we had deficits, I think that the minister would do well to consider carefully the question as to the advisability of doing away with this board of management. I know that there has been a feeling in many parts of the maritime provinces that the board of management perhaps has not played the game to the extent that somebody would like it to.

An hon. MEMBER. The political game?

Mr. CARVELL. The political game, but I do think that they have played the business game and that is the game that the country wants to-day. I am not lecturing my hon. friend, but I am trying to talk common sense, and I hope that he will give some consideration to what I propose before coming to his decision as to the question of policy.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I remember very well the late Minister of Railways explaining to the House what had been done with the surplus earnings in the way of betterments to rolling stock and betterments to the railway.

Mr. COCHRANE. I explained that.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, and the late minister always made that explanation.

Mr. COCHRANE. I did it this morning.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, I had not the opportunity of hearing my hon. friend. It was affirmed by the late Minister that all reasonable improvements which were required and which any ordinary railway company would charge to operating expenses were charged by the Intercolonial railway, and that no improvements had been charged to capital account except such as a railway company would charge to capital account. It seems to me that where entirely new rolling stock is obtained, additional locomotives and cars, it is proper to charge the cost of these to capital account. Where rolling stock has been worn out and new cars are obtained to take their place then it is proper to charge the cost of the new cars to revenue or operating expenses. I understand that where a bridge has been replaced by a heavier bridge, owing to the necessity of providing for heavier locomotives, the difference between what would have been the fair value of the bridge that was replaced and the cost of the new bridge has been charged to capital account. Every railway company does that. I have been told by a gentleman connected with the Canadian Pacific railway that since that road was supposed to be entirely constructed and completed the Canadian Pacific railway has expended more on capital account, in rebuilding, improving grades, laying heavier rails and rebuilding bridges than the original cost of the road. That has been charged to capital account and it would be very improper and unfair to the shareholders to charge it to operating expenses. In order to deal justly with the Intercolonial railway and give the public a proper idea of whether it is paying expenses or not it is very proper that these should be charged against operating expenses and the overplus should be shown as a surplus. It seems to me that that is only reasonable and fair.

Mr. CARVELL. I am sorry to differ from my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Pugsley) although I quite agree with him that the method which he has described is the method followed by the ordinary railway company. I am sure that if we were to keep on following that method we would never know what the Intercolonial railway was costing us, or whether it was paying its way or not. There ought to be a time at which the Intercolonial railway should be considered as being finished except you are adding new mileage. Of course, if new mileage is being added that is another thing. But, there should be a finality to it at some time. Most of us are business men to some extent and if, in my business, or in any of the enterprises with which I am connected, I kept taking money out of earnings and paying it out in the form of dividends, and if I was issuing new stock to keep the thing going, possibly I myself might get some money out of the dividend, but I would not be creating very much of a property to hand down to my successors.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Is not that what the Pennsylvania and Canadian Pacific railway are doing?

Mr. CARVELL. That may be so as far as these railways are concerned, but the business of the country is not done in that way. This is a case, I contend, of running this road in such a manner as to enable it to pay its way. When we have a railway running for forty years surely the time has come when it ought to pay its way or we should know why. Possibly I am talking against the policy of both my friends and my friends opposite, but I hope the minister will give the question some consideration and bring forward some definite proposition.

Mr. FOWLER. There is a matter to which the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) took occasion to refer last evening, when I was, for the moment, absent from the House. It is in connection with certain rails that were supplied for the Salisbury and Albert railway. The hon. member for St. John referred to certain remarks which I had made in the county of Albert subsequent to the election of September 21, and he attempted to show by referring to certain telegrams, which he quoted that my statements on that occasion were not in accordance with the facts. The statements which I made at that time to which the hon. member takes exception were as a matter of fact largely inferences from the condition of affairs as we saw them. We knew that on the morning of the election, September 21, a number of carloads of rails were brought to Salisbury, the junction point of the Intercolonial railway and the Albert railway. These carloads of rails were never put upon the Albert road, they were never brought away from Salisbury, and shortly after the election they were returned to Moncton. The natural inference was that it was never the intention of the government to hand over these rails to the Albert road for the purpose of repairing its lines. We had no access to these telegrams, and so, as I say, the natural and only inference was that it was merely an election trick and we would be quite justified in drawing that inference, because we knew who was behind it, the hon. member for St. John, who was celebrated for these little election dodges and manipulations. Consequently we were confirmed and fortified in our opinion and in the inference we drew from the position of affairs as we saw it. These rails were returned to Moncton, and I had to come to Ottawa and interview the department before any of them were made use of upon the road.

My hon. friend has quoted certain telegrams which passed beween himself and Mr. Raymond. The condition of affairs was just as I stated in the remarks I made in Albert county subsequent to the election, to which I have already referred. No agreement had been executed between the railway company and the government, and consequently the officers of the department in Moncton declined to allow those rails to go for the use of the Albert railway.

My hon. friend quoted a telegram which shows that this agreement had not been executed and so the quotation which he makes from my remarks at Albert is amply borne out. I said: 'The people of Albert county were fooled about the railway.' Surely they were fooled, they were told they were to get these rails, that the arrangement was all made and these agents of the Liberal party were chasing about the county, were going to the various halls and schoolhouses throughout the county, telling what the government had done and were proposing to do and they were reading telegrams by the score from Mr. Pugsley showing the wonderful, strenuous efforts he was making in order to get this road in running order again. But it was all hot air, simply wind, and nothing was done, and nothing had been done until after September 21, or in fact until October 26. Anybody who has anything to do with these government departments, and I think I speak to a sympathetic audience, knows that it takes some time to get them to move and so it is no wonder that it was not until October 26, with all the force I was able to bring to bear upon the department that I was able to get these rails. I did get them and the road was running on the 1st of December, the very day I told the people it would start. I told the people of Albert they were fooled about the railway. Surely in the face of everything said by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley), and his emissaries throughout the county, when they were still without the railway, and suffering great loss of business and distress, I was justified in drawing the inference that the people were fooled about the railway. Promises were made that were not intended to be fulfilled. The only way to judge of a man's intention is by the circumstances surrounding his acts, because you cannot pry into his brain and find inscribed there what he really means; you must judge of his intention by the outward evidence of his acts, and with these carloads of rails going down to Salisbury and remaining there instead of going into the county as was expected, to be used on the road, it was the most natural thing in the world for us to draw the inference that they were never intended to go any further.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Did not my hon. friend the Minister of Railways, after he became minister, cause the cars to remain there up to the 26th day of October when the agreement was delivered at Ottawa?

Mr. FOWLER. No, the cars went back to Moncton and were unloaded.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. FOWLER. I know a number of cars were unloaded, I tried to prevent them being unloaded.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That was after the new government came in.

Mr. FOWLER. Possibly it would have been great presumption on my part to attempt to interfere before. I said:

> There had been no authority for these rails to be loaded or removed from Moncton.

Is that statement correct? My hon. friend has shown by the telegram that there was no authority. He said that on information he had received, he wired that the contract was signed and executed. If it was signed it certainly was not filed at Ottawa and that would not authorize the department to send the rails. I am not finding fault with the department but with the manner in which this was done. It was done in such a way as to throw the strongest possible suspicion upon the bona fides of those carrying on the negotiations, and it is no wonder the people of that country think that they were fooled and I said what I thought because that was the only possible inference one could draw. I said:

There had been no authority for these rails to be loaded or removed from Moncton, and as soon as the elections were over and the government was defeated, arrangements were made to withdraw these rails.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is quite incorrect.

Mr. FOWLER. I say that the rails that were loaded in Moncton yard to be shipped to the Albert railway were after the elections, unloaded from the cars in which they had been placed. I say that because I saw that done and tried to stop it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. On what date?

Mr. FOWLER. After the elections.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Was it after or before the present Minister of Railways came into office?

Mr. FOWLER. Possibly it was shortly after. There was no contract and therefore the minister would not have been justified in allowing these rails to go. I said:

I found out that there had been no contract signed or executed in regard to rails for the Salisbury and Albert railway.

As far as the department was concerned, it had not been signed or executed. I do not know what document may have been signed outside of the department, certainly there was none there.

Then there was trouble about the bridges. I again went to Ottawa and got the bridges, and I have the authority for saying to you that one of these bridges is now on the line and on the 1st of December the road will again be in full operation its entire length.

Mr. MACDONALD. Were these rails subsequently obtained for the branch line?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes, they were bought by the company under an agreement with the department that they were to pay, I think, $27 per ton, which I think was an excessive price for them. The rails were sold to the company under the condition that if the branch line were taken over by the government, an allowance would be made for the rails, and if the branch lines were not taken over, the company would pay $27 a ton for them.

Mr. MACDONALD. But in the meantime they are not to pay for them?

Mr. FOWLER. They are not to pay for them until it is determined what interest is to be charged against them. My desire was to have this railway operated through its entire length, but it was shut down by the late government, which was charged with the duty of conserving the rights of the people and looking after their interests. However, after the present administration came in, I found the department sympathetic, although slow, and the result was that on the 1st day of December the railway was operated throughout its entire length, and it has been operated daily ever since, to the great comfort and joy of the people; and of course everybody along the line of the railway is very strongly in favour of the present administration, whereas the other people had only made promises, which, as usual, had a string to them. They remind me of a trick that we used to play when boys. We would take a ten-cent piece, put a hole through it, tie a string through the hole, put the ten-cent piece on the sidewalk, hide in a doorway, and, when any one went to pick up the ten-cent piece, jerk it back. So with the late government: They always made their promises with a string to them, and, as soon as people were ready to grasp them, pulled them back. The hon. member for St. John assured us as a member of this House that he was acting in good faith, and I am bound to accept his statement. I am simply justifying the statement that I made at Albert, and I will leave it to the fair opinion of any member of this House if I was not justified in all the circumstances.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What I complain of is not so much that my hon. friend, in his ignorance of the facts, made the statements that he did, but that when he has acquired a knowledge of the real facts, he should still persist in stating that the people were fooled, and that there was no bona fide intention to supply the rails for this railway.

Mr. FOWLER. The hon. gentleman has missed the point of what I said. I said that I was justified in drawing the inference which I did, and I say so still. But if the hon. genleman makes the statement as a member of this House that he was acting in good faith throughout this affair, I am bound by the rules of the House to accept it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is a course which usually does not commend itself to gentlemen. That is not a generous mode of accepting the statement I made. I do not ask my hon. friend to rely on my statement, but I ask him to take the correspondence which appears on the record, and any man reading it, with a disposition to deal fairly and honourably with his political opponents, would say that everything was done bona fide and in a proper and businesslike manner; and there is no ground for my hon. friend, with the knowledge of the facts as disclosed by the record, stating that there was any disposition to humbug the people or to do anything that was not fair and businesslike.

Mr. FOWLER. Was the contract in the hands of the Railway Department before the 21st of September?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I stated last evening exacly what the contract was, and I will repeat after the recess what I said.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 99) respecting the Ottawa, Montreal and Eastern Railway Company. —Mr. Bickerdike.

Bill (No. 94) respecting the Windsor, Chatham and London Railway Company. —Mr. Wilcox.

Bill (No. 54) to incorporate the Quinze River and Ottawa Railway Company.—Mr. Brabazon.

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 114) to incorporate Révillon Frères Trading Company, Limited.—Mr. Barker.

SUPPLY.

House again in Committee of Supply.

Campbellton—to increase accommodation at, $150,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend for Kings and Albert (Mr. Fowler), who is not now in his place, asked me just before recess if the contract was signed prior to the 21st of September. I may say for the information of my hon. friend that the telegram from Mr. Raymond to me was prior to the 21st of September, stating that the contract had been signed, and it was understood that it would be forwarded immediately to the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals at Ottawa. I observe that in the copy of agreement which is included in the return to the House, and which was signed by the Minister of Railways, the date is given as the 19th of September. Of course that was not the date when my hon. friend signed it, he signed it afterwards, and that evidently was the day when it was signed in New York by the president of the company.

Now my hon. friend for Kings and Albert has been a little disagreeable in the remarks which he made to the committee, and among other things he said as an excuse for not believing that the government was acting bona fide in reference to the supply of rails for this railway, that he was aware of tricks which I have played in the past, presuming, I suppose, political tricks, and therefore he was justified in giving the worst construction possible to what had taken place. I do not propose to follow my hon. friend and say any disagreeable things with regard to him. I think it does no good to import language or insinuations of that kind into the discussion of an important matter such as this. I am not aware however that ever in my political life I gave any assurance to the public which was not given with the utmost sincerity, or that I ever failed to carry out, so far as I was able, any promises which I had made. Perhaps I may say this—and I hope my hon. friend will not take it offensively—I think that if he has any weakness at all it is a desire, when he gets upon his feet, to say things which are disagreeable, and for which I have no doubt he is exceedingly sorry afterwards. I have no doubt my hon. friend has many uneasy moments after he makes a speech in going over the mistakes which he makes, and he promises himself to do better next time. I only hope that my hon. friend will avoid future errors of that kind, because, underneath what appears to be the disagreeable side of my hon. friend's character, he has a kindly heart; you have to search for it often, but still when you do make diligent search, you find it is still there all the same. I should be very sorry indeed to say anything of an unkind nature towards my hon. friend. My only reason for bringing this matter up was to show that whether the hon. gentleman was endeavouring to give a fair and proper impression to the people of Albert county or not, he certainly led them astray when he led them to believe that there was any want of good faith on the part of the late government in this very important matter.

Mr. FOWLER. I was not here when the hon. gentleman began his remarks. Would he repeat what his answer was to my question?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I said that the telegram from Mr. Raymond to me, stating that the agreement had been signed in New York, was prior to the 21st of September. I said also that that was further confirmed by the fact that the agreement which is on file, and which is executed by the present Minister of Railways, is dated the 19th of September, two days before the election, and of course in the vicinity of three weeks before the present Minister of Railways assumed office. I take it for granted that he signed the agreement with the date in it which had been put in by the company. It was signed by Mr. Swan, the president of the company.

Mr. FOWLER. I asked if there was any agreement between the Salisbury-Albert

Railway Company and the government on file in the department at Ottawa or anywhere else, an executed agreement with regard to selling rails and transferring rails from the Intercolonial to the Albert road?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I stated the full circumstances last evening. What I said then I am happy to repeat now, because my hon. friend, I fear, has not done me the honour of reading the report of my remarks in 'Hansard.'

Mr. FOWLER. Yes, I did.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Then he has forgotten what I said. I said that in the month of September Mr. E. P. Raymond, who was solicitor of the company, and who, I may say, had given assurance that he held a power of attorney from the Salisbury-Harvey Railway Company, had wired me from New York that the agreement had been executed by the company; and it was understood between Mr. Raymond and myself that immediately upon its being executed it should be forwarded to the Department of Railways at Ottawa.

Mr. FOWLER. But had it been signed by the Minister of Railways?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not at all.

Mr. FOWLER. When was it signed?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I said it was not signed until the present minister signed it, some time in October; I stated that yesterday.

Mr. FOWLER. Then I would ask the hon. gentleman if that agreement was operative until it was signed by the Minister of Railways and Canals?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would say that it was, and I will tell my hon. friend why. In the month of September the terms of the agreement were approved by Mr. Raymond, the solicitor of the railway company, and who held a power of attorney from the railway company, and it was also aproved by Mr. Sherwood, the general manager of the railway company. When Mr. Raymond sent me the telegram that it had been formally executed by the president in New York, my view as a lawyer was then, and is now, that if any rails were delivered upon the strength of that agreement, the terms of which had been approved by all the parties interested, by Mr. Alward, acting for the Department of Railways, in St. John, where the terms of the agreement were arranged—that if rails were supplied under that agreement, the company would be bound to carry it out. I have no doubt whatever upon that point.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to read a document which is on file and which was not read yesterday, but which has a bearing, a very important bearing, upon the question of the bona fides of the late government in reference to supplying the rails, and which is also important in view of the point raised for the consideration of my hon. friend the Minister of Railways as to the arrangement being that legislation should be introduced at the present session of parliament. This is a letter from the former Minister of Railways to Mr. Swan, the president of the Salisbury and Harvey Railway Company:

Office of the Minister of Railways and Canals,
Ottawa, Aug. 2, 1911.

Dear Sir,—The policy of the Dominion government, as announced, is to take such lines as may, in the interests of the public, furnish branch lines to the Intercolonial railway. At the session of parliament just closed a Bill was introduced naming the basis on which these lines might be taken over. This Bill got its first reading, and was under discussion in Committee of the Whole House when dissolution took place.

In the meantime, the owners of these lines made representations that the basis could not be worked out practically, and after consultation with the Minister of Railways another basis was proposed, which does not seem unreasonable.

I have your offer to sell outright the Salisbury and Harvey railway, with its extensions and rolling stock for ($120,000) one hundred and twenty thousand dollars. Ordinarily I would not at the present moment make a proposition respecting the taking over of this line, were it not that some nineteen miles of the road are not now open for traffic, and the people who were accustomed to a railway service are suffering a great injustice and hardship, so that I feel strong steps should be taken to remedy this situation.

The government is prepared, therefore, to propose to you that at the coming session of parliament they will introduce legislation, either to take over the road at one hundred and twenty thousand ($120,000) or to take it over on the basis recently arrived at after consultation between the owners of the various branch lines and the Minister of Railways on condition that you will agree, at once to make sufficient repairs to the line to enable it to be operated and begin at once to operate it over its entire length for the convenience of the public. Such repairs to be made under the supervision of the Railway Department.

Should parliament approve of the government taking over this line, the amount of money expended by you in such repairs will either be added to the sale price, or to the capital on which you will be paid interest under the rental basis.

Kindly let me hear from you without delay as the people complain loudly of the inconvenience.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) GEORGE P. GRAHAM.

A. S. Swan, Esq.,
President, Salisbury and Harvey Railway,
Hillsborough, N.B.

I find on file also a letter from me to Hon. Mr. Graham, Minister of Railways and Canals, as follows:

Office of the Minister of Public Works, Canada.
St. John, 11th Aug., 1911.

Dear Mr. Graham,—In reference to a letter of A. Sherwood, manager of the Salisbury-Harvey railway for loan of rails and iron girders for bridges. Sherwood agrees to modify letter so that they shall be merely a loan to the company pending completion of transfer of road to Intercolonial railway. It is very important that this loan should be made, as the people are put to an enormous inconvenience by reason of road being shut down.

I am, yours very sincerely,
WM. PUGSLEY.

Hon. Geo. P. Graham,
Minister of Railways,
Ottawa.

Members of the committee will see that the letter of the Minister of Railways and Canals of the late government to the president of the company set forth very fully the terms upon which the government would allow the company to have the rails. Following that up, an agreement, as I have said, was prepared, approved by the manager of the railway, approved also by the Solicitor of the railway, who held the power of attorney, as appears from the papers on file, and by the then Minister of Railways. Then, when I received Mr. Raymond's telegram that the agreement had actually been executed by the company, and assuming that he would send it forward to the Department of Railways and Canals, I felt that I was justified in wiring to the department that Mr. Raymond had wired me that the contract had been signed and asking that the rails might be forwarded. For some reason or other there was some delay on the part of Mr. Raymond in sending the agreement to Ottawa. We find on file the communication from Mr. Raymond, which was read yesterday, as follows:

St. John, N.B., October 5, 1911.

Hon. Wm. Pugsley,
Minister of Public Works,
Ottawa, Ont.

Expect to make another arrangement with new government.

E. P. RAYMOND.

That the company expected to make a more favourable arrangement with the new government does not appear. But I think that everybody will agree with me that when the agreement did not arrive in Ottawa in due course of mail, as the deputy minister had a right to expect it would arrive, the department was quite justified in issuing orders, as it did, to withhold delivery.

Now, my hon. friend (Mr. Fowler) repeats to-day the statement which he made in Albert, that he was entitled to all the credit for getting these rails actually delivered. I cannot agree with that. The files of the department do not justify my hon. friend in making that statement. It appears that he did communicate with Ottawa, and did offer to give his personal assurance, to assume the personal responsibility to make good to the government any claim in respect of these rails. But my hon. friend the present Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Cochrane)—very properly—having in view the Independence of Parliament Act—declined to take any contract from my hon. friend, no matter how good that contract might be, for my hon. friend could not properly enter into it, and declined, as he had the right to decline, to countermand the order with regard to the rails until the company carried out its undertaking to forward the contract to Ottawa. It was not owing to what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowler) did, unless it was to induce Mr. Raymond to hurry forward the contract. For, the moment the contract arrived the present Minister of Railways and Canals acted promptly and in good faith and executed the agreement which, as I have said was arranged weeks before, and gave the order.

Another thing which strikes me as peculiar. The hon. member for Kings and Albert says he did not know anything about the telegrams on file in the department. Does he deny that after the election, and before the present Minister of Railways and Canals acted he saw the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and asked him the cause of the delay?

Mr. FOWLER. I saw the Minister of Marine and Fisheries on several occasions. We discussed many matters, and may have incidentally discussed this matter,—I dare say we did.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have no doubt my hon. friend (Mr. Fowler) did so. It was the most natural thing in the world for him to see the Minister of Marine and Fisheries as being the minister from the province. And I assume that it would be at the request of my hon. friend from Kings and Albert that the telegram of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries of the 12th of October was sent. That telegram reads:

St. John, N.B., October 12, 1911.

Hon. Frank Cochrane,
Minister of Railways,
Chateau Frontenac, Que.

Agreement made with late government to supply rails and girders to Salisbury and Albert railway to repair their railway pending the agreement to take over railways by government, since government resigned management refuses to give any further rails. Kindly instruct Pottinger at Moncton to continue supplying sufficient rails and girders so work can be completed. Will see you in Ottawa Tuesday.

(Sgd.) J. D. HAZEN.

Which, as I said yesterday, was a very proper telegram for the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to send. To that telegram the Minister of Marine and Fisheries received the following reply:

Ottawa, Oct. 14, 1911.

Hon. J. D. Hazen,
St. John, N.B.

Message received re Salisbury and Albert railway I find upon inquiry that the company has not executed the agreement they promised to, and which it was said they had done. This is reason, I am informed, for non-delivery more rails and girders.

(Sgd.) F. COCHRANE.

If my hon. friend was not informed by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries of that telegram it certainly is very surprising indeed.

Mr. FOWLER. Why surprising?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Surprising, because, if my hon. friend was getting the Minister of Mariné and Fisheries to intercede in the matter and to hurry on the delivery of the rails, I would have assumed that the minister would have informed the hon. member for Kings-Albert as to the reason why the rails and girders were not being delivered. At all events, what I say is that before the hon. gentleman informed himself by finding out what had taken place in regard to these rails, the agreement which had been made and the correspondence which had passed between the department and the railway company, he was not acting in a manner which would command the approval of those who were acquainted with the circumstances, when he went to his constituency and told the people that the late government had been deliberately fooling them instead of delivering these rails, in fact, telling them that they never intended to deliver them and that what they did was simply to send forward the rails with the intention of taking them back after the elections. I submit that upon consideration even the hon. member himself will feel that his conduct under these circumstances was of the most unjustifiable character.

Mr. FOWLER. That is very strong language to be used even by the hon. gentleman. In order that the committee may be fully seized of the circumstances in connection with this particular case it would be as well for me perhaps to give a little of the history of the stoppage of operations on this road. Many months before the first step was taken, before the first telegram was sent, this road had ceased operations from Hillsboro to Albert, a distance of about 20 miles, and the people were needing the service of that railway very much. There were manufacturing industries at Albert that were unable to get their products away by reason of the lack of transportation and the people were making every effort possible to get this road reopened. The House was in session there during that time, the government was in power, the government of which the hon. member for St. John was a member, and a supposedly not unimportant member, it was my hon. friend's own province, it was a constituency close to his own, it was a constituency represented by my hon. friend; yet, all these months passed by and these people got no redress nor was any attempt made to redress their grievance. The first date that my hon. friend has put forward is the 2nd of August, months after the road had ceased operation. Why did they get in a bit of a hurry then?—because an election was impending, because this railway ran through an important section of the county of Albert, a part of the constituency of Kings and Albert, because they felt that this man Fowler would likely be a candidate, and under those circumstances, they were determined to keep him out of the House at any cost. They had succeeded once at a tremendous cost and they were determined to do it again if they could. So these gentlemen got busy, not because they wished to redress the grievance that the people of that portion of Albert county were suffering from—no, but simply because they wished to carry that constituency and they felt that it was necessary to take that step. Then, they made a terrible rush.

They got in a very great hurry and my hon. friend did a great deal of telegraphing all over the country. Telegrams were flying thick and fast and a certain gentleman in the county of Albert who was formerly the local member there made himself very busy and I do not know how many trips he made to Moncton beseeching and praying the department there to do something before election day. Why? Why was all this haste at this particular time?—because the election was approaching and not because they wished to assist the people of Albert particularly but simply because they felt it necessary in order to prevent my returning to the House of Commons.

Now the hon. gentleman tells us that under the circumstances that existed in this case, because there had been some negotiations in connection with this matter because there was supposed to be floating around somewhere, he knew not where, an agreement, whether signed or not he knew not, certainly not signed by the Minister of Railways and Canals, we are not justified in casting any doubt upon the intentions of the late government. He was on his reputation as a lawyer and as a Minister of the late government that it was a sufficient contract entered into between the late government and the Railway Department to justify the carrying out of the terms as they were to be carried out by the government if the contract had gone through. It has been said, I know not with what truth, but I suppose that when they investigate it we will find out with what truth, that a great deal of the business of the Department of Public Works, under the supervision of my hon. friend, the then minister, was done in a very loose way, not that there was anything crooked, or criminal or improper in a wrongful sense, but that the business was done in a very loose way and, having heard what the hon. gentleman said tonight with regard to this matter and in regard to what he would do under circumstances such as he has detailed here, I can understand why there might be a great deal of loose business in the Department of Public Works under his superintendency. No Minister of Railways, no responsible head or deputy head of the Department of Railways, would be justified in allowing rails to such an amount as would cover 20 miles of road to go out from the possession of the Intercolonial railway under any such loose arrangement as that, I care not what statement my hon. friend may make in regard to it on his responsibility or reputation as a lawyer. I grant that my hon. friend is a good lawyer, none better in Canada, but my hon. friend is not serious when he makes the statement that that would be a sufficient contract for him, and if he were advising a client he would not advise him along those lines. I was absolutely justified, I repeat it here and now, under all the circumstances of the case, in drawing the inference which I did draw, and the inference which the people of that district drew, that the government was not serious in the attempt it was making to redress the grievance under which these people had laboured. If the government had seriously desired to do justice to the people it would not have allowed that railway to have remained idle for months notwithstanding that public meetings were being held that petitions were being sent forward, that everything was being done that the people could be expected to do to bring about a change in the running of the road and to secure the opening of that part of it that was not being operated. Therefore, I say I was absolutely justified in the statement I made and I will leave it to the fair judgment of the members of this committee to say whether or not I was under the circumstances, even as detailed by my hon. friend.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman again indulged in street-corner gossip, I suppose. He says it is said that the business of the Public Works Department has been loosely managed. Who told my hon. friend that? Has he learned that from the present minister? We have the testimony of the present minister that he has the greatest possible confidence in the head officers of the Department of Public Works. Let me tell my hon. friend that under the rules governing the administration of the federal government where the principal officials of a department are careful in the performance of their duty there is not likely to be any loose work. So far as the Public Works Department, while I had the honour to preside over it, is concerned, I have no fear of the fullest possible investigation into every act of mine, and as to everything that was done while I was minister.

Mr. BENNETT (Simcoe). Wait a while.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We will wait a while, just as long as my hon. friend wants, but let us wait, do not let us anticipate what may be discovered, do not throw out insinuations as to what may be discovered, do not seek to poison the public mind with respect to the administration of a department until matters are brought out, if there are any that can be brought out, reflecting on the administration of the department. It seems to me that is only fair, only what any public man administering a department has a right to expect from political opponents whether they are members of this House or outsiders.

My hon. friend has complained of delay by the late government in making provision for the opening of this railway. It seems to me my hon. friend speaks in that respect without consideration. This is a private road, owned by a private company which received subsidies from the provincial government and from the Dominion government. It did cease to operate a portion of its line. Very great complaints were made by the people, the very strongest possible complaint was made by the late representative of Kings and Albert, and at the earnest solicitation of Dr. McAllister and representatives from other constituencies in which railways were in a somewhat similar position, the late government asked parliament to enact a law of a very drastic character under which if a road ceased to be operated, proceedings might be taken for the sale of it in order to take the most effective measures possible to secure its being reopened and operated upon a safe and proper basis. But in this particular case the company said we have not the money to put this 20 miles in order, we cannot reopen it, unless we can get rails, we have not the means to procure rails, and we cannot do anything towards reopening the road unless the government will come to our rescue and give us a loan of rails pending the completion of an arrangement for taking over the various branch lines of railways. That was a very difficult thing to do, if a proposition like that were put up to the present Minister of Railways, he would say that was a question that required careful consideration.

Mr. FOWLER. How long did it take to say all that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It has not taken me very long.

Mr. FOWLER. How long would it take for the people to make their statement, and for you to grant that relief? Would it take all the months that the road remained idle until the 1st of August?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It took a good deal of consideration on the part of the government before they would approve a recommendation which I made that the government should come to the rescue of this road, and make a loan of this large quantity of rails to them. It meant lending the company rails to relay 20 miles of road, it meant contracting quite a large indebtedness, and was a matter requiring very careful consideration, and the government very properly took quite a considerable time before deciding to do it. My hon. friend knows that another part of this railway extending to Alma was closed up by the Albert Railway Company.

Mr. FOWLER. Not the same company.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It may be another company, but a continuation of the line owned and operated by this company.

Mr. FOWLER. That had nothing to do with it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. And my hon. friend knows that the rails of that road were taken up and disposed of, and I think my hon. friend had something to do with the matter as solicitor or otherwise, and would know something about it.

Mr. FOWLER. I know all about it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That was a piece of road which would have been a feeder to this part, which was aided by the late government and unfortunately it went out of service, the rails were taken up and that part ceased to be operated, thereby, of course, rendering the other part of the road less profitable than it otherwise would have been. I submit that the late government so far from being censurable for any delay which took place with regard to making a loan of these rails, were entitled to receive, and did receive, from the people of Albert county, and should receive from my hon. friend as their representative, hearty thanks in respect of the matter, because what the late government agreed to do was of great public service and it affords me the greatest pleasure to know that the present Minister of Railways has carried out what we agreed to do.

One word with regard to what my hon. friend says was the improper advice which I gave to send forward these rails upon my receiving information that the contract had been signed. The hon. gentleman says that this was a contract which was flying around loose somewhere. It was nothing of the kind. That draft of agreement had been brought to St. John by the law clerk of the department, its terms had been approved of by the deputy Minister of Justice, by the general manager of the Intercolonial railway, and by Mr. Raymond, solicitor of the company, and all that remained was to take it to New York to secure its execution by the president of the company under the seal of the company, after which it was to be forwarded to the deputy Minister of Railways at Ottawa. I think it was not an imprudent thing to say to the deputy minister that it would be proper for him to have the rails loaded and sent forward, because in the ordinary course before those rails would reach the Harvey-Salisbury road, the contract would reach Ottawa, where it would be executed by the then Minister of Railways and the whole matter would be completed. The rails were so loaded that they were kept in the possession and under the control of the authorities of the Intercolonial railway until that agreement reached Ottawa, and when there was inexplicable delay in its reaching Ottawa, when it was found that Mr. Raymond was for some reason delaying in sending it forward, the railway authorities acted very properly in issuing orders not to deliver the rails to the company because the agreement had not reached Ottawa. They acted entirely properly afterwards in waiting until the 26th of October under the present minister when the agreement was received, properly executed, when, without any thanks to the hon. member for Kings & Albert (Mr. Fowler), the present minister carried out the arrangement made by the late minister and ordered delivery of the rails.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not think my hon. friend has explained the long delay of almost a year during which this railway was down before action was taken on the 2nd of August by the government. The only explanation he has given is that he acted promptly and brought the matter before his colleagues. It took his colleagues a long time to inform themselves as to whether or not he was correct in the statements he was making. It seems to me that the hon. gentleman's colleagues should have had more confidence in the statements he made, and should not have required all those months of extra information outside of what he was able to give them, unless there was some very good reason for it.

My hon. friend has referred to another road, which he says was a part of this, and has said that I had something to do with the disposal of the rails on that road. There was another road in the county, but it was no part of the Salisbury & Albert Railway. It was a road from Harvey to Alma. It has been in existence 17 or 18 years. The ties were all rotten, the bridges were all down, and the rails were being stolen by private parties. They supposed that the road had been abandoned, and they carried off the rails and used them for various purposes. Certain persons who were clients of my office had a judgment against the road, and the rails were sold under that judgment. Why does my hon. friend drag in that transaction? To draw a herring across the trail? I cannot understand what it has possibly to do with this railway.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Was it not all one continuous railway.

Mr. FOWLER. Not at all.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Was it not a continuous railway, although owned by two separate companies?

Mr. FOWLER. As a matter of fact there were three railways there—the Salisbury & Albert, the one under discussion, the Harvey branch connecting Albert with Harvey, under a different management, and the railway from Harvey to Alma, under different management and different ownership. It was the road from Harvey to Alma which was down all those years. nothing was left but the right of way and a portion of the rails. My hon. friend knew that perfectly well. He knew that the Albert Southern, so-called, had nothing to do with the Harvey & Alma, and why he dragged it into the discussion I do not know. Did he want to cast some discredit on myself? I do not know why otherwise; and if that is all the argument that my hon. friend can put up for the long and cruel—and I say it advisedly—way of the late Government, it is a very lame and very poor defence, and it was so considered by the people of Albert county. Let me tell you that the people of Albert county are well pleased and well satisfied now with the result, and I may state that they give the credit to the present member for Kings and Albert for the redress of the great grievance under which the suffered for so many years.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is not the first time that the people have been deceived, as my hon. friend says.

Mr. FOWLER. No. or my hon. friend would not be here.

Mr. FOWLER.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Let me say, as the concluding remarks of this debate so far as I am concerned, that the people certainly have great reason to be satisfied with the policy which was inaugurated by the late government, of taking over the branch line railways, under which that government agreed to lend the rails to this Company in order to have the road improved, so that it could be put in good running condition, and which has been very properly carried out by the present Minister of Railways—I say that the people ought to be gratified that that policy has been brought to such a successful issue; and if my hon. friend is clever enough to make the people believe in a state of facts that does not exist, then he is cleverer than even those of us who have admiration for his intellect would give him the credit of being.

Mr. FOWLER. Let me say this, that the people are satisfied and gratified that there is to-day in power a government which does something more than promise. That was all that the late government did with regard to that constituency at any rate it dealt in empty promises. To-day we have a government that deals in performances.

Mr. MACDONALD. I want to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Railways to the case of a young man in Nova Scotia named Joseph Benoit, who was dismissed by my hon. friend. He had been for a number of years an employee of the railway, and had paid into the provident fund a considerable amount of money. He has called my attention to the fact that he has received an official letter informing him that he cannot receive back the amount of money which he has paid in. It does seem to me that that is very unfair, particularly in view of the law on the subject. Chapter 22 of the Acts of 1907 says that employees who are discharged from the service for any cause other than those mentioned in paragraph 'b' of section 17, after they have been three or more years contributors to the fund, may be paid out of the fund the total amount of their contributions to the fund, but without interest and less the cost and expenses of medical examinations. Paragraph 'b' of section 17 referred to is this:

> Those who are discharged from the service on account, of wilful default, misconduct negligence in the performance of their duties, drunkenness, fraud or dishonesty.

A charge arising out of political interest does not come within the things mentioned in this paragraph.

Mr. COCHRANE. Would not that be misconduct?

Mr. MACDONALD. He is not charged with misconduct, but with political interference, which is not misconduct in the sense of the statute, which relates to his conduct on duty or to any offence involving moral turpitude. Certainly it would be straining the construction of this statute very much to keep from this man the money which he has actually paid into this fund, and which was kept out of his wages, because he got interested in politics to an unusual extent. I would like the minister to look into this case and see that justice is done to this man. I am only asking my friend to carry out the statute.

Mr. COCHRANE. I shall be very glad to look into it.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). I have a similar case to bring to the attention of the hon. minister, though it is slightly different, inasmuch as the man tendered his resignation. The case is that of John Girrior, Tracadie, Antigonish county. He was section foreman, and had been in the employ of the department for upwards of 14 years. He was supposed to be a Liberal, I understand, and some people got busy to put him out of the way. Then he received notice some time in October, after this government came into power, that he was no longer to act as foreman and another man who was under him was appointed in his place he however being continued as underman. The result was that Mr. Girrior, who lived about the middle of the section—being an under-man—had to walk to the end of the section every morning before 7 o'clock when the day's work begins. Now, unfortunately he had met with an accident and had his leg broken about a year ago in consequence of which rheumatism developed. The result was that it was very hard for him to walk from the middle to the end of his section in order to get to his work, as he was required to do, every morning at 7 o'clock.

Mr. CARVELL. How far would that be?

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). These sections are 6 or 7 miles in length and it would be half that distance. At any rate it was quite apparent to him in his way of thinking—whether rightly or wrongly—that this was a subterfuge, that he was degraded in the service to get him out of the way in order to make room for the man who was appointed as his successor. Therefore to save himself from the odium of dismissal, which he expected was coming, Mr. Girrior very foolishly tendered his resignation. Now the Employees Provident Fund Act provides that any man who tenders his resignation cannot participate in the fund. Had Mr. Girrior waited and taken his dismissal for political reasons or on account of political partisanship, he would have been entitled to the amount he paid into the fund for the whole 14 years and upwards without interest and less certain charges such as the fees of the medical examiner. Had he stayed in the government service a few months longer he would have been entitled to his pension, but he resigned before the specified period of 15 years had expired. Having tendered his resignation however it is held by the Provident Fund Association that he is not entitled to participate in that fund. The section of the Employees Provident Fund Act to which I refer is the following:

> The following employees, notwithstanding anything in this Act, shall not participate in any of the benefits of the fund under this Act, nor be entitled to a refund of any portion of the contributions made by them to the fund, that is to say:
> Those, except as in this Act provided, who voluntarily retire from the service.

The Provident Fund Association has claimed that as Mr. Girrior voluntarily retired from the service he cannot receive the amount which he now claims, namely, the amount which he has paid in. But I submit, and I direct the attention of the minister to this fact; that although in form the resignation was voluntary yet, all the circumstances being considered, it was not a case of voluntary resignation at all. but a case of forced resignation as Mr. Girrior apprehended the situation. Mr. Girrior taking into considération the fact that the other man had been appointed as foreman, and that he was submitted to this extra work, of walking to the end of the section before the beginning of his days work, which under the circumstances he cauld not perform, naturally concluded that this was a means of getting him out of the way. As he puts it himself: There are lots of ways of killing a dog besides choking him with butter. Under the circumstances he very foolishly I think, tendered his resignation. I do not blame the department at all—in fact I do not attribute any blame to anybody as far as that is concerned—but Mr. Girrior thought that by offering his resignation and by making no fuss he could participate in the benefits of the employees fund. He thought that would strengthen his case and he would be all the more likely to receive the benefits to which he thought he was entitled by tendering his resignation, which under the circumstances I submit was not voluntary.

Mr. COCHRANE. The matter has not come before the department in any way at all.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). I believe that.

Mr. COCHRANE. But I will get a report on the case.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I would like to get from the minister some information in regard to the method that is adopted in the case of dismissals. Are the dismissals made by the department, or by the board of commissioners? The appointments, I understand, on the Intercolonial railway are made by the board. When a young man asked me to recommend him for an appointment, and I had to send him to the board. He had to pass some test in regard to his health, his eyesight, his age, and a number of other matters, and then having proved satisfactory he was taken on trial, and everything having proved satisfactory he was finally appointed. Now, the board having the power to appoint men, it would occur to me that it also ought to have the power of dismissing them as well.

Mr. COCHRANE. When complaints are sent into the government, under the rules of the brotherhood, the men cannot be dismissed without an investigation. I am carrying out that procedure to the fullest extent and to show how lenient we have been on the Intercolonial I will state that on the 1st September on the government railways there were 11,473 employees. The number complained of is 77, dismissals ordered 20, suspensions 2, re-instatement 1, investigations asked for or ordered 60. Only 9 of the 20 dismissed men have so far asked for an investigation. On the canals there are about 4,000 men employed. There have been 24 dismissals, 4 investigations, and the constituencies affected number 9. In every case where an investigation on the railways has been asked for, and in many cases where that was not done, an investigation has been ordered.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Do I understand then, that the board has nothing whatever to do with the complaints against employees?

Mr. COCHRANE. Not as far as political complaints are concerned. The board has power to investigate other complaints, of which there have been quite a number. Some of these dismissals were based on other complaints rather than complaints of a political nature.

Mr. SINCLAIR. One of the main reasons for the appointment of this board was that the Intercolonial railway should be taken out of politics altogether, and we were all hoping that result would have been realized.

Mr. COCHRANE. Oh no.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Oh yes. Would it not be better when political or other complaints are made against employees in the service that those complaints should be referred to the board, rather than to the department?

Mr. COCHRANE. I do not think that would be a proper course, because it would be bringing the board into politics. Where the complaint is other than political the board does conduct an investigation.

Mr. SINCLAIR. It has also been represented to me that employees complained against were not allowed to have counsel at the investigation, that counsel were not permitted to take any part in the examination, and that only such questions as the commissioner allowed were asked.

Mr. COCHRANE. Through the commissioner.

Mr. SINCLAIR. The questions must all be asked through the commissioner, and it is in the discretion of the commissioner as to whether questions should be asked at all or not. I have also been informed that the commissioner refused to put certain questions, that were considered fair and right, to witnesses. I would like to know on what ground the people who are complained against are refused the advice of a friend who is willing to attend or of counsel. It puts the employees in a very awkward position, as they are not accustomed to these trials. It will be difficult for them to get fair-play unless there is some one there to assist them and bring out the truth. Would the minister say whether it is true that instructions have been given to the commissioners that no person is allowed to assist the employee in connection with his defence.

Mr. COCHRANE. I follow the rules laid down by the agreement, which states that a man against whom a charge is brought can take a friend with him, a brother employee. And no order has been given that counsel shall not appear.

Mr. MACDONALD. Early in the session I asked if a Mr. John Fraser had been employed as inspector of round-house construction in Stellarton in my county. The minister said that this man was so employed on the recommendation of the gentleman who contested the riding with me. On the same day I was informed by the Postmaster General that this same John Fraser had been dismissed from the post office in Stellarton for defalcation in connection with the trust moneys in his hands as postmaster. Even after this fact was mentioned in this House, the minister permitted this man to remain in the employ of his department not merely until the work of construction which he was employed to inspect was finished, but until some ten days ago when I directed his attention to the matter after I had visited my county and had found the work finished over a month ago, and this defaulter walking around the streets of the town drawing

$3 a day and doing absolutely nothing. It may be that the minister was not aware of these facts, and I trust he was not. I make these statements on my responsibility as a member of this House. Some of his under officials permitted this defaulter to continue as inspector of construction for a month after the work was done—

Mr. COCHRANE. It is not done yet.

Mr. MACDONALD. The minister said the other day that this man was dropped from the employment of the department on February 23.

Mr. COCHRANE. That is true. The chairman of the Railway Board informs me that the work is not done yet.

Mr. MACDONALD. What work is not yet done? I was there less than three weeks ago and the building was being utilised as part of the round-house. It may be that some little details remain to be finished, but the contractors have worked out their contract and gone back. Let me tell the minister that while this man was inspector of the building, he was employed in some small office in the town which took up practically all his time. He did not give his whole time to the work of inspecting. The people in my county know the facts, and many of the political friends of the hon. minister, knowing this man, were surprised to find that one of the first acts of the government in my county was to put this man in an office of semi-trust and keep him under pay long after there was any practical need for his services. This is deserving the attention of the minister, and I ask whether he will inquire into it. If not, we will have to deal with the matter in some other way. I would like an answer from the hon. gentleman.

Mr. COCHRANE. Will the hon. gentleman please put the question again?

Mr. MACDONALD. I have called the hon. gentleman's attention to facts, and I ask him to inquire of people at Moncton and see what the facts are with regard to the case.

Mr. COCHRANE. I did not know that this man had been dismissed from the Post Office Department when I employed him. I did find out what his qualifications were as clerk of works, I found that he had served his apprenticeship as a carpenter for four years, and, after working at his trade for ten years, until 1870, was appointed as foreman carpenter in the Black Diamond colliery, taking full charge of all the surface work and buildings. After 1876, he again took up the building trade and had charge of building stations and freight houses on the eastern extension railway from New Glasgow to Mulgrave. I understand that there never was an investigation, and I do not think it is proper to call him a defaulter, for nothing was proven. I must admit, however, that had I known the circumstances, I would not have appointed him as clerk of work. When I made the statement, that the work was not finished, I made it on the authority of the chairman of the board who claims that it is not finished yet. It was to have been finished in December, but the time was extended by order in council.

Mr. MACDONALD. I would like to know where the hon. minister got this statement as to this man's qualifications. There is no use in anybody trying to make out that he had not a fair trial on the charges of defalcation. He resigned in order to avoid prosecution, and his friends came to my political friends to intercede and prevent action. There is nobody in the county of Pictou, in the vicinity where he lives, that does not know this. If he was engaged in all this great construction work, he has not been doing it for the last thirty years, for he has been doing nothing but living off the public wherever he could get an office or a little job of some kind. I would like the minister to ascertain when the work on this round-house actually stopped, also whether this man has been doing anything in relation to that work for the last month, and whether he has been employed in other work in the meantime and drawing salaries from two or three different sources within the last six weeks.

Mr. LOGGIE. I desire to draw the attention of the minister to the matter that the Boards of Trade of Chatham and Newcastle have taken up with me and also with the Department of Railways for some time past the matter of improved railway service. The deputy minister, at any rate, is well aware of the matter I am going to refer to. The villages of Doaktown and Boiestown are about half way between two principal business towns on the Miramichi and Fredericton. Doaktown and Boiestown are about 35 to 50 miles west of Chatham and Newcastle. The way trains are run at the present time, Northumberland citizens are able to do their marketing in another county, namely, at Fredericton. They leave their home in the morning, go to Fredericton, do their business, and return at night. The people of Chatham and Newcastle consider it a grievance for this reason: If a man living in either Doaktown or Boiestown wishes to do business in Chatham of Newcastle, he cannot reach these towns over the Intercolonial without losing one day and two nights; while he can go to Fredericton and do his business and come back the same night, an equal number of miles. The Boards of Trade of Chatham and Newcastle ask that a train leave either Boiestown or Doaktown in the morning, and go east to the business centre of the county. Chatham and Newcastle are located about half way of the extreme length of the county. But as I said, the Department of Railways have not been able thus far to meet the wishes of the people of Chatham and Newcastle. I am reminded by the Minister of Railways that there is a surplus on the year's operation of about $700,000. May I not ask him to consider if there is not some way by which the residents of Doaktown and Boiestown can use the railway to go east, either to Chatham or Newcastle in the morning, do their marketing in the shire town of their own county, and in the other commercial town of their own county, instead of having to go to the shire town of another county to do their business and return the same night. It seems to me that money would be well spent in giving the outlying districts increased accommodation. It was my privilege to draw the attention of parliament seven or eight years ago to the fact that the Intercolonial was the only trunk line passing through that portion of the province of New Brunswick, and a duty devolved upon the management to see that the outlying districts were given reasonable transportation facilities, which was along the line of building branch lines. I will be told that there is hardly any business for an extra train, and that the people are served by facilities granted them to go to Fredericton instead of going to the business centres of their own county. I want to draw the attention of the minister to the fact that this is a grievance of which the people of Chatham and Newcastle complain.

While I am on my feet, I want to draw the attention of the minister to another matter. He will find in the records of his department a petition from the people on the north side of the Miramichi in the parish of Alnwick, where there is a large amount of fishing business done, praying that the minister will take into consideration the building of a branch line from Newcastle down towards Tracadie, or as far as Tabucintac, a distance of about 35 miles. I am in entire sympathy with the policy of the government in their decision to build branch lines, and thus to accommodate the people of the outlying districts, who at the present time are without railway facilities. I would like, therefore, if the minister would bear that matter in mind. That petition is in his department from the people of the county of Northumberland, who are looking for their turn to come in the near future to get a branch line.

While I am on my feet I would like to take this opportunity of drawing the attention of the minister to another matter. It is urged by my hon. friends, and by the Board of Trade of Newcastle, that at the present time the deep water facilities are not what they ought to be. They ask that a crane be placed on the wharf at Newcastle, and that the Newcastle wharf be enlarged. I have no doubt we shall have the pleasure of a visit from the minister later on, and I am sure he will give these matters his favourable consideration. They have been before the department already, but thus far have not been put right. I think it is my duty to call his attention to these matters, and hope he will give them his favourable consideration.

Mr. COCHRANE. I have received visits from deputations from both Newcastle and Chatham; of course they want the railway to run a different way. The great difficulty has been that there are two roads, one on each side of the river. I think if we adopted one side alone we might give them some relief. It is a matter that I intend to bring before the board. With reference to the wharf, Newcastle and Chatham have both had it. I have received a deputation from Chatham, and they feel they should have it still. As to the branch line, I have not had time to consider whether it is properly placed, or desirable in the interest of the country. But I hope to give it consideration later on.

Mr. TURGEON. My hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. Loggie) has asked for a branch line in his county from Newcastle to Nackawic. I think that a branch line should be extended not only as far as Neguac, but as far as Tracadie where it would join the Caraquet North Shore road. This Caraquet North Shore railway is one of the branches which the department is now thinking of taking over in a short time as a branch of the Intercolonial railway. It traverses the most prosperous and wealthy districts in the province of New Brunswick. It is a great lumbering district, and we have immense forests, the development of which has been very rapid recently. The products of that district have not been able to reach the market of the western provinces because they are handicapped by the extra freight they have to pay. The fisheries besides, are immense, and the traffic in that line has been increasing rapidly year after year. I hope the minister will take into consideration the advisability of leaving no gap along that peninsula between the Baie des Chaleurs and Miramichi bay. That road should connect Bathurst and Newcastle. I am sure the board of management of the Intercolonail railway and the Deputy Minister of Railways also, must be acquainted with the possibilities of that route in large passenger and freight traffic. We have also the mines at Bathurst, which are worked by people from the east of Gloucester county. People are getting more and more prosperous, and therefore better able to bring traffic and earnings to the railway. I trust the Minister of Railways will look into that scheme in the expectation of assuming control of the Caraquet and North Shore railway, which should be extended to Tracadie and Newcastle, there adjoining the Intercolonial railway.

Mr. LOGGIE. I would like to say a word with reference to what the minister has said regarding the possibilities of removing the rails from one side of the river. I would like to remind the minister that that railway has been through for thirty or forty years and while the earnings are not very great, I am sure the people living alongside that river would consider it a very great breach of faith and a grievance should the rails be raised. The population, of course, is small.

Mr. COCHRANE. Did I make the statment that I was going to remove the rails?

Mr. LOGGIE. No, but I thought you said you were going to consider it.

Mr. COCHRANE. I said that I was considering closing one.

Mr. LOGGIE. That is what I mean. I understood the minister to say that he was considering closing one of the railways on one side of the river, and I presume it will be the side of the river which is more sparsely settled and where the income would be less. That is why I wished to draw his attention to the fact that this railway has been through for thirty or forty years and that the residents will consider it a great grievance if the privileges that they have hitherto enjoyed are taken away from them. While we have a surplus, it seems to me that if there be a portion of the road which is not a paying piece we might very well, in the interest of the whole and in the interest of the people at large, consider the localities served by the portion of the railway whose earning power is hardly up to what you would like it to be. I would like the minister to bear in mind the fact that after these residents have had railway facilities for thirty or forty years they would find it a grievance if these facilities were taken away. Chatham and Newcastle each have railway facilities. If Chatham requires increased railway facilities, and she is getting them, that is no reason why Newcastle should not have increased railway and terminal facilities in keeping with the trade requirements of the town. One town is on one side of the river and the other on the other side of the river and there is no reason why there should be any undue competition between these two towns. An expenditure for increased railway facilities at Chatham was agreed to two or three years ago but the improvements are not quite completed. I am sure that the minister will go on and complete that work at an early day. The department now own a very nice piece of property in the largest town in the county of Northumberland. Miramichi district is the Liverpool of the north shore of New Brunswick. From the district of Miramichi many millions of deals are shipped annually and many hundred thousand dollars worth of fish are exported. If I am not transgressing I would say that Miramichi fishermen during the last winter lost $30,000 in duty paid to Uncle Sam's treasury that might have been kept in the pockets of the fishermen.

Mr. LEMIEUX. While we are on the subject of the Intercolonial railway, might I call the attention of the Minister of Railways and Canals to the present condition of the railway built from Matapedia in the county of Bonaventure to Gaspé Basin? As my hon. friend knows there are two sections of the railway. There was first the Atlantic and Lake Superior, built from Matapedia to New Carlisle, about a hundred miles, and then a new company was formed which completed the railway from New Carlisle to Gaspé Basin. The second section of the railway, 102 miles, was completed this last fall. The inspection by an engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals remains to be made in order to entitle the company to the balance of their subsidy. As to that I have no doubt that when the inspection is made the minister will find that this second section of the road is of a high class, exceedingly well built and will certainly be an excellent line. What I wish to bring to the minister's attention more particularly is the condition in which the first section of the railway is at present. There have been two companies, the first the Atlantic and Lake Superior and the second the Atlantic, Quebec and Western. The construction of the Atlantic and Lake Superior railway began some thirty years ago and it is a poorly equipped railway. It is really in a very bad state, and this winter the road was somewhat crippled on account, first, of the snow blockade, and second, on account of the many dangers that travellers found in travelling on a poorly equipped road. My hon. friend is authorized by a statute passed here last session to take certain steps with regard to a railway in this condition and I think he would do well this spring to send his engineer to inspect the first hundred miles. When that inspection is made, if the company does not make the necessary repairs in order to equip the road as it should be and if it does not put it in fair running order, the minister by the authority which was given in last year by a statute in amendment to the Railway Act, can force the company to appear in court and he can cause the road to be sold and, out of the proceeds of the sale, make the necessary repairs.

Mr. COCHRANE. Could you get enough out of it to pay for the repairs?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I do not know as to that, but this might lead to a second conclusion, that is to say, if there is not enough to put the road in fair running order with the proceeds of the sale the hon. gentleman, under the law passed last year, has authority to take the first section of the Gaspe railway, lease it, and run it as a part of the Intercolonial railway. I think that eventually the hon. gentleman will have to come to this. I do not represent the county of Gaspé any more but I still have the interests of Gaspé at heart and no doubt the time will come when he will have to lease the two sections, the one from Matapedia to New Carlisle and the one from New Carlisle to Gaspé Basin. But he is keen enough in business to realize that if he can get out of the proceeds of the sale enough to make the necessary repairs he will be satisfied with that and the public will be satisfied.

I call his attention to this because the Peninsula of Gaspé is now connected with the outside world by a railway and it would be a great pity if on account of the bad condition in which the first section of the road is, the peninsula should not derive from that railway the benefit to which it is entitled. I am bound to say to my hon. friend that the peninsula of Gaspé has special claims on the government. About 40 years ago, after the construction of the Intercolonial railway, the government of Sir John Macdonald decided to build that branch line from Matapedia to Gaspé Basin, in fact the first contracts were given by the railway department and the first plans were made but the government changed its policy and it remained for private companies to do what otherwise the government had contemplated doing. After many difficulties, after many cases before the courts, after many failures, the people of Gaspé and some enterprising gentlemen have finally succeeded in getting a first-class road over one section at least. With just a little help from my hon. friend by sending his engineer on the road and exacting from the company that the road shall be kept in fair running order the hon. gentleman can be of great service to the peninsula of Gaspé. The road will eventually be a success. At its terminus there is Gaspé Basin which is open practically for nine or ten months of the year and which affords splendid harbour facilities for open navigation, without any special dredging being done by the government in the bay. With such a terminus there is a great future for the road even if it is not taken by the Intercolonial railway and worked as a branch line and I ask the hon. gentleman to give his usual attention to the case of the peninsula of Gaspé, I am sure the people would be grateful if he could see his way to give them fair running conditions on the road.

Mr. COCHRANE. I shall be only too glad to make a note of the hon. gentleman's remarks. Any complaints that have come in with regard to the safety of railways since I assumed office I have referred to the railway board and I have had splendid satisfaction in their prompt and common sense reports on them. I shall refer this matter to the railway board. I think it would be better to have that board deal with it than to send our railway inspector. They have the officials for the purpose and would be only too glad to attend to it.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I wish to address some observations upon the items of Halifax docks and wharfs, and increased terminal accommodation. I desire to impress upon the minister the necessity of extended terminal facilities and railway accommodation at Halifax. I do so because I fear that the minister, coming from Ontario, may not fully appreciate as yet the railway situation in the province of Nova Scotia so far as the Intercolonial railway is concerned. At the beginning of this parliament the minister made some remarks respecting the proposed extensions of the Intercolonial railway from Dartmouth to the Musquodoboit Valley and a proposed extension of the Intercolonial railway into the counties of Pictou and Guysborough which gave me the alarming impression that he was not too strongly inclined to extend these branches, because he was not sure then that they would be profitable. I suppose one could hardly blame him for taking that point of view. Later I was glad to hear the minister state in parliament that it was the policy of the government to carry out the contract which the late ministry made for the extension of the Intercolonial from Dartmouth to the Musquodoboit valley as far as Dean settlement as agreed by the late government and I congratulate the minister upon his decision in that respect.

There is a widespread feeling in Canada that by reason of the fact that Nova Scotia has had the enjoyment of a government owned and operated railway that the province has therefore had great advantage over other provinces in railway transportation. This assumption is open to very grave question, because if we once were to go back to the earlier history of transportation, and trace it down to the present time it is difficult to say whether the province as a whole has benefited by having a government owned and operated railway rather than a company owned and operated railway. The fact that Nova Scotia has had the Intercolonial railway has doubtless been of some advantage, but it has also had its disadvantages. In that province the Intercolonial railway system pre-empted the very best traffic sections leaving the lean sections to be served by private companies assisted by Dominion and provincial subsidies. It is true there are many sections of the province that do not hold out great inducements to railway traffic, and consequently railway constructing in many sections of the province was long delayed or never begun. I have always taken the position that the Intercolonial railway being in that province as a government system, after having pre-empted the best railway territory, should serve at least some of the lean sections as well. I am not arguing that to-day in view of existing conditions, the government should abandon the ownership and operation of the Intercolonial railway, that would be too big a question to discuss here to-night but I do say that the Intercolonial railway being the chief system in that province and having the major portion of the railway traffic, should go into the railway business to the fullest extent and to the utmost needs of the people of the province. If they fail to do so, I think we who represent that province would be justified in asking that the government transfer the operation of that road to other operators. I shall not however discuss this further to-night.

However, I trust that the government will take the view that being railway owners and operators in the province now, they are willing and anxious to extend the existing system and meet to the utmost of their ability the needs of the different sections of the province.

There is ample opportunity there for extensions and improvements which are necessary, and ultimately sound from a business view point, even if they did not hold out hope of immediate or substantial financial profits. But I rose particularly to discuss the matter of railway terminals at the port of Halifax, which to-day are not satisfactory to shippers, to importers or to local wants. The conditions there, so far as the present needs are concerned, are very much the same as they were ten or fifteen years ago. At that time the Intercolonial railway could hardly meet the traffic demands of the port; but those demands have grown to such an extent that to-day the terminal facilities are hardly adequate to meet the business which the railway finds there. During the winter of 1911, when transatlantic ships were sailing from Halifax to Great Britain, they were very much handicapped owing to their inability, in consequence of the congestion at the terminals, to discharge and receive freight with any degree of promptitude. Just another illustration of the congestion last year. In the month of February last there arrived at the port of Halifax a quantity of freight destined for a point in western Ontario, which was not moved from Halifax until late in the month of April, a delay of considerably over two months, owing to the fact that it was stored in a freight shed, and was covered later with other freight, and it was impossible to get it out before. In addition to the steamers now calling at the port of Halifax, many other steamers would call there during the present winter months were they able to secure facilities. I am not approaching this question in a fault-finding spirit. The Board of Trade and business men of Halifax have been repeatedly urging upon various governments the necessity of extended and improved terminal facilities. Improvements have been made, but there has always been a tendency to make the extensions of terminal facilities merely to suit the immediate needs, instead of making them upon some comprehensive plan that would meet the requirements of the port for a great number of years. The trade at the port of Halifax has grown very considerably in recent years, as shown by the following figures of freight handled during the fiscal years stated:

DOMESTIC.

	In.	Out.
1902-3	188,871 tons.	63,563 tons.
1903-4	74,667 "	64,027 "
1904-5	101,139 "	114,309 "
1905-6	291,677 "	98,448 "
1907-8	240,369 "	107,949 "
1908-9	261,822 "	108,426 "
1909-10	254,395 "	109,971 "

FOREIGN.

	Imports.	Exports.
1902-3	35,940 tons.	102,691 tons.
1903-4	47,767 "	131,176 "
1904-5	38,331 "	100,819 "
1905-6	43,255 "	125,108 "
1907-8	89,209 "	111,088 "
1908-9	97,460 "	123,578 "
1909-10	91,740 "	131,250 "

Of course, not all this tonnage was handled by the Intercolonial railway, but the tonnage handled by the railway itself has grown considerably in recent years. The following are the figures of the tonnage handled by the Intercolonial railway at Halifax during the years 1901, 1906 and 1911:

	Export.	Import.
1901	70,000 tons.	22,000 tons.
1906	113,507 "	35,823 "
1911	131,050 "	72,298 "

I am informed that the increased tonnage handled by the Intercolonial railway at the port of Halifax during the first six months of 1911 was 100 per cent more than during the first six months of 1910, which indicates that the railway tonnage at that port is increasing very rapidly, and provision must be made for the future growth. The increase during the last three months, I am advised, is greatly in excess of that of the corresponding months of last year. Now, I would like to state to the minister what in my judgment is needed at the port of Halifax. He of course knows that a year or two ago a somewhat comprehensive plan was arrived at by the Department of Railways for extended and improved wharfs and piers. At present the port has in connection with the Intercolonial railway 9 wharfs or piers, 5 of which are at Deep Water, so-called, and four at Richmond. It is, I believe the intention of the Department of Railways to construct at Deep Water some four or five new piers to replace the old ones now existing; the new piers to be of course much more modern and larger, and capable of handling a greater quantity of traffic and in a very much shorter time. Pier No. 1, the contract for which was awarded in August or September last, is now under construction, and when completed will be one of the most modern and largest piers on the Atlantic coast, either in Canada or in the United States.

Pier No. 2 is intended for freight and passenger traffic. Now, I understand—and as the minister probably knows I have not had an opportunity of becoming very conversant with the details of terminals at the port of Halifax—that there is another pier to be constructed, which is No. 3, I believe on the proposed terminal plans of the port, and which is similar to the one now under construction. I am instructed by the business men and by the Board of Trade of Halifax, that it is extremely urgent that tenders be immediately asked for the construction of this pier, because long before it is completed it will be impossible for the new pier No. 2, together with any of the existing wharfs, to handle the traffic which will then be at the port. I trust that the minister, whenever he finds himself at leisure or whenever he can possibly give the matter consideration, after the closing of parliament, will ask his officers to take this subject into consideration, and after he does I hope he will find himself justified, as I believe he will, in directing that tenders be asked for this new pier No. 3 so that it will be carried to completion as quickly as possible. There is another matter which I believe is the settled policy of the department, and that is the erection of a new freight-shed at the port of Halifax, a matter which probably was brought to the minister's attention when he was at Halifax during the late autumn of last year. The present freight-shed is certainly inadequate, and I am further led to believe it was improperly located when originally constructed. I understand a portion of land has been already procured on the upper side of Water street whereon to erect a new freight-shed, and I trust that the minister will order the construction of this freight-shed to be commenced as early as possible, for I can assure him that it is extremely urgent at the present time. There is a further matter to which I would like to draw the minister's notice. I do not know whether his attention has been called to the fact before or not, and it is this: that a portion of the Intercolonial from Halifax to the town of Windsor, is under lease to the Dominion Atlantic Railway Company. The freight-shed which is used by the latter company lies close to the Intercolonial station at Halifax. For certain reasons, which are unnecessary for me to mention, the freight-shed used by the Dominion Atlantic railway is very inconveniently located. All traffic reaching the freight-shed must proceed down or up North street, which offers a very heavy grade, and which renders truckage very expensive indeed, and this handicaps very much the shippers and importers at Halifax in sending out or receiving freight by reason of this fact. I am not aware if the minister's attention has been drawn to this particular point, but it is certainly a matter which deserves the consideration of the department. The Intercolonial should afford a more adequate and convenient freight-shed for the Dominion Atlantic railway.

I wish to say in connection with the terminal facilities at the port of Halifax that some broad and comprehensive scheme of extension of the Intercolonial rails along the water-front must at once, or very soon, be taken into consideration. I would hardly venture to say to the minister what I think should be done, because I can scarcely ask him to consider me an authority in that respect, and whatever judgment I may have regarding the matter is entirely due to a limited personal knowledge of the situation and to information which comes to me by contact with the business men of the city of Halifax. Possibly I may be more ambitious than some of them in what I think should be done in this respect. I would like to make the suggestion to the minister that he and his officers should take this matter up, and possibly it would be wise for him to take into consideration the suggestion to obtain other expert advice upon the matter and consider the whole question of the extension and improvement of terminals at this port. I believe that ultimately the whole of Upper and Lower Water streets, so called, should be expropriated. I do not think it would be necessary to demolish or remove at once the structures erected on the properties which would be expropriated. The rentals furnished by these buildings or properties would probably yield sufficient to pay interest on the capital amount necessary for the expropriation. At any rate a great portion of Water street should be expropriated so that the rails may be extended farther south. I think it is quite clear that the upper side of Water street at least, and possibly the lower side as far as what is known as the Ordnance yard—possibly this description is not very intelligible to the minister who may not know the location—should be expropriated as quickly as possible. However, as I said, I do not wish to express any definite or fixed views upon this point. And even if I had any definite or fixed views to-night I would hardly venture to give them to the committee in a dogmatic or definite manner. I shall be quite satisfied and content if I have the promise of the minister that during the summer he will take into consideration the matter of the adoption of a comprehensive scheme for the extension and improvement of railway terminals at the port of Halifax, so that at the next session we may discuss the matter more carefully and at greater length. Another matter which possibly I should mention in connection with improved terminals at Halifax is: whether or not the Department of Railways should not obtain possession of, and occupy the present dockyard between Richmond and Deep Water, and which is now in the occupation of the Marine and Fisheries and Naval Departments. If that property could be secured it would afford a great deal of yardage room for the Intercolonial railway, and also give additional dockage room. The feeling prevails at the port of Halifax that this dockyard should be occupied by the Intercolonial railway, and not by the Marine and Fisheries and Naval Departments, and I think myself there is a preponderance of fact in favour of it. I think a suitable location might be obtained on other portions of Halifax harbour, on the Halifax or the Dartmouth side, which would be sufficiently adequate for the necessities of the two departments referred to. But even if the dockyard property was secured by the railway, there is still necessity for the expropriation of a great deal of property along the waterfront at Halifax. And there is this to be remembered; that in Halifax as in a great many eastern towns and cities to-day, the values of property are rapidly increasing, and unless this is done in the near future there will very soon come a time when the Intercolonial railway and the country will find these terminal facilities so imperative and so necessary that they will be obliged to buy the necessary properties, and then at a very greatly enhanced cost. There is just one further matter to which I would like to call the minister's attention, and which I had intended referring to when a later item in his estimates was reached, namely, the vote in connection with the extension of the Halifax and Eastern railway out of Dartmouth.

I refer to the necessity of a bridge across Halifax harbour between Dartmouth and Halifax at a point called the Narrows, where once a bridge was in existence but which some fifteen or twenty years ago fell down and has never since been replaced. The physical conditions along the waterfront on Bedford Basin and Halifax harbour proper and where the Intercolonial railway rails are laid and approach the city, are such that it is extremely difficult to get the necessary room. On the west side of the railway there is high and rocky ground, and it is extremely expensive to increase yardage or track room on this account. With a bridge constructed across the harbour, I think there could be found considerable yard room on the Dartmouth side of the harbour besides affording additional shipping facilities. I urge the minister to make inquiry and investigation as to the cost of the construction of a bridge, not only for the reasons already given, but for the further reason that the contruction of the Halifax and Eastern railway from Dartmouth to Musquodoboit valley is now a reality, and it will not take very long to build that road. If no bridge is constructed across the harbour, it will be necessary for passengers to leave the railway at Dartmouth and take a ferry across to the city of Halifax, and it will be necessary to transfer freight in the same way, or let it get to the city of Halifax via Windsor Junction. I do not wish the minister to understand me as saying here to-night that this bridge should be built at once. I think that first we should ascertain the cost of the bridge, and the subject might with greater satisfaction be discussed later. I think there is to be found in the department a report upon the construction of this bridge; but I think that at least, during the coming summer the matter should be carefully investigated. If the minister would be good enough to undertake that this should be done, I should for the present be content with that. It will not mean a very great expenditure, and at the next session of parliament the matter can be discussed at greater length.

I wish to repeat that the chief purpose I had in rising was to impress upon the minister the imperative necessity of extended and improved terminal facilities at the port of Halifax, not only for the good of Halifax, but for the good of Canada. Physically and historically Halifax is the winter port of Canada on the Atlantic coast. It is destined to be the winter port if not the all the year round port, for the fastest transatlantic steamship services from Europe to Canada. It is at least bound to be the winter port of the transatlantic steamship services by reason of the fact that these ships are now becoming so large that they will be bound to select Halifax as their port of call and departure; and I say this without intending any reflection upon the port of St. John or upon the harbour known as Country Harbour in the county of my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair). The export and import traffic at the port of Halifax is bound to increase very much indeed, as one can safely predict when he contemplates the tremendous development going on in this country. And I submit that, regardless of the cost, I care not what it may be, it is the duty of the government to give to the Intercolonial railway and to the port of Halifax such terminal facilities as port trade conditions warrant to-day, and in the expanding future.

Mr. McCURDY. I do not think that the hon. junior member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) has at all overdrawn the necessities which exist for improved terminal facilities at the very important port of the county which he represents. For a member who has only represented that constituency for a short time, I think his grasp of the requirements of his constituency so far as this matter goes do him great credit.

As he has said, the Intercolonial railway is in a peculiar position. Not only is it the only road running into and out of the province of Nova Scotia over which all must necessarily travel, but it is the only trunk line of any large importance in the province of Nova Scotia. Its position gives it necessarily, for the present at least, somewhat of a natural monopoly in railway transportation in that province.

In earlier days private companies built railways in Nova Scotia. Most of these were companies with small capital and limited mileage. They were financially unsuccessful in many cases, and the fact is that to-day there are few short railways operating in Nova Scotia. But that development is not peculiar to Nova Scotia. Short railways were built in other provinces serving even the most fertile parts of other provinces, and these are not operating as private small railways to-day, but have been absorbed by larger systems. They did not always pay as short lines, but as parts of large systems they are profitable to the large operating companies. Traffic originates on these short lines and feeds the bigger systems.

I think that Nova Scotians are justified in expecting that the Minister of Railways and the government shall take liberal views of existing transportation needs in Nova Scotia and apply to that situation at very least as liberal principles as large railways in other parts of the country apply in buying and building and operating the cross country lines and feeders, and the feeders should be built, maintained and operated even if they are not always very profitable feeders. Otherwise, how can remote and isolated districts be served? This must be done in Nova Scotia by the Intercolonial railway, as it is the large trunk line operating there.

The hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) last evening lauded very highly the operation of the Intercolonial railway. That is right, to a limited extent, but I am not prepared to go to the limit indicated by the hon. gentleman. He said the Intercolonial railway was the best operated railway in the world. I have occasion to travel much on that road and on other roads, and I do not think it is the best operated railroad, even on this continent. I am not sure that the standard of its operation has been improving during the past few years even to the same degree as has the standard of its best competitor. I think that its competitors are giving an improved service and that in comparison the Intercolonial railway does not occupy as favourable a position as a competing road as it did some years ago. I have been told that although the hon. member for St. John so highly praises the Intercolonial railway and considers it the best railroad in the world, he still travels occasionally by another road when he wishes to come to Montreal or Ottawa. So do I, because I consider that for some years past the Intercolonial railway was not the most convenient or the best road in the world to travel on even between Halifax and Montreal.

Competition, we are told, is the life of trade; and I think that the Intercolonial railway has been slack in the past in competing for and seeking to enlarge its patronage both for passengers and freight. When in London a few years ago, I searched the city over to find an Intercolonial railway time table. I did this as a matter of curiosity, not because I needed further information regarding the road, but I wanted to find out what efforts the management of that road habitually made to advertise its business amongst possible patrons. But I could not find an Intercolonial railway time-table in the city of London, and for all that the railway and steamship people in London knew about that railway, it might never have been in existence. The big roads look after and canvass for business, they do it consistently and constantly, and I think that is a department in which the management of the Intercolonial railway can be improved. It is no uncommon thing for shippers in Nova Scotia to be canvassed by roads competing with the Intercolonial railway once, twice or three times a week, where the Intercolonial railway officials appear once a month or once perhaps in a year. The junior member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) pointed out that in the past ten or fifteen years no attention had been paid by the late administration to the demand for increased terminal facilities at Halifax. I fully agree with him. I think they have absolutely failed to appreciate the necessity of improving the terminal facilities there, which are shockingly inadequate. I look forward, however, with a great deal of confidence to what this new administration will do in this matter. The hon. member also gave us some impressive figures about the growth of traffic at that port. But he omitted to mention the important fact that the increase in imports in Halifax during the months of February and March, 1911, was 100 per cent over the corresponding months of the preceding year, and I am informed that this year there is a further substantial increase. Now, when the requirements of the public call for additional expenditure generally throughout the country, the money is often freely voted by the Canadian government. But money voted and expended for terminal facilities at Halifax, where they are so urgently needed as at present, is in the nature of an investment, the government would be spending money on its own property, and would increase the earnings of its own railway. Surely it is a shocking state of affairs when a railroad which can borrow money at a very low rate of interest, and is a transportation monopoly, is not ready to provide needed accommodation, or even to look after the business that is offering without the railroad management having to seek it. The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald), in addressing the committee last night, ventured the opinion that a surplus should not be expected from the operation of this road. That to me is sound. The other railroads that have been built in this country have been assisted by large grants of money and land, and it seems to me it would be as logical to expect that in course of time these subsidies and grants of land should be returned to the government, as to expect that the Intercolonial railway should pay the surplus earned by that road from year to year into the general funds of the country.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I regret that it is necessary to tax the patience of the committee at this late hour by making any further remarks. But when this question of transportation is before the House affecting as it does the constituency I have the honour to represent, I feel that I must say something on the subject. There is no question that comes before this parliament that is of such vital importance to the people I represent as the question of railway extension in the province of Nova Scotia. It would perhaps have been a good thing if the minister had given us a general statement last night, if he had followed the usual custom that has been adopted in this House I think for the last thirty years, of outlining the conditions of transportation in the country, and informing the House what he proposes to do. A good deal of time has been taken up in proposals made by hon. gentlemen because we do not know what the minister himself proposes to do during the year 1913 and this year. If he had cleared the way, and laid down the things that he intends to do with the money he is asking the House to give him, we would be in a better position to judge as to whether it is any use to discuss these other matters that are left out of the purview of his plans during the present year.

My hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Maclean) congratulated the minister on the fact that he has decided to extend the Intercolonial railway from the town of Dartmouth to Dean Settlement in the county of Halifax. I regret that I am not able to congratulate my hon. friend on the extension of the branch that was proposed in my constituency. I did have some hopes during the first days of this session that no discrimination would be made by the minister between the counties of Halifax and Guysborough. When the House met in the early days of the session I was much pleased to see a million dollars in the estimates for the construction of a branch line from Sunnybrae in the county of Pictou to Guysborough in the county of Guysborough, with a spur from the Cross Roads of Country Harbour to the deep waters of that harbour. I was pleased that the estimate that was placed before parliament by the previous government had been continued by this government. It appears however, that during the Christmas holidays, and I would expect my hon. friend the Minister of Railways to be engaged in some more congenial work at such a season than hardening his heart—after the Christmas holidays we learned for the first time that the money that was intended to construct the branch line in my constituency was struck from the list for the present year. Now I would like to point out that this is not a party question in the county I represent. It is a questioin on which both parties have committed themselves up to the hilt. The Prime Minister himself did me the honour of visiting my county, he spoke in three places, and in each place he spoke of the great necessity of this road, and he used language that was understood by the people there to pledge himself and his party, if he were returned to power, to the construction of that line.

Not only is that the case, but it will be in the recollection of hon. gentlemen who were in the last parliament that when the resolution relating to the construction of branch lines was moved in this House by the hon. member from North Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie), the Prime Minister spoke in favour of the branches that were advocated in that resolution, and this Guysborough branch was one of them. The right hon. gentleman used very decided language and led everybody who listened to him to believe that it was his policy to construct those branches if returned to power. Mr. Rollings, the gentleman who ran against me in Guysborough in the interests of the Conservative party, not only advocated this branch in this election, but in the former election of 1908 he issued a card which he placed before the people of that county in which he says:

I strongly advocate the construction of a railway throughout the length and breadth of Guysborough county—the non-railway county of Nova Scotia and I deprecate any attempt being made by any persons or parties who seek to use as an election scheme this matter so vital to the interests of eastern Nova Scotia.

This was the card that my opponent placed before the county of Guysborough in 1908, and in the election of last September it was an important issue in that county. I had a great deal of confidence at that time in telling the people that we were on the eve of having railway extension there because the late government had committed themselves to the construction of this branch line. The Minister of Railways (Hon. Mr. Graham) had announced his policy in the House. The government had placed a million dollars in the estimates for the purpose of commencing the construction of the line, they had placed a staff of surveyors in the field, and they had surveyed a large part of the line. They had also purchased the Sunnybrae branch at a cost of $100,000, got the deed of this branch, paid the money and that property will be entirely useless to this government unless the road is extended to a port in the county of Guysborough. When all these steps were taken by the late government I had a great deal of confidence in telling the people of that county that we were pretty certain now to have railway extension. You can imagine the disappointment, not only of myself, but of every person in the county of Guysborough, when it was learned that the present government had abandoned, for the present at least, the plan of the old government to construct that branch line. One would have supposed that, as the contract had been let, and the contractor had deposited his money, and was ready to commence work on a part of the line, the government would not have interfered, especially as this parliament had committed itself to its construction, as both sides of this parliament had agreed to the principle of building it and had voted, prior to that date, a large part of the money to do so. I have never known a case in the history of this country where a project was carried so far by one government, and was turned down by the next government without any good reason, I submit, so far produced to satisfy me or any other hon. gentleman in this House that it should have been done. The Minister of Railways has made some excuses why that step was taken by the present administration. He is skilful in that way, but I want to draw his attention for a moment to the language which he used in the discussion which took place here some weeks ago. I entered a protest against the action that had been taken by the government on the occasion of that discussion, and the minister replied to me in this way. I copy his language from 'Hansard':

I may say further——

He says,

—that although hon. gentlemen opposite have quoted a great number of figures, there are no statistics in the department which I preside over, to warrant us in going on with the construction of this railway now. I believe that before committing the country to any expenditure, we should be able to give the people a just reason for our action and we should see that the tax-payers of Canada get a fair return for the money expended, or at least sufficient to pay the interest on the capital.

I submit that these are pretty hard conditions. In business ventures, of course, that is the rule that people lay down; they do not want to invest their money in any venture unless it will pay and unless they get some return for their capital. But, I submit that this is not a rule that has been adopted in this country in the case of the assistance which has been given by parliament to transportation. We have been subsidising railways, we have been deepening rivers, we have been constructing canals at vast expense for the last forty years in Canada and this is the first time, I submit, that any Minister of Railways has laid down the principle that we will not give aid to transportation in Canada unless the money we invest will not only pay the running expenses of the road but the interest as well. That is the way in which a Jew would approach a question of finance, he wants to see interest coming, he wants to know, when he puts his dollar in that he is going to get something out. That is not the way in which this question has been treated by previous Ministers of Railways or by previous administrations in this country. When I say that I want to prove what I say and can prove it. Every hon. gentleman here knows that we have spent enormous sums of money in aiding transportation. It is placed in the books at $400,000,000. What return are we getting for it? What return in interest are we getting for the enormous amount of money we gave the Canadian Pacific railway? What return are we getting for the hundred million dollars that we put into the canals largely in the province of my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals? Why, sir, we have not only spent an enormous sum in transportation in Ontario Canals but after we did so we passed an order in council declaring the canals absolutely free. Bring along your ships, pass through the canals, we will open the gates for you, we will give you the facilities and we will not charge you a cent! That is the way the government of this country has been treating the transportation problem in the province that my hon. friend comes from. Absolutely free! A hundred million dollars invested in canals and no interest coming to the people of Canada. I am not objecting to this because it develops the trade of this country. That is not the only case I might give, for there is the Intercolonial railway itself upon which a very large sum has been expended. Does any one expect to get interest out of the Intercolonial railway? Such a proposition has never been put up before by any Minister of Railways in this country and this is the kind of excuse that should not have been made in this case. If it is right to give these facilities free in the canals, if it is right that we should have spent such enormous sums of money in deepening the St. Lawrence river, if it is right that we should have built the Intercolonial railway connecting the different provinces together, and if it is right that we should have made these enormous contributions to transportation without expecting any return, why stop when a branch line is asked for in the county of Guysborough to connect some 18,000 people who are in an isolated position and who have good trade to offer the road? Why is it that this proposition is put up to them and they are told that unless the road that they propose to build will not only pay running expenses but interest on the money, they cannot get it?

I do not think that my hon. friend should have given such an excuse as that, and I think on consideration he will see the unfairness of his proposal. The present minister is himself making a number of proposals with reference to transportation throughout Canada. He proposes to build a car ferry to connect the government railway on Prince Edward Island with the Intercolonial railway on the mainland. That is a good proposal. It has always been a handicap to the people on the island that they have to tranship their freight from the cars on the island to the steamship and then back to the cars on the mainland, and if these transhipments can be avoided it would be a splendid thing for the province of Prince Edward Island. Does any hon. gentleman say that that shall not be done unless the people on the island can show it will pay running expenses and interest on the capital? If you put it on that basis you cannot confer this great benefit on Prince Edward Island. We all know that the Prince Edward Island railway has never yet had a surplus, but at the same time it furnishes a good deal of traffic to the main line and in that way helps the road.

My hon. friend knows that it will be many years before the Hudson Bay railway can be expected to pay running expenses, yet that does not prevent him from entering upon its construction. But he says to the people of my constituency: You cannot have this road unless it pays expenses and interest.

I believe that this Guysborough road would offer a large amount of traffic, that it would develop a good trade. There is timber enough along the line to keep the road busy for the first ten years. This is a good timber country, and a large part of the wood is hardwood which cannot be profitably floated down streams. Spruce, pine and hemlock are being floated down to the ocean, but there are enormous quantities of hardwood in that country that would be reached by this railway. At Country Harbour the line would tap one of the best ports on the coast of Canada. I have no reflection to make on the port of Halifax, which is one of the best harbours in the world, but if you are going to enumerate the great harbours in Canada, you will have to include Country Harbour. There you strike a fishing industry east and west of this harbour, The men engaged in that industry are anxious to secure a better market for their fish. I am informed that certain gentlemen of his own party in Nova Scotia, interested in the construction of this line, interviewed the minister a few days ago, and that he informed them that if they could assure him of ten car-loads of fresh fish a day he would undertake to build the line. He said: 'You claim to have a great fishing industry there that can be developed at the port of Country Harbour, and the Port of Guysborough. What does it amount to? Could you furnish a branch line with ten cars of fresh fish per day?' That is a very large order, Mr. Chairman. It is so much fresh fish that you could not find a market for it in Quebec and Montreal. If you placed three car-loads of fresh fish on the Montreal market I am informed you would break the price. It is not like the Boston market, where you could put ten or twenty cars per day on the market. It would not be possible to sell at Montreal and Quebec more than half the quantity which my hon. friend said would have to be loaded on the branch line we are proposing before he would undertake the construction of the road. I do not know how many car-loads we would have, but I do know that at Canso the fresh fish business has been developed to a large extent, and an average of over a carload a day is shipped. Of course there are months in the winter when the fishermen do not go out to sea. They work until about the first of February, but there are a few months when they do not operate. They have no railway facilities at Canso, they have to transfer their fish from boat to rail at Mulgrave. They have an average of over one car a day leaving Mulgrave all the year round. This is good traffic for the Intercolonial railway.

Fresh fish is such a perishable commodity that it has to be put on the market quickly and disposed of quickly, and transportation means everything to the business. If we had a branch line to Country Harbour, we have a splendid fishing locality both east and west of that harbour for 25 or 30 miles, and the fish could be collected at that point. I have no doubt that a very large business could be built up, but it will take time. You can see the isolated position in which these people are. They are denied connection with the Intercolonial railway. The present administration says: You must not have anything to do with the market of the United States. Of course, we have the sea there; our people are accustomed to the sea; and we could take our fish by the sea to Boston and place it on the American market, but we are denied that privilege by the heavy duties we meet when we get it there. The Canadian market for fresh fish is a very limited one. The fish cannot be sent very far west. I believe that with better facilities we might send more there. But we are denied the right of sending our fish to the markets of the United States, and by the same administration which denies us that right we are denied connection with the Intercolonial railway, with the chance of selling our product in the home market.

Mr. BURNHAM. Was it the government or the people of Canada who denied you that right?

Mr. SINCLAIR. I do not think the people of Canada ever intended to deny us that right. If they had to give a verdict to-day, I think they would give a different one. It is unfortunate that the question was mixed up with so many other questions, and we did not get a square verdict upon it.

Mr. LENNOX. It was not mixed up with other questions.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I did not find any difficulty in getting a different verdict in my constituency. It was the most popular cry I ever had in my constituency. All I had to say was: Let us cultivate the home market as much as we can, but you are getting a preference in the Boston market. If you have a barrel of mackerel to sell, you now pay $2 a barrel to land it on the Boston market. The people of the maritime provinces are not the only people who are selling mackerel in Boston. It comes from England, Ireland, Denmark, Norway, and nearly every other northern European country, and every one of them would have still to pay $2 a barrel to send their mackerel to the Boston market, while the Nova Scotian will get it in free.

Mr. McCURDY. Do you not agree with the late administration's theory that the consumer pays the duty?

Mr. SINCLAIR. I know that is the economic theory, and I suppose, considering the question as a broad question, that is true. But in this case the producer would get the advantage. We are not selling, I suppose, 20 per cent of the mackerel that goes into the market of the United States, consequently, if all these other people have to pay $2 barrel in order to send their mackerel to that market and ours goes in free, we would be able to levy that $2 on the American consumer. That is the way I explained the matter to my electors, and they were quite satisfied with it. This is true not only of mackerel, but of codfish, haddock and every other kind of fish that we sell in the American market. It was one of the greatest things ever offered to the fishing industry of the maritime provinces, and I hope we shall get it yet, as nothing will build up the country to such an extent as reciprocity would have done. But I am not going to lament about it. I am ready to face the future and try to make the best of the decision that has been given. At the same time, as the leaders of hon. gentlemen opposite have succeeded in getting that decision made in the country, shutting us out of that market, we hope that now they will consider our claim for a road so that we can sell our product in the Canadian market, and will give us this branch line of railway, or we shall not be able to reach the Canadian market for a large part of that coast. Then, I would like to ask the minister about another matter. Some time ago I asked him how it was that he had made up his mind to build the road from Halifax to Dean Settlement, while he had decided not to build the branch line from Sunnybrae to Country Harbour. This is the question and the answer:

With reference to the following language used by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals in his speech in the House on January 18, 1912, referring to the construction of this branch railway, namely: 'I believe that before committing the country to any expenditure, we should be able to give the people a just reason for our action, and we should see that the taxpayers of Canada get a fair return for the money expended, or at least sufficient to pay the interest on the capital, does the minister apply the same condition to the expenditure involved in the proposed line between Dartmouth and Dean, settlement in the same province?'

The minister answered that he did apply the same rule practically to the case of the proposed line from Dartmouth to Dean Settlement.

Now I submit that if my hon. friend will do that, if he will apply the same rule to the branch line from Sunnybrae to Country Harbour—I have not a word to say against the road from Halifax to Dean Settlement. I voted for it at the time it came up and I am quite willing to vote for it now—he will find the Guysborough branch to be a better financial proposition. The road that I am proposing is to start at a great coal mine and it ends at a great harbour. It has traffic along the line that is at least equal to the other, but it has got these two things that the other road has not got, and it certainly needs no argument for anyone to see that it is a better financial proposition than the road from Dartmouth to Dean Settlement which ends in the woods. My hon. friend tells me that he is applying the same principle to the Guysborough branch that he is applying to the Halifax branch. If that is so he is bound to restore a million dollars to the estimates and go on with the construction of the former branch. But my hon. friend gave me some further information in answer to a question in the House in reference to the contract. The contract, as my hon. friend will recollect, was let by the late government and to a contractor who was ready to commence work at the time of the government's defeat. I am told that he had his machinery on board a ship at Sydney, and was ready to start for Guysborough to begin the construction of the road at that point, and he had deposited his money as security. I would like to ask whether the money is still in possession of the government.

Mr. COCHRANE. The money has been returned.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Thank you. Well this is the question that was asked:

Was the successful tenderer instructed not to proceed with the work of construction? If so, why?

The answer given to that question was this:

Yes, Surveys of the whole of the railway had not been completed before tenders were called. The first location of the line was from Sunnybrae easterly along the east branch of the St. Mary's river through the county of Pictou, thence southeasterly to Melrose in Guysborough county. Another location which was urged was one from Sunnybrae southerly following Barren Brook to the west branch of St. Mary's river, thence easterly through Guysborough county to Melrose, a common point to both locations. The last mentioned location was examined only in a preliminary way. The question as to which of these routes should be adopted had not been settled. No reliable estimate of the cost of the work had been made. There not being at hand sufficient information to show that there was justification for the building of the line, and the incurring of the outlay, it was thought well to cancel the contract and abandon the proceedings until complete and reliable data and information could be obtained, and the minister satisfied that, before committing the country to the expenditure, the same was justified.

That is a long answer to a short question. I suppose the meaning of it is that the road was not all surveyed. One section of the road surveyed, that portion from the town of Guysborough to the Cross Roads, Country Harbour, and from Cross Roads, Country Harbour, to deep water at Country Harbour, that section was surveyed and the contract let. The other section of the road between Melrose and Sunnybrae was not settled. And what does my hon. friend do? He cancels the contract for the part that was surveyed and contracted for, because forsooth the route of the other portion was not settled. And what does he do to settle it? He dismisses the staff of engineers that were at work trying to settle the route at the time he took office. If there was any difficulty about which direction the road should take, why did the minister not let his engineers go on and finish their work and get the information so that the question might be settled. It is not a difficult question to settle. My hon. friend in his remarks to the House endeavoured to show that there were some fierce disputes going on about the location of this line. I submit that was not the case. There was a difference of opinion about it, but so far as I am concerned that need not stand in the way for a moment. If that is the only trouble my hon. friend can let his engineers settle it. Whether it goes down the east river or down the west river is not such an important matter as that it should tie up the construction of the line. I would be quite willing for him to go on with his investigation and take the best line in the judgment of his own engineers. That ought to be satisfactory to him. That is what the late government were trying to do. They had surveyed the line down the east river and they had secured the information, but it was suggested that a better line existed down the west river and the engineers were busy trying to determine that question when my hon. friend took office, and in place of allowing them to go on and finish their work he telegraphed them to stop their operations and to get out of the field and do nothing more. Then we are told in the House that the reason why the other branch of the line was stopped was that the minister did not have the information in regard to the western end of the line. Now I think it is my duty to point these facts out to my hon. friend and to assure him that he need not worry over the question of the dispute that he says existed between my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) and myself in regard to the western section. I am quite willing to leave it to his own judgment, whichever he says is the best route after he gets the report of his engineers. Then let the railway go down one or the other rivers, it does not make any material difference so long as he builds the line from Sunnybrae to Guysborough and Country Harbour. I wish to assure him on that point so that it may not be used in future as an excuse for not going on with the work. Now, I submit that my hon. friend should not apply a different principle in the case of the railway in the county of Guysborough that he applies in the case of the road in the county of Halifax. He tells me that he does not, but I feel quite sure that if he will only take the trouble to investigate the matter he will find that the proposal that I am making for him to build in the county of Guysborough is a better financial proposition than the one he has decided to adopt in regard to the county of Halifax. I thought I should fail in my duty if I did not make it clear to my hon. friend that both sides are committed to the construction of the line that I am advocating. Not only is his leader, and the party following him, committed to this construction, but the late government were also committed and the construction of the line as proposed should therefore, have been allowed to have gone on. All my hon. friend had to do when he assumed charge of the department was to keep his hands off. The money was provided, the contract was partly let, everything was in progress to have the road built, if my hon. friend had only left the matter alone construction would have gone on. The minister, however, chose to interfere with that construction and he has not shown any good reason why he did so.

Mr. SINCLAIR.

Mr. MACDONALD. I would like to associate myself with my hon. friend from Guysborough in the efforts which he is making to induce the minister to continue the policy adopted by the late government —a policy which was ratified by his leader during the late campaign and received the support of the Conservative party in eastern Nova Scotia—in regard to the construction of the railway in Sunnybrae, in my county, to Country Harbour. Before proceeding, however, I would like to ask the minister as to whether he has received the report of Mr. Archibald, who I understood was deputized to go over this proposition?

Mr. COCHRANE. I think it has come in.

Mr. MACDONALD. Would the minister bring that down ?

Mr. COCHRANE. Yes, no objection; I will have it on Monday.

Mr. MACDONALD. Very well. The feeling which exists among the people of Nova Scotia is that the failure of the minister to go on with this railway is a distinct discrimination against our province. There is no other reasonable explanation. I venture to say that if a like condition existed in any other province, there would be no question about the action taken. If my hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Staples) had in his province of Manitoba any situation that was half so aggravating as this, he and the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Rogers) would have it solved, more particularly as the previous government had outlined the policy, so that all that remained was to——

Mr. STAPLES. I think they can trust the hon. gentleman to ventilate any grievance that may exist. He would rather have a grievance than a remedy. We will give him the remedy.

Mr MACDONALD. If the hon. gentleman will use his influence to have the remedy applied I will gladly give up any solution I may have by reason of a grievance. I have plenty of other grievances without keeping this one. I say this is a distinct discrimination against eastern Nova Scotia. Look at the action of the Minister of Railways in regard to the St. John Valley railway. In the province of New Brunswick they have railways up and down and across, subsidized by previous governments. They have two transcontinental lines, as I mentioned this afternoon in discussing this question. Yet, in spite of all that great railway accommodation, with one railway running up one side of the St. John river, the Minister of Railways is going to be so liberal as to make an arrangement with the province of New Brunswick under which a railway is to be constructed by that government on the west side of the river, and he is going to pay them forty per cent of the gross receipts.

Mr. COCHRANE. The province guarantees the bonds for $25,000 a mile.

Mr. MACDONALD. No wonder. When the money comes in and is counted up, he is going to hand over to the province forty per cent of it. It is not surprising that they agree to pay the interest on the bonds when the Minister of Railways is going to provide the money. My hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair), has outlined the situation so far as his county is concerned. Let me point out one or two other considerations. A railway twelve miles long to Sunnybrae has been purchased at a cost of $100,000. Every day this government operates the Sunnybrae railway without extending it to the country beyond, it is losing money, as the minister knows, having looked into the matter. The only way by which they can make that purchase of any value to the rest of the people of Canada is to extend that railway to the deep water beyond. I am at a loss to understand what the proposition of the minister is in regard to the matter. My hon. friend from Guysborough has reviewed it and practically the minister says: I want to look into this thing. What for? How is anybody to guarantee him what the operation of the railway will result in? Has he any guarantee before he pays forty per cent of the gross proceeds of this proposed railway to the province of New Brunswick? Before the session closes he will probably ask us to vote subsidies amounting to millions for the construction of railways. Has he any guarantee in regard to any of these new railways that their interest will be paid or that they will be successful? Not at all. But this is the unreasonable ground he takes in regard to this enterprise. The minister has control of the only trunk line of railway in our province. Then, he must either build these branch lines, or let the transcontinental railways come in, and they will quickly build them. He will not have to go far to hunt among the transcontinental railway companies to find one that will willingly build these branch lines if he will give the right of way in order to connect these branch lines with their railways in the other provinces.

Mr. COCHRANE. I would be glad to get an offer.

Mr. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman wants people to come and make him offers——

Mr. COCHRANE. You are making the statement.

Mr. MACDONALD. The hon. minister wants to sit here and do nothing while waiting for offers. His business as minister is to see what can be done for the railway development of the country.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Macdonald), favour handing over the Intercolonial railway to a private company?

Mr. MACDONALD. I will explain to my hon. friend from Annapolis (Mr. Davidson), who has nothing to do with the Intercolonial railway, where I stand on the question, and will do it in a perfectly frank way. But at the present moment I am dealing with a special situation on which I am addressing the minister——

Mr. JAMESON. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that no person except himself has a right to speak of the Intercolonial railway ?

Mr. MACDONALD. Not at all; the hon. gentleman can talk from now until tomorrow about the Intercolonial railway, when I get through. I have told the hon. member for Annapolis that I am ready to give him my views on the question he brings forward. But I do not propose, when I am addressing the minister on a special point, to be diverted to a general discussion. I was saying the Minister of Railways controls the only trunk line in the province of Nova Scotia, and, unless he is willing to engage in the construction of a branch line which the people of that province regard as essential to its prosperity, he should at least do the next best thing and allow the transcontinental lines to come into Nova Scotia so that we may ask them to build the branch lines which he refuses to build. If he will do that I believe it will result in our getting the railway accommodation that we require. How long is the minister going to wait——

Mr. STAPLES. How long is the hon. gentleman (Mr. Macdonald, Pictou) going to talk about it ?

Mr. MACDONALD. As long as I please, and if my hon. friend does not like it he will have to do the other thing. I say, how long is the minister going to look into this question ?

Mr. STEVENS. I rise to a point or order. The hon. member a moment ago said that it was nobody's business to talk of the Intercolonial except himself and one or two others.

Mr. MACDONALD. I said nothing of the kind.

Mr. STEVENS. The hon. member did. But I raise a point of order. What item are we discussing? What bearing has all this discussion on the item before the Chair? I am willing to sit here all night discussing the business of the country, but I do not think it is reasonable for hon. members to discuss all manner of grievances.

Mr. MACDONALD. My hon. friend has gone beyond his point of order.

Mr. STEVENS. I am explaining my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bennett, Simcoe). There is no point of order, as I understand it. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Stevens) asks the Chairman what item we are on. It is Fredericton, increased accommodation to—$46,500. I think perhaps the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) is just coming to that.

Mr. MACDONALD. I am sorry the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Stevens) hears so badly as to understand that I said it was nobody's business about the Intercolonial but my own and one or two others. I never made use of any such remark. I did make some reference to the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Davidson), who interrupted me with a remark that he did not live along the line of the Intercolonial, and hoped that I would deal with the proposition he suggested. But I did not wish to be diverted from the argument I was pursuing upon a matter in which I was especially interested. I am sure the minister will agree with me. We have no desire to be captious in discussing his estimates. But I want to point out that this question of the administration of the Intercolonial is one of great importance to the people in Nova Scotia, and this is practically the only opportunity we have had to discuss it. I want to impress upon the minister the seriousness of the proposition as we understand it. Our people have been waiting a long time for the promised railway communication in eastern Nova Scotia, where we have a water-front extending to the Straits of Canso, and where there are numerous harbours, just as good harbours as that of the city of Halifax. Now when railway advancement is taking place everywhere in Canada, with guarantees by provincial governments and federal government to ensure the construction of branch railways all over the country, after a long period of waiting, the people along the coast and in the central part of the province felt last year that they had succeeded in getting the federal government to provide for the construction of these two lines of railway in eastern Nova Scotia; and when they know that the department has at its disposition a survey and examination by the provincial government and various railway companies, and when in good faith the federal government advertised for the construction of the link in the railway which reaches the waters of the Atlantic, and when the government went on to implement the construction by purchasing the Sunnybrae railway, the people regard it as a discrimination against them when the minister suddenly comes in and stops the whole thing. I had hoped the rumour I had heard was true that the minister had not gone back on his first resolution. There were suggestions of political reasons for the delay, which would result in a contract being continued under some different management. But if the fact is as the minister says, that the deposit has been returned, I assume that so far as anything could be accomplished under the tender asked for last year, it has become a thing of the past. I wish to say to the minister that in taking this course he is unfair to our people. The same information which enabled him to come to the conclusion that he should build from Dartmouth to Musquodoboit was at his hand in regard to the proposition from Sunnybrae to Guysborough. Governments cannot be moved except upon their own volition, I assume, but whatever motive is behind the minister's action I would like to discover it. I warn him that there is only one way in which he can rid himself of a deep impression in our part of the country that he is doing them a great wrong, and that is by providing in the supplementary estimates the amount which was in the original estimates but which he has cut out. Everybody in this country recognizes the necessity of the road. The situation in Nova Scotia is such that unless the Minister of Railways goes out and creates extensions and brings railway facilities to places where they are desired, the people of Nova Scotia will say to him: If you will not do it, you must permit the Transcontinental railway to have running powers over the Intercolonial, and let them come in and divide those extensions. Let me remind the minister that out of his 1,496 miles known as the Intercolonial railway, in that portion of the railway more particularly from the town of Amherst east to Truro and from Truro to Sydney, my hon. friend has the only part of his whole railway which initiates freight for shipment to the west. He has imported freight at Halifax from steamers in the winter time, but in other periods of the year, if he had not the return freights to the west that he gets from Nova Scotia, his balance at the end of the year would not be on the right side but badly on the wrong side. There are two large companies which alone contribute one-eighth or one-ninth of all the revenue which is collected in that province, and these are operated in that portion of the province. Now, here is the difficulty which exists with every minister. This House will rise in a month or six weeks, and from April until November and January the government of Canada is absolutely powerless to do anything to remedy the situation that exists in an industrial and business way along the line of the Intercolonial. Supposing a business condition arises there under which it is necessary to spend a large sum of money, my hon. friend could resort to a Governor's General's warrant, but that would be a very unusual procedure, besides being of doubtful legality. But from the month of April after the estimates are voted, he, as general manager of this 1,500 miles of railway, is not in a position to initiate the expenditure of a single dollar outside the ordinary purposes of expenditure, until he meets parliament again next winter.

Mr. STAPLES. That is right.

Mr. MACDONALD—It is absolutely essential that the large railway enterprises of the west should be prepared, as they are prepared, to look after facilities and create conditions under which the opportunities afforded large manufacturing interests can come to fruition. How would it be if in all other portions of Canada a railway company would say to a business man: You will have to wait until the next meeting of directors which will take place nine months after this? It is true your project may be a pressing one, and it is in the interest of the railway and of the country, but we cannot do anything in that line until our directors meet next year, or nine or ten months after this. That is the position that every Minister of Railways is in who has to deal with these conditions.

Then, we have another difficulty. We are living in the great freight producing part of the country where the Intercolonial railway obtains the greater part of its east and west business. We produce in eastern Nova Scotia to-day something like 10,000,000 tons of coal. We produce a greater quantity of iron and steel than is produced in any other part of Canada. With the Intercolonial railway under existing conditions not a pound of coal can be sent from Nova Scotia west of Montreal so as to compete with American coal, even with the duty added. Why? Simply because my hon. friend the Minister of Railways, when he carries that coal to Montreal, has to hand it over to the Grand Trunk railway, the Canadian Pacific railway or the Canadian Northern, and the arbitrary division of freight which is always made in the traffic arrangements means that when the new company takes that traffic at Montreal it takes such an additional share of the freight rate that it is impossible to send the coal to Ottawa or anywhere further west than Cornwall, and nowhere up into the Canadian Pacific railway country here. The same thing applies to steel products. You have to levy two prices for the two railways, whereas, anywhere else in Canada practically, with the tremendous extent of the Canadian Pacific railway and the Grand Trunk railway systems, the manufacturer who has products to dispose of can put them on the one railway which will carry them to any part of Canada and, by the long haul rate, deliver them in competition with foreigners or people from other places under satisfactory conditions. Every man in the maritime provinces is put under the handicap that it is impossible to transport his products west of Montreal.

Then, there is another difficulty that the minister under present conditions is unable to overcome. Gentlemen who live in the west know, gentlemen who live in Ontario know, that the large corporations of the country develop the business possibilities that exist in the vicinity of their railways. They take hold of them, assist them and provide conditions under which they can be developed and made a success of. That is going on all over the country. The Minister of Railways cannot do that. What a proposition it would be if the Minister of Railways came down to parliament and asked to have placed in his hands a vote of money which he could utilise in his judgment in regard to a question of that kind? No minister has ever thought of it up to the present time, and I am quite sure that no minister would have thought of entering into that arena. Then, there is another consideration. All Canada has contributed to the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. STAPLES. Does the hon. gentleman not think that he is pretty wide of the item that is under discussion?

Mr. MACDONALD. There are some gentlemen who come from other parts of Canada who have made us listen to grain Bills and other questions affecting the farmers of the west for days, and we would like at least for one night if the hon. gentleman will bear with us while we entertain them with our little needs and necessities. If my hon. friend (Mr. Staples) is getting tired I am perfectly willing to excuse him. He may go and I can assure him that we will not do anything unlawful while he is away. We in Nova Scotia have contributed our part, and we were glad to do it, to aid in the construction of the Canadian Pacific railway. We are to-day contributing in an equal degree to construct the Grand Trunk Pacific, both of which enterprises have never touched our province, one stopping at St. John and the other at Moncton. We are guaranteeing and pledging the credit of the country to an enormous extent to ensure the construction of a third transcontinental, the Canadian Northern, with the continental system of which our province has no connection. With the exception of Prince Edward Island, which is isolated as an island and is therefore impossible to be connected directly with a railway system, we are the one province that is not in touch with any transcontinental railway system. We have all these disadvantages by reason of the fact, but we are confined to one railway—the Intercolonial railway. What I say to the minister is—and this is the point that I have been waiting to make—that he is the only source to which we in eastern Nova Scotia can look for consideration in regard to our railway necessities and I say to him that he should provide for these necessities and, if he fails to do so, I urge upon him to give to these railway systems, by an arrangement with them which would be equitable, and in the country's interest, opportunities for coming into our province over the line of the Intercolonial railway so that they could take part in the business life in which we are interested and we could go to them and say: Here is a business proposition, will you take hold of it and will you go on and give those facilities which the government of the Dominion do not see their way clear to provide? There is the issue—to my mind a plain and simple idea—that the minister must satisfy the needs of the province of Nova Scotia, as they have been recognized by the late government, and provide such facilities as will enable her industrial opportunities to find full fruition, or he must give to the transcontinental railway lines an opportunity to come into our province and make such an arrangement as will enable us to obtain from them those facilities which we think are in our interest and would be in the interest of any railway enterprise that was operating in Nova Scotia.

Mr. KYTE. Mr. Chairman, I regret that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Cochrane) in moving that this House go into committee on his estimates, did not follow upon the usual course of making some announcement in regard to the future policy to be carried out with respect to the operation of the Intercolonial railway. We have heard from him this afternoon that there is a surplus of some $700,000 upon the year's operations. I think it is scarcely a matter to become very boastful of in view of the fact that we have great need for additional railway accommodation, as has been pointed out by my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) and my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald). In the absence of any declaration of policy by the Minister of Railways and Canals yesterday afternoon I presume that the statement he made a few days ago in respect to the intentions of the government as regards acquiring branch lines still stands. On the 10th January last the minister stated that:

> The government would be prepared to take them over after investigation to find out what branch lines on the Intercolonial railway can be taken over that will become feeders of that road, and not milkers of it.

I stated that in the absence of any further declaration of the future conduct of the department in respect to the acquisition of branch lines I assumed that the Minister of Railways stands by that statement. I assume that in the absence of any further definition as to the future policy of the department in reference to the acquisition of branch lines the minister stands by that statement. If these branch lines were dividend-producing institutions, there would perhaps not be the demand to have them taken over that there now is. The fact is that for obvious reasons these branch lines have not been paying institutions and cannot be under the present conditions. In my judgment, instead of having a surplus from the Intercolonial railway, it would be more in the interests of the maritime provinces if the moneys which remain after paying the operations of the railway from year to year were applied for the purpose of acquiring these branch lines. The statement of the minister discloses a surplus of nearly $700,000 on the operations of the present year. That would represent a capital sum of $17,500,000, on which this surplus would be sufficient to pay the interest at four per cent. It would not require anything like this amount to pay for all the branch lines which the representatives of the maritime provinces are seeking to have taken over by the government, and it would be highly proper that the government from year to year should set aside this surplus to meet the interest charges on the capital sums required to purchase these branch lines. It has been pointed out that in Nova Scotia two companies, the Dominion Iron and Steel Company and the Nova Scotia Steel Company, contribute more than a million a year towards the traffic of the Intercolonial railway, and both of these companies are operating in Cape Breton. I am particularly interested in a railway running through my constituency for 30 miles. It is one of the roads which the late government intended to take over under the statute passed in 1910. That statute had in contemplation the taking over of some 13 branch railways in the maritime provinces. At the last session a resolution was introduced by the then Minister of Railways enabling him to complete negotiations with these railway companies for the taking over of the roads.

Mr. COCHRANE. Will the hon. gentleman mention any railway that could have been taken over on the standardization fixed in that statute?

Mr. KYTE. The resolution introduced by the late Minister of Railways at the last session was to give him authority to take over such railways as were available and were not provided for by the statute passed in 1910. I regret that the present Minister of Railways has not introduced a similar resolution, because it would then be some guarantee to us that his intentions in regard to taking over these branch lines of railway were good.

Mr. COCHRANE. Resolutions are good.

Mr. KYTE. Yes, when they are supplemented by statute as it was the intention of the late minister to do had it not been for the unexpected dissolution of parliament last year.

I rose to impress on the minister the desirability of resuming these negotiations opened by the late government. I cannot accept the statement of the minister that only such railways as will guarantee a surplus in their operations should be taken over by this government. The only trunk railway we have in the province of Nova Scotia is the Intercolonial railway and that province has contributed very largely towards the earnings of the road, a large share of the surplus of last year must be credited to that province. If these railways were paying institutions there would not perhaps be the same demand that they should be taken over, but while the government is undertaking large expenditures from which profits cannot reasonably be expected, there is no reason in the world why the department should not carry out a similar policy with respect to railway operations and give us the benefit of this policy in the maritime provinces.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If my hon. friend will allow a few items to stand on which it is desired to have some discussion, we might pass quite a number of items in regard to which no discussion will be necessary.

Hampton—improvement at, $31,300.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am glad to see the item for improvements at Hampton, but I regret that the item of $15,000 which was placed in the estimates by the late Minister of Railways has been omitted. That was for the construction of a spur from Hampton station to Hampton village. The cost was to be about $40,000 and it would give very great and needed accommodation. I hope the minister will look into it personally.

Mr. COCHRANE. I shall be very glad to do so.

Mr. SINCLAIR. In connection with the item of public highways there is a highway approaching Mulgrave where the Intercolonial railway crosses the highway in two places. For a number of years negotiations have been going on between the local authorities and the Intercolonial railway to divert the highway so as to avoid accidents in that locality.

Several deaths have occurred at these crossings, which are very dangerous. The difficulty could be avoided by diverting the road so as not to cross the railway at all. At present the road crosses the railway twice, whereas if it could be built along the northern side of the railway it would not cross the railway at all. The question of who should bear the cost of building this piece of highway has been before the government of Nova Scotia and the Department of Railways for some time. As the minister will have money to expend on public roads now and as he will have only himself to deal with on behalf of the Intercolonial railway and also on behalf of the road expenditure, he will be in a position to decide this vexed question. If he would do so he would be conferring a great benefit on that locality, and would probably save a great deal of expense in future to the railway in the way of claims for accidents.

Mr. COCHRANE. I shall be very glad to look into the matter.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). There is another place on the Intercolonial railway, not very far from the place referred to by my hon. friend, which I would ask the minister to consider at the same time. I refer to the crossing at Sylvan Valley in Antigonish county, where several persons have been killed and numerous accidents have occurred. Some years ago, an electric bell was placed there, but while at first it seemed to be an improvement, it has not given satisfaction. The reports in the department will show that this is a place where there should be an overhead bridge. It would not cost very much, and would remove the danger that now exists.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Where does the minister intend to spend this money for the protection of highways?

Mr. COCHRANE. At Forbes street, New Glasgow, Maclean's crossing, Hopewell, near Oxford station, Amherst, Moncton, Little Metis.

Mr. MACDONALD. Do you propose to put a subway at Forbes street in New Glasgow?

Mr. COCHRANE. Yes.

Surveys and inspection, $15,000.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Inverness). On this item I wish to refer to a line of railway which is proposed to be constructed from Orangedale to Cheticamp. I have listened to the pronouncement of policy by the minister with regard to the requirements of proposed lines, and, while the standard which he has laid down is a pretty high one, I have no doubt that this line will come up to his requirements. He has made reference to two features—cost of construction and prospective earning power. The reason I refer to this line is that I desire to ask the minister to have a survey made of it next season in the strong belief that the findings of the engineers will fully justify the immediate construction of the road. With regard to the cost of construction, I think the report of the engineer will bear me out in saying that it is not a difficult or expensive line to construct, as there will be no serious engineering difficulties to encounter. I am very well acquainted with the route of the line from Orangedale to Cheticamp, having spent sixteen years in the practice of my profession through that country. I am convinced that there will be no serious cuts and certainly no streams of any size to cross. The only river to be crossed is the Margaree, which is not very large. I am, therefore, convinced that the cost of construction will be below the average. With regard to earning power of this proposed road I think no branch line that has yet been discussed in this House has as good possibilities as this line. It will go through Whycocomagh, Ainslee Glen, South Ainslee, East Lake Ainslee, Margaree Valley to South West Margaree thence either by St. Rose along the shore to East Margaree Harbour, or along the Margaree river to Margaree Harbour with a branch to St. Rose, thence through to Cheticamp. There may a difference of opinion as to the route from South West Margaree to Margaree Harbour, but I am willing to leave the determination of the route with the engineers. That is a matter which the engineers will decide, and I shall be satisfied with whatever decision they may arrive at. This line as proposed passes through a prosperous and comparatively thickly settled section of farming country. The line would give railroad accommodation to at least 20,000 people. The mineral wealth of the district is immense. There are pyrites mines at East Lake Anslie which have been developed to a limited degree, but the great difficulty which this concern have to contend with is the want of transportation facilities.

Notwithstanding the fact that the owners of this property are under the necessity of trucking this ore some 10 or 17 miles, they still have done in the past considerable business. With a railway affording connections with the Intercolonial they could get the product of these mines to Halifax cheaper than they can now to Whycocomagh the shipping port, and could carry on their operations all the year. There are several pits open here which have been operated for some time—in fact they are opening them now with renewed energy and they entertain great hopes that this road which I am discussing will be constructed which will give great impetus to their industry. In the neighbourhood of this proposed line there is an enterprising concern sinking for oil. I have their latest report which indicates that they will be successful in the near future in locating oil wells. If that is the case this industry alone will be sufficient justification for the building of this line. At St. Rose there are located the St. Rose coal properties. There has been enough development done there to enable the owners to know the quantity and to determine the quality of the coal on those properties. There are already located one 4 foot seam, two 6 foot seams and one 8 foot seam. The quality of the coal is first class, but unfortunately we cannot hope to have these coal areas developed unless we get some transportation facilities. We are not blessed with good harbours as a rule as are other parts of the province of Nova Scotia, in fact we have not a good harbour within 26 miles of these properties. These properties in themselves I have no hesitation in saying would furnish at least a thousand tons a day of freight all the year. I arrive at this conclusion from the amount of freight that is furnished by the neighbouring mines of Inverness. I must now refer to the gypsum properties of North Inverness. Gypsum of course is a low priced ore and has not been developed very much down there on account of lack of proper transportation during the whole year, but I can tell the hon. minister there is at present operating the Great Northern Mining Company's mill. This concern is prepared to enter into an agreement with the government, as the minister already knows to furnish this proposed road between 6 and 7 carloads a day of the manufactured gypsum. The same concern is willing to pay 75 cents a ton for carrying the manufactured product of these mills from the mills at Cheticamp to Port Mulgrave. If this rate were extended to Montreal it would amount to $8 a ton. This would show the great necessity for this railway, so far as this industry is concerned. It is only one of the industries that would be developed in northern Invernsss as a consequence of providing railway facilities. We have important copper areas in Cheticamp which are being opened up, and which will give employment to a large number of our people who now have to leave their home to find employment elsewhere. There is another argument in favour of the construction of this railway from Orangedale to Cheticamp which I would also like to point out, I refer to the fisheries in the northern part of Inverness. I think I am not going too far when I say that off the coast of Inverness are located the finest fishing grounds possibly in Canada. We are of course deprived of transportation facilities, we cannot get to the fresh fish market. The result is that 90 per cent of the catch of fish along that coast has to be salted, which of course involves extra labour and expense and our fishermen do not get the prices for their catch that they would if they had the advantage of fresh fish market. The result of all this, so far as the fishing industry is concerned is, that almost all our young men have abandoned fishing and have gone away to seek employment elsewhere. If we only had this road extended down along the coast we would get these young men to return to this industry. Last year notwithstanding the disadvantages that we had to encounter the value of the fisheries of that coast amounted to over $200,000. With proper transportation facilities I have no hesitation in saying we would ship from Inverness fish to the value of at least between $600,000 and $700,000. The freight on that would go a long way to enhance the value and earning power of the Intercolonial railway. We have large forests of lumber down there that have never been disturbed because we had no way of shipping lumber from that part of the country. With a railway through that particular part of the county such as I have referred to, the lumber from these vast forests will be shipped over this branch line. There is another matter that I would like to refer to particularly, and I am sorry the Postmaster General is not in his seat, that is, that the fact that the construction of this road to Cheticamp would bring the Magdalen Islands to within 40 miles of a railway. At present these islands are at least 130 miles distant from a railway line. That is to say, the distance between Pictou and the Magdalen Islands is 130 miles, and from Cheticamp 45 to 50 miles. This is an important matter to the people of these islands. I am sure if the Postmaster General were in his seat he would agree with me that by means of this railway we would be able to supply the people of the Magdalen Islands with facilities which we cannot now do. A daily boat service to the Magdalen Islands in summer would be made possible by the construction of this line to Cheticamp. The transportation service to the islands would be greatly improved, and the Postmaster General would be able to give them a daily mail which I think they are not at present enjoying. There would be no difficulty in the world in providing a daily mail during the season of open navigation. I may point out that the gulf is open from Cheticamp to the Magdalen Islands for a considerable space of time longer than it is between Pictou and the Magdalen Islands. The question of transportation would be, I am sure, important to those people, and I desire to press this matter very particularly upon the Postmaster General. There is another feature of this proposed line which is of importance to the government. At present there are five steamers plying along the coast of Inverness county. The subsidies voted by the government to these steamers amount to something like $18,000 a year, but there would be no necessity for continuing these subsidies if only this railway were constructed and the Inverness railway taken over as a branch line to the Intercolonial railway. I desire to refer now to the Inverness railway. I claim that the government lost a splendid opportunity when they failed to build a line from the strait of Canso to Inverness. I was told lately by an official high up in the Railway Department that the owners of that road are willing to hand it over at any time to the government. If that is so I trust the government will take advantage of the offer. When I point out to the Minister of Railways that last year that road had a net earning power of $90,000, that it is now carrying the product of one coal mine, a coal mine owned by the owners of the railway and that it is quite possible for it to carry the products of two other coal mines, he will realize the importance of this line as a feeder to the Intercolonial. If that line were owned by the government these three industries would be placed on an even basis, and one would have as much consideration as the other. It is only reasonable to suppose that the present owners of the road, who also own and operate a coal mine, will pay particular attention to the development of their own property, and that I think is borne out by the facts. I may point out also that on account of the extraordinary rates paid over that line, the whole traffic of that part of the country has been brought to the various little harbours in schooners which certainly would not be the case if this road were owned by the governemnt as a branch to the Intercolonial railway when only single freight would be charged. I think I may suggest to the Minister of Railways the desirability of having this Inverness road considered from the view point of taking it over. As I have said already, if the owners are so willing to hand the road over to the government I think the latter would make a great mistake if they did not avail themselves of the offer.

In closing, I would ask the minister to have a thorough survey made of this line from Orangedale to Cheticamp. I would desire not only an engineer's report, but a report also of the traffic possibilities of the line. I would like also to have a report of the possibilities of the Inverness and Richmond railway. I am not in the least afraid but that these reports will fully justify the immediate building of the Orangedale-Cheticamp and the taking over of the Inverness road.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would ask the hon. minister to allow the remaining estimates to stand.

Mr. MACDONALD. The item for increased accommodation along the line and for Truro might pass. One item was rolling stock. I want that to stand.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). What is 'increased accommodation and facilities along the line'? Has it anything to do with building railway stations?

Mr. COCHRANE. It includes the following:

Amherst, paving at, $12,650.
Amherst, track scale, $2,500.
Sandy Cove, extension of siding, 600 feet, $1,000.
Kinsack, extension of siding, 300 feet, $600.
Sydney, piling turn table tractor, $500.
Sydney, addition to freight shed, 150 x 40, $8,325.
Sydney Mines, addition to freight shed, 100 x 40. $4,700.
Coal branch, addition to station, $310.
Bureau, siding, to improve loading facilities, $880.
Kempt, freight sheds, $1,300.
Sayabec, new station, $6,800.
St. Germain, addition to freight shed, 30 feet, $640.
Laurier, station and addition to freight shed, $6,700.
St. Leonard junction, addition to freight shed, $1,200.
Lotbinière, addition to freight shed and coal shed, $665.
Barachois, additional sidings, $1,250.
Eel River, addition to freight shed, $1,215.
Rimouski, addition to freight shed, $1,245.
St. Anaclet, freight shed, $880.
St. Ann, addition to freight shed, $715.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). Is that a station at Truro?

Mr. COCHRANE. The contract is let.

Mr. MACDONALD. Who is the contractor?

Mr. COCHRANE. The same man as before.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). Has the hon. minister a report of the condition of the stations at South River in Antigonish and at Tracadie? When the board of management were inspecting the road last year, they were of opinion that the station at South River was not in proper condition. Attempts had been made to repair it, but even so it was in a dilapidated state. The trouble was that the foundation was bad and the building heaved. The stationmaster who had been there for some years was advised by his doctor that the conditions were unsanitary, and, as it was not convenient to get a suitable house to rent there, he quit the service. Owing to the condition of the station, his health began to fail and it forced him to give up his position. Another station of which the board of management promised to improve conditions was Tracadie. The health officer for the county wrote that conditions were entirely unsatisfactory and such as to be a menace to the health of the stationmaster's family. This was a couple of years ago. There are other letters on file from the clergymen and other prominent citizens to the same effect. For some reason this work had been put off from time to time. But it was agreed on the occasion of the visit of the board of management and staff last summer, that necessary repairs to the building and improvement of the surroundings would be made. Parliament dissolved not long afterwards and nothing was done. I hope there will be no further delay in the matter.

Mr. COCHRANE. I will have a note made of that and will go into the question.

Mr. MACDONALD. Before we rise, the hon. member for Kings, Prince Edward Island (Mr. Hughes), who was compelled to leave to catch a train, asked me to ask the minister to bring down the papers in connection with the car-ferry matter, before we came to that item in Supply.

Mr. COCHRANE. What papers?

Mr. MACDONALD. I am not sure, not being familiar with the matter. I believe some papers were moved for.

Mr. COCHRANE. I understand that these have been brought down.

Mr. MACDONALD. I will advise the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes, Kings), of that fact.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In connection with the large item that is left standing, I think perhaps the general question of railway accommodation in the maritime provinces in connection with the Intercolonial railway might be discussed somewhat along the lines followed by my hon. friend from Pictou. I should be very glad if the minister, when we resume the discussion would let us know just in what condition the proposed agreement is for the operation of the St. John Valley road, including the aid for the bridges across the St. John river.

Mr. COCHRANE. I can give the hon. gentleman that information now. The agreement has been arranged and is away for signature. It is on a little different terms from the other agreement. The provincial government guarantee the bonds at $25,000 a mile, and they issue bonds for $10,000 more and receive the subsidy from the federal government of $6,400 a mile. The principal change is that we guarantee the bonds of the bridge for $1,000,000. They are not allowed to issue more bonds except the two issues, and we have the right then to issue bonds beyond the $35,000 for any betterments the road may want during the currency of the lease.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does the agreement include the building and operation of the line all the way from St. John to Grand Falls?

Mr. COCHRANE. That line is only approved as far as Andover, and that is not fully settled yet.

Mr. PUGSLEY. But it is settled as far as going to St. John?

Mr. COCHRANE. It will be a matter of agreement where to join the Intercolonial.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Will my hon. friend be able soon to lay the agreement on the table?

Mr. COCHRANE. I think very shortly.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Will the same terms be available for the province of Nova Scotia for the branch lines projected in that province?

Mr. COCHRANE. As the ex-Minister of Public Works knows, there has been a little change made in the agreement of last spring, and I think he had a good deal to do with making the agreement. I have been told that this road passes through a very fertile country, and if what I am told is true, I am surprised that this road has not been built long before now. The prospects of the road are better than those of any other road I am acquainted with. I would be glad to discuss with the government of Nova Scotia any proposition which they might make. I do not like to commit myself to any proposition, because I am only one member of the government. But if I get a report as favourable as I have with regard to this road, I think it will be only reasonable to do something of the same kind in Nova Scotia.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The Minister of Railways is quite right in saying that the agreement is arrived at.

Mr. COCHRANE. The guarantee of the bonds.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The provincial government were to guarantee the bonds for $25,000 a mile, and then the Dominion government was to grant aid at $6,400 a mile pursuant to the statute for a road between St. John and Grand Falls, where it was to connect with the Transcontinental. It was also agreed upon between the late Minister of Railways and the provincial government that aid was to be given for two large bridges across the St. John river, one across the river near Mistake, so-called, another at Andover and another across the Kennebecasis. Then the Intercolonial was to lease the line for a term of ninety-nine years. I may say that the late government took up this whole question of railway aid, and all the different propositions really formed part of one comprehensive scheme. We agreed, for instance, to build the Hudson Bay railway, we agreed to guarantee the bonds of the Canadian Northern so as to link up the eastern with the western section. Then we made an agreement that the government could compel the Canadian Northern to exchange traffic with the Intercolonial at Montreal.

Mr. COCHRANE. Was there an agreement made between the Canadian Northern and the Intercolonial for an exchange of traffic?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. COCHRANE. Is that in writing?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. COCHRANE. I never heard of it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend ought to look into that, because it is very important. It provides that the government has a right to call upon the Canadian Northern railway to exchange all its traffic at Montreal with the Intercolonial railway; an important arrangement, and very beneficial to the country. It was a part of our policy. These different features were all linked up together, these branches in Nova Scotia were to be built, and the government adopted the policy of taking over the various branch lines of the Intercolonial railway in Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia; branch lines were also to be built in Prince Edward Island. We were to assist the St. John Valley line also. All these features were part of a comprehensive scheme which the government decided upon with a view to further railway development in different sections of Canada. I think hon. gentlemen from Nova Scotia have good reason to complain of the omission of that very important piece of road for which provision was made by the late government.

Mr. COCHRANE. They will have to be patient a little longer.

Mr. PUGSLEY. They have been patient for a great many years. I can testify that they were pressing this matter for a great number of years, and finally it was agreed that the government would aid the St. John Valley road in this way, and these other branch lines should be built. I hope my hon. friend will look into the matter again, and see his way clear to restore the items for the construction of branches in Nova Scotia which have been omitted.

Mr. CARVELL. Perhaps I did not understand the minister as to the assistance to be granted the St. John Valley. I am aware of the guarantee of bonds for $25,000 a mile for the road. My recollection is that the agreement that was arrived at between the late Minister of Railways and the provincial government of New Brunswick, in the month of July last, was to the effect that the government was to furnish aid to the extent of about $400,000 for bridges, and the bonds for the balance of the bridges were to be guaranteed by the province. I now understand that the Federal government guarantees the bonds for the whole million dollars for the bridges.

Mr. COCHRANE. Yes.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Then the difference between that and the proposition of the late government is that we were not guaranteeing bonds for the bridges, but we were to give a substantial cash bonus, supposed to be one-third the estimated cost of the bridges. Then the provincial government were to provide an equal amount. I understand now that instead of giving a cash subsidy this government agrees to guarantee the bonds.

Mr. COCHRANE. Yes.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I asked the minister whether the terms would be available to the government of Nova Scotia. Do I understand it is a question of the probable revenue of the road; that is, that that is the only question that will have to be considered ?

Mr. COCHRANE. In that respect, yes. I know we are taking desperate chances at 40 and 60 per cent. I do not know that there is going to be anything in it for the Intercolonial railway.

Mr. SINCLAIR. It is forty per cent of the gross earnings ?

Mr. COCHRANE. Of the gross earnings. It makes a great deal of difference where that road will run, and whether it is possible to make both ends meet on the forty and sixty per cent basis. For the Intercolonial as a whole, it takes about ninety-five per cent of the revenue to meet running expenses. I would not like to commit myself to any definite proposition, but I would be glad to discuss any proposition the provincial government may have to make. I would rather encourage the building of roads in that way than to see the federal government undertaking the whole responsibility of an enterprise to develop the natural resources of a province. I think that the federal government should build what you might call trunk lines; but these branch lines in a province constructed solely for the purpose of developing natural resources, I would aid in the same manner as we are aiding the St. John Valley road.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The way we looked at the matter was this, that in all probability for a few years both governments might sustain some loss. We consider that the federal government would lose some money in operating on the 40 per cent basis, but also the provincial government would incur some loss because until the earnings reached $2,500 per mile, the 40 per cent would not pay the interest and therefore for three or four years there might be a loss on the part of both governments. But I felt, and I think the late Minister of Railways and Canals felt, that when the earnings reached $2,500 or $3,000 per mile it would pay on a 40 per cent basis. The Canadian Pacific railway lease the Tobique Valley railway, they operate on a 40 per cent basis, and I am told that the results have been quite satisfactory.

Mr. COCHRANE. Have they to provide anything for betterments ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know, but it is not unusual that we have companies operating on that basis.

Mr. McKENZIE. When the minister comes before the committee again I desire and would like him to tell me as well as he can the particular purpose to which this vote in the estimates for the Sydney mines diversion will be devoted.

Mr. COCHRANE. I will give all the details.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. COCHRANE moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What business will be taken up on Monday ?

Mr. COCHRANE. I understand that the Boundary Bill will be discussed on Monday, and then estimates.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.40 a.m., Saturday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, March 4, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 119) respecting certain patents of the Continental Can Company.—Mr. Fripp.

Bill (No. 120) for the relief of Ethel May Stewart.—Mr. Clark (Red Deer).

POST OFFICE INSPECTORSHIP AT MOOSEJAW.

Mr. KNOWLES. Before the orders of the day are called I wish to draw the attention of the Postmaster General to the fact that a return, called for by an order of the House which was passed on the 22nd of January, for all papers, etc., in connection with a vacancy in the appointment of post office inspector at Moosejaw, Saskatchewan, has not been yet been brought down.

Hon. L. P. PELLETIER. I will see to it.

PRIVATE BILLS—QUEEN'S COLLEGE KINGSTON.

Upon the orders being called for further consideration in committee of Bill (No. 68) respecting the Queen's College at Kingston —Mr. Nickle; and Bill (No. 69) to incorporate Queen's Theological College.—Mr. Nickle.

Right Hon. R. L. BORDEN (Prime Minister). I would like to remind the hon. gentleman who has charge of these Bills that we fixed to-day for the second reading of Bill (No. 115) to provide for the extension of the boundaries of the province of Manitoba, and as it is possible that there may be some prolonged discussion on the Bills now coming before the consideration of the House, I would ask that they should stand until a later date in order that we might proceed with the debate on the Manitoba Boundaries Bill as already arranged.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stand.

HOUSE IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

House in committee—Third Readings.

Bill (No. 108) respecting the Trust and Loan Company of Canada.—Mr. Baker.

Bill (No. 46) respecting the Dominion Trust Company, and to change its name to British Empire Trust Company.—Mr. Cromwell.

DOMINION TRUST COMPANY.

House in Committee on Bill (No. 80) respecting the Dominion Trust Company, Limited, and to change its name to the Dominion Trust Company.—Mr. Macdonell.

On section IV—

Mr. MACDONELL. I move that the word 'committees' be substituted for 'boards' in this section. The word 'boards' was left in the Bill by oversight in the committee. The change is desired because the word 'committee' is that which is used in the by-laws of the company and throughout its literature, and so it is the one that will best correspond with the requirements of the company.

Mr. NESBITT. How will it read then?

Mr. MACDONELL. It will read:

The head office of the company shall be in the city of Vancouver and the directors may establish branch offices and local advisory committees at such other places in Canada and elsewhere as they may determine.

Mr. NESBITT. Is not the word 'boards' generally used in Bills of this kind?

Mr. MACDONELL. The word 'boards' is frequently used, but the word 'committees' is used quite as frequently. They are convertible terms of practically the same meaning, but, as I have said, the literature of the company and its by-laws contain the word 'committees,' and it is to bring this Bill into correspondence with these that I move this amendment.

Amendment agreed to.

Bill as amended reported, read the third time and passed.

MR. EZRA BUTLER EDDY BESSEY.

Mr. FRIPP moved the second reading of Bill (No. 117) to change the name of Ezra Butler Eddy Bessey.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I would ask the Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty), if he has considered this Bill. It is a proposition to change the name of a person born in the province of Quebec, and does the Minister of Justice think that such a Bill comes within the jurisdiction of this parliament? I am of opinion that such a Bill would fall within the jurisdiction of the province in which the register of the birth of the gentleman is kept, and the registers are carefully kept in the province of Quebec.

Mr. HENDERSON. In looking over this Bill I was under the impression that it came more properly within the jurisdiction of the provincial legislature as a matter of property and civil rights. However, I do not wish to raise any objection to the Bill going through, as I am aware that the young man will be a gainer by about three quarters of a million dollars if he gets his name changed within two years after he becomes of age. I knew his father and grandfather very well, and I have no desire to see any objection raised to the Bill. I had not thought of the point raised by the right hon. gentleman the leader of the opposition; there may be something in it. It is quite possible the young man was born in Hull, of that I have no knowledge. But as his parents resided in Hull at one time, I have no doubt the right hon. gentleman may be quite correct. I fail to see, however, that that is a material point.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I would be sorry to do anything that would injure the prospects of this young gentleman. I also knew his family and grandfather very well. I have no desire whatever to interpose between him and the rights which he is to obtain under the will of his grandfather. But the very suggestion my hon. friend now makes is one which is in the interest of the young gentleman himself, because, if we pass an Act here that we have no power to pass, we might seriously interfere with his prospects.

Mr. HENDERSON. One moment Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SPEAKER. There is nothing before the House.

Mr. HENDERSON. I thought the second reading of the Bill was before the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. No, it was passed and referred to the Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

Mr. DOHERTY. Perhaps I may still be allowed to say one word on the point raised by the right hon. gentleman who leads the opposition. It does seem to me there is a great deal to be said in support of his suggestion that the jurisdiction in a matter of this kind belongs to the legislature. But so far as precedents go, I think I am correct in saying that there is a precedent for passing Bills of this kind by this House. There is one case where, if my memory is not at fault, we changed the name of a gentleman to Mr. Amor De Cosmos, however, this is a private matter, and the gentleman himself who is promoting the Bill will have to incur the consequences, if it is found that we have not jurisdiction.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I think there is a concrete case as a precedent. My hon. friend the Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier), I think is aware of a Bill passed by the local legislature some years ago. I do not know of any similar Bill passed by the federal House.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

RESOLUTION ON NAVAL BILL.

Mr. LAMARCHE. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago you ruled that my former question was out of order, according to the rules of the House. Since then I have amended it, and now beg to submit it again.

Mr. HENDERSON.

1. Does the government intend to give an opportunity to the members of the House of Commons to discuss the resolution of Mr. Sevigny, which stands as No. 25 on the orders of the day as a notice of motion?

2. If so, is it the intention of the government to give an opportunity to the House to declare itself on the merits of the said resolution?

Mr. BORDEN. A great many applications have been made to the government to give an opportunity of calling up resolutions and Bills under the head of Public Bills and Orders. It is thought undesirable in any of these cases to give such an opportunity as is here asked for, as it would result in seriously delaying the work of the House.

COAL COMBINE IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. STEVENS:

1. Has the government received from the provincial government of British Columbia a request to investigate whether or not a combine or understanding exists among the coal producers and dealers of British Columbia to establish and maintain the prices charged for coal?

2. If so, will the government order such inquiry, and when?

3. Has any answer been sent to the government of British Columbia? If so, what?

Mr. CROTHERS:

1. The Lieutenant Governor of British Columbia on the 3rd of May, 1909, transmitted to the then Secretary of State copy of a minute covering a resolution of the legislative assembly of British Columbia which reaffirmed a request that the Dominion government should cause inquiry to be made with a view to ascertain the cause of the alleged excessive price charged to consumers of coal in that province. This communication from His Honour the Lieutenant Governor of British Columbia was acknowledged by the Under Secretary of State on the 14th of May, 1909.

2. The present government has not had an opportunity up to the present of considering the request which was first brought to its attention by the inquiry of the hon. member.

3. It does not appear that any reply has ever been sent to the government of British Columbia except the acknowledgment by the Under Secretary of State on the 14th of May, 1909, above alluded to.

SEPARATE SCHOOLS IN KEEWATIN.

Mr. BARETTE:

1. Did the government receive a petition from Messrs. Larose, Poirier and Smith of Le Pas, Keewatin, asking for the creation of a school district, to be established by the commissioner of the northwest territories in council?

2. If so, when does the government intend to give to the aforesaid commissioner, the councillors indicated by section 6 of chapter 62 of the revised statutes of Canada, 1906, and the authority required by section 10, for the establishment of school districts?

*Mr. LAVALLEE:

1. Did the government receive a petition from Messrs. Larose, Poirier and Smith, of Le Pas, Keewatin, asking that a school district be established by the commissioner of the northwest territories in council?

2. If so, does the government intend to have the councillors appointed in accordance with section 6, chapter 62, of the revised statutes of Canada, 1906, and the authority required by section 10 of the same statute, for the stablishment of the school district, before submitting to the House the whole Bill enacting the annexation of Keewatin to the province of Manitoba, in accordance with the resolution now in the Orders of the Day, dated 19th February, 1912, by the hon. Mr. Borden?

Mr. BORDEN:

1. Yes.

2. The petition alluded to was received on the first of December, 1911, more than three years after the House of Commons had unanimously declared by resolution passed on the 13th day of July, 1908, that the territory therein mentioned should be added to the province of Manitoba. The Revised Statutes came into force on the 31st day of January, 1907, and no action has since been taken by either the preceding or the present administration under section 6 or section 10 of chapter 62. In view of these circumstances such action seems unnecessary at the present time.

MR. FRED. P. ROBINSON.

Mr. CARVELL:

1. Has one Fred. P. Robinson of Fredericton, New Brunswick, been appointed preventive officer for the whole or any port of New Brunswick? If so, for what portion?

2. What are his duties and what salary does he receive?

3. By whom was he recommended for the position, and what is the date of his appointment?

Mr. REID (Grenville):

1. Mr. Fred. P. Robinson, of Fredericton, has been appointed an acting preventive officer of customs for service wherever required in New Brunswick.

2. His duties are to endeavour to detect and to prevent frauds on the customs revenue. Salary $1,200 a year.

3. His employment was authorized 1st February, 1912, on the recommendation of the Minister of Customs.

NAVAL SERVICE.

Mr. MONDOU:

1 Does the government intend to propose the repeal of the Naval Service Act?

2. If so, does the government intend, in case of such repeal, to propose another Act containing the policy of the government in matter?

3 If such other Act is proposed, is it the intention of the government to submit the same for the approval of the people before being put into force?

Mr. HAZEN:

The answer to each of these three questions is—'Yes.' After such consideration and inquiry as may be necessary, the government will present its naval policy to parliament and to the people. That policy will undoubtedly require legislation which will involve the repeal of the present Naval Service Act. In the meantime that Act will remain on the statute-book for purposes in connection with the Fishery Protection Service and otherwise. Before any permanent naval policy is put into force, the people will be given an opportunity to pronounce upon it.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY—INVESTIGATION BY MESSRS. GUTELIUS AND STAUNTON.

*Mr. MURPHY:

1. What amounts by way of salary or other remuneration are F. P. Gutelius and G. Lynch Staunton to receive each year while they are engaged in investigating the affairs of the National Transcontinental Railway?

2. What salary did F. P. Gutelius receive from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for the year immediately preceding his appointment by the government?

3. Was the said F. P. Gutelius employed on the Heinze Railroad in British Columbia? If so, in what capacity?

4. Did the said F. P. Gutelius enter the employment of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company at the time of the sale of the Heinze Railroad to the latter company?

5. How long was the said F. P. Gutelius employed by the Canadian Pacific Railway at North Bay and Montreal, and what were his duties at each place?

6. What experience has the said F. P. Gutelius had, respectively, in the operation, management and construction of railroads?

7. What connection, if any, is the said F. P. Gutelius to have with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company while he is employed by the government?

Mr. COCHRANE:

7. No connection.

SUPPLY OF CEMENT TO DEPARTMENT OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York):

1. Were any tenders received up to January 30, 1912, for supplying approximately, 210,000 barrels of cement to the Department of Railways and Canals?

2. If so, what are the names of the corporations, firms, or individuals who tendered?

3. Has any contract been awarded in respect to such tenders? If so, what is the name or names of the successful tenderer or tenderers, and at what prices has such contract been awarded at each delivery point?

4. What is the name or names of the corporations, firms, or individuals who contracted to supply cement to the Department of Railways and Canals for the year 1911, what quantity did each contractor supply at each delivery point, and at what prices?

5. What was the contract price of cement supplied by the Lakefield, Portland Cement Company to the Department of Railways and Canals, under contract of March 10, 1909, delivered at Frankford, Campbellford, Trenton and Hastings?

6. What are the names of the contractors who supplied cement to the Department of Railways and Canals, other than the Lakefield Portland Cement Company, in the year 1909, and what prices were paid to such contractors for cement at each delivery point in that year?

7. Is the government aware as to whether or not the product of all the cement mills extending from Montreal, Quebec, to Windsor, Ontario, with but two exceptions, are controlled by two mergers or trusts?

8. Is the government aware as to whether or not the Department of Railways and Canals in the year 1910 paid 48 cents per barrel more for cement than in the year 1909 at the same delivery points?

9. Is the government aware as to whether or not the duty upon cement imported from the United States is equal to 67·30 per cent of the selling market price at the American mills, or 43¾ cents per barrel?

Mr. ROCHE:

9. The duty collected on cement, including the duty on paper bags containing the same, imported into Canada from the United States during the year ended 31st March, 1911, according to the Trade and Navigation Tables, is 32 per cent of the value of the cement, or 43¾ cents per barrel of 350 pounds.

SEPARATE SCHOOLS IN MANITOBA AND KEEWATIN.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

Has any demand been made to the government, verbally or in writing, by any member of the House of Commons, praying for the establishment of a separate school system in the province of Manitoba or in Keewatin? If so, by whom?

Mr. BORDEN. The government does not consider that an inquiry of this character is either usual or pertinent.

CANADIAN NORTHERN RAILWAY BONDS.

Mr. MARTIN (Montreal, St. Mary's):

1. Do the Canadian Northern railway bonds, said to have been unconditionally guaranteed by the Dominion of Canada both as to principal and interest, cover the terminals in Winnipeg, Montreal and elsewhere?
2. Is the Canadian Northern Railway Company issuing and putting on the financial market of New York, special bonds for said terminals?
3. Have the moneys realized from the sale of the said railway bonds been applied for the purposes for which they were issued?
4. Does the government intend to order an auditing of the moneys so realized from the sales of these railway bonds, to ascertain whether or not such moneys have been applied for the purposes for which the bonds were issued?
5. Does the government intend to order an auditing to ascertain whether the terminals of the Canadian Northern Railway Company are included in the securities guaranteeing the bonds issued?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds):

1. The Dominion of Canada has not guaranteed the securities of the Canadian Northern Railway Company, or any of the companies connected with the Canadian Northern system, which are a charge upon terminals at Montreal or Winnipeg.
2. The government has no information.
3 & 4. Moneys realized from the sale of securities of the Canadian Northern Ontario Company's railway, guaranteed by the Dominion under chapter 6 of the Acts of 1911, are being applied in aid of the construction of a line of railway from Montreal to Port Arthur, as provided by the said Act and deed of trust made thereunder. Such sums only are paid out of these moneys as the chief engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals shall certify as justified, having regard to the proportion of work done as compared with the work of construction of the whole line.
5. In view of the previous answers an auditing as is suggested is not called for.

MR. AZARIE BIBEAU.

Mr. WILSON (Laval):

1. Has Mr. Azarie Bibeau, a sessional clerk during the last parliament been dismissed? If so, at whose request?
2. Has he been replaced? If so, by whom?

Mr. BORDEN:

1. Yes. It was found on inquiry that Mr. Azarie Bibeau had been paid during sessions at the rate of $4 per day, and that he was repeatedly absent without leave and had not done any departmental work for some years. This was deemed a sufficient reason for his dismissal.
2. Yes. By Charles Meneilley.

CARRIAGE OF MAILS BETWEEN SOREL AND ST. VICTORIA, QUEBEC

Mr. CARDIN:

1. On what date were tenders for the carriage of the mails between Sorel and St. Victoria, county of Richelieu, furnished to the Post Office Department?
2. Who were the tenders at the date, and what was the amount of each tender?
3. Who obtained the contract and at what price?
4. Were some of the tenderers recommended by the hon. the Postmaster General?
5. If so, who are they and by whom were they so recommended?

Mr. PELLETIER:

1. Tenders were received at department, 19th January, 1912.

The following tenders were received: Adelard Paulhas, $400; F. E. Pelletier, first offer $425, later reduced to $400; Adelard Paulhas, $425; Pierre Pelletier, $440; Chas. Ethier, $499; Ovila Bussiere, $500; J. B. Aubuhcon, $599.

3. F. E. Pelletier at $400 per annum, instead of $450, the price paid before.

4 & 5. No.

BUDGET—BOUNTIES ON IRON AND STEEL.

Mr. SINCLAIR:

1 At what date will the Budget debate be brought on?

2. Is it the intention of the government on the occasion of the Budget debate to give a favourable answer to the application of the manufacturers for a renewal of the bounties on iron and steel?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds):

1. An announcement will be made in due course.

2. It is not the custom to answer questions of this character in advance of the Budget speech.

MAIL CONTRACT BETWEEN VAL DES EBOULIS AND RIGAUD, QUE.

Mr. BOYER:

1. Who has the contract at present for the carriage of the mail between Val des Eboulis and Rigaud?

2. When was the contract granted?

3. Did the department ask for public tenders for the said service?

4. What are the names of the persons who tendered, and the amount asked by each of them?

5. When did the contract granted to Pierre Quesnel expire?

Mr. PELLETIER:

1. Eugene Quesnel.

2. 24th January, 1912.

3. No. It was not necessary as contract was below $200.

4. Answered by No. 3.

5. 31st December, 1911.

SOULANGES CANAL EMPLOYEES.

Mr. BOYER:

1. Has Damien Lalonde, chief electrician on the Soulanges canal, made a report respecting assistant electrician Cuillerrier, accusing him of having stolen tools and goods from the powerhouse?

2. If so, does the department intend to make an inquiry to establish the truth of the accusations brought against Guillerrier?

3. When this inquiry takes place, by whom will it be held, and where?

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not think that this question can be asked until it is presented in a different form. One of the rules applicable to the asking of a question is that the question shall not reflect upon individual character. This, I take it, is a violation of the rule.

Mr. BOYER:

1. What are the names of all persons employed on the Soulanges Canal, permanently and otherwise, up to the 21st September, 1911?

Mr. BOYER:

1. Has a person named Denis Methot, recently appointed assistant electrician on the Soulanges canal, replacing a person named Cuillerrier, the required experience to perform such duty?
2. If so, can the government state where this man acquired his experience?
3. Who are the persons who furnished certificates, references, &c., showing that the said Denis Methot has the requisite experience to perform such duty?

Mr. COCHRANE:

1. Methot had experience with machinery generally. The department does not require expert electricians for such positions. Any intelligent man, especially if he has a general experience in machinery can be trained in a very short time. In this case it was arranged that either the chief electrician or one of his trained assistants would take the appointee in hand and that he would never be left alone in charge of the electrical machines until properly acquainted with their working.

It may be stated that the man Cuillerrier had no more knowledge of electrical machinery when appointed some years ago, than has Methot.

2. He had no experience at the time of his appointment.
3. He had no certificates and none were required in his case.

Mr. BOYER:

1. Has the government received a report respecting an assault committed by Damien Lalonde, chief electrician on the Soulanges canal, on the person of one of his assistants, named L. A. Leroux?
2. Is the government aware, as reported, that the said Damien Lalonde was arrested for this act, that he appeared before the court on the 22nd February, and that his trial has been put off to the 28th instant?
3. Is it within the knowledge of the department that the said Damien Lalonde, without any other authority, dismissed the said L. A. Leroux, in order, as alleged, to replace him by a person named Macdonald, and that his appointment had been afterwards ratified by the department?
4. What is the date of L. A. Leroux's dismissal?
5. What is the date of Macdonald's engagement?

Mr. COCHRANE:

1. The superintending engineer, was handed a letter by Mr. Leroux relating the circumstances of the assault in question.
2. The superintending engineer reports that he was notified of the arrest by Leroux.
3. Lalonde did not dismiss Leroux. It was necessary to put a man in his place, to complete the staff, so Macdonald was appointed temporarily, by the overseer, who reported to the superintending engineer and his action was approved of.
4. Leroux left the service on the 19th February.
5. The 19th February.

BRITISH COLUMBIA FISH HATCHERIES.

Mr. SHEPHERD:

What was the cost of construction of each of the following hatcheries in British Columbia: Anderson Lake, Kennedy Lake and Cowichan Lake?

Mr. HAZEN:

Anderson lake hatchery, $6,964.94. Kennedy lake hatchery, $7,505.57; Cowichan lake hatchery, $9,023.81.

HERRING FISHING IN BRITISH COLUMBIA WATERS.

Mr. SHEPHERD:

1. Was herring fishing permitted in the waters adjacent to Nanaimo harbour and Departure bay after the season 1910-11 had closed?
2. If so, upon whose authority and to whom were such privileges granted?
3. By whom were the necessary permits issued?

Mr. HAZEN:

1. No.
2. Answered by No. 1.
3. Answered by No. 1.

ST. LAWRENCE SHIP CHANNEL—GOVERNMENT DREDGES.

Mr. CARDIN:

1. Are the captains, engineers, mates and other navigators employed up to last autumn on the government dredges and towboats employed in dredging the channel of the St. Lawrence between Montreal and Quebec, engaged for the season of navigation of 1912?

2. If some of them are to be dismissed, who are they, what position did each occupy, who asked for these dismissals, and why?

Mr. HAZEN:

1. The matter is under consideration.
2. Answered by No. 1.

PINK ROCK WHARF, N.B.

Mr. FOWLER:

1. What is the total cost to date of Pink Rock wharf, Westmorland county, N.B.?
2. Who is wharfinger, and what amount of tolls have been collected from the public?
3. What quantities of gypsum or other freight have been handled on the wharf by the Albert Manufacturing Company, or C. J. Osman, free of tolls, under an alleged agreement with the Public Works Department?
4. Is the title of the land upon which the wharf is built, vested in the Crown? If so, from whom was it obtained, and at what price?

Mr. MONK:

1. $16,065.64.
2. (a) No wharfinger has, as yet, been appointed; (b) no tolls collected.
3. No records of such shipments kept in the department.
4. No, but the agreement entered into with the Albert Manufacturing Company is considered a sufficient title.

FISHERY INSPECTORS, NOVA SCOTIA.

Mr. SINCLAIR:

What are the names, addresses and present salaries of the fishery inspectors in the province of Nova Scotia?

Mr. HAZEN:

John G. Morrison, Englishtown, inspector for Cape Breton Island, salary $1,200 per annum.

Robert Hockin, Pictou, inspector exercising jurisdiction over Cumberland, Colchester, Pictou, Antigonish, Guysborough, Halifax and Hants counties, salary $1,200 per annum.

5. A report is submitted annually for publication in the report of the Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries. Twenty technical and fishery reports have been published at intervals as supplements to the Fishery Report of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, under the title of 'Contributions to Canadian Biology being studies from the Marine Biological Stations of Canada,' and nineteen further reports are being printed and nearly ready for issue by the King's Printer.

FEDERAL SUBSIDIES TO MANITOBA AND NOVA SCOTIA.

Mr. SINCLAIR:

1. What is the population of Manitoba according to the last census
2. What is the gross amount that will be payable as arrears to the government of Manitoba by the Federal government on account of debt allowance, land account and buildings, under the new adjustment now before parliament?
3. What amount, in addition to the arrears referred to in question No. 2, will be payable as provincial subsidy out of the revenue of Canada to the province of Manitoba for the year ending March 31, 1913, under the adjustment now before parliament?
4. What is the population of Nova Scotia as per last census?
5. What is the amount to which the province of Nova Scotia will be entitled for provincial subsidy from the Federal government for the year ending March 31, 1913?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds):

1. 455,614.

2. Arrears on account of allowance in lieu of debt (in respect of four years—July 1, 1908, to June 30, 1912)—payable when Bill becomes law, $810,648.52; approximate arrears of allowance in lieu of land (same period), payable when Bill becomes law, $1,368,000; special allowance building account, payable one-half July 1, 1912, one-half July 1, 1913, $201,723.57. Approximate total, $2,380,372.09.

3. Manitoba will receive, if the Bill becomes law, for the year beginning July 1, 1912 (Subsidy Acts make grants to provinces payable half-yearly in advance July 1st and January 1st, each year), approximately $1,349,345.39.

4. 492,338.

5. For the year beginning July 1, 1912, Nova Scotia will receive $636,671.28.

POSTMASTER AT TRACADIE ROAD, N.S

Mr. SINCLAIR:

1. Has any complaint been received by the Postmaster General of the Post Office Department against John H. McPherson, postmaster at Tracadie Road, N.S.?

2. If so, what was the complaint, and who made it?

3. Has any notice been sent to Mr. McPherson?

4. Does the department intend to take further action in this case?

Mr. PELLETIER:

1, 2, 3 and 4. The Post Office Department has received to-day the following telegram:—

Halifax, N.S., March 4, 1912.

The Secretary,
Post Office Department,
Ottawa.

John H. MacPherson, Postmaster, Tracadie Road, stated to have died four years ago. Report by to-day's mail.

(Sgd.) W. E. MacLELLAN,
P. O. Inspector.

DISMISSAL OF MR. CHARLES FLEMMING.

Mr PARDEE:

1. Has Charles Flemming, employed in the Inland Revenue Department at Petrolia, Ontario, been dismissed? If so, for what cause?

2. Was an investigation asked for? If so, will it be granted?

Mr. NANTEL:

1. Yes. For intemperance.

2. Yes. No investigation will be held as evidence was conclusive.

LIGHTHOUSE KEEPER AT ILE ROUGE.

Mr. GAUVREAU:

1. Has any one asked for the position of Mr. John Irving, floating lighthouse keeper, of Ile Rouge? If so, what are their names?

2. Is it the intention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to dismiss the said John Irving? If so, will an inquiry be granted him?

Mr. HAZEN:

1. Representations have been made to the department that Mr. L. T. Delisle, formerly employed as captain, should be reinstated.

2. The matter is under consideration.

DRY DOCK AT QUEBEC.

Mr. BELAND:

1. Who are the persons or companies now conferring with the government on the subject of the construction of a dry dock in the port of Quebec?

2. In the case of companies, who are the directors and through whose intervention are they coming to terms with the government?

Mr. MONK:

1. The representatives of the Quebec harbour board and of the shipping federation.

2. No company has made any application to or entered into any pourparlers with the government upon the subject.

CHICAGO DRAINAGE CANAL.

Mr. LAVALLEE:

1. What steps have been taken by the honourable the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to prevent the proposed increase of the flow of water from Lake Michigan through the Chicago drainage canal?

2. Is the minister aware of the damage this increased flow of water would work to shipping by a lowering of the lake levels?

Mr. HAZEN:

1. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries, on learning of the application of the trustees of the Sanitary District of Chicago, to be allowed to increase the quantity of water withdrawn from Lake Michigan through the Chicago Drainage Canal to ten thousand cubic feet per second, directed Mr. John Kennedy, Consulting Engineer of the Harbour Commission of Montreal, and Mr. W. J. Stewart, C.E., Chief Hydrographer of the Department of the Naval Service, Ottawa, to proceed to Washington and watch on behalf of Canada, proceedings in that connection before the United States Secretary of War.

At the said hearing, the trustees of the Sanitary District of Chicago were present, the case in their behalf being presented by counsel.

Opposing the application, there appeared representatives of shipping interests from all over the Great Lakes; also representatives of various cities and harbours, including some from Chicago itself, and from as far east as Cleveland.

The Canadian representatives took no part in the proceedings, further than to ask for an adjournment of the hearing until the 27th March, 1912, a request that had already been made by the Right Honourable the Prime Minister of Canada through the British Ambassador at Washington. This request on behalf of Canada was readily granted.

In addition, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has arranged for a conference of representatives of the shipping interests, to take place at Ottawa on the 5th March, with a view to discussing with him ways and means of presenting Canada's objection to this application, at the hearing arranged, for the above named date, at Washington.

2. The minister is aware that great damage would result to shipping if sufficient water were diverted to affect the lake levels.

SUPERIOR COURT BENCH, HULL.

* Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. Has the Minister of Justice read the following from the Ottawa 'Citizen' of the 29th ultimo:—

'NEW JUDGESHIP.

'Hector Chauvin may go to Hull Superior Court Bench.

'The announcement made by Judge McDougall, presiding at the Hull Superior Court yesterday that it was probable that a new Superior Court judge would be appointed at an early date, caused much satisfaction amongst the members of the Bar Association who were present.

'Judge McDougall stated that he had interviewed the Minister of Justice and told him that he was unable to handle the great number of cases before the court, and that as he would be debarred from sitting on the bench during the hearing of a number of cases in the coming Hull assizes, owing to his having been at one time retained by some of the principals in the case, it would be necessary to secure the services of another judge. Moreover, owing to several of the Montreal judges being at present on the sick list, it would be difficult to obtain one to preside at Hull.

'In reply the Minister advised Judge McDougall that an appropriation would be made during the present session, providing for an additional Superior Court judge, who would reside in the district of Ottawa, pending the establishment of the Nominingue district.

'It is stated that the new judge will probably be Mr. Hector Chauvin, whose name has been mentioned in connection with a judgeship very frequently of late.'

2. Is an additional Superior Court judge to be appointed as suggested by Mr. Justice McDougall.

Mr. DOHERTY:

1. This question was practically answered on Thursday last (Feb. 29). The answer will be found on page 4197 of 'Hansard' (unrevised). If the hon. member so desires I will repeat the answer:

I have not seen the statement of Mr. Justice McDougall, but the Quebec legislature has provided for a new judicial district to be called Montcalm, and that until there is a proper courthouse at the Chef-Lieu of Montcalm district, the judge to be appointed shall reside at Hull. It is the intention when we introduce the Bill to provide for the additional judges which are asked for by the different provinces to make provision for the salary of the judge which the legislature has determined is required for the district of Montcalm and who is to reside at Hull, and that was so stated to the Hon. Mr. Justice McDougall.

2. When the necessary legislation is passed an additional judge will be appointed.

MAGDALEN ISLANDS NEWS SERVICE.

* Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. Who sends the weekly letter by Marconigram to Magdalen Islands, and what is his salary?

2. What is the nature of the news supplied?

Mr. PELLETIER:

1. Mr. David Watson, of Quebec.

2. I think eight dollars per week, but I will have this verified.

MOTIONS AGREED TO WITHOUT DISCUSSION.

For a copy of all letters, petitions, requests, memoranda, ministerial or departmental instructions in the possession of the government or any department thereof, relating to the alleged change of name of Blind River post office, in the province of Ontario.—Mr. Sinclair.

For a copy of all letters, contracts, memoranda, or notice cancelling contracts, and of all other papers and documents in the possession of the Department of Railways and Canals, bearing date after January 1, 1911, relating to the construction of certain branch lines of the Intercolonial railway between Sunnybrae and Guysborough and Country Harbour, and between Dartmouth and Dean Settlement, in the province of Nova Scotia.—Mr. Sinclair.

For a copy of all documents, correspondence, inquiries, accusations, petitions and reports in the Department of Railways and Canals, referring to the dismissal of Mr. Theophile Morice, an officer over the delivery of coal of the Intercolonial railway at Rivière du Loup.—Mr. Gauvreau.

For a copy of all papers and correspondence in connection with the removal of the postmaster at Rathburn, township of Mara, county of Ontario, and the change of the location of the post office at said point.—Mr. Pardee.

For a copy of all contracts, correspondence or writings whatsoever, respecting the construction of a dam in 1908 or 1909, called the Lake Timiskaming dam constructed or built over the rivers forming the inflow or the discharge of the said lake, exchanged between the government of Canada and the contractor or contractors.—Mr. Boulay.

For a copy of all correspondence between the Intercolonial authorities, the Minister of Railways and the Department of Justice, and all other persons, relating to a claim of the Matepedia Water Works Company against the Intercolonial, including therein all plans, designs, inquiries, evidences and other reports concerning this matter; also a copy of all plans, designs, notices and correspondence between the Intercolonial authorities and M. P. Laberge, the Dominion Lumber Company and John Fenderson & Co., relating to the placing of an aqueduct pipe on the land No. 170 of the cadastre of St. Pierre du Lac.—Mr. Boulay.

For a copy of all papers, documents, letters, &c., connected with an inquiry made by the Intercolonial authorities of the loss of a horse killed on the Dalhousie branch, belonging to Mr. Xavier St. Laurent, of Causapscal, since 1905.—Mr. Boulay.

For a copy of all inquiries, correspondence whatsoever relating to the death of the late Absolon Lavoie, of Amqui, accidentally killed on the Intercolonial railway at Metis, county of Rimouski, during the summer of 1911.—Mr. Boulay.

For a copy of all letters, complaints, charges and other documents connected with or giving any information as to the discharge of Thomas Hale, of Westville, Nova Scotia, as correspondent for the 'Labour Gazette.'—Mr. Macdonald.

1. For a copy of all reports of engineers from 1874 to 1900, relating to the most suitable site in the harbour of Quebec for the construction of a dry dock.

2. Of all correspondence exchanged on the subject of a choice of a site for the dry dock now existing at St. Joseph de Lévis, at the time of its construction.

3. Of engineers' reports, plans, maps and bearings relating to the construction of a new dry dock in the port of Quebec since 1900.

4. Of all correspondence exchanged between the different companies and the government relating to the construction of a new dry dock in the port of Quebec, since 1909.

5. Also for the production of all documents submitted by the different companies who have asked for the government grant provided by the Dry Dock Subsidies Act.—Mr. Béland.

For a copy of all letters, telegrams and petitions, sent to the government, or any of His Majesty's ministers, praying for the establishment of a separate school system in the Keewatin territory.—Mr. Lemieux.

For a copy of all documents, letters, messages, recommendations, requests, tenders, &c., respecting the contract granted to Alexander Duchesneau, for work done to the wharf at St. Valier, county of Bellechasse.—Mr. Lapointe.

EXTENSION OF BOUNDARIES—MANITOBA.

Rt. Hon. R. L. BORDEN (Prime Minister) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 115), to provide for the Extension of the Boundaries of the province of Manitoba. He said: Mr. Speaker, when the resolutions upon which this Bill is founded were in Committee, the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux), asked that we should lay upon the table of the House a map showing the boundaries as proposed; I have done that and have also handed to my hon. friend a copy. This map has been prepared by the geographer, and I believe it shows accurately the boundaries as proposed by the resolutions, and by the Bill of which I now move the second reading.

I might also give to the House some information as to the population within the added territory as furnished to me by the officials who have charge of the census. The population is as follows:

Origin.	Number.
English	108
Scotch	33
Irish	6
French	16
Scandiavian	2
Eskimo	259
Halfbreed	525
Indian	4,822
Total	5,771

It is thus apparent that there has been very little settlement and apparently very little development in the territory which is thus to be added to the province of Manitoba. However, we cannot tell what development may come in the future. We know that the Hudson Bay railway is to be constructed, and we also know that the government of the province of Ontario have it in mind that the Timiskaming and Northern Ontario railway will, in the course of time, be extended through a portion of this territory so as to reach a port on Hudson bay.

The boundaries now proposed are the same as those which were affirmed by this House on the 13th day of July, 1908. I might state that between 1905 and 1908, the province of Saskatchewan laid claim to some portion of the territory which is now proposed to be included within the boundaries of the province of Manitoba. That was alluded to by the then Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), in moving the resolution I have just mentioned, on July 13, 1908. He used this language as expressing the conclusion which the government had reached in that connection:

> After giving due consideration to this claim on the part of the province of Saskatchewan, it seemed to us that, as between the claim of the province of Saskatchewan and of the province of Manitoba, to have the territory which lies north of Manitoba and east of Saskatchewan allotted either one way or the other, the weight of argument was certainly in favour of Manitoba and we could not grant the prayer of Saskatchewan. We therefore had to ignore it.

The present administration has seen no reason to depart from the conclusion which was thus arrived at.

Objection was taken during the debate on the resolutions to certain financial provisions which were then proposed, and which are embodied in this Bill. Criticism was directed against the date at which these financial provisions shall take effect. I need not remind the members of the House that the claim of Manitoba for an extension of its boundaries is of long standing. It was said, and I think accurately said, by the right hon. gentleman who leads the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), when he was moving the resolutions in 1908, that that claim dated as far back as 1884. It was renewed with a good deal of insistance in 1901, and as far as I am able to understand, it was proposed or suggested at that time that the claim of Manitoba in that regard should be postponed until what were then the territories lying west of Manitoba should be formed into provinces. Those territories were constituted into the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan during the session of 1905. The right hon. gentleman who then lead the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) dealt with the claim of Manitoba in that regard when he moved the first reading of the Autonomy Bills. He spoke of the claim of Manitoba to an extension of its boundaries as one which was entitled to fair and just consideration, but he attempted to justify the delay in dealing with that particular matter by saying that it could not be properly dealt with until Ontario and Quebec, and also the new province of Saskatchewan, then being constituted, had been consulted. Subsequently to that date Saskatchewan, Ontario and Quebec were consulted, and the result was the proposal of the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), embodied in the resolutions of July 13, 1908. The suggestion is made that although Manitoba put forward a claim which was entitled to consideration in 1905, but which claim was not acceded to at that time for the reason already alluded to, a delay of some six years having intervened, Manitoba should have no consideration whatever, for the time which has intervened between 1905 and the present time. I am not disposed to accept that conclusion.

I have already said that Manitoba urged, and urged with great insistence, that inasmuch as her claim should have had consideration in 1905 it would be proper, and only just and fair, that whatever financial provisions were to be embodied in the Bill providing for an extension of her boundaries, should date not from to-day, but from the period in 1905 when the new provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan were first constituted. We have not seen fit to date these financial provisions so far back as that, but we do think inasmuch as the boundaries which are now proposed were unanimously affirmed by this House in 1908, that it is no more than just to the province of Manitoba that those financial provisions should date and take effect from the 1st day of July 1908, and we ask this House to support us in that conclusion. What are we giving to Manitoba? We are increasing the lands indemnity from the sum of $100,000 to $562,500, the same as to Saskatchewan, and estimated on the same basis as in the case of that province. But we have asked Manitoba to accept, and Manitoba has agreed to accept, a deduction of $149,230 from that sum, leaving the net amount to be received by Manitoba in respect of her public lands of the sum of $413,370. Now my hon. friend the member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) has put the case very strongly in that regard. I do not know whether I quite apprehend the point of my hon. friend, but apparently he thinks that we are not giving Manitoba quite sufficient compensation in respect of her public lands, because I observe that in the course of his remarks on that question in the debate on the resolution, he declared that Manitoba has restored to us swamp lands which are worth at a fair calculation $21,000,000 in capital or $1,000,000 a year in annual revenue. While I do not accept the computation of my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) I think there is at least enough in his argument to justify us in saying that the proposal to which we are now asking the assent of the House does no more than ordinary simple justice to the province of Manitoba. After all, Mr. Speaker why should there be any discrimination between the province of Manitoba and the province of Saskatchewan in that regard? It is perfectly true that Manitoba was constituted into a province in 1871, and that Saskatchewan was constituted into a province in 1905, but everyone of us realizes also that the financial position of this Dominion is different to-day from what it was in 1871, and that consideration can properly, and in the public interest ought to be, extended to the province of Manitoba to-day which it was not possible to extend to that province when it was first constituted in 1871. And I venture to think that a proposal which takes away and removes any discrimination between the enlarged province of Manitoba and the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan, is after all one which is eminently in the public interest, one which is entirely justified by every sentiment of fair-play and one that should appeal to every member of this House. Further than that, Mr. Speaker, I need not allude to the fact that Manitoba is handing back to us these lands of which a detailed statement was given upon the introduction of this resolution, except to bring the testimony of my right hon. friend who leads the opposition to the value of the asset which the Dominion of Canada is receiving in the return by Manitoba of these lands. Speaking in the debate upon the Autonomy Bill in 1905, at page 1439 of 'Hansard' of that year the right hon. gentleman said this:

> The swamp lands are perhaps the most valuable lands in the province of Manitoba. They require some preliminary work for drainage but when drained there are no better lands in the whole province. When the late government gave to the province of Manitoba the swamp lands they made her a valuable gift, and it has proved to her a most important asset.

Well, Manitoba, in consideration of the financial arrangements exactly similar to those made for Alberta and Saskatchewan, is handing back to us the swamp lands, the very great value of which have been urged by the right hon. gentleman who leads the opposition, and by the member for Edmonton. We have charged Manitoba with every dollar which she has received out of these swamp lands, less the cost of administration, we have also charged Manitoba with 150,000 acres of land granted to the University of Manitoba. These stand in a somewhat different position from the swamp lands, because, when these lands were granted to the university, the province of Manitoba had no control over them as I understand. They were dealt with for the University of Manitoba, and so far as the sale of them is concerned the proceeds accrue to the university and not to the province as a whole. We have thought it only fair and reasonable, therefore, that value should be deducted as on the date, or about the date, when they were first granted. That value has been estimated at $2 per acre. So that the total amount in respect to which Manitoba accounts to the Dominion for the lands granted to the University of Manitoba is the sum of $300,000, upon which interest at the rate of 5 per cent has been deducted. But it may be asked, why should Manitoba or any other province receive compensation from the Dominion of Canada in respect of lands that are held by the Dominion, and are not administered by the province? Well, the principle upon which we are proceeding to-day was adopted by the late administration in 1905, when it fixed the financial terms for Alberta and Saskatchewan. Therefore, I do not suppose that any hon. gentleman on the other side of the House will be disposed to quarrel with that principle to-day. In fact it has already been recognized so far as Manitoba is concerned, because to-day, before the Bill passes, Manitoba is receiving, or would receive, $100,000 annually, in respect of these public lands, or as an indemnity for the lack of them. But I would like to point out the very great revenues which other provinces in Canada are receiving from their public domain to-day. The amounts that I am giving to the House have been taken from the very valuable yearbook or handbook, published by Mr. J. Castell Hopkins, and I am quoting from that handbook for the year 1911. According to that authority New Brunswick received in the year 1910, for what is termed territorial revenues, the sum of $494,491.64. In the same year the province of Nova Scotia received from its mines, $629,010, and from its Crown lands, $33,600, making a total received by the province of $662,610, from public domain which is not possessed by the province of Manitoba, or by the province of Alberta or Saskatchewan. The province of Quebec, in the same year, received in respect of its lands and forests $1,150,747, and from its mines, fisheries and game the sum of $182,132, a total of $1,332,897, from its public domain. In the same year the province of British Columbia received from timber leases and licenses the sum of $2,325,000, and from land sales and revenue $887,600, a total of $3,212,600. In the same year according to the authority, the province of Ontario received from its lands, forests and mines, $2,951,428. I have no doubt that in every one of these cases some expenses and costs of administration must be deducted, and I am merely pointing out that the province of Manitoba, and the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan, in being deprived of their public domain, which is being administered by Canada and for the benefit of Canada, so far as any revenue is concerned, are certainly entitled to some consideration in respect of subsidy for the withdrawal of those lands.

It is upon this principle, the principle acted upon in 1905, that we proceed to-day when we ask parliament to sanction this increased allowance to the province of Manitoba. Now, it may be asked, Why should we give compensation at all? Why should we not permit Manitoba to retain its swamp lands? Why not hand over to the province all the Crown lands within the enlarged boundaries and thus place the province in the same position as the other provinces of Canada except the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan? Well, it has been thought best—and I apprehend there is good reason for the conclusion—that the matter should be dealt with at one and the same time so far as Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan are concerned. But the delay that will be involved in carrying out such an arrangement is surely no good reason why there should be delay in doing that justice to Manitoba which she has long claimed. It is for that reason that we think it is no more than right, in the first place, to put Manitoba upon the same financial basis and to accord to her the same financial terms as those which have been already accorded to the sister provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. Because, I repeat once more, these three provinces stand in a different category from the other six provinces of the Dominion. The other six provinces have their natural resources, their public domain, mines, minerals and other assets of that kind; these three provinces have not those assets. Having in regard these considerations our policy and our proposal is, in the first place, to put Manitoba upon the same just and fair basis as that which has already been granted to Alberta and Saskatchewan, and then to take up, at the earliest opportunity, the question of the terms upon which the natural resources of all three prairie provinces shall be handed over to the administration of these provinces. And I would like to repeat what I have already said in speaking upon the resolutions in that regard, that when we do come to consider that proposal I think it will be just and necessary to give some consideration to the maritime provinces whose boundaries cannot be enlarged by reason of their natural situation, to call them into our councils and give to them a just voice as to the terms upon which these lands shall be handed over, and especially with regard to what compensation, if any, should be given to the three maritime provinces by reason of the transfer of these lands to the governments of Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan.

Now, what else do we propose so far as Manitoba is concerned? We propose to increase the annual allowance on account of debt from $178,947.65 to $381,584.19. Alberta and Saskatchewan each receive an annual allowance on account of debt of $405,375. We have made certain just deductions in the case of Manitoba which have already been fully explained to the House upon the resolutions. Why should there be any discrimination between Manitoba on the one hand and Saskatchewan and Alberta on the other in this regard? Shall the accident of the date of the establishment of these provinces make any difference in that respect? My hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Pugsley) declared with a great deal of earnestness that inasmuch as Manitoba was constituted in 1871 and Alberta and Saskatchewan were not constituted until 1905, Manitoba had no just and reasonable claim in this regard; because, he said, Manitoba is an old province in this confederation, established forty years ago. I would submit two or three considerations to my hon. friend from St. John and to the members of this House. In the first place, these three provinces differ from all other provinces in Canada in this respect—that they are not provinces which originally constituted this confederation and they were not sovereign provinces at the time of confederation, but brought in afterwards. Each one of these three provinces has been carved out of territory that was added to this confederation shortly after 1867. Therefore, so far as that is concerned, and except for the accident of dates, Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan are precisely in the same category.

But my hon. friend from St. John declares that the circumstance to which I have alluded, that accident if I may so call it, constitutes a valid reason which should prevent us to-day from giving to the province of Manitoba the same consideration in respect of debt allowance that was given in 1905 to Alberta and Saskatchewan. I am bound to say that I do not so regard it. Every one of us knows, who has been familiar with these transactions, that Manitoba in 1905 pressed her claim to have her boundaries extended as far west as Regina. We know that the government of that day did not see fit to entertain that claim. But suppose that claim had been entertained, suppose the boundaries of Manitoba had been extended as far west as Regina or further, would my hon. friend from St. John say that no increased allowance in respect of debt should have been granted to Manitoba in that regard? Surely he would not say that. Manitoba is having her boundaries extended to-day. The debt allowance is based upon the consideration of population in the case of Manitoba as in the case of Alberta and Saskatchewan. Manitoba in 1905 wanted her boundaries extended. Would my hon. friend from St. John be prepared to say that if the territory so far west as Regina had been constituted into a province it would have been quite right to make for that province a special, generous debt allowance, such as was granted under the Act of 1905, but that if the same territory had been added to Manitoba, no such consideration should have been given to Manitoba by reason of the population within that added territory? It does not seem to me that the argument of my hon. friend is consistent with the attitude taken by his leader in 1905 and by the government of which he was at that time, or very shortly after, a member. So we have come to the conclusion that the debt allowance of Manitoba should be placed exactly upon the same basis as that which was adopted in 1905 with regard to Alberta and Saskatchewan when they were constituted into provinces.

Now, so far as the terms of the Bill are concerned, hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House, are, no doubt, familiar with them. Sections 1 and 2 are of a formal character. Section 3 sets out the boundaries, sections 4 and 5 deal with the financial terms and set forth in considerable detail the items of increased allowance which we propose to make to the province of Manitoba by the Bill. Section 6 provides that the Crown lands and all the public domains shall continue to be vested in the Crown and administered by the government of Canada for the purpose of Canada, subject to the provisions of any Act of the parliament of Canada.

Section 7 deals with the rights and properties of the Hudson's Bay Company. Section 8 provides that the province shall continue to be represented in the Senate of Canada by four members, provided that such representation may, after the completion of the decennial census of June, 1911, be increased to 6 by the parliament of Canada. Section 9, the last section, provides that the Act shall not come into force until proclaimed by the Governor in Council, and that such proclamation shall not be made until the legislature of Manitoba shall have assented to the provisions of this Bill.

I, therefore, Mr. Speaker, submit the Bill with every confidence to the members of this House in the hope and in the expectation that it will receive their approval; and in the confidence that they will regard it as no more than a simple act of justice to the province of Manitoba in respect of claims of long standing, which some of us at least think should have been considered, and should have been regarded, and should have been granted long before this date. So far as the arrearages are concerned, on which the argument of my hon. friends opposite principally spent itself in the debate of a few days ago, I say that inasmuch as the province of Manitoba had every reason to ask that its boundaries be extended in 1905, and inasmuch as these boundaries, exactly as they are proposed to-day, were defined by resolution of this House on the 13th of July, 1908, parliament is doing no more than a simple act of justice when it declares that these terms shall take effect and date, not from to-day, but from the 1st day of July, 1908.

Hon. Wm. PUGSLEY (St. John City). I do not think that any one in this House will be disposed to admit that the right hon. gentleman who leads the government has made out good ground for, in effect, making the provisions in respect of these financial terms to be granted to Manitoba, retroactive, and giving the province a lump sum of about $2,000,000 to represent what would have been the increased allowance from the 1st of July, 1908, supposing the same terms had been arrived at at that time. Now the only ground stated by my right hon. friend is, that this parliament—I think it was this House, not the parliament—passed resolutions in favour of extending the boundaries of Manitoba in 1908. Now, Mr. Speaker, that was not the conclusion of the bargain. That was an effort on the part of this parliament to extend the boundaries upon certain terms, which were not agreed to by the province of Manitoba; that is all. Nothing was carried to a conclusion, nothing became binding upon the Dominion and the provinces, but everything remained uncompleted until the present time. Now upon what theory does my right hon. friend date this provision back to the 1st July, 1908? He says to-day we are now giving these improved financial terms to Manitoba as a part of the plan for the extension of the boundaries, and because Manitoba is assuming jurisdiction over this added territory. That is one of the grounds which my right hon. friend puts forward for giving to Manitoba these improved financial terms. Well has Manitoba during these four years been charged with anything in connection with the administration of the government in the added territory? Not at all. Has she been called upon to bear any burdens? Not at all. Has she built a courthouse, has she erected a public building, has she built a road, has she established a school district, has she incurred one single dollar of liability in the added territory? Not one. Yet my right hon. friend is asking this parliament to vote $2,000,000 of the money of the people of Canada to the province of Manitoba absolutely without a particle of consideration. It does seem to me that it is utterly impossible to justify that provision of the Bill.

Now then my right hon. friend puts it forward as a ground for the passing of this Bill that this parliament passed certain resolutions in 1908, and therefore, because Manitoba did not accept the terms, and this government is now asking parliament to grant new and more favourable terms, which are now to be accepted, the whole arrangement should date back, and Manitoba should get compensation for the four years delay. Well, my right hon. friend has placed upon the order paper resolutions for the extension of the boundaries of Ontario and Quebec. The resolutions, providing for these extensions were also passed in 1908, and what compensation does my right hon. friend propose to give to the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, because those resolutions were not carried into effect in 1908, and Ontario and Quebec have not had the use of the lands which would have been given them in 1908? Does my right hon. friend propose to apply the same principle to these provinces? He could, with just as much reason. But he could not do it at all, because there is no reason upon which he could found such a proposition in respect of either Ontario or Quebec; and what reason can be advanced for giving financial terms to Manitoba to date back to 1908, which cannot equally be urged in favour of Ontario and Quebec? Can we suppose that the people of Manitoba would ask for anything out of the treasury of this country to which they are not fairly entitled?

Now then my right hon. friend has called attention to the next provision of the statute in relation to the allowance which he says is by way of compensation for the province not getting these lands. He also dates that back to 1908. I think this is the first time that it has been put forward seriously that a money allowance is by way of compensation for lands. That is not the way in which it was put when the $100,000 was first allowed to Manitoba; it was put as being in lieu of lands; in other words, because the province was not given the lands from which it would have a revenue; therefore it was desirable to give it a money grant to enable it the better to carry on the administration of the affairs of the territory. But it was never recognized that the province of Manitoba or any other province of Canada is entitled to the public lands. Those lands, the land in the territories, the land in Prince Rupert's land, the land of all the territories, was bought by the original four provinces of Canada, by Quebec, Ontario, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, I do not think Prince Edward Island was then a member of the confederation.

Mr. BORDEN. Does my hon. friend say it was never put forward by way of compensation?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think not.

Mr. BORDEN. I will read to him what his own leader said in 1905:

> But I frankly admit, and we must all recognize, that the provinces in the west, in being deprived of the public lands, are deprived of a valuable source of income. And in that way they complain that they are put on a footing of inequality as compared with the older provinces of the Dominion. Realizing that fact, it is the duty of parliament to make ample, even generous provision which will compensate the provinces for the retention of the lands.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think a reading of the whole of the remarks of my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition, made at that time, bears out what I say.

My right hon. friend did not put it that the province was entitled to the public lands, but he put it that inasmuch as the provinces were not going to have these lands as a source of revenue, it was proper to give them money which would take the place of the revenue that they would get from the lands. That is the way in which it was put in the statute thirty years ago when $100,000 per year was granted; it was for want of public lands and not as compensation for lands. I say again, and I say it with confidence, that it has never been recognized by parliament that the provinces were entitled to these public lands. They are the lands which belong to the Dominion of Canada, which belong to New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, just as much as they do to Manitoba, Ontario, or Quebec, and the matter must, it seems to me, be dealt with from that standpoint. As I have said, they were bought by the money of the people of Canada and the people of Canada have the right to be considered, and the various provinces have the right to be considered, in the disposition which shall be made of these public lands. I grant that in the case of Ontario and Quebec there is an exceedingly strong argument in favour of the placing of the public lands in the control of the provincial governments just as the lands in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec as now constituted are under the control of the provinces, but at the same time, in connection with the placing of the land under the control of the provinces, the rights of the other provinces are entitled to be considered. So, I say that in the case of Manitoba, we have the right to deal with the matter from the standpoint that the province of Manitoba has no claim to these lands in the territory which is to be added, but it is a question as to what amount of revenue from the Dominion treasury shall be granted to the province by reason of the fact that it is not to get these lands as a source of revenue. What I especially object to is that the government to-day is picking out one of the provinces of Canada and proposing to accord to it special treatment without paying attention to the rights of the other sections of Canada. I am not opposed to treating Manitoba not only fairly but generously, I am not opposed to giving Manitoba, out of the Dominion treasury all the money which is needed to enable it reasonably to carry on the administration of affairs within the province. I think it is the duty of the Dominion, as far as possible, to give such aid to all the provinces of Canada as will enable them fairly to discharge the duties devolving upon the governments of the different provinces. It is one thing for the great family of provinces to sit down together and consider what is right and fair to all and it is another thing for the government to pick out a certain province and bestow upon that special favour. The only argument which I have heard from the right hon. leader of the government and the only argument that I heard from the hon. Minister of Finance a few days ago, when proposing the resolutions upon which this Bill is founded, was that they wanted to put Manitoba upon the same basis as Alberta and Saskatchewan. It was not argued that this is fair to the old, original provinces of Canada, it was not argued that this is treating New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, British Columbia, Ontario and Quebec fairly, but the argument was that, having in 1905 made certain financial arrangements with Alberta and Saskatchewan when they were created, Manitoba, lying side by side with the province of Saskatchewan, and being one of the three prairie provinces, should be put upon the same footing as Saskatchewan and Alberta. I think there is, notwithstanding what my right hon. friend said, a wide distinction between making provisions for a new province and altering the financial terms as between the Dominion and a province, where this province has been a long time a member of the confederacy. Under the terms of the British North America Act it is provided expressly that when Manitoba came into the union, and it was the same when British Columbia came in, the same, I think, with Saskatchewan and Alberta, the terms of the British North America Act should be applicable to the new provinces. When Manitoba came in financial terms were arranged, a certain debt allowance was made, certain provisions were made by reason of the want of public land and also provision was made for giving to the government of Manitoba a large area of what are known as swamp lands. These terms were altered at different times, but in 1885 the whole subject was gone into and there was a re-adjustment of the debt allowance as far as all the provinces of Canada were concerned. These provisions will be found in the statutes of 1885 and they are re-enacted in the Revised Statutes of Canada 1906, chapter 28, page 322. It is provided by section 5 that:

In the accounts between the several provinces of Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and British Columbia, respectively, and Canada, the amounts payable to and chargeable against the said provinces respectively, in so far as they depend upon the amount of debt with which each province entered the Union, shall be calculated and allowed as if—

(a) In the case of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec respectively, the sum fixed by the one hundred and twelfth section of the British North America Act, 1867, was increased from sixty-two million five hundred thousand dollars to seventy-three million six hundred and eighty-eight dollars and eighty-four cents;

(b) In the case of the province of Nova Scotia, the amount fixed by the one hundred and fourteenth section of the said Act was increased in the same proportion;

(c) In the case of the province of New Brunswick, the amount fixed by the one hundred and fifteenth section of the said Act, was increased in the same proportion; and

(d) In the case of the province of British Columbia, the amount upon which it was to receive interest fixed by or under the terms and conditions on which the province was admitted into the Dominion was increased in the same proportion.

Then provision was made in the case of Nova Scotia by which the increase was to be based upon the allowance fixed in the year 1869. In the case of Manitoba, it was provided, by section 9 that:

The capital sum on which the province of Manitoba is entitled to receive half-yearly payments of interest at the rate of five per centum per annum, as fixed by the Act passed in the thirty-third year of Her late Majesty Queen Victoria's reign, chapter three, and as readjusted or increased by any subsequent Act, shall continue to be calculated on a population of one hundred and twenty-five thousand, at a rate per capita as ascertained by dividing the sum of five hundred and fifty-one thousand four hundred and forty-seven dollars, by seventeen thousand, which was the estimated population of the province under the said Act, thirty-third Victoria. chapter three, the said sum of five hundred and fifty-one thousand four hundred and forty-seven dollars being the amount of capital on which the province was entitled to receive interest under and by virtue of section twenty-four of the Act hereinbefore last cited and the Act thirty-sixth Victoria, chapter thirty.

Then subsection 2 provides for certain charges with respect to local works. Section 10 provides that this shall be a settlement with Manitoba in respect of everything which had been put forward up to the 10th of January, 1885. It says:

The grant of swamp lands and the grant of lands not exceeding one hundred and fifty thousand acres as an endowment to the University of Manitoba, authorized by part I of the Manitoba Supplementary Provisions Act, and the payments to the province of Manitoba hereinbefore authorized, shall be made as a full settlement of all claims made by the said province for the reimbursement of costs incurred in the government of the disputed territory, or the reference of the boundary question to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and all other questions and claims discussed between the Dominion and the provincial governments, up to the tenth day of January, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-five.

That was, as I have said, a re-adjustment of the debt account, as between all the provinces of Canada, and it was supposed they were all put on a fair and proper basis.

Mr. MEIGHEN. What are you quoting from?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, chapter 28.

Mr. MEIGHEN. That is simply a transcription of the Act of 1885.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I presume so, and it is carried forward in the revised statutes. Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that if Manitoba wants more money to enable her to carry on the affairs of government, and to properly develop her territory, we ought to do the same as was done in 1885; we ought to readjust the debt account as between the different provinces. We should endeavour to treat all fairly. It seems to me further, that we should try to make an end of the matter as between the different provinces; we ought to have it embodied in the British North America Act, and make it as nearly final as it is possible to make it. Picking out first one province and then another and dealing especially with it, and so tinkering from time to time with the constitution is exceedingly unsatisfactory, and is likely to cause great discontent as between the people of the different provinces. I want to know why my right hon. friend and his colleagues do not consider the whole question now. Take the case of British Columbia. British Columbia is not nearly as favourably situated as Manitoba will be when this Bill passes. British Columbia is growing with equal if not greater rapidity than is Manitoba, and there is no reason in the world why British Columbia should not receive equal treatment. But my right hon. friend may say: we will deal with British Columbia by itself; the government of British Columbia has demanded that a commission in the nature of arbitrators shall be appointed to deal with the claims which that province is putting forward; the government of British Columbia has demanded that there shall be appointed three commissioners, one to be chosen by the federal government, one by the government of British Columbia, and the third to be appointed by the commissioners so chosen, and, as appears in the press despatches, the federal government has consented to leave the case of British Columbia to that arbitration. I submit that is exceedingly unsatisfactory. What is to be done in respect to the claims of the other provinces of the Dominion? Are there claims to be dealt with by a commission; are they to have similar special treatment? We have had no intimation so far as to what treatment is to be accorded to the three old provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Prince Edward Island. The people of these provinces have borne the burden connected with the development of conferedation, the building of the Canadian Pacific railway and the construction of other public works for the benefit of the whole country. They have borne their share of the burden cheerfully with the rest of the people of Canada, but I do not observe any indication on the part of this government that their special claims are to be considered. Is there to be a commission of inquiry as to what claims they have on the public treasury? We have no announcement as to that, but what the government is doing to-day is picking out the one province of Manitoba, giving to it special treatment, and proposing to pick out British Columbia, and through the medium of a commission, accord to that province special treatment as well. In considering this question of debt account, it might be well to deal for a few moments with the basis upon which the debt account of the provinces was provided for by the Act of Confederation. In the case of the four original provinces, the debt account was something tangible; it represented something. In the case of Ontario and Quebec, the two original provinces, they had actually expended at the time of confederation, sixty-seven million dollars, for which they were in debt, and this was afterwards discovered to amount to seventy-three million dollars. They had built the great canal system of which Canada is so proud, and which was even then a great system, although it has since been vastly improved; they had built other public works and they had incurred this indebtedness actually. The province of Nova Scotia at the time of confederation had built a line of railway from the city of Halifax to the New Brunswick boundary and it had constructed the Windsor branch and other portions of what is now the present Intercolonial railway system. Nova Scotia went into the Dominion with a debt account of eight million dollars, which was actually expended upon public works, and all of which were to be passed over to become the property of the Dominion. After confederation in 1869, it was discovered that between the time of the Quebec conference and the coming into force of the Act of Union, the province of Nova Scotia had expended a very considerable sum which had not been taken into account when the debt was fixed at eight millions, and subsequently the debt account of that province was increased from eight millions to over nine millions. At that amount it remained until 1885, when there was a general pro rata increase of debt allowance among the different provinces of Canada by the statue to which I have referred. But, that debt amount did not represent paper as this allowance to Manitoba does. That amount was allowed to the province of Nova Scotia because Nova Scotia had actually gone into debt, and constructed public works to that extent, which were transferred to the federal government. But in the case of Manitoba the Bill itself recites that whereas Manitoba had no debt when she went into the union, therefore, it is proposed to fix her debt allowance in the vicinity of eight million dollars. When New Brunswick entered confederation her case was about the same as that of Nova Scotia. New Brunswick had incurred a very large indebtedness for public works, the most important of which was the European and North American railway, now part of the Intercolonial railway extending from St. John to the Nova Scotia boundary. New Brunswick had also built the road from Painsec Junction to Shediac, and all upon the credit of the province, and for which the province had gone into debt. At confederation that railway was passed over to the Dominion; it was charged up against our debt allowance of seven million dollars and to-day New Brunswick is not drawing one single cent out of the treasury in respect to that public work, but on the contrary the treasury of Canada is deriving a large revenue from the railway between St. John and the Nova Scotia boundary. I repeat what I said the other day, that that part of the Intercolonial between St. John and Halifax which was built by these two provinces, and which forms part of the debt account which is charged up against the provinces with interest at the rate of five per cent, is one of the most remunerative pieces of railway property in the Dominion. The result is that so far as New Brunswick is concerned, although its debt account was taken at seven million dollars, we have only been drawing interest on five or six hundred thousand dollars which was the difference between the actual expenditure and the allowed debt account; whereas, it is proposed to-day to give to Manitoba interest to the amount of some four hundred thousand dollars annually as against between twenty-five thousand and thirty thousand which the province of New Brunswick receives. And yet the province of New Brunswick has at the present time a population of 350,000 as against 460,000 in Manitoba. I mention these things for the purpose of showing that it is grossly unfair to attempt to justify the increase in the debt account of one province by comparing its position with only two provinces of Canada and leaving out of the question altogether all the other provinces constituting the Dominion. My right hon. friend says that the reason he compares Manitoba with Alberta and Saskatchewan is that these provinces have no natural resources. But, this question of natural resources does not come into the reckoning so far as the debt account is concerned. We have no right to consider the question of lands when we are dealing with the debt account and deciding whether or not we should put on an additional debt allowance of four million dollars when Manitoba had no debt at the time of confederation. In giving Manitoba interest on an additional four million dollars, amounting to some four times as much as the province of New Brunswick has been receiving, the question is whether we have treated Manitoba in the past fairly in relation to all the other provinces of Canada, and not simply in comparison with the two provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. Of course when you are dealing with the question of allowance in lieu of lands then the argument is different, and you have the right to contrast the position of Manitoba with the position of Saskatchewan and Alberta. But, when you are dealing simply with the debt account which has nothing to do with the public lands it is not right to simply pick out two provinces and compare their position with that of Manitoba. We have a right to look to the position of all the provinces of Canada, and to consider as to whether upon the whole, looking at the way in which all the provinces of Canada have been treated with regard to this debt account, Manitoba has been fairly and properly treated.

I argued the other day that in dealing with this question we ought also to deal with the claims of the other provinces not only with reference to financial matters but also with reference to the question of representation. My right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Mr. Borden) seemed impressed to a certain extent, I do not know how far, with the reasonableness of that contention, but he said: We will deal with that by and bye. Although we are giving to Manitoba this large amount of money in lieu of public lands, and taking back from her the swamp lands, yet in the sweet by and bye we are going to propose to parliament a measure which will enable us to hand over to those three provinces all their lands and timber and minerals and other natural resources, and he says that will be the time to deal out justice to the maritime provinces ! As a representative of one of the maritime provinces, I declare that in my opinion now is the time to deal out justice to the maritime provinces, because this government is asking parliament to make great constitutional changes with regard to several of the provinces. We are asked to extend the boundaries of the province of Manitoba beyond what those boundaries were when she became a member of the confederacy. The government are asking parliament to alter the terms of the Union so far as Manitoba is concerned, and therefore to alter the constitution in relation to that province. In regard to Ontario, they are asking parliament to alter the constitution because when Ontario came into the confederacy under the terms of the British North America Act it was a province with a limited area.

My right hon. friend and his colleagues are asking parliament to alter the constitution of Ontario in reference to its boundaries, and to add something like 200,000 square miles to the area of that province. He is also asking parliament to do what he knows in law will be in effect to hand over to the province about 200,000 square miles of land which to-day is the property of the whole people of Canada. He is asking us to do the same thing in respect to the province of Quebec. If ever there was a time when the voice of the smaller provinces should be heard, when the voice of the people of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, which went into the union upon certain terms, should be heard, that time is now. The people of these provinces have a right to claim that their representation should be attended to. My right hon. friend knows as well as I do the intense feeling of dissatisfaction which exists among the people of the lower provinces at the loss of representation. As a result of the census which has just taken place, New Brunswick will lose two more representatives, Nova Scotia will lose two more, and the province of Prince Edward Island, which refused to come into the Confederacy unless it had a representation of six members, will find its representation, as a result of the last census, reduced to three. As each decennial census takes place, with the wonderful development of the province of Quebec, with the growth of its great cities, particularly of Montreal, with the establishment and growth of scores of manufacturing towns throughout that province which are rapidly progressing, the maritime provinces, notwithstanding that we may get some increased prosperity, and we are all looking forward hopefully to it, must fall behind in representation. The Fathers of Confederation, seeing that that might possibly take place, put in the Act, subsection 4 of section 51, a clause which they thought would be a safeguard against any decrease in representation and they provided that unless the population of a province relatively to the other provinces of Canada (and the Act speaks of the four provinces) falls below one-twentieth, there shall be no loss of representation notwithstanding that Quebec may have increased more rapidly than any one of the original provinces of the confederacy. Owing to the rapid development of the northwest and to the bringing in of portions of those territories, and their creation into provinces, with a rapid increase in population, the benefit of that safeguard has been swept away from us. Therefore all we can look forward to in the future is that there shall go on, as each decennial census takes place, a decrease in the representation of these provinces in the House of Commons.

Now I submit, Mr. Speaker, and submit it will all deference to my right hon. friend, that if he has in mind the making of some change in the British North America Act which will prevent this loss of representation, there never was a time when it could be done so well as now, and there never will be a time when it should so well be done as now. Let me beg of him that instead of passing this measure into law, instead of dealing with the boundaries of Manitoba, Ontario and Quebec at this time, to allow this Bill to stand over, to call a conference of the premiers of the different provinces, and submit to them these important questions. Let him submit to that conference the question of the financial claims of the different provinces, and the question of representation, let him get the family of provinces composing this great nation together, let them talk these matters over with a view to arriving at some basis which will give satisfaction to the whole of the people of Canada which will make our people united, which will establish for ever peace and harmony among the different provinces and among the people composing those provinces. If my right hon. friend does that I think he will have taken a step which will redound to his credit, and which will infinitely redound to the advantage of all the people of Canada. There is another very great objection to this Bill: It can only be considered by this parliament in connection with the order in council which was passed by the government not long ago and which was recently read in this House by my right hon. friend (Mr. Borden). Hon gentlemen will find that order in council in 'Hansard' beginning at page 3972. It provides that the province of Ontario shall be given a strip of land about 240 miles in length and about 5 miles in width from the western boundary of Ontario through the province of Manitoba to the mouth of the Nelson river, and then extending for ten miles up the east side of the Nelson river, or upon the Nelson river and Hudson Bay and I am sure that my right hon. friend (Mr. Borden) will agree with that view, that if we adopt this Bill we also agree to the terms of the order in council which was brought down by the right hon. gentleman as giving the settlement which has taken place between the governments of Ontario and Manitoba and this government, in respect to boundaries. It seems to me that that provision has many objections. To begin with it is projecting the ownership of one province into the territory of another. It is not merely giving a right of way for a railway, because the right of way for a railway need not be over 200 feet wide, but, for some reason or other which has not been explained to the House, it is giving Ontario a strip of land in the territory of Manitoba 5 miles wide and about 240 miles in length. Because if hon. gentlemen will look at the map, they will see that that land extends for about 240 miles from what will be the western boundary of Ontario to the mouth of the Nelson river. It comprises about 768,000 acres of land which is not the property of Manitoba —it is proposed to pay in lieu of it—but the property of the Dominion of Canada. What warrant is there for my right hon. friend (Mr. Borden) to give away 768,000 acres of the land of the people of Canada to one province without compensation to the Dominion treasury, and without consulting the other provinces? And bear in mind, Mr. Speaker, this land is not to be selected by the Minister of the Interior of this government, it is to be selected by the government of Ontario which can put its surveyors and engineers in there, and let them examine as to the mineral deposits; and we know that Providence has been marvellously generous, so far as minerals are concerned, in our great northern land. Furthermore the province of Ontario has five years within which to select that land. And, Sir, although it is put forth in the recital of the order in council that this is in some way for the purpose of encouraging the extension of the Ontario government railway to Hudson bay, the only condition attached to the grant is that the province is to make a selection within five years. The moment it does so, that land becomes the property of Ontario for all time to come and the province need never build one mile of railway. Now I ask my right hon. friend (Mr. Borden) how he can justify that? Surely, if the government of Ontario want to build a railway up to Hudson bay, and it has the power to do so, the government ought to have stipulated that the province must begin the construction within five years, or ten years, or 100 years if it is thought 100 years would be reasonable, and I am not sure but what it would be. I am not sure that it will not be 100 years before the government of Ontario ever thinks seriously of building a railway from Cochrane—named after my hon. friend (Mr. Cochrane) and well named after him too, because it is a good, thrifty town. In view of the Hudson bay railway being built, in view of connections being made between the city of Winnipeg and the Hudson Bay railway, I do not think that for a great many years to come the province of Ontario will find very pressing need of extending its own railway in that direction. And Sir James Whitney has been shrewd enough to stipulate that the grant shall be made to the province absolutely free of any condition whatever, and all that Ontario will have to do, will be simply to select its land somewhere within 50 miles of the shores of Hudson bay, select its 768,000 acres, and its 10 miles along the eastern shore of the Nelson river, and then that land will become the absolute property of the province without its building a single mile of railway. This is the condition of sale set out in the Order in Council to be found on page 3974 of 'Hansard':—

A period of five years be allowed to the government of Ontario within which to select and designate the said lands intended to be transferred as aforesaid, and to notify the location thereof to Your Royal Highness's government, and that this order shall cease to be effective if such location be not made and duly notified within the said period.

That, as I have said, is the sole condition which is attached to the grant to the province of Ontario. Now, Sir, I do not wonder that Sir James Whitney, in his desire to soothe the ruffled feelings of the people of Ontario—I would not like to say in his desire to humbug them, because I would not want to use offensive language —has stipulated that the government shall not be obliged to build the railway, because no man can know better than the Ontario Premier that the government of that province has no power under the British North America Act to build a mile of railway outside the territory of Ontario.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is absolutely provided for by the terms of the British North America Act. In subsection 10 of section 92, of that Act, are set out the works which are assigned to the provinces:

Local works and undertakings other than such as are of the following classes——

Lines of steam or other ships, railways, canals, telegraphs and other works and undertakings, connecting the province with any other or others of the provinces, or extending beyond the limits of the provinces.

Any railway which extends beyond the limits of the province, is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Dominion parliament. But, then it may be said: This parliament can authorize the government of Ontario to build its railway in the territory of another province. I doubt that, Mr. Speaker. I do not think there can be any ground for that contention, because while I think parliament might authorize a company to build a railway there, and undoubtedly it could, yet the government of Ontario cannot construct a railway without public money; and I think it goes without saying, that this parliament could not empower the province of Ontario to expend the public moneys of that province in the construction of a railway which the legislature of Ontario itself could not authorize.

It would be a most anomalous proposition that this parliament should authorize the government to pay provincial money for the construction of a public work which the legislature of the province itself could not authorize. I take it that there can be no doubt whatever that the government of Ontario would have no power to construct a railway outside of the limits of the province of Ontario as is proposed by this order in council. So, I believe, Sir James Whitney has acted wisely in insisting that he should get this grant of over 760,000 acres and this waterfront upon the Nelson river and Hudson bay without being bound to build what he knows that his government cannot build, a railway through the territory of the province of Manitoba. It may be said that it is intended that this would be to enable the province of Ontario to give a grant to a railway company to build such a line. That is not the order in council; it is that the grant shall be made to the province of Ontario or a public commission or public corporation for that purpose. It is a grant to the province of Ontario, the road must be built out of the public money of the province of Ontario; and, as I have said, it seems to me there is no authority for the government of Ontario to build such a line of railway. I would ask my hon. friend the Minister of Railways if he has had a report yet as to where, in case the terminus of the Hudson Bay railway is to be upon the Nelson river, as to which side of the river these terminals should be constructed?

Mr. COCHRANE. Judging from the report that was in, on the west side would be best—the far side from here.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman says 'Judging from the report that was in,' the west side would be best. It does seem to me that until that matter is positively determined, it might hamper most seriously the operation of this government in connection with the construction of the Hudson Bay railway to give away to a provincial government some ten miles of waterfront which it might or might not utilize for railway terminal purposes.

Mr. COCHRANE. We would take good care of that.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman cannot 'take good care of that,' because he and the government have bound themselves, and when we pass this Bill parliament will have bound itself, in good faith to give to the government of Ontario ten miles along the eastern shore of the Nelson river, whether that is or is not the best place to establish terminals in connection with the Hudson Bay railway. In saying that 'they will take care of that' he is simply saying that they will break faith with the province of Ontario, to which, in order to induce them to become a consenting party, they have arranged to give this land.

Mr. BRODER. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pugsley) mean to say that the Dominion cannot run a road where it likes?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Undoubtedly it can, but it is not proposed that the Dominion shall build the road. It is proposed that the Ontario government shall build it.

Mr. BRODER. I understood the hon. gentleman to argue that if the province owned this it might hamper the Dominion's right to get the port.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What I say is that the Dominion might build, but that if this land is given away to Ontario and it turns out that this is the place where the terminals should be, then the government, in connection with the Hudson Bay railway, must settle with the province of Ontario before they can fix their terminals there.

Now, I did not intend to take up so much time; I regret that I have spoken at such length upon this subject. But it is one of a great deal of importance, one, I think, of vast importance. I think we ought not to deal with the matter by piecemeal. We are brought to-day by this Bill, face to face with very important changes in the constitution of several provinces. We are called upon to consent to the enlargement of the boundaries of the provinces. Important questions are raised. It does seem to me that the only satisfactory way in which these questions can be dealt with is to treat all the provinces of Canada as being interested in them. All the provinces to-day are interested in the public lands. All the provinces, of course, are interested in the amount of money that is given by way of subsidies. The only satisfactory way in which to deal with that is to call together the Premiers of the different provinces, just as was done in 1906, and ask them in consultation with this government to take up all these questions, all questions which are outstanding between these provinces, and reach a settlement upon some broad national basis which will relieve all grounds of dissatification and cause all the people to feel that complete justice has been done to each province and to the people of Canada as a whole.

Mr. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Portage la Prairie). Mr. Speaker, this is the second day that this very important measure has been brought to your attention and the attention of the House. On each occasion, the case for the opposition—if it can be said to have a case as an opposition—has been entrusted to the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley). He, on each occasion, has made a rather prolonged address, and I think I detect in that circumstance, alone as well as in the evident absence of enthusiasm among hon. gentlemen opposite, that they are suffering severe disappointment from their party point of view, at the course adopted by the government in this matter. So far, nothing has been urged against the Bill, except merely on the ground of its financial terms; and the point pressed over strenuously by the hon. member for St. John is that the financial terms now granted to Manitoba are such a variation from those heretofore existing and such a variation from what he calls 'the compact of confederation,' that they should not have been entered into until a conference of the provinces was called and the consent of all obtained. The hon. gentleman in this connection, occupies a position different from that of most hon. gentlemen opposite in that he came to this House sometime after the celebrated year 1905, when the very opposite position was taken by the government which he afterwards joined. In that circumstance, perhaps, we find an explanation of the fact that he has been twice put forward to urge opposition to this measure.

Now, what principle is at the bottom of the financial terms proposed? The first item of the terms is the $190,000 for local government and for buildings. To that the hon. gentleman makes no objection. Nor does he make any objection to the subsequent clause providing 80 cents per head of population based on the last decennial census—which, I believe, is approximated to every five years (between the two decennial censuses); neither of these items alter any subsisting rule and to them hon. gentlemen opposite lay no objection whatever. Nor do they urge that in respect of them there is any variation from any original understanding nor any reason or ground why they should not be accorded to Manitoba.

But they say, coming to the next two, that there is a radical change, and a change of such consequence to the older provinces that before it is made, reference should be made to a provincial conference. Now on this point the hon. gentleman argued, in the opening part of his address, that inasmuch as any enlargement of the territories takes place now and did not take place four years ago, Manitoba has not suffered, has not during that time expended any money for increased administration, and consequently is not entitled to arrearages on that ground. Now had the Prime Minister or any one else argued that so far as a claim to increased financial terms is based on the fact that at this date we are increasing the territories and necessarily the administrative responsibilities of Manitoba, so far as that claim is concerned, there could in my judgment be no claim to arrearages, but I do not so understand the Prime Minister to argue.

But the claim to increased advance has another footing and a much stronger footing. It is that there are other provinces in the confederation which were in a like position relative to Canada, who are in the same position, in every sense of the word, and particularly in the one sense that they are on a financial basis in regard to subsidy instead of getting their moneys from the administration of the natural assets of those provinces. It is on the claim of equality with those provinces that we based the claim to arrearages, so far as I understand it, and on no other. I want to state here that no reason can be advanced by any hon. gentleman that Manitoba is at this time, and was not in 1905, entitled to equal financial terms, man for man, to the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. They were in a like position, they had equal responsibilities, they shared equally in the burdens of confederation, they shared equally in the profits of confederation, they shared equally in its advantages; in every respect they were at that date in the same position, and the circumstance that one province was older than another and had come into confederation sooner, has nothing whatever to do with the position of that province as regards its demands on the federal treasury. So that inasmuch as the address of the hon. gentleman attempted to show that we could not found our claim to the $2,000,000 arrearages on the fact that we are taking under our wing and administration additional territory, that is correct. But the hon .gentleman did not attempt to argue that on the other ground we are not entitled to arrearages, and that we could not set to work at this or any later date and alter the terms of the three provinces until first of all we had put them on a footing of equality. So it is on the argument of equality and on no other that this claim to $2,000,000 arrearages is based, and that argument is an insuperable one.

Now the other two items that constitute the better terms is this: We have heretofore enjoyed an allowance in lieu of public lands, that is to say, by virtue of the fact that Manitoba has all along been denied the administration of the public lands and minerals, she has received from the confederation a grant on a certain basis. The hon. gentleman, as I understood him, contended that before an alteration should be made in the principle of that grant, before an increase should be made in the grant of money in lieu of public lands, the other provinces should be consulted. In the first place, the argument is completely taken out of his mouth by his own leader, not when the hon. gentleman was not a member of this House and of the government, but when he was a member, because in 1908, when an enlargement of Manitoba's boundaries was under consideration, the right hon. gentleman then leading the government distinctly set it down at that time an increased grant in lieu of public lands could be made and should be made then and and there without any reference to the other provinces whatever. The right hon. the leader of the government argued that in 1908, in this House, and stated that the policy of his administration, which means the policy of the hon. member for St. John, was to take into account that fact and that the government should discusss with Manitoba's members on what basis the enlarged grant should take place, and no suggestion whatever was made of a conference of the provinces for that purpose. Now it is quite clear that from time to time in this country, so far as these provinces are concerned that receive money in lieu of revenue from public lands, adjustments must be made and have been made all along, have been made periodically since confederation, and at no time save one, so far as I am aware, have they been preceded by any conference of the provinces. The public lands of this country, the assets of every character of Canada, increased with our population and increased in value; as Canada becomes greater and more populous our public lands become of greater value, and so with the advance of time the revenues of those provinces which enjoy the administration of the lands increase, and consequently an increased allowance must be made to the provinces which are on another footing. Year by year ever since confederation that principle has been followed, adjustments have been made from time to time, and there is no reason why they should not be made now in respect of Manitoba, especially as it has already been made in respect to Alberta and Saskatchewan. So that on the plain principle of common justice relative to the other provinces we are entitled to an increased grant from time to time in lieu of public lands, until the time comes when these public lands are ours. Now the other is the ground upon which the hon. gentleman chiefly based his objection.

Mr. CARVELL. Suppose the time should come in the next two or three years when these lands will be surrendered to the provinces, would the hon. gentleman consider that this allowance in lieu of land should be discontinued?

Mr. MEIGHEN. It has been my habit in public life to cross bridges when I come to them. I apprehend that one will soon be reached, and then I propose to give it as earnest consideration as I give to other questions. The chief point against which the attack of the opposition is directed is the other item of increased advance, namely, allowance in lieu of debt. Now, I may be pardoned if I trace the history of this allowance, and the reason for it. It has been done at different times in this parliament, but not very fully in this debate. When the four provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Ontario and Quebec formed confederation in 1867, Upper Canada, comprising the latter two, was burdened with an indebtedness of some $67,000,000. That indebtedness was incurred for similar purposes as the other provinces have incurred indebtedness, which the other provinces incurred since that time, and have to bear themselves. Now I have stated that very briefly, and I do not intend to particularize, just what that money was expended for. But I say it will be clear to every member of this House that in the main that indebtedness which at that time burdened the provinces of Upper and Lower Canada and burdened the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, was in the main incurred for those public works, for those public purposes that otherwise would have had to be borne, and have been borne since in the case of the other provinces, by the local exchequer.

Recognizing that, the fathers of confederation came to an understanding. I should have stated that the debt that was at that time carried by New Brunswick was some $7,000,000, and that the province of Nova Scotia carried a debt of some $8,000,000. It was figured out by the framers of the Quebec resolutions, and then by the framers of the British North America Act, that the debt of Ontario at $67,000,000 was greater per capita than the debt of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick at $8,000,000 and $7,000,000 respectively. It was proposed that United Canada should take over these obligations and relieve the provinces and in order to reduce the per capita debt taken over by United Canada to the same basis in the different provinces $5,000,000 of the debt out of $67,000,000 was left standing on the shoulders of the two provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, and in the ultimate a debt of $7,000,000 for New Brunswick, $8,000,000 for Nova Scotia, and $62,000,000 for Upper and Lower Canada was assumed by the confederation under this agreement in 1867. It was fixed at these figures in order that the debt assumed from the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Ontario and Quebec, would represent in a word $25 per head of the population. When, therefore, these four provinces came in, Canada assumed a per capita debt of $25 per head. Later on other obligations from the provinces were assumed by the confederation and the per capita debt was enlarged to $32.43 per head. At the time that was done a rearrangement among the provinces of the debt allowances was made in order to adjust that of each to the changed circumstances. We have thus proceeded on the assumption from confederation, or from a date prior to confederation, that the per capita debt of the provinces, which was found to be $32.43, should form the basis of a system of allowing to new provinces who might join later and thus share in the national burden, a compensation from the federal treasury when such provinces at the time of uniting had themselves no debt for the union to assume. So when new provinces were brought into confederation, by virtue of the Act of Canada alone, by virtue of the Act of this House, and it was found that these provinces, or territories then erected into provinces, had a less debt than $32.43 per head, or no debt, allowance had to be made in respect therefor. Manitoba came into confederation without any debt at all. Her debt, at the time she entered confederation, was nothing, and consequently it was assumed that the debt allowance to be made by Canada should be on the full basis of $32.43 per head of the population. The same principle applied when Alberta and Saskatchewan entered the confederation.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Is not my hon. friend mistaken? It was not on the actual population of Manitoba, but on an assumed population of 125,000, was it not?

Mr. MEIGHEN. I think that in the first place it was on a population of 17,000, but afterwards, in 1885, it was increased to the figures stated by my hon. friend. But, the point will not help my friend: it rather assists the argument that I hope to advance. In the case of Alberta and Saskatchewan, however, the population was figured, when they came into confederation in 1905, to be 250,000 in each province. That 250,000, multiplied by $32.43, amounted in the aggregate to $8,107,500, and that was the capital allowance made in lieu of debt made to Alberta and Saskatchewan. Manitoba had come in in the earlier years at a time when her population was very sparse indeed, and the allowance in lieu of debt had necessarily to be figured on a smaller amount of population. Later on, as Manitoba advanced in population, that allowance was increased, as the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley), who has just interrupted me, says. But, what I want to point out is that a distinction between the allowance in lieu of debt has to be made by virtue of the fact that when new provinces come into confederation they thereby assume a share of the liability of confederation proportionate to their population, whereas, if they had remained out of confederation they would have had no share in that liability. Parliament set to work to do away with that obvious unfairness and the way it adjusted it was this, and it seems to me that if not exactly right the arrangement was conceived in a spirit of fairness and at the time approximated thereto. Parliament has made a grant to each such province of five per cent yearly on its debt capitalization; that is to say, each province has entered confederation on a capital debt allowance represented by its population multiplied by 32·43, and five per cent per annum thereon has been granted as a subsidy in lieu of debt to each of these provinces. As we apprehend the ground work of this allowance in lieu of debt, we will come to more clearly understand this legislation in the case of Manitoba and whether or not a re-adjustment should take place in this case or any other without a conference of the provinces. While the debt allowance was conceived in a spirit of fairness, and with an effect approximating thereto at the time, it will be seen that with the unequal advance of population in each of the provinces an unfair condition is certain to result. Had it turned out to be the case that each province had remained at the population it had when this debt allowance was made then the conditions should always have been fair and just between them. Had it even transpired, as may possibly have been expected, that each province would advance proportionately in population, that is to say, that the advance would be at the same ratio in each, then likewise, the allowance in lieu of debt might have been said to have been on a permanent basis and have remained permanently fair between them. But, such has not been the case. Manitoba was taken in with a very small population. It advanced rapidly. Manitoba came in with about 15,000 of a population, and she has to-day nearly 500,000. She bears the proportion of the national debt of this country that her present population bears to the population of Canada; that is to say she carries the burden now that her population bears to the whole population of Canada and not the burden that the population when she came into confederation bore to the whole population then. So it will be seen that with the unequal advance in the population of the provinces of this country a distinctly disjointed state of affairs arises in so far as this allowance in lieu of debt is concerned. I need only remark that if no readjustment is to be made in lieu of debt, as the right hon. leader of the opposition argued in 1908, and as the hon. member for St. John argues now, and as the now loyal opposition in 1908 distinctly said to the province of Manitoba, in these words: 'We will not even discuss this question with you in regard to your allowance in lieu of debt—if that position is to be taken, it would mean that the province which came in and opened its arms to confederation in its younger life, came in when its population was sparse, would be at a disadvantage and its tax-payers would be suffering a very decided wrong when its population had advanced out of proportion to that of the older provinces. No argument that is rooted in right, or fair-play can be advanced that this allowance in lieu of debt is part of the compact of confederation and would be subject to no readjustment at all.

In my judgment—I argue this from a conviction that it is right—the allowance in lieu of debt—that constituent of the subsidies by the Dominion to the provinces—is just as much and just as necessarily subject to readjustment as is the allowance in lieu of land. That is to say, that as the provinces increase in unequal degree and in unequal proportion in their population, a readjustment must necessarily be made on the basis of that increase, and that, I submit, can be fairly made as has been done in the past, by this parliament without conferences. The right hon. the leader of the opposition, and I think the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley), will recognize the truth of what I say when I say that the principle I now argue for, of a readjustment from time to time of the allowance in lieu of debt has been recognized by the House before, not once, but five times, without any reference to a conference with the provinces. The allowance to Manitoba itself, in lieu of debt has been increased in 1871, in 1873, and up to 1885. The allowance in lieu of debt has been adjusted by this House from time to time as population advanced in unequal measure. And never, that I have heard, has objection been raised to it, because it was not preceded by a conference with the provinces. Why, that very Act of 1885, from which the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley), quoted, whereby the allowance to Manitoba was increased by a very substantial amount at that time; was not preceded, so far as I have been able to find out, by any conference with the provinces. If the present Bill is in any way a violation of an infringement of the compact of confederation, the Act of 1885, was certainly the same. The Act of 1885, purported to put the subsidy to be granted to Manitoba on a footing that would, up to that time, do justice to the province of Manitoba. The government of the day thought that justice to Manitoba was not being done by virtue of the tremendous increase that Manitoba's population had undergone, and the larger share she bore of the obligations of Canada, and the parliament in 1885, finding that to be the case, thought it would do justice to Manitoba. All that is asked at the present time is that this parliament of 1912, should do the same justice to that province.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In 1885, was it not simply a proportionate increase among all the provinces, Manitoba included?

Mr. MEIGHEN. The Act I read, and I am sure it is correct, is an Act respecting Manitoba alone, and the Act is headed: An Act to Increase the Subsidy to Manitoba and adjust all claims up to date.

Mr. CARVELL. Was not that in 1884 and not 1885?

Mr. MEIGHEN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Pugsley) told me it was in 1885.

Mr. CARVELL. There are two Acts, one in 1884 and one in 1885.

Mr. MEIGHEN. That only adds strength to my argument.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I was quoting from the chapter in the revised statutes which, as I understand it, is the statute under which the provinces were increased proportionately.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I asked the hon. gentleman and he told me that it was a transcript of the Act of 1885.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I thought it was. It says it is subject to all claims up to the first of January, 1885, so that it may have been in 1884.

Mr. MEIGHEN. If it was adjusted in 1884 and also in 1885 it will hardly be open to the hon. gentleman to argue that no adjustment must take place without conference. The Act of 1885 is entitled an Act for the final settlement of the claim made by the province of Manitoba on the Dominion, and it proceeds to deal with the matter section after section. The first section grants the swamp lands to the province; the second section grants this one hundred and fifty thousand acres of university lands, the third section increases the indemnity for want of public lands, which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pugsley) now argues should never be done unless you call a conference of the provinces. The next section was a readjustment of the per capita allowance of the province, out of a sense of justice by this parliament, and so on all down the line. Therefore, Manitoba's subsidies were revised in 1885, and revised in deference to the fact that Manitoba's population had increased so as to bring about an injustice to herself in the subsidies she was then receiving from the Dominion treasury, and which were altogether less than she was entitled to receive on account of her population. At that time Manitoba was bearing her share of the obligations of Canada; she was paying her share of the public debt of Canada in proportion to her then population and not in proportion to the population that she had in 1870, when she entered the family of provinces. If there is any fault in my reasoning which I am unable to apprehend myself, I would be glad to have it made known to me now. I say that the allowance in lieu of debt, the allowance in lieu of public lands, and the other allowances are all on the same footing, and that they have from time to time been adjusted by this parliament without conference, and solely out of consideration for the existing circumstances. I say that the very circumstances that demanded their readjustment in days gone by, demands with louder voice their readjustment now. And, there is an added reason for their readjustment now, in that, in the case of the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan, this principle has been recognized and since then the taxpayer of Manitoba has borne an undue share of the burden relative to the taxpayer of Saskatchewan and Alberta. Every reason that existed in 1885 exists now, and to-day we have the plainer, the clearer, the more specific reason in the fact that this parliament recognized that right of Alberta and Saskatchewan to subsidies in 1905 to which in all justice we are entitled as being exactly on the same footing in confederation.

I think I have covered each and every item in the proposed rearrangement. The arrearages are dated back to 1908 by way of compromise, as I understand. In so far as our right to equality is concerned, they could with all justice, date back to 1905. But it is quite true that we have not been carrying during these years the burden of the extra administration of the northern lands, and consequently I think it was only fair to make a deduction from these arrearages and that a fair compromise was struck in selecting the first of July, 1908, about which date parliament recognized the right of this province to a readjustment of its terms and of its territory.

As to the allowance in lieu of debt, it is justified by all the reasons that have justified this parliament in days gone by in making similar readjustments and it is further justified by the action of this parliament seven years ago.

The justice of the allowance in lieu of lands is admitted by the right hon. gentleman himself who in 1908 clearly placed his government and his party in the position of being ready to make an increased allowance to Manitoba in lieu of public lands. As to the other features of the arrangement there is no objection. So unless hon. gentlemen opposite can find some graver objection to this Bill than objections to its financial terms I fear they are not going to gain much capital in the country on that ground.

What is the cry of the Liberal opposition in the legislature of Manitoba? The provincial opposition represents in miniature the opposition in this House, they stand on the floor of the local House to-day and say that Manitoba is not getting nearly enough and that they are going to appeal to the people of Manitoba on the ground that the rights of that province have not been adequately acceded to by the parliament of Canada. And, perhaps not on exactly the same grounds but on a similar one, an hon. member of the local opposition, Mr. Molloy, has stated on the floor of the local legislature in language that carries us back very closely to 1885, that until justice is done to Manitoba and the west the cry of secession and the demand for secession will increase with emphasis until it cannot be denied and yet his friends in this parliament are endeavouring to stir up jealousies among the provinces on the ground that Manitoba is getting too much.

Mr. OLIVER. Was Mr. Molloy in the local House dealing with the question of better terms for Manitoba when speaking in that way?

Mr. MEIGHEN. I said that he made this statement on the ground that Manitoba and the west were not being properly treated in the confederation.

Mr. OLIVER. It had nothing to do with this subject at all.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I do not know how much reference Mr. Molloy had to this subject, but I know that the member for Lakeside stood beside Mr. Molloy and doubtless received his applause when he said that he would not be satisfied with the terms granted to Manitoba by this Act but would fight on for better terms. That is to say the opposition in that province is conducting what they believe is a vigourous campaign at this very hour against this Bill on the ground that it does not do justice to our little province and the opposition in this House, professing the same principles, ready to link arm in arm with the local opposition in the same campaign, resist the Bill because it is unjust to all other provinces in confederation.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Edmonton). My hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) dealing with the subject of the Bill before the House, made the point as he sat down, that the financial terms of the Bill must be fair and reasonable, because the opposition in Manitoba were complaining that those terms were not sufficiently liberal to the province, while the opposition in this parliament, were complaining that the terms were too liberal. My hon. friend is under the impression that a great many other people are under, that it is not possible for a bargain to be bad for both parties to it, just on the same principle as some people are under the impression that no bargain can be good for both parties to it; that under normal conditions, a bargain must be good for one of the parties, and bad for the other. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I hold very strongly to the view that there are three kinds of bargains. One in which both parties to the bargain benefit, another where one of the parties benefits, and the other loses, and a third, where both parties are at a disadvantage as a result of the arrangement. It is my judgment that the arrangement embodied in this Bill, as between the province of Manitoba and the Dominion at large, is one of the latter class; it is not fair to Manitoba and it is not fair to the rest of the Dominion. Take for instance, and only as an illustration, the very simple provision in regard to the access of the province of Ontario to a port on Hudson bay. The provision is in the first place, very remarkable. It is not unreasonable on the face that the province of Ontario should desire to have a port on Hudson bay. On the other hand it is not unreasonable that the province of Manitoba, whose trade must furnish the reason, and to all intents and purposes the only reason, for the existence of such a port, would desire to have provincial jurisdiction over that port. I do not intend to trouble the House with a discussion of the claims of Ontario, but as a western representative, looking at the matter from a western point of view, I am at a loss to know on what reasonable ground, except the desire for acquisition of territory, the province of Ontario has for the claim that it made. If it is asserted that the province of Ontario requires, or desires, a port on Hudson bay at the mouth of the Nelson river, as an outlet for the trade of the province, or as a tributary to that trade, I can only say, that inasmuch as the railway connection of such a port with the present railway system of the eastern provinces, and of the province of Ontario at Cochrane, would involve the construction of a road some 800 miles in length through a territory which, at the present time, is not productive of traffic, the construction of such a road is an enterprise that it does not seem to me comes within the range of possibility so far as Ontario is concerned. It is not only that the road would be 800 miles in length, but even that is a matter for consideration even to the province of Ontario, but it is a fact that it would run in a direction to which the outbound traffic of the present productive portion of Ontario would never go; and in all human probability the traffic originated at that point which will find its ultimate market in the province of Ontario, would be so limited as would never warrant the construction of such a road. Notwithstanding this fact, under this very remarkable arrangement the province of Ontario is given proprietary rights in a strip of territory running through the proposed extension of the province of Manitoba and abutting on the proposed port of Nelson. If there is any value in that country at all, it is in whatever locality is fixed upon as the ultimate port is reached by the Hudson Bay railway to be constructed from the Saskatchewan river. If there is any value in that territory it is in the ownership of the town site at that port, which the government proposes under this Bill to hand over to the province of Ontario for the benefit and profit of that province without requiring any consideration from it for the proprietary rights given. It is true there is some mention of the possibility of the construction of a railroad, but I have pointed out, Mr. Speaker, how absurd such a possibility is, and there is nothing in the Bill, and there is nothing in the explanations that have been made, that indicate in the most remote degree the intention of the province of Ontario to build a railway to that point. Why is this grant made? Is it done for the purpose of satisfying public opinion in the province of Ontario? No, it is to be for the purpose of strengthening the partisan position of the government of Ontario. This government sees fit to hand over to the government of Ontario the only piece of property of serious value in the proposed to be added territory, hand that piece of valuable property over to Ontario without rhyme or reason, without consideration of any kind whatever, simply as a partisan measure for the purpose of strengthening the partisan government in that province. In regard to the position of Manitoba, if that province is entitled to the jurisdiction over that territory and has to assume the responsibility and cost of administration within that territory, surely the province of Ontario has no claim, right, title or interest in the proprietorship of the only particularly valuable piece of land, so far as we can see at present in that whole area.

It is true that it would either be the property of the Dominion or of the province of Ontario, it would not be the property of the province of Manitoba under the arrangement made in the Bill. But I submit that if this piece of valuable property is to be taken from the Dominion and handed over to one of the provinces, surely in common justice it should be handed over to the province within whose provincial jurisdiction it is situated, and the province whose trade is the one thing that will give it value. If the province of Ontario is to receive the benefit financially of the ocean port created by the trade of the province of Manitoba, while that port is within the jurisdiction of the province of Manitoba, it seems to me to be an arrangement that can neither be satisfactory to Ontario nor to Manitoba nor to the Dominion. If it is right that the province of Ontario should have a port on Hudson Bay, then it was right that the boundaries should be so adjusted that the province of Ontario should exercise jurisdiction over the port that it was entitled to. It should exercise provincial jurisdiction over that port. It was an easy matter to arrange the boundaries so as to meet that condition. If the easterly boundary of the province of Manitoba had been extended eastward, north of the English river where it does not interfere with the present province of Ontario, if it had been extended easterly to longitude 53½ west, there would have been a straight easterly boundary between Ontario and Manitoba north of the English river that would have given to Ontario the south side of the Nelson river at the proposed port of Nelson, it would have given that province the jurisdiction over the port that presumably it is entitled to have. I say that when the province of Ontario does not get jurisdiction over the port that this Bill says it is entitled to, and the province of Manitoba does not get the port over which this Bill gives it jurisdiction, it seems to me to be an absolutely fixed conclusion that the arrangement is neither fair to Manitoba, nor to Ontario, nor yet to the Dominion.

In regard to the subsidy again, I say that it is not only possible, but it is a fact that the subsidy arrangement can at the same time be unfair to Manitoba and unfair to the sister provinces. On what grounds is it claimed that the debt account of Manitoba should be increased by reason of the increase of population? What is the population of Manitoba? 455,614. The province of British Columbia has a population of 392,480, and it gets an allowance on debt account, so I am informed, on a population of 60,000. That is to say, the province of British Columbia with a much larger area than the enlarged province of Manitoba, with a population nearly as large, will receive a subsidy on debt account on one fourth as many people as the province of Manitoba will under this arrangement, while she has a population very nearly equal to that of Manitoba. Is that fair to the province of British Columbia? If justice is to be done, this Bill should have contained provisions for an increase of subsidy on debt account to the province of British Columbia as well as to the province of Manitoba. I followed what my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) said about the right and propriety of increasing the allowance on debt account to the various provinces proportioned to the increase of population. In taking that position he was following the position that I myself took in the debate on the presentation of the resolution. I quite agree, as a representative of the western country, where the population has increased rapidly, and in the nature of things must increase very largely over the present population—it is elimentary that an arrangement whereby the subsidy on debt account is fixed on a certain low basis of population, is not fair to those provinces as they increase largely in population. Even at the present time, take the provinces of Saskatchewan, Alberta, and Manitoba with the proposed increases; they are getting an allowance on debt account for 250,000 when the population ranges from 375,000, in the case of Alberta, 392,000 in the case of British Columbia, 455,000 in the case of Manitoba, and 492,000 in the case of Saskatchewan. Now, if there is to be a readjustment of the debt account of the province of Manitoba because of increase of population—I do not for an instant say there should not be such a readjustment,—I say there is absolutely the same ground, and a very much stronger ground, for readjustment in the case of British Columbia, an absolutely stronger ground even to-day; there are stronger grounds to-day for an adjustment of the allowance on debt account in respect to Alberta and Saskatchewan. What we contend is that when the government undertakes to deal with this question of debt account they should deal with it having due regard to the rights of all the provinces, and not, as my hon. friend from St. John has said, pick out one province to be dealt with as a matter of special favour and special right, and ignore the conditions and the position of the other provinces.

Mr. BRADBURY. Did the hon. gentleman think that way when he was arranging with Alberta and Saskatchewan? Why did he not give a consideration then for the debt account to the other provinces?

Mr. OLIVER. The debt accounts of Alberta and Saskatchewan were fixed at the time those provinces entered confederation on the basis of the then estimated population, just as the present debt allowance to the province of Manitoba was fixed under the then estimated population.

Mr. BRADBURY. What about British Columbia?

Mr. OLIVER. It was fixed exactly the same way, on the then estimated population. It was perfectly right according to the conditions as they then existed.

Mr. MEIGHEN. My hon. friend's point is that there was an unfairness toward British Columbia, which was altogether wrong, existing in 1905, when the arrangement was made with Alberta and Saskatchewan. Why was it not corrected?

Mr. OLIVER. I was not dealing with British Columbia as connected with Alberta and Saskatchewan. The late government dealt with Alberta and Saskatchewan as new provinces coming into the confederation, and they gave those provinces an allowance on debt account which was based on the then estimated actual population of these provinces, which is exactly what was done with British Columbia and what was done in the beginning with Manitoba. But, from time to time, as my hon. friend has stated, the debt account of Manitoba was increased with the increase of population until the readjustment of 1885, when an estimated population of 125,000 was taken. But, a very large increase in population has taken place since that time, an increase that was not expected, that was not looked for, that was not hoped for, and that never would have occurred if my hon. friends had not given place in 1896 to a more capable administration; and had it not been for that increase in population this allowance of debt account would not have been so far behind the requirements as it is now. But, we are facing in this matter, a new condition, a condition which has arisen since 1905, a condition that requires to be dealt with, that this government is dealing with in one way, but that we say should not be dealt with in that way, but should be dealt with in a more comprehensive way, in a way that would do justice not only to Manitoba but also to Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia, to say nothing about the eastern provinces. For the purpose of argument I am leaving the case of the eastern provinces to be dealt with by other members. It is not only the fact that Saskatchewan to-day, according to the last census, has a population twice as great as the population on which it is receiving allowance on debt account, but that population, and the population of Alberta, are increasing, as the census returns show, more rapidly than the population of any other province in the Dominion. Therefore, if their allowance on debt account to-day is below what it ought to be, if their debt account is to remain at the present figure, it is going to be still further and further below every succeeding year. When the government undertakes to deal with this question of debt account in regard to Manitoba on the plea that it wants to do justice, we ask that it shall do justice by other provinces as well as Manitoba.

Again, let me repeat what I said on a former occasion, that the simple statement of area, of population and of subsidy figures, does not establish an equality of treatment. To-day the part of Manitoba that is effectively occupied, on which the provincial government is required to expend money in enforcing its jurisdiction, is less than half the present area of the province. The present area of the province is some 73,000 square miles. Everybody knows that the population of the province occupies less than the south-west half of the total area. There is a part of the present province of Manitoba—I speak of the north-eastern portion—which is as little known to the government of Manitoba as the Congo is in the interior of Africa.

Mr. BRADBURY. What portion of the northeastern part of Manitoba ?

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend is more familiar with the geography of that country than I am.

Mr. BRADBURY. I think I am.

Mr. OLIVER. I say that over the greater portion of that area northeast of Lake Winnipeg the provincial government exercises no more jurisdiction than it does over the Congo Free State.

Mr. BRADBURY. It is a very small area.

Mr. OLIVER. It is not a small area. My hon. friend can see on the map that this is not a small area. This is a statement of fact, and I want to compare that condition with that of Saskatchewan which is effectively occupied by population requiring the administration of the provincial government from the boundary line to a point north of Prince Albert, a distance of not less than 300 miles. There is more territory at present effectively occupied in the province of Saskatchewan than the total present area of Manitoba. Everybody knows that. What is true of Saskatchewan is true in a still greater degree of Alberta. There is a much greater area in Alberta effectively occupied and requiring provincial expenditure and administration than there is in the whole province of Manitoba. Yet, from the Dominion treasury the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan are to get only as much as the province of Manitoba is to get under this arrangement. We do not complain of that if it is the arrangement that exists because of having been entered into years ago, and it is considered not desirable to disturb it, but when this government undertakes to disturb that arrangement and disturb it in the name of justice and fair play we ask for justice and fair-play all round. Let it be remembered, Mr. Speaker, that in the province of Manitoba between one-fourth and one-third of the population is in the city of Winnipeg. The cost of provincial administration in the city of Winnipeg is trifling compared with the cost of administration in connection with a like population in the agricultural portions of the country. It is a fact that outside the city of Winnipeg the province of Manitoba has not increased seriously in population in the past few years, or at any rate, has not increased in comparison with Saskatchewan and Alberta. Its increase is in the city of Winnipeg. Does this government tell us that, because of an increase in population in the city of Winnipeg, where there is no practical increase in cost to the provincial government in the matter of administration, the province of Manitoba should have an increased allowance on debt account when the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, whose cost of administration is increased stupendously by a similar increase of population, should have no consideration on debt account? If there is to be justice and fair-play in this matter we ask for justice and fair-play. We are prepared to accede to an arrangement for an increased debt allowance to the other western provinces including British Columbia, having regard to the physical conditions which lay immeasurably heavier burdens upon the administration in those provinces than are laid upon Manitoba, or will be laid upon that province by this addition of territory.

In regard to the increased subsidy on land account, there are matters that have to be considered in that connection that are aside from and, in my judgment, far above in importance the mere matter of the amount of money that is to be paid.

First of all, let us clear away some little misapprehension which I think exists as to the amount of increase of subsidy on land account that the province of Manitoba is to receive. At present the subsidy of the province, (as shown in the estimates this year) is $833,838, but there must be added to that the amount that is derived by the province from the sale of swamp and university lands, which, according to the statement of the Minister of Finance, is $149,230, and this brings the total amount that the province of Manitoba is to-day realizing from subsidies received from this Dominion to $983,068. Under the arrangement proposed by the Bill the province will have $190,000 for civil government, $364,491 per capita, $562,500 on land account, and $381,584 on debt account, a total of $1,498,575, against $983,068 that it is now receiving, or a difference of $515,507. But let me remind the House that under the arrangement that was offered to Manitoba by the Liberal government, there was to be an annual payment of $200,000, so that if that is deducted, the advantage of cash that comes to the province of Manitoba on land account over and above what would have come to the province under the offer made by the Liberal government is, $315,507. That is, the province is better off in cash by reason of this arrangement over and above what it would have received, had the offer of the late Liberal government been accepted, by $315,507, but it is worse off by eight million acres of swamp land, according to the estimate given by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar). Did the late government offer $200,000 annually?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes. I cannot give the exact date, but the offer was made some time last spring. I suppose my hon. friend (Mr. Sharpe) does not suggest that no such offer was made.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar). Well, I never heard of it.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend is not well-informed in matters concerning his province.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar). The only offer I ever heard of was one of ten thousand per year.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend is behind the lighthouse altogether. The proposition made by the late government was discussed in the legislature of Manitoba and was rejected there, so that it is a matter of record. The condition now is: that this offer by the present government is $315,000 better in cash and eight million acres worse in swamp lands than the offer of the Liberal government. I think it will take all the gymnastic ability—I mean gymnastic ability in figures—of the Minister of Finance to explain how $315,000 in cash each year is better for the province than an asset of eight million acres of land, some 880,000 acres of which have been sold at a net profit to the province as we are informed, of $2,684,601.

Mr. BURNHAM. May I ask a question?

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. BURNHAM. Are there any other objections to this Bill than the financial and geographical?

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend (Mr. Burnham) will have to think that out for himself; I am not making any other objection just now. I was trying to show that it will require all the ability of our friend the Minister of Finance to prove to the people of Manitoba, or of this country, or to prove to this House how the province gains financially by exchanging $350,000 a year in cash for eight million acres of land which, on his own showing, appears to be worth three dollars per acre or twenty-four million dollars and twenty-four million dollars at five per cent interest would amount to $1,200,000 a year against the $315,000 cash which this government offers. That is how this bargain figures out now as compared with the offer made by the Liberal government less than a year ago.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). Where does my hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) get the three dollars an acre?

Mr. OLIVER. From the statement of my hon. friend (Mr. White) in the House the other day.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). The statement I made in the House was not my statement but the statement of Mr. Young, chief geographer, and I said so. The statement was :

The unsurveyed area in the province is estimated at 12,900,000 acres. This is largely unexplored. It is thought that thirty per cent. (4,870,000 acres), may be swamp. This land will be of considerably less value than the swamp lands already referred to.

My hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) may put any price he likes on that land, but I do not want him to give the price he mentions as coming from me.

Mr. OLIVER. All right. The particular statement of my hon. friend (Mr. White) to which I was alluding, reads as follows on page 3926 of 'Hansard':

The total acreage sold is stated to have been 838,484·16 acres; the amount received for them is $3,137,399.30. Dominion deductions from provincial subsidy with respect to surveys of swamp lands, &c., amount to $211,942.95; provincial expenditure on account of swamp lands, proportionate estimate $240,854.60. These two make a total of $452,797.55 leaving the net amount received by the province from swamp lands at $2,684,601.75. Five per cent. of this amount is $134,230.08, which I deduct, as I have previously explained. That would give an average of about $3 an acre for the swamp lands already sold by Manitoba.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I don't like to interrupt my hon. friend but I am sure he wants to be fair.

I stated that with regard to some of the lands already sold. That is a matter of record. These other items with regard to the balance are estimates of Mr. Young's. I do not know the value. My hon. friend may put any value he decides on them, but do not let him quote me in connection with it because I do not know their value.

Mr. OLIVER. It must be admitted that the value of these swamp lands is a matter of estimate. The fact is that of this large area of upwards of two million acres which was in the hands of the province of Manitoba beginning some time in 1885, and coming down to the present time the portions sold from time to time, realised an average of $3 an acre. That is established. It must surely be admitted that with the appreciation in the value of lands which has taken place within the last few years that the price of $3 an acre received during the past 20 years, was below what the land would now realize.

I find in the report of the Department of Provincial Lands of Manitoba, for the year ending December 31, 1910, a statement in regard to the value of these lands.

Land sales, $73,729.35. There were sold during the year parcels of land representing 142,535·10 acres for the sum of $737,395.26. The prices obtained ranged from $3 to $19 per acre, and the average was $5.17 per acre. The progressive policy of the government of the province in draining, from time to time, large areas of swamp lands, is responsible largely for the splendid revenue of the department, as lands which, prior to being included in a drainage district, were practically unsaleable, and were held at $3 and $4 per acre, are now selling at from $6 to $12 per acre. In view of the steady demand for these reclaimed lands, the different municipalities wherein they are located are benefited to a very considerable extent owing to their being able to collect taxes from the date of sale on hitherto non-assessable lands.

Mr. BRADBURY. Does the hon. gentleman realize what it costs to drain these lands?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes. I have here also, bearing on the value of these swamp lands, a copy of a statement issued by the provincial government of Manitoba in London, England, on the occasion of the sale of the telephone bonds of the province in London. In a statement of the value of the assets of the province the following appears:

Public buildings—Deferred payments due on provincial lands already sold, unsold lands, estimated at 7,053,000 acres, of a value of £5,039,082.

I shall accept my hon. friend's statement that he did not say that the unsold lands of the province of Manitoba were worth $3 an acre, but he did say that the lands that have been sold realized $3 an acre, and I produce the evidence of the government of Manitoba that as these lands are reclaimed they are worth from $6 to $12 an acre, and there is every evidence that the greater part of those lands can be reclaimed, and reclaimed, on the evidence of the government of the province of Manitoba, at a reasonable expenditure. So I think I have placed before the House ample evidence in support of the assumption that I make of a value of $3 an acre for the undisposed-of swamp lands of the province, to which the province is absolutely entitled. I repeat that in the present condition of land values, in the west, in the present buoyant condition of the money market, no one will question for a moment, that if the province of Manitoba saw fit to offer to-morrow, the right to the swamp lands of the province they could get in cash $3 an acre and no questions asked. There is no manner of doubt about that. That may be a speculative value, but it is a realisable value, and we are dealing with facts and figures. It is property that belongs to the province of Manitoba to-day, that the province is entitled to dispose of, as it pleases, when it pleases, and if it has not seen fit to dispose of this swamp land more rapidly than it has, the reason is found in the statement contained in this report of the provincial government that by the application of drainage works to these lands, their value is stupendously increased.

Mr. MORPHY. What does it cost per acre to drain these lands?

Mr. OLIVER. Drainage in Manitoba is like anything else, in this world, it varies according to the circumstances; but I can tell the hon. gentleman that the province of Manitoba has sold a very large proportion of the 880,000 odd acres which they have sold without any drainage, or any cost of drainage.

Mr. MORPHY. Is the hon. gentleman aware that in the county of Essex in Ontario, we spent $3,000,000 in drainage?

Mr. OLIVER. Quite likely, I have no doubt that in Essex there has been $3,000,000 spent in drainage.

Mr. CURRIE. How much have they spent in Manitoba on drainage?

Mr. OLIVER. They have spent very little so far. In regard to drainage in the county of Essex, the expenditure that has been made, has increased the value of that land 2, 3, 4, 5, 10 and 20-fold, and my hon. friend cannot deny it.

Mr. MORPHY. If you take the natural values at the time the drainage was done, it did not do anything of the kind. They increased in value later along with other lands.

Mr. OLIVER. And I say, that in Manitoba there are vast areas of lands that have no actual agricultural value, but which by the application of a reasonable expenditure, can be made the most valuable in Manitoba.

But, as a matter of fact, although the province has sold nearly a million of acres of swamp lands, their actual expenditure in drainage in regard to that law has been comparatively small. And let me point out this further—that this land has been sold at private sale and not in public competition; it was not sold at public auction, and there is a very grave question if the province received for that land anything like its value at the time it was sold.

Mr. STAPLES. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) claim that this land was not sold at public competition?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. Then, the hon. gentleman does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. OLIVER. I have very good authority for the statement I make. It has been made within my hon. friend's (Mr. Rogers) hearing on the floor of the House in the legislature of Manitoba, and has been substantiated there beyond question.

Mr. ROGERS. If the hon. gentleman will excuse me, I would tell him that when such a statement was made on the floor of the House the hon. gentleman who made it had to apologize for it.

Mr. OLIVER. There is no point in my hon. friend and myself discussing what took place in the legislature of Manitoba. He was there and I was not, and therefore I am compelled to accept his statement. But I would ask him, was one acre of that land sold by public auction, and if so, when?

Mr. ROGERS. It was not our policy to sell the land by public auction.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. ROGERS. But we were selling land in the same districts where the hon. gentleman himself (Mr. Oliver) was selling school lands and we were getting a higher price for the adjoining quarter-section in nearly every case than the hon. gentleman was getting for that which he sold.

Mr. OLIVER. I stated that these lands were not sold in competition. My hon. friend has admitted that they were not sold in competition; and they were not so sold as a matter of fact. Again I repeat, it has been stated by those who ought to know, that the actual values were not received for a large proportion of the land sold by the government of Manitoba. That is a matter, of course, that the people of Manitoba can settle for themselves.

Mr. STAPLES. If the hon. member (Mr. Oliver) desires to be fair, he should tell the House how these lands were disposed of, and the policy by which they were disposed of. He knows that an upset value was put on every acre and——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. STAPLES. I do not wish to interrupt the hon. member. I am making this statement, and I think that if he wishes to be fair——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) has the floor.

Mr. OLIVER. If the House will permit, I shall be very glad to have the hon. member (Mr. Staples) make his statement.

Mr. STAPLES. I make the statement that every acre of that land was inspected and valued; then a price was put on it, and any person desiring to purchase that land had only to look at the book, see the value placed on the parcel, and pay that price, and not an acre was sold in any other way.

Mr. OLIVER. I think my statement is thoroughly established, that these lands were sold without competition.

Mr. STAPLES. No.

Mr. OLIVER. The Dominion government has been administering certain lands in the western country in the interest of this same province—the school lands. And this parliament, in its wisdom, provided by statute that not an acre of that land should be sold except by public auction. That is the only true competition. It is by selling at auction that the value is certainly received. When the government of Manitoba sells the public property of the province, in this way, as they have admittedly done, to the extent of 880,000 acres for something over $3,000,000, they must be content to take the same criticism that would have been levelled at the Dominion government if it had undertaken to dispose of the public property in the same way. That, I think, is fair.

Now, just a word in regard to the valuation placed upon these lands. If this is to be a business arrangement let it be a business arrangement. And when we undertake to value a property that has been handed over to a province and to charge the province with that value, a reasonable valuation should be made. We find that 150,000 acres of land were handed over to the province for the benefit of higher education in the province—university lands, as they were called. They were to be farm lands and selected lands; they were not swamp lands by any means. And the Minister of Finance (Mr. White) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Borden) blandly tell the House that these selected lands in the province of Manitoba are properly valued at $2 an acre—when the very swamp lands were sold, without competition, at over $3 an acre. It is a small affair; it does not matter materially; but it shows, that on the face of it, the calculations that have been made in connection with this matter are unfair calculations; on the face of the calculations there is not an attempt to do justice, but an attempt to do injustice as between the province and the Dominion.

I have said, and I think I have shown that so far as the land account is concerned, the province stands not to gain but to lose in actual hard money. But it stands to lose a great deal more than the difference in the money value between the cash subsidy and the value of the swamp lands. A great part, possibly the most valuable part, of the province of Manitoba is low and level land subject to overflow at times, but of the most valuable character both as to the quality of soil and of climate. All that is required is to get the water off and keep it off, and this acreage of land in Manitoba compares favourably, and more than favourably, with any similar acreage of land in any country in the world in actual productive value.

When the arrangement was made whereby the swamp lands were handed over to the provincial government, it was not so much to provide a source of direct revenue to the province as it was to secure the reclamation of these lands, to secure the establishment of settlement upon them, and to secure production from them, and I say, Mr. Speaker, if there are 8,000,000 of acres of swamp lands in Manitoba, the bringing of that immense area into cultivation, into production, is ten times more important to that province and to the Dominion, than any paltry half million dollars a year, whether it goes one way or goes the other. Eight millions of acres constitute one-third of the total grant that it cost to build the Canadian Pacific railway, and within two-thirds of the total area under cultivation in the three prairie provinces to-day. Surely, Mr. Speaker, the question of bringing that stupenduous area of most valuable land into production is something of the highest and greatest importance not only to this Dominion, but to the province of Manitoba and to the people who are in that province. It matters not that the government of Manitoba has not risen to its duty in that regard, that it has treated this swamp lands area as a speculation rather than as a matter of development. Some other government will be formed in Manitoba that will deal with these lands as a matter of development and not as a matter of speculation, at least we will hope so. But the fact is that the lands are there. It is the business of the province of Manitoba to relieve the conditions of too much moisture in regard to much of the land that is already settled upon, and in doing that they reclaim these 8,000,000 of acres of swamp lands or a large part of them. These swamp lands as they stand to-day are an inducement, nay they are the financial means whereby the government of Manitoba may bring into production and into development that stupendous area; but under the arrangement that is offered for the consideration of this House, the province of Manitoba has to forego the policy of drainage under which it could reclaim that enormous area of lands, and these are to be handed back to the Dominion to remain in that condition, because the Dominion has not the responsibility for carrying out drainage, or the jurisdiction, and the province gets less than half a million dollars a year in cash. Whatever may have been the case in regard to other features of the agreement, this feature is one in which both the province and the Dominion lose and lose heavily.

But there is another feature of this arrangement and that is in regard to arrearages. The province is to get a bulk sum of $2,380,271 as arrearages on debt on land and on building account. Now on this question of arrearages it seemed, according to the statement of the Prime Minister, that because the province of Manitoba wanted an extension of boundaries many years ago, therefore, the province receiving that extension is to-day entitled to $2,380,271 of the public money of this country. My hon. friend the Prime Minister did not seem to think that this was a rule that worked both ways. The province of Manitoba has been in possession of the swamp and university lands ever since 1885. It has been drawing interest on the disposition of those lands, and has been using the proceeds as revenue during all that time, but it did not have to give any account of the money that has been spent before the present Bill goes into force. The province did not have to account for the arrearages, it is only the Dominion government that has to account for them to the province. Is not such an argument as that too childish to put before an intelligent assembly? What is this proposal to pay the province of Manitoba a bulk sum of $2,238,000 on the passage of this Bill or shortly afterwards? There is no justification of right or reason, for this proposal as between the province and the Dominion, or as between the province of Manitoba and any of the other provinces. It is the declaration of a government in power, a government with a large and hopelessly subservient majority, the demonstration of that government to the various provinces of this Dominion that whom they will they will make rich, and whom they will they will leave poor. It is a demonstration to all the provinces that if they do not come in line with this government, if they do not yoke up with the politics and the policy of the party now in power, they cannot expect to get hand-outs of this character; they must stand and see their neighbour fattened while they remain hungry. It is simply a declaration that this government pays no attention to the rights of the various provinces. What have rights to do with them? It is a declaration that the terms of confederation do not concern them. They have command of the public treasury, and they propose to use that command for partisan purposes in provincial matters whenever and however it pleases them to do so. Now I am not at present a resident of the province of Manitoba. I was at one time and I have some acquaintance with the people of that province. I have some knowledge of their attitude of mind towards public questions, and I say this to the government: That if it required an annual payment of five dollars a year to every Indian in the province —that payment to be made so long as grass grows and water runs—in order to induce that Indian to give up his rights, a payment of five dollars a piece in one year to the white people of the province of Manitoba will not have the effect of inducing them to give up their rights. Our hon. friends who hope to buy out the province of Manitoba with a bribe of $2,380,000 will find that they have deceived themselves. The people of Manitoba are not for sale at the price—

Mr. BRADBURY. Nor at any other price.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend has taken the word out of my mouth—they are not for sale at any price; and the government that undertakes to buy them, taking money out of the Dominion treasury——

Mr. BRADBURY. The hon. gentleman knows from experience that they are not to be bought.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know from experience. Does the hon. gentleman say ——

Mr. BRADBURY. Speaking of the government of which the hon. gentleman was a member. They know from experience, that Manitoba was not for sale.

Mr. OLIVER. On what particular occasion? Perhaps the hon. gentleman would enlighten us. On no occasion, and under no circumstances, did the late government undertake to offer a bribe to the province of Manitoba or any other province. This proposal, Mr. Speaker, if I am within parliamentary rules in so saying, to my mind, is a proposal to pay the province of Manitoba $2,238,000 to which that province is not entitled under the terms of confederation or under any consideration of fair-play as between province and province. It is neither more nor less than an attempt on the part of this government to square the provincial government of Manitoba with their people because of the remarkable and atrocious position of that province in regard to their telephone transactions, whereby the province has incurred a capital expenditure of $12,000,000 on the promise to give the people reduced telephone rates, while it is proposed now to increase those rates to double, treble and quadruple what they were at the time when they took the telephone service over. It is an attempt to salve the people of the province of Manitoba over the shortcomings of their provincial government, and to salve them over because the farmers of that province have lost millions and millions of dollars by reason of the accession of this government to power.

Mr. BURNHAM. How can you salve them over with such terms?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not think they will be salved over with such terms. I say that the attempt was made, but that it will fail. I think that I have demonstrated that the proposition now before the House is one in which the province of Manitoba does not stand to gain, in which the other provinces of the Dominion do not stand to gain and in which the Dominion does not stand to gain; and particularly one in which the government that brought forward such a proposition stands discredited before the people of this country.

Mr. J. A. M. AIKINS (Brandon). It is pleasing to know that this Bill finds such favour in the sight of hon. gentleman on the other side. One ex-minister condemns it as giving too much to the province of Manitoba; another ex-minister of that administration condemns it, because it does not give enough to that province. I am delighted with the universal advocacy of the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver). He seems to have taken briefs for three provinces. He seems to have assumed that the province of British Columbia is not able to take care of itself, and, therefore, he takes the brief for that province. Are we to think that the administration of the hon. Mr. McBride has retained the hon member for Edmonton to advocate the interests of British Columbia in this House, or are we to assume that the hon. member for Edmonton has been retained by the premier of the province of Manitoba to advocate the interests of that province? Are we to assume that Sir James Whitney himself, finding that there is such an able advocate, has given his brief to the hon. member? Or is the House to assume that the McBride administration of British Columbia is better able than the hon. member for Edmonton to look after the interests of that province? And that the administration of the hon. Mr. Roblin in Manitoba and of Sir James Whitney in Ontario know how to look after the interests of those provinces?

I do not intend to go at any length into what has been said by the hon. member for Edmonton, because I am thoroughly convinced that the government of Manitoba knows more about the swamp lands of that province than does the hon. member and that it understands better than he, the financial requirements of the province. But I do desire to speak for a short time in reply to certain arguments used a few days ago by hon. members opposite in the debate on the resolution. In 1881, it was supposed that the boundaries of Manitoba were being extended eastwards as far as the line of longitude extending north from the confluence of the Mississippi and Ohio. Therefore, the Act of 1881 was passed. In introducing the Bill, Sir Alexander Campbell, then leading the Senate, spoke of this territory as:

> . . . covering an area up to a line due north from the forks of the Ohio and Mississippi, of 154,411 square miles, or something like eleven times its present area. It will be observed, by the map on the table, that on the east we do not lay down a line in the sense as we do on the south, west and north, but suggest a dotted line, as what the boundary line between Ontario and Manitoba will be, as the present government of the Dominion believe the law establishes it. . .

Now, in extending these limits, it is, of course, a matter of interest to the House to know what population is within the proposed extension; and I had a statement prepared showing that the Indian population in such places as North West Angle, Shoal Lake, Rat Portage, Rainy Lake, Rainy River, Manitou Rapids and Lac des Mille Lacs, and the white population of the township of Olver, Fort William and Neebing, Mattawan, Sibley and a number of people along the line of railway works.

He stated also that immediately after the passing of the Act, Manitoba took control largely of that territory.

A dispute arose between Manitoba and Ontario concerning these boundaries. The matter was submitted to the Imperial Privy Council, and the decision was given in these words:

> Their Lordships find the true boundary between the same two provinces to the north of Ontario and to the south of Manitoba, proceeding eastward from the point at which the above mentioned line strikes the middle line of the course of the same river (whether called by the name of the English river or as to the part below the confluence by the name of the river Winnipeg), up to lake Suel or the Lonely Lake, and thence along the middle lines of Lake Suel, of the Lonely lake to the head of that lake, and thence by a straight line to the nearest point of the middle line of the waters of lake St. Joseph, and thence along the middle line until it reaches the foot or outlet of that lake, and thence along the middle line of the river by which the waters of lake St. Joseph discharge themselves, until it reaches a line drawn due north from the confluence of the rivers Mississipi and Ohio, which form the boundary eastward of the province of Manitoba.

And the Privy Council ordered that its finding should be carried into execution. In 1889 the province of Ontario, desiring to have the limits as found by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council confirmed by an Imperial statute, made, through a joint address of these two Houses, an application for that purpose. The recital of the Imperial Act of 1889, which was thus passed reads:

> And whereas such boundaries, as far as the province of Ontario adjoins the province of Manitoba, are identical with those found to be correct boundaries by a report of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, which Her Majesty the Queen in Council, on the 11th day of August, 1884, ordered to be carried into execution.

The Privy Council found the boundary for Manitoba extended as far east as the line of longitude which ran north from the confluence of the rivers Mississippi and Ohio. Speaking in reference to that, the Hon. Mr. Mills, in 1889, said:

> What both the representative of Manitoba and the representative of the Dominion maintained was that this meridian line was the eastern boundary of Manitoba, and being the eastern boundary of Manitoba so much of Manitoba as lay north of the Albany river remained in Manitoba under that decision. It was never argued before the Judicial Committee that if Manitoba could not claim any portion of the territory south of the Albany river, she would not be entitled to any portion north of that river. That question was not raised, and I do not see how the Judicial Committee could do anything than as it did, leave to Manitoba that portion which was uncontested, and assign to Ontario that portion west of this meridian line which they believed belonged to the province of Ontario. I am pleased that the hon gentleman has brought forward this resolution, and I trust that this will be the last time we will have to discuss the boundaries of Ontario in the parliament of Canada.

Now, Sir, as the judgment of the Privy Council determined the easterly boundary of Manitoba, which extended as far east as the line of longitude running north from the confluence of the Ohio and Mississippi, if that line was carried immediately north it would come almost to the north-east corner of the boundary of the proposed province. One wonders why was it, when the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council decided that part belonged to the province of Manitoba, it was not given to the province of Manitoba? The late administration refused it. The province of Manitoba long ago demanded that in connection with the extension of her boundary north, and if that had been given to Manitoba when it should have been given by the late administration, then no question would have arisen such as that raised by the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie), that the ports of Churchill and Nelson should belong to Ontario. Although the government of Manitoba made application to the late administration time and again to have their boundaries properly extended, it was refused, and that has been one of the causes whch has led to the disturbed feeling which prevails to some extent in the west of Canada. In 1908 the right hon. the leader of the opposition said:

> I am aware that the boundary we have laid down has been disappointing perhaps to both parties. Judging by what I have seen of statements made by the premier of Manitoba he expresses disappointment although I do not believe it would be possible for the government or parliament to concede in full the claims of Manitoba. I have seen some flaming articles in some newspapers stating that the rights of Ontario have been sacrificed inasmuch as the two harbours of Churchhill and Nelson have been given to Manitoba. Well, Sir, I think that the province of Ontario has enough of wealth and of territory and of glory to enable her to willingly concede to the sister province what little advantages there may be in that. Moreover, the traditions of history would seem to indicate that the Churchill and Nelson rivers should belong to Manitoba. They were the avenue of the fur trade in the olden times when the fur trade was all the trade there was, and if we were to take away from Manitoba what advantage there may be in this, I think Manitoba would be entitled to complain on sentimental grounds. At all events I submit these reasons to the fair consideration of the House and I think they will impress themselves on all those who will give this matter impartial consideration.

One would assume, when the judicial decision of the Privy Council was placed before the late administration, that they would have given effect to it. But instead of doing so they decided to give that part of the territory to the province of Ontario. You may ask now: Why is it not now demanded by the province of Manitoba? Simply because, for a dozen years the province of Manitoba was demanding it, and all that was offered them was the easterly boundary which is offered now, and as further effort was useless with that administration they were almost obliged to accept it subject to a proper financial settlement, which they have been unable from that time until this administration came into power, to secure. Having once accepted that eastern boundary from the late administration, they could do nothing else than accept it now. Although it was thus settled by the late administration, we find the hon. member for South Wellington trying to stir up the feelings of Ontario against the west concerning it. We find only recently, on the 21st of February last, the leader of the opposition in the Ontario house moving a resolution insisting that the boundaries should be extended north to the Churchill river. Just a little previous to that the same hon. gentleman declared that it was desirable there should be no antagonism between the west and east of Canada, still he moved that resolution which would disturb the whole of western Canada. Why should that old trade route by York factory and Nelson river be given to the province of Ontario? We find hon. gentlemen on the other side of the house, for instance, the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley), trying to stir up the other provinces against this settlement with Manitoba. We find the hon. gentleman who has just spoken trying to set one province against another province in the west. The policy of hon. gentlemen opposite thus appears to be to sow discord and create strife, and disharmony, in order that out of the resulting confusion they may in some way or other derive party advantage. However, I am sure that as the province of Ontario and the province of Manitoba have agreed with the Dominion on a settlement, all the efforts of hon. gentlemen to cause a cleavage between the east and the west will prove futile, because these provinces and the Dominion have agreed to settle their differences in order that peace and harmony may prevail between the east and the west.

Therefore, Ontario has no right to complain. Both political parties in Manitoba, practically accepted the eastern boundary, as laid down by the late administration and this administration. The only question for settlement was the question of financial terms, to which I wish to refer for a moment. In 1878 the University of the province of Manitoba realized that in consequence of the small income that the province was deriving it could not give much assistance to it. Therefore, the university applied to the Dominion government for a grant of land to assist it in its educational work. In 1881 another application was made to the Right Hon. Sir John A. Macdonald, and in 1884, prior to the passing of this Act of 1885, he wrote to the University of Manitoba stating that the government would make the grant. We, nevertheless, find that it is incorporated in one of the clauses in the Better Terms Act of 1885. Section 2 of that Act provides that:

> An allotment of land, not exceeding one hundred and fifty thousand acres, of fair average quality, shall be selected by the Dominion government and granted as an endowment to the University of Manitoba for its maintenance as a university capable of giving proper training in the higher branches of education, and to be held in trust for that purpose upon some basis or scheme to be framed by the university and approved by the Dominion government.

Approved not by the provincial but by the Dominion government. Before coming to this question of the basis of trust let me say that, although the grant of land was to be of fair average quality and salected by the Dominion government, no step was taken by the Dominion government to make that selection and most of the fair average land had been taken up as homesteads, given in grants or otherwise disposed of. Up to 1886 or 1887 no arrangement had been made for the selection of the land. The University of Manitoba pressed strongly that the selection should be made. They were practically told that they would have to make it themselves. Accordingly, they spent money and the province gave them some assistance to make the selection, but as the best land had been alienated, they were not able to select the first quality of land. In consequence of the delay and difficulty in making their selection of land, application was made to the Dominion government to commute the grant for a money payment. In January, 1888, a committee appointed by the university reported an interview with the Minister of the Interior which stated that with respect to the land which had come back to the government by the non-fulfilment of homestead conditions, the minister was unwilling to withdraw it from homesteading and would prefer the grant of a sum of money in commutation of said land. In February, 1888, the Minister of the Interior made a recommendation to the Governor in Council that he had been waited on by representatives of the university council and favoured a commutation as a way of settling the difficulty in procuring lands and he thought that the commutation would be an advantage, both to the interest of settlement and of higher education in the province, and, therefore, recommended the commutation and suggested legislation. But commutation was not carried out because, as was stated afterwards, the revenue of the Dominion was not in a buoyant condition. The only amount I recollect as being mentioned by the minister or the university was $2.

Complaint has been made that the sum of $2 an acre is too small a sum on which at present to fix a price for university land. But between the 8th of March, 1882, and the 11th of January, 1891, the Dominion lands south of the Canadian Pacific railway were held by the government at a price of $2.50 per acre, while north of the Canadian Pacific railway belt, at $2 an acre. Further, with respect to the university lands there is a reversionary interest in the Dominion government, not the provincial. One of the conditions in the patent of this land is:

Provided always, that if at any time hereafter the said university shall be dissolved or shall cease to exercise its functions as a university, then, and in such case, any and all of the said lands which may remain unsold shall revert to and become revested in us and our successors as of our and their former estate therein, subject to any mortgage or pledge which may have been given by the said university; and all funds in the hands of the said university, their successors or assigns, the proceeds of or which in any way result from the sale, lease, mortgage, pledge or other disposal of the said lands, shall be immediately paid over to us, our successors or assigns.

Yet, complaint is made that the province should pay a higher sum in commutation of that land grant than $2 an acre at the date of its grant. When you consider that the reversion is with the Dominion government, that that government had the right to fix the basis of trust, when you consider the price at which the government land was selling, when you consider that land selected was not the best land or of fair average quality, when you consider that all these lands, for over twenty years, were managed by the university council, and that during all this time the province of Manitoba and the municipalities have not taxed the lands, it is impossible to understand how the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) or any one can come to the conclusion that the university's interest in the land should be valued higher than $2 per acre. I will go a little further and say that, under these circumstances, if the commutation is made the reversion should be handed over to the province of Manitoba and the basis of trust should thereafter be controlled by that province. It seems to me, therefore, after this explanation, that the House will be prepared to say that this, at all events, was a fair bargain as far as the Dominion was concerned.

The hon. gentleman who has just spoken said that these lands should remain with the province of Manitoba, because it would be to their interest to drain these lands. If they are going back to the Dominion, then, whose duty is it to drain them? Certainly the duty of the Dominion government and not the duty of the province. For whose benefit should they be drained? These lands are not held by the Crown in the interest of the province, but for the benefit of the whole Dominion, as the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) said. Therefore, the late administration should not only have looked after the draining of these lands, which were not handed over to the province, but after the draining of all other Dominion land. Certainly the duty of draining the swamp lands of which the Dominion is to have the benefit should be that of the Dominion government, and not of the province. Therefore, if the land is handed back and if the government does its duty the province will receive the benefit and so will the Dominion, when they are so drained.

The clause of the statute to which I refer the Better Terms Act, 1885, says:

The grant of land—

That is the grant of swamp land and the university land and payments authorized by the foregoing sections shall be made on the condition——that they be accepted by the province of Manitoba as a full settlement of all claims made by the said province for the reimbursements of costs incurred in the government of the disputed territory——

Not merely a subsidy, but:

—costs incurred in the government of the disputed territory or the reference of the boundary question to the judicial committee of the Privy Council and all other questions and claims discussed between the Dominion and the provincial government up to January 10, 1885.

Therefore, when you come to consider either commuting the value of the university land or the restoration of the other lands to the Dominion you must consider the fact that they were not given solely for the purpose of subsidies but partially to defray the expenses of the government of that disputed territory, for that disputed territory was governed for a time by the province of Manitoba; it was formed into an electoral district which sent a representative to the local legislature, until 1884 or practically 1885, when the judicial decision was given that it did not properly belong to the province of Manitoba. It is, therefore, improper to argue this question solely on the ground that the swamp lands and the university lands were given only as a subsidy to the province of Manitoba. Mr. Speaker, you cannot compare things which are utterly dissimilar; you cannot contrast one condition with another condition in no way identical, and, consequently you cannot contrast the position of the western provinces with that of the eastern provinces, their conditions are altogether dissimilar. It cannot be justly said that the conditions in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba are at all similar to the conditions in the eastern provinces, or even to the conditions in the province of Ontario. Neither are the prairie provinces similar to British Columbia, and, therefore, what is done by the Dominion for one of these eastern provinces, or for the province of British Columbia, cannot be taken as a fair standard of what should be done for the prairie provinces which are not similarly situated and do not own their own natural resources or their lands. In what respect are the three prairie provinces similar. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver), has assumed that they did not come into confederation at the same time, but he ought to know better, for the fact is that the Northwest Territories and the province of Manitoba came into confederation on July 15, 1870. There was, no doubt, this difference: that full provincial autonomy was given to the province of Manitoba, whereas there was a limited government given to the territories, the Dominion government retaining certain control. In 1905, when Alberta and Saskatchewan were given their autonomy, the conditions then prevailing in these two provinces were similar to those which prevailed in Manitoba. True, Manitoba had a larger population and a little more settlement, but settlement was going on in Saskatchewan and Alberta in 1905. as I say, the conditions were generally identical, save that there was a greater burden of government on the province of Manitoba than on either Alberta or Saskatchewan. That being so, why was it that the Liberal government treated Manitoba in a different way from that in which they treated Alberta and Saskatchewan? Why? Because Alberta and Saskatchewan were practically the creations of the Liberal administration, subject to its will, and the province of Manitoba was not. The hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley), has said: why do you not get all the members of confederation together in a family council and discuss the terms that are now to be given to the province of Manitoba? Let me ask the hon. gentleman why in 1905 the Liberal government did not call the family of confederation together to discuss the financial terms which were to be given to Alberta and Saskatchewan? The hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver), has asked why British Columbia should not be called into council now, why did not the Liberal government, in 1905, call British Columbia into conference when they were settling the financial terms for Alberta and Saskatchewan? Why is it that these gentlemen opposite now suggest that a different course should be pursued by the present administration from that which they themselves pursued under exactly similar circumstances? Their former action and their present argument are utterly inconsistent. The Dominion government was supplying the funds for the Northwest Territories from July, 1870, to the year 1905, while during that period Manitoba was allowed to look after herself and to struggle as best she could with an insufficient subsidy. During that period the Dominion government was erecting in the Northwest Territories public buildings out of Dominion funds, while Manitoba was paying for her own buildings. I therefore claim, and I do not think it can be disputed, that the conditions in Manitoba were quite similar to the conditions in Alberta and Saskatchewan in 1905 when these two provinces were created and therefore the government of to-day should have treated the province of Manitoba with the same consideration and given it the same subsidies as Alberta and Saskatchewan. And now, these gentlemen opposite complain because the increased amount of the subsidy is dated back to 1908. Well Sir, if full justice were rendered to Manitoba it might well be contended that it should date back to 1905 when the late administration should have treated Manitoba the same as they treated Alberta and Saskatchewan. But, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) has told us that the cost of administration was greater in the two new provinces than it was in Manitoba and in support of his idea he pointed to Manitoba with its large capital city containing almost one-third of the entire population of the province. I would remind the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) and his friends that the cost of governmental administration in a large city, with a new incoming population, is as great or greater than the cost of administration in rural districts, and whatever argument may be founded on that ground is altogether in favour of Manitoba. I would like to know how the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) makes out that with a smaller population in Saskatchewan than in Manitoba and with a still smaller population in Alberta, there was more settled country in these two provinces and a larger district to govern than was the case in Manitoba. I therefore contend that it was at least fair as a compromise for the government when making this arrangement with Manitoba, to have dated it back to 1908. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) tells us that the money subsidy we are giving to Manitoba is too large and in the same breath he tells us that the province of Manitoba is giving too much to the Dominion government when it surrenders these lands. I would like to know how that equation works out. If they are giving such valuable lands back to the Dominion. surely the Dominion can give them financial compensation in lieu of that land. Well, Sir, considering the terms on the whole it seems to me that they are just and fair both to the province of Manitoba and to the Dominion of Canada.

A moment on the financial terms or subsidy. Hon. gentlemen opposite are evidently not at all agreed about them. When you hear some hon. gentlemen opposite say on behalf of the province of Manitoba that the government have not made terms sufficiently good for that province and others saying that the terms are too good for it, we may come to the safe conclusion that the government did the just and proper thing in making the terms they did. Therefore, this Bill should pass without very much more contestation.

It has further been suggested that it was wrong to give the province of Ontario a strip of land five miles wide running from the eastern boundary of the proposed boundary to the Nelson river. The property within the borders of Manitoba, the public domain, belongs to the Dominion government, and the Dominion government can do with it what it thinks proper, can give those lands as a subsidy if it likes for the construction of a railway across it or a port on Hudson bay. I am sure the province of Manitoba will be delighted if Ontario will join with it in creating such a port as there ought to be created for the whole of western Canada at the mouth of the Nelson river. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken has been complaining that we have not enough outlets for the surplus annual products of the west, and that therefore everything possible should be done to give facilities for the transportation of that surplus. Is there then any objection to Ontario building a railway through their own province to the eastern boundary of Manitoba and there being joined by a line, if you like, constructed by Manitoba, and thus forming another national line to carry out the surplus products of the west to the markets of the world? The west will be glad to have such a railway, will be glad to join Ontario in having a joint railway from a common point on such railway up to the port on Hudson bay, will be glad if on one side of the river the province of Ontario creates a splendid port there, as there should be. Let me say to hon. gentlemen and to the people of the west that assurances are given that there will be created either at Churchill or at the mouth of the Nelson river, by the Dominion government, a port which will help them to ship the western surplus products by a speedy route—through Hudson bay and Hudson Strait to the final market of Liverpool, to the great benefit of the west.

There are difficulties in the west. I hope for the consolidation of Canada, I deprecate every statement that is made by hon. gentlemen opposite or elsewhere which will have a tendency to separate the provinces or to create disunion. What we want is union, and if the present administration does what, for 15 years the late administration neglected to do, and cares for western interests, the west of Canada will not only be prosperous but will be contented. The troublesome conditions which now prevail in the west are largely the natural result and consequence of the neglect of western interest and western affairs by the late administration during the years of their power.

Mr. F. B. CARVELL (Carleton, N.B.) Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend from Brandon (Mr. Aikins) has discussed this subject entirely from the standpoint of its effect upon Manitoba, and has carefully avoided alluding to any other aspect of the case, or to that aspect which would appeal to any other portion of Canada, and therefore, I hope he will not consider me discourteous if I leave the track which he has trodden so carefully and try to call the attention of the House back to this proposed agreement to some extent as it bears relation to the other provinces of Canada and try to see if it is a reasonable agreement taking Canada as a whole. My hon. friend from Brandon has made a very strong appeal for peace and harmony and the union of Canada, and I heartily concur in that sentiment, but I doubt if the policy which the government is following in this case will be the best means of attaining the very much desired end to which my hon. friend has alluded. We can have no peace and harmony in this country so long as there are incongruities and unfairness existing as to the manner in which one section of the Dominion is treated as compared with others and as I view this case there is a manifest unfairness in the manner in which Manitoba has been dealt with as compared with the treatment of eastern Canada, and I think I might say of every province in Canada, but the greatest distinction probably would be between Manitoba and the eastern portions of Canada. There are perhaps three general principles upon which the Bill now before the House might be discussed. The first is the extension of the boundaries of Manitoba or its territorial expansion. To that I shall not devote much time because it is, I believe, pretty well settled that Manitoba is entitled to the amount of land she is receiving, and in fact that principle was adopted before this House four years ago. If Manitoba is willing that Ontario should have a right of way five miles wide and one-half of what may be the principal port in the Hudson bay, I have no quarrel with that, and if Ontario is satisfied with it again I have no quarrel.

The next question provided for in this Bill is the financial arrangement which will be applicable to Manitoba in the future, and the third subdivision would be the arrearages which we are paying to Manitoba on account of what has taken place or has not taken place during the past four years. My hon. friends seem to treat the province of Manitoba as though it was a new province just entering the union, as though it had not 40 years of history and experience, as though it had not worked out its existence along the line of other provinces and as though it should be placed on an entirely different basis from other provinces that came into the union only 45 years ago. You must remember that this province became a separate entity with a legislature and government of its own in 1870, or between 41 and 42 years ago, and the other four provinces in Canada only came into the union in 1867. When the four provinces formed the union I submit that the financial arrangements, both as to the per capita allowance, as to the debt allowance, and as to all financial matters were worked out on a thoroughly fair and honest basis. There was a principle involved in all these things, and it is on account of departing from the principle that I chiefly find fault with the government for the terms of this Bill. I shall not quarrel with the amount of money Manitoba is receiving, but I do quarrel most seriously with the arrearages. I think the principle objection is the departure from the principle established in 1867.

Now we know that when the different provinces united in 1867 they received their public lands, with the minerals and all that would go in connection with them, and therefore, so far as those provinces were concerned there was nothing to adjust. The next question that came was the amount of money that would be paid to each province for government and local purposes, and that was apportioned on a population basis and divided up fairly and evenly, and each province received the amount that it was entitled to. There again you had a principle which was followed in arriving at this conclusion. We come next to the debt account. Now the debt account was not so easy of adjustment, but yet the principle was followed as my hon. friends opposite know. The debt of the old province of Canada was found to be about, I think, $67,000,000—I am speaking now in round numbers—and it was decided that the government would assume of that debt $62,000,000. Then it was found that the debt of Nova Scotia was somewhere about $8,000,000, and the government agreed to assume that debt. The debt of the province of New Brunswick was a little less than $7,000,000, it was somewhere over $6,000,000, but in order to make the debt allowance of New Brunswick compare proportionately with the debt allowance of the other provinces of Canada, they agreed to assume the debt of the province to the extent of $7,000,000. They would pay the actual debt, which was something over $6,000,000, and they agreed to pay New Brunswick five per cent interest on the difference between the actual debt and the assumed debt of $7,000,000. Now there you had a principle, you had something which was perfectly fair and reasonable, as between the different provinces, and something to which no person could find any fault. When Manitoba came into the union in 1870 it had no debt, and for some reason for which I can find no explanation, and I must say that I have investigated matters pretty carefully, it was decided that Manitoba would be allowed a debt of $472,090 estimated on a population of 17,000. The basis I understand was, that it was to be $32 on an estimated population of 17,000. But I never could see the reason of that excepting that the Dominion government said: We ought to give Manitoba something with which to carry on her government and, therefore, we will say that she ought to have a debt of $472,000. Then I find that when Prince Edward Island came into the union they also assumed a debt of $4,701,000, but in the case of that province they followed the principle which had been laid down at the time of confederation, and allowed a certain debt according to the population of the island, and agreed to pay the difference between the actual debt and the assumed debt. Now things went along fairly well for a number of years. Finally Manitoba commenced to demand more money, and the result was that in 1882 a change was made by which Manitoba was to receive $50,000 in place of $30,000 on account of government, and then they were to receive 80 cents a head on a population estimated at 150,000, which was probably two or three times in excess of the actual figures. But it was assumed to be 150,000 and that would make a payment on a per capita basis of $120,000. Now in 1882 we find the first reference to the allowance to be paid to the province of Manitoba in lieu of the lands, and in that year it was provided that Manitoba was to receive an annual allowance of $45,000, as it was put in the statute for the want of lands. Because the lands were owned and controlled by the Dominion she received no revenue and had no control over them, and it was thought she ought to receive something for them. Well, Sir, with this last proposition I have no fault to find, I can readily understand that if the four older provinces owned their lands and were able to receive a revenue from them, the new provinces ought to be put in the same position as the older ones were in, and it was only fair to give them a grant for a certain amount on account of not receiving their lands. That was placed at $45,000 in 1882. In 1885 a change was made and they received from that time down to the present $100,000 annually. I find no fault with that, and I do not think that any person from any of the other provinces could find any fault if that amount had been increased, because we must all understand that if the province did not own its land it was not on a parity with the four older provinces of Canada, and also with British Columbia and Prince Edward Island, which had since come into the union, and, therefore, they were entitled to something. It may be true that the Dominion of Canada received no revenue from these lands, but the Dominion had the administration of them, they were able to hold them out as an inducement for settlers to come into that country, and we know that settlement did come in and not only did Manitoba prosper, but the whole of Canada prospered, by reason of having the lands to offer. Therefore, I say no objection can be found to giving Manitoba an allowance in lieu of her lands, and I do not think that very much fault can be found with that provision of the Bill at the present time. It may be a little exaggerated but that is only a matter of degree. The Federal government is allowing the province of Manitoba now, I figure out, $413,270 annually, in lieu of the right to control her own lands, but it must be remembered that in 1885 the province of Manitoba received something else besides the $100,000 in lieu of her land. She received all the swamp lands from the province, or all lands which hereafter might be declared to be swamp lands. That feature has been pretty thoroughly discussed during this debate, and I will, therefore, only refer to it very shortly when I come to it in a few minutes. But Manitoba also received at that time 150,000 acres of land for the university, and my hon. friend from Brandon (Mr. Aikins) has tried to show that those lands were not very valuable. But it is more remarkable that my hon. friend has not stated—at least I did not hear him state, nor did I hear anybody state in this debate—how much the province of Manitoba actually received from the 150,000 acres. It will be interesting to know exactly what the provinces did receive. I am satisfied, however, that the Minister of Finance must be away below the actual amount received when he places it at the nominal sum of $2 per acre. If any of these lands are still in existence and owned by the province they must be worth $20 an acre rather than the small sum of $2.

Mr. CARVELL.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). May I say to my hon. friend that the university lands never were owned by the province.

Mr. CARVELL. I appreciate the fact that they went into a fund for the benefit of the university, but that university exists for the advantage of the province, so that really the proceeds come back to the province in that way.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). Oh no.

Mr. CARVELL. Then there is a difference of opinion between my hon. friend and myself. In 1884 there seemed to be an attempt made by the Federal parliament to rearrange the financial conditions of the different provinces and they there adhered to a certain matter of principle. They rearranged an increase of the debt allowance to each of the provinces on a proportionate basis according to the population. Now, that was a principle. They increased that debt, so far as the old provinces of Ontario and Quebec were concerned, by $5,397,000, Nova Scotia $793,368, New Brunswick $604,509, Manitoba $110,825, British Columbia $83,107, and Prince Edward Island $182,973. Now, the thing that I complain about particularly in this Bill, so far as the general financial arrangements are concerned, is the debt allowance. I contend, Sir, that it is unfair to the maritime provinces to a greater extent, probably, than anything else, and unfair to some extent to the provinces of Quebec and Ontario. It is not so great an injustice to these provinces as it is to the maritime provinces because they have in the past received large additions to their territory which are very valuable, and under which the province of Ontario is to-day receiving, I think I am safe in saying, millions of dollars in royalties on lands, timber and mines, and upon which the province of Quebec must receive large sums each year in stumpage and royalties on lands and timber.

But now we have a proposition—and I will not discuss it at length because there will be another opportunity during the session—to add to Quebec and Ontario; and you add a second time to the amount which they receive from the Dominion, whereas the maritime provinces received nothing; the maritime provinces cannot receive anything. Then, I want to point out the unfairness of this debt allowance to the province of Manitoba, a debt allowance of $8,000,000, upon which they will forever receive an estimated income of $381,584.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Did I understand the hon. gentleman (Mr. Carvell) to say that he never could see any reason for this allowance in lieu of debt? Do I understand him to argue that he never was able to see reason for an allowance made to a province that came in without a debt?

Mr. CARVELL. That is my contention. If you want to give a province sufficient funds to carry on its affairs as a province, you ought to give it in a straight way, not by a circuitous method like this.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that a province that comes in and assumes a share of the debt of the whole Dominion, ought not to receive any compensation?

Mr. CARVELL. I thought the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Meighen's) argument on that point, was the most fallacious I ever heard him advance. I give him credit for being extremely logical as a rule,—I have told him so before, and I tell him so to-night. But I thought he was not only illogical, but absolutely fallacious in his argument on this subject to-day. If he will go back to the terms of confederation, he will find that the debt allowance was not given, because of the debt which these provinces must bear as a part of the whole, but it was based on this principle—I referred to it once before this evening, but I will speak of it again—that the actual debt of the province was assumed by the Dominion. In the case of the old provinces of Canada, nearly the whole debt of Canada, $62,000,000 of a debt of $67,000,000 was assumed, and this, I think, by an arrangement in later years, was increased to some extent. In the case of Nova Scotia, the debt was assumed at $8,000,000, and if it was found to be less than that Nova Scotia was to receive, the interest between the actual and the assumed debt. A similar treatment was accorded to New Brunswick, her debt being assumed at $7,000,000. But the old provinces of Canada and the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick did not receive interest on the debt thus assumed. The province of New Brunswick received interest on only about half a million. It is true, we had a debt of something over $6,000,000 assumed by the federal government. But my hon. friend forgets that at that time we also had assets and that we handed over these assets to the Dominion, amounting to almost that whole debt that was assumed. I cannot tell my hon. friend exactly the amount of these assets. I did not begin to look it up until the dinner recess, and I did not have time to prepare a complete statement. But I can give the hon. gentleman substantial foundation for the statement I have made. In the public accounts of Canada for 1868-9, at page 9, there is a statement of the assets belonging to the Dominion as of that date. I will not go over all these items, but take the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia as examples. We find that in railways alone that province hands over $6,520,900. And from the province of New Brunswick were the assets of the European and North American railway which is now part of the Intercolonial railway. This road was actually constructed and was handed over to the Dominion on the basis of $4,650,903.35. In addition I find the Norton and Apohaqui bridge at $15,595.25, and railway stores $99,888, or in these three items alone nearly $5,000,000 of actual liquid assets handed over to the federal government by the province of New Brunswick, and almost $7,000,000 of actual liquid assets handed over by Nova Scotia. Nor is that all. If the hon. gentleman will turn to the third schedule of the British North America Act he will see what was handed over by the provinces:

Canals with lands of water-power connected therewith.
Public harbours.
Lighthouses and piers, and Sable Island.
Steamboats, dredges and public vessels.
River and lake improvements.
Railways and railway stocks, mortgages and other debts due by the railway company.
Military roads.
Custom houses, post offices and all other public buildings, except such as the government of Canada appropriates for the use of the provincial legislatures and government.
Property transferred by the Imperial government, and known as ordinance property.
Armouries, drill sheds, military clothing and munitions of war, and lands set apart for general public purposes.

If you take the public accounts of Canada and follow the list of property coming under the items I have given, you will find that so far as Nova Scotia is concerned she actually handed over to the Dominion liquid assets to the amount of $7,500,000. And, so far as New Brunswick is concerned, you will find out that it is close to $6,000,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Why was an allowance made in lieu of debt not to the old provinces of Canada but to New Brunswick?

Mr. CARVELL. In order to bring the debt allowance on the basis of population to a parity with that of old Canada.

Mr. MEIGHEN. And the same with Manitoba.

Mr. CARVELL. When Manitoba came in she had not the population. According to the hon. gentleman's argument, the more people you get into a province the more you have to add to the debt allowance. But there is no suggestion that this should apply to New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. You may add a million people to those provinces, but they receive no increase in the debt allowance. New Brunswick, for example, is receiving and has been receiving for many years, almost ever since confederation, interest on something like $500,000 at 5 per cent. The federal government assumed a debt which is something over $6,000,000. But then we handed over to the federal government assets to that $6,000,000. Except the amount on which we are receiving 5 per cent, it is true that this debt was paid by the federal government, but we gave them assets with which they paid it. Some of the assets we handed over are among the best assets of the Dominion of Canada to-day. We gave the present Intercolonial railway practically constructed from St. John to Halifax; the only portion of the Intercolonial railway, I venture to say, which has paid its way, a portion which is paying more than twice as much as any other equal mileage on the whole system. Therefore, we paid the federal government for paying our debts, and we owe them nothing.

We would be delighted to take back the property which we gave them and pay our own debts. Then there are the customs and excise; but on the property alone my hon. friend would be delighted to take over the Intercolonial from St. John to Halifax and pay our own debts. Now, what did they do with Manitoba?

Mr. MEIGHEN. The hon. gentleman said that my explanation of the debt allowance was illegal and fallacious. If he will turn to page 1437 of 'Hansard,' of 1905, he will find exactly the same explanation given by the leader of the opposition.

Mr. CARVELL. I wish to follow my argument on my own line, and I am going to show whether my argument is logical or not. Now, the result is that the province of New Brunswick to-day is receiving as a debt allowance probably half a million to three quarters of a million dollars; the province of Nova Scotia is receiving a little more. The province of Manitoba, which has had a population equal to that of New Brunswick only within the last three or four years, and is only about equal to that of Nova Scotia, is receiving interest on $8,100,000 as a debt allowance. If my hon. friends can argue that this is fair and just to the maritime provinces, then I fail to see by what method of argument they can make it appear reasonable. I have already stated that so far as the allowance for land is concerned I think it is fair, the principle is good. I am not saying that the actual amount of figures is fair, but I think the principle is all right.

There is one thing which I cannot understand, and that is why the government of Prince Edward Island has not been making a demand for an increased allowance in lieu of land when Manitoba is being treated so generously, as Prince Edward Island had no public lands any more than Manitoba. When Prince Edward Island came into the union in 1873 they were allowed an annual amount of $45,000 a year, or $800,000 if they wished to borrow that for the purpose of purchasing land from the landed proprietors and selling it to the people again. If they borrowed the money and bought the land they had the property; if they did not borrow the money they got the $45,000 a year. So, therefore, for the purpose of argument, we are safe in saying that the province of Prince Edward Island receives $45,000 in lieu of lands. Prince Edward Island came into the union about the same time that Manitoba did. When Manitoba came into the union she received nothing in lieu of lands. In 1882, she was given $45,000 a year in lieu of lands, and in 1885 she was given the swamp lands, which we have been told here to-night aggregate 8,000,000 acres, and she was given $100,000 annually in lieu of her lands, and she has gone on receiving $100,000 annually ever since. But now the government come down and propose to give the province of Manitoba for all time to come, after making all allowances for interest on what she has received for some of her swamp lands, the magnificent sum of $413,270 annually. Why on earth has not Prince Edward Island been considered, when Manitoba has been treated so magnanimously? It seems remarkable that Prince Edward Island has been entirely forgotten in this arrangement. I merely throw this suggestion out to the hon. members representing Prince Edward Island in this House. I hope hon. gentlemen from Prince Edward Island supporting this government will wake up to the enormity of the situation, to the manner in which they have been treated by the present government in granting this allowance to the province of Manitoba in lieu of her lands.

Now I come to discuss the third branch of the case, and that is the arrearages. While the second branch of the case, or the financial arrangements, are possibly unfair to the rest of Canada, yet they have followed to some extent previous legislation, and in some instances they are justified as a matter of principle. But I cannot for the life of me see where you can justify these arrearages from any standpoint whatever. My hon. friends from Manitoba say, Well, we have had a grievance. My hon. friend from Brandon (Mr. Aikins) said that a great many years ago they wanted to extend their boundaries eastward and the Privy Council said they were wrong. Though the highest court in the Empire says they are wrong, yet they insist that they have a grievance. Then they said, We want to go westward to Regina. But the people of Regina said No, and the province of Saskatchewan would have nothing to do with them. Then they say, We have another grievance, we want to get northward. And because they could not get northward they have another grievance, and because they have all these grievances the Minister of Finance said the other night:

> I think this matter goes very much deeper than that. The province of Manitoba has been dissatisfied for years, and where you have such a province as Manitoba dissatisfied, and expressing that dissatisfaction irritably, there must be, as my hon. friend once said, something wrong in the political situation

And because Manitoba has had a grievance for all these years the Minister of Finance says: Well, you may have been unreasonable, I think probably you have, but you have a grievance, there is an irritation going on, and it won't do to have the province of Manitoba with a grievance; therefore we will give you something which you are not entitled to, and which we are not giving to any other province in Canada. Will any one say that I am drawing the parallel unfairly? I say the proposition cannot be justified on any logical argument or with any logical reason. The Minister of Finance has not tried to justify it—except, and I will do him this credit, that ten times in the short speech that he made on the resolution, he said: We are going to give her what you gave Alberta and Saskatchewan. That is the Minister of Finance's justification for it—because you did this for Alberta and Saskatchewan we are going to do it for Manitoba. I want my hon. friends to consider the application of this reason to the rest of Canada. Now let us see where it will land us. As I said before, they have a grievance, they are irritated, and it won't do to have Manitoba irritated, therefore we must give them what they want. What do you think will happen next? Manitoba will say: Well, we have a sentimental side to this question. We were called the postage stamp province, and we wanted that remedied. Now we have reason to believe that there is some land round the North Pole, and we want land at the North Pole, and all we have to do is to keep at it long enough, and if the Minister of Finance is in power long enough, he will come back and say, Manitoba has got a grievance, she is dissatisfied, she is irritated, she wants land round the North Pole, it won't do to have Manitoba dissatisfied, and therefore we must either give her land at the North Pole or another donation of a few millions. That is the logical conclusion. I would advise every province in Canada to get busy and work up a grievance. I think you will find that the next thing will be that my friend Sir James Whitney will be coming up here and he will say, I have a grievance, I wanted lands clear to the Nelson river, and you have only given me the right of way. And if he persists long enough, and shouts loud enough, and argues strenuously enough, and the hon. gentlemen opposite remain in power long enough, they will say: It won't do to have Ontario dissatisfied, therefore we have got to give them a couple of million dollars.

That is the only logical position but, there is another way of getting at it. Let us analyse it. My hon. friend says that they should have gotten this land in 1905, but as they did not get it, and as this parliament only passed that resolution saying that they should have it in 1908, therefore, we will date the arrearages back to 1908 and these arrearages are based on two considerations. First, on the debt account. The debt account has been discussed a good deal. I have discussed it myself. I have read every word uttered by the Prime Minister and the Finance Minister on the discussion on the resolutions, I have listened to everything that has been said here to-day and I would like to know, and I hope the Minister of Finance or some other member on the other side of the House, will enlighten us, as to the ground on which the province of Manitoba is being given $202,637 for four years, or a total sum of $810,648. What can be the reason unless it be that Manitoba has a public grievance, and we do not want to have Manitoba irritated, and therefore, we must give her this money. It is not on the ground that if this added territory had been given to her four years ago, she would have more population so that she could have drawn a per capita allowance. It cannot be on that ground as a simple statement of the population would show. The right hon. leader of the government told us this afternoon that there are now 5,571 people in that territory of whom 4,822 are Indians. The federal government looks after the Indians; therefore, you would be reduced down to about 900 people which the Manitoba government would have been compelled to look after during these four years. You are giving them $800,000 because they were not called upon to look after these 900 white people in the last four years. I cannot see any other reason. But if that be illogical and unreasonable, it pales into insignificance when compared with the reasons given for the allowance in lieu of land. I hope that my hon. friend the Minister of Finance will follow me on this point, because he at least, I presume, would like to be able to justify it. It is a well-known principle that we are giving money to the prairie provinces, because they do not have the control of their lands, they have not a chance to sell them, they have not the right to make money out of them, they do not get the minerals, they get nothing out of them whatever, and they are compelled to spend money in carrying on the ordinary affairs of the government within their territory, let it be large or small. The theory is, that the province of Manitoba must expend money in building roads and bridges, to some extent, providing for school accommodation, looking after the adminstration of justice, and doing all the other things that go to make up the cost of the administration of affairs of government in that portion of the province. We are giving them $413,270 for all time in the future to provide for the administration of the affairs of the government in this added territory. You have only got at the present time 900 people to look after, because the Indians will still be looked after by the federal government. Let us take the last four years. Manitoba has not owned these lands in the last four years, it has not spent a dollar on schools, it has not spent a dollar on roads, it has not spent a dollar on bridges or on any other governmental affairs within that territory for the last four years. It has not incurred either directly or indirectly, one cent of liability in the last four years, and there is no possibility of it being called upon to pay a cent, by reason of the administration of this territory in the last four years. Yet the people of Canada, the people of the maritime provinces, are to pay their proportion of this magnificent sum of $1,368,000 to the province of Manitoba for doing that which they have not done, that which they never will do. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance wants the people of this country to feel that this is a justifiable transaction. I think that he will have to look up some arguments that have not yet been produced in order to justify to his own mind, let alone the people of this country, the grant of this sum to the province of Manitoba. If my hon. friend said: Well, we want to make a present to the province of Manitoba, and then, if he would make a present to the other provinces of Canada in proportion to their population and just demands, there could not be so much objection to it because there you have a principle. But here, without rhyme or reason, without any justification apparent on its face, you are presenting the province of Manitoba with $1,368,000 for doing nothing and for not pretending to do anything. Is there a reason for this? There must be a reason for it. My hon. friend from Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) told the reason why. I am not going into that to any great extent. But, before I take up that branch, I want to take another glance into the unfairness of this arrangement to the people of the rest of Canada. While in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia—I take these two as an illustration—we have our lands, our minerals and whatever we can make out of them, yet we have to look after all the affairs of our country in the way of roads, bridges, public buildings, schools and everything else connected with the affairs of the government. The right hon. leader of the government gave some figures as to what the provinces had received during the last year as territorial revenue from their lands and he gave the province of New Brunswick as receiving $494,000 and Nova Scotia $662,000 in the year 1910. We will say that in New Brunswick we received last year $494,000 from our public domain. I may say here that we have never received that much before. I do not believe that since confederation we have averaged $200,000 from our public domain; we certainly never averaged $250,000. While I am not going to go into local matters, I make this statement that if we continue milking $494,000 a year out of our public domain in New Brunswick, in twenty years we will not have any public domain because, while they are supposed to be cutting lumber in New Brunswick, they are practically cutting pulp-wood. They are getting twice the revenue that they ever got before, but they are doing it at a terrible sacrifice and they are paying the awful penalty in the depreciation of our capital, the only source which we have in New Brunswick from which to raise money except that which we raise from direct taxation. But, that is only by the way. My right hon. friend, however, failed to take into consideration the fact that Manitoba last year received from her proportion of the school lands alone $200,000, as I find by the sessional papers of Manitoba for 1911, or half as much money was paid to Manitoba last year for education alone out of the sale of Dominion lands as was received in New Brunswick altogether from our territorial revenue.

That has not been taken into consideration. The more you compare the financial terms you are giving to Manitoba with the terms given to the other provinces of the Dominion, the more unreasonable do they appear to any fair-minded person. I agree in the opinion of the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) that this is an unfair trade even from the standpoint of Manitoba and, I know I may be charged as being illogical when I say it is unfair to everybody. It is unfair to Manitoba for this reason: You are taking from Manitoba swamp lands which are of very great value, and, there is of course a difference of opinion as to what that value is. But, from the sessional papers of the Manitoba legislature for 1900 I find that in that year the province sold 37,096 acres of land for $115,295, the price ranging from two dollars to five dollars per acre, and the average price being $3.14. The sessional papers of the Manitoba legislature for 1911 show that last year the provinces sold 142,535 for which was received $737,395, or an average price of $5.17 per acre, so that in these eleven years the average price of these swamp lands has increased by two dollars per acre. Of course, the value of these lands depends on your building roads into them and inducing settlement, and assuming that this is done it is fair to say that the remaining lands are worth more than five dollars per acre. Then, if you take the seven million acres and say they are worth five dollars an acre, the result is that the Dominion is taking from the province of Manitoba an asset worth thirty-five million dollars. These lands are, of course, increasing rapidly in value and the report of the Manitoba government, stated last year that they were selling all the way from three dollars to nineteen dollars per acre, and at the present time they were selling at from six to twelve dollars per acre. It may be said that the province of Manitoba would have to spend a great deal of money in draining these lands in order to make them valuable, but as I understand it the province does not spend out of the ordinary revenue account any money whatsoever to drain these lands. The province is divided into nineteen different drainage districts, and these drainage districts have issued debentures which at present amount to $1,897,853. As I understand it these debentures are a lien upon the land, and the man who buys the swamp lands buys them subject to this lien so that he and his associates in the end not only pay the cost of the drainage, but the interest as well. That is my understanding of it, and the Minister of the Interior can correct me if I am wrong. It is, therefore, the case that these lands were worth last year $5.17 an acre in the province of Manitoba irrespective of drainage, and the money expended for drainage simply appreciates their value because it is paid by the owners of the land and is not practically chargeable to the province. It is argued by gentlemen on the other side that it is only fair when we are taking these lands, to compensate the province for them, but, these hon. gentlemen must remember that the government of Canada does not sell land and will not sell land. The hon. gentleman from Brandon (Mr. Aikins) told us that it was the duty of the Dominion government to drain these lands and make them valuable, but that being done he will no doubt tell us that it is the duty of the Dominion government to give them away to homesteaders. Then, when these lands are developed, settlers will be brought in and every man, woman and child that is brought into Manitoba yields a Dominion subsidy revenue of eighty cents per head to the province, so that from the Dominion standpoint we are receiving nothing and from the standpoint of the province, we are taking that from the province which can be made of very great value to it. It may be asked, why the province of Manitoba accepted such an unreasonable bargain. Well, the only reason I can see is that the province is a little hard up at the present time for ready cash. If the Minister of the Interior would tell us the real facts he would have to admit that the dividends from his telephone scheme are not as great as he anticipated and that in consequence the province of Manitoba is in an unenviable position financially. The fact is, I believe, that Manitoba is so financially hard up that the Conservatives there are willing to sacrifice the immense potential value of these lands in order to get some ready cash in hand to pay their liabilities and to get themselves out of their difficulties. There cannot be any other reason that I can see for it. It is fair to assume that if other and better methods were adopted in selling these lands they would bring in more than $5.17 an acre, and, therefore, from the standpoint of Manitoba the province is getting $2,000,000 cash and is giving away a heritage which will be of enormous value in time to come. The provincial accounts of Manitoba show that last year the province received from lands alone $648,848, thus they are giving to the Dominion lands which will yield them that sum each year in return for a lump sum of $2,178,000. I think my Conservative friends from Manitoba will have to admit that that is not a good business proposition.

For these reasons the Bill is ill-advised and ought not to be passed. I think that the government are not treating the rest of Canada fairly in not giving the rest of the provinces that to which they are entitled. It is true they are putting them off with a promise and saying: When we give back all lands to the three prairie provinces we will take into consideration the rest of the maritime provinces—but it may be a long time before they give the lands back to the prairie provinces. We all know our hon. friends opposite and we can conceive of a condition of affairs in the three provinces when they might be willing to give them back their lands, but we know a condition of affairs when they will not be willing to give them back their lands, and I make the prophecy now that if the political conditions in the prairie provinces remain as they are to-day it will be many years before those provinces get back their lands, and if that be true it will be many years before the maritime provinces get any change in their financial arrangements or receive justice to which they are entitled under this arrangement. Therefore it would be well for the government to consider even at this late date, the unfair treatment accorded to the rest of Canada, to revise the conditions, to change the Bill or hold it over until an arrangement can be made with all the provinces, thus arriving at something which will be fairly definite, and above all things, based on some principle. When you have arrived at a conclusion based on that principle then you will have that splendid condition which my hon. friend from Brandon (Mr. Aikins) so desires, when we shall have peace and harmony between all the provinces of Canada.

Hon. T. W. CROTHERS (Minister of Labour). Mr. Speaker, the gentlemen who have criticised this Bill have placed themselves in a position of hopeless confusion. By their addresses, and by an address of the right hon. the leader of the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) a few years ago, they have clearly and distinctly answered each other. The criticism was taken by my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Pugsley) that in carrying out the provisions of this Bill the other provinces of Canada would be unfairly dealt with, first by reason of giving to Manitoba a large tract of territory that does not belong to the province of Manitoba, but that belongs to all the provinces of Canada, and therefore the gift or the attachment of this large and valuable territory should not be made to Manitoba without consulting the other provinces and securing their consent thereto. The other ground on which he objects to the Bill is that it proposes to pay out of the treasury of this country a large sum to Manitoba. The hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) contends that that treasury belongs to all the provinces of Canada and not to any one province. I think that I shall be able to answer in one moment from a speech delivered by the leader of the opposition a few years ago the first objection, namely, that the other provinces are being unfairly dealt with by attaching to Manitoba this large tract of territory. The right hon. the leader of the opposition, on July 13, 1908, when introducing resolutions dealing with these same lands and proposing to add them to the province of Manitoba, used these words:

My honourable friend from Kings and Albert (Mr. Fowler) has taken the position that the policy we have adopted is unfair to the maritime provinces, and that they are entitled to some compensation, because the territories which we acquired in 1869 in the Hudson bay district were paid for by the Dominion of Canada, and that if we dispose of them, we should give some compensation to the maritime provinces. Well, the question is not new, it has been raised before, and it has received no sclution such as the honourable gentleman now desires. These territories were acquired in 1869, and in the year following, the parliament of Canada carved out of them a certain domain for the province of Manitoba. But no compensation was asked by the maritime provinces. Later on when we appropriated a certain portion of that domain for the new provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, we made the same disposition,—— —and the lower provinces made no claim thereto.

Mr. FOWLER. Would not the right honourable gentleman see a distinction between the carving out of this territory a new province and adding out of this territory to the provinces forming part of confederation when Nova Scotia and New Brunswick came in?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Does the honourable gentleman believe it makes any difference? The basis of our national life is a federative system. This country is covered by provinces, that is the idea which we have always had before us. That has been the case in the United States. The United States purchased territory from France, Louisiana and from other countries. Since that time her policy has been to turn those territories into states, forming now the American Union. This is the object we aim at. For my part, I regret that the climatic conditions are such in this new territory that it cannot be created into new provinces. I wish we could form a new province on the Hudson bay. I wish we could form a new province out of the Mackenzie river territory. I wish we could form a new province of Ungava. But while it is a wish I devoutly entertain, every man must see that such a thing is impossible. No man, I am sure, from the maritime provinces pretends that we could form new provinces out of that territory. If, then, that territory cannot be turned into new provinces, does it not seem to my honourable friend that the best way to deal with it is to annex it to the existing provinces? We must come to that conclusion. We cannot desire that at one end of this Dominion we should have provinces and at the other end a large unorganized territory. Is not that the goal to which we should aspire, that every inch of Canadian territory should ultimately be under provincial organization? That has been the policy of the United States, until to-day I think all their territory has been turned into states.

My hon. friend from St. John was a member of the government which proposed resolutions giving to Manitoba the very same territory that this Bill proposes to give. He listened to my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) explaining why, as I have just read, the maritime provinces would have no ground of complaint, and I presume he agreed with that statement at that time, and yet to-day, in criticising this Bill, he sets that forth as a reason why the lower provinces are being unfairly dealt with because we are proposing by this Bill to attach to Manitoba a large territory which now belongs to the whole Dominion of Canada. So that the right hon. the leader of the opposition in the remarks he made on the 13th of July, 1908, answers very effectually one argument adduced by the hon.

member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) in criticising this Bill. The other argument that he adduced was that we are proposing to pay Manitoba a large sum of money in which the lower provinces are interested, and that it would be unfair to take this large sum of money out of the public treasury and give it over to Manitoba without consulting the other provinces. My hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Pugsley) has been very effectively answered by the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver), who has proved to a demonstration, to his own satisfaction at least, that that offer made to Manitoba three years ago was $885,000 a year better for Manitoba than the provisions set forth in this Bill.

So that my hon. friend from Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) completely answers the other branch of the argument of my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Pugsley). According to my hon. friend from Edmonton, Manitoba is getting $885,000 less under this Bill than the government of which he was a member offered the province of Manitoba. Now I assume he will admit that the offer of the government of which he was a member was not an excessive offer or an exaggerated offer, that in their opinion at least, it was a reasonable offer, and yet he tells us to-day that by that offer he proposed to give to Manitoba $885,000 a year more than we propose to give under this Bill. And at the same time he tells us that the lower provinces— Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and the other provinces— have great grounds of complaint because he offered Manitoba $885,000 more a year than we offer in this Bill. Well my hon. friend from Edmonton has spent a good deal of time in this House during the present session in advocating what purported to be the interests of the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta. His benevolence has extended down to the provinces of Manitoba and Ontario, and he has bewailed the lack of wisdom manifested by the representatives of these provinces in agreeing to this Bill. Let me tell my hon. friends that the gentlemen who represent Ontario in this House have the utmost confidence in the ability, sagacity and patriotism of Sir James Whitney, and his government of Ontario. We are quite satisfied that Sir James is not permitting any of the best interests of Ontario to be sacrificed in this Bill, and we are quite willing to leave it to him. The gentlemen who represent Manitoba in this House have the same confidence in the government of that province and in the Hon. R. P. Roblin, an old schoolmate of mine, and his colleagues that they will look after the best interests of their province. I would recommend my hon. friend from Edmonton to take the advice of the member from Carleton (Mr. Carvell) who said that he was quite willing to leave the interests of Ontario and Manitoba to the governments of these respective provinces. So where are all the objections to this Bill? They are answered in two or three words, not answered by members on this side, but by members on that side, the one contradicting the other. Let us look at the historical aspect of this matter for one moment because I want to refer to some of the financial arrangements with the different provinces. It is nearly 230 years since King Charles of England conveyed to the governor and company of adventurers of England trading in Hudson bay all that territory draining into the Hudson bay—Rupert Land. Afterwards they by lease acquired from the home government the rest of the territory extending out to the Rocky Mountains, the largest or one of the largest, real estate transactions recorded in history. That company, usually known as the Hudson's Bay Company, in substance owned and governed that one-third of the continent for 190 years almost as an independent nation. In 1867 the fathers of confederation had a vision, they had a foresight, they looked into the future, they prepared not only for the union of the old provinces of Canada, but they looked forward to the day when Canada would compose all of the northerly half of the North American continent extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and they provided in the British North America Act first for the union of the three provinces of Canada, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick—and afterwards for the admission into the union of Prince Edward Island, British Columbia, Newfoundland, Rupert Land and the Northwest Territories. In 1870 the Manitoba Act was passed. You all know that at the time Manitoba was formed it contained only a very small area of land some 13,400 square miles from the 93rd meridian of west longitude to the 96th, and somewhere about 132 miles in the other direction. In the year 1877 the boundaries of Manitoba were slightly extended to make them conform to the system of Dominion surveys that had been made in that part of the country. In 1881 this parliament proposed to extend the boundaries of Manitoba to a very great extent, reaching away down eastward to the line drawn northerly from the confluence of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers. But the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council by their judgment, held that they were not entitled to a large portion of that land. This Bill provides that there shall be added to the province of Ontario 40,000 square miles in area which was, by judgment held to be in the province of Manitoba. We have heard a good deal about the debt allowance and so on. At the time of confederation there were four classes of subsidies recognized and only four, and there has been one added since. There was, in the first class, a sum allotted to each province for government and legislation, secondly, there was provision for allowing 80 cents per head of the population, thirdly, there was provision for paying the several provinces certain sums growing out of the allowance for debt, and in the fourth class, there were special grants. Now I have been unable from the statutes, to ascertain any very definite principle upon which any of these allowances were made. If you look at the Act of 1867, you will find in the first place, that the debt allowed the old province of Canada, which was composed of Ontario and Quebec, was $62,500,000, to the province of Nova Scotia, $8,000,000 and to the province of New Brunswick $7,000,000. There is a special grant allowed in the British North America Act for New Brunswick. That Act provides that the provinces of Ontario and Quebec should be allowed 80 cents per head of their population, based upon the population of 1861. Now that was not made applicable under the British North America Act to the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, for you will find in section 118 of the British North America Act, these words:

The following sums shall be paid yearly by Canada to the several provinces for the support of their governments and legislatures——

The amounts are guaranteed and the section continues:

—and an annual grant in aid of each province shall be made equal to eighty cents per head of the population as ascertained by the census of one thousand eight hundred and sixty-one, and in the case of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick the 80 cents per head was to be based on the decennial census.

They had not adhered to the same principle which was applied to Ontario and Quebec.

—by each subsequent decennial census until the population of each of those two provinces amounts to four hundred thousand souls, at which rate such grant shall thereafter remain.

Now there is a special provision in the Act of 1867 which is applicable to Nova Scotia and New Brunswick and not made applicable to Quebec and Ontario. Then you have a special grant made to New Brunswick by this very Act in the very next section:

New Brunswick shall receive by half-yearly payments in advance from Canada for a period of ten years from the Union an additional allowance of sixty-three thousand dollars per annum——

On what principle? There is nothing in the Act to indicate.

Mr. CROTHERS.

—but as long as the public debt of that province remains under seven million dollars, a deduction equal to the interest at five per centum per annum on such deficiency shall be made from that allowance of sixty-three thousand dollars.

Then I find after the union there were some special grants, and I may say that each one of these four classes has been modified from time to time. The sum allowed for government and legislation has been changed many times by statute. The sum allowed per head has been changed at least once, even as to Ontario and Quebec. At the conference in 1906—it was agreed that the annual sum for government and legislation should be $240,000 instead of $80,000, as it had been up to that time in the two provinces, and it was agreed also that their per capita allowance should, instead of being based on the population of 1861, be based upon the decennial census. The special grants have been changed. The debt allowance has been changed time and time again by special legislation.

The first special grant after confederation I find recorded was made to Nova Scotia in 1869, by chap. 2, 32-33 Vic. It was a grant of $82,695 a year. New Brunswick got the amount I mentioned a moment ago, $63,000 for ten years. In the case of Manitoba several changes have been made. Changes were made in 1873, 1874, 1884, and 1907. All these classes of subsidies have been varied from time to time by statute on special grounds. I cannot find any principle upon which they have gone. Now, we come to the present Bill. These three prairie provinces occupy a different position in confederation from that of the other provinces. The British North America Act, section 109, provides:

All lands, mines, minerals and royalties, belonging to the several provinces of Canada, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick at the union, and all sums then due or payable for such lands, mines, minerals or royalties, shall belong to the several provinces of Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick in which the same are situate or arise subject to any trusts existing in respect thereof, and to any interest other than that of the province in the same.

But these three western provinces, out of the nine provinces of the Dominion, have been deprived of the public lands within their borders. Hence they are to be dealt with on a different basis altogether. Saskatchewan and Alberta, in 1905, were very generously dealt with. Manitoba now is asking, as being in the same class as the other two, to be dealt with on the same basis, and it is proposed by this Bill to do it. Now, I only repeat what I started with, that the hon. gentleman who began this criticism against this Bill has been completely and fully answered by hon. gentlemen who followed him on the other side, and by the right honourable the leader of the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). In the first place, the plea that the other provinces are unfairly dealt with by giving this territory to Manitoba was completely answered by the speech of the present leader of the opposition on the 13th of July, 1908. The statement that too much money is being paid to Manitoba is answered by the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver), who showed that the government of which he was a member, had offered Manitoba $885,000 more than is provided under this Bill.

Mr. D. D. McKENZIE (North Cape Breton). It is somewhat late, and if it is satisfactory to the leader of the House, I would move the adjournment of the debate.

Some hon. MEMBERS. It is early yet.

Mr. McKENZIE. If I were allowed to speak on another occasion my audience would be fresher than at the present time. But if it is the desire of the leader of the House that I should speak on this occasion, I will do so.

It might have been thought that the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) having been put up to reply to the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley), he would be able to dispose of the argument of the hon. member for St. John in a way satisfactory to the government. But it is evident that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Crothers) regards the hon. member from St. John as not having been answered. He found the arguments of that hon. gentleman were too keen and cogent, too much to the point, and also that they were not answered by the hon. member for Portage la Prairie, and he undertook to answer them himself. I must say, that if I am capable of following the line of argument presented by the Minister of Labour, it will be necessary to put up somebody else on that other side. If the hon. member for St. John was not answered by the hon. member for Portage la Prairie I can assure you if I am a judge at all, he stands still unanswered, and it is just as necessary now, as it was before to make a proper, a substantial and conclusive reply, if such a thing be possible, to the argument put forward by the hon. member for St. John. The point made by the hon. member for St. John was that somewhere in the neighbourhood of $3,000,000 was being paid to the province of Manitoba without the slightest justification either under the constitution or any form of law that we know of in this Dominion. And that point is still unanswered. As I have suggested, it will be necessary for the Minister of Finance himself, who is answerable to the people of this country for what shall become of the public revenue, to either give a satisfactory answer to the hon. gentleman from St. John or strike this provision out of the Bill. The hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Aikins) said that some hon. members on this side were finding fault with the terms because they were too good and some because they were too bad. I submit that it does not make any difference whether the terms are good or bad when we are dealing with the provisions of the statutes under which we live. If we make a bargain which must be governed by the constitution and have no right to break away from it and to make bargains and agreements that have no foundation in the conditions and terms of that constitution, I submit that a bargain in reference to the responsibilities of the citizens of this Dominion must not be governed by the generosity or wishes of any government which for the time being happens to be in power. I submit that the rights of our provinces and of each citizen must be founded upon a better and more stable basis than that. We came into the family of confederation upon a well-defined basis and subject to conditions which were regarded as fair to all, and we have the right to suppose that whether we are in the maritime provinces or in British Columbia, whether the province to which we belong is washed by the surges of the Atlantic, or by the waves of the Pacific, the same laws must apply, and that the conditions under which we entered confederation shall be regarded and respected by the government.

I submit that the moment we depart from that principle, the moment we come, as the Minister of Finance said the other day, to be good-natured, the moment that it is a question of kindliness apart from the consideration of actual facts and conditions and the relations of the provinces to each other and to confederation, that moment we are treading on dangerous ground. The part of the British North America Act which deals with this particular point now under consideration is very simple and very easily understood. It is not necessary to go over the historical events to explain why we are dealing with Manitoba in this way. I was going to say that at the time of confederation it was discovered shortly afterwards that there were some grave doubts as to whether this parliament had the right to create provinces at all, or whether we had any right to make a constitutional compact with any territory, and create it into a province. It was found necessary to go back to the mother country for authority and get a new chapter to add to the British North America Act, and remove all question as to our right to create provinces. Under that Act we got the right to create provinces, to give them a constitution, and all the powers. I submit that we have no right to deal with any province in the way of giving it better terms, or worse terms, or any terms at all, except under the authority bestowed on us by the British North America Act of 1871. If it is necessary to give better terms to any province, and if we do not find the authority to do so in the British North America Act, it is much better that the province should for the moment put up with the disadvantage, until the constitution is amended and the necessary power is given to this parliament to deal with the conditions. I submit that unless we have the power in the constitution to-day to do what we are doing, it is much better for all concerned that Manitoba should wait until we get the necessary authority than to go at it haphazard as we are doing now. I was saying that when we gave a province its boundaries, its lands and its conditions, we have no authority afterwards, so far as that province is concerned, to add to or take anything away from it. Under section 2 of the British North America Act of 1871 it it said:

> The parliament of Canada may from time to time establish new provinces in any territories forming for the time being part of the Dominion of Canada but not included in any province thereof, and may, at the time of such establishment, make provision for the constitution and administration of any such province, and for the passing of laws for the peace, order and good government of such province and for its representation in the said parliament.

If we had no further power, I submit that would be the end of any legislation of ours with regard to the boundaries of Manitoba. But the next section of the Act mentions something else that we can do:

> The parliament of Canada may from time to time, with the consent of the legislature of any province of the said Dominion, increase, diminish or otherwise alter the limits of such province, upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed to by the said legislature, and may, with the like consent, make provisions respecting the effect and operation of any such increase or diminution or alteration of territory in relation to any province affected thereby.

I submit that all the power we have there is to make such further financial arrangements with the province as are made necessary by reason of the territory that we add to it. We have no power there to go to the basis of confederation and reconstruct it. We can make such financial arrangements as are necessary to meet the necessities of the case by reason of the territory being enlarged. But this Bill goes beyond the constitutional powers of this House under the British North America Act, goes to the basis of the arrangement that was made with Manitoba in 1870, and the arrangements that were made in 1885. The arrangements that were made in 1907 disorganize the whole business, and makes a new basis of the financial agreement altogether. For what reason? The reason is that the new arrangements were made at the time Alberta and Saskatchewan were created provinces. These arrangements were made under section 2 of the British North America Act of 1871, which gives us the right to make them. We had the right to make whatever arrangement we pleased with Alberta and Saskatchewan, the best arrangements we could make, for we had authority to do so. But I submit that when you come down to a rearrangement under subsection 3, it only gives the right to rearrange the financial conditions in order to meet the necessities of the province.

Mr. MEIGHEN. The hon. gentleman will admit that on several occasions the parliament of Canada has readjusted the terms of confederation in the case of other provinces.

Mr. McKENZIE. That was done, but I say that the Act of 1895 was in the way of a settlement, as I understand it, with the province of Manitoba, and the other provinces were putting forward certain claims on the Dominion.

Mr. MEIGHEN. The first case was for the benefit of the hon. gentleman's own province in 1869.

Mr. McKENZIE. It does not make the slightest difference. But it was explained here that that was the mere correcting of a mistake in the arrangement of the debt at the time. That was the reason why better terms were given to the province of Nova Scotia. But it is no answer to tell me that a certain thing was done if that thing was not constitutional. I suppose as we grow in population and strength, and as we become wiser in experience, we shall grow in knowledge of the constitution under which we live. I find in our constitution a provision which says that we can add to a province from time to time, and when we do add territory to a province we must make such financial arrangements as will compensate that province for the charges that have been brought about. But certainly we have no authority to go back to the foundation and disorganize that. That is the condition which I find here. I find that in the preamble of the Bill the idea I suggest has been to some extent followed, so far as the draftsman could, until he found it necessary to break away from it; that is, he was going to provide for the necessities of the case where additional territory had been added to a province.

The preamble says:

Whereas, on the thirteenth day of July, one thousand nine hundred and eight, the House of Commons resolved that the limits of the province of Manitoba should be increased by the extension of the boundaries of the province northward to the sixtieth parallel of latitude and north-eastward to the shores of Hudson bay, as in the said resolution is more particularly set out, upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed to by the legislature, Manitoba and the parliament of Canada.

And whereas it is desirable that the financial terms——

—should be established. That is the preamble but that is a preamble that is not consistent with the third section of the British North America Act, 1871. They have departed from that and gone into an arrangement which will change the conditions. They have departed from the provisions of the constitution and are acting without authority. I think this parliament is acting without authority inasmuch as the Manitoba legislature did not pass an Act authorizing what we are doing here. This subsection 3 of the constitution of 1871 contemplates that the terms will be accepted by the province, put in the concrete form of an Act and passed by the legislature before we have authority at all. I will have to read it again to show that our power in this legislation is conditioned upon the legislature of Manitoba passing an Act agreeing to the terms upon which we are going to legislate.

3. The parliament of Canada may from time to time, with the consent of the legislature of any province of the said Dominion, increase, diminish or otherwise alter the limits of such province, upon such terms and condition as may be agreed to by said legislature, and may, with the like consent, make provision respecting the effect and operation of any such increase or diminution or alteration of territory in relation to any province affected thereby.

That is the way that the Act was understood by the advisers of the Crown in 1881 as corroborated by an Act of the legislature of Manitoba, passed in 1881, and recited by the drafters of the Act of 1881 passed by this House. The preamble of the Act of 1881 says:

Whereas, by an Act of the legislature of Manitoba passed during the session thereof held in the present year of Her Majesty's reign and intitutled an Act to provide for the extension of the boundaries of the province of Manitoba.

And so on. That shows that on that occasion at least the construction which I want to put upon the Act was the construction which was accepted and acted upon by the officers of the Crown. They reached the conclusion that it was necessary before they could move in this House that the legislature of Manitoba should put in the concrete form of an Act its consent to the provisions proposed and submit that Act to this parliament to be acted upon. That has not been done in this case and I submit to you, Sir, and the members of the government that the conditions precedent have not been complied with. What does the sixth section of the British North America Act say? If there was nothing in the argument that I am putting forward it might well be said that I am wrong and that the construction that I wish to put upon it is not in accordance with the meaning of the spirit of the Act. But, we find an Act passed dealing with section 2 and section 3. Section 6 says:

Except as provided by the third section of this Act, it shall not be competent for the parliament of Canada to alter the provisions of the last mentioned Act of the said parliament, in so far as it relates to the province of Manitoba, or of any other Act hereafter establishing new provinces in the said Dominion subject always to the right of the legislature of the province of Manitoba to alter from time to time the provisions of any law respecting the qualification of electors and members of the legislative assembly, and to make laws respecting elections in the said province.

I am not aware that there is any law of the Dominion of Canada or any law of the federal parliament in any way changing that position. We are told here positively that we have no authority to change the condition in regard to Manitoba or any new province except as we find these conditions laid down in section 3 of this Act. I have not yet heard any answer to this contention, and I have not heard any explanation. I will expect to hear that there is some authority, that there is some way, by which we can get over section 3, section 2 and section 6 of this Act, and that there is some authority by which we can ignore the arrangements entered into at confederation by the different provinces. If there is no authority for ignoring these arrangements then, of course, we are going haphazard and there is no security for property or life under confederation by reason of any of the terms thereof. The question of education is regarded as being very sacred under the terms of this constitution of ours by many of the provinces. Many of the provinces think they have safeguards under the constitution with respect to education that cannot be disturbed or interfered with. They feel that they possess those safeguards as being based upon the terms of the constitution itself. If that can be overridden and overrun by some Act that we may pass in this parliament what is the good of the terms of the constitution? And if they are no good in that case, if they are not to be respected and accepted in that case or in this, then, of course, all that is necessary is that we pass an Act of this parliament that will override any of the terms of the constitution. Upon that basis and for these reasons I submit that we have no authority at all to change the terms of confederation or the terms upon which Manitoba entered confederation. Manitoba may have entered confederation on terms that were not satisfactory. Manitoba may have entered the confederation on terms that were not as good as they ought to be. Then, of course, there is a constitutional way of remedying the difficulty. That constitutional way, I presume, was followed, particularly in 1907, when at a conference of all the provinces of the Dominion a basis for the payment of subsidies to the provinces was agreed upon which was perfectly satisfactory to the present Premier of Manitoba and to the hon. gentleman who is now Minister of the Interior (Mr. Rogers), and who was then an important member of the Manitoba government. They, at that time, agreed to the conditions that were accepted by this House and as to which an address was presented to His Majesty for legislation readjusting and reconstructing the terms of confederation. In 1907 the terms of confederation were constitutionally readjusted by an Act of the Imperial parliament which can be found in the Acts of 1908 of this parliament, and, that being the case, I think it is rather strange that now we are making another change, setting aside altogether everything that has been done from 1870 down to the present and taking a new standard for confederation. What is the standard that is taken now? The standard up to now was the proper adjustment of all our difficulties, financial and otherwise, under the terms of that Act.

If this Bill is founded on right and justice the inference from it is that we must start afresh and give new terms to every other province in the Dominion. I submit that there is no justification for acting in this way. I believe the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) was perfectly within constitutional lines when he said that if we were to give better conditions to Manitoba it should only be done after the provinces had all sat down with the Dominion and heard the grievances of Manitoba, if grievances she had, and then make provision to remedy them. But, if each province of the Dominion can come to the government at Ottawa and get better conditions according to the pull it has with the government, and that seems to be the only rule now, where is it all going to end? We heard to-night that the fate of Manitoba could very well be left to the Premier of Manitoba, and acording to the Minister of Labour, Mr. Roblin would see to it that his province received fair treatment at the hands of this government. We were also told that Sir James Whitney and the government of Ontario would see to it that Ontario was well treated, but that is not the spirit in which to deal with a great question of this kind, and that is not the way in which the people of this country would wish to have it dealt with. The people of Canada want to know whether or not we have a constitution in this country; they want to know whether there is going to be an equitable scale of division between the provinces, so that each province will be dealt with according to the understanding on which it entered confederation, and not because Mr. So-and-so and Mr. Somebody-else is more vigilant than another to look after its rights. I submit that there is no constitutional basis for this law and that it is simply a makeshift to get over a certain contingency in order to bolster up the Manitoba government and try and place the province in a better financial condition than it is in to-day. I wish that some one on the other side of the House, who knows something about the subject, would tell me where we find our authority for passing legislation such as this: where do we find a constitutional basis for reconstructing and making over again the financial terms we have accorded to the province of Manitoba? If it is true that we can do so with respect to Manitoba, what argument is there that we cannot do so in the case of Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. If the Premier of New Brunswick, or of any other province, should come here to-morrow with a hard-up story stating that his province was not treated properly at confederation, that his debt allowance and his per capita allowance should be increased, in view of such legislation as this, how can we refuse his demand? I repeat that the reason I spoke on this question is to enter my protest against any manipulation of the standing of the different provinces in confederation without sufficient constitutional authority for it. I say the people of Canada will make a great mistake if they allow this tinkering with the right each province has under the British North America Act. I say that the people of Canada should demand that if changes are necessary with respect to the standing of any province in the confederation, these changes should be brought about in a constitutional way and not in the extraordinary manner in which this Bill proposes.

On motion of Mr. Bradbury, the debate was adjourned.

Mr. ROGERS moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. ROGERS. We will continue the same debate.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.55 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, March 5, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

EXTENSION OF BOUNDARIES—MANITOBA.

House resumed the adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Borden for the second reading of Bill No. 115, to provide for the extension of the boundaries of the province of Manitoba.

Mr. GEORGE H. BRADBURY (Selkirk). Mr. Speaker, the question before the House is not a new one. It has been before the country for a number of years; it has been before this House and has been discussed at some length: it is a question in which the province of Manitoba is vitally interested. And it is a question that has been played with by the late government. That government practically penalized the province of Manitoba for years and refused to place the province on an equality with the sister provinces of the west. And now, when the right hon. leader of this government (Mr. Borden) brings in a Bill for the purpose of doing common, everyday justice to the province of Manitoba and to implement the pledge that he gave to the people of that province, we find the right hon. leader of the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) doing all that he can to frustrate this government in thus doing justice to that province. And it is strange to realize that the hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House do not even agree in their opinion upon this proposed measure. The leader of the opposition takes the ground that the proposed Bill deals too generously with Manitoba, while the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver), the former Minister of the Interior takes the ground that Manitoba is not to be a gainer but is to be a loser under this proposed arrangement. It is very hard to reconcile the opinions of these two hon. gentlemen who sat side by side in the Cabinet for a number of years when justice was denied to the province of Manitoba.

I shall not detain the House at any length, but I wish to refer to a few of the remarks made by the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) in dealing with the Bill before the House. That hon. gentleman performed some strange feats of argumentative gymnastics when dealing with the figures relating to the swamp lands in Manitoba. He stated that Manitoba had 8,000,000 acres of these lands that would be transferred back to the Dominion if this Bill went through. And he assumes that these lands had a value of $3 an acre, and said, in view of that fact, that the province of Manitoba was handing back something like $24,000,000 worth of lands. But he was forced to admit that when he claimed that these swamp lands had an area of 8,000,000 acres, it was only an estimate. As against this, we have the estimate of the late Mr. Young, who was well known as the chief geographer of the Department of the Interior. Mr. Young had the facts before him, I presume, when he made this estimate. And this is his statement:—

> The unsurveyed area in the province of Manitoba is estimated at 12,900,000 acres. This is largely unexplored. It is thought that 30 per cent, (4,870,000 acres) may be swamp. This land will be of considerable less value than the swamp lands already referred to.

This is the estimate of a man competent to make an estimate if any man was; and he reached the conclusion that less than 5,000,000 acres of swamp lands are at present held by Manitoba available to go back to the Dominion in case this Bill goes through. Again, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) estimated that, because the swamp lands already disposed of by the province had netted the provincial government something like $3 an acre, the remaining swamp lands were of equal value. But, there is no man in this House who knows better than the hon. gentleman himself that the swamp lands in Manitoba that have already been sold were picked lands, lands lying adjacent to settlements and to railways, and consequently of more value than the swamp lands still remaining in the possession of the province. Ninety per cent of the lands that were sold were prairie lands. I think it safe to say that 95 per cent of the remaining swamp lands of Manitoba are practically bush lands, and any hon. gentleman who knows anything about the bush swamp in Manitoba, can have some idea of the comparative value of the bush swamp area and the prairie swamp area. In my own county there is a large area of that kind of land. Some of it has been drained and cleared, and the men who have done this, estimate that it cost them from $15 to $25 an acre to clear and drain it. So, it is safe to say that when the hon. gentleman estimates that the swamp lands remaining in the possession of Manitoba are worth $3 an acre he very much overestimates the value of these lands.

Another statement that the hon. gentleman made and that was in keeping with a great many statements made by hon. gentlemen opposite dealing with this question, was that these lands were never sold in competition but were sold by private sale; and he gave that as a reason why the lands had not brought higher prices. This statement he made in face of the fact that while he himself was Minister of the Interior large tracts of school lands were sold throughout the province of Manitoba by public auction, or so called public auction, and yet the swamp lands sold by the province of Manitoba realized as large a price as the school lands—which were supposed to be good lands, some of them first-class lands —realized in the sales as carried on under the direction of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver).

Mr. OLIVER: May I ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bradbury) to give the figures upon which he bases that statement. I think the House would be glad of that information.

Mr. BRADBURY. I have not the figures at hand. But I am satisfied that when the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Rogers) takes the opportunity to reply he will give the figures. He made the statement yesterday—and I have seen similar statements in the Manitoba papers and reported as having been made in the legislature by the Premier of Manitoba and others—that the swamp lands of Manitoba had realized as good a price as the school lands sold by the late government by competition, so called. Under the late Dominion government peculiar methods of conducting the auction were followed. One was this: If in a given district some of their friends wanted a particular piece of land, some person attended the auction who would bid the land away up above its value, and then would fail to deposit his cheque for 10 per cent as was necessary in order to make the sale binding. This land was supposed to be sold, every man present in the office supposed this tract of land was sold to Mr. So-and-So, to Mr. Smith, we will suppose, who was bidding on it, and the consequence was that the auctioneer in settling up would find that the land was not sold at all. We had evidence of this thing in Manitoba on different occasions, and the friends of the government got the land at their own price.

I wish to say in reply to the charge made by the ex-Minister of the Interior that the swamp lands of Manitoba never having been advertised, that there was one large area that I remember something like 200,000 acres, in the year 1905 or 1906, it was advertised in Toronto, Ottawa and Montreal papers and in American papers for thirty days. That land was situated in my own county and the highest bid that the provincial government received at that time was 52 cents an acre. Now, Sir, knowing the land as I do I did not wonder at it because I did not consider it was worth any more. I want to say right here that knowing the bush swamp land of Manitoba as I do there are hundreds of thousands of acres of it that would be dear if the government gave it as a gift to any one who would undertake to drain it, clear it and put it in shape for cultivation. And still my hon. friend tries to make out that the province of Manitoba is losing by this proposed settlement. Who is to be the judge? Is it the right hon. gentleman who leads the opposition, who knows very little about the province of Manitoba, and I am bound to say cares less, or is it the late Minister of the Interior who is a resident of another province and who has been cheated in a princely fashion by the late government of which he was a member, or is it the people themselves who live in the province of Manitoba? I have an editorial here from the Winnipeg 'Tribune,' a paper that supported the right hon. gentleman for many years, that supported his candidates in every constituency at the last campaign and did all that was possible to defeat the Conservative candidates in every riding of this Dominion. Here is what the Winnipeg 'Tribune' says:

Thursday, February 29.—So far as we can see at present Manitoba is to be congratulated upon the terms embodied in the Bill which Premier Borden has introduced to define the boundaries of this province. Especially are our people to be congratulated upon the financial terms to be accorded to this province.

And this, Mr. Speaker, is what my hon. friend from Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) tries to convince this House is unfair and inadequate to the province of Manitoba, while the right hon. gentleman who leads the opposition takes the opposite tack and claims that the terms are altogether too generous for Manitoba. The article goes on to say:

Mr. Roblin has maintained a long and strenuous battle for terms of equality with Alberta and Saskatchewan and his final victory entitles him to the thanks of the people of this province. The new financial terms make a splendid addition to the income of this province. The argument against the increase advanced by Sir Wilfrid the other day is scarcely worthy of him. The fact that Manitoba has gone along for forty years on a niggardly subsidy, while her more favoured and recently launched sisters, Saskatchewan and Alberta, were accorded princely terms, should be regarded as an irresistible argument in favour of according to Manitoba justice, even if belated. Sir Wilfrid takes the other view for what reason it is difficult to conceive, except it be due to a prejudice against the postage stamp province which the ex-premier has long been suspected of harbouring.

Meantime Premier Roblin and his government and the people of Manitoba are to be congratulated upon the settlement that has been secured.

Now, Mr. Speaker, who is in a better position to speak for the people of Manitoba? The Winnipeg 'Tribune,' an organ of the late government, a paper that championed the cause of the hon. member for Edmonton and his leader, which has the honesty and the fairness to come out and congratulate the Premier of this Dominion and the Premier of Manitoba on this magnificent settlement that has been effected. But we have other witnesses? Take the local legislature now sitting in Winnipeg. Every hon. gentleman knows that for years the local legislature has been unanimous in demanding that the province of Manitoba be placed on an equality with her sister provinces. A few days ago a member of that House, Mr. D. A. Ross, the member for Springfield, was asked his opinion of the action of the right hon. leader of the opposition in this parliament regarding the boundary question, and he made this statement:

Mr. Ross said only snatches of Sir Wilfrid's views had been published, but he declared that as far as the ex-Premier's reported stand of Manitoba-getting-too-much was concerned, he was not favourable.

Mr. Ross hesitated. He said only bits of Sir Wilfrid's speech had been published, and he was eager to express an opinion. If it was true, however, that Sir Wilfrid begrudged Manitoba the money, as retroactively speaking, he is reported to have done, well then Mr. Ross said, he is most certainly opposed to that phase of the ex-Premier's stand.

Mr. Ross is a Liberal member of the local legislature, I might say one of the strongest Liberals in Manitoba, and one of the most ardent supporters of the right hon. gentleman who leads the opposition in this House. Another reference was made by another member, Mr. Molloy, M.P.P., a bright young man, who said on the boundary question:

On the boundary question, he said that Manitoba was being sold out by the arrangement made with the Dominion government. He held that they should have been allowed to retain control of the swamp lands, and that the compensation offered was not sufficient to recompense them. The speaker based his argument in regard to the area of the swamp lands on figures given by the late Minister of the Interior, Frank Oliver.

The Premier, intervening, said that Mr. Oliver at that time had simply been playing a game of politics. He (the Premier) had seen Sir Wilfrid Laurier officially immediately afterwards, and the then Premier of the Dominion had told him that the statements of Mr. Oliver were absolutely untrue.

Now I do not wonder that the right hon. gentleman made that statement in face of the facts laid before this House by my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, when he read to this House a statement which I have just read by Mr. Young and which shows that the swamp lands even at the biggest estimate, comprise less than 5,000,000 acres. Still my hon. friend raised the estimate up to 8,000,000 acres, to suit his argument, and to make it appear that Manitoba was losing a great deal by this transaction.

There was a piece of swamp land sold in the province of Manitoba, and it was sold by public competition as every acre of swamp land has been sold in Manitoba during the past ten years. Books have been opened, provincial valuators have been put over the land, and an upset price put on each parcel, and any man, the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver), for instance, could have walked into the office and bought any of the land that he wanted to buy as hundreds of his Liberal friends did. There was one piece which especially interested Mr. Edward Brown. The hon. gentleman knows to whom I refer, and he knows Mr. Brown is not a Conservative. He is the ex-leader of the Liberal party of Manitoba. There was a large area of land offered for sale, and Mr. Brown put his valuator over that land. The upset price of the government was $2.60 an acre. The valuator came back and advised Mr. Brown that the valuation was too high. The consequence was that Mr. Brown refused to pay $2.60 an acre for the land, but Mr. Brown had the opportunity like any other Liberal in the country. But the truth is, that it would pay the country to give a clear title to much of this swamp lands on condition that they were properly drained. It does seem strange, just on the eve of everyday, common justice being done to the province of Manitoba, that the right hon. leader of the opposition, and his friends, should take the position they are taking at the present time. Instead of assisting the government in settling this question, and allaying the irritation that exists in Manitoba on account of the unfair manner in which they have been treated for years by the late administration, we find these hon. gentlemen arraying one province against another, and trying to incite the jealousy of the lower provinces, and of Ontario as against Manitoba. I hold that this is an unworthy position for hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House to take. If this country is to prosper, and be what it ought to be, a great and prosperous nation, it must be by the united efforts of both parties to unite our different provinces, and unite our people from the Atlantic to the Pacific. When my right hon. friend the leader of the government, is attempting to implement the pledge which he gave to the province of Manitoba, brings in this Bill for the purpose of doing justice, and of placing Manitoba on an equality with the two western provinces, it is hard to understand the attitude of hon. gentlemen opposite in opposing that proposition. We, who have lived in that province during the last thirty years, realising that Manitoba is the pioneer province which has blazed the way for the great provinces that have sprung up to the west of us, feel the unfair and harsh treatment that we have received from the Liberal party in this province during the last eight or ten years. Manitoba has been penalized. Why? Because the Conservative party rose equal to the occasion and turned the rottenest government that ever existed in Manitoba out of power, and placed a Conservative government in power. Ever since that day the Liberals in Ottawa led by the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) have penalized that province and have refused to do it simple, everyday justice. In conclusion, I want to congratulate my right hon. friend the leader of the government upon bringing this Bill in to do for the province what he promised, to give to the province an equality in the great family of provinces, and to place Manitoba in the position which she ought to have occupied years ago.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Quebec East). Mr. Speaker, during the last campaign which terminated on the 21st of September, everybody will remember that loud and many were the promises that, if the Conservative party were to be victorious in the contest, the long-pending controversy over the Manitoba boundaries would be settled to the satisfaction of Manitoba, and the whole of the Dominion. Loud and many were the promises that as soon as a Conservative administration had been installed in Ottawa, Manitoba would cease to be a postage stamp on the map. They were victorious, and now the attempt is being made in this Bill to implement the pledge which was made, not only to the people of Manitoba, but to the people of the whole Dominion. This is a sample of the manner, I suppose, in which the different pledges of the present government are to be implemented. Manitoba, forsooth, by the terms of this Bill and of the order in council to which I shall have to refer also, gets an increase of its boundaries, but there is a stigma placed upon the territory which has been added to it. Manitoba is granted financial terms which no one begrudges because they are large, but which we oppose because they are unfair to the rest of the Dominion. Let me remind the House, that when parliament was dissolved at the end of July last, there were upon the journals of the House resolutions adopted as far back as the month of July, 1908 whereby it had been declared expedient by this House that the boundaries of the province should be extended northerly up to the 60th parallel of latitude, and easterly to the 89th degree of longitude. The resolutions also declared that it was expedient that in the added territory which was given to Manitoba, there should be granted to to the province an allowance in money to be a fair equivalent for the land included in that extent of territory. It may not be out of place that I should quote this part of the resolutions:

> That whereas notwithstanding the extension of territory above described, the ungranted lands of the Crown in the territory so to be added to the said province will still continue to be administered by the government of Canada for the purposes of the Dominion; and the said province will not have the public lands as a source of revenue.
> It is just and equitable to recognize the increased cost of civil government which such extension of territory will occasion to the province, and in view of the premises, to make to the said province an increased allowance by money payment, the amount of which should be the subject of negotiation between the government of Canada and the government of Manitoba.

When parliament was dissolved everybody in Canada knew that upon these resolutions there had been extensive negotiations between the then government of Canada and the government of Manitoba. We had offered to the province of Manitoba an extension of territory such as is described in these resolutions northerly to the 60th parallel of latitude and easterly to the 89th degree of longitude, but the government of Manitoba demurred to these terms, and claimed a very extensive territory indeed—much more than we thought it would be fair to give them. It was only after thrice repeated negotiations that finally, in the month of March last, the province of Manitoba agreed to accept the boundaries which we had tendered them, and which are now embodied in the Bill before the House.

As to the financial terms, we offered what we thought were fair and reasonable terms to the province of Manitoba in lieu of the lands which were to remain in the Dominion, but the province of Manitoba insisted upon negotiating on an altogether different basis. That is to say, the province of Manitoba was not satisfied with simply having compensation for the lands which were included in the territory which was to be added to its then existing area, but insisted on having an allowance for all the lands comprised in her present and future limits, not only upon the 140,000 square miles or thereabouts which are to be given her under this Bill, but upon the 70,000 square miles which constitute her present territory. Upon that basis we could not negotiate and that was the line of cleavage between us and the government of Manitoba when parliament was dissolved. When the present government was organized, Mr. Roblin, the Premier of Manitoba, accompanied by Mr. Campbell, his Attorney-General, came to interview the Cabinet. They presented their claims and they stated they would be satisfied, as they had declared in the course of the year 1911, to accept the boundaries which had been defined in the resolution of July, 1908, but they insisted also, as they insisted with us, on having financial terms given to them, not based upon the extended territory alone, but based upon the whole territory of the province. They concluded their claim in the following language:

We, therefore, most humbly pray and request Your Excellency and your advisers to take such action respecting all and singular the terms as shall give every effect to the extension of the boundaries of the province in accordance with the proposal of the House of Commons contained in a resolution adopted on the 13th of July, 1908, and upon terms of equality with either the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta or the provinces of Ontario or Quebec, or upon such other terms or further terms as may be agreed upon between the federal authorities and the legislature of this province.

We understood, from the public press, that Mr. Roblin received audience and was admitted to the Council Chamber to plead his case. And, after that, we are informed by the declaration of Mr. Roblin himself that he carried every point; that he got everything he had asked for; that he was given the boundaries which we had agreed to give him, and that he was given the financial terms which we thought could not be given. At all events, when Mr. Roblin left Ottawa on that occasion, he was quite exultant and jubilant. So jubilant was he that he had to pour out all over the land the echoes of the joy which filled him and which if pent up would have torn his bosom. He proclaimed his joy and his triumph from the housetops and from the street corners. He buttonholed every reporter that came within speaking distance, and told him all he had achieved. But, unfortunately, Mr. Roblin crowed too soon and his crowing was his undoing, for his boasting aroused from his slumbers Sir James Whitney, the Premier of Ontario. Mr. Roblin in the excess of his joy, interviewed, before he left Ottawa, the reporter of the 'Evening Journal,' and on the 21st of November the 'Evening Journal' thus gives the conversation it had had with Mr. Roblin:

Before leaving for the west last night Premier Roblin of Manitoba made the definite statement that as a result of conferences held here during the last few days a basis of settlement of the Manitoba boundary question had been arrived at. The new boundaries of the province as fixed by the Laurier government and as agreed to by the Manitoba government, have been accepted, but the terms of financial assistance to be given to Manitoba have been varied.

The amount of additional subsidy which Manitoba will receive has not been announced, but it is satisfactory to Premier Roblin and Attorney General Campbell, who have carried on the negotiations with Premier Borden and his colleagues.

The Federal government will this session introduce a Bill providing for the settlement, and it will doubtless be concurred in by the Manitoba legislature. The settlement, it is said, will put Manitoba on an equality in regard to financial terms with Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Premier Roblin said that now that Manitoba was to come into its own and be extended to the shores of Hudson bay, the provincial government would take steps to open up the hinterland and secure all data in regard to the country with a view to the future development of its resources.

From Ottawa, Mr. Roblin went to Toronto, and in Toronto it was natural for him to go to the office of the 'Mail and Empire,' and the 'Mail and Empire' gave out, on the 22nd of November, the confidences he had poured into its ears in the following paragraph:

Hon. R. P. Roblin and Hon. Colin Campbell, of Manitoba, go back to Winnipeg to-day having settled the vexed question of the provincial boundaries.

Premier Roblin anounced to-day that the agreement arrived at with the Federal government provided for territorial extension north and east, as laid down in the proposal of the late government.

The financial settlement which the Laurier government refused to make has been conceded by the Borden ministry, Manitoba, in respect to the added territory being placed on exactly the same financial footing as the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta. This involves a subsidy from the Federal treasury in lieu of the public lands, the whole arrangement being in accord with the expressed wish of the Manitoba legislature. Fort Churchill on Hudson bay thus becomes a Manitoba port.

Mr. Roblin stated that a Bill will be probably introduced in parliament giving effect to this settlement this session. He said that on his return to Manitoba he will set to work on a policy of development of the new north country providing transportation facilities, &c.

And from the 'Mail and Empire' office Mr. Roblin went to the 'News' office and the 'News' gave the tenor of the conversation it had with him on the 21st in the following language:

Hon. Mr. Roblin, Premier of Manitoba, who arrived from Ottawa, stated to the 'News' this afternoon, that through an arrangement with the Federal government the province of Manitoba would have its annual subsidy increased from $200,000 to about $400,000.

'Are you satisfied with the boundary settlement of Manitoba,' he was asked?

'Absolutely,' he replied, it was practically all we asked; Manitoba will henceforth enjoy equality with the other provinces which it has heretofore been denied.'

As I said a moment ago, Mr. Roblin spoke too soon. He awoke Sir James Whitney and when Sir James Whitney saw that Churchill was to become a Manitoba port, Sir James Whitney came down to Ottawa and asked fair or foul that Churchill must belong to Ontario, and then everything was upset. Then the ministerial papers were told that they had to sing another tune, not the tune of the success of Manitoba and of the triumph of Mr. Roblin, but that Manitoba and Ontario had to agree together before any settlement was made. The Ottawa 'Journal' on the 24th of November, contained the following:

The Manitoba boundary question has not yet been settled; it will not be until the claims of Ontario are heard and given that full consideration which their importance demands.

This statement was made to-day by one of the Ontario Cabinet ministers.

'Despite the reports sent out from Ottawa purporting to be official or semi-official, to the effect that this important question had been disposed of, and that in the solution the rights of Ontario were disregarded, you can authoritatively state that such is not the case. He said. 'The government simply discussed the matter with Premier Roblin, but as yet the reported concessions have not been granted.'

Following this tug-of-war between these doughty champions, Sir James Whitney on the one side and Mr. Roblin on the other, there were marches and counter-marches, manœuvring in one direction and another, secret expeditions from Ottawa to Winnipeg and back to Ottawa again, secret expeditions from Ottawa to Toronto and back to Ottawa again. Mr. Roblin insisted that Churchill and Nelson should belong to Manitoba; Sir James Whitney insisted that, fair or foul, Ontario was bound to have both Churchill and Nelson. And so on, for three long months or thereabouts, these negotiations went on, until the whole affair was patched up in the shape of the hybrid conception which we now have in this Bill and the order in council giving to Manitoba the sovereignty without the land, and to Ontario the land without the sovereignty. And this is what they call justice to the province of Manitoba; this is what they call equality with Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Let us go a little further into this mystery. Let me quote now the order in council which is to accompany the present Bill, but for which the present Bill would not be necessary. In that order in council, which was passed on the 20th of February, it is stated:

The Committee of the Privy Council have had before them a report from the right hon. the Prime Minister submitting,—in connection with the proposed extensions of the limits of the respective provinces of Ontario and Manitoba as defined by resolutions of the House of Commons passed on the 13th July, 1908,—that the government of Ontario represents that upon the enlargement of the territory of the province as proposed it would or might be desirable in the interest of the province to extend the provincial railway known as the Timiskaming and Northern Ontario railway at present in operation between North Bay and Cochrane in the said province to a suitable port on Hudson bay; that it may be found necessary or expedient to select for such Hudson bay terminus a point at or near the mouth of the Nelson river, and that as the estuary of the Nelson lies some distance westward of the proposed western or northwestern boundary of the province, the government desires that such arrangements be made as will enable the province, or such commission or public corporation as may be thereunto authorized on behalf of the province, to construct, maintain and operate that portion of the proposed extension of the said provincial railway which may be projected within the extended boundaries of the province of Manitoba for the purpose of reaching the terminus to be selected as aforesaid upon the waters of Hudson bay.

The Prime Minister states that he considers that reasonable provision should be made to give effect to this request on the part of Ontario in so far as it is within the authority of the government and parliament of Canada.

These words are very suggestive, because, whilst this concession to the province of Ontario is made out of the domain of the province of Manitoba, it is evident, from the caveat here included, that the government of the day which passed this order in council has very serious doubts that this is giving anything at all to the province of Ontario. Then the order in council goes on to say that the province of Ontario is to be given out of the domain now to be constituted the province of Manitoba, a strip of land five miles wide until the harbour of Port Nelson is reached.

Well, Sir, is this a settlement? Can the province of Manitoba be satisfied with this? I know the difficulties that my right hon. friend had to contend with in giving an interpretation to the law satisfactory both to Ontario and to Manitoba. I know the difficulties, because we had the same difficulties to face. We had to arbitrate between Ontario and Manitoba, and we gave the best judgment we could on the case presented to us. We selected, as the boundary line between Ontario and Manitoba, the 89th degree of longitude. That was a clear-cut, well-defined line. We may have been right or we may have been wrong; but whether we were right or wrong, the position of each party was well-known, and the verdict was fair as between them. It may be that it was not satisfactory to one party, but I repeat that it was fair to both. But the present agreement is fair neither to the one party nor to the other: it is not fair to Manitoba, because it takes away a portion of its domain to give it to another province; it is not fair to Ontario, because Ontario, which wants to build a railway through that portion of Manitoba, must forfeit its present charter in order to continue its own railway through that province. The whole settlement may be well described as a black eye to Manitoba, a gold brick to Ontario. My right hon. friend, when he presented to the House the other day the resolution on which this Bill is founded, was emphatic in stating that this Bill was brought in in order to give justice to the province of Manitoba, in order to put it on an equality with the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. Still more emphatic was my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, who recalled the statement made by myself on one occasion, that there was a feeling of irritation which should be alleviated. I agree to all this, but does any one contend that this measure is putting the province of Manitoba on a footing of equality with the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta? It is quite true that the province of Alberta has not its lands; it is true that the province of Saskatchewan has not its lands either; but if neither of them has its lands, their lands have not been given to another province. It is quite true, the boundaries of the province of Manitoba have been extended; it is quite true that Manitoba will no longer be a postage stamp on the map; it is quite true that when a man from Manitoba looks at the map, he will not be humiliated or mortified by the smallness of the province he inhabits; but when he looks at the map he will be shocked at the bar sinister which crosses the province of Manitoba, and which will forever proclaim to the world the inferiority of Manitoba to the neighbouring provinces. This is the condition of what is called a fair settlement. It is impossible that the government of Manitoba may accept such a settlement.

But, Sir, what is the reason which is put forward by the government why this settlement, so called, should be accepted by the province of Manitoba? The very words which were uttered the other day by my right hon. friend in presenting the Bill were that Manitoba cannot complain because the public lands in Manitoba did not belong to that province. Sir, would you have believed that you would ever hear such language in the mouth of my right hon. friend the present Prime Minister? The Prime Minister has said again and again to the people of Manitoba that though they have not the lands at the present time, of right they should have them, and that as soon as he was in office he would see that they were given to them. This statement has been made by my right hon. friend on more than one occasion. It has been made by the Minister of the Interior, by the present Minister of State (Mr. Roche), by the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen), by the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Aikins), by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury), in fact it has been made by the whole Conservative party. Shall I exhume that document, at one time often spoken of but now hidden beneath the dust of oblivion, the Halifax platform? The Halifax platform says in so many words that the provinces must have their public lands. Mr. Borden, speaking at Halifax, as far back as August 21, 1907, when he laid down the Halifax platform, said:—

> In 1905 the Conservatives took the position that under our constitution the public domain within each province ought to be committed to the management and administration of the people of that province through their provincial governments. That was the basis of arrangement between the four provinces originally constituting the Dominion. At the present time every province in Canada controls and administers its public lands except the three provinces of Manitoba Saskatchewan and Alberta.

And he concludes as follows:—

> We have not receded from the policy which we announced two years ago, and therefore we are prepared to restore their public lands to the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan upon fair terms.

Manitoba is not mentioned here, but as the policy is to place Manitoba on a footing of equality with Saskatchewan and Alberta, it goes without saying that Manitoba also should have her public lands restored to her. But if there was any doubt about it that doubt was removed this summer. What I have just read is somewhat ancient history, but we have also comparatively recent history. We have first of all one of the numerous amended platforms of my right hon. friend during the last election, and in that he stated in so many wards that one of the planks of the Conservative party if they are restored to power will be:

> The granting of their natural resources to the prairie provinces.

There is still more. My right hon. friend last summer toured Manitoba. I shall not refer to what he said in other provinces, but I shall call the attention of the House to what he said in Manitoba, speaking in Winnipeg. Listen to his words:

Before discussing a subject of great public interest now under the consideration of parliament, I desire to touch upon certain questions of paramount importance to the people of the west. To-day in Canada six provinces enjoy the right to control and administer the public lands, mines, minerals and other natural resources within their boundaries. That right is not enjoyed by the three prairie provinces. The Liberal-Conservative party since 1902 has firmly asserted and maintained the rights of these three provinces to their public domain. We stand for that right to-day and we will maintain it. The public lands, and natural resources are vested in the Crown, to be administered for the benefit of the people. In six provinces the Crown, in dealing with the public domain acts upon the advice of the provincial ministers and under laws enacted by the provincial legislatures. In the three prairie provinces the Crown in dealing with such lands acts upon the advice of the federal ministers and under laws enacted by the federal parliament. Why should there be any such discrimination against the people of these three provinces? The day is not far distant when Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta will receive from a Liberal-Conservative government at Ottawa the just recognition of their undoubted right to their public lands and natural resources.

There is a Conservative administration in Ottawa to-day and it is dealing with that province, not however, by giving the lands to that province.

Then at Brandon my right hon. friend spoke in these words:

> In 1902, in 1905, in 1907, and again in 1910, we have stood for the right of the western provinces to own and control their public domain. It is the right of the people of those provinces to have their public lands and natural resources administered by their own governments under the control of their own legislatures. They say that they are free men and being free men in a free country have as good a right to control through their own local legislatures, and by their own provincial executives, the administration of their public lands and natural resources as have the people of any of the eastern provinces who enjoy and have enjoyed that right. The Liberal-Conservative party supports that claim and will enforce it at the first opportunity.

Will enforce it at the first opportunity! Is there not the opportunity here to do so? What prevents my right hon. friend from carrying out the promises which he made to the people of Brandon and the people of Winnipeg and the people of the whole province of Manitoba, in Manitoba?. My right hon. friend had the opportunity to do so, but has deferred doing so. What reasons he has for this course I do not know, but I know one thing, and the statement was cheered a moment ago that the opportunity would come for him to do so, I know one thing that whenever my right hon. friend attempts to carry out the promises he made to the people of those provinces and to give back to Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, their public lands, he will find in his path the same lions which he finds to-day and which make him recoil from his position and force him to go back upon his promise.

That is very significant, but there is something which is perhaps more significant than what has been said by the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister is not the only one who has spoken in grandiloquent terms upon this question. My hon. friend the Secretary of State (Mr. Roche) in a speech delivered in 1906 on this question, on a motion made by Mr. Lake, then member for Qu'Appelle, on the question of the coal strike, said:—

> The hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) has spoken about the humiliating position in which our country has been placed. In the first place I claim it was a humiliating position in which to place those new provinces to withhold from their hands the control of their own public lands. Had the rights of the people of those provinces been fought for as they should have been fought for by hon. gentlemen supporting the government, the provinces would have control over their lands to-day, and the provinces would have been able to grapple with their own coal strike without calling on the federal government for relief.

It was a humiliation to the people of Saskatchewan and Alberta that their own public lands were not given to them. If it was a humiliation for Saskatchewan and Alberta, how are we to characterize the deeper humiliation of Manitoba whose lands are given, not to Manitoba, but to another province, the province of Ontario? I have only to say that, in my humble judgment, the position taken in this respect, by Manitoba and by the government of Canada in relation to Manitoba is poor business, politics, and still poorer statesmanship.

Wtih regard to the financial terms given to the province of Manitoba, I have not much to say beyond what has been said by my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Pugsley) and my hon. friend from Edmonton (Mr. Oliver). I do not begrudge at all the money which under the terms is given to the province of Manitoba. My hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury) stated that I had been the enemy of Manitoba. Why should I be the enemy of Manitoba? I am a Canadian, and look upon this question as a Canadian. And, as a Canadian, and a representative of the people, I am bound to regard it not merely from the standpoint of the extension of Manitoba's boundaries, but from the standpoint of the stewardship which I, like the hon. gentleman and every other member of this House, owe to the people of Canada. So far as I am concerned, Manitoba is welcome to the money. But I have serious objection to the principle upon which this money is to be given to Manitoba. It is not to the giving of the money, nor to the sum, high as it is, that we take exception; but I say without hesitation, that the principle involved in this Bill cannot be defended before any audience outside of the province of Manitoba. Nay, it cannot be defended, even in Manitoba. Manitoba is following the example so often given of trying to secure special terms from the Dominion, and it is a rather ungracious task to fight against the province of Manitoba getting more money than she is now receiving from the Federal Treasury. But I have this to say to my hon. friend from Selkirk, that the question is higher than the mere question of money. We stated in 1908, when we introduced the resolution now partly implemented by the present government, for the extension of the boundaries of Manitoba, that, so far as this territory was concerned, as the addition to the province would involve a greater expenditure on the part of the provincial government, it would be fair, as Manitoba was not getting the lands, that she should get the equivalent of those lands. But that is not what is done to-day. It is not an equivalent for the land of this territory that the present government has agreed to, but this government undertakes to review the whole financial terms of Manitoba, a province which has existed for more than thirty years, and to give new terms, new facilities, new subsidies to that province over that which she has enjoyed for many years past. Is there any justification to this? What justification can there be for such an attitude? This provision to give more money to the province of Manitoba over the subsidy which she now receives from the Federal Treasury is in no way a corollary of the extension of the boundaries in Manitoba. Whether the boundaries are extended or not does not affect this question. Manitoba can always come here, if she chooses, to ask for better terms. But there is a limit to this thing. There is a parity amongst the provinces, and there is no reason in the world why one province should be better treated than another. But since the principle is admitted by the present government of treating with Manitoba on a basis which was not the basis of the resolution of 1908, since the principle is admitted that better terms should be given to the province of Manitoba, because of what she is now receiving for the cost of the administration in the province, I should have supposed that the most natural way would have been for the present government to give Manitoba lands and not money. I believe Manitoba preferred to have the lands, and no one knows it better than my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Rogers). Again and again the province of Manitoba through its legislature, expressed its preference, in the arrangement of the matter which we are now considering, to have lands and not money. Why were not the lands given? Why were not the promises made by the Prime Minister to the people of Manitoba not twelve months ago—hardly eight months ago—why were they not implemented? It was his policy, a policy for which he has fought for years. He proclaimed that policy from one end of the Dominion to the other. He has the majority; every one behind him was ready to vote to give the lands to Manitoba. And yet, it is not lands but money that he is giving to Manitoba. What the reason can be I do not know. But one thing I do know, and that is that the question is not so simple for the right hon. gentleman now that he bears the responsibilities of government, as it was when he sat on this side without responsibility. It was easy to say: We will give the lands. And, for my part, so far as concerns those lands which are not prairie lands, I see no difficulty at all in giving them to the province. My objection to handing over the prairie lands is that these lands are the basis of our policy of immigration, and it has always seemed to be right that we should retain that basis of our policy in our own hands. I do not know but that my right hon. friend (Mr. Borden), may have come to the conclusion, now that he has the responsibilities of office, now that he must be responsible for what he does, now that the difficulties which we saw when in office, but which he ignored, loom up so large and so dark before him, that he must recall his oft-proclaimed policy and declare that he will not give the lands, but will give the money instead of the lands. With regard to the compensation in money, whether the province of Manitoba receives less or receives more, for my part I am not very much concerned. If she receives more, she is welcome to it; if she receives less, that is her business. The question is not there, the question is in the constitutional difficulty. What reason can be given for changing the allowance for debt which was given in 1885, to the province of Manitoba? What reason can be urged in behalf of Manitoba that cannot be urged also on behalf of every other province in the Dominion? I listened yesterday with great attention to the argument on this point presented by my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen). As usual, he put his case clearly and in felicitous language. I have no objection to offer to his case or to the premises he laid down, so far as they went. But he did not go far enough in the premises he laid down. I followed him and agreed with him as to the basis of his debt allowance. When the four original provinces of confederation were joined, the Dominion assumed the debts of those provinces, Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. The terms were not very clear at first. But, in the course of time they were all elucidated. The debt, I think, was calculated to be some $90,000,000. At all events, it was stated officially, and has been accepted ever since, that the debt which was then accepted by the Dominion government, and of which the provinces were relieved represented an average of $13.43 per head of the population of that day.

And whenever a new province was brought into the Dominion, it was thought reasonable, seeing that the newcomers were to undertake a share of the burden in the government of the province, that an allowance should be given to them at the rate of $32.43 per head of the population. That has been the accepted policy ever since, that was the policy accepted for Manitoba, that was the policy accepted for British Columbia, for Prince Edward Island, and for all the other provinces as they came into the Dominion. But after the province had come into the Dominion, if she was entitled to compensation on her population at the time she entered the Dominion, what reason can be alleged why she should be given better terms than any of the other provinces, on an increased population? The only reason advanced by my hon. friend was that the thing had been done for Saskatchewan and Alberta. I take issue with him. Alberta and Saskatchewan were not treated differently from Manitoba, or Prince Edward Island or British Columbia. Remember that the population of Alberta and Saskatchewan, when they entered confederation, was larger than the population of Manitoba when she entered confederation, or that of Prince Edward Island, and of British Columbia. But the moment British Columbia, Prince Edward Island and Manitoba entered confederation, from that moment they assumed their share of the advantages and of the burdens of confederation. After that they are on a parity with the other provinces. I repeat that there is no difference whatever between the position of Manitoba and the position of Saskatchewan and Alberta, with the only exception that the population was larger in the one case than in the other case. If there is any difference at all, it is that Manitoba was treated more generously than any other province of the Dominion was ever treated. No one knows it better than my hon. friend. He knows that time and again the terms which were originally allowed to Manitoba were improved, as he said so himself yesterday four or five times. It is so, they were increased from time to time, but they were increased not on any principle but out of generosity, they were increased, and more favourable terms were given every time, not because Manitoba was entitled to more favourable terms, but simply because she was in some condition of dire distress. My hon. friend states, and that was the only argument which he gave in support of his views, that there were precedents for what we are now doing. There is no precedent at all. Again I repeat that the terms which were given to Manitoba from time to time were not advanced on any principle at all, but simply in order to assist the province in somewhat difficult circumstances.

The hon. gentleman stated in answer to a statement made yesterday by my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Pugsley), that the thing had been done without a conference. True, the terms were increased without a conference; but this shows only the necessity of having a conference. If we had had a conference we would not be where we are to-day, we would not have Manitoba coming and knocking at our doors for better terms, and another province likely to come for better terms. We would not have British Columbia knocking at our door for better terms if we had had a conference at that time, or at any time, to settle once for all what should be the relations between the provinces one towards another, and it seems to me that the basis of confederation would be more secure, secure though it is. What answer can be given to the argument of my hon. friend from St. John when he says that if you do it for one province you have to do it for another province? Why is it that Manitoba is to-day receiving a debt allowance on some $8,000,000? Simply because the population of Saskatchewan and Alberta, when they entered confederation, being estimated only at 250,000 each, their debt allowance amounted to $8,000,000. If the population of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta had been 100,000 they would have been entitled to less, and so would Manitoba; if their population had been only 50,000, they would have been entitled to still less. That would be acting according to principle. There is no answer at all, I submit, to the statement which was made yesterday by my hon. friend from St. John that you are opening the door to claims which you cannot resist when they are presented. If the province of British Columbia asks to have her terms improved under the same pretence as Manitoba is asking, because the population of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, estimated at 250,000, gets $8,000,000, what answer can you give British Columbia? Will it be any answer to say, you are a mountain province and Manitoba is a prairie province? because after all, that is what it amounts to. You have to treat the three provinces similarly, and so far as the money terms are concerned, the amounts should be exactly as they are. I see no serious objection to that. But so far as the debt allowance is concerned this is an abuse of the power of the majority; and moreover, I do not hesitate to say and to repeat that you are opening the door to consequences which you will reap at no distant time.

There is another feature of this Bill for which there is also no possible justification, and that is the arrearages to be given to the province of Manitoba. Again I repeat what I said a moment ago to my hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury), it is not a pleasant task, it is rather an invidious task, to have to insist on this principle, because the effect would be to deprive the province of Manitoba of what she is getting under this resolution. But what is the basis of this resolution? My right hon. friend stated, in opening this debate, that Manitoba had asked her arrearages to date back to 1905. Why? Because it was in 1905 that Alberta and Saskatchewan were brought into the Dominion. He thought, however, that would be giving Manitoba too much, even for his extravagance, and he said, we will give her these arrearages dating back to the month of July, 1908. Why from the month of July, 1908? Because at that time this parliament passed a resolution to which I will refer, providing for the extension of the boundaries of Manitoba. Well, I could conceive that there would be some justification for the allowance which is now made if the province of Manitoba were in a position to tell us in 1908, we would have accepted the boundaries which were then offered, but we could not come to any settlement, because the late administration denied us the terms you are now giving to us. Under such circumstances there might be a basis of justification. But if Manitoba did not get her enlarged boundaries before this year, it is because the late administration differed with Manitoba upon the financial terms. The reason why Manitoba was not given enlarged boundaries at that time was because she did not accept the offer that was made her. Shall I give you the proof? Here it is, in the petition presented to this government by Manitoba herself. This is what is said in the memorial of the province:

> While we maintain that the province has been unfairly dealt with in this respect, and, as a matter of right, is entitled to have included within its area all the northern territory proposed to be divided between Manitoba and Ontario, we desire to apprise Your Excellency of our decision, and the conclusion arrived at by the legislature of the province in the year 1911.

In the year 1911. It was only in the year 1911 that Manitoba acepted these boundaries and, under such circumstances, I put it to the common sense of every hon. gentleman in this House, what reason can there be why Manitoba should be given the extra time which is granted before she accepted these boundaries. It is too palpable not to be interpreted at once. But the government has decided otherwise, for what motive I do not know, for what motive I cannot comprehend, and, therefore, for these reasons it seems to me that this Bill and these terms are altogether extravagant, uncalled for and unjustified. As to the allocation for public buildings, I think the terms are generous but I do not discuss them. There is, Sir, in the province from which I come an agitation going on upon this question and in a paper which supports the government, 'L'Evenement' of Quebec, we read two or three days ago, that there should be no agitation, that the minister would speak and that they would give us an explanation. They are not in a great hurry to speak. We have been expecting that they would give us their policy. They have not done so and as they have not discussed this particular part of the subject I will not discuss it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Sir. WILFRID LAURIER. I understand very well the spirit of those cheers. These gentlemen have a policy that they dare not explain, but they want us to discuss it even before they have presented it to the House. That is the spirit in which the subject is approached. Why do not these gentlemen speak if they want us to reply to them? Let them speak and for my part I shall be very happy to give them my views.

Mr. PELLETIER. Why not give them now?

Sir. WILFRID LAURIER. Because my hon. friend (Mr. Pelletier) has not said anything. I understand that my hon. friend has a speech covering a ream of paper to prove his point. I shall be happy to hear him. But, in the meantime I stand within the lines of Torres Vedras. I shall speak when the time has come and then I shall not be backward at all.

But, with reference to the case, as we have it now before us, I beg to say that in my humble opinion, the government have approached this question, not from the point of view of principle, but from the point of view of expediency, and as is usual when expediency is substituted for principle, they have created new trouble for themselves and for the country. They have brought into existence new difficulties which it will be more difficult to settle than the difficulties that they are now pretending to settle. They have failed to give to Manitoba that fair measure of justice to which Manitoba is entitled, they have failed to give to Ontario, the right to which Ontario thought she was entitled, they have opened the door to claims which are just and fair, and just as equitable as anything that is now to be found in this Bill, and, in my humble judgment, they have done more, they have violated some of the soundest principles of constitutional government as applied in this country. Therefore, for these reasons, I beg to move in amendment:

That this Bill be not now read a second time, but that it be resolved, that while this House is favourable to the extension of the boundaries of the province of Manitoba, it is of opinion that the terms under which it is proposed to make the said extension, as set forth in this Bill and in the order in council of the 20th February, 1912, are unfair and unjust both to the people of Manitoba as well as to the people of the other provinces of the Dominion.

Hon. ROBERT ROGERS (Minister of the Interior). Mr. Speaker, before venturing to make answer to some of the arguments as advanced by my right hon. friend who has just resumed his seat (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and before undertaking to deal with some of the provisions as contained in the Bill now before us, for our consideration, I desire to say but one word in respect to my own position as a supporter of this Bill, and it is this, that I do not wish to be understood by the members of this House, as supporting this Bill simply and only because I happen, for the time being, to occupy a seat upon the floor of this parliament as a representative from a constituency within the borders of the province to which this measure directly relates. But, Mr. Speaker, I desire to be understood by the hon. members of this House, and by the people of this country, as supporting this Bill, because I find in its provisions evidence that it adopts the principle of equity and of justice. I desire to be understood as supporting this Bill, because I find in the clear and straightforward statement, as made by the right hon. gentleman who leads this government (Mr. Borden), when he moved the second reading of this Bill yesterday afternoon, representing, as he does, the great party to which he belongs, and which he leads, I recognize that he stands to maintain and to uphold that grand old traditional policy of the party, that has ever stood in the past and that I trust, ever may stand in the future, to uphold equal rights and equal justice to all and all parts of our country. That, to my mind, is exactly what this Bill undertakes to represent. It promises nothing more and it promises nothing less. This Bill is made necessary in order that we might rectify a condition of affairs through which and by which a serious injustice has been done to the province of Manitoba.

The right hon. gentleman, dealing with this question this afternoon, has gone over somewhat of the history of the conditions which prevail in Manitoba, but he did not undertake to tell the whole story to the House. He has not told the House that Manitoba occupied a position of inequality with every province in this Dominion; he has not told the House that during the past eight or ten years that province pleaded with him, as the leader of the Dominion government, to rectify the injustice and to remedy the adverse conditions of which she complained. We have, as was well said by the right hon. the Prime Minister two classes of conditions in respect to provinces in this confederation. We have provinces that own their own lands, their mines, and their natural resources, and we have the three prairie provinces that have been treated upon an entirely different basis. Now, when in 1901 the people of Manitoba presented their views as represented by a unanimous legislature to the right hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, then Prime Minister, we were told that we would have to wait for the terms and conditions which we were pleading for, until such time as the new provinces would be formed out of the Northwest Territories. We regarded that answer as reasonable and we so accepted it in Manitoba. We in Manitoba waited in patience for the day and for the hour when it might suit the convenience of the right hon. gentleman to introduce the necessary legislation for the formation of these provinces, and, when that day and that hour came Manitoba was represented here pressing her claims. But, we very soon found that we came here under circumstances well described by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury) this afternoon; we found that our claims were to be treated by the then Prime Minister and by his government as a whole, as a political question. We came here representing a unanimous province and our first words to the right hon. gentlemen were in effect that a fair and just settlement of Manitoba's claims would in no way effect either one party or the other. But, that did not seem to satisfy my right hon. friend; he did not think that such was the opinion of his own political friends in Manitoba. Presenting that case as strongly as was possible for the representatives of Manitoba to present it, it was necessary for my right hon. friend to make some answer and while he did not do the representatives of the province the honour of giving them a direct answer upon that occasion, he made a statement from his place in parliament which was in effect: that Manitoba could not be treated with, that Manitoba's position could not be considered at the time, simply because he had sitting behind him in this House a gentleman who represented that territory and who had entered an objection. And, when we made inquiry, as to why the hon. gentleman representing a small portion of that territory was objecting, we were told that the hon. member for the constituency of Mackenzie objected by reason of the fact that he was fortunate enough to secure a Liberal majority in that particular district, and, therefore, he did not want it to go to the province of Manitoba or to anywhere else. That is a sample of the treatment which we were receiving from the Prime Minister, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, at that time. It is true that the public press took some note of that statement and the right hon. gentleman found it necessary to meet that objection, and he prepared a Minute of Council about a month later and transmitted it to the province of Manitoba. In this minute of Council he undertakes to find another excuse. It is dated March 21, 1905, and the concluding paragraphs set forth:

The committee are likewise of the opinion that the desire of the province of Manitoba for an extension of its boundaries to the shores of Hudson bay is not an unreasonable one, and they suggest that when the measures now before parliament for the formation of the two provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan are disposed of, the subject of such extension of the boundaries of Manitoba might profitably be considered. This committee think it possible that in this connection questions would arise which concern other provinces inasmuch as the territory lying to the north of the other provinces may be made the subject of requests of a character similar to that of the province of Manitoba in the present case. The committee, therefore, recommend that at a convenient date after the formation of the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan the request of Manitoba for an extension northward be taken up with the object of coming to a speedy conclusion, and trust that this suggestion may be acceptable to the government of the province of Manitoba whose welfare and development the present ministry desire to promote in every way compatible with their obligations towards the other provinces of the Dominion.

Now, Mr. Speaker, you find here two excuses by the right hon. gentleman as to why the extension of the Manitoba boundaries should not take effect at once. The first excuse was that it might be necessary to consult other provinces in this matter. It is true that my right hon. friend undertook upon that occasion exactly the same course that he is taking to-day so far as the province of Ontario and the province of Manitoba are concerned. He is disappointed to-day, in that it was impossible for him to make trouble between the province of Ontario and the province of Manitoba. I know that it is disappointing to the right hon. gentleman to see that the province of Manitoba and the province of Ontario have been able to effect a settlement which has been acceptable to both provinces and entirely satisfactory on every ground. My right hon. friend in this Minute of Council next told us—and I would remind you that this Minute of Council was dated in 1905—that he would endeavour to bring about a speedy settlement of Manitoba's claims. Well, what about that speedy settlement? Here we are in this parliament seven years later proposing a settlement, and I am sure if the right hon. gentleman had been allowed politically to live, and finish his work, that the province of Manitoba would have waited seventy-seven times seven years before justice was rendered to her by him. The right hon. gentleman did not like the idea of that little province of Manitoba sending down to Ottawa eight or nine supporters of the right hon. Mr. Borden when in opposition as well as when in power. That is the only reason I can see why we did not get fair terms from Sir Wilfrid Laurier on that occasion. Now, the leader of the opposition takes objection to the fact that Manitoba is getting certain arrears in respect of the claim which she had from that date in 1905 down to the present time. In 1905, by virtue of that Minute of Council, Manitoba was obliged by the then government to meet in conference the other provinces and that no doubt, with the object of delaying the settlement of Manitoba's claims. That conference took place in 1906, and in 1907 we were promised in the Speech from the Throne that a Bill would be presented to parliament by which this vexed question would be settled, but, the pledge of the right hon. gentleman as usual was not kept and no Bill was introduced.

It is true, a resolution was introduced in 1908, and in 1909, a copy of that resolution and of a Bill, as prepared by the right hon. gentleman, was transmitted to the government of the province of Manitoba for their consideration. The moment the government of Manitoba received that Bill, they sent representatives to Ottawa to discuss terms and conditions with the right hon. gentleman. When we arrived we complained that the boundaries provided for were not those to which the province of Manitoba was entitled. I am not going into the details of that matter, which were fully covered by my hon. friend from Brandon (Mr. Aikins), last night. But when the representatives of Manitoba found in 1909, as was stated to the delegation by the right hon. gentleman himself, that the Liberal members assembled around him, as representing the province of Manitoba, had decided on those boundaries, and therefore, they were fixed, and finally fixed, as far as he was concerned, we felt that there was no other course open to us, under the circumstances, than to accept the boundaries as laid down, and they were accepted by us. Manitoba heard nothing more during the year 1910. During the year, 1911, we received an invitation to come and meet the right hon. gentleman, and his colleagues. That conference took place, lasting for two afternoons, and no settlement of any kind or description was reached, because the right hon. gentleman did not appear to be willing to treat Manitoba in the fair manner in which we believed she was entitled to be treated. But, worse than the conditions proposed, and the delay which was practised by the right hon. gentleman during his régime, was the policy by which he penalized and punished the province of Manitoba to such an extent that I want to say, from my place in this House, that no amount of money which this parliament could vote could compensate the province of Manitoba for the injury which was done her by the actions and the words of the right hon. gentleman.

Now, a good deal has been said during the course of this discussion in regard to the swamp lands of the province of Manitoba. If there was no other reason, this very question of the swamp lands furnishes a good and sufficient reason why the province of Manitoba has been at the door of the Dominion of Canada asking for a rearrangement of the terms which were made in 1885. If the terms which were then made, had been faithfully and loyally kept by the Dominion of Canada, there would perhaps have been less reason why the province of Manitoba should be here to-day asking for the changed conditions which she is asking for; and if there is one man in public life to-day who is more responsible than another for the violation of that contract of 1885, in respect of the swamp lands, it is the right hon. gentleman who was the leader of the late Liberal government. Under the contract of 1885, between the government of Manitoba and the Dominion government, Manitoba was to receive certain swamp lands; and let me give you a sample of how these lands were dealt out to the province. Under that contract an arrangement was arrived at by which certain inspectors were to be appointed to go out and decide what sections or quarter sections were swamp lands and what were not. It was provided that the government of Manitoba would have the right to appoint one or more representatives on a commission for that purpose, and the Dominion a like number; and as soon as the government of the right hon. gentleman opposite took office, one of the first things they did was to dismiss Manitoba's representative on that commission, in order that Manitoba might be penalized and punished. Following that, when a Liberal government was in power in Manitoba, an effort was made by the government of the right hon. gentleman opposite, during 1898, the first full year after they came into power, to convey certain swamp lands to the province of Manitoba. As will be in the knowledge of hon. members of this House, the Liberal government was defeated in Manitoba in the year 1899, and how do you suppose the province was then treated by the Liberal government at Ottawa in respect to its swamp lands? In the year following, in the first half of 1899, the province got 160 acres of swamp lands from the government of the right hon. gentleman; a short time afterwards they got about 30,000 acres more; in 1901, they did not get an acre; in 1902, in the first half of the year they got 20,000 acres more; in the last half of the same year they got 160 acres more. I will give you another sample, from a Minute of Council as prepared by the government of Canada, of how they deprived the province of Manitoba of a great portion of the territory that rightly belonged to her. That Minute of Council, which was passed on the 28th of September, 1904, after reciting that the inspectors had examined an area of 284,000 acres, goes on to say:

> The minister states that of the area thus examined the commissioners find an area of 146,274 acres falling to the province as swamp lands.
> That by a comparison of the schedules furnished by the commissioners with the books of the Department of the Interior and its agencies in Manitoba, it has been found that of the total area of 146,274 acres selected as such swamp lands, an area of 43,192·27 acres is available.
> The minister submits a revised schedule of such of the lands included in the schedule of the commissioners as are found available, comprising an area of 43,192·27 acres, and, being satisfied of the accuracy of the same, recommends that the lands enumerated therein be vested in His Majesty King Edward VII, for the purposes of the province of Manitoba, under the provisions of the fourth section of chapter 47 of the Revised Statutes of Canada.

By that one act alone the government of the right hon. gentleman were able to take away that which their own inspectors claimed belonged to the province of Manitoba. In that one inspection of 284,000 acres, they were willing to give to the province of Manitoba only 43,000 acres, and keep over 140,000 acres, which, as they themselves admitted, belonged to the province of Manitoba. I may say that the same condition was applied throughout, with the result that nearly a million acres of the swamp lands belonging to the province of Manitoba were used by the government of the right hon. gentleman opposite for their own purposes.

I say it was no wonder Manitoba complained of her conditions and complained bitterly in respect to the matter of swamp lands. The same conditions continued all the way through. We had an interest in certain lands upon which a mortgage had been given by the province of Manitoba in connection with the Hudson Bay railway and Manitoba pleaded with the government of the right hon. gentleman opposite again and again to have those lands surveyed but without success, with the result that Manitoba had to accept the cash value of the obligation or even less than the cash value of the obligation out against them; and a few days after the Canadian Northern Railway got control of those lands they were able to come down here to the government at Ottawa and secure from them the right to go to Saskatchewan and select the very best lands found there. This prevented the province of Manitoba from getting justice and the resources of the Dominion of Canada were exploited entirely for the benefit of a railway corporation. I might continue with the discussion of the manner in which the district of Keewatin was taken from Manitoba and various other matters but I shall not take up the time of the House in dealing with these details. I shall at once take up the question that has been so fully discussed by the right hon. gentleman (Sir. Wilfrid Laurier) and by every other hon. gentleman on the other side of the House who has taken part in this debate. The right hon. gentleman complains that the terms and conditions as provided by this bill should not date back to the year 1908. I would remind my right hon. friend that this is no new course for this House to take. My right hon. friend undertakes to tell the House that it is a violation of the constitution that such a course should be taken. This House did the very same thing in 1869 and again in 1885 for the provinces of Ontario, Nova Scotia, Quebec and New Brunswick and the same principle; the same course that is being adopted by this government to-day was adopted by the governments of those days. My hon. friend from St. John undertook to tell us yesterday that Manitoba had made a final settlement of her claims in 1885 and told us something more, in which he was supported by the hon. member from Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) that before this House approves of the bill now before us for consideration, we should invite a conference of the different provinces of the Dominion to consider whether or not the terms and conditions being granted to the province would be acceptable and satisfactory to the other provinces of Canada.

Mr. OLIVER. It is hardly that way. My idea was that there should be a conference of the provinces to enable the other provinces to have their claims dealt with, at the same time as the claims of the province of Manitoba.

Mr. ROGERS. My hon. friend from Edmonton may have had that idea, and I can quite understand, perhaps, that he does not know as much about that question, or at least should not know as much about it as the hon. member for St. John. I think I shall surprise you and shall surprise this House, when I say that the very claim embodied in the Bill now before us was presented by the premier of the province of Manitoba to an inter-provincial conference held in the city of Ottawa in the year 1906, and further, that the province of Manitoba on that occasion, was able to get a unanimous endorsation from the conference, and that it had no better friend upon that occasion, no man who better helped and assisted to bring about the unanimous decision in favour of Manitoba, than the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley). Yet, six years after, for reasons best known to himself, he comes down to this parliament and undertakes to tell us that we should again go before an interprovincial conference with respect to our claims, as now presented. When this conference was called a letter was addressed to the premiers of the different provinces of Canada, as follows:

Ottawa, Sept. 10, 1906.

Sir,—In accordance with the request of the provincial governments for a conference with the Dominion government to discuss the financial subsidies to the provinces, I beg to inform you that such a conference will take place at the city of Ottawa on Monday, 8th October next, at 11 a.m., which you are invited to attend.

Your obedient servant,

WILFRID LAURIER.

When the province of Manitoba received that invitation, that province took precautions to avoid conditions such as we are meeting from the other side of the House to-day. A Minute of Council was passed and transmitted to the right hon. gentleman and to the Secretary of State of which I shall read the last portion:

On the recommendation of the hon. the President of the Council, Committee advise,—

(1) That the hon. the President of the Council of the executive of the government of the province of Manitoba be authorized and empowered to represent the province at the said conference for the purposes aforesaid, and, on behalf of the province, to agree to such solution of the said several matters in issue, having regard especially to the rights of the province of Manitoba, as shall, in his opinion, be fair, reasonable and just, and in the best interests and welfare of the province.

(2) That at the said conference it be distinctly understood and agreed that any allowances that may be made to the province of Manitoba, with respect to the said several matters in issue, shall in no wise abrogate or dispose of certain other claims of the province respecting the swamp lands, the adequate compensation to the province for public lands taken and used for the purpose of the Dominion, the readjustment of the capital account of the province, the handing over to the province for administration of the school lands and the school lands fund, and the extension of the boundaries of the province, and any and all other matters or things not embraced within the special matters set forth in said interprovincial conference resolutions, to all of which such other matters or things the province claims to be entitled to substantial relief from the Federal authorities.

(3) That a copy of this report be forwarded to the Secretary of State for Canada.

Certified,

20th September, 1906.

C. GREYBURN,
Clerk, Executive Committee.

It was on these terms and conditions that Manitoba attended that interprovincial conference. When her representatives came here, they came prepared with an order in council which was presented by the premier to the Interprovincial Conference. In order that the House may understand the position taken by that province at that time, I shall read you the parts of that order in council that referred particularly to the amounts that are now being asked for in the Bill before us. Part of the second order in council presented to that conference was as follows:

It is contended, and strongly so, that the province of Manitoba is equally entitled to be paid as large an annual sum by way of compensation for public lands as the two recently created provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta.

These provinces, it is provided, are to be each paid annually, until the population reaches 400,000, in the sum of $375,000, and thereafter on an increasing scale as the population multiplies up to the extent of $1,125,000 annually. Manitoba but receives $100,000 annually and the amount is fixed for all time to come and subject to no increase, no matter what the population of the province in the future may be. Surely, it cannot be reasonably maintained that this dissimilarity and discrimination between Manitoba and the other new provinces is fair to the people of Manitoba. In all phases of the subject the injustice to Manitoba is most apparent. At the present time the two new provinces each started with $375,000 in lieu of public lands. Manitoba but receives $100,000, notwithstanding its population is greatly in excess of either Saskatchewan or Alberta. As previously stated, the present annual payment to the new provinces, in lieu of lands, is subject to increases, on the basis of population, until the population reaches 750,000, when thereafter the payment to each is to be $1,125,000 annually. The effect of this arrangement is, that at the present time each of the new provinces are given $275,000 more than Manitoba, with provision for increase as the population grows, and that, when their population is 750,000, they will each receive for public lands, anually, $1,025,000 more than Manitoba, notwithstanding that Manitoba, in a great measure, as the parent Prairie province of the west, has stood the vicissitudes and hardships of pioneering for many years, and is largely responsible for the present stature and significance of those provinces, and may have at that period as great, if not greater, population than either of those provinces. It may be that the new provinces have not been given too much, but, if so, it must naturally follow that Manitoba receives too little—a mere pittance in comparison.

Manitoba went further in this memorandum and dealt with the question of the capital account. Referring to the amount of allowance at $32 per head, on a population of 125,000, making a total of $4,054,759.35, and they concluded in this way:

It is contended that the fixing, in 1884, of 125,000 as the population upon which the province should be paid a per capita allowance of $32.43 per head was an arbitrary proceeding, it being impossible at that time to estimate, with any degree of accuracy, what the population or requirements of the province would reasonably be at future periods, and it is the more evident that placing the population of Manitoba at 125,000, for the purposes aforesaid, was entirely too small, viewed in the light of the parliament of Canada having, a little over a year ago, based the capital account of Saskatchewan and Alberta on a population of 250,000, when, as a matter of fact, the population of those provinces, in both cases, was far inferior to that of Manitoba, as it is to-day.

The province claims, in any event, that it should be accorded in this respect the same or equivalent treatment as the two new provinces named, who each draw annually, on this account, $405,375, or just twice as much as Manitoba.

That was the case made by the province of Manitoba at the time that conference assembled at which were present the gentlemen whom I have just named. In order that the House may have a clear understanding of the facts of the case, I desire to read the reports of the public press in respect of the work and the action of the conference on the matters to which I have just referred. The conference assembled on the 8th of October, and Mr. Roblin at once presented Manitoba's case. This is the report of the matter in the Toronto 'Globe' of October 9th:

After some discussion, therefore, it was recognized that the resolutions could hardly be presented to the Dominion Cabinet in their original form, and a committee consisting of Messrs. Gouin, Weir, Murray, McBride, Pugsley, Foy and Campbell was appointed to suggest amendments which would overcome the obstacles to a general endorsation of the resolutions. Then the conference adjourned and left the committee to their work. The latter remained in session until shortly after six o'clock and reached conclusions which they will report to a general committee which will meet to-morrow morning at ten o'clock. An hour later the provincial delegates, it is expected, will be able to lay before the representatives of the Federal government the demands for an increase of subsidy in an amended form.

In case some hon. gentlemen might doubt the accuracy of the report of the Toronto 'Globe,' let me give the report of the Toronto 'Mail and Empire' of the same date:

Resuming in the afternoon Mr. Charles Lanctot, Deputy Attorney General of Quebec, was appointed secretary to the provincial gathering. The Quebec resolutions of four years ago were considered and it was decided to appoint a sub-committee to frame a resolution regarding them. This sub-committee consists of Messrs. Gouin, Foy, Pugsley, Weir, McBride and Campbell. They sat until six o'clock, and it is understood agreed upon the text of a resolution to be submitted to the general conference to-morrow. It reaffirms the resolutions of 1902, leaving it open, however, to each province to make independent representations.

The province of Manitoba was represented at the conference upon these terms, and insisted that the question should be left open to independent representations.

While the provincial delegates were in conference the representatives of Alberta and Saskatchewan asked permission to retire so that they might confer on the subject of the resolutions of 1902. This was granted and when they re-entered the conference Premier Scott announced that they concurred with the other delegates on this subject.

Then on October 10th:

From other sources, however, it is learned that the provincialists were making anything but progress. The resolution submitted by the sub-committee reaffirmed the subsidy resolution of 1902 with a clause reserving to each province the right to make special representations to the Dominion authorities. This proviso particularly affects Ontario, Manitoba and British Columbia. Manitoba does not want her claim for a readjustment of the provincial boundaries to be sidetracked. . . .

In the afternoon the situation improved. The conference sat for three hours and after it had risen Premier Gouin once more told the waiting newspaper men that there was nothing to announce. It seems, however, that after a stubborn fight the original resolution was finally agreed to unanimously with a special proviso in it reserving the rights of those provinces which have claims for additional recognition to have them considered. The resolution will be presented to the federal ministers tomorrow morning by Premiers Gouin and Whitney and an opportunity will be afforded to Premier McBride to present British Columbia's case for special consideration.

The Toronto 'Globe' goes on to deal with the report of this same committee. I may explain that the reasons were presented the following day, as stated by the press to the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), who now leads the opposition. Let me quote to him the reasons as they appear in the public records of this House:

Therefore, it is unanimously.

Resolved—1. That the subject matter of the resolutions adopted by the conference of the representatives of the several provinces, held at Quebec in December, 1902, and which were shortly thereafter presented to the government of the Dominion and which were ratified by the legislatures of the then existing provinces, except that of British Columbia, be now pressed upon the government of the Dominion for immediate and favourable action, under reserve of the right of any province to now submit to such government memoranda in writing concerning any claims it may have to larger sums than those set out in the said resolutions, or to additional consideration or recognition.

That reason was unanimously accepted and carried by that committee and presented by the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) who leads the opposition to-day. I would like to quote what the 'Globe' had to say in dealing with these reasons at that time.

Premier Roblin continued to press his claim, and I find in the Toronto 'Globe' the following report of the official minutes of the conference:

Moved by Mr. Roblin, seconded by Mr. Peters, that the report of the committee charged with the preparation of the resolutions embodying the views of the conference on the resolutions of 1902 be adopted, and it was unanimously adopted as follows:

Whereas the members of this conference are of the opinion that it is desirable in the interests of the people of Canada and essential to the development of the provinces that an immediate provision be made for an increase of the subsidies granted by the Dominion to the several provinces and for the award to the provincial governments by Canada of an amount sufficient to meet the costs of the administration of criminal justice not exceeding twenty cents per head of the population; therefore it is unanimously resolved (1) that the subject matter of the resolutions adopted by the conference of the representatives of the several provinces held at Quebec in December, 1902, and which were shortly thereafter presented to the government of the Dominion and which were ratified by the legislature of the then existing provinces, except that of British Columbia, be now pressed upon the government of the Dominion for immediate and favourable action, under reserve of the right of any province to now submit to such government memoranda in writing concerning any claims it may have to larger sums than those set out in the said resolutions, or to additional consideration for recognition.

(2) That in the case of the government of Canada concurring in the views of the conference as expressed in the above resolution a measure should be submitted to the parliament of Canada at the next session providing for payment of such increased subsidies and allowances as may be determined upon, pending an amendment of the British North America Act if such amendment should be deemed necessary.

Now, Mr. Speaker, those resolutions were presented in the amended form as suggested, to the right hon. leader of the then government and his colleagues, who joined that inter-provincial conference, and you will be surprised to learn that he accepted those resolutions as representing the claims of Manitoba:

The Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier announced that the Dominion government had come to the conclusion to agree to the resolutions embodying the views of the interprovincial conference submitted by the hon. Mr. Gouin on the 10th October, with the exception of that portion of the first resolution proposing an increased subsidy towards the cost of the administration of criminal justice.

This was not anything that affected the province of Manitoba more than any other province. Then later on I find in the report of the minutes signed by Mr. Lanctot and Mr. Joseph Pope:

Sir Wilfrid Laurier further observed that his government had considered this question up to this moment in the hope that the present interprovincial conference would be unanimous. He said that while there is unanimity with respect to the principle of increased subsidies and also in regard to that portion of the resolution of the interprovincial conference submitted by Mr. Gouin on October 10, to which the government has agreed there was a special claim from British Columbia touching which some difference as regards the amount exists. Sir Wilfrid Laurier added that he wished to report to his colleagues on that point before giving a final assent.

Now, Mr. Speaker, you will see that Manitoba had presented her case, and in doing so had obtained the support of the representatives of all the provincial governments. Mr. Roblin presented his case to the right hon. gentleman, and he accepted it. Now let me ask if Manitoba was not justified in asking for arrearages back to 1905 and 1906? When she could not get arrearages back to 1905, she wanted to get them at least to 1906, when the right hon. gentleman accepted the resolution in confirmation of her claim as presented by all the provinces. I ask you what more could Manitoba have done to establish her case in the clearest possible manner than the course she has adopted in pressing her claims now for fair treatment, and for equality of treatment with the other provinces of this Dominion? I mentioned a moment ago that she was promised a speedy settlement in 1905 by an official Minute of Council. She was again promised a settlement by the official statement of the right hon. leader of the government in 1906, when he accepted the basis recommended by the Interprovincial conference. Again in 1907 Manitoba was promised a settlement in the Bill by which her boundaries were to be extended, and a settlement was to be effected of the terms and conditions. Then again we had the resolution of 1908 which was brought before the government in its amended form, and which was accepted by the province of Manitoba. And yet after all these things, we have the right hon. gentleman the leader of the opposition and his followers coming here and discussing this question from various points of view, some undertaking to place one province against another, and others undertaking to set the east against the west. My hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Pugsley) was very solicitous with respect to the maritime provinces.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Hear, hear.

Mr. ROGERS. I do not blame my hon. friend for standing up for his province. But when in 1908 the right hon. gentleman who sits beside him was passing a resolution for the extension of the boundaries of Manitoba, my hon. friend from Kings and Albert (Mr. Fowler) raised the same question on behalf of the maritime provinces, and what answer did he get from the then leader of the government? The answer was read yesterday by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Crothers), and I will not trouble the House by reading it again. But the right hon. gentleman made it clear that he would not consider the proposals then made by the representatives of the maritime provinces. Now let me tell you that the conditions are different to-day. We have at the head of affairs as Premier of Canada a gentleman who represents a constituency in the maritime provinces, and what did he tell this House yesterday in discussing this matter? He assured this House that when the time arrived for making a final settlement of the natural resources of the three great provinces of western Canada, at that time the government would take into consideration every interest relative to the affairs and welfare of the maritime provinces. Now I ask you, and I ask every hon. member of this House, if there is a citizen in the maritime provinces who is not prepared to accept in its entirety the word of the right hon. gentleman who leads the government of Canada to-day. Some hon. gentleman opposite have undertaken to say that our natural resources are being withheld from us. The leader of the opposition who addressed the House this afternoon dwelt somewhat warmly on the position taken by the leader of the government in respect to the natural resources of the three prairie provinces. He said that the leader of the government had promised certain terms previous to the last general election. Well, I want to tell him that we are under a different régime in this country now than we were in 1905, and that when the present leader of the government makes a promise to his fellow countrymen they can depend upon it that that promise will be fulfilled. The reason why the three prairie provinces are not getting their natural resources to-day is simply because this is a matter so important that it involves a great deal of consideration, it involves considerable time. I know that the leader of the opposition would have been glad to use this lever to justify him in continuing his policy of penalizing the province of Manitoba, to which he has taken such a particular dislike during the past ten years. But this is not a matter that can be settled hastily, because we have evidently a work of education to perform in some of the western provinces in this respect; we find that even some gentlemen in the province of Saskatchewan, for example, are willing to follow in the footsteps of the leader of the opposition.

He is willing to take the ground that the natural resources of the province should not be handed over. That is the position taken by the Hon. Walter Scott, Premier of the province of Saskatchewan. Surely you would not expect this government to force a provincial government to take over the natural resources if they did not want them. Mr. Walter Scott, following in the footsteps of my right hon. friend opposite, has been ready and has shown by his statements, that he wishes to treat this matter from a political point of view. That is the manner in which he has treated it ever since he came into power . I hold in my hand some statements made by Mr. Walter Scott with respect to this particular matter, and I would like to quote them to the House. Dealing with this question, Mr. Scott said in 1906, that:

He could prove that before he went to Ottawa for the Autonomy session he had come to the conclusion, with a great many other people, that it would be better that the public lands should not be handed over to the possession and management of the people of the province, and if they could induce the Dominion to give them a fair subsidy it would be better for the lands to remain in the care of the Department of the Interior. Then it came down to the very simple question as to the adequacy of the terms. His friends contended, and would contend, he had no doubt, to the end of the chapter, that the terms were inadequate. (Mr. Wylie—'Hear, hear.')

The member for Maple Creek said 'hear, hear,' but let him look among his political friends outside the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan and he would fail to find one who would agree with him.

Mr. Wylie. But we are the judges.

Mr. Scott remarked that they had the judgment of the people of Alberta and Saskatchewan. Before the provinces as a whole stated their opinion at the elections last fall there was a by-election at Edmonton, and since the provincial elections they had had three other contests, all of which endorsed the terms. West Assiniboia and Saskatchewan went unanimously in support of the Act, and Strathcona gave a large majority.—Scott Budget speech, 'Leader,' May 21, 1906.

Therefore, Mr. Walter Scott was willing then, as I presume he is to-day, to measure terms and conditions for the province with respect to the natural resources and to treat the question as a matter of politics. If it is necessary, I am satisfied that we are prepared to go to the province of Saskatchewan and educate the people there, and I am also satisfied that it is in their best interests, notwithstanding Mr. Walter Scott or Mr. Anybody-else, to have their own natural resources and to administer them for the benefit of their own province. Then again, speaking in 1908, I find Mr. Scott saying:

In addition to the parliament of Canada having settled the question, the province has settled it in the campaign of 1905. It was plainly put and fully discussed. He was satisfied that the cash grant which the province obtained in lieu of their public domain was more advantageous to them than the lands would be. (Hear, hear.)

Then again:

There was not a public man except a bitter partisan, who had opened his mouth on the subject who did not admit that Saskatchewan and Alberta had been made much better off by the federal administration of the lands than they would be, had the lands been under their control.—Regina 'Leader,' Aug. 8, 1908.

Again on August 15, 1908:

We have heard a good deal about the land issue. As I pointed out in this hall on Wednesday evening, in view of the verdict the people gave three years ago on the land, as well as other autonomy questions, what was there for the government to do but what we have done? The people did not want the land arrangement disturbed. They said the same again yesterday. How long is it going to take the people of Saskatchewan to convince Mr. Haultain that they are satisfied with the terms granted them by the Autonomy Act?—'Leader,' Aug. 17, 1908.

Then we have Mr. Scott speaking as follows on October 6, 1911:

If Saskatchewan had the lands, what would we be doing with them? Mr. Haultain tells you we should be using them for revenue. This is the burden of his contention—that the province is losing revenue by not having the lands.

This land bargain issue in Saskatchewan is a false issue. For practical purposes we might as well discuss stopping the sun in its course.

The autonomy land bargain is not a legitimate issue in the provincial field, and would not be used as an issue if the opposition thought there was good ground on which to attack us in the sphere where we are really responsible.

I am willing, not only willing, but glad, to defend the vote which I gave in parliament in 1905 in favour of the land terms.

The straits of the opposition as regards finding any reasonable grounds of attack against the government's record or policy is confessed by them, in their desire to keep the autonomy land bargain before the province as an issue. They thereby confess that they lack any real ground of criticism.

Lastly, suppose that Mr. Haultain is in office on the strength of this collection of suppositions. it is his policy to acquire the lands. He has been elected to get the lands. How will he go about it? In 1905 and to-day I believed and believe it better that we should have money in lieu of lands, but I can conceive of changed conditions which might lead me in 1920 or 1930 to want the public domain for the province, and against such a day I should really like to know what machinery assists to turn the trick. My curiosity is perfectly sincere.

Mr. Walter Scott undertakes to say that in twenty or thirty years he would be willing to consider the proposition of accepting the natural resources for the province of Saskatchewan, and he asks what machinery there would be to turn the trick. I answer Mr. Walter Scott that the Conservative government of this Dominion, are the machinery through which, and by which that trick will be turned to the advantage of the great province of Saskatchewan. Mr. Scott goes on to say:

I have questioned lawyers and I have yet to learn how it could be done. They tell me that the thing is impossible.

It therefore follows that Mr. Haultain would be utterly helpless to obtain the lands. The province has no more power to take possession of the lands than it has to obtain the moon. Parliament's power to enact the Saskatchewan Act was as complete as its authority to elect the Customs Act, and the land bargain has no more place as an issue in our provincial affairs than any tariff schedule.

If time permitted, I could bring, to quote an illustrious Canadian, 'mountains of evidence' to sustain the Liberal position on this land question. I assure you that it is not on account of lack of defence that I complain against the dragging in of the issue, because our position is sound and strong, while the opposition ground is easily upset.

Am I going too far when I suggest a doubt as to the sanity of any Saskatchewan man who complains against our land terms?

When urging the principle of local ownership of the lands, I know that all I hoped to obtain was recognition of our right of proprietary interest in them. I certainly never expected the actual transfer to the new provinces.

That is what Mr. Walter Scott has to say upon this matter, and let me repeat what I said a moment ago, that when this government have had the opportunity and time to investigate this matter, the promise, as made by my right hon. friend who leads the government, will be faithfully and loyally carried out.

I may say, in reference to the question of financial terms, as cited in the Bill, that my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) in discussing this question to-day, in reference to the capital allowance, makes a very different argument when he is arguing against the province of Manitoba from the argument which he made, when he was arguing for the same condition of affairs by the creation of the two new provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta. I hold in my hand a copy of 'Hansard' which contains the argument as advanced by the right hon. gentleman at that time. I am not going to quote at length from what the right hon. gentleman has said, but I desire to place the following before the House:

What can have been the reasoning which induced the fathers of confederation in 1867 to depart from so obvious a principle of finance and government?

The reasons are simply these. Confederation was the result of several compromises. It would have been impossible to establish it if there had not been a policy of give and take adopted among all the constituent bodies. And I am quite sure, I am speaking absolute historical truth when I say that neither Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Ontario nor Quebec would ever have consented to part with their revenues, to give up their powers of taxation in customs and excise, if they had not been promised that out of the federal revenues they would be allowed a certain sum every year to defray the expenses of their own local governments and administrations. This is the reason why this provision is to be found in the British North America Act. It is there. I do not think it is sound, but though in my judgment unsound, it is the duty of everybody in this House and in this country to take confederation as we find it, with its good points and its blemishes, and carry it to the end on the principle upon which it was established. Therefore, upon this point I believe it is the duty of the Canadian parliament to continue that policy in this instance and make a liberal provision for these two new provinces which we are about to admit into the Canadian family.

That was the argument advanced by the right hon. the leader of the opposition upon that occasion, when discussing the question as to whether the position of the provinces then to be created would be the same as the other provinces in respect to customs and excise taxes. I submit that the same conditions exactly apply to the province of Manitoba. For example, in this past year of 1911, the province of Manitoba contributed to the public treasury of this Dominion in customs and excise something like nine and a half million dollars, and as against that the subsidy given to the province of Manitoba by virtue of the policy adopted by hon. gentlemen opposite was something about $800,000. I therefore say it is not to be wondered that Manitoba makes the claim she is making to-day in order that she may find relief from the condition in which she finds herself of being placed in a position of inequality to every other province in this Dominion. It is upon that ground and upon that ground alone that Manitoba has appealed to this parliament time and time again for justice. Manitoba appeals to the parliament of Canada asking that the restrictive conditions that were applied to her as a province shall be removed, so that she may be enabled to take her place of the full sisterhood with the other provinces that form confederation. Let it be remembered that the people of Manitoba have for the forty years past been the pioneers of that western country. Let it not be forgotten that through their energy and determination and perseverance as pathfinders in that great western land, its possibilities have been opened up to eastern Canada and there has been demonstrated to the world the happy future in store for the hundreds of thousands of settlers who made their homes upon the fertile prairie. Is it fair and reasonable that that province which undertook the hardships of the early pioneer life should be compelled to accept an inferior position to other provinces either in the west or in the east? This Bill undertakes to place Manitoba in a position of equality with the other provinces of the Dominion, and that is all it undertakes to do. Manitoba complains that she has been too long regarded as the kitchen province of the Dominion; she thinks it time that she should be invited to the dining room and given her full status amongst the provinces of this confederation. That is the position which this Bill undertakes to place her in, and I submit to this parliament and to the people of this country that it is only just and fair that such fair treatment should be accorded her.

House divided on amendment (Sir Wilfrid Laurier).

Mr. CARVELL. I beg to call attention to the fact that the hon. member for Yamaska has not voted.

Mr. MONDOU. The reason I have not voted is that when the Bill goes before the committee I intend to explain my position fully.

Mr. LAMARCHE. Before the vote is taken on the second reading of the Bill I wish to speak and explain the position I have taken.

Amendment negatived.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

CONTINENTAL CAN COMPANY.

On the order being called for the second reading of Bill (No. 119), respecting certain patents of the Continental Can Company.—Mr. Fripp.

Mr. CARVELL. In my opinion this Bill should not receive a second reading. This is really the same question that was discussed in this House last week in reference to the patents of a man named Rambaut, and while the House did not decide as a matter of principle that they would not pass the Bill, still the hon. member who had charge of the Bill was satisfied that it should not be passed and dropped that particular portion of it. The whole object of this particular Bill is to place some five or six patents with reference to a certain mechanism for making tin cans under the provisions of section 44 of the Patent Act. That is the section which allows the commissioner of patents to grant to the patentee the right not to manufacture in Canada as was purely the intention of the patent law but to license some other persons to manufacture and to pay him a royalty. As I before said, the only class of patents to which this clause should apply are those dealing with articles such as heavy machinery for which there would be very little sale. If we adopt this Bill then this patentee will be in a position to license some one else to manufacture, and perhaps it may be five or ten years before the industry would be established in Canada, whereas in the ordinary course he would have to manufacture within two years of the issue of this patent.

Mr. BORDEN. The Minister of Agriculture is not in the city to-day, but he will be here to-morrow. I suppose there would be no objection to allowing the Bill to go to the committee where the considerations which the hon. gentleman has mentioned, and which are very important, may be taken into account.

Mr. MACDONALD. The point raised by the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) is one which goes to the very principle of the measure and can hardly be considered a matter for the committee. In the last parliament this question formed a subject of discussion and the sense of the House then was against giving to foreigners the right by special legislation of this parliament to continue for a longer period than there was any necessity for under the original patent the rights of the patentee.

Mr. BORDEN. I have never understood that the second reading of a private Bill affirmed any principle.

Mr. MACDONALD. That is true to a great degree where you are dealing with a private Bill which simply confers corporate powers, but here the proposition involved is really an amendment to a substantive law in so far as this particular person is concerned. It is not a matter to be settled by a committee.

Mr. BORDEN. I have no objection to allowing the Bill to stand, but I think that considerations of that kind should be entertained by the special committee to which a Bill of this special character is to be sent. The Bill comes back to the House in the ordinary course upon the report of that committee either for or against the Bill. In fact, as the hon. gentleman knows, it comes back to this House, it goes into Committee of the Whole, and the report of the committee upon it is usually adopted by the House.

Mr. MACDONALD. I have no objection to the Bill going to the committee with the distinct understanding that I do not approve of the principle of the Bill, and I do not want to have it afterwards said that we are bound to accept the report of the committee to which I do not belong.

Mr. CARVELL. With that understanding I am willing to withdraw my opposition to the second reading, but I would not like to be told that a committee has decided this question and we have to abide by the decision of the committee. I would like to reserve the right to oppose it when it comes back from the committee.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 120) for the relief of Ethel May Stewart—Mr. Clark (Red Deer).

EXTENSION OF BOUNDARIES—MANITOBA.

House resumed the debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Borden for the second reading of Bill (No. 115) to provide for the extension of the boundaries of the province of Manitoba.

Mr. CARVELL. Before my friend proceeds with the debate, I want to raise a question which I raised before six o'clock, and which was not decided by the Chair. I raised the question that the hon. member for Yamaska was sitting in the House and had not voted, and I claim that I am entitled to a decision, because under the authority of Bourinot at page 504, it is distinctly stated:

> If a member of the Commons who has heard the question put does not vote, and the attention of the Speaker is directed to the fact, the latter will call upon him to declare on which side he votes; and his name will be recorded accordingly.

Now, Sir, I raised the point that you, Mr. Speaker, should call upon the hon. member to state on which side he voted. That is supported by a number of references, one of which says:

> In the English House of Commons, 3rd February 1881, Mr. Speaker informed the House that several members who had given their voices with the noes when the question was put, had refused to quit their places, and consequently he had submitted their conduct to the consideration of the House. A number of members were then suspended for refusing to withdraw during the division after having been warned of the consequences by the Speaker.

And not withdrawing during the division would be the same as not voting in this House. I think the hon. member for Yamaska (Mr. Mondou) should be requested by the Chair, to state his reason why he did not vote and on which side he would have voted.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have only to say that I did not notice the hon. member (Mr. Carvell) raising the question, or I would have attended to it then. But, as other business has intervened in the meantime, it is too late now to raise the question.

Mr. P. E. LAMARCHE (Nicolet). Before the House rose, my right hon. friend, the leader of the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) had proposed an amendment which had been voted down. It was as follows:

> That whilst the House is favourable to the extension of the boundaries of the province of Manitoba, it is of opinion that the terms under which it is proposed to make the said extension as set forth in this Bill and in the order in council of the 20th of February, 1912, are unfair and unjust both to the people of Manitoba as well as to the people of the other provinces of the Dominion .

I voted for that amendment; but not for the same reason as my right hon. friend. I voted for it because that amendment declares that the terms under which the extension of Manitoba's boundaries are proposed in the Bill are unfair and unjust. But, in my opinion, they are unfair and unjust, not because the conditions set forth in the Bill are so, but because of the absence of other clauses, which I judge, are absolutely necessary. And it is my intention, Mr. Speaker, to develop as briefly as possible the reason why I take that position. The liberty for the people of this country to express their free will through the voice of their representatives is one of the most precious privileges that has ever been granted by the British Crown, and it is the underlying principle of our parliamentary institutions.

The will of the people of my constituency, clearly manifested, on the 21st of September last, by their cheerful and generous acceptation of the promises I had made to them during the campaign, shall to-day dictate my conduct and force me to break away upon this important question from many political friends, for whom I have personally, the most profound respect, notwithstanding our divergence of views and opinions.

The Bill, which is to-day submitted to the approval of this House, provides for a concession in land and money on the part of the federal government in favour of one of the provinces of this confederation.

There is not one Canadian, I believe, who will not admit the opportunity of effecting under just and reasonable conditions, the annexation to Manitoba of that important portion of our common territory. Our sister province is, at present, geographically too small to satisfy her ever growing energy, to justify her legitimate ambitions and to assure the perfect equilibrium in our political system. Every one will admit also that such transfer of property, if made with due respect to law, justice and equity, is compatible and in harmony with the principles laid down by the fathers of confederation.

The Bill, as far as I can see, contains nothing objectionable. I perfectly agree to every one of its clauses, but, in my opinion, it is incomplete, and I cannot support it for the reason that I fail to see in it a saving clause for the rights of the minorities.

The portion of the territory contemplated for annexation is free from financial liabilities. Is it free from moral obligations? If not, is it in our power, and is it our duty, to point it out in the present legislation? There is a question which has, in the past few weeks, caused many commentaries and occupied many legal minds.

The problem of education, commonly called the school question, has, at different intervals, demanded a solution. The different administrations which have succeeded each other in the government of this country, have dealt with that problem, and some of them have made it worse and more difficult for a satisfactory solution.

In the province of Quebec my right hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, has been defeated in many counties during the last election, partly on account of a serious movement inaugurated against him way back in 1905, as a result of his attitude on the school question in Alberta and Saskatchewan.

The school question in Keewatin, although the same old school question, arises in this case under a new form as regards its legal aspects. What is the law in force to-day in the Northwest Territories? And is the portion of land contemplated for annexation comprised to-day, for the purposes of the law, within the limits of the Northwest Territories? These are two questions that I will try to elucidate before going any further.

The Northwest Territories, as well as Rupert's Land, entered into confederation in the year 1870, on the 15th of July. On the 8th of April, 1875, the federal government of the day, which had at its head the Hon. Mr. Mackenzie, passed a law for the regulation of that newly acquired region, and that law provided for a system of separate schools, by which the Catholic or Protestant minority was protected for the future against the payment of a double school tax. That principle which is laid down in article XI of chapter 49, 38 Victoria, reads as follows:

XI. When, and as soon as any system of taxation shall be adopted in any district or portion of the Northwest Territories, the lieutenant-governor, by and with the consent of the council or assembly, as the case may be, shall pass all necessary ordinances in respect to education; but it shall therein be always provided, that a majority of the ratepayers of any district or portion of the Northwest Territories, or any lesser portion or subdivision thereof, by whatever name the same may be known, may establish such schools therein as they may think fit, and make the necessary assessment and collection of rates therefor; and, further, that the minority of the ratepayers therein, whether Protestant or Roman Catholic, may establish separate schools therein, and that, in such latter case, the ratepayers establishing such Protestant or Roman Catholic separate schools shall be liable only to assessment of such rates as they may impose upon themselves in respect thereof.

In article I of the same Act, the Northwest Territories are defined as follows:

I. The territories formerly known as 'Rupert's Land' and the Northwest Territories (with the exception of such portion thereof as forms the province of Manitoba), shall continue to be styled and known as the Northwest Territories.

This certainly included Keewatin. That law of 1875, did not, however, come into force immediately. In its article 78, it was enacted as follows:

78. This Act shall come into force and effect upon, from and after such day as shall be named in a proclamation to be issued by the Governor in Council for that purpose.

The order in council putting the law ininto force was published in the official 'Gazette,' on the 7th of October, 1876, and the law was put into effect the same day. On the same occasion, viz., on the 7th of October, 1876, the Keewatin Act, which had been assented to on the 12th of April, 1876, was put into effect by a proclamation which appears in the same issue of the Canada 'Gazette.' The Act is intituled as follows, 'An Act respecting the Northwest Territories, and to create a separate territory out of part thereof.' Its reference is 39 Victoria, chapter 21. The new district formed out of and separate from the northwest territories is described as follows in article I of the Act:

I. All that portion of the Northwest Territories, bounded as follows, that is to say:—

Beginning at the westerly boundary of the province of Ontario on the international boundary line dividing Canada from the United States of America; then westerly following upon the said international boundary line to the easterly boundary of the province of Manitoba; thence due north along the said easterly boundary of Manitoba to the north-east angle of the said province; thence due west on the north boundary of the said province to the intersection by the said boundary of the westerly shore of Lake Manitoba; thence northerly following the said westerly shore of the said lake to the easterly terminus thereon of the portage connecting the southerly end of Lake Winnipegosis with the said Lake Manitoba known as 'the Meadow Portage'; thence westerly following upon the trail of the said portage to the westerly terminus of the same, being on the easterly shore of the said Lake Winnegosis; thence northerly following the line of the said easterly shore of the said lake to the southerly end of the portage, leading from the head of the said lake into 'Cedar lake' known as the 'Cedar,' or 'Mossy Portage'; thence northerly following the trail of the said portage to the north end of the same on the shore of Cedar lake; thence due north to the northerly limits of Canada; thence easterly following upon the said northerly limits of Canada to the northerly extremity of Hudson bay; thence southerly following upon the westerly shore of the said Hudson bay to the point where it would be intersected by a line drawn due north from the place of beginning, and thence due south on the said line last mentioned to the said place of beginning—

Shall be and is hereby set apart as a separate district of the said Northwest Territories by the name of the district of Keewatin.

In the Keewatin Act many clauses of the Northwest Territories Act are made applicable to the new district, but no reference is made to Article XI., which contains provisions for separate schools, and legally speaking there can be no doubt that from the 7th of October, 1876, and for some time as we will see later, the separate school clause was ineffective in the new district, as long as the Keewatin Act stood in force.

It is important, however, to point out that the District of Keewatin, as described in the Keewatin Act, is only a part of the territory to be annexed to Manitoba, and which is described in the present Bill; the other part consists in a piece of land of about fifty miles wide and extending from the northern boundary of the actual province of Manitoba towards the northern limits of Canada.

This strip of land has always remained since 1870 and is still a part of the undisturbed portion of the Northwest Territories, and in that part, at least, the law introduced in 1875 relating to separate schools, has always been in force. It is in that section of Keewatin that we find that place called Le Pas, where there is, at present, if my information is correct, a voluntary school in operation. The law introduced by Mackenzie, in 1875, and the Keewatin Act, introduced in 1876, as I said before, came into force the same day, 7th of October, 1876. It may be well to know that the law introduced by Mackenzie was a legislation of a permanent character, while the Keewatin Act was only a law of exception and passed temporarily for the purpose of awaiting the settlement of a local difficulty.

In order to assure ourselves that the law of 1875 had a permanent character, it may be well to read the speeches made in the Canadian parliament, during the session of 1875, in the month of March, by the Hon. Mr. Mackenzie, the Hon. Mr. Blake and others, and if you consult the fourteenth volume of the debates of the House of Commons, 1875, page 658, you will see that the Hon. Mr. Blake is quoted as having said that:

He believed that it was essential to our obtaining a large immigration to the north west that we should tell the people beforehand what those rights were to be in the country in which we invited them to settle.

And further:

I do not agree with the policy of asking people to settle in that western country and tell them that a paternal government would look after them, and would give them such institutions as the government thought suitable. We had better let the people know their fate, politically and otherwise before they settled there.

That was, Mr. Speaker, the spirit of the law and it was in that spirit that the Canadian government of 1875 has put its seal to that legislation of equity, which was to be accepted by the settlers of that country. The Keewatin Act was only a temporary and accidental legislation, and its preamble bears out my assertion. It reads as follows:—

Whereas it is expedient, pending the settlement of the western boundary of Ontario to create a separate territory of the eastern part of the Northwest Territories.

In the same law we find a proviso giving authority to re-annex any part of the new district to the Northwest Territories. In 1905, an order in council was passed to reunite Keewatin to the Northwest Territories. It is contended, and I think with reason, that such order in council was 'ultra vires,' because it provided for the re-annexation of the whole of Keewatin, while, according to the provisions of the Keewatin Act, the Governor in Council, without the parliament, had only the right to re-annex parts of that territory, but not the whole.

Although that order in council seems to be unconstitutional, it shows, at least, the intention of the government of the day, and we shall see immediately how their intention has been carried out.

When the statutes of Canada were revised in 1906 the Northwest Territories Act, as modified by several amendments, was inserted as chapter 62, but the Keewatin Act was left out, and moreover, if we consult in Vol. IV, of the Revised Statutes, 1906, page 7, under the title of History and Disposal of Acts, we find 'District of Keewatin, Chapter 53, effete and recommended for repeal.' Furthermore, Art. 4 of 6-7 Ed. VII intituled 'An Act respecting the Revised Statues, 1906,' reads as follows: 'The several Acts enumerated in Schedule 'A' to the said Revised Statutes are hereby declared to be and to have been on, from and after the last mentioned date (31st January, 1907) repealed to the extent mentioned in the said Schedule.'

And in Schedule 'A', Vol. III, R.S.C., p. 3063, I read the following: '53. An Act respecting the District of Keewatin the whole repealed.'

I think every lawyer in this House will bear me out when I say that, at least, since the revision of 1906, which came into force on the 31st January, 1907, the Keewatin Act is no longer a law of this country, and, as a result, the District of Keewatin, is no longer excepted from the Northwest Territories as they are defined in Article 2 of chapter 62 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, and which reads as follows:

Article 2 in this Act, unless the context otherwise requires:

(a) Territories means the Northwest Territories which comprise the Territories formerly known as Rupert's Land and the Northwestern Territory, except such portions thereof as form the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta and the Yukon Territory, together with all British territories and possessions in North America and all islands adjacent thereto not included within any province, except the colony of Newfoundland and its dependencies.

The Northwest Territories Act applies, therefore, not only to that strip of land, which has never been excluded from the Northwest Territories, but it applies also to the other part to be annexed and which has automatically returned to the Northwest Territories by the disappearance of the Keewatin Act. The Northwest Territories Act, however, as we find it in the Revised Statutes of Canada, chapter 62, is somewhat different from the original legislation of 1875 and this as a result of several amendments.

The original Article XI of the law of 1875 relating to separate schools has now become Article X of chapter 62 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, and it reads as follows:

X.—The Commissioner in Council, if authorized to make ordinances respecting education, shall pass all necessary ordinances in respect thereto, but in the laws or ordinances relating to education it shall always be provided that a majority of the ratepayers of any district or portion of the Territories or of any less portion or subdivision thereof, by whatever name the same is known, may establish such schools therein as they think fit and make the necessary assessment and collection of rates therefor; and also that the minority of ratepayers therein, whether Protestant or Roman Catholic, may establish separate schools therein, and in such case the ratepayers establishing such Protestant or Roman Catholic separate schools shall be liable only to assessments of such rates as they impose upon themselves in respect thereof.

Do we find in that Article X the existence of a right in favour of the minorities to separate schools and a protection against the payment of a double school tax? It is my opinion. The Commissioner in Council cannot pass an ordinance establishing a school system without providing for the rights of the minority. The Commissioner in Council, however, cannot pass such ordinance without, first, being authorized to that effect by the Governor General in Council. Therefore, the government is at liberty to give or to abstain itself from giving the proper authority to the commissioner, but if it is given, it is to the establishment of separate schools and nothing else.

Now, is it possible to establish a school system in the Northwest Territories in any other way than by the means of an ordinance emanating from the Commissioner in Council?

I think so, but the only way would be by a law of this parliament passed in open session, in the regular way, but I hold that, even that law would have to provide for the rights of the minority, unless Article X of the Northwest Territories Act is repealed, modified or made non-applicable, which would be the breaking away from the just and equitable policy of Mr. Mackenzie, consecrated thirty-six years ago by the Conservative as well as the Liberal party.

If you peruse the disposition of Article X, you will find that it is divided into two distinct sections, although they are not numbered, but simply separated by a semicolon, after the word 'thereto,' in the third line.

The first part simply states that the Commissioner-in-Council shall pass all necessary ordinances respecting education, if he receives the proper authority. No mention is made in that first part, of laws, for the good reason that the Commissioner-in-Council has no right to make laws. His legislative powers are exercised by way of ordinances. This is clearly stated in Article VII of the Northwest Territories Act, which is entitled 'Legislative Powers of Commissioner-in-Council,' and there can be no doubt about it.

In the second part of Article X it is clearly stated that not only the ordinances shall provide for the protection of the rights of the minority, but the laws as well. In other words, not only the Commissioner of the Northwest Territories is ordered to respect the rights of the minority, but even the parliament of Canada.

The government of Canada, through its executive, has the right to give or to refuse to the Commissioner-in-Council, the proper authority to enable him to pass an ordinance establishing schools recognized by law.

Has the government made any use of that power? If my information is correct, the government of Canada, under the past administration, as well as under the present one, has either refused or neglected, not only to give the proper authority to the commissioner, but even to name the persons to form his council, although it had been duly and repeatedly requested by a certain number of British subjects inhabiting the territory which is now contemplated for annexation to the province of Manitoba; and a certain newspaper, 'The Manitoba Free Press,' if I am not mistaken, qualified the lack of action in that matter as a sharp piece of work and good tactics in contemplation of the prospective extension of boundaries. Now, I think the non-existence of regular school system in Keewatin would be a very poor reason to allege, especially by those who have been instrumental in refusing to act. But, is it necessary, Mr. Speaker, in order to find the true spirit of the law which is now in force, to go through all those tortuous legal technicalities? The article which now regulates education in that part of the country should be considered as forming part of a constant policy in existence for thirty-six years in the minds of those who have worked for the best interests of Canada, and in order to know the true meaning of that law, those who are to be consulted are not the politicians who have modified and tortured the texts, during the past few years, but those rather who have given life to that legislation of justice, expecting that it would last untrammelled longer than their own mortal existence.

Last week, curious coincidence, the Canadian statesman who has been the instigator of that charter of rights for the people of the northwest, passed away practically at the same moment as an effort was being made to leave in oblivion the work of his life. Why not live up to the former engagements entered into by the government of our country? Is it because the other party to the Act is weak and feeble? I do not think such an idea could make its way in the spirit of a broad-minded people, and I do not think it could be invoked with success in a British country like ours.

Is it because the respect of minorities is a principle which has been productive of bad results in our country? We have been told several times by the best accredited representatives of the English minority of the province of Quebec that it was a good principle and that the majority of that province was very particular in taking the means to safeguard and respect it. Why should not the same principle work as well in other portions of Canada? We are told very often that in this free country of ours all religions are on the same footing. We know also that the full exercise of the Catholic religion has been guaranteed from the time of capitulation. It is the duty of Catholic parents to send their children to a school of their faith and, Mr. Speaker, I say that we are limiting their liberty in that respect in making them pay a double tax for the exercise of that privilege, when we can avoid it. In the province of Manitoba there has been a school question which has been incompletely settled. A judgment of the highest tribunal of the empire has recognized that the Catholic minority of Manitoba was suffering serious grievances. To-day we are asked to vote in favour of a Bill which provided for a concession to Manitoba. That Bill is only the first part of a contract because the Legislature of Manitoba has to accept the terms of the arrangement as they are laid down in the present measure. It would not be in my mind, a policy of coercion but rather a policy of conciliation to insert in the Bill a saving clause for the rights of the minorities in the new district to be annexed, similar to the clause which I have seen in the Bill which protects the rights of the Hudson's Bay Company.

I have respect, Mr. Speaker, for those who differ with me in their opinions. The question is difficult and intricate if we look only into its legal aspects. I will even admit that I have considered the spirit of justice and equity stronger than the doubtful solutions arising from the text books. The principles I have set forth, which I think are just and equitable, I have preached politically for ten years, and, in the last campaign, I made, in connection with this Keewatin question, some declarations that were not ambiguous, and I made them to the knowledge and in the presence of those to whom my candidature was agreeable and useful. I am here to-day to keep my word and I shall do my duty.

These are the reasons why I have voted for the amendment moved by my right hon. friend and these are the reasons why I shall vote against the Bill that is proposed to the House.

Hon. F. D. MONK (Minister of Public Works). Mr. Speaker, I personally am obliged to my hon. friend who has just taken his seat (Mr. Lamarche) for affording me an opportunity of giving some explanation to the House with regard to the point which he has raised. My hon. friend has explained his position in moderate and clear language. I do not think anybody, even those who do not entirely agree with him, can find fault with the manner in which he has placed the case before this House. But Mr. Speaker, before taking up the consideration of this phase of the question which my hon. friend has touched upon, I would like to say, after all I have heard this afternoon that, upon the whole, my hon. friends on the other side of the House have taken what I would call a somewhat gloomy view of the measure brought down by the government. It is, to my mind, necessary to point out that there is a brighter view and that in bringing down this measure my right hon. friend the leader of the government (Mr. Borden) has placed, so to speak, the keystone in the arch of confederation, completing the great work begun by Macdonald, Cartier and the other fathers of confederation.

It is the rounding up of that great work at which we are assisting this evening, and it seems to me that such an important event for our country should afford cause for more gratification, and more self-congratulation than we have heard from the other side of the House during this debate. Three provinces, Quebec, Manitoba and Ontario, are profiting by the work which, to-day, the traditional descendants of the founders of confederation are bringing to completion. For my part, having more intimate connection with the province of Quebec, I congratulate the government upon bringing into the provincial organization of this Dominion the territory which is being added to my native province, because I believe that the very best results will come from it. The territory which is being assigned to the province of Quebec is of immense value. There is within its confines great lumber, wealth, vast water-powers, which when developed, will enrich our whole country, extensive mineral areas, and most productive fisheries along the coast which comes under the jurisdiction of the province of Quebec. To the province of Ontario an equally valuable area is assigned for development, an area which comprises probably more agricultural resources than is to be found in the territory given to Quebec, a territory where there is lumber wealth and mineral resources and which brings the province of Ontario into contact with the great fisheries of the Hudson bay. And, to the province of Manitoba, this is a particularly welcome thing, because it brings to an end the discontent, the justifiable discontent, which had prevailed in that province. I have never been able to understand why, when we carved out the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, we did not, at the same time, in view of the temper of the people of the west, and the long-standing aspirations of Manitoba, the first born of the provinces of confederation —I have never been able to understand why we did not satisfy the claims of Manitoba at that time. No man can look at the map of the Dominion to-day without seeing with the naked eye the comparatively insignificant position which that province occupies territorially, and none can fail to appreciate why there is dissatisfaction in that eldest of the prairie provinces. We are now at long last rendering justice to Manitoba; we are handing over to her territory which ought to belong to her as a province, and we are finishing up the work of confederation in this way. When I heard my right hon. friend, the Prime Minister, presenting this measure to the House, I recalled that nearly forty years ago when I was not more than a boy, I myself heard Cartier, one of the great workers in the initiatory process of the foundation of this Dominion with prophetic version foretelling the hour when the whole of British North America would be organized into provinces and when the dream of himself and his associates would be polarized. Well, Sir, to-day we are giving effect to that prophecy of the great Sir George Cartier. One would suppose, hearing the remarks of my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Pugsley), that the first organizers of confederation had entered into the scheme as a land speculation. When we heard the hon. member speak of the necessity, in the disposal of these great territories, of consulting provinces far removed from the regions which we are discussing, and talking of compensation being given to these provinces, one would suppose we were assisting in a land deal. Well, that is not the spirit in which the founders of confederation proceeded; that is not the spirit which presided over the negotiations when they acquired Rupert's Land and the territories of the northwest. There was no payment there for real estate; it was under an order in council of the Imperial government that most of these lands were handed over to us, and, while it is true, that in 1868, compensation was paid to extinguish the rights—other than trading and commercial rights of the Hudson's Bay Company, the idea at the bottom of it was that these territories would afterwards be distributed among the provinces in order to complete a symmetrical plan under which this territory would become provincially organized for the fuller and more completed development of the confederacy then in an embryo state. It is not a matter of adjusting accounts among the provinces; it is not a matter to be taken up in a book-keeping spirit; but it is a matter which should be regarded in the light alone of the fruition of the scheme of confederation. It seems to me, therefore, that the criticism we have heard to-day about the financial terms granted and about consulting the other provinces, and about an accord between Manitoba and Ontario, as to a right of way for a purely provincial railway into the hinterland and towards Hudson bay; it seems to me that the constitutional points raised in these questions did not evince on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite that large and liberal-minded view which we should take of an event of this kind, and which should lead us to a more generous, more comprehensive, and larger view of the whole situation. The port on the Hudson bay is a port which belongs to the Dominion and which will be developed by the Dominion, and what more natural than since an arrangement of this kind cannot be come to without the mutual consent of all interested, that there should be a consent to this right-of-way giving Ontario the privilege of pushing its provincial railway up to the very shores of the Dominion harbour on Hudson bay.

This is a matter which, it seems to me, ought to be the subject of general congratulation and exultation, at least in its general features. But in all human events a bitter drop usually surges out of the fountain of our joys, and my hon. friend from Nicolet (Mr. Lamarche) has brought to the surface that bitter drop in this instance. For my part, I am very glad to be able to explain to this House and to the country, my position on this question. A great many very unfair criticisms of the government have come from certain quarters in regard to the educational aspect of this question. I have read of these criticisms with very great regret, because I do not think they are in the least degree founded. But from their tone, one would suppose that it is in a certain way the resuscitation or resurrection of the Manitoba school question. It is, I think, proper, to point out, in order to clear away what doubtful points may exist, in regard to this matter, that, as I have always understood, the Manitoba school question was finally, and for all time, settled in 1897, by the settlement arrived at between the Dominion government and the government of Manitoba, in regard to that question, and it cannot in any sense come up again. I have always held to that opinion, and have expressed it on many occasions, though I have absolutely condemned the terms of that agreement. There are several ways in which, under our constitution, the Federal government can intervene, and interfere in matters of education. They are provided for in section 93 of the British North America Act, and, in the case of Manitoba, in section 22 of the Manitoba Act, the charter of that province under Imperial authority. It was under the latter section that what I cannot help calling the regrettable question at that time arose. But it does not in any sense, arise in the present instance. Where disagreements arise, we can interfere by conference, under section 22 of the Manitoba Act we can interfere by remedial order, we can interfere by legislation, and we can interfere by settlement; but surely, to anybody who reads with attention and care the dispositions of section 22 of the Manitoba Act, and of section 93 of our Constitutional Act, when those means have been exhausted and a settlement has been arrived at, there is the end of the matter. I remember having given public utterance to that sentiment in 1896, after the general elections of that year, in which the electorate had declared against the mode adopted at that time, by the leader of the government, Sir Charles Tupper.

After that election, I expressed the view, and I think with reason, that the country had decided that there should be no remedial legislation, and that, as far as remedial legislation was concerned, the Manitoba question was settled. I gave public utterance to that view, which was commented on at the time by the papers in my own province, and I believe outside of it. What happened in 1896? My right hon. friend, the leader of the opposition at that time and the leader of the opposition to-day, declared as his policy before the country that there should be no remedial legislation—that it was not the proper system to adopt in order to remedy the grievance which had been established by the highest court of the empire as a real grievance of the minority in Manitoba. He was in favour of conciliation and he held out to the electors of Canada that as soon as he was placed in power he would name a commission, the chairman of which would be Sir Oliver Mowat, a man commendable to everybody, and that under the management of that commission this question of the Manitoba schools would be settled, not by remedial legislation, but by conferences and agreement. Well, Sir, in my own province that programme was absolutely ratified and adopted, we who were in favour of remedying the grievance by remedial legislation returned from the province of Quebec a small baker's dozen, if I remember correctly. Therefore, the attitude of my right hon. friend in that regard was endorsed in my province and all over the country. What happened afterwards? A settlement was arrived at in 1897 though not exactly in the manner announced by my right hon. friend. As brought down to the House in 1897, that settlement is to be found in the Sessional Papers of that year, volume 30, Sessional Paper No. 35, and if this is consulted, it will be found that the agreement, in the estimation of the minority themselves of the province concerned, was absolutely inadequate to remedy the grievance. I condemned it as such, but it was approved by parliament. The ministerial party of that day without any exception approved of the terms of that agreement, by voting confidence in the government after it had been adopted. It was approved by the country in the elections of 1900, more particularly in my own province.

I think I am justified in saying that as far as interference from the Dominion parliament or the Dominion government is concerned in any way we are to-day absolutely functi-officio. There is no power in the Dominion parliament or in the Dominion government to touch in any way the disabilities, the inconveniences, the great injustices to my mind from which at the present moment the religious minority in Manitoba are suffering. Therefore, it seems to me that it is our duty to examine what rights there are in the district of Keewatin which, according to my hon. friend from Nicolet, are to be safeguarded or attended to. From the animadversion and vituperation with which certain attacks have been made upon those of us in the Cabinet who are supposed to be more particularly concerned with the protection of the rights of the minority, that we should inquire if there are any vested rights in the Roman Catholic population of the district of Keewatin. In the petitions which I have received, in the requests which have appeared in the public press, reference is continually made to the Statute of 1875 to which the hon. member for Nicolet (Mr. Lamarche) has referred. The statute of 1875 contained the disposition which he has read to the House and which I would like briefly to quote. It is to be found in chapter 49 of the Statutes of 1875, section 11, regarding the Northwest Territories. It says:

> When and so soon as any system of taxation shall be adopted in any district or portion of the Northwest Territories, the Lieutenant-Governor, by and with the consent of the council or assembly, as the case may be, shall pass all necessary ordinances in respect to education, but it shall therein be always provided, that a majority of the ratepayers of any district or portion of the Northwest Territories, or any lesser portion or subdivision thereof, by whatever name the same may be known, may establish such schools therein as they may think fit, and make the necessary assessment and collection of rates therefor; and further, that the minority of the ratepayers therein, whether Protestant or Roman Catholic, may establish separate schools therein, and that in such latter case, the ratepayers establishing such Protestant or Roman Catholic separate schools shall be liable only to assessments of such rates as they may impose upon themselves in respect thereof.

This disposition is reproduced in the statutes of 1896, but it never was in any way enforced in the district of Keewatin. This Act of 1875 never applied to the district of Keewatin in any way. In the year after the Act was passed the district of Keewatin was organized separately under the Keewatin Act and this separation of the district of Keewatin from the rest of the Northwest Territories was for the purpose of temporarily providing for the administration of that district. Even as far back as 1875 this intention was expressed by parliament, as we find in the debates; the disposition of that territory was purely temporary, it was intended to incorporate it with the province of Manitoba or part of it with the province of Ontario. It was separated from the territories of the Northwest as being immediately about to be incorporated with existing provinces, and the disposition of section 11 to which I have referred was especially for that purpose and then there is the Keewatin Act. Mr. Alexander Mackenzie, as will be found on referring to the debates of 1876, stated that this leaving out and this failure to provide any school law protection, any educational guarantee, was because the measure was temporary and it was intended before long, even at that time, 30 years ago, to place that territory under the school administration of the province of Manitoba or the province of Ontario or even perhaps to return it to the Northwest Territories. Therefore, I say that from the 7th of October, 1876, the date at which the Northwest Territories Act of 1875 came into force and the district of Keewatin Act of 1876 was also proclaimed, there never was any educational guarantee or law of any kind in the territory with which we are now dealing up to the time of the erection of the two provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, 30 years during which this district was kept in that state of suspense, and it is, I think, fair to assume that during that time there never was any law in existence in that territory under which any vested rights of any kind or description might be acquired.

I come now to the moment when the two provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta were organized. Up to that moment, during 30 years, in the district of Keewatin, there were no schools, there was no school legislation, there was no law of any kind under which any living man could claim any guarantee of any kind whatever in respect of education. In 1905 we created the two new provinces of Saskatchewan

'and Alberta by the two Acts of that year 'and in the same year was passed this 'statute which, I think, is important to 'quote to the House, because we are com-'ing to a crucial and important moment 'in connection with the examination of 'this question. In the year 1905 at the 'time the Dominion parliament was creat-'ing these two large provinces alongside 'of Manitoba, we passed a statute amend-'ing the Northwest Territories Act, chapter '27, 4 and 5 Edward VII, section 3. We were then left with the Northwest Terri-'tories and with the district of Keewatin. 'What were we going to do? We had not 'carried out the expectation and the very 'natural request of the province of Mani-'toba to simultaneously receive its own 'extension of boundaries. This is what I 'find in section 3 of that statute:

The Northwest Territories shall hereafter comprise the territories formerly known as Rupert's Land and the Northwestern Territories, except such portions thereof as form the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the district of Keewatin, and the Yukon Territory, together with all British territories and possessions in North America and all islands adjacent to any such territories or possessions except the colony of Newfoundland and its dependencies.

Therefore, the Dominion parliament, after having created and organized these two new provinces, as I read this sentence —and I submit to the House that it is not subject to any other interpretation—declares what shall be the new Northwest Territory, and keeps out of the Northwest Territory the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the district of Keewatin and the district of the Yukon. That was, at that moment, the will of parliament. Keewatin was not thrown into the Northwest Territory, but by the express declaration of the will of parliament, and for the same reasons that had prompted the creation of the district of Keewatin in 1875, it was kept aside to be placed in the province immediately adjacent. I say that was the will of parliament at that moment. The will of parliament was that the district of Keewatin should not once more be thrown into the Northwest Territory. At that very moment this annexation to the province to which we are annexing it to-day was already an urgent, a burning question. And parliament, with perfect reason, decreed that Keewatin should remain under the same régime as that under which it had been before.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Was Keewatin not reannexed to the territories in 1905, by a proclamation which was provided for in the Keewatin Act of 1875?

Mr. MONK. I have just stated to the House what was the legislation immediately following or contemporaneous with the creation of the two new provinces. But four days afterwards, on the 24th July, 1905, under the section of the old Keewatin Act, the Dominion government passed an order in council—the order in council to which my hon. friend from Nicolet (Mr. Lamarche), referred. This did not detach from Keewatin, in conformity with the terms of the Act, some proportion or portions of the district, but assigned the whole of the district to the Northwest Territories. And it is claimed—and I think with reason —that the order in council was absolutely ultra vires of the powers of the government under the section of the Keewatin Act to which I have just referred. But the strangest part of all came about when the revised statutes of 1906 came into force. The revised statutes of 1906, chapter 62, section 2, provides as follows:

In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires, 'territories' means the Northwest Territories, which comprise the territories formerly known as Rupert's Land and the Northwest Territories, except such portions thereof as form the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta and Yukon Territory.

Leaving out entirely the district of Keewatin in spite of the statute to which I have referred, passed in the previous year. So that, as I understand, the Act of the previous year was not repealed.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Will the hon. minister please read that section again?

Mr. MONK. I say that under section 2 of chapter 62, the Act respecting the Northwest Territories, the description of the Northwest Territories is not taken from the Act of 1905. It is not made to comprise the Northwest Territory except the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the district of Keewatin and the Yukon territory. The district of Keewatin is left out in the revision of the section. Although the will of parliament declares in 1905, that the statutes to which I have referred was that the district of Keewatin should remain outside of the Northwest Territories, and although that statute of 1905 is not repealed by the revised statutes —it is mentioned among the statutes revised—still in this section the Keewatin district is left out of the list of exceptions and so is thrown into the Northwest Territories.

Mr. ETHIER. May I ask the hon. gentleman to read the last part of the section 2? He does not read it all. The last part concludes the definition of the word "territories". The hon. gentleman reads only the exceptions.

Mr. MONK. I will read it all to my hon. friend:

'Territories' means the Northwest Territories which comprise the territories formerly known as Rupert's Land and the northwestern territory, except such portions thereof as form the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta and the Yukon Territory, together with all British territories and possessions in North America and all islands adjacent thereto, not included within any province, except the colony of Newfoundland and its dependencies.

What I wish to point out is that the statute of 1905, though it is not purported to be repealed by the revised statutes, but consolidated, clearly takes out of the Northwest Territories the district of Keewatin, whereas under this section 2 of chapter 62 of the revised statutes as it is proclaimed in the following year, the district of Keewatin is left out. Therefore under this section 2 of chapter 62 it was actually thrown into the Northwest Territories, contrary, as I submit, to the clearly manifested will of parliament expressed by the statute passed in the previous year.

Mr. GUTHRIE. But the revised statutes, I presume, would supersede the statutes of the previous year. We passed the revised statutes as well as the others.

Mr. MONK. I suppose so. But the statute of the previous year was not repealed.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I would take it to be repealed by implication.

Mr. MONK. I do not think so.

Mr. PROULX. Is it not repealed by the statute of 6-7 Edward VII—the next year?

Mr. MONK. Now, Sir, let us take the section to be found in the revised statutes of 1906. Up to 1906, we have not a shadow of reason for contending that there is in the district of Keewatin during the thirty years during which it had existed any legislation of any kind whatever concerning education or educational privileges. But let us take what happened in 1905 and 1906 and let me read to the House these sections concerning education to be found in the revised statute. I quote from the revised statutes of 1906 chapter 62, section 10:

The Commissioner in Council, if authorized to make ordinances respecting education, shall pass all necessary ordinances in respect thereto; but in the laws or ordinances relating to education it shall always be provided that a majority of the ratepayers of any district or portion of the territories, or of any less portion or subdivision thereof, by whatever name the same is known, may establish such schools therein as they think fit, and make the necessary assessment and collection of rates therefor; and also that the minority of the ratepayers therein, whether Protestant or Roman Catholic, may establish separate schools therein and in such cases, the ratepayers establishing such Protestant or Roman Catholic separate schools shall be liable only to assessment of such rates as they impose upon themselves in respect thereof.

Taking it that this enactment of section 10, to be found for the first time in 1906 as applicable to the district of Keewatin, taking it that it came legitimately into our legislation, were there any vested rights of any kind or description whatever created under that section? The House will note that in order to create any of these rights it was necessary that the commissioner of the northwest should be provided with a council. Without that council he could not pass any laws or regulations whatever in respect of education. But that was not the only condition. Not only must he be furnished with a council without which he had no authority whatever to legislate, but he must be specially authorized by the Dominion government to pass ordinances in respect to education. Neither of these conditions were ever fulfilled. It is not surprising that they were not fulfilled, because everything at that moment in that territory was in a state of transition; there was no necessity for providing it with a council. It was not necessary for him to pass any ordinances in respect to education, because the régime over which he had control particularly in that direction was in a transitory state. Whatever may have been the reason, he was never authorized to pass any ordinances, he never received any council to advise him in his legislative capacity, and no law or regulation of any kind was adopted in that régime in respect to education. And can it be pretended that there were vested rights in respect to education?

Mr. GUILBAULT. Will the hon. member permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MONK. Certainly.

Mr. GUILBAULT. When was the nomination of that council asked for the first time? Was it under the present government or under the ex-government?

Mr. MONK. I believe that the first request addressed to the federal government of appointment of a council was made in 1909. In a few moments I will refer to the matter mentioned by my hon. friend.

I say, therefore, that when you speak of vested rights in respect of education, you speak of rights that have been obtained in a substantial form, and under legislation which has been adopted. This section 10 which came into force under the circumstances I have indicated, in these peculiar, strange, mysterious circumstances, in respect of which I think some explanation ought to be offered by those who at that time were responsible for the legislation, was potential legislation, permissive or restrictive legislation. But, surely no vested rights of any kind could arise under a clause of that kind until it became effective by the creation of a council under the authority conferred upon the commissioner to legislate, and furthermore, by legislation putting in force ordinances and regulations by the commissioner thus surrounded by his council and vested with authority. There never was at any time anything of that kind. So that what we have to-day in the district of Keewatin is merely a restriction which never became operative or effective because the clause itself never came into operation through the failure to name a council and to authorize that council to legislate.

I have spoken in regard to the district of Keewatin. My hon. friend from Nicolet (Mr. Lamarche) has referred to the narrow strip on the eastern part of the district of Keewatin, probably one-ninth at most of the territory with which we are dealing to-night, and which, when the two new provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta were created, were left out of those provinces for the sake of symmetry and remained in the Northwest Territories. But in that narrow strip, although the former section of the Act of 1875 applied without any interruption, it never became effective, no schools were organized, the ordinances of the Northwest Territories were never applied in that district, and no vested rights of any kind, to my mind, were created. Now under these circumstances I do not think it is possible to say that there are, in any portion of that district, acquired rights with which we can deal. Let me here mention to the House, in answer to the question put by my hon. friend from the county of Joliette (Mr. Guilbault), a petition was presented to the government—I have a copy of it here—on the 9th of July, 1905, for the establishment of a school at Le Pas. That petition does not indicate the character of the school to be established. There is a correspondence upon the subject. I will not take up the time of the House in quoting lengthily from the correspondence upon that subject, but I will merely state the facts. In 1909 application was made to the government for the establishment of a school in that strip. The government does not seem to have thought at the time that it was possible to organize that school under any law. The report of Mr. White, commisisoner, was that there were no laws under which effect could be given to that application. I believe that application was from the Catholic minority. So far as I can see from the document, it was for the establishment of a school at that place. There was afterwards an application from a Roman Catholic bishop. That application was made since the present government came into power. The matter was referred to the commissioner of the northwest, and the report was in the same sense, that there were no ordinances applicable or susceptible of any application in that territory under which any possible effect could be given to that expressed desire for a local organization.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I thought the question of my hon. friend from Joliette (Mr. Guilbault) was whether there had been an application for the appointment of a council, and when it was made for the first time.

Mr. MONK. I am not aware that there was at any time an application for a Council; it may be so, but I am not aware of it. There were several applications—I think two or three, at any rate—for school organization under the laws, but I am not aware that there was any demand—although there might have been a demand—for the nomination of a council. When this government came into power, one of the very first questions brought to our consideration with which we had to deal—I think the very first question—was precisely the demand of Manitoba for an extension of its boundaries. There has been a pretension that at that moment it was the duty of the government to complete the council and to authorize the commissioner, assisted by the council, to pass educational legislation. It seems to me a most preposterous proposal that we, at that moment, when seized with the immediate question of the extension of the boundaries of Manitoba, which had been before the country for years, and obliged to deal with that question, should, by the nomination of a council and the authorization of the commissioner to pass ordinances in respect to education, still further complicate the question which was already before us to be decided. It would have been not only highly improper, but absolutely preposterous at that moment. We would have been called upon to deal immediately with the territory, to name a council, and to complete the organization of that territory as if it were to remain permanently outside of the province. I always considered that that was a most improvident demand and a most indefensible proposal. I think this is a proper view to take of it. Then, there were no vested rights of any kind in Keewatin territory, and there are at present no vested rights, nothing substantial in the way of legal or acquired rights in the territory with which we are dealing. There is a legislative restriction in case the commissioner in charge of the territory should be provided with a council, and in case he should be authorized to legislate on education. But, there is no council, we found no council, we have to deal with the question and the commissioner has never been provided with a council or authorized to legislate. There are no obligations of any kind existing under any legal disposition in that territory. Let me read to the House the law which governs our dealings with this question at the present moment. I shall quote from the Imperial Act, 1871, 34-35 Vic. We are doing something absolutely different from what we were doing in 1905, because then we were organizing two new provinces. These are the sections of the Imperial Act, under which we are authorized to create new provinces or to extend the boundaries of a province:

The parliament of Canada may from time to time establish new provinces in any territories forming for the time being part of the Dominion of Canada, but not included in any province thereof, and may, at the time of such establishment, make provision for the constitution and admission of any such province and for the passing of laws for the peace, order and good government of such province, and for its representation in the said parliament.

3. The parliament of Canada may from time to time, with the consent of the legislature of any province of the said Dominion, increase, diminish or otherwise alter the limits of such province upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed to by the said legislature, and may, with the like consent, make provision respecting the effect and operation of any such increase or diminution or alteration of territory in relation to any province affected thereby.

In 1905 we were giving a constitution to the two new provinces. Under the third section, under which we are acting at the present time, we have no constitution to give to the province of Manitoba. It has its constitution under Imperial legislation. In 1905 we were called upon to establish the constitutions of the two new provinces. We found there a territory under which there had been legislation in respect to schools in force for a long time, in which there was a population, in which there was a Catholic minority, a number of schools organized under these ordinances and what we were required to do, was to provide protection for the actual, substantial vested rights of that minority under the new constitutions of these two provinces. We were making constitutional limitations. My right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) at that time, took that view of it, and he will remember that he invited us to mount with him upon the rock of constitution and the very section of the Northwest Territories Act was to be incorporated in the constitutions of these new provinces, which we were dealing with, with such limitations as we think were fit and proper at the time of the foundation of these new provinces under section 2 of the Imperial Act.

But, in this case, we have no constitution to confer upon any of the provinces between which we are dividing that territory. We have no power to place constitutional limitations upon those provinces under section 3, under which we are acting. We cannot change the constitution of any of these provinces. It might be argued that, under the very general permission of section 3, which I have just read, we could impose conditions upon the province of Manitoba. To what extent can we impose those conditions? I have said to the House that in my estimation there are, in this territory, no vested rights, no substantial rights acquired under any legislation. But, if you admit that, and if you say that we can, because this is a matter of mutual consent between ourselves and this province, impose any condition we like, it becomes a question of policy. What should be the policy? Is it the opinion of the House, is it the opinion of my hon. friend from Nicolet, that since it is a matter of mutual consent, we should say to the province of Manitoba: You shall not have this territory to which you are clearly entitled under the scheme of the division of the territory unless you accept as a condition that you will have a dual system of schools in your province; you have the system which exists in the old province of Manitoba; and which has been declared to be constitutional by the decision of the Privy Council in the Barrett case, as a matter of constitutional law; you will not have that territory unless you consent to a dual system of schools in the enlarged and extended province. To my mind, Mr. Speaker, it would be impossible to conceive of a proposition more calculated to do injustice to the very large minority of Catholics who are to-day in the old province of Manitoba, and for whom there is reason to hope that the government and the people of Manitoba will do something in the future to relieve them from the disabilities and injustice under which they suffer at present.

Mr. MACDONALD. Has the hon. member (Mr Monk) any assurance or understanding that any such thing will be done?

Mr. MONK. None whatever. But, leaving aside now the legal question of vested rights and of what should be the policy in dealing with that great province, I submit that at the present moment, without the existence of any properly or so-called vested right, to say to the province: you will not have this territory unless you consent to establish within your limits a dual system of education, would be, in my mind, an extremely unwise and unfair condition to place upon Manitoba. There are, in my opinion, no legal rights whatever to safeguard, and as a matter of pure policy to say we will place that condition upon any transfer of territory would be absolutely contrary to the best interests of the country, and even to the best interests of the minority in that province. It is a well known fact that in spite of the extremely unenviable conditions of the agreement arrived at in 1897, the minority in the province of Manitoba has been treated with the extremest indulgence possible by the government of Mr. Roblin. There is no doubt whatever that everything that could be done for that minority under the laws as they exist, has been done. At the present moment, it seems to me that for us to take up that extremely hard and unjustifiable position with respect to this territory, would be impolitic and improper. That is the opinion I hold of the situation, viewed from the standpoint of policy. Then, Mr. Speaker, if it is to be considered entirely as a question of policy, it seems to me that would bring up the whole question of public schools, so to speak. For my own part, I am not a believer in the system of education which perhaps meets with the approval and favour of the majority of the members of this House, and which to-day meets with great favour in the United States. I believe in a system of education which preserves absolutely for the parent the right to educate his child according to his consicence; I believe in a system of education with moral and religious training for the child, and that principle is the principle which, notwithstanding the fiercest educational controversies, has always been maintained in the legislation of England. In the United States a different opinion prevails. Some fifty years ago in that country the people came to the conclusion that the primary system of education which had produced the greatest men of the republic from Washington to Jefferson was not a proper system, and the prevailing educational system was then commenced to be introduced, and in my opinion, after years of trial it has been found absolutely insufficient and defective. To-day, throughout the republic of the United States, the most eminent men and the greatest thinkers of every religious persuasion have come to the conclusion that the prevailing educational system has not in any way produced the result which its promoters expected from it. Now, I do not believe in that system, but it undoubtedly has obtained great favour in many parts of our own country, and there is hardly a doubt that it meets with the approval of the majority of the members of this House. Now, what would be thought of a policy by which this parliament would say to all three provinces concerned in this transaction—Quebec, Ontario and Manitoba—we will not transfer to you any part of this territory unless you establish denominational schools in every part of this annexed territory. I know, Sir, that in the province of Quebec, such a proposal as that would be deemed an affront and no doubt the province of Ontario would take the same view. If you divest this question from the idea of vested legal right; if there are no legal rights whatever and it becomes a question of policy, I say that the proper policy for us is to transfer the territory to the province of Manitoba without any condition whatever in that respect. And, there is no provision which we could insert in the deed of transfer which would afford any protection to the people of the annexed territories better than the protection which is afforded by the constitution of Manitoba in section 22 of the Manitoba Act. We neither could nor should afford any other protection than is to be found in that legislation, and under it, if there are any rights of any kind existing in that territory, those rights will continue to exist after the extension of the boundaries. What laws may be in force will continue to be in force until altered by competent authority, and that competent authority, if it is the provincial authority, will be absolutely limited by the constitutional provisions which exist under section 22 of the Manitoba Act, to which I have referred. There is therefore, to my mind, nothing which we can place in this Act as a question of policy, which would give greater protection to the people of the new territories than is provided under the constitution of Manitoba itself, and in our dealing with that province, as in our dealing with the other provinces concerned, I think we cannot do a wiser thing under the circumstances than to pass the territory over without any conditions of any kind whatever.

Mr. ETHIER. The hon. member states that if there are vested rights there is no necessity for putting in a proviso to protect these vested rights.

On the same principle, if the Hudson's Bay Company has vested rights, why is it necessary to make a proviso for them? What is the difference between the vested rights of the minority and the vested rights of the Hudson's Bay Company?

Mr. MONK. The difference is this, that the rights of the Hudson's Bay Company are purely proprietary rights, as to which there is no doubt whatever, and in transferring this territory, we are obliged to provide for those proprietary rights. I do not think there are any vested educational rights, but if there were any, the only way in which they could be protected, if the transfer is to take place, is under the educational clause 22 of the Manitoba Act, which we cannot change or vary in any way.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. What is clause 22? The right of appeals only?

Mr. MONK. It is the charter of Manitoba, which says this:

In and for the province the said legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to education, subject and according to the following provisions:

Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to denominational schools which any class of persons have by law or practice in the province at the union.

Then there are two subsections with regard to an appeal and remedy in case that provision of the law should be violated.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. What application has this to the present case?

Mr. MONK. Under this section, if there are any rights existing in this territory, and if after its incorporation into Manitoba those rights are interfered with, this section will operate to protect those rights, whatever they may be.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. But I understood my hon. friend to say there are no rights there.

Mr. MONK. I am certainly of opinion, and have endeavoured to show, that there are no rights of any kind existing. I say the commissioner was never authorized to legislate, and no rights of any kind were created under that permissive section. There were no schools organized under the law and no rights to be protected; and under the imperial constitution of Manitoba there can be no other guarantee than the guarantee provided in section 22.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Section 22 has no application at all to this territory. It refers to any right which existed in the province at the union, that is, in 1870.

Mr. MONK. The words seem to me to have the same application as those of section 93 of the British North America Act. Subsection 2 provides for an appeal in case vested rights are interfered with.

Mr. PROULX. I beg to remind the hon. minister that section 22 deals with a province; but this territory does not come in as a province; it is only added to a province.

Mr. MONK. For every part of a province I believe there is a remedy under section 22. I thought it necessary to show to the House and the country that this matter has been most carefully considered by ourselves, in view particularly of an agitation which it has been attempted to start, and which I consider most unfounded and unwise. Speaking as a member of the Catholic minority, I am not at all disposed to say that there should be the slightest disposition to give way when we have clear and established rights. I believe that the foundation of the prosperity of this confederation, in which we all have faith and hope, reposes on absolute respect for the rights of all minorities, and the strict maintenance of those rights on every occasion possible. But I believe at the same time that we must confine our exactions as a minority to the clear cases in which those rights exist under the law. There should be a strict adherence to the constitution. Where there is no evidence of any existing right, it would be, I think, unwise and wrong to make claims that have no foundation in law. I and my colleagues have endeavoured to give to this matter the most careful consideration. As a matter of policy, after the irritation that has existed in regard to the Manitoba school question, the idea no doubt prevalent in the minds of many people is that the settlement of the Manitoba boundaries has possibly been retarded by the acrimony that prevailed in regard to that question. It would be wrong at the present moment to make excessive claims. I have absolute confidence myself that the Manitoba government will in due course give favourable consideration to the disabilities under which the minority suffer within the limits of the old territories, and with whom, under my interpretation of the law and of the agreement of 1897, they have no power whatever to interfere. I believe that at the present moment to impose conditions with regard to this transfer which are not clearly founded in law, would indispose the government and the people of Manitoba. These western communities are generous and broad-minded, but they do not like control or domination. In this case there is to my mind no ground for any such domination or any such imposition of conditions, and I have confidence that, from the measure in the shape in which it is submitted by the government the very best results will follow.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York). Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will bear me for two or three moments while I refer to this question. I have listened to what the hon. member for Nicolet (Mr. Lamarche) has said, and if I can interpret his argument, it is this, that there would have to be coercion of Manitoba in connection with education if his suggestion were entertained.

If anything ever was settled by this House once and forever it was settled in 1896, that there was to be no coercion of Manitoba in respect of education. I was a member of the House at that time, and I disagreed with my party then in regard to this question. I was one of seven, and there are only two of us in the House now, who took this stand that there was to be no coercion of a province, and we were supported in that contention by the then opposition, led by the right hon. gentleman who leads the opposition at the present moment (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), and it was settled once and forever that there was to be no coercion of the province of Manitoba in regard to education. If the hon. member for Nicolet (Mr. Lamarche), means anything to-night he proposes that there shall be inserted in this Bill something coercive of Manitoba. Not for one moment will the people of this country stand for the coercing in any shape or form of a sovereign province like Manitoba whose rights in this matter were settled long ago.

In 1896 the then government of the day felt that they were constrained by the constitution to give remedial legislation on behalf of Manitoba. That was argued and upheld by the government, that they were coerced to do that thing. I contended against that then, the province of Ontario from which I come also took that view, and now when another Conservative government are in office they do not feel that they are constrained by the constitution to in any way attempt to coerce the province of Manitoba. Thus you can see that there is some kind of progress in a constitutional way, and to my mind it is a sign of progress that neither the government nor the parliament to-day are disposed to coerce a sovereign province like Manitoba in the matter of education.

Passing along we come down to the legislation which established the new provinces in the northwest. To my mind there was coercion then. It carried after a very long and severe fight, but even then there were members in the Liberal party who left their party on that occasion because of what was considered coercion of the provinces. In the first instance coercion was attempted by the government and failed, and later on when a modified form of coercion was attempted it succeeded in a way, but still the circumstances were different in that we were creating new provinces in the second case, and interfering with an established province in the first case.

Now we come to this case. There is a proposal that there shall be some kind of coercion of Manitoba in this case. I am voting for this measure to-day and I am glad to vote for it because there is no attempt at coercion in it, and in that respect it is altogether different from the two former measures. I grant that on the line of the argument of the previous speaker the minority may have a grievance, but, if they have a grievance the remedy is still in an appeal to the province of Manitoba to do them justice, and I believe if their grievance is a good one and they persist in it, they will get some kind of modification that will meet their views and that would be better than that we should attempt the coercion of a province and should interfere with what might be called the rights of the majority, because a majority may have rights, and these rights may be greater than what the grievances of a minority may be. If the proposal of the hon. member for Nicolet (Mr. Lamarche) means anything it must mean that there shall be coercion of the whole province or coercion in regard to education in the newer portion that is now to be added to it, and in that case we would have a province with two different kinds of laws in regard to different sections of it. That anomaly surely could not exist. If it meant that the law was to be widespread and the minority's rights were to be incorporated in the statutes of Manitoba now, I say we would be going altogether too far in interfering with that province. So I have simply risen to say that I am voting for this measure because I have seen this parliament grow, both as regards the government and as regards the House, in at last adopting the policy that there must not be coercion in this country in matters educational, and that it is best in every way to leave these questions to the people of the respective provinces.

I believe the people of all our provinces will respect the rights of minorities and will do justice to all, and that the only natural and the proper thing for this House to do either in the past or on this occasion, is to absolutely keep clear of these questions and to leave them to the provinces for settlement and for the doing of any right that a minority can fairly claim. This Act shows an advancement, a progress in our country in this respect, that at last we have decided not to interfere in any way with a sovereign province in the matter of education.

Hon. L. P. PELLETIER (Postmaster General). Mr. Speaker, the Bill we have before us now is one of great importance in itself, but its importance is greatly enhanced by the fact that it will be considered by parliament together with two other Bills, one extending the boundaries of the province of Ontario, and the other extending the province of Quebec.

This country is growing rapidly, and its population is keeping pace with its progress.

It is now proposed by two of these Bills, that Ontario will take over and administer all that portion of territory extending from its present limits as far as Hudson bay, and to extend to the boundaries of the province of Quebec, so as to include the whole of Ungava.

By the present Bill it is also proposed to extend the boundaries of the province of Manitoba, but it is to be noted that special conditions are made as to public lands and school lands which this government keeps.

The features of this Bill which have not met with the approval of hon. gentlemen opposite are mostly what I might call the financial terms or conditions. It has been argued by some gentlemen that this government was giving too much to Manitoba. Other gentlemen on the same side of the House have argued that the government was doing the reverse of that. It has been attempted to convince the maritime provinces that they were unfairly treated. I do not think I am going too far in saying that no very great or serious objection has been raised in that regard.

One argument which has been put forward by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) may at first sight have been considered as having some force. He said that the resolutions provided for the extensions of the boundaries of these two provinces had all been passed in the same year,—as a matter of fact, they are contained in the same resolution. Why, then, he said, should we give to the province of Manitoba arrears which we are not giving to the provinces of Ontario and Quebec? Speaking with all due deference to all the hon. gentlemen who have spoken on this question, this was the only argument that struck me as being, at first sight, very serious. But if we consider the state of affairs existing then as it exists now, I think that even the hon. member for St. John, who has put forward this argument for his own province and the two sister provinces by the sea, will admit that his argument cannot live in the light of the facts. I may not have understood it, and I speak subject to correction; but it seems to me there is a vast difference between the positions of Ontario and Quebec in this respect, and that of Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan in 1905. We must not lose sight of the fact that to Ontario and Quebec we are giving the lands within their boundaries, but we give here to the province of Manitoba only the extension of boundaries, but we keep under this government the school lands and the public lands. What the government did in 1905 for Alberta and Saskatchewan is what this government is doing to-day for Manitoba in that respect. Even if that resolution of 1908 had been put on the statute-book and agreed to by all the provinces, Ontario and Quebec would not have had much revenue from these territories. As a matter of fact, they would have had none. But Alberta and Saskatchewan had been receiving, in lieu of public lands, a money grant. And if Manitoba had been treated like the sister provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan, she would have received a similar grant from 1905. But Manitoba has been deprived of this revenue. Now I ask the question—and it is a fair one—why should we be reproached for giving to Manitoba what she ought to have received from 1905? Are we to be told that this in an unfair arrangement. Surely not. Speaking for myself, I should have been disposed to consider a claim by Manitoba going back to the time when the money was given to the other provinces, because Manitoba was entitled to that amount as much as Alberta and Saskatchewan were. This argument of the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) which I have been considering as the only serious argument, and is the only one to which I think it necessary to refer.

Manitoba has been kept in the background because, in the eyes of the late government, she was guilty of being a Conservative province, and now that the Conservative government is in power at Ottawa, we intend, at once, to give the province of Manitoba the territorial limits to which she is legitimately entitled and of which she has been unjustly deprived.

The financial conditions are, as I understand, reasonable and acceptable, and there seems to be no great obstacle in the way, except, that as far as the Catholic members of the Cabinet are concerned, they are told that they are not doing their duty on the vexed question of separate schools.

My right hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Sir. Wilfrid Laurier) has told us that on this question he is within the lines of Torres Vedras. My right hon. friend knows that ground well; he has been there very often. I have never been there: I am not going to be there to-night.

Now, this is an important question. The papers in our province, as the right hon. gentleman himself put it this afternoon, speak of nothing else just now but this question. The right hon. gentleman referred to it but said he was not going to speak of it. I am not here to judge the course my right hon. friend has chosen to follow in this matter, but I have the right to look on and see what is going on. And I see here a great party the leader of which says in this House that we have before us an important matter, but he is not going to touch it, that he has no policy with regard to it. And he says, very aptly: Give us your policy on this question. Mr. Speaker, we have put the Bill before the House: that is our policy. The right hon. gentleman was fifteen years in power, and when he brought measures before parliament, if somebody had told him he had no policy with regard to the matters involved he would have been very much surprised. And I was surprised this afternoon to be told that this government has no policy. The right hon, gentleman's own papers in the province of Quebec are calling us arch-traitors because this Bill is before the House in the form in which it appears. The right hon. gentleman (Sir. Wilfrid Laurier) has nothing to say. I take it that if there are clauses in the Bill which the government brings before the House which are bad in the eyes of certain members, those members should stand up like men and tell us so. And if a Bill which the government brings down shows important omissions, it is the duty of the loyal opposition in this House to tell us: You have forgotten to put something in this Bill which ought to be there.

Since we are confronted with it and since we must look back to that past, so as to know where we stand for the present and for the future, if the House will give its attention for a short time, we will consider the facts.

But even after my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works had spoken, again these gentlemen have nothing to say, they are playing a waiting game. They were waiting for me, and they are not going to be disappointed. For my part I do not approve of the game they are now attempting to play. When a government has a policy to lay before parliament and the country, it is the duty of that government to state clearly the reasons which actuate it. For my part, Mr. Speaker, I am quite ready and intend to utter my opinions on this subject freely and boldly, whatever the consequences may be to my future and to myself. I am going to take a stand on this question, because I believe that the time has come when every man must take a stand upon it. It is not my purpose to play with this question politically; it has been made a football long enough. Fifteen years ago this question was approached by one of the political parties with the sole object of making political capital out of it. I may be pardoned if I look at this question briefly. My hon. friend the Minister of Public Work' has referred to the statute giving existence to the province of Manitoba. He has read a part of the statute, and as it is one of the important bases of my argument, I will recall briefly the facts of the case. The statute giving Manitoba its existence as a province, contained the following clauses:—

Section 22. In and for the said province, the said legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to education, subject and according to the following provisions:

1. Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to denominational schools which any class of persons have, by law or practice, in the province at the union.

2. An appeal shall lie to the Governor General in Council from any act or decision of the legislature of the province, or of any provincial authority, affecting any right or privilege of the Protestant or Roman Catholic minority of the Queen's subjects in relation to education.

3. In case any such provincial law, as from time to time seems to the Governor General in Council requisite for the due execution of the provisions of this section, is not made, or in case any decision of the Governor General in Council on any appeal under this section is not duly executed by the proper provincial authority in that behalf, then, and in every such case, and as far only as the circumstances of each case require, the parliament of Canada may make remedial laws for the due execution of the provisions of this section, and of any decision of the Governor General in Council under this section.

It is useless to dwell at any length on the interpretation to be given to the clauses which I have just read. Their sense and meaning have been interpreted by the highest judicial tribunal of the British Empire, the Privy Council in England, and I shall refer to that in a moment. Let me say in passing, that they leave no doubt whatever as to the rights which, under that statute, the minority, either Protestant or Catholic, had to their own schools.

In defiance to that Act, the Greenway government, in 1890, submitted to the Manitoba legislature a Bill which ignored the vested rights which the minority had. This was done for a political purpose, to obtain undue political advantage; however, it became the law of the province, and it has remained the law of the province, with slight amendments, ever since. This law might have been disavowed by the federal government. If it had been disavowed, it would probably have been enacted and re-enacted year after year. and it would have kept the province at war wtih the federal government, and a most unsatisfactory state of affairs would have ensued. As the law creating Manitoba contained stipulations providing for a better, more complete and final settlement of the question, in a judicial or 'quasi' judicial way, it was thought better that the interested parties should have recourse to them.

When the working out of the Manitoba School Act was attempted or rather begun, a number of interested parties questioned the validity of the law and its constitutionality; this is the case known as the Barrett case. It went from court to court, to the Privy Council in England, and here is the holding of the Privy Council:

AN APPEAL FROM THE SUPREME COURT OF CANADA.

City of Winnipeg, Appellant, and Barrett, Respondent.

Held, that the Act of 1890, which abolished the denominational system of public education established by law since the union, but which did not compel the attendance of any child at a public school, or confer any advantage in respect of attendance other than that of free education, and at the same time left each denomination free to establish, maintain and conduct its own schools, did not contravene the above proviso; and that, accordingly, certain by-laws of a municipal corporation which authorized assessments under the Act were valid.

I am not here to criticise that judgment. I have to take it as it stands; it declares that whilst the statute, erecting Manitoba into a province, provided that the minority's schools should not be interfered with, the Manitoba School Act which apparently did take them away was rigorously constitutional. The point of view taken was that the Manitoba School Act did not compel the Catholic minority to attend any schools except their own, that they were still at liberty to have their own schools and to send their children to them. However, the matter did not rest there; the Catholic minority had another remedy which was given them by the constitution, by means of an appeal to the Governor General in Council. This appeal was made, but at the time, there was a great agitation over the question in this country; some people were clamouring that this appeal could not and should not be entertained that the judgment of the Privy Council in the Barrett case had settled the question, and so forth. The government of that day acted very prudently in the matter; in view of the fact that their power to hear this appeal was questioned; they decided that the question should be referred to the courts, so that, like the Ne Temere question, it would be decided by the highest court of the empire. They fully expected, and had reason to expect, that when the Privy Council had spoken, everyone in the country would submit to the decision given at the foot of the Throne.

The case was referred to the Supreme Court of Canada, and was there decided in one way. That judgment was afterwards carried to the Privy Council, which reversed the decision of the Supreme Court, holding as follows:

> Where the Roman Catholic minority in Manitoba appealed to the Governor General in Council against the Manitoba Education Act of 1890, on the grounds that their rights and privileges in relation to education had been affected thereby:
> Held, reversing the judgment of the Supreme Court on a case submitted to it:
> (a) That such appeal lay under section 22, subsection 2, of the Manitoba Act, 1870, which applies to rights and privileges acquired by legislation in the province after the date thereof.
> (b) That Roman Catholics having acquired by such legislation the right to control and manage their denominational schools, to have them maintained out of the general taxation of the province, to select books for their use, and to determine the character of the religious teaching therein, were affected as regards that right by the Acts of 1890, under which state aid was withdrawn from the schools, while they themselves remained liable to local assessment in support of non-sectarian schools to which they conscientiously objected.
> (c) That the Governor General in Council has the power to make remedial orders in the premises, within the scope of subsection 3 of section 22, e.g., by supplemental rather than by repealing legislation.

I shall not dwell upon this judgment. The Catholics of this country had bowed to the first decision in the Barrett case, and Catholics and Protestants had to bow to the last judgment in this Brophy case. This, the men who governed Canada at that time fully understood, and they decided to stand on the constitutional rights, as interpreted by the Queen of England in the Privy Council.

Unfortunately, the statesmen who took this view had to fight those who, for political reasons, thought it advisable and proper to make of it a political question, and to use it for all it was worth. I find no words in the vocabulary to qualify their action, and I shall not attempt to do so. However, let me say that it was a Grit government in Manitoba which was responsible for this legislation, by allowing vested rights to be set aside, and a Grit opposition in federal politics, which countenanced and encouraged resistance to the Privy Council judgment.

The Grits in this country are not the Father of Confederation, they fought it and do not seem to care whether the pact of confederation is undermined or not. They had, at that very critical moment, a noble and important duty to perform; they decided to put that to one side and make use of the situation in order to further party ends, a fact which no man in this country can deny.

Let me now state the course of action followed: The Privy Council had declared that the Catholic minority had the right to appeal to the Governor General in Council. The appeal was heard, the case was argued, and the Governor General in Council decided that the appeal was well founded, and that it should be allowed; consequently, a remedial order, such as is provided by the law, was passed; this Remedial Order was communicated to the Manitoba government, and the Manitoba government threw into the waste paper basket that order, traceable to the Queen of England, and decided to persist in their unfortunate legislation.

It became the duty of the federal parliament to pass remedial legislation, and the famous Remedial Bill was introduced in the House of Commons. Every one knows that this Remedial Bill was accepted by the interested parties as the measure of justice they expected.

It was then that the most extraordinary, to use a very mild term, page was written in the history of this Canada of ours. The men, the great men then in power, understanding their responsibility, offered the measure of justice for adoption by parliament. Most of them did not believe in separate schools, but they decided to stand by the constitution of this country and by the decision of the Privy Council.

What were they then confronted with? The political party then in opposition in Ottawa, the friends of the same party in Manitoba who had, in violation of the constitution, taken away their schools from the minority, decided to obstruct the passage of the Remedial Bill; unfortunately, the time limit for the expiration of that parliament was not very long, they talked against time, and prevented, by their obstructive tactics, the passage of the Bill.

The leader of that party, by the way, was himself a Catholic, that is, one of those from whom it might have been reasonably expected that he would concur in the adoption of that legislation. However, he did not do so. I might perhaps express my opinion in regard to that, but as I might have to employ unparliamentary language, I shall refrain from doing so. I am bound to say, however, in all fairness, that, at that moment, the right hon. gentleman declared that he did not think much of the Remedial Bill; he thought that the Catholic minority in Manitoba who were satisfied with it were wrong, and substituted his own judgment for that of the people most interested; he took the stand that something better could, should, and would be done. He and his political friends from the province of Quebec repeated that one after the other and his political friends from the other provinces started this other cry—that there should be no coercion of Manitoba, and every one remembers the slogan 'Hands off Manitoba.' It took them four months to repeat that, until the ears of the people were full of it, and parliament had to be prorogued before the Remedial Bill was passed. By that time, the Grit newspapers of the country had very skilfully succeeded in making a great number of people believe that the Conservative government was the persecutor of Manitoba, and so forth.

The Conservative statesmen of that day, undaunted, had to face the storm. They did so like men, they took their political lives in their hands, because they were the successors of Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir George Etienne Cartier, and, with their back to the wall, they performed a noble duty. What did we see then? Let me quote here from two speeches made by the same man, to demonstrate how the people were appealed to on this Manitoba school question, which was the great issue in the elections of 1896. I will first quote the speech made in Quebec by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, leader of the opposition then and leader of the opposition to-day, and then I will quote another speech by the same gentleman in Massey Hall, Toronto. At the Jacques Cartier Hall, Quebec, on May 7, 1896. Mr. Laurier (now Sir Wilfrid) said:

JACQUES CARTIER HALL, QUEBEC.

Do not misunderstand my intentions, I repeat here that I wish the minority in Manitoba to obtain justice. It is a principle written in letters of gold in the programme of my party, that the rights of the minority must be respected. . . .

If the people of Canada bring me to power, as I am convinced they will, I will settle this question to the satisfaction of all interested parties. I shall have with me in my government Sir Oliver Mowat, who has always been in Ontario, at the peril of his own popularity, the champion of the Catholic minority and of separate schools. I will put him at the head of a commission, where all the interests at stake shall be represented, and I affirm to you that I will succeed in satisfying those who are suffering at this moment. Is not Sir Oliver Mowat's name alone a guarantee of the success of this plan?

And finally, if conciliation does not succeed, I shall have to exercise that constitutional recourse which the law furnishes, 'a recourse which I shall exercise completely and entirely.'

Briefly put, it reads thus: To you Catholics of Quebec, I, your future Prime Minister, promise and undertake that I shall give your people of Manitoba a more complete measure of justice. I will have the great Sir Oliver Mowat with me, he is a friend of the Catholics, always has been.

This speech inflamed Catholic enthusiasm in Quebec, and the small fry, the ward-heelers, went with that speech throughout the province, adding on to it special comments, such as the following which I had heard at almost every meeting during that election, and which ran thus: Now gentlemen, you see what this great man Laurier will do for his Catholic people in Quebec. Do you not think that Catholic Laurier will do better than Protestant Tupper?

Mr. LEMIEUX. That's what Sir Charles Tupper said in Winnipeg, reversed.

Mr. PELLETIER. My hon. friend (Mr. Lemieux) instead of attempting to deny this admits it and tries to bring in Sir Charles Tupper, which is entirely beside the question.

Mr. MACDONALD. What did you say?

Mr. PELLETIER. What I said then I am saying now. I would suggest to hon. gentlemen opposite that they take their medicine like men. We are told, and it is true, that a great many of our own people went back on Sir Charles Tupper, and did not extend to him the 'glad hand' of gratitude.

I am not here to approve of what they did. To say the least, I think they made a great mistake, but it is, to a certain extent, explained by the fact that when appeals are made to religious enthusiasm, either Catholic or Protestant, we always find people who allow themselves to be carried away by them.

Mr. McKENZIE. Like the navy question in Quebec last election.

Mr. PELLETIER. We will let the navy rest for the moment with the remark that a gentleman who has been a judge ought to know that we should try each question judicially. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. McKenzie) were addressing a jury no doubt he would speak about the state of the weather outside the courthouse. But let him come with me to Massey Hall, Toronto, and hear what Sir Wilfrid Laurier said there, and I quote from the Toronto 'Globe' so that there be no mistake about it.

Mr. Laurier said: He was there (in Toronto) to say, not that he would give either a small or a large amount of relief to the minority, but that assisted by his friend, Sir Oliver Mowat, he would settle the question, not by appeal to any class, but by appeal to the sense of justice which was emplanted in every one by the Creator . . . He was a Roman Catholic and a French-Canadian, and, therefore, might have strong sympathy for the minority, but as he himself would not be coerced by anybody, so he would not consent to force coercion upon any one.

This is the same man who said in Quebec, that he would give a big measure of relief. In Massey hall he would not say whether it would be big or a small measure. At first sight there are many words in the Toronto speech which resemble the Quebec one, but mark the ending. The cry in Ontario had been 'do not coerce Manitoba,' and we find on the lips of the Laurier of that time, the very same words, put there, no doubt, for a purpose. There was enough in that speech to allow the Grit press and the Grit speakers to go about and say all over the province: 'Look at the great man we have as our future Prime Minister, he will not coerce Manitoba.' The Grit candidates went upon the hustings with the Remedial Bill in their hands and said: 'If we are returned to power, we will take that Remedial Bill and tear it to pieces, shouting: 'Hands off Manitoba.'

Mr. TURRIFF. Nothing the matter with that.

Mr. PELLETIER. I am not surprised at that. This is the same double-faced policy we have had for fifteen years. What, Sir, was the result of all this? Quebec sent a majority to put in power the man who promised to give a better measure of justice to the Catholic minority of Manitoba, and the English-speaking Protestants sent a majority to bring to power the man who would not coerce Manitoba. Meanwhile, the Manitoba minority lay by the way-side knowing full well what they could expect from the government which the leader of the opposition did not wish to coerce.

A commission had been promised which would look into the question and solve it; instead of that, there was a conference between the Manitoba Grits and the Ottawa Grits, where sunny smiles and sunny ways, we were told, would produce important results.

What those results were, I need not mention, except to say, in a word, that, during fifteen long years, a great number of Roman Catholics in Manitoba have been obliged to pay for the maintenance of schools which their children did not attend, and have had to put their hands in their pockets a second time, to have other schools where, according to their belief, they could send their children for their education. Then we heard, falling from the lips of His Majesty's representative in this country, the Governor General, the following words, which were pronounced at the opening of parliament in 1897:

Immediately after the last election, the government of Manitoba was invited to hold a conference with my ministers on the subject of the grievances arising out of the Act of that province relating to education. Three members of the Manitoba government came to Ottawa, and, after many and protracted discussions, a settlement was reached between the two governments, which was the best arrangement obtainable under the existing conditions of this disturbing question. I confidently hope that this settlement will put an end to this agitation which has marred the harmony and impeded the development of our country, and will prove the beginning of a new era to be characterized by generous treatment of one another, mutual concessions and reciprocal good-will.

Later, the question was asked by Mr. LaRiviere, now a senator, who was then a member of this House, and reply was given by the then Prime Minister, who is now the leader of the opposition. Let me quote that also:

Mr. LaRIVIERE asked:
By whom was the settlement of the school question signed, after the same was agreed upon by both the federal and provincial governments, and why are not the names given in the copy brought down?
The PRIME MINISTER (Mr. Laurier.) I have alrealy stated to the honourable gentleman that the negotiations which took place between the Canadian and the Manitoba government were confidential. When they were concluded, the terms of the agreement were communicated to the press and taken back to Manitoba by the commissioners of the Manitoba government, and afterwards embodied in the Act of the legislature.

However, it was discovered later that the agreement which was brought down without any signature, contained two signatures —those of Wilfrid Laurier and Thomas Greenway.

Before closing what I may call the historical part of my remarks, I wish, once again, in the year 1912, to put on 'Hansard' something which was said in this parliament when the Liberal government came into power. Sir Charles Tupper, the man who went to the election, with his government, to have a judgment of the Privy Council and the constitution of this country upheld, who was defeated in that manly, courageous, and righteous attempt, stood up in the House, and spoke thus:

In the future, as in the past, the cardinal principle of the party to which I belong, will be: Equal justice to all, without respect to race or creed. I am glad to know that the responsibility of settling this question—an important question—I am glad to know that the responsibility no longer rests upon my shoulders, but upon those of the honourable gentleman who is now the First Minister of the Crown. I can only say that I trust and hope that he will be most successful in obtaining such a settlement of this question as will do justice and give satisfaction to all parties. I can assure the honourable gentleman not only that he has my most cordial wishes for a happy, and early, and fair settlement of this important question, but that anything I can contribute to that end will be at all times most cheerfully done.

A most noble and patriotic move, which has not, I think, its parallel in the history of this country. These words were uttered at a moment when the new leader of the new government, (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) could do alone what he had promised to Quebec, but, for fear that he might be handicapped in some way, this great statesman, who had just fallen in the accomplishment of his duty, turns to the man who had profited by the sacrifice, and tells him: "I will not do as you have done, on the contrary, I will help you for the sake of the cause."

I hope the right hon. leader of the opposition will not be offended if I now put him and Sir Charles Tupper side by side, and ask this country to make a comparison between the two. The comparison will be made anyway in the history of this country, and we may as well have it now.

You have now, Mr. Speaker, the facts of the past; they had to be stated in order to show the present state of affairs. These facts are so closely connected with the consideration of what we are told should have been inserted in this Bill now before us that they must be recalled in order to thoroughly understand the position which I take in this matter.

It is now suggested that this battle be fought over again, in respect to the district of Keewatin. If it has to be, in the first place I may say, and say emphatically, with due respect and deference, that there are two things about which I am sure and about which I will not have one moment of hesitation. With my experience of the past, I am not prepared to leave the rights of any minority, either Protestant or Catholic, to the tender mercies of the leader of the opposition and his friends. I would rather leave them in the hands of the Roblin government. If future facts show that in doing this I have erred, I will stand the consequences. I am prepared to do so because I believe from the bottom of my heart that I am right. I shall have to again refer to that later.

Mr. MACDONALD. Has my hon. friend any understanding with the Roblin government?

Mr. PELLETIER. That is too thin. I am going to answer the question fully by and bye. The Minister of Public Works has answered it and what the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) wants is to enable the Toronto 'Globe' to-morrow to say: Roblin has purchased the consent of the Roman Catholic members of the government. He will not have that chance.

Mr. MACDONALD. I do not want it. All I want my hon. friend to do is to tell me the truth.

Mr. PELLETIER. You are going to have the whole truth. The other thing about which I am sure is that it would be most unjust to tell us here to-day that we will be just as bad as the leader of the opposition if we do not give the people of Keewatin more than he gave the people of Manitoba. In the first place, the cases are not alike, and moreover the settlement of the Manitoba school question on just and fair terms was a very easy thing in 1897. The then leader of the government was not only pledged to it, but the opposition offered to help in the settlement, but the present leader of the opposition refused to do anything fair and reasonable.

He decided not to fulfil the promises contained in his Quebec speech, but to stand by his Massey Hall 'no coercion' programme, and to educate the people of this country on those lines. For the last fifteen years, this has been considered by the people of this country as a good and sound policy. The law of the land has been put to one side, due to that attitude of the leader of the then government and his party. The very constitution has been trampled under foot. A remedial order, which the Privy Council has declared to be a valid and legal remedy, was ignored, and the Liberal party of this country is responsible for all this. Now, I am not here to say that this should be forever continued, and that this should endure forever. I would say: let us put an end to it now and come back to the sane and sound principles which obtained in the past, and which are the safeguard of every citizen of this country, but in the name of the most elementary principles of justice and fair-play. I ask those two questions: If there is to-day within easy reach, a possible way of settling this vexed question should we, in the first place, be asked to uselessly run upstream against the torrent which the Liberal party has set running from the mountain; should we give a chance to the Liberal party to set this country ablaze a second time with one appeal to Quebec and another appeal to Ontario? Shall we thereby take upon ourselves the responsibility of asking our political friends to go down to defeat once more to the detriment of the minority, and for the benefit of those who have ignored it yesterday, and who would, to-morrow, continue that same policy?

Again, I say that if the purpose in view can be obtained in some other ways, this would be nonsensical and suicidal. I am not prepared to help the gentlemen opposite to continue their policy of setting race against race, and creed against creed in this country. Why, Sir, where would this end? Yes, where would it end? I put this question here as a good Canadian. I have been told that I must resign, that there must be a big crisis. Well, Sir, let me tell these gentlemen who speak thus, that there is not enough in that portfolio for a man to forget his honour and his principles, and were it not that I consider I have here a noble duty to perform, it is not one, nor ten portfolios which would make me stand the torrent of abuse, organized and unorganized, which is showered upon me. There has been created, during the last fifteeen years, a certain state of public opinion, people have been educated to believe that, year in and year out, what is right shall be ignored, and what is wrong will triumph and that minorities have no rights. And when a part of the public mind has been so moulded during so many years, I am asked to undo all that in a few months, nay, in a few weeks. A certain part of the public mind misled by the men in power, and their newspapers has, in some respects, to be recast, and a new definition has to be made of what, in certain respects, is right or wrong, and it it the duty of the successors of the Fathers of Confederation to do it. Why, Sir, the Grit newspapers of this country will lie to raise a race cry about the name of a country post office. They will say that Bourassa has ordered the change, and they will organize indignation meetings. Other men will have the audacity to ask me to decide questions in a certain way, not because it is right, but because this or that man is a Catholic or an Orangeman. For the last four weeks the Grit press of Ontario shout that Borden will yield to Bourassa, and impose separate schools in Keewatin, and the Quebec Grit press say we are going to betray the Catholics by not having separate schools.

Now, can this be? And will it be tolerated by the people much longer? As I understand it, one of the noble aims of this government is to try and bring all the people of this great country together; to make Canadians love one another more and to make the people understand that if you are a Christian, one of the very first of the Christian principles tell you not to do unto others what you would not like done unto you. I am here to try and help in this most noble work. If I have to suffer for that, I will, and am prepared for it; but I am not going to be 'stampeded' by a temporary outburst of public opinion which should not exist and which I believe is most unfortunate. With my back to the wall, I shall face it like a man, and wait for better days and a more sober judgment.

Some very good people are very much concerned about the people in Keewatin. So am I, but it is a fact—is it not?—that what is involved in Keewatin at the present moment is a large area of territory with almost no population. I am more concerned about the people who are alive who are up and doing in Manitoba. There were two courses open to me; I might have gone and told Manitoba: 'You will remain the postage-stamp province of this country for all time, if you do not consent to have for Keewatin, school laws as I want them.' This is one course. What is the other? It is to expect from the people of Manitoa themselves that the Catholics of that province, both for Manitoba and Keewatin, will not pay a double tax if they want to have their children educated as their conscience dictates.

The first of those two courses resembles somewhat what the Catholics tried in 1896, but it had a lamentable fate, because politics interfered in a question which ought to have been put on a higher plane and advocated from a broader point of view.

At that time, as I said a moment ago, the battle could have been won, and won easily. Up to that moment, the great political men of both political parties when enacting laws, had been mindful of the rights of minorities, and it was a very easy thing to have clauses put in any statute, protecting those rights. The fathers of confederation put it in the British North America Act, and a long series of statutes have been adopted on the same lines.

The statute of 1875 relates to the territories. There you find the same thing enacted in a law, at the request of a Liberal government, but of a government in which were such men as Edward Blake (who has just been called to his reward and who was a great Canadian). However, all this came to naught and became a perfect wreck, when the people of this country were told that the pact of confederation could be ignored for the purpose of putting a certain political party into power. The people of this country know now that the government of a province can, in defiance of the clear terms of the constitution, enact a law which will do away with the very basis of that constitution, and the people of this country know now that this hitherto inconceivable attempt will be successful, if, thereby, a political advantage can be obtained. In view of all this, if the minority can be otherwise protected, the attempt to force educational laws on Manitoba does not appeal to me as being the best course to follow.

The other course is to expect that the men in power in Manitoba, who are the successors of the fathers of confederation, who have been the friends of the minority over there, will settle this matter once and for all, at home, as they have the power of doing.

Mr. MACDONALD. How are they going to do that, will the hon. minister tell us?

Mr. PELLETIER. How sorry the hon. member (Mr. Macdonald, Pictou) would be if this question were taken once for all out of politics, and if he no more had the opportunity to raise cries of race and creed. But I will come back to the point later.

There is another important point to which I want to refer now. I said a few moments ago that I was more concerned with Manitoba than with Keewatin, because the needs of Manitoba are far greater and much more pressing than those of Keewatin. Let me now state the fact that I have made a careful study of the different problems which have arisen, and one of them, the most important, to my mind, is whether the school rights of the Manitoba minority which have been given away by the late government, can to-day be restored by this parliament? Let us look into the facts: Those rights unquestionably existed; the Privy Council has said so; and there is, consequently, no possible doubt in that respect; it cannot be denied that they have been put aside.

There is no doubt that they could have been restored in a certain way, provided for by the constitution; this is also undeniable, because, again, the Privy Council has so declared. The way they could have been restored was by an appeal such as the one which was made. Such an appeal was made, and it is precisely at this moment that the question goes through an interesting phase. The appeal was by the minority to the Governor General in Council, and it was then 'lis pendens' between two well-known parties; one of them, the appellant, was that same minority, and the other party, the respondent in the case, was the provincial government; the justices were the ministers of the Crown here. They were so to speak, constituted a court of justice to hear that appeal. The appeal was heard and decided in a certain way, and the constitution did not allow of an appeal from their decision, which was a final one. The ordinary courts of this country and every country have been invested with power to see that their judgments are executed and obeyed, but, in this special case, the law gave the Governor General in Council the right to decide in a certain way and the law went just a little further and said: 'When you have decided you will issue an order to the province 'which has lost its case, and there your powers will end.'

It is presumed that the men who enacted that law fully expected that that judgment or order would be obeyed, that there was a moral certainty that it would be; judging from a high sense of justice, they probably had reason to expect that a government would not set at defiance the judgment so rendered. However, the Manitoba government took upon itself this responsibility. What next? Did not the Governor General in Council become 'functus officio' when the judgment or order was rendered and served upon the province of Manitoba? If so, that case, in which the litigants were the minority on the one side and the provincial government on the other, became a thing of the past, and the power of the Governor General in Council ceased. Another remedy was then provided for, but this remedy was no longer in the hands of the Ministers of the Crown alone, and it could be used only if the majority of the members of both Houses of parliament were in favour of it. This was the remedial legislation, and when it came to remedial legislation, the parties in the case were the government of Manitoba on the one side, and the members of the government of Canada on the other; and parliament was the judge, as the King's advisers in this country, the government submitted a Bill to implement the legislation which Manitoba refused to enact. The remedial order had been disobeyed, this remedial legislation had fallen through when the new government which was, constitutionally speaking, the continuance of the preceding government, came into power in 1896. They could have done either of the two following things: Ask parliament to enact remedial legislation, or, by persuasion or otherwise, induce the Manitoba government to obey the remedial order, they had it in their power to do so, they were the only men, or body of men who could do so. What did they do? They decided that remedial legislation was not the proper thing. They thought they would sit down and settle this question by obtaining a partial acquiescence from the Manitoba government to the remedial order, and they decided to abandon the other part of that remedial order and throw it to the winds. Those are hard, historical facts. Can it be pretended at this moment that this settlement, unfair and inadequate as it is, can be legally and constitutionally set aside? Let us look at the way in which it was arranged. Members of the Dominion government called to their office the members of the provincial government; there, we have face to face the people who, constitutionally, issued the remedial order, and the people who disobeyed it.

There they make a hard and fast bargain which the Manitoba legislature put into the form of a statute, and of which the Governor General of Canada, speaking from the Throne in parliament says: 'This question is now settled forever. Both Houses of Parliament assent to that.' The question I might now ask is: is it final or is it not final? I am not going to say that it is or that it is not. I am not going to admit that it is final, because I do not wish to prejudice the case or anything which might crop up in future. I shall remember that I am one of the men who govern this country for a time; that I, like other men, will, some day or other, be called elsewhere as God will decide, and I shall not say anything which might prejudice any future claim, but I am bound to go so far as to say that this right of appeal, this remedial legislation which was a very easy weapon at hand in 1896, has now become much more involved and much more difficult of access.

Now, what is the upshot of all this? It is clear that whatever is done here for Keewatin will not apply to Manitoba. Why not leave it to the government and legislature of Manitoba, where they can remedy the situation both for Manitoba and Keewatin? Is this not the better course if there are hopes, amounting to moral certainties, that at this moment, when Manitoba becomes a great province, there will be a general desire that all the citizens, Catholics and Protestants, should be happy, contented, and that there shall exist between them brotherly love, mutual esteem and deep-laid gratitude. I will be told, and I have been told, that I only have hopes, and that hope often results in disappointment. It is true that there is no bargain. The government of Manitoba has not purchased the acquiesence of the Roman Catholic members of this government to the extension of their boundaries, but I have faith, because I believe that the Hon. R. P. Roblin is a fair, honest, righteous, broad-minded, patriotic Canadian, and this, I think, is of more value and importance than guarantees on paper, which experience has so often shown to be valueless.

Whilst the Manitoba law is a hard one for the minority, the men who have the confidence of that people, have administered that law, as far as it lay in their power to do so, to alleviate its hardships, to make the minority in Manitoba understand that they were not their persecutors. This statesman, Hon. R. P. Roblin, his late colleague and his friend, Hon. Robert Rogers, stand high in the opinion of the minority.

So you see my hope is a great one, it is abundant, it is without limit. I will stand or fall by it. I have faith, and we are told that faith, will remove mountains.

Mr. MACDONALD. When my hon. friend speaks of mountains, does he mean that the Roblin government is the mountain?

Mr. PELLETIER. If it is, it is a mountain of good, but the member for Pictou will not make me say any more than what is true and I have told him that no promise has been made.

Mr. PROULX. Does the Postmaster General believe that the Manitoba government is not going to be changed?

Mr. PELLETIER. My hon. friend (Mr. Proulx) was about to make a speech when the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Monk) rose, and now he has swallowed his contemplated speech. But there are other reasons which give us a right to hope in the justice of a good government. I understand that there are a certain number of public men in the province of Quebec and elsewhere who have taken the stand that the Catholics in Keewatin have certain vested rights in separate schools, and that this Bill ought to contain a clause making it clear that those rights shall continue to exist.

Now I am not resting my case only on hope for relief from Manitoba. There are other reasons which, it seems to me, make this, by far, the best course. I understand that a certain number of important public men from the province of Quebec and elsewhere, have taken the stand that there are vested rights in favour of separate schools in Keewatin, and that those rights would be thrown to the winds if this Bill did not contain a clause, making it clear that these rights shall continue to exist. Let us face the situation squarely and let us meet it unhesitatingly. Are there such vested rights in Keewatin now? I may say that I have looked into this question with a great deal of care, I have read all the legislation on the subject, and I am bound to say that at a given moment I found a very strange state of affairs. The Northwest Territory Act, passed in 1875, provides for separate schools, but that statute excludes Keewatin from its operations. Moreover, this law of 1875 did not come into force until 1876, by proclamation of the Governor General in Council and before this Bill of 1875 came into force, there was another Bill passed by this parliament in 1876, containing all the enactments which the parliament of that time thought necessary for Keewatin. Whilst the Bill of 1875 contained a clause about separate schools the Keewatin Bill contained no such clause. If you read the debate in 'Hansard' of 1876 about this you will see that the Hon. Mr. Mackenzie, then Prime Minister, declared that this was no oversight. Hon. L. R. Masson, one of the important members of parliament at that time, put the question to him. His answer was: It is not necessary to provide for education in Keewatin. I am not going to discuss whether his reasons were good or bad, I simply refer to Mr. MacKenzie's words to show that I made no mistake in declaring that there was no provision for separate schools in the Keewatin Act.

It is useless for me to dwell at any length on the consequences of that statute, because something else occurred. That Keewatin statute disappeared from what is admittedly the law of the country, viz.: The Revised Statutes of 1906. The manner in which it was done is indeed very strange. The Keewatin Act was never repealed by any special statute, it contained a clause which reads as follows:—

> Provided always, that the Governor in Council may, by proclamation published in the 'Canada Gazette,' at any time when it appears in the public interest to do so, detach any portion of the said district therefrom and re-annex it to that part of the Northwest Territories of Canada not included in the said district, and the portion so detached shall then be subject to the same government and laws as that part of the Northwest Territories of Canada to which it is re-annexed.

It is to be noted that this clause gave the Governor General in Council the power, when it appeared to be in the public interest, to detach a portion from another portion of Keewatin. It is quite clear that this clause never gave the power to annex the whole of Keewatin. In the year 1905, the then government had a Bill before this House, dealing with Keewatin, and providing that it should be part of the Northwest Territories. At that time, there was a good deal of discussion and trouble about the Alberta and Saskatchewan Bills, and it is a fact of public notoriety that certain members of the government of that day were not great friends and that there were serious rows around the council table over the famous clause 16. At a given moment, the Keewatin Bill, which would probably also have caused trouble, was withdrawn, and four days after the session had closed, that same government, which had withdrawn the Bill, and had told parliament that it was not necessary to deal with the situation in Keewatin, passed an order in council in which they formally said: We have, under the law, a right to detach from Keewatin some portion of it and in virtue of the power so given to us to divide Keewatin into two portions and annex one portion to the territories; we, the government, declare that we annex to the territories the whole of Keewatin. Here is the text of the order in council, as it appeared in the 'Canada Gazette':

> Whereas, in and by the Act, chapter 53, of the Revised Statutes of Canada, commonly known as the Keewatin Act, amongst other things, in effect enacted, that our Governor in Council may at any time when it appears to the public advantage so to do, detach 'any portion' of the district of Keewatin 'therefrom' and re-annex it to that part of the Northwest Territories of Canada not included in the said district, and that portion so detached shall become subject to the same government and laws as that part of the Northwest Territories of Canada to which it is re-annexed;
> And whereas it has become expedient that the said district of Keewatin should be again annexed to and made subject to the same government and laws as the Northwest Territories;
> Now therefore know ye that, by and with the advice of our Privy Council of Canada, and under and by virtue of the powers by the said in part recited Act, and of all and every powers and powers in that behalf in any manner otherwise in us vested, we do by these presents declare and proclaim that on, from and after the first day in September, in the year of Our Lord one thousand nine hundred and five, the 'whole' of the said district of Keewatin shall be annexed to that part of the Northwest Territories not included in said district;
> Of all which our loving subjects and all others whom these presents concern, are hereby required to take notice and govern themselves accordingly.
> In testimony whereof, &c. . . .

Is there a student-at-law who will say that this can be done under the clause which I have read to the House? Certainly not. The government have the right in the public interest, but the public interest has to be stated. However, we will not trouble about that for the present. If you have the right to take a part of this table and put it outside, with a certain number of books which are on it, are you going to take the whole of it?

Mr. GUTHRIE. May I ask my hon. friend a question?

Mr. PELLETIER. I am going to finish my sentence. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Guthrie), was going to be Minister of Justice at one time, and he knows he must wait. What is the legal effect of that? My hon. friend will pardon me——

Mr. GUTHRIE. I think that my hon. friend might have been a little more courteous in his reply.

Mr. PELLETIER. Then go on.

Mr. GUTHRIE. No, I'll——

Mr. PELLETIER. We will make friends to-morrow. I would regret it very much if I have not been courteous, but my hon. friend will understand that when following the trend of a legal argument, if you are interrupted in that way it is not fair. I do not mind interruptions, my hon. friend knows that, but there is a certain time at which to interrupt.

I presume that the House understands the situation thoroughly. Here is a government which feels justified in presenting a Bill dealing with Keewatin, and providing for its annexation to the territories; this Bill is withdrawn from the consideration of parliament, and this same government pretends to annex to the territories all the territory, when they have the power to do so only for a portion of that territory. However, this did not repeal the Keewatin Act of 1876, which was still in the Statute-book. When the statutes were revised in 1906, the men who were entrusted with the work, and who had been appointed by the government, finding themselves in presence of that complicated situation, were not going to tell the government who had appointed them that their order in council was a nullity, and they thought the best way to deal with the matter was to put in the appendix of the statutes a few words, that the Keewatin Act had become effete. There were quite a number of laws which became useless because of consolidation, they were all put in a special schedule at the end of the revised statutes, the Keewatin Act was lodged there, and then they put in a clause abolishing all the laws mentioned in that schedule, and that is the way the Keewatin Act has disappeared without the people or parliament practically knowing anything about it. Now, we are told by very important people that the settlers in Keewatin, be they numerous or not, had a right to expect that they would come under the law governing the Northwest Territories and that a moral contract was entered into with the settlers as far back as 1875. The facts show that this is a complete mistake and fallacy.

If Keewatin has ever become part of the Northwest Territories, it is not under the law of 1875, but in virtue of the operations which I have just mentioned and this would not go any further back than 1906. All this has created, as far as Keewatin is concerned, an intricate situation, about which lawyers and constitutional readers might and will differ; there never were any laws and ordinances passed for separate schools in Keewatin specially, and the question to-day and a very serious one is: are there any laws now in force in Keewatin, except those comprised in the Keewatin Bill of 1876? This Keewatin Act has disappeared, but nothing has replaced it. Theoretically, Keewatin would be in the Territories since 1906, but, have the Keewatin laws of 1876 ever been replaced by the law of the Territories?

I will refer in a moment to the law which governs such cases. I do not believe it necessary to go any further on this point, because I do not consider the question to be a practical one at the present time. I have come to another conclusion which is clear to my mind and it is this: Whether there are or there are not in Keewatin now vested rights to separate schools, it does not make a particle of difference if we do or do not put a clause in this bill dealing with them; these vested rights exist in Keewatin or they do not exist. If they do not exist, it would seem idle to proclaim from the house-tops that some one has consented to their disappearance and has, therefore, failed in his duty. If, on the contrary, those rights are in existence, you must have a law to do away with them, and no such enactment is to be found in this Bill. It is a well known principle of law, and one which, in fact, is undisputed, that the laws of a country or part of a country or territory which is conquered or annexed remains in force so long as they are not changed by competent authority. Lord Mansfield says:

> The laws of a conquered country remain in force as long as they are not changed by the conqueror; the absurd exception with regard to the pagans, mentioned in the Calvin case, show the antiquity and universality of the maxim.

Chief Justice Marshall says:

> With regard to the transfer of territory, it was never deemed that the relations of the inhabitants among themselves were not changed. Their relations with the first sovereign are dissolved and new relations are created between them and the government which has acquired the territory, the law which can be called political is necessarily changed, although what governs the relations and general conduct of the individuals amongst themselves subsists until it is changed by the power of the state newly created

To further illustrate that rule I will quote Blackstone, whose authority is great in matters like this. He speaks on the subject in a characteristic manner:

In conquered or ceded countries, again, that have already laws of their own, the Sovereign may indeed alter and change those laws, but, till he does actually change them, the ancient laws of the country remain, unless such are against the law of God.

Thus, the laws of Spain, Holland and France are still wholly or partially in force in the colonies which have been acquired from those powers. Nor are there wanting instances in which the laws and usages of ceded and conquered territories, though inconsistent with and even repugnant to those of the parent state have been permitted to survive their annexation to the British Empire? Thus, in the celebrated case of General Pictou, the question was much argued, though not finally decided, whether obtaining evidence by torture was legal in Trinidad; polygamy has been tolerated in Ceylon, the burning of widows in India, and slavery in American dependencies.

To recognize, remodel or altogether supersede the laws of a conquered country, is thus part of the prerogative of the Crown and the same powers belong to the Sovereign with respect to ceded territories, unless his right has been restricted by the articles of the cession, which by the law of nations are sacred and inviolable until altered by the legislature of the territory itself.

The conclusion of this is obvious, if there are laws in Keewatin now, this Bill will not make them disappear, and those laws cannot be repealed except by the authority or power which has enacted them.

What are the schools which are in existance now in Keewatin? The facts are well known, there are several schools but they are public schools. There is only one private school attended by a few Catholic children. There never were any separate schools established in that country, and we have been told why none were established. The commissioner of the Northwest Territories reported that the thing could not be done; here is that part of his report referring to that:

Ottawa, 18th November, 1910.
Memo. re Schools in the Northwest Territories.

* * * * *

The Very Reverend Bishop Charlebois, Vicar Apostolic of Keewatin, has recently made inquiries with a view to the establishment, with government assistance, of a separate mission school at the Pas for Catholics only, and has asked what advantages the government would offer for this kind of school, and what obligations would be incurred on his side.

His Lordship is evidently under the impression that the school ordinance of the old Northwest Territories is in force in the new Northwest Territories. It is an Act containing 232 sections with schedules and many forms—and quite unadaptable to the present conditions in the new Northwest.

Respectfully submitted
(Sgd.) FRED WHITE,
Commissioner.

Could we in the face of that report, establish those schools which would probably have been a nullity? It seems to me it would have been childish, unworthy of serious men to do that at the very moment when it was a well known fact that Keewatin would shortly become part of Manitoba, when there are in the journals of this House since two years, resolutions unanimously adopted, declaring that Keewatin is to be annexed to Manitoba. That we should have created a so-called separate school, at such a moment, a school, the legal existence of which would be open to doubt, and that we should have done this just as Keewatin is going to be made part of Manitoba, might not have been considered a fair and square deal. I believe this would have been ill advised. It would have simply brought trouble, great trouble, and I think there is more to be gained for the minorities by not trying to do things like that.

I wish to specially call the attention of this House to the fact that, whilst there are to be found in some of our laws enactments under which, if separate schools are abolished, there is an appeal to the Governor in Council for a remedial order and remedial legislation (and those are the clauses of which the minority availed themselves in 1896) there is nothing in the Northwest Territories Act, as it stands today in the statute-book of 1906, which gives any such remedy; the only clause of this Act which refers to separate schools is clause 10, and it reads as follows:

The Commissioner in Council, if authorized to make ordinances respecting education, shall pass all necessary ordinances in respect thereto; but in the laws or ordinances relating to education it shall always be provided that a majority of the ratepayers of any district or portion of the territories, or of any less portion or subdivision thereof, by whatever name the same is known, may establish such schools therein as they think fit, and make the necessary assessment and collection of rates therefor; and also that the minority of the ratepayers therein, whether Protestant or Roman Catholic, may establish separate schools therein, and in such case, the ratepayers establishing such Protestant or Roman Catholic separate schools shall be liable only to assessment of such rates as they impose upon themselves in respect thereof.

It is obvious that it would have been necessary to appoint a council and this has not been done before the adoption by this House two years ago of the resolution declaring that Keewatin would be annexed or ceded to Manitoba. As far as we are concerned I may say that we received a similar request sometime in December last. Those who made that demand were not desirous enough that it should be granted to take the trouble of speaking about it for even five minutes with any of the four Catholic members of this government.

If that council had been appointed, it would have had to pass ordinances and after the ordinances would have been passed, it would have become necessary to establish separate schools and tell Manitoba: 'Now you just wait until all that is done and then we will annex Keewatin.' I put it to all reasonable men: Could a provincial government be found anywhere who could have accepted such a proposition as that?

Now, let me refer again to clause 10 of the Statutes of 1906; this clause, upon which some people rely to protect something in Keewatin, is not one which creates separate schools; it declares that separate schools may be provided for, if ordinances are passed; as I said a moment ago, no ordinance having been passed, what existing right is there that we could protect? Surely it cannot be pretended that if we inserted clause 10 in this Bill, it could be acted upon. It provides for an administrator and a council, can we reasonably ask for one part of enlarged Manitoba that public affairs will be carried on by an administrator and a council as in the Northwest Territories and the other part of Manitoba governed by the same government as all the provinces have? Could a majority be found even in Quebec to say that this would be a fair demand? The people who have spoken to me about this, have not seriously contended that this could be put forth, except as a means of getting something else.

There is going to be a great province there after this Bill is passed. Can we ask this parliament that there shall be one law on the south side of the fence where the Manitoba boundary is now, and another system of law for the other side of the fence, where Keewatin begins, one law for the northern part, and another law for the southern part of the same province? I am confident of one thing, and that is, that when the Manitoba legislature will have to enact laws for Keewatin, they will, under the good government it has, make just laws; but whatever they are, the laws for Keewatin, annexed to Manitoba, will ultimately be in spite of any clause here or there, the same for the whole territory of the enlarged province.

We are told that another Grit government might come into power and again upset that, but is it not obvious that if a Grit government begins that over again that new law would again be subject to an appeal for a remedial order and remedial legislation under the Manitoba Act? The Greenway law has not abolished the Act, creating Manitoba, which can always be invoked. It is based on the British North America Act and the British North America Act should be adhered to, as the best protection for minorities.

I have said, Mr. Speaker, that I had great hopes. Have I not more? It seems to me that if we put no idle clause in this Bill, the minority are better protected than if it be there.

At the instance and suggestion of well-meaning persons and of the newspaper 'Le Devoir,' Mr. Henri Bourassa's paper, some of our electors are sending us petitions and letters informing us that we must be energetic and that we must not sacrifice the rights of our people. I have the greatest respect for Mr. Bourassa's opinion. He is one of the leading men of the province of Quebec, a most clever and a most patriotic citizen, and it is a matter of deep regret to me that I cannot see eye to eye with him on this question, but I feel so sure that I am right that I have to follow my own course. Let us wait for some time, and time will tell.

This case is, of course, absolutely different from the Alberta and Saskatchewan cases which were dealt with in 1905. The law is absolutely different when you erect a new province and when you annex a territory to an existing province. In the first case, this parliament has the right to give to the new province so erected, the constitution which it thinks fit, provided that it does so in accordance with the British North America Act. The province to be erected has nothing to say, except that its citizens may make representations and demands which may or may not be granted. But, in a case of extension of territory or boundaries, the extension cannot be made, except on such terms and conditions as are agreed upon between the parliament of Canada and the legislature of that existing province; consequently, we cannot impose upon Manitoba, conditions and terms which they would not accept; we do not impose any such terms for the extension of Ontario and Quebec, why should we try it on Manitoba? It may be said, and rightly so, that Ontario and Quebec have never defied the law and the constitution of this country, and that Manitoba misled at a given moment, did that most regrettable thing. I admit that there is a great deal in that; but, are we going to suppose or presume that Manitoba will continue to act in that way? A Conservative government has not done, and I believe will not do that. The people who believe the contrary are probably right in asking for guarantees. I do not believe it. Again I say and I repeat that I have confidence in the men who govern that province. They belong to the party who have made our country what it is to-day, and that party has not in its history anything to justify that fear. The minority have trusted to the great men of that party the whole of their national life; they have placed in the same hands, and with confidence, what is most dear to them and they have not been deceived. When the minority have suffered at the hands of others, they have found, in the successors of Sir John A. Macdonald, champions of their cause and of their legitimate grievances. Am I going to tell them now that I have lost confidence in them, that I distrust them? Would that be a fit and proper reward for what the great and good men of that day did for us in 1896?

No, Sir, they took chances then; I am taking chances now. There would be no responsive chords in my heart if I did not do so. In doing so, I think I am not running any very great risk, and I am putting something to the credit of the Sir George Etienne Cartier side of the Macdonald-Cartier great book. If I am mistaken, then, let our common Lord and Saviour extend heavenly wings over the future of this country. While I do this to-day, I will have a right, it seems, at any time, to look for the same treatment from our English-speaking friends, as we have already received in time of need.

A good many bad things are said in the province of Quebec, about the 'bad' Tories of the province of Ontario; we must see to it that this prejudice disappears, that something is done to make it disappear and that our friends from all over the country will stand up in the future, as they have done in the past, like men and patriotic citizens.

There is no use in expecting and believing that because some people are the minority, they might as well be trampled upon; we should remain together and upbuild this our common country; this should be our aim. I think ultra Protestants and ultra Catholics will get the best of it if they mutually respect one another's convictions and religious beliefs; one religion is right in the minds of one and it is wrong in the minds of the other. But what can you do? These differences have to exist. They never were and never will be settled with a club or a bludgeon. We differ in the way and the manner in which we adore God, but, after all, do we not adore the same God, even if we do not all worship at the same altars?

Mr. Speaker, when we, before our everyday work, pray together in this House, what do we say? With bowed heads, we all say the same prayer, and we repeat together the words, the heavenly words, which were given to the world from the top of the mountain. Why then, when we sit down, should we turn to one another with clenched fists and say: 'You wretched Protestants, You cursed Catholics.' I see no reason for it; we are here for another purpose, we are here in this great temple of labour to work for our country. Let us open the portals of a great and brilliant future, let us write a great page in the history of this country—a page of toleration and good-will—Let us re-write one for the other the message of good-will and peace to all men which was brought to this world two thousand years ago. Let us give a chance to every one, Protestant or Catholic, to join hands and do something of which we may be proud. Let all good, broad-minded men, of every class, religion and nationality form the great procession which will enter the gates of the future and let us leave to one side the very few who will choose to continue harping and barking to create trouble and discord." We must have peace in this country, religious peace, civil peace, and we will have it by following always, and at all times, without one exception, the glorious traditions of the Conservative party.

In bringing down a measure of relief, the Manitoba parliament would be simply extending the 'glad-hand' to the minority. The minority believe that they should have their children educated in a certain way; this is for them a matter of conscience, no one should interfere in questions of conscience; it is stronger than the will of man.

The great country which is known as the British Empire, believes in fair-play for minorities. When this country ceased to be under the flag of France, to live under the Union Jack, the King of England told his new subjects that they were free, as far as their religious beliefs were concerned.

Do you think then, Sir, that the province of Manitoba would be disgracing itself by doing what the King of England has done? Do you think that the Manitoba legislature would not do honour to itself if, after fifteen years, it decided to amend its laws, the way the Privy Council declared that it should?

Why, Sir, any true Britisher ought to desire that this should be done. If the legislature of Manitoba did that, it would carry out a wish which, on another occasion, was formulated on another matter by the man on whose shoulders is to-day the mantle of Sir John A. Macdonald. Here is what the leader of this government said on the 29th of August, 1907:

> In my native province, the rights of the minority have been preserved and safeguarded without any legislative enactment. I had no reason to believe nor do I believe that the people of the new provinces would be less generous, less fair or less honourable than the people of my own province.

At every page in the history of England, what do we find? At every period in that great history, when new territories were being added to the immense empire, over which to-day the sun does not set, the Mother country always took care to see that the national and religious aspirations of the people in the new territories should be respected. This is the great, broad policy which has made us loyal to the empire, and which has brought Louis Botha, one of the generals who had fought in the Boer war, to the council of the empire, at the foot of the throne. Strong and sturdy races will not disappear. It is useless to encroach upon their rights. Live and let live. Let this be the pass word of the future, and that future will be a great one.

Mr. A. A. MONDOU (Yamaska). I deem it my duty to let the House know the position I took upon the vote this afternoon on the amendment to the Bill proposed by the right hon. gentleman who leads the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I did not vote on that amendment for the following reasons: The Bill now before the House is an Act to provide for the extension of the boundaries of Manitoba.

This Bill has its financial aspect and its religious aspect. So far as its financial aspect is concerned I have every reason to believe, so far as my information goes, that both political parties have agreed, except so far as immaterial matters are concerned. But when I heard the leader of the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) state, in moving his amendment that, so far as the religious question was concerned, he would stay within the lines of 'Torres Vedras,' I thought I had better wait a little and see whether there was a very strong position in 'Torres Vedras' or not. I claim that the leader of the opposition has no right, after putting such an amendment as this before the House, to take the stand he took this afternoon. That is the reason I did not vote on the amendment because the financial aspect of the Bill is not directly under discussion now. It may be discussed when the Bill is considered clause by clause in committee. But now we are dealing with the principle of the Bill on the second reading. And I accept the authority of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Monk), under whom at Laval I once studied the constitutional law of this country, and it has not been proven to me by the speeches so far made that there is such Federal authority in this House as has been contended. We may not agree absolutely upon the special conditions put in the Bill, but now we are called upon to vote on the principle of the measure which provides for the extension of the boundaries of Manitoba. And I state plainly here that I have no objection to the boundaries of Manitoba being extended. So I am proud to support the present government. Being a new member of this House, I was rather disposed to favour the amendment, if I could have found in that amendment elements of truth, faithfulness and a real desire to serve the minority in Keewatin. But seeing in it a double-faced policy in a double-faced amendment, I could not vote for it.

I wish to be very brief in my remarks, but to give my own statement of the position taken by the Postmaster General. I have some information in regard to the matter. In 1878, the Conservatives brought before the country the National Policy. In 1882, in 1887 and in 1891 they appealed to the people on that policy. And what was the policy of the Liberal party? It was a changing, an indefinite policy. But when it came to the election of 1896, the Liberals were in favour of a policy of reciprocity, but the Conservatives still stood before the people on the National Policy. The Liberals came into power with the present leader of the opposition at their head, but he knew, as everybody knew, that he had not the support of the country on his tariff policy. So, he stood by the National Policy, because he knew that elections were won for his party on a double-faced policy on the Remedial Bill. This was understood plainly in this House and in the country. So elections were carried by his party with one policy for Quebec and another for Ontario —a policy stated in Jacques Cartier hall for Quebec, and in Massey hall for Ontario. But favouring a policy of protection, they carried the elections of 1900, 1904 and 1908. And in 1911 they came before the country again on a policy of reciprocity. I state without fear of successful contradiction that for the last twenty years the public vote of Canada has pronounced unquestionably in favour of the protective tariff.

Now, all this may seem to be a digression. But it is only to show that behind the walls of Torres Vedras there is a man who is not sincere and who wishes to play a double game. Mr. Speaker, it has always been my sincere desire that I might have the opportunity to stand before the present leader of the opposition and tell him plainly what I thought of the position he occupies in this raising of national and race cries in the province of Quebec. The seed of discord that had been planted came first to fruition in 1896. We perfectly know that the relations between the people of this country are not as they should be. We plainly understand our position. But, after the sincere explanations given to this House by the Minister of Public Works and the Postmaster General calling upon sincere and broad-minded people to stand by us in the present fight, to stand by the government, and I hope and trust——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MONDOU. Authorities have been cited before this House. But, Mr. Speaker, I still accept my professor on constitutional law. That hon. gentleman, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Monk) stated that there were no vested rights at present in the Keewatin district. Of course, so far as my knowledge of legal science is concerned, it is not very considerable to-day.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. MONDOU. It is a good thing when you are ready to admit that what you have not very much learned you do not know. I plainly state that, after due consideration, I come to the conclusion that there are not vested rights in the Keewatin district. I hope and trust, however, that we will meet on certain questions with Torres Vedras, when the Bill goes into committee, and stand both in our fortresses with them.

Mr. LEMIEUX moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Borden, House adjourned at 12.30 a.m. Wednesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, March 6, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 121) respecting the Rainy River Radial Railway Company.—Mr. Beattie.

Bill (No. 122) for the relief of William Hollaway Adams.—Mr. MacNutt.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

ASSISTANT ELECTRICIAN CUILLERIER.

Mr. BOYER:

1. Have any charges or complaints been made to the Department of Railways and Canals against assistant electrician Cuillerier?
2. If so, has any report as to such complaints or charges been made to the department by the chief electrician on the Soulanges Canal?
3. If such charges or reports have been made, does the government intend to make an inquiry as to the truth of the same?
4. If such inquiry should be made by whom will it be considered, and when and where will it be held?

Mr. COCHRANE:

1. No.
2. Answered by Number One.
3. Answered by Number One.
4. As no charges have been made, it has not been necessary to decide when and where and by whom an inquiry will be held.

NAVAL DEFENCE OF PACIFIC COAST.

* Mr. MACDONALD:

1. Is the government aware as to whether or not a resolution in the following terms has been adopted by the legislature of British Columbia:

Whereas the government of Canada has decided that any scheme of naval defence to be effective, must be by co-operation with the mother country and the other parts of the Empire; therefore, be it resolved, that the Dominion government be urged that, in view of the great importance for the immediate and adequate protection of the Pacific coast of Canada, the question of naval defence be considered at the earliest possible date?

2. Has the attention of the government been called to any such resolution?
3. If so, has the government been informed as to whether or not such a resolution was adopted on the motion of the Premier of British Columbia, Mr. McBride?
4. Has a copy of such resolution been received by this government from the government of British Columbia?
5. If so, does the government propose to move along the lines suggested in said resolution? If so, when? If not, why not?

Mr. HAZEN:

1. Yes.
2. Yes.
3. The government has no information as to the mover of this resolution.
4. Yes.
5. When the government has formulated its naval policy, it will lay it before parliament.

DISMISSALS.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. Has M. J. Lepage, Esq., preventive officer in His Majesty's Customs at Rimouski, been dismissed? If so, at whose request, and for what cause?
2. Is the Minister of Customs aware that this officer is said to have denied under oath having taken any part in elections?
3. Has he been denied the right of an official investigation? If so, why?

Mr. REID (Grenville):

1. M. J. Lepage, collector of customs, Rimouski, has been dismissed for active political partisanship, on the statement of the member for parliament for Rimouski.
2. No.
3. The usual course has been followed in this case, the charge having been made by a member of parliament.

Mr. CARVELL:

1. Was George Chubb, of L'Etete, Charlotte county, N.B., dismissed from the position of Customs officer in 1905 or 1906?
2. If so, on whose recommendation and for what reason?
3. Was any charge preferred against him? If so, what, and was it proven or did he plead guilty thereto?

Mr. REID (Grenville):

1. Yes.
2. On the recommendation of the Minister of Customs for alleged violation of the Canada Temperance Act.
3. There was an information laid against Mr. Chubb before a commissioner of the parish of St. George civil court. Mr. Chubb states that the facts in this case were that his son, who was working in the store with him, sent to St. John for three bottles of whisky for some of his neighbours about Christmas time, and that he was not personally accountable for the ordering or the distribution of the liquor, but as he did not desire to figure in the courts, he sent his son to St. George before the trial and paid the fine of $50 and $7 expenses. Mr. Chubb's statement is confirmed by one of the neighbours, who describes himself as a Liberal.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. Has Louis Pouliot, of Amqui, been dismissed? If so, what was the cause of his dismissal?
2. Has an investigation taken place? If not, why not?

Mr. PELLETIER:

1. (a) Yes.
   (b) Political partisanship.
2. (a) No.

THOMAS HALE, WESTVILLE.

Mr. MACDONALD:

1. Who has been appointed to succeed Thomas Hale, of Westville in the county of Pictou, as correspondent of the 'Labour Gazette'?
2. If none has been appointed yet, will anyone be appointed?

Mr. CROTHERS:

1. Lawrence Howard McKenzie.
2. Answered by No. 1.

MOTIONS AGREED TO WITHOUT DISCUSSION.

For a copy of the news sent up to date to Magdalen Island by the weekly correspondent appointed by the Postmaster General; also for a copy of the instructions given said correspondent at the time of his appointment.—Mr. Lemieux.

For a copy of all letters, complaints, charges, and other papers and documents in the possession of the Post Office Department relating to Tracadie road post office, Guysborough county, Nova Scotia.—Mr. Sinclair.

For a copy of all papers, complaints, letters and other documents connected with or relating to the dismissal of John McLeod as postmaster at Denmark, Colchester county, Nova Scotia, and the appointment or suggested appointment of D. McLeod to the vacancy.—Mr. Macdonald.

PELAGIC SEALING.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to ask my right hon. friend whether letters of ratification have been exchanged for a treaty with reference to pelagic sealing, and are they before the House?

Right hon. R. L. BORDEN (Prime Minister). I understand that letters have not been exchanged, and the treaty is now being considered by the United States.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. KYTE. I desire to ask the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Monk) when I may expect certain returns moved for on the 5th of February having reference to breakwaters at Port Richmond and Charles Forest's Cove, N.S.?

Mr. MONK. I will make a note of my hon. friend's request, and try and get the report down.

Mr. KYTE. There are several other orders outstanding having reference to other departments of the government, and I will be glad if they are brought down as early as possible.

Mr. MONK. Send me a memorandum of them.

PAYMENT OF ELECTION ACCOUNTS.

Mr. TURRIFF. I would like again to call the attention of the Secretary of State (Mr. Roche) to the fact that I am still getting communications from my constituency claiming that the accounts in connection with the election held now almost six months ago, have not yet been paid. A part only of the money has been sent, but in such a way that the returning officer is not able to pay it out, and practically nothing has been paid in connection with the election. In connection with the census, also, there are still a number of accounts outstanding, and I would like to draw the attention of the government to the fact that it is now a great deal more than six months since the census was taken, and these accounts are still unpaid.

Mr. BURRELL. I did not quite catch all my hon. friend's remarks, but I understood them to be a complaint that a lot of the census enumerators had not been paid. Was that it?

Mr. TURRIFF. Some of them—yes.

Mr. BURRELL. I am informed by those responsible in the department that all the accounts would have been paid at the end of last week but for the fact that vouchers for some had not been received. I believe that explanation to be correct. I think my hon. friend will find that all were practically settled last week. If my hon. friend will go back to the last census he will find that the work has been expedited this year probably more than it was ten years ago.

Mr. ROCHE. With regard to the election accounts, that is a matter which comes under the jurisdiction of the Auditor General, with whom I have had some communication in which he informs me that if there are any unpaid accounts it is invariably due to the fact that they have not been rendered or there is some dispute in connection with them. I will get the particulars of these accounts to which my hon. friend has referred.

ST. JOHN VALLEY RAILWAY.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would like to ask my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Cochrane) if the agreement regarding construction and operation of the St. John Valley railway has yet been signed. My hon. friend was good enough to say that as soon as it was signed he would lay it on the table of the House.

Mr. COCHRANE. It has been signed by myself and the order in council was passed yesterday. As soon as the order in council is signed by His Royal Highness the Governor General I will be glad to bring the papers down.

EXTENSION OF BOUNDARIES—MANITOBA.

House resumed the adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Borden for the second reading of Bill (No. 115), to provide for the extension of the boundaries of the province of Manitoba.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Rouville). Mr. Speaker, the question which is now before the House is one of great importance indeed and of far-reaching consequences from the national point of view, and, I might perhaps add, from the imperial point of view. We are engaged in the process of carving out from the vast domain of Rupert's Land new territories for three great provinces of this Dominion. Whilst we are engaged in thus carving out these new territories we might, perhaps, be inclined to forget the men who secured for Canada the great Rupert's Land, obtaining it through the good offices of Downing street for a paltry sum of money. I have heard during this debate warm compliments paid to the memory of Sir John A. Macdonald, who was declared to be a great statesman because, in the early days of confederation, he had thought proper to enter into negotiations with the mother country in order to secure these territories for the Dominion of Canada. I do not begrudge, Sir, the compliments to which the great giant of our Canadian public life, Sir John A. Macdonald, is entitled. But, we must not forget, now that we are comparatively far away from those events of confederation days, that there were other men too who did their best to obtain the union of the various provinces and to found this great confederacy, and who, with Sir John Macdonald, merged their party strife and party spirit and obtained for Canada the territories of the northwest from the Hudson's Bay Company. I refer especially to the old Liberal chieftain, George Brown and Alexander Mackenzie, to whom we owe much for confederation and for the retention of this land for the Dominion.

With this piece of legislation which we are now considering stands on the order paper concurrent legislation, which will be moved in a few days by my right hon. friend who leads the government (Mr. Borden). There are two resolutions on the order paper in one of which it is enacted that what remains of the territory north of Ontario, and the portion of Keewatin that is not allotted to Manitoba, shall go to the province of Ontario. In another resolution it is also enacted that the far away district of Ungava, shall henceforth belong to the province of Quebec. Sir, let me say at once to my right hon. friend the Prime Minister that, speaking as a Canadian, I heartily approve of that legislation. I believe that Ontario is entitled to the land north of Temiskaming as far as the shores of Hudson bay and I unreservedly rely on the good sense of the province of Ontario to administer that new region as well as it has administered the district immediately adjoining. I also approve of the annexation of Ungava to the province of Quebec. It rightfully belongs to the province of Quebec. My hon. friends, the Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier), and the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Monk), yesterday, opened their remarks by laying emphasis on the fact that Ungava would be allotted to the province of Quebec. Presumably they were desirous of accommodating their remarks as much as they could, to the sentiments of their followers in this House. But their followers and the members of this House must not forget that both the territory to the north of Ontario and Ungava territory were offered some years ago by a Liberal government to the two largest provinces of the Dominion. Ontario did not see fit at the time to accept the terms of the resolution which was moved in this House by my right hon. friend who leads the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), but long ago, Quebec, through the instrumentality of the Premier, Sir Lomer Gouin, accepted Ungava on behalf of his province. So, it is no new thing and Ungava cannot suffice to soothe the sentiments of the followers of hon. gentlemen opposite. They must give something else. At all events, Sir, I congratulate the right hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) not on having given these portions of the northern territories to the two great provinces of Ontario and Quebec, but rather do I congratulate him upon having only implemented legislation brought before this House three or four years ago.

Let me say now, how far I disagree with the right hon. gentleman in regard to the legislation which he has submitted to this House. There is another order in council which will be embalmed in the statute book, I suppose, as part of the Bill. This order in council has reference to the projection of a line five miles in width through the northern territory of Manitoba as far as Port Nelson. I cannot help saying with all due respect to my right hon. friend, that this is a most unseemly and most extraordinary piece of legislation. It paves the way for future conflicts between the provinces of Manitoba and the province of Ontario. It gives sovereign rights to the province of Ontario on that thin red line on the map, whilst it keeps away from Manitoba proprietary rights in the lands adjoining.

I say it paves the way for future conflicts between these two great provinces. True, the Prime Minister can answer that the Premier of Manitoba is satisfied, and that the Premier of Ontario, who is supposed to voice public opinion in that province, is equally satisfied, and that the government supporters at Ottawa are satisfied, and that the opposition in this House are the only persons who are dissatisfied.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Well, that is no argument. My right hon. friend the Prime Minister is supposed to know public opinion in this country and he ought to realise that he cannot repeat the victory he won on the wave of the 21st of September last. He may believe that, but, there was once a king of Poland who, when he was intoxicated, believed that all his subjects were intoxicated with him. And, as regards this unseemly projection of the province of Ontario in a thin red line on the map towards Port Nelson, I say with all due respect for Sir James Whitney, for whom I have great admiration——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. LEMIEUX.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I say that notwithstanding all his ability, while he may be satisfied with that thin red line projected over Manitoba to Port Nelson, there are others deeply interested in the province of Ontario who are not satisfied. I know of a man who in his day and generation represented public opinion in Ontario in no less degree than does Sir James Whitney; I refer to Sir Oliver Mowat.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I know the fight and the successful fight that Sir Oliver Mowat made for the boundaries of Ontario against Sir John A. Macdonald; and I know that if Sir James Whitney is satisfied with this, Sir Oliver Mowat would not be satisfied were he alive to-day.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). May I ask a question ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, sit down.

Mr. CURRIE (Simcoe). I just want to ask a question.

Mr. BUREAU. Take your medicine like a man.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux) has the floor.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am now in the vein of paying compliments to the Prime Minister and that stalwart friend of his, that future cabinet minister——

Mr. BUREAU. Now, you have got him.

Mr. LEMIEUX. He should not interrupt me even 'pro bono publico.' I am, I say in the vein of paying compliments to the right hon. the Prime Minister, and coming to the boundaries of Manitoba I say that I approve of the boundaries as set forth in this Bill. I approve because it is a vindication of the policy pursued by Sir Wilfrid Laurier when he was in office. That right hon. gentleman himself mapped out with his colleagues what extensions should be made to Manitoba north and east, but for years and years the Manitoba government who were not in sympathy with the right hon. gentleman, marked time. They sent to Ottawa delegation after delegation, and when they were not satisfied with the boundaries they were satisfied with other parts of the offer made to them, but it was always found that if something was satisfactory something else was sure to be unsatisfactory in the terms offered by the Liberal government. By far, the most important matter was the provision with regard to the boundaries, and it is a vindication of the policy of Sir Wilfrid Laurier that exactly the same boundaries have been given to Manitoba in this Bill as he proposed. And, if the present Prime Minister, in addition to extending the boundaries of Manitoba and giving new wheat fields to the farmers of that province, could insert in that Bill a provision that with respect to the new crops that will be raised on that extended territory he would give to the western farmer a market in which to sell them I would say that this legislation was almost perfect. Be that as it may, the Prime Minister did another thing by this legislation to which I strongly object. I need not repeat the arguments that have been adduced by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley). With his usual eloquence he dealt with this subject and he criticized with all the vigour and ability with which he is endowed the financial terms that are offered to Manitoba by this Bill. I agree entirely with the remarks he made. I say that the financial terms are exorbitant. I say that they are not what they should be, considering the position of Manitoba relative to the other provinces, and when we know that in 1885 there should have been a finality in this matter. The policy of the government as regards the arrears is also unsound and calculated to bring about regrettable results. I agree on these two questions with my hon. friend (Mr. Pugsley). In giving the enormous amounts which are being handed over to the province of Manitoba by this arrangement I cannot help thinking of the sad position in which the provinces by the sea are left. I cannot forget that the maritime provinces helped just as much as did Ontario and Quebec in the founding of this Dominion. I cannot help remembering that their delegates were united with the delegates of Ontario and Quebec, and that they thought when Canada was made a Dominion they would have an equal chance with the other provinces to develop and to increase. But what are the facts? As Quebec has increased her territory, as Ontario has increased her territory, as the provinces in the west are increasing their territory, the little provinces by the sea which cannot be extended are decreasing in population, while their financial burdens are ever increasing. Have not these provinces in the east done as much for confederation as have the new provinces? I have travelled in the west and I say here that the real pioneers are the men who came from the maritime provinces and from Quebec and from Ontario. You may go into any seat of learning in the west; you may go to any high school in these new territories, and there you will meet men from Prince Edward Island, men from Nova Scotia, men from New Brunswick, teaching the younger generation. Go into the banking institutions, into the insurance companies, into the largest financial establishments, and at the head of these institutions you will find men from the far away provinces by the sea. But, Sir, the provinces by the sea will have no added territory. Then, under such circumstances, before carving out finally what remains of our Canadian Dominion, the right hon. gentleman should have summoned to Ottawa a conference of the premiers of the various provinces and have given our friends by the sea a chance to exist and to live.

Mr. Speaker, the Bill is perhaps more important for what it does not contain than for what it contains. We were treated right royally last evening to the new issue of the eternally famous school question By whom has this question been imported into the debate? Not by the Liberal party, not by the Liberal press, not by the Liberal orators throughout the country. The question which was imported into the House last night must be assigned exclusively to the Nationalist wing of the coalition government. Indeed, I do not know why I should presently address myself to my friends on the other side of the House. They know more about this feud than we know. I ought to enlighten my friends on this side of the House who come from various provinces as to this family quarrel—because it is nothing more and nothing less than a family quarrel. My hon. friend the Postmaster General complained last night that he was being called names. He said: 'They call us names; they implore us French Canadian ministers, hand over your portfolios; and we are branded as arch traitors.' Of course, Sir, the hon. gentlemen will not hand over their portfolios, and my hon. friend must stand being called names for many years to come. Turning towards his Tory friends sitting behind him, he said, "They call us arch traitors." By whom are they called arch traitors? As regards myself, I know what name to give the hon. gentleman. For twenty-five years in public life I need not invent any new name. He is called arch traitor by whom? By his own friends. Mr. Bourassa, in an interview published two days ago, said that the conduct of the hon. gentlemen who form the Nationalist wing of the coalition government made his British blood boil in his veins; and Mr. Armand Lavergne, the leader of the hon the Postmaster General, said of him not later than yesterday, "I am ashamed of him." Arch traitors, Mr. Speaker? Arch traitors to their own friends, whom they led not into the promised land of integral Nationalism. Arch traitors to their own friends, to their own promises, and to their apparent convictions on and before the 21st of September last. I say again, Mr. Speaker, we did not raise the issue. We are simple onlookers. We are witnessing the quarrel, and we are evincing much pleasure at the sight. No, we did not raise the issue. The best evidence of that is the able and eloquent speech delivered last night by a sincere believer in Nationalism, the young member for Nicolet (Mr. Lamarche) a speech Sir, which deserves commendation from every member of this House, because it was lofty. What did the hon. member for Nicolet say? He said that he felt in duty bound to separate himself from his ministers who had led him astray before the 21st of September, as he had promised if elected he would restore separate schools to Manitoba and would give separate schools to the minority in Keewatin. By whom was he induced to make that promise to the electors of the county of Nicolet if not by the Minister of Public Works, if not by the Postmaster General, and by the Minister of Inland Revenue? I repeat—and I am in the judgment of my fellow Liberal members from the province of Quebec—who induced the bright young men who separated themselves yesterday from the ministerial party—who induced them during the last four years, in their respective constituencies, to advocate and promise the restoration of a system of separate schools in Manitoba and in the district of Keewatin, if not the Postmaster General the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Inland Revenue with their incendiary speeches? The quarrel is between those who yesterday separated themselves from the ministerial party and the three Quebec ministers is this, that the young Nationalists are sincere, while the three ministers are not and were not sincere. Sir, I have listened with a great deal of interest, with rapt attention, to the impetuous speech made by the Postmaster General. It was a plea pro domo.

The hon. gentleman was defending his own gates, he was defending his own lines, in a word he was defending his portfolio. But, Sir, do you suppose that this speech, hurling defiance as it did against the ex-Prime Minister, was addressed to the right hon. gentleman. Sir, the Postmaster General's bold rejoinder went far beyond the walls of this parliament: It was addressed to that Samson of the Nationalist party, that Samson that no Delilah could approach, and whose locks no Delilah can clip or fleece. The indignant speech of the hon. gentleman was addressed to Mr. Bourassa, who is now desecrating the ministerial temple by acting in such a way that we can already hear the columns toppling and tumbling to pieces within that edifice.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. LEMIEUX. No, Mr. Speaker, that speech was not directed against the right hon. gentleman who leads the opposition, make sure of that. The Postmaster General's indignant accents went far beyond the walls of this House. They were addressed against Mr. Bourassa, who dared to be logical after the 21st of September as he was before that date. They were addressed against Mr. Lavergne, the would-be leader of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pelletier). They were addressed against the editors of the Nationalist press—against the editor of 'Le Devoir,' of 'La Croix,' of 'Le Nationaliste,' 'L'Action Sociale,' against the four leaders of public opinion in the Nationalist party, who are all denouncing the action of the Postmaster General at the present time. Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman and his colleagues from Quebec are primarily responsible for this school agitation and they will reap their reward sooner or later.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. LEMIEUX. They are denounced by those they have misled. They will also be condemned by the electorate at the very first opportunity. Last night I heard something which is new to my ears. I listened to the laboured speech of the Minister of Public Works. I pinched myself during the delivery of that speech. I could not believe that it was the Minister of Public Works who was speaking, but beyond doubt he was the speaker. He said, Mr. Speaker, that he always understood—and he made the statement in his usual mellifluous tones—that the school question had been finally settled, and he added, remembering no doubt that he once was a professor at Laval University, 'We are functi officio.' It sounded like a legal sermon. The Minister of Public Works during the last 15 years has been representing quite another constituency than that of Jacques Cartier; his constituency was the Nationalist element and some of the young clergy in the province of Quebec. I do not know what the Nationalists would have said during the last campaign, with the programme I have in my hand, when the hon. gentleman was apparently so much concerned about the maintenance of the federal pact of 1867 as regards the protection of all minorities in order to ensure contentment among all classes—if he had told them that the Manitoba school question had been settled.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I do not know either, what reception he would have had from a certain section of the French-Canadian clergy if he had answered: 'functi officio sumus!' Ah! Mr. Speaker, we were great criminals in the province of Quebec. The right hon. gentleman who leads the opposition, with his French-Canadian colleagues in the late cabinet, and the French Canadian members in the last parliament were great criminals in the eyes and in the judgment of the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Monk). True, at the same time whilst he was ingeniously carrying on his racial agitation, by promising remedial legislation, by promising the restoration of Catholic schools in Manitoba, in Saskatchewan, and in Alberta, true it is that during his 15 years of stewardship in this parliament the hon. gentleman never moved a motion of censure against the settlement which was made in 1897. But one can speak one way before the House of Commons and the other way before the electorate; and we had the evidence of this during the last 15 years. Let me recall a few instances. Those whose righteous principles were elastic enough to accept the Manitoba settlement made by the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) in 1897 could perhaps be stirred up in their patriotic feelings against the hon. gentleman's naval policy as formulated in this parliament, and, therefore, the Minister of Public Works made a formal alliance with the Nationalist party. With some of them he rode the separate school horse, with some others he rode with flying banners against the Canadian navy. And in order to give the public an impression that he was sincere, what did he do? He severed with eclat his connection with the right hon. gentleman who now leads the government.

He did that in order to give the Prime Minister a little more freedom elsewhere and to make himself a little more free in the constituencies of the province of Quebec. Many in this House were present in the county of Drummond and Arthabaska two years ago who have not forgotten the incident which took place during the speech of the hon. Minister of Public Works on that occasion. He was fiercely denouncing the naval law he was fiercely denouncing the school settlement promulgated at the instance of the right hon. gentleman by the Greenway government in Manitoba, when suddenly, from the crowd, a voice shouted 'what about Borden?' My right hon. friend (Mr. Borden) will pardon me if I re-echo the very discourteous interjection, but great men are only known by their family names? Some one shouted from the multitude 'What about Borden?'

Some hon. MEMBERS. He is all right.

Mr. LEMIEUX. He is all right? He may be all right to-day——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. LEMIEUX. He may be all right to-day, but on that day he was all wrong. What was the answer of the Minister of Public Works? Let my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) a doughty fighter of the Conservative party, listen to this. When he was asked: What about Borden? he turned around and, nearly sobbing, as he sobs when he passes his estimates, with tears in his voice and in his eyes, said: Borden? Have I severed my connection with the Conservative party to be told that I am a partisan of Borden? He was all wrong, Mr. Speaker, on that day.

I say, Sir, that the stand of my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Monk) on the school question for the last 15 years,—and you, Sir, are a witness to this—was on a par with his stand on the naval question at the opening of this session. You remember, Mr. Speaker, in 1909, on the 29th March, a resolution was passed by this parliament praying for the establishment of a Canadian navy. You remember that the hon. gentleman who is now Minister of Public Works, from his seat in this House, denounced that policy and declared himself opposed to that resolution. During the campaign his constituency of Nationalists listened to him. According to Mr. Bourassa and his friends he was the only one in this House who had spoken the true language of a patriot. The elections took place, and that hon. gentleman was selected as one of the colleagues of the Borden government. He came back to this House, he was asked how the change had come about, what bargain he had made with the right hon. the Prime Minister, to merge his opinions, anti-naval, with the opinions, pro-naval, of his Prime Minister. What did he answer? He answered that he had never wavered, that he had always been in favour of a naval policy. He went so far as to say that he had supported the resolution of March 29, 1909, and I had to read him his ipsissima verba from the 'Hansard.' He did not dare answer when I established clearly to this House that he had differed completely from his colleagues on that occasion.

The Postmaster General made a lengthy speech containing some more or less witty references to the right hon. gentleman who leads the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), which, perhaps, could be forgiven, if they had been made on the platform or at Billingsgate, but I say that the reflections he cast on the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) will put the Postmaster General on a level where he really stands in the judgment of this House. Sir, let not my friends who belong to the Tory party believe for one moment, that this staunch defender of Tory faith, has always been a dyed-in-the-wool Tory. I know the hon. Postmaster General from A to Z, and when I say from A to Z, I know whereof I speak. The hon. gentleman reminds me of that little animal mentioned somewhere in the Roman law, known in common parlance as the chameleon, but known in the Roman law as the salamander. In the Roman law a man who has a fraudulent debtor was called a salamander or a chameleon because he could change at his own sweet will. The hon. gentleman is the Postmaster General. of Canada. Has he always been such a faithful follower of the Conservative party, has he always held the same contemptuous opinion which he expressed yesterday of the right hon. gentleman who leads the opposition? I tell my hon. friends on your right, that I have known the Postmaster General for nearly 25 years. I have listened to him when he was a humble, a very humble follower of the right hon. gentleman who leads the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). In 1885 on the Riel question, the hon. gentleman left the Tory party, joined the ranks of the Liberal party, and ran as the candidate of the Nationalist party of the time, in Three Rivers.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Liberal-Nationalists.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The hon. gentleman who always refers to his loyalty and his sturdy opposition to reciprocity, was a humble follower of the right hon. gentleman who leads the opposition, when the Liberal party in 1891 unfurled the banner of unrestricted reciprocity. He supported that party from 1887 until 1891. In Lotbiniére county, in the elections of 1908, when he ran against my hon. friend who sits for Lotbiniére, he did not run as a Conservative candidate, he stood as an independent candidate. He wanted to come into this House—and I was present on the platform to unmask him—he solicited the votes of the men of Lotbiniére county, as he said, that he might come into the House of Commons as a follower of the right hon. gentleman. The district of Quebec is my witness, my hon. friend from Lotbiniére is my witness; the Postmaster General wanted to come into this House to support, as he said, the right hon. gentleman who was then the Prime Minister, and the only fault he found with the right hon. gentleman was, that he was too much under the sway of Mr. Sifton on the Manitoba school question. Sir, during the last election, in the month of September he delivered a speech in the county of Quebec, where he was brought as a candidate by whom? By Mr. Lavergne. Let me quote from 'L'Evenement,' his own organ:

On the 17th of September, speaking in the county of Quebec, Mr. Pelletier paid a tribute of gratitude to Messrs. Bourassa and Lavergne for what they had done for their country.

And in his grandiloquent style, with that tragic countenance which he assumed yesterday, reminding us of Talma or Coquelin, he said:

The people love you, Lavergne, because you have loved the people. Bourassa and yourself, Lavergne, have written a unique page in the annals of our country. I have offered myself as a candidate, because I had the support of Armand Lavergne.

Mr. LEMIEUX.

And speaking of the multitude:

When you, gentlemen, on the 21st of September next, elect me, you will sing the victory of Pelletier and Lavergne. (Loud and prolonged cheers).

Do you think, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. Lavergne, on the 17th of September last, gave utterance to views similar to those that were expressed by his follower last night in this House? We all know as a matter of history, and you, Mr. Speaker, better than any one else, that the reason why Mr. Lavergne severed his connection from the Liberal party was, first, because on the Autonomy Bills of 1905, he deprecated the substitution of clause 16, No. 2, to clause 16 No. 1. He started a campaign with Mr. Bourassa throughout the province of Quebec against the school policy accepted by this government, and by the Liberal party; and then, later on, to the many faults, to the many weaknesses which he found in the Liberal ranks, he added the naval policy in his arraignment of the Liberal party. Mr. Lavergne, in the province of Quebec—and I am in the judgment of the Liberal members of this House—Mr. Lavergne denounced the government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier on the school question, and on the naval question. And when my hon. friend the Postmaster General ran as a candidate in Quebec county he ran imbued with the ideas, with the principles, with the professions of faith made by Mr. Lavergne; he was the follower of Mr. Lavergne, as he rightly stated at that meeting. What a change since the 21st of September. It may be said, however, Mr. Speaker, that not all of the Nationalist editors had faith in the hon. gentleman. I read in 'La Croix,' one of the most influential clerical and Nationalist papers in the province of Quebec, a very fierce denunciation of the hon. gentleman. In the last number of 'La Croix,' on March 2, it says:

The present Bill will not be debated in the House until Monday next. What will then be the attitude of the Catholic members of the House, of the ministers, Messrs. Pelletier, Monk and Nantel? Will they throw down their portfolios on the green cloth of the table, at the feet of their leader, if that leader persists in his refusal to insert in that Bill a clause preserving the rights of Catholics in Keewatin to their schools? Have they already insisted on that right? We do not know, events which will occur in the House of Commons next week will teach us what has happened. But from Pelletier, notably, we expect nothing good.

I have too much admiration for the ability of my hon. friend to read the other sentences.

Mr. PELLETIER. I never read it.

Mr. LEMIEUX. 'La Croix' will teach you to read it.

Mr. PELLETIER. Never. I know those people too well.

Mr. LEMIEUX. You are speaking of clerics.

Mr. PELLETIER. I am speaking of 'La Croix.'

Mr. LEMIEUX. You are speaking with much boldness. I am afraid there will be a mandement issued against you shortly.

Mr. PELLETIER. 'La Croix' is not a respectable paper.

Mr. LEMIEUX. It is not a respectable paper since it differs from my hon. friend, but it was a respectable paper before——

Mr. PELLETIER. Never.

Mr. LEMIEUX—when it denounced my right hon. friend as being subservient to the Protestants, and my hon. friend used 'La Croix' for his own political purposes.

Mr. PELLETIER. Never.

Mr. LEMIEUX—against the Liberal party.

Mr. PELLETIER. I never used that paper in my life.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend is very nervous; I do not know why he should be so nervous.

Mr. PELLETIER. I am not nervous.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Let him take his medicine. This Bill is a very hard and bitter pill to swallow. Again I say to my hon. friend, let him take his medicine; the end is not in sight yet. My hon. friend has given a new version of the history of the Manitoba school question. Let me refer for a minute to this question which is better known probably from my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Rogers) than from any other member of the House of Commons. There was a school question from 1890 to 1897. but I understood last evening from the Minister of Public Works that it had been finally settled. The Postmaster General stated in so many words last evening that it was not settled and that he relied on his friend, Mr. Roblin, to give justice to the minority of Manitoba. It is well known that in 1890 a Grit government in Manitoba abolished the separate school system. It is also a matter of history that this legislation, passed by the Manitoba government in 1890, could have been disallowed within two years of its sanction. It was not disallowed, and I quite agree with my hon. friend that it would have been a very severe remedy to have used against that legislation. Sir John Macdonald, we are told, refused to entertain the idea of disallowing that legislation in Manitoba. He had had his experience with that province of Manitoba; he knew that disallowance might be in the statute-book, but that it is never wise nor prudent for a statesman to enforce it. It was no more wise to use the power of disallowance than, in such an extreme position as the Manitoba school question was placed in 1896, to use the remedial order which was sent forward from the then government to the Manitoba authorities. If we cannot blame the Conservative government in 1890, 1891 and 1892 for not having used the power of disallowance, we cannot blame the Laurier government of 1896 for not having insisted on the remedial order being accepted by the Manitoba authorities, and I will explain why. The great mistake—I will not use the word 'crime,' because according to Thiers an error in politics is sometimes worse than a crime—the great mistake made by the Conservative party in 1890 was, instead of boldly facing the issue and entering into negotiations with the Manitoba government, to dally with the question, to send it from court to court, from the Supreme Court of Manitoba to the Supreme Court at Ottawa, from the Supreme Court at Ottawa to the Privy Council in England, from there again back to Manitoba, and to follow in the same way a second time to the Privy Council in London. During that time the agitation went on, becoming fiercer and fiercer every day, until, in 1895, this country, as you know, Mr. Speaker, being a contemporary yourself of the events which took place during those memorable years, 1895 and 1896, was ripe for civil war and we were, practically speaking, on the verge of national disintegration. What happened then? The judgment of the Privy Council came to the Conservative government and they enacted the famous remedial order. Looking back at those events as they appear in history to-day, is there a man in this House who, in his sober senses and in good faith, would pretend for one minute that the remedial order could have been enforced as against an unwilling legislature in Manitoba? I assert that it was impossible. Sir Charles Tupper, during the session of 1896, after the Liberal government came into office, admitted that it was impossible to enforce that remedial order. There is a saying in law—and again I address myself to an old professor of constitutional law who will pardon me if I use Latin words—summum jus summa injuria. We know that under the saving clause of the Manitoba Act you could enact remedial legislation, but by enforcing that legislation against an unwilling legislature in 1896 and in 1897, you would have caused civil war in Manitoba. Then, Sir, do you suppose, as my hon. friend the Postmaster General said yesterday, that if my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition won the elections on the 23rd June, 1896, it was due to appeals made to his fellow countrymen on the school question? Do you not rather believe, Mr. Speaker, you who are one of the stalwarts of the old Conservative party of those days, that the crisis which took place in the cabinet in 1895 and 1896, when seven ministers on the eve of a session and of a general election, threw up their portfolios and abandoned their leader, reacted in the country and had the effect of opening the minds and judgment of the electors? No doubt the school question was a factor in the election of 1896, but after the Conservative party had been eighteen years in office, after having lost their great chieftain, Sir John Macdonald, after having been deprived of their other leader, Sir John Thompson and having in the last resort recourse to the ability, I must say, but the old age of Sir Charles Tupper, do you not believe that, the Conservative party having against it the buoyancy of the Reform party and the Liberal wave sweeping the country from one end to the other, the time was ripe for a change in spite of the school question? At all events I am in the judgment of this House in stating that as regards the school question the attitude of my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition from 1890 until 1897, when the settlement was accepted by Manitoba, was lofty, Canadian-like and patriotic.

What did he say during that crisis; what was the watchword of the Liberal party—yesterday my friend used the word slogan—what was the watchword of the Liberal forces then? It was: no coercion against Manitoba. Sir, provincial rights have been emblazoned on the banner of the Liberal party; provincial rights have been vindicated by the Mowats, the Blakes and the Lauriers. Our cry was: no coercion against Manitoba, but a policy of conciliation, of mutual concession on every question of an irritating character as must necessarily be the school question or the language question. Yes, that was the policy of the Liberal party. No coercion, again declared our leader on the Autonomy Bill, when the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Monk) was trying to impose the French language as an official language on the legislatures of Saskatchewan and Alberta, although there was but one French Canadian a member of these two legislatures at the time. No coercion, said Sir Wilfrid Laurier, but a policy of conciliation on this language question. And, the right hon. gentleman added: I have faith in the generosity of my English speaking fellow citizens, and I know that if the time comes when there are several French Canadian members in these two legislatures, as very likely it will, then the English speaking people of the western provinces will be generous enough to give them the opportunity of using their own language in addressing the legislative chamber. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that the policy of the Liberal party from 1890 to 1897 in these years of crises was a policy of conciliation. My hon. friend opposite has quoted a speech said to have been delivered in Quebec, and contrasted it with a speech delivered at Toronto by the right hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Well, there are just two or three words in the last sentence of the Quebec speech which do not sound like the usual utterances of the right hon. leader of the oppoistion, and as to the balance of both speeches, I recognize the expression of his well-known principles of justice of fair-play and freedom for all the people of Canada irrespective of race or creed. And, Sir, I declare here without fear of contradiction that whether in Ontario or in Quebec the right hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier has always advocated only one policy: a policy of conciliation and mutual concession. But we do not lack authority other than newspaper reports which are not always accurate; we have here the book of books; we have here 'Hansard,' and in 'Hansard' will be found the policy enunciated by the Rt. Hon. gentleman, when leader of the opposition, sitting in the very seat he now occupies, vindicating Liberal principles against a Conservative majority from 1890 to 1897. We were told last night that he appealed to the passions of the Quebec electorate. Let me remind the younger members of this House of a certain letter, which, on the eve of the general elections in 1896 was addressed to the right hon. gentleman by an old missionary, venerable, and highly respected, not only in Quebec, but throughout the entire Dominion. The letter I refer to was written by Father Lacombe, and addressing the Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, he said:

> I inform you with regret that the episcopacy like one man, united to the clergy, will rise to support those who may have fallen to defend us. Please pardon my frankness which leads me to speak thus. Though I am not your intimate friend, still I may say that we have been on good terms. Always I have deemed you a gentleman, a respectable citizen and a man well able to be at the head of a political party. May Divine Providence keep up your courage and your energy for the good of our common country. We do not ask you to vote for the government but for the Bill which will render us our rights, which will be presented to the House in a few days. I consider, or rather we all consider, that such an act of courage, goodwill and sincerity on your part, and from those who follow your policy, will be greatly in the interests of your party especially in the general elections.

There the chance was offered to the right hon. gentleman that if he would support the remedial legislation he would in return receive the support of the Catholic clergy of the province of Quebec. And, we were told from the government benches yesterday that Sir Wilfrid Laurier had appealed to the religious prejudices of his fellow countrymen in 1896. How dare any man make such a statement? We have 'Hansard' here, and we have the words spoken by the right hon. gentleman before the elections, spoken not in a little hall in the back concessions of Quebec, nor in the back concessions of Ontario, but here on the floor of this parliament, addressed to the country and conscious that his words would be unmistakably heard by the people at large, and what did Sir Wilfrid Laurier answer to that invitation of Father Lacombe? Mark his words:

Not many weeks ago I was told from high quarters in the church to which I belong, that unless I supported the school Bill which was then being prepared by the government and which we have now before us, I would incur the hostility of a great and powerful body. Sir, this is too grave a phase of this question for me to pass it by in silence. I have only this to say: even though I have threats held over me, coming, as I am told from high dignitaries in the church to which I belong, no word of bitterness shall ever pass my lips as against that church. I respect it and I love it; but Sir, I am not of that school which has been long dominant in France and other countries of continental Europe, which refuses to ecclesiastics the privilege of having a voice in public affairs. No, I am a Liberal of the English school; I believe in that school which has all along claimed that it is the privilege of all subjects, whether high or low, whether rich or poor, whether ecclesiastic or layman, to participate in the administration of public affairs to discuss, to influence, to persuade, to convince; but which has always denied, even to the highest, the right to dictate even to the lowest.

Was that an appeal to the passions of his fellow countrymen? Listen to the right hon. gentleman further:

I am here representing not Roman Catholics alone but Protestants as well, and I must give an account of my stewardship to all classes. Here am I, a Roman Catholic of French extraction entrusted, with the confidence of the men who sit around me, with great and important duties in our constitutional system of government. I am here the acknowledged leader of a great party composed of Roman Catholics and Protestants as well, in which the Protestants must be in the majority as in every party.

Am I to be told—I, occupying such a position—that I am to be dictated to as to the course I am to take in this House by reasons that can appeal to the consciences of my fellow-Catholic members, but which do not appeal as well to the consciences of my Protestant colleagues? No! so long as I have a seat in this House, so long as I occupy the position I do now, whenever it shall become my duty to take a stand upon any question whatever, that stand I will take, not from the point of view of Roman Catholicism, not from the point of view of Protestanism, but from a point of view which can appeal to the consciences of men, irrespective of their particular faith, upon grounds which can be occupied by all men who love justice, freedom and toleration.

That programme—because it is a programme—became the banner of the Liberal party, French and English; it became the bond of union of all liberty-loving Canadians. It defeated the Tory policy, a policy which in Ontario vociferously denounced the right hon. gentleman for certain reasons, which I need not give, and which in Quebec, denounced him no less vociferously, and perhaps much more ingeniously, from quite other motives. The government of the day resigned, and as a result the right hon. gentleman, then became the Premier of this Dominion. He was immediately called upon to formulate a policy on the school question. Of course we hear much less denunciation against the Postmaster General and the Minister of Public Works than were made in 1896 against the right hon. gentleman. He had to give justice immediately to the Catholic minority of Manitoba, as the demand was pressing. It took a few months. He had some pour parlers with Mr. Greenway. He used the influence of his colleagues, Sir Oliver Mowat, and others, and finally an agreement was reached. The Minister of Public Works declared last night that that agreement was acceptable to him to-day. The question in his judgment, is finally settled. According to the Postmaster General, it was a poor settlement. Sir, the Postmaster General paid a great compliment to the memory of the old leader of the Liberal party, who has just passed away, the Hon. Edward Blake, and I join him in those compliments. If, according to my hon. friend, the Laurier-Greenway settlement was a poor one, one for which the right hon. gentleman should have been condemned 15 years ago, how is it that Hon. Edward Blake, a great legal luminary probably the greatest jurist in the British Empire at any rate, strongly approved of that settlement? In a letter which he addressed on January 20, 1897 to the Solicitor General of that day, the Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick, the Hon. Edward Blake gave as his opinion that the settlement was a broad and fair settlement, and should be accepted by the minority in Manitoba; and we know that Mr. Blake was a friend of the minority, for whom he he had been selected as council before the Privy Council. Let me quote the words from Mr. Wilson's book:

Mr. Blake said that if, in order to succeed in the appeal, he had found it necessary to maintain that the separate school system should be absolutely restored, he would have failed, and that it was only by taking much more limited ground that he had induced the court to touch the question at all. The judicial committee had simply decided that the Governor General in council had jurisdiction in the matter, and had left to the political authorities the question of how the jurisdiction should be exercised. He considered the terms of the settlement more advantageous to the Catholic minority than any remedial Bill which it was in the power of the parliament of Canada to force on the province of Manitoba.

I quote these words, just to show that, according to an unbiased and judicial mind like that of the late Hon. Edward Blake, the school settlement was considering the circumstances a fair one for the minority of Manitoba. The agreement was accepted by the Manitoba legislature, but did the agitation stop there? No, but ever since Mr. Roblin took the reins of office, the agitation has gone on continuously in the province of Quebec. This agitation has been stirred up day in and day out, in every general election, and those who are responsible in the first degree for that agitation, are the hon. gentlemen who sit to-day in the coalition government. When the agreement came before this House on the only occasion on which it came before this House, because it was never taken exception to by any of the members of the Conservative party, the right hon. gentleman who was then Prime Minister, said:

When we came into power, we approached that question in the only way in which it should have been approached, and if it had been approached in that way first, this country would have been spared the years of agitation, which have brought it almost to the verge of civil war. We went to the government of Manitoba and said to them: 'The legislation of 1890 has inflicted a grievance upon the minority of Manitoba. You have the authority of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council that such is the case. Repair the grievance yourselves.' Sir, they undertook themselves to repair that grievance. We thought, and still think—and upon that issue I am ready at any time to take the verdict of the country—that the smallest measure of conciliation was far preferable to any measure of coercion.

But, as I said a moment ago, the agitation went on. If the words are not too strong I may say, and say very boldly, that during a period of 15 years Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his fellow members of the Catholic persuasion in the province of Quebec were simply crucified by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) because they supported that agreement. That is not new in the history of the Liberal party. The question of whether a French Canadian in the province of Quebec can be a Liberal or not is as old as the province of Quebec itself. For 50 years we were denied by our opponents the rights which belonged to the humblest British subject. It was argued by them that a Liberal could not be a good Catholic, and no man could be elected, even to a position on a municipal council, if he claimed to be a Liberal. To such an extent was the agitation against us carried on that it eventually culminated in 1897 in the Liberal members of parliament who belonged to the Catholic faith appealing to the supreme chief of Catholicity. We pointed out to the Supreme Pontiff that we were British subjects, and that we were entitled to our civil rights, and we wanted a judgment from His Holiness as to whether or not we could as British subjects be members of the Liberal party and be considered as Catholics. We all know what happened. The judgment was given. But somehow or other the fight began over and over again at every election. And the Postmaster General is one of those who most assiduously and ingeniously appealed to the prejudices of the Catholics against the present leader of the opposition. This is not new. The same thing was done in the days of Dorion, in the days of Letellier in the days of Blake, in the days of Mercier. For years and years the Liberal party in the province of Quebec could not count a baker's dozen in either of the legislatures. We could not be elected, we could not go before the electors, because some agitator would rise and say that we, the Liberals of Quebec, were like our compeers of Continental Europe—that we were opposed to religion, to the liberties and the tenets of the Catholic church—and they so misconstructed the word Liberalism in politics until finally it was defined by the Supreme Pontiff himself. Sir, the same quarrel has gone on in France.

We belong to the British school of Liberalism, and not to the French school of Liberalism. We admire the French school of Liberalism, as represented by Montalembert, and Lacordaire. Montalembert in a book, which was published not too long ago, stated that he himself found a wide difference between the Liberals of England and the Liberals of France. His grandfather was a Scotch Liberal. He had been educated by that grandfather in England, and then at the age of 17 or 18 he came to France. It was at a period when revolutions in continental Europe were rife. In Paris especially at every lyceum and every school there was quite a demonstration amongst the young men in favour of Liberal ideas, but he found, as he says, quite a difference between the French Liberalism and the English Liberalism. The young French Liberals were opposed to religion and to the liberties of the church. They were not only opposed to the church, but he tells us that one day in class a ballot was taken to ascertain how many believed in the existence of the Almighty, and he mournfully discovered that the Almighty had carried the day only by a majority of one. This shows the wide gap between the ideas of French doctrinaire Liberals and those of English Liberals. I repeat that it is with such a thin construction of the word 'liberal' that the Liberal party was kept in opposition in Quebec for 50 years. It is with such methods that we have been fought at every election. But, thank Heaven, we have won the battle, and now the province of Quebec knows no difference, religiously speaking, between a Liberal and a Conservative.

The Postmaster General and the Minister of Public Works have, through a long labyrinth of arguments, summed up their position in the following words: 'There are no vested rights for the minority of Keewatin.' They have found that set out in the statute-book. Even the ingenious Minister of Public Works has gone so far as to say that the word Keewatin has disappeared from the statue-book, and that as there was no Keewatin hence there were no vested rights; consequently there was no school question, and thus he could consistently keep his portfolio. However, it is the opinion of a gentleman who, if he is not a full-fledged member of the cabinet, is a semi-ready member, I refer to the hon. the Speaker of the Senate, the co-editor and co-propriteor of 'L'Evenement' of Quebec. That gentleman has given his opinion and he finds that there is a Keewatin in the statute-book, that there are vested rights, and that there is a school question. How do you reconcile that? How do you reconcile the saying of the already made minister that there is no school question, with the statement of the semi-ready minister that there is a school question? Does the latter anticipate that the already made minister will resign and that he will step into his place?. However, it is the opinion of the Speaker of the Senate. It is also the opinion of a man whom I respect and revere, His Grace the Archbishop of Manitoba, Mgr. Langevin, who has declared on many occasions that the minority in Keewatin has rights that must be respected. Sir, using the words of His Grace the Archbishop of St. Boniface, the Deputy Speaker of this House addressing a meeting at Three Rivers last summer, stated that there was a school question, and that he intended to resurrect that much dreaded issue.

Speaking at Three Rivers on the 7th of August, your deputy, Sir, used the following language:

> The supreme resource of the government is to say of a question that it is dead and buried. Dead and buried? The school question of Manitoba, in spite of the eloquent voice which cries: 'I am eternally wounded and my grave is my cradle'. Dead and buried the question of South African contingents where your sons were called to shed their blood on the African veldt?

No, no, not dead and buried, quite alive. However, the dissenting ministers state now, that there are no vested rights for the minority of Keewatin, and that no threat should be made to Manitoba, especially at the present moment, when this government have just come into office and they are asked by their Quebec followers to stand by their pledges. No threats should be made to Manitoba and besides no two school systems could co-exist in Manitoba. How would it do, said my hon. friend, for one section of Manitoba to have public schools and to import into the annexed territory a system of separate schools? No two school systems can co-exist, says the Postmaster General. He says besides that there are but a handful of Catholics in Keewatin and that, at all events, we should trust the Roblin government. He used quite different language during the elections. It is not for me to look at the statute book and to point out the clauses which give or do not give to Catholics in the Keewatin territory rights, as hon. gentlemen opposite said during the last general election, they had rights, It is not for the right hon. gentleman, who leads the opposition, to frame a policy for that great genius who took for himself all the glory of overthrowing this government in the district of Quebec; it is for the right hon., the leader of the government (Mr. Borden) and he knows what he has to do. His Bill is before the House, there is no school clause in it, and it is for the hon. gentleman to induce the right hon. the leader of the government, to frame a policy, it is not the duty of the leader of the opposition. One thing is sure. Mr. Greenway is dead, his government has disappeared; the Laurier government is out of office; the Borden government is in office and the Roblin government is in office; these are two friendly governments. Mr. Roblin has been in office since 1899. How is it, I ask the Postmaster General, that if the remedial order could have been enforced in Manitoba at the time the right hon. gentleman, who leads the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) was Prime Minister, Mr. Roblin never put it in force? How is it that he has not improved the condition of the French Canadian and Catholic minority in Manitoba? Was he prevented by the right hon. gentleman from implementing the terms of the agreement of 1897? On the contrary, but we know that Mr. Roblin was not quite willing.

Oh, but the hon. gentleman knows that Mr. Roblin unfurled the British flag on every school house in the province of Manitoba, and I commend that policy. We must teach the young men to love and respect the flag. I say that the British flag is the symbol of justice, of tolerance and of liberty. We Liberals trust in the flag more than in Mr. Roblin. It should be an easy matter then for the three Nationalist members, unwilling to surrender their portfolios in order to protect the sacred rights of the minority, to settle with Mr. Roblin under the folds of the British flag.

Rt. Hon. R. L. BORDEN. (Prime Minister) Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend who has just taken his seat (Mr. Lemieux) has entertained the House at very considerable length with a number of reminiscences very delightfully rendered and of a more or less amusing character. I shall come to some of these a little later on but for the moment I will take up one or two observations of my hon. friend in the early part of his address. He is good enough to congratulate the government upon having placed upon the order paper of this House resolutions providing for the extension of the boundaries of Ontario and Quebec, adding, however, that our action in that regard is only by way of implementing a resolution passed by this House under the leadership of my right hon friend who sits opposite; and when he reminds us of that it might be worth while to inquire why it is that these resolutions have remained as waste paper ever since the 13th of July 1908 and whether or not the remarkable and unexplained delay has anything whatever to do with the extension of the boundaries of the province of Maniltoba.

Then my hon. friend was good enough to lament the harsh treatment which, as he claims, has been meted out to the province of Ontario. Does he realize, when he makes that statement, that the boundaries proposed by this government are exactly the same as those for which he voted in 1908?

Does he realize that although Ontario, through her ministers of the Crown, went before the government of which he was a member, she was denied the relief which this government is giving her by the present measure? If my hon. friend is of the opinion that Ontario is not getting fair-play to-day, does he mean to say that it was to the credit of his own government that it gave to the province of Ontario no right whatever to a port on the Hudson bay? I should regard it as venturesome not to say audacious, for my hon. friend, under the present proposal which secures to the province of Ontario a port on the Hudson bay, to contrast for one moment the treatment accorded to that great province by the present administration with the treatment accorded it by the administration of which he was a member.

Mr. LEMIEUX. There is a misconception, perhaps I did not clearly express myself. I quite approve of the new boundaries given to Ontario, as I approve of the boundaries given to Manitoba. What I intended to speak of, was the projection of Ontario to Port Nelson.

Mr. BORDEN. My hon. friend was complaining on behalf of Ontario.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I said that Sir James Whitney might approve of that projection, and that the Conservative party might approve of it, but the people might not.

Mr. BORDEN. Does my hon. friend realize that it is a great deal more than he was willing to give to Ontario? Will my hon. friend be good enough to state whether he does or does not object to that consideration being granted to the province of Ontario? That is a plain question. My hon. friend does not seem to be very ready with an answer.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I objected to that projection of the province of Ontario into Manitoba, and I still object to it.

Mr. BORDEN. My hon. friend a moment ago was complaining on behalf of Ontario. Now he has shifted his ground, and is complaining on behalf of Manitoba. Has my hon. friend really made up his mind whether he desires to complain on behalf of Ontario or on behalf of Manitoba?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I said it would lead to conflicts between Ontario and Manitoba. My hon. friend will read my remarks in 'Hansard' to-morrow.

Mr. BORDEN. Yes, and I will find exactly what I have stated, and I do not think I will get much enlightenment as to the exact position of my hon. friend.

Now my hon. friend bewailed the sad position of the provinces by the sea. We did not hear much about that in 1908, when these resolutions were passed. I would like to tell my hon. friend that he is not speaking by the letter when he says that the maritime provinces are declining in population. They are not declining in population. It is true, they have not made the same advance in population that some of the other provinces have made, nevertheless they have made a substantial advance in population; and I have not the slightest doubt that, under the progressive and favourable policy of the present administration, they will make very much greater advances in the future than they have made in the past.

Mr. LEMIEUX. What I meant was, that they had decreased in population because they were losing their representation in this House. By the present census they are liable to lose a few seats in this House.

Mr. BORDEN. I am aware that they lost representation in the House of Commons in 1901, and I am also aware that the late administration did not do anything to redress any of the grievances of the maritime provinces in that regard. Of course, every one of us realizes that it is because those provinces entered confederation without any provision that their representation should not be decreased that they are in that unfortunate position to-day. As a matter of fact, the only province on whose behalf such a stipulation was made when it entered confederation was the province of British Columbia, which has never required it.

However, I will pass from that to deal with another point to which my hon. friend invited attention. I shall not attempt for a moment to follow my hon. friend in the very rambling address which he delivered this afternoon, and which was largely composed of taunts hurled against my hon. friend the Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier) and my hon friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Monk). I would like you, Mr. Speaker, and hon. gentlemen on both sides of this House, to observe this one thing at least, that the Postmaster General and the Minister of Public Works have had the courage to stand up in this House and state where they are on this question. But my hon. friend, after speaking an hour and three-quarters, left us as much in ignorance as to what his own attitude is on this question as we are in ignorance of the attitude of his leader. My hon. friend reproaches my colleagues with desiring to keep their portfolios, he reproaches them with a change of heart, with a change of mind; he reproaches my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works with having changed his mind on the naval question. Has my hon. friend from Rouville any recollection of the letter he wrote in regard to the naval question on the 4th of August, 1902, and may I ask whether he stands to-day where he stood when he wrote that letter?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Exactly in the same position.

Mr. BORDEN. Then I will read it, or a portion of it:

Permettez-moi cependant d'exprimer mon étonnement de ce que les délégués des Chambers de Commerce du Canada, et de la province de Québec en particulier, aient cru devoir appuyer une résolution qui affirme un principe absolument faux, à savoir: l'obligation pour les Colonies de participer à la défense de l'Empire.

Translate that into English—I need not read the rest of it:

Permit me, however, to express my astonishment that the delegates of the Chamber of Commerce of Canada, and from the province of Quebec in particular, have thought fit to support a resolution which affirms a principle absolutely false, namely, the obligation of the colonies to participate in the defence of the empire.

Now has my hon. friend still the courage to stand up in this House and reproach the Minister of Public Works with respect to his position on the naval question in 1909? I have only read one paragraph from the hon. gentleman's letter, I will leave it to other members of the House to read the whole letter, I have read such portion of it as is relevant to this debate. I say that the citation of that one paragraph of his letter puts my hon. friend absolutely out of court when he endeavours to level any reproach against the Postmaster General of the Minister of Public Works in respect to their attitude upon this question.

Now my hon. friend has spoken in reply to a criticism which was levelled by the Postmaster General against the right hon. leader of the opposition. There is one remarkable thing about my hon. friend who has just taken his seat (Mr. Lemieux). Whenever he quotes from a newspaper which does not exactly coincide with his views, he makes all due allowance for inaccuracies of reporting; but when he comes to quote a newspaper containing some alleged speech of a member on this side of the House, he has no misgivings whatever about its accuracy.

Well, my hon. friend referred to what had been said in Quebec on the one hand and in Massey hall on the other by the right hon. leader of the opposition. He qualified his observations upon the Quebec speech by saying that the concluding sentence or two did not sound like the words of the right hon. gentleman who leads the opposition. He had a good deal of misgiving about that. I think he might perhaps have been a little more accurate if he had stated that the concluding sentences of the Quebec speech did not sound very much like the Massey hall speech. Let us contrast the language of the two speeches. My hon. friend argued that they were entirely consistent. This was delivered in the Jacques Cartier hall, Quebec, on the 7th May, 1896, and I am reminded by my hon. friend from Dundas (Mr. Broder) that the elections were held on the 23rd June in the same year.

Finally, if conciliation does not succeed, I shall have to exerise that constitutional recourse which the law furnishes, a recourse which I shall exercise completely and entirely.

The other remarks at Massey Hall have been placed in contrast with that by my hon friend the Postmaster General. They are these:

He was a Roman Catholic and a French Canadian, and therefore, must have strong sympathy for the minority, but as he himself would not be coerced by anybody, so he would not consent to force coercion upon any one.

It is absolutely impossible to reconcile the two statements. My hon. friend knew that and therefore he qualified his observations in regard to them by stating that the concluding sentences of the Quebec speech, which, as far as I know, have not been denied by the right hon. leader of the opposition, did not sound like the right hon. gentleman's usual utterances.

Now, my hon. friend (Mr. Lemieux) dealt with a great many matters in the course of his address as to which it is not necessary for me to speak. But, as his speech was undoubtedly designed for the purpose of furnishing ammunition of a certain sort which has not been without its use to my hon. friends on the other side of the House, I think it is only right to comment rather briefly, but perhaps somewhat pointedly, on the attitude of the opposition in regard to this measure. My right hon. friend the leader of the opposition left this question, as to which his press in Quebec are not silent, to the concluding part of his speech and then alluded to it in a few, brief sentences. In the course of these sentences he declared that he was within the lines of 'Torres Vedras.' My hon. friend the Postmaster General well stated that my right hon. friend has been there many times before, and that it has been a very usual resort in times of stress for him. My hon. friend from Rouville (Mr. Lemieux) has also resorted to the lines of 'Torres Vedras,' but the only difference between them is that he is a little farther within those lines than even his leader. We were told by the right hon. gentleman that whenever this question was raised in the House he was ready to discuss it. I would have supposed that that remark would have applied to his chief lieutenant or, at all events, to one of his chief lieutenants. Yet, after this question has been raised, and after my hon. friend the Postmaster General, and my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works have spoken upon it, we find that the hon. member for Rouville occupies nearly two hours of the time of the House and fails, from beginning to end of his speech, to state his own position upon this question. My hon. friend the member for Rouville has said that his leader in 1896 stood for no coercion. He has endeavoured to deal very gingerly with this question. Why did he not state whether he stood for coercion to-day or for no coercion? That would have been a very plain statement. He asks that the government should define its policy. The government has defined its policy by the Bill which is now before the House, and it would have been the proper and constitutional course for my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition, when he came to deal with this question, to have attacked that Bill on account of what it did not contain as well as on account of what it did contain. What course did he take? The course which he took was to allude to but not to deal with this question and to place before this House a cunningly devised amendment which he thought might be of advantage to him from the political point of view, while he himself remained within the lines of 'Torres Vedras.' Then, Sir, his own press in Quebec is making an attack upon this government, and an attack upon the Bill that the right hon. gentleman does not see fit to make, because, although he is willing to wound he is afraid to strike. The hon. member for Rouville has spoken of this as a family quarrel. Let me tell him, if I may venture to do so, that charity begins at home, and that he had better see to the quarrels within his own party.

Now, I will come to some of the matters that have been referred to in connection with the policy of the government on this question, and let me point out, in the first place, that I appreciate very much what was said by my hon. friend from Nicolet (Mr. Lamarche), who spoke in a very reasonable and moderate way, whose speech on this question was worthy of this House and, from the standpoint which he took, was a reasonable, a moderate and forcible speech. It is a speech that deserves consideration from the government, and a speech to which I propose to give some consideration. Let me say that the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, were proclaimed and came into force on the 31st day of January, 1907. I pass by the question alluded to by my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works and will simply advert to the fact that in July, 1905, an order in council was made by the late administration which, in so far as I have said, was entirely beyond their powers, inasmuch as it exceeded the authority that the statute had bestowed upon them. However, when the Revised Statutes were placed before this House in the following session that order in council was made good in terms by the Revised Statutes, and these statutes are undoubtedly the law of the land today. By section 2, subsection (a) of the statute to which I refer, the Northwest Territories include all the territories formerly known as Rupert's Land and the Northwest Territories except such portions thereof as form the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta and the Yukon Territory.

It is, therefore, plain that Keewatin is included in the expression 'Northwest Territories' as used in this statute, and we must look to its provisions to see what right may exist in any body or community of people with respect to educational matters in these territories. This statute was in force from the 31st of January, 1907 until the present administration came into power on the 10th of October, 1911. Now, what was necessary for the purpose of carrying into effect the educational provisions which had for some years previously been existent in the Northwest Territories. In the first place, by section 6 of the Statute:

The Governor in Council may from time to time constitute and appoint such and so many persons, not exceeding four in number, as are deemed desirable to be a council to aid the commissioner in the administration of the territories; and a majority of the council, including the commissioner shall form a quorum.

Section 10 reads:

The Commissioner in Council, if authorized to make ordinances respecting education, shall pass all necessary ordinances in respect thereto; but in the laws or ordinances relating to education it shall always be provided that a majority of the ratepayers of any district or portion of the territories, or of any less portion or subdivision thereof, by whatever name the same is known, may establish such schools therein as they think fit, and make the necessary assessment and collection of rates therefor; and also that the minority of the ratepayers therein; whether Protestant or Roman Catholic, may establish separate schools therein, and in such case, the ratepayers establishing such Protestant or Roman Catholic separate schools shall be liable only to assessments of such rates as they impose upon themselves in respect thereof.

Now, there were two things necessary before that legislation should become operative. In the first place: that the government of this country should appoint a council of four, to assist the commissioner. From the 31st of January, 1907, up to the tenth of October, 1911, no such step had been taken by the administration which preceded us. The next thing necessary was that the Commissioner in Council should be authorized to make ordinances respecting education, and, from the 31st of January, 1907, up to the time we came into power, no such step was ever taken by the administration which preceded us. Consequently, it follows directly, that during the period which intervened between the 31st of January, 1907, when this law came into force and the day on which this government came into power, no steps, preliminary or otherwise, had been taken by the Liberal administration for the purpose of making operative in the Northwest Territories, the provisions I have read with regard to separate schools. I trust I make myself thoroughly understood by every hon. gentleman within sound of my voice in regard to that matter. Something had been done with regard to education during the interval, but it was done under a mere tentative arrangement and not under the authority of the statute. We find in the records of the Minister of the Interior this memorandum made on the 20th of June, 1907:

Ottawa, 20th June, 1907.

Memorandum re Schools in the Northwest Territories.

Two applications have been made for assistance:—one from 'The Pas' which is in the nature of a mission school, and can remain in abeyance until after the return of Dr. Cash, M.P., who is to visit the locality in August, and has promised to make full inquiries.

The other is from Barrows, on Red Deer Lake, about six miles north of the boundary of Manitoba, where a sawmill is in active operation, and there are between 35 and 40 children for whom there is no school; nor would it be possible to organize a school under trustees and other conditions required by any schools Act—and yet the children should not be deprived of education.

As a temporary arrangement the undersigned recommends that, provided three responsible persons organize themselves into a school board and engage a teacher who would be qualified to teach in the public schools of Alberta, Saskatchewan or Manitoba, an allowance equal to 75 per cent. of the salary of the teacher be made from public funds, on evidence that he or she has received from the trustees the remaining 25 per cent.—payment to be made quarterly; the arrangement to be for one year, subject to renewal; the school to be strictly non-sectarian, and the salary of the teacher not to exceed $600 per annum.

This is approved, the undersigned would ask the authority of the minister to pay the amount from the appropriation for schools for the Northwest Territories.

Respectfully submitted,
(Sgd.) FRED WHITE,
Commissioner.

Approved,
(Sgd.) F. Oliver,
21st June, 1907.

That, so far as I understand, is the only provision (and it is a provision entirely of a temporary nature) made by the late administration with respect to schools in these territories up to the time we came into power.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it must be apparent to you under those circumstances, that so far as these statutory provisions respecting separate schools in the northwest are concerned, they were absolutely inoperative, for the reason, in the first place, that no members of the Council had been appointed so as to create a body known as the Commissioner's Council, and in the next place, because the commission had not been authorized—even though councillors had been appointed—to make any laws or ordinances whatsoever with respect to the establishment of schools in these territories. The situation when we came into power was this: that for three years there had been upon the records of this parliament, resolutions declaring that the boundaries of Manitoba, of Ontario, and of Quebec, ought to be enlarged according to certain defined limits which were expressed in these resolutions. What was our duty under the circumstances? We know very well indeed that a great deal of negotiation had gone on between the government of Manitoba and the late Liberal administration with regard to the enlargement of the boundaries of that province, and, there are those of us who are free to believe that the delays with respect to all these provinces were due to a certain peculiar policy of the Liberal government in connection with the extension of the boundaries of Manitoba. When we came to power, we conceived it to be our duty to carry out that policy which parliament had declared in 1908, and we proceeded to carry it out. I ask any hon. gentleman in this House whether or not it would have been a reasonable thing for this government—after that matter had stood for nearly four years without the appointment of any council, without authority to the commissioner to put into force these provisions respecting education—I ask whether or not it would have been a reasonable thing for us to undertake to do that without which these Northwest Territories had got on very well for three and-a-half years at least. And, to do that, remember, on the very eve of carrying out a proposal to which parliament had given its unanimous acceptance on the 13th of July, 1908. Why, Mr. Speaker, I think it would have been the very worst thing we could have done in the interests of all concerned if this government had seen fit, on the eve of enlarging the boundaries of Manitoba, to take any such step as that which has been suggested. I come from a province where separate schools do not exist by reason of any statutory provisions; I come from the province of Nova Scotia, and I would like to tell my hon. friends in this House from the province of Quebec and from every other province in Canada, that although there are no provisions in that province establishing separate schools for Catholics as a matter of right, the relations between Protestants and Catholics in the province are, I believe, at least as cordial and as friendly as they are in any province of Canada, and I do not believe that the Catholics in the province of Nova Scotia have anything to complain of in respect of the treatment which they receive from their Protestant brethren. I believe they are fairly, and justly and honourably treated, and I think I can appeal to my Roman Catholic friends from the province of Nova Scotia to bear witness to the accuracy of what I now state.

What are the arguments of the right hon. leader of the opposition in 1896? That this matter had better be left to the people of Manitoba; and, following the advent of his party to power, certain negotiations were carried on between his government and the government of Manitoba. I am not disposed to-day to enter into a consideration of how far the agreement arrived at, was or was not satisfactory; but I do say that the Roman Catholics of the province of Manitoba constitute a larger proportion of the people of that province, than the Roman Catholics of this Dominion constitute of the population of the Dominion as a whole; and we cannot for a moment, suppose that the influence of the Roman Catholics in the province of Manitoba in the advocacy of what they consider to be their just rights and for the redress of any grievances from which they suffer will be any less powerful than it would be in relation to the enactment of ordinances under the provisions of the Northwest Territories Act, chapter 62, of the Revised Statutes of Canada. I trust that I make myself perfectly clear. The Roman Catholics of the province of Manitoba are in a minority in that province; but they are a more powerful minority in the province of Manitoba than the Roman Catholics, as a whole, are in this whole Dominion, and I have absolutely no doubt that the majority of the people of Manitoba will be disposed to deal fairly, honourably and generously with them, just as the people of the province of Nova Scotia, without any statutory provision whatever, have dealt fairly, honourably and generously with the Roman Catholics of that province.

Then a suggestion has been made that it would be desirable for the parliament of Canada, in enacting this measure, to attempt to place restrictions upon the legislative authority of the legislature of Manitoba in respect of the territory proposed to be added. In the territory there are at the present time, not more than 165 white people, 400 or 500 half-breeds, and the balance of the population are Indians. Now, a proposal to place any such restriction upon Manitoba would seem to me to be an impossible one, for two reasons. In the first place, I do not believe that it is politically possible, because I do not believe that Manitoba would accept the extension of her boundaries coupled with any such restriction. In the next place, I do not think it is constitutionally possible. I would like to point out to hon. members, to whose attention this may not have been brought, that the provisions of the British North America Act, of 1871, with regard to the constitution of a province in the first instance, are very different from those contained in the clause of the same Act, providing for the alteration of the boundaries of a province. Section 2 of that Act is as follows:

The parliament of Canada may from time to time establish new provinces in any territories forming for the time being part of the Dominion of Canada but not included in any province thereof, and may, at the time of such establishment, make provision for the constitution and administration of any such province, and for the passing of laws for the peace, order and good government of such province and for its representation in the said parliament.

But when we come to the third section of that statute, we find that the language with regard to increasing the area of a province, is in very different terms. It is as follows:

The parliament of Canada may from time to time, with the consent of the legislature of any province of the said Dominion, increase, diminish, or otherwise alter the limits of such province, upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed to by the said legislature, and may, with the like consent, make provision respecting the effect and operation of any such increase or diminution or alteration of territory in relation to any province affected thereby.

We have in the one section direct authority for this parliament to determine the constitution of a province. In the other section we have not any such thing, and it seems to me absolutely impossible to conceive that you can have a province in Canada, such as Manitoba would be after this Bill had passed, which would be governed as to one part of it by one constitutional provision in respect of education, and in another part of it, by another constitutional provision in respect of education. I do not believe that the British North America Act of 1871 contemplated any such thing. To my mind, it is inconceivable, and I do not find warrant for it in the statute. It is inconceivable that you could have one constitutional limitation in old Manitoba and another constitutional limitation in the part of Manitoba which we now propose to add. But whether I am right or wrong in believing that that is constitutionally impracticable, I am absolutely certain that it is politically impracticable; and I venture to say that the people of Manitoba, imbued as they are with a big, broad, generous spirit, would be inclined to deal with their fellow countrymen who may be of a different faith in the same broad-minded and generous spirit as that which has been evinced in other provinces of Canada where no constitutional provisions of this kind exist. So, Mr. Speaker, I venture to say that this Bill which we have submitted to the parliament of Canada is along the right lines—along the lines of observing the constitution of Canada as it is embodied in the British North America Act, of 1867, and in the British North America Act of 1871. My hon. friend the Postmaster General last evening cited competent authorities for the position that in so far as any rights do exist in the territory which we propose to add to the province of Manitoba, those will remain to be dealt with by the parliament of Canada in so far as such matters appertain to the parliament of Canada or by the legislature of the province of Manitoba in so far as they appertain to the legislature of the province of Manitoba. I venture to think that the course which the government has taken in that regard is one in the best interests of all concerned, and will commend itself, not only to the majority of this parliament, but to the majority of the people of Canada as well.

House divided on motion for second reading of the Bill.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

On section 4, financial terms,

Mr. PUGSLEY. I beg to move the following amendment to subsection 1 of section 4:

That subsection 1 of section 4 be struck out, and the following substituted therefor:

4. Inasmuch as the province was not in debt at the time that the province was established, it shall be entitled to be paid and to receive from the government of Canada by half-yearly payments, in advance, on the first days of January and July in each year, an annual sum not exceeding $381,584.19, being the equivalent of interest at the rate of five per cent per annum on the sum of $7,631,683,-85, the difference between a principal sum of $8,107,500 and $475,816.15 heretofore advanced by the government to the province for provincial purposes; and such amount shall be fixed and determined by the Governor in Council after the holding of a conference by the federal government with the premiers of the different provinces of Canada in respect thereto, and also in respect to any increases in the debt allowance which it would be just and equitable to make to the other provinces of Canada in connection with the increase of the debt allowance to the said province of Manitoba.

My hon. friend will see that the amounts are exactly the same as in the section as proposed. The only difference is that the Governor in Council may pay an amount not exceeding this, the amount to be settled after there has been a conference between the federal government and the premiers of the different provinces of Canada called to consider this matter and also to consider what allowance, if any, it would be just and equitable to make to the other provinces of Canada in connection with the increase in the debt allowance to the province of Manitoba.

I think that the idea of a provincial conference to consider and if possible to settle and determine what shall be the subsidies granted to the different provinces of Canada is one which ought to commend itself to every member of this House. We know that a good many years ago there was a conference of the provincial governments held at the city of Quebec in, I think, the year 1886. That conference was not called by the federal government, it was convened at the instance of the two larger provinces and certain resolutions were passed looking to a readjustment of the subsidies from the Dominion to the provinces. Their resolutions were sent to Ottawa, but they were not acted upon and so far as the public records show they were not even considered. In 1906 there was a new departure and the government determined to call the premiers of the different provinces of Canada in conference with a view to considering the various claims that were being made by the provinces upon the Dominion and more especially to consider the question of increasing the subsidy allowances to the different provinces. I think that was a move in the interests of the whole Dominion. The different provinces are like a family, they together constitute this nation and I cannot imagine anything more calculated to promote harmony and good will between the different provinces of Canada and to allay dissatisfaction than for the federal government to summon the different provincial governments in conference with a view to talking over matters which are of common interest and to settle any questions that may exist in relation to the financial status of the different provinces. That was the first time in the history of confederation that such a conference was called by the federal government. The act of summoning the conference was received with universal approval by the people of Canada. All the governments of Canada responded to the invitation and the provinces were all represented at that conference. They entered upon their deliberations with a sincere desire to come to conclusions which would be just and equitable to all the provinces and which would be in the general interest of Canada.

I think myself that the government could not take a step more in the interest of the whole people of Canada than to follow the example which was set in 1906, and now summon a conference of the Premiers of the different provinces. To-day we have this spectacle of one province coming to the federal government and claiming that the arrangements which were made twenty-five years ago with that province are at the present time unsatisfactory, and claiming what in effect is an additional subsidy; because, no matter how we may speak of it, there is no doubt that the addition to the debt allowance is an addition to the subsidy of the province. It is in no way connected with the question of ownership of the public domain, it is a question which pertains as much to all the other provinces of Canada as it does to Manitoba. We have also the spectacle to-day of the province of British Columbia coming to this government and appealing for better terms, and we have a proposal on the part of this government, in effect, to leave the claims of that province to arbitration under an arrangement by which this government would appoint one commissioner, the province of British Columbia another commissioner, and these two commissioners appoint a third. Now, it does seem to me that instead of dealing with each province by itself, there ought to be a conference of the Premiers of all the provinces meeting here in Ottawa, who would confer from day to day with the federal government, and who, I am sure, would enter upon that conference with a disposition to deal justly and fairly the one with the other, and to reach conclusions which would be in their nature final, and would give general satisfaction to all the provinces of Canada.

Mr. BLAIN. Has my hon. friend overlooked a statement made by the Prime Minister on the second reading of the Bill, dealing exactly with the question to which he is now referring?

Mr. PUGSLEY. What is that?

Mr. BLAIN. I will read it if the hon. gentleman will permit me. The Prime Minister said on March 4, page 4350:

> And I would like to repeat what I have already said in speaking upon the resolutions in that regard, that when we do come to consider that proposal I think it will be just and necessary to give some consideration to the maritime provinces whose boundaries cannot be enlarged by reason of their natural situation, to call them into our councils and give to them a just voice as to the terms upon which these lands should be handed over, and especially with regard to what compensation, if any, should be given to the three maritime provinces by reason of the transfer of these lands to the governments of Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I had that well in mind, I had not overlooked it at all. But my hon. friend will see that these remarks of my right hon. friend the Prime Minister apply simply to the question of giving compensation to the maritime provinces by reason of handing over at some time in the future, whether the near future or the distant future, the public domain of the three prairie provinces. Now, that may be a long time hence, that cannot be done without some arrangement with these three provinces by themselves. As the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Rogers), admitted when he was addressing the House, when it comes to dealing with that question, it would be for the governments of those provinces to say what amount of money they would return to the federal treasury in exchange for the lands to be handed over to them. That is a matter that can only be dealt with by arrangement with the three provinces. It was stated by the Minister of the Interior that there are a good many people in the prairie provinces who would prefer to have the money instead of the lands, the money which they can use for ordinary purposes of public improvement, and they would prefer to let the Dominion government administer the prairie lands and give them away to the settler free of any charge, as they have been doing in the past. Many people in the prairie provinces believe that instead of making the prairie lands a source of revenue, they should be given away absolutely free to the man who is prepared to come into that country, and make a home for himself and his family. Therefore, it may be many, many years before that question would come up if it is only to come up as suggested by the Prime Minister.

Mr. BARKER. Is the hon. gentleman disposed to leave to the dim and distant future the settlement of all these questions with the provinces by the sea?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, I am not disposed to leave it to the dim and distant future. I say that now, when we are altering the situation of three important provinces of Canada, when we are trebling the area of the province of Manitoba, when we are almost doubling the area, if not quite doubling the area, of the province of Ontario, and when we are almost quadrupling the area of the province of Quebec, when we are altering the financial terms under which the province of Manitoba for 26 years has been in the confederation, I say that now is the time to take up the question as to what, if any, consideration should be given to the maritime provinces.

Now, if ever, is the time to take up the question of what should be done in regard to the representation of the maritime provinces. It does seem to me that those of us who are here representing the maritime provinces can appeal with great force to the representatives of those great, strong and growing provinces of Canada, to give fair and reasonable consideration to the claims of the maritime provinces, not only the financial claims but their claims in respect to representation. My hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) suggests that we should leave it until the time comes to deal with the public domain of the three prairie provinces. Why, Sir, within a year or two at the outside, there ought to be introduced into this parliament a redistribution Bill. Under that Bill, unless some provision is made with regard to the representation of the maritime provinces, these three small provinces by the sea will lose five representatives; the province of Nova Scotia will lose two, New Brunswick will lose two, and Prince Edward Island will lose one. That small province of Prince Edward Island, small though it may be, is yet a province composed of men the equal of any of the people of Canada, that province which, when solicited to join the union, declined to enter unless it was assured of a representation of six members, a representation which the people of Prince Edward Island were led to believe would never be reduced; that province today will find, as a result of the redistribution which must before long be passed through this parliament, her representation in the House of Commons reduced by one-half the representation which it was stipulated she should be allowed by the Act when she entered confederation. Now in New Brunswick we shall find as a result of the redistribution that our representation will be reduced to eleven, and that of Nova Scotia will be reduced to sixteen. I say, therefore, that now is the time, when we are dealing with these important constitutional questions, to take up this matter and endeavour to settle it. We know that the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia have asked for a conference of the Premiers of the different provinces for the purpose of considering this question of representation.

They all feel in the strongest possible manner that that question ought to be dealt with at a conference of the provinces. Would it not be entirely opportune, that, in connection with the financial question and in connection with the extension of the boundaries this question of representation should be taken up? It will not delay this measure very long. It would only mean that it would stand over until the next session of Parliament. A conference could be called very soon after Parliament rises, representatives of the provinces could easily be got together and all these important matters could be gone into by the premiers of the different provinces in consultation with the federal government. I have sufficient confidence in the good judgment and in the spirit of generosity of the various provincial governments to believe that they will consent to an arrangement which will give—and this is all we ask—to the lower provinces that representation that we had when we entered into the union, all we ask is that our representation should not be reduced below what it was when these provinces entered the confederacy. We do not ask for any increase. We are willing to let our rights to an increase depend on an increase in population. In saying that I speak, not for Liberals, not for Conservatives, but for the whole people of New Brunswick and I believe I speak the united voice of the whole people of the maritime provinces, when I plead—I suppose I cannot demand, because the older provinces have the right, perhaps on their side, to stand by the strict terms of the Act of Union—for fair play in the proper sense of the word. I plead for doing away with the injustice from which we are suffering and for removing many of the disadvantages which are pressing upon our people. I desire to express my most sincere thanks to my hon. friend who sits on my right (Mr. Lemieux) who, this afternoon, in a true spirit of generosity, in a spirit which makes for the advantage of the whole people of Canada, said that he would welcome the day when justice would be done to the maritime provinces with respect to its representation and when an Act would be passed which would prevent its suffering any loss in representation. Let me appeal to my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Hazen). I have heard him before on this question and I have heard him speak in eloquent terms of the injustice from which the maritime provinces have been suffering and the great necessity of doing something to take away this injustice and the certainty of continued loss in representation. Let me ask him whether he has taken the question up with his colleagues and, if he has, if he entertains the same view to-day which he entertained when he was a member of the provincial legislature. Let me ask him if he can conceive of any better time than now to take up this question of the representation of the maritime provinces, if he can conceive any better time for its consideration by a conference of the provinces when they might be summoned, as they could be summoned now, if this measure stands over, to consider all these questions, to consider how the enlargement of the territories of three great provinces of Canada affects the smaller provinces, to consider how the alteration in the financial terms affects the smaller provinces, and to consider whether or not in its material aspects the alteration of the constitutions of these three provinces affects the question of representation and ought now to be dealt with. In my humble judgment there never was a time in the past so appropriate as now to take up this question of representation and there never will be a time so opportune in the future as is the present occasion for taking up the subject and dealing with it.

My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Rogers) sought to justify this special dealing with the province of Manitoba by the statement that all the members of the Interprovincial Conference approved of these claims on the part of Manitoba, and he said that Manitoba had no greater friend at that conference than myself. Well, Mr. Chairman, I have always, I am proud to be able to say, been a friend of Manitoba. I was one of the pioneers of Manitoba. My hon. friend speaks of the pioneers, and my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. White) speaks of the pathfinders. When I went to Manitoba there were many pathfinders, but of later years, and I believe since the time when the hon. Minister of the Interior went into Manitoba, the hardships have all passed away and there is no pleasanter place in which to live than Manitoba. The people suffer no more hardships there than they do in the other provinces of Canada. Manitoba is an exceedingly prosperous province. But while I was then a friend of Manitoba and desirous of doing justice to that province as one member of the Interprovincial Conference, yet I beg to differ from my hon. friend and to say to the committee that the records show, if I read the records aright, that my hon. friend is entirely mistaken when he says that the members of the Interprovincial Conference approved of these claims of Manitoba. I can prove what I say by the record. If the members of the committee will take up the sessional papers of 1907 they will find a full report of the proceedings of the Interprovincial Conference. I refer them specially to sessional paper 29a.

Report of proceedings in conference between members of the government of Canada and of the various provincial governments assembled at Ottawa, October, 1906:

At that conference the first and principle question which was dealt with was an increase in the subsidies to the various provinces, and if hon. gentlemen will look at the return they will find, upon the fourth page 'Resolutions of the Conference,' dealing with this subject of an increase in subsidies. My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior has endeavoured to make the committee believe that, while these resolutions were agreed to, yet, at the same time, the members of the conference approved of the special claims which the province of Manitoba was making. I say they did not, and I speak as a member of the conference, not only from my recollection but from the record as contained in that return which was brought down to parliament. This is what the conference resolved:

Therefore it is unanimously resolved that the subject matter of the resolutions adopted by the conference of the representatives of the several provinces held at Quebec, in December 1902 and which was shortly thereafter presented to the government of the Dominion and which were ratified by the legislature of the then existing provinces except that of British Columbia, be now pressed upon the government of the Dominion for immediate and favourable action, under reserve of the right of any province to now submit to such government, memoranda in writing concerning any claims it may have to larger sums than those set out in the said resolutions, or to additional consideration or recognition.

My hon. friend did not give that weight to the word 'now' which the conference intended should be given to it and which must necessarily be given to it. What the members of the conference did was, first, to pass a resolution in regard to a general increase of subsidies amongst the different provinces. Then they said: We are prepared to consider the special case of any province and we reserve to the government of any province the right to now submit a memorandum of any special claims which they may have. The province of British Columbia did submit its claim for additional consideration. That memorandum applied as well to the province of British Columbia as to the province of Manitoba and to every other province in the Dominion. British Columbia, as I have said, submitted its claim and what did we do with it? The conference unanimously rejected it, and the two representatives from the province of Manitoba, Mr. Roblin and Mr. Campbell, joined in an unanimous recommendation that the claims of British Columbia should not be conceded. That is the way in which the conference dealt with that special claim—a claim in respect to which these reasons apply just as much as they do to the claim of the province of Manitoba. The conference rejected, as I have said, the claim of British Columbia, but, in view of the exceptional conditions in that province, in view of its being a mountainous country and road-making being exceedingly expensive, and in view of other considerations which were put forward in the memorandum and which will be found in this return, the conference recommended that the Dominion should give to the province of British Columbia an additional allowance of $100,000 per year for a period of ten years.

Mr. BORDEN. I do not quite understand how these matters are settled by the conference; do they vote by provinces or by individual membership?

Mr. PUGSLEY. They voted by individual membership, but I may say that they were unanimous.

Mr. BORDEN. Was the membership for each province restricted.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, the representatives for Ontario were Sir J. P. Whitney, Mr. Foy, and Mr. Matheson; for Quebec, Sir Lomer Gouin, Mr. Turgeon and Mr. Weir; for Nova Scotia, Mr. Murray and Mr. Drysdale; for New Brunswick, Mr. Tweedie and Mr. Pugsley; for Prince Edward Island, Mr. Peters and Mr. George E. Hughes; for Manitoba, Mr. Roblin and Mr. Campbell; for British Columbia, Mr. McBride; for Saskatchewan, Mr. Walter Scott and Mr. Calder; for Alberta, Mr. Rutherford and Mr. Cross. For each of the larger provinces there were three representatives and from the other provinces two representatives each, except British Columbia which had one representative in the person of the Prime Minister. So far as I remember the resolutions at the conference were passed unanimously. In order to show that the conference had no thought of approving of any additional claims of the province of Manitoba I find in the return a memorandum which was submitted by Sir J. P. Whitney, the Hon. J. J. Foy, and the Hon. A. J. Matheson, in which there is this language:

> We urge that in the future no special grant at any rate should be made to any one province. We repeat that in our opinion an agreement which will render impossible periodical applications for the rearrangement of the subsidy is feasible and should be determined upon. It is possible that such an arrangement might be fixed and positive and at the same time elastic, working automatically so as to speak as the Dominion census from time to time would determine.

There you have a strong protest on the part of the representatives from Ontario, which protest was concurred in by the members of the conference against in the future making any special grant to any one province. And, so I say, at that conference it was intended to deal with the various claims that were submitted and to make a finality of them so far as the conference could do. The conference was of the opinion expressed by Messrs. Whitney, Foy and Matheson that in future there should be no special grant to any one province.

Mr. BORDEN. Did the conference come to any resolution on that question?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, not so far as the returns show. The only exception from that was with respect to British Columbia where they thought that owing to special circumstances they should recommend an additional allowance of $100,000 a year for ten years. My recollection is that the representatives of Manitoba with the representatives of the other provinces, felt that the Dominion was dealing generously at that time with the different provinces, but at all events the special claim of Manitoba was not further mentioned at the conference, and we were not called upon to deal with it. The conference having agreed upon the general resolution as to the increase in subsidy then reserved the right to any province to, at that time, not in the future, submit its claims to the government so that the conference might deal with them. In response to that invitation the province of British Columbia did submit its claim which was dealt with by the conference in the manner I have described, but the province of Manitoba did not respond to the invitation and did not present any other claim, and I was under the impression that the representatives of Manitoba went home perfectly satisfied that they had received the same generous treatment which the other provinces had received in connection with the adjustment of the subsidies. I do not know that it would be of any advantage to take up the time of the committee in urging that there is no fair ground whatever for now dealing specially with the one province of Manitoba any more than there is for dealing with any other province of the Dominion which might be picked out. Reference has already been made to the fact that it is now proposed to arbitrarily give to the province of Manitoba a sum of about $32 a head upon a population of about 250,000. Why not make it the actual population of 450,000? In the case of British Columbia it was fixed on a population of 60,000, and although British Columbia to-day has a population of about 350,000, I am not aware that it has received any increase other than the general increase which was made in 1884. The government fixed upon a population of 250,000 for Manitoba, because they say that parliament in 1905 made a debt allowance based upon a population of 250,000 for the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. But, you ignore British Columbia, you ignore Ontario, you ignore Quebec, you ignore Nova Scotia, and simply because in 1905 when two new provinces were being created, these provinces were given an estimated population of about 250,000, you say it is right to do the same thing now in respect to an old province which has been forty years a member of the confederacy. The government ignores absolutely the fact that this eight million dollars which it is proposed to give to the province of Manitoba does not represent one single dollar of expenditure made before Manitoba became a member of the confederacy.

They admit that Manitoba had no debt when she became a part of the union. They ignore the fact that every dollar of the debt allowances of Ontario and Quebec, if I remember rightly, represented money of the people of the old province of Canada which had been paid out for the construction of public works which were handed over to the Dominion, and which form to-day a most valuable asset of the Dominion, such as the great system of canals which are essential factors in the system of national transportation, and in respect of which those provinces did not receive one dollar of interest, because that allowance simply goes to pay the interest on the debt which they incurred before confederation, in order to construct public works which are for the general advantage of Canada. They ignore altogether the fact that the larger part of the debt allowances for the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick was incurred in respect of works of a national character which passed over to the Dominion, works which, if those provinces had not constructed them before confederation, such as custom houses, post offices, railways, harbour works and lighthouses, would have had to be constructed and paid for by the whole people of Canada. Hon. gentlemen ignore these facts altogether, and treat the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia in this light and cavalier manner, just as if they had no claim for consideration in a readjustment of the debt allowance of a province. The hon. gentleman said that there was a precedent for this. What was the precedent he cited? He cited the case of the province of Nova Scotia in 1869, when an increase was made to the debt allowance of that province. The members of the government of that day most of whom had taken part in drawing up the compact of confederation, said: We recognize that this is something which ought not to be done except in a case of the gravest possible necessity. But they admitted that a mistake had been made in respect of Nova Scotia. Nova Scotia's debt allowance was based on what was assumed to be her actual expenditure on public works up to the time of the Quebec conference; but between that time and the time of her coming into the union, she had expended $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 in extending her railway system; and it was agreed that because of that mistake, parliament ought to interfere and put her in the position in which she would have been placed if that mistake had not taken place. Sir Charles Tupper, then Dr. Tupper, made a strong argument in favour of rectifying the mistake, and showed how it had occurred. This has been done also in the case of Manitoba, under circumstances which were explained during the debate on the motion for the second reading of the Bill.

Mr. BORDEN. I understand that the government of which the hon. gentleman was a member made an offer of certain financial terms to Manitoba?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN. Was there any conference before that was done?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Those terms were simply based upon the necessities which would arise by reason of the addition of territory.

Mr. BORDEN. Why were not the other provinces entitled to be heard?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am prepared to admit that they ought to have been heard, but we cannot always have our own way. My right hon. friend who leads the opposition will remember that I urged almost from the day I came into the government that some steps should be taken to secure the representation of the maritime provinces at the numbers at which it stood at the time of confederation. I did not succeed at that time, but I had a great hope of succeeding when the time came for dealing fully with this question of boundaries. The time had not arrived when the late government was in power, although my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition went a considerable distance in that direction when a resolution was passed to enlarge the boundaries of the province of Quebec, and a clause with his approval was added providing that the increased territory should in no way affect the representation of the other provinces; in other words, that, in estimating the 65 members who form the pivot upon which the representation turns, the added territory should not be taken into account at all. That was quite a step forward, and I had certainly strong hope that when we came to deal effectually with the matter, the claims of the maritime provinces with regard to representation would be recognized. A short time ago, I think in the discussion on the address in reply to the speech from the Throne, my hon. friend from Queens, P.E.I. (Mr. McLean), took strong ground that something ought to be done. Is his voice to be heard now, or is he going to allow this Bill to pass without raising a protest on behalf of the province from which he comes, and which is suffering so much by reason of loss of representation? We heard at the same time from my hon. friend from Kings and Albert (Mr. Fowler), who, I regret, from circumstances over which he has no control, is not able to be here to-night; and I had hoped that he also would raise his voice against the continuance of the present condition of affairs with respect to the representation of the maritime provinces. There is nothing more that I can say; the facts are plain. With respect to the province of New Brunswick, the Dominion of Canada has an asset which cost that province upwards of $5,000,000, and which to-day is yielding a revenue to this country. That is charged as a part of the debt account, and New Brunswick is not receiving one cent of interest in respect of that indebtedness. All that the Dominion has done has been to pay the interest on the indebtedness incurred in the construction of that revenue-producing property. In respect to Manitoba, hon. gentlemen propose to-day to fix arbitrarily $8,000,000 as her allowance, and to grant her on this account $400,000 yearly out of the Dominion treasury. I may be unduly prejudiced as representing one of the smaller provinces down by the sea, but it does seem to me that there are claims in respect of those provinces—financial claims and claims in respect to altering the basis of representation—which ought to be considered. If my right hon. friend passes all the legislation now proposed, and leaves unsettled these questions, which are believed by the people of the maritime provinces to be vital to their future, he is going to have great difficulty in dealing with them in the future.

As I have said now is the time, when we are dealing with these important constitutional questions, to call together the government of the different provinces of Canada to a conference, confer with them, let them meet with each other—the representatives of all parts of Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific—let them confer together, in conjunction with the members of the federal government, and I am sure they will bring to bear their best intelligence, bring to bear their mutual desire to make an arrangement which will promote peace and harmony among all the people of Canada. If that is done I have every confidence that they will work out a plan which will be satisfactory to all the provinces, and which will be satisfactory to this parliament and to the government of Canada.

Mr. HUGHES (Kings County, P.E.I.) I have very great pleasure indeed in seconding the motion which has been made by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley), and I agree with every statement he has presented to the committee. I think that I can make some other statements that will appeal to the fairness of this committee, particularly with regard to the province of Prince Edward Island. I am bound to say that there are many features of this Bill which appeal to me as being fair and reasonable. The statements made on behalf of the government that, in the preparation of this Bill and in the giving of financial terms to the province of Manitoba they desired to put that province on a footing of equality, so far as regards financial terms with the sister provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan, appeal to me. That desire appears to me, so far as I understand it, to be fair and reasonable provided you do no injustice to any of the other provinces in the making of that arrangement. Sir, I look upon the confederation as a partnership, a partnership of nine members. Every one of these members has a private business of his own which he is carrying on, and if you take from the partnership funds a large sum of money and give it to any one of the partners for the purpose of his own private business you necessarily, to that extent, do some injustice to all the other partners unless they receive compensation in some other way. Sir, unless this confederation, this partnership, is carried on by the application of principle of the strictest justice it would appear to me that it cannot be carried on at all satisfactorily, that you are introducing a system that sooner or later will have very dangerous results. Now, while the granting to Manitoba of additional territory so that its area will be practically the same as that of the sister provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta appeals to me, and while I think that by placing all these prairie provinces on a similar financial basis you are not going far astray, at the same time to date these payments to Manitoba back to 1908 appears to me to be quite unjustifiable. That is the feature of this Bill that I cannot understand and cannot see the justice of. I want to consider the case of Prince Edward Island and to refer to the special conditions connected with that province. Prince Edward Island never had any Crown lands or mines or minerals, and in that respect she stands exactly on the same footing as the three prairie provinces. Therefore, I think that when large additions have been made to the finanical resources of Manitoba, that the position of Prince Edward Island ought to be specially considered. We will take up one item in this Bill, which I think will prove that a very great injustice will be done to the province of Prince Edward Island unless this special provision is taken into consideration. I refer now to the sum that is to be paid to the province of Manitoba in lieu of the public lands. The sum of $562,500, based upon the population, is to be given to Manitoba in lieu of public lands, and that sum is to be increased from time to time. That payment amounts to practically—as near as I can figure it out—$1.25 per head of the population of Manitoba at the present time. When Prince Edward Island came into confederation her allowance because of the fact that she had no public lands was $45,000, which amounts to less than 50 cents per head of her population. If we want to be fair to the province of Prince Edward Island we must I think—and in this matter I appeal to every member of this committee—increase the allowance to that province to make it correspond with the payment which we are now giving to Manitoba. Prince Edward Island, therefore ought to receive $1.25 per head of her population by reason of having no public lands, mines or minerals. That would be an addition of $75,000 to her present subsidy. Furthermore, if you pay these subsidies to the province of Manitoba from the year 1908, by every reason of justice and fair play you ought to likewise pay this additional subsidy to the province of Prince Edward Island from that year.

Mr. MACDONALD. Hear, hear.

Mr. HUGHES (Kings, P.E.I.). This would give her arrears of $300,000. It seems to me that that is a fair and businesslike statement which ought to appeal to the fairness and justice of the Minister of Finance. I might also state, as it has been referred to by the member for St. John, that when the older provinces came into confederation they brought in with them their public works for which they had paid. The same thing applies to the province of Prince Edward Island. We built our own railway in Prince Edward Island before we came into confederation and paid for it, and the cost of that railway was charged to us in the allowance that was given to us at the time of confederation. At the time of our entry into confederation the debt of Canada was $49.40 per head of the population, and Prince Edward Island was given a debt allowance of $50 per head of the population. That was charged to her, and the province was also charged with every dollar expended on public works and we have since that time paid the interest on our debt, which includes the cost of building the railway, and our share of the debt of the Dominion of Canada. That is a fair arrangement, and I have no fault to find with it, but it has been sometimes said to me, and the view is held even by some members of this House, that the Dominion of Canada built the railway on Prince Edward Island and presented it to the province as a gift. Nothing of the kind. We came in under exactly the same conditions as the other provinces of Canada.

A word with regard to representation. That is a question of very great importance to the smaller provinces of this Dominion. Some few years ago, when I had the honour of a seat in this House, I brought that question each year to the attention of the House and was glad to find that each time it was received with better attention and received greater support and when in 1907 I moved a resolution asking that an address be presented to His Majesty praying that he would submit a measure to the imperial parliament changing the British North America Act to the exent that none of the three Atlantic provinces in the Dominion of Canada should have fewer representatives than it had at the time it entered confederation, my resolution receive very generous support from hon. gentlemen opposite, including the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Borden), the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain), the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Lalor), the hon. member for the Niagara District

(Mr. Lancaster), and I think the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. Stanfield).

Mr. STANFIELD. I moved a motion of that kind and the government turned it down.

Mr. HUGHES (Kings, P.E.I.). They have a provision of that kind in the constitution of Australia, and British Columbia secured such a condition under the terms of her entrance into the confederation. The time has surely come when the government of this country should seriously consider this problem in relation to the maritime provinces. I want the Minister of Finance to consider what I have said with reference to the financial terms in regard to the position of Prince Edward Island. It appears to me that the case need only be stated for its justice to be apparent, and that the claim of Prince Edward Island for treatment similar to that now being given to Manitoba is insuperable. I feel sure that the members of the government will not see injustice done to any province, particularly to any of the smaller provinces, and it must be remembered that Prince Edward Island stands in exactly the same position, as far as public lands go, as Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. I submit this matter with all confidence to the consideration of the government and hope that they will deal with it. For that reason I have seconded the motion made by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley).

Mr. HAZEN. My hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Pugsley) made some remarks with reference to the representation of the maritime provinces in the parliament of Canada, having regard to the fact that after each decennial census for some decades there has been a decrease in the representation of those provinces. The hon. gentleman made a direct reference to myself and stated that he had heard me in the past speaking in very strong language as to the injustice that was being done to the lower provinces in consequence of their losing representation because of the fact that the population in the lower provinces was not increasing as rapidly as that of the other provinces in confederation.

Therefore, under the terms under which we entered the confederation in 1867, we were losing representation, as we were not holding our own proportionately with the population of the province of Quebec. My hon. friend asked me if I still entertained the same views on that question which I entertained at the time to which he referred, which was a time when my hon. friend and myself both occupied seats in the local legislature of the province of New Brunswick, and in which, on several occasions, this question of the loss of representation was discussed. I would say to my hon. friend that I still hold precisely the same views that I held when I was a member of the legislature of the province of New Brunswick. I think it is a most desirable thing, and an act of simple justice, that some effective action should be taken under which there should be provided at least an irreducible minimum so far as the representation of the maritime provinces of Canada is concerned. My hon. friend brought the matter to the attention of the New Brunswick legislature on several occasions when he was a member of a government of that province. On one occasion he made the contention that if a case was properly submitted to the highest court in the empire he believed that court would hold that the proper interpretation of the word 'Canada' in the British North America Act, in the clauses concerning representation of the various provinces, was that Canada consisted of the four original provinces of the confederacy, and that as a result of such an interpretation we would not lose any part of our representation, and that what we had lost would be restored to us. My hon. friend then Attorney General of the province of New Brunswick, carried the matter first to the Supreme Court of Canada, and afterwards to the Privy Council; but the Privy Council failed to uphold the contention of my hon. friend, I regret to say. His contention was that the word 'Canada' mentioned in the British North America Act, was the Canada consisting of the four original provinces of the confederacy; that contention was dismissed by the Privy Council, and it was held that the loss of representation which we had sustained was justified under the British North America Act. Now, my hon. friend has referred to the fact that it is a matter of great regret to us in the lower provinces that this is the case. It is indeed a matter of great regret to us, irrespective of party. The provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick were two of the original provinces of the confederacy, whose consent made it possible to bring about the union, and which at that time did not anticipate the tremendous growth and expansion of the west, and it is, I say, a matter of regret to us that our representation after every census has been reduced, and we fear that perhaps that reduction will continue to go on in the future. Now, this question is not a new one in the parliament of Canada. We find that on January 31, 1910, a resolution was moved in this House by the hon. gentleman who then and now, represents the county of Richmond in the province of Nova Scotia (Mr. Kyte). That resolution was in this language:

That in the opinion of this House the maritime provinces of Canada should have preserved to them the representation in the House of Commons that they now enjoy. That in the redistribution of the constituencies to be made after the next decennial census the number of representatives to be returned from the said provinces should not in any case be reduced. And that an humble petition be presented to His Majesty praying that the British North America Act be amended in accordance with the purport of this resolution.

That resolution was debated, and an amendment was moved by an hon. gentleman who at that time, represented the county of Queens, Prince Edward Island, (Mr. Warburton), and it was seconded by Dr. Daniel, then representing the city of St. John. That amendment read as follows:

Each province in the Dominion of Canada should have as a minimum representation in the House of Commons the representation it had upon becoming a province of Canada. That in the redistribution of the constituencies to be made after the next and after every future decennial census, the representation of each province should be not less than that minimum. And that a humble petition be presented to His Majesty praying that the British North America Act be amended in accordance with the purport of this resolution.

The resolution moved by the member for Richmond was to the effect that the representation of the provinces should not fall below the representation which they had at the time this resolution was moved. The amendment of the hon. member for Queens, Prince Edward Island, was to the effect that the representation of none of the provinces of Canada should at any time, fall below what that representation was at the time they entered the union. That amendment was debated in this House, a number of hon. gentlemen took part in the debate, and among others, was my hon. friend from the city of St. John (Mr. Pugsley). I am a little surprised to find, on referring to his speech, that it lacked in large measure, the enthusiasm that we used to hear him express on this subject, when he spoke upon it in the legislature of the province of New Brunswick. Those who heard the extremely strong views which the hon gentleman entertained before he went to the Privy Council, and the even stronger views to which he gave expression after he returned from the Privy Council, when in that legislature, he criticised the judgment, and pointed out wherein he thought it was weak, and maintained that the province had a grievance which called for redress, believed that when the hon. gentleman came here, and became a member of the government of Canada in the year 1907, only a short time would elapse before he would so influence his colleagues in the House and in the government, that some remedial legislation would be introduced to redress the grievances under which he and many of us felt, that we were labouring under in the lower provinces. But we find that the hon. gentleman, so far as the record goes, did not lift his voice or use his great influence in that direction. We find that when the hon. gentleman addressed the House on the resolution moved by the hon. member for Richmond, and the amendment moved by the member for Queens, Prince Edward Island, that enthusiasm which had so marked the hon. gentleman's speeches in the House of Assembly of New Brunswick had practically disappeared, that a change had come over the spirit of the hon. gentleman's dreams, and he no longer talked of the injustice that was being done to the lower provinces. Let me quote some of the remarks of the hon. gentleman on that occasion:

In my opinion the way in which this matter should be presented is rather along the line taken by my hon friend (Mr. Richards) than along that taken by my hon friend from York (Mr. Crocket). My hon. friend from York said that a great injustice was done the maritime provinces, and he claims that these provinces were not here asking for a favour but demanding as a matter of right that a change should be made in the representation.

Mr. CROCKET. If my hon friend will pardon me, I said we were demanding the restoration of a right of which we had been deprived.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I understood the hon gentleman to say, and I think I understood him correctly, that it is not as a matter of favour, but rather as a matter of right that the representation should be restored to what it was. But it seems to me that my hon. friend from Prince (Mr. Richards) has put the matter on the only ground on which it can be put, and that is that it would be a generous thing for the larger provinces to recognize the dissatisfaction existing in the maritime provinces and which is bound to increase as our representation declines. It would be an act of broad generosity for the larger provinces to recognize that fact, to deal in this spirit with the smaller provinces, and to restore the representation to what it was at the time of confederation and below which the people then thought it never would fall.

The reason that I say it cannot be said that an injustice has been done to the lower provinces is that we have no right to complain of what is the interpretation given to the constitution by the highest court of the realm.

It will, therefore, be seen that the hon. gentleman, speaking of the resolution in this House, took a distinctly different ground from the ground which he took in speaking on a similar subject in the legislature of New Brunswick at a time when he was a member of the government of that province. This resolution, as I say, was discussed by a number of members from the different provinces, and all the speeches were distinctly sympathetic. The right hon. the leader of the opposition, then first minister, addressed the House. I have not had time to go through the reports as I did not know the question was coming up to-night, but I did read the report of the debate some years ago, and I believe that every man expressed sympathy with the position that was taken by the lower provinces. The right hon. the leader of the opposition said that the question was one which could not be disposed of by this parliament, that the question of representation had been settled by the British North America Act, that it was a compact entered into by the different provinces, that the question was one which would have to be dealt with by the different provinces, and a conclusion come to by them in regard to the matter, before it could be taken up and dealt with by the government of the Dominion, and before a change could be asked for in the British North America Act. Following that session I had a conference with a gentleman who was at that time the premier of Prince Edward Island, Mr. Hansard, now a judge of the supreme court of that province, and as a result of that we called a meeting in the city of St. John which was attended by representatives of the three lower provinces. The hon. junior member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean), who was at that time attorney general of the province of Nova Scotia, attended as its representative in the absence of the premier, who was unable to be present in consequence of illness. Others who were present were Messrs. Hansard and Palmer of Prince Edward Island, Mr. Warburton, who had made the motion in the House of Commons, Dr. Daniel, and one or two public men in the province of New Brunswick. We fully discussed and considered the whole question, passed a resolution embodying our views, and then got into correspondence with Sir James Whitney and Sir Lomer Gouin, and asked them to call a meeting of the premiers and representatives of the different provinces, so as to consider this question which was of vital importance to us. That conference was held in Toronto in the autumn of 1910. Among the representatives present were the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Rogers), Sir James Whitney, Sir Lomer Gouin and representatives of all the other Canadian provinces with the exception of British Columbia. I presume that British Columbia did not send a representative to the meeting because it did not feel interested in the question to the same extent that the other provinces did, as under the Act, under which British Columbia came into the union, there is an irreducible number fixed below which representation in British Columbia cannot fall no matter how small the population of the province should become. In other words, British Columbia, which came into the union, after the four original provinces, and before Prince Edward Island became part of the confederation, had inserted in the Act determining the terms of union a provision that under all circumstances its representation should be fixed at six, and that it should not fall below six; so that if the population of the province should become smaller than it was at the time it entered the union, its representation would still be six members. The conference deliberated in regard to the question very fairly and very candidly. I do not think that I am revealing any secret when I say that there was a very general feeling among the members of the conference that something should be done to meet the case of the maritime provinces so far as their representation was concerned. But when my hon. friend puts forward the statement, as he has done to-night, that the representation of no province should fall below that which it had when it entered the union I am afraid that my hon. friend has not given full consideration to the question. That view was put forward at the conference and at once we found ourselves face to face with this condition of affairs. Under the British North America Act the representation of the pivotal province of Quebec was never to be less than 65 in number. Ontario entered the union with 82 members. The people of Quebec have the expectation that at some day, it may be in the near future or it may be farther away, Quebec will be equal in population to Ontario. That hope and ambition may or may not be realized but see what it would mean if it were realized and there was a clause put in this Act to the effect that the popular representation of the provinces should never fall below what it was originally placed at in 1867 or when the provinces entered the union. It would mean that Quebec would have the same or as large a population as Ontario and yet the representation of Quebec would remain at 65, would not increase at all, while the representation of Ontario would not fall below 82. It looked like an insurmountable objection at first, but there was a very strong disposition among the representatives who came from the west, who came from Ontario, and among the members of the conference generally that some exception ought to be made in the case of the maritime provinces. The conference adjourned without taking action as several of the representatives of the different provinces said that they did not feel like committing their provinces to any course of action on the subject until they had had an opportunity ments and legislatures. The conference adjourned with the understanding that it would be called together at some future date after the census had been taken and before a redistribution had taken place in order that some decision might be come to along the line of doing something, in so far as the maritime provinces are concerned, in the way of fixing an irreducible minimum for their representation. I may say that, from conversations I have had since with the premiers of different provinces and with gentlemen from different parts of Canada who were present at the conference, I do not at all despair of an agreement being come to between the provinces themselves under which an arrangement will be made that will be eminently satisfactory to those of us who come from the lower provinces.

I fully agree with many of the reasons advanced in support of a contention of that sort. At the time of confederation there were only the four provinces. No man in the wildest flights of fancy, could foresee the greatly changed conditions that were going to come over Canada or anticipate the day when there would be thousands and hundreds of thousands of people flowing into the northwestern country, a country little known at that time and a country that was hardly thought to be fit for settlement. The whole condition and complexion of that country has been changed, and had the men who were delegates to the Quebec conference before 1867 anticipated what was in store they never would have agreed to the terms regarding representation that they did agree to when the conditions were entirely different from what they have become since and when no man anticipated that these greatly changed conditions would come about in the course of a few years. We find the other provinces being added to from time to time, an empire almost being added to the province of Quebec; we find provinces carved out of what was then just prairie land in the west belonging to the Hudson's Bay Company, first the province of Manitoba, followed by the two great provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, and we find a large addition made to the province of Ontario. But, situated as we are in the lower provinces, hemmed in on both sides either by the sea, by the state of Maine or the province of Quebec, there is no possibility of an extension of territory and we feel that this territory out of which these other provinces in the west have been carved has been purchased with the money of the Canadian taxpayers, with the money of the people of the lower provinces, with the money of the people of every other part of Canada and that the land belonged equally to us as it did to the other parts of Canada.

Under the physical and geographical conditions that prevail, no part of that domain can come back to us. But we do claim that on account of the tremendous additions made to the west in territory, a share in the burden of purchasing which we cheerfully bore in the general interests of the whole Dominion, and considering that we were among the original provinces of Canada, which made possible the great idea of a united Dominion from ocean to ocean across the northern part of this American continent, we do claim, I say that we are entitled to generous consideration, and especially so in view of the fact that the devolpment of that western country has attracted from our farms, our workshops and our fisheries, so many of our young men, who, had they remained, would have contributed to the wealth and influence of their native province. In view of all these circumstances and the sacrifices we have made, we believe that we should not be put in the humiliating position of having our pride wounded, census after census, by finding that our representation has to be diminished in this House, and that to-day we are not holding nearly as influential a position in the confederacy, so far as to representation in Canada, as we did in its early years. And, while that general statement is true in reference to the lower provinces, there is an even stronger claim on behalf of Prince Edward Island. There is no question to my mind, that history shows that the men who represented Prince Edward Island when the terms of union were brought about in 1871, firmly believed that provision had been made for the minimum number of six members that would represent that province in this House of Commons. That was at the time a larger number than the population of Prince Edward Island would have warranted, and the representatives of the island distinctly understood and so reported to the people what the terms of the arrangement were, that there was an irreducible minimum of six members below which the representation of the island would never fall. The delegates from Prince Edward Island had before them the fact that only the year before, British Columbia, which then had not as large a population as Prince Edward Island had when it entered the union—secured terms under which it was provided that the representation of British Columbia should be six members in this House of Commons and that it should never fall below that number. That privilege having been agreed to in the case of British Columbia, it constitutes to my mind a tremendously strong argument in favour of a similar provision being inserted with regard to the representation of the lower provinces. I have spoken to-night because I think it is important that this question should be kept before this House and because of the direct personal appeal made to me by my colleague from the city of St. John (Mr. Pugsley). I understand that the next conference of provincial premiers will be held during this coming summer, and that correspondence on the subject is already taking place between the Premier of New Brunswick and the other provincial premiers. I understand that Sir James Whitney and Sir Lomer Gouin, who are recognized as the joint chairmen, are willing to call a meeting to consider the matter, and I have every hope an agreement will be come to under which it can be arranged that the representation of the lower provinces shall not fall below what it is at the present time. And, while I entertain my opinion about our representation as strongly as I ever did, yet I do not believe that the proper means of accomplishing the object we have in view is by opposing the present measure which seeks to put Manitoba on a plane of equality with the other western provinces of Canada. So far as that measure is concerned it is intended as a measure of fair-play to the province of Manitoba. No one who looks at the map of the Dominion of Canada can see the position Manitoba occupies in comparison with Alberta and Saskatchewan, so far as the extent of territory is concerned, wihout feeling that a great injustice was done Manitoba. Every fair-minded man must admit it is only just that its boundaries should be extended, so that it may become comparable in that respect to the newer provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. Every one must feel that this injustice should not be continued longer to the old province of Manitoba, that has blazed the way and opened up to civilization that western country which has now become so potent and important a factor in the public life of Canada. The proposal in this legislation is to redress these grievances, and I do not think any man in this House should object to that. I have heard nothing to lead me to suppose that Manitoba is being treated with anything less than fair and generous justice if this Bill becomes law. I do not believe that we of the maritime provinces have anything to gain by setting our face against this measure which is calculated to do justice to the western part of this country. Rather, I think we will advance our interests and the case we have at heart—not only in the matter of representation, but in the future as regards the financial terms—by gaining the goodwill and support of our friends in the west if we accord this measure generous support. Let us treat Manitoba now in the broad spirit in which we ourselves hope to be dealt with when the question comes before parliament (as it will in the not far distant future) of better times for the maritime provinces. We have the assurance of the right hon. the Prime Minister that the question of compensation to which the maritime provinces are entitled will be dealt with when the question of giving over to the western provinces the control of their public lands is brought for consideration before parliament, and we will not have to wait until the dim and distant future to see that happy day. We have the assurance of my right hon. leader that when that time comes the claims of the maritime provinces will be fairly and reasonably considered, and we may then expect that we will be placed in as good a financial position relatively as the other provinces are. I do not concur with the view expressed by my hon. friends opposite that it is desirable now to hamper the present question with the consideration of that compensation to which we are entitled in the lower provinces, or by an expression of opinion regarding the representation of the maritime provinces as to which I believe this House is practically a unit now, and which I sincerely hope will be dealt with effectively at the meeting of the premiers to be held during the coming summer. If it is not dealt with effectively at that meeting, the question will arise as to what attitude may fairly be taken, having regard to the constitution, for the purpose of redressing the undoubted grievances we labour under. Only a few years ago, in 1891, Nova Scotia had twenty-one members, New Brunswick had sixteen members, and Prince Edward Island had six members, but to-day there has been a great reduction and New Brunswick has only thirteen members, Prince Edward Island four, and Nova Scotia eighteen. But while my hon. friend (Mr. Pugsley) is now calling for the redress of these grievances, he overlooks the fact that we lost representation under the census of 1901, and that at that time, while he was not a member of this House, he was an influential supporter of the government of the day. How does it come, that he did not then exert his influence with the government, to have existing conditions remedied?

Nothing was done at that time. We sustained the loss of representation. The census of 1911 shows that we shall sustain a still further loss. But I believe that we from the maritime provinces, uniting on both sides of politics in supporting a claim of this kind, can with confidence appeal to this House regardless of party affiliations, to do what it can to effect a remedy for a state of affairs that so affects our pride, and will affect our status and influence in the future as a part of this confederacy.

Mr. CARVELL. I am afraid that my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries possesses a greater optimism in regard to the sense of fair-play of the parliament of Canada with regard to this matter than the facts of the case warrant. My hon. friend has not been in this House during the last seven or eight years and listened to the discussions on this question by hon. members from all parts of Canada. I have listened to his very pleasant speech with a great deal of interest; but I want to point out to him that a conference of provincial Premiers alone will not settle this vexed question of the rights of the maritime provinces. It will require a conference participated in, not only by provincial Premiers, but by the Premier of the Dominion and the federal parliament before we can arrive at a conclusion. If my hon. friend will take the trouble to go over the debates and votes to which he has referred, I think he will find that not a man from the west of Lake Superior, and very few west of the maritime provinces, voted for the motion of the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Kyte), or for the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Queens, Prince Edward Island (Mr. McLean). There were a few from the province of Ontario; I do not think there was one from the province of Quebec; and the remainder were members from the maritime provinces, regardless of politics. Now, my hon. friend has travelled all around the question, and has given, I think, in a fair manner, the arguments pro and con. It is true, he has tried to show that the attitude of the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley), to-night is not consistent with the statements he made in this House two years ago. But, after all, my hon. friend from St. John was fair in stating the facts as they were in 1910, just as he has stated them to-night. My hon. friend from York (Mr. Crocket), was claiming as a matter of right that our representation should not be reduced below the point at which it exists to-day. My hon. friend from St. John was not claiming that as a matter of right, because he said the Privy Council had decided that as a matter of right our representation must be reduced, and, therefore, the only way in which our present representation could be maintained was as a matter of justice to us by the remainder of the Dominion. We may just as well face this thing as it is. We may as well admit that as a matter of law, on a proper construction of the British North America Act, as settled once for all by the Privy Council, our representation must go down unless our population increases in equal proportion to that of the province of Quebec. There is no use of beating around the bush and saying that we have any legal right in the matter, because we have not. Therefore, we come down to the question: Will the rest of Canada give to us as an equitable right that which we assumed we were safeguarding when we came into the union? I agree with the statement of my hon. friend that if the representatives of the maritime provinces at the Quebec Conference had the faintest idea that our representation would be reduced below what it was as fixed at confederation, they would not have accepted the terms then proposed. But, unfortunately, conditions have changed and our representation has been reduced; and, unfortunately, as the law stands to-day, it will continue to be reduced unless our population increases much more rapidly in the future than it has done in the past. We must have a change in the British North America Act if this reduction is to cease, and how are we going to get that change? My hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries says: 'Let this Bill go through; you will only be injuring your case if you raise an objection now, because you will hear from the rest of the people of Canada if you are not friendly towards them.' My experience is that the best time to get anything from another party is when he wants to get something from you. That may be a sordid way of looking at the matter; but my hon. friend will find that if the province of Manitoba gets her boundaries extended and her money grant increased, and if the province of Ontario gets all the rest of the Northwest Territory lying west of Hudson bay, and if the province of Quebec gets all the remainder of the territory lying east of Hudson bay, all of the available land in Canada will have been divided among all the other provinces, and they will have got the financial arrangements that they want, which are grossly unfair to the maritime provinces, he will be reckoning without his host. He will be leaning on a broken reed if he expects that the other provinces, after they have gained all these advantages, are going to turn around and say: You poor people of the maritime provinces have been badly used; we cannot give you more money or land, but we will give you more representation. I want my hon. friend to consider that before he throws his cards on the table. It may be said that I am taking a sordid view of the situation. I think I am taking a commonsense view, and I want my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, as one of the representatives of the maritime provinces in the government, to look the facts in the face. If we have a conference of all the provinces, and have the matter discussed in parliament before Manitoba gets her boundaries extended, and before Ontario gets hers, and before Quebec gets the rest of the territory, and before they all get improved financial treatment, I think we shall be in a much better position to obtain just treatment for the maritime provinces. Therefore, I think, from the standpoint of the maritime provinces and from the standpoint of common prudence, the members of this House would do well to consider, very carefully, the amendment offered by the hon. member for St. John. I do not know that anything I may say will have any influence with my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries; but I warn him now, and I warn the people of the maritime provinces, that the bait which the leader of this House is holding out to them may be very useless; it may be something that may not be realized for years to come. As I have already pointed out, it is all very well for the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to say, I have faith to believe that this will come in a short time. I know perhaps as much about the feeling on this matter as he does, although I am not a member of the government, and, as I read the political horoscope to-day, the possibility of the three western provinces getting their land is very much farther in the future than it has been at any time in the last ten years; and if the maritime provinces are to be compelled to wait until the land is given to those provinces before they get a readjustment of their financial arrangements, I believe they are doomed to great disappointment before the promised land is reached.

What is true in my statement regarding financial matters, is doubly true regarding my statement as to the question of representation. Therefore, Sir, I say again, it behoves the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who perhaps in one sense ought to be the special representative of the maritime provinces in this case, to look very carefully into this question, and consider it very seriously before he attempts to vote down the amendment proposed by the member for St. John.

Mr. BORDEN. I am not quite able to apprehend the view of my hon. friend who has just taken his seat, that the transfer to the western provinces of their lands is further off to-night than it has been at any time in the past, but I suppose my hon. friend perhaps did not mean it just in that way.

Mr. CARVELL. Pretty nearly.

Mr. BORDEN. You did?

Mr. CARVELL. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN. Then all I have to say is that I do not quite understand the statement. In the first place the resolution which has been moved by the hon. member for St. John does not allude at all to the question of representation, but to the question of financial terms, and the hon. gentleman desires, according to the terms of his proposed amendment, that nothing should be done in respect to placing Manitoba on a basis of equality with Alberta and Saskatchewan until the Premiers of Canada have been called together and held a conference. Well, I am bound to say that I do not exactly see the significance of that. I am not aware that the Premiers of Canada were called together in conference at the time Saskatchewan and Alberta were constituted.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BORDEN. I am not aware that the Premiers of the various provinces of Canada were consulted about the financial terms granted to Alberta and Saskatchewan.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BORDEN. I am not aware that at any one of the many occasions on which individual provinces have had a change for their advantage made in the financial terms which they received from this Dominion, that there has been a conference of the Premiers. The only conference of the Premiers in regard to which any such action was taken, that I can recall, speaking from memory, is the one which has been already alluded to so many times in the course of this debate. Now, the member for St. John says that this measure proposes to ignore all the other provinces. Well, the other provinces are no more ignored now that they were when Alberta and Saskatchewan were constituted. As far as I am aware the moneys proposed to be paid to Alberta and Saskatchewan were to be paid out of the treasury of Canada, and I do not know any other source from which it was proposed to derive them. Therefore, I assume that there should have been just as good reason for consulting the Premiers of the other provinces of Canada then as now, but they were not consulted. No one of the hon. gentlemen who have urged this point with so much insistence had a word to say about calling any conference of the Premiers of the various provinces of Canada at that time. Then I do not exactly understand how the conference of provincial Premiers is to work out this question. Are they to vote by provinces? Are they to vote by the accidental number of representatives who happen to be present from the various provinces? Are they to vote by population, or how are they to vote?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Would it not be fair to have them present at a conference though?

Mr. BORDEN. Would it not be fair to have them there?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Yes, if they are not satisfied, would it not be fair and just to have them at a conference?

Mr. BORDEN. I do not know that there is any great advantage in calling the provincial premiers together in a conference unless we are going to pay some attention to their conclusions. If we are to call them together in a conference, then surely we are to be governed to some extent at least, by their conclusions. Well, suppose the provinces are not unanimous, are we to be governed by the majority, and if so, by what majority? By the majority of population, by the majority of a number of provinces, or by the majority of delegates who happen to be there incidentally to represent any province. That is what I asked the hon. member from St. John.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). The Minister of Marine and Fisheries says the provincial premiers are going to be called for some purpose or another.

Mr. BORDEN. Oh no, he says they have been called together for the purpose of seeing whether or not the provinces of Canada, other than the maritime provinces, would not all come to an agreement that the representation of the maritime provinces should not be decreased below what it is at the present time, and they failed to come to any such agreement. Some of the provinces, I understand, were willing, and some were not willing. At all events no agreement was reached. Suppose a similar result obtains in regard to this matter, what conclusion are we to adopt? Every hon. member knows that in the end the final conclusion in respect to any such matter as this must rest upon the responsibility of the federal government and upon no other responsibility, just as it rested in 1905 upon the responsibility of the government that was then in power. We are doing no more to-day, as I have already stated a great many times, for the enlarged province of Manitoba than was done for the adjoining provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan in 1905. However, my hon. friend from St. John has moved his amendment, and it is understood that matters of a controversial nature were not to be finally dealt with to-night. I would be very glad, therefore, to let the clause stand, and see if we can make any progress with some of the other clauses of the Bill, and resume the discussion upon this clause if that course meets with the approval of the committee to-morrow, or when the Bill is next taken into consideration.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou). I would like to say a word in regard to this matter on behalf of my province, and I must say that I cannot quite grasp the reasoning of the leader of the House when he wanted to indicate that there was no necessity for a conference, that you would not know what to do with that conference if you did get one. Yet my hon. friend two days ago told us that when he comes to hand back the lands to Manitoba and the other provinces, he is going to call a conference of the provincial governments of Canada to consider——

Mr. BORDEN. I beg my hon. friend's pardon, I did not say that.

Mr. MACDONALD. Well, my hon. friend used the expression: We would call them to our counsels.

Mr. BORDEN. I said that we would call the maritime provinces to our counsels whose boundaries could not be extended by reason of their natural situation. I said nothing more.

Mr. MACDONALD. Then my hon. friend when he gets the representatives of the maritime provinces together, is he going to say that Prince Edward Island shall not have as much to say about the matter as Nova Scotia, nor Nova Scotia as New Brunswick, or how are the provinces going to vote?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is another term for a conference.

Mr. BORDEN. I did not say they would vote at all, and I do not propose they shall vote.

Mr. MACDONALD. Then my hon. friend is going to call the representatives of the provinces before him and, when they are here and sitting down at the conference, say to them: 'Although you have been called here I do not intend that there should be anything more than talk indulged in. You cannot come to any unanimous conclusion and you cannot vote on questions with which you are dealing.' I wonder what the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is going to do with the conference that he is going to have this year. Is he going to allow the representatives at that conference to vote?

Mr. HAZEN. The hon. gentleman is wrong. I did not say I was going to have any conference this year.

Mr. MACDONALD. You did not? Then if my hon. friend did not tell us there was going to be a conference of the different provinces of the Dominion to consider the question of representation, I do not know what he did tell us.

Mr. BURNHAM. May I ask whether this conference of the provinces is a Dominion or a provincial matter?

Mr. CARVELL. There is an election coming on in New Brunswick this summer.

Mr. BURNHAM. I see. All right.

Mr. MACDONALD. My hon. friend from Peterborough generally manages to throw some light upon any problem which he undertakes to discuss, but I am bound to say on this occasion he has only succeeded in so clouding up the matter that one hardly knows what he means. Certainly there is going to be some kind of a conference according to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries this year, to consider the question of representation. I would like to know when these gentlemen get together how they are going to be allowed to vote, how their judgment is to find expression. Are they to be allowed to come to any decisions at all, are there any votes to be taken, or what are they going to do?

According to the Prime Minister, you cannot have that kind of a conference because when he has his conference he will not allow anything of that kind. The Prime Minister will see on deliberation, that what the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley), is asking him to do, is to to have a conference before changing the debt allowance of this particular province in order to consult the other provinces on that subject because it is an important one and one on which they have a right to be consulted, and at the same time, he can deal with the question of disposing of the lands if he wants to. The leader of the government says: I am going to give to Manitoba this subsidy and then I will call a conference in regard to another matter. The Minister of Finance when he came to deal with that question pleaded with the leader of the opposition that he should try to be a statesman and not a politician, and my hon. friend set the pace for all the government, in which he was followed by the Minister of the Interior, but he himself was neither a statesman nor a politician, he was a sentimentalist, willing to grant subsidies to pathfinders. That was about the only reason the minister was able to give to the House for this increased debt allowance. Pathfinders should get more money, because they are pathfinders, and a pathfinding province should get more than any other portion of the Dominion. After you have paid off the pathfinders, then we will have a conference to settle that question, after you have disarranged the debt allowance all over Canada and created a disparity and unfairness of treatment of different provinces, we will sit down and talk it over. That seems to be the attitude of the government in this matter.

My hon. friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Hughes) put before us the situation of his province. That province has never had any crown lands, it has had no revenue producing assets of any kind, which are common to all the other provinces of the Dominion. Why should not Prince Edward Island get special treatment in connection with this Bill? It may not be a province peopled with pathfinders, but nevertheless its people are entitled to consideration and consideration now. If we are to have any haste about this thing, if the demand of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Rogers) is so imperious and insistent, that he has to be settled with at once, and all of the other provinces have to wait, Prince Edward Island will have to worry along with $1,028,293.41 a year less than Manitoba. The province from which I have the honour to come, which has 30,000 or 40,000 more population and consequently, more institutions to deal with, will receive under this Bill $738,884.91 per annum less than Manitoba.

Mr. BORDEN. How much more does Saskatchewan receive?

Mr. MACDONALD. My right hon. friend does not want to get away from that proposition and I shall deal with it in a moment. I am saying here, that when the hon. member says to the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) that he would not have a conference until some time in the dim and distant future, that when he called a collection of people together he would not allow them to do anything except to look at him. In the meantime, the other provinces in the Dominion are being treated in this ungenerous way.

Take New Brunswick. Every year from the passing of this Bill that province will receive $42,794.43 less than the province of Manitoba, which has practically the same population. Then why should British Columbia stand and wait? Is the Minister of Interior more powerful than Dick McBride? Is that the position to-day that he can come here and say we must have all we are asking for and we must have it immediately without consultation with anybody and every other province can go hang in the meantime while British Columbia, which is a province of pathfinders and should therefore commend itself to the Finance Minister, will have to struggle along with $756,323.99 per year less than Manitoba, and some time we will call you to our councils, look at you and state what we are going to do about this thing? That is the position to-day, they are handing out to Manitoba this generous gift covering three years of alleged arrears over and above all this disparity that exists in regard to these individual provinces.

The Prime Minister a moment ago wanted to make a comparison with Saskatchewan. Let us look at the problem of how this subsidy should be dealt with. Manitoba as a province of the Dominion has existed since 1870, it took part in all the conferences held with regard to provincial subsidies and, in the meantime, accepted without ever a quiver or complaint in 1906 and 1907, the amount of money which the federal government had voted in accordance with the resolution passed at the conference. Every one who was in the House at the time or who has looked at the debate knows that while there was an aggressive Conservative party in this House from Manitoba no one alleged that Manitoba required or demanded any special treatment, and the Secretary of State sat still and said nothing. The Minister of the Interior yesterday tried to make us believe that the particular claim of his province at that time received special recognition at the hands of the conference. There is not a single line in the whole report to be found in the Sessional Papers that warrants that statement. On the contrary the Premier of Ontario and his colleagues went on record in the strongest possible way in declaring that for the future there should be no special grant of subsidies such as this government proposed to make to Manitoba at this time. Is this confederation a partnership of the different provinces of Canada or is it not? That is the proposition that is at the basis of this whole legislation. One would think to hear these gentlemen talk about these matters that the history of Canada is about written and that our future was not a matter to be considered at all. The only way in which such questions as the extension of boundaries can be fairly solved is the way in which the fathers of confederation did it, when they sat in council at Charlottetown and Quebec and considered the relative positions of each province, what the debt allowance should be and what considerations were peculiar to each province and then attempted to settle the matter fairly. That is what they did in 1906-7, and when under the late government the proportionate amounts to be paid to each province were reconsidered they all met here and dealt with the matter. When my hon. friends come to pick out one province which was to enter confederation after 1867, and to deal with it, they did not attempt to defend the proposition except to say that they were dealing with the matter on a basis of federal readjustment. They come along and say, oh this is a province of pathfinders. The same thing was done when the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan were originated, and now they say that for that and no other reasons you must increase the debt allowance, and make these extra grants to the province of Manitoba. When this question of subsidies was before the House of Commons in 1906-7 the financial critic of the opposition who is now the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster) told the House how these things should be dealt with. I ventured to ask the Minister of Finance on the first reading of this Bill whether he had looked at this question from that standpoint, and he told us he was not responsible for the individual views of his colleagues. I think my hon. friend the new Minister of Finance could have gone to school to the Minister of Trade and Commerce in regard to these questions.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). My hon. friend asked me what was the debt of Manitoba to-day. There is no assumption by the Dominion of the debt of Manitoba to-day, and therefore it does not enter into the consideration of this question.

Mr. MACDONALD. Unfortunately for my hon. friend, the Minister of Trade and Commerce did, in 1906-7, lay that down as one of the essential things that should be taken into consideration.

Mr. WHITE (Leeds). I am satisfied that he did not intend it in that sense at all, because it is not relevant unless the Dominion assumes the debt.

Mr. MACDONALD. I invite my hon. friend to turn up 'Hansard' of that year where he will find what the Minister of Trade and Commerce said upon that question. He discussed very fully the resolutions which were then brought before the House by the then Minister of Finance, asking that the resolutions which had been agreed upon by the provinces should be adopted by the House. The present Minister of Trade and Commerce laid down a great many rules which should be followed, and I will take them up. First he said that before the federal government dealt with this question of subsidies they should consider what are the available sources of revenue of a province, they should examine into the expenditure of the province, and find whether it had been wise and prudent, or whether it was one which was likely to lead to a debt so vast that the province would be compelled to come back to the federal parliament and ask for assistance. If their means of revenue were limited, that also should be taken into consideration. Then there was another consideration: Is this to be the last time of asking? he said: Is the proposition to be a final one? There has been no suggestion in regard to that subject in this case, and that is a subject upon which we ought to know something before this Bill goes out of committee. Hon. gentlemen say that this is the last time Manitoba is coming back. Are we making a full settlement of all financial demands, or will Manitoba be coming back next year? These are things which the Minister of Trade and Commerce said should be considered. Then he asked: Is it a permanent arrangement? Every Finance Minister, he said, should be careful to see whether it was a permanent arrangement or not. There is nothing here to show that this is a permanent arrangement; on the contrary, we are told that this is not a permanent arrangement. In a year or so we are going to give the lands back to the western provinces, and to make a new deal in which the Minister of the Interior will endeavour to walk off with the larger share of the swag. The result will be that this whole subsidy question will be reopened. Is there any check put on the debt creating power of the province? was a pertinent question asked by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is there any check, or is the door left open so that every provincial Premier who wants to be extravagant can come back and make another raid? All this language in regard to the debt will be found in the speech of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, pages 5314 to 5319 in 'Hansard' of March 25, 1907. All these considerations were suggested by him as being absolutely necessary before you could determine what was fair and right in dealing with any province of the Dominion. Then he declared that having a fixed sum you could never have finality, and where you fixed a definite amount you could never have finality, and no payment should be made, except it was made on the percentage basis, or you could never have a final settlement as to the rate of payment which is to be applied to every province. All these considerations the Minister of Trade and Commerce declared to be essential in 1907; and not one of them has been observed by this government; there is no pretence, they are all thrown to the winds. There is only one defence—Saskatchewan and Alberta got so much in 1905, and therefore we have got to give to Manitoba that amount to-day. Now, on what possible ground can this proposition be justified? What reason can there be for doing that any more than if you were to say to Ontario to-day, which was one of the original partners of confederation, that because her boundaries are being extended to the Hudson bay, you must give her an additional amount. The principal theory upon which the provinces are to be assisted with provincial subsidies is that larger responsibilities are assumed along with the rights accorded to them under the British North America Act. Certain duties were assigned to each provincial legislature to carry out. They were compelled to look after certain services, and we were compelled to look after certain others. The amount of money that was to be expended necessarily by any province depended upon population and like considerations. Now, because, forsooth, you are adding to the territory of the province of Manitoba a certain area, you say to them: We are going to give you this vast sum of money beginning in 1908, though you had no territory and therefore had no responsibility, and therefore nothing to expend any money for. Manitoba never lost a dollar since 1908 by reason of not having this money, because she never had the territory to spend it on. If the reason for granting this increased subsidy is because you are going to increase the territory of Manitoba, then you have no reason for giving these arrearages, because Manitoba was not spending any money. In 1905 you started out the two new provinces, and from that moment their expenditure began. Along with the rights that were accorded to the provinces under the British North America Act, was a duty imposed upon the legislatures of those provinces, and they had to spend their money. Manitoba has been doing this since 1871 in a limited way, but not a single dollar has she spent since 1908 in addition to what she was spending before, for the reason that she had no more territory on which to spend it. The Minister will search the records of his department in vain previous to confederation down to the present time to find any justification for such a proposition. What are they to be compensated for? If they had the lands, then they would have been expending some additional amounts upon them, because responsibility begins with the acquisition of the lands. It is purely a sentimental arrangement in order that the Minister of the Interior may go back to Manitoba and tell them: See what I have got out of the Dominion treasury for you, although I had no right to get it.

Mr. BURNHAM. Are there no damages?

Mr. MACDONALD. My hon. friend (Mr. Burnham) is a lawyer, I understand, and damages in regard to breach of rights in a legal sense can be assessed upon certain principles. If it were possible to convince my hon. friend, I could easily convince him that these theoretical damages of which he speaks were never found within the purview of any legal considerations nor of any political one, either, up to date.

Two million dollars paid to Manitoba because they did not get the boundaries settled three years ago. Why did they not get their boundaries? It was their own fault. They never said they would take the boundaries until last spring when they took the very limits that the late government offered to them, Yet, the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. White), subsidizing the pathfinders, is going to give them $2,000,000 for nothing. What is going to happen, after they do get the lands, to the 690 white people up there? The Manitoba government has never spent a five cent piece in actual money in looking after these 690 people or the territory in which they live since 1908, or at any time up to date. The Dominion government looked after that territory and had everything to do with it. The Indians were looked after by the Indian Department, and whatever police work was done was done by the mounted police. If Manitoba gets control of that territory the mounted police will go on looking after the territory at the expense of the Dominion of Canada. This additional bonus which they will receive we have not yet heard mentioned. The result is, that leaving out of consideration altogether the amount which is supposed to be their due for damages for a wrong that was never inflicted, this Dominion is giving to Manitoba a still further sum of $747.83 every year for every man, woman and child to be found in the added territory. Is it any wonder that my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Pugsley), wants to have a conference of the other provinces of the Dominion? When you get down to the real situation in reference to this matter you will find that the Dominion government hands over to this province $747.83 every year for every man, woman and child as a gift to assist in governing the people who are to be found in the added territory in order that Manitoba may be on an equality with Alberta and Saskatchewan. That is the reason that is given.

My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Rogers), sang a dismal song that the late Premier would not give them what they wanted because they were Conservatives. He was smiling in his cheek when he made that statement in this House. It has become an old story how he and the Premier of the province of Manitoba have been making a football of this question for the last ten years. The Minister of the Interior knows very well that the Manitoba government were preaching that Laurier would not give them a fair deal. They did not want a fair deal. They were sparring for wind and for time, looking for a grievance, and it is on account of this old grievance of theirs that they were feeling so badly, but have succeeded in inducing the new Minister of Finance to give them this $2,000,000 as a present, and a solatium for their wounded feelings. Then my hon. friend was so sorrowful over the fact that this leader of the opposition. when he was Premier, would not give them the swamp lands just when they wanted them. But he said the Canadian Northern could get lands just when they wanted them in Saskatchewan. My hon. friend was worrying tremendously about the Canadian Northern railway. Everybody who knows anything about Manitoba politics knows that my hon. friend and the Canadian Northern have been cheek by jowl for the last ten years, standing and working together whether it was in regard to swamp lands or any other kind of lands. The Minister of the Interior was certainly drawing a long bow when he attempted to persuade this House that the claim of Manitoba in regard to this debt allowance and increased subsidies was approved by the conference. The contrary is the case as has been proved by my hon. friend from St. John. There is no evidence on the records to justify the statement of the Minister of the Interior. On the contrary, I want to reiterate to my hon. friend who was not at the conference at all, that the Premier and the Attorney General of the province who were there signed and supported the resolution which was presented to them under which they accepted the allowance that they have been receiving from that day down to the present time and never made any kind of a kick, never made any kind of objection as to these side claims. Look what Premier McBride did in regard to British Columbia. He presented his claims and advocated them very seriously. He could not get the representatives of the other provinces to agree with him and he said: I will not join you at all upon this question; you may go and see the Prime Minister if you like, but as far as I am concerned, I will leave the conference and do what I can to secure favourable action upon my demand. The colleagues of the Minister of the Interior, Mr. Roblin and Mr. Campbell, quietly and humbly sat down along with the other Premiers, and representatives of the other provinces and never said a word about these claims, except that they had presented them to the Premier. When these gentlemen would not agree with them that it was right that they should get these extra claims, they said: We are not going to go like Premier McBride, and kick over the traces, or do anything; we will take what we can get in the meantime, and as long as you do not agree with McBride we will go with you. They did so; there was no refusal on their part, as there was on the part of Mr. McBride. If the minister's colleagues, Messrs. Roblin and Campbell, had done what McBride had done in 1906, it would have been open to him to argue that they had a grievance that ought to be remedied, but he comes in and proposes to take the money of the various provinces because Laurier would not give them the boundaries. Since 1908 anybody who went to Manitoba would hear nothing discussed in provincial politics, but the declaration of members of the provincial government that this wicked man who had been leading the government of Canada would not give them fair-play, and would not give them the boundaries. A great many people believed it, who did not know that there was incorporated in the records of this House, a resolution passed in 1908 giving them exactly what they get this year and what they would not take and what no one could possibly induce them to take. These gentlemen did not want to take that until they had the elections over in Manitoba last year. The complaint would have been done away with, if they had accepted these boundaries before the provincial elections were over. These gentlemen wanted a grievance. Mr. Richard McBride asserted, this claim for an extra allowance but, finding that his colleagues from the other provinces would not join with him, he would not have anything to do with them and went out and asserted he was right in this matter. These gentlemen did not do anything of the kind; they took the money went home, and now they have succeeded in inducing the government of this country to give them $2,000,000 for absolutely nothing. You say that this is not a finality that this does not close the books, that you are making a deal about lands and about territory, that you are taking from these people the swamp lands, that you are going to make a new arrangement at some time in the future and that when you make that new arrangement about the lands, you will hold a conference. We come to you and say: Do you think that it is a good time now to hold a conference because you are dealing with financial arrangements on a certain basis, with an old province of the Dominion, that joined with us three years ago, as a member of the conference that then took place, and where we were told what our course was going to be in the future and what we ought to receive—do you think that it is a fair proposition that you should hold a conference now before you adopt this new arrangement with this one province? That is the proposition of my hon. friend from St. John, it is a reasonable one, and I fail to see upon what ground it can be answered.

The circumstances of this case are such that my hon. friends opposite cannot answer their responsibility to the other provinces of the Dominion by saying they are going to level this up by the two prairie provinces. For the reasons I have given I support the resolution of my hon. friend (Mr. Pugsley). The Minister of Marine and Fisheries rather suggested that my hon. friend (Mr. Pugsley) was not as enthusiastic about the matter of representation as he was at one time, but I can tell the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries that that idea is purely a figment of his imagination. The maritime provinces were not aroused on this question of representation until after 1901, and the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) was the first to raise the question. He initiated the legal proceedings which were taken to have the question considered before the Supreme Court and the Privy Council and I had the honour of being associated with him, representing the province of Nova Scotia in that argument No man could have presented a stronger case than the hon. member for St. John did before the Supreme Court of Canada, and I want to say that the decision upon that matter was based upon a strict legal interpretation and not upon the consideration of these constitutional rights which ought to have been taken into consideration in arriving at a decision upon such a question. The Supreme Court of Canada, when it has to deal with a question of constitutional rights such as that of representation, will not look at the historical documents which show the understanding that existed at the time of union, nor at the date which is open to every one and which discloses the intention of the original parties to the compact. The courts never looked at these facts, but decided the question from a technically legal standpoint. However, the right which is claimed now is one which can only be granted as the result of the consent of the various provinces of this Dominion. And, this would be an appropriate time to have this conference, a conference of value, a conference such as the Premier proposes to call with regard to the disposal of the land. Why not have that conference this year? Next year we will have redistribution and if parliament goes on redistributing without an amendment to the Act of the Imperial parliament to warrant their doing justice to the maritime provinces, the time will be too late and the right which the Minister of Marine and Fisheries says we should obtain, we cannot obtain. I come from the province of Nova Scotia, which is discriminated against as a result of this bargain. I come from a province which was one of the first partners of confederation, and has more right to consideration at the hands of this government than has that eldest of the prairie provinces, great as she is. And, I say that every year hereafter until justice is done us, we will be discriminated against, as compared with Manitoba, to the amount of $750,000 a year, I claim that the resolution moved by my hon. friend (Mr. Pugsley) demands the attention of the government, and I am surprised that the Prime Minister coming, as he does, from my own province, and knowing the conditions there, should absolutely submit himself to the dictation of the Minister of the Interior, who, in this case has succeeded in getting him to do something which is unfair to the other provinces of the Dominion. If Manitoba is entitled to this concession, then let the other provinces of the Dominion be treated fairly at the same time. For my part I say: let Manitoba have every right to which she is entitled as a member of the confederacy, but do not let Manitoba have that which the government refuses to give to Nova Scotia, to New Brunswick, to Prince Edward Island and to the other provinces of the Dominion.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I understood the Prime Minister to say that as the amendment offered by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) was contentious, it would stand over until a future occasion. I have an amendment to move to section 4, and as no doubt that amendment will be contentious also, I want it to be understood that if this amendment is left over we are not to be precluded from moving further amendments.

Mr. BLAIN. What is the hon. gentleman's amendment?

Mr. GUTHRIE. When the present amendment is disposed of, I intend to move that subsection 2 of section 4 be stricken out, and the following substituted therefor:

The first half yearly payment under this section shall be made on the first day of July, 1912.

Mr. MONDOU. I also give notice that I shall move as an amendment:

That the following clause be inserted in Bill 115 as clause 8, immediately following clause 7.

Nothing in this Act shall in any way prejudice or affect the rights that may actually be enjoyed by the population of that part of the Northwest Territories now added to Manitoba.

Mr. ROGERS. I wish to say a few words by way of enlightenment to the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) who has undertaken to discuss a question that he apparently knows very little about. I am surprised at some of the statements the hon. gentleman has undertaken to make in this House, for I would expect that in undertaking to discuss an important question such as the one before us, he would have informed himself to some extent so as to be in a position to discuss it intelligently. In the first place, the hon. member (Mr. Macdonald) has asked: why did not Manitoba take her lands when they were offered to her three years ago. Well, I want to tell the hon. gentleman that we have never been offered the lands, neither three years ago, nor at any other time during the reign of the late Liberal government. Such a thing was never offered to us; we pleaded for that as representing Manitoba time and again, but we never could get that concession from the Liberal government.

Mr. MACDONALD. What about the resolution of 1908?

Mr. ROGERS. The resolution of 1908 did not promise or offer to the province of Manitoba one single solitary acre of land.

Mr. MACDONALD. You are confusing that with boundaries.

Mr. ROGERS. Then my hon. friend (Mr. Macdonald) goes on and undertakes to tell the House that the territory of Keewatin to be added, has never cost the province of Manitoba a solitary dollar. Let me read for his information a few words from a speech delivered by his honoured leader in this House on May 9, 1905. Sir Wilfrid Laurier made the following statement:

No, there is no need for a legislature, because there is no population in Keewatin. Keewatin has been administered for thirty years by the province of Manitoba.

Mr. MACDONALD. Since 1905 who has administered it? The province of Saskatchewan.

Mr. ROGERS. The province of Manitoba was administering the district of Keewatin for thirty years, and an attempt was made by the government which my hon. friend supported in 1905 to take it away from us.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Is it or is it not true that although it may have been administered by Manitoba, any expenses connected with the administration of Keewatin were borne by the Federal government?

Mr. ROGERS. Certain expenses were borne by the Dominion government. The Lieutenant Governor of the province of Manitoba received $1,000 a year for thirty years as the governor and administrator of the district of Keewatin, but every justice of the peace and magistrate in the province of Manitoba, who received his pay from that province, was a justice of the peace with full power and authority for the administration of law and order in the district of Keewatin for thirty years.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Did these justices of the peace receive any salary from the Dominion government?

Mr. ROGERS. Justices of the peace, police magistrates, and so on, always received salaries from the province of Manitoba.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Did they receive any extra salary for administering justice with respect to persons charged with crime in the Keewatin territory?

Mr. ROGERS. No doubt, in fixing their salaries, due consideration was given to the amount of work they had to do in administering that great territory during that length of time. The hon. member for Pictou says we are apparently in great haste in endeavouring to settle this question, and that we should delay it further in order to have a conference. I do not think the facts will bear out the statement of the hon. member for Pictou that either I or any other member of this government, or the government as a whole, are evincing any great haste in the settlement of this question. It has been a very live issue in the province of Manitoba for ten long years. We have been appealing to the government of our predecessors during all that period, and we have not met with much success.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Has the Manitoba government pressed the federal government to give the lands?

Mr. ROGERS. We pressed the government of our predecessors to give us equality either with the provinces to the east or the provinces to the west. The real grievance of Manitoba rested upon that point. Manitoba claimed that her position was one of inequality with any other province in the Dominion, by reason of the fact that, before the province of Alberta and Saskatchewan were formed, she was the only province that was not in possession of her public domain and her national resources. She complained for many years, and received from this parliament, on various occasions during that period, a readjustment of her claims. When the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan were formed in 1905, the province of Manitoba made a special appeal to the gov ernment of the day to be placed in a posi tion of equality either with the provinces to the west or to the east. The older provinces of Canada had their lands and their mines and their minerals, and the provinces of the west then being created were being placed in a much more favourable position than the province of Manitoba. We were told by the right hon. gentleman who was leading the government at that time that he could not consider at all the question of granting us our lands. Manitoba then undertook to urge its claims on the ground that it was entitled to be placed in a position of equality with the sister provinces to the west. The province of Manitoba presented its claim at the conference, and had it supported by the conference, to be given the same terms and conditions as those given to the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta. The province of Manitoba has not asked this government up to the present time to give them their lands, because they felt that they had established their case at the conference to the satisfaction of every government in this Dominion, and were entitled to the same terms and conditions as the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. Now, the hon. member for St. John says that the Sessional Papers do not establish that Manitoba had made the claims which she did make before that conference. If the hon. gentleman will turn to page 3 in the Sessional Returns, he will find it stated that the return published there consists simply of extracts from what took place at that conference. Therefore the Sessional Papers show on the face of them that it is not a full report of that conference.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Will my hon. friend allow me, because there is an issue between us? My hon. friend made the statement that the records show that the conference had approved of these special claims which the province of Manitoba was making. Now I have no recollection of it. I have searched the records, and I can find no trace of such a thing. Would my hon. friend be good enough to point out, where it appears that the conference approved of these things?

Mr. ROGERS. In answer to my hon. friend, let me say that I told the House yesterday that when Manitoba was invited to be present at that conference, its representatives replied they would only attend upon a certain understanding. They came here with that understanding, and when they arrived, Mr. Roblin presented his case to the conference and a sub-committee was appointed to consider that case, not as my hon. friend from Pictou, I think it was told us, that they were appointed to consider the case of the representatives from British Columbia. In order that I may make it clear to the House, I will read the statement appearing in the official record, as made at that time, by the right hon. gentleman who now leads the opposition, so that you will see that the case of Manitoba and of British Columbia were both dealt with in an entirely different form and in an entirely different way. When British Columbia came here the claim that she had in effect was this: That British Columbia would not be satisfied with the terms and conditions for which that conference was specifically called to deal with. That conference, as has been stated by the member for St. John, was called to carry out, or to approve, a resolution as passed by a conference held in the province of Quebec in the year 1902. That conference in 1902 laid down that the time had arrived when this government should give to the different provinces of Canada additional subsidies in regard to legislation and to the cost of government, as well as in regard to the changed conditions by the payment of 80 cents per head. The conference was called to deal with these two specific points, and these two points alone. Manitoba at first refused to attend in case her position would be misunderstood for these points were the only two to be dealt with in that way. British Columbia refused to take part in that conference and Mr. McBride left the meeting because he could not get an additional increase under those two items. Those two items are to-day entirely satisfactory to the province of Manitoba. However, that was the point which Mr. McBride raised in so far as the province of British Columbia is concerned. Now, here is what Sir Wilfrid Laurier had to say in addressing the joint conference upon that matter:

I have given careful consideration to the memorial of British Columbia's government, and particularly to the request that a commission be appointed for the purpose of inquiring into the financial relations between the Dominion and the province. I have been unable to reach the conclusion that the appointment of such a commission would be the best way of dealing with a question of this kind. I fear that such a course would not lead to the harmonious settlement of the grants to provinces which all should desire to bring about. However, I regard the matter at present more as one for the opinion of the conference than for the judgment of the Dominion government. You have assembled for the purpose of considering the sums which should properly be paid by the Dominion to the provinces in the way of subsidies and allowance for the maintenance of government. The British Columbia proposal comes entirely within the chief purpose of this conference. If this conference, after hearing Mr. McBride's arguments in support of this contention, reach the conclusion that an arbitration should take place, through a commission, for the purpose of dealing with the claim of British Columbia, that would present the matter to the Dominion government in a new light, and while I am not prepared to express any final opinion, I can say at once that such a recommendation from the conference would have great weight with us, and we should feel bound to give it further consideration. While I give you this expression of my own views and of the views of my colleagues who are here with me, I shall, if you will permit me, offer a suggestion. I think there is a disposition on the part of the conference to recognize that the conditions in British Columbia, owing to the vastness of her territory, to its mountainous character, and the sparseness of her population, create exceptional difficulties which should be taken into consideration in the adjustment of the distribution of the grants in aid of provincial governments. I am myself disposed to admit that such is the case, I would strongly advise that Mr. McBride avail himself of the good disposition which is manifested in the conference and at once approach the question of that allowance, in addition to that already contemplated, should be made to meet British Columbia's difficulties. It is a question which after all can better be settled here than anywhere else. I feel assured that the conference will be willing to deal with the matter in a spirit of fairness to British Columbia. I propose therefore that we shall leave you to discuss the question frankly with one another and come to you again when probably you will have reached some satisfactory agreement.

Now that was where British Columbia came in in connection with the other provinces. Manitoba took no exception to the proposal as made by the conference held at Quebec in 1892, and when her representatives attended that conference at that time, they were careful then, as in 1906, to have a note made on the records of that date, that the case of Manitoba should receive special consideration, and at the foot of the report of that conference of 1902 you will find the note:

The following paragraph was added in the case of Manitoba:

It is, however, to be distinctly understood that in asking for this conference on the basis set forth, it shall in no way prejudice Manitoba's claims upon the Dominion in respect to her lands.

and so forth.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that is the position which Manitoba has taken all along in respect to this matter, and her representatives attended the conference in 1906 with the distinct understanding that her claims against the Dominion were not to be prejudiced by the fact of their attendance there, and by Manitoba's acceptance of the terms in respect of the government and legislative allowance, as well as the allowance in connection with the 80 cents per head. I read to this House yesterday, and I am not going to detain hon. gentlemen by reading it again to-night, that when that conference took place, a subcommittee was appointed and appointed specifically to give consideration to this matter. On that occasion the hon. member for St. John, because I heard my colleagues talking about it at the time, was very good and very generous in supporting or giving consideration to that particular matter, and when the resolution embodying the arrangement agreed to by that conference—not only by the subcommittee, but by all members of the conference—Mr. Roblin who was presenting the matter moved this resolution, as reported in the Toronto 'Globe,' which published a full report of the official minutes of the meeting taking place at that time:

Moved by Mr. Roblin, seconded by Mr. Peters, that the report of the committee charged with the preparation of the resolutions embodying the views of the conference on the resolutions of 1902 be adopted, and it was unanimously adopted as follows:

Whereas the members of this conference are of the opinion that it is desirable in the interests of the people of Canada and essential to the development of the provinces that an immediate provision be made for an increase of the subsidies granted by the Dominion to the several provinces and for the award to the provincial governments by Canada of an amount sufficient to meet the costs of the administration of criminal justice not exceeding twenty cents per head of the population; therefore it is unanimously resolved (1) that the subject matter of the resolutions adopted by the conference of the representatives of the several provinces held at Quebec in December, 1902, and which were shortly thereafter presented to the government of the Dominion and which were ratified by the legislature of the then existing provinces, except that of British Columbia, be now pressed upon the government of the Dominion for immediate and favourable action, under reserve of the right of any province to now submit—

Mr. PUGSLEY. To now submit.

Mr. ROGERS:

To now submit to such government, memoranda in writing concerning any claims it may have to larger sums than those set out in the said resolutions, or to additional consideration for recognition.

Mr. PUGSLEY. For recognition.

Mr. ROGERS. I want to tell my hon. friend from St. John, that Manitoba placed her claim in the hands of the Dominion government then and there, in writing. I want to tell him furthermore, that no other province in this Dominion from that day to this, as far as I know, has placed any claim in the hands of the government in writing in respect to the said matter.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The records show that immediately following the adoption of that resolution, British Columbia submitted her claim, and it was dealt with by the conference, including the representatives from Manitoba, and it was rejected, the conference passing a unanimous resolution which the representatives of Manitoba also assented to, declaring against arbitration but recommending that British Columbia receive a reasonable additional allowance for civil government of $100,000 a year for ten years.

Mr. ROGERS. My hon. friend does not appear to have understood what I mentioned a minute ago, that British Columbia's claim was a special one which simply dealt with the two specific items which the conference was called to consider—that of the subsidies for government and legislation, and the matter of 80 cents per head, as stated by the then Premier himself, whose remarks I quoted a few minutes ago. Outside of that no other province made any claim under the reservation as provided by these resolutions that they should make appeal to the government for additional consideration under the reserve so stated. Manitoba has been the only province that came under that particular clause from that day to this.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Have we heard now from my hon. friend all that he relies on as showing that the conference approved of the special claims of Manitoba or is there anything else that will tend to prove it?

Mr. ROGERS. I think I have told the hon. gentleman all that is necessary to inform him to-night. If to-morrow he wants more information I will, if possible, supply him with it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is not a word to show that the conference approved of it.

Mr. ROGERS. I told my hon. friend that our claim was presented at that conference and it was only after the conference gave it full and fair consideration that they were willing and did vote unanimously in order that this reservation should be placed in the resolution.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That does not approve of it.

Mr. ROGERS. That is a statement that should be plain enough in respect to the matter and should satisfy the hon. gentleman if he wants to be satisfied in regard to the position. My hon. friend has moved an amendment to the effect that we should submit this matter to a further conference. This course is adopted in pursuance of the same policy which has been pursued by the hon. gentlemen opposite for the past fourteen years. They have attempted to find one cause after another to stir up one province against another, in order that Manitoba might be prevented from occupying a position of equality with the other provinces of Canada.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Was the minister or any other member of the government of Manitoba aware of the terms of the address passed by the parliament of Canada in 1907 asking for certain imperial legislation to ratify the new provincial subsidies in which the terms were used that this settlement was to be final and conclusive? Did anybody oppose this legislation in the Imperial parliament on behalf of the government of Manitoba as it was opposed on behalf of British Columbia?

Mr. ROGERS. If my hon. friend will read the Act I think he will find it is there under subsection 7. That clause was put in order to cover the very resolution which I have been reading to this House which was passed unanimously at the request of Manitoba, and in order that Manitoba's claims should be protected and it is incorporated in the Act to which my hon. friend refers.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). That clearly refers to British Columbia.

Mr. ROGERS. So I think that Manitoba is not neglecting any part of her task in order that she may make clear her position so that she may receive justice at the hands of this House. We felt in 1905 that the Liberal government at Ottawa were putting every obstacle in our way they could, and so strongly did we feel that, that we made strong statements to the people of that province at that time in regard to the treatment we were receiving. I want to tell my hon. friend from Pictou that we were not willing or desirous to treat this matter from a political point of view, because when Manitoba came here to ask fair treatment in 1905, the first statement we made to the Premier was that a fair and just settlement of this question carried no political advantage to either party. That statement was published in the press of this country by an interview given by myself which the right hon. the leader of the opposition did me the honour to quote in parliament. We felt strongly and spoke strongly because we recognized then as to-day that the Liberal party were disposed, if they possibly could, in one form or other, to handicap and penalize the little province of Manitoba because that province would not send a Liberal majority to support them in the parliament of Canada or elsewhere. In the legislature on February 23, 1906, I said:

> Thank heaven, Mr. Speaker, the day is not far off when no public man in Canada, either through his own organ or by his actions, can continue to regard the good citizens of our little province simply as bastard members in the confederation of our great Dominion. We ask for no favours. We look for none. We expect none. We want none. We have pleaded for simple justice and fair play. This for the present has been denied us. We may have to wait a while but not long. It is true we may have to wait to see the present administration at Ottawa politically dead and politically damned. When that day arrives and a Conservative administration rises in their place, we can then depend as citizens of the province upon securing equal liberty, equal rights, and equal fair play in common with all other good citizens in all other provinces that now form the confederation of our Dominion of Canada.

That represented then, as I believe it represents to-day, the feeling that existed in Manitoba in regard to the fair treatment which we received at the hands of the Liberal government. My hon. friend from Pictou went on to deal with the finances of the different provinces, as did my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Pugsley), and they undertook to tell this House that Manitoba is getting too much, and should not receive an arrearage back to the year 1908. I would like to point out to my hon. friend, and I do not do this with any desire of making comparisons with our sister provinces, Alberta and Saskatchewan, to their detriment, the amount which the province of Manitoba has been contributing to the treasury of this Dominion during the last three years. The figures for the three provinces for the years 1909-10 and 1911 were as follows:

Manitoba paid..	$19,161,934 85
" received..	3,553,341 44
Paid more than received..	15,608,593 41
Alberta paid..	$5,243,808 70
" received	4,474,879 60
Paid more than received..	768,929 10
Saskatchewan received..	4,593,695 85
Paid by Saskatchewan	2,999,645 61
Received more than paid ..	$1,594,050 24

Mr. PUGSLEY. Would the amounts paid into the treasury be customs duties?

Mr. ROGERS. Customs and excise.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Is not the great city of Winnipeg the wholesale distributing point of the whole of the west?

Mr. ROGERS. Toronto is too.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Would it be fair to take the figures of the great city of Montreal and attribute them to the province of Quebec?

Mr. ROGERS. Now, I ask you if Manitoba, from that point of view if from no other, has not a good case to present to this House to have her position rectified, and to be placed on a footing of equality with the other provinces. That is all Manitoba has ever asked, that is all they are asking by this Bill. The hon. gentleman says that we should have a conference to consider the question of representation in the maritime provinces.

Mr. NESBITT. Those figures that the hon. gentleman has presented of money paid into the various provinces, are they based on the customs?

Mr. ROGERS. Based on customs and excise. I want to say that I sympathize with the hon. member for St. John and the other members from the maritime provinces in the claim they make in regard to representation. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries has dealt fully with the conference that was held here in 1910. I had the pleasure of attending that conference, and the question which the hon. gentleman refers to was given careful consideration. The great majority of the members of that conference considered that it would be in the interest of this Dominion if most careful consideration were given to the representations then made. I think that one or two gentlemen present at that conference were not disposed to give sympathetic consideration to the proposals made by the maritime provinces. However, my feelings in regard to the matter have not changed, and I am sure that I represent the feelings of the people of western Canada. I am satisfied they are willing at all times to join any conference, and to give the most liberal interpretation to any propositions that may be made by representatives from the maritime provinces with a view to secure a remedy for the grievance of which they complain. I presume another conference will be held before very long, and when this question comes up, I am satisfied that the representatives from western Canada will be prepared to give a sympathetic and generous support to the claims of the maritime provinces. With regard to the amendment of the hon. member for St. John, I think the object is to delay as long as possible a settlement of this vexed question relating to the province of Manitoba. But I can assure him that no matter how many amendments he may move, we will be able to carry through this House the Bill which is now before us, and in so doing we will be rectifying an injustice from which Manitoba has been suffering for a long period.

Mr. PUGSLEY. By this amendment I trust the committee will realize that we do not ask for any delay that would be prejudicial to Manitoba. The first payment of the subsidy could only be made next July. Now, in the amendment we name the exact figures suggested by the Minister of Finance. All that we propose to attain by this amendment is that the Governor in Council shall have authority to pay to the province of Manitoba an amount not exceeding the figures which are named here. But before doing that a conference of the Premiers of the different provinces should be called to consider this matter, and also to consider what it would be equitable and just to allow in respect of the debt account to the other provinces of Canada by reason of this increase in the debt allowance to Manitoba. There need be no delay. We do not limit the Governor in Council at all, all we ask is that before deciding this matter, before disturbing the financial position of Manitoba, which necessarily does an injustice to the other provinces until they are likewise considered, we ask that a conference of the Premiers of the provinces should take place with the Federal government, to consider this matter very fully. Now, the Minister of the Interior gave me several surprises. I am surprised that he does not consent to the reasonable and fair proposition I have made. It looks as if he wished to rush this thing through and disturb the financial relations between the different provinces. He thinks if he gets this Bill once on the statute-book, then, when the conference takes place, he will be just that much ahead in the game. I think this is a pretty tough business on the other provinces of Canada, and I hope my hon. friend will not persist in a course so unreasonable and so unfair as he now threatens to take.

Mr. MONK. I will make a proposition to the committee. I understand that the clause under consideration is not to be disposed of this evening, as it is a contentious clause, nor will the amendment be disposed of this evening. I propose that the committee go through the other clauses of the Bill to which there is no objection, and then we will rise. In that way we will make some progress at this sitting.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There will be some discussion upon the clause relating to swamp lands, but as to the unimportant clauses it would not take five minutes to put them through. But we shall run against a snag almost immediately when we strike the swamp lands. There are a good many on this side of the House who think that is the most indefensible thing in the world, to take away from this province these swamp lands and then hold out the idea that in a year or two we are going to give them all back again.

Mr. MONK. I have no idea of arguing the objection that my hon. friend takes, I was merely endeavouring to ascertain, in order that we should make some progress, what clauses are objectionable. These we can reserve, pass the others, report progress, and rise if we are not going to dispose of the Bill finally this evening.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If we disposed of the contentious clauses the non-contentious clauses would not take five minutes, so that there would be nothing gained.

Mr. ROGERS. Let us take five minutes to the non-contentious clauses.

Mr. PUGSLEY. From the costume of many hon. members I conclude that there must be some pleasant function going on here and, therefore, I think we had better rise.

Mr. MONK. If we are going to make no progress I think it would be better to rise, I would move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Monk, House adjourned at 11.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, March 7, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

TIMBER SLIDE—CHATS FALLS.

*Mr. SHARPE (North Ontario):

1. On what date was the deed of the timber slide on Chats Falls given to D. O'Connor by the late government?
2. What was the purchase price?
3. Has the present government received any representations from the city of Ottawa or the Hydro-Electric Commission, urging the cancellation of the said deed?
4. Has the government decided to cancel the deed or taken any steps to cancel it?

Mr. MONK:

1. 2nd October, 1911.
2. $1,471.
3. Yes.
4. The question is under consideration.

DISMISSALS.

Mr. FORTIER:

1. Have Captain Léon Laroche, commanding officer of one of the boats doing quarantine service at Grosse Isle, P.Q., and Désiré Laroche employed at the same quarantine station as policeman, been dismissed? If so, for what reason?
2. Who brought complaints against them?
3. Will the department or the Minister of Agriculture grant them an inquiry?

Mr. BURRELL:

1. The engagement of Captain Leon Laroche at the Grosse Isle Quarantine Station terminates on the 14th of April, 1912.
The engagement of Désiré Laroche at the Grosse Isle Quarantine Station terminated on the 30th November, 1911.
It is not proposed to engage either for the coming season.
2 and 3, answered by No. 1.

Mr. TOBIN:

1. Has Joseph Clouthier of St. Adolphe de Dudswell been dismissed as postmaster?
2. If so, who requested his dismissal?
3. Has an inquiry been made?
4. What is the name of the inquiring commissioner?
5. If an inquiry has been held, was it in French?
6. Has the department or the minister received petitions asking for the continuance of Mr. Clouthier as postmaster?
7. If so, how many signed the said petition or petitions?
8. Have any been received asking for his dismissal?
9. If so, by how many and where were they from?

Mr. PELLETIER:

1. Yes.
2. It was requested on the recommendation of Mr. John Hayes.
3. Yes.
4. Dr. W. L. Shurtleff, K. C.
5. The report shows that some of the witnesses spoke in French and others in English.
6. Yes.
7. 107 persons.
8. Yes.
9. Thirty persons, residents of St. Adolphe de Dudswell.

Mr. TOBIN:

1. Has Mr. Joseph Lapointe been appointed overseer of the wharf works on Lake Aylmer at Garthby?
2. If so, who recommended him for this position?
3. How long has he held the said position?
4. Who replaced him for the completion of the works on the wharf at Garthby?
5. By whom was he recommended?
6. Has he the necessary qualifications?
7. Who asked for the dismissal of Mr. Joseph Lapointe, the former overseer?

Mr. MONK:

1. Yes.
2. Mr. Tobin, M. P.
3. From 8th to 27th September, 1911, when work was ordered to be suspended.
4. Mr. Telesphore Pichette.
5. Dr. Hayes.
6. General instructions are issued to all engineers that the services of an inspector are not to be retained unless he is qualified.
7. Answered by question No. 3.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT WEEDON, QUEBEC.

Mr. TOBIN:

1. Is it the intention of the Minister of Public Works to proceed at once with the construction of a public building at Weedon, Quebec?
2. Are the plans ready for said building?
3. Have tenders been called for?
4. Has a site been secured, as recommended by the Municipal Council of Weedon?

Mr. MONK:

1. The subject is receiving earnest consideration.
2. No.
3. No.
4. No.

PELAGIC SEALING.

Rt. Hon. R. L. BORDEN (Prime Minister). I would like to say to my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), who asked a question yesterday about the treaty in reference to pelagic sealing, that I have this further information which I think it is only right that my right hon. friend should have. The Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs informs me that the ratifications in the matter of the pelagic sealing treaty of the 7th July, 1911, were deposited in the United States Department of State on the 12th December, 1911. This procedure is equivalent to an exchange of ratifications. It was thought more convenient for the four powers to deposit their ratifications in the Department of State rather than go through the somewhat complicated procedure of exchanging ratifications with each other.

BIOLOGICAL BOARD OF CANADA.

Bill (No. 118) to create the Biological Board of Canada—Mr. Hazen—read the second time and the House went into committee thereon.

On section 3,

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Will the members of this board receive any compensation ?

Mr. HAZEN. Section 8 of the Bill provides that no member of the board shall receive emolument for his services beyond actual and reasonable travelling expenses in connection with the work of the board.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Is it the intention to appoint special officers of the department, in addition to the representatives of the universities ?

Mr. HAZEN. The minister will appoint two members of the board. Prof. Prince has been a member of the board in the past and it is likely he will be again appointed. The universities mentioned in the Bill: Dalhousie, Laval, McGill, New Brunswick, Queen's and Toronto, carry on biological work. There is provision made in the Bill that when any other university engages in the work of biological research a representative from it may be added to the board.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Will the two members of the board appointed by the minister, devote all their time to this biological work ?

Mr. HAZEN. By no means; there is no necessity for that. The work of Prof. Prince in the department is in line with the biological work he will do in connection with this board. The other member of the board appointed by the minister will be an official of the department whose business it is to make a study of fishery conditions.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I do not wish to make any definite criticism of the constitution of the board, but in my judgment the minister would obtain better results if some members of the board devoted their whole time to this biological work. Prof. Prince has not been able to devote his whole time to this work in the past, and I have always considered it a mistake that he should have been assigned to work other than that for which he was originally appointed into the service. There is great field for biological work in connection with our fisheries, and Prof. Prince might with advantage to the country, devote his time exclusively to that work. I do not, of course, object to representatives of the universities being appointed, but still they can only be an auxiliary force and can hardly be considered practical working members of this board. I trust the minister will see that in future Prof. Prince shall devote his entire time to this particular work, and probably it would be well to associate one or two permanent officers with him.

Mr. SINCLAIR. The minister must not forget the practical side of the work of this board, and I may say that up to this date the board has not done very much practical work for our fisheries. Recently, Professor Prince gave evidence before the Fisheries Committee and he explained that owing to the fact that the gentlemen who composed the board were not salaried, the department was not in a position to give them instructions to do any special work, which I regard as a very important feature of this whole matter. There are many practical questions which arise in connection with the fisheries, and which a board of this kind ought to be able to solve. The scientific side of the question is all right and I have no criticism to offer on the work which the university professors are doing, but most of it is I suppose in connection with their professional duties in their colleges, which of course it is right the department should aid them in. There are a great many questions in dispute among practical fishermen which this board could do a good deal to throw light upon. A few days ago the question of steam trawling was under discussion in the House, and the minister appeared to think that it was not destructive to our fisheries, while I, like many others who live on the sea-coast, take an entirely different view. If we were able to refer such a question to the board and have them make actual investigation as is done in Great Britain where they employ vessels of their own in that service, it would be of great benefit to our fisheries. Then, as to the propagation of lobsters; the Fisheries Department has placed a great many millions of young lobsters in the sea year after year, and there is a variety of opinion amongst fishermen as to whether they ever mature. I do not think it would be very difficult for scientists to discover exactly what progress these lobsters make after they are put in the water. I urge on the minister the necessity of appointing a first-class practical man on this board who will get a salary and devote his whole time to the work.

Mr. HAZEN. As to the desirability of some members of this commission giving their entire time to the duties devolving upon them, I may point out that there are biological stations in different parts of Canada where during the season observations are taken from day to day in regard to matters that are of interest to this biological board.

Observers are placed at these stations for the purpose of making accurate records of the observations so taken. The results of those observations are furnished to the members of this board, and from these, and such observations as they may make themselves, conclusions are arrived at which may be valuable. These observations are, of course, made under the direction of this board, which at the present time is vested with greater powers of management than it had before. While the officials appointed under the board are to be paid, the board itself acts in an advisory capacity, and is charged with the management of these stations and the carrying on of this work. If the results of the work carried on by the Biological Board are found to be beneficial, it will have to be carried on upon a permanent scale; and, if so, it will become more expensive, and a larger sum of money will be required to carry it on than the modest sum voted by parliament in the past. The work will probably be one of growth and development. I think the suggestions made by my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair), who takes a very active and intelligent interest in all fishery matters, are well worthy of consideration. I shall have great pleasure in directing the attention of the Biological Board to the suggestion of my hon. friend that more practical work should be done under its direction. There are in the department to-day officials whose duty it is to consider these fishery questions from a practical standpoint. My experience has been that it is difficult to get fishery experts to agree, and it is very seldom that they agree on technical questions. I suppose there is room for a divergence of opinion, because after the fish leaves the shores and gets into deep water, very little is known of its habits. My hon. friend, in referring to steam trawling, rather inferred that I considered that it was not destructive. If my remarks conveyed that impression, it is contrary to what I intended them to convey. I think that steam trawling is undoubtedly destructive in its effects, from the fact that many more fish are destroyed by that method than by other methods. My hon. friend also referred to the work done by the lobster hatcheries, and raised the question whether the conditions under which the lobsters were being hatched and cared for while very young are such as will enable them to live and increase the lobster industry of the country. I know that there is a great difference of opinion on this subject. There are some who believe that the young lobsters are not sufficiently protected under the present system, and that another system should be adopted. Others take the opposite view. This is a subject which we are trying to work out with the view of arriving at the correct solution. I will take up the suggestion of my hon. friend with the chairman of the Biological Board, and see if it will not be possible, besides giving attention to the scientific aspect of the question, to give attention also to the practical side.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Unless there are certain officers in the department who can devote their entire time to biological work, there is very little use in creating a biological board. This work has been very much neglected in the past. But I rise for the purpose of suggesting to the hon. minister that instead of a biological board there should be a fisheries board, consisting of officers of his own department and certain other persons living in the different provinces and interested in fisheries. I fear that such of his officers as are supposed to devote their time to the fisheries are so fully occupied with matters of a general character that they can hardly be expected to do good work along special lines. I think it would be a very good departure if the department were to organize a fisheries board, with the biological board as a branch of that board, the two working together. I know that the suggestion has frequently been made, in the province of Nova Scotia at least, and probably it has been conevyed to the minister since he came into office. I have often heard the suggestion made myself, and I have always looked on it with considerable favour. I think the departmental officers would receive a great deal of assistance by working together with appointees from the various provinces interested, and I would like the minister to take this into consideration berore the next session of parliament.

Mr. HAZEN. The suggestion which my hon. friend makes is, in my judgment, well worthy of serious consideration. I do not think the suggestion is a new one. I think it has been made in this House before, when the estimates of the Fisheries Department have been under consideration. Fisheries boards, I understand, exist in other countries. There is one, I believe, in England, and one in Scotland, and these boards have been instrumental in doing a great deal for the conservation of the fishery interests in those countries. There is force in what my hon. friend says about the fisheries officials of the department having their time taken up with general matters and not being able to give as much time as should be given to problems of importance in connection with the fishing wealth of Canada.

I have found in the Marine Department that the Lighthouse Board is a most useful body, and one which not only relieves the minister of responsibility—perhaps I should not put that forward as a reason, because the minister is bound to take the responsibility—but which furnishes advice concerning the aids to navigation, the lighthouses, and the protection of our coasts, that is of very great value, and which it would be difficult to deal with in any other way. I may say—and I am saying it without a thorough study of the subject—that it certainly seemed to me that a board constituted along the same lines for the purpose of advising on questions affecting the fisheries, fisheries protection, the fishery patrol service, close seasons and open seasons, and the implements and means employed in the catching of fish, might be of very great use and assistance to the minister in charge of the department and to the country as well. I have been giving some thought to the matter—I cannot say that I have arrived at a conclusion, I have not the knowledge at present sufficient to enable me to do so—but it is my intention to give very careful consideration to the matter between this session and the next session of parliament.

Section agreed to.

On section 8—salaries to members,

Mr. SINCLAIR. Is it not intended that there shall be two paid members of this board?

Mr. HAZEN. No, not paid as members of the board. There will be two members who receive salaries as officials of the Fisheries Department, but they will not be paid any extra salary for their services as members of this board.

Bill reported, read a third time, and passed.

YUKON JUDGES.

House went into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to authorize the payment to each of two judges of the Territorial Court of the Yukon Territory of an annuity equal to the salary of the office now held by him; such annuity to commence upon the resignation of such judge.

Mr. HAZEN.

Hon. C. J. DOHERTY (Minister of Justice). The purpose of the Bill which is to be based on this resolution, is to remedy a condition of affairs now existing in the Yukon, under which the country is called upon to pay salaries to judges for services which have become unnecessary. The present territorial court consists of three judges. At the time it was constituted, and those judges were named, there was ample work for them to do. But by reason of the changed conditions in that country, the position now is that there is in reality not more than enough work for one judge. But notwithstanding that fact, under their appointment, the three judges are entitled to draw their salaries and also their living allowances. The salaries of the judges are $5,000 each per annum. They are further entitled to a living allowance of $5,000, making a total payment to each of them of $10,000 a year. Two of these gentlemen are willing to resign their positions provided they be allowed a pension an annuity, equal to the amount of their salary, not including living allowance.

The effect of this is that the country is saved $10,000 a year and it is for the purpose of effecting that saving that the Bill to be based upon these resolutions will be proposed. The Bill provides that payments to two of the three judges of the Yukon Territorial Court may be continued equal to their present salaries, this annuity to begin upon their retirement and to continue thereafter. The Bill further provides that, in the event of the present condition changing and need arising for the services of either or both of these judges, they may be re-appointed, but should they, on being reappointed, decline to accept the reappointment, and to return to the Yukon and perform their duties, then this pension shall cease. There are other provisions in the Bill made necessary by this reduction of the number of judges from three to one, including the provision that appeals from the Territorial Court shall be to the Court of Appeal for British Columbia. And though it is not now contained in the Bill, the intention is to propose by amendment a provision for the appointment of a deputy-judge in case of illness, absence, or other unforeseen cause, preventing the one judge from performing his duties.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The provisions of the Bill, as explained by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty), seem to be absolutely reasonable. The only question to be discussed is whether there is justification for the withdrawing of two judges from the bench. From the information I have, I think there is cause for that; but it would have been satisfactory to the House—and perhaps it can be done before my hon. friend goes on with the second reading of the Bill—to have statistics comparing the condition of business at the time of the appointment of these judges with that at the present time. Representations were made to the late government in the direction now proposed, and we had the matter under consideration, at the time we went out of office, but had not reached a conclusion. The provision that the judges may be called back to resume their duties, should the conditions again arise which prevailed at the time of their employment, seems perfectly reasonable and commendable. Would the Minister of Justice give the names of the two judges who are to be retired?

Mr. DOHERTY. Mr. Justice Dugas and Mr. Justice Craig. Mr. Justice Macaulay will remain. As to information showing the necessity, or at least the desirability, of withdrawing these judges, I shall be in a position to give that in detail before I ask the House to pass the Bill. In the meantime, I may say that all the judges of the Territorial Court concur in the view embodied in this measure. Furthermore, I have certificates from the clerk of the court that there is in reality not sufficient work for one judge.

Mr. LEMIEUX. To take the concrete case, what was the salary of Mr. Justice Dugas as judge?

Mr. DOHERTY. His salary was $5,000 with an additional living allowance of $5,000.

Mr. LEMIEUX. And now he will retire with a pension of——?

Mr. DOHERTY. Five thousand. We save the living allowance.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Has not the population decreased considerably in Dawson?

Mr. DOHERTY. Yes, very much. I may say that there are three judges in the territory and only four lawyers. That proportion, of itself, I think, will show that there is not the need for three judges.

Mr. TURRIFF. Why should not these judges be asked to take up work in some other part of the Dominion? Why make a discrimination in favour of judges as compared with other officials? If you find you have officials in the Yukon or anywhere else, and have not work for them to do there, you do not superannuate them on full salary—you bring them to some other part of the Dominion where there is work for them to do. Why not give these judges appointments in Ontario, Quebec, British Columbia, or some other place in which judges have to be appointed? It seems to me the proposal is a piece of extravagance not justified in any way by the conditions of the case. These judges have not been a very long time on the bench and have not earned that pension by their term of service. It would seem to an ordinary layman, applying common sense to the case, that if there is not work in the Yukon and if the salaries of these judges are to be continued, then the judges ought to be given work elsewhere, and so save the appointment of two new judges. This is another such example of extravagance as we had a little while ago. I see by a question asked on the 5th of February that the deputy Minister of Justice has just been paid a sum of nearly $10,000—to be exact, $9,809.24—for work done for the government, this being over and above his salary of $7,000 and his expenses.

Mr. SHARPE (North Ontario). Your party paid that money.

Mr. TURRIFF. I will attend to that in a minute. And in addition to this, the Deputy Minister of Justice is allowed to plead cases before the Privy Council by which he can earn large fees. My hon. friends on the other side say that our party paid that money. I beg to say that our party did nothing of the kind. That matter came before the late government time and again, recommended, I acknowledge, by the then Minister of Justice, and by several others ministers of justice of that government, but in no case was the recommendation agreed to by the government—it was turned down in every case. It remained to this government to pay over this large sum for work done for the government by this official who was already drawing a salary of $7,000 a year, and who was allowed to plead cases before the Privy Council and so earn large fees besides. I see that in the answer to the question, the Minister of Justice said that this claim had been recommended by his predecessor, Sir Allen Aylesworth. But he did not mention the fact that the government had refused to pay this account, and that the order in council for the payment was passed only after this government came into power. This case that we have now before us is another examples of the same thing. Two judges for whom there is no work where they happen to be located, are retired on full salary instead of being transferred to some place where their work is required.

Mr. DOHERTY. The hon. member (Mr. Turriff) perhaps does not quite understand the matter. These two judges were appointed to the position they occupy, and appointed to those positions for life. So that this government has no power to order them to go to work somewhere else, and if they chose to say: We do not desire to retire, they might stay on in the Yukon and draw their pay and their living allowance. They are perfectly within their right, they have been appointed to this particular position for life, and unless they choose to retire, the government has no power, under the law, to retire them.

Mr. TURRIFF. When they do retire could not my hon. friend appoint them to the present vacancies in Ontario?

Mr. DOHERTY. In the first place I am not aware whether these gentlemen are members of the bar of that province as they would have to be for appointment to the bench of that province. Furthermore we might appoint them, but we could not make them accept the appointment.

With regard to the other extravagance that has been laid at the door of the administration in paying to the Deputy Minister of Justice a bill which he presented for services rendered previous to 1910, I might say that that account was rendered under the administration of the late government and was for services rendered under an express agreement with succeeding Ministers of Justice in that administration and certified to by them. They further certified that in obtaining those services from the Deputy Minister of Justice at the rate at which he was paid the government had effected large savings as compared with the cost of retaining the services of outside counsel. I investigated the account and it appeared to me that the certificates of Sir Allen Aylesworth, Sir Charles Fitzpatrick and the Hon. David Mills were fully justified. Had I been asked for a petition of right on such an account I would not have hesitated to grant it. The country had contracted a debt and we had to pay it. Of course all of this is entirely apart from the question whether it is or is not desirable that a gentleman occupying the position of deputy minister should perform services for which he would receive payment apart from his salary. All of these services were rendered before the passing of the Act of 1910 which absolutely prohibited any civil servant receiving payment in any form for services rendered to the government outside of his salary and unless I assumed that my last two or three predecessors in office had absolutely misstated the facts in reference to these services their payment became a debt of this country.

Mr. NESBITT. In case of the appointment of a deputy judge would the minister use the services of one of these superannuated judges?

Mr. DOHERTY. If one of them remained in the Yukon and chose to accept the position of deputy judge that might be done, but without the living allowance I doubt if they would remain in the Yukon.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. With regard to the payment to Mr. Newcombe, my recollection is that my hon. friend is somewhat in error as to his facts. It is quite true that Sir Oliver Mowat, the first Minister of Justice under the late administration, certified an account to be paid to Mr. Newcombe, but that was an account for services which had been rendered under the previous administration, and of course the following Ministers of Justice certified to accounts for services rendered since we came into office, but the basis of the claim of Mr. Newcombe was an alleged agreement that when he took office under the previous administration he had stipulated that he would be allowed to practice and to perform such services as he did afterwards. I do not wish to put in controversy the work done by Mr. Newcombe who is a very good lawyer, an efficient Deputy Minister and a gentleman whose word must be taken, but it was, to say the least of it, an extraordinary piece of business that an agreement of that kind should be made by the minister of the day without there being any record of it. Moreover, I do not think that such an agreement could have been binding or legal and as to this I would appeal to the judgment of Mr. Newcombe himself. I would have preferred that my hon. friend had done as we did and left Mr. Newcombe to his recourse in law, an appeal to the Exchequer Court.

My hon. friend has chosen to do what the late government would not do. I think there was no cause whatever to make such a payment to Mr. Newcombe. The reason why we did not accept this agreement was the reason which was afterwards embodied in the statute, that no member of the civil service should receive any remuneration beyond his salary. If that was not the law in 1892, or 1893, when Mr. Newcombe was appointed, it was the spirit of the law, and, for these reasons, I think my hon. friend would be better advised if he left Mr. Newcombe to his recourse in the Court of Exchequer.

Mr. DOHERTY. I am not in a position to say whether the agreement went back to the administration that preceded that of my right hon. friend, but this I am in a position to say, that the succeeding Ministers of Justice, under the administration of my right hon. friend, carried on that system with full knowledge that that was the system under which the work was being done, and that, as I said before, if not all of them, certainly several of them, certified it to be a desirable arrangement and one under which the country was saving money. As to what the law was before the introduction of the statute, I suppose it is permitted to lawyers to differ, but I, myself, would have no doubt that, under the circumstances, Mr. Newcombe had a claim against the government and in support of that, it might be pointed out that, upon a question precisely of the taxation of costs in a case of this kind, the Supreme Court decided that there was a claim for a fee on the part of counsel, notwithstanding the fact that the work was done by a gentleman receiving a salary. I had the judgment before me, when the matter was dealt with, but I am not prepared to give all the details at the present moment.

Mr. PROULX. As there are two new high court judges to be appointed for Ontario, I would suggest to the Minister of Justice to appoint Mr. Justice Craig to the high court. I am sure he would accept that, because there is a difference of $3,000 in his salary which he would get. He was a good lawyer in Ontario before he was appointed to the bench in the Yukon and even if his qualifications were not sufficient for the high court bench, the minister could appoint him to the county court bench.

Mr. DOHERTY. I shall be pleased to give my very best consideration to the suggestion which my hon. friend has made.

Mr. TURRIFF. The Minister of Justice points out that these judges are appointed for life. I understand that the living allowance of $5,000 that they have been receiving in the past, is not a life matter. That was granted at the time because living in the Yukon was very expensive. I am quite satisfied that if my hon. friend wants these gentlemen, who are capable men and who are still young men, to take hold of other work, all he has to do is to drop off the living allowance and they will be pleased, I am sure, to take up work in other parts of the Dominion. With reference to the defence that the Minister of Justice makes for paying these large sums to the deputy Minister of Justice, surely it must have appeared to him that, if this account had been hanging fire for so many years, although it had been recommended by three or four Ministers of Justice, there must have been some good reason why it was not paid. What does the deputy minister get his salary for, if it is not to do the work of the department? It seems a very strange proceeding. Why should one deputy minister, who is paid an extra salary anyway, be allowed to charge for work done for his own department? Would you allow any other deputy minister to charge for the work that he does in his department, outside of his own salary? The Minister of Justice must have known that the late government had refused to pay that account. He must have known that there was some good ground for not paying that account. Here we have an official getting $7,000 a year and all his expenses when he travels over to the old country in connection with the work of the department and it is a remarkable thing that he should be allowed to draw big fees and in addition be paid his expenses while he is over there pleading cases for private parties. It seems to me to be a very strange thing that just as soon as this government come in they pay this amount that the late government refused to pay. However, the Minister of Justice must take the responsibility for that payment, but it will be pretty difficult to justify it to a great many people in the country, who do not earn anything like $7,000 a year, to whom $7,000 a year and all expenses seems a pretty good salary, equal to the salary of the Minister of Justice and of all his colleagues except the Prime Minister of Canada. In addition, Mr. Newcome is allowed to work for private individuals, to do a private practice and on top of that the government pays an account that the late government refused to pay.

Mr. THOMPSON (Yukon). Just before the resolution is adopted, I would like to offer an explanation as to the cause which gave rise to the necessity for this measure. When the Yukon was first settled in 1896, after the discovery of the Klondike, there were no laws governing placer mining in that country. Placer mining as an industry did not obtain to any considerable extent in Canada up to that time. There were some placer mines, but they were in provinces which had laws previous to the time that these provinces had entered confederation, such as British Columbia. That necessitated the making of laws governing the placer mining industry in the Yukon Territory, and for several years after the discovery of gold in 1896 the industry was governed altogether, not by laws, but by orders in council. There was a very great inrush of people to the goldfields, a great many claims were staked, boundaries overlapped and as a result a very great deal of litigation arose. The courts, in the first few years of the existence of the territory as a territory, were overworked. Subsequently all these regulations were gathered together, assorted and passed upon by the people of the territory, finally brought to parliament and passed through parliaparliament as the Yukon Placer Act, thus placing the chief industry of the Yukon on a more solid, permanent and better basis. As a result of that Act a great deal of the cause of the litigation of earlier years was removed. The consequence was that, although we had practically the same population, we had less litigation because our laws were in a better condition. The appeal was formerly from the Yukon court to the court in British Columbia, but after the court of the territory was established with three judges, appeals lay in Dawson city itself. The fortunes of a mining country like the Yukon may fluctuate and at the present moment I regret to say that we have not as many people in the Yukon as we had when that court was established. That, however, is not a criterion as to the future of the territory, as we hope, and we have every reason to believe, that before many years, we shall have as many people and perhaps more than we have had and that the fortunes of the Yukon will be improved. Many new finds have been made and other prospects are looming up, all of which lead to the hope, based upon the history of mining in past years, that we will have a population in the Yukon requiring this full court. There is in this Bill a clause which provides for the recall of these judges. By passing this measure the country saves $10,000 per year, and if we find that we have to reconstitute this court we may recall these two judges who are to be retired.

Resolution reported, read the second time, and agreed to.

Mr. DOHERTY moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 123) to amend the Yukon Act.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT.—CUSTOMS OUTSIDE SERVICE.

Hon. J. D. REID (Minister of Customs) moved second reading of Bill (No. 116) to amend the Civil Service Act.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. REID. This is a copy of a Bill introduced last session by the Hon. Mr. Paterson, my predecessor in office, and which was not passed owing to the dissolution. The Bill proposes to increase the salaries of some of the officers in the outside customs service such, as the collectors of ports and chief clerks. We introduce a class called senior chief clerks with a salary ranging from $2,200 to $2,800, and who will be employed only in the large cities like Montreal, Toronto and Winnipeg. The present system is to have a chief clerk for each department at these ports, but the business is so increasing that it has been found necessary to have a senior official over these clerks who must be a man of experience in the service and be the very best officer we can find in the port. The surveyors now get from $1,200 to $2,400 a year, and the Bill proposes to make the maximum $2,800. The assistant surveyors now get from $800 to $1,200, and in future they will get from $1,200 to $1,600. We provide for new officials called Dominion appraisers, who will receive a salary ranging from $2,200 to $2,600. At present we have an appraiser for each department, but we want a man at each large port who will see that the appraisers do their work properly and are qualified for the position. The Dominion appraiser will act as inspector of the other appraisers. Then we are introducing a new class called senior clerks whose salaries will range from $1,200 to $1,600. Under the present law these clerks cannot get a salary over $1,200, although they may have served for many years and be really deserving of better pay. If a senior clerk has reached the maximum of his salary and he is worthy of promotion, the Bill contemplates that he shall get a maximum salary of $1,600.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Mr. CARVELL. Can the minister tell me on what principle the salaries of customs collectors are based? I notice that they run from $300 to $4,500 and I have never been able to understand how a man can faithfully perform his duties and maintain himself and his family on the minimum salary of $300. Is the salary based on the amount of business done at the port or upon the number of clerks and outports under the collector, or is there any principle at all in connection with it?

Mr. REID (Grenville). As I understand, the system that has been in existence for many years has been based on the revenue of the port. The hon. member says that he can hardly understand a collector of customs receiving a salary of only $300; but suppose a port has to be opened at a small place where very little business is done besides the clearing of a few vessels. Yet there must be a collector, and his salary must be based on the work he has to do.

Mr. CARVELL. The minister uses the word 'collector' here. Does that include a sub-collector? For example, at Woodstock there is a collector of customs for all the northern portion of New Brunswick, and there are under him 8 or 9 sub-collectors, some of whom are compelled to spend all their time in the duties of their office, and are entitled to as much as a collector. That would not be the case if their salaries were based on revenue.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The salary of a sub-collector is based on the revenue collected at his outport, in the same way as the salary of a collector.

Mr. CARVELL. A sub-collector would come under the heading of collectors in the schedule?

Mr. REID (Grenville). Practically the same.

Mr. EMMERSON. As I understand, a sub-collector is one who is required to report to a collector near by. For instance, the city of Moncton has a collector, and there are sub-collectors at Shediac, Hillsborough, in Albert county and Dorchester, who are subject to the jurisdiction and the control of the collector at Moncton. At the outports where these sub-collectors are placed the revenues as a rule are not large, though the export business is somewhat large and there may be a great deal of shipping. For instance, at Hillsborough, in Albert county, there is an immense amount of shipping of plaster and other raw material, which is quarried and shipped to the United States and other countries. The imports at that port are comparatively small, and yet the sub-collector there is required to be in his office at all times during office hours, and his salary is certainly not commensurate with the time he has to devote to his official duties. The same is true of Baie Verte and Cape Tormentine, and other ports which are sub-ports of Sackville. In years past, when I felt called upon to interview the predecessor of my hon. friend in office, his uniform reply was that, regardless of the duties a man had to perform or the time he had to devote to those duties, the amount of revenue collected was the governing principle in fixing his salary. Now, I would strongly urge my hon. friend to make a reform in this matter. Take the collector at the port of Moncton, which has a population of 14,000 or 15,000. Under his jurisdiction are sub-collectors at Hillsborough, Cocaigne, Shediac, and Dorchester. He is responsible in a large measure for the oversight of these several sub-offices. It does seem to me that $1,400 or $1,500 is a paltry salary to give to a man holding such a responsible position. At the port of Sackville the salary is, I think, $800 or $900. Yet these officers are required to be in attendance at their offices during office hours, and oftentimes outside of office hours, in order to clear vessels so as to enable them to take advantage of the tide. If the hon. minister will inquire into the matter, I think he will realize that these officials have been in the past underpaid, and that a remedy should be applied. I hold that the criterion of a man's salary should not be the revenue of his office. Some of the most important ports in the province of New Brunswick, and also in the province of Nova Scotia, are ports where no great amount of importing is done, and where the officials are engaged in attending to export business. In these days the large importations into this country are made at the great centres, such as Montreal, Halifax, Quebec and other shipping ports. But the smaller ports are a necessity in the interests of navigation, and in the interests of trade and commerce. Officials are necessary, their time must be devoted to the duties of their offices, and they should be paid on a scale larger than has heretofore prevailed.

I would urge upon the attention of my hon. friend this feature of the question of salaries. I do not observe that under this Bill any particular provision is made for officials of that class, but I think there should be. It seems that these provisions are intended to apply to the larger ports of Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, St. John and Halifax. But the smaller ports of the country should also receive attention. Take the one to which my hon. friend from Carleton (Mr. Carvell) referred, the important port of Woodstock, being on the border of the United States the officials there are necessarily continuously applying themselves to their duties. The same can be said of Moncton, which is a centre, Charlottetown and other similar points. The officials at these places are not provided for by this Bill, if I read it aright, and it seems to me that the collectors and sub-collectors, particularly the latter, should be recognized. I believe it to have been the policy of the department in later years to combine a number of ports together under the control of one official who is known as the collector, the other officials being designated sub-collectors. And these collectors and sub-collectors certainly have important duties. I invite my hon. friend's favourable consideration to the point raised.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The hon. member is right about the extra work at the port when an outport is being attached to it. But the outport is really independent in a way. All that is done there is to send the cash and a copy of the entries to the port.

Mr. EMMERSON. That involves responsibility.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Certainly it does. Of course at the port the collector has more assistants in order to do that work. I agree with my hon. friend that the salaries are small, but it is hard to get any reasonable system by which you can regulate it. The hon. member mentioned a place called Cocaigne.

Mr. EMMERSON. It is in the county of Kent.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The sub-collector there only gets $300. That amount looks very small indeed, and any person can quite understand that a man could not live on $300; he should have more. That is how it appears on the face of it. But in such a small place as that, where there is really no business done, the officer generally has some other employment and his stipend from the customs is really extra. For example the officer may be a merchant.

Mr. EMMERSON. It is not permitted.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Yes. When the salary is less than $800 he is able to do other work outside.

Mr. EMMERSON. He is not permitted to deal in merchandise.

Mr. REID (Grenville). He may not be allowed to deal in merchandise, he is probably engaged in insurance or something of that kind. But take the case of Cocaigne, which the hon. gentleman has just mentioned, where the officer only gets $300. The man only made five entries and took in $2.19, and there was only one vessel arrived at the port during the year. You can quite understand with that amount of business it is hard to increase the salary of the officer.

Mr. EMMERSON. Refer to Hillsborough and see the number of vessels that arrived there.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Very well, take Hillsborough and compare it with the other place. At Hillsborough the subcollector gets $700 a year. The total collections at that port were $1,184.30, so the subcollector got one-half of that amount. He made 168 entries, or about one every other day.

Mr. EMMERSON. What about the clearances?

Mr. REID (Grenville). Fifty seagoing vessels arrived and 49 departed. Practically the same vessels went out that came in. Of coasting vessels, 35 arrived and 39 departed. So the hon. member can see that the business there is small.

Mr. EMMERSON. Still it is important.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I admit it is very important. Now the difficulty—

Mr. EMMERSON. That man certainly could not attend to any other business. He is compelled to keep his office open at all times, I know that personally.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I admit that, but at the same time, he might do some other business if he had his office open. There is no reason why he could not do so, and it is allowed in small places where the business is unimportant. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that these salaries are small; no person realises it more than I do. During the short time I have been in the office, I have had very many complaints about the small salaries. In cases of this kind, it is left to the minister to grant an increase in each case, in so far as he feels that the circumstances justify it. Last year my predecessor gave increases to 1,752 men—that was the number, if my memory serves me right. Now the hon. gentleman can see that even if you only grant an increase of $100 a year, it would mean a total of $175,000. The practice has been for the minister to place an amount of $200,000 in the estimates for the purpose of increasing salaries and opening new offices. I claim that amount is too small. Every time you open a new outport, it seems on an average an additional outlay of $1,000 a year. Some of the outports may yield a large revenue in which case, a subcollector is appointed. Probably at a salary of $1,000, if there is a lot of work to do, and the other disbursements for rent and so on, would bring the total up to $1,200 or $1,400. You may appoint another man at $500 or $600, so that when you average these expenditures up, it means about $1,000 for an outport. There are very many places throughout the Dominion applying for new outports, and think they are entitled to them; and along the new territory which is being opened up, it is absolutely necessary to open a lot of new outports. That takes a large portion of this appropriation. Personally, I feel that there are very many officials who should have larger increases than I am able to give them, and so far as I am concerned I shall grant to every man in the service, the very largest amount that I can possibly give him, from the lowest official up to the highest, out of the appropriation that is being voted at this session. The case of the collector at Moncton, will be considered with the rest. Personally, I would be very pleased to give him the very best consideration I can, under the circumstances. Under these increases a man gets a raise of $50 to $100, and he finds it hard to realise that where the appropriation has to be divided among a couple of thousand officials, the amount is very small that would be available for each man. I know officers that are applying for increases that should have $200 or $300 a year more, and I would be glad to give it to them if I could. They claim the cost of living has gone up and that they should have a substantial increase when they have a family to support. On the small stipend such as the hon. member has mentioned, it is undoubtedly hard to live. Yet the money that was voted last year is exhausted, and when we come down with the amount the same as last year, it is hard to give the increases that have been expected. I can only say, I will do the best I can to give every deserving officer in the service, the best increase I can, under the circumstances.

Mr. EMMERSON. I appreciate the spirit in which my hon. friend the Minister of Customs (Mr. Reid, Grenville) approaches the consideration of the question. I ask him to bear in mind, as justification of the course I take, that our revenues have immensely expanded and that trade, commerce and navigation have had a like expansion. All this means the opening of new ports. It is necessary for the protection of the revenue, for the very fact that there is a port of entry in a certain district has the same effect as the placing of a policeman on a beat, such an officer may not have much to do, but the fact of his being there has a deterrent effect upon evildoers. Therefore, it seems to me that the justification for the course that my hon. friend, I know, would like to follow and which, I believe, he will follow as far as circumstances permit, is to be found in the conditions prevailing in Canada to-day.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am glad that the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) has brought this matter up, for I believe there is a great deal in it. I would draw attention to another feature of the case, to which, I think, he has not referred. I have in mind a place in Ontario where there is a very large amount of imports for a town of its size. In this town of 2,000 population the imports would probably amount to $800,000 or $900,000 a year. Possibly two-thirds, I might even say three-quarters, of those imports would be of free goods. But all these goods, free or dutiable, have to be passed by the customs officer, and he must be in attendance. If the salary of the officer is fixed according to the revenue, there would be a certain unfairness to the officer, for he must be in attendance during business hours to make these entries even when the result does not show in the revenue receipts. I think some other plan might be adopted to equalize these salaries. I hope the minister will take the matter into consideration, and I am sure the hon. gentleman desires to do justice to all concerned.

Mr. LEMIEUX. How many offices are involved, and how many new officers would be appointed, and what is the total annual charge?

Mr. REID (Grenville). The total estimated increase is $10,000; and the officers to which these increases will apply are 13 inspectors, 7 surveyors, 13 appraisers and 30 clerks.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Are all these in the outside service?

Mr. REID (Grenville). Yes.

Mr. GUTHRIE. In section 2, 'other classes' are mentioned. What is the distinction between 'higher classes' and 'other classes'?

Mr. REID (Grenville). If the hon. member will refer to schedule D of the Bill, he will see the word 'higher classes,' then 'technical officers' and 'other classes.'

Mr. GUTHRIE. The Bill would apply to places like Guelph, Berlin and Stratford?

Mr. REID (Grenville). Yes.

Mr. GUTHRIE. And I understand that this is practically the scale of remuneration proposed in the Bill that was introduced by the former Minister of Customs, Mr. Paterson. I think the Bill is in the right direction. We have places in Ontario where quite large amounts are returned to the treasury and a very heavy responsibility attaches to the collector and his staff; and the salaries now paid, I believe, are entirely inadequate. I was just going to rise when my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) took the floor, and mention what he suggested, that the revenue collected is not always a fair guide in fixing the salary. I know offices in my portion of the province of Ontario where fully half the imports are on the free list. The work to be performed by the collector is just as great in regard to free imports as in regard to dutiable imports. The responsibility is not so great, of course, because the actual cash is not handled. In Guelph, a city of about 17,000 population, the collections run to about $225,000. The collector there, I believe, receives $1,800 a year. He has been there many years, having been appointed in 1894 or 1895. He is a first-class business man and gives personal and constant attention to his office. The salary paid seems to me ridiculously small for the work done. I have, time and time again, taken up this matter with the former minister, with a view to having his salary placed at a minimum of $2,000. I trust that under the provisions of this Bill the minister will see his way to grant an increase not only in the Guelph office but in all offices in western Ontario similarly situated. As to the principle upon which the minister is to proceed, would it not be possible to devise a scheme by which the inspector would report from time to time? He must visit the offices periodically and make a thorough examination, and I think he would be the proper man to report.

Mr. CARVELL. I quite approve of this Bill and I concur in the remarks that have been made as to the great difficulty any minister must have in a department of this kind in satisfying and at the same time doing justice to a horde of officials. I think the minister is in error when he says that a collector has no greater responsibility on account of having a number of officers under him. A collector, especially along the boundary line, as in the county I have the honour to represent, must be constantly on the alert to guard against the very frequent cases of petty smuggling. I know the collector in Woodstock makes frequent trips all over the district extending 100 to 200 miles, to discuss these matters with the sub-collectors. His duties are very different from those of a collector who sits at a port to register the clearing of vessels. I doubt if the minister is correctly informed, when he says that the word collector would cover sub-collectors. In the Customs Act the word 'collector' is defined thus:

"Collector" means the collector of the customs at the port or place intended, or any person lawfully deputed, appointed or authorized to do the duty of collector thereat.

I do not think that would cover a sub-collector fifty miles away from the port, and I fear that the minister may not be able to consider the claims and the rights of sub-collectors under this, and there are five times as many sub-collectors as collectors. This would apply also to tide waiters and preventive officers. Take a preventive officer living at the border. There again you have an entirely different class of duties from those of a man stationed 100 miles away. The man on the border is on the go from Monday morning until Saturday night in order to prevent smuggling and, shrewd and earnest as they may be, they cannot prevent it altogether. Merchants complain that these officers are not doing their duty, that their neighbours are smuggling goods constantly and that nothing is done. I know men who devote their whole energy to travelling up and down the country to prevent smuggling who receive the paltry sum of $600 a year. The duty of the preventive officer is to prevent the bringing in of goods, and if his salary is made to depend on the volume of collections it is not a fair basis. Nor is it fair that a clerk who has to devote all his time to office-work should not have his salary increased merely because the collections at his port have not increased. I hope the minister will be able to give us some rule or basis on which these salaries will be increased from time to time under this Bill.

Mr. EMMERSON. I mentioned the port of Moncton simply because I am familiar with the conditions there, but my remarks would apply to every port and all officials similarly situated. The importations of raw cotton at Moncton are direct and no duty is paid. Large quantities of hard pine timber and anthracite coal are imported in that section of country and the free goods imported certainly exceed in value those upon which duty is paid. The larger dutiable imports are made at the larger centres of the Dominion.

Mr. CARVELL.

Mr. ROBB. Possibly there is no member of the House better qualified to judge the value of the outside service in connection with the customs service than the Minister of Customs. He has lived close to the border, where there is always considerable importation going on, and to-day it is reassuring to have the minister tell us that so far as he is concerned justice will be done to every officer in the department. That is somewhat different from the story we hear from his friends in the country. There we hear that promotion will come from the broadaxe. I want to do the minister the justice of saying that in the county I have the honour to represent so far the axe has not moved and I hope it will not be used in that county; there is no justification for it.

Two of the oldest, and as good officers as there are in the service, are Conservatives, appointed by the political friends of the Minister of Justice. One of these officers was appointed by Sir John Rose, and the other was twice the Conservative candidate in the county. I do not think that the customs officers in the country have had the same consideration as officers in the large centres. Looking over the list of collectors in Quebec for the year 1908, I find that at Abercorn the officer is receiving a salary of $900 a year. He was appointed in 1877. At Athelstan, Huntingdon county, where the collector has under him four or five men, and where at times the business is so great that they send out relief officers from the cities, the collector was in receipt of a salary, in 1908, of $800. I submit that this salary is not sufficient for a man in an office of that character. In the town of Hemmingford, the oldest officer in the service in Quebec, a man who was appointed in 1868, is only getting a salary of $750. I hope the minister will carry out his promise and give greater consideration to the officers in the country districts. As my hon. friend from Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Carvell) has pointed out, these officers are continually on duty, and they are at considerable expense. They have to keep horses, they, at times, have to drive at night, and they are the most deserving officers in the service. At the large ports where goods come in ships, a man is compelled to make his entries, but at these frontier ports the officer must continually be on the watch, and if there is any class of officer in the public service who is deserving of consideration it is the country customs house collector.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I would like to ask the Minister of Customs to give some information regarding the dismissal of Mr. Lyman C. Smith, of Oshawa, Ont. I do not know anything about the matter or the circumstances relating to the case, but I had the curiosity the other day to read the papers which the minister had placed on the table, and it seemed to me to be rather an extraordinary case. This man appears to have been dismissed because he expressed himself as being in favour of a pure election. I think it is a case that the minister ought to give some information about to the House.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Answering the hon. member for Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Carvell) first in reference to sub-collectors, I understand that the officers of the department have been appointed sub-collectors under the section he has read. Of course, they are appointed by order in council similarly to the collectors, and for that reason we feel that the sub-collectors should really be treated on the same basis as collectors in so far as their salaries are concerned. As far as my hon. friend from Wellington (Mr Guthrie) is concerned, I would say that this does apply to Guelph and places like that. This will enable clerks who have been in an office like that of Guelph for many years, who probably have families, who have done their work well and are deserving of promotion, but who cannot at present go higher than $1,200, to be increased up to as high as $1,600. With reference to what my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) has said, I agree with him that in places where the business of a port or outport is such that there is a great deal of work on account of the free importation of goods, such work ought to be taken into consideration. Of course, it is taken into consideration, and no doubt has been in the past in fixing the salaries of the officers at those different places.

It has been the custom in the past for the minister to give an increase when he thinks it deserved. There is no doubt about it that I must take the advice of the inspectors and the commissioner who have knowledge of the conditions at the different ports, who know the officers and the service they are giving, and act with them in coming to a conclusion as to what the increases should be. I shall certainly try to do justice to every officer in the Customs Department. With reference to the question asked by the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) as to the dismissal of an official in South Ontario, I may say that in the first place this collector had never been appointed by order in council. He was simply acting as collector. If I remember aright, my predecessor sent this order in council over and it was returned to him so that this man was never permanently appointed. However, be that as it may, this official acknowledged in a letter that he wrote to myself that he had made remarks that were certainly offensive to the candidate who was running. I took it for granted from the letter he wrote himself that he really admitted that he had made remarks that were offensive. My hon. friend knows that if a member of parliament makes a charge that an official has been offensive it has been the rule laid down by both sides that we are justified in dismissing that official. That is the rule that I acted upon. Where we have the member's own recommendation I consider that the proper course is to act upon it. In the case of this gentleman in the town of Oshawa, I think it was, the member who demanded his dismissal. With reference to other dismissals throughout the country, my hon. friend from Carleton mentioned that even in his county he expected they would all be dismissed.

Mr. CARVELL. I said if they kept on at the present rate.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I do not know what the hon. member meant by that, but I think he must be aware that if there have been any dismissals in his county, I have not sanctioned them without having a full investigation and with out a report from the commissioner confirming the charges of partisanship.

Mr. CARVELL. I do not know about that. I take the minister's word for it, and I will presume that he has had a report.

Mr. REID (Grenville). That has been the policy that I have been following throughout. I have been holding investigations and there have been no dismissals with the exception of two or three——

Mr. SINCLAIR. Did the minister have any investigation in this case to which I have called his attention?

Mr. REID (Grenville). No, because a member of the House asked for his dismissal on account of active partisanship. That rule has never been questioned by either side of the House. The member representing the constituency claimed that this man was an active partisan and I acted on his statement.

Mr. SINCLAIR. The dismissal appears to have been based upon a letter written by this Mr. Lyman Smith. There are three letters in the correspondence, one to the Prime Minister, one to the Minister of Customs, and the third to Mr. Smith, member for that constituency. I have been unable to find anything in Mr. Lyman Smith's letter to justify his dismissal, I will read it:

Ottawa, November 21, 1911.

Hon. Dr. J. D. Reid, M.P.,
Minister of Customs,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir,—I have received the following from Mr. Lyman Smith, collector of customs, Ottawa, viz.:—

'Oshawa, Nov. 15, 1911.

'William Smith, Esq., M.P.,
'House of Commons,
'Ottawa, Ont.

'Dear Sir,—The 'Indicator' to-day reports that at a meeting in Oshawa at which you were present, Dr. Raiser said I should be removed from office as an offensive partisan. I have thought best to give you a plain statement of facts:

'(1) I was not appointed because of political services.

'(2) I never contributed a cent for any election.

'(3) I never even sat on any political platform in my life.

'(4) I never spoke at any meeting.

'(5) I never was in a party committee room in my life, nor attended any such meeting.

'(6) I never canvassed for votes, nor spoke to any man with any intention of influencing his vote.

'(7) I attended four political meetings—two on each side. I took no part in any demonstration. I never even cheered for any candidate or speaker.

'(8) As the election was the one subject of conversation, I conversed with perhaps a dozen whom I chanced to meet, and expressed my views of the question at issue.

'(9) I hold certain views in regard to the conduct of elections and expressed these views to private parties and only in private conversation. I did not hesitate to express them, but it was with no intention of influencing votes. I spoke to both friends and opponents.

'(10) I do not believe in canvassing for votes. I do not believe in a party fund. The bare expenses of hiring halls, printing, and such absolute needs, should be met, and I think, by the State, for all legitimate expenses are for the good of the country or should be. I do not think voters should be carried to the poll, except old and feeble folk, and the expense of this should be borne by the state. I do not believe in parades or demonstrations. I never took part in one. I think there should be open and fair discussion. Public meetings should be held to inform the people of the questions at issue, then the voters should go quietly to the polls of their own accord and exercise their franchise without fear or favour.

'(11) The head and front of my offending seems to be that I stated to John McCulloch that I considered the right of the franchise so sacred that I would never vote for any man, no matter who he was, or what party, or what the issue, who had proved to have been concerned in the giving of money for bribes. I stated that I had on a few occasions unknowingly voted for such, but I would never so vote if I knew it. If pure men did not offer themselves I would not vote at all. I further stated that in my opinion a man that had done this should not have a vote himself, or be permitted to hold any office. This view was stated in general terms, and I have often made the same statement when an election was pending. Remember, please, that all this was said in private conversation only.

'I know that customs officers are supposed to take no part in politics; but I judged we lived not in Russia but in Canada, where a man could express his views privately to his friends.

'I have done nothing that I wish to deny or conceal. I never considered you anything but a friend, and was persuaded you entertained like feelings towards me. Therefore, there could be no personal animus in this matter. It was merely a statement of my principles.

'I am, dear sir,
'Yours truly,
(Sgd.) LYMAN C. SMITH.

Mr. Smith was appointed to the customs of Oshawa about a year ago, and in many ways was very active during the election which closed on September 21. I think the above letter would be all that was necessary to cause his removal, which I would recommend to be done as soon as possible.

Yours very truly,
(Sgd.) WILLIAM SMITH.

The answer of the Minister to Mr. Lyman Smith's letter, was as follows:

Ottawa, 6th Dec., 1911.

Lyman C. Smith, Esq., B.A.,
Acting collector of Customs,
Oshawa, Ont.

Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 2nd inst., respecting a charge of partisanship against you, and have carefully noted your representations in the matter.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) J. D. REID,
Minister of Customs.

The Prime Minister appears to have turned the letter addressed to him which is almost an exact copy of the letter to Wm. Smith, M.P., over to the Minister of Customs, and the next one is a letter from Mr. John McDougald, the Commissioner of Customs, to Mr. Lyman Smits, as follows:

Ottawa, 27th Dec., 1911.

Lyman C. Smith, Esq.,
Acting Commissioner of Customs,
Oshawa, Ont.

Sir,—In my letter of 30th December, 1910, authorizing your employment as acting collector of customs at Oshawa, Ont., it was stipulated that this employment may be discontinued at any time at the discretion of the Minister of Customs.

I am now directed to inform you, by order of the Minister of Customs, that, on account of political partisanship, your employment as acting collector of customs will be discontinued and shall terminate on the 30th December, 1911, at the close of which day you will deliver the books and other customs property in your charge to the Inspector of Customs who hands you this letter.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) JOHN McDOUGALD,
Commissioner of Customs.

Now, there is nothing whatever in that letter of Mr. Lyman Smith which seems to justify his dismissal. I do not know the circumstances more than what appears in the correspondence, but this man was certainly not a partisan. According to his own story he is an extraordinary man; he does not seem to have taken the usual interest that men everywhere take in public affairs, and he appears to be under the impression himself that he was dismissed because he made the statement that he did not approve of bribery at elections. Surely that would not be a good reason for dismissing this official, and that is the reason which appears to have been acted upon in this case after having read the correspondence, I ask the minister to give an explanation.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I did not know that this matter was coming up this afternoon, and I am not prepared to go into it, but now that the letters have been read, I may say that the letter of this man, as read, certainly justified his dismissal, and I acted accordingly.

Mr. GUTHRIE. What portion of that letter justified his dismissal?

Mr. REID (Grenville). The whole letter. The man himself admits that he was practically canvassing.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Oh no.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Well, it amounts to that; he says he went around expressing his opinion to private individuals.

Mr. SINCLAIR. And the opinions he expressed is an opinion that is shared in by everybody in this country, namely that we should have pure elections.

Mr. REID (Grenville). He attended meetings and expressed his opinion, and certainly took part in the elections. If the hon. gentleman wishes to bring the question up on the estimates I will be prepared to deal with it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The Minister of Customs has, with, shall I say painful frankness—it is hard to know how to express it—admitted that upon that letter he dismissed this man. It is a letter of high moral tone, a letter, the contents of which, no man could possibly object to. Because that man to one elector expressed the opinion that——

Mr. BORDEN. I have no objection to the hon. member discussing this matter at the proper time, but I do not think it is in order to do so on this Bill.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend is a little late in rising to the point of order, as the Minister of Customs has chosen to discuss the dismissal and has stated the grounds on which he dismissed this man. I submit that it is entirely relevant to the Bill to discuss the tenure of these offices, the grounds on which they can be dispensed with, and the rights and privileges of these collectors. I am inclined to think that my right hon. friend is endeavouring to confine the discussion to too narrow limits.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think the point of order is well taken. I do not see any relevancy to section 1 in the discussion of the dismissal of an officer.

Mr. TOBIN. I would like to ask the Minister of Customs what decision he has arrived at with regard to Mr. James Pender, the subcollector at Windsor Mills. An investigation was held some time ago by Dr. Shurtliff, of Coaticook, who was the organizer of the Conservative party in the eastern townships; but so far, Mr. Pender has not heard what decision the minister has come to or whether he is to be dismissed or not.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I have not the papers here, and do not know what the situation is. I did not know anything of that kind would come up.

Mr. CARVELL. Does the minister intend the officers provided for in 39a and 39b, that is, senior chief clerks and senior clerks, to come under the inside or the outside service? Section 39 of the Civil Service Act refers only to officials of the outside service.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The side-note on the Bill says it is for the promotion of a chief clerk in the outside service, and that is what is intended.

Mr. CARVELL. The marginal reference is not an enacting part of the Bill.

Mr. BORDEN. I think my hon. friend's suggestion is a proper one, and that we had better insert the words 'in such service' in line 10, after the word 'clerk' and in line 16 after the word 'clerk.' It will then be well understood that this applies to the outside service.

Section amended accordingly.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I read in the papers this morning that the hon. Mr. Lougheed, the leader of the government in the Senate, stated yesterday that it was the intention of the government shortly to put the outside service in the inside service. Did he speak authoritatively?

Mr. BORDEN. I have not seen the observation, which my hon. friend attributed to Mr. Lougheed; but I do not imagine that it went beyond what has already been stated on more than one occasion in this House, that it is the intention and desire of the government to extend the provisions of the Civil Service Amendment Act of 1908 to the outside service as far as may be practicable, and as rapidly as may be practicable. But of course it must be understood that before we do that, there would have to be inquiry and consideration and investigation in every department. It cannot be done in a moment or without consideration; but we have already said that that is the policy and intention of the present administration; and indeed I think the late administration had something of that kind in contemplation during the last few years.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). I approve of the principle of increasing the salaries of the officers mentioned in this Bill. This Bill refers particularly to collectors and inspectors and makes provision for the payment to them of such salaries as will be adequate and sufficient to keep them in a reasonable way. By so doing I believe you will attract better men into the civil service of the country. But there is a class of government officials throughout the country whose needs I submit, are just as great as the needs of the inspectors, collectors and inspectors of customs throughout the country, and even greater, I refer to the ordinary customs officials, for instance in the office of Regina, or in the customs offices in similar cities and towns in western Canada, and I believe the same argument will apply to towns in eastern Canada although perhaps not to so great an extent. The cost of living in western Canada, as well as in eastern Canada, has increased tremendously. I know instances of customs officials resident in Canada to-day who are not getting sufficient allowance to actually subsist upon. I submit that is not a fair position to put any government official in. The revenue of this country is vastly in excess of the current expenditure at the present time, and I think that part of that surplus might very well be expended by the government in making a general increase to the civil service, if not in the actual salary at least in the living allowance. The living allowance granted in the west to many of these officials is certainly not adequate. My own experience in connection with government offices in western Canada has been that the only man who can be got to enter a government position, outside of the better class of offices, is a man who is temporarily out of employment, and who says: I will go into the position for two or three months in the hope of getting something better outside and then I will leave the service. If you want ability in the government service throughout the whole of Canada, if you wish to secure efficient and capable men who will devote their lives to the service of the government, you must pay them salaries adequate to their positions and equal to the salaries they can obtain in similar employment elsewhere I think at the present time we are not paying sufficient salaries to the ordinary clerks throughout the country. Take for instance in my own part of the country, the wages paid in every calling in life, from the ordinary labourer up, have increased during the past three or four years, and increased adequately with the cost of living in the west. The only calling in which the remuneration has not been increased has been in the civil service of Canada. I recognize, of course, that the class of men to whom I am calling the attention of the House do not come under the provisions of this Bill. At the same time I would ask the Minister of Customs to direct his attention to the ordinary customs officials throughout the country, and if possible give them adequate salaries to live upon. In the city of Regina it would take half the salary obtained by the average customs clerk to pay the rent of an ordinary house, and that is not a fair position to put these officials in.

Mr. BORDEN. I realize that there is a great deal of force in what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Martin, Regina) has said, not only in regard to the customs service but with regard to other government departments. He will appreciate the fact, however, that there has not yet been opportunity to take that matter up in a very comprehensive way. I think something has been done in the Post Office and Customs Departments, and I can only ask my hon. friend to take what we are doing now in respect to these customs officers as an earnest of what we may look forward to doing in placing the public service of the country upon an effective basis. I appreciate entirely the truth of the hon. gentleman's remarks that you cannot have an efficient and stable public service, unless you give to the men who are employed by the government a reasonable salary, having regard to the positions in which they are placed. I am afraid, however, that we shall not be able during the present session to take the matter up in the comprehensive way which my hon. friend suggests, but I can assure him that we appreciate the force of his remarks, and that we will hope at some subsequent session to bring in a measure which I trust will be along the lines which he has pointed out to-day.

Mr. CARVELL. I did not exactly catch the explanation of the Minister of Customs when he was referring to the amount of increased expenditure, which these augmentations of salary would involve. Did I understand him to say that the increase would amount to $10,000 as regards the whole of Canada? I sincerely trust that all the customs officials of Canada will be brought under this Bill. Some doubt has been expressed as to whether it applies to sub-collectors, but I am inclined to think that these officials will come under the provisions of the measure. I hope the amount of increase will be more than $10,000; if not it will surely be very inadequate. I want to tell my hon. friend that when the late government were in power the members on this side pleaded with them to increase the salaries of customs officials, perhaps not as publicly as to-day. but we did it just the same, and we urged that that increase should apply to the whole service.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is not the first occasion on which I have heard the hon. member for Moosejaw refer to subjects somewhat akin to this. I only rise to express my surprise that that hon. gentleman, as well as the hon. member from Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Carvell) have not in the past complained of these very same matters. They have been sitting here for some years without criticising these small salaries to government officers, and it is only when a change of administration takes place they suddenly come to the conclusion that something is radically wrong. I do not think it is fair for these hon. gentlemen to cast reflections upon the government now in power, when they have been supporting in the past the very thing which they now condemn.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). Did the hon. gentleman refer to me when he spoke of the hon. gentleman from Moosejaw?

Mr. HENDERSON. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I mean the hon. member from Regina. I was thinking of the larger town when I spoke.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). I may say to the hon. gentleman that on many occations—on several occasions at least—in this House during the past three or four years, I did advocate a general increase in salary in the outside service. If the hon. gentleman would take the trouble to look at 'Hansard' he will find that is the case. I am not attempting at the present time to cast any aspersions on the present government. I do not think I put the matter at all in that way.

Mr. BORDEN. Hear, hear.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). I do not see why the hon. gentleman should introduce the matter of politics into the question at the present time, because I did not discuss the matter at all in that spirit.

Mr. HENDERSON. I simply rose to express my surprise that nothing had been done in this matter previously, or that these hon. gentlemen had not succeeded in getting the government that they supported so faithfully to do what they now ask should be done.

Mr. CARVELL. The hon. gentleman is not aware of all that was done.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I wish to correct the impression that nothing was done by the previous government because my recollection is to the contrary. The minister will remember that a few years ago an increase was given by his predecessor to the customs officials. It was not a large increase, but it was pretty general, I think, and it was supported by the gentlemen who sat behind the government of that day. There were many of us, however, who thought that the increase was rather small.

Mr. HENDERSON. Not enough.

Mr. SINCLAIR. That is a different thing, as to whether it was sufficient or not.

Section agreed to.

On the motion for the adoption of the preamble.

Mr. McKENZIE. (North Cape Breton). I would like to know clearly from the minister if he is fixing the amount of $300, which appears in this schedule, as the minimum salary. Does it mean that any person engaged in the customs service as collector or subcollector is to receive a minimum of $300 a year?

Mr. REID (Grenville). No, we are paying even less than $300. I am not making any change in this, but I am simply continuing the terms of the old Act.

Mr. CARVELL. I thought it was $300 to $4,000.

Mr. REID (Grenville). No, I think that the year before last an amendment of the Civil Service Act made it $300 to $4,500. But even less than $300 is paid.

Mr. McKENZIE. That is why I asked. I am aware of some officials receiving less than $300, and I was in hopes that the intention was to fix $300 as a minimum.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I am only carrying out the same policy as my predecessors, so far as salaries are concerned, until I can look into the situation. I have had no time to do that yet.

Mr. McKENZIE. It seems to me that if a man is appointed at all he should receive not less than $300. I have listened with great attention to the discussion and concur, so far as my own part of the country is concerned, in what has been said. We have in Cape Breton three very important ports, Glace Bay, Sydney, and North Sydney. I do not know whether this Bill will affect officials at those centres or not. But there are very large transactions in these ports. There is the export of coal, iron and steel, and large imports of iron ore from Newfoundland and other places, as well as the general business, so that the duties devolving upon these officers are very important, and their work is very heavy. I hope the attention given to the officers in such places does not necessarily depend on what is said by representatives here, but I wish to mention these important ports of my county.

Mr. HUGHES (Kings, Prince Edward Island). There are ports in which the revenues are very small. The representatives of inland places seem to think that there is no need for a collector where there is an extremely small revenue. But I suppose it is not the intention of the minister to close the small offices.

Mr. REID (Grenville). No, that is not my intention.

Mr. HUGHES (Kings, Prince Edward Island). Those offices are very important for the prevention of smuggling, assistance to shipping, and otherwise.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Of course.

Bill as amended reported.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT—POST OFFICES.

House went into committee on the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to amend the Civil Service Act by providing that assistant postmasters in post offices in which the postage collections exceed $1,000,000 may be paid a minimum salary of $2,800, with annual increases of $100 up to a maximum salary of $3,500, and that, if the Governor in Council so determines, such provision may be made applicable to assistant postmasters appointed prior to the first day of April, 1912.—Mr. Pelletier.

Hon. L. P. PELLETIER (Postmaster General). This resolution will be applicable only to the assistant postmasters of Montreal and Toronto. As the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux) knows, they are two first-class officers. They are given salaries running from $2,800 to $3,500. The Toronto post office is the one in which there is the largest revenue of the whole country, and Montreal comes next. The revenue of the Montreal post office is going up by leaps and bounds, as also is that of Toronto. We think these officers are deserving of the recognition here given. And this is the sole object of the resolution.

Mr. LEMIEUX. If the resolution has for its object only to increase the salaries of these two deserving officials, I very heartily concur in it. Speaking more especially for Montreal post office—with the work of which I am more familiar, though during my career as Postmaster General I visited the Toronto office a number of times—I can assure the House that Mr. Gaboury is the 'deus ex machina' there. He has accomplished great reforms in the office. And besides, I am aware that he has received very good offers from different financial institutions, banks especially, but these he has refused because he is a faithful servant of His Majesty. He could have had a much better salary if he had accepted any of these offers. Such men ought to be encouraged. The gentleman in Toronto who occupies a similar position is also a most valuable officer. The post office in Montreal has, under ordinary circumstances, more work than any other office. I do not refer only to the letter delivery in the city, but also to the work connected with the European mail which is concentrated in the Montreal office, both for the incoming steamers as they reach Rimouski and for the steamers leaving Rimouski and Quebec for Europe.

The work is tremendous, there is an immense number of bags and baskets, and the sorting of the European mail generally is of great importance. Mr. Gaboury has reorganized that service to perfection and I am glad to say that under his régime in Montreal we have had fewer thefts in the post office and in the postal service generally than ever before. In fact he has the full confidence of the board of trade, and generally speaking, of the business community of Montreal. I am very glad that the Postmaster General should have thought of raising the salaries of the assistant postmasters of Montreal and Toronto. They well deserve it.

Mr. PELLETIER. I cannot afford to do any more.

Resolutions reported, read the second time and agreed to.

Mr. PELLETIER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 124) to amend the Civil Service Act.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

EXTENSION OF BOUNDARIES—MANITOBA.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 115) to provide for the extension of the boundaries of the province of Manitoba.—Mr. Borden.

On section 4, financial provisions.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Shall section 4 be adopted?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The question is on the amendment. If any hon. gentleman desires to hear what the amendment is, I might repeat it; but it simply is that the Governor in Council may give interest upon the proposed debt allowance to the identical amount named within the Bill, but that before the amount shall be so fixed there shall be a conference of the Premiers of the different provinces called by the federal government to consider the matter and also to consider the question with respect to any increase in the debt allowance which would be just and equitable to make to the other provinces of Canada in connection with the increase in the debt allowance which the government propose granting to Manitoba. I desire to repeat what I said last evening, that this amendment seems to be so reasonable, so well calculated to do justice to the other provinces, that I am surprised it is not readily accepted. It will cause no delay. It has been stated by my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Hazen) I think, that there is a conference of the Premiers of the province to be held early in the summer. This payment, unless it is to be dated back, in the ordinary course, would not commence until the 1st of July. It does not mean therefore, practically any delay, and I am sure that after this conference had been held and the views of the different provinces ascertained the Governor in Council would be in a position to come to a conclusion that would be very much more apt to be satisfactory to the provinces and would be much more apt to be fair and just to the provinces, than this proposition now before the committee.

Mr. TURGEON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be permitted to say a few words of appreciation of the statements made and the sentiments expressed by my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Pugsley) when he moved his amendment yesterday. This amendment does not interfere with the operation of the Bill. It is only requesting that the grant made, or offered to the province of Manitoba in connection with this extension of territory be delayed for a while until the suggested conference shall have been held. We are not asking you to take away anything from the amount allotted by the government; we are only asking that further consideration of the general question may be given by such a conference. There has been a tendency during this debate to allege that Liberal speakers who have presented objections to this proposition now before the committee have displayed a spirit of reluctance to allow the people of Manitoba the full enjoyment of what they are entitled to. I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, and every member of this House, as I can assure the whole country, that no man in the maritime provinces regrets the prosperity of Manitoba or any other prairie province. No man has more admiration for the people of Manitoba, whose activity, intellectual as well as physical, seems to be stimulated and enlivened by the invigorating atmosphere which pervades the country in which they have made their homes. The people of the maritime provinces have generously contributed to the purchase of these western territories for the common welfare of the Dominion and it is gratifying to us to see that our children have gone forth from Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island to assist in the development of that great west, have reflected credit upon their native provinces, and that those of them who have been elected to represent their fellowmen, young or old, are to be found in the first rank among the members of this parliament. Certainly I wish to insist upon this point that, whatever position may be taken or whatever suggestion may be made, it is always in the spirit of the greatest liberality of the east towards the west. No greater builders of this nation have been in this parliament than the great men from New Brunswick or the illustrious Howe, who foresaw sixty years ago in that great western country what we have realized to-day and whose hopes in regard to that rich heritage have been fulfilled to a greater degree than even he could possibly have expected they would be.

A suggestion has been made by my hon. friend from St. John that this Bill should stand until we have a conference of the Premiers of the provinces to consider the rights of the other provinces in connection with this increase in subsidy—it is nothing else—given to Manitoba. I have always been a generous admirer of the constitution. It is our admiration of the constitution which has made the people of New Brunswick as good Canadians as they have been. We have suffered, in so far as the Catholic minority is concerned, from the terms of confederation, but our sufferings perhaps have only rendered dearer to us that constitution which we cherish today knowing that it will ever stand for the rights which have been acquired in every part of the Dominion. This Bill today is merely a usurpation of the rights given at the last provincial conference to the different provinces. There had been an agitation going on for years amongst the provinces to secure an increase in the subsidies in order to enable the provincial governments to better administer the affairs and develop the resources under their control. We all know that with the increased revenue of this government the provinces have increased expenditure, and, therefore, it was nothing but natural that the amount of money fixed by the Fathers of Confederation should be insufficient to meet the present day needs of the provinces. A conference was called by the then leader of the government, the right hon. leader of the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), to meet in 1906, and the provinces were allotted a certain amount each according to the unanimous resolution which was passed. As I stated a few days ago, I regret that this amount was not made larger, because I feel that the time will soon come when the provinces will have to come again and ask for a further increase of these subsidies which at present are not sufficient to enable them to administer their many departments according to the needs of the time. I would have expected that this government, when enlarging the territory of Manitoba, and giving an increased subsidy to that province, would again have called a conference of the provinces to consider this question of the increase of subsidies together with many other questions in connection with the development of Canada. We have, as I said a moment ago, contributed very spontaneously and generously to any assistance that the west may have required in the past.

We are willing to-day or at any time to contribute for further railways, or for the construction of the Georgian Bay canal, for the great benefit of Ontario and the west. We shall tax ourselves with pleasure whenever any government may be disposed to impose on Canada any expenditure for our national development, which will contribute to the welfare of the people of the west as well as of the people of the east. Meanwhile right is right, and while we are willing always to be generous, we have at the same time to consider our own future.

A great deal has been said by my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior about the province of Manitoba looking like a postage stamp on the map of the Dominion. New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island together are perhaps a still smaller postage stamp on the map of the Dominion. In the meantime, we are not less hopeful of the future; but it may be that such considerations will develop in the minds of the people of the maritime provinces a desire to state as forcibly as possible their position. We have contributed to the purchase of the territories which are now to be allotted to the largest and perhaps the wealthiest provinces of this Dominion. Those territories may become very valuable. If we are to believe half of what we are told in the reports on the resources of northern Ontario and of Ungava, the provinces of Ontario and Quebec will soon get the benefit of territories as wealthy as any portion of the Dominion. I believe that the people of the maritime provinces have not only a right to a fraction of the money which we paid as our contribution for the acquisition of those territories, but a right to share in some way or other in the benefits which will be derived from the development of those territories. Very recently the Premier of Quebec stated that the district of Ungava had immense lumber resources, water-powers and minerals. Therefore, we of the maritime provinces, with our postage stamp provinces, unable to expand, surrounded as we are by the sea and by other provinces, have a right to a portion of those benefits which will accrue to the province of Ontario, and Quebec from the development of those immense resources which are the pride of the country to-day. I believe that the present occasion should be taken advantage of to bring together the Premiers of the various provinces, with the right hon. the leader of the government, who represents at this moment the province of Nova Scotia, and the eloquent Minister of Marine and Fisheries, to whom I listened with pleasure last night, to see what can be done, to-day and not to-morrow, on behalf of the maritime provinces and the other provinces of this Dominion. I always listen with pleasure to my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries even when he comes to my constituency to speak against me——

An hon. MEMBER. Without success.

Mr. TURGEON. Yes, without success. I admire his way of putting the case, and I believe he is convinced that the time has come for a conference of the Premiers of the provinces to settle many of the questions to which he has referred, such as the decreasing representation of the maritime provinces in this parliament from census to census. On this question my views have not always been similar to those expressed by the hon. minister and by the hon. member for St. John city (Mr. Pugsley). As I have said, I am a jealous admirer of the constitution, and at the risk even of losing something, I prefer to hold to the fundamental principles of the constitution. Meanwhile, just because at this moment there are divergent opinions as to what step should be taken by the maritime provinces on the question of representation, I say that it is imperative upon the Premiers of the various provinces to come together in order to see what can be done in that regard. I have held during my whole lifetime that it is better for us to stand by the terms of the constitution than to expose ourselves to the danger of tinkering with it. But a conference of the provincial Premiers is the only tribunal before which such a question could be placed to advantage, whatever their decision might be; and if perchance they could not come to an agreement by which the representation of the maritime provinces should remain in statu quo, or be placed in the position in which it was at the time of confederation, the Premiers of the maritime provinces and the ministers representing those provinces in this government should insist on some financial return in order to place our local governments in a better position to develop their own resources, and thus keep our population at home and bring more population which would enable us to maintain and increase our representation. I have always held the view that just because we have not been in a position to develop our resources as they should be developed, we have not been able to keep the population that has been going away from year to year, until according to the last census the province of New Brunswick shows an increase of only 20,000—increase solely due to the French population.

I regret to see that in the southern counties of New Brunswick the English speaking people have year after year since confederation been drifting towards the New England States, and all on account of that want of development of our agricultural resources which would have kept the children of New Brunswick on their native soil. I support the amendment of my hon. friend (Mr. Pugsley), because I feel the time has come for us to make a fresh start with greater vitality than has actuated us in the past; the time has come for better terms for the provinces and for improving the financial relations with the Dominion of the provinces of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. I have many a time advocated in this House greater transportation facilities for the maritime provinces, and I have advocated the construction of a tunnel between Prince Edward Island and the mainland so as to place the population of that fertile island on the same footing as the people of the rest of the Dominion, thus giving greater opportunities to the young men of Prince Edward Island to stay at home on their fertile soil which is capable of sustaining a population of 300,000, and which now, I regret to say, has a population of only 93,000. I congratulate the Minister of Railways on promising to establish a car-ferry service between the mainland and the island, but I still believe that the construction of a tunnel, even though we should have to make large sacrifices, would be far more advantageous to the people of the island, and would not in the course of years be any greater burden on our resources. Though I am sure the Minister of Railways will keep his promise with regard to the car-ferry service, I hope to see the day when that tunnel will be constructed. Then again, the question of the representation of the maritime provinces in this parliament must be dealt with, and when we consider that these provinces are decreasing in influence decade after decade in this parliament, it is a matter which must be regretted by every member of this House. Then again, I believe that Newfoundland should be brought into the Canadian union. It may be that the leading statesmen of Newfoundland will not to-day entertain the idea of uniting with the people of Canada, but there was a time when the stand taken by Newfoundland towards the Dominion was very different, and there may grow up in time to come a feeling in that ancient colony for union with our confederacy. We must not forget that at confederation Newfoundland offered her vast natural resources in agriculture, in lumber, in minerals and in fisheries, to the Dominion, and that unfortunately this offer was not accepted on the terms proposed. Then again in 1895, when the government of Newfoundland came to Ottawa and again offered the resources of their colony to the Dominion, for the sake of a paltry half-million dollars they were permitted to go back without their offer being accepted, and again another fatal mistake was made by us. Let us not forget that Canada can never become a great nation, unless there is included within the confederation the ancient colony of Newfoundland which occupies such a splendid strategic position at the entrance to the Gulf of St. Lawrence. I trust this government will make every reasonable effort to induce Newfoundland to cast in her lot with us. Perhaps there is an opportunity now that we are inaugurating a naval service for asking Newfoundland to join with us. The Minister of the Naval Service has told us recently that the navy such as we have it to-day will remain, and that until he can confer with the admiralty during the vacation the vessels would be used in the fishery protection service. I trust that after the hon. gentleman does confer with the British authorities, he will return to Canada and be able to announce a naval policy in the interests of the Dominion and of the empire.

But I take advantage of this opportunity to say also that before the hon. gentleman goes to Great Britain, before he confers with the British Admiralty in order to effect a change in the naval system of the late government, which was adopted after a consultation with the British Admiralty and on their advice a year or two ago—although I have no objection to further consultation with and further advice from, the naval authorities in London—would it not be proper for him to listen to my suggestion this evening? Then when he goes to London he will be able to say that he is acting after a conference with the representatives of Newfoundland, the representatives of that great British colony—perhaps the most British colony under the Union Jack where no doubt as to loyalty can be said to exist. For I am sure if he has to establish any naval service at all which would be valuable to Canada and to the empire on the Atlantic coast, the same would also be serviceable to the island of Newfoundland, and would save that colony the large amount of money which she has to pay for the protection of her coasts. The concurrence of Newfoundland would be a most valuable factor. There is no doubt that the union of Newfoundland with Canada is about to come. It is her ultimate destiny, and while the movement for confederation is not a popular one at present in that island, still I have faith that if Canada persists in the policy of conciliation towards Newfoundland that desirable result will yet be accomplished. It behoves Canada, however, to make the first step towards union. The occasion is opportune on the creation of a navy, or the creation of a system, the details of which are not known to us, but which must be made efficient in the interests of Canada and Newfoundland, as well as of the British Empire as a whole. At such a time would it not be well to unite with Newfoundland and take advantage of the fine strategic position of that island lying as it does at the very gateway of the northern part of the continent. I have already said that I have always been a zealous admirer of the constitution. I heard with pleasure the leader of the government speak last night of the harmonious feeling which exists in the province of Nova Scotia, where there are no statutory separate school systems, but where every child in the province enjoys the system of education there on a footing of equality. Let me say that I commend this spirit of harmony which prevails in Nova Scotia, and which also prevails in the province of New Brunswick. In the latter province we at one time thought we enjoyed a separate school system which was statutory, so strong was our faith in the legality of that school system at that time. The leader of the government will admit that the harmony which may prevail in any one or two provinces in regard to school matters does not curtail a constitutional right with respect to schools possessed by any section of people in other provinces. Therefore, it is not merely on the fact that a spirit of harmony exists in the maritime provinces that we should build up our hopes for the future. It is well known that the fathers of confederation had intended to give the maritime provinces separate schools the same as in Ontario and Quebec, but we did not get them. The words 'by law' having been introduced into the Act of Confederation, with respect to the school system, it was found that our schools, although they were advantageous did not give us the rights we thought we possessed. Those rights, it seems, were enjoyed by practice but not by law. The troubles of the past in New Brunswick in regard to the school question are well known. I have taken an active part in public life myself and participated in these troubles; and it is on that account, as I said a while ago, that I have learned to admire the constitution. We found ourselves by the decision of the Privy Council confirming the judgment of the supreme court of New Brunswick, in this position: We did not have separate schools by law, and the privileges we had been enjoying were only given to us by practice. If you consider the settlement which was made in regard to the province of Manitoba, you will see how very carefully that great statesman Sir John A. Macdonald acted at that time. By reason of his experience of the situation in New Brunswick he was careful in framing the constitution for Manitoba to insert into the constitution the words 'by law or by practice,' hoping therefore to avoid in the case of the minority in Manitoba the troubles which had arisen in the province of New Brunswick. Again contrary to the interpretation of the law it was once more found that in that western territory, including the province of Manitoba, there did not legally exist separate schools, and therefore it was left to the local legislature of the new province to enact whatever statute it might see fit in regard to education. But it is well known that a system of separate schools, which was agreeable to the majority as well as to the minority, was introduced by an Act of the legislature itself in 1871, and the educational grant was divided according to population, one half going to the Catholic minority and the other half to the Protestant majority. I have always heard the school question in the province of Manitoba spoken of as the trouble of 1896, but that trouble really developed in 1890, when the legislature passed an Act which annulled the preceding law, and therefore cancelled the enjoyment by the minority of the privileges which they had exercised up to that time with regard to the separate schools.

It was in 1890 that the trouble began. And in my opinion, and in the opinion of those who have been consistent in this line the government of Canada at that time should have refused the Royal assent to this measure of the Manitoba legislature and, instead of making that law operative, should have sent it back to the legislature of Manitoba. Then, had the province of Manitoba taken the thing up and gone from court to court, the Act of 1871 would have been in force and the separate schools would have remained. After five or six years of agitation, the Remedial Bill was brought in. But the Bill was not in compliance with the order of the Privy Council. The appeal which was made and which ultimately reached the Privy Council was based on the ground that the Manitoba legislature had refused to provide money for the support of separate schools in that province. The judgment of the Supreme Court was to the effect that money should be provided for the schools of the minority according to the law of the province previous to 1890. That Act was not ultra vires, but it was defective in the sense that it did not give the money necessary for the separate schools, and without such moneys it was impossible to maintain those schools. In the province of New Brunswick during the period of agitation to which I have referred, while we were awaiting the decision of the Privy Council, the minority endeavoured to keep our schools notwithstanding. But after a few months, everybody saw that it would be impossible for the minority to keep their schools on an equality with the public schools which enjoyed grants of public money. And the same thing would have happened in the province of Manitoba. When I say that the Remedial Bill was not in compliance with the order of the Privy Council perhaps I may be allowed to read a few words of that judgment—page 127:

> The schools before 1890 received their proportionate share of the money contributed for school purposes out of the general taxation of the province, and the money raised for these purposes by local assessments was, so far as it fell upon Catholics, applied only towards the support of Catholic schools.
> What is the position of the Roman Catholic minority under the Act of 1890. Schools of their own denomination, conducted according to their views, will receive no aid from the State. They must depend entirely for their support upon the contribution of the Roman Catholic community, while the taxes out of which the States aid is granted to the schools provided for by the Statute fall alike on Catholic and Protestant. Moreover, while the Catholic inhabitants remain liable to local assessments for school purposes, the proceeds of that assessment are no longer destined to any extent for the support of Catholic schools, but afford the means of maintaining schools which they regard as more suitable for the education of Catholic children than if they were distinctly Protestant in their character.

This is the basis upon which the judgment of the Privy Council suggested that the government of Canada should provide a Remedial Bill. And what did this Bill provide as it was laid before the House? The first provision was to strike off the appropriation of money for the assistance of schools that the government offered to give the Catholic minority of Manitoba. This Remedial Bill was opposed by the leader of the opposition of that time, the hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), who leads this opposition to-day. It has been said all over the country that the Remedial Bill should have been accepted by the chief of the opposition, and that in refusing to accept it he had failed to do his duty towards the Catholic people of Manitoba. A great agitation, of which I need not speak further, has been made against him in Quebec and elsewhere. Speaking as a member of the Catholic minority, and as one of the French people, though not of the province of Quebec, I say it was great statesmanship on the part of the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to refuse the Bill that was offered. And my reason for saying so is that this Bill did not contain the means necessary for the support of the separate schools. I was a candidate in 1896, and explained my position to the Catholic minority in New Brunswick and to the French Acadians of the county from which I come. I took my stand chiefly upon the very fact that the schools offered by the Remedial Bill were not in a position to be maintained, and for that reason the Remedial Bill of 1896 was not worth the paper it was written on. We had had the experience years before in New Brunswick that schools could not be supported without a share of public money. If the Remedial Bill had been accepted, and if an attempt had been made to put it into operation in Manitoba, it would have been a great misfortune for the Catholics in that province. For it would have been impossible to maintain their schools upon it, and word would have gone abroad that the Catholic people were not the kind of people to maintain their schools. Is it necessary for me to show the correctness of what I state? I do not believe it is necessary for me to weary the House with reading the provisions of the Bill. But let me say that the Hon. Mr. Dickey in presenting that measure in the House in 1896, declared that the portion which referred to the public money would be eliminated and that that matter would be left in the future, to the good-will of the province. And this notwithstanding the fact that it was on the ground that the province of Manitoba had refused to assist in any way, the schools of the minority that the agitation for a Remedial Bill had arisen. We know from speeches delivered in 1896 by members of the then government, between the dissolution of parliament and the elections in June, that they would not give a cent of the public money towards the support of these separate schools, that the supporters of such schools would have to keep them in an efficient state or they would be closed. Therefore, the more this question is considered by any Canadian, no matter from what province he may come, the more thankful he must feel towards Sir Wilfrid Laurier for the settlement which he brought about. It has been said on many occasions that when the history of Canada comes to be written, a black mark will be placed against the name of Laurier because he did not accept that Remedial Bill and thus deprived the Catholic minority in Manitoba of their rights and justice. I believe that when our history is really written, when impartiality has succeeded to sentiment, it will be proven to the country at large to Canada, and to the British Empire, that there has been no greater act of statesmanship in the history of Canada than the position taken on that question by Sir Wilfrid Laurier . In view of all these considerations, in view of the agitation which may occur in future, owing to grievances of any part of the population, even although those grievances may not be, and I hope will not be always religious, now while we are forming these new provinces, while we are allotting to them immense territories, with immense possibilities for the future, we should decidedly accept the amendment of my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Pugsley) in order that time may be given for further consideration.

There is one other reason which I wish to give. In to-day's papers I see it stated that the addition of the district of Ungava to the province of Quebec, would not affect the unit of population for the future, that the population of Quebec as at present constituted, would be the pivot of our representation, but if correctly reported, Premier Gouin to-day or yesterday stated in the legislature of Quebec that the district of Ungava would be given in the future additional representatives beyond the 65 representatives of the province of Quebec, as it is to-day. I hope he has been misrepresented, but still while there are such rumours I feel that we would be only the more prudent and should insist on adopting the amendment of the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) in order to give both the government and the members representing the maritime provinces, time to come to some understanding, bearing in mind the possibility of the entrance into the Confederation of Newfoundland, which after all, might be the best strength that could be given to the maritime provinces, owing to the harmony of feeling between the people and the similarity in resources.

Mr. MOLLOY. Coming as I do from the province of Manitoba and voting as I do against this Bill I think it only fair to my constituents and to this House that I should explain the reason for my course. This question last came before the House in the closing session of the last parliament on an amendment to the motion for Supply moved by the then member for Winnipeg (Mr. Haggart). As that was a vote of want of confidence in the government, I voted against the amendment of the then member for Winnipeg and for doing so I received a certain amount of abuse, I was called a traitor to the province of Manitoba. I was not a traitor to the province of Manitoba. I love Manitoba better than any other province in the confederacy of Canada. I was not born in that province but I was taken there many years ago and my length of residence in Manitoba is greater than that of any other member of this House coming from that province, and anything I may be able to do to assist towards the advancement of Manitoba I would very gladly do.

The boundary question first came into prominence in Manitoba politics in 1905. In that year there was a by-election in the constituency of Mountain owing to the resignation of Mr. Greenway who had been elected to the House of Commons. In that by-election the Conservative candidate was elected by means which could not be defended by everybody. The boundary was made the main issue by the Roblin government. To show its effect in the constituency of Mountain I may say that the gentleman who was elected at the by-election in 1905, against the same Liberal candidate who opposed him in the general election of 1907 the Liberal candidate received the largest majority of any man elected to the legislature in that year. It was again the issue in 1907. I was a candidate in the election of 1907. The Premier of Manitoba said it was a paramount issue. He made many speeches including one notable speech at Carman, on the day of his nomination. He said it was the only issue. With that those of us who were opposed to the Roblin government at that time did not agree.

It was fought out largely on that issue. Mr. Roblin told the people of Manitoba that he would stand by his claim on behalf of his government and that he would not accept anything short of it. He told the people of Manitoba that if any other man than my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) had been at the head of affairs in this country Manitoba would have been justly dealt with. I did not believe that then and I do not believe it now. I have felt convinced, ever since this session opened, that two things would happen; in the first place, that Manitoba would not receive such fair treatment from this government as it would have received from the government of my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition, and second, that the minority in the province of Manitoba would, to use an expression, get tomahawked at the hands of this government. There were some things that were upheld and advocated by Mr. Roblin in the province of Manitoba during the election of 1907. I say that he misled the people of Manitoba with regard to this settlement that he has made. Among other things Mr. Roblin, speaking of the boundary and speaking of the treatment which he was receiving from the then government, said:

I stated at the conference, and I repeat here tonight, that neither Ontario on the one hand nor Saskatchewan on the other have any right either by law or in equity to adjudicate or arbitrate as to what portion of the territory to the north and east Manitoba should have. I say in law, and in making this statement I understand that at once a constitutional question is raised, and I am prepared if Sir Wilfrid Laurier dares undertake to take from us that portion of Keewatin lying north of Albany river, and which was included in the Act of 1881, and which has not yet been repealed—I say, if Sir Wilfried Laurier undertakes to deal with that I shall resist it with all the power and all the influence that a united people with a just cause can exercise and command.

A very lofty sentiment.

I will go to the foot of the Throne where justice is always secured and there I believe—I know—that we will get what is ours; we will get what Sir Wilfrid has invited Ontario to claim and which she is ashamed of herself, and thus get at least a portion of the territory he would propose to give to another province.

As a matter of fact, he has not received that territory, and he has not only not received that territory, but he had accepted a great deal less. He has accepted less than that which was offered by the members of the former government in 1908. Speaking at the same meeting he said further on:

We are asking for a territory that Ontario never asked for; no public man in Ontario ever thought of asking for it, because constitutionally they had barred their claim to this particular territory. Sir Wilfrid, however, cunning and designing in his methods of operation to thwart the will of Manitoba invited this province which has no right or interest there to make a claim and they have done so (applause). Now, you say, why cannot you succeed as Sir Oliver Mowat has done? We can and will, if the people of Manitoba stand behind me.

Well, the people of Manitoba supported the Roblin government in 1907, there were thirteen oppositionists elected. In the general election of 1911, there were thirteen oppositionists elected; so that the people of Manitoba evidently were behind the Premier of that province, and still he has accepted much less than he told the people he would accept. He also said on that same day, speaking with reference to the claims that the province of Saskatchewan was making:

Why do I mention Saskatchewan? I will give you a reason. It is one that will carry conviction to the hearts and consciences of every true Manitoban in this province. When we met in conference at Ottawa as I have said, after I had stated my case and after Mr. Whitney had made his pretensions of a claim, knowing he had nothing he could make any argument on, because there was no argument to be made.

That is what Mr. Roblin said in 1907. However, times have changed. The then Minister of Public Works in the Manitoba government is now in Ottawa, and a member of the present government. He is a strong and influential man—there is no question about that— but he sits beside a man who is also strong and influential, a member of the same Cabinet, and that gentleman is from the province of Ontario. After all the trouble they raised about the boundaries as laid down by the Laurier government in 1908, the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Cochrane) a member of the government of Ontario, made a claim on behalf of that province, and in order to satisfy the wishes of Ontario it was considered necessary by the government to accede to the demands of that hon. gentleman. What is the situation to-day? Here is the old province of Manitoba, here is a portion of the added territory, the northerly portion of which is divided by the Churchill river, and in comes the province of Ontario in the form of a strip five miles wide running from one side of the province of Manitoba to the Nelson river. I wonder what the Premier of Ontario would have said if the government of Manitoba, whether Liberal or Conservative, with the endorsation and assistance of the government of Canada that was in power prior to the 21st of September, had asked the government of Ontario to concede a strip of territory five miles in width running easterly from the Manitoba boundary through the province of Ontario. I wonder what Mr. Whitney would have said, and when Mr. Whitney says 'no' he is given credit for meaning just exactly what he says. But our representatives in the Cabinet, and there are two from Manitoba, have consented to a bargain which is nothing but a jumble on the very face of it. Not only have they given Ontario a roadbed through the province of Manitoba for no reason whatsoever, but along with that they have given Ontario some other things as well. In the Ontario legislature the other day members of the opposition found fault with the little that Ontario had received from the bargain that is about to be made. Mr. Hearst in reply said regarding the strip of territory that is given to Ontario from the Manitoba boundary to the Nelson river:

The Minister of Lands, Forests and Mines, proceeded to point out the advantages Ontario would receive under this arrangement to secure access to Port Nelson. The five-mile strip of the river gave a ten-mile frontage on the south shore and the best shore.

Ten of the best miles on the river will be Ontario's said Mr. Hearst. 'Ten miles frontage on that harbour means that Ontario will own the townsite there if ever it becomes a real harbour.

That statement was received with applause, and no wonder. What I particularly want to point out is that the government of the province of Manitoba would not accept any settlement offered by the Laurier government for the simple reason that it would not pay them politically to do so. They made a football of the Manitoba boundary during the Manitoba campaign on two occasions. They find now that they are about at the end of their tether, and they are willing to act in defiance of the speech made by the now Secretary of State, (Mr. Roche), in 1908, and sitting in the gallery at that time before I had become a member of this House, I heard that hon. gentleman claim just as Mr. Roblin had done, that under the decision of the Privy Council in 1884, Manitoba was entitled to every foot of that territory known as Keewatin north of the Albany river.

Now, they come back and after all, they accept less from this government than they were willing to accept from the Laurier government on any consideration. Of course, they had no intention of accepting any terms offered by the Liberal government, because they thought it was good policy—and I regret to say that the result shows it was—to hamper the Liberal government in every way and to prevent a settlement so far as they could. However, these things all come to an end, and the Roblin government cannot work that game much longer. What the Roblin government will do for a policy, now that they are going to get rid of the boundary question, I really do not know. I am sure they will not appeal to the country on their telephone policy, or on their Manitoba elevator policy, or on the Manitoba land deals on the part of the Roblin government, or on their administration of justice in Manitoba. Well, perhaps they may go to the people on their God-fearing and saintly record as a government for the last twelve or thirteen years. As to the financial terms offered to Manitoba by this Bill, I contend that the province will not be as well off, when the swamp lands are given back to the Dominion, as it was before. The province of Manitoba receives under this legislation, an increase on debt account amounting to $202,637 a year; on land account amounting to $313,270; and the interest on the bulk sum given to the province will amount to $119,013. Along with the boundaries offered by the Laurier government, they were offered by that government a yearly grant of $200,000, and the items I have mentioned above under this present proposal, amount to about $634,000 a year. The $200,000 which would have gone with the boundaries, (plus the strip that Ontario has received), would amount in toto to about $434,000 a year more in cash than was offered by the Liberal government. Now, the statement made by the Hon. Hugh Armstrong, Provincial Treasurer, in Winnipeg last year, will give an idea of what the government of Manitoba valued the swamp lands at. The statement of Mr. Armstrong was made on the 22nd of February, 1910, and is reported in the Winnipeg 'Telegram,' of the 23rd of February, 1910. Accounting for the assets of the province, he made this statement:

Provincial lands, 1,425,712 acres; valued at $3 an acre, and amounting to $4,277,136; swanp lands to be turned over by Dominion government 4,000,000 acres.

It has since been estimated to be more, but we will accept the statement of Mr. Armstrong. At $3 per acre, that would amount to $12,000,000 and plus the one million odd acres sold, it would mean a cash value of $16,000,000 which capitalized at 5 per cent., would amount to $800,000 a year. That would be the condition if they had retained control of the swamp lands. Now, as against that, they receive a cash subsidy of $434,000 a year better than the Laurier government offered. But they give back to the Dominion the swamp lands of the province, which would mean, if capitalized at 5 per cent, $800,000 a year. But, the argument is made that Manitoba will get back the swamp lands. Well, perhaps she will and perhaps she will not. The people of Manitoba have no guarantee that the swamp lands will ever be returned and those who believe that they will not have just as much right for their belief as those who believe to the contrary. My own opinion is that the swamp lands will probably be retained by the Dominion and be administered by the Department of the Interior. Therefore, I say that the financial arrangements as proposed in this Bill are not in the interests of Manitoba. If the swamp lands had remained in the province of course the other terms offered here would be very much to her advantage. It was but a short time ago that gentlemen opposite were advocating: 'what we have we'll hold.' Let me ask why did not the province of Manitoba retain her swamp lands when she had them? It is my belief that it would be far easier to retain possession of these lands than to ever get them back again. There were over 8,000,000 acres of swamp lands, and at a valuation of $4 an acre they would amount to $32,000,000. According to the statement of the Provincial Treasurer of Manitoba, the lands which were sold were sold at an average price of $5.48 per acre, amounting in all, for the year to $515,298. Last year the statement of the sale of lands alone, outside of subsidies received from other quarters, is as follows:

First payment on land sold..	$ 43,383
Deferred payments..	289,728
Timber dues, &c..	16,167
Interest on deferred payments.	166,319

In eight years the province of Manitoba had received from the interest on deferred payments alone, $923,692 and a great part of these were swamp lands. The most damaging feature in connection with the swamp lands is this: the swamp lands will now become the property of the Dominion, and as a consequence the drainage will not be done which otherwise would. I call the attention of the Minister of the Interior to the fact that on the fourth of March, 1910, he moved a resolution to the effect that in the opinion of the government of Manitoba it was in the interest of the province that the Dominion should at once turn over to the province the swamp lands so that they could be made into drainage districts. In that way the lands would be drained and they would find more ready sale, and the lands of the settlers adjoining would receive the benefit from the drainage which would have been done. I think that was a very sensible way to go about it, because when the lands were turned over to the province then not only the swamp lands themselves but the other provincial lands and the lands of the settlers would come under one drainage district and everybody would be benefited. In support of the policy then advocated by the provincial government with respect to swamp lands, I quote no less an authority than the Winnipeg 'Telegram' which is the official organ of the Roblin government in Manitoba. On April 5, 1911, the Winnipeg 'Telegram' said in a plainly inspired article:

> Under the settlement of the boundary question proposed by Mr. Oliver, 8,000,000 acres of swamp land would likely be transferred to the province. The importance of this assurance contained in Mr. Oliver's communication can hardly be overestimated for it presents the Dominion government's proposal in an altogether different light. The recent communication from the Dominion government, setting forth the terms under which it would agree to the enlargement of Manitoba's boundaries made no reference to this immense acreage of swamp land which it is proposed to donate to Manitoba, and, the concession of 8,000,000 acres of swamp land is infinitely more important than the cash compensation offered for the surrender of the public domain in the added territory.

It was of infinitely more value than the cash offer of $434,000 better than was offered by the previous government. I may say that the swamp lands were estimated by the late Mr. Young to be 8,232,831 acres at $3 an acre, which, capitalized at 5 per cent, would give an income of $1,234,964. I admit that it would naturally cost the government of Manitoba something to drain that land, and something to put it on the market, but little compared with the value received for it.

We have been told time and again that with the advent to power of the Conservative government the prairie provinces would be given their natural resources. Hon. gentlemen opposite say, we have not had time. There is reason and justice in that statement; but I believe that many moons will pass before the natural resources of the prairie provinces are handed over to them by this government, if it is ever done.

Another question which I want to deal with is the school question, or the rights of the minority of the province of Manitoba and in the territory which is to be added to the province of Manitoba. I listened with great attention to the statements made by the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Monk), who is known as a lawyer of high standing in this country, in which statement he tried to justify the action of this government in ignoring those rights. I believe, and I do not care how many authorities are brought forward, that the minority in the province of Manitoba are and have been suffering from a grievance for the last twenty years, and they are determined, and justly so, if it lies in their power, that this shall come to an end. I cast my first vote on the 15th of January, 1896, though I was a Liberal then, as I am a Liberal now, and I voted for the present Conservative member for the county of Emmerson. My second vote I cast on the 23rd of June, 1896, and I cast it for the gentleman who is now Senator Larivière from the province of Manitoba. I have been consistent on this question, and I propose to stand out for the rights of those who are suffering from a grievance, and at some time this government or some other government will have to reckon with those people and with their co-religionists throughout this entire country. I say they have been unfairly treated for political reasons and political reasons only. Just as the Roblin government made a football of the boundary question for political reasons, so the Liberal government of Manitoba in 1890 made a football of the school question for their own political purposes.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Will the hon. gentleman move an amendment to force the province of Manitoba to recognize the rights of the minority of which he is speaking?

Mr. MOLLOY. Will the hon. gentleman vote for it if I move it?

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I have voted already for the Bill as it stands.

Mr. MOLLOY. I say I have been consistent on this question. It originated as a result of the Act of 1890 abolishing separate schools in the province of Manitoba which the Liberal government then in power in that province put in force because they believed that the majority of the people in the province, being other than Roman Catholic, would support them, and they did so. Then the Tupper government, at the very last moment, tried to pass the remedial order, thinking that the people of this country would support them, but they refused to do so. As far as I am concerned, I have voted for the Conservative party on this question because I believed they were right, and I will vote for them again if they give relief to the Roman Catholic minority in the province of Manitoba, and particularly in the territory where they are entitled to that relief.

The statement of the Minister of Public Works rather nonplussed me for the time being, when he said that the district of Keewatin did not come under the Act of 1875. I believe that it does come under that Act, for the following reasons:

The district of Keewatin was created as a separate entity by Chap. 21 of the Statutes of Canada, 1876, and by section 9, thereof it was provided that:

All laws in force in the said district as part of the Northwest Territories, at the time of the coming into force of this Act, and not hereby repealed, shall, so far as they are consistent with the 'The British North America Act, 1867,' with the terms and conditions of the admission of Rupert's Land and the Northwest Territories into the Union, approved of by the Queen, under the one hundred and forty-sixth section thereof, and with any Act of the parliament of Canada relating to the Northwest Territories then in force, and with this Act, remain in force in the said district until repealed or altered by the parliament of Canada, or by the Governor in Council, or the Lieutenant Governor and his Council, under this Act, as shall also any order of the Governor in Council made under any Act mentioned in the second section of this Act, until repealed, or altered, as it may be, under this Act.

It was also provided that the Governor in Council at any time by a proclamation, should have the right to re-annex the same to the Northwest Territories and when so done, this particular territory should be subject to the same government and laws as that part of the territories to which it was to be re-annexed. This is provided for in the latter portion of section 1, which is as follows:

Provided always that the Governor in Council may, by proclamation published in the 'Canada Gazette,' at any time when it may appear to the public advantage so to do, detach any portion of the said district from the same, and re-annex it to that part of the Northwest Territories not included in the said district; and the portion so detached shall then be subject to the same government and laws as that part of the said territories to which it is re-annexed.

Therefore, at this date clearly the provisions of section 10 of the Educational Act of 1875 were applicable to Keewatin as well as to any or all the other portions of the Northwest Territories. Things remained in this condition until the creation of the new provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, when a new Act was passed regarding the Northwest Territories, known as chapter 27 of the Statutes of 1905, which, while assented to on the 20th of July, 1905 by section 15 of the Act. did not come into force until the last day of September, 1905, and by section 3 of this Act, the Northwest Territories were defined as follows:

The Northwest Territories shall hereafter comprise the territories formerly known as Rupert's Land and the Northwestern Territory, except such portions thereof as form the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the district of Keewatin and the Yukon Territory, together with all British territories and possessions in North America and all islands adjacent to any such territories or possessions except the colony of Newfoundland and its dependencies.

It will be seen that Keewatin was not included as a portion of the Northwest Territories, but for the time being remained a separate district, but by an order in council passed on the 24th day of July, 1905 under the provisions of section 1 of the statutes of 1876, hereinbefore quoted, it was re-annexed to and became a portion of the Northwest Territories, to take effect on, from and after the first day of September, 1905, which order in council is as follows:—

By proclamation dated 24th July, 1905, under the provisions of the Act, chapter fifty-three of the Revised Statutes of Canada, commonly known as the Keewatin Act, the whole district of Keewatin was annexed to that part of the Northwest Territories not included in the said district, on, from and after the first day of September in the year of Our Lord one thousand nine hundred and five.

It will therefore be seen that on the 1st day of September, Keewatin became a portion of the Northwest Territories.

Mr. AIKINS. Under the Keewatin statute, I think it was of 1876, provision was made that a portion of Keewatin might be detached and added to the territories. What portion of Keewatin was detached and added to the territories by the proclamation?

Mr. MOLLOY. The whole of it came back.

Mr. AIKINS. The whole of it was attached to the Northwest Territories? Under what authority was the whole of it detached?

Mr. MOLLOY. I cannot follow the hon. gentleman. It will therefore be seen that under the provisions of the Act of 1876, by a provision which in no way is contrary to the provisions of the Northwest Territories Act of 1905, because both the Act and the order in council were to take effect on the same dates, this condition of affairs was recognized and ratified when the statutes were revised in 1906, as will be found by chapter 62, section 2, subsection (a), which is as follows:—

'Territories' means the Northwest Territories which comprise the territories formerly known as Rupert's land and the Northwestern Territory, except such portions thereof as form the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta and the Yukon Territory, together with all British territories and possessions in North America and all islands adjacent thereto, not included within any province, except the colony of Newfoundland and its dependencies.

Therefore, without any question, whatever rights were granted the minority by section 10 of the Act of 1875 went to Keewatin when it was separated from the rest of the territories in 1876, and remained an inherent right of the people down to the first day of September, 1905, when it was again re-annexed and became a portion of the Northwest Territories, and all of these rights whatever they may be, must necessarily exist at present.

That is to say the district of Keewatin comes under the Act of 1875 and section 10 of that Act guarantees to the minority, Protestants or Roman Catholics, the right to establish separate schools, and only to be taxed for the maintenance of such schools whether they be Catholic or Protestant. It is only fair and just that it should be so. With the constitutional aspect of the question, I am not going to deal, because I am not a lawyer, but I know the stand of the Roman Catholics in the province of Manitoba on the question, particularly in the city of Winnipeg, and it is their purpose and intention as representing the entire Catholic population, to lay before this government shortly their claims to right and justice in this matter, and I think it would be just as well for the government, knowing, as they must know that intention, to show a little less haste in trying to put this Bill through parliament. I might also say that I have here the Northwest 'Review,' which is the organ of the English speaking Catholics of Manitoba, and in its last issue on March 2, speaking of this question, it goes on to say as follows:

We will not now discuss the constitutional powers of the province of Manitoba in educational matters, but what we do know is that the new territory which is to be added to the province of Manitoba has constitutional rights which neither the government at Ottawa nor that of Manitoba can ignore with impunity. To leave the settlement of our school troubles to the province of Manitoba is sheer nonsense.

The hon. Postmaster General lays considerable stress upon the fact that they will address Mr. Roblin in this matter. But the Catholics of Manitoba have made up their minds that they expect relief, and they do not expect to get that relief from any other source than from this government, they certainly do not expect it from the government of Manitoba:

The treatment that has been meted out to us in the last 22 years at the hands of this or that political party in Manitoba is guarantee enough that the future holds very little for us. When one party is willing to enact legislation to restore our Catholic schools, invariably the other party refuses to fall in line, and the efforts and good will of the first are thereby paralysed.

I say it is in the interest of peace and harmony in this country that this question should be settled, as was the opinion of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce in the great speech he delivered in this House in March, 1896, when, in closing, he said:

Let us do justice to a weak and patient minority.

As pointed out by the paper from which I have quoted, which represents English speaking Catholics in the west, this question has been a matter of agitation for 22 years, and it is about time in the opinion of the Catholics of Manitoba that they should get relief from some quarter. There is another feature which should be explained and it is this: The Catholics of the northwest have been led to believe that they would obtain relief from the federal government in Ottawa whenever a change of government took place. Ninety per cent of the Roman Catholics in that province, and I think I am well within the mark in making that statement, have on this ground voted in support of the Conservative party.

An hon. MEMBER. Whom do you represent?

Mr. MOLLOY. I represent the other ten per cent. The Conservative party in Manitoba in the provincial, as well as in the federal elections, have received the almost undivided support of the Roman Catholic electorate. There are gentlemen who sat in the last parliament, as well as in the previous one, who would not have had the honour of sitting here had it not been for the vote of the Roman Catholic electors. In order to establish that a large percentage of the Roman Catholic electors have been voting for the Conservative party in the interest of separate schools I will quote from 'Les Cloches de St. Boniface,' the official organ of His Grace Archbishop Langevin. The statement in question appears in the Winnipeg 'Free Press' of September 4, 1911, and reproduces the views of 'Les Cloches.' Let me say before reading the quotation that the Roblin government have succeeded during the last eight or ten years in attracting to itself the undivided support not only of the Roman Catholic electorate but of that particular body known as the Loyal Orange Society, and in that way have continued to hold power.

FROM ST. BONIFACE SOUNDS THE TOCSIN.

Every Catholic of French Tongue bound to support Conservative Candidate.

The current issue of 'Les Cloches de St. Boniface' which bears on every issue the archiepiscopal coat of arms and the announcement that it is the official organ of the archdiocese, has the following in the current issue under the heading: "The Election in the County of Provencher":—

Mr. J. A. F. Bleau, mayor of the city of St. Boniface, seeks the votes of the electors of the county of Provencher in the federal election of September 21. We do not hesitate to declare that every Catholic of French tongue, anxious for our school rights, is in honour bound to support his candidate.

Commenting upon the result of the general election of October 26, 1908, 'Les Cloches' made the following remarks, and they have lost nothing of their aptness and their justice:—

'The result of this election has been a majority of about 50 for the Liberal government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

'The county of Provencher has elected a Liberal and an Irish Catholic.

'The French-Canadians who did not vote for the Hon. Mr. Larivière have forgotten the pact made upon the organization of the electoral divisions here which assured to the French-Canadians the election of one of their own race. They have forgotten, also, that it was the Liberal government which in 1890 abolished the official use of the French language. Catholics who voted for Mr. Larivière forgot that it was the Liberal Greenway government which took from us our schools in 1890, that it was Sir Wilfrid Laurier, head of the Liberal party at Ottawa, who opposed, in 1896, the Remedial Bill, establishing the principles of separate schools and presented to the House by the Grand Orange Master, Sir Mackenzie Bowell, that it was the same Sir Wilfrid Laurier who in 1905 did not have the courage to concede all our school-rights, especially the right of the confessional school, guaranteed by the constitution, in Saskatchewan and Alberta, that the so-called final Laurier-Greenway settlement of 1896 gives us none of our former school-rights from the Catholic standpoint, although it gives us a portion of our rights to the French language, placing us, however—us, the first occupants of this country—on the same footing as all other settlers speaking a language other than English. These are incontestable facts, which one may try to weaken or explain, but which remain absolutely true and which many know without appearing to be at all disturbed.

'There is no doubt that in the present contest the county of Provencher will be able to recover itself and to regain the position lost in 1908. This county belongs by right to the French-Canadians and to the French Métis, who form the majority and who must inwardly desire to be represented by one of their own race and not by a man who is a stranger to their nationality, and to their language. May the regard for superior interests and for patriotism win the day over the blind party spirit, and may all the French-speaking electors in the county of Provencher contribute by their votes to assure themselves a Catholic and French-Speaking member.'

I am sure that will satisfy anybody as to the direction in which it was thought advisable that the Catholic vote should go in the province of Manitoba, and especially in the constituency of Provencher. Now, we shall see whether they will receive more from the gentlemen who are in power here, and from those who have been kept in power in Manitoba for the last ten or twelve years by this same vote. This is not a political question—or should not be. I am going to support the man and the measure which will give to the minority in Manitoba that to which they are entitled—and they are asking nothing more—as guaranteed them by the constitution. And if it has come to this, that a religious body, in order to receive justice, must be in the majority, there is something wrong with the existing state of things. In Manitoba the separate schools were taken away,—and let them say of those schools what they will; there was no need to abolish the separate school system in Manitoba; if that system was not right, it could be reformed. And I say I will give my support only to that man and that measure, which will restore to the Catholics of Manitoba and the territory to be annexed to Manitoba, the rights which they formerly enjoyed. And beyond any question of doubt, the Catholics have a greater right to separate schools in this added territory even than in the old province of Manitoba. I hope the government will see their way clear to secure for these people the rights to which they are entitled as clearly as the Catholics of Ontario are entitled to the rights which nobody would deny them, as are also the Protestants of Quebec. I remember hearing the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Hazen) state in his first speech this session, that it was no disgrace to a man to have gone down with the good cause in 1896. If it was a good cause in 1896, it is a better cause to-day. On behalf of the Catholics of Manitoba being the only Catholic in parliament, from that province, I claim for them these rights to which they are entitled. And the day will come when their rights will be given to them, whether the government of that day be Conservative or Liberal. And we will thank nobody for it, because we are asking only for that to which we are entitled.

Mr. EMMERSON. It is neither my purpose nor my desire to take up the time of the House at great length. But this Bill is of such far reaching consequence, that I think it my duty as representing a constituency of eastern Canada to offer some observations with respect to it. While the title of the Bill is: 'An Act to provide for the extension of the boundaries of Manitoba,' the Bill is not confined either in its provisions or in its consequences, to one particular province. It is so far-reaching that it certainly affects every province in eastern Canada.

Shortly after Confederation, in 1868, as a land speculation if you will, the Dominion purchased what were known as the Hudson bay lands, a venture which was conceived to be in the interests of the provinces. It is now conceded on all hands that it was a wise speculation, not only in the interests of the original provinces, but in the interests of the great country that was purchased by the Canadian Confederation. And from that day down to the present, every province of the Dominion has been interested in our western heritage, as it has been called.

Every province in the Dominion has looked to that western country with pride, with a feeling of proprietary right, and not merely with respect to the good which was to come to the eastern provinces, but with respect to the good which was to come to the country carved out as our Northwest Territories. The original partners were Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec and Ontario and when British Columbia and Prince Edward Island came into the partnership they entered having equal rights with the original provinces, and were entitled to share with the original provinces all the benefits that might accrue, and they assumed their proportion of the responsibilities, which were placed upon the Confederation by the act of absorption of these western territories. It is not merely the question of the investment of the original purchase money, not merely the dollars and cents involved in the securing of the western country but from the moment of the purchase down to the present each of the eastern provinces has given of its best to the upbuilding of our great western territory, to the creation of a great west that would invite the millions from all lands. To the upbuilding of the western country the eastern provinces have contributed of their brain and their brawn, year after year we have poured into the west our young men, our very best, with a view not merely of upbuilding that country but of advancing the individual interests of those who thought it desirable to make their homes in the western land. In the face of great difficulties we have built up a confederacy which has attracted to us the eyes of Europe, the eyes of Great Britain, the eyes of the people to the south of us. Chief among the difficulties that presented themselves to those who were charged with the duty of creating the federation was the question of finances. Had not some assurance been given particularly to the people of the Maritime provinces that financial arrangements would be made sufficient to guarantee them from any direct taxation in order to carry on the government of their respective provinces, there would have been no confederacy. When Sir John Macdonald, the Hon. Geo. Brown and their associates went to Charlottown, at a time when the delegates of the several maritime provinces were meeting to consider the question of a maritime union and presented their proposition with respect to a larger and wider confederation, one of the very first questions asked of them by the men of the maritime provinces was: Upon what terms can such an arrangement be entered into with respect to the financial future of our provinces. At that time each province had entire control of its excise and customs duties and of all revenues, and they wished to know how they could receive compensation for surrendering these revenues and how they could carry on the affairs of their local administration. The second question was with respect to the binding of these provinces together. The provinces were then aliens and strangers to each other.

The men of the maritime provinces were more familiar with Massachusetts, Maine, New York and the New England States than they were with Quebec, Montreal or Ontario. There was no communication of any character whatever between the people of Canada and the people of the maritime provinces. Therefore, the very next question that was taken into consideration was as to the means of communication between Ontario and Quebec and the provinces by the sea. These two important questions were solved to the satisfaction of the people of the east, and they consented to become partners in the confederacy. But, the confederation was no sooner launched than it was found that there were financial difficulties, that the provisions which had been made were not adequate, that the calculations that had been entered upon were faulty and, practically speaking, it was found to be a necessity to have some other arrangement. I am sure that it is within the recollection of those who are familiar with Canadian political history that there was an agitation with respect to better terms with Nova Scotia. That great Nova Scotian, Joseph Howe, who had opposed the terms of confederation, who had fought valiantly against confederation, continued his agitation and continued it to the point where it was found necessary on the part of the Canadian government to make terms with him and to make terms with Nova Scotia, and in the making of terms with Nova Scotia it was recognized as well that there were other provinces to be dealt with. New Brunswick came to the front, and Nova Scotia had no sooner been settled with than New Brunswick put forward her claim and recognition was granted to that province. Later on, when British Columbia and Prince Edward Island came into the union, there had to be a special provision made in each case with respect to financial arrangements and special consideration given to these provinces. Otherwise they declined to be partners in the confederacy. These arrangements were made. At that time the men who were charged with the control of affairs had taken a wider conception of the future of this country, they had a vision with respect to the future possibilities of our great confederation, they were willing to make better terms, to give greater consideration, and they did give that greater consideration, and they did make better terms. We launched out with six provinces, the four original provinces, the extreme western province of British Columbia and that little province in the gulf, Prince Edward Island.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that did not settle the question. There have been from that time down to the present upheavals and rumblings with respect to each partner in the confederacy. From time to time this province would put forth its claim and some other province would put in a counter claim or take exception to the claims then presented. It was a question of agitation, it was a question of irritation, and the history of our confederation with respect to these terms is a proof of the axiom that nothing is settled until it is settled right. Although we have thought from time to time, when arrangements were made, that we had reached a finality, although we thought, after having made additional arrangements with Nova Scotia, with New Brunswick, with Prince Edward Island and with British Columbia, and finally with all the provinces, that we had reached a finally final settlement with respect to the terms of partnership, we find to-day that we have not, but that we are still as unsettled as we were before. Is there a member who has been in this House for the past twelve years who will not recall that session after session we have heard a voice, deep and loud, from the little province of Prince Edward Island with respect to the want of consideration that has been given to that province in connection with the carrying out of the terms of confederation, who will not be able to recall the complaints that have come up from that province in respect to the injury done to that partner in the confederation? It has been an annual offering, although it has been an offering that has not at all times received the response that it should have received. It has been a complaint that has left in the minds of every man, who feels himself at all responsible for the conditions of this country, a feeling of unrest. It has always been a disturbing feature in connection with our parliamentary conditions as well as with our political conditions in the confederation. As I have said, nothing is ever settled till it is settled right, and until this is settled right it will always be a cause of irritation, it will always be used for a purpose perhaps other than that of having the grievance remedied. Local parliaments and local governments must live, and they do as best they can. Political parties in the respective provinces are quick to seize upon any matter that will be a disturbing element so that they can secure for themselves that which you might consider as sectional, that which you might consider selfish, but that which the people themselves are taught to believe to be in their interest, and to be an act of justice to them. In the province of Prince Edward Island, election after election, appeals are made with respect to the condition of that province under confederation. Men may talk about the last election of September 21. It was my privilege to be in the province of Prince Edward Island during that election, and I did not observe so much interest in the great overshadowing question with which we felt we had to deal and with which we thought we should deal, but I saw and observed great concern on the part of electors in the constituencies there with respect to the means of communication, the terms of confederation and an increase in representation. I observed more agitation and irritation with respect to these questions than I did with respect to the future of this Dominion in connection with its trade relations with the United States of America. That will be so. It has been asserted on the floor of this House that this question of better arrangements in respect to Manitoba has been made a football at election after election in that province. I do not doubt it. I am not going to in any way condemn the men who use it as they do. It is but human for them to do so, and it is but natural that they should.

The right hon. gentleman introduced this Bill, not with the assurance that it was a settlement of the difficulty, not with the assurance that it would, in any way, solve the problems which confronted him and his government with respect to Manitoba, or Alberta, or Saskatchewan, or any of the other provinces, but, he introduced it with the frank announcement that it was a tentative measure. He talked about the difficulties that had existed; he talked about the proposition that had been made by the Laurier government to the province of Manitoba with respect to its boundaries, and he felt that it was necessary that some action should be taken by him to afford a pretended solution of the difficulty. The statesmanlike course for the right hon. gentleman to have pursued, was to take a broader view of the whole situation, and to have dealt with the whole difficulty as it existed among all the provinces in the Dominion. You will notice that whenever the right hon. gentleman is asked with respect to the Intercolonial railway branch line question, or with respect to transportation in the maritime provinces, or with respect to his naval policy, and the other great questions which are agitating the public mind, his answer is always that these matters are under consideration. and that they will not be dealt with until his government can realize just what should be done to settle the whole matter. His is a government that is devoting itself to the consideration of questions and not to the solving of them; his is a government that is putting off until to-morrow what should be dealt with to-day; his is a government that, with respect to all those other questions, is postponing and deferring in the hope that the people may forget them and, had he pursued a like policy with respect to this question, had he taken the whole situation of the provinces of Canada into review and taken time to consider before dealing with the difficulties existing, he would be doing justice, not only to himself, and the government, which he so ably leads, and he would be doing a greater justice to the Dominion for the administration of whose affairs he is responsible. I hold Sir, that this Bill does not settle the question, and it does not settle it admittedly from his own standpoint. He holds out the hope that Saskatchewan and Alberta, will have something done for them in respect to their natural resources, and he says that the ownership of these resources shall be held in the Dominion for the time being. He even goes so far as to say that this very legislation does not settle the Manitoba boundary question, because he tells us that, so that Manitoba may no longer be a postage stamp on the map of Canada he will extend the boundaries for the present, and he also says that in a little while when it may be found more opportune, he will be able to take into consideration the settlement of the whole question with respect to the ownership of the lands and resourses and the boundaries of Manitoba and Alberta and Saskatchewan. As to the maritime provinces the hon. gentleman says: You are partners in the confederacy, you can have no part in the division of this western heritage, but we will perhaps do something for you later on. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries has told us that there may perhaps be a meeting of the Premiers of the different provinces shortly, and then that this government would take into consideration the financial conditions of the eastern provinces and the question of the representation of these provinces in this parliament. The Minister of Marine has not been in this parliament for the past few years and presumably he is not familiar with what has transpired here with respect to the representation of the lower provinces. Does he think that he can in any way settle that question by a convention of the Premiers of this Dominion; can he hope to invite delegates from the respective provinces of this Dominion and get these delegates to agree upon a question which may involve the representation of their own provinces. If he has any such hope, I fear he will see it dashed to the ground. We know the terms of the British North America Act with respect to the representation of Quebec and we know that that is the governing feature of the representation of the other provinces. It was thought at confederation when New Brunswick and Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island entered the Dominion, that their representation would never be less but that it would most probably be increased as the Dominion grew and expanded. I say that this question is not settled because it is not settled right, and it is not settled for the further reason that it leaves all these matters open to future adjustment. Instead of calling this 'An Act to provide for the extension of the boundaries of Manitoba.' I would call it 'An Act to create entanglements and embarrassments as respects our western heritage and to make confusion for all time to come in the matter of provincial subsidies.' That, in my judgment, is the proper appellation for the Bill now before the committee. It is calculated to create entanglement and embarrassment as respects our western country. You tentatively have arranged boundaries for Manitoba and you have carved out of it an area for Ontario, thus placing across the territory of Manitoba a bar sinister, and affording a pathway which is calculated to create disturbance, to cause confusion and to engender irritation between those two great provinces. You have provided in your Bill conditions for the creation of jealousies among the other provinces of the Dominion.

In the public prints of to-day we observe that the province of Saskatchewan has put in its claims. This is a question which, like Banquo's ghost, will never down, which will always be before the Canadian people. This government may not live very long to grapple with it; but succeeding governments will be confronted with the same difficulties. This matter is not settled, and cannot be settled, until it is grappled with, with a courage that has not been evinced by this government. With respect to the provincial subsidies, the original basis has been departed from, from time to time. In 1906, I think it was, the right hon. leader of the opposition, then the leader of the government of Canada, invited the representatives of the several provinces to take into consideration the question of subsidies. We know the history of that conference, and we realize the position that was taken by the Premier of British Columbia. That gentleman refused to be reconciled, refused even to consider the judgment of his colleagues in the conference, and went away; and that question has been in British Columbia, from that time down to the present, and I doubt not will be for years to come, a disturbing element, a matter upon which provincial elections will be run, and which may become an issue in any Dominion election that may be contested in that province, either a general or a by-election. To the detriment of other great questions, it will cause injury not only to the province, but to the Dominion at large. If our human ideals were attained, we would have great issues settled by the people of the several provinces upon their merits; but when you leave as matters of contention, issues that are local, you have those issues engrossing the minds of the electors to the exclusion of greater issues that affect the Dominion at large. Therefore, I say that in this regard this Bill will not only create confusion, but is a menace to the future of this Dominion, a menace to the good government of Canada, a menace to the parliament of Canada in its consideration of the great questions entrusted to it for solution. From that standpoint I condemn this Bill, and I say that it does not meet the difficulties, that it does not attempt to grapple with and solve the difficulties, that it is imperfect, incomplete, and as such deserves the condemnation, not only of this House, but of the people of Canada at large. Who wants simply to half settle a matter? There must be in the mind of every man here, I care not what his political faith may be, a desire to see all these difficulties, as between the federal government and the provincial governments respectively, settled and determined, so that they can be brushed from our pathway, and we can follow along the road of national government in the interest of the whole people, and without regard to any merely sectional prejudice or passion.

Another thing. This question, however settled, affects the future representation in this House of Commons, and as such does an injury to eastern Canada. As such it affects the little province of Prince Edward Island very materially. That province has contributed to the upbuilding of the western country, with its brain and its brawn, with young men and young women going from its shores every season. That little province is being depleted—shall I say impoverished? No, because it is so rich and fertile that it is almost impossible to impoverish the 'Garden of the Gulf.' But it is being injured, and its representation in this House is decreasing year by year until we can in vision see that it has reached almost the vanishing point. If we go on in the same ratio, the time will come when the constituency of Prince Edward Island will be joined to that of Westmorland, and we shall have an electoral district composed of the county of Westmorland in New Brunswick, with Prince Edward Island thrown in and sending one member to this House. The next distribution, I understand, will give Prince Edward Island three members, while it has four senators in the Senate of Canada. My hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Hazen), spoke, I am sure with sincerity, and with a desire to accomplish the very best possible for the province which he so ably represents in this government. But my hon. friend has been too long in politics to be in any way caught by fair promises, and I am sure that he must realize that now is the time to have this whole problem solved. When we are discussing the financial arrangements with Manitoba, when we are taking into consideration the enlargement of Ontario, when we are contemplating a solution of the difficulties in the prairie provinces, and when we have in mind the coming to Ottawa of the Premier of British Columbia with his claims, my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries must realize, if he realizes anything that now is the time to strike, while the iron is hot, that now is the time to demand for his province, and the other provinces by the sea, the consideration which they should have.

My hon. friend said that the case of Manitoba was urgent. What greater urgency could there be than in the case of the province of New Brunswick, or than in the case of the province of Nova Scotia? There it is assuredly a question of urgency, it is a question which I might almost say is essential to the future of these provinces by the sea. The Minister of Marine is aware that to-day the province of New Brunswick is awaking with respect to its future, that its people are alive to the conditions that confront them, that their environments have created an unrest that is in evidence to-day in that province. I have in my hand a badge to be worn by delegates from the whole of the province of New Brunswick to a convention that to-morrow is to be held in the city of Fredericton, a convention to take into consideration the conditions which prevail in that province with respect to the depletion of its population.

Mr. HAZEN. That is a very free translation of the objects of the convention.

Mr. EMMERSON. A true translation of the objects.

Mr. HAZEN. No, a free one.

Mr. EMMERSON. I will not go at length into the matter of the decline of the population of our province. There has been a trek of our young men, from the maritime provinces to the country to the south and also to the western provinces of Canada, and no more important convention could be held than the one I have referred to. I trust that the convention will be confronted with the questions which really appertain to the present condition. It is all very well to invite men to come to New Brunswick and to occupy the farms that are vacant. Why are they vacant, may I ask? It is a question which that convention must necessarily answer. And one that every man in the province of New Brunswick must answer. Why are our young men leaving, some to dwell under a foreign flag and others going to the great west to help in the building up of our western territory? Let my hon. friends stop and think on this point. Hon. gentlemen opposite have made a plea for the suppression of all partisanship in connection with this matter. I associate myself with them in that wish. I would have hoped that this matter could have been dealt with not as one of party exigencies and party expediency, but I feel that it is and the evidence to support that opinion has fallen from the lips of the Prime Minister, the Minister of the Interior and other gentlemen who have spoken in support of this Bill. Evidently this Bill is conceded to have been conceived as a tentative measure, to catch for a moment the ear of the people of Manitoba, because of political exigencies and expediencies. This is not a courageous, a complete and comprehensive solution of the difficulties which exist, and for years have existed between the federal authorities and the provincial authorities in their respective provinces. These difficulties have not come to a head, as the saying is in some of the provinces. It so happens that in British Columbia and in Manitoba for the past ten or more years there have been in charge of the governments of those provinces, administrations that were not in harmony with the federal administration at Ottawa, and it was in their interest to have a bone of contention and to have a grievance. There are some men whom we meet in the world who always have a grievance, and the last thing they wish in the world is to be free from that grievance. There are some governments with a love of grievances, which could not subsist without having one; and the governments of Manitoba and British Columbia lie under the suspicion at least that they have been thriving on the grievances which they themselves have created. The convention badge which I had in my hand a few minutes ago—and I am sorry that I shall not be able to attend at that convention—bears the motto 'Delegate to Convention to boost New Brunswick.' Well, although I cannot attend that convention I am here to-night to boost New Brunswick with respect to the difficulties under which that province labours, and under which it will labour to even a greater extent by the provisions of this Bill if it becomes law. Under the terms of the amendment of the hon. member for St. John there is a provision whereby the matter of the adjustment of the financial terms shall be subject to a conference to be held among the representatives of the several provinces of this Dominion. And who have a better right to be consulted than these provinces? I do not say that on all occasions in the past when an adjustment of the financial terms has been made that there has been such a consultation, but I do say that where it has not been done it should have been done. That course was followed on the very last occasion of a readjustment of the subsidies, and there can be no question but that a similar course should be followed now.

I wish my hon. friends would carry the idea I have in mind.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried.

Mr. EMMERSON. I know that I cannot carry it without their help. And I have been pleading, I have been agonizing with them——

An hon. MEMBER. You had fifteen years to do it in.

Mr. EMMERSON. Ah, but my hon. friends opposite have come to judgment, and they are to remedy all the ills that have existed. I am not here to deal with the past—let the dead past bury its dead. But we are dealing with the living present and with the future.

An hon. MEMBER. You are making it go.

Mr. EMMERSON. But hon. gentlemen opposite are not making very much go. If they would consider this a little longer and deal with it in a more comprehensive way, greater justice would be done, not merely to the Dominion, but to every individual province.

No man will say, I care not how biased his judgment may be by political associations, that this has been settled right. For the answer to such a statement would be in the utterances of the right hon. the leader of the government (Mr. Borden) himself who has said that these matters will probably be dealt with a little later, perhaps at the next session. We find that the Highways Act, which was heralded in the speech from the Throne, is to be put foward as a tentative proposition, and the leader of the government tells us that probably during next session or in some succeeding session a more comprehensive Act will be introduced. It is admitted to be imperfect—they have not even got a principle upon which to base it. It is put in the form of a contribution of additional subsidy to the respective provinces; and then we have a little rider added whereby the Minister of Railways and Canals who, in some of his fitful moods may be in a position or may feel constrained to do so, may go out somewhere and build a small culvert or reconstruct a bridge. That is within his authority.

I say the subject of this Bill is left for future consideration, as other matters are left for future consideration. But the country would have been safer, and especially the east would have been in better condition, had this matter been dealt with so as to settle the whole question for at least a score of years. You may place this upon the statute-book; but it is not a settlement. You have heralded it thoughout the country as something that has been done; it is something that has not been more than half done. I would ask my hon. friend to drop this Bill and take hold of a matter that affects Eastern Canada to an extent that few realize, the question of the branch lines. This is a matter which has been formulated and agreed upon, which my right hon. friend (Mr. Borden) himself determined even before he was charged with the responsibility of leading the government, believing it to be in the best interests of Eastern Canada and a wise addition to the transportation system which affects not merely Eastern Canada but the whole Dominion. Mr. Chairman, I have taxed your patience, I know, and the patience of my hon. friends opposite——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. EMMERSON—though I know they are too good natured to say so. But above all, I have so taxed my own strength that I think I will have mercy and say no more at present.

Mr. HAZEN. I do not rise for the purpose of making a speech. But my hon. friend from Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) has referred with feelings of great pride to the fact that he has in his possession, a badge, such as those to be worn to-morrow by the delegates attending the immigration convention to be held in Fredericton. I also am the proud possessor of one of those badges, which I now hold in my hand. I interrupted my hon. friend to say that he was giving a very free translation of the inscription upon that badge. one would have thought in listening to my hon. friend, that the convention was to be held because the people of New Brunswick were bowed down with care and sorrow over the condition of affairs existing in the province, and that they felt it necessary to hold this convention because of what he calls the abandoned farms and the deserted homes throughout the province. That is not at all the reason. The convention is being held because there is a feeling of extreme optimism and of hope in the future in the breast of every one in the province of New Brunswick to-day. Let me read the language of the inscription upon this badge of which my hon. friend gave such a free translation:

Delegate to the immigration convention, Fredericton, March 8th. We are going to boost New Brunswick——

Not New Brunswick, the down-trodden, not New Brunswick the depressed, but—

We are going to boost New Brunswick, the busy east of Canada.

Let me call attention to some of the reasons given why the delegates ought to attend this congress. I have here a report of a meeting of the Board of Trade held in the city of St. John on Tuesday evening last, and reported in the St. John papers of yesterday morning. This is the report in the paper read on all occasions with great care by my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Pugsley) and to which he occasionally makes reference in this House:

T. H. Estabrooks then called attention to the immigration congress to be held at Fredericton. He said that owing to the more favourable attitude assumed by the federal government to the eastern provinces, and the interest shown by the provincial government in immigration, they should do all that was possible to boost the immigration movement, and send a large representation to the congress. He believed the St. John Board of Trade could take credit for doing much to promote the feeling of confidence and optimism that now prevailed, and it should continue to take an aggressive interest in the forward movement in the province.

It is not necessary for me to remind my hon. friend from Westmorland or any hon. gentleman who knows New Brunswick, that Mr. T. Estabrooks who made the statement referred to about the more favourable attitude of the federal government towards New Brunswick and of the attitude of the provincial government as regards immigration is not a member of the Conservative party, but is a leading citizen of St. John, and one of the most active and zealous leaders of the Liberal cause in that constituency.

Mr. McKENZIE. The importance of this question to Nova Scotia as well as to other provinces of the Dominion, compels me to take up a little time of the House in discussing the subject. In this cabinet Nova Scotia ought to be well represented, and I conclude is well represented.

But that representative evidently must fight for the rights of that province. A strong claim is made for New Brunswick, the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat has said he is going to do great things for that province. The Minister of Railways not satisfied with taking what lies in front of his province, is stretching out through another province to Hudson bay. When I see these things being done by the present cabinet, when I see the hon. gentleman of the cabinet who represents Manitoba getting everything in sight for his province, when I know that there is a grievance approaching full maturity in British Columbia which is represented in the cabinet by a very capable representative, then, knowing that all of these representatives will insist on their pounds of flesh, I feel that the good representative of the province of Nova Scotia in the cabinet is in a position similar to that unfortunate person, who, on one occasion, going down from Jerusalem to Jericho fell among thieves. I feel that no matter how able that representative from Nova Scotia may be, strenuous assistance and support even from the opposition will be required to enable him to impress on his colleagues that there is such a place as Nova Scotia and that it has demands and needs of as great importance as those of the other sections of the Dominion.

We have heard severe criticism of Liberalism from hon. gentlemen from Manitoba, particularly from the Minister of the Interior. I shall not quote the not at all classic or choice language in which he last night made reference to the position of Manitoba in the confederacy. I shall not refer in his own words to the lamentable position in which he says that province has been ever since its creation nor shall I refer to his description of the lack of justice that has been meted out to that province by the Liberal party. But I must remind him that that province was not created by a Liberal government, but was created in 1870 by a Tory government and whatever constitution, whatever terms it received, were given by the late Right Hon. Sir John A. Macdonald and a Tory cabinet. Thus, if its territory or if its financial terms were not right, it was not the fault of any Liberal government or of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Manitoba was a province during the administration of the Tory party from 1870 to 1896 with the exception of four years from 1874 to 1878. What have these hon. gentlemen supporting the government to-day to say about the conduct of the Conservative party who for twenty-two years made no attempt to improve the position of Manitoba? We have heard a great deal about the Liberal party being responsible for the educational conditions in Manitoba, about the settlement of the school question made by the Liberal party not being satisfactory. If it was not satisfactory to the Conservative party in Manitoba when they came into power in 1899, why did they not remedy the conditions as it was entirely in their power to do? From that day to this they have done nothing by legislation to better conditions there. Whatever that settlement was, it was eminently satisfactory to the Roblin government and the Minister of the Interior, for they have left it severely alone.

I submit that in dealing with the vast heritage which has come to us we should treat it as the property of the whole of Canada. The method which is being adopted by the government bears a striking similarity to the winding up of an estate step by step, giving each heir a share of the estate at a different time.

Mr. BURNHAM. Do you think the country is dead?

Mr. McKENZIE. I think this alarm clock must be wound in such a way that it will not be going off at unexpected moments. I would ask the Minister of Public Works to see that this clock is looked after in some better way.

I was saying, Sir, that my hon. friend, in his practice of his profession, and every hon. gentleman in this House who practices that profession of the law, knows that the settlement of estates can better be accomplished when the heirs or their representatives are all before the court at the same time. I submit that the land of the Northwest Territories is the common property of the people of this country. It was bought by the common administration of the country, and paid for by moneys coming out of the common treasury. The moneys that were expended in the development of the country were the common moneys of the people. The land and the money given to the Canadian Pacific railway for the development of that country, were land and money expended by the people of Canada as a whole for the development and welfare of the Northwest. We are all on an even footing. No partner of the concern has any advantage over the other. We are all on equal terms, and we have a right to an equal part of that territory. If it be true that while we were expending money and giving land for the advancement of that large corporation, for the benefit of ourselves as well as in the interest of the corporation, is it not likewise true that, if now, this land has become profitable and worth looking after, we have a right as partners, to come in and benefit by what is to be got from it. The moment Alberta and Saskatchewan received money in lieu of land, they began to participate in the profits of that land. It became a source of profit to them. We are putting through this House another Bill by which the province of Manitoba is to receive the rentals from this land. It will receive so much per acre for the land which comes within its lines. Alberta and Saskatchewan are receiving a rental from this land. Why should not Nova Scotia, Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island receive an equal compensation, or some compensation from the same property to which they have the same right? That is the ground largely upon which we come here and present our claim. Ontario is getting the land itself, Quebec is also getting land, and they are therefore, not in the same position as New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia. We cannot get the land itself, although we are not without a precedent for getting it. What has happened in the United States under similar circumstances is that certain sections of Louisiana were set apart for the eastern states and they sold the land to their own advantage. We are not looking for a condition of that kind, but we are looking for something that will be equivalent to it, something that will give the provinces by the sea some compensation for the interest in these territories and valuable properties. This is the most opportune time for the government to deal with this question. Never again will such an opportunity present itself. Saskatchewan has its part, Alberta has its part, and now Manitoba is getting its quota. Ontario, by a resolution which is on the order paper of this House, is getting its share, Quebec is to get its share and now is the opportune time to settle the question once and for all. We are told by no less a person than the Prime Minister that this is not an opportune time, that we must put it off a little longer, and that when Manitoba gets its share, and all the provinces except the maritime provinces get their share, something will be done. I submit to the Prime Minister that it will be more or less a matter of bargaining before he can reach a settlement and that the best time for bargaining is when he has something to offer to these provinces for a fair settlement with the maritime provinces. The mother country cannot be suspected of being less honourable in its dealings with the smaller sections of the empire than would be the province of Ontario, Quebec or Manitoba in dealing with the maritime provinces. And yet, when my right hon. friend who leads the opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) made a change in the tariff by which preference was given to the mother country, we were told that he made a mistake, that he should never have given that concession without something in return, and that if he had stood by manfully and kept them from getting that preference until they gave us some preference in their markets, it would have been better for us. The situation here is exactly the same, the position is similar, the Premier of this country has to-day the whip-hand, he has control of these lands, they are the lands of Canada, the provinces want this consideration and it is for him to say as representing the maritime provinces as the trustee of the maritime provinces in this matter, as he is of every other part of the country: Before you can get these lands you must consent to certain concessions as far as the maritime provinces are concerned, you must consent to a readjustment of the representation in the House of Commons for one thing, and you must agree to some money consideration to these provinces for the interest and right which they have in these vast territories. These are conditions which the Prime Minister will find it comparatively easy to settle to-day, but which he will find extremely difficult to settle if he goes to those provinces empty-handed without anything to offer in compensation for any concessions that he may ask them to make. It is proposed to enlarge the province of Quebec to a large extent, and I do not begrudge that province any territory which properly may be added to it. If that territory is what we believe it is going to be, it is a territory in which people will live, it is a territory which will become inhabited, it is a territory which will add largely to the population of the province, and if matters remain in statu quo it will increase the unit of representation enormously, and as the unit of representation increases in Quebec I need not point out to the Prime Minister that it makes the representation of the maritime provinces smaller and smaller until it comes to the vanishing point altogether. I do not know whether the addition of this territory to Quebec will affect the unit of representation in that way, but I think it would be better, if the territory is going to be taken in, that we should have a reconsideration of the terms of confederation in so far as representation is concerned, and fix a unit of representation at something higher than it is at the present time, in order that justice may be done to the maritime provinces. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Hazen) spoke last night about a resolution which was moved in this House in 1909. He will find in the discussion then that all of us practically from Nova Scotia spoke upon it. I spoke upon it myself, and I took the very same position then that I am taking to-day, although we did not have the same opportunity of presenting our case, as the question was not as fully before the House then as it is now. I submit that when Quebec is getting its lands is the time to revise the representation and to place a provision in the constitution whereby the maritime provinces will be in the same position as British Columbia.

It does not work unfairness to anybody and, therefore, I do not see why there should be any objection to putting similar safeguards in the arrangements with the maritime provinces. Why should we not at this opportune time settle everything once and for all? I submit to the Prime Minister with confidence that unless he is going to the imperial parliament for confirmatory legislation, he has no constitutional authority for the Bill now before the House. There is no constitutional precedent for this measure, unless it is the intention of the government to go to the imperial parliament to get an Act confirming it, as was done in 1871 when Manitoba was first created a province. I am confirmed in my belief in this matter, by the remarks of the Prime Minister himself, who, speaking on the constitutional aspect in respect to the Manitoba school, told the House that we had no constitutional authority to deal with the terms upon which Manitoba came into confederation. He told us that section 2 of the British North America Act of 1871 gave us power to create the province and to start it out on its housekeeping and to give it financial and educational terms, but he also told us that we had no authority whatever to afterwards alter the terms of that constitution. I submit that this Bill is a reconstruction of the constitution of Manitoba, and is, therefore, beyond our jurisdiction. The twenty-fourth section of the Manitoba Act says:

> Inasmuch as the province is not in debt, the said province shall be entitled to be paid and to receive from the government of Canada by half-yearly payments in advance, interest at the rate of five per cent per annum on the sum of $422,900.

Will any person in this House deny that that section is a part of the constitution of Manitoba? Then when you come to section 4 of this Bill, it commences:

> Inasmuch as the province was not in debt at the time it was established, &c., and you are practically to all intents and purposes repealing section 2 of the Manitoba Act and putting in its stead sections 4 and 5 of this Bill. I submit that before this bargain is confirmed we must go to the imperial parliament for confirmatory legislation, and as the fewer times we go there the better, I would suggest to the Prime Minister that all these changes, everything that is necessary to put the provinces on a proper footing, should be incorporated in the one Bill, that we may once for all settle with the provinces.

My contention is that even if the constitution of a province came only from this parliament, we could not afterwards change it, but how much more is that the case when we find that the charter of Manitoba is practically an imperial Act. At page 2927 of 'Hansard', 1905, appears an opinion given by Mr. Borden, now Prime Minister, upon the authority of this parliament to tinker with or change the constitution of a province once it is given. The right hon. gentleman then said:

> I do not know whether my hon. friend is quite of the same opinion to-day, with regard to the easy nature of the step, but I venture to say in all seriousness that the step which we are taking now is the most important and momentous step that has ever been taken by this parliament in regard to our Northwestern Territory. We are doing to-day what this parliament cannot undo in the future, because the constitution which we now propose to give to the territories of the Northwest can only be adhered by the imperial parliament.

Further on he said:

I, to-day, am standing on the rock of the constitution, as I understand that constitution; that I simply desire that the domination of this parliament shall not in any way destroy or undermine that foundation upon which the provincial rights of this country rest.

The Prime Minister then took the ground that once a constitution was given to a province nothing could be done by this parliament that would interfere with it. I think that I can successfully contend before any authoritative body on constitutional law, that the Bill now before parliament has the effect of changing the constitution of the province of Manitoba and that we are attempting to legislate in this direction without any authority under our constitution.

I have been looking at the different Acts which compose the British North America Act, but I can find no authority to the contrary. If what I say is true, that hon. gentlemen opposite must go to the imperial parliament for authority for the revision of this agreement, I submit that we should only go when all the land questions are settled, and when every province has received what is its due under present conditions. We might have thought, from what we had heard during the last few years, that the moment the Premier obtained charge of the affairs of this country, he would give the lands to the different provinces in the west. But he has brought a gentleman to take charge of those lands in the person of the Minister of the Interior, who is a very different sort of man when he is in charge of them from what he was when he was merely a minister of the province of Manitoba. That hon. gentleman now realizes that to have the swinging of all the lands from Ontario to the Rocky mountains is quite a piece of patronage to have in his hands, and that to give those lands to the provinces of Saskatchewan and Ontario and Manitoba, which I understand is to have a Liberal government in a few months, would be to place in the hands of the various local governments a weapon that they could use against hon. gentlemen opposite. For that reason there is a change of front upon this question. It is entirely a question of whose ox is gored. When they could not use those lands themselves, they were ready to grant them to the provinces, but now that they have the swinging of the lands and the patronage connected with them, they wish to leave them as they are, and the old slogan of last summer, let well enough alone, is brought into play again. It is said that we cannot give the lands to Manitoba until it is put in the same position as Saskatchewan and Alberta. I cannot understand that reasoning. If it shall be a good and proper thing to give the lands to Manitoba ten years from to-day, why should it not be a good and proper thing now, particularly in view of the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite during the ten or fifteen years that they were in opposition in this House? The policy of the government on that point reminds me of the doctor who was treating a patient with fever, and who prepared a large tub of ice-water. He was asked, 'What do you mean by putting a patient with fever in that cold water? He said, 'When I put him in that water, he will have convulsions, and I know how to treat convulsions.' In the same way this government want to put the province of Manitoba into a certain position before they give it its lands.

Now, I want to point out where the province of Nova Scotia stands in relation to this arrangement. The province of Nova Scotia and the province of Manitoba are closer together in the matter of population than any other two provinces in the confederation. This arrangement gives the province of Manitoba an arrearage, going back for four years, amounting to $2,380,372.09. Hon. gentlemen tell us that they are doing this under section 3 of the British North America Act of 1871. I say that that Act simply gives them authority to deal with conditions as they are when they pass the Act. That section does not give them any authority to go back one day. It is not retroactive, and they go back those four years without any authority whatever. According to the last census the province of Nova Scotia had a population of 492,338, and it receives from this Dominion $636,671.28, or $1.20 per head of population. The province of Manitoba has a smaller population, numbering about 450,000, on which it receives $2.96 per head, or more than double the amount, per head, paid to Nova Scotia. Under the terms of confederation the different provinces were supposed to get exactly the same amount per head. How does the Prime Minister, being the only representative of the province of Nova Scotia in this cabinet, propose to explain to his people that the good old province of Nova Scotia is to get along with $1.20 per capita of its population, to do all its work and meet all its obligations, whereas he is a consenting party to giving Manitoba $2.69 per capita to do the same kind of work? That is the bargain which is being submitted to this House today, and which is supposed to be accepted by the people of Nova Scotia. We have 36,724 more people in the province of Nova Scotia than there are in the province of Manitoba, and yet the latter province gets $712,674.11 per year more than Nova Scotia does. I submit that this is an absolutely indefensible and unfair position for the Prime Minister to take in regard to the province he represents; and I presume it is the same with reference to every other province.

I figured it out as between Manitoba and the province to which I belong, because I am particularly accountable to the people of the province of Nova Scotia. I submit, therefore, that any legislation confirming this arrangement is not fair to the province of Nova Scotia or any of the maritime provinces, and it is not fair to any other province in Canada. Unless the Prime Minister intends to bring all the provinces up to a position of equality, to put them on the same footing, and give them all according to the population the same amount of money, he cannot expect to have peace, contentment, or harmony in the family of provinces over which he presides. One thing more, and I perhaps should not say very much about it. I want to point out to the Minister of Public Works and to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, that this Manitoba school question seems to be a very important one, and that if they want to do anything with respect to the constitution in Manitoba on the subject of education they are beginning at the wrong end. They say that they have not the authority to touch the territories, and that they cannot give any new law to the territories, but they are creating boundaries for the provinces. Everything within those boundaries will constitute the one province. There will be no north, south, east or west about it, all that territory will be in the province of Manitoba. When Sir John A. Macdonald and his government drafted section 22 of the Manitoba Act, will anybody tell me that it was not his intention to give separate schools in that part of Manitoba. The section provides:

> Nothing in any such law shall prejudicially affect any right or privilege with respect to Denominational schools which any class of persons have by law or practice in the province at the Union.

It was the intention of the government of that day to give separate schools to the people of Manitoba. It was the belief of the people who went into Manitoba that under that law they had that right. When that section came to be interpreted by the Lords of the Privy Council they said: There is no doubt about it, that was the intention of that legislation, but the drafters of the Act did not use apt language to fully carry out what they set out to do. Now the Prime Minister, the Minister of Public Works, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and every other lawyer in the cabinet, and every man that is in the cabinet or is supporting it, cannot escape the responsibility by saying that there is nothing in the Territories Act to enable them to change the law. All they have to do now when if they are giving a new charter, or a new constitution, to Manitoba and I challenge anybody on the other side to say to the contrary—that if they are giving a new constitution to Manitoba changing its financial terms, and changing its boundaries, what is the matter, if they are true to their principles, with changing that section to give what it was intended to give from the start. That is the condition, Sir, and there is no use in hon. gentlemen trying to escape by any back door, or by saying there is nothing in the Territories Act which gives them the right to do this. If the government had the right to change the financial terms, they have the right to change other features. They cannot escape their responsibility and they may as well confess that they do not want to do it. That is the position and that is where I want to leave it. Now I submit that all these things should be put right, and that the province should get what belongs to it. If these matters are not righted now there will be an appeal to Cæsar, there will be an appeal to the people. If we cannot get our rights here, we will get them at the ballot-box, and this government will be hurled from power and will have plenty of time to lament not taking the action which they could have taken in this matter.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). The Bill before the House is, in my judgment, one of the most important measures that has ever been introduced in parliament since confederation. As has been pointed out by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, it is in effect, an attempt at recasting the terms of confederation. It goes to the very essence of our constitution. It deals with matters that pertain to all the provinces, and with especially matters of very vital importance to each and every one namely, the extent of its territory and the financial arrangements under which it came into confederation, and form part and parcel of that grand scheme. I shall say nothing as to the rights of the people in the addition which is being made under this Bill to the province of Manitoba. I want to deal more particularly with this special point: I represent a constituency which, from what I have heard within the last few days, regarding the effect of the late census on the question of representation, will stand a good chance of being wiped out. I am quite convinced, after listening to the eloquent speech of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries yesterday, that it was not the intention of the fathers of confederation that any of the maritime provinces should lose the representation which they had at that time. I have the honour to speak for a constituency that was represented about the time of the union and afterwards by men who took a prominent part in the confederation scheme and afterwards in the securing of better terms. I refer to one of the bright and shining lights of confedration one who took a prominent part in the confederation deliberations, William A. Henry, subsequently, Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada, who at that time, represented the county to which I have the honour to belong. I refer likewise, to the late judge Hugh Macdonald, who also represented the county of Antigonish, and who after confederation went to England to secure better terms for his native province. I am quite sure that if these men could have anticipated that the county of Antigonish would be put into the position it is likely to be, by reason of the legislation which is now before the House, and legislation which will be brought down with respect to the extension of the boundaries of Quebec—not directly due to that legislation, but indirectly due to it—I am quite sure that if they could have foreseen that the constitution would be construed in the way that it is likely to be construed, they would have taken care that more apt language was used in connection with the clauses dealing with the question of representation, than was used. It has been pointed out by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries who backed up the members from this side of the house that the provinces by the sea, are likely to be placed in a very humiliating position by reason of the great growth that is going on in the western part of the country, due in a large measure to the drain that has been made upon the eastern provinces. They are likely to have their representation still further reduced. I have listened with a great deal of pleasure and satisfaction to that hon. gentleman's statement when he said that we should approach this question without any party spirit. On this question, he said, all those from the maritime provinces, should be united. I agree that it is a most serious question, and I invite hon. gentlemen opposite, and especially those from the maritime provinces, to show that they appreciate the gravity of the situation by urging upon the government to afford some protection to that section of Canada before this measure goes through. Now is the time, I submit to do that, when the province of Manitoba is asking for an extension of her boundaries and for a change in the terms and conditions under which it entered confederation, and under which it existed in that confederation for a period of 40 years.

The province of Quebec, as explained by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, is to have almost an empire added to it. And the papers tell us that the province of Saskatchewan is asking for further consideration and for redress of grievances which it alleges will exist if this measure goes through. Does anybody doubt for a moment that, if we give this large territory to Manitoba and make the proposed subventions to that province, the other provinces will be discontented? Though I have listened to this debate carefully I have not heard a solitary, substantial reason advanced in support of these concessions to Manitoba, except that Manitoba is a young, energetic, active province that was well worthy of the advantages proposed to be given, and deserving to be as well treated as Alberta and Saskatchewan. There was no constitutional ground for the favours to be granted—only a comparison with Alberta and Saskatchewan. We are asked to depart from the terms of confederation on which Manitoba came in and under which she has existed since, and this is to be done on the plea that it is necessary in order to place Manitoba on an equal footing with Alberta and Saskatchewan—not because there are constitutional grounds for the change. But what about the other provinces of the Dominion? What about New Brunswick? What about Prince Edward Island? Have not these provinces equal rights with Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba? And if you are going to make an increased grant to Manitoba simply because a certain grant was made to Alberta and Saskatchewan and not because there is a legal constitutional ground for it, why not deal in the same way with the maritime provinces and British Columbia?

This is the time when the people of the maritime provinces should urge their grievance. That there is a grievance, no one can deny who has listened to the calm and earnest speech of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Hazen) and to the speeches of the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) and the hon. member for Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Carvell) and the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson). Anybody who listened to these speeches, whether in sympathy with the maritime provinces or not, if he applies reason, judgment and fair-play to the question must come to the conclusion that the people of the maritime provinces have a just and valid claim, that they have a grievance that should be redressed. I refer to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and the speech he delivered to show that in my judgment we should look at this question not from the party point of view. We should not seek to make party capital out of it.

It was pointed out by the hon. member for Westmorland that the intention of the fathers of confederation was that the maritime provinces should continue to have the representation that they had on entering confederation. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries emphasized that. But the whole difficulty is that the intention was not expressed; what was intended to be said was not said, or that which was said was different from that which was intended. But that is not by any means unprecedented. The hon. member for North Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie) referred to the Manitoba school case and to the decision of the Privy Council, showing conclusively from the language of the members of that court that there was no doubt as to what was intended so far as Manitoba was concerned, which was separate schools, but the difficulty was that apt language was not used, and they had to consider the language used and give their decision accordingly. It was pointed out by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and others that the idea of the fathers of confederation was that the representation of the maritime provinces should bear a certain proportion to that of the rest of Canada. But what was meant by Canada? The maritime provinces contended that it meant the original four provinces. But the courts held that it meant the Dominion of Canada as it then was, including the added provinces. And we suffer in consequence, and we must accept the constitution as it is. But we appeal to this government to take steps to secure for the maritime provinces that which it was originally intended they should have. I say it is time that we should press our claims, now when other provinces are coming and asking that justice be done. When the half of Canada is asking for changes, seeking favours and concessions—justice if you like—from this parliament, that is the time when we should be more likely to get the ear of this parliament and of the other provinces for our own demand. The Prime Minister intimated yesterday that something would be done for the maritime provinces. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries also gave us some comfort in that regard. But the statements of the Prime Minister were rather vague and indefinite and, while in form reassuring and comforting, were far from satisfactory. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who was rather more assuming so far as the rights of the maritime provinces are concerned, asked us not to throw any obstacle in the way of this measure, not to press our claim just now, but to take the chance of the goodwill and generosity of the other provinces at a later date. I concur in what the hon. member from Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Carvell) said, that the time when others are seeking for redress of grievances, the time when the other party is seeking a favour from you, is the proper time to do business. The words of the Prime Minister were somewhat comforting and the words of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries perhaps were well conceived. Yet I think the words of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Monk) and the Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier) were far from comforting. The Prime Minister tells us that later on the provinces by the sea would be taken into his council and he would see what could be done for them. But he did not promise definitely that anything would be done. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries went further and said he hoped the day was not far distant when these grievances would be settled and thus justice done.

The Postmaster General and the Minister of Public Works rather ridiculed the claim that we made. The latter was somewhat sarcastic when discussing our claims. The argument of the maritime provinces is that this large territory which is to be added to the province of Manitoba is not the patrimony of Manitoba but the equal property of all the rest of Canada. It was purchased by the four original provinces, costing $1,500,000, but since then there has been expended on it a vast sum of money for surveys, policing and development, the construction of the Canadian Pacific railway, the Canadian Northern railway, the Grand Trunk Pacific and other railways, and it is surely right for the other provinces to say that we must jealously guard our own interests with respect to that country. The Minister of Public Works grew sarcastic and ridiculed this claim. He said:

> When we heard the hon. member speak of the necessity, in the disposal of these great territories, of consulting provinces far removed from the regions which we are discussing, and talking of compensation being given to these provinces, one would suppose we were assisting a land deal. Well, that is not the spirit in which the founders of confederation proceeded; that is not the spirit which presided over the negotiations when they acquired Rupert's Land and the territories of the northwest. There was no payment there for real estate; it was under an order in council of the imperial government that most of these lands were handed over to us, and, while it is true, that in 1868, compensation was paid to extinguish the rights—other than trading and commercial rights of the Hudson's Bay Company, the idea at the bottom of it was that these territories would afterwards be distributed among the provinces in order to complete a symmetrical plan under which this territory would become provincially organized for the fuller and more completed development of the confederacy than in an embryo state. It is not a matter of adjusting accounts among the provinces; it is not a matter to be taken up in a book-keeping spirit; but it is a matter which should be regarded in the light alone of the fruition of the scheme of confederation. It seems to me, therefore, that the criticism we have heard to-day about the financial terms granted and about consulting the other provinces and about an accord between Manitoba and Ontario, as to a right of way for a purely provincial railway into the hinterland and towards Hudson bay; it seems to me that the constitutional points raised in these questions did not evince on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite that large and liberal-minded view which we should take of an event of this kind.

It may be that the Minister of Public Works and the Postmaster General, who spoke on similar lines, think that this is a matter of no great importance or concern to us, and that we should look at it in a big, broad, liberal-minded way. That is not the way the people of the maritime provinces look at it, Conservatives as well as Liberals. They feel that all the provinces must have a fair proportionate share of this land in order to carry on their administration. As the hon. member for North Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie) pointed out, when Louisiana was purchased by the United States, a large tract of the land was reserved and afterwards dealt out to the various states of the Union. The states received large grants for the support of colleges devoted to agriculture and the mechanical arts. This was done under the Morel College Land Act which was approved on July 2, 1862. We in the maritime provinces are far removed from that western country, but we have a right to participate, and some scheme could be worked out similar to the Morel Act. The Prime Minister and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries have urged that the further consideration of the rights of the maritime provinces should be deferred until this matter is disposed of. I venture to say that if that is done then later on, when the maritime provinces ask to have their case dealt with, they will be told that they should have presented their claim in 1912, when there was a readjustment of the boundaries of Quebec, Ontario and Manitoba, and of the indemnity paid to Manitoba. I submit that the time for us to present our case is now, and that there is nothing unreasonable in asking the government to let this matter stand over until a conference of the various Premiers may be held on the question of fair and equitable readjustment of the subsidies. The principle of the extension of the Manitoba boundary has already been recognized by the seconding of the Bill. The people of Manitoba, Ontario and Quebec will not suffer from the postponement, and I submit that if this measure goes through it will practically for ever bar the maritime provinces from coming in and securing a redress of grievances. It is now or never with us.

If that be the case, I think it is only fair that the further consideration of this matter should stand over until this question of what our rights in the maritime provinces, both as to representation and provincial subsidies has been determined. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries pointed out that we would likely have our grievances redressed a little later on. The language of the Minister of Marine was somewhat assuring, but the language of the Prime Minister was rather less assuring, while the language of the Minister of Public Works and of the Postmaster General, in referring to the claims of the maritime provinces, was positively disheartening. How far did the Prime Minister go in this connection? He said:

> And I would like to repeat what I have already said in speaking upon the resolutions in that regard, that when we do come to consider that proposal I think it will be just and necessary to give some consideration to the maritime provinces whose boundaries cannot be enlarged by reason of their natural situation, to call them into our councils and give them a just voice as to the terms upon which these lands shall be handed over, and especially with regard to what compensation, if any, should be given to the three maritime provinces by reason of the transfer of these lands to the governments of Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan.

It will be observed that the Prime Minister was very careful not to commit himself to the statement that the maritime provinces reasonably could expect to participate in these lands at a later day. He said that they would consider what compensation, if any, might be granted, and he said that they would be called to the councils of the government, but nothing further than that. That surely cannot be satisfactory to hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House who come from the maritime provinces. They may have some further assurance that we know nothing of. If they have I can understand the position that they will take but, if they have not any assurance further than these words in the speech of the right hon. Prime Minister, speaking in the debate, they are recreant to their duty to the maritime provinces if they do not take a firmer and more positive stand on this occasion. This is the time for us to act and to act unitedly if we hope to accomplish anything. The hon. Minister of the Interior emphasized the fact last night that the people of Manitoba have had a long standing grievance, that they had been complaining in season and out of season ever since they had entered confederation, and in order to placate them it was necessary to come down with some such measure as this. He emphasized the fact that they had complained, that they had remonstrated with this government time and time again ever since confederation. They succeeded, or they are about to succeed. Therefore, I say it is up to the people of the maritime provinces, who have been suffering in patience, who have been quietly seeing their population dwindle away census after the census, who find that the finances of the various provinces are scarcely sufficient to carry on their business in a satisfactory manner, and who are handicapped very much because of their limited revenue, to get busy now and try and secure from this government the measure of compensation that they are entitled to. They should take a leaf out of the book of Manitoba. They should agitate, they should remonstrate with the Prime Minister, who, we are proud to acknowledge, is one of our own people from the maritime provinces and whose sympathies are, or should, naturally be with us. It is up to the people of the maritime provinces to make their grievances known and to press their grievances in season and out of season, so that they may secure that measure of justice to which they are entitled.

Mr. HUGHES, Kings, P.E.I.). I find in the Morning 'Chronicle' of Halifax of the 6th of this month a telegram dated from Charlottetown, which says that Premier Matheson of the province of Prince Edward Island and two members of his government were here lately presenting the claims of that province for increased subsidy for the non-fulfilment of the terms of union in regard to winter communication and for an increase in subsidy in respect to the land which is given to Manitoba and which is intended to be given to Ontario and Quebec, that a committee of the government was appointed to take these claims into consideration, and that that committee is now considering them. I wish to ask the Prime Minister if that statement is correct? Perhaps I had better read the telegram.

Mr. BORDEN. I do not think it is necessary to read the telegram.

Mr. HUGHES (Kings, P.E.I.). That telegram is here.

Mr. BORDEN. Very good.

Mr. HUGHES (Kings, P.E.I.). It is this:

Charlottetown, P.E.I., March 5.

Premier Matheson has returned from Ottawa where he had gone, accompanied by Hon. A. E. Arsenault and Hon. John McLean, two members of his government, to press the claims of the island for better financial treatment by the federal government. Claims on account of the Prince Edward Island railway's failure to maintain regular communication in winter, and for compensation to this province, on account of public domains being acquired by other provinces, whose boundaries have been extended, were strongly pressed. The question was submitted to a committee, consisting of Premier Borden, Finance Minister White, Hon. G. E. Foster, Hon. Messrs. Rogers and Perley.

Mr. Matheson makes no definite announcement as to the result of the trip but says he believes justice will be rendered this province. Delegation also succeeded in arranging that the rights in certain harbours and other waters, now vested in Canada, be vested in the province, in order that oyster cultivation be carried on.

I just desire to ask the Prime Minister if he would give any information as to whether the matter is being considered, whether a decision has been reached yet by the committee, or whether he expects that it will be reached in time to submit the question to parliament during this session?

Mr. BORDEN. The Prime Minister of Prince Edward Island and his colleagues presented certain claims to the government which are under consideration.

Mr. HUGHES (Kings, P.E.I.). That is not very definite information; in fact, the telegram contains a great deal more than that. I am rather inclined to think that the Premier of Prince Edward Island will give the people of that province more information than the Prime Minister has given to me or to members of this committee. I would ask the Prime Minister, is the mater under consideration?

Mr. BORDEN. I have already said so.

Mr. HUGHES (Kings, P.E.I.). By a committee of the government.

Mr. BORDEN. By the government.

Mr. HUGHES (Kings, P.E.I.) There is no doubt that the province of Prince Edward Island is presenting to the government certain claims which they expect to be considered and which are really at the present time under consideration. The government of the province of Manitoba is also presenting claims which, we understand, are to be settled by arbitration. If this Bill passes there is no doubt but that other claims will be presented by nearly all the provinces because this Bill will unsettle the financial arrangements between the federal government and the provincial administrations.

Would it not be a just thing to do, to accept the amendment of the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) and call together all the provinces to present all their claims so that the Dominion government may dispose of them at one and the same time? If you adopt this Bill you will practically issue an invitation to all the provincial governments to come here and present the claims they have or think they have, and then you will be compelled to dispose of these claims in a fragmentary way. Prince Edward Island thinks it is entitled to consideration because of the public domain that is being given to the other provinces, and it appears to me this government has some idea that there is merit in that claim because the Prime Minister, speaking on the subject, gave us an intimation that when the three prairie provinces are given the ownership of their lands the government would consider the claims of the maritime provinces for compensation in reference thereto. I fear it will be many years before that matter is disposed of, and if Prince Edward Island has to wait that long for compensation, it is certain the subsidy to that province will not be increased in the near future. I would, however, point out to the Prime Minister, that although he himself gave that promise, and although it was concurred in to some extent by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, no other member of his government who spoke appeared to take the same view. The remarks of the Minister of Labour would lead us to suppose that he did not think there was anything in the claim of the maritime provinces with regard to this; the Minister of Finance appeared to take the same ground, but the Minister of Public Works and the Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier) strongly disapproved of the idea that the maritime provinces had any claim in regard to the public domain that would be handed over to the other provinces, and the Minister of Public Works indeed said that the hinterland of Quebec and Ontario had always belonged to these provinces and that it was always understood it would be handed over to them in due time. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) told us that we should not approach this question in any huckstering spirit, but in a broad and generous way, and judging by his attitude, it would seem to me that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) would be quite pleased to take the land for Quebec and to leave the broad and generous spirit to the maritime provinces. Surely there can be no better time to settle this whole matter than the present. It is a matter that concerns us in the maritime provinces very intimately.

When this matter was first discussed the member for Kings and Albert (Mr Fowler) made the statement that this measure would not pass until the maritime provinces got fair-play and justice, and the hon. memebr for Queens, Prince Edward Island, agreed with him in that view. These gentlemen are not here to-night but if they were I have no doubt they would be just as insistent as we upon this side of the House are in seeing that we get a more definite statement in regard to this question. I have presented my views on the matter, I think they are fair and reasonable views, and I believe they should receive just consideration from the government. We do not want to retard this legislation; we do not want to be unfair to Manitoba or to any province in the Dominion, but we want to get fair-play for the maritime provinces.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. HUGHES (Kings, P.E.I.). Surely that is a fair claim to make, but judging from the manner in which these gentlemen opposite receive these remarks they would seem to think that the maritime provinces have no right to present their case in this House. I leave these gentlemen to their responsibility for taking such an attitude as that.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I wish to present a few figures to the committee which have been omitted to be given by the Minister of the Interior. In addition to the swamp lands, it ought not to be forgotten that the federal government has given to the province of Manitoba two sections in every township for educational purposes. I shall give the figures taken from the speech of Mr. Armstrong, the provincial treasurer of Manitoba, made in the year 1910, and which shows what a very valuable asset these lands have been to the province of Manitoba. The school lands fund, resting with the Dominion government for the benefit of the province on the 31st of March, 1909, is $2,185,211; deferred payments on lands sold to 31st of March, 1908, $2,750,600. In addition to that there were at that time unsold 1,789,674 acres, which at the low valuation of $8 per acre—which I think is very much below what the school lands sell for—amounts to $14,317,792, making a total value of the school lands in Manitoba including the cash on hand and the deferred payments and the value of the unsold land at $8 per acre the very handsome sum of $17,977,136.

Mr. Armstrong also stated that the province was at that time receiving a revenue from the school lands, cash, and deferred payments, of $166,056. I think that this must necessarily be taken into consideration in dealing with the question as to whether this proposed settlement is fair or unfair to the other provinces and particularly to the smaller provinces of Canada. In my opinion, instead of passing this Bill as it is, instead of going through this farcical arrangement of taking back from the province of Manitoba its swamp lands, with the idea that two or three or four or five years from now they will be handed back, in connection with some arrangement with the three prairie provinces, it would be infinitely better, in view of the fact that the Dominion to-day is administering for the province two sections in every township, or one-seventeenth of the entire area of the lands of Manitoba, to let the province keep her swamp lands, keep as she will under this Bill the school lands, keep the lands in the added territory if you like, and give her a fair and reasonable, nay, a liberal sum, to enable her properly to administer affairs in the added territory. This is an additional reason why the amendment which I have the honour to propose to the committee should be adopted.

Amendment negatived: yeas, 62; nays, 101.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I mentioned last night that I had another amendment to move to clause 4. I move, seconded by Mr. Pardee:

That section 2 of section 4 be struck out and the following substituted therefor: The first half-yearly payment under this section shall be made on the 1st day of July, 1912.

As it is a pretty late hour of the night, and as this is a 'bona fide' amendment and is likely to be a contentious one and to take some time to discuss, I think I may fairly ask for an adjournment.

Mr. BORDEN. If it is going to take a good while to discuss it, we had better utilize some of the time this evening.

Mr. GUTHRIE. The subsection which I propose to amend occurs as subsection 2 of section 4, and as subsection 6 of section 5. In section 4 it applies to the payment of arrears on debt allowance, and in section 5 it applies to the payment of arrears in regard to lands. I fancy that the same argument will probably apply to both cases, and that, without infringing any rule, I can discuss both subsections under my motion, although the language of the amendment which I propose is directed merely to subsection 2 of section 4.

That brings up the whole question of the payment of arrears which to my mind—having examined the Bill as carefully as I could, and having listened now for several days to all the arguments which have been offered by supporters of the government in favour of the Bill both in principle and in detail—is perhaps the most objectionable feature in connection with the whole measure. It is certainly a feature which offers an opportunity for sound argument in opposition to it, and I noticed that the Prime Minister laboured very much as he sought to justify the payments proposed under subsection 2 of section 4 of this Bill. I followed very closely the argument of the Finance Minister upon the question, and I submit to any hon. member who will give the matter unbiased judgment, that the Finance Minister did not justify, nor attempt to justify, the payment of these arrears. I noticed also that, in the somewhat lengthy speech delivered by the Postmaster General, the only subject which he dealt with, apart from the school question was the payment of arrears, and I understood him to say that it did offer reasonable ground for argument. I should have liked very much had we had the benefit of the opinion and the learning of the Minister of Justice in regard to this particular clause. I cannot understand upon what principle it is proposed. I know of no principle of law, no principle of equity, which would justify such a proposal. I have not heard anything advanced which justifies the proposal so far during this debate, and I appeal to hon. members, whether on this or on the other side of the House, to give this question their earnest consideration. I am going to discuss it as seriously as I know how.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I regret very much the hour is so late for the discussion. I have waited patiently for two days in the hope that I might bring this matter before the House, and before a serious House——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Which would give this matter real consideration, and neither howl it down nor shout it through. The proposal as it affects subsection 2 of section 4 arises as to the debt allowance. It would almost seem unnecessary at this stage of the debate to approach the question of debt allowance from an historical point of view. Yet it is necessary to make some reference to it in order that one may place before the House a connected statement in regard to the matter. From what I have been able to gather myself, and from what I have gathered from the remarks of hon. gentlemen on both sides, I have come to the conclusion that the whole question of debt allowance is more or less of a fiction. The payment of the debt allowance itself is a fact but founded upon fiction. In the year of confederation, or the year prior to that event, when negotiations took place, and when the agreement was made between the representatives of the various provinces, the question of debt was a most difficult one to handle.

In old Canada, or in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, large sums had been expended on public works. We had not paid the money, we owed the money. New Brunswick had a debt, and Nova Scotia had a debt, and after many conferences and much discussion the founders of confederation finally reached an agreement that the debt of Canada, or of Ontario and Quebec should be assumed by the Dominion. At first it was stated at $67,000,000, but latterly at $62,000,000, that of New Brunswick at $7,000,000, and that of Nova Scotia at $8,000,000. Now the peculiarity of that assumption of debt was this: The provinces were relieved of their obligations and of their payment of interest. From thenceforth the Dominion of Canada was to bear the obligation and to pay the interest.

We transferred our assets to the Dominion of Canada, we made nothing out of the transaction at all; the Dominion of Canada assumed the debt and took over the assets. themselves. Now, under conditions such as I have narrated, why should a new province entering confederation without debt have a debt allowance at all. That, I submit, is the fiction in connection with the whole matter. I do not believe there ever should have been a debt allowance to provinces which came into confederation without actually having a debt. But the custom has been followed, in all cases since confederation to make a debt allowance when any new province did enter confederation, so that it is probably too late at this present time to raise such an objection. But I am convinced in my own mind the whole theory of debt allowance is wrong, the whole thing is founded in fiction and should not have been allowed in the first instance. But we have done otherwise, and having done otherwise in regard to all the other provinces, I do not think we should make an exception in regard to the province of Manitoba. As each province entered into confederation a debt allowance was fixed. The amount was settled by agreement between the parties interested, and once having been fixed, settled, and adjusted, it should, I think, have been the proper course to have pursued that the settlement made should have remained final and unalterable. But I must admit that it has not in the case of various provinces had that finality. The debt allowance of the various provinces has been on more than one occasion revised, and on more than one occasion altered, but the principle has been adhered to as nearly as possible. The original principle upon which the provinces entered into confederation under actual agreement should be adhered to as nearly as may be, particularly where any change might work to the prejudice of one of our sister provinces.

The province of Manitoba comes to this government asking—as I read the memorial that has been presented—for equal treatment with the sister provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta. The Finance Minister (Mr. White) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Borden) also emphasized the point that the guiding principle in the terms set forth in this Bill is to effect this equal treatment. There is no very good reason why such a parity should be established. Superficially, it sounds very well to say that the three prairie provinces are now placed on equal terms. I do not know that there would be very great objection to that course if the Bill did place the three prairie provinces on such terms, without doing harm or injustice to the other provinces of the Dominion. But my first point is that in regard to this debt allowance you are not placing Manitoba on equal terms with Saskatchewan and Alberta, but are giving Manitoba a distinct advantage over the other provinces.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I will try to elaborate that a little, I am convinced that it is so. In 1905 we incorporated into the confederation Alberta and Saskatchewan. The assumed population of each province was 250,000, and we gave them a debt allowance, which was considered fair having regard to the amount of the Dominion debt and to the number of our people, at a per capita rate of $32.43, making a capital sum of $8,107,500, as stated in these resolutions and in the Bill, and on this these provinces were entitled to receive 5 per cent as interest payable half yearly At that time, Manitoba's debt allowance was a comparatively small sum—about $400,000. But the population of Manitoba in 1905 was much less than the population of Manitoba to-day. To-day it is stated at 455,000 in round numbers, while the population of the sister province of Saskatchewan is about 40,000 more than that of Manitoba. It is proposed by the Bill to give Manitoba as a debt allowance the same capitalized sum as is enjoyed to-day by Saskatchewan with 40,000 more population according to the census of June last. If you are going to make Manitoba and Saskatchewan equal you would have to give Saskatchewan a further sum of $32.43 per head for that 40,000, or about $1,280,000 more for debt allowance.

That is only one discrimination. But the greatest discrimination, I submit, arises in connection with the amendment I have moved. The debt allowance, while founded in fiction, has been allowed since the year of confederation. And for what purpose? To assist the provinces in the administration of law within their own boundaries, to assist in regard to civil government, to help to pay some part of what would otherwise be a provincial tax upon the people of the province. That is the assumption upon which that allowance is made to any province in regard to debt. The proposal in this Bill is to date these allowances from the 1st of July, 1908, in other words, to pay the province of Manitoba for four years of arrears the compensation which the government proposes to allow Manitoba in maintaining government and peace and order within the boundaries of the province. I submit that there is no ground for such compensation. I ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. White) if he can point out any such ground. If you pay arrears, there must have been some debt, but in this case there was no debt, no obligation, no expense. Manitoba, from 1908 to the present day, has not spent a five cent piece in regard to these extended boundaries. That is a statement that, I think, cannot be controverted. Then, not having spent a cent; not having had it within its power to spend a cent for this purpose, upon what principle are you going to compensate; upon what principle are you going to pay arrears? The same reasoning, I think, applies to the arrears proposed under this Bill in respect to the lands of Manitoba. For, in respect to the land, you propose to pay arrears of three or four years. When Saskatchewan received indemnity for its public lands, those lands were actually within the provincial boundaries, and were administered by the Dominion of Canada. The province might be put to some expense in the maintenance of peace and order, and carrying on the government in respect to these lands and the people who occupied them.

It was for that reason that allowances were made to Saskatchewan and Alberta. But Manitoba has not had the lands, she has not the additional territory yet. For four years for which you propose to pay this land bounty, not one acre of the land has been within the boundary of that province, she has not and could not spend a dollar upon it. We would naturally expect that a strong case would be made out before any government would be justified in paying out of the public treasury $2,180,000 which under this Bill it is proposed to pay to Manitoba for arrears. For what? Compensation for what? Indemnity for what? Damages for what? Not one five-cent piece has Manitoba expended, not one five-cent piece has Manitoba suffered by way of damages. On July 13, 1908, parliament passed a resolution setting forth that the boundary between Manitoba and Ontario should be the line made permanent under this Bill. I can understand that if Manitoba had then passed an Act accepting that boundary and taken possession of those lands, there might be some justice behind this claim, some reason for paying these arrears, but Manitoba did not take that course, the province refused to accept that proposition and never agreed to accept that territory until March, 1911. We know that under the British North America Act, 1871, the Dominion parliament cannot alter the boundaries of a province without the consent of the province expressed by an Act of its legislature. Such an Act was passed by Manitoba in March, 1911, but it was not officially notified to this government until October or November last. I could understand the payment of this sum by way of bounty or gratuity, but you cannot properly put it on the ground that it is a debt, that Manitoba has any legal or equitable right to it. Manitoba has had and still has a vast area of swamp lands in her possession. She has realized $2,400,000 for 800,000 acres or a net sum of $3 an acre. She has been administering these lands since 1908, when we passed the resolution. She has had the ownership of these lands, and has derived the revenue from them, and still has an enormous amount of swamp lands in her possession. The best evidence of the value of these lands is to be found in the prospectus issued by Manitoba in which the claim is made that the swamp lands still remaining in the possession of Manitoba are worth £5,000,000 sterling. They have these lands to-day, they have had them for a number of years. Then why under such circumstances should the Dominion, made up of nine provinces all contributing in taxation to the exchequer, present $2,000,000 to Manitoba? It would not be right, it would not be just, and I sincerely hope it will not be done. I can best illustrate the position by an ordinary case of vendor and purchaser where a contract for purchase and sale of land is entered into to be carried out a year hence, the vendor remaining in possession for that year and then on the payment of the purchase money at the end of the year the possession to be changed; the vendor continuing to enjoy possession and saying to the purchaser at the end of the year: I want interest for the year. He would laugh at the man, such a claim would not be entertained for a moment. That is on a par with the position here.

Here is Manitoba since 1908 in full possession of the land, still in possession and enjoying the increment from the land, and when this Bill comes into force with these terms you turn round and say: Notwithstanding that you have had possession, notwithstanding that you have enjoyed the profit, we are going to hand you four years' arrears on this transaction, out of the treasury of the people of Canada. I do not know how many of my hon. friends from the province of Ontario, who sit behind the government, appreciate the significance of this question to Ontario. I am inclined to think that the five ministers from Ontario cannot and do not appreciate the true significance of the position. I believe that they have been asleep to the situation, or else the influence of the Minister of the Interior has been prepondering over them. He simply walked over them in connection with this transaction. It may be a great tribute to his ability—it is; it may be a great tribute to his tenacity—it is; it may be a great tribute to his influence in the Cabinet, and it is a great tribute to any one man who by his influence can drive through a bargain such as is grafted upon the present Bill, whereby Manitoba can come to the treasury of Canada and take out $2,000,000 odd of the taxes of the people. Upon what principle? I have not heard anyone state upon what principle. Upon no principle. There is no principle to it; it is nothing more nor less than a straight treasury raid. What is the significance to Ontario? I know that part of the province from which I come and I wish I had some of my neighbours in that province here tonight. I want my hon. friend from North Wellington (Mr. Clarke), my hon. friend from Dufferin (Mr. Best) and my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson), who support this government, to tell me how they are going to justify to their people this proposition. Here is the province of Ontario with a population, in round numbers, of 2,500,000, out of a total population of 7,200,000. We have about 35 per cent of the people of this country living in the province of Ontario, and at the same time we pay, as nearly as may be, 40 per cent of the taxes of the whole Dominion. We have a greater interest, in the province of Ontario in the amount of money which is taken out of the treasury than any other part of the country has. We contribute more in taxation than any other portion of the country. Where do we get our money? How is it going to come into the treasury? Where does it come from? The money comes from taxation, and the chief source of that taxation is our customs taxation. We received $73,000,000 last year from customs taxation, and $16,000,000, or $18,000,000 from excise. Ontario paid something over $29,000,000 in customs taxation out of the $73,000,000 collected, which is nearly 40 per cent, and we have 35 per cent of the population. We are paying more than our share. What does this proposal mean to Ontario? It means that you are going to pay out of the treasury this $2,000,000 odd to the province of Manitoba and that $800,000 of taxes of the people of Ontario are going to be handed over to Manitoba without the slightest justification, as 40 per cent of that amount will come out of the taxes of the people of Ontario. What are we going to say to our people? How are we going to explain it?—merely by the fact that in 1905 we constituted two new provinces and gave them terms adequate, proper and just at the time they were incorporated and that we did not at that time do so with respect to Manitoba? Is that a good reason, is that a good excuse? Will it do to say that in 1908 we unanimously resolved in this House that we would enlarge the boundaries of Manitoba? Would that be an excuse because Manitoba said: No we will not take those boundaries. If that were the ground upon which the transaction rested these arrears should only go at the farthest to October of last year, when Manitoba formally accepted that boundary. If you do not rest it upon that what are you going to rest it on? I do not know of any principle. I have tried to think of one. I have tried not to involve the matter but to get it as clearly in my mind as possible and to present it as concisely as I could to the committee. I know that my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. White) is a gentleman who has had very great experience in dealing with large financial transactions. I know that the Minister of Finance is perhaps the most experienced man in this House in dealing with large bulks of trust money. I know he will realize that in handling the money of the people of Canada he is handling trust money and that as in his career up to the present time in the city of Toronto he has handled very large amounts of trust money, I believe that if the case is fairly presented to him it will appeal to him that, as the trustee for the people of Canada, as the trustee of the money in the public treasury, he must have a much stronger case than has been made out here to authorize him to take $2,000,000 odd out of the treasury and hand it over to Manitoba when that money belongs to the people of Canada and when forty per cent of it has been paid in taxes by the people of Ontario. I think that if the case is fairly presented to him he will be impressed with the responsibility which he must carry with regard to this transaction. I do not believe that members of the government from Ontario have seriously considered this aspect of the case. The hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Crothers) has discussed this question and he is in his place tonight. I know he is a lawyer and a good one, but I do not believe that he has ever looked into the question of the payment of these arrears. I do not believe that any ground exists upon which that money can be legally paid. The only thing that you can do is to say to Manitoba: Here, out of the treasury of Canada, is $2,000,000 odd which we are going to give to you as a gift. It is a gift. Let the people know that you are giving it as a gift. Do not say that you are giving it on the ground of arrears. I noticed my hon. friend dealing with it, labouring with it and endeavouring to explain that feature of the proposition to the House. Any one who watched him could well understand the difficulties that he had to contend with. I do not believe that he satisfied his own mind and he certainly did not satisfy hon. members who sat on this side of the House, that there was anything right or anything proper in connection with the payment of these arrears. The hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier), I believe, was prepared to swallow the whole thing in one gulp, but even he had to say that it was an awkward point which had been raised in regard to these arrears and that there was ground for argument. Is there not a ground for argument? I appeal to the Minister of the Interior and ask him what justification there is for handing over this sum of money. Suppose we give this sum on account of debt allowance, suppose it is right—which I do not admit—suppose the land allowance is right too, suppose the boundary line is right also, what justification can my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior give to the committee for this transaction? To me it appears to be nothing short of an outrage, nothing short of an enormity. I do not look upon it as political payment to the people of Manitoba. I believe that the public men both here and in Manitoba are above that sort of thing, but I believe it is wrong to take the money of the people of Canada and hand it over to Manitoba unless the province of Manitoba is legally entitled to it. I have stated the facts as they present themselves to me, I have endeavoured to state them fairly and accurately, and if there is any right or justification on the part of the government of Canada in paying over this money to Manitoba I would like to hear about it. In the meantime I propose to move a resolution. It applies not only to subsection 2 of the present clause, but it is likewise applicable to subsection 6 of clause 5.

My amendment, which will probably be moved again on the third reading of the Bill is:

The first half-yearly payment under this section shall be paid on the first day of July, 1912.

Mr. BORDEN. I would be inclined to concur with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Guthrie) that the expedient of debt allowance in respect to the new provinces, was only an expedient after all, and perhaps a somewhat awkward one. There was justification for a debt allowance in the first place, in that the provinces had incurred debt for the purpose of constructing public works which were at confederation handed over to the Dominion of Canada, and with respect to which it was proper the provinces should receive consideration. When Alberta and Saskatchewan were constituted as provinces, the system of debt allowance was continued, and the argument of the hon. gentleman appeals to me when he declares that it was only an expedient for giving to these provinces a certain amount for the purpose of enabling them to carry on their government. The hon. gentleman argues that there is discrimination in favour of Manitoba as against Saskatchewan, because Saskatchewan has 40,000 population in excess of Manitoba, but he surely knows that when the two provinces were started in business in the first instance, Saskatchewan had a larger population than Alberta, although section 19 of the Alberta Act, and the same section 19 of the Saskatchewan Act, put these two provinces precisely on the same basis. Therefore, on his argument, the very measure which he supported in this House, created a discrimination between Alberta and Saskatchewan.

Mr. GUTHRIE. My argument was based on the assumption that the case of the government was founded on the principle of equalization. I did not argue that Saskatchewan and Alberta were equal, but what I said was, that the excuse for this legislation was to make them equal.

Mr. BORDEN. Does the hon. member understand that there was no principle of equality when Alberta and Saskatchewan were constituted provinces? Did the measure proposed by the late administration which he supported establish a basis of inequality as between Alberta and Saskatchewan? The hon. member contrasts the population of Manitoba with that of Saskatchewan, but why does he not contrast the population of Manitoba with that of Alberta, or the population of Saskatchewan with the population of Alberta? In order to make a point against the measure we have in hand, the hon. gentleman is driven to conclusions which would point directly against the measure he supported in 1905. He asks us to name the principle upon which we make this debt allowance, after he has himself declared that the debt allowance to Alberta and Saskatchewan was based on no principle at all. But, I have a very good answer to his question and it is that we base the debt allowance in this case upon the principle that the province of Manitoba is entitled to be placed on an equality with the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. I have already conceded that in the case of Alberta and Saskatchewan it was only an expedient for enabling these provinces to proceed with their national housekeeping and to take care of their public expenditure.

Then the hon. gentleman asked why in the name of all that is sensible any land allowance should be made to Manitoba especially during the past three or four years when Manitoba has not had these lands. The hon. gentleman has argued this whole question more or less as if he were arguing a lawsuit, and I would remind him of the well known principle: that equity regards that as having been done which ought to have been done; and inasmuch as the province of Manitoba should have and would have had these her boundaries extended in 1908, if the financial terms now accorded had been granted to that province at that time, I say it is no more than just that we should compensate Manitoba now. The hon. gentleman seems to overlook the fact that according to the measure he himself supported in 1885 without a murmur, the compensation in lieu of lands was based on population, and I would ask him why it is that a very large allowance in lieu of public lands should be made to Alberta and Saskatchewan and only a trifling allowance in comparison should be made to Manitoba. Inasmuch as these three provinces have not their own natural resources, inasmuch as these resources within their boundaries are administered by the government of Canada, we are disposed to regard them all as in the same category, and for that reason, and taking the principle which the hon. member (Mr. Guthrie) supported in 1905, we say that Manitoba to-day is entitled to similar compensation in lieu of her public lands to that which was given to Alberta and Saskatchewan in 1905 and which has been enjoyed by both of these provinces ever since.

For the reason that I have already mentioned, we say further that the allowance in respect of public lands ought to date, not from to-day, but from the 1st day of July, 1908. My hon. friend seems to think that there is no precedent for this. There have been a good many precedents for antedating allowances. It was done in the case of Nova Scotia in 1869; it was done in respect of all the provinces in 1884. Nova Scotia under a statute of this parliament passed in 1869 received an allowance, not from 1869, but commencing on the 1st day of July, 1867.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I think that was on finding that her debt was really more than it had been considered to be by the conference. It was ascertained that she had really spent more money in the interval.

Mr. BORDEN. I do not know that there is any particular reason why this parliament has not the same power to correct an error in 1912 that it had in 1869. What I find in the statute is this:

> Nova Scotia shall receive from Canada for the period of ten years from the 1st day of July, 1867, an allowance of $82,698 per annum, in addition to all other sums payable to the said province under the British North America Act, 1867.

That was passed on the 22nd of June, 1869, and a similar statute was passed in 1884. Under these circumstances, I think my hon. friend, on reflection, will come to the conclusion that the allowances proposed to be made by this Bill are no more than just and fair, and I do not think that the appeal which my hon. friend seems disposed to make to this province or that province or the other province, especially to the province of Ontario, will find very much response. If the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan are entitled to be placed on the basis which he himself supported in 1905, it seems to me that the present government is doing no more than simple justice in extending to-day the same treatment to the province of Manitoba.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I thank my right hon. friend for the very courteous manner in which he has replied to my remarks; but he has directed his reply more to the question of debt allowance and allowance in respect of lands than to the question of the payment of arrears. My motion is directed entirely to the question of arrears. I did not ask for any justification in regard to the payment of debt allowance or the allowance in respect of lands; but what I do ask for is some justification to be laid before the House upon the question which my hon. friend the Postmaster General struck in the course of his remarks the other night. It was the one branch of the question which he touched upon, and he saw that there was an argument in it. My right hon. friend refers to the case of Nova Scotia. I can only depend on my memory and on the statements made in the course of this debate, to say that when the arrangement in the preliminary agreement was made with Nova Scotia, the debt of Nova Scotia was placed at a certain amount, and before Nova Scotia had actually come into the confederation it had spent a million or two million dollars more. Then, two years after the union the question was raised, and it was enacted by the Act which the right hon. gentleman has just read that Nova Scotia's debt allowance should be paid and interest should be paid from the date of confederation. So it was with the re-arrangement of 1884. Then it was discovered that instead of the allowance which Canada, that is, Ontario and Quebec, got of $62,000,000, the allowance should have been $73,000,000, and changes were made in respect of other provinces. Canada was paying interest from 1867 upon $10,000,000 upon which she should not have paid it, and the Act of 1884 provided that the interest payments should be to Canada as of the confederation year. There was a principle for which there was full justification. But surely that is different from this case. Alberta and Saskatchewan were incorporated five years ago. But leave that out, and come to the year 1908. Since 1908 Alberta and Saskatchewan have been governing and controlling all the territories within their boundaries and have been entitled to the subsidies which we gave them. Manitoba on the other hand, has not been in possession or control of the added territory at all, nor has she spent a five-cent piece or incurred a responsibility there, while on the other hand, she has had possession of the swamp lands, which have been estimated as worth from $25,000,000 to $30,000,000, and has enjoyed the proceeds of those lands. Is there any parity in these cases? My right hon. friend cites the well-known maxim of equity, that equity considers that done which ought to have been done. What would have been done if Manitoba had passed an Act in 1908 accepting the boundary then offered? But she did not do it. Manitoba was in default and not Canada, and why should the treasury of Canada suffer to the extent of $2,000,000 because of that default on the part of Manitoba? That is the ground of my amendment.

Mr. CARVELL. The right hon. leader of the government has not attempted to answer the argument put forward by my hon. friend from South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) against taking $2,178,000 from the people of the rest of Canada, and giving it to the people of Manitoba. My right hon. friend did not elucidate that point any more than he did when he introduced the Bill, when he said:

> I have already said that Manitoba urged, and urged with great insistence, that inasmuch as her claim should have had consideration in 1905 it would be proper, and only just and fair, that whatever financial provisions were to be embodied in the Bill providing for an extension of her boundaries, should date not from today, but from the period in 1905 when the new provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan were first constituted.

But he goes on to say that he hardly knew whether that was right or not, and he finally made a compromise under which he dated from the 1st of July, 1908. Well, Sir, the only earthly reason my friend gave last Monday for the payment of these arrearages was that the province of Manitoba had been wanting an extension of its boundaries, and they had not got it. Then my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, who I notice is not here to-night—will have great difficulty in coming here and defending this thing.

Mr. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman is speaking in very bad taste indeed. The Minister of Finance is detained from the House by illness.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take it back.

Mr. CARVELL. Do not get excited.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take it back.

Mr. CARVELL. Well it is early in the evening yet.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take it back.

Mr. CARVELL. If you will give me time to do so I will be only too glad to take it back. I had no idea whatever that the Minister of Finance was ill. I had no reason whatever in the world to imagine that he was absent on account of illness and therefore I make the most humble apology possible. Now if the Minister of Finance were here, I think there is no man in Canada who would feel as ashamed of himself for being a party to this transaction as would that hon. gentleman. The Minister of Finance, as has been stated here a great many times, is a man who has been used to handling financial transactions of great magnitude and he is too good a financier not to know that there is not one particle of foundation on which this thing can be based. You have the statement by the Minister of Finance when the resolutions were introduced, that Manitoba had a grievance and was dissatisfied, and therefore, something must be done to relieve that grievance and dissatisfaction. That is all the excuse that can be urged. The Minister of the Interior last evening attempted to give us an excuse for this—I will not say hold up, although if it were a business transaction I think it would be treated as such—but the hon. gentleman said that in 30 years, or thereabouts, the province of Manitoba had had something to do with administering the affairs of Keewatin. But when it was called to his attention that the Dominion had paid the Governor of Manitoba a salary for his services, the hon. gentleman was driven back to the statement: Well our police magistrates sometimes have issued warrants in connection with criminal affairs. And the hon. gentleman went so far as to say farther: We have to pay them salaries, and possibly we pay them salaries a little in excess of what we would otherwise do, on account of their looking after the administration of affairs in this territory. Well it is a pretty small excuse to urge that salaries have been paid by Manitoba to a few police magistrates in the province of Ontario for the last four years to administer the affairs of 700 or 800 white people, and probably they have not issued half a dozen warrants in that territory during that period. It is a pretty small excuse to come to this Parliament and ask us to pay $2,178,000 for that small amount of work. I have taken up the argument of the three responsible Ministers of the Crown, and I come now to the arguments of the Prime Minister when trying to answer my hon. friend from South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie). The latter hon. gentleman's amendment complains not of the debt allowance, and not of the allowance for land, although he does claim that the debt allowance paid is based on scientific principles. I want to tell my hon. friend in passing that the original debt allowance was not based on scientific principles, it was based on good mathematical grounds, and grounds which could be justified before any legislative assembly. But the right hon. gentltman beat around the bush, he failed to come to the point, until finally when he saw that he had to say something in justification of this, and then what reason did he give? Oh, well, equity considers that as being done which should be done. And he says that because Manitoba wanted an extension of her boundaries in 1905 and in 1908, and did not get that extension, because she wanted to be put in the position that Alberta and Saskatchewan were put in 1905, and the request was not granted, therefore, she ought, in all equity, to be put back in the same position as though she had received her lands, and received her boundary extensions in 1905. I would ask my right hon. friend if Saskatchewan and Alberta did not want autonomy some four or five years before it was granted to them, I want to show the fallacy of the argument which the right hon. gentleman made. These two provinces wanted autonomy for four or five years, and it was not granted to them, but finally when their wish was acceded to, what were the principles upon which the financial arrangements were made? They were to get a grant for government purposes the same as any other province gets. They were to get an allowance in lieu of debt, based if you will on scientific principles. Then they were to get an allowance in lieu of their lands, which I think is based on scientific principles. And fourth they were to get a certain amount for the erection of public buildings. Did they get these payments extended back for four or five years previous to that because they had wanted it? Again, whenever the right hon. gentleman has been driven to the wall he makes the retort: The present leader of the present opposition did 'it when he was in power, and, therefore, because he did wrong we are entitled to do wrong. Pressed a little further on this question he says: Alberta and Saskatchewan got certain things in 1905. I submit that these provinces got on $2,000,000 of arrearages because they had a grievance which had not been remedied for the last four years. Therefore I think the right hon. gentleman has to look further than the financial arrangements made with Alberta and Saskatchewan in order to justify this raid on the public treasury of Canada at the expense of the rest of the provinces.

Section 4 agreed to.

On section 5,

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would suggest that as there are some gentlemen who wish to make remarks on this section 5, that perhaps it could stand, and we might proceed with sections 6, 7, 8 and 9, which are non-contentious.

Mr. BORDEN. Let section 5 stand; pass sections 6, 7, 8 and 9.

On section 9.

Mr. MONDOU. I gave notice of an amendment yesterday to section 7.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I regret that I cannot——

Mr. MONDOU. I wish to know when there will be an opportunity for me to speak to the amendment of which I have given notice?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Section 5 stands, and perhaps the hon. gentleman——

Mr. MONDOU. I do not understand the procedure, but I want to know when will be the proper time for me to speak to my amendment?

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Borden House adjourned at 1.50 a.m. Friday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, March 8, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

EXTENSION OF BOUNDARIES—MANITOBA.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 115) to provide for the extension of the boundaries of the province of Manitoba.—Mr. Borden.

Mr. A. A. MONDOU (Yamaska). (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, I beg leave to amend the Bill now before the House by the insertion, after section 5, of the following section:—

Nothing in the present Act shall affect prejudicially the school rights of the minority,

Roman Catholic or Protestant, which inhabit the territory now annexed to Manitoba.

And beg leave to withdraw the notice of motion in amendment which I have given on a previous occasion.

It is with great pleasure, Mr. Chairman, that I address this House for the first time in the language that is dear to me, and I have a special motive for doing so, considering that the English reporters, in the report of the remarks I made the other night to explain the stand I was taking on the amendment to the Bill, on the first reading, and to explain the reason why I did not vote, have not given to my words the meaning I intended them to convey.

I consider that this report, owing no doubt to my imperfect knowledge of the English language, does not give the exact meaning of what I intended to say, when I first addressed the House in English.

At first I declined to vote on the amendment of the hon. leader of the opposition, and later on, I voted for the second reading of the Bill, but it was after the remarks of the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Monk) who had stated that when the Bill was drafted, the minority in the district of Keewatin had no vested rights safeguarded by the constitution.

My own opinion, after a fairly thorough study of the law, was not in accord with the one given by the hon. minister. Notwithstanding, since the hon. Minister of Public Works was stating positively that, under the constitution, the minority was not entitled to claim school rights, I saw nothing in the way to prevent me from voting for the second reading of the Bill as it was.

There was nothing in it that I did not approve of; it rather sinned by omission. I considered the Bill to be incomplete; but if the intention of those who drafted the Bill was such that it did not admit of vested rights for the minority, there was nothing according to my views to prevent the addition of a saving clause on the lines of the one I am proposing by this amendment. If the minority, Catholic or Protestant, of Keewatin have no vested rights, the adoption of this amendment can do no wrong, but if the minority have rights, they will be put in a position by this amendment to claim those rights before the proper tribunal.

By voting this amendment parliament would be giving due regard to the minority who have a perfect right to be respected and are entitled to live.

For my part, Mr. Chairman, I do not conceal that the stand I am taking on this question is rather strong and resolute. For the last fifteen years, in the province of Quebec, this question has been causing a considerable amount of agitation. It is probably for the last time in the political history of this country—certainly, for a great number of hon. gentlemen who are in this House to-night—that we are called upon to legislate on such matters.

I say again that the rights of the minority in Keewatin, be it Roman Catholic or Protestant, must be respected.

My intention is not to intensify the agitation that is going on on this question, nor do I wish to stand on narrow grounds. In all my business relations and in the discharge of my professional duties, I have given ample proof that I am free from prejudices, political, racial or religious. In submitting this amendment, I am moved by a sense of duty and loyalty; my only motive is to secure to the minorities the constitutional rights that are theirs.

In my opinion, this question is not so intricate as it might be supposed to be in some quarters, and perhaps I will be allowed to give my personal view on the subject. I am possessed of more light today than I had at the beginning of this discussion. I have been studying that question with great caution and with the sole aim of arriving at a practical result, and also with the object of discerning who are those in this House who are really seeking the welfare of the minorities. I want to have an expression of opinion, clear and straight, and I think that my amendment leaves no loophole on that score. What are we doing at this very moment? We are studying a deed—I am a practising public notary of the province of Quebec, and as such, I am fairly well acquainted with such matters—we are studying a deed between the province of Manitoba and the Government of Canada. I liken the situation to that of two private individuals who have decided, the one to sell and the other to buy a property. They both go to the notary, quite decided to close the bargain.

When the Bill was first brought before the House, nobody objected to a deed between the province of Manitoba and the Government of Canada. For my part, I thought it my duty to ratify the principle of the Bill and to uphold the government in all that relates to financial and other arrangements in the Bill. Following my comparison, let us suppose that we are now in the notary's office and we are examining the clauses of the deed by which we are giving to the province of Manitoba a territory that is under our jurisdiction. We have the right to impose the conditions that we deem proper. Consequently, I ask that we put in the deed the clause that I have just moved. If the province of Manitoba which is invited to submit to that condition declines to accept it as too burdensome, the deed will be put aside and the whole thing will have to be started over again.

Negotiations on that boundary question have been going on for a long time between the two governments. Everybody seems to agree on the principle, but it is not so when we come to the conditions of the deed. As a member of this House, I ask that the minority in the added territory be protected, and in doing so I am sincerely convinced that I am discharging a sacred duty devolving upon me. I came to the conclusion long ago that the majorities in this country don't want any protection, and that those who take an interest in the common wealth would be putting their time to better use in caring for the weak and those who are not in a position to uphold their rights and privileges. We are bound to champion all legitimate claims, to show spirit and energy; we are bound to stand erect and prove that our constitution is as immovable as a rock; that it is the foundation of our social life, if we want to see harmony and goodwill between races and creeds in this country.

Under the circumstances, in accepting this amendment, we would be doing a commendable thing and would demonstrate that, true to its duty, the Canadian parliament is ready to extend its solicitude to all, without stopping to inquire if those who are seeking redress represent only a few individuals or a million of people; the number does not affect the principle. If vested rights do exist, they must be upheld by a guarantee.

Relying on that principle, I hope that my amendment will receive the endorsement of the majority of this House, or at least will induce the House to have the Bill stand until we have ascertained if the province of Manitoba absolutely rejects all arrangements upon those lines.

Let us examine for a moment the stand taken by the other party to the deed. Has that party always abided by the constitution? In all transactions there must be honesty. Cannot that province be taxed with contempt of court?

Are they not still ignoring the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada and even of the highest court of the empire, His Majesty's Privy Council? No effect is given to that decision because it runs against the will of a majority who refuse to accept it. So long as this situation will endure, the decision of the Privy Council will remain a dead letter. Even if my presence in this House should result in nothing else than giving me this opportunity of upholding the rights of the minorities and the respect of the constitution, I should feel that I have not been sent here for nothing, because we are not entitled to be called legislators if we disregard the constitution; unless that by mutual consent, after thorough consideration and for very serious reasons—that this parliament will have to discuss—the conclusion is reached that we have no constitutional right to modify the British North America Act. I raise all these objections because we have good reason to be on guard when dealing with Manitoba. The situation would be quite different if we had any guarantee that the Manitoba government would deal generously and fairly with the minorities. It is an admitted fact that the provinces in which the rights of minorities have been upheld, never had any trouble of that kind in the administration of their public affairs. Difficulties and troubles on that score are found to exist only in those provinces where the majority has been unfair towards the minority.

There is no doubt in my mind that vested rights exist in the territory of Keewatin, and I can find the proof of it in what has been said in this House during this debate. The Northwest Territory Act that is to be found in the Revised Statutes of 1906, ch. 62, is my authority for the stand I am taking. Section 10 of this Act relates to the minority and says:

> The Commissioner in council if authorized to make ordinances respecting education, shall pass all necessary ordinances in respect thereto; but in the laws or ordinances relating to education it shall always be provided that a majority of the ratepayers of any district or portion of the Territories, or of any less portion or subdivision thereof, by whatever name the same is known, may establish such schools therein as they think fit, and make the necessary assessment and collection of rates therefor; and also that the minority of the ratepayers therein, whether Protestant or Roman Catholic, may establish separate schools therein, and in such case, the ratepayers establishing such Protestant or Roman Catholic separate schools shall be liable only to assessments of such rates as they impose upon themselves in respect thereof.

I come from the province of Quebec, and I pray to God that I will never see the day when the rights of the Protestant minority will be in jeopardy, but if that day must come, I give my solemn word that I will be seen in the front ranks of those who will fight for those rights whoever may be the party on which we will have to rely to give fair play to that minority. I am free from all political faction. I stand on higher grounds and I say it is high time that all that agitation comes to an end. It is high time that those who wish to remove all causes for discord and bad feelings stand and raise their voice to affirm that the time has come for the recognizance of such rights as we deem dear and sacred.

It is said, Mr. Chairman, that the counsel to the commissioner of Keewatin has never been appointed and the responsibility for that is put on the late government. I concede that the late administration has a great part of responsibility, but I do not admit that the present ministers of the Crown are justified in taking refuge behind the wrongdoings of their predecessors. This tu quoque argument is played out.

I hold the principles far above the maintenance of any government; we are in duty bound to stand up and to unite to safeguard what we deem most sacred: individual, civil and religious liberty.

Can it be contended that because a Canadian government has not appointed a counsel to the commissioner of Keewatin, the parliament is to-day debarred from legislating on this question? In my opinion there is absolutely nothing in that contention, as can be seen by section 3 of the Imperial Act of 1871 amending the constitution of 1867:—

3. The parliament of Canada may from time to time, with the consent of the Legislature of any province of the said Dominion increase, diminish, or otherwise alter the limits of such province, upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed to by the said legislature, and may, with the like consent, make provision respecting the effect and operation of any such increase or diminution or alteration of territory in relation to any province affected thereby.

I am well aware that if we were creating new provinces we would have the right to impose any school system we deemed proper; but the question is quite different. We are engaged at this moment in the discussion, as the Bill puts it, or 'such terms and conditions as may be agreed to by the the legislature,' and such terms and conditions as the parliament of Canada may exact.

This section 3 leaves no doubt in my mind as to the right of this parliament to exact the condition contained in the amendment I submitted to the committee. That right exists virtually if not in the actuality; and if it does not exist in the actuality it is because certain proceedings have not been taken that can be taken. We have plenty of time yet to act; the parliament can order the Bill to stand for a time to allow the Governor-in-Council to pass the necessary ordinances. I say again that this right exists virtually if not in the actuality.

I am free to admit that for some years past, I have not given much time to the study of legal questions and it is my intention in future to devote more of my time to the law, and more especially to the study of constitutional law, but at the same time I submit the above remarks to the committee as my humble opinion upon this question. I will say further that if there is some doubt as to the existence of constitutional rights for the minority in Keewatin, what wrong can be done by having this amendment added to the Bill? If no rights exist, the clause will amount to nothing, but if rights do exist the minority will be protected. It goes without saying that the question is worth studying. The right hon. leader of the government himself expressed a doubt on this point when he said in his speech of March 6, at page 4582 of the unrevised edition of the Debates: 'But whether I am right or wrong in believing that that is constitutionally impracticable.'

Everybody knows that when it comes to the construction of the text of a law, we have very often conflicting opinions. Every day judgments of the Superior Court are invalidated by the Court of Appeals, and after having gone through all the courts of the country, a case often goes to the Privy Council in England.

For my part, I hold that the deed with the province of Manitoba which the parliament is asked to confirm, cannot be accepted unless there is added to it the clause contained in the amendment that I have the honour to submit to the committee.

I do not propose to say anything more at this moment; I had no time to prepare a long speech, and I just gave expression to my sincere conviction. I hope that the House, after full consideration, will accept the amendment and will give ample justice to those who are entitled to it.

The position is thus: If this clause was inserted into the Bill it would prevent the government of Manitoba to do any injustice to the minority if it were so disposed.

Do not let us forget that the man who enters a house with the intention of appropriating to himself certain articles which are not to be found in that house, is committing nevertheless an act that in law is called robbery. This clause of mine puts a gate in front of the door of the house and this gate is needed all the more because those who are dwelling in that house are more than one thousand miles away from those from whom they can claim assistance.

I have voted for the Bill as a whole, I have accepted the financial arrangements, because I trust the present government, and that I have no doubt that in drafting this Bill they gave due weight and consideration to all its sections. When I was speaking on the address. I stated that I had confidence in the government, because it was composed of business men. Now I think it is the time to settle that question in a business-like way and not from the viewpoint of religious and racial prejudices. If the amendment is carried it will be up to Manitoba to conform the school system actually in force in that province to the school system of the added territory. The other night, when speaking on this very question, I said that it was more than fifteen years old and that it was at the root of all the agitation that had been going on since, and those who are responsible for that situation are exactly the same people whom we are dealing with to-night. For any one who will study that question, not from the viewpoint of a political party —it is far above such considerations— but from the loftier viewpoint of the union between the different races and the different creeds, it is quite evident that the government of Manitoba could settle this question in an instant. The only thing to do is to give effect to the Manitoba Act of 1870, and if that is done nobody will hear any more about the 'Manitoba school question.'

We all agree upon the necessity of having union and harmony between the different nationalities and creeds of this country, and if the Manitoba government would give effect to that Manitoba Act of 1870, it would go a long way in the direction of that ideal situation we are aiming at and we could then bend our energies toward the development of our resources in peace and harmony.

Every day members of this House are pressing upon parliament the claims of other people. That is exactly what I am doing at this moment, and I say that now is the time to act, because we are now discussing the very last sections of the Bill. It is the time, now or never, to take a strong and well defined stand.

I listened the other day with great attention to the remarks of the hon. leader of the opposition on that Bill. I have always professed a great admiration for his personality, but instead of taking example from the Duke of Wellington fighting the French at the gates of Lisbon and remaining within the lines of Torres Vedras, he should have taken example from Henry of Navarre saying to his men—as the hon. gentleman himself said to his friends during the last election in the province of Quebec—'Follow my white plume, it will lead you to victory.' It is true that Henry of Navarre came back victorious, while the right hon. gentleman has been completely routed.

In concluding I say that I feel the full responsibility of the stand I am taking and I am quite willing to assume it, Even if I had done nothing else in all my public career, I would still feel that it is sufficient to atone for all the political sins that I might have committed.

Mr. J. A. M. AIKINS (Brandon). I have the greatest respect for the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mondou) who has moved this amendment, and I appreciate the sincerity and honesty which has actuated him in presenting it to the committee, but I cannot agree with the propriety of the conclusions at which he has arrived. His amendment reads as handed to me by the clerk:

> Nothing in this Act shall affect prejudicially in any way the rights of the minority, either Protestant or Catholic, to separate schools, as they now exist in such part of the territories, now annexed to Manitoba.

This amendment assumes that there are separate schools existing; it assumes that there may be a Protestant minority or a Roman Catholic minority which has a right in respect to separate schools. But, I submit that this parliament should not legislatively decide that there are existing now in the territory to be added to Manitoba any separate schools or separate school rights. It becomes a matter for consideration (having regard to the wording of the resolution) before we can intelligently vote upon it. What educational system does exist there? On the 15th of July, 1870 Rupert's Land, the Territories, including Keewatin, and the province of Manitoba, were added to confederation. By the Manitoba Act there was created for Manitoba a constitution, and power was given to it to govern and legislate according to that constitution and subject to its limitations. That Act was confirmed by an Act of the Imperial parliament. The same Act provides for the union of the territories, as well as Manitoba, to the Canadian confederacy. It was also necessary to create for the territories a constitution, a government and a legislature to enact the necessary laws respecting those territories. This parliament passed, in 1871, an Act under which the Lieutenant Governor and a council to assist him were authorized to pass ordinances necessary for the government of these Territories. Keewatin was made a separate district from the Territories. The Lieutenant Governor of the province of Manitoba, under the instructions of the Governor in Council of the Dominion, governed the district of Keewatin, and continued to do so from that date until 1906, when it was added to the territories. In 1875 this parliament passed an enactment which empowered the government of the Northwest Territories to enact legislation respecting schools subject to limitations, but it was amended in 1880, and again in 1885; these provisions practically continued in the Northwest Territories till 1905. But, that legislation was not legislation creating school districts or creating school rights in this territory. It only enabled the government of the Northwest Territories to legislate in respect of separate schools, but with that enabling power there was a limitation. The section passed in 1875 reads:

When and so soon as any system of taxation shall be adopted in any district or portion of the Northwest Territories, the Lieutenant Governor, by and with the consent of the council or Assembly as the case may be, shall pass all necessary ordinances in respect to education, but it shall therein be always provided that a majority of the ratepayers of any district or portion of the Northwest Territories, or any lesser portion or subdivision thereof, by whatever name the same may be known, may establish such schools therein as they think fit and may make the necessary assessment and collection of rates therefor. And further, that the minority of ratepayers therein, whether Roman Catholic or Protestant, may establish separate schools therein, and that, in such latter case, the ratepayers establishing such Protestant or Roman Catholic separate schools, shall be liable only to assessments of such rates as they impose upon themselves in respect thereof.

As you see it was simply a clause enabling the government of the Northwest Territories to establish schools, should they pass any legislation respecting education. Therefore, as I have said this legislation did not create separate schools in the territories. It merely enabled or empowered the government of the territories to do so, but when that government did so it was to be subject to the limitations mentioned in the section I have read. That section was amended in 1885 by striking out the first words as follows:

When and so soon as any system of taxation shall be adopted in any district or portion of the territory.

So that the government of the territories were authorized and empowered to pass school legislation at any time, subject to certain conditions. The form of the government of the territories was changed from time to time until it stood in the position in which it was prior to the passing of the Act of 1905 creating Saskatchewan and Alberta and making new provision for the territories. Therefore until the Act was passed in 1905 creating Alberta and Saskatchewan and making a new government for the territories, no government was empowered to pass any school legislation for the Northwest Territories except the Governor in Council, or the Governor with the Territorial Assembly. The question then is, what legislation did they pass? They did pass legislation such as the Ordinance of 1901, but under the Ordinance of 1901 no separate schools were established in the portion to be added to Manitoba. The government that existed in the Northwest Territories did not act under their power to establish any separate schools or any other schools in the Northwest Territories. At that time the Northwest Territories, included a strip of land of about fifty or seventy-five miles in width immediately adjoining to the east the present province of Saskatchewan. It did not include the district of Keewatin. Therefore, when on the 20th of July, 1905, the new Northwest Territories Act was passed, the only government authorized to legislate in respect of education was the government of the Northwest Territories and it did not make this legislation effective in that strip of land or area and no government had passed any effective legislation or created any school district or given any school rights in that strip of land originally in the territories which is now proposed to be added to the province of Manitoba. Another point, for serious consideration, in this connection is that the district of Keewatin, under the old Keewatin Act, was governed by the Lieutenant Governor of Manitoba under the instructions of the federal authority and there were no educational ordinances or law for the district of Keewatin, at all events until 1906. I am aware of the fact that the late administration, purporting to act under the Keewatin Act of 1876, did make a proclamation. That proclamation recited the Act of 1876, and recited that that legislation had authorized the government to detach amongst other things—but I had better read the words of the Act:

The Governor in Council may at any time when it appears to the public advantage to do so, detach any portion of the district of Keewatin therefrom and re-annex it to that part of the Northwest Territories of Canada included in the said district, and that portion so detached shall then be subject to the same government and laws as that part of the Northwest Territories of Canada to which it is re-annexed.

It seems to me perfectly clear that the authority given to the Governor in Council was only to detach a portion and to add that detached portion to other territory. Now, if I understand anything aright, it is that the whole is greater than a part, and therefore the interpretation that has to be put on that language of the section is not that it is a power to take the whole of Keewatin and attach it to the Northwest Territories, but only to 'attach' according to the words of the Act, that portion so 'detached' from Keewatin. No reasonable interpretation of this section would, it seems to me, justify any attempt on the part of the federal government to attach the whole district of Keewatin to the Northwest Territories, and yet that is what the late Liberal government did. I submit that what was said by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Monk) in that respect was correct, and that the proclamation made by an authority which was simply authorized to 'detach' a portion, did not enable them to 'attach' the whole. Therefore that action of the late government was unconstitutional and had no authority in law. Consequently the laws of the Northwest Territories did not apply before the new Act passed in 1905 respecting the Northwest Territorities. In other words, the ordinances of the Northwest Territory that were passed by the Lieutenant Governor and the legislative assembly of the Northwest Territories never applied to the district of Keewatin.

In 1906, however, the revised statutes declared that the Northwest Territories should include Keewatin. At that time there was no provisional government created by this parliament with the power to legislate with respect to education for Keewatin; consequently the limitation concerning education in the territories was not in force in Keewatin. We have to look to the Northwest Territories Act, chapter 27, of 1905, to see what the law was when the new government of the Northwest Territories was established. Remember, the government of the old territories had, by virtue of this Act, ceased to exist, and the new government and legislative power was established. That government was given power to legislate in respect to schools, but with the same limitation as was on the government of the Northwest Territories. That government might have passed school legislation, but it did not. Therefore, there never existed, and I submit does not now exist in Keewatin, any legislative enactment making school districts, or giving educational rights either to the minorities or the majorities, whether Protestant or Roman Catholic. This resolution assumes that separate schools do exist, because it says: 'Nothing in this Act shall affect or prejudice in any way the rights of the minority, either Protestant or Catholic, to separate schools.' In other words, it assumes that there are rights to separate schools. I submit, on a consideration of the law, that there are no separate schools existing in that territory; therefore, there can be no rights affected. If that be so, the amendment proposed is entirely inapplicable and inoperative, and it would be dangerous for this House to pass it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I should have translated it to read: 'school rights that the minority, either Protestant or Catholic, may have.' There is no mention of separate schools.

Mr. AIKINS. I would like to have the proper translation. If the Chairman will give it to me in French, I can understand it.

Mr. MONDOU. 'School rights,' means either public schools or separate schools. The law with regard to the schools must remain as it is.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The translation reads now as follows:

Mr. AIKINS.

Nothing in this Act shall affect prejudicially in any way the school rights of the minority, either Protestant or Catholic, as they may now exist, in such part of the territories now annexed to Manitoba.

Mr. AIKINS. The argument that I was making in respect of the translation that was given to me is applicable to about the same extent to that. This resolution would make the parliament assume that there do exist school rights of some nature. It would be dangerous, it seems to me, for the parliament to adopt such an amendment. As I have pointed out, the Northwest Territories Act simply enabled the Territorial government to pass enactments relating to education. The Dominion parliament never created by legislation private schools, or public schools, or separate schools, or denominational schools. All that the parliament did was to create a body, a government which might legislate in respect to education, but which did not act thereunder to create school rights in any part of the added territory. Another important point which I wish to consider is that if this amendment could constitutionally pass, then the government of Manitoba, to which this territory is to be added, would not have power to pass any reasonable legislation with respect to schools, because there would be no legislation which would be passed in subsequent years by the province of Manitoba that would not in some manner affect somewhat school rights if any exist there. Could the province of Manitoba assess the property of the people for the support of schools of any class? That right does not exist now. The people might very well say: You cannot assess our property for schools, because we have a right to carry on our schools without any assessment, our right now is not to be assessed. It could not make any regulation in respect of schools, because the people educate by right there without regulation. The proposed amendment is intended to be such a limitation on the legislative power of the province of Manitoba in respect of this added territory, that it could not possibly pass any enactment which would affect present school rights, which right is to teach as people please without taxation, or regulation, or teacher qualification. It is true, it says, 'shall not prejudicially affect school rights.' Who is to decide whether those rights I have mentioned, are prejudicially affected or not? You pass an Act respecting schools, either public or private, giving the right to tax and the right to apply the money, and any person affected might say: That prejudicially affects me, because I have a right to be free from taxation, from regulation, and I can employ any teacher, qualified or unqualified, as I please.

Consequently such an amendment passed in such wording as that would certainly create confusion, because indefinite and would lead to litigation. Now there is a constitutional point that has to be considered. As I have said the Northwest Territorial government was given the Northwest Territory to govern, including the westerly portion of the area that is to be added to Manitoba, to legislate under the instructions of the Governor in Council, in respect to education. But the power to legislate was subject to certain limitations. The parliament of Canada itself as I have said did not legislate to create school districts, did not pass any school law and apply it to that territory. It never purported to enact any law immediately applicable to school districts of the people in respect of education. It empowered the Commissioner in Council in the Northwest Territories under the Act of 1905 to do so, if empowered to do so by the Governor in Council, but the Governor in Council never gave them the authority to do so and the Commissioners in Council never purported to pass any school law relating to education. Therefore, I submit that there does not exist now any legislative rights in respect of education in the Northwest Territories, except the one right that the people there have to educaate their children as they please. But that does not create a public right at all, it is a private right, and they can carry on that education in any way they may; there is no system of school, separate or sectarian or general. Is it right or proper that we should say to the province of Manitoba: You have no right to interfere with the way in which education is now carried on in the area to be added; a go-as-you-please system. Of course the laws in force there will continue until altered by competent legislative authority. There must be adopted some system of education such as is applicable in all the provinces, and the province of Manitoba should have the right to inaugurate that system subject to the limitations of its constitution. Remember one thing: That this Act is not creating a new government for the province of Manitoba. It is simply adding territory to come under that government and under the constitution of that province. It was quite different when the late government created the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. There they created governments and they put limitations on the governments, and on the power of legislation. But what right has this parliament to put limitations on the power of legislation or alter the constitution of a government already created and existing, the constitution and the government of the province of Manitoba? I submit that, as was stated by the Prime Minister only the other night, this parliament has not the power to change the constitution of that government or to put limitations on the power it has in respect of education, other than those now existing. As was stated very clearly section 22 of the British North America Act gave to the Manitoba government the power of legislating in the matter of schools subject to limitations. Those limitations were practically the same as the limitations in the British North America Act. That was stated very clearly by the judgment in the Privy Council in these words:

In the case of Brophy vs Attorney General of Manitoba:

The second section of the Manitoba Act enacts that after the prescribed day the British North America Act shall——

Here the judge read the section:

It cannot be questioned, therefore, that section 93 of the British North America Act (save such parts of it as are specially applicable to some only of the provinces of which the Dominion was in 1870 composed) is made applicable to the province of Manitoba except in so far as it is varied by the Manitoba Act. The 22nd section of that statute deals with the same subject-matter as section 93 of the British North America Act. The second subsection of this latter section may be discarded from consideration, as it is manifestly applicable only to the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. The remaining provisions closely correspond to section 22 of the Manitoba Act. The only difference between the introductory part and the first subsection of the two sections is that in the Manitoba Act the words 'or practice' are added after the word 'law' in the first subsection. . . In view of this comparison, it appears to their lordships impossible to come to any other conclusion that that the 22nd section of the Manitoba Act was intended to be a substitute for the 93rd section of the British North America Act.

So that we have in the province of Manitoba the same limitations in respect of education, the same rights and privileges protected in respect to education, as in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. The province of Manitoba, therefore, has this limited constitution in respect to education. That constitution was confirmed by an Imperial Act, and I submit that this parliament has not the power to change Manitoba's constitution as it would be affected if this parliament passed the section suggested by the hon. gentleman who has just moved his amendment. Section 3 of the British North America Act of 1871 says:

The parliament of Canada may from time to time, with the consent of the legislature of any province of the said Dominion, increase, diminish, or otherwise alter the limits of such province, upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed to by the said legislature——

Those terms and those conditions, must be terms and must be conditions within the competence of this parliament to pass and not otherwise. But has it the right to change the constitution of Manitoba? Look a little further on at section 6:

Except as provided by the 3rd section of this Act, it shall not be competent for the parliament of Canada to alter the provisions of the last mentioned Act of the said parliament in so far as it relates to the province of Manitoba or of any other Act hereafter establishing new provinces in the said Dominion, subject always to the right of the legislature of the province of Manitoba to alter from time to time the provisions of any law respecting the qualifications of electors and members of the legislative assembly, and to make laws respecting elections in the said province.

I submit that the province of Manitoba has not the power to consent to the amendment of its constitution by the parliament of Canada. Would it not be necessary to go further, and obtain an Imperial Act in order to change that constitution? Further I submit, and think the right hon. gentleman opposite (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) will admit the same fact, that those terms and conditions referred to in section 6 must be terms and conditions within the competence of this parliament, and relate only to the increase of its area, its finances, and not its constitution. That appears to me to have been the view of the right hon. the leader of the opposition and his administration, for in the Act which they proposed to pass for the purpose of adding to the province of Manitoba, there was no mention whatever of any such restriction or condition or term. That is the position as I understand it, and the leader of the opposition will correct me if the letter and the proposed Bill, which I am about to read, are not correct. On the 26th of February, 1909, the right hon. gentleman wrote as follows to Mr. Roblin, the Premier of Manitoba:

Dear Mr. Roblin,—I have the honour to inclose the draft Bill for the extension of the boundaries of the province of Manitoba. This Bill is on the line of the resolutions adopted by the House of Commons at its last session. The amount of allowance to be paid to the province in lieu of lands has been left in blank. According to the aforesaid resolution of the House of Commons, this amount should be fixed by negotiation between the Dominion and the government of the province.

We will be happy to confer with you at any time that may be convenient to yourself and to your government.

(Sgd.)WILFRID LAURIER.

The draft Act recites:

Mr. AIKINS.

Whereas, a petition has been presented to the House of Commons on behalf of the legislative assembly of the province of Manitoba, praying amongst other things for an extension of the boundaries of that province northward and eastward, and for an additional subsidy to the province in lieu of the ownership of the public lands in the territory to be added to the province by such extension, and it is expedient to grant the prayer of such petition to the extent and in the manner provided in the enactments hereinafter contained; therefore His Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons enacts as follows:—

Boundaries of the province.

1. Upon the legislature of the province of Manitoba consenting thereto, the limits of the said province shall be increased so that the northern boundary of the province shall be the sixtieth parallel of north latitude; the western boundary shall be the present eastern boundary of the province of Saskatchewan; the eastern boundary shall be the present eastern boundary of the province to the northeast corner thereof, thence in a straight line to the most easterly point of Island Lake, and thence in a straight line to the point where the eighty-ninth meridian of west longitude intersects the shore line of Hudson Bay, thence following the said shore line to its intersection with the sixtieth parallel.

2. And whereas in accordance with the provisions of the Act establishing the province of Manitoba the ungranted lands of the Crown in the territory so to be added to the said province will continue to be administered by the Government of Canada for the purposes of Canada and the Province will not have such lands as a source of revenue, it is further enacted that there shall be paid by Canada to the Province an increased allowance by money payment to an amount of. . .

3. This Act shall come into force upon a date to be fixed by proclamation of the Governor in Council.

Now, that was the proposed Act by the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and his government. There is no provision in that Act respecting education such as has been suggested by the hon. gentleman in the proposed amendment. I submit that there must have been some good reason why the right hon. gentleman and his administration did not put such a clause in their proposed Act; that reason is, I presume, the very same reason that governs that action of the present government, namely that they do not wish to change the constitution of the province of Manitoba, in which constitution the rights of the minority and of the majority in respect of schools, are protected just in the same way and to the same extent as the British North America Act, section 93, guards the rights of minorities in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. I presume there was no such addition in that proposed Act because it was assumed that this parliament had no right to amend the constitution of the province of Manitoba. Moreover if this parliament had it would be a rather singular thing that Manitoba should have one constitution for one part of its territory and a different constitution for another part of its territory. Such a thing, I submit, was never contemplated by this parliament nor by the Imperial parliament when they framed the Manitoba Act. Therefore, the reason for adding this territory to the province of Manitoba without such suggested limitations was that the present constitution of the province sufficiently guards the rights intended perhaps to be guarded though indefinitely by the hon. gentleman who moved this amendment. Assuming any school rights do exist those rights will be protected under section 22 of the Manitoba Act which, in effect is section 93 of the British North America Act, 1867. If such rights exist, they will continue to exist, I submit, as was demonstrated by the hon. the Minister of Public Works the other evening, that under the general law in a territory coming under a new government the laws in force remain in force until changed by competent legislative authority. In view of this and in view of the ambiguity of the amendment itself I submit the amendment should not be entertained by this House.

Amendment, Mr. Mondou, negatived.

Mr. OLIVER. I desire to move an amendment to section 5——

Mr. MONDOU. Mr. Chairman——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The amendment is lost.

Mr. OLIVER. I desire to move, in amendment to section 5, as follows:—

Inasmuch as under the provisions of this Act the province will not have the public lands as a source of revenue, there shall, subject to the provisions hereinafter set out, be paid by the government to the province, by half-yearly payments in advance, on the first day of January and July in each year, an annual sum based upon the population of the territory proposed to be added to the province as from time to time ascertained by the quinquennial census thereof, as follows—

The sum payable until the population of such territory reaches 100,000, shall be $200,000.

Thereafter, until such population reaches 150,000 the sum payable shall be $250,000.

After such population reaches 200,000 the sum payable shall be $300,000.

I move this amendment as embodying the views of the late government in regard to subsidy in respect of land in connection with the increase of the area of the province of Manitoba. The late government in negotiating with the province made the proposal set out in this amendment. It carries with it no return by the province of any of the land or the property which now belongs to the province. I wish to lay some stress upon reasons why the offer of financial terms to the province of Manitoba in connection with the extension of its area was framed in accordance with this amendment and why there was not taken into consideration the question of any return of the property of the province, or the prospective property of the province, to the Dominion. It was absolutely necessary, in considering the resources which would be accorded to the province under the new arrangement to consider what the province was receiving directly and indirectly from the Dominion government, especially in consideration of the fact that it was to some degree desirable that there should be parallel arrangements in the matter of financial assistance—measurably parallel, at any rate—as between Manitoba and the western provinces. But, more important than the question of actual financial arrangement, more important than the value that might be attached to the property which had been handed over by the Dominion to the province, was the effect that this retention by the province would have upon the development and progress of the province as compared with that which would take place if that property were handed back to the Dominion. For good reasons—undoubtedly for good reasons—in 1885, when the adjustment of the subsidy was made with the province of Manitoba, in addition to the cash subsidy to be paid, it was provided that all swamp lands within the province should become the property of the province. The reason why this was done was not so much because of the cash value of those lands, because at that time these lands had no cash value. In 1885, good agricultural land in the province of Manitoba and in the other two western provinces was not worth $3 an acre—it was not worth $2 an acre.

The Canadian Pacific railway, sometime between 1882 and 1885, sold to the Dominion government six million acres of land at $1.50 an acre. This was selected land, selected agricultural land, fairly fit for farming; and if first class agricultural land fairly fit for farming was worth at that time only $1.50 an acre, the swamp lands of Manitoba had practically no value at all.

The reason why the swamp lands were left in the hands of the province of Manitoba was in order that they might be reclaimed, developed and made productive—that they might be drained. It was thought that the province itself was the proper authority, and had the most suitable means to do that work, and consequently they were left in the hands of the province, it was thought right and proper to leave them in the hands of the province which was expected to make the expenditure to reclaim those lands and make them valuable The proposition was not to give revenue to the province of Manitoba in place of a cash subsidy, it was an arrangement whereby this large area of land could be reclaimed, could be made productive That arrangement, I am sorry to say, did not work out as was expected. When money is readily available, and when the prices of land are high, when it is possible, as it was not possible during previous years, to raise money on the security of the lands to be drained, the government of Manitoba might well have entered upon a policy of effective drainage of these low lands, a policy of effective reclamation of the four, five, six, or seven million acres that are to-day classed as swamp lands. The provincial governments have not entered upon such a policy. It is perhaps not in place here to criticise the drainage policy of the Manitoba government, but there may be no harm in mentioning it. It is a policy whereby certain areas are set apart as drainage districts, bonds are issued on the security of the lands in those districts, and purchasers of the lands not only pay the price of the lands to the provincial government, but carry the debt that has been laid upon them for the purpose of drainage. That may be a good policy in a limited way, but it cannot be a policy under which this vast area of land can be properly reclaimed. This area, as I said the other night, is two-thirds as great as the total area under cultivation to-day in the three prairie provinces, that cultivation which has made the Dominion rich and great. That is the area which is waiting to be reclaimed, developed, and made productive under an active, energetic and progressive provincial government such as we hope to see in that province in the not distant future. That land is to be handed back to the Dominion government, a government which has not the proper authority or jurisdiction, and which is not responsible for the drainage or reclamation of those lands. Is it possible, as the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Aikins), said the other day, that these lands are only being temporarily handed back to the Dominion, to be again returned to the province? Possibly, that is the case.

Mr. AIKINS. Does the hon. gentleman say that the member for Brandon said that?

Mr. OLIVER. I understood him to say it.

Mr. AIKINS. The hon. gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. OLIVER. Then I was mistaken in my allusion. The lands, however, according to this Bill, are to be handed over to the Dominion, I suppose we are agreed upon that, and if they are to be reclaimed at all, they are to be reclaimed at the expense of the Dominion. Now the Dominion is not vested with the proper authority to do drainage work in the province of Manitoba, it has not the legislative jurisdiction whereby it can do that work properly. So far as this Bill shows anything, it shows the intent utterly to reverse the policy of 1885, to reverse the idea of reclaiming this enormous area of valuable land, to turn it back to the Dominion to be treated simply as a cash asset, without regard to the development or progress of the province. I consider such a policy detrimental to the province of Manitoba and detrimental to the Dominion of Canada, far beyond the matter of one, or two, or three hundred thousand dollars, or of any subsidy to be paid out of the Dominion treasury into the provincial treasury. We will suppose these millions of acres of land were reclaimed and made productive, and they produced 100 million bushels of grain, they would add anywhere between 50 and 75 million dollars a year to the wealth of this country by their reclamation. I say, what is the matter of $200,000 or $300,000 a year one way or the other in regard to such a stupendous interest? I cannot understand on what principle this government, charged with the responsibility of securing the development of this great country, particularly of those western provinces, can come to this House with a Bill which hands back to the Dominion these swamp lands, thereby reversing the policy entered upon in 1885, abandoning a policy that looked to the development of these lands and making them productive.

The late government, in dealing with the province of Manitoba, had no such thought. They desired to give the province consideration for the cost of government in the added territory, and they made the proposition which is embodied in the amendment I have placed before you. I submit that in every interest, both of the province and of the Dominion, that proposal is very much better for both than the proposal contained in the present Bill, aside altogether from the question of money values. Let me bring before you some evidence of the soundness of the views I have placed before you. I am sure the Minister of the Interior will not object to be called as a witness as to the policy involved in the drainage of the swamp lands by the provincial government. I find by reference to the records that on March 3, 1910, on the occasion of a resolution moved in the legislature of Manitoba criticising the provincial government in connection with the swamp land administration, my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior moved an amendment, and part of the amendment reads as follows:

And whereas, the settlers near the said swamp lands are being injured by non-drainage thereof and are pressing for needed improvements; now, therefore, be it resolved that in the opinion of this House, the remaining swamp lands should be transferred from the Dominion to the province forthwith with the view of the formation of drainage districts so as to render available an increased acreage for the purpose of agriculture.

The Minister of the Interior, a member of the provincial government at that time, in March, 1910, declared for a policy of drainage and reclamation not only of the swamp lands which the province has, but he demanded, in the interests of the settlers who were already settled near these lands and in the interest of the development of the province, the handing over to the province of the rest of the swamp lands within the province. In October or November, 1911, he comes forward with a proposition to hand the whole of these unsold swamp lands back to the Dominion government, foregoes the policy of drainage and reclamation by the province and lets the settlers, who are waiting and hoping for the drainage of these lands, sit and wait and hope on until this Dominion government shall enter upon a policy looking to the drainage of these lands in Manitoba.

Mr. BRADBURY. Why should it not?

Mr. OLIVER. Because it has not the jurisdiction over the question that the provincial government has.

Mr. BRADBURY. Do you not think that the good roads policy of the present government will have the effect of draining a lot of these lands?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not think it will. If the conditions in Manitoba were not as extreme as they are no doubt the building of roads would have some effect—no doubt it will have some effect—but, in so far as actual swamp lands are concerned, it is absolutely necessary for the government to consider a provincial drainage policy which will involve large expenditures in order to secure the reclamation of those lands. Everybody knows that it is in the provincial government that the authority rests to deal with matters of civil rights; and for the Dominion government, without jurisdiction, to go into the province of Manitoba and undertake to carry on a drainage policy would certainly bring on complications, as between the provincial and Dominion governments, that I do not think this present Dominion government has the faintest idea of. The settlers who were hoping and waiting in March, 1910, on the authority of my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior, are going to be left to hope and wait indefinitely because of his action in the fall of 1911.

What is the consideration for this radical change in policy, admittedly to the detriment of the province of Manitoba and particularly, on the authority of my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior, to the detriment of the people who are now settled in the vicinity of these swamp lands and whose prosperity and welfare depend upon the drainage of these lands? The consideration, as set down in the Bill before the committee, is a cash payment in excess of the amount now received from the Dominion treasury as to land of $313,000 a year. In consideration of the receipt from the federal treasury of some $313,000 a year, more than it is now receiving on land account, the province foregoes its policy, hands back the land to the Dominion and the settlers who are now without drainage simply sit and wait for it to come. I quite appreciate the possibility that the province of Manitoba, like many a settler in the country, is hard up for money. Many a settler, as soon as he gets his patent, mortgages his homestead worth from $5,000 to $10,000, for a few hundred dollars. I can appreciate that the province of Manitoba, under the administration of its present government, is probably in that very position and is so far behind in its ability to meet its present requirements that $313,000 of extra cash a year is more important to it to-day than the carrying out of the policy of reclamation by drainage which is the proper policy for any government of that province. It is a pity if that is the condition, but it is not the fault of this government if it is the condition. A payment of $313,000 in cash per year for the abandonment of the policy of draining and reclaiming 7,000,000 acres of swamp land in Manitoba, is, to all intents and purposes, no consideration at all. It is not a consideration, it is an insult to the province.

Let us step aside now from the question of the policy of drainage and its results to the progress and prosperity of the province and let us consider this matter simply as a cash transaction. Let us consider the swamp land as simply having a certain value and let us see whether the arrangement contained in section 5 is a good arrangement for the province of Manitoba or not, put on the lowest possible ground, on the ground of cash received on the one hand and the value of the cash given on the other. There have been several estimates of the value of this swamp land at $3 an acre. The average price of the swamp land which has been passed over to the province and, by the province, sold to private individuals, something over 800,000 acres, has been placed at $3 per acre. The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury) assured the House that it was the choice land that had already been sold and that what remained to be sold would not bring nearly so much money. But, in looking through the records again, I noticed that on this same 4th March, and in connection with the same debate in the Manitoba legislature, that the Minister of the Interior gave some information to the legislature as to the value of these lands sold. I find that he told the House at that time that in the district of Makinack—that would be in the constituency of Dauphin—in township 21-15, certain swamp lands were sold at $8 per acre; in township 22-15, $6.50 per acre; in township 26-15, $10 per acre; in township 26-15 W. $9, $15 and $30 per acre.

Mr. STAPLES. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) tell the House what was the average price per acre of the St. Peter's reserve land sold by himself.

Mr. OLIVER. I would if I had time, but the House on former occasions has heard a great deal about the price of the land of the St. Peter's reserve. The government of which the Minister of the Interior was a member, saw fit to issue a Royal Commission to investigate that claim, and it will be for the Minister of the Interior to tell the hon. member (Mr. Staples) everything in connection with it when the opportunity occurs.

Mr. STAPLES. The hon. member (Mr. Oliver) sold the lands for less than $5 an acre and it is only twelve miles from Winnipeg.

Mr. OLIVER. The land on the St. Peter's reserve was sold by auction and it brought all it was worth at the time.

Mr. STAPLES. And it was not swamp land either.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar). Was it all sold by auction?

Mr. OLIVER. All the land that the government sold was sold by auction.

Mr. BRADBURY. You gave the Indians 21,000 acres to give away.

Mr. OLIVER. We gave the Indians certain lands that were adjudged to be theirs and they sold them as they had the right to do. My hon. friend (Mr. Bradbury) discussed this matter in the House frequently and a Royal Commission was issued by the government of Manitoba and that Commission has reported, and when that report is laid on the table of this House we will discuss it at the proper time.

Mr. BRADBURY. That commission reported that my contentions as brought before this House with regard to St. Peter's reserve were correct and that the contentions which the hon. member (Mr. Oliver) is responsible for were not correct.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend can wait until the records are laid upon the table and then we will know whether his statement is correct or not. I am bound to say that my reading of the record, so far as I have seen it, is absolutely to the contrary of what the hon. member (Mr. Bradbury) has stated.

I was going to say that in township 26, range 15, two sections of swamp lands were sold at eight dollars an acre, and in township 24, range 16, certain swamp lands were sold at six dollars per acre. I have, I think, established very thoroughly that so far from three dollars per acre being the maximum average price it must in the nature of things have been very much below the average price of these swamp lands. As a matter of fact in the budget speech made by the provincial treasurer of Manitoba to the legislature in February, 1910, he stated that the average value of the swamp lands sold in the year with which he was dealing was $5.48 per acre. Now, I am not going to value this land at $5.48 per acre; I am not going to value it at six dollars, eight dollars or ten dollars, which the Minister of the Interior boasted in the House the land brought, but I do say that the evidence that was placed before the Manitoba legislature by the present Minister of the Interior and by the provincial treasurer on that occasion, is ample proof that when the general valuation of three dollars per acre is placed upon the swamp lands of Manitoba, it is below the actual cash value at the present time. Taking then the value at three dollars an acre, we find that in the statement made by the Hon. Mr. Armstrong, provincial treasurer, on the 22nd of February, 1910, that the province held at that time—not that they were going to hold, but did actually hold—1,425,712 acres of land, valued at $4,277,136. This statement goes on to say that there were to be turned over by the Dominion government to the province, 4,000,000 acres of land, which in his budget speech he valued at $3 an acre or a total of $12,000,000. That represents four and a quarter millions for land owned by the province that was unsold, and $12,000,000 for lands to be turned over to the province and to be sold by the province, or a total of over $16,000,000 which the provincial treasurer of Manitoba, delivering his budget speech to the legislature declared to be the actual value of the swamp lands of that province. Now, Mr. Chairman, it does not take very much figuring to show that $16,000,000 at 5 per cent interest yields $800,000 a year. On the one hand, by this bargain the province of Manitoba gets in cash $315,000 increase in regard to land, and it gives away property which at the valuation placed upon it by the treasurer of the province is worth $800,000 a year. Mr. Chairman, I do not know how our friends hope to justify this feature of this Bill to the people of Manitoba. They have made merry in the House because it has been argued that the terms were too generous to the province of Manitoba, and at the same time that they were not generous enough. This is not generosity; it is a question of policy looking to the development of the province. But if you bring it down to the basis of a cash transaction, the province is a loser (in the face of the statement made by the provincial treasurer of Manitoba on his responsibility as provincial treasurer to the legislature of the province); the province is a loser by the difference between $315,000 and $800,000 a year.

But, it may be said, that the province is getting an increase on its debt account, and is getting a bulk sum as arrearages, and it does not make any difference whether it gets it on land account or debt account or any other account, the transaction is better for the province in money than the offer made by the Liberal government less than a year ago. Let us see how that works out. Under this present arrangement the province gets an increase of $202,000 on debt account; it gets an increase of $315,270 on land account; and if the arrearages and building allowances are capitalized and interest is allowed at 5 per cent, which I claim is a fair calculation, the province gains $119,013 per annum on arrearages account.

That is, the province makes a total gain over the present subsidy of $634.283. But if that is compared with the offer made by the Liberal government, $200,000 must be deducted from it. So that the account stands thus: The province is better off by the Bill now before the House to the amount of $434,514 in cash than it would have been if the government of Manitoba had accepted the offer of the Liberal government made last spring, and it is something over $800,000 worse off in cash value as the result of this present offer—$400,000 to the good on the one hand, and $800,000 to the bad on the other hand.

Mr. BLAIN. How does my hon. friend explain that the Manitoba government are perfectly satisfied with it?

Mr. OLIVER. I explained that in the beginning of my remarks. I said that many a homesteader who has secured his patent, has mortgaged a farm worth $10,000 for a few hundred dollars; and the government of Manitoba is in exactly that position. Having gone behind in their provincial finances, they need the money, and when this government offers them $434,000 in cash per year, their financial position is such that they are compelled to take it rather than realize on the property, according to the figures of their own Provincial Treasurer delivered only two years ago. There is no way of escaping from the results of these figures, which are the figures given by the government of Manitoba itself. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I desire to move the amendment which I have placed in your hands.

Mr. ROGERS. The hon. member for Edmonton has sought to convey a wrong impression of certain conditions of this Bill. He has said that this arrangement will be detrimental to the Dominion in view of the fact that the province of Manitoba undertook to drain the swamp lands belonging either to the Dominion or to the province. I want to tell my hon. friend that such has never been the case. We have in the province of Manitoba a Drainage Act under which it is possible for any individual who owns a certain tract of land which he considers to be swamp land and desires to have drained, to file a petition with the government of the province for that purpose. Then the government issues bonds or debentures to the amount fixed by the engineer, who makes an estimate of the necessary cost of carrying on the work. The government simply acts as trustee for the people who own the land or control it, and never has undertaken to do any drainage work on the lands which the province of Manitoba owns as swamp lands. My hon. friend moves an amendment which is simply a copy of the proposition which was made by the late government to the province of Manitoba on the 7th of March of last year. In case the House is not aware of the fact, I would like to state that when that offer was made to Manitoba, the legislature of the province unanimously rejected it. The resolution rejecting the offer was moved by Mr. Roblin, the Premier of the province, and was seconded by Mr. Winkler, the chief whip of the Liberal party, and was supported by every member of the legislature. It was as follows:

And whereas it appears, by a minute of Council, approved of by His Excellency in Council on the seventeenth day of March, 1911, that, after frequent urgings, a proposal is made by the federal authorities that the limits of the province be extended eastward and northward to the Hudson bay, to comprise an area of 106,304,000 acres, and that there shall be paid to the province annually, in lieu of public lands, mines, minerals and royalties in the said territory, the sum of $200,000 until the population thereof reaches 100,000, the sum of $250,000 until the population reaches 150,000, and thereafter the sum of $300,000;

And whereas it is the opinion of this House, after due and careful deliberation, that the said proposal does not recognize the principle of equality as aforesaid;

Therefore, be it resolved, that this House firmly but most respectfully declines to accept the proposed addition of territory upon the terms offered in the minute of Council of His Excellency in Council, as hereinbefore set forth, and reiterates and reaffirms the request of the province, as a constituent portion of the confederation of Canada, for equality of treatment with either the provinces of Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick or the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, that is to say:—

(a) The control of all the public lands, mines and minerals in the said proposed territory, or

(b) Financial and other considerations of a character similar to those given or to be given to the said provinces of Saskatchewan or Alberta.

Either of which propositions this legislature is willing to favourably consider.

Now, Mr. Speaker, to accept the amendment of my hon. friend would mean the renewal of the refusal on the part of a unanimous legislature in the province of Manitoba. It would be idle for this House to undertake to adopt that amendment, and make a proposition such as my hon. friend has suggested, knowing full well that the same could not, and would not be accepted by that province. I am sure that my hon. friend understands very well the conditions in Manitoba province, and he is well aware that it would not accept this proposition.

I would like to correct my hon. friend in another statement which he has made in respect to this arrangement being necessary because of Manitoba's financial conditions. I would be sorry —and I am sure my hon. friend did not intend to throw out such an idea—if the statement were to go broadcast, that the province of Manitoba was in any sense in financial difficulties. I want to tell my hon. friend that there is no province in Canada whose credit stands higher to-day than does that of Manitoba. Sir, that is true notwithstanding the fact that we have suffered in respect to this matter of swamp lands as a result of the administration of my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) opposite. The hon. gentleman makes a calculation of the amount of swamp lands that we got, and that we were entitled to, like my hon. friend, I think from South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) who last night made the statement that Manitoba had been in possession of 20,000,000 or 30,000,000 acres of swamp lands for some years and that the province was now wishing to return them. I want to draw attention to the fact that one of the grounds of complaint registered by Manitoba time and time again was in respect to this very matter of swamp lands. It is true that the Liberals were not in power in Manitoba in the year 1900. A Conservative government was then elected in that province, and we came to Ottawa at that time and presented our claims in connection with the swamp lands. Although we pressed these claims as strongly as we possibly could, we were only able to secure in the first part of the year 160,000 acres, and in the latter half of the year 33,000 acres more. The following year we were not able to obtain a single acre, but the next year again we got 160,000 acres in the first half of the year, and in the second half 20,000 acres more. Let me tell the ex-Minister of the Interior, as he knows well, that from September, 1909, down to the day he left office he did not hand over to Manitoba a single solitary acre of swamp lands. That was the treatment of which we complained.

Mr. OLIVER. Did my hon. friend make an allusion to myself?

Mr. ROGERS. The allusion was to the department over which my hon. friend presided, and from 1909 down to the time he left office——

Mr. OLIVER. Did I understand the hon. gentleman to say that there was not a single acre handed over to the province of Manitoba?

Mr. ROGERS. Not an acre.

Mr. OLIVER. During that time?

Mr. ROGERS. From September, 1909, down to the time my hon. friend left office. I have the return here and will send it over to my hon. friend.

Mr. OLIVER. How much land was handed over before that?

Mr. ROGERS. The total amount of lands that we received was 2,500,000 acres. I do not think it is necessary for me to add anything more on this subject. I merely wished to make one or two corrections in respect to the statements made by the hon. gentleman. I think the committee will not accept the amendment which he has moved because it is only intended as a piece of factious opposition on his part, and in order that Manitoba might again refuse, as they did very properly and unanimously refuse a similar proposition on a previous occasion.

Mr. ROBERT CRUISE (Dauphin). As a representative of the constituency of Dauphin, province of Manitoba, I feel that it is my duty to offer a few remarks on the question of the extension of the boundaries of that province, more particularly as Manitoba is probably more concerned in the matter than any other province in the Dominion. The object of the Bill is to enlarge the boundaries of Manitoba, and as to that I have no objection; the territory given to the province is perfectly satisfactory in my judgment; but I strongly oppose the handing back to Ontario of a single foot of land belonging to Manitoba.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. CRUISE. This Bill gives to Ontario a strip of land five miles wide and 150 miles long for the purpose of building a railroad, and it also proposes to grant to Ontario a strip of land one-half mile wide and ten miles long, down the Nelson river to use as it pleases. The province of Ontario has also the privilege of taking 200 feet from Fort Nelson to Fort Churchill for the further construction of a railroad, and if they avail themselves of it, it practically gives them all the water front that is of any value on Hudson bay. For these reasons I strongly object to handing over to Ontario these valuable concessions. The strip of land to be granted to Ontario has been referred to here as the red line, but I would prefer to mark it on the map as the black line, because the fact that this territory should be given to Ontario so that it can go as it pleases through a sister province, is a black eye to Manitoba. I would want to say further that Ontario has no more right to such a grant, or to a port at Port Nelson than Manitoba has to a strip of land five miles in width to Fort William or to Port Arthur. In this respect I take the same stand to-day that I took years ago. We were told in the province of Manitoba some years ago by the hon. Minister of the Interior, a man for whom I have the greatest respect, and also by the Hon. Mr. Roblin, that Ontario had no right whatever to one foot of land in the territory belonging to Manitoba. On October 17th, 1905, Mr. Rogers, speaking at a party gathering in the Maw block, Winnipeg, made the following statement:

> I want to say, as representing the province of Manitoba, that the province of Ontario has no more claim, as far as I understand the law and the facts as shown by the public records, than the province of British Columbia. The mere fact that Ontario lies to our east does not give her any claim either in equity or law.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. CRUISE. Mr. Rogers cited the Privy Council judgment and the subsequent legislation by the Dominion House, and then said:

> The government of Sir John Macdonald never changed a line or letter of that statement as drafted by Ontario, and yet Sir Wilfrid Laurier, in order to further hamper, punish and discipline the province of Manitoba, undertakes to drag in the province of Ontario, which settled the boundary for itself on its own terms.

Now, Sir Wilfrid Laurier has been accused of dragging Ontario into the settlement of the boundary question. Who is guilty of dragging Ontario into the settlement of the boundary question at the present time? I say that it is not a square deal to Manitoba to make these concessions to Ontario which properly belong to Manitoba, and therefore I object to these provisions in the present Bill.

Now a word in connection with the swamp lands. I strongly object to handing over the swamp lands of the province of Manitoba to the Dominion. For years our local government had been demanding more swamp lands from the Dominion which was perfectly right; and now they have in the neighbourhood of seven or eight millions of acres of these lands. These they propose now to hand back to the Dominion. I contend that as a business proposition that is not favourable to the province of Manitoba. It is the local government's business to drain these swamp lands and bring them into condition to be cultivated, but if these lands are handed over to the Dominion, I do not believe this work will be done. We have been told by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Rogers), that he has a great immigration policy, an immigration policy that knows neither east nor west. I hope that this is true, for we want immigrants in the Dauphin district. But I would ask the minister this: when these swamp lands are handed back to the Dominion and the work of draining them ceases, what is he going to do for his immigrants to Manitoba? It is most important to the province that these lands should be drained and settlers brought in to cultivate them. A great deal has been said about the value of swamp lands, some putting it at $3 an acre and some putting it at a higher figure. I know something about these swamp lands, and I know that when drained they are the most productive lands we have. That has been proven beyond a doubt, especially in my district where we have a considerable area of these swamp lands. For these reasons, I object to these lands being handed back to the Dominion. We are told that the government will hand these lands back again to Manitoba at some future day. That may be true or it may not be true. We were told by the present Prime Minister (Mr. Borden) when he appeared in the western country that if he were returned to power he would not give the people of Canada reciprocity. He was admired by the western people for his courage in making that statement. But he went further and stated that if returned to power he would carry out the Farmers' Bill of rights to the letter and would give them government ownership and control of elevators. Where do we find him to-day? The people took him at his word, but he has not delivered the goods and given us government ownership and control of elevators. How do we know, then, that he will hand back these lands to Manitoba? It seems to me that this is nothing better than a hold-up. The lands, we are told, will be handed back to the province at a future date. But when? At the next general election? In that case, what will be the argument? It will be: If you vote for the Conservative party you will get your lands back? That is not a square deal. And for that reason I object to it. I support the interests of the province of Manitoba, where I lived for many years and hope to live for a good many yet. These are my reasons for objecting to certain clauses in this Boundary Bill.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). I desire to speak on the general question, but more particularly with respect to the amendment of the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr Oliver). I have no objection to the boundaries of Manitoba being extended. There has been a general desire on the part of the people of Manitoba for a number of years for an extension of the boundaries of their province. But there has also been a general desire on the part of the people of Saskatchewan for an extension of the boundaries of their province toward Hudson bay. As to that, I hope to speak more directly before I conclude, but, in the meantime I wish to offer a few observations with regard to the financial terms under this Bill. Hon. members who take the trouble to go back to the debate of 1905 and read the speeches of men who were then in opposition, and are now on the treasury benches, will be apt to wonder how these gentlemen who opposed the financial terms given to Saskatchewan and Alberta can to-day support the terms being given to Manitoba, particularly as the government say that the object of the Bill is to place Manitoba on the same footing, financially and otherwise, as these other provinces. One of these speeches was by the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster). He criticised the late government for the financial terms that were being given to Saskatchewan and Alberta, and said practically that these provinces were getting too much.

Mr. STAPLES. No, he did not.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). He said to the government: This measure will bring down upon the government every province of the Dominion; already I hear the rumbling of discontent among the western provinces; and he went on to say that he hoped the Minister of Finance, before he pressed the Bill forward, would revise the financial considerations about to be given to the new provinces. And now we are told by the leader of the government (Mr. Borden) that Manitoba is being placed on exactly the same footing as Saskatchewan and Alberta. How can the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster), in view of his statement then with regard to Alberta and Saskatchewan, support to-day the terms being given to Manitoba under this Bill?

Mr. SCHAFFNER. It makes the provinces equal.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). But the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster) said that the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta were being given too much; to-day he says the province of Manitoba is being given just enough; and yet, according to the Prime Minister and other hon. gentlemen opposite, the province of Manitoba is being given exactly what these other provinces were given. I do not say that the treatment of the provinces is equal. I had here beside me a copy of volume 2 of 'Hansard' of 1905 containing a speech by the present Minister of Public Works (Mr. Monk). I am sorry that it has been taken away, for it deprives me of the opportunity to quote the hon. gentleman's exact words. But it was practically the same line of argument. He said there was no reason why Quebec should be called upon to assist in paying these immense subsidies to Alberta and Saskatchewan. But, to-day he is prepared to support the same terms when given to Manitoba. I do not wish to be understood as finding fault with Manitoba getting a square deal. If the Manitoba members are satisfied with this Bill, all right. If I were a member from Manitoba, I should not be satisfied with it. But there are certain features of this Bill which show discrimination in favour of Manitoba against Saskatchewan and Alberta. One of these was well stated by the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie). According to the Bill, Manitoba obtains a debt allowance on a population of 250,000, the same, I believe, as the debt allowance that was given to Saskatchewan and Alberta.

To-day in the province of Saskatchewan we have a population of something like 495,000, while the province of Manitoba has 455,000; we have 40,000 more than Manitoba. Therefore, in order to place Saskatchewan on the same footing as Manitoba we should have in Saskatchewan an increased debt allowance based on our 40,000 additional population, which would mean a debt allowance of $1,280,000. That is one of the discriminations in favour of Manitoba against Saskatchewan and Alberta. There is another point. The population in Manitoba is confined to a comparatively small area. If you draw a line diagonally from the southeast corner of Manitoba to the northwest and take the country south of that, you will find an area of 40,000 square miles of inhabited country. In the province of Saskatchewan only the southern half is well populated, covering an area of about 125,000 square miles. It is not so expensive to administer the province of Manitoba as it is to administer the province of Saskatchewan. In Manitoba to-day roads, bridges and schools must be provided for over an area of about 40,000 square miles, while in Saskatchewan roads, bridges and schools must be provided for over an area of 125,000 square miles. It is therefore less expensive to administer the province of Manitoba than the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. So this constitutes another discrimination in favour of Manitoba.

There is another matter. The province of Manitoba secured 150,000 acres of selected lands for university purposes. Saskatchewan never secured any land for such a purpose neither has Alberta. The 150,000 acres of university lands selected in Manitoba are being written off, according to this measure, at $2 per acre. I would like, as a representative from Saskatchewan, to be allowed to select 150,000 acres of land in that province for university purposes at $2 per acre. I say that this government, in order to place Saskatchewan and Alberta on an equal footing with Manitoba in this respect, must give us the right to select 150,000 acres of land for university purposes in each one of those provinces.

Now the question of arrearages has been referred to. I do not profess to be able to throw any new light on the subject, and will only present it to you as it appears to me, as a representative of Saskatchewan. After looking over the speeches that have been delivered by the Prime Minister and other hon. gentlemen of the opposition dealing with the payment of arrearages to the province of Manitoba, I confess that I have not been able to find any justification for it. What do they say? That as early as 1905, when Manitoba wanted to have her boundaries increased and her territories extended to Hudson Bay, the Prime Minister says he could not admit her contention that they should date back to 1909. When the resolution was passed by the late government extending the boundaries to Hudson bay, it appears, if I am correctly informed, that the Manitoba government never accepted those boundaries until the month of March, 1911, and never formally notified the government of Canada of their acceptance until the month of March 1911. To my mind the Manitoba government have not got a solitary leg to stand upon in respect to the payment of arrearages. I do not wish to cast any reflections upon the present government of Manitoba. The Minister of the Interior a few days ago ventured to say that the finances of the province of Manitoba were in the best position, in as good a position as those of any other province in Canada. I do not know anything about the position of the finances of the province of Manitoba; I do know, however, that on their telephone transaction, when they purchased the telephones throughout the province and operated them as a government concern for the past three or four years, they are something like $450,000 behind at the present time in the operation of that system. I also know that they have lost money in the operation of their government-owned elevators. I do not need to go outside the province of Manitoba to get information of her finances. About six weeks ago when I was in Winnipeg, I was told many times that the government of Manitoba were financially in a very bad position. I can only say that it is my belief that this sum of $2,178,000 to be handed over to Manitoba in payment of arrearages is merely being given as a sop to that province, and as a rope to pull her out of a hole. I do believe that were it not for the financial assistance which the Manitoba government expects to get out of this payment of arrearages, they would not have a ghost of a chance in the next election.

Because the old legislature of the Northwest Territories, as far as they are covered the province of Saskatchewan, passed a resolution to the effect that the time had come when a province should be formed, we might just as well argue, that the payments under the autonomy legislation of 1905 should date back to 1902 as hon. gentlemen can argue that Manitoba's arrearages should date back to 1908 as provided in this Bill. Let me further point out to emphasize my argument that pursuant to the resolution passed in the territorial legislature in 1902 Mr. Haultain drew up a draft Bill which he submitted to the late government as a basis on which the two provinces should be carved out of the Northwest Territories. With just as good reason, therefore, you might argue that Alberta and Saskatchewan should receive financial consideration back to 1902, as you can argue that Manitoba should be paid arrearages amounting to $2,178,000 dating back to 1908. In my opinion this is an outrage to the rest of the people of Canada, and a further discrimination in favour of Manitoba as against the other two provinces.

There is another matter that occurs to me in connection with this Bill, and that is the question of our natural resources. Ever since the year 1905, in western Canada, every Conservative candidate always promised, not only in Manitoba but in Saskatchewan and Alberta, that immediately the Conservative party came into power it would restore our natural resources to those three provinces. Now here is an opportunity for the present Conservative government to fulfil their promises and show their good faith. Here is an opportunity for the Prime Minister to fulfil the promises which he made when he was touring western Canada last summer, when he told them he was in favour of restoring the natural resources to those provinces. No further legislation is required, here is an opportunity for him to do it. Let me refer to one or two statements that were made by the present Prime Minister in the west last year. First of all, let me read the statement that was made by the right hon. gentleman at Halifax on August 21, 1907—I believe it has already been quoted in this House. The hon. gentleman said:

In 1905 the Conservatives took the position that under our constitution the public domain within each province ought to be committed to the management and administration of the people of that province through their provincial governments. That was the basis of arrangement between the four provinces originally constituting the Dominion. At the present time every province in Canada controls and administers its public lands except the three provinces of Manitoba Saskatchewan and Alberta.

He concluded as follows:

We have not receded from the policy which we announced two years ago, and therefore we are prepared to restore their public lands to the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan upon fair terms.

The platform of the Conservative party circulated in western Canada during the recent election contained this paragraph about handing over their natural resources to the prairie provinces. That was the main argument of the Conservative party in my constituency, granting the natural resources to the prairie provinces. Then at Winnipeg, in 1911, when the right hon. gentleman was dealing with this question, he said:

Before discussing a subject of great public interest now under the consideration of parliament, I desire to touch upon certain questions of paramount importance to the people of the west. To-day in Canada six provinces enjoy the right to control and administer the public lands, mines, minerals and other natural resources within their boundaries. That right is not enjoyed by the three prairie provinces. The Liberal-Conservative party since 1902 has firmly asserted and maintained the rights of these three provinces to their public domain. We stand for that right to-day and we will maintain it. The public lands, and natural resources are vested in the Crown, to be administered for the benefit of the people. In six provinces the Crown, in dealing with the public domain acts upon the advice of the provincial ministers and under laws enacted by the provincial legislatures. In the three prairie provinces the Crown in dealing with such lands acts upon the advice of the federal ministers and under laws enacted by the federal parliament. Why should there be any such discrimination against the people of these three provinces? The day is not far distant when Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta will receive from a Liberal-Conservative government at Ottawa the just recognition of their undoubted right to their public lands and natural resources.

There is a Liberal-Conservative government at Ottawa at the present time; why does not that Liberal-Conservative government implement its promise, particularly to the province of Manitoba, and give these natural resources to that province? That was a speech made by the right hon. gentleman at Winnipeg. But I have here an extract from a speech made by the Prime Minister at Brandon in the month of July, 1911. He said:

In 1902, in 1905, in 1907, and again in 1910, we have stood for the right of the western provinces to own and control their public domain. It is the right of the people of those provinces to have their public lands and natural resources administered by their own governments under the control of their own legislatures. They say that they are free men and being free men in a free country have as good a right to control through their own local legislatures, and by their own provincial executives, the administration of their public lands and natural resources as have the people of any of the eastern provinces who enjoy and have enjoyed that right. The Liberal-Conservative party supports that claim and will enforce it at the first opportunity.

As far as the province of Manitoba is concerned here is an opportunity; yet, the promise which was made at Winnipeg and Brandon during last summer has not been implemented. Not only have we the promise of the right hon. Prime Minister, but other members of the present administration have expressed themselves very strongly with respect to the control of the natural resources of the prairie provinces. I have to go no farther than to the hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Roche) who discussed this subject in the House of Commons in 1906, and, if I remember correctly, he made similar remarks in speaking at Regina, when I had the pleasure of hearing him. I may tell the Secretary of State that he did not do me very much harm when he was in Regina. Speaking on the question of the coal strike in 1906, on a resolution moved by the then member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) the hon. Secretary of State said:

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Lake) has spoken about the humiliating position in which our country has been placed. In the first place I claim it was a humiliating position in which to place those new provinces to withold from their hands the control of their own public lands. Had the rights of the people of those provinces been fought for as they should have been fought for by hon. gentlemen supporting the government, the provinces would have control over their lands to-day, and the provinces would have been able to grapple with their own coal strike without calling on the federal government for relief.

If that was a humiliating position for the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta to be placed in then, I submit it is a much more humiliating position for the province of Manitoba to be placed in to-day in view of the assurances that were given not only by the right hon. the Prime Minister, but by other ministers and by every Conservative candidate throughout the west during many years past. Hon. members from Manitoba told us in 1905 that Alberta and Saskatchewan were being placed in a most humiliating position. Why do they not rise to the occasion now and help us to keep Manitoba from being placed in such a humiliating position and from being deprived of the management of her natural resources and lands?

Then, there is this question of the swamp lands to which I want to allude for a minute. There have been various estimates made of the value of these swamp lands which were handed over to Manitoba under the Act which was passed in 1885. I believe that it is estimated that something like 8,000,000 acres of swamp lands still belong to Manitoba. The estimate made by the provincial treasurer of Manitoba, Mr. Armstrong, was that these lands were worth something like $16,000,000. My hon. friend from Edmonton has stated that this sum, capitalized at 5 per cent, would produce $800,000 per annum and, according to the calculation of my hon. friend from Edmonton, Manitoba would be in a far better financial position to keep these lands, even provided they produced only $3 per acre, and get $800,000 per annum than to accept the terms proposed by the Bill now before the committee. I submit that $3 per acre is not a sufficient value for these swamp lands. If the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury), who used to wax eloquent in connection with St. Peter's Indian reserve, were in the House, I would call him as a witness. He used to estimate that these reserve swamp lands were worth from $25 to $30 per acre.

Mr. BRADBURY. The hon. member from Selkirk is in the House. I would like to correct the hon. gentleman.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). Just as soon as I get through the hon. gentleman may follow me.

Mr. BRADBURY. What the hon. gentleman has stated is absolutely incorrect.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). I have not any doubt at all that 'Hansard' will prove that what I have stated is absolutely correct, that the hon. member for Selkirk did estimate the lands of St. Peter's Indian reserve to be worth from $25 to $30 per acre.

Mr. BRADBURY. I beg to say that the hon. gentleman is absolutely incorrect. There are not more than 8,000 acres of swamp land out of the whole 40,000 acres contained within St. Peter's Indian reserve.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). I am forced to accept the hon. gentleman's statement. However, it is a matter of small import in any event. I submit that $3 per acre for the swamp lands in Manitoba is a very small valuation. I believe that these lands are worth at least $10 per acre. Take 8,000,000 acres at $10 per acre and you have $80,000,000 and therefore the argument presented by my hon. friend from Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) that the terms offered by the recent administration, according to which Manitoba was to retain her swamp lands and get a grant of $200,000 per annum in lieu of the balance of land not granted, was a better proposition for Manitoba than the terms submitted by the present government, is quite correct.

Then, before I conclude my remarks, I wish to direct the attention of the commitee to a matter which is of great importance to the province of Saskatchewan and to refer to the rights of that province to have some consideration in connection with a port on Hudson Bay. If you go back to the question of what territory is involved in the territory that is being added to Manitoba you will find that it is made up of parts of the original territories of Saskatchewan and Athabasca, Keewatin and the territory which lies between Ontario and Hudson Bay. There are only three provinces which can possibly be interested in that territory and they are Ontario, to the east, Manitoba and Saskatchewan. The province of Saskatchewan, as early as the year 1906 or 1907, put forward a claim for an extension of her boundaries to a port on the bay. I submit that in deciding the question you must of necessity go into the history of these territories, and that, in as far as that portion of Athabasca and of the old district of Saskatchewan which is being added to Manitoba are concerned, the province which has the paramount and absolute interest is Saskatchewan. When the province of Saskatchewan was formed there were parts of the old district of Athabasca and the old district of Saskatchewan that were not included.

Those districts and those parts of those districts which are now being put into Manitoba, were formerly part of the old

Northwest Territories and were administered by the government of the old Northwest Territories. The school law of the old Northwest Territories which was in force until 1905 was in force in those parts of Athabasca and Saskatchewan district which are now being added to the province of Manitoba. Those parts of those districts, as a matter of fact, were represented in the old territorial legislature of the Northwest Territories, now represented by the legislature of Saskatchewan and the legislature of Alberta. The old government of the Northwest Territories was responsible for the construction of roads and bridges, and schools in those territories, and, as I have said, those parts of Athabasca and Saskatchewan were represented in the legislature by Mr. Samuel McLeod. Formerly, I believe, they constituted part of what was known as the district of Cumberland, and latterly the district of East Prince Albert. As a matter of fact these portions of territory were represented in this House of Commons in the old district of Mackenzie by a gentleman who still occupies a seat in this House. This territory which is being added to the province of Manitoba, was just as much a part of the old Northwest Territorities as the city of Regina, or the town of Indian Head, or any other municipality located in the central part of that province. In addition to the fact that the province of Saskatchewan has a paramount and absolute interest beyond any other province, in the part of this territory which has been referred to—the part that lies north of the Nelson river and between the Nelson river and Hudson bay—in addition to that I submit that in apportioning the territories among the three provinces, it is generally admitted that each of these provinces was entitled to have access to Hudson bay. If you will look at the map I think every one will agree that the province of Saskatchewan, beyond any other province in the Dominion, is entitled to access to a port on Hudson bay. Our province is the most vitally interested in the construction of the Hudson Bay railway. I submit that it is beyond dispute that the province of Saskatchewan will use that Hudson Bay railway for transportation facilities far more than will any of the other provinces of the Dominion. I believe than any railroad that is constructed out of Saskatchewan or Manitoba towards Hudson bay, will be used by Saskatchewan more than it will be used by Manitoba. The products of Saskatchewan are to-day greater in volume than are the products of Manitoba, and there will be greater disparity between the two provinces in this respect in years to come, so that of necessity any railway that is constructed towards Hudson bay will be more used by the people of Saskatchewan than by the people of Manitoba or of Ontario. I submit that Saskatchewan would only be getting a square deal if it were given access to Hudson bay, and given the same consideration at least as the province of Ontario is getting.

There are further facts to consider in connection with this matter. As far as any evidence I have been able to find goes, the inhabitants of the territory which is being annexed have never themselves evinced any desire to be annexed to Manitoba, but, on the contrary, they have evinced a desire to be annexed to Saskatchewan. I find in volume I of the Sessional Papers of 1906-07, that when the legislation of 1905 was under consideration in this House, the people of that part of Athabasca and Saskatchewan petitioned to be included in Saskatchewan, and I shall read a short extract from a petition which the people of these territories forwarded to the Prime Minister at that time:

> We, the undersigned electors of Mackenzie district, Northwest Territories, and residing at or near the Pas, Saskatchewan, having learned but recently that an effort is being made by the government of Manitoba to have that portion of the territories, lying north of Manitoba, joined to and included in the province of Manitoba, and such annexation being repugnant to us, and as we believe detrimental to the best interests of this portion of the country, we therefore humbly petition that our political affiliation may be with the territories and not with Manitoba, and in case of provincial autonomy being granted the territories, our destiny may be in and with that portion of the territories of which we form an integral part and for such, as in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

Therefore, we have the inhabitants of this territory petitioning not to be annexed to Manitoba, and so far as I have learned, there is not on record any petition to the contrary.

The territory which I submit Saskatchewan is entitled to, is as follows:

> The territory bounded on the south by the province of Manitoba; on the west by the province of Saskatchewan; on the north by the thirty-second correction line of the Dominion lands townships system of survey, which is very nearly the sixtieth parallel of north latitude; on the east by a line commencing at the point where the 100th meridian of west longitude intersects the thirty-second correction line aforesaid, thence following the said 100th meridian south to the eighteenth correction line in the said system of survey, thence in an easterly direction along the said eighteenth correction line to a point where the said correction line intersects the Nelson river, thence southerly along the Nelson river to Lake Winnipeg, thence along the northern and western shores of Lake Winnipeg in a southerly direction to the point where it intersects the northern boundary of the province of Manitoba.

I presume that in view of the position taken by the government, and in view of the fact that the Bill is submitted to us, there is very little use of my urging that the province of Saskatchewan should be given that territory. I present this view, however, as the view taken by the vast majority of the people of the province of Saskatchewan. However, I do submit that if the government desire to render Saskatchewan justice, or if it wants to render Saskatchewan as much justice as it is rendering to the province of Ontario, it should at least do for Saskatchewan that which it proposes to do for Ontario. I will read, so that it may be on record, a telegram which was recently sent by the Acting Premier of Saskatchewan to the Rt. Hon. R. L. Borden, Prime Minister:

Regina, March 6.

To Rt. Hon. R. L. Borden,
Premier of Canada, Ottawa, Ont

The government of Saskatchewan understands that legislation now before parliament contains provision whereby the province of Ontario will have the rights to secure access to Ports Nelson and Churchill on Hudson bay. On behalf of the people of Saskatchewan we deem it our duty to again call your attention to the claims of this province as set forth in the memorial now in your hands. We desire to protest in the strongest manner possible against the provision of the Bill now before parliament which ignores the just claims of Saskatchewan for access to the bay. We wish further to point out that if there is a single valid reason why the province of Ontario should be given access to the ports mentioned, there are many reasons which are made apparent in the memorial referred to why Saskatchewan should have its claims recognized.

In view of the fact that you did not grant the request of the government of Saskatchewan to be represented at the conferences held with the governments of Manitoba and Ontario we desire to take this means, the only course open to us at present, to notify the government of Canada on behalf of our people that if the legislation now before parliament regarding an extension of the boundaries of Manitoba and Ontario become law without proper provision being made therein for a recognition, not of the claims, but of the rights of this province, the citizens of Saskatchewan for all time to come will have just cause to complain of the treatment received by them. In dealing with the matter referred to, our people have the right to hope and expect that your government will be guided by principles of justice and equality, thereby ensuring that the various provinces in the confederation of Canada will have no cause to complain of unfair treatment.

Mr. BLAIN. Will my hon. friend read the reply to that?

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). I will do so. The position taken by the Saskatchewan government is mainly that that province is entitled to the territory outlined in the record which I have read from the sessional papers of 1907. But they also claim as an alternative that if the government of Canada do not see their way to give Saskatchewan any portion of that territory, with a port on Hudson Bay, that province should have at least the same consideration as has been given to the province of Ontario in the order in council recently passed. In asking for this, we are not asking for very much; for I think the present government, to use a common expression, has handed the province of Ontario a lemon. They have given it what is of no use to it. It does not own the land; it gets a simple right of way through the territory of Manitoba. This is simply handed out to the province of Ontario to hoodwink the people of that province. So that in giving the same kind of consideration to the people of Saskatchewan, I do not think the Dominion government would be giving us much. I think they should give us a great deal more to meet the need of the province for an outlet to Hudson Bay. The hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) asked me to read the reply which has been sent by the right hon. the Prime Minister to the government of Saskatchewan. That reply is as follows:—

I beg to acknowledge your telegram of yesterday. The legislation now before parliament does not contain the provision alluded to. The province of Ontario considers it desirable to extend its state-owned railway to a port on Hudson bay.

At this point I would say that the present government has no guarantee from the government of Ontario that they are going to extend that railway to Hudson bay. All that the order in council says is that it might be desirable in the interest of the province to extend the railway to Hudson bay. I can say exactly the same on behalf of the province of Saskatchewan. Although we have no state-owned railway, it might be desirable in the interest of the province to have a state-owned railway running to Hudson bay. This is just as much assurance as the government has received from the government of Ontario. There is no agreement on the part of the province of Ontario to extend the railway. As I am not through, Mr. Chairman, will you call it six o'clock.

Mr. BORDEN. I understood that the discussion was to be concluded by six o'clock; at least that was the intimation conveyed to me.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There was no agreement, but it was said that we would not interpose any obstacle to having it concluded by six o'clock.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

MONTREAL, OTTAWA AND GEORGIAN BAY CANAL.

House in committee on Bill (No. 30) respecting the Montreal, Ottawa and Georgian Bay Canal Co.—Mr. White (Renfrew).

On section 1—time for construction extended,

Mr. OLIVER. This Bill has been the subject of considerable criticism, and perhaps the hon. gentleman in charge of it would inform the committee what is the present position of affairs.

Mr. LENNOX. The Montreal, Ottawa and Georgian Bay Canal Bill was partly considered in committee, and then referred to a subcommittee. The subcommittee met the representatives of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, and discussed the measure, and amended it to some extent. It was reprinted as amended by the subcommittee, and then came back to the Standing Committee on Railways. It was considered by them as reprinted, and it was adopted without any further objection. The main features that were in discussion were to have it defined clearly who should be the directors. It was proposed that the survivors of those that were originally directors should be the directors of the company. Now it is held that certain persons shall be the directors. The other proposition which gave rise to the most difficulty was, as to the right to take property belonging to the provinces without the provinces having anything to say in regard to that. It is now provided that, except for the purposes of the canal construction, the company shall not take any land without the consent of the province of Quebec, or the province of Ontario, as the case may be. Then I think there was a provision changed submitting to the jurisdiction of the Railway Board, and they have the Bill before them. I think those were the changes that were made.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not very familiar with the case, but I have seen some criticism of this Bill based, I think, on the ground that it may be used as a foundation of claim against the government of Canada, in case it was decided to go on with the construction of the Georgian Bay canal as a government work. If the railway company and the House at large are satisfied with that position I am not going to raise any objection, only I would like to have that point brought out so that it might be seen that we are not passing the Bill absolutely in the dark.

Mr. LENNOX. I think I can satisfy the House and the hon. member as to that point. The hon. gentleman will probably recollect that two or three sessions ago, probably, when the power given by this Bill was last renewed, a provision was inserted safeguarding the rights of the country in case the government should at any time determine to take over this work. It was pointed out that although we had the sovereign right to take over if we saw fit at any time, the plea might be set up that these men had vested rights, and they could get a very considerable advance on the actual outlay as a going concern, and so on. It was pointed out that we should not take over this work without paying the company for their franchise, and a provision was then inserted which provides that the government should not be called upon to pay more than the actual outlay that had been made by the company. It appeared to the committee the other day that, without making any special provision referring again to the enactment of two or three years ago, the probability was that it would be continued and enforced; but in order that there should be no question about the point, it is provided again by reference, that that clause is continued in force by the extension of time we now grant to the company. So that the point which my hon. friend referred to has, I think, been carefully safeguarded.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I would like the hon. gentleman to look at clause 7 which states as follows:

> Nothing in this Act shall affect or impair the rights of the government of Canada under or by virtue of the provisions of the section substituted by section 5 of chapter 128 of the Statutes of 1906 for section 43 of chapter 103 of the Statutes of 1894.

Then section 5 of chapter 128 of the Act of 1906 reads as follows:

> His Majesty, His Heirs and Successors, may at any time assume the possession of, and the property in, the said canals and works, and of and in all the rights, privileges and advantages of the company on giving to the company one week's notice of intention to do so, and thereupon all property in the said canals, works, rights, privileges and advantages shall become, and thence forward shall be, vested in His Majesty, His Heirs and Successors; and by way of compensation His Majesty shall pay to the company the value of the work actually done by the company up to the time of the giving of such notice in surveying and in the making of plans, and otherwise upon the ground, together with the value of all tangible property of the company of which possession may be so taken,—such values to be fixed by three valuators, or the majority of them, one valuator to be chosen by His Majesty, another by the company, and the third by the two chosen.

Bill reported, read a third time and passed.

EXTENSION OF BOUNDARY—MANITOBA.

House resumed consideration in committee of Bill (No. 115), to provide for the extension of the boundaries of Manitoba.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). When the committee rose at six o'clock, I was endeavouring to deal with the reply which was sent by the Prime Minister to the request received by this government from the government of the province of Saskatchewan for increased territory, or for at least similar treatment to that accorded the province of Ontario. For the purpose of placing the telegram completely before the House, I will read it:

I beg to acknowledge your telegram of yesterday. The legislation now before parliament does not contain the provision alluded to. The province of Ontario considers it desirable to extend its state-owned railway to a port on Hudson bay. For this purpose the Governor in Council has passed an order granting to that province a strip of land five miles in width from the western boundary of Ontario to the mouth of the Nelson river. This grant is made by virtue of the federal ownership of the land within the extended boundaries of Manitoba. In case the province of Saskatchewan should undertake the construction and operation of a state owned railway to the shores of Hudson bay, this government will be glad to give the proposal the most careful and earnest consideration. May I point out, however, that apart from this the claim of Saskatchewan was disposed of by the late administration on the 13th July, 1908; Sir Wilfrid Laurier expressed the decision of his government in the following words: 'After giving due consideration to this claim on the part of the province of Saskatchewan, it seemed to us that, as between the claim of the province of Saskatchewan and the province of Manitoba, to have the new territory which lies north of Manitoba and east of Saskatchewan alloted either one way or the other the weight of argument was certainly in favour of Manitoba, and we could not grant the prayer of Saskatchewan. We therefore had to ignore it.

There are two or three points in this reply to which I wish to call attention. The first one I mentioned before six o'clock, the words 'the province of Ontario thinks it desirable to extend its state-owned railway to a port in Hudson bay.' Now, I submit that that statement is not borne out by the order in council passed by the government giving certain rights to Ontario in the shape of a strip of land to a port on the Hudson bay. All the order in council says is as follows:

The government of the province of Ontario considers that it would or might be desirable in the interest of the province to extend the provincial railway known as the Timiskaming and Northern railway——

All that the order in council says is that it 'would or might be desirable'. The telegram says that the government of the province of Ontario considers it desirable. We have no evidence, and the government has no evidence and I do not believe that this road is going to be extended by the province of Ontario. I submit that in order to carry out the effect of that telegram word for word there should be some agreement between the government of the province of Ontario whereby it undertakes to build that railroad from Hudson bay, otherwise the whole contention of the right hon. gentleman in this telegram falls to the ground. Furtherfore, what does he say to the province of Saskatchewan:

In case the province of Saskatchewan should undertake the construction and operation——

The right hon. gentleman did not ask from the province of Ontario an undertaking to construct that Timiskaming road to Hudson bay, but he is asking from the province of Saskatchewan, before we can get similar consideration an actual undertaking to build a state-owned road from some point in that province to Hudson bay. But he does not say in the telegram that we will get the same treatment as the province of Ontario, even if we undertake to construct a road, but he simply says if such be the case this government will be glad to give the proposals the most careful and earnest consideration. The most the province of Saskatchewan can expect if she does undertake to build a state-owned railway from some point in that province to Hudson bay, is 'careful and earnest consideration'. I ask you, Mr. Chairman, to compare that treatment accorded to us with the treatment accorded to Ontario. The province of Ontario was never asked for any undertaking, they got this consideration without any undertaking whatever.

Some hon. gentlemen will say that the late government disposed of this whole question. It is true the late government disposed of the question so far as the territory was concerned. But I point out that the late government did not concede the demands of the province of Ontario, and the present government has re-opened the whole question by giving to Ontario a certain strip of land and a certain right to a port on the Hudson bay. The late government did not concede that, therefore the present government have re-opened the whole question, and I say that in all fairness we are entitled to equal consideration with the province of Ontario. Hon. gentlemen opposite are very glad, and very anxious, to shelter themselves behind the decisions of the late government, and I do not blame them for it. The decisions of the late government were usually correct. But in this case the present government are sheltering themselves behind the decision of the late government in regard to Saskatchewan, but they do not shelter themselves behind the decision of the late government in regard to Ontario. Now I fancy that not many men sitting here from the province of Ontario believe that the Ontario government is going to construct the Timiskaming railway to Hudson bay. It does not seem to me to be reasonable that the Ontario government is going to extend that Timiskaming railway to Hudson bay, or from Cochrane to Hudson bay. It appears to me more reasonable that they might extend it to the city of Quebec, and especially in view of the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite to keep the trade of this country running east and west. The distance from Cochrane to the city of Quebec is 475 miles, the distance from Cochrane to Ste. Margaret's bay, the nearest point on the Hudson bay, is 625 miles. The distance from Cochrane to Port Nelson terminus on Hudson bay is 700 miles. Now the common sense view of the matter appears to me to be that this Timiskaming railway from Cochrane will in all probability be extended to the city of Quebec.

I said before the committee rose at six o'clock that the province of Saskatchewan had more interest in transportation to Hudson bay than any other province in the Dominion of Canada. I do not require to elaborate that statement. But let me give you one or two figures to indicate that we are really more interested, because of our nearness to ports on the Hudson bay, in the traffic that may be conducted with any port, or through any railroad connected with that bay, than even the province of Manitoba. Take the distance from the centre of these provinces. The centre of Manitoba is very much closer to Fort William than the centre of Saskatchewan. From the centre of Manitoba to Fort William is a distance of about 500 miles. From the centre of Saskatchewan to Fort William is a distance of 800 miles. But from the centre of Saskatchewan to Churchill is a distance of 500 to 550 miles; whereas, the distance from the centre of Manitoba to Fort Churchill is some 750 to 800 miles by the nearest route. The centre of Saskatchewan is far nearer than the centre of Manitoba to either one of these ports on the bay. Therefore, I say we are more interested in transportation to Hudson bay than the province of Manitoba can be. Let me conclude my remark by giving a brief resume of the reasons I have given for the contention that we are entitled to added territory, but in any event we are entitled to equal consideration with the province of Ontario:

1. Those parts of old districts of Saskatchewan and Athabaska not included in the province of Saskatchewan were for 20 years, and should continue to be, united with the area forming that province.

2. The province of Saskatchewan and the province of Manitoba are both entitled to have their boundaries extended to Hudson bay.

3. By granting to the province of Saskatchewan those portions of the old districts of Saskatchewan and Athabaska, the Nelson river forms a natural boundary, and I submit, a reasonable boundary between that province and Manitoba.

4. The territory north of the Nelson river is tributary to the province of Saskatchewan rather than to Manitoba.

5. The province of Saskatchewan has a much greater interest in a transportation route via Hudson bay to the European market than has either Manitoba or Ontario.

6. If the territory north of Wilson river were given to Saskatchewan, no great injustice would be done to Manitoba because there would still be left 208,000 square miles of equally good territory with several hundred miles of coast line, which is amply sufficient to satisfy all reasonable claims both of Manitoba and Ontario.

I submit that in order to do even scant justice to the province of Saskatchewan we must be accorded like treatment with the province of Ontario. That statement cannot be successfully refuted. I have only this to say to the present government, that if they do not give the province of Saskatchewan access to a port on the Hudson bay in the same way as they do to the province of Ontario, the people of Saskatchewan will have a just cause for complaint, and a just grievance against this government for all time to come.

Mr. BORDEN. I would like to say one or two words in reply to the observations of my hon. friend from Regina (Mr. Martin). He will pardon me if I do not advert to the major portion of his speech, because it simply contains arguments that have been made a great many times in the discussion of this measure, and which I think have been answered a great many times. But with reference to the alleged discrimination between Ontario and Saskatchewan, I want to point out that the word 'undertaking' was not used in the telegram in the sense which he attributes to it. It was used in the sense of embarking upon the project of building a railroad to Hudson bay, it was not used in the sense of requiring any undertaking from the province of Saskatchewan, and I regret that my hon. friend took that meaning from it. I may be permitted to say that inasmuch as he regards the arrangement with Ontario as either a lemon or a gold brick, I am not sure which, I am surprised that he should be exercised so greatly in order to get a similar lemon or gold brick for the province of Saskatchewan. He is of course entitled to his own opinion as to the character of the particular arrangement that has been made. If he still should be anxious for this alleged lemon or gold brick, as the hon. member has called it, for the province of Saskatchewan, I have already said in the telegram that the government would be desirous of giving its most earnest and careful consideration to any proposal that the province of Saskatchewan might make in that regard.

In so far as the desire of the province of Ontario is concerned, I do not recollect at the moment the exact words that were used in the order in council, but I do know that the government of Ontario, in so far as I can gather the intentions of that government, has it in most serious contemplation to extend the Timiskaming and Northern Ontario railway to a port on Hudson bay. My hon. friend is a little astray, I think, in one regard. In so far as the boundaries are concerned, they are left exactly as they were defined in 1908. The arrangement made with the province of Ontario is not a part of this legislation. If legislation is hereafter to be placed before this House for the purpose of carrying out that arrangement made with Ontario, my hon. friend's observations will be very much more to the point than they have been this afternoon and evening, although I concede, of course, that he is at perfect liberty and quite within his rights in making the comments upon the arrangement that he has seen fit to make.

I do not think that my hon. friend was a member of this House in 1908 when the resolutions were moved on the 13th of July, and therefore I cannot ask him why he kept silent on that occasion because he was not here to say anything for the province of Saskatchewan. Perhaps I am mistaken in that.

An hon. MEMBER. He was here.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). I was not here in 1908.

Mr. BORDEN. That is my recollection. But, I would like to say to him that Saskatchewan was represented by capable and zealous men at that time, and I do not remember—I am speaking from recollection—that any member from Saskatchewan then found fault with the attitude of the late administration on that occasion. My hon. friend suggests that the present administration is desirous of hiding itself behind the late administration. We are not so desirous. The present government thought that the boundaries which were defined by this House in 1908 ought to be adhered to and, consistently with that, we thought it no more than right to give some effective consideration to the desire and claim of the province of Ontario to extend its state-owned railway to the shore of Hudson bay. In doing that we have not departed at all from the boundaries. We have simply, by the exercise of the rights appertaining to the government of this country in virtue of the federal ownership of these lands within the extended boundaries, given this strip of land to the province of Ontario in order that it may have an opportunity of extending that railway to the shore of Hudson bay. If the province of Saskatchewan should desire to enter into the project of owning and operating railways, and should desire to extend its railways to the shore of Hudson bay, I can only repeat to my hon. friend what I have already said to the government of Saskatchewan in the telegram which has been brought up, that this government will be prepared to give the most earnest and sympathetic consideration to any suggestions or proposals that the government of Saskatchewan may have to make in regard to the matter.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). Could that be done in any way at all after this Bill extending the boundaries of Manitoba has passed?

Mr. BORDEN. I am afraid that I have not made myself clear to my hon. friend. I trust that I have made myself clearer to most hon. gentlemen in this House than I seem to have succeeded in doing in so far as he is concerned. The boundaries are adhered to exactly as they were before, but inasmuch as the Crown, in the right of the government of Canada, owns the greater part of the land within the extended boundaries, the government of Canada could make a grant for railway purposes to a corporation, or an individual, or to any one else. This is not strictly connected with the extension of the boundaries. If the boundaries of Manitoba had not been extended at all it would have been equally competent for the government of Canada to have made a grant to that province for the purpose referred to. The two things are not directly connected with each other, except in so far as they are connected in this way: Ontario made a claim that it was entitled to have a port on the shores of Hudson bay, but the boundaries having been defined by parliament in 1908, it seemed that the best course open to us for the purpose, was to make a grant of this strip five miles in width in order that it might be competent for the province of Ontario to extend that railway through the province of Manitoba just as it could have extended that railway through these territories before they formed a part of the province of Manitoba. I am putting aside for the moment, the alleged constitutional difficulties which have been raised by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House and to which I do not attach a great deal of importance. But, that is all that has been done. If the boundaries had not been extended the same thing might have been done, or if the boundaries of Manitoba were extended to-day and Ontario, three years from now, had come to the conclusion that it desired to extend its railway to the shores of Hudson bay, it would have been competent for this government at that time, to have done exactly the same thing. It is only in the way I have suggested, that the two proposals are connected with each other.

Amendment (Mr. Oliver) negatived on division.

Mr. BORDEN. Before clause 5 is adopted, there are just one or two amendments of a clerical nature that I would like to make. At the end of the 44th line, in subsection of section 5, it reads:

> Thereafter until such population reaches one million one hundred thousand, the sum payable shall be seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

My hon. friends on the other side of the House did not happen to observe, and I only observed myself a short time ago, that we are really discriminating against Saskatchewan by the use of the word 'one.' It should be 'two'; one million two hundred thousand, instead of one million one hundred thousand. Therefore, I beg to move that the first section of subsection 5 be amended by striking out the word 'one' at the end of the 44th line, and substituting the word 'two' therefor.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In clause 3 the provincial boundaries are described as being 'along the international boundary line to a certain monument thereon, at or near the northwest angle of the Lake of the Woods'. Should not that monument be definitely described in some way, or otherwise there may be disputes in the future.

Mr. BORDEN. This description has been gone over very carefully by the geographer and by the astronomer as well, and it was supposed to be absolutely accurate and definite in every way.

Mr. PUGSLEY. They have no legal training, and they may think that because they know where the boundary is, it is all right.

Mr. BORDEN. There does seem to be force in the hon. gentleman's suggestion. We may report the Bill, and before the third reading I will refer the matter to these gentlemen, who are more responsible than I am for the description, because I left it almost entirely to them.

Mr. OLIVER. The peculiarity about the boundary at that particular point is that the international boundary line which runs east and west, up to a certain point, runs north for a short distance, and the monument spoken of is at the north end of this northerly turn to the boundary line.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The description does not say so.

Mr. OLIVER. It does not, and it is rather important that the monument should be definitely defined.

Mr. MACDONALD. When the boundaries of Manitoba were definitely settled in 1908, the same resolution dealt with the boundaries of Ontario and Quebec, whereas in the present case, the government is dealing with the boundaries of each of these provinces by a separate Bill. In 1908 a resolution was moved by the hon. member for Colchester to the following effect:

> Be it resolved that the extension of the boundaries provided for by this resolution shall be accompanied by such conditions as will prevent such extension prejudicially affecting the representation of any province in parliament.

An amendment was moved to that resolution. which was adopted, I think, by consent, as follows:

> That in any legislation to be introduced to give effect to the foregoing resolution, nothing shall be contained or provided to impair the representation of any province in this House.

In view of this, I call the attention of the Prime Minister to the effect of the extension of provincial boundaries upon the representation of the provinces in parliament. The Prime Minister, coming from the maritime provinces, is aware of the interest which has developed in that portion of the Dominion in regard to this question of representation. In the organ of his party in the Island of Cape Breton, it was urged that the members of this House, irrespective of party, should, in connection with this Bill, take up this question of representation, and have it settled. During the discussion in 1908, the hon. member for Kings and Albert (Mr. Fowler), and the then member from St. John county (Dr. Daniel), dealt at great length with that question, and the effect which the extension of these boundaries would have upon the question of representation. I do not propose to move an amendment, but I want to say a word or two to the right hon. gentleman in regard to this matter. I need not urge on the Prime Minister the desirability of keeping in view the working out of some arrangement so that the representation of the maritime provinces should not be reduced. There are two ways in which this could be dealt with. It could be provided in the Quebec Bill that the population of the additional territory which is given to that province, should not be taken into consideration in the computation which is made in order to ascertain the electoral unit. An amendment could be made in this Bill providing that the population in the added territory should not be taken into the computation of the population of the provinces when you come to make up the number which has to be taken into consideration when you make a comparison between the population at one census and the population at the previous census. But, of course, legislation of that kind would not in any way remedy the difficulty which exists. If no amendment providing for the safeguards is made to these Bills we would be left to the remedy suggested by the Minister of Marine, whereby, as a result of a conference to be held between the Premiers of the provinces of the Dominion, an agreement might be made under which you would have an irreducible minimum fixed for each one of the maritime provinces, or, what would be better, a minimum fixed for all of the original provinces which entered into confederation with the addition of Prince Edward Island.

I apprehend, from the statement made by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, that a conference of the provinces is to be held at which that question is to be discussed. But supposing that conference is to be held, the Premier should move, and move speedily, in order to obtain effectual results from it, by asking this parliament to adopt an address to the imperial parliament, so that we would have imperial legislature in force and effect when we came to pass a redistribution Bill, and would be empowered to deal with it on that basis. The whole question of redistribution is inextricably mixed up with this problem, and it is important to have the opinion of such a conference brought to a head at an early day. My hon. friend has also told us that at some time he proposes to call the maritime provinces to council for the purpose of considering how they are to be affected by the granting of lands to the other provinces of the Dominion. When the boundaries of all the provinces are fixed as a result of these various resolutions, we shall have shut the door for ever on the possibility of any of the maritime provinces having any share in the present territory of the Dominion beyond what they have now, or on the possibility of their having any increased representation through the addition of territory, as will be the case with all the other provinces, as a result of the legislation we are now passing or may pass in the future. This problem is a very serious one. I am quite sure the Premier is sympathetic; but as a result of this legislation, without providing in any way for our representation being unimpaired, the door is being closed against any remedy being ever obtained in that way. As far as I am concerned, I am not moving any amendment to this measure, on the faith of what I assume the Premier will do, believing that we can count on him taking such steps as are in his power to gratify the reasonable wishes of the various provinces, particularly the maritime provinces, in regard to representation. The proposition is one which ought to be taken up with regard to all the original provinces of confederation, together with Prince Edward Island. The language of section 51 with regard to this matter is well worth recalling:

> On the completion of the census in the year 1871, and of each subsequent decennial census, the representation of the four provinces shall be readjusted by such authority, in such a manner, and from such time as the parliament of Canada from time to time provides——

Subject to certain rules. Although we have the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada and of the Privy Council based on a strictly legal interpretation of the terms of this document, it is quite evident to any hon. gentleman who has looked at the record of what occurred at the time the fathers of confederation assembled together to settle these matters, that they had in view a readjustment to be made by a comparison every ten years of the populations of the different provinces with that of Canada consisting of the four original provinces. That that should be preserved as the basis of confederation is a proposition which is not an unreasonable one; and, realizing that though some guards could be obtained by the insertion of amendments in this Bill, but apprehending at the same time that they would be ineffectual, I ask the Premier, in connection with the various questions germane to this, which will of necessity come up in this and succeeding years, to see if he cannot work out the problem so that the representation of the various provinces will be maintained.

Mr. BORDEN. I realize the very great importance of the matter which the hon. gentleman has just mentioned. The maritime provinces lost a certain number of members under the census of 1901. If I remember correctly, they stand to lose five members by the census of 1911—two in New Brunswick, two in Nova Scotia, one in Prince Edward Island. The people of those provinces naturally take a deep interest in having their representation in this parliament maintained. I recall very well the debate in 1908, when those resolutions were introduced by the right hon. gentleman who now leads the opposition. The principal portion of the debate turned upon the matter which has just been mentioned by my hon. friend from Pictou. The maritime provinces, as I understand, depended on subsection 4 of section 51 as a safeguard to prevent the reduction of their representation. Subsection 4 is as follows:

> On such readjustment the number of members for a province shall not be reduced unless the proportion which the number of the population of the province bore to the number of the aggregate population of Canada at the then last preceding readjustment of the number of members for the provinces is ascertained at the then latest census to be diminished by one-twentieth part or upwards.

This worked out in connection with the other portions of section 51 in this way. In the first place, you ascertained the unit of representation by dividing the population of Quebec by 65, the constant number of members to which that province is entitled. Having obtained the unit of representation in that way, it was necessary to ascertain something more before you could reduce the representation of any province. You had to ascertain whether or not the proportion which the population of the province bore to the population of all Canada, as determined at the previous census, had been diminished by the results of that census to the extent of one-twentieth. If it had not been diminished to the extent of one-twentieth, the province would not lose any part of its representation. The difficulty which has arisen is this. Section 51 as it originally existed in the British North America Act had clearly related to the four provinces of Canada which constituted the confederation—the old provinces of Canada divided into Ontario and Quebec, the province of New Brunswick and the province of Nova Scotia. In 1904 or 1905, when this question was referred by the late administration to the Supreme Court of Canada, afterwards going on appeal to the Privy Council, it was determined by the Privy Council that the word 'Canada' in its application to the census of 1901, meant not Canada as originally constituted, but all the provinces of Canada, including Prince Edward Island and British Columbia, which were brought into the confederation in 1871 and 1873, and also the provinces of Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan, which were constituted afterwards.

At least I think the judgment of the Privy Council went that far. My hon. friend the member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley), argued the case, and he will correct me if I am not stating it accurately.

Mr. PUGSLEY. They did not state whether it included the territories or not, but it included all the provinces.

Mr. BORDEN. They did decide that it included Manitoba?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN. Therefore, the same reasoning would lead to the conclusion that it included Alberta and Saskatchewan, after they were constituted into provinces.

Mr. MACDONALD. All the provinces.

Mr. BORDEN. Just one further circumstance may be mentioned in that connection, because it seems to me a very important one. I do not know on what the judgment proceeded in the Privy Council. If I remember correctly the Privy Council did not give any reasons for the judgment.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN. Did they give reasons?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN. I had forgotten that, but at all events in the Supreme Court of Canada, some of the judges laid stress upon the contention that the British North America Act of 1871, and the British North America Act of 1886, had an important bearing upon this question, by reason of the fact that in the British North America Act of 1886 it is declared that the Act of 1867, the Act of 1871, and the Act of 1886 shall all be construed together as if they were one Act, although doubtless there are other reasons why they were constrained to come to the conclusion which I have just mentioned. Now, I would like to say in that regard, that neither the Act of 1871, nor the Act of 1886, was passed for any such purpose——

Mr. MACDONALD. Hear, hear.

Mr. BORDEN. And if the effect of those Acts is to prevent this safeguarding section from having the operation which it was intended to have in the first instance, then it would seem to me that there is a pretty fair argument to be made, that the compact between the provinces of Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick, which was effected by the British North America Act of 1867, has been inadvertently departed from.

Mr. MACDONALD. Hear, hear.

Mr. BORDEN. I can assure my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald), and the hon. member from St. John (Mr. Pugsley), who take a great interest in this question that all of us from the maritime provinces are just as deeply interested in it as they are, and I can assure my hon. friend from Pictou that it will have the earnest and careful consideration of the government. Various suggestions have been made as to how the representation of the maritime provinces might be maintained, but I need not go into them to-night. I will be glad to discuss them at any time with any hon. gentleman in this House, who takes an interest in this question. I think, however, it must be apparent to every one of us who has given consideration to this question, and I have given a great deal of consideration to it, that no one of the methods suggested is free from difficulty. Doubtless some of these suggestions would be attended with less difficulty than others. One suggestion that has been made is, that a minimum representation should be established for the maritime provinces. Another suggestion is that the British North America Act should be amended, to the effect that in estimating the one-twentieth diminution which is required under the provisions of subsection 4 of section 51, only the four original provinces should be taken into consideration, so far as any diminution of the representation of those provinces is concerned. If I am right in the view that some of the judges went upon the grounds which I mentioned a moment ago, it would seem to me that perhaps that suggestion would afford the most reasonable basis for an amendment to the British North America Act.

Mr. MACDONALD. Hear, hear.

Mr. BORDEN. But I would not like to be understood as giving a final opinion in that regard, because the importance of this question demands very much more consideration than I have been able to give it during the past four or five months, as my hon. friends in the House will understand. I can only repeat in conclusion, that my hon. friend from Pictou can rest assured that this matter will engage the very earnest and careful attention of the government.

Bill reported.

SUPPLY.

House again in Committee of Supply.

Subsidies service between Baddeck, Grand Narrows and Iona—$5,825.

Mr. McKENZIE. Has the contract for the ensuing year been signed between the government and the company?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). No.

Mr. McKENZIE. Is there any proposition for a change in the terms?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). No.

Mr. McKENZIE. For the last few years boats used to call at a place called Camp Head, but I am not sure that they did last year. I am particularly anxious that that call should continue.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Yes, that call is required. That is after they pass Mackay's point.

Mr. McKENZIE. Last year, I believe, it was obligatory upon the company to call there only while the steamer 'Marion' was making her regular trips. It is very desirable that a steamer should call there during the whole of open navigation en route to Iona. I hope the minister will have that inserted in the contract.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I shall be very glad to look into that.

Steam service between Canada and Australia or New Zealand or both, on the Pacific Ocean, $185,509.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). What was the extent of the carrying trade last year of the line thus subsidized?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Last year twelve voyages were made. The total number of passengers was 6,016; freight, 53,680 tons; mail, 10,012 bags, and 937 sacks.

Mr. SINCLAIR. They are not paid extra for carrying the mail?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). No, the mail carriage is provided for in the subsidy.

Steam service between Canadian Atlantic ports and Australia and New Zealand, $120,000.

Mr. SINCLAIR. How does it come that we have two services to New Zealand?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). One is on the Pacific and the other by the Atlantic ports. These vessels on the Atlantic side make a sailing once a month, on the 15th.

In the summer the service is from Montreal to Auckland, Wellington, Lyttleton and Dunedin, in New Zealand, and Melbourne and Sydney in Australia. In the winter months, they sail from St. John and Halifax and make the same terminal ports in New Zealand and Australia.

Mr. SINCLAIR. How much did they carry last year?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The total distance is nearly 13,000 miles. The freight carried was 12,304 tons by weight and 73,640 tons by measurement. There is little or no passenger traffic and no mails.

Mr. SINCLAIR. What is the tonnage of the ships in the service?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). It runs from 7,503 to 9,964 tons, there being four vessels. The speed is from 10 knots to 12 knots.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). Are any of these steamship subventions new, and if any are new, will the minister please indicate that as we come to them?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). These are all old votes, most of the services having been established for a long series of years.

Ocean and mail service between Canada and Great Britain, $600,000.

Mr. MACDONALD. What is the minister doing in regard to that?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The contracts end on the 1st May, 1912. The government has had under consideration, for several years, as my hon. friend knows, various plans for the improvement of the service across the Atlantic. I find records of these plans on the files as I look them over. Some of them are pretty ambitious, and all of them anticipate a large amount of money in the shape of subsidies. We are paying now for Atlantic steamers somewhere in the region of $700,000 or $800,000, for what we call the distinctive mail service. Many of the smaller subsidies are for freight ships, passengers constituting a very small part. The present government has had no opportunity, no time, to take up these matters and give them the consideration they merit. These projects involve two things, first a large increase in the amount of money and also contracts for a considerable period of time, because a large enterprise like this will not begin on the basis of a year-to-year arrangement. Hon. gentlemen will quite see that it has been impossible for us to sit down and give any real attention to the subject. After the House of Commons has ended its session and left us, we hope to be able to get down to that question in the course of the recess and give it real consideration. There is another proposition on foot, which is to enlarge the number of vessels at present coming into our ports as beneficiaries of the subsidy granted on a tonnage basis. I have looked into that somewhat in connection with the Post Office Department, but I have not looked into it sufficiently to make up my mind in reference to it. The committee will see from the tenor of my remarks that what is likely to take place is that the present service will be continued temporarily and that during the recess the whole matter will be taken up and the consideration given to it which it deserves.

I cannot, myself, see any better way than that. I do not care to make long contracts under present conditions; I would not like to make a contract under the new conditions involving, as I said, much more money and for a long term, without time for consideration. In the meantime, although we may not have all that we ought to have, we have a very creditable mail service. The style of boats, the capacity of boats, the speed of boats having constantly increased since many years ago when we commenced to talk about a fast Atlantic service. Our speed now comes up to 17 and 18 knots, and the quality, the accommodation and the outfittings of our best boats are much to be commended. But the lines which are at present running those boats are not satisfied with the development. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company is now building two very fine boats for the Pacific service, and if my information is correct, those boats will be put upon the Pacific service inside of probably twelve months. That will relieve the present boats on the Pacific line for service elsewhere. There are also being built by steamship companies, improved boats, some of which will carry upon the Atlantic line. Last year, I think it was, the 'Laurentic' and the 'Megantic' of the Dominion-White Star line came to the river St. Lawrence and the port of Montreal. I think these vessels will also come this season, and it is not impossible that one or two other vessels of that line may make voyages to our ports.

There is one thing in connection with the St. Lawrence route which is not satisfactory, and that is that we have not so far been able to take out from Montreal the amount of freight that is offered at Montreal, and that might go via Montreal provided we had the tonnage. We have some 22 regular vessels coming into port there, large vessels, but they carry large numbers of passengers and large quantities of parcel freight, and they take a minimum of grain, according as their space is filled or is not filled. These boats, both passenger and mail boats, are not able to take away the grain that offers at the port of Montreal, and last year, as in previous years, and as will occur no doubt next year, to a certain extent, grain will seek its way out through the port of Montreal and will not find in that class of ship tonnage sufficient to carry it. The difficulty is, coming down to the point, that the insurance rates are so high that any other than a regular steamer does not find it convenient or profitable, and maybe does not find it possible, to compete for grain from the port of Montreal. If you take the zone below us to the Atlantic ports of the United States, and compare the insurance rates with ours, our insurance rates are very much higher, and the difference in rates is sufficient to keep the tramp steamers from visiting the Montreal ports. There ought to be some method of solution by which lower insurance charges should be given to the irregular vessels coming into our more northern harbours. We have spent an immense amount of money on the St. Lawrence route and on the gulf, in lighting, and in all the conveniences for the warning of ships. We have a route there that we might well be proud of, which has been the interest of all governments since Canada had a government, and which can claim from both parties and all governments, and has received, fair and generous consideration. There has been a progressive diminution of casualties, consequent upon the increase of lights and appliances for warning vessels. Now it does seem as though the great insurance companies, and Lloyds is of course the greatest, ought to have some regard to that progressive feature in our marine history, and ought to come a little nearer to accommodating itself in the way of insurance rates to the wants and necessities of the St. Lawrence route and the Canadian ports.

Mr. NESBITT. Does the minister know how much higher they are now?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I have not the figures by me, but they are considerably higher.

Mr. NESBITT. They have been very materially reduced in the last five years.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). They have been reduced if you take a period of some length of time; but in the last two or three years, if my memory serves me right, the reductions have not been large. I may say that that matter is not escaping the attention of the government, my own department is taking that matter up, and I hope that in some way or other we may turn over a new leaf with reference to that matter, and that we may get for our ports and our trade a better insurance rate, which would enable us to remove from ourselves the reproach of allowing the grain that offers itself to our ports to go to other ports, owing to our lack of tonnage accommodation.

Mr. MACDONALD. What is the speed of the new Canadian Pacific Railway boats that are going on the Atlantic?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The new boats will have a speed of not less than 22 knots.

Mr. MACDONALD. We are to understand that, pending a review of the whole subject and a final arrangement, the contracts as they stand now will run during this year?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I am not saying that certainly, but that is the conclusion towards which the remarks I have made trend. Something might happen that would make it different, but I do not know of anything at present.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I was going to suggest to my hon. friend that he let one of these items stand over, as there are some gentlemen who are not here who would like to speak upon them.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). We will leave the last item over, with the understanding that they may all be discussed.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend mentioned the grain business. My judgment is that one of the most immediate needs of solving the difficulty about the grain business is to have more elevator accommodation at the St. Lawrence and Atlantic ports. We have not one-tenth part of the storage accommodation for grain which is needed east of the lakes. At Buffalo they have storage capacity for fifty million bushels of grain, and the result is that Buffalo has become a favourite place for the storage of grain, and when it is stored there at the proper time, and the market is satisfactory and freights are satisfactory, and tonnage is available, grain goes forward from that port to the markets of the old world. Our elevator accommodation east of the lakes is very limited in character. I am satisfied that the railway companies feel it. I have talked with the officials of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and they know that they realize that the elevator accommodation is not what it ought to be, but, of course, the railway companies usually move along under the pressure of business. It seems to me that the government ought to consider whether, at certain important points, a large amount of storage for grain should not be provided. I am satisfied that it would go a long way towards relieving the difficulty caused by congestion, and that the grain would go forward as tonnage was available and as the market suited

Mr. SINCLAIR. I am glad to see that the minister is taking an interest in the question of insurance in the river and gulf of St. Lawrence. There is a certain amount of prejudice among the underwriters in England against the St. Lawrence route. They, of course, make their calculations, upon the losses that they make from year to year during a given period of years and they will give you that as a reason why the rates are so much higher. I am certain that the situation is not well understood by the brokers in London. They close down very early in the season on insurance in the St. Lawrence; I think it is in October——

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). They raise their rates.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Yes, they raise their rates in October just at the time when the grain is being moved and at a time when the season is the busiest. There is no real reason in the condition of our climate why the rates should be raised so early in the season, because October and November are just as safe for navigation in the St. Lawrence as any other month. They raise their rates from Quebec away down to the Baie de Chaleur, Miramichi bay and northern coast of New Brunswick which affects the timber trade to some extent. It is quite true that tramp vessels do not find their way very much to the St. Lawrence largely on that account. Not only is the insurance all the year around too high, but it is very much heavier at the time of the year when the large bulk of the work is being done. I do not know whether anything can be done, but I think it would be a very good thing if the minister should get in touch with Lloyds people in London and give them the charts of the St. Lawrence and all the information that is available in the department in order to show them that navigation in these waters is quite safe in these early months of winter. If he does perhaps some of this prejudice, which I feel certain exists there, can be removed.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I would like to intimate to the Minister of Trade and Commerce that some time before the close of the session I wish to discuss the matter of a fast Atlantic steamship service. I will not do it to-night but I will give him notice at some later date.

Mr. EMMERSON. I would like to ask the minister with respect to the service between Moncton and Bay of Fundy ports. I cannot see that provision has been made for it this year. It was for a steamer plying between Moncton and ports in the county of Cumberland, Nova Scotia, and in the county of Albert, New Brunswick. I think the amount paid last year was $2,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I think my hon. friend will find an item before we get through in reference to that. I just want to say in connection with the point mentioned by the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair), that we have been making representations in two ways. We have been making representations by way of spreading information as to what has been done in improving, lighting and other conveniences in Canada and we have also been making representations, and we are at the present time making representations, to the insurance companies themselves and endeavouring not only to put all the information which we possess before them but to put it before them in such a way that we are getting them to canvass it and to talk over it with us. If anything can be done in that way during the present year to make everything as plain as it can be made, I propose that my department shall have that done. I do not think there will be any lack in that respect. In reference to the suggestion of my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Pugsley) that the solution of this matter would be the building of elevators, I do not want it to be understood here that the government propose to take over the duty and the work that belongs to the railway companies whose business it is to equip their roads with these terminal conveniences. Wherever the government has railways and termini and grain offers and those conveniences are necessary, I think the government will not be backward in providing them. As far as the great railway companies are concerned, I think they must themselves provide terminal conveniences. It is their duty to do it and I see no reason why we should not impress that duty upon them.

Mr. BENNETT (Simcoe). In connection with this question of grain elevators, I think that the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) perhaps does not bear in mind the fact that a very large proportion of the wheat that comes from the northwest is distributed in Ontario and the other provinces. The object of the elevator companies is not simply to make what they can in the way of charges for holding the grain over for the winter but it is the money made in the elevating of the grain and, in turn, discharging it into cars that is important to them. We have several places in Ontario to-day where large milling companies have erected grain elevators. There is a great deal of the spirit of gambling in connection with grain and while to-day the miller aims at buying grain when it is low, in order to accommodate the grain that he owns himself, he must have an elevator of his own. I have in mind two or three flour-milling companies in Ontario who have large elevator accommodation. I think it is hardly fair to expect the railway companies, as a business enterprise, to build huge elevators, have them filled up with grain in the fall of the year and simply derive the charge from handling or storing it during the winter. This is a matter that, in my judgment, in so far as Ontario is concerned, will correct itself inasmuch as the flour milling companies will construct and maintain elevators of their own and thus relieve the congestion of grain at the eastern lake ports.

Steam service between Canada and Cuba, $25,000.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). What business did this line do last year?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The Canada and Cuba line did not do much of a business, and as far as I am concerned it will not go on the same another year.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). It is from St. John, is it not?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Well, it was. They made nine passages, they carried no passengers, they carried out 35,325 tons by measurement, and they brought back not a single ounce of cargo. When the service was first projected, it was with the idea that these steamers should carry things to Cuba, and carry things back from Cuba to Canada. What it has resulted in is that they carry out a certain large amount of produce from Canada, but after reaching Cuba they load up for foreign ports. Hereafter the service may touch at Cuba and do good work in carrying produce out of Cuba, but it has got to be so connected as to bring back something for Canada or else they will not get a subsidy.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That matter is worthy of further consideration by the minister. The important thing for Canada is to get a foreign market for Canadian products, and why should we be so anxious to buy goods in Cuba and spend Canadian money there? The minister tells us that the line to Australia and New Zealand has carried out forty thousand odd tons; does that mean the same measurement as he gave for the Cuba line?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). That means tons weight.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Let us suppose that at least half the quantity of Canadian products is sent to Cuba for this small subsidy of $25,000 as is sent to Australia and New Zealand for the large subsidy of $180,000, and the showing is not so bad after all. This subsidy was given for the purpose of developing the trade in potatoes, particularly between the maritime province ports and Cuba and it has been very effective in that respect. As to passengers, of course it is natural to expect that passengers would go to New York and take a passenger steamer there rather than travel by a freight boat. It has been explained to me by those in the enterprise that really there is not much return cargo from Cuba to Canada.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I think that is so.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We continued the subsidy as an encouragement for the export of Canadian products, and to give our people a foreign market, and in doing that we were accomplishing the most important object to be gained by this small subsidy. I have no doubt that the Minister of Trade and Commerce will look into the matter carefully before he takes any action.

Mr. EDWARDS. The position taken by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pugsley), is very interesting when we contrast it with the position he took last year in regard to this matter. When these subsidies were up last year I called attention to the fact that so far as the trade between Canada and Australia and New Zealand was concerned the outgoing trade from Canada consisted almost entirely of manufactured articles, principally agricultural implements, and that the export of Canadian agricultural products to these countries was a mere bagatelle. The incoming trade from Australia and New Zealand to Canada consisted mainly of agricultural products which were coming in here and competing with the products of our own farmers. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Pugsley), now says that we should look mainly at these subsidies from the standpoint of getting outside markets, for our products, but last year he was willing to subsidize steamship lines to convey our manufactured articles to Australia and New Zealand, and to bring back to Canada agricultural products to compete with the products raised by our own farmers.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That was getting a foreign market for our manufactures.

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, but the hon. gentleman and his political friends represented themselves as the friends of the agriculturists, when in that respect they were showing themselves the friends of the manufacturers, and the foes of the agriculturists, because they were subsidizing steamship lines to bring back agricultural products which they proposed to let into the country free, to compete with our own agricultural products, while the outgoing agricultural exports from Canada did not amount to a bagatelle. It seems to me that this whole matter of steamship subsidies could be very well looked into with a great deal of care. I have never been able to understand on what basis these subsidies have been granted; whether the steamers were supposed to be paid so much a trip or whether the subsidy was paid on the amount of tonnage carried inwards and outwards. It does seem to me that the volume of trade with some of these countries to which we subsidize steamship lines does not warrant the amount of the subsidy granted. The Auditor General's report for the year ending 31st March, 1911, shows that a subsidy was granted between Canada and Mexico of $125,000 which I suppose includes the service on the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, and of that amount $11,458.34 was not used. Then, $50,000 was granted for the Canada-New Zealand service, and none of it was used. Between the Canadian Atlantic ports and Australia and New Zealand there was a subsidy of $120,000 granted which I believe is to be voted again this year, and $20,000 of that was not used. I notice that in several of these items here the full amount voted was not used. That is why I ask on what basis these grants are voted. I would also like some explanation as to why they have not all been used.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The grants have not all been used because the money has not all been earned according to contract. There is a gross sum put in the estimates, which forms the maximum of the contract for a certain number of trips. The vessels are paid generously so much per trip. If they do not make the full number of trips, they do not get the full amount of the subsidy. A contract is entered into for each of these services. There are certain general features common to all the contracts; then there are special features which fit the individual case.

Mr. EDWARDS. In arriving at the amount you are going to pay, do you take into account the value of the goods they carry out of Canada and the value of the goods they bring back ?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I do not think that is taken as a basis. There are some services which are called services of necessity; there are others which are experimental. You do not get as much trade as you would like to get. You are working up a trade. If there were a full trade, there would be no necessity for the subsidy at all. The arrangement is for each individual service, and there is the usual bargaining between the steamship company and the government. If a lump sum is arranged for a certain number of voyages, for each complete round trip, the company gets its proportion of the whole subsidy. If it does not make the number of trips stipulated for, as a maximum, the payment falls short in that proportion. It would be almost impossible, in such services, to pay according to the amount of exports and imports, from the fact that you start a service, not because there is a plethora of freight offering to and fro, but because you want to work up to a larger and larger commercial intercourse. You will help the vessel at the first, and in course of time, some of these become paying and do not need subsidies.

Mr. EDWARDS. I would assume that in asking for a subsidy they would advance some argument to show why a subsidy should be granted.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). There is no doubt they advance arguments.

Mr. EDWARDS. It seems to me they ought to have something more tangible in the way of an argument than simply that they want the money. I would suppose that they would present arguments to show that such a trade could be worked up.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I do not think my hon. friend is ingenious enough to invent any argument that has not already been used by the companies as a reason why they should get a subsidy. But I will tell my hon. friend what I am doing. He will find in a report which is now in the printer's hands, and will soon be in the hands of the House, a statement with reference to every one of these subsidies. The salient terms of the contract are given, the capacity of the vessel, its speed, tonnage, etc. Then, there is the gross amount of what it carries in passengers, mails and freight. Next year this report will contain not only the gross amount of freight carried each way, but an analysis of the principal grades carried, so that there will be an opportunity of judging not only whether or not we are carrying a certain amount of dead weight, but what is the quality of the merchandise that is going and coming—whether it is all timber all agricultural produce, all manufactured goods, or, if not, what proportion and quantity of each. I have also come to the conclusion to insert in all the contracts that are made this year a clause asking the company to present a full account of its expenses and of its receipts, so that we shall be able to find out just about what is the outgo and the income; and when we arrive at a certain point, we shall be able to say to the company: Your passenger traffic has increased and your freight traffic has increased, your expenses have been so much, and your receipts have been so much, you have been able to pay a certain dividend, or you have not. In that way I think we shall get down to a better basis upon which we can adjust the subsidy to each case in hand. There will always be cases where there will be a necessity for communication but where there is no possibility, within a short period at least, of a paying trade.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Will that statement be a solemn declaration or one made on oath?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I think we may assume that we shall get at the rights of the case. If we find that the accounts are not given properly, we will take measures to get them, because that is a condition of these companies getting subsidies. But I prefer to go on the assumption that the steamship companies with which we make these contracts will give us a fair statement of their returns.

Steam service or services between Canada and Newfoundland, $18,000.

Mr. MACDONALD. Before Christmas I mentioned to the hon. minister a proposal which had been made for a daily service. I understand that the new boat for this line has come out, and that the trade between Canada and Newfoundland is rapidly increasing. I hope the minister has given favourable consideration to the proposition to assist in extending this service so as to secure a daily service between North Sydney and Port aux Basques.

Mr. EDWARDS. How frequent is it now?

Mr. MACDONALD. Three times a week. A short time ago I was informed that the freight at North Sydney accumulates to such an extent that the Intercolonial Railway has been compelled to refuse freight for shipment at certain seasons of the year because of the impossibility of moving it fast enough by the present tri-weekly service.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). There is a continual growth in the trade. Last year there were carried 6,765 first-class passengers, 11,178 second-class passengers, 15,538 tons of freight, and 1,635 head of stock, with a very large quantity of mail, and if you take that trade in conjunction with the previous three years there is a gratifying increase. The company had the misfortune to lose their vessel. They have their new boat out now, I think, but I am not sure if she is on the service. However, the supplementary estimates are yet to come down, and before that takes place the matter will be considered. I may say that so far as I am concerned, I am very sympathetic with that trade and that route, and I think we ought not to be over parsimonious in forwarding the interests of that line of communication all that we possibly can.

Mr. MACDONALD. Hear, hear.

Mr. McKENZIE. I am very glad indeed that the hon. member for Pictou has directed the attention of the minister to this service. I am particularly concerned in the matter because this service has its terminus on the Canadian side in my own town. I am pleased to be able to tell the minister that the 'New Bruce,' as she is called, left the other side a few weeks ago and has made her trip direct into the port of North Sydney. There are several pleasing features about this service. We are glad to get a very excellent boat on this route. It is now making regular trips backward and forward between Port aux Basques and North Sydney. Another thing that has been proven is, that this boat has been able at the hardest period of the winter, about the last of February, to make her way through the ice from Newfoundland to North Sydney. Thus we have the certainty of another outlet from Canada to Newfoundland, and from Newfoundland across to this side. In this connection I would like to ask the minister how much was paid for this service last year.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Last year about $9,000.

Mr. McKENZIE. I notice that the minister has $18,000 in the estimates this year. Is it the intention to give that amount to the company provided they put on another boat ?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The $18,000 is available for a daily service. The present tri-weekly service, if I am not mistaken, is to be made a daily service. In Newfoundland there is to be a daily service by train, so that a very great improvement is looked for both by Newfoundland and by ourselves in the communications this year.

Steam service between Canada and South Africa, $146,000.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I may say with reference to this item, that the development of trade between Canada and South Africa has been very satisfactory. For a long service it probably has been the most satisfactory we have had, and the trade shows signs of constant improvement.

Mr. MACDONALD. Where do the vessels sail from ?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The contract requires sailings from Montreal, calling at Quebec and at any other Canadian ports during the summer, and from St. John and Halifax in the winter. Last year there were twelve voyages. The number of passengers carried is not many by that route. There were carried 26 passengers, 31,385 tons of freight and 37,800 tons in measurement. There were carried besides, a considerable quantity of live stock, and I will say for the Elder-Dempster people that they show a very commendable activity in canvassing freight throughout Canada for that service. They issue a weekly letter, and send their men out, and they are actively at work getting freight.

Mr. SINCLAIR. What is the character of the goods carried?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). That I cannot tell exactly, except from having simply seen some of the invoices. However, the character of the goods is very varied. Quite a large quantity of flour is taken, also implements and largely general manufactures. In another year I hope to have a thorough tabulation of these goods.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Have you only one commercial agent in South Africa?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). We have only one agent there.

Mr. LEMIEUX. At Durban?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Yes, he is at Durban. It appears from the statistics that Durban is by far the largest port.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The finest too.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). It is by far the largest port, and it strikes more at the centre of the country as well.

Steam service between Halifax and Newfoundland via Cape Breton ports, $4,000.

Mr. McKENZIE. At what ports in Cape Breton did this boat call last year?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). A lot of ports. The vessel starts from Halifax and goes to the west coast of Newfoundland. It calls at St. Peters, Grand Narrows, Baddeck, North Sydney, South Sydney, Ingonish, Neil's Harbour, and Aspey bay in Cape Breton; and also St. Paul's Island, Bay St. George, Codroy, Bay of Islands and Bonne bay.

Mr. McKENZIE. The vessel makes a round trip calling at the same ports each way?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The same ports each way.

Mr. McKENZIE. How frequent is the service?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto.) The vessel made fifteen round trips last year, and carried 180 passengers, 8,558 tons of freight, and some mail.

Mr. McKENZIE. The passenger list may not be very large, but I may say in support of the service that it is a very useful one in the interests of the fishermen at these different ports of call.

Mr. EDWARDS. I understood the member for Pictou to say that the only service between Cape Breton and Newfoundland was a tri-weekly one. It seems to me that there are other services which would appear to be independent of the one to which he refers.

Mr. MACDONALD. The service from Canada to Newfoundland runs between the Dominion and the colony from the nearest possible points. It is a passenger line of communication. The service between Halifax and Newfoundland, via Cape Breton ports, starts from Halifax and runs through, I think, the Bras d'Or lakes and round the coast of Cape Breton.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Through the Bras d'Or lakes.

Mr. MACDONALD. The service goes to some of the outports of Newfoundland.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). On the west coast.

Mr. MACDONALD. The service covering Halifax, St. John's, Newfoundland and Liverpool, I think, is a service run in conjunction with the Newfoundland government, and affords communication between the other side and Newfoundland.

Steam service between Halifax, St. John's, Newfoundland, and Liverpool, $20,000.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I am informed that that is simply a freight service, carrying no passengers, but chiefly deals, competing in this trade with the tramp ships. I never could understand why a line should be subsidized to carry deals to the west coast of England, for that is a commodity that is in the market all the time and should be left to open competition. That subsidy has been on the list for many years, and I have never been able to get a satisfactory explanation of it.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I do not know that I can give my hon. friend much more information than he has. The contract is with the Furness-Withy Company. The subsidy is an old stager—I remember it away back. I see one good thing about it—they have to carry trade commissioners over and back free. Last year they made twenty-five round trips; not many passengers—16 in, 48 out, total 64; freight 114,357 tons weight.

Mr. HAZEN. Is it shown how much of that is deals?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). No; I was explaining before my hon. friend (Mr. Hazen) came in that we will have a tabulation of the different kinds of freight so that we may know what business is doing.

Mr. MACDONALD. They made a lot of money carrying apples.

Mr. SINCLAIR. They have been charging very high rates, I understand. I think the minister should look into that and see if he could not reduce the rates on apples from Nova Scotia to England. I am told that the rates ruling last autumn were something like 90 cents from the Annapolis valley to Liverpool or London. That is a very lucrative business for a ship. I know very many ship owners who would like to have the carrying of these apples at 50 cents a barrel. A small part of the rate charged, I understand, goes to the railway. There may have been changes in that rate on account of the Canadian Pacific railway coming in. If we are going to subsidize a vessel to carry apples, I think we should have some control over the rates.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I suppose the apple growers would like to have the rates as low as possible, but what they are more troubled about is that the apples do not get there in a sufficiently short space of time—the rate of going is not quick enough to take the apples to market in the best condition. A delegation of the apple growers came to see me, and we had a talk over the matter. I am going to try, if possible, to get a little quicker transit.

Mr. MACDONALD. How long do they take to go across?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). They run at 11 knots—perhaps not quite that. I think the growers want to get the apples there in about six days.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Do not these contracts provide that the government shall have control over the rates?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Yes, most of these large contracts. But there are difficulties in that which have always been faced, but never met. It is a pretty difficult thing for the minister sitting in his office to say what the freight rates should be. The freight rates go up and they go down. I think it would be an advantage to have some board or authority on freight rates to assist the minister to come to a conclusion as to what are really equitable rates. In some of the contracts it is provided that they shall not charge more than is charged by vessels from New York to the ports to which they trade. That forms a basis of comparison that is apparent. But when a complaint comes to the minister that they are charging too much on apples or on cheese, the knowledge or the arts of the steamship company generally get away with the minister, and he feels that he is not quite big enough to pass judgment on the point. There has been a large increase in freight rates recently. Charters have gone up and vessels are in great demand. All freight carrying steamers have increased their rates.

We have had protests against that from shippers. But when you go to the steamship companies showing an increase in rates all over, it makes it difficult to say that there shall not be an increase in rates even by a subsidized steamer. The argument on the other side is that a subsidy is given for the purpose of making the rates a little lower than would be the case by an unsubsidized vessel and there is a good deal in that argument. But in order to find a solution of the difficulty I hope to get some authoritative adviser who will make it his business to look after these things, and who will be able to advise the department as to what is right, and I hope to have that in the course of the next year.

Mr. McKENZIE. The minister has stated that this is a very old service and I am sure it would be the desire of the minister to make this service as useful as possible. Conditions in eastern Nova Scotia have changed a good deal since the commencement of this service. The minister knows that now, in eastern Nova Scotia, we have a large population who have come over from the other side of the water within the last nine or ten years. There is a large passenger traffic now to and from the old country and eastern Nova Scotia which was entirely unknown fifteen or twenty years ago. There would also be some freight traffic such as the exportation of canned lobsters dried fish and that sort of thing, which would go direct to the old country if there was opportunity. I think the minister could easily make this boat call at the terminus of the Intercolonial at North Sydney, or some other point on Sydney harbour, and give the large number of people at that place who go across to the old country and return, and people who may wish to come directly to the steel and coal works at North Sydney, an opportunity of reaching that point directly by this service. At present these people have to come up via Montreal, and sometimes from New York, at a much larger expense and more inconvenience. I hope the minister will give this matter some consideration.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I will look into it.

Steam service from the opening to the closing of navigation in 1912 between the mainland and the Magdalen Islands, $15,000.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The contract ends in 1913. The service starts from the town of Pictou.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I received a letter from the Halifax Board of Trade which unfortunately I have not before me. I have no doubt that the minister has seen a copy of the letter. It urges that this service should start from the port of Halifax. It seems to me that Halifax would be the proper port from which to make this service start. A great deal of the business done with the Magdalen Islands originates at the port of Halifax, and it merely means starting from Halifax and calling at Pictou.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The matter has already been taken into consideration so far as the contract having been awarded is now running and I do not propose to break the contract. If my hon. friend will take the map and will look at the Magdalen Islands, he will conclude that there is no better point than Pictou from which to start this communication. It is on the line of the Intercolonial railway, and it is the nearest possible point to the Magdalen Islands from anything like a large port.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). If the frequency of the service demands a shorter distance between the point of departure and the Magdalen Islands, there would be some force in the statement of the minister. But what is the service?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). It does not run in the winter time. But in the summer season it made 61 trips, carrying 1,416 passengers, 6,173 tons of freight and 1,269 head of live stock, hops, sheep, cattle, etc., and mail bags galore. So far as I know, it is a well conducted service.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I have no doubt about that. But I say that inasmuch as the service is but twice a week, there seems to be no reason why the steamer should not start from the port of Halifax, because that is the port that does the business with the Magdalen Islands. I do not understand the Halifax Board of Trade to urge that the steamer should not call at Pictou; I can quite understand that that would create some prejudice in that old historic port. But I say that this service might well start from Halifax and serve the Magdalen Islands two trips per week. It would not hurt, in the slightest degree, the port of Pictou or any other port. Of course, it might be that the steamer would require some additional subsidy.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I was wondering while my hon. friend was speaking, what would have happened to-night in the last five minutes if the fortunes of war had kept my hon. friend at Lunenburg instead of sending him to Halifax.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I am looking after the interests of my constituents.

Mr. HUGHES (Kings, P. E. I.) It would be simply impossible for this boat to make two trips a week between Halifax and the Magdalen Islands. The whole six days of the week are taken up now in making the two trips from Pictou. The steamer has to call at several places on the way to the Magdalen Islands, and I think it takes her five days and a half to make the two trips. The suggestion of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) is simply impossible.

Mr. MACDONALD. I am afraid my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Maclean) has not been properly briefed. His information on the subject is very scanty and entirely inaccurate.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). He is new to his constituency as yet.

Mr. MACDONALD. My hon. friend from Kings, Prince Edward Island (Mr. Hughes) has very effectually disposed of the suggestion he has made. I could summon as a witness my hon. friend the ex-Postmaster General, who represented the Magdalen Islands for a number of years, and who can testify as to the excellent service and the splendid character of the boat, and the fact that under the existing contract a better service is being rendered than has been rendered for the last 40 years. There has never been any suggestion from the Magdalen Islands that this service should start from Halifax. Whether it is that because the constituency is represented by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Borden) and by my very able friend here (Mr. Maclean), Halifax has got so ambitious that it wants to get all the steamship subsidies, I do not know, but there does not appear to be any other possible reason why they should have asked for this.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The desire of the inhabitants of the islands is that the service should be between Pictou, Prince Edward Island and the Magdalen Islands twice a week, but probably the islanders would like to have the service with Halifax because there are several months in the year when the service is closed. The service between Pictou and the Magdalen Islands is in operation only during the summer months, the fall and the spring. But, it is quite possible, during the winter, to send one or two government steamers or ice-breakers, from Halifax.

Mr. MACDONALD. Or Sydney.

Mr. LEMIEUX. From Halifax or Sydney to the Magdalen Islands.

Mr. HAZEN. We did that this year.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes. I congratulate my hon. friend upon having done that.

Mr. HAZEN. A most successful voyage.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I congratulate my hon. friend upon that. I tried during several years to have that done, but we were always told by the captains that they could not reach the islands in the winter time.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). There is a different government in power.

Mr. LEMIEUX. By what steamer was the service performed?

Mr. HAZEN. My recollection is that the 'Stanley' made one trip and that it was a most successful trip. We are going to have another voyage before the season closes.

Mr. LEMIEUX. In that case I would ask the hon. gentleman to suppress that political marconigram which is sent every week now that, through the good offices of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, communication has been established.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Now that you have the marconigram you might take away the other service.

Mr. LEMIEUX. No, I prefer the service.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I would like to give the minister notice that before the next estimates are prepared I shall be better informed as to the claims of the port of Halifax and if provision is not asked for in connection with this service I shall ask for a new one altogether.

Steam service between Mahone bay and Tancook island, $1,000.

Mr. KYTE. I would like to call the attention of the minister to a petition that I forwarded to him a few days ago asking for a small subsidy for a steamship service between the ports of Arichat and Canso. These ports were served some years ago by one steamship company. The service was from Canso to Arichat and Port Mulgrave. But a few years ago the service was separated and one boat was put on between Canso and Mulgrave and another between Arichat and Mulgrave. In that way the service between these two important ports became disconnected. I would be very glad if the minister would give his attention to this matter before preparing the supplementary estimates and I would hope that he would see his way clear to putting $1,000 in the estimates this year for this service. Another request has been forwarded to the department in connection with the steamship service between Halifax, Petit de Grat, d'Escouse and River Bourgeois, all ports on the island of Cape Breton. These are important places, they have no communication by railway, they have no means of shipping the products of their industry to Halifax or elsewhere. I would urge that the minister would be good enough to also give attention to that request and endeavour, if possible, to provide a small subsidy of $2,000 for this service during the coming year.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I will be very glad to give these matters attention.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I have been asked by the people of Canso to press that matter upon the minister's attention and I would like him to give his best consideration to this proposed service between Arichat and Canso.

Steamship service from the opening to the closing of navigation in 1912, between Port Mulgrave, St. Peter's, Irish Cove and Marble Mountain and other ports on the Bras d'Or lakes, $6,000.

Mr. McKENZIE. The steamship performing this service is giving a good service to that part of the country. I think this service should be confined entirely to ports in the Bras d'Or lakes. It is a sea run of about seventy miles from the canal to the head of navigation in East bay, and the boat will have all she can do without going to Mulgrave at all. I submit to the minister that it is not desirable to be giving subsidies to steamships where they are in competition with railways. There is a railway from the canal at St. Peter's connecting with the Intercolonial railway at Point Tupper and any passengers or freight or anything else that the steamer 'Richmond' would bring to St. Peter's could be put on the railway there and carried to their destination. This boat is running from the canal to Mulgrave in competition with the Intercolonial railway and Cape Breton railway from Point Tupper to St. Peter's and in that way giving a service to a section of country which, I am sure, does not really require it, whereas such ports as Big Pond, the head of East bay and several other places in the Bras d'Or lakes, are in need of this service. Passengers and goods could be carried from these ports to meet the railway at the Grand Narrows. The boat should be kept here altogether without going up to Mulgrave, where there is no real necessity for it. I wish to direct the attention of the minister to this matter because I want him to apply the subsidy where he will get the best work done and where he will not be in competition with railways.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto.) There is a large family of children here that I find under my care. Some of them cropped up a good while ago and I know their faces, while there are others that are entirely new to me. This one deserves some consideration. This boat made 204 round trips and she carried on an average nine passengers per trip and two and a quarter tons of freight. The $6,000 subsidy, if we calculated it on the basis of the freight that was carried, would put us in the position of paying $12 for every ton of freight that was moved. She has either to go somewhere else and get some more freight or else we are paying, seemingly, a very large amount for a service that does not appear to have very much in it. If it were growing it would not be so bad, but it does not seem to be growing. I think there is something in what my hon. friend says that we are trying to run against a couple of railways and we are getting the bad end of it.

Mr. KYTE. The service of the steamer 'Richmond' outside of the Bras d'Or lake is for the accommodation largely of the important communities of Marble mountain and West bay in the Bras d'Or lake, and d'Escouse, Poulamond and Lennox in the Lennox passage.

At Marble Mountain the Dominion Coal Company have extensive works, and from that point they ship dolamite which is used in the manufacture of iron and steel. The railway between Point Tupper and St. Peter's is unfortunately owned by a private corporation. Now, a car of flour, ordered by a merchant at Marble Mountain, passes over the Intercolonial to Mulgrave, is shipped on the Cape Breton railway to St. Peter's and from St. Peter's it has to be transported by steamer to Marble Mountain. That would mean that three rates would have to be paid by the merchant at Marble Mountain on a carload of flour from Ontario. The service has been maintained two days a week from Bras D'Or lake to Port Mulgrave for the purpose of taking passengers from these points not touched by a railway and also for carrying freight which is shipped by the Intercolonial railway to Mulgrave. This service enables the people there to get a very much cheaper rate than if they were obliged to pay the Intercolonial railway, the Cape Breton railway, and then the freight rate on the boat.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Inverness). I corroborate what has been said by my hon. friend (Mr. Kyte) with regard to this service. Marble Mountain is sixteen miles from the railway, and this is actually the only service the people there have. If this boat does not connect with Port Mulgrave, the people of Marble Mountain will not be able to get to the railway unless they drive fifteen or sixteen miles over a mountain. West Bay is in the same position except that it is closer to the Intercolonial railway than Marble Mountain. I would be very sorry, indeed, if the service were changed because these people living there would be set back to the condition they were in fifty years ago.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I did not say I was going to change the service this year, but I said it would bear looking into. I think that in some of these services there is a duplication and in some cases a triplication, and while I do not propose to disturb them very much this year, it is worth keeping tab on them to see whether a redisposition could not be made which would give a better service and perhaps not cost us as much.

Mr. McKENZIE. If the Cape Breton Railway Company which runs thirty miles of a road from Point Tupper to St. Peter were worth its salt, it would run its line down to the waters of the Bras D'Or lake on the canal, which is only about a quarter of a mile from the end of its line now. Then the traffic from North Mountain and all these points would simply be run down to the end of the line, and thus all this duplication would be done away with. As the railway is located now it is a little piece from the water, and the freight has to be carried from the head of the canal to the terminus of this railway. It shows a tremendous lack of enterprise on the part of that company that they do not connect with the Bras D'Or lakes, and put themselves into a condition to receive the freight. Then an arrangement could be made with the Intercolonial railway and the freight would run right into the ports on the Bras D'Or lakes, and thus avoid the difficulty we now have to contend with.

Mr. KYTE. I would remind the minister that the difficulty which my hon. friend (Mr. McKenzie) seems to have with respect to the connection there, will be altogether avoided the moment the present government carries out the policy of acquiring the branch line railways. Then, I will be willing that the service outside the Bras D'Or lakes shall be discontinued.

Steam service from the opening to the closing of navigation in 1912, between Pictou and Cheticamp, $2,000.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). Could the minister give us some information with regard to this service?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). This steamship line carried 227 passengers, making twenty-six and a half round trips; 1,173 tons of freight by weight, and 310 tons by measurement.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). Is it the intention that this boat will call at the ports of Arisaig, Georgeville, Ballantyne's Cove and Morristown, during the coming season. These ports intervene between Pictou and Cheticamp, and I understand that the steamer 'Electra' which gave the service, only called occasionally at those ports, or whenever it suited the captain. The people along that shore had a grievance inasmuch as the service was very irregular and when they remonstrated they were told that the boat was receiving no subsidy for calling at points in Antigonish county and therefore they could not expect any improvement in that respect. Last year, an arrangement was made that the boat should call at these points and be paid an extra subsidy. In some way or other which is not necessary to explain just now the amount was not provided for in the estimates, and the arrangement was made with the captain that if he undertook to perform the service, as soon as the money could be obtained he would be paid. A service was then given which was fairly satisfactory. I had communication with the minister on the matter last year. I wish to ask the present Minister of Trade and Commerce if it is the intention to carry on that service next year. The points on the route that I have mentioned are distant from the railway on an average of twenty miles. Arisaig is about eighteen miles from the Intercolonial railway, Ballantyne's Cove twenty-five miles, and Morristown seventeen miles from the Intercolonial railway. In the spring and fall, when the roads are in bad condition, the people get their supplies in from Pictou by this steamer, and the service is the only convenience they have in that respect. I hope the minister will look into that matter.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The service will be continued between the two terminal points, and all the accommodation that can be given will be given. I have not been able to go into the matter thoroughly yet.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). I wish to know whether the extra subsidy was paid last year.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). It was not paid; there was no contract.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish). Was there not an offer on the part of the department that if the service were performed it would be paid for?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). If the department although I was not the minister, made a bona fide offer that they would be paid in so far as they carried out the service, they will be paid. I do not intend to go back on the arrangement if I find that it was bona fide made by the minister.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Inverness). Is it the intention of the department to continue the service this year as usual between Mulgrave and Cheticamp ?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I am not prepared to say that it will be continued just as usual. The service will be continued, but this is one of the cases in which I am looking to see whether it is not possible to avoid a triplication of services, and get just as good or perhaps a better service. Anyway, it will not be any worse.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Inverness). This is a very important item to my constituency, particularly to the north end of the county, where we have not any railways as yet, though we hope to have one in a short time. If a change is going to be made in the line, as I am told is the intention, I am afraid the service will not be improved. I think it is the intention to have one boat do the service from Pictou to Mulgrave and from Mulgrave to Cheticamp, calling at certain ports on the way, and going back to Mulgrave, making the trip twice a week. This to my mind is impossible, if we are to have a satisfactory service. I hope the minister will look into this matter carefully. If he makes a contract with some company that pretends to be able to do this, and is not able, it will be a serious thing for our people, who depend on this service as their only means of communication. I admit that there has been some duplication of the service, but I confess that I do not know of any other solution than the continuation of the service as it is. If a better or even as good a service can be had, I shall be satisfied, but I would be sorry if our people suffered from not having as good a service.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). We will try to avoid that.

Steam service between Prince Edward Island and Cape Breton and Newfoundland, $12,000.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Inverness). Last summer or the summer before last, an application was made by the people of North Inverness to have this boat call at Cheticamp in order to help along the cattle trade. The government or the company sent down an officer to determine whether there was water enough in the eastern harbour to permit the boat to call, and I think the report was that there was a scarcity of water. I understand that some dredging is to be done there quite early in the coming summer, so that it will then be possible for this boat to call. I think the company were willing that the boat should call if there was enough water.

Steam service between Quebec and Gaspé Basin, touching at intermediate ports, $8,500.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I would like to relieve the anxiety of the contractors for this service, who are Quebec gentlemen, Bouchard brothers. They have spent a considerable amount in getting the proper vessel to ply between these various ports, and they have been very good to the public. When I was the member for the county, they used to send me 25 or 30 passes for poor people.

Therefore I want to retaliate in their favour and ask the hon. gentleman to renew the contract with them. They are a little afraid that the new member for Gaspé might influence the hon. gentleman against them; but I hope he is too good-hearted to listen to such advice.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). My hon. friend took good care to tie the matter up before he went out, because the contract runs to 1913.

Steam service between St. John and Halifax, $10,000.

Mr. JAMESON. I would like to direct the attention of the minister to the fact, that it is very desirable to have the steamship operated in connection with this service, call at Westport and Freeport, en route for St. John. This will not take the vessel out of her way, and as the subsidy paid, is a very substantial one, it seems to me, there should be a call made at these ports. There is now a service between Westport and St. John, but it is maintained by a comparatively small boat. The trade of the communities at which this boat calls, has increased of late years, and the service now is not sufficient to meet their demands. I was approached, when in Halifax, recently, by some gentlemen who were interested in the operation of this service, and told that they could call at these ports, if they received an increase of $1,000 in the subsidy. I am not prepared to say that any such increase would be warranted, but I do not think it would take the vessel out of its way to call there. I trust that the minister in making any contract with these gentlemen will see his way clear to provide that such a call be made. The business of Westport and Freeport is suffering somewhat for lack of sufficient service. They are altogether out of touch with railways, and the only means of communication is by steamship. I had a letter the other day from a gentleman who is carrying on a very extensive fishing business, and he told me that because of the insufficient steamship service, the business of his firm had been prejudiced. The people of Westport and Freeport are very anxious indeed that this boat should call, and I cannot urge this matter too strongly upon the minister.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I doubt very much whether it would be fair to ask the persons who now have the contract, to extend the service without some compensation being granted. I doubt, in fact, if they would be allowed, even with extra payment, to call at Freeport and Westport, because I do not think they could properly perform the service they are now under contract for, namely a weekly service between St. John and Halifax, and call at so many intermediate points.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). As a matter of fact, the contractors are not performing a weekly service. The contract was for 52 trips, but I found that the contract was given them for 40 trips. I do not quite know why that was done. It may have been done from the representation that they found it impossible, from their point of view, to make 52 trips for the subsidy that was offered, and that a compromise was effected, by giving them the contract for 40 trips by the same route. I have not sufficient information on the point, and I do not know quite whether I ought to fix this contract on the same basis as last year or not. I have not looked into the matter sufficiently to tell. However, we can come back to this vote, as we are allowing one item to stand, and I would look into the subject a little more. With reference to the call at Freeport, looking at the map, one would think it was on a direct course, but you cannot always tell that by a mere reference to the map. If it were not to take the vessel off its course —that is, make her voyage longer—it would seem to me, that the contractors might take up the idea of calling at that port, as I am informed, there is good water and good landing. I will say to my hon. friend (Mr. Jameson) that I will take the matter up with the contractors and see whether or not this can be done.

Steamship service between St. John and Halifax or either, and the West Indies and South America, $79,500.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Is there anything new in regard to the West Indies?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). No, there is nothing new. To be frank with the committee, the position of matters is just about this——

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). I suppose you will discuss the matter with the delegates from the West Indies?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Yes. They will be here about the last of the month, and we will take up with them the steamship service, as well as other matters. At present I would not like to make any change either by dropping the vote or otherwise.

Steam service between Sydney and Wycocomagh, $3,000.

Mr. McKENZIE. The minister will find from various petitions and other communications on file in his department, that for many years I have been struggling to have this subsidy increased. The stretch of water from Sydney to Wycocomagh, with which, perhaps, the minister is acquainted, is served entirely by this boat, the steamer 'Marion.' There is no railroad touching places at all on either side of the lake, and this boat moves on a very zig-zag route, crossing from side to side, and serving the people highly satisfactory in so far as any one boat can do it. The subsidy she receives, I think the minister will find, is small in proportion to the service she renders that very large tract of country which contains a very large population. I was trying before the present minister assumed charge of the department, to obtain a subsidy of $4,000 a year for this service. Petitions and communications on file would show that, and I really hope that upon ascertaining the service which this vessel has been rendering, the minister will see his way clear to give that necessary and desirable increase.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). When did my hon. friend enter the House?

Mr. McKENZIE. My first coming here was in 1904.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). My hon. friend says he has been struggling and has not accomplished anything.

Mr. McKENZIE. Not very much.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I see that in 1907, eighty round trips were made and a subsidy of $1,000 was paid. In 1909, 85 trips were made, and the subsidy paid was $2,000. That is 100 per cent increase in the subsidy. In 1911, 78 trips were made and $3,000 was paid in subsidy. Now my hon. friend has been exerting himself and yet did not know that he had accomplished so much in raising the subsidy.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The minister ought to go one better.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I think there is this to be taken into account—that a steamship company ought to consider it a privilege to carry on operations in such a beautiful part of the country. This vessel has had a substantial business in freight and passengers, and I find that business has been all the time increasing in both respects, which is very satisfactory. Last year the vessel carried 6,051 passengers, 1,690 tons of freight, and 4,738 head of live stock, which was a very good increase over preceding years. I am tender-hearted in a way and I will look into the matter and see what can be done.

Mr. McKENZIE. A subsidy of $1,000 was hardly worth mentioning in connection with such a service, and the goal of our ambition was that we should get the subsidy for that very excellent service increased to $4,000, when we intended to stop worrying the department any further. I hope that $4,000 will be given.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). If my hon. friend makes a threat of worrying too much he may get the $4,000.

Mr. SINCLAIR. If the minister will permit me I would like to return to the item for the service between Guysborough and Mulgrave. This is a daily service starting from the town of Guysborough every morning and connecting with the train at Mulgrave. In the summer time this vessel carries the mails.

In the winter the mails are carried by coach. This boat calls at Queensport on the way to Mulgrave every morning. But on the return trip, it takes her out of her course a few miles to call at Queensport, and she has been accustomed to make the trip direct. Queensport is the centre for a number of small places. Passengers for Queensport or any of these places are now taken to Guysborough, and remain there all night, going back to Queensport the following morning. Objection is taken by the town of Guysborough, because they want a direct trip from Mulgrave to Guysborough. I took the view that where there were passengers from Mulgrave to Queensport or any place reached from Queensport, the steamer should go the few miles out of her way necessary to land these passengers. Last year instructions to that effect were given to the captain, I believe. It was represented there were not passengers every day, and the compromise I suggested was that when there were passengers, the ship should call at Queensport; if not she should make her direct course to Guysborough. I would like the minister to look into that matter, and see if this can be arranged.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I have some complaint from Guysborough.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I would like to give notice that when we go into Supply on some occasion when the minister can listen to me, I intend to discuss the question of the Canada-France steamship line, and our trade relations with France.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I hope my hon. friend keeps Easter in view. Condense it.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes. Always keeping Easter in view, may I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce to press some of his colleagues to lay on the table the returns that were asked for long ago. I refer especially to the Postmaster General.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Will that make Easter come quicker?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto), moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What business will be taken up on Monday?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The third reading of the Grain Bill, and other government Bills.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Which Bills?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). There are two third readings, the Grain Bill, and the Bill to amend the Civil Service Act. The Bill for the Aid and Encouragement of Agriculture stands for second reading, and also the Civil Service Bill relating to the post office. These two Bills will be taken up as well. After that probably estimates.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.22 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, March 11, 1912.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

COURTENAY BAY HARBOUR WORKS.

Mr. EMMERSON. Before the orders of the day are called, I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works if the contracts for the harbour works at Courtenay bay have been signed.

Mr. MONK. They have not been signed yet, but they are being prepared for signature.

ST. JOHN VALLEY RAILWAY.

Mr. EMMERSON. I would like to ask the Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister of Railways and Canals, whether the contract with regard to the St. John Valley railway has been signed ?

Right Hon. R. L. BORDEN (Prime Minister). The Minister of Railways and Canals was asked that question a few days ago. He said it had been signed by one of the parties, and not by the other, as far as I remember.

THE NORTHWEST MOUNTED POLICE.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether or not it has been decided by the government to increase the pay of the Northwest Mounted Police ?

Mr. BORDEN. Yes, the necessary order in council has been passed for that purpose.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That order will be brought down immediately, I suppose.

Mr. FOSTER (N. Toronto).

Mr. BORDEN. It will be brought down at once.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Kamouraska). I desire to ask the hon. Postmaster General when I may expect the various returns from his department which were ordered by the House at my request. One of these orders was made on the 22nd of January. As I intend to discuss the matter referred to in these papers before the session closes, I would be very glad if the minister would see that the papers are brought down.

Mr. PELLETIER. I will take a note of the question of my hon. friend. I may say that there are so many papers asked for that the department——

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. So many dismissals.

Mr. PELLETIER. No, there are not many papers asking for dismissals, but there are many on other matters.

THE GRAIN ACT.

Mr. KNOWLES. I wish to ask a question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and in order to do so I will read the following telegram from the secretary of the Grain Growers' Association of Saskatchewan.

Moosejaw, Sask., March 9, 1912.

W. E. Knowles, M.P., Ottawa.

Whilst fullest discussion was afforded before Senate committee last year, farmers are fearful that through the influence of elevator and transportation companies at Ottawa farmers' friends will be handicapped and their interests sacrificed. Our association is ready to send delegation if in your opinion their cause may be assisted.

FRED. W. GREEN,
Secretary, Saskatchewan G.G.A.,
Moosejaw.

I wish to ask the hon. minister whether he will give me an assurance or an intimation that the progress of the Grain Bill will be delayed for a sufficient length of time to give the Saskatchewan Grain Growers' Association an opportunity to send this delegation here. I should think it could be here by the end of this week. I understand that the Bill has now been waiting for a week, and I submit that the matter is of sufficient urgency that it might be further delayed till they arrive. I hope the hon. minister can give me that intimation so that I may answer this telegram.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I think my hon. friend may rest assured that the interest of the farmers is perfectly safe in the hands of the Minister of Trade and Commerce and of the government.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The farmers do not think so.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The farmers do not all think one way. There are a great many farmers in the Northwest, and I fear that comparatively few of them have been represented here. However, I think it is not necessary to delay the passage of the Grain Bill through this House. If these or any other gentlemen wish to come here, they will have an opportunity of conferring with me or with the leader of the Upper House or with their friends, and if anything is put before the department or the government which they consider to be vital in the matter, a change could be made in the Bill in the Senate just as well as in the House. I would not like at this stage of the session to delay the third reading of the Bill in this House.

PRIVATE BILLS.

QUEEN'S COLLEGE AT KINGSTON.

House in committee on Bill (No. 68) respecting the Queen's College at Kingston, and to change its name to Queen's University at Kingston.—Mr. Nickle.

Mr. NICKLE. The last time the Bill was before the Committee of the Whole the hon. member for the St. Lawrence Division, Montreal (Mr. Bickerdike), moved that the committee now rise, and said:

I do not wish to kill the Bill, but I have endeavoured on three occasions to get the opinion of the Justice Department on this question. My hon. friend from Kingston states that the Private Bills Committee has had that opinion. I am not a member of that committee, and I think we are entitled to have that opinion laid on the table of this House. There are some clauses in the Bill that we have pleaded with the promoters to leave out, because they are insulting to a large number of people. As long as clause 20 remains in the Bill, I will take every chance to defeat it. I stated to the promotor of the Bill that if that clause were struck out, I would not raise the question of jurisdiction.

From the utterances of the hon. gentleman, it is perfectly clear that he admits the general principle of the Bill, but finds fault with certain of its clauses. Under these circumstances, it seems radically unfair that he should place before the House a motion that the committee now rise, the effect of which would be that the Bill would be killed so far as this House is concerned. Perhaps it would be only fair, as the personnel of the committee to-day is not exactly the same as that of ten days' ago, that I should outline briefly the history of this legislation and the position of its promoters with regard to it. As I stated on a previous occasion, Queen's University was incorporated in 1841 by royal charter, and the preamble is as follows:

Whereas the establishment of a college within the province of Upper Canada, in North America, in connection with the Church of Scotland, for the education of youth in the principles of the Christian religion; and for their instruction in the various branches of science and literature, would greatly conduce to the welfare of our said province.

Provision is made in the charter that the university shall be managed by 27 trustees, 15 of whom shall be laymen in full connection with the church of Scotland, and 12 shall be ministers of the Presbyterian church, the Principal of the university to be a minister of the Presbyterian church. On the occasion of the union of the Free church with the old church of Scotland in Canada, legislation was sought in the Ontario legislature and also in this parliament, with the result that the control of the university was then vested in 27 trustees, who were given authority to elect their successors when a vacancy occurred on the board.

The whole spirit of Queen's from its inception has been against religious intolerance. It was founded as a protest against the restriction of King's College, Toronto, now Toronto university, where a student was bound to take a test oath before he could have the advantage of that institution. At no time has Queen's required a student to take a test oath. In 1902 the late Rev. G. M. Grant, then Principal of the university, had before the General Assembly of Canada, a measure for the cutting away from Queen's of her Presbyterian control, and in 1903 a Bill was introduced in parliament to that effect. Unfortunately the reverend gentleman died shortly after the Bill was introduced, and from 1903 until 1911 nothing was done in regard to the subject. However in 1911 the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church in Canada consented to the university becoming separated from the Presbyterian church, but laid down as a condition precedent to that separation, that the distinctively Christian character of the university should be maintained, and at that time appointed two committees, one of which was to co-operate with the trustees of the university in securing legislation, the other to watch the interests of the theological faculty. In the Bill of 1903, as presented by the late Principal Grant, clause No. 26 was identical with clause 20 as it appears in the present Bill, but in the Bill of 1910, as originally drafted by the trustees, the words:

—save the profession of Christianity.

as they now appear in clause 20 of the present Bill, were omitted. When the two committees of the Presbyterian church and the committee of the university came together to confer on the terms of this Bill, those who had the responsibility of protecting the rights of the Theological Faculty of the Presbyterian church objected to clause 20 standing as it was then drawn, and insisted that the words, 'save the profession of Christianity,' be introduced. The Presbyterian church, as I outlined a moment ago, gave consent to this separation on certain terms, and, bowing to the judgment of the Theological Committee of the Presbyterian church, the trustees and the co-operating committee of the church agreed to these words being reinstated, and it is in that way that the words now appear in the Bill. Perhaps it is only fair that I should place before the House my views on this question, because the Bill, as I have already pointed out, is private legislation. It is not a Bill for which I am primarily responsible. The Bill that I introduced in this House relates to an institution that is domiciled in Kingston. I might say that my personal views are that the incorporation of the words 'save the profession of Christianity,' is a mistake from the point of view of the university and from the point of view of the church. It is a mistake because, in my judgment, it will cut off the university from taking advantage of the intellect of certain of the Jewish people who display great aptitude in matters, legal, literary, and scientific. It will be a stumbling block in the way of the university when application is made to the government of Ontario for assistance, because the government may then feel justified in saying: 'You are not national in spirit because your restrictions exclude from your trustee board and professional chairs, certain representative Canadian citizens. I think also it is a retrograde movement, because is puts restrictions on Queen's that are not now there, and furthermore, I doubt if the movement is one in the right direction. But, Sir, there is another question that I have to consider, and it is one that has caused me great worry and anxiety. The question is this: How far am I justified in setting up my views as against the views contained in this Bill, which represent the wisdom of the Presbyterian church and the wisdom of the trustee board of Queen's university? The only ground on which I would be justified as a member of parliament, in voting against this Bill, is that within its four corners are inconsistencies and improprieties from a national point of view. I have listened to the arguments advanced by my hon. friend from St. Lawrence (Mr. Bickerdike), and of those whom he contends he primarily represents, and I have been struck with the fact that only on one ground can he hope to succeed in having either clause 3 or clause 20 amended or altered in any way. If I interpret correctly the argument of the member for St. Lawrence, it is that there is an inconsistency in having in the Bill clauses 3 and 20. If the members of the House will follow me they will see that clause 3 of Bill (No. 68) reads as follows:

> The management and discipline of the university shall be in every respect freed from all denominational restrictions, and it shall be national and non-denominational in its character and management;

Clause 20 is to the following effect:

> The university shall continue distinctively Christian, but no religious test or qualification save the profession of Christianity shall be required of or appointed for any officer, trustee, member of council, or official of the university. Laymen shall be eligible to any position therein.

The argument of the hon. member for St. Lawrence is that there is an inconsistency in the Bill in saying that a university shall be national, and at the same time saying that it shall be distinctly Christian. The promoters of this Bill answer those objections by referring to cases decided in the courts in England and in Ontario. In the case of the Crown versus Milburn, which is reported in the Law Reports, Exchequer Court Cases, 1867, volume 2, page 230 (234) Baron Kelly enunciated the doctrine that 'Christianity is part and parcel of the law of the land.'

They also draw my attention to a case that was decided in Ontario, in 1879, Pringle versus Napanee, in which the Divisional Court held that Christianity in general and not simply the tenets of a particular sect is part of the recognized law of the province.

In Shirley's Leading Cases, fifth edition, at page 155 to 158, the same principle is enunciated: that Christianity is part of the common law of England. The argument might be advanced that while Christianity was part of the law of England, yet parliament with plenary jurisdiction could vary in any way the desire to enact a law of this sort. But then the promoters of the Bill estop me still further by drawing my attention to 'Hansard' of 1896, page 5623, in which the late Minister of Justice spoke as follows when the Lord's Day Act was before this House for discussion:

> The general scope of this Bill is indicated by its title, an Act respecting the Lord's Day, an Act intended to secure the better observance of the Christian Sunday, throughout the whole of Canada. Christianity, I need scarcely say, is recognized as constituting part of the law of Canada, as it is of the law of the British Empire, and statutes declaring certain things to be offences because they profane the sanctity of the Chritian Sabbath have been frequent upon the statute books of the imperial parliament and of this parliament and of its predecessors.

As a member of parliament, in the face of such decisions and of the statements of the late Minister of Justice is it correct to say that Christianity is not a part of the law of this land, and that a Bill is inconsistent which states in one clause that a university shall be National and in another that it shall be distinctly Christian? After giving the matter the most careful consideration that I have been able, I have come to the conclusion that there is nothing necessarily inharmonious in this Bill. To say that a university is National and to say that a university is distinctly Christian, is practically saying legally one and the same thing, but in different terms. I might say for the enlightenment of my hon. friend (Mr. Bickerdike) that when this clause was drafted it was never thought for one moment that it would be offensive to the Hebrew citizens of this country.

Queen's is at all times willing to open her doors to men of other faiths, and I trust the time will never come when Queen's will feel that she need shut her doors in the face of any man who comes seeking for instruction. This university was founded by the Presbyterian Church and has been endowed with Presbyterian money; and it would seem that these people are within the sphere of their right when they ask this parliament to ratify legislation that widens the scope of her operations. Some people might object that a clear severance should be made between education and the state; and, I think, when they try to put on the term 'National' as used a narrow meaning, and say that because the university is declared to be a National university, therefore it becomes the ward, so to speak of the state, they do not give to the word its true and direct meaning. The idea that the trustees had in the use of that word was that 'National' meant that Queen's is a free institution to which every student could freely come, that it was geographically National; and, while certain restrictions were put on the staff, and on the trustee board, she was National in this, that she offered free opportunity to those who seek an education, who desire to take advantage of the opportunities she possesses. And I think that when my hon. friend from St. Lawrence, Montreal, (Mr. Bickerdike), considers the matter he will see the propriety of allowing the preamble of this Bill to pass, and that we should discuss in committee the modifications he desires, when it may be possible, that some solution of a very vexed question may be reached. It would be radically unfair that because certain terms are objectionable to him, and to those whom he purports to represent the whole Bill should be killed. The principle of the Bill was settled on its second reading, and it is not unfair to ask that the committee pass the preamble, and proceed to the consideration of the various clauses.

On section 3,

3. The management and discipline of the university shall be in every respect freed from all denominational restrictions, and it shall be national and undenominational in its character and management.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I have listened with a great deal of interest to the excuses given by my hon. friend (Mr. Nickle), for being the champion of the persecutors of the Jews to-day, and I am sorry he did not make a better hand at it. I am pleased to see the Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty), in his place, because I intend to raise again the question of jurisdiction. The Bill came before this House, and had its first and second reading with clause 2 in it stating 'the university is hereby declared to be a work for the general advantage of Canada.' But at the request of the promoters of the Bill, that clause was withdrawn so that the Bill no longer stands as declaring the university to be for the general advantage of Canada. Well, if it is not for the general advantage of Canada, this becomes merely an educational Bill; and I would ask on what ground this parliament of Canada is asked to deal with it. I submit respectfully that this Bill should be referred to the Department of Justice, as there is a question of doubt, and a very grave doubt, whether this House has jurisdiction to deal with it or not. The very fact that the Ontario authorities sent a representative to the committee to enter a protest against this House taking up this Bill, against our usurping their jurisdiction in educational matters, is surely a reason why we should pause before going on with this measure. Though the clause has been eliminated declaring it a work for the general advantage of Canada, yet we have section 3 declaring that the university shall be 'National and undenominational.'

If it is undenominational, then section 20 is a direct contradiction. As to the question of jurisdiction, a man does not need to be a lawyer to understand the British North America Act on this subject. That Act states distinctly and defines exactly what this parliament can do, and what the legislatures of the provinces can do. This House has no more constitutional right to deal with an educational matter than the legislatures of Ontario or Quebec would have to grant a bank charter. So, I move that we do not proceed further with the consideration of the Bill, but that the Bill be referred to the Department of Justice to get their opinion as to whether we have or have not jurisdiction.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The motion is not in order in that form. I think the hon. member (Mr. Bickerdike) had better move to report progress.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Yes, the suggestion is that progress should be reported for the purpose of referring the matter to the Department of Justice. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. DOHERTY. I think the hon. member for St. Lawrence (Mr. Bickerdike) labours, to some extent at all events, under a misapprehension, when he sets forth the view that the proper method of determining whether this Bill is constitutional or not, and whether this House should proceed to deal with it or not on the question of its constitutionality, is to refer the matter to the Department of Justice—as I understand him, for decision. I understand that the Minister of Justice and the Department of Justice are not the advisers of this House. As I understand it, the Minister of Justice is the adviser of the Crown and the different departments of government; but I do not understand that it is part of his functions to advise this House, still less do I understand that he has any privilege, or prerogative, or power, to decide for this House whether or no it shall proceed to pass certain legislation upon the consideration of its constitutionality. I think the question of constitutionality of a particular piece of legislation submitted to this House is to be determined by the House like any other question that arises in connection with the proposed measure. And yet, while all that is perfectly true in my judgment, I, of course, am quite willing to put myself at the service of any member of this House who thinks my opinion upon a question may be useful to him; but I wish to point out that any opinion I express would be only the opinion of a member of this House, and would be entitled to such weight only as might properly belong to my personal opinion.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. We will abide by it.

Mr. DOHERTY. It is true, the private Bills committee did send this Bill to the department, submitting to it this question of constitutionality, and one of the officers of the department did wait upon the committee and express to them, in the first place, the view I have just set forth, that it was not, perhaps, the proper function of the department to advise the committee, but, nevertheless the department, like its head, was at the service of this House or of any committee of this House that might consider that its opinion could be useful. Now, with regard to the question of the constitutionality of legislation concerning education, and more particularly concerning this particular educational corporation, I think it is well that we should bear in mind that we are not approaching a perfectly new question. We should have present to our minds the fact that this House has already three times assumed jurisdiction over this particular corporation, and acted on the assumption that it had jurisdiction to enact legislation with regard to this university. Now that creates a situation where, no doubt, things have been done in virtue of that legislation, very possibly, and very probably rights have been acquired under that legislation. I think that in that condition of affairs it behoves us to be very careful indeed before we undertake to pronounce, as we would impliedly pronounce by rejecting this legislation purely on the ground that we have no constitutional power to deal with the matter, that the previous legislation was unconstitutional. As I have said, that legislation has been enacted and rights have been created under it, and that being true, I think we must recognize that it is much more proper that the question of the constitutionality of that legislation should be left to be determined by the courts, than that we should take it upon ourselves, by saying now that on this new legislation we have no jurisdiction whatever, practically to declare that the previous legislation was unconstitutional.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. But I would call the attention of the minister to the fact that legislation similar to that of Bill (No. 68) has never been before this House; the three times that he refers to were on an entirely different Bill. Bill (No. 69) at present is the theological Bill. Bill (No. 68) is purely an educational Bill, a Bill the like of which has never been before this House.

Mr. DOHERTY. But the hon. gentleman does not deny that there has been before this House legislation with respect to Queen's College at Kingston.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. That was the theological college.

Mr. DOHERTY. Whether it was or was not, the purpose of this Bill is to modify that particular corporation, that is the corporation concerning which we are asked to legislate. I think the fact itself that parliament has already assumed jurisdiction with regard to this corporation to legislate on three different occasions, is sufficient reason why this House should deal with the Bill upon its merits, and determine whether or not, looking at it from the point of the merits or demerits of its provisions, they should pass it or not. After all, it is private legislation, and the parties promoting this Bill are those who will run the greatest and most serious risks if it should be passed and be subsequently determined to be unconstitutional. I think it is fair for us to assume that they have been advised upon that question. That being so, if it be my proper function to advise this House, as far as any member may be disposed to ask for my advice, I would suggest that the Bill be allowed to pass upon a consideration of its merits or demerits, without regard to the constitutional question. I may say that the same matter was brought up in connection with the legislation of 1889 and on that occasion Sir John Thompson, I think, expressed substantially the view that I have now submitted upon the question of the constitutionality of the legislation. I do not think it would be proper for this House to go back to the position as it stood before that legislation, and undertake now to treat the question of our jurisdiction over this situation just as if that legislation had never taken place. That being so, I think it would be unfair that we should put on record an opinion that might even throw doubt upon the validity of the legislation which has been enacted in the past. For my part, I would be disposed to think that the proper line of action for this House to take would be to deal with the Bill upon its merits, and I would not at all accept the position, if it were thrown upon me, of expressing an opinion which in any sense this House should accept as decisive in determining this question under the present circumstances.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Under the circumstances, I will withdraw my motion, I always take the advice of the Minister of Justice in this House, on whichever side of the House he may be sitting. I would like to draw the attention of the Minister of Justice to clause 3. I think he will agree with me this time that that clause is in contradiction with clause 20.

Mr. DOHERTY. I do not see that there is any question of law involved in section 3. I think it is a section that any layman is just as competent to deal with as a lawyer; therefore, I do not see that there is any reason why the Minister of Justice should be called upon to express an opinion. But if I were to express an opinion, I would say, speaking only for myself, I think that it is very undesirable that we should attach the name 'National' to any institution that is going to be governed, controlled and directed by any private individuals, or any corporation of the nature of this one. Without going into the consideration of the question whether there be or be not anything inconsistent in the terms of section 3 with those of section 20, I think the word 'National' as applied to an institution of this kind is very undesirable, because the word 'National' is susceptible of more than one meaning. The word 'National' may properly be attributed to an institution of any kind that was under the control and direction of the nation, or an institution which the nation chose to select and dignify, and set forth as its conception of what a national institution ought to be.

I do not want to say a word derogatory to this very great institution and to the great work it has done and is doing, and of course we must all join in approval of its aspirations to give to that work in the future a National character in the sense of making of it an institution open to the whole nation and conducted from the point of view of conducing most effectively to the spread of education throughout the whole nation. But while I feel that way about it, I do not think we should by an Act of parliament attach this designation of 'National' to the institution. I quite understand that the promoters of the Bill do not intend to have that designation attached to it as conveying any idea of connection between the institution and the nation, and I fully sympathize with their desire to affirm that their purpose is to carry on an institution which shall enure to the benefit of the whole nation, and to carry it on upon lines that will make it acceptable to the whole nation. But that is the sentiment that inspired those who control all of our great educational bodies; there are other great universities in this country whose motive and desire is to prove these institutions of National use and benefit, and I am sure the gentlemen of Queen's themselves would admit this desire to be quite as sincere as their own. That being so, if we enact in this parliament a declaration that this university shall be National in its character, then there is no reason why we should not enact the same thing for every one of these universities, and if this epithet or description is to be common to all universities it ceases to have any distinguishing meaning at all. Thus no matter how anxious we may be to recognize this desire of Queen's University to be so described at least from the point of view of being an institution desirous of doing good work for the nation, I sympathize with the suggestion of the hon. member for St. Lawrence (Mr. Bickerdike) that the word 'National' should not appear in this description of the university or of its proposed character and management as set forth in clause 3.

Mr. NICKLE. What would you use?

Mr. DOHERTY. I think we require nothing beyond what is in the clause:

The management and discipline of the university shall be in every respect freed from all denominational restrictions.

Mr. NICKLE. As I understand the difficulty lies here. Under the charter the university was particularly and peculiarly limited to the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, Upper and Lower Canada. The promoters wish to incorporate in the Bill some expression that will clearly convey to the people of Canada that that restriction has been deleted and that the university is now as wide as the bounds of Canada.

Mr. DOHERTY. Is it contemplated that the operations of the university should be carried on in more than one province?

Mr. NICKLE. At present it draws students from every province in Canada and in fact from all over the world. The idea they want to impress on the people is that the university has ceased to be provincial in respect to Upper and Lower Canada and has taken on itself a wider and more significant prospect.

Mr. EMMERSON. If I understood the Minister of Justice his idea is that all of this section after the word 'restrictions' should be omitted. That would appear to me to be more correct legislation. Admitted that this parliament has power to deal with this Bill in common with the rights of the local legislature, it would be wiser if such legislation were referred to the provincial legislatures. I do not quite understand the purport of this Bill. I have got an impression from some source that this legislation has in view a participation in a fund established by a philanthropist the restrictions of which are that no educational institution controlled by any denomination shall participate in the benefit of that fund. It may be that this particular Bill has no relation to that fund, but I know that some universities in Canada have sought to free themselves from denominational influences with a view to securing the monetary advantages which would accrue by reason of such freedom. It would be improper for us to continue in this Bill the words 'and it shall be National and undenominational in its character and management' if we intend at the same time to enact section 20, which clearly and unequivocally places a religious test upon all those who seek admittance.

Mr. NICKLE. The test is applied solely to the management and there is no test in regard to those who seek admittance as students and there never has been from 1841 down to to-day. The test is on the controlling body.

Mr. EMMERSON. Therefore, it is not undenominational. The moment you require such a test with respect to any officer, professor or president, it ceases to be undenominational.

Mr. NICKLE. Oh, no.

Mr. EMMERSON. I submit that would be the logical result.

Mr. NICKLE. I was very careful to look that up. The word 'denominational' refers to the divisions within the Christian church itself and Queen's is nondenominational in this, that it in no way prevents any person who professes Christianity taking advantage of it. But it is not non-racial; it would prevent a Buddhist or a Japanese. It certainly does place restriction on a number of people. The word 'denominational' refers only to divisions within the Christian Church.

Mr. EMMERSON. Section 20 clearly narrows and restricts the terms of section 3. Let us look at the Bill from a broad standpoint. This is a private corporation, religious in a sense, and it has control and management within itself, and they can make any one an officer or a professor. Why should the parliament of Canada be called upon to require that there shall be a religious test with respect to any such officer or professor. It seems to me to be an invidious declaration and one not in harmony with the declaration of the third section of the Bill, and certainly not in harmony with the National aspirations of the university. I am heartily in accord with the remarks of the Minister of Justice and of the hon. member for St. Lawrence Division, Montreal (Mr. Bickerdike). It seems to me the third section should be amended by striking out all the words after the word 'restriction,' and that subsequently when we deal, with section 20 we should eliminate all religious tests with respect to the officers or professors. If we give that power to the managing board we enable them to narrow the character of the faculty, and to make it entirely inconsistent with the aims and aspirations set out in the preceding sections of the Bill.

Sections 3 and 20 allowed to stand.

On section 22,

Mr. NICKLE. This Bill has been before the law clerk since it passed the Private Bills Committee and he suggested the following amendment as more clearly carrying out the intention of the Bill. I move that section 22 be amended by striking out the first two lines thereof and the following be substituted therefor:

In order to provide for the maintenance of Queen's Theological College, the university shall form an incorporation of said college, and upon its being declared to be a successor of the faculty of theology of Queen's College at Kingston, pay to the said college.

Mr. EMMERSON. That amendment brings up the question with respect to Bill (No. 69) on the order paper. Whatever reason may be advanced in support of Bill (No. 68) because of previous legislation, no such reason can be given with respect to Bill (No. 69). It seems to me that Bill (No. 69) is clearly within the jurisdiction of the provincial legislature and while, as a matter of expediency, this parliament may be willing to set aside its usual procedure, it should not, without very grave reasons, interfere with the jurisdiction of the provincial legislature in such a matter.

I have opposed the legislation on general principles, with a view to having correct legislation, and with a view to this parliament not interfering in any way with the jurisdiction of the provincial legislatures. I think you can range over the whole history of the legislation of this character, and you will not find any university or college established in any of the provinces except under the authority of a provincial Act. To seize upon this particular institution, and take it out from all the rest seems to me to be a strange procedure, and I think that as members of this committee we are entitled to have advanced very strong reasons for such a course.

Mr. BORDEN. It seems to me that whatever consideration applies to the present Bill would apply to the other. Parliament has already legislated twice with regard to this institution, and I suppose that those who are coming to us now for legislation might very well say that inasmuch as that legislation has not been questioned from the time it was enacted by this parliament up to the present, they are justified in coming to us for legislation which manifestly does alter the status of the university as established by two previous Acts of this parliament. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice has submitted considerations on account of which he considers that we are justified in proceeding with this legislation, and it seems to me we shall be equally entitled to deal with the other measure in the same way.

Section agreed to.

On section 3,

Mr. BICKERDIKE. With a view to meeting the views of my hon. friend the Minister of Justice and the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Nickle), I would suggest that sections 3 and 20 stand over in order that we may try to agree on something that will not be offensive or insulting to any of the minorities in this country and will at the same time carry out the wishes of the university.

Mr. NICKLE. Would my hon. friend be satisfied to strike out the following words:

And it shall be National and non-denominational in its character and management.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I would much prefer to have the word 'National' struck out and leave the word 'non-denominational' in.

Mr. NICKLE. The clause would then read as follows:

The management and discipline of the university shall be in every respect free from denominational restrictions.

Would that meet the hon. member's approval?

Mr. BICKERDIKE. It will satisfy me as far as section 3 is concerned.

Mr. NICKLE. Will it satisfy you in toto?

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I might say, Mr. Chairman, it does not satisfy the hon. member from Kingston.

Mr. NICKLE. I have tried to make myself perfectly clear to the House and to the hon. gentleman. I have told him that clause 20 did not meet with my approval—

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Then withdraw it.

Mr. NICKLE. The hon. gentleman terms me a persecutor of the Jews. I want to again make my position perfectly clear, I am not in favour of that test clause.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Strike it out then.

Mr. NICKLE. The hon. gentleman says strike it out. This is Private Bill legislation, which has the ratification of the Presbyterian church and Queen's university, Kingston, and I have no more right to strike that provision out, or to change even a comma, than I have to change the constitution of Canada.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I want to correct the hon. gentleman. When he states this legislation has the endorsation of the Presbyterian church, he is going a little too far. It has nothing of the kind.

Mr. NICKLE. This Bill has been endorsed by three committees. First, a committee of Queen's university; second a cooperating committee of the Presbyterian church, nominated by the Moderator at the general assembly held either at Halifax or Ottawa, I forget which; and third, a committee nominated by the Moderator, with the concurrence and sanction of the General Assembly of the church to look after the interests of the Theological Faculty. The Chairman of the first church committee is Dr. Ramsay, of Ottawa. The chairman of the university committee, is Mr. D. B. McLennan, of Cornwall, and the name of the chairman of the third committee, is Dr. Love, of Quebec. These committees were duly appointed, they have placed this Bill in my hands, and they tell me that as member for Kingston, I cannot vary it one jot or tittle. I have told this House, and I have told the member for St. Lawrence (Mr. Bickerdike) in private conversation, that I do not believe in test oaths. I believe the effect of this Bill will be that the scamp may have access to the professoriate of Queen's university, and the scholar may be excluded. I believe the man who has no principle may say he is a Christian, while the man of integrity, who may happen to be a Jew, will say, that even for the sake of the professorial chair, he will not abandon his religious convictions. When the men who have drafted this Bill tell me that I cannot change one jot or one tittle, I say it is unfair for the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bickerdike) to brand me as a persecutor of the Jews. The Jews of my own constituency know where I stand in this matter. It is not a question of politics, it is a big question which touches Canada from one end to the other, and which the Presbyterian church feels, touches her to the very foundation. The men who control the destinies of the Presbyterian church maintain that Christianity is the foundation of the common law of this country, and if the issue has been raised, they, as the representatives of that church, insist that that great principle be maintained, that Christianity is part of the common law of Canada, part of the common law of England, and they rely on the enunciation of that principle by the late Minister of Justice. What right have I as a commoner of this House, and as a young lawyer without power and without reputation, to set my judgment up as against the judgment of men who sit on the Bench in England and who occupy the Woolsack in Canada, and have represented this Canada of ours as Ministers of Justice in former parliaments? Why should I be branded as a persecutor of the Jews because I take this stand? It is not fair politics and I resent it. I do not want to read the member for St. Lawrence a lecture, but we have heard enough about the east as against the west, about Roman Catholic as against Protestant. Are we going to set Jew against Gentile in this country by striking at the very foundation of the Christianity we revere?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Shall clause 3 be adopted?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto.) I move that the section be amended by dropping all the words after the word 'restrictions.'

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think notice should be given of such an amendment.

Mr. SHARPE (North Ontario). When this Bill was being considered in the Private Bills Committee, as has been so very ably and lucidly pointed out by the member for Kingston, representatives of the different bodies composing the Presbyterian church, appeared before that committee and presented this measure as the basis of their agreement. In other words the present Bill represents the conclusions come to by the various bodies in the Presbyterian church, and one of the statements made by them was rather than have the measure changed they would prefer to have it withdrawn. Looking at it in that light to my mind it seems a small matter to not allow this institution to be called National and undenominational. Its operations will extend from the Atlantic to the Pacific by the way of extension lectures; it draws its students from the various provinces; and what harm is there in calling it a National institution, I think it would be in the nature of a breach of trust on the part of this parliament to change the provisions of the Bill in any vital way. I hope the Bill will pass in the way in which it has been presented by the representatives of the Presbyterian church. The Presbyterian church and its members are handing over this private property to the nation as a National asset. Why then should we do anything to diminish the rights and privileges which they possess? I do not think we have any right when they are giving that National asset to this country to vary the terms upon which these interests had agreed in the past. In other words it would be a breach of agreement as between these various parties if we vary or change in any way the restrictions and rights which the Bill provides for, and therefore I hope that the Bill will be passed in the condition in which it now is.

Mr. BORDEN. I move that we proceed to clause 20.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I cannot agree to clause 3 standing unless clause 20 stands also. Both clauses should stand together, seeing that one is a direct contradiction of the other. If these two clauses are allowed to stand we may get a section drafted that will be satisfactory both to the persecuted and to the persecutors. I throw out that suggestion to my good friend the Minister of Justice.

Mr. NICKLE. Where is the contradiction between clause 3, as amended, and clause 20?

Mr. BICKERDIKE. You say it is not amended, and that it stands.

Mr. BORDEN. It cannot be amended without notice.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Then assuming that clause 3 stands, clause 20 should stand as well. I still entertain the hope that the Minister of Justice will draft some clause that will satisfy the Jews as well as the university authorities.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Does not the hon. gentleman think that if clause 3 were amended by striking out everything after the word 'restrictions,' the ground of objection to clause 20 disappears?

Mr. BICKERDIKE. No, I think still that clause 20 should be amended.

I think that section 20 should be amended. The amending of section 3 does not have the same effect. Even with section 3 amended, there should be an amendment in section 20, unless you wish——

Mr. BORDEN. What amendment is suggested in section 20?

Mr. BICKERDIKE. To strike out the words 'save the profession of Christianity.' The section would then read:

The university shall continue distinctively Christian, but no religious test or qualification shall be required of or appointed for any officer, trustee, member of council, or official of the university. Laymen shall be eligible to any position therein.

I think that the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Nickle), would probably agree to that.

Mr. DOHERTY. I could quite understand the objection to these words in section 20, if we had left section 3 to stand as it was. But now that section 3 has been amended, it simply comes down to a question of whether parliament shall incorporate a Christian university.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. You are legalizing a test.

Mr. DOHERTY. Yes. But, if our Hebrew friends came to us and asked for the incorporation of a Hebrew university, desiring to keep the teaching in their own hands, surely we would not refuse so long as the corporation called itself what it distinctively was. I have had the pleasure of hearing the observations of many of our Hebrew friends upon this Bill, and, unless I entirely misapprehend them, they do not object to this institution making a profession of that kind, provided it is clearly and distinctly a Christian institution, and is not given the title 'National' or 'undenominational.' I am, perhaps, as anxious to meet the desires of these gentlemen as is the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bickerdike), and that is what I understand them to desire.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Perhaps I am taking up too much time, but I want to point out that you are making a law that will not allow this university to employ a Jew in any capacity, even as a janitor. Why pass a law declaring that the great Queen's University shall be debarred from employing a Hebrew in any capacity?

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). If the university wants it that way, what is the objection?

Mr. NICKLE. Let me tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bickerdike) this: You are a Presbyterian; so am I. The committee of your church say to the university: We have a string around your waist, and we will not cut the string and free you, unless you agree to certain conditions. The university must agree to the conditions. I have told the House frankly that the university as such did not want these words, but that the church, which is the master of the situation, says that unless these words go in you cannot be free. And the university wants freedom.

Mr. BICKERDIKE.—Then, I say, take out the words. I will not be dictated to even by the Presbyterian church.

Mr. STEELE. Not many minutes ago the hon. member for St. Lawrence (Mr. Bickerdike) stated that notwithstanding this Bill was arranged jointly by three committees one of which was selected by the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church, it did not represent the Presbyterian church. Yet we have the suggestion that he and two or three of this House should get together and amend this Bill and arrange it to suit their ideas, upon the basis, I assume, that they represent the Presbyterian church.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I would draw the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty) does not represent the Presbyterian church.

Mr. STEELE. I believe that the expressions of the Minister of Justice represent the opinion of the Presbyterian church much closer than do those of the hon. member for St. Lawrence. I think we should consider this Bill as a far more important matter than the promotion of the political interests of any hon. member of this House, and that this Bill, which is made not with a view to furthering a political purpose, should not be treated by any member in that way. This is a Bill brought in at the request of the Presbyterian church to deal with one of the great educational institutions of this country. And whether we leave in the word 'National' or not, every Canadian must admit that the great Queen's University is national in its scope, its efforts and the work it is doing. We may ask that the word 'National' be deleted, but we cannot delete the sentiment which prevails regarding this university. We cannot destroy the National influence which the university is having in Canada. We must not forget that this university, ever since its incorporation has been under the control of the Presbyterian church; and if the church is willing at this time to broaden it and to have its charter amended in such a way as to remove it from the direct influence of the Presbyterian church, I think we should readily assent, on the ground that the Presbyterian church has some right to say on what terms the university shall be handed over to an independent body.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. What does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Steele) mean by saying 'remove it from the direct influence of the Presbyterian Church'?

Mr. STEELE. It has been under the direct control of the Presbyterian Church; it has been a Presbyterian body——

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Where is it going now?

Mr. STEELE. It is now being put in the hands of a body that is undenominational.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. In which no church will have control?

Mr. STEELE. No one church. A vote was taken of the graduates of this university, and out of 1,562 voting on the question, 1,430 voted in favour of the change. And on the strength of that vote this broad Bill is brought in. I say we must not forget that, that church has had, in the past, full control of it. They are willing that it should be handed over to an undenominational body to be controlled in the future. But because they are willing to do that, I do not know that we should demand that the church should assent to all reference to Christianity being cut out of the Bill.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Will the hon. gentleman excuse me a moment? Is it not the intention to make this an entirely state institution?

Mr. STEELE. No. It is the intention of the church, I have no doubt, simply to carry out the practice in the past, that the intention is that the students attending the university shall be under Christian influences, that there shall be no professor of the university who is not a professed Christian. It is simply the desire of the church that the university shall uphold the great Christian religion, and that it shall not get into the hands of those who are opponents of the Christian religion. The university has been supported largely by the members of the Presbyterian church; they have endowed it in the past; and I think it is a very slight request that they make when they ask that the university shall continue distinctively Christian and that every teacher in it shall be a professor of Christianity.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I hope my suggestion will be adopted in the spirit in which it has been offered, otherwise I should strongly oppose the adoption of section 20. My hon. friend from Kingston (Mr. Nickle) the other day quoted largely from Sir John Thompson, a man whose memory we all respect. But the hon. gentleman forgot to say that Sir John Thompson was the man who declared that wherever minorities were found they should be treated not only justly but generously. Now, I ask him if it is just or generous to some half a million good, loyal inhabitants of this country, loyal to the Union Jack, to pass section 20 of this Bill, which is an insult to them, and specially to single them out as unworthy to enjoy equal rights with their fellow citizens in Canada. And here we are asked to legalize that insult. I hope this House will never agree to adopt section 20. We should be very careful in this country how we deal with minorities. Although these men are Jews, they have souls just as well as my hon. friend who has just taken his seat, and why should we single them out for unfair treatment? Why, even a negro, much to his credit, can be a professor in Queen's College, while a Jew cannot. A Jew cannot even be a janitor, cannot even be an employee in that institution; and here you are asking us to pass a law that for all time to come will exclude Jews from Queen's University. A Jew may be one of the best educated men in this country, he may have all the qualifications requisite to make an excellent professor, and yet you impose upon him here a test that he cannot take. England, at a former time, made just such unjust distinctions against Jews. My hon. friend has the evidence by him, and he knows that three universities combined to strike out those religious tests. I think that the secret of England's greatness is the fact that she has always dealt justly and generously by minorities. Is Canada going to do any less? Why should Canada pass a law shutting Jews out from any university in this country? Why should Canada pass a law that would prevent a Jew even from sweeping the streets in front of this university? I think it is an outrage, and on reflection I do not think this House will consent to it. I acquiesced in the opinion of the Minister of Justice on the constitutional question, because he was the Minister of Justice, and believed he was right, although I think he was wrong. I have always taken the ground that educational matters belong exclusively to provincial jurisdiction. Why should this Bill undertake to say that we have jurisdiction here under the British North America Act? I think I have heard my good friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster) argue several times that educational matters belong specially to the jurisdiction of provincial legislatures. For my part, I am strongly opposed to section 20, and I move in amendment to strike out these words 'save the profession of Christianity.' I want to strike out this religious test, and I appeal to hon. members of this House to assist me. The hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Nickle) suggested that a man who wants to become a professor could easily profess the doctrine of Christianity; he said that some men might do so, but he did not think the Jews would, I suppose he meant that they could not. What harm will it do to strike out these words, which are an insult to a large number of loyal Canadians? I see no necessity for them whatever. The hon. member for Kingston himself admits that it would be right to strike them out, but he does not wish to do so because the university authorities wish them to remain in. I think, however, that we should follow our own judgment and strike out these words.

Mr. LANCASTER. I do not, as a rule, agree with the hon. member for St. Lawrence Division, Montreal (Mr. Bickerdike), but on this occasion I am obliged to agree with him. It seems to me this amendment he has offered ought to be adopted by this committee. I cannot approach this matter without reminding myself that this House might properly be called Cæsar's court. We have no business, as I understand our constitution, to make any distinction between one man and another on the ground of his religion. We are called upon in parliament to legislate only for the welfare of loyal British subjects, and I cannot understand why we should indirectly insult a man who is a good, loyal British subject, as this Bill would do without this amendment. On the other hand, I cannot understand why we should put a premium upon any man joining the Christian religion. I do not think Christianity would be served by exercising any such compulsory powers. This is coercion, and this House ought not to exercise coercion on anybody, no matter to what church or sect he may belong, so long as he is a loyal subject to King George. We are here asked to give sanction to this legislation. We must do it either because the institution is denominational or because it is national. If this is a denominational institution, which has certain rights as such, that is one thing; but to say here that we are going to exclude by Act of parliament, or to sanction the exclusion of certain people from this university because they are not Christians, it seems to me is striking a blow at their citizenship which we ought not to do. Let me remind this House that an atheist, who is further removed from Christianity than a Jew, is perfectly competent to sit in this House, he is just as competent to exercise the franchise as a Christian or anybody else. He has all rights co-equal with any one of us, whether we are Jews or Christians. Why, Sir, under our constitution the Prime Minister of this country might be an atheist, and competent to advise His Excellency on all matters, and an atheist is even further removed from Christianity than a Jew. We cannot forget that a former Prime Minister of Great Britain Benjamin Disraeli, who became Lord Beaconsfield, was a Jew. I personally feel that I ought not to give a silent vote on this matter or allow the measure to pass without some such amendment as that moved by the hon. member (Mr. Bickerdike). To properly represent my constituency I must declare for full rights of citizenship for every one without putting any impediment in the way of any citizen, without any attempt to restrict his liberties either by persuasion or coercion in any legislation and I cannot vote that any institution wanting state legislation should be allowed to pick or choose between Jew and Christian.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario). The last speaker (Mr. Lancaster) and also the hon. member for St. Lawrence (Mr. Bickerdike) are apparently arguing on the assumption that this is public legislation; on the contrary it is private legislation, asked by private individuals. I agree with the hon. member for Lincoln that we should not place a bann upon any one by any public legislation, but we have here certain private individuals asking us to pass an Act that is private legislation. They ask for this legislation which is the result of an agreement. The amendment proposed would destroy that agreement among the parties. We would be guilty of breach of faith if we accepted this amendment.

Mr. LANCASTER. Where is the difference in our function? It matters not whether it be a public or a private Bill, parliament is asked to sanction this. If we adopt it we advise His Royal Highness the Governor General to approve a certain Act of parliament and I see no difference in regard to our function between a public and a private Bill. For my part I cannot advise His Royal Highness to sanction any such Bill as this.

Mr. DEVLIN. As I shall be called upon to vote on this amendment, I do not wish to give a silent vote and shall explain briefly why I propose to support the amendment of the hon. member for St. Lawrence division (Mr. Bickerdike). I am of opinion first that this legislation should come under the provincial legislature, that section 93 of the British North America Act without doubt places educational matters under the legislatures, and that is the reason why I do not see that this educational Act should be asked from this parliament. But there is another and a graver reason. The hon. member for St. Lawrence is perfectly right in saying that this is offering an insult to a religious sect in this country. The Jews are very, very respectable people and as was pointed out a moment ago by my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) Benjamin Disraeli, one of the ablest men in the history of Great Britain, belonged to the Jewish faith. I know from experience that McGill, one of the greatest universities in Canada, does not exclude any man of any faith from a chair in that university. I know that the Minister of Justice, who does not profess the Presbyterian faith with which McGill is very closely allied, occupied for a great many years a professor's chair in that university, in fact I had the honour to be a student of the university when the minister was giving a course of lectures. I speak in favour of the Jews being recognized in this country not from any political point of view, because, to the best of my knowledge, I have not a Jewish voter in Wright. I think if we are going to lay it down as a principle in this country that there shall be no coercion, the Presbyterians should not ask us to sanction an Act which will involve coercion of the Jews, any more than the members of any other faith should ask us to coerce, for instance, the province of Manitoba.

I hardly think it can be argued in this House, that any particular religious body can ask the Canadian parliament to establish any set rule in the educational system, we will say again, in the province of Manitoba, which would exclude either Protestants or Roman Catholics. If we are not going to recognize any established church in this country, and if the universities we charter are to be undenominational, why should not Jews, who believe in God, be recognized just as well as any other religious body? I am very sorry to have to take part in a discussion which does not concern the religious family to which I belong, but since it becomes my duty to vote on this measure, I want to say that I recognize no established church in Canada, and I cannot vote to insult a most respectable element in our community, namely the Jews.

Mr. OLIVER. I generally like to agree with my friends, but I must say that I believe a word should be said on behalf of the Presbyterian church in connection with this matter. I happen to be an adherent of that church, and I must protest most strongly against the idea that the Presbyterian church, in connection with this university, has any intention of insulting anybody or doing anything to interfere with anybody's religion. If there is one religious body in the world, against whom that charge cannot be successfully maintained, it is the Presbyterian body, for, if the Presbyterian church has ever stood for anything in this world, it is for toleration, and for education. I am absolutely unable to appreciate the view of my hon. friend (Mr. Bickerdike), when he suggests that the legislation before the House is an insult, or is intended to be an insult to any section of the people of Canada. I protest against such an assertion. There is no such intention on the face of the legislation and there is no such intention behind the legislation, in any way, shape or manner. I am not responsible for the legislation in any way, but I cannot sit silent and hear such suggestions made in this House. My understanding of the matter is that the adherents of the Presbyterian church have at stupendous cost and sacrifice to themselves established an educational institution known as Queen's University, which has done great work in the cause of education, and, if you like, in the cause of Christianity. I do not know that the time has yet come when anybody needs to apologize for his adherence to the Christian creed; at any rate I do not feel like doing so. I do not think that the Presbyterian body, or the body that is behind Queen's university, has any reason to apologise for the fact that they have established this educational institution as a Christian institution. The adherents of the Presbyterian church in Canada have, as I said, at great cost and sacrifice to themselves, built up an educational establishment, which, for some reason, they now desire to have declared undenominational. They come to this parliament for legislation, perhaps they should have gone to some other legislative body. I do not know anything about that. However, it seems to me, that if there is to be any transfer of property or of jurisdiction or of authority of any kind, surely the people at whose cost the establishment has been created and maintained, are the people to say under what conditions that transfer of authority or of jurisdiction shall be made. I say that if the Presbyterian church, having come to this parliament and asked for this legislation, this parliament does not see fit to grant the legislation as asked for, on the terms asked for, then, let parliament refuse to sanction the proposal, and let the condition remain as it is. But, as an adherent of the Presbyterian church, and having some slight interest in the welfare of that body, and the educational organizations under it, I would certainly protest against this parliament amending the proposal that has come from the owners of that property. The duty of this House is either to accept the proposal as it is made, or to refuse it, for reasons which should be given. I understand there is some difference of opinion in the Presbyterian church itself as to the advisability of this step, but, it would be absolutely unfair to amend this legislation, without giving the Presbyterian body who applied for it, an opportunity to say whether they would agree to the amendment or not.

Mr. DEVLIN. I wish to make my position clear on this question. If this university is to continue under the Presbyterian church, I can understand that they might object to any religious denominations having the right to occupy a chair in the university, but if it is going to be undenominational, I do not think they should impose such a restriction as is here suggested. For instance, if a body of Catholics, sold a Catholic church to a body of Presbyterians, the Catholics would not have the right to put in a clause that the Methodists should be excluded from worship in that church. That is the view I take. I do not want to interfere in the domestic matters of the Presbyterian church, but if the Presbyterians are handing over this university as an undenominational institution, I say this parliament cannot sanction a clause excluding any religious sect.

Mr. OLIVER. I quite agree that if the institution is to become national, it certainly should not be in any sense sectarian, but the point I am trying to submit is that assuming the Presbyterian church to be the proprietor of this university, if they wish to have a change of status with respect to it, then let the House accord in the change asked for, or else absolutely refuse, but do not let us amend it so that the Presbyterian church, in dealing with this valuable educational institution, shall be forced by the supreme authority of this parliament, to accept legislation that the Presbyterian church does not want.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I confess that I can not see what my hon. friend (Mr. Bickerdike) finds in this Bill to insult the Jews. It has often happened that we have found it necessary to incorporate an institution connected with some particular church, and this legislation is going only a little wider and incorporating an institution connected with all the Christian churches of the country. I find on the order paper Bill No. 70, which is entitled 'An Act to Incorporate the Roman Catholic Episcopal Corporation of Keewatin,' and in that Bill it is provided that all property, real and personal, churches, schools, colleges and so on, possessed or enjoyed by the Right Rev. D. Charlebois, or the church in communion with the Church of Rome, are declared to be vested in a corporation. Well, there is no one who would take any objection to that.

Mr. DEVLIN. That is denominational.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Yes, but it is not an insult to the Jews, although it excludes them, and it is not an insult to the Presbyterians or the Methodists, although it excludes them also. In this Bill, respecting Queen's university, the applicants are applying for legislation that will apply to all Christian churches alike. We are not excluding anybody, but we are providing for the education of people belonging to all the Christian churches of this country, and I do not think there is any ground whatever for saying that that is an insult to anybody. The Jews do not pretend that they have put any of their money in this institution.

I have not heard that the public are going to put any money into it. The money is contributed by private individuals who are interested in education; and should it not be in the power of these people to say, we want our money devoted to Christian education—not to Jewish, pagan or any other than Christian education? I think that is a fair proposition in a free country like this, and I do not see any good reason for the attitude taken by my hon. friend from Montreal.

Mr. LANCASTER. Does my hon. friend think that we in parliament have any right to say that because a man has not in the past put money into an institution, he shall not avail himself of it to get an education, be he Jew or Christian?

Mr. NICKLE. This does not stop him.

Mr. LANCASTER. It indirectly stops him by putting a ban upon him, by making him believe that he is going where he is not wanted. I suppose I am as much wedded to the Christian religion as any other man in this House, but I consider that anyone who tries to convert a Jew by depriving him of his state rights is doing a very un-Christian thing. We have no right to put a mark against a Jew, or even an atheist, in this matter. It is not entirely a matter of the Presbyterian church. The Presbyterian church is not able to do what it wants to do without the legislation of this parliament, and it comes here and asks us to approve of what it is doing, and to give it a greater strength than it could have without that legislation; and it wants us to draw a line between the Jew and the Christian as to education. This is a place where we render to Caesar the things that are Caesar's. We have no business here to do anything towards the salvation of souls. The man who says that he is in this House for the purpose of doing the work of the churches is mistaken upon the constitution and is very nearly a hypocrite. We have no business to attempt to affect prejudicially or otherwise the religion or non-religion of anyone who is a loyal citizen of King George. Therefore, I cannot vote for this, and I think we ought to be very careful before we establish any such precedent.

Mr. NICKLE. The hon. member for Lincoln evidently misapprehends the scope of the measure. The original charter of the university made it distinctly clear that no religious test should be required of any student who entered the walls of Queen's, vested the control of the university in 27 trustees, of whom 12 were to be ministers of the Presbyterian church and 15 laymen in full communion with such church. In 1889 and again in 1906 a widening power was obtained from this parliament, by which the graduates and the members of the council obtained the right of electing ten members to the board of trustees. The attitude of the church at the present moment is as follows: They say that the Presbyterian church through our 27 trustees have control of the university and of its funds. The church says we raised $800,000 as an endowment of that university, and we are quite willing to turn it over to the board of trustees of the university to be elected by the benefactors and the graduates. We desire that those who are going to fill the professors' chairs shall be men who profess Christianity. As I have explained to the House, I do not agree with the Presbyterian church or that branch of it which contends for this provision; but I do agree with the contention that the Presbyterian church, in handing over $800,000 and a university has a right to say into what hands that work shall be entrusted. I do not think it ever crossed the mind of the Presbyterian church or the representatives of the university that this would give offence to the Jews. If I catch correctly the spirit of the Presbyterian church, this was aimed not at the Jew, but at the agnostic and the atheist, because the Presbyterian church desires to maintain this great educational institution Christian, require those set to educate the youth of Canada to be Christians, to believe in the divinity of Christ. It is ridiculous to construe this as an insult to the Jews or to any other class of people. If the Jews came to-morrow and desired to incorporate a university confined to the adherents of their faith, I would vote for it as readily as I do for this Bill, recognizing as I do the right of all religious sects to educate their people in the faith of their fathers. The hon. member for Wright (Mr. Devlin) will see that the word 'non-denominational' is used. That word is not as broad as 'non-sectarian.' 'Non-denominational' includes the branches of the Christian churches. 'Non-sectarian' would be inconsistent with the purpose of the Bill. Under the Bill, all branches of the Christian church are welcomed to its board, and to its professors' chairs, but only those who profess Christianity shall be entitled to occupy those positions; and, as the ex-Minister of the Interior says, why should not the Presbyterian church be allowed to give this great gift to the nation, and to widen the sphere of its influence?

Mr. LANCASTER. Does the hon. gentleman say that we are justified in being sectarian and not in being denominational?

Mr. NICKLE. I think it is within the sphere of parliament, so far as the objects are good, to incorporate any body of men to carry out a benevolent or charitable purpose, and in the carrying out of that work, it has a right to say that the members of the board of management shall be members of their own faith. That is the principle on which this legislation is founded. It is non-sectarian, it offers no insult to any person, but it says you cannot take advantage of our gifts unless you are members of our faith. I say that it is consistent on the part of the Presbyterian church, although I do not agree with the premises from which they reason.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. My hon. friend the ex-Minister of the Interior stood up very strongly for the Presbyterian church, and I was very pleased to see him get so religious all of a sudden.

Now my hon. friend from Guysborough said it was really Christianity versus something else. In my opinion that is not a correct statement. The other denominations are opposing this legislation as well as the Jews.

Mr. SHARPE (North Ontario). What denominations?

Mr. BICKERDIKE. The Baptists are opposing it. Let me read what the official organ of the Baptists says about this Bill. I am about to quote from the 'Canadian Baptist,' which is the mouthpiece of the Baptish Church of Canada. The article says:

> There was passed, without amendment, by the Private Bills Committee of the House of Commons at Ottawa, on Friday last, the Queen's College Bill, and it will now come before the House itself. Before the Private Bills Committee, a strenuous protest was made by certain Hebrew bodies, who feel that the Bill as proposed shuts them out from privileges which should be theirs as citizens of the Dominion of Canada.

I would like my hon. friend the ex-Minister of the Interior to remember that the Jews are citizens of Canada, that they are decent people, and loyal British subjects.

Mr. OLIVER. I would like the hon. member for St. Lawrence to remember that I have suggested no idea that the people of the Jewish race are any other than he has said, and the Presbyterian body has never had any such idea in mind as he suggests, in bringing forward this legislation.

Mr. LANCASTER. Now get the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) to admit that they have rights as citizens.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Will you admit the Jews have rights as citizen?

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. gentleman's question is absolutely uncalled for, and I object entirely to the suggestion contained in his remarks.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I have not yet made any remarks on the question.

Mr. OLIVER. I object entirely to such a question. There has been no suggestion made to the House by myself, or any other member, that any person of the Jewish religion or race, is any other than the equal of any person of another race or religion, and I object to the hon. gentleman making it and coupling my name with it.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I think we will get the hon. gentleman right after a little while. Now I want to let my hon. friend know a little more as to what the Baptists say:

> And we believe that the Hebrews are in the right in their protest, and that they should be joined in their contention by Baptists and others who believe that a 'National' university foregoes the right to place a religious test on any citizen who may seek to have entrance into its halls or into its professoriate. If Queen's College, now becoming Queen's University, cuts itself loose from the bonds of denominationalism, and of its own accord beomes a National or State institution, it should be willing to shoulder any supposed disabilities, and not seek legislation that contravenes either in spirit or fact the domocratic position of separation of Church and State.

That is what the Baptists say, and I think they are men of very broad views. I do not think the Baptists would want to have any such clause enacted as the one in question as regards any of their universities. Neither is this proposed legislation in accord with Anglicanism; the Anglicans are too broad-minded to adopt such a position. I cannot say that it is even Presbyterianism, for I believe many Presbyterians in this country are opposed tc any such legislation as is here proposed.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I understand that up to this time the Presbyterian Board had had the sole directorate and management of Queen's University. Is it the hon. gentleman's argument or opinion that that has constituted an insult to the Jewish faith?

Mr. BICKERDIKE. No. Clause 20 is the one that I have in mind.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It seems to me that the amendment is of a most important nature, and under the rules notice of it must be given.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. If the Chairman says that I must give notice then clause 20 will have to stand.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Rule 112 says:

> No important amendment may be proposed to any private Bill in Committee of the Whole House, or at the third reading of the Bill, unless one day's notice of the same has been given.

Now it seems to me that this proposed amendment is quite important.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I quite agree with you, Mr. Chairman, but when you accept amendments moved by the other side, and allow them to go through, I felt I was justified in moving an amendment also.

Mr. LANCASTER. I think in all fairness that the Bill should stand in order that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bickerdike) may give notice of his amendment, as it would be very unfair under the circumstances to prevent the hon. gentleman from having a vote on that amendment. The Bill should stand and come up again to-morrow.

Mr. NICKLE. As far as I am concerned I am perfectly willing that the Bill should stand, because I do not want any snap verdict. I would rather have the hon. gentleman feel that he had received the fairest possible treatment from the committee. I willingly agree so far as I am concerned to the amendment being moved and the matter threshed out now.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. If the hon. gentleman is willing to accept the amendment I think we might get through with the Bill.

Mr. NICKLE. I consent to the amendment being moved now, but that is not exactly the hon. gentleman's construction of my statement.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I still feel that I am going against rule 112.

Mr. BORDEN. A vote can be taken on the amendment with the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Very well then, if the committee is unanimous.

Amendment (Mr. Bickerdike) negatived. Yeas 7; Nays 70.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I understand that clause 3 stands.

Mr. BORDEN. Yes, but we will take the amendment now if the hon. gentleman has no objection.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I have no objection.

Mr. OLIVER. Is this amendment in accordance with the expressed wish of the authorities who are supporting the college or university?

Mr. NICKLE. It is not in accordance with the expressed wish of those who are promoting this Bill, but it removes from the measure the sting that the Jews are singled out as not being part of the nation. If the committee passes the amendment, as seems to be its spirit now, I will write to the promoters of the Bill setting out how the matter stands, and if they object to the Bill going on in that form it will have to be withdrawn.

Section as amended agreed to.

Bill reported.

Bill (No. 69) to incorporate Queen's Theological College—(Mr. Nickle)—was considered in committee and reported as amended.

ROYAL ASSENT.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that I have received the following communication from the secretary of His Royal Highness the Governor General:

Ottawa, March 11, 1912.

Sir,—I have the honour to inform you that the Right Hon. the Chief Justice of Canada, acting as deputy of His Royal Highness the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber on the 12th instant at four o'clock for the purpose of giving the Royal Assent to certain Bills which have passed the Senate and the House of Commons during the present session.

I have the honour, to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Signed) H. C. LOWTHER,
Lieut.-Col.
Governor General's Secretary.

To the Hon. the Speaker of the House of Commons.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. BORDEN.

COUNTY OF MASKINONGE, ELECTION EXPENSES.

* Mr. BELLEMARE:

1. Have the election expenses of the county of Maskinonge been settled?
2. If not, will the government see to it as soon as possible?

Mr. ROCHE:

1. The election expenses for the county of Maskinonge were settled by a cheque dated the 17th of October last.
2. A certain portion of the claims for services of constables, rent of polling booths and mileage of the deputies and clerks were put in suspense, owing to the fact that the returning officer did not supply vouchers signed by the persons to whom the money was due, and apparently, appointed deputies and clerks in his own home town and sent them to distant parts of the county, when there does not appear to have been any reason why suitable persons could not have been obtained in the various polling places.

Explanations have been received from the returning officer, but as they were not accompanied by the vouchers asked for, and did not satisfactorily explain why he caused so much mileage for the deputies and clerks, no further payment has been made.

PELAGIC SEALING.

Mr. KYTE:

1. Is it the intention of the government to provide a sufficient sum during the present session to compensate those engaged in the sealing industry of British Columbia for the cessation of sealing under the recent treaty?
2. Will the government appoint a commissioner to determine the amount of compensation to be paid to each Canadian sealer, in consequence of the discontinuance of that industry, by virtue of the treaty prohibiting pelagic sealing for fifteen years?

Mr. HAZEN:

1. No. The Pelagic Sealing Treaty of July 7, 1911, provides for an advance payment of $200,000 by the United States to Great Britain on account of fur seal skins it will be entitled to under the treaty. When this money is received it may be used in such connection.
2. As the advance payment has not yet been received, the method of dealing with claims has not been decided upon.

RATES ON PARCEL POST.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

What is the rate on parcel post from Montreal to Paris, France, from Montreal to London, England, and from Montreal to Toronto, Canada?

Mr. PELLETIER:

(a) The rate on outgoing parcels, via England to France has been, is now, and will continue to be at so much per pound, the rates being: 1 lb. 40c., 2 lb. 48c., 3 lb. 56c., 4 lb. 74c., 5 lb. 82c., 6 lb. 90c., 7 lb. 98c., 8 lb. $1.16, 9 lb. $1.24, 10 lb. $1.32, 11 lb. $1.40.

Under the new arrangement the rates will be very much reduced, being: 1 lb. 18c., 2 lb. 26c., 3 lb. 34c, 4 lb. 42c., 5 lb. 50c., 6 lb. 58c., 7 lb. 66c., 8 lb. 74c., 9 lb. 82c., 10 lb. 90c., 11 lb. 98c.

The convention for the direct service has been signed by both Canada and France, and will go into operation as soon as the French office has made its final arrangements.

(b) The rate on outgoing parcels to the United Kingdom is 12 cents per pound.

(c) There is no arrangement in Canada for the transmission of closed parcels in the mails except at letter rate. Parcels, the contents of which must be open to inspection, may, however, be sent to places in Canada at the 4th class matter rate of postage, 1 cent per ounce.

REPAIRING MAIL BAGS.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

What persons or firms are engaged in repairing mail bags, and at what places and the rates?

Mr. PELLETIER:

(a) At Montreal, Quebec, Martel & Dumouchel, Montreal Tent and Awning Company; at Quebec, Quebec, E. Tremblay, Beauport, C. Gingras, Indian Lorette; at Ottawa, Ontario, A. W. Chester, J. B. & E. Roy, F. Montgomery, D. Choquette, Wm. Morel; at Toronto, Geo. Lugsdin & Company; Wm. Hanna, Hector McLean; at Newmarket, Ontario, Thos. Fardy; at King, Ontario, Jas, McClement, Walter Rolling; at Aurora, Ontario, Wm. Hastings, A. E. Conover; at London, Ontario, J. Jones, J. Dun.

(b) The rates are as follows: For repairing, inclusive of furnishing and attaching fittings to letter bags, 42c. each; for fitting metal bars to letter bags, 5c. each; for fitting metal rings to letter bags, 5c. each; for patching, only, letter bags and newspaper sacks, 25c. each; for repairing newspaper sacks and fitting with cords, &c., 41c. each; for fitting cords only to newspaper sacks, 9c. each.

GOVERNMENT LOANS.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax):

1. What is the amount of the last Canadian government loan, the rate of interest, the amount realized, and where placed?

2. If the said sum was a refund of an outstanding debt or loan, what was the amount of the same and the date of borrowing?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds).

A loan of £5,000,000 bearing 3½ per cent, due 1st July, 1950, with option to redeem on or after 1st July, 1930, on six months notice, was recently placed on the London market to replace a 3¾ per cent loan of £5,000,000 issued in June, 1908. Of the latter loan £4,681,870 12s. 4d. is now outstanding and redeemable 1st May next.

The final payment on the new loan will not be made until 29th April next. It was underwritten and issued at 98.

TENDERS FOR ENGRAVING DOMINION NOTES.

Mr. MURPHY:

1. How many tenders did the government receive for engraving, printing, furnishing and delivering Dominion notes, postal and Inland Revenue supplies, and what were the prices in each case?

2. Who is the lowest tenderer?

3. Has the contract been awarded? If so, to whom?

Mr. WHITE (Leeds).

Tenders have been received and are now under consideration by the government. Until the matter is finally dealt with no statement can be made.

MAIL CONTRACT, VAL DES EBOULIS AND RIGAUD.

Mr. BOYER:

1. On what date was granted to William Robert the contract for carrying the mail between Val des Eboulis and Rigaud?

2. What was the amount of this contract?

3. When was the contract annulled?

Mr. PELLETIER.

1, 2 and 3. The department has never granted a contract to William Robert.

DRAINAGE AT POINT AUX ANGLAIS.

Mr. ETHIER:

1. Does the government intend to do drainage work at Point aux Anglais, on the River Ottawa, for the purpose of facilitating the access of boats to the wharf at that place?

2. If so, what amount will be expended to that end?

Mr. MONK.

1. There is no application for drainage work at Point aux Anglais, but there is an application for dredging. The distribution of work under the dredging appropriation has not yet been made.

2. This work would cost $3,973.

ORIENTAL IMMIGRATION.

Mr. STEVENS:

1. What is the total number of Chinese that have entered Canada through ports of British Columbia up to date?

2. How many Japanese?
3. How many Chinese during last year?
4. How many Japanese during last year?
5. How many Hindus have entered Canada?
6. How many Hindus during last year?
7. Has the department any record of the arrival of Dr. Sundar Singh?
8. Was any order issued for his deportation? If so, was it executed?
9. Did the said Sundar Singh comply with the immigration regulations?

Mr. ROGERS.

1. 16,902.
2. 13,764.
3. (Fiscal year), 5,254.
4. (Fiscal year), 436.
5. 5,142.
6. (Fiscal year), 1.
7. Record shows that Dr. Sundar Singh arrived at Halifax, N.S., March 12th, 1909, per S.S. 'Virginian' of the Allan line.
8. Yes, not yet executed. Still pending.
9. No.

DISMISSALS.

Mr. CARDIN:

1. Has Mr. Alfred Lalonde, warehouseman in the government yards at St. Joseph de Sorel, been dismissed?
2. If so, why, and who asked for his dismissal?
3. Were complaints made against Mr. Lalonde? If so, by whom?
4. Has proof been given in support of these complaints? If so, by whom?
5. Who is Mr. Lalonde's successor, and who recommended him?

Mr. MONK:

1. Yes.
2, 3 and 4. Charges of political partisanship were preferred against him by J. A. Barrette, M.P..
5. Hylas Yergeau, Messrs. Barrette and Mondou.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

Has Mr. Yule, customs house officer at Aurora, been dismissed? If so, for what reason?

Mr. REID (Grenville). On the report of the inspectors, Mr. Andrew Yule, sub-collector of Customs at Aurora, has been granted leave of absence, with pay until July 1, 1812, after which his case will be considered. The reports show him to be in bad health and it is necessary to have an officer in charge able to perform the duties of the office.

Mr. BOYER:

1. Have complaints been made against William Brown, postmaster at Point Fortune?
2. If so, what is the nature of these complaints and by whom were they made?
3. Who asked for his dismissal?
4. Who is to be his successor, and by whom is he recommended?

Mr. STEVENS.

Mr. PELLETIER:

1, 2 and 3. Charges were made and proved, on investigation, to be well founded.
4. His successor has not yet been recommended.

Mr. BOYER:

1. Have any complaints against the postmaster at Mont Oscar been made to the government?
2. Who asked for the dismissal of Isidore Chevrier, the postmaster of that place?
3. Who is to be his successor and by whom was he recommended?

Mr. PELLETIER. 1, 2 and 3. The postmaster has to be dismissed as a result of the investigation held about this case.

Mr. CARVELL:

1. Has D. I. Mundle been dismissed from the office of sub-collector of customs at Richibucto, N.B.?
2. If so, for what reasons, on whose recommendations, and was the charge against him, if any, investigated, and by whom?
3. What was his salary, when was he actually dismissed from the position, and to what date was he paid?
4. Will the amount which he has paid into the superannuation fund be repaid him?

Mr. REID (Grenville):

1 and 2. D. I. Mundle, preventive officer of customs at Richibucto, has been dismissed from the customs service for political partisanship, by order in council on the recommendation of the Minister of Customs, based on charges made in the usual course by the member of parliament for the constituency.
2. Mr. Mundle's salary was $400 a year. The notice of dismissal was mailed on 26th February, 1912. His salary has been or will be paid up to the time when he received notice of dismissal.
3. The amount contributed by him to the retirement fund will be repaid. He did not contribute to the superannuation fund.

Mr. CARVELL:

1. Has W. S. McLean, acting preventive officer at L'Etang, Charlotte county, N.B., been dismissed from office?
2. If so, for what reason, on whose recommendation, and was he accorded an investigation?
3. Was George Chubb appointed in his place?
4. Is this the same George Chubb who was said to have been dismissed from office in 1906 for a violation of the Canada Temperance Act?
5. What is his age and salary at the present time?

Mr. REID (Grenville):

1 and 2. The services of Mr. W. S. McLean, acting preventive officer of customs at L'Etang or Back Bay, New Brunswick, have been dispensed with on account of political partisanship, by order of the Minister of Customs, based upon charges made in the usual course by the member of parliament for the constituency.

3. Yes.

4. This is the same George Chubb who was dismissed from office in 1906 and deprived of his superannuation contributions to make room for Mr. W. S. McLean, a political partisan. It appears that Mr. Chubb did pay a fine under the Scott Act, on account of three bottles of whisky ordered by his son about Christmas time for some neighbours, one of whom describes himself as a Liberal.

5. His age is 70 years. His salary is $150 a year, as this is a preventive station only, with little revenue collected.

MOTION AGREED TO WITHOUT DISCUSSION.

For a copy of all papers, documents, correspondence, &c., between the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway, or any other railway, and the government, or any minister thereof, in reference to the guarantee of securities, and to the time and manner of the issue of such guaranteed securities, made under chapter 6 of the Statutes of Canada, 1911.—Mr. Maclean (Halifax).

For a copy of all letters, telegrams and other papers in connection with complaints of whatever nature against commission agents for placing farm labourers in Ontario, also officials connected with any agency in Ontario, during the year 1910 and 1911.—Mr. Sutherland.

For a copy of all documents, letters, petitions, requests or reports, respecting the dismissal of L. Tréfflé Délisle of Trois Pistoles, as captain of the lighthouse boat of Ile Rouge; and, of all documents, letters, petitions, requests and reports respecting the request to reinstate Mr. L. Tréfflé Délisle in his former position.—Mr. Gauvreau.

For a copy of all charges against Arthur Brymer, fishery officer at L'Ardoise, N.S., and of all telegrams and other communications between the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, or any other officer of his department, and any other persons having reference to the same and in relation to the appointment of his successor.—Mr. Kyte.

For a opy of all charges against Lawrence G. Power, superintendent of the lobster hatchery at Arichat, N.S., and of all letters, telegrams and other communications between the Minister of Marine and Fisheries or any officer in his department, and any other person having referene to the same and in relation to the appointment of his successor.—Mr. Kyte.

For a copy of all documents, letters, papers, requests, inquiries and reports respecting the dismissal of Mr. Joseph Cloutier, postmaster of St. Adolphe de Dudswell.—Mr. Tobin.

For a copy of all papers, letters, requests, resolutions of municipal councils, &c., asking for the construction of a wharf at Grathby, on Lake Aylmer, from 1904-5 to this date.—Mr. Tobin.

For a copy of all letters, requests, complaints, depositions, reports of inquiry and of every other document in the possession of the Post Office Department relating to the dismissal of Doctor H. Dupré as postmaster of St. Robert, county of Richelieu, and to the appointment of a new postmaster.—Mr. Cardin.

For a copy of all letters, requests, complaints, depositions, reports of inquiry and of every other document in the possession of the Post Office Department relating to the dismissal of Madam, the widow of Antoine St. Martin as postmistress at St. Louis de Bonsecours, county of Richelieu, and to the appointment of a new postmaster.—Mr. Cardin.

For a copy of all letters requests, complaints, depositions, reports of inquiry and every other document whatever, relating to the dismissal of Mr. J. O. Dauphinais as postmaster of Sorel, county of Richelieu, and also of all letters, requests, or other documents relating to the appointment of the new postmaster at Sorel.—Mr. Cardin.

For a copy of all letters, requests, memorandums, tenders and other documents in the possession of the Post Office Department relating to the calling for tenders and the granting of the contract now in force for the carrying of the mail between Sorel and Ste. Victorie, county of Richelieu.—Mr. Cardin.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 106) to amend the Civil Service Act.—Mr. Pelletier—read the second time and House went into committee thereon.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

On section 1,

Mr. LEMIEUX. Will the hon. gentleman please explain?

Mr. PELLETIER. The general tenor of this clause is to deal with the classifications in the post office outside service. It dispenses with senior and junior, and created classes with Grade A and B. It does away with the class known as stampers and sorters; with what was known as the fourth class and also with the junior third class. The stampers and sorters, the fourth class, and the junior third class, become third class. Grade B stampers and sorters under the existing law receive $500 and go up to $600 with increments of $50 a year. The fourth class commences with $500 and goes to $700 with increases of $100 a year; the junior third class goes from $700 to $800. All these are replaced by third class Grade B, and the officers in this class will receive $500 on appointment, and will go to $800 with annual increases of $100. What is now the senior third class and the junior second will become third class Grade A. At present a senior third class clerk receives from $800 to $900, increasing by $50 a year, and the junior second commences at $900 and goes to $1,000 by two increases of $50 a year each. These two become third class Grade B with a salary of $800 to begin at and the maximum will be $1,000 by increases of $50 per annum. Senior second class clerks now receive $1,000 per year and they will in future have $1,200 as a maximum. It is divided into two grades: second class Grade B, the salary of which begins at $1,000 and goes to $1,200, and second class Grade A, the salary of which begins at $1,200 and goes to $1,400, which is $200 more than the present maximum of the second class. The first class, which at present ranges in salary from $1,200 to $1,500, and in which there was no junior or senior grade, will be subdivided into two grades: one, class Grade B beginning at $1,400 and going to $1,600, and the other class Grade A, beginning at $1,600 and going to $1,800; an increase of $200 on the minimum and $300 on the present maximum. This Bill introduces a class called chief clerks in post offices with an annual revenue of $500,000 or over, and there will be one chief clerk for every two hundred employees.

This will for the moment apply solely to the three largest post offices—Toronto, Montreal and Winnipeg. The salary of the chief clerk will begin at $1,800 and go to $2,200. The salary of the superintendent will begin at $1,800, the present salary, and will go up to $2,500. This is the general purport of the Bill. Most of these clauses were in the Bill which was presented to the House last year by the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux), but which was prevented from passing by the arrival of the Sergeant-at-Arms at the door; therefore, I suppose my hon. friend will concur with me in finding this a good measure.

Mr. LEMIEUX. On general lines I commend this legislation. The Bill is similar to the one which was introduced last year, and which was on the eve of receiving consideration from this House, but was unfortunately prevented from passing on account of the visit of the Black Rod. The increases and changes which are made are certainly most desirable. I can only emphasize the fact that the time has come I believe, when we should dispense with all this phraseology, and as far as possible bring the outside service under the Civil Service Act. In fact, the Bill of last year was prepared with that end in view, and I suppose the amounts mentioned in this Bill have reference to the classification which we find in the inside service, so that when the change takes place and the outside service is brought under the Commission, there will be no difficulty in classifying the various offices.

On section 7—limitation in employment temporary clerks,

Mr. PELLETIER. I propose that this clause be dropped entirely, because this matter is provided for in the other clauses.

Mr. BELAND. I see that temporary clerks are to be paid $2.50. What salary are these employees receiving now?

Mr. PELLETIER. $1.60. The cost of living has very much increased.

Mr. BELAND. It is all right, I do not object to it.

Motion agreed to.

On section 8—eligibility for employment,

Mr. PELLETIER. It is proposed to drop from the section the words 'or box collector.' In many cases the box collections are made by a company, and there might be some difficulty with the Auditor General in regard to this.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Who is the box collector at Quebec?

Mr. PELLETIER. A Mr. Gagnier.

On section 9—permanent appointment temporary employees,

Mr. PELLETIER. The words 'for an increase' in the last line do not carry the idea sufficiently well. I have been over this clause with the staff of the department, and they have come to the conclusion that the words mentioned ought to be replaced by the words 'a higher salary than the maximum of the class in which he may be placed under this Act.' This means that the employees referred to can go up to $1,000.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 11—mileage to sorters,

Mr. PELLETIER. I propose to add after the words 'railway mail clerks' in the first line of the paragraph the words 'and other post office employees when employed as sorters in the postal cars.'

Amendment agreed to.

On section 12—salaries of inspector, assistant inspector or superintendent.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Will the minister explain in how many cases this increase will be given?

Mr. PELLETIER. This will affect inspectors and superintendents of the railway mail service as follows: Mr. W. E. Maclellan, Nova Scotia, will get $200; at present he is receiving $2,800. Mr. Colter of New Brunswick, if the Governor in Council consents, may get as high an increase as $700. He is now receiving $2,800.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The $700 would bring him up to the maximum.

Mr. PELLETIER. Yes.

Mr. LEMIEUX. And the minister will judge according to circumstances in granting the increases?

Mr. PELLETIER. The increase will be granted on merit.

Mr. LEMIEUX. He might receive an increase of $300, or $400, or $500, or $700?

Mr. PELLETIER. The Governor in Council will decide that. I am sorry to say that we cannot take advantage of this provision in the case of Mr. Green, of Quebec, but we are going to try and provide for him in some other way. Mr. Green has been moved here and there, in order that his services might be made effective, and that fact has caused his appointment to date only from the 4th of May, 1910.

Mr. LEMIEUX. What is the maximum now?

Mr. PELLETIER. $2,500.

Mr. LEMIEUX. And this gentleman cannot get any higher at present? I think the minister would be warranted in granting an increase.

Mr. PELLETIER. I am glad to hear the hon. gentleman say that because Mr. Green is a most efficient officer.

Mr. BELAND. Will Mr. Larue get the increase?

Mr. PELLETIER. Yes. Mr. Goudet of Montreal is in the same position as Mr. Green. Mr. Bolduc may receive $700, if the Governor in Council so decides, like Mr. Colter.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The ablest man you have in the service.

Mr. BELAND. What is Mr. Bolduc's salary?

Mr. PELLETIER. It is $2,800. I will recommend that he get his maximum at once. As the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux) says, he is perhaps the best inspector we have in the department.

Mr. BELAND. Certainly a first-class man.

Mr. PELLETIER. Now we come to Mr. Merrick of Kingston. He is in the same position as Mr. Bolduc. Then there is Mr. Limoges of North Bay, whose present salary is $2,600; Mr. Sutherland, of Toronto, who is in the same position as Mr. Greene of Quebec. Mr. Campbell, of London now receives $2,800, and by virtue of this Bill he can get an increase up to $200. Mr. McLeod, of Winnipeg was in a position to get the increase of $700 but he has retired since this Bill was prepared. Mr. Wilson, of Moosejaw has recently deceased and has been succeeded by Mr. McNaughton, who has made his mark sufficiently to take charge of the new position. Mr. Chamard, of Saskatoon, now receives $2,600, and may get an increase up to $200, Mr. Bruce, of Calgary, who now receives $2,600, will receive an increase up to $200. He is a good officer. Mr. Cairns, of Edmonton, now receives $2,800, and he may receive an increase under the Bill up to $300. At Vancouver, is Mr. Greenfield, whose salary is $2,800, and who may also receive an increase up to $300. Mr. Fletcher, of Victoria, is one of those who may receive an increase as high as $700. I have the details here, with regard to the inferior officers, but I will not go into that unless the hon. gentleman desires it.

Mr. BELAND. I would like to know about Mr. Larue, assistant inspector at Quebec.

Mr. PELLETIER. His salary at present is $1,700, and his increase may go to $400.

Mr. BELAND. I am glad to hear it, he is a very good officer, and has been long in the service.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I desire to read a letter I have received.

In looking over Bill No. 106 that has been introduced in the House of Commons, I find that so far as second-class clerks in the post office are concerned, it contains a very unfair discrimination. Frequent representations have been made, as you know, for a general increase in the salaries of post office clerks without the least suggestion of political discrimination. But the Bill that has been introduced makes discrimination in favour of those who were appointed by Conservative governments.

In referring to the second-class clerks, page 3, line 25, you will see that those who have had less than 15 years service, temporary or permanent, are placed in grade B; again at line 32 on the same page, any one who has had fifteen years' service or over, whether temporary or permanent, goes into grade A. This practically means that there will be no increase in salary for second-class clerks appointed during the Liberal term of office. While the Bill does not say that these differerences shall date from July of 1896, by putting the period at twelve years, it practically and very effectively gives the preference to those who were appointed by a Conservative government as against those who have been appointed since. I am satisfied that a question in the House as to the number of persons that were affected as appointees before and after the fifteen years' limit with the dates of their appointment, would show the large preponderance of Conservatives whom this Act will beneficially affect.

I am told that employees who were letter carriers from Conservative appointment prior to 1896 were in many cases advanced to clerkships with a large increase in salary. This Bill would displace clerks at present (from seniors by reason of the efficient discharge of their duties) who have not had fifteen years' service, but who held clerkships before the others reached that rank in the service. In addition to the matter to which I refer, it is suggested that the fair application of the benefits of the Bill to all parties will be obtained by striking out in line 28, page 3 the following words: 'and he was a senior second-class prior to the 1st day of October, 1909"; and in the 33rd line by striking out the words 'temporary and permanent" and substituting the words 'in that case.'

My hon. friend (Mr. Pelletier) will read these remarks in 'Hansard' and I am sure he will give them consideration. This is a private matter, but I will hand it to my hon. friend; I am sure he means to be fair to every one. I hope he will look into this matter fully.

Mr. PELLETIER. I will consider it.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 124) respecting the Civil Service (Mr. Pelletier) read the second time, considered in committee, read the third time and passed.

Bill (No. 116) to amend the Civil Service Act.—Mr. Reid (Grenville).

THE GRAIN ACT.

On order for third reading of Bill (No. 32) respecting grain.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I move that the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to Committee of the Whole in order to make certain amendments.

Motion agreed to, and House went again into committee on the Bill.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). The chief reason for taking this Bill back into Committee of the Whole is because that, in the printing of it, certain omissions have been made, and some inconsistencies remain to be cleared up. In section 230 I move to insert the words 'upon the recommendation of the board.'

Motion agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). In section 107, after the words 'No. 1 Canada Western barley shall be plump, bright, sound, clean and free from other grain.' I move to add after the word 'grain,' 'and shall weigh not less than 48 pounds to the bushel.'

Motion agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Then in the last line but one—we had some discussion over the weight of No. 3 Canada western barley, the weight of which we reduced from 45 pounds to 44 pounds. I propose to change the weight back to 45 pounds. It was put down at 44 chiefly from representations from the west; but subsequent representations led me to believe that if we made it as low as 44 pounds it would destroy its value as a malting barley. 45 pounds puts it on a par with the nomenclature in the United States.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Section 121—when we went over this section we changed (a) (b) by putting in 'in the western and eastern inspection divisions,' so as to include both divisions. However these do not appear in the re-print, and I now propose to make it of the same sense as before.

Motion agreed to.

On section 156, rules and regulations,

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I beg to move the addition of subsection 4. This was really agreed to in committee but seems not to have been embodied in the bill:

Such rules and regulations shall be laid before both Houses of parliament within 30 days from commencement of each session.

Amendment agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto) moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. CRUISE. I beg to move:

That the Bill be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to the Committee of the Whole to amend it by striking out subsection (e) of section 207.

I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that the farmers throughout Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta, object very strongly to this subsection (e) of the Bill, and consequently I believe that it is my duty to move that it be stricken out. Should this subsection become law, many abuses would arise which would be detrimental to the farmers of the west, and these abuses I shall briefly point out. My contention is that this subsection (e) gives to the Board of Commissioners altogether too much power, and that it will place the farmers in practically the same position as they were ten years ago, when they were forced to load through the elevators and were refused the privilege of loading over the platforms into the cars. It will not, of course, work out to the detriment of the farmers shipping at divisional points, but take for example Ochre river, on the south side of Dauphin, where there are two elevators, and a large settlement on each side of the town. Now, when the farmers begin to thresh, there are seven or eight threshing machines, we will say, ready for operation, and the farmers put their names on the order-book and order their cars to be ready when they commence threshing. Then, when they haul their grain in, the probability is that the cars will not be placed there for them, and the railroad people will send some excuse, and the result is that they will be forced to ship their grain through the elevators. This may continue for three or four days, and the elevators become full. Then the elevator operator reports to the Board of Commissioners that his elevator is full and he asks for cars and the board immediately order cars to be sent out to relieve that elevator. Then, as the farmers come in, they are still refused the cars for the purpose of loading their grain over the platform, and they are in this way constantly forced to load their grain through the elevators.

This shows that if the clause I propose to have stricken from the Bill is retained, it will be detrimental to the interests of the farmers. Now, I have never been able to ascertain who it was that asked for the insertion of this clause (e) in the Bill. I have already stated in committee that the farmers did not ask for it, and although the Minister of Trade and Commerce answered that the clause was inserted for the benefit of the small farmer, I hold that I am representing the feelings of the smaller farmers in the west when I ask to have it stricken out. At the present time, the small farmer who ships one car is on the same footing as the large farmer who ships ten, twelve or fifteen cars of wheat and there is no complaint. From my constituency, and indeed from all over the west, I have received protests against the car distribution clause being interfered with in any way. I shall read, for the benefit of the House, the following telegram sent by Mr. Roderick McKenzie, secretary of the Grain Growers' Association of Manitoba:

Over hundred farmers Portage constituency yesterday passed following resolution:—

Whereas, under subsection (e), section two hundred seven Grain Bill, railroads can create congestion wherever and whenever they please, thereby indirectly control distribution cars any point where they desire; therefore, resolved that members Portage District Association Manitoba Grain Growers' Association disapprove of proposed change as it can be used to destroy the usefulness of the most important portion of Grain Act and urge that said clause be struck out of Bill before finally passed.

R. McKENZIE.
Winnipeg, Man., March 2, 1912.

I have also a list of the following thirty different branches of the Grain Growers' Association of Manitoba, protesting against any change in the present law in this respect:—Rosser G. G. A., Seeburn G. G. A., Holland G. G. A., Miami G. G. A., Strathclair G. G. A., District Convention Manitoba G. G., Goodlands G. G. A., Kenton G. G. A., Bethany G. G. A., Elm Creek G. G. A., Airdrie G. G. A., Shadeland G. G. A., Stephenfield G. G. A., Franklin G. G. A., Reston G. G. A., Carroll G. G. A., Lenore G. G. A., Havelock G. G. A., Baycentre G. G. A., Minitonas G. G. A., Benito G. G. A., Barnsley G. G. A., Edwin G. G. A., Holmfield G. G. A., Beaver G. G. A., Valley River, Ashville, Ochre River, Gilbert Plains, Dauphin, Sunnydale, Macleod-Howe Branch W. F. A.

These are all grain growers' associaciations, and they strongly protest against any change being made in the car-distribution clause. They have asked different members of this House to insist on subsection E of section 207 being struck out. We are told by the Minister of Trade and Commerce that this subsection was inserted purely and simply to assist the small farmers. I have given this matter a great deal of study, and in my humble judgment it is not going to be of any benefit whatever to the small farmer, but is going to put him practically where he was ten years ago. For that reason I object to this clause and move this amendment.

Mr. DAVID WARNOCK (Macleod). Mr. Speaker, in rising to second the motion of the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Cruise), I wish again to register my protest against the passing of section 207. These amendments have created a widespread alarm in the west, and meetings have been held day after day to register protests against the proposal to deprive the farmers of the privileges they have enjoyed for a number of years under the provisions of the Manitoba Grain Act. In my opinion section 207 as now amended is completely emasculated in so far as affording any protection to the farmers; and this is the opinion of a great many farmers in the west. I wish to read a letter which has been written by Mr. E. J. Fream, secretary of the United Farmers' Association of Alberta to the hon. member for Edmonton:

Calgary, Alta., Feb. 27, 1912.

The Hon. F. Oliver,
House of Commons,
Ottawa.

Sir,—At the annual meeting of the Canadian Council of Agriculture held a few days ago, the question of the new Grain Bill was up for discussion and the following resolution was unanimously adopted:—

That this council endorse the action of the delegates to Ottawa, representing the three western provinces and consisting of Messrs. Henders, McKenzie, Hopkins, Green and Fream, and the views submitted by them to the government, and again place on record our firm belief that nothing short of government operation and control, either by lease or purchase, of all terminal and transfer elevator facilities through an independent commission will ever relieve the adverse conditions now existing; further that it is essential that no change shall be made in the clauses of the Grain Bill relating to the distribution of cars as any tampering with the rights pertaining to the producers in this direction will work a great hardship upon these producers and will not tend to relieve the car shortage, which shortage can be traced to the inability of the railway companies to handle business consigned to them; further it is our opinion that if any change is contemplated in this direction it will be better to drop the Grain Bill entirely and continue to administer the grain business through the provisions of the Manitoba Grain Act as it now reads.

We have viewed with alarm the proposals made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce in connection with the Grain Bill, and we can only see calamity in sight if same becomes law with all the proposed amendments as is now proposed.

We are convinced that nothing short of government operation and control of all terminal facilities will ever give us what we require, and think that the proposal to take over two or three of the terminals as an experiment is nothing more or less than a desire to ruin the whole plan of government ownership, as such a scheme must of necessity be dependent on the private interests, and will therefore be at their mercy when the grain is handled.

We are greatly alarmed at the proposed amendments to section 207 and are appealing to you to assist us in protecting our rights and retaining that which we won only after the hardest kind of a battle. You are fully conversant with all these details, and we are therefore simply asking you to assist us as far as possible and to remind you that we would prefer to see the whole Grain Bill defeated rather than to have our rights interfered with by the destruction through many amendments of the saving principles embodied in the car distribution clauses of the Grain Act.

Thanking you in anticipation of your favourable consideration and assistance.

Yours truly,
EDWARD J. FREAM, Secretary.

The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce is inclined to think that the makers of the resolutions which have been sent to members on both sides of the House do not represent a very large proportion of the grain growers of the west; but I know that in southern Alberta they represent 100 per cent of the grain-growing farmers. Of course, there are some farmers not largely interested in grain to whom the matter is of very little importance; but the grain-growing farmers are united on this question. Resolutions along these lines have come from grain-growers' associations at Strathcona, Pincher Creek, Wheatland Centre, Sullivan lake, Botha, Gadsby, Cairns, Granum, Iron springs, Agricola, Trout creek, Oxoway, Chauvin, Lewisville, Warner, Acme, Galahad, Fairgrove, Spruce grove, Sunnydale and Macleod (Howe Branch). These resolutions are arriving by every mail, and in a few days we shall have a great many more of them. Most of the resolutions embody another resolution to which I would like to draw the attention of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. This is one from the Howe Branch of the United Farmers' Association at Macleod:

Resolved that the western outlet for our grain should be taken up immediately, and that the Dominion government should provide terminal elevator facilities at the Pacific coast at once.

I should like to recommend that to the consideration of the hon. minister.

I protest against the passing of section 207 as amended, and would ask that it be passed as it stood in the Manitoba Grain Act.

House divided on amendment of Mr. Cruise.

Amendment (Mr. Cruise) negatived.

Mr. THOMSON (Qu'Appelle) I wish to move:

That the Bill be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of amendment by striking out subsection 2 of section 57 and substituting therefore the following:

Notwithstanding any provisions in this Act that may conflict therewith, sample markets may be established under such rules and regulations as shall be recommended by the board and approved by the Governor in Council, in the city of Winnipeg, and such other point or points as shall be selected by the board with the approval of the Governor in Council.

The change which would be effected by this amendment, if adopted, would be in the first place, that instead of as at present providing for three points for sample markets—that is Winnipeg, Fort William and Calgary—a market would be established at Winnipeg and such other point or points as shall be selected by the board, with the approval of the Governor in Council. At present, I believe, the only place at which people generally appear to have asked for a sample market is Winnipeg. There is no objection, to a sample market being established there, but I think it would be necessary to have sample markets at other points. I do not think it is well to limit the places at which these markets may be established. They may be necessary at Calgary and Fort William, but they are just as likely to be necessary at other points. This is a matter which might well be left in the hands of the board with the approval of the Governor in Council, because circumstances may arise which might make it advisable to establish sample markets at other points. For instance, a considerable quantity of grain is being shipped to the United States. The grain from the western part of Saskatchewan, and parts of Alberta is being shipped to that country, and it will go over the Soo line. Therefore, it would be advisable to have a sample market at Moosejaw or North Portal or some such place. This amendment will leave the board free to select such points as they may deem advisable. My chief reason for moving this amendment is because of the provision which permits the mixing of grain. There are two or three things that seem to the farmers of the west to be very important in connection with the grain trade. One of these has been dealt with in connection with car distribution. Another equally important question is that of the mixing of grain. The western farmers rightly or wrongly, and I believe rightly, deem it to be very important to them that mixing should not be allowed. I do not think they would seriously object to mixing provided all terminal elevators were operated by the government. But we must remember that we have not any positive promise from the Minister of Trade and Commerce that such a policy will be carried out. He merely says that he proposes to try the experiment with one or two elevators, or possibly more, and there is no reason to suppose government control of terminal elevators generally will be carried out. On that account, the western farmers are utterly dissatisfied with the provision to which I have referred. I fear the Minister looks on the grain growers as spoiled children who have had too much of their own way in the past. It is true that a great many amendments have been made to the Manitoba Grain Act at their request since it was first put in force, but I think if the Minister of Trade and Commerce will look into the recommendations of the western grain growers asking for amendment to that Act, he will find that they have been for the benefit of the country at large, and not merely in the interest of the grain growers themselves. Everybody must recognize that the great growth of Canada in late years, has been caused by the development of the west and the increase in the amount of grain which has been grown and exported from that country. To allow mixing to take place is bound to be one of the most serious blows that can be struck at the western farmer.

Mr. DOUGLAS. In seconding the amendment, I merely wish to state that the amendment is in the interest of the grain growers of the west to a large extent. Since this Bill first came before the House I in common with other members, have received a great many communications dealing with this Bill in its various stages, and among the clauses which have received the condemnation of the grain growers as a whole, is the one which allows the mixing of grain in terminal elevators. That section has caused a great deal of dissatisfaction among grain growers. In my judgment the clause has been inserted largely for the benefit of the grain dealers, as against the interest of the grain growers. The object of the latter in past years has been to prevent the bad practice of mixing, which has prevailed at the terminal elevators. If these elevators were owned and operated by the government, I believe this evil might be controlled to a very large extent, but under the provisions of the Bill only one or two such elevators are going to be run by the government. Consequently the farmers view with a great deal of alarm the fact that other elevators which are privately owned, may continue to go on mixing the grain in the same nefarious manner in which it has been done in the past, which practice it has been the object of the Manitoba Grain Act to overcome in every possible way. For these reasons I very gladly second the amendment which has been moved by my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I do not want hon. gentlemen opposite to think that because I did not answer the arguments of the gentlemen who moved and seconded the former amendment that I treated that amendment otherwise than it should have been treated. I did not make any answer because the arguments advanced, so far as I can judge, were practicaly the arguments that had been already adduced, and that were thoroughly threshed out as we went through committee, and I did not consider it necessary to take up the time of the House in repeating arguments in rebuttal. The same thing applies to the present amendment, and yet I think it is well for me to take a moment or two in dealing with this amendment especially. There is not, I think, very much difference between the mover of this amendment and myself as the sponsor for the Bill. He argues, and wishes to make effective, that the selection of sample markets shall be left with the Board of Commissioners and subject to the approval of the Governor in Council. The Bill states three principal places at which sample markets, not necessarily shall, but may be established. It does not seem to me that sample markets in the west, or anywhere else, are, like the measles and small-pox, breaking out at unexpected moments.

We meet here every year and we have a chance to legislate each year, and I think that no interest will suffer in the interim between sessions, and no sudden and unexpected development is likely to take place which would mark out a certain place which had not been provided for in the Act as a necessary place for a sample market. I think we should go gradually in fixing sample market places in the west and that the growth should not be over rapid. When you make your provision for Calgary for a sample market, for instance, that does not say that it will be a sample market this year, or next year, or the year after. This Bill, when it becomes law, does not establish a sample market anywhere, but simply makes it possible for a sample market to be established at that place; but the co-operation of other factors than the government and other conditions than those for which the government can be responsible, are necessary before a sample market can be established. Now, as the spot upon which we are all agreed for a sample market if there is one at all, we take Winnipeg. There is no cavil about that. I think that it has been demonstrated that Fort William is another place where a fairly good sample market could be established. It is unique in its position at the head of lake navigation and in connection with the rail transport of grain; and, with the press of cars from Winnipeg and the time that elapses between their being sampled and graded at Winnipeg and their arrival at Fort William, there are conditions that may arise that will make Fort William a good place for a sample market. It is not improbable, also, that Fort William will become a large milling centre in the course of time. It has a good location in that respect. For these reasons it is a likely place for a sample market. The same is true of Calgary, far remote from these other two. If it ever does become a sample market, it will be because of the western export of the grain by the Pacific ocean. That may develop pretty rapidly. I would not take the responsibility of saying that we should not make provision this year for Calgary as a point for a sample market, because, with the great production of grain and the necessary congestion which is physically unmovable towards the east, it is not out of probability that next year may see a very large efflux of grain from the prairie provinces, especially from Alberta and part of Saskatchewan, towards the Pacific ocean; if not next year, then certainly the year after.

So that, I think, we have covered all the present possible points for a successful sample market in the three places we have named in the Act. If, when we come here next year, it is found that Edmonton, or Prince Rupert, or Moosejaw, or some other place has developed towards the point where successful markets can be established, we can make provision therefor. But I think we shall all agree that to endeavour to have a large number of small sample markets, would be rather against having a successful sample market at all. The success of the sample market depends on the large number of buyers and the large aggregation of sellers, coming together in a certain place, together with other conditions which Winnipeg and Fort William at present, and Calgary in the near future, pretty well fulfil. So, I do not think there is much difference in fact and in reality between my hon, friend (Mr. Thomson, Qu'Appelle) and myself.

Now, with reference to mixing: What is it that the farmers dreaded and dread to day, in mixing? I have had the pleasure of reading about it in the Grain Growers' Guide—and I read that journal very regularly, and have appreciated much that it contains, though I do not agree with everything it says. It is not for me to offer advice to the grain growers on the conduct of their paper; but if I were running a paper in the west, on agricultural lines, I would try to be more hopeful, I would try to inculcate through the columns of the paper some friendly advice, some kindly suggestion, some enumeration of the advantages of the country, some suggestions of the better and newer methods. I would not paint the whole situation black; I would have a reasonable portion of clear and lively colour. But I am not running the 'Grain Growers' Guide.' The grain growers who run the 'Grain Growers' Guide' put one leg upon the mixing and another leg upon the government-owned elevators, and they say: Mixing is horrible, but we are willing to embrace it if we have only honest conduct of the elevators. Well, honest conduct of the elevators is what this government is going to see is carried out. It is going to do it by the added machinery, which this Bill is to put into their hands. It is going to do it by the nomination of a first-class grain commission which has no interested sympathy with elevator companies or with railroad corporations, but which has first and mainly the farmers' interest in view and will use both elevators and railway companies as very helpful means to aid the farmers in quick and proper despatch of their grain to the markets of the world. Now, I defy any one to read the discussion in the Grain Growers' Guide upon the sample market without coming to the conclusion that if there is not a preponderance of sentiment in favour of the sample market with mixing, there is at least a fairly even division of opinion. I would invite my hon. friend to read the last, or the next to the last, number of the Grain Growers' Guide and the resolutions and discussions upon these resolutions, and he will see that they are in favour of a sample market absolutely, provided they have honest conduct of the elevators at the terminal points. These gentlemen want,—they ask for, and have a right to ask for,—a certain thing, and the government is in duty bound to give what they ask for. But, the government and the House have a perfect right to use its judgment as to how that thing shall be brought about. Mr. Fream and Mr. McKenzie say it cannot be brought about except by government-owned elevators. The government believe that with the machinery that is provided in this Bill, they can bring it about; and I am willing to stake my reputation and the reputation of the government on the fact that it will be brought about in the administration of this Act during this and the succeeding years. If they get the thing they want, honest mixing with a sample market, what is the trouble that they need fear. I do not find fault with the farmers in the west for fearing. But that which they fear is based upon suspicion and not upon actual facts. 'Once bitten, twice shy.' The farmers in olden times were bitten, bitten by the elevator men and bitten by the railroad men. But the legislation of 1905-6 revolutionized the matter of transportation of grain in that country. This Act and the administration of this Act, and the government behind this Act, does not mean to take away one iota of the privileges which the farmers of the west have for the proper disposal of their grain. If they can help them in any way they will do it. Why should I, or why should the government, collude with the elevator men or with the railroad men as against the farmers of the west?

The whole argument of my hon. friends opposite sink to the ground, disappear utterly, unless you can prove that there would be collusion between three parties; the elevator men, the railway men and the grain commission. Now, I do not believe that the grain commission is going to collude with either the elevator men or the railroad men to the detriment of the farmers; it is going to aid both the elevators and the railroad companies, and I believe, with their consent and with their co-operation, to do everything that possibly can be done for the speedy marketing of the farmers' grain. Now, I would not ask that this Bill be passed if I thought it was going to do what Mr. Fream fears it will do. He says: You had better knock the Bill out entirely rather than have these going to have that effect I would be just added clauses in it. If I thought it was as much against that clause as Mr. Fream or Mr. McKenzie. We all have a right to our opinions. I do not judge any one as not being honest and straight in the opinion he holds of what might take place. But it cannot be a well based opinion yet, it is nothing more than a fear or a suspicion; and I think he will find that the fear is groundless, and that the suspicion will not eventuate in fact.

Mr. KNOWLES. I must congratulate my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Thomson) on having succeeded in waking up the minister at last. During the last day or so that we have been dealing with this Bill the minister has either ignored our criticisms, or given them scant courtesy. He has entered into a more or less general discussion of the matter, defending the commission that is going to be appointed. Now he has one great advantage over us, he has some sort of an idea whom he is going to appoint on the commission, whereas we do not know at all what men the government have in their minds. Nor do we know, when they come to bring down supplementary estimates, how much money they will ask parliament to vote for the purpose of securing the control and operation of government elevators at the head of the lakes. The minister's whole argument is that he would not ask parliament to put this measure through if he did not believe it was a good one. He speaks of 'My commission' and says it is going to be so immaculate and perfect that it should have the confidence of every member of this committee, as if we ought to vote without hesitation any legislation the minister proposes. For my part I do not propose to accept any legislation merely because the minister asks us to do so. We might just as well go home if we are going to vote for a certain piece of legislation just because the minister says he would not present it to the House if his motives were not good in proposing it. I think the minister will see that while we are not reflecting upon his bona fides in the matter, he cannot bring us to the conviction by simply saying that he would not do it if he did not think he was perfectly right. But he has gone beyond the mere amendment in your hands, and has spoken about the Bill being so satisfactory, and when it is passed there are going to be such safeguards surrounding the handling of grain at the head of the lakes, and such a fine commission to handle it, that he has no doubt at all everything will be satisfactory to the farmers. It is a remarkable thing that when this Bill was before the House last May, hon. gentlemen opposite declared they could not support it because it did not suit them, and now we find them throwing up their hats in support of a Bill of the very same tenor.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would remind the hon. gentleman that, under a similar ruling, it is scarcely permissible to refer to anything that is not before the House. I do not think it would be wise to wander far away from the present amendment.

Mr. KNOWLES. When I rose to my feet I proposed to speak particularly on that part of my hon. friend's amendment, and to his suggestion that the minister might take to the board power to establish sample markets at any place that the government or the board might deem proper. I think that is a suggestion the minister might take into consideration, even at this late hour. I speak of this more particularly from the view point of the town I have the honour to represent. From the city of Moosejaw there have gone south this year, into the American market, car load after car load, train load after train load, of wheat, after paying the duty. I have seen reports from the Minneapolis, St. Paul and Sault Ste. Marie railroad saying that their traffic was congested with wheat from the Canadian west. That is an illustration of what may occur which would make it desirable that the government should have in its hands power to adjust the administration of this Act according to changing circumstances from time to time. There have gone from the city of Moosejaw possibly millions of bushels of wheat, going down south by the Minneapolis, St. Paul and Sault Ste. Marie railway, which leaves the main line of the Canadian Pacific railway at Moosejaw. Another year some other set of circumstances might arise. We have been told during the late election campaign that we should not encourage reciprocity, because the Americans would take off the duty anyway. Let us suppose that they did remove their duty from our cereals and admit the product of our soil free of duty, there would be such a demand from the United States that our cereals would go south in immense quantities. I say to the Minister of Trade and Commerce that the American people prefer to purchase in a sample market. Practically all their buying is done in Minnesota and other places by sample in a sample market, and if a sample market would be popular for any purchasers it would be with American purchasers. Therefore I suggest that the minister should take to himself power in this Act to establish sample markets wherever the government and the board might think it well to do so. More than that, one of the important customers of the sample market is the mill. We know that the great mills of Minneapolis are the greatest customers of the sample market in Minnesota. In the city of Moosejaw there is a greater demand for wheat for milling purposes than there is in the city of Calgary; there are more milling facilities in the city of Moosejaw than in the city of Calgary. Therefore, I say there is a much stronger reason for making Moosejaw a sample market than Calgary. I do not propose that the name of Moosejaw be put in the Bill, but I propose that the minister take power to establish as many sample markets as circumstances may render desirable.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Yeas and nays.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the 'Nays' have it.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Same division.

Mr. SHARPE (Lisgar). I would not like to have the same division recorded. If this division should take place I would vote against the amendment. I do not wish to be recorded as voting the same way.

House divided on amendment (Mr. Thomson, Qu'Appelle.).

Amendment (Mr. Thomson, Qu'Appelle), negatived.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax). The hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) did not vote.

Mr. OLIVER. I am paired with the Minister of the Interior, otherwise I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. McCRANEY (Saskatoon). I move, seconded by Mr. MacNutt:

That the Bill be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to the Committee of the Whole, with instructions to amend subclause 2 of clause 57 by inserting after the words 'in connection therewith' the words following: 'in elevators operated by the board.'

The effect of this amendment if passed would permit the mixing of grain to be carried on only in government owned elevators. The clause would then read as follows:

Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act that may conflict therewith, sample markets may be erected in the cities of Winnipeg, Fort William and Calgary, and the mixing of grain permitted in connection therewith in elevators operated by the board under such rules and regulations as are recommended by the board and approved by the Governor in Council.

Amendment, (Mr. McCraney) negatived on the same division as the last.

Mr. W. E. KNOWLES (Moosejaw). I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Martin, of Regina:

That the Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the Committee of the Whole, for the purpose of amendment by striking out section 124, and substituting therefor the following:—

123. No person owning, managing, operating, or in any way interested in, any public or terminal elevator, shall buy or sell or be in any way interested in, the buying or selling of grain, at any point in the western inspection division.

(2) Subsection 1 hereof shall not apply to any person who owns or is in any way interested in the ownership of any terminal elevator.

(a) Which with the approval of the Governor in Council has been leased to the board for operation, or has been leased to any person for operation with the approval of the board.

(b) Which is used or operated in connection with any flour mill, situate at the same terminal point as such elevator, provided, however, that such elevator shall be subject to such restrictions and regulations as are imposed by the board with the approval of the Governor in Council.

(3) Subsection 1 of this section shall not apply to any person by reason only of the fact that he is the owner or holder of stock or shares in a railway company, which owns or operates a terminal elevator which does not as a business buy or sell grain.

(4) If the person mentioned in subsection 2 hereof owns, manages, operates or is in any way interested in any terminal elevator other than a terminal elevator or elevators coming under the provisions of subsection 2 hereof, he shall not be exempt from the provisions of subsection 1 hereof.

In proposing this amendment, I do so for the purpose of placing before the House in this formal way, the same issue which I placed before the Committee of the Whole some two weeks ago. My contention is that the Bill as proposed by the government has absolutely no meaning, and is absolutely ineffective. This Bill, more or less makes a pretense of forbidding men who operate terminal elevators, from, at the same time, buying and selling grain, but, when it comes to be studied, it makes only a pretense of that because it does not in any way effectively attain that result. It distinctly says that any person who manages a leased elevator, where the lease is approved by the board, may buy or sell grain. I need not go further into the question than to show that that one feature of it makes the section absolutely useless. If a person wishes to be put in possession of an elevator and to have control, of the management and operation of it, all he has to do is to become a lessee of it or to become a member of a company which is a lessee of it, or be in any way associated with the leasing of such an elevator, and then he may buy and sell grain to his heart's content. I submit that once the Minister of Trade and Commerce grants that, and he cannot deny it, he must agree with me that the whole clause is absolutely useless. The Minister of Trade and Commerce, in reply to a question I put him this afternoon, assured me that the farmers were safe in the hands of the government. That is a fragile basis to put this legislation on. The farmers do not hold that view. The Minister of Trade and Commerce implied, although he did not say it, that the representations that have been read in this chamber coming from the Association of Grain Growers, and coming from the secretaries of the different provincial associations which group together the district associations; that they did not represent the people in any full measure. The Minister of Trade and Commerce did not use these words, but he made the remark that there was a great part of the farming community that was not making its voice heard when we spoke, and when we read these resolutions that we have read in the House from time to time. I read to him, and I will place it again on 'Hansard', a telegram I received this morning from Mr. Fred. W. Greene, secretary of the Saskatchewan Grain Growers' Association, a gentleman holding the very responsible position of secretary for a group of all the Grain Growers' Associations of the greatest grain growing province in the Dominion. If you could concentrate in the expression of one man anything that is worthy of attention, I say the attention of the House and of the minister should be given to a communication from the Secretary of the Grain Growers' Association in the great wheat province of Saskatchewan. This is what he says:

> Farmers are fearful that through the influence of elevator and transportation companies at Ottawa, farmers' friends will be handicapped and their interests sacrificed. Our association is ready to send delegation if in your opinion their cause may be assisted.
> (Sgd.) F. W. GREENE.
> Secretary Grain Growers' Association.

I was in hopes there might be time given to these men to come down here and state their case, and they can state it better than any of us in this House can state it, try as we may and repeat as we may at times, our arguments to the wearying of the minister and of hon. gentlemen opposite, a great many of whom do not belong to the west and do not understand details. I say now, and I pledge my word, that the farmers of the west are not satisfied with this legislation. They feel they are getting a gold brick from the government, in this present Grain Act; that it is not bringing about any improvement in their position, but that on the contrary they would be better with things as they are now. The minister has great confidence in the Bill. I asked him the other day to follow me in my remarks with regard to section 123, and he never took the trouble to so much as say whether he saw the point I tried to make or not, and if he did see it, to try and explain it away. I do not think he can deny what I have said with regard to the flimsiness and the inefficiency of section 123. The farmers are afraid of this legislation on a great many scores and there is nothing they are more afraid of than the manipulating of the grades. We have heard the accusation in the House and on the hustings and in the press and in the resolutions of the Grain Growers' Associations everywhere, that the manipulation of our grain is being affected in the terminal elevators at Fort William.

The minister has not yet taken the trouble to show us how this most important clause is going to stop the lessee of an elevator from buying and selling grain and still going scot free. If he admits that it is not intended to do that, we shall know how to deal with it; but if he admits that does not stop that practice, he admits that it is a farce. I hope the minister will even at this late hour, take into consideration the people most concerned in this matter, will see the error of his ways, and agree to admit what I suggest.

Amendment negatived on the same division as the last.

Mr. OLIVER. I beg to move

> That the Bill be not now read a third time, but be referred back to the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of amendment by striking out section 246.

This section reads as follows:

> The expenses of the administration of this Act shall be paid by the imposition of such fees as are necessary for that purpose, and the board, with the approval of the Governor in Council, may fix such fees and determine how and by whom they shall be paid.

In support of the amendment I desire to say, that in my humble judgment, the purport of this section is to authorize the board, with the approval of the Governor in Council, to levy taxation and to make expenditure without the vote of parliament, and that the first part of the section authorizes the board, with the approval of the Governor in Council, to incur expenditure at their own will. Such a provision, I submit, is objectionable under our system of government, and does not make for good government or economical or efficient administration.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I do not wish to detain the House, but I do not think it would be right to let this motion pass without saying one word. From the very inception of this system and the administration of it, I have not heard a word of protest, nor have I seen a word of protest from the farmers, the grain growers, the grain operators, or anybody else in the west against what was their promise at first, and what has been their promise ever since, that they were quite willing to pay all the expenses of the administration of this system. They have paid them largely up to the present time—and I think our hon. friends opposite, are estopped from questioning any further or going at all beyond that—so great is their faith. In fact, the grain growers' delegates this year said to me in my office, and said it before a mixed delegation, that they were perfectly willing to pay all the expenses of the administration of the system, and that if the government went further and adopted a system of government-owned and operated elevators, they were quite willing that all the expenses and a sufficient amount to reimburse the capital expenditure over a series of years should be imposed upon the product itself. Now my hon. friend with all this adverse testimony against him, proposes that this parliament shall go back upon what is really an agreement which has existed for a number of years, an agreement not forced or compelled, but entered into voluntarily and with perfectly free accord. The expense of administering this Act last year was $198,732. This is made up by a charge of 50 cents a carload, a carload of wheat consisting of 1,075 bushels and a carload of oats consisting of 2,000 bushels. That is a mere bagatelle on a carload, but it wipes out an expense which would otherwise come on the general public, an amount of money which could be devoted to much better purposes. That being the case it does not seem to me that my hon. friend has any argument for asking parliament to go back upon a practice and an agreement of the past for the very small reason that he gave in moving his amendment with the consent of the House. As this may be the last opportunity on the Bill, I would like to read a few figures which are illustrative of the quantity of wheat which has been moved this year as compared with the preceeding year.

I make no comment, I merely give the figures. I find that for the month of February, 1912, 19,156,825 bushels of grain have been moved, and in the six months ending February 29th, 1912, a total of 128,846,050 bushels. Comparing that with last year, the six months of 1911 showed a movement of 73,590,100. There has been an increase in the wheat over the same period of 1911, of 38,485,550 bushels, an increase in all grains of 55,255,950, and an increase in cars hauled of 45,111 cars. Considering the difficulties of the season, that I think is a mighty good record for wheat movement during the past six months

Mr. MARTIN (Regina.) With respect to section 246, to which an amendment has been moved, I would like to call the attention of the minister to the fact that we are not objecting, as far as I understand the amendment, to the grain trade carrying the cost of the administration of this Act. What we do object to is that the board is given power to fix such fees as it may deem necessary without any reference whatever to parliament, and in that way the board may possibly swell the cost to any extra extent it likes, and still it has the power to fix the fees to meet that expenditure. The minister may say the fees are subject to the approval of the Governor in Council. Personally I would object to that equally as strongly, because I submit that is giving to the board and to the Governor in Council practically the power to levy taxes on certain parts of this country, and I submit that parliament is the only body that should have that power.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Parliament has in the ultimate analysis the power.

Mr. MARTIN (Regina). I submit not according to this Bill.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). Parliament delegates that authority to the Board of Grain Commissioners and to the Governor in Council, which is the executive whilst parliament is out of session. It is done only and by virtue of an Act which parliament in both Houses approves.

Amendment (Mr. Oliver) negatived on the same division as the last.

Mr. CASH moved:

That the Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be read this day six months.

He said: My reason for making this motion is that the western Liberal members have honestly tried to have this Bill put in such shape that it would accomplish that for which the grain growers have been striving for years, and which I think is essential to an honest and fair conduct of the grain business, and they have tried to do this without regard to politics. I cannot say as much for the Conservative members from the west, as it seems to me that their efforts have been directed more towards supporting the minister than to advancing the interests of the grain growers. The House was assured early in this debate by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, that his endeavours would be along the same lines as outlined above, but what has developed? Why that the minister is playing the game in the interests of the manipulators and not in the interests of the grain growers? I do not think it will take many words to demonstrate this. There are three very essential things the farmers contend it is necessary to have in this Bill in order for them to get a square deal. These are: complete separation of the interests of the grain dealers from that of the terminal and transfer elevators. No mixing of grain whatever after government grading, and equal distribution of cars; and third, the distribution of cars.

I am aware that Bill (Q) of the Senate had its origin with the late government. We all recognized, however, that it was a long way from being perfect and required amendment, which we proposed to make when in Committee of the Whole. The opposition at that time, however, refused to allow us to get into committee with the Bill.

The most objectionable features of that Bill are embodied in the present Bill, and yet the minister refuses to allow us to amend the measure. I refer now to clauses 57, 123 and 207. Amendments to these three sections were suggested by the hon. members from Qu'Appelle, Moosejaw and Dauphin. I am particularly afraid of this Bill, as so much depends upon the sentiment of those who administer the law. We had a sample of this in the case of lumber. A government that is friendly to the grain growers interests would probably interpret this Bill so that it would not injure the grain growers, but in the case of lumber, we find that where there was any excuse to interpret that Bill to benefit the western settler, that it was so interpreted by the Liberal government, but now that the Conservative government is in power, we find that interpretation changed so that at present it is construed and administered in favour of the lumbermen. Therefore I think we should be very careful as to the form in which the Bill is allowed to pass, more especially as the present Bill is so full of opportunities to construe it in favour of the manipulator of grain. I think that it would be safer for the grain growers to have the former Act in force than the present one. I think this Bill should have been made short, plain and effective to protect the interests of the grain growers, upon whose success the prosperity of Canada depends, instead of being cumbersome, ambiguous, and in some instances plainly in favour of the manipulator.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Order

Mr. CASH. I therefore am compelled to move this amendment. If this Bill were to be placed in the hands of a Liberal government to administer, we should not be so much afraid of it. Western grain growers and that class of people, feel that a Liberal government would treat them in a liberal manner and would administer the law with a view to the protection of their interests.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Do I understand that hon. member (Mr. Cash) to say that if this Bill were being put through by a Liberal government the Grain Growers' Association would favour it?

Mr. CASH. I have stated the case as I see it, and I think hon. members should have no difficulty in understanding what I say. This Bill is full of opportunities for the kind of thing I have indicated. It is an ambiguous Bill, full of imperfections. I think the Bill should have been made much shorter so that an ordinary man reading it could understand it. But you take a Bill so long as this and with one clause leading to and depending upon another, the ordinary man cannot understand it. It requires very careful handling. It has been brought down prematurely; it should not have been placed before the House until it had been made more perfect than it is. I believe that is the view of the grain growers of the west —that this Bill is not what they want or what they ought to have. Therefore, I am constrained to move the six months' hoist.

Mr. MACNUTT. I have no hesitation in seconding the motion of the hon. member for McKenzie (Mr. Cash), believing with him that the Bill, as amended, is not so perfect as the old Bill 2 or Bill 32. The farmers for many years have been agitating for government ownership and operation which, they believe, is the only method to prevent fixing prices on the minimum quality of certain grades rather than on the average quality. And until recently hon. members on the other side, including the Prime Minister, believed in the same thing. Let me read a resolution brought down on the 13th of February last by the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner) bearing out this idea. The hon. gentleman on that occasion made some remarks, in the course of which he said:

> I do not think there is any diversity of opinion among the grain growers as to how the terminal elevators should be operated in the best interests of the producers. Other methods have been tried but we have all come to the conclusion that the warehousemen must not have an interest in grain.

The hon. gentleman also said:

> I have already said that we had been trying to solve problems connected with the line elevators. But even if we solved those problems in the most successful manner, of what advantage would it be to us if the terminal elevators are left in the hands of people who treat the producer unfairly, who, in fact, for the last number of years—and the term is none too strong—have been stealing their wheat? (There is absolutely no question about it, because it has been proven by government officers.)

About the time this resolution was before the House, the Bill known as No. Q was going through the Senate. The Bill was distributed among the members and came before this House. It was violently opposed because there was a clause in it with regard to government ownership which was not mandatory. It was found in Bill 32 as section 16 and appears in this Bill as section 13, copied without change. There is nothing in it to indicate that the government intends to operate the terminal elevators. We have had a statement from the Minister of Trade and Commerce on which we rely— rely to a greater extent than the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner) appears to have relied upon a statement made by the then Minister of the Interior last summer—that he will experiment with one, two or three of the terminal elevators. That, however, is not government ownership and operation. Let me read some further remarks of the hon. member for Souris, and remarks of other hon. members as well. Hon. gentlemen opposite were blocking Bill No. Q. The hon. member for Souris said:

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I say the chief demand of our farmers is that the government should operate these terminal elevators, and that is denied them. Hon. gentlemen opposite who want to assist the government in getting out of a hole and in neglecting their duty, and the 'Grain Growers' Guide,' may be satisfied with this Bill, but I am not; and if the 'Grain Growers' Guide,' is satisfied then it is not true to the arguments it has used in the last few years in connection with terminal elevators. The farmers of the west have asked for government operation principally; they have asked for government ownership, but to my mind it is not so important who owns the terminal elevators as it is who operates them, and there is absolutely nothing in the Bill that grants government operation. Will the Minister of the Interior answer this straight question: Is it the intention of the government at this session to provide in the estimates for money to buy or lease these terminal elevators and to operate them entirely by the government? If the Minister of the Interior answers that question in the affirmative I will admit there is something in clause 16 of the Bill to meet the demands of the farmers.

The hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver), then Minister of the Interior said:

Mr. OLIVER. I am not authorized to speak for the government, but I would like to make the bargain with my hon. friend, that if he will let this Bill pass now we may possibly be able to get a sum in the estimates to enable the Bill to be operated in that way.

This, be it remembered, was the second reading of the Bill. The House was not then considering estimates. The hon. member for Edmonton said further:

Mr. OLIVER. I said that if the hon. gentleman and his friends will allow the Bill to pass there would be some object in the government providing a sum in the estimates, but until the Bill passes there is no warrant for the government putting a sum in the estimates.

Another remark of the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Schaffner) was as follows:

If the minister and the government want to meet the demands of the farmers they have it in their power to do so. This commission business has been on trial for a great many years——

And is evidently going to continue to be on trial for years to come.

—and the farmers have come to the conclusion that it does not meet the case. The farmers refuse to accept or experiment with that system any longer. I shall oppose this Bill until I have some promise from the government that they will this session place in the estimates a sum of money for the acquisition or control of these elevators.

And Mr. Campbell, then member for Dauphin, had this to say:

The farmers for years and years have been asking a certain thing. They sent a large deputation here, and the most important thing they asked for was the government control of terminal elevators. That request was the most strongly urged of any. The matter was discussed at that meeting by the farmers, the grain buyers and the millers, all of whom voiced the opinion that it was an absolute necessity for the grain trade of the west that the government should control the terminal elevators.

And the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury) said:

The question is whether the government should own these elevators or not. I hold that they should. I would therefore urge the Minister of the Interior to consult his colleagues and see if it is not possible for him to make a definite statement to-day to the effect that he will provide the means for the government to take the absolute control of these elevators. . . This Bill does not meet the demands of the farmers.

Mr. Lake, then the member for Qu'Appelle, spoke along the same lines. Practically all the Conservative members were in favour of complete government ownership and operation. I allude also to the absolute promises made by the Prime Minister last summer to the farmers of the west. He did not say that they would experiment with regard to government-owned and operated terminal elevators, he said that the time for experiment had passed, and he pledged his government if returned to power to complete ownership and control of the terminal elevators. We do not find in this Bill anything different from the Bill of last year in this respect; we have to rely entirely upon the statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce that there will be something in the estimates to purchase one, or two, or possibly three, terminal elevators; but I think he means that is to be an experiment. It is more necessary than ever now that the government should operate these terminal elevators, because the government is actually, under certain rules and conditions of which we know nothing, allowing mixing to take place after inspection, the very thing the farmers have been protesting against for all these years, and almost the only reason why they desire government operation and control. Many Conservative votes were given in the west last year on the strength of the promise made by the Prime Minister, there is no doubt about that. There is another feature that renders the Bill very objectionable, and that is the clause referring to the distribution of cars. This is something that the farmers have been fighting for during many years, and they have now obtained a fair system of distributing cars. Under this Bill, however, as amended and reprinted—because the Bill as it came down in the first place was not so objectionable—it says that the board may in its discretion, order cars to be supplied wherever, after due examination, the board considers it necessary and advisable in order to relieve congestion and facilitate the dispatch of grain. It is left entirely to the option of the commission where the cars shall be sent. Let me give an example to show how it might work out. We will suppose there are half-a-dozen farmers who apply for a car each.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is going a little too far into an analysis of the working of the Act. I think it is permissible only to give reasons why the Bill should be read this day six months instead of now.

Mr. OLIVER. Might I ask that my hon. friend be allowed to give reasons why he does not wish to vote for the third reading of the Bill? He is explaining how the Act as amended does not work in the interest that it was supposed to serve.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member is going over the Bill again, and giving examples of what may happen; I do not think it is permissible to go into an analysis of the Bill in that way on a motion to read the Bill this day six months. But it is permissible to give direct reasons why it should be read this this day six months instead of now.

Mr. MACNUTT. I would like with your permission to read some opinions with regard to this Bill, because the people are taking a great interest in it and are watching it in the west. This is what I find in one of the local papers:

A change in the Grain Act fathered by the Hon. Geo. E. Foster will not meet with much favour in the west. It stipulates that the car distribution be placed in the hands of the Railway Commission instead of as present when cars must be allotted by the agent in order as the names are placed on the order book, except the warehouse commissioner order otherwise in case of emergency.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Will the hon. gentleman not say that he knows the quotation he is reading is absolutely false when it says that the car distribution is left in the hands of the Railway Commission?

Mr. MACNUTT. I am reading what I find in one of the local papers, I am not reading my opinion.

Mr. MEIGHEN. It is untrue to say that the car distribution is placed in the hands of the Railway Commission.

Mr. OLIVER. Is the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) in order when he suggests that my hon. friend from Saltcoats (Mr. MacNutt) is reading some thing that he knows to be false? I submit that is not according to the rules of parliament.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is not according to the rules of parliament to say that an hon. member is reading something which he knows to be false or untrue.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I did not say that.

Mr. MACNUTT. I do not know that this is false.

Mr. MEIGHEN. It is not the Board of Railway Commissioners who has the distribution of cars, the hon. gentleman knows that, but that is what the quotation says.

Mr. MACNUTT. No doubt that is a misprint, it means the Grain Commission instead of the Railway Commission. I will continue reading:

The change will mean that the elevators, railways and banks, in other words the big interests, are given at one swoop all the advantage that the farmers have gained through years of endeavour, and that these said interests working through their agent the Railway Commission——

Here again, there is a mis-print, it should be the Grain Commission.

—will secure concessions to the disadvantage of the producing farmer.

Mr. STEVENS. Will the hon. gentleman state what he is reading from? I think we are entitled to know what paper he is reading from.

Mr. MACNUTT. It is from a paper called the 'Abernethan,' printed in Abernethy, in the district of Saltcoats, and dated the 28th of February last. It has evidently made a couple of misprints, mentioning the Railway Commission instead of the Grain Commission.

The sum total of grain moved will be no greater, but the advantages will be in favour of the interests. Of the western members Sharpe voted with the opposition and Schaffner absented himself.

I think this Bill ought to be read this day six months becouse it is a retrograde measure. Had the Bill gone through as it appeared in the first place, with some minor amendments, I think we would have supported it on this side of the House; but it has been mangled and mutilated so much in committee that I, for one, will not feel like supporting it. It is only a half-hearted measure with regard to government ownership, which is only to be adopted under certain conditions. It permits mixing after inspection. It is also objectionable in regard to the very important matter of car distribution.

Mr. McCRANEY. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster) spoke as though there was quite a division of opinion throughout the west with regard to this Bill, and I understood him to say, this with reference to section 207, subsection (e), giving discretion to the Grain Board with regard to the distribution of cars.

Mr. FOSTER (North Toronto). I think my hon. friend mistook the point of my remark. I did not hazard an opinion as to whether there was unanimity on that; but I did say that with reference to the sample market there was this division of opinion.
